House of Commons Debates

THIRD SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 6, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Montreal Savings Bank.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill (No. 154) to incorporate the Niagara, Queenston and St. Catharines Railway Company.—Mr. German—by Mr. Logan.

EXCHEQUER COURT—RAILWAY DEBTS

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. Johns and Iberville)—(translation)—moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155), respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway debts. He said: Mr. Speaker, the Act of 1899 already allows the Exchequer Court to order the sale of a railway, at the request of a mortgagor or of a holder of debentures. The Bill which I submit to the consideration of the House has for its object to allow the Court of Exchequer to order that a railway be sold, on a petition from the Minister of Railways or from a creditor not protected by mortgage, when the railway company has become insolvent or is no longer in a position to manage its own affairs.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

IMMIGRANTS REFUSED ADMISSION.

Mr. WILSON asked:

1. How many immigrants have been refused admission into the Dominion of Canada, and for what causes or reason, for the years 1901 and 1902; and up to 1st of April, 1903?
2. How many immigrants have been deported to the country from which they came, and at whose expense, and for what cause?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock):

1. In the year 1901-2, 193 immigrants were refused admission into Canada on the ground that they were paupers who might become a public charge if allowed to remain in Canada, or because of their being afflicted with loathsome, dangerous or infectious diseases; and for such reasons 193 were deported at the expense of the steamship company on whose ships they had been brought to Canada.

2. For the period from 1st July, 1902, to 1st April, 1903, 147 immigrants were for like reasons refused admission to Canada, and were deported at the like expense of the steamship company, and for like reasons.

INDIAN MEDICAL ATTENDANT, KING'S, N.B

Mr. FOWLER asked:

Who is the medical attendant to the Indians in the county of King's N.B.? When was he appointed, and on whose recommendation? What salary does he receive, and upon what basis was the amount of salary computed? How many Indians are there in said county?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock):

1. Duncan H. McAllister is the medical attendant for the Indians of King's county, N.B.

2. He was appointed on the 31st May, 1900.

3. He receives a salary of $200 per annum, which covers the cost of medicines prescribed, and was computed on the average cost of attendance for the three years previous to his appointment.

4. The Indians of the county number 59.

SASKATCHEWAN LAND COMPANY.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Have any lands been sold by the government of Canada to the Saskatchewan Land Company? If any, what is the extent of the acreage of lands sold and where situated?
2. If any sold, what was the price per acre?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock). The information asked in this question will appear in the return which was ordered by the House on Monday last.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When will that be down?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In a few days, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We want to have it before the Interior estimates come up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be no delay.

RAILWAY STATION AT ALBERTON, P.E.I.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to construct a new railway station at Alberton, in Prince County, P.E.I., this year ?
2. Will they construct it of brick, which are manufactured in plenty at that place and vicinity ?
3. Is it the intention to deflect the track so as to avoid the 'Y' nuisance that now exists ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. The construction of a new station at Alberton is under consideration.
2. If constructed, it will probably be of wood as well as all the other stations of the railway are.
3. It is not the intention to deflect the track to avoid the 'Y.'

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—SALE OF TICKETS.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Are through tickets to all parts of Canada and the United States sold by agents at the different booking stations on the Prince Edward Island Railway ?
2. If not sold at all stations, at what particular stations may they be found on sale ?
3. Are such tickets for sale at Wellington station ? If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1 and 2. Through tickets to all points in Canada and the United States are on sale at the following stations on line of Prince Edward Island Railway, viz :—Alberton, Bradalbane, North Wiltshire, Souris, Summerside, Cape Traverse, Charlottetown, Kensington, Hunter River and Mount Stewart. And a limited issue covering New England states and all points on the Intercolonial Railway are on sale at all other booking stations, except at Wellington, Miscouche and Royalty Junction.

3. No. No requests have been made to the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway for such an issue of tickets at this station.

COAL IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Did members of the Geological Survey staff make an examination in the Province of Prince Edward Island, during the last year, with a view to the discovery of coal ?
2. Who were employed in the work ; and have they reported to the government ?
3. At what places were the examinations made ; and are the indications, as reported, favourable to finding coal in workable quantities ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock) :

1. Yes.
2. Dr. R. W. Ells and one assistant—Yes.
3. Examinations made over the island generally. Examinations proved the presence of several anticlinal folds traversing the island, notably, near the west coast near Miminegash or Campbelltown, near Summerside, at Gallas Point, near Wood Islands, and other points.

There are no indications of coal on the surface, since all the rocks exposed belong to the upper carboniferous, which overlie the true coal measures of Nova Scotia, but it is probable these may underlie the island, in which case they can only be reached by borings.

The most favourable locations for boring are regarded as near Miminegash, on the west coast, near Summerside, and at Gallas Point or Wood Islands, preferably the former.

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE IN MONTREAL.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask : Has any action been taken by the government in regard to the strike prevailing among the longshoremen at Montreal, and which has been creating so much disturbance in commercial operations there ? Has anything been done by the government, and if so what has been done ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is quite aware that the government has no authority to interfere in this matter. The law provides for the existing conditions, and the law is being followed. The local authorities have thought it advisable to call upon the military authorities to give them assistance, and all the assistance that it was in the power of the military authorities to give has been rendered.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Might I ask the right hon. gentleman, if there is any foundation for the statement that His Worship the Mayor of Montreal has appealed to the government, that the expenditure in connection with the calling out of the militia force shall be borne by the government and not by the municipality of Montreal ? If the Mayor of Montreal has made that request, has the government given any reply ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The request has been made. The law is to be followed, and I do not interpret the law to mean that the government is to bear that expense.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has an application been made to send the regular troops to Montreal ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Such an application has been made, and the telegram of the Mayor of Montreal to that effect has been published in all the newspapers. But the whole thing has been done under a misapprehension. The law provides that when peace and order is threatened, the municipal authorities may call upon the military authorities to give assistance. The municipal authorities have made a request to the military authorities to supply them with troops. Colonel Gordon, commander of the district, has called upon certain volunteers to do patrol duty on the wharfs. I understand that it is contemplated by Colonel Gordon to replace some of these volunteers by the permanent force——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Within his district.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, within his district. All this is a matter for the consideration of the military authorities, and it is a peculiarly military question.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I may inform the hon. Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock) that I have just received two telegrams from the agents of the Franco-Canadian line stating that as one of their ships cannot be discharged it will have to leave the port of Montreal with its cargo. It is also stated in these telegrams that the crew of the ship were threatened that if they tried to discharge the steamer they would not be allowed to do so. That ship sails under the Russian flag, and the Russian Consul has telegraphed as follows :

Failing to get ship discharged will have to leave port with cargo.

Might I ask, if anything will be done by the Labour Department concerning this matter ?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is aware that the Labour Department has no power to interfere with the militia in maintaining order. The military authorities have provided men to protect that crew and it shall be protected.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. With the permission of the House I would suggest that my hon. friend the Minister of Labour make an offer of intervention. In some cases such an offer has been made unofficially, and with very good results. The hon. minister has at his disposal, I am glad to say, very able officers, especially the deputy minister, and I am inclined to believe that if an offer of intervention were made, it might have some good results.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Mr. Speaker, I am probably not in order, but I will conclude with a motion, if necessary. I think the present state of affairs in Montreal has lasted long enough, and some step should be taken by the government to put an end to it or to relieve the municipality of Montreal from a difficulty which is not local in its character, but the effects of which are being felt all over the country. It is well known that the trade not only of Montreal, but of the whole country is being paralyzed by this strike—the cattle trade and every other trade concerned. Every day more ships are coming to that port, and there are no ship labourers to take the cargoes off the ships. I understand from a very competent authority that merchants all over Canada will suffer to a very great degree should this strike be prolonged. I understand that a great many merchants throughout Canada, retail merchants as well as wholesale merchants, will probably be ruined if this state of things continues. It seems to me this is an occasion on which the Labour Bureau should exert its influence to relieve the tension. It is high time the Labour Bureau did something. I do not know whether they have done anything at all; it is not reported that they have made any effort to intervene between the longshoremen and the ship owners to put an end to the strike. The House and the country should be informed on this point. If nothing has been done by the Labour Bureau, I trust that the hon. Minister of Labour will put as many of his employees as necessary, especially the head of the department, at the disposal of the people who are interested, so as to bring this strike to as prompt a conclusion as possible. As I said before, it is a matter which interests not only the city of Montreal, but the whole trade of this country. The city of Montreal is paying out large sums of money every day for the maintenance of troops to keep order. We have in different parts of the country, not only in the military district of Montreal, but at Quebec, Toronto and other points, soldiers who, though doing their duty to the best of their ability, have very little to do, and it seems to me that they might be brought to Montreal to perform the duty which the citizens of Montreal are now attending to. It is a great hardship to many of these people to be obliged to be under arms. Many of them are losing their positions. Members of the Sixty-fifth regiment, the Royal Scots and others have to obey the command of duty, but the employers of many of them are telling them that if their services are required much longer, they will lose their positions. Under the law of this country the militia are liable to be called under arms at any time ; but at the same time, when we have troops stationed at Toronto, at St. John, at Quebec and other points, who are paid their allowances every day, it seems to me that the authorities might bring them to Montreal and relieve the local militia. I hope in the first place that the Labour Bureau will do everything that lies in its power to bring this strike to an end as soon as possible, and in the next place that the military authorities will come to the aid of the civic authorities in keeping the peace on the wharfs. I move, seconded by Mr. Kemp, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. R. BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). Mr. Speaker, we all realize the truth of what the hon. member who has just taken his seat has said. Every one is anxious to have this strike settled, and everything possible has been done to settle it. We are all offering suggestions, but none of them can be put into effect. We have had meetings between representatives of the longshoremen and representatives of the ship owners in Montreal during the last two or three days, at which I have been chairman; we have sat three nights trying to bring about a reconciliation. The ship owners have agreed to the demands of the men in every instance, they are willing to give them the wages they want, but they refuse absolutely to recognize the union. On that point there is a deadlock. The longshoremen refuse to go back to work unless union men and union men alone are employed. The ship owners, on the other hand, say that they will engage the men who suit them best whether they are union men or not. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has spoken of the St. John troops. They are there now; they came yesterday. There is no trouble on the wharfs; order is being kept; any man who wishes to go to work is protected, and everything that could be done has been done. I have just received a telephone message from the President of the Steamship Association, in which he says they have about 1,100 men at work now on the wharfs, and that a great many of the teamsters who struck have gone back to work. Matters are in a little better shape than they were yesterday, though they are not by any means satisfactory. Nothing more that I know of can be done at the present time. I would be very much pleased if the Labour Bureau could bring about a settlement. The steamship men will not recognize the union, and the longshoremen will not go to work unless the union is recognized, and hence the deadlock.

Mr. C. MARCIL (Bonaventure). May I ask if this union is a Canadian or an American union?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The union is simply an association of longshoremen which is not incorporated. The head of the union is an American, who is over here now, and is agitating.

Mr. CLARKE. The organization is purely voluntary, is it not?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Purely voluntary.

Mr. GALLERY. I would like to ask the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal, (Mr. Bickerdike) if the majority of these longshoremen are citizens of Montreal?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No, they are not. A great many are, but most of them are from the country districts around Montreal. A great many are shantymen who, after working in the shanties in the winter, work on the wharfs at Montreal in the spring. Ninety per cent of them are Canadians, but they are from different parts of the district of Montreal.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Nothing which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has said goes to show that the citizens of Montreal who are mulcted in an expenditure of about $8,000 a day in connection with this strike, and who are contributing their share to the support of the Labour Bureau, receive from that bureau the help they are entitled to receive at the present moment. The question I asked was intended to elicit from the hon. Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock) an answer showing that since this strike has been in existence, the Department of Labour has taken some steps to bring it to an end. It is incumbent on the hon. gentleman to show that his department has been of some use in this very serious affair. It is certainly the duty of this government to interfere, it is certainly the duty of the Minister of Labour to see what can be done, and the Department of Labour should have had a representative at these meetings which were held, and to which the hon. member for St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike) has just referred. This strike has now been on over twelve days. It is the duty of the government, which is interested in the maintenance of the reputation and the good fame of the port of Montreal, to use all the means at its disposal to have that strike brought to a close.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). The question was aked whether the party who had been influencing the longshoremen to strike is a Canadian and a native of Montreal, and we are told that he comes from the United States. Sir, the emissaries of the labour unions of the Uuited States are traversing this country from end to end, fomenting difficulties, instigating strikes, and acting in a manner detrimental to public interest. Their business is to create difficulties in order that they may give some showing for the salaries they receive, and unless they can foment strikes, their labours are apparently fruitless.

Mr. MONK. Is the hon. gentleman aware that this strike at Montreal has been fomented by Americans?

Mr. CHARLTON. I merely take the reply given to a question with reference to that matter by one of the hon. members from Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike). I am also aware that American emissaries are engaged in the business of fomenting strikes—strikes based on the demand that the labour union shall alone be recognized, based on the monstrous assumption that no labourer can be employed unless he becomes a member of the union. That was the crucial trouble in the great anthracite coal strike, which disorganized business in the United States. This strike was based on the demand that the union should be recognized, and acts of violence were committed in order to prevent men from exercising their rights as citizens to make contracts with their employers, unless they belonged to the union. That strike was referred to a board of arbitration. That board sat a long time, it examined into all the circumstances, it delivered its findings, and decided that labour must be recognized as such, that the individual must be recognized as well as the labour union, and that while the labour union might be and should be dealt with, it was not entitled to take the position of preventing the individual from selling his labour to an employer and giving that labour unmolested by the union. The whole country is pervaded by rumours of strikes, fomented by these agitators who are not, as a rule, Canadians. They come here from the labour unions of the United States to create a state of things which must inevitably lead to great trouble, and even to violence on the part of those who desire that no one should work except under the auspices of the labour union and at its dictation. It is high time that this matter was taken into serious consideration. I believe that the government would be justified in excluding these agitators from the country, in considering them as disturbers of the public peace, and requiring them to go forthwith about their business.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). There has been nothing brought up this afternoon which entitles the hon. member for North Norfolk to draw the inference that the strike at Montreal has been caused by union emissaries from the United States. As a matter of fact I believe—and I think that hon. members from Montreal will bear me out—that the strike was on before these men were sent for, and that as a matter of fact the strikers sent for them to come and try to effect a settlement. If men who come here at the instance of the labour element to settle a strike, are to be called agitators, I do not think such language calculated to have any good effect. It was well known throughout Montreal that this strike was bound to take place this year. The shipping federation declared last year that they would not again be put in the same position in which they were last year, when labour was scarce, and said they were about to import men to do their unloading, irrespective of the trade organizations. There is a Bill before the House asking for the incorporation of the Shippers' Federation with that very purpose in view. At present it is said that there are a thousand men on their way from the port of Liverpool to come and unload vessels at Montreal. The shippers may be perfectly within rights, but they are making an attack on the longshoremen, residents of Montreal. I rise specially to protest against the unwarrantable inference being drawn that this strike has been brought about by foreign agitators or that the condition of affairs has been aggravated by foreign emissaries. As regards what was said about the regular troops being more generally employed to take the place of the militia or the civil authorities, let me say that we should be very careful how we endorse the calling out and keeping out of regular troops. The civic authorities of Montreal have ample means at their disposal for the keeping of the peace, and I believe that that work should be done by special constables.

Mr. MONK. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUTTEE. It seems to me that it is wrong to resort to the military in these matters, and I do not think that such a proceeding will commend itself to the people of this country.

Mr. W. R. BROCK (Toronto Centre). Coming from Toronto, I think it but right that I should give my views on the matter before the House. The strike is not only a very serious grievance to the merchants and the manufacturers of Canada, but also to those who have agricultural produce to ship at various points. I have seen a notice this morning that the railway companies are refusing to take possession of freight to be brought to Toronto, and at present there are some 1,200 or 1,300 of our young men in the militia guarding the wharfs at Montreal. I can speak feelingly of this myself because nearly a dozen are out of my establishment in that city, and these young men are kept out these very cold nights without proper provision being made to protect them from the cold. I think that the city of Montreal should add to its police force on occasions of this kind, so that the regular police could attend to the difficulty on the wharfs and additional police do patrol duty in other parts of the city.

This whole matter of trades unions in this country and the way they are governed and worked is a serious menace to business. It is one of the most serious matters we have to deal with at the present time. Any man wishing to enter upon any kind of enterprise must face the fact that directly he has done so, on the one hand he is assailed by labour agitators and on the other by politicians—and, in fact the whole question is too much mixed up with politics, so seriously that I can understand the difficulty the government have in attempting to deal with such matters, fearing that what they do may be used against them with this numerous body, and that they may be made unpopular with one class. Notwithstanding what I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) to say, I here assert, without fear of contradiction, that the agitation is brought largely from the United States. It is all very well to get up and say that nothing has been brought forward in this House to establish this, but I tell you the papers are full of it; and I say that in any of the difficulties we have had in labour unions in this country, we find that the mainspring is on the other side of the line. I am strongly in favour of an organization of labour in this country, but I say that it should be under the control of our own people and our own government. We should not have before us continually the danger of being obliged to follow any particular organization to the other side of the line and beyond the control of our own people. The time may come when we shall be rushing to arms to protect this country from that kind of thing. This is the time for the government to take hold of the question. I do not say how that should be done, but they will be able to say. They should take hold of this and deal with it, apart from politics, framing measures solely with the view to meet the difficulty that faces us. At the present time it is a very difficult matter for us to say when the military power should step out and the civil power should step in. I certainly think in this case the civil authorities in Montreal should have had power to deal with the difficulty and deal with it firmly. I believe with the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that the individual in this country has rights. I am willing to concede to a labour organization also that it has rights. But when the organization undertakes to interfere with the individual and with his personal rights, the whole power of the country and the government should be brought forward to put a stop to that interference at once. The difficulty in the United States, as we know, is want of power in the central authority to deal with these matters. In these troubles the people who suffer most are not the workmen, not the manufacturers, not the capitalists—the whole accumulated evil falls upon the consumer, upon the masses of the people who have to pay the bill every time. If you prevent miners from getting out coal, they will get back at you, because they will merely charge a dollar or two more for every ton and, so far as the capitalist is concerned, he will be as well off as ever. The men who are posing as representatives of labouring men forget that in every one of these contests the workingmen come out at the small end of the horn. They always do. Not a single case can be named where the workmen have not got the worst of it. So I say the proper course is for a good strong government to take hold of this matter and prevent these people from the United States coming in here and agitating in this country, for it can be seen that their only object is agitation. They do not care that these poor longshoremen are out of work, they are idle and spending money sometimes very injudiciously. All they want is to pose before the people of this country and the United States as being anxious for the welfare of the people for whom they are agitating, although they are causing them to lose not only their time, but their money. I do trust the government will see their way to do a little more——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). What would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) suggest that a good government should do ?

Mr. BROCK. If I were Minister of Labour I should be in a position not only to make suggestions, but, I hope, to do something. Why, this is almost childish. When an hon. gentleman on this side presents the view that the government are not doing all that they ought to do we are asked : What is your policy, what suggestions have you to make ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, because you do not make out a case until you do.

Mr. BROCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House any longer. But I can assure you that, to myself personally as well as the city I represent, this is a very serious matter. Before sitting down, I may mention one thing. At this season of the year the importers of this country are bringing in a very large quantity of what we call spring and summer goods. We know that shipments of these goods are in the vessels in the port of Montreal ; but the goods cannot be delivered, they cannot be distributed throughout the country, under the present circumstances. The result is that a serious loss is going to fall upon these importers. For, the goods now coming in are usually of light material—what I may call fashionable goods—and suitable for the season. If the goods are not sold now, there will be a serious loss in carrying them over, because, next year they will be unfashionable and worth almost nothing. Therefore—there may be some selfishness in it— I am associated with those who are anxious that this difficulty be put a stop to as quickly as possible.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker, I deplore the existence of industrial struggles, such as those going on in Montreal and in other parts of the country, just as much as any hon. gentleman in this House. But I want to say that, so long as hon. members of this House are not prepared to assume that some fault may be found on both sides in this struggle, so long will affairs remain in the present condition. Now, Sir, these people have reason for the position that they take. It is true, their reasons may not always be good reasons. But, when large bodies of men who depend not upon a bank account, but upon each dollar as it is earned as a daily wage, without any prospect of maintaining a living whilst on strike, take the course that these men have taken, we may depend upon it they have some reason for entering upon such a struggle. Now a great deal has been said including what has been said by the hon.

member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), with regard to outside agitation. I do not think the position taken on that matter by these hon. gentlemen is a fair position at all. How would the hon. member for North Norfolk like it if I were to demonstrate to him that alien capitalists in this country had provoked strikes by their tyranny and oppression? So long as the hon. member objects to the doctrine that the individual labourer is not entitled to come to this country and have a voice in the sociological questions without being considered an agitator, what is he to say when the capitalist employer, who is an alien, seeks to oppress and tyrannize over our people by his method of carrying on business? Now, there are two sides to this question. I do not believe in strikes. I want to say that I have been associated for many years as a leader of a labour movement, and I have never yet been in a single strike, I have always used my influence against strikes. But I want to remind hon. gentlemen in this House that there are national strikes, that there is the strike of war, that there is the position taken by one nation against the other—and even the modern method of settling these questions ultimately is for the parties to take up arms against each other and demand their rights. That being so, it must be easy for hon. gentlemen to concede that labour and capital—and labour especially, which lives in dependence upon the exercise of its force for a daily wage, is entitled to adopt that method, so long as, in doing so, it does not interfere with the constitution and with the laws of this country.

I do not think I would under any circumstances be inclined to permit an alien agitator to come to this country and dictate to me as to what were the proper conditions under which I should work. Sir, there is not as much in the contention supported by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) as he asserts. This institution at Montreal, contrary to what has been said on the floor of the House to-day, is a voluntary institution, and does not receive dictation from over the line. I am speaking subject to correction, but if I understood the hon. gentleman aright, he said that it was not a voluntary institution but that it was subject to dictation from the other side. I wish to say that no alien agitator has anything to do with the conduct of the business of this institution. I agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the most legitimate kind of influence is that which emanates from the authority of the government. But we must remember that the government have no power to insist that these people should settle their grievances: and I would like the hon. gentlemen who represent the interests of organized capital in this House to be able to assure the government that if provision was made empowering the government to compel a settlement of these troubles, they would support a proposition of that kind. If I had time and opportunity, I could demonstrate to this House that in nine cases out of ten of labour struggles, labour has volunteered to stand by the results of compulsory arbitration enforced by government, and that in only one case out of ten do we find the capitalists prepared to do so. Now, it is right that these facts should be presented to this House. Both sides have a right to be represented in this matter. There are two sides to this question. What does the ordinary member of this House know about the actual grievances of these poor men in Montreal? What proof can any member of this House give to show that there may not be the greatest possible reason for this strike at Montreal? Where is the remedy? The remedy I believe is in increased legislation along these lines. I do not believe that the people of this country would support the principle of compulsory arbitration, but I believe they would agree to accept some further amendment of governmental dictation along the line of compulsory investigation and conciliation; I believe in that principle. The Minister of Labour has a Bill before the House for that purpose.

Now, Sir, as to the request made upon this government to assist in paying the expenses of protection of the public in this strike at Montreal. I do not think that would be a proper thing to do, for the outside authority to have such power. I consider that the power to call out military protection by the municipality is a wise provision. But, I want to say this, that if any financial assistance is given by this government in consequence of a strike of that kind, I can easily conceive how much more ready the municipalities would be to call out the militia without necessary provocation when they know that the expense would have to be borne by another authority. There are two sides to this question also. I want to say, and it ought to be said to the credit of the strikers in Montreal, that the newspapers, who are as a rule anxious to record the misdeeds of the strikers, have not been able to chronicle a single unlawful act on their part. What reason can be given by the authorities in Montreal for calling out the militia in this instance? If the expenses of this protection are to be paid by this government, how much more easily it will be for these municipalities to call out this protection because somebody else has to pay the bill. The greatest safeguard for prudence in such matters, is the fact that the people who are concerned must pay for the protection they require.

Now, Sir, I will support any proposition in this House that will bring to an end these industrial struggles. I will subscribe with my vote to any measure that will increase the powers of the government to make compulsory investigation into these matters with a view to avoiding trouble. But, so long as hon. members in this House are prepared to look only on one side of this question, so long as they are prepared to assume that there is only one party in the struggle, and only one that is absolutely right, while the other is absolutely wrong, then I want to say that those hon. members utterly fail to grasp the facts of the situation. I want to tell the hon. member for North Norfolk that any individual, or any member of this House, who does not recognize the rights of labouring men to enter into voluntary association, is as big a demagogue as the man who would adopt unconstitutional methods to accomplish his purpose. There are unreasonable men in the labour movement; yes, there are unreasonable men in the capitalist movement; and what is wanted is proper government authority to deal with these extreme people, and to provide that the business of the country shall be conducted for the benefit of the whole community.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The question introduced has assumed a somewhat wide range. I do not propose to discuss the labour question in the abstract, the fringe of which has just been touched by some hon. members; I would rather confine my few observations to the question that led to this discussion. The trouble in Montreal to-day is not new. It has been growing for some time. The two parties evidently have been organizing, and have entered upon a contest of strength. Before the outbreak of hostilities the government endeavoured to prevent them. I am sure that hon. gentlemen are all most desirous that the interests of the country should be paramount in a matter of this importance. I am sure that no hon. gentleman would desire to make any political capital out of a question such as this. I say this with all frankness and in all sincerity. Whatever views may exist, I will say this, though a party man, that I hope the day will never come in a Canadian parliament when the members will make a football of the labour problem. It has challenged the efforts of the best governments and the brightest minds the world has ever known, and it is not yet solved. We have a task before us, and we will be better able to solve it if we keep the one object in view of the common interest of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before this trouble began the government sent for representatives of the two parties. You will understand the delicacy of the negotiations, in view of the strained relations that exist and have existed for some time. You cannot with success plunge into the midst of a struggle between two parties who are excited and determined. But so far as our private interviews, influence, advice, and pressure could go, they were exercised to induce, if possible, a settlement and to remove all causes of difference. Our advice was refused. It was deliberately given, it was deliberately taken into consideration, and it was deliberately refused.

Mr. MONK. May I ask the hon. gentleman who the representatives sent were?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I assume in advance that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is most anxious for a satisfactory solution of this difficulty, and he will quite understand that, to go into particulars and to give names, would jeopardize the negotiations that have continued up to this moment. At no time since the trouble began has there not been present in Montreal endeavouring to make overtures to and to establish relations with both sides a gentleman of high standing and in close touch with the government. We have not only had him in daily and constant communication with us, but we are in telegraphic communication with him, and even since this debate began the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has received telegraphic despatches reporting the state of affairs. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) asks a natural question, but I am sure it would only strike him as equally natural for me to say that I doubt if anything would be gained by giving away, if we have the right to do it, the confidences of which we are the recipients on both sides.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. Postmaster General say whether the advice was deliberately refused by one or both sides?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will, perhaps not press me too far upon that point. He has the same object that we have in view and it is extremely important that the government should be at all times able to enjoy the unqualified confidence of disputants in labour troubles, not only on this occasion but on all occasions, and if the government's influence is to be for good we must preserve the unqualified confidence of disputants no matter how wrong either of them may be. I say that not desiring to withhold anything, but for the reason which I am assigning here. The hon. member for Centre Toronto urges us to do something. There are only two things that can be done in regard to labour strikes. If you had a law by which you could by force compel men to go to work you could invoke such a law. This is a free country and there is no such law upon the statute-book. I do not think that any hon. gentleman would propose to put such a law upon the statute-book. There is one other method and that is by friendly conciliation and by bringing the pressure of public opinion to bear. In regard to either of these steps there is a right time and there is a wrong time. There is a time when intervention would be effective; there is a time when it would be a failure. It is difficult to strike the right time. It does not appear yet to have arrived, for we cannot induce either of these parties at the present moment to receive any friendly overtures from the government. What more can be done at this stage is a question that I am unable to answer. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) mentioned that it was my duty to make a statement. I hope he did not think I was refusing to do my duty or shrinking from trying to do my duty. I rose several times, but in deference to the wishes of others that I saw rising I gave them the right of way, but, and it was not through any disinclination, as soon as I had the opportunity, to make these few observations. As to the suggestion that the government might bear the expense, the law is to-day what it has been since confederation. It is no new law. It was not passed by this government and not by the immediately preceding government, but it has been ratified by parliament and by public opinion for a generation and more, and that law is that the municipality must bear the expense of calling out the militia to maintain order within the municipality. I would say that at this very moment we have a gentleman of high position in this country in Montreal endeavouring to induce the parties to receive in a friendly way the overtures from this government with the view of arriving at a settlement. It took the President of the United States a good while to solve the problem in the anthracite coal regions. For some time the strikers refused to listen to his suggestions. They continued that strike for five months and national disaster was the outcome, the injury spreading beyond the confines of the United States. We suffered ourselves. He could not at first succeed but in time he did succeed. As the struggle continues these two disputants may become more receptive of friendly advice, and all I can say on behalf of the government is that we are in an attitude ready and waiting and anxious to be allowed to be the medium of peace whenever the two parties will permit us to act in that capacity.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, before this debate is concluded, I want to call the attention of the House to a statement of fact which was made a moment ago by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), and one which calls for some consideration on the part of every member of this House. The hon. member for Montmorency stated a moment ago that some of the volunteers who are now doing duty on the harbour at Montreal are threatened with dismissal by their employers if they continue to be removed from their daily occupations. I think that when the hon. member for Montmorency made that statement he was misinformed. I cannot believe that there is in the city of Montreal any man so mean, any man so unpatriotic as to threaten one of his employees who happens to be a volunteer and is performing his duty as such with dismissal. I cannot believe that there is any employer of labour, knowing that his employee is engaged in protecting property, who would threaten him with dismissal because he has to be absent from his occupation. There was some feeling upon this question in the state of New York last winter when it was reported in the press that a labour organization in Schnectady, New York, had expelled one of its members because he was a member of a military organization in the state. I hope we are not going to have anything of that kind in this country. I have seen the statement that during last winter some labour organizations in this country had discouraged their members from joining the militia force. I do not believe that statement, and in reference to the statement of the hon. member for Montmorency, I still refuse to believe that there is any man in Canada who would discourage any of his employees from becoming members of the volunteer force. It would be a sad day indeed for Canada if any citizen were to discourage any one at all from discharging his duty to the country, and if the hon. member for Montmorency is correctly informed, I think that the voice of parliament ought to be unanimous in declaring that if such a threat were to be carried into execution, if the volunteers now doing duty for their country were to be dismissed, the man who did that would be branded with infamy and he would be consigned to the indignation of every patriotic citizen of Canada.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike), in speaking upon this question a few moments ago, said that the difference, so far as remuneration is concerned, between the longshoremen and the employers had been practically settled, and that the only matter in dispute, the only question that kept the parties separate, was the question of the recognition of the union of the employees. If that is a fact, I am sure that we can appeal to the hon. Postmaster General to use his good offices to get this union recognized; because, I believe, it is one of the conditions imposed upon those who tender for work in his department that the work shall be done in a union office, and that the union scale of wages shall be paid. The demands of the men certainly could not have been so unreasonable as some hon. gentlemen have pointed out, because the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence, has told us that the parties have agreed as to the remuneration and that the only question is as to whether the men have the right to unite together for the purpose of protecting themselves, and whether it is a reasonable position for the employers to take to say that the men shall not have that right, and to say that those who organize themselves into a union of employees shall not be given employment. This is a very serious position and one that ought to engage the attention of the Department of Labour, and engage it forthwith. We on this side of the House have no desire to make political capital out of these labour disputes. If any such capital has been made out of them, I am not going beyond the line of my duty when I say that the Postmaster General, in addressing the electors from one end of Canada to the other has pointed out that if the government is entitled to confidence for one thing more than another it is because it has established a Labour Bureau, which from time to time adjusts the labour difficulties which may arise.

I want to enter my protest against the statement made here: that foreign agitators are at the bottom of all this trouble. It is an insult to the Canadian workman to say that foreign agitators whom he never saw before can come to Montreal, Toronto or anywhere else, and can induce Canadian workmen to leave their employment and demand unreasonable terms. Such a statement is absurd. It needs only to be mentioned to be scouted at once. Canadian workmen have had organizations from one end of Canada to the other for the past half century, and the record of these unions is the best possible answer to the charge made against Canadian workmen as to their unreasonable demands. I myself have had the honour of belonging to one of these organizations for about thirty-five years. That organization has had an existence in Canada for nearly three-quarters of a century; and during that long period, on only two, or at most three occasions, were the most amicable relations which exist between the employers and the men, in any degree strained. The great bulk of the men who compose the labour unions in Canada are men whose interests are identified most closely with the interests of their employers and the interests of the country. They are most reasonable men; they are conservative in their methods. They do not desire to create a condition of things that will compel them to strike. Striking is the last resort in the case of the great majority of them, because as the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) has pointed out, no matter what may be the result of the strike, ultimately they are the sufferers. Those against whom they strike do not in the end suffer, because, as my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) has pointed out, the other parties to the difficulty eventually compel the public to bear the losses to which they have been subjected. Even if the workingmen be successful, it takes them a very long time out of the additional wages they receive, to recoup themselves for the losses they incurred during the time they were demanding their rights. I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but there is one phase of it, in relation to the efforts which the government is making to settle the matter, on which I desire to say a word or two. We are bound and we are ready to accept most fully the statement made by the Minister of Labour in respect to the action of the government during the past month or two to bring this difficulty to a satisfactory settlement. But is there not too much mystery about the methods which the government are employing? The Postmaster General made the statement that when the President of the United States interfered—and interfered wisely and patriotically—to bring that tremendous conflict between labour and capital to a satisfactory settlement, he appointed commissioners to represent him. But let me point out that the people of the United States were apprised at once as to the action of the President, as to who represented him, and as to what lines the attempts made to bring about the settlement, were based upon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was many months after the strike.

Mr. CLARKE. I am speaking now of the time when the President intervened, and he at once apprised the people of what was being done hour by hour and day by day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is that the strike began in March, and that the President did not intervene until September.

Mr. CLARKE. But the moment the President did intervene the public were apprised of all that was going on, and the hands of the President were strengthened, because the public were at his back. I am satisfied that if the Minister of Labour would take the House and the country into his confidence, and tell us who are representing him in Montreal and what their instructions are, then if the instructions commend themselves, as I have no doubt they will, to the majority of the people of Canada, the hands of the minister would be upheld, public opinion would be focussed upon this trouble, and a settlement would probably be reached sooner than it otherwise would.

One word as to the affiliation of Canadian labour unions with the American unions. No Canadian union is obliged to affiliate with a union on the other side. The advantages of affiliation are mutual. Unfortunately, up to the present time, aye and at the present time, a greater number of men belonging to Canadian unions go to the United States to seek employment, than do American labour unionists come from the United States over here. The international card is a substantial advantage to the members of the Canadian unions, and that card has never been dishonoured by the unions on the other side. That card forms a bond of union between the workingmen on both sides of the line, and the reason the Canadian unionists identify themselves with American unionists, is because they believe it to be to their advantage and because they do not believe it is derogatory to their position, or to the interests of Canada that they should so identify themselves. These are the facts, and if, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has stated the employers of labour in the port of Montreal have been arranging for the past six or nine months to have men in Montreal when navigation opened to take the place of the longshoremen; may I not without prejudicing the case say, that these employers placed themselves in a position to accentuate the hostility of the longshoremen; that they were doing what was likely to antagonize the longshoremen of Montreal, and to make a reasonable settlement more difficult? As the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) pointed out, there must be a recognition of the rights of both parties before a satisfactory settlement can be reached; there must be an observance of the golden rule. Except in a very extreme case, I have never known an instance where fair propositions for settlement were made by one or other of the parties, that these propositions did not eventuate in a satisfactory settlement. I hope that the efforts of the Minister of Labour will be crowned with success, but I repeat that a great deal of good would be done if he would take the House into his confidence and state who represents the government in Montreal, what has been done, how far he has succeeded in bringing the parties together, and what is the real reason why he has not been completely successful in his efforts. Before I take my seat, I again repudiate the statement that foreign agitators are the cause of this trouble in Montreal. I am sure the hon. gentleman made the statement in good faith, but I do not believe that statement is susceptible of being substantiated. It is an insult to the Canadian workmen to say that they cannot recognize their own interests, and that they have been led away by men whom they do not know, to commit acts which may bring disaster on themselves and their families.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) refers to me, I wish to say that I did not make that statement. What I said was that the head of that organization was an American.

Mr. CLARKE. Then I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I understood him to say that the present strike in Montreal was caused by the presence of foreign agitators in the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It was the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) who said that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I rise, as a newspaper man, to enter my protest against the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith). He said that the newspapers are always anxious to record the misdeeds of the workmen. Let me tell him at once that the newspapers have worked more harmoniously with the labour unions than with any other class of the community. In the printing office with which my name is connected there are as a rule about 250 men employed, and all or nearly all of them belong to labour unions, and we never have any trouble with them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Nearly all the newspapers in Canada are employing union men. They are skilled tradesmen and I am proud to say that there is no class of men who give less trouble than the members of the Typographical Union. Suppose, for instance, that one of them gets on a spree and he is dismissed, there is no trouble over it and no objection made. I make this statement to correct the wrong impression which possibly may have been created in the minds of some hon. gentlemen here, that when union men are employed in an office or a shop, they are masters. That is not the case. One of my hon. friends near me, before I rose, asked me to state what I understood by the recognition of the union. It means undoubtedly that when you have admitted a labour union in your establishment, you must work with them; they work with you, and you must work with them.

Mr. CLARKE. The obligation is mutual.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The question has been asked whether we are not in a free country; in other words, whether free labour, labour which is not connected with labour organizations, could not be employed along with union labour. I read a day or two ago a report of a meeting that took place in the month of December last in New York under the auspices of the National Civic Federation, of which Senator Hanna was the president. At that gathering the whole question was discussed very thoroughly. The contention of the labour unions to-day is that the individual workingman has no right to sell his labour outside of the union. I read that argument in very able speeches delivered by Mr. Gompers and by Mr. Keefe, who is president of the Longshoremen's Union. Their contention is that in these days of progress and of vast organizations of capital, the right of the labourmen to organize is as large and as broad as the right of capital, and that the individual workingman, selling his labour outside of the labour organizations, causes damage and injury to organizations that should be recognized as being for the best advantage of the country in which they exist. As my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Smth) says, there are two sides to this important question, and the sooner we recognize that fact the better, both from the labour standpoint and the capital standpoint. There is no use of denying to the workingmen the right of forming themselves into organizations. Capital is forming organizations, and we do not on that account denounce capital. Labour has the same right, and I verily believe, after having tested the labour organizations on a pretty large scale, that if the owners and managers of large establishments would grapple with the question without any prejudice; if they would realize that in a country like this where industries are growing bigger every day the masses employed must grow bigger every day; if they would make up their minds to the fact that labour men have families, and that they have duties to perform to those families, that they have rights to protect; if they would recognize that there are two sides to this important question; the labour problem would be solved without much difficulty. I have not been made acquainted with the cause of the difficulty in Montreal, I fully realize the delicacy of the situation in which the government are placed; but all the same I am not sure but my hon. friend from Toronto is to a large extent right in asking the hon. Minister of Labour, if not to-day, as soon as possible, to take the House into his full confidence. This is a question in which the whole country is interested; parliament is sitting, and we have some right to advise, for after all the government is only a committee of the House; I invite the hon. minister—perhaps it is not necessary for me to do so—to proceed as speedily as he can in the settlement of the difficulty, which is of national importance.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker it would seem to me, from the statement made by the hon. member for the St. Lawrence division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), that it is a very small matter of contention between the parties. We have in the west many labour unions of various kinds on a firm footing. The city of Winnipeg is a city of unions, and my experience has been that where unions have been formed, they have been beneficial both to the employers and the workingmen. I have never known unions to work an injury, and I think the longshoremen of Montreal are quite justified in forming a union to better their condition. The hon. member for St. Lawrence said that the only point of contention was that the ship owners refused to recognize the union.

Mr HEYD. What do you understand by the phrase, 'recognition of the union'?

Mr. McCREARY. That they will deal with the officers of the union in regard to wages and other matters.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does it not imply that they will employ none but those belonging to the union?

Mr. McCREARY. It does not necessarily imply that, unless the by-laws of the union so provide. The association which the hon. member for St. Lawrence belongs to is a union of the shippers of Montreal, which they have entered for their own benefit, for the purpose of charging proper rates of freight, getting proper rates of insurance, and so forth. Then the Manufacturers' Association—what is that but one of the greatest unions in Canada, and, so far as we are concerned in the west, one of the most tyrannical? And yet we are told these longshoremen are not to form a union to protect themselves. There is another phase of this question which has been presented by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that is, that these unions have no right to import from the United States men who have had experience in the same line. If the hon. member for North Norfolk were so particular about not making use of Americans, we would not hear such long speeches from him, for he goes over to the states to get a good deal of his inspiration for these speeches. The Americans are coming to our country in large numbers, to work our mines and develop our prairies, and I do not think there will be much harm done if one or two come across to help the suffering longshoremen of Montreal to protect their own interests.

With regard to employing the military to suppress the unions, I am against that all the time. The moment you do that you are going to do an injury not only to the cause of labour, but to the militia system of Canada. I was speaking the other day to a man in Winnipeg, a member of a union, who had been at one time chairman of the Trades and Labour Council. He intimated to me that there were likely to be strikes. I remonstrated, saying I thought they were going a little too far. He said they were not, as prices of everything were so high that they needed higher wages. Then we proceeded to discuss the militia and its relation to the unions. He said the time was coming when men would have to choose between belonging to a union and belonging to the militia. I asked him, 'What would you do in that case?' He said: 'I am an old soldier. I was in the expedition to Manitoba under Lord Wolseley, I also served at the time of the rebellion in 1885, and I am still in the militia, but if I have to resign one or the other, I will resign the militia and not the union.' If that spirit gets into the militia of Canada, if a man becomes convinced that he cannot be a consistent union man and belong to the militia as will be the case if you persist upon calling on the militia to suppress strikes, that will disrupt this whole Dominion. I do not think it comes with good grace from men who belong to unions themselves to object to those poor longshoremen belonging to a union. We have union in every calling from the clergy down. We have unions among manufacturers, lawyers, doctors, and I am glad to know that the farmers in eastern Canada are forming an association. We have the Grain Growers' Association in the west, and I hope that the farmers in this country will form a union and assert their rights. With regard to the influence of these unions, let me say that the manager of a large industrial concern in the United States told me it was much more satisfactory dealing with unions than with disorganized labour; and some of the greatest corporations in that country want all their men to belong to a union. They find that there is less trouble dealing with the president of the union than with a mob of men. In my opinion it is the duty of the Minister of Labour to send his men down to deal with those shippers and endeavour to convince them that they should recognize the union or else this government will not protect them.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). I do not desire to enter into a discussion on this question, but I would like to have a better definition of that phrase, 'The recognition of the union.' What does it mean? Each speaker gives it his own interpretation, and I would like the hon. minister to give us an authoritative definition of what the employees mean by it and what the employers understand by this term.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to say very much on this question, because I am not conversant with the details of the strike in Montreal, but shall content myself with a few general remarks. During a later period I shall probably bring before this House some measures dealing with that great question of the relations between capital and labour. I have the honour to represent a strong, labour, industrial county in this Dominion—a county that produces millions of tons of coal every year. Down there we have a labour union which we consider the very strongest in Canada. It is about 7,500 strong. And let me say that in the county of Cape Breton we have not had, for some eighteen or nineteen years, any serious disturbance between capital and labour. Why? Because the representatives of capital recognized that their best policy is to deal with organized men and not with a mob. I wish to point out—and I think that in saying this I have history on my side—that the capitalists of this country and all those who look ahead would do well to glance over the history of similar movements in Europe and Great Britain. We may make up our minds that we have to arrive at the point reached in Great Britain and Europe, and we had better take the easiest and not the hardest road to it. Let me raise my humble voice to ask the employers of labour to consider this matter, because a storm is rising in this country. No man who has an eye in his head can fail to perceive that great difficulties are about to confront us, and it will be a serious matter for us if we have to wade through the difficulties which agitated England and Scotland from 1840 to 1880. I sincerely hope that the recognition of the union of workingmen will be facilitated by capital in this country, instead of thwarted, and in this way, more than any other, will be avoided difficulties such as we are now considering.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). I think that the question of discussion this afternoon is one of great importance. My hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Kendall) has told us that a storm is no doubt brewing in this country. Every day we hear capitalists say that the labour question is the most dangerous one ahead of us in this country at present, and that it is rendering unsafe the investment of capital. At the same time we must recognize that the labouring man has the same right to unite with his brother labourers as the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) has to unite with his brother manufacturers in the Manufacturers' Association. The attempt to shut out labour unions in Canada would lead to civil war and could never succeed. Calling out the militia is, of course, the last resort, and should only be done to secure the peace of the community and not to suppress a strike. The question before the House was brought up by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier asking the government if they proposed to pay the city of Montreal a portion of the cost of calling out the militia.

Mr. MONK. I did not bring that question up at all. I asked the government what they were doing or intended doing in Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am responsible for that question.

Mr. LOGAN. Then it was my hon. friend from Montmorency who put that question. I think that to do what my hon. friend asked would be to set a dangerous precedent. I would ask the government if there is a precedent of that kind? We had a great labour struggle in the city of London only a few years ago, and the militia were called out to preserve the peace, but I do not think that the government of Canada were asked by that ambitious city to pay for the militia.

Mr. MONK. There was the case of the town of Valleyfield. The government were asked to pay for the militia there, but I do not know what was done.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that the government refused to accede to its demand.

The PRIME MINISTER. It was against the law.

Mr. LOGAN. And, as my right hon. friend the Premier has said, it was against the law. We had a very serious strike in Toronto last year, and although that city is not slow in asking favours from this government, we never heard of it asking that this government should pay the militia.

Mr. CLARKE. The militia were doing their annual drill, but even then the city of Toronto had to pay them.

Mr. LOGAN. The city of Montreal is ambitious. It proclaims itself as the national port of Canada. Surely, it should not come begging this parliament to preserve the peace in that port. If we should do so, we would be establishing a most dangerous precedent. With reference to the storm brewing, serious thinking people realize that there is one certainly threatening over the labour question. I would humbly suggest that the government should be forewarned, and that it might be in the public interest—this may not be a very well considered suggestion, but I make it in all sincerity—for this government to appoint a commission of able men to meet the leading labouring men of Canada and the capitalists and consider whether some means could not be devised for preventing the outbreak of the threatened storm. We have labour organizations, we cannot prevent their existence, we have also organizations of capitalists, and it seems to me that commission might possibly be the means of some agrement being arrived at between capital and labour in this Dominion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I rise to make a personal explanation. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the city of Montreal is coming to parliament to beg the governmen to pay part of the expenses that are incurred by keeping the militia on the docks to maintain peace and order in the city. What I said is that, if the militia are to be used to maintain peace and order, it seems to me that the regular troops who are at St. Johns, Toronto, and Quebec, and who are being paid their salaries now by the government, might properly be brought to Montreal to relieve those members of the volunteer force who are now engaged in the work of maintaining order. These regular troops get their pay from the government now, and they would get the same in Montreal as they do where they now are. That is all.

The PRIME MINISTER. In answer to the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain), let me say that the troops at St. Johns have been brought to the city of Montreal and all the troops available in the district of Montreal are at the command of the municipal authorities. But, to bring troops from other cities, from Toronto and other places, it is a question that involves very serious considerations.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I do not propose to go into the merits of this question, nor to discuss the general principle involved. I wish to refer to one point in connection with the bringing out of the militia. I feel very strongly that when an occasion arises that makes it necessary for the government to employ troops to keep order, the volunteers of the locality if called out might be forced to war against their fellow-citizens and countrymen and that this would be wrong. On an occasion of a strike in a city, such as we have in Montreal, no local militia should be called out. The men serving in the local regiments are, in many cases, the brothers and friends of the men on strike, and both sides believe that they are doing what is right. When occasions of this kind arise—and, unfortunately, I suppose we must beileve that they will arise, that we cannot help it—we should have permanent troops sent to each place of disturbance to maintain the peace. If it is accepted and understood that in the case of a street railway strike in Toronto or a longshoremen's in Montreal, the local volunteers will be called out, perhaps to fire on some of their brothers or friends, I think we are going to destroy absolutely in this country the spirit out of which our militia grows. No matter at what cost, in the case of a strike of this sort, the government should send the paid force of the country to keep order and not call upon the local militia. Though not an employer of labour, I have opinions as one who has perhaps, thought a good deal about this subject, although without saying very much. I believe that unionism is of great advantage to the men; I believe that it has come to stay and that it is going to accomplish in the end very great things for the labourer. At the same time, I have just as strong an opinion that unionism is absolutely wrong when it adopts the boycott. I believe I am right when I say that not more than one-third of the labourers in the cities—leaving out farm labourers, that is to say, not more than one-third of the mechanical labourers—belong to the unions. If I am right in that, I do not think that it is right that one-third of the labourers who are in the union should be able to say that the other two-thirds shall not work. I am not able to suggest a remedy for the difficulty, but I believe a remedy will be found; and I think that as time goes on there will be a better feeling between capital and labour—and that good feeling is growing, and must grow—these difficulties will be avoided. I believe that in the principle of a minimum wages and a share in the profits of all industries will eventually be found the solution which will make labour and capital work together in union. It is a slow process, perhaps, but we are tending to that end, and I know of industries in which that scheme has been attempted and has worked, and is working, to the satisfaction of both labour and capital. I believe it only requires patience, the avoidance of temper, and the recognition of the rights of both labour and capital. I must confess that I do not believe that a compulsory board of arbitration will do good. The results of compulsory arbitration will only be accepted in good faith practically by the party in whose favour the award is made. I believe, that, eventually, arbitration will rule very much more than it does now. And I believe that with the keen interest taken by the Minister of Labour, who is now the man whom we look to as the head man in dealing with matters of this kind, if he puts politics aside and perhaps, nominate some outside man, as the President of the United States did—some strong man who would go upon the ground and see what could be done, some man who is not in politics, not a railway man and not an employer of labour——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Where would you find him ?

Mr. OSLER. Cannot a fair man be found in the whole country ? If the hon. minister (Hon. Sir William Mulock) has that idea of the country, I say God help the future—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) must not put words in my mouth that I did not use. He suggested that a man should be found, a strong man, one who is not in politics and not in railways and not an employer of labour. I only asked where I was to look for such a man. Of course, there may be such men.

Mr. OSLER. I can only say that I believe, there are men not in politics, and not in railways, strong men and honest men who could be found.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman send me a list of them.

Mr. OSLER. I wish I could quote correctly. I remember coming upon a sentence —very appropriate in describing the present government. It was to the effect—describing such a government as this—that where men who have taken power and assumed the duties that go with it and are not able to solve the questions that come before them, they are either incapable or otherwise wholly unworthy of the position they have assumed. It is not for the government benches to throw taunts at this side on every occasion, to cry : Give us a solution of the difficulty. We are not here to solve the questions that face the country. We are here to approve or disapprove of what the government do.

Mr. McCREARY. What did you do in the labour question during the eighteen years when you were in power ? You did not put in a line upon the statute-book.

Mr. OSLER. I do not hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary). Is he referring to eighteen years back ?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. I am not here as a member of this House to approve of everything done eighteen years ago. I will agree with the hon. gentleman very often that those things were bad. This government have now a strong majority, they are backed by a majority of the constituencies of the Dominion of Canada, and it is their duty to face manfully every proposition that comes before them. If they are not able to face that, then they are not fit to be in their positions. They have no right to taunt the opposition by asking them on every occasion what they would do under certain circumstances. Whenever occasion arises in which the public interest is concerned, the government are bound to propound a scheme ; it is the duty of the opposition to object or to approve of that scheme, and of the government to carry it with their great majority.

But I rose principally to express my views on this point, on which I feel strongly, that I think it is very wrong and very injudicious to call out the militia of this country to suppress disturbances between our own people, in strikes and troubles of that kind. I believe that the government, no matter at what expense—charge it to the cities, if you like, I don't object to that—but I believe that the government should make the permanent force do duty on all occasions where military force is required, as in the present instance in this strike in Montreal.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would like to explain to the House that there has been some misapprehension in this discussion. We have been for nearly two hours discussing a question which can be boiled right down to one word. I have here the offer drawn up and submitted to the steamship people, and also the one submitted by the longshoremen. It is clause 8, which reads :

> The stevedores and the parties of the first part, will not discriminate against union men, and willingly agree to employ them.

That clause was put in because the steamship men had made a contract with some 350 men. Now, having made that contract, they are bound to carry it out.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, having already spoken, is out of order.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). I was much interested in listening to the remarks made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary). I should suppose, judging from the tenor of his speech, that he is going to desert his old friends, the Doukhobors, and intends to secure, if he can, the representation of the city of Winnipeg in the next election. Therefore the present labour leader of that city (Mr. Puttee) must hand in his resignation, for he will no longer represent the magnificent city of Winnipeg in these halls. The member for Toronto was asked a little while ago what the Liberal Conservative party had done for the people during the eighteen years they were in power. If my memory serves me right, they gave bread and butter to the workingmen of Canada. If my memory serves me right, they closed up the soup kitchens that had been opened during the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the soup kitchens have never been reopened since the national policy came into force. I cannot agree with one remark made by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler), who says that only the permanent corps should be employed to put down riots. I maintain that it is the duty of every citizen of Canada, whenever disorder or disturbance exists in his municipality, to turn out and do his duty in assisting to preserve law and order within the bounds of his own municipality. As a representative of a riding that is not troubled with strikes, I object on behalf of that community to paying any share of the cost of suppressing any disagreement that may happen to arise in the city of Montreal, and I should strenuously object to one dollar of the public money of Canada being paid towards a settlement of any strike in Montreal. Let Montreal settle her own troubles.

So far as unions are concerned, I have always upheld them when they tend to the betterment of the condition of the workingmen, or of any other men; when their association tends to make them more temperate, more law abiding, more intelligent, to shorten the hours of labour and develop their home life. But when it comes to a union saying to a man who has to earn his bread and butter: You shall not take employment under these men, then I maintain that it is the duty of the state to step in and tell the gentlemen of the union who are on strike that they may go a certain distance, but no further. We have seen suffering on the part of families of labouring men who are endeavouring honestly to earn their bread and butter, and who do not wish to join these labour unions under the dictation of a foreign leader or to be controlled by such. When these men and their families are hooted at on the streets and otherwise abused, I maintain the time has arrived in this country when the gentlemen of the unions must be taught that while they are at perfect liberty to work or to strike, they must not directly or indirectly interfere with any other man who does not belong to the union, and who wishes to earn his daily bread at whatever wage he can obtain. More than that, if the capitalists become tyrannical they must be controlled likewise by the government of the country. In England, when that great engineers' strike took place a few years ago, the nation lost millions of dollars. Already the Dominion of Canada, by reason of this strike in Montreal, has lost an enormous amount which it will take years for the parties who are engaged in that strike to make up by their operations.

Mr. KENDALL. The hon. gentleman says that the engineers' strike in England entailed a loss of millions of dollars on British industry. If that is so, would the hon. gentleman tell us how he would measure the loss to the country that was caused by the control of the cotton industry by the factory men of Lancashire for a century?

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I shall answer that question at a later period. But I want to point out that I object not only to the tyranny of the labour unions, but to the tyranny of the capitalists. The labour unions in the old land are very tyrannical, and I will give you one instance: A wholesale dealer in the city of Toronto visited Staffordshire a few years ago to purchase a certain brand of crockery, of which there was none in the market. It was a little out of the ordinary line of manufacture. The manufacturer said he could make the crockery for him, but said he must consult the head of the union before he could give him a final answer whether they would manufacture that line or not. Business was not any too good at that time in the old land. The gentleman was notified next morning that the labour union objected to manufacture this class of ware, and the gentleman took his order to Germany, and Britain lost hundreds of thousands of dollars on that transaction alone. So, we find, Sir, that these unions may be carried to an extreme just the same as the tyranny of capital may be carried to an extreme. The only point I rose to make is that while I recognize the right of any labouring man in any part of the Dominion of Canada to strike, I want the gentleman distinctly to understand also that he has to allow any other free man to go and take his place without being molested, and without being hounded from one end of the country to the other, as is being done to-day. The time is not far distant when this sort of thing must be put a stop to. If men seeking to go to their work on the docks are to be hounded to death and trampled in the dirt on the streets of Montreal, it is time the law interfered, and whether it be done by the regular troops or by the militia, it is time the strong hand of the law made it plain to these men that this country must be a law abiding country, and that we must have the law obeyed whether these men be in favour of it or not.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have not received my union instructions with the brief which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) speaks of. I am not in a position to use the same kind of language as the hon. gentleman who seems to think that the longshoremen are alone to blame in this matter. The hon. gentleman, for the first time in this House, has alluded to violations of the law on the part of the longshoremen in Montreal. I have heard no charge made of that character this afternoon. So far as I am personally aware I do not know all the details of this difficulty between the longshoremen and the employers, but there is one thing I want to call attention to and it is that one of the most important contentions of the workingmen is that a fair day's pay shall be given for a fair day's work, that we find that there is no difference between the two parties in regard to this question and that the longshoremen have been satisfied in that respect. But, I have learned also that the chief grievance that now exists between the two parties who are contending is in reference to the fact that 350 men were brought to Montreal and to the threat that something like 1,000 more men would be brought to Montreal in order to perform the work that the longshoremen usually perform which will only have the effect of depressing their wages. I recognize the rights of workingmen the same as I recognize the rights of any other class of the community. Surely, when a man has nothing else but his labour to sell he has a right to associate with other men for their mutual advantage and mutual protection and so long as they comply with the law and so long as they guard against violating the law I do not see that there is any particular harm done to the country by an association of that character. I may say that those men who claim the right for their own particular class and calling to be associated together and to be organized are not justified in finding fault with workingmen simply because they claim the same right. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) spoke strongly to-day as a manufacturer—I think entirely too strongly. He has assumed that Mr. Gompers came from the other side for the purpose of fomenting trouble and difficulty in this country. If Mr. Gompers is doing so surely he will not lay the blame on the longshoremen of Montreal for bringing that gentleman here. They are not associated with Mr. Gompers in any way. He comes to this country as a citizen of the United States and he enjoys the privilege which the law of this country gives him, of speaking to the people of this country. He has now that privilege in the city of Monreal. I do not wish to approve of his remarks or to disapprove of them because I know nothing about them, but he has that right and I would say that the longshoremen are not to blame in any sense whatever. concerning him. I would say to the hon. member for North Norfolk that if a number of workingmen refused to work for a manufacturer simply because he belonged to the Manufacturers' Association, if the manufacturers brought that before this House as a reason for the condemnation of the workingmen, I would rise up in my place and offer a few remarks on an occasion of that kind in support of the Manufacturers' Association in condemning conduct of that character. So, I say what is good for one is certainly good for the other. Fair play to both is a proper thing. I will take some of the other close organizations in this country. Take the legal profession and the medical profession and no one will contend that they are not close corporations. I remember that a few years ago an effort was put forth to have it declared, for instance, that a medical gentleman moving from the city of Ottawa to the city of Hull, which is situated in another province, would not be allowed to practice his profession without being guilty of violating the provincial laws which would not give him that right. So the House will see that even the medical profession are protected and that they are a close organization. I quite approve of that, because, in their particular profession, it is necessary that they should be protected. It is a matter of life and death frequently and I am not in favour of quacks practising medicine. Then, take the legal profession. A member of that profession cannot pass from Ontario or Manitoba or British Columbia and practice his profession without violating the laws of Manitoba or British Columbia. Probably there may be some quacks among the lawyers who might attempt to practice in these provinces and in order to practice themselves and guard their interests the legal gentlemen have a close organization in the different provinces. So, I say it would not be becoming on the part of the legal profession, the medical profession, or of the Manufacturers' Association, or of the capitalists, to undertake to prevent the workingmen from becoming organized. I was very glad to hear from the director of one of the greatest enterprises in the Dominion of Canada speak as he has done. I refer to one of the hon. gentlemen from Toronto. Now, I know as a matter of fact that the railway companies in this country do recognize the trades unions. I know as a matter of fact that they have their grievance committees and that from time to time, year in and year out, the officials of the railway companies confer with the representatives of the unions and whatever grievances they have are adjusted and adjusted, I believe, to the satisfaction of both parties concerned. So I say that if the manufacturer is desirous of doing what is right, and if the employee is desirous of doing what is right no difficulty can occur between them. I was glad also to hear the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) say that this question should not be discussed in a party spirit. I quite approve of that but I am somewhat of a doubting Thomas at the time of a by, or general election, when I hear the hon. gentleman taking credit to himself and his department for the work he is doing on behalf of labour and appealing to the workingmen to support his candidate or party by reason of this claim. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to refrain from resorting to that kind of party warfare I have no objection I am sure to his statement and I would rather approve of not making this a party question at all. The idea has been suggested that if the hon. member for North Norfolk thinks that the presence of Mr.

Gompers and his course in discussing matters in the way he has been doing is a detriment to the country what is the matter of calling the attention of the hon. Minister of Labour to the fact and have him place one of his officers in communication with Mr. Gompers with the view of notifying him that the course he is taking is not in the interests of labour in this country. I do not care to take up any more of the time of the House but I understand there is to be some legislation proposed, probably to-day, and if there is to be I trust that all those hon. gentlemen who are so sincere in their efforts in behalf of the workingmen of this country will lend their best efforts towards making this legislation as perfect as possible.

Motion to adjourn the House negatived.

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY LABOUR DISPUTES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved second reading of Bill (No. 17) to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes. He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill has had the advantage of a discussion that has I trust prepared the mind of the House to give it a receptive consideration to the principles involved in the measure. Last session I had the honour of introducing a Bill of a similar nature, and on that occasion I stated that it was not the intention of the government then to press the Bill to a conclusion, but rather to leave it over to the present session in order that it might in the meantime receive the consideration not only of the employees and the employers, but also of the general public. Accordingly, I again bring the matter before the attention of the House, and I shall point out now wherein this Bill differs from the measure that was introduced last session. This Bill may be said to differ from the other in three respects. The Bill of last session provided for arbitration only—this Bill provides for an intermediate procedure, namely, an attempt at conciliation, and failing conciliation then arbitration. Under the Bill of last session the award of the arbitrators was enforcible by legal process to a certain extent as it provided penalties for those who disregarded the awards—the present measure departs from that, and instead of providing compulsion through the courts, it leaves the enforcement to such influences as may be brought about, in order to have it respected by public opinion and the good judgment of the parties concerned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In other words, do I understand that the arbitration is compulsory but without any legal sanction to enforce it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The award is given to the public and to the parties and there it rests. In the Bill of last session a permanent board of arbitrators was appointed by the parties and it was to remain in office for a certain term of years—under the present measure instead of there being a standing board, the scheme contemplates a special board to be chosen to deal with each case. These are, I think, the leading differences between the Bill of last session and the present Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As to the composition of the board; are the parties to have any voice in it under this Bill?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. Later on I will explain the reason for the changes. The Bill recites that strikes and lockouts, or whatever may lead to strikes or lockouts, are against the public interest. I presume it is understood that the measure does not deal with labour disputes except in respect to railways, and it applies to all railways in Canada whether under the legislative control of the Dominion or the provinces, whether operated by government (the Intercolonial for example) or operated by corporations. The Bill also applies to street railways and to all other institutions that may be known as railways. The Bill recites the reasons why parliament should proceed in this way, namely: that the public is interested in the proper transportation of passengers, mails and freight, and that whatever is likely to interfere with such transportation is against the public interest, and that therefore the public have a right to intervene to prevent such injury to their interests. In the event of it appearing that there is likely to be any interruption of the transportation of passengers, mails, or freight, or in the event of a strike or a lockout actually having occurred upon a railway, the Minister of Labour may invoke the machinery of this Bill. He may, on the application of either party, or on the application of the municipal council directly concerned, or he may of his own motion take steps to establish in the first place, a board of conciliation. He proceeds to do so by inviting the two parties to choose their conciliators, and if they comply with that request then it will be the duty of the two conciliators to choose a third. These three conciliators are the board of conciliation and mediation. In the event of either party making default, then the minister may appoint a conciliator for the parties so making default. There is also a provision for filling vacancies on the board; the party having the right to appoint also having the right to fill up a vacancy.

Assuming that the board of conciliation and mediation has failed to bring about harmony, then the Minister of Labour may refer the matter to arbitration and a board of arbitration is then appointed, which may be the board of conciliation if agreed to by the parties, and if not, then the board of arbitration is appointed in like manner as the board of conciliation. The board is clothed with the power to examine witnesses, to call for the production of papers and to make the award. It will be the duty of that board to ascertain the causes of the dispute, to make suggestions for its termination and such other recommendations as it in its wisdom may deem proper. That award and the report will then be presented to the Department of Labour and become documents of record. Copies will be given to the parties directly concerned, and to the press and the public, and it will be laid upon the Table for the information of parliament. There the jurisdiction of the machinery proposed by the Bill ends. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition will therefore see that the enforcement of the award is left to such influences as may be brought to bear, backed up of course by the standing of the arbitrators, the manner in which they have conducted the arbitration, and the force of public opinion. As I stated on a former occasion, I know of no other machinery for compelling submission to such awards, except it be the compulsory machinery of the law. There is a wide distinction between the two methods. My own inclination is altogether in favour of the principle involved in this Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. When did the hon. gentleman change his mind ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will tell my hon. friend when I changed my mind. It is true that last session I presented a measure providing different machinery. I was not on that occasion very sanguine in favour of that procedure, but I submitted it to the House and the country in order to get the benefit of the advice of the parties interested and of the public. There are arguments in favour of the enforcement of awards by compulsion, and there are arguments against it. The only law of that kind which has been on trial for any considerable time is the New Zealand Act. That was passed in 1894, and went into operation on the first of January, 1895. It has given more or less of satisfaction, perhaps dissatisfaction. Opinion is as yet divided upon it. A year or two ago the state of New South Wales desired to study the labour law of the state of New Zealand, and sent a very distinguished jurist to New Zealand to inquire and report whether or not in his opinion the compulsory law of New Zealand was a desirable measure. That commissioner studied the question pretty thoroughly, and made a report which on its face might be considered an endorsement of that method for the settlement of labour disputes, that is, a method under which the award has the force of a judgment of a court, enforcible just as any legal judgment would be. But he observed that the Act had only been in force in New Zealand during the period of a rising market. During that time, as a rule, the workingmen had gained by the awards. The question arises, would they acquiesce in the awards of the arbitrators in a period of a falling market ? It cannot be said, I think, that that law has undergone a complete trial, until the parties have had an opportunity of coming to a conclusion as to its efficiency when there is a falling market. If, after there has been a falling market in New Zealand for a term of years, public opinion should stand by that view, we would be warranted in adopting that method; but up to the present time, I submit, it has not undergone that complete trial that would warrant us in adopting it. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asks me when my views underwent a change. That is putting it rather strongly, because though I did frame the measure of last session, containing some very trifling penalties, they fell very far short of making it one that might be treated as a compulsory mode of settling disputes. The penalties were not very onerous and the methods of enforcement were rather mild. But I will tell my hon. friend with all frankness how this present measure came to be framed. When speaking on the subject last session, I gave what I considered to be a public invitation to all parties interested to assist the government in framing a measure. The invitation was responded to, to a certain extent. I am not at liberty to give the names of the representaives of the railway employees who consulted with me with regard to the framing of this measure, and I am sure no hon. gentleman will ask me to do so.

Mr. INGRAM. Did they approve of it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They did. But I will go so far as to say that I had the advantage of meeting on several occasions a large number of men representing different branches of railway employees, and amongst them their legislative representative, Mr. J. H. Hall. That gentleman, I understand, occupies a very prominent position in the labour world. He is, I understand, the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Order of Railway Trainmen, and the Order of Railway Telegraphers. He took part in all the negotiations with me, at which the railway employees were present.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Where is his residence, may I ask ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. His residence is in the city of Toronto. He was good enough to convene a meeting of railway employees and introduced to me the deputation, a very numerous one, of men deeply interested in this question. In speaking of the men, I would say that I was prepared to receive advice from both sides—not only prepared, but most solicitous to receive it; and I have had the opinions of some leading railway men in Canada in regard to this measure. Perhaps I would be giving an incorrect impression if I were to leave the House under the impression that it was a one-sided measure. At the same time, I would perhaps be conveying an equally erroneous impression if I were to say that it had the hearty approval of the railway companies. Yet I think I am correct in saying that some of the largest railways in Canada view it with hope. I think there may be in some quarters a prejudice against it. I am able to say, in regard to the Intercolonial Railway that the measure has the approval of the Minister of Railways. Well, I met a delegation of railway men with Mr. Hall, and we discussed this subject at very great length on many occasions, and it has not been my good fortune on any occasion to have met a set of men more zealously anxious to arrive at a proper solution of the labour question, than the men who assisted me with their advice in the preparation of this Bill. By common consent, we did not think it advisable to invite the reporters to be present during the preparation of the measure. There are delicate questions to be discussed between employer and employee, and there is always more or less an attitude of standing on guard assumed by the one towards the other. At the same time, I must testify to the unqualified loyalty of the representatives I met towards the companies under whom they served; and, having reached the conclusion that we could provide a law for the settlement of railway disputes by appealing to public opinion and the consciences of the men concerned, it was to me most gratifying to be assured by the men that, so far as they were concerned, the House and the country might depend on it that the railway operatives of Canada would loyally stand by the decisions of the board of conciliation and award.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand the hon. member for Vancouver to state that the trade unions of Canada approved of compulsory arbitration.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). What I did say was that in the majority of cases the labouring men had showed a disposition to agree in any decision arrived at by the government authorities.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The House and the country may rest assured that if this measure becomes law, the railway men will be found loyally supporting the government boards of conciliation and award. I am not in a position to speak of the other classes, but I may say that the committee which assisted me gave that as their opinion, and I have no reason to doubt that the railway companies will equally loyally abide by the decisions of the boards of conciliation and award. They are as amenable to public opinion as are the employees, and if we can get the employers and employees in Canada to respond to public opinion in their dealings with each other, we will have made some progress towards solving the labour problem. I am not one of those who hope to ever see an end to labour troubles. These troubles are incident to industrial life, and arise from natural self-interest. It is most natural that the employee should seek to better his position and that the employer should endeavour to make his enterprise as profitable as possible. The workingman wants a higher wage and the employer is anxious to make more money out of his investment. That is a condition of affairs which we will always have, and the more industrial progress Canada makes, the greater our industrial activity, the more frequent will be these frictions. It is idle to suppose that there ever will be an ideal state of affairs when every body will do everything desired by the other, and no man will have to stand up and battle for himself. But in connection with this question, it may be observed that the Bill does not travel beyond railway disputes, and while I might be asked the reason, I think that perhaps the bare statement of the question answers itself. The railway companies are creatures of parliament for the benefit of the public. They are not created for the benefit of any corporation or labour. They are created to serve the general community; and whilst both employer and employees have a deep interest in the working of the road, there is a still greater interest concerned, and that is the public interest. Therefore, on an occasion like this, I submit that the public have a locus standi, have a right to intervene and see that if the employer and employees fail to operate the road satisfactorily, then the public will do its best to see that the road is properly run and at the same time provide means for justice being done to employer and employee.

Mr. CLANCY. Through what channel?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Through the channel suggested in this measure. While, as my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has suggested, it might be desirable to extend this principle beyond railway companies, yet this Bill does not go beyond them. My hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) suggested last year that this Bill should be made to extend to telegraph companies. There are also coal companies and many other companies, monopolistic in their character, and which perhaps might properly be brought within the provisions of this Bill. I hope that this measure, if it becomes law, will prove so satisfactory in its operations as to lead to the extension of the principle into various other industrial channels. My hon. friend from Cumberland made a valuable suggestion, which I am glad to endorse. It does seem to me that the employers and employees of Canada would do well to recognize that the labour question is here to stay, that strikes and lockouts will always be resorted to until we supply some other tribunal for the settlement of these differences. We have lockouts to deal with differences of another character, but there is no tribunal to-day apparently within the reach of employers and employees except the tribunal of force, such as strikes and lockouts, to solve these disputes. Perhaps, therefore, parliament is not altogether free from blame in not having long since endeavoured to devise some better means than these violent measures of strikes and lockouts for the settlement of labour troubles. But coming back for a moment to the Bill, I will take the liberty of reading to the House a letter which I received from Mr. Hall, as follows :—

Grand Union Hotel,
Ottawa, Ont., March 18, 1903.

Honourable Sir William Mulock, Minister of Labour,
Ottawa, Ont.

Hon. Sir,—After the great amount of consideration that I have given to your Bill for the settlement of railway labour disputes and your desire to put a Bill such as it is on the statutes of the country, for the purpose for which it is aimed, I feel that considering those motives, it is one that should be endorsed by the members of parliament. The fact that the Bill has the power of appointing a conciliation committee, whose duty it will be to endeavour by all possible means to bring about settlements of disputes that may arise, I have no doubt will have good effect. Although in the train service we have had no serious difficulties between the train hands and the company for over ten years. and I don't see that there is a possibility in the near future of anything of the kind occurring, still, the fact of a measure such as this being under the statutes of Canada will place the Minister of Labour in a position to use his good offices to bring about a settlement of those differences, should they arise, possibly without going so far as arbitration. If, after the committee have failed to settle the difference, then the privilege of course, of referring the matter to arbitration, or of what is more a fact—investigation of the difference between the company and their men. They making their report to the Minister of Labour, who will according to the provisions of the Act, make report of the findings of that committee through the public press of the country ; this being for the purpose of influence by public opinion. Something, I believe, that will have that force behind it, that no matter which side of the controversy refuses to be fair, will compel them to accept reasonable conditions and to make a settlement. As I said before, the matter has had a great deal of consideration from myself, and also from other representative railway men of the country, and while admitting that there are a number of those interested who opposed the Bill, I think merely from the fact that they believe that the existing circumstances are all that are required, claiming that they have been able, up to the present, to settle their differences without interference from anybody, and believe that they can still continue to do so, and argue that there is no occasion for the Bill. But I am confident that a large majority of those interested are satisfied to accept your Bill, with the guarantee that it is intended to accomplish the one object—the bringing about of settlements of disputes that may arise.

As the legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Order of Railway Telegraphers, I have consented to the Bill as it is now introduced, and hope that all concerned will make the necessary use of the Bill, if the occasion ever arises, and also that it will be interpreted according to the ideas and intentions of the minister, and as I believe the Bill is intended to operate, and serve, my only wish is that it will be the dove of peace to bring about conditions where sometimes we have war and enmity to each other.

Respectfully yours,
(Sgd.) J. H. HALL.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of legislation on the subject of labour disputes. You can scarcely turn to the statutes of any country without finding more or less legislation of this kind. I shall not trouble the House with any review of the laws in other countries ; but, in case any hon. gentleman should desire a book of reference, I would suggest that he take up a book which he will find in the library, the Fifteenth Annual Report on Arbitrations, issued by the New York State Department of Labour. There will be found a collection of the statutes now in force throughout the United States, including an inter-state law and also the statutes of various other countries. On going through these different Acts, you find that with rare exception, the stumbling block in the way of their being useful is that the law is not set in motion except on the application of one or other or both of the parties. When the two parties, employer and employees, are at arms length neither is willing to manifest a sign of weakness by invoking outside help. The legislation of the United States is largely a dead letter, and I believe that it is largely attributable to this fact. There is a most interesting article published in the Bulletin of the Department of Labour of the United States, the May number, written by Charles Francis Adams—not the great lawyer and diplomatist, but a son of his, who has written a great deal on questions of this kind. I do not propose to read this article to the House, but the writer's suggestions are so much in line with this Bill, or rather the Bill may be said to be so much in line with his suggestions, that a reference to the article, I am sure, will be extremely interesting to the members of the House. There is a draft Bill at the end of the article. While I cannot quite trace all the provisions in the Bill now before the House, I have no doubt that the views presented by Mr. Charles Francis Adams in this article, assisted me in coming to the conclusion set forth in this measure. I refer to this article mainly for the purpose of pointing out that at page 670, will be found a description of the use made of the Massachusetts Act, a measure somewhat similar to this Bill, in the settlement of the great railway strike in the state of Massachusetts in 1877. The writer describes with great satisfaction how the state board, intervening at the right moment held a public inquiry, summoning the parties before them, and reached an award and gave it to the public. Both parties immediately accepted the award, and peace was restored. The article proceeds to argue in favour of a setlement of disputes by the aid of public opinion, the principle upon which this Bill proceeds. After the general scheme of the Bill that is now before the House became known to the public, I received communications from persons outside of the railway world inquiring why we did not extend the provisions of the Bill to the industrial world generally. One of these communications was on behalf of a very large and influential section of the labour world. I think that, from the tenor of that letter, we have a right to assume that the very considerable section of workingmen represented by that order would rejoice if some peaceful measure such as this were within their reach, so that, in the event of their having trouble, they also might get the benefit of this measure. But I replied saying that the Bill was, at present, limited to the railway world; but that, if it proved satisfactory and public opinion, represented by employers and employees, demanded its extension to other classes, I was sure that parliament would accede to that demand. I think the time has come when both classes—indeed the whole community—might well address themselves to the question of endeavouring to devise means for the settlement of the labour question. I do not regard this country as on the brink of some great upheaval, as some hon. gentlemen seem to suggest. There is enough common sense among the people to demand what they conceive to be their rights, but yet not to go too far. They may go much farther at times than is wise, but they will not go to too great extremes. But seeing that, in my opinion, the time has arrived, I desire to give some practical form to that opinion; and I would suggest whether it would not be in the interest of all classes, employers and employees, if both sides should seek to bring together a representative committee of men of both classes, to thresh out this question and see if they could not find a solution, perhaps somewhat in the lines indicated. Such a discussion and the conclusions arrived at would, perhaps, bring to bear upon the question such a force of good will and impartial opinion as to make it effective practically in all cases of industrial war. At all events, I do not think we are warranted in assuming that parliament cannot make effective legislation in this direction. Therefore, I go so far as to express the hope that the public will seriously consider this proposition and assist in trying to solve the question. To-day, I received a letter from a large employer of labour in the city of Montreal. There is a passage in the letter, which, perhaps the House will allow me to read. The suggestion comes from him that there should be legislation. Speaking of labour organizations, he says:

> That these organizations have the power to negotiate and arrange any matters of interest affecting the particular trade or calling with which they are connected. Failing to accomplish this by amicable negotiation, the matter to be brought into court and regularly tried, in the same way as any other civil matter, and in the event of a failure to comply with the decision of the court, pains and penalties to follow, the same as in any other case in dispute. I know this is a large order, but we have to face the problem now in a most unsatisfactory manner.

This is from an employer of labour. My hon. friend from Vancouver this afternoon, alluding to some remarks made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), asked whether the employers would be willing to be bound by rules. Well, this is a letter from an employer who suggests the extreme procedure of having a board established by law, and the award of that board to be binding as in a civil court, and enforcible by all the fines, penalties, sheriffs, and powers that the law can supply. I only cite it to show that there is a feeling abroad in favour of some such solution of this question. Therefore, I suggest to those who take an interest in the matter that they should try and organize themselves into a free deliberative body in which both sides may meet and debate the question, and see if some good cannot come out of it. At least no harm can come. I submit it is our duty as good citizens to make every effort to bring about some agreement. You cannot suppress the question. It will be present on every occasion. Therefore, instead of deploring and wringing our hands when we are confronted with labour troubles let us rather as wise men set ourselves to work and try to solve the difficulty. However, I am travelling outside the record of the particular Bill before the House. My Bill is not limited to railways. I should say no more at present than to submit it for the consideration of parliament, feeling sure that if it becomes law it will meet all reasonable expectations.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 139) respecting the St. Mary's River Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill (No. 140) to incorporate the Cardiff Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill (No. 141) respecting the Medicine Hat and Northern Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Davis.

Bill (No. 142) respecting the Elgin and Havelock Railway Company.—Mr. Fowler.

Bill (No. 143) respecting the Canadian North-west Irrigation Company.—Mr. Oliver.

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY LABOUR DISPUTES.

House resumed debate on proposed motion of the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) for the second reading of Bill (No. 17) to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). With respect to the Bill which has been introduced by the hon. the Minister of Labour, I may say in the first place that, even if the Bill is only an experiment, still I believe we ought to be willing to accept any experiment that offers any promise of useful results. I am bound to say, after hearing the explanation of the Minister of Labour, and after an examination of this Bill, that I cannot see that it does promise to produce any results that are likely to be of any advantage in allaying disputes between capital and labour in this country. It is a somewhat curious coincidence that since the establishment of the Department of Labour by this government a few years ago, we have really had a greater number of strikes, some of them very important ones, than I think we ever had before in the same period of time in the history of Canada. I concede at once that this condition of affairs in the country is such as to justify some action on the part of the government. It is suggested sometimes on the other side of the House that this is a growing time. I may say to the Minister of Labour that since this department has been instituted, it has been a growing time for strikes as well as for everything else. Now the first criticism which I would like to make on this Bill is that, if it is to be of any advantage at all, I see no reason for restricting it to steam railways and street railways. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour suggested that on account of the monopolistic character of the railways and street railways they should alone be included in this Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, not on that account.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, my hon. friend made the remark in that connection. I could understand the argument if there was any remedy to be given by the Bill by which the government, could, as he said, in one part of his speech, take over these railways and operate them, and relieve the country from a serious situation induced by a strike. If there was anything of that kind in the Bill, I could understand there would be some reason for restricting it. But, surely the Minister of Labour will agree with me that if there is to be any advantage derived from this Bill, it is an advantage which ought to be extended to any other trade or business when affected by a strike. For example, if the provisions of this Bill are to be of any use, why should they not be extended to the condition of affairs that now unhappily prevails in the city of Montreal, where a strike is going on which is paralyzing a very important branch of business in that port. There is nothing in the provisions of the Bill which would not make it as much applicable to that condition of affairs as to any strike upon a railway or street railway.

Then there is another suggestion which I would like to make. Does this Bill accomplish anything that cannot be accomplished under existing legislation? If it does, I would like to know what it is. I would like my hon. friend to consider that: What is there that you can do under this Bill that you cannot do as well at present? My hon. friend may say that you cannot appoint a board of arbitration. What is the use of appointing a board of arbitration unless the parties in the first instance will agree to accept its award, or are bound by law to accept the award after it is made

Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting at the present time that we should pass a law providing for compulsory arbitration, but I am merely pointing out that a law of this character seems to me to be absolutely useless and may possibly be detrimental because it will result in nothing. The hon. Minister of Labour says that we may thereby have an inquiry. Is he not at the present time making an inquiry in British Columbia by means of a royal commission in regard to the labour situation there? Cannot he get every opportunity for making an inquiry from the legislation in existence that he could possibly get from this Bill? He may say that he cannot get a board of conciliation. He can get a board of conciliation under the Act passed two years ago, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour whether or not any action has ever been taken in the establishment of boards of conciliation under that Act, or whether any advantage in so far as establishing these boards of conciliation is concerned has ever resulted from the passing of that Act. Then, if he is not able to answer in the affirmative, it must be doubtful whether he can expect any advantage to result from the provisions which he is now proposing to this House? If he wants a board of conciliation, if he wants intervention between capital and labour, can he not have it under the Act passed two years ago, or can he not have it by the intervention of the Deputy Minister of Labour, who, I believe, from everything I have seen of his work, is a very capable and efficient officer? If he cannot accomplish that by the board of conciliation which he established two years ago what is he going to accomplish by this Bill? In the first place, under this Act, if a strike is threatened, or is in progres, he establishes a board of conciliation and the board of conciliation proceeds to negotiate. This negotiation can be carried out under the boards of conciliation that we have already under the Act of two years ago or it can be carried on by the very capable officer who is acting as the Deputy Minister of Labour. Well, the hon. Minister of Labour might say in addition that after you have gone through all that red tape—because there is a great deal more machinery about this Bill than anything else—after you have gone through all that red tape of establishing, first, your board of conciliation it is, if I understand the provisions of the Bill, open to you to establish a board of arbitration which would take upon itself the duty of making an inquiry and making some award in respect to the difference. What would be the advantage of that ? The hon. Minister of Labour admits, as the fact is, under the provisions of this Bill, that when the award is made it may be absolutely disregarded by either one or both of the parties. What would you have accomplished ? The hon. minister will say that you would have accomplished something by your inquiry. You can make your inquiry now as he is doing in British Columbia, you can have your board of conciliation under his Act of two years ago and you can accomplish under this Bill nothing that you cannot accomplish as conditions stand at the present time. It would seem to me that it would be very much better for the hon. Minister of Labour to devote his energies to some practical purpose, not to the establishment of a tribunal whose award might be disregarded by both parties, a tribunal which may not be attended by either of the parties because there is nothing in his Bill to compel either of the parties to attend, there is no penalty placed on either of the parties for not attending this board of arbitration—a tribunal which if once appointed may be left alone in its glory to make an inquiry without either of the parties paying the slightest attention to it. Under these circumstances no possible good can result. If the hon. minister would devote his attention to some practical scheme by which both parties might be brought into agreement for the purpose of arranging to be bound by the award of some tribunal I think in that way he would accomplish some result in the end by reason of the fact that both parties had agreed to be bound by the award of the tribunal. In establishing this tribunal under the forms of law, but whose award is not sanctioned by law and which cannot have the sanction of law to enforce it, are you not really putting an obstacle in the way of an agreement between the parties to be bound by the tribunal ? If you can get capital and labour to come together and agree that they will be bound by the award of a certain tribunal you have accomplished something, because I believe that when capital and labour have entered into an agreement of that kind they will abide by the result. If instead of doing that you simply ask these people to attend before a tribunal that they may absolutely ignore and if you permit that tribunal in the absence of one or both of the parties possibly, to make an award, you are going through a mere form in the end, and how are you going to accomplish anything in that way for the settlement of disputes between capital and labour ? I do not regard this measure of the hon. Minister of Labour as one that is likely to produce satisfactory results, or, in fact, any results at all. I think it is a measure that will have about the same end, so far as practical results are concerned, as the measure which he introduced two years ago in regard to establishing boards of conciliation. In these questions at issue between capital and labour you must very largely have regard to public opinion, and I suppose the hon. minister is looking to the force of public opinion to enforce the award. But, I think in this he is starting at the wrong point. I think the time to invoke public opinion is when you are seeking to bring the parties into an agreement for the purpose of having an award made which both will submit to when it is once made ; but I think if you invoke the force of public opinion to enforce an award after it is once made, after the inquiry has been made (it may be ex parte), you are expecting too much if you anticipate therefrom any very great results. These, Mr. Speaker, are the very brief criticisms which I would make of the Bill in its present form and at the present time. We may be justified in making an experiment of this kind which has been proposed by the hon. minister who has evidently devoted some thought and considerable attention to the subject, but I say from my own brief consideration of this Bill, and looking at what has been accomplished by the somewhat similar provisions of the Bill introduced two years ago, that I for one would not anticipate any very great results from it, and I would think that possibly it might stand in the way of obtaining agreements between capital and labour to be bound by arbitration. I do not think that legislation can possibly do a great deal in matters of this kind, at all events, in the direction in which the hon. minister is moving. You cannot by force of legislation, compel any man to work for a wage which he is not willing to accept, and you cannot by force of legislation compel any man to give a higher wage than that which he is willing to pay. You have to deal with matters of this kind, I admit, very delicately, but you have to deal with them wisely with the view of arriving at an agreement as early as possible in the history of the problem which presents itself to the government for solution, and I would think that the object of legislation would be to bring about as early as possible some agreement between capital and labour—perhaps you cannot go farther than that at present—some agreement between capital and labour whereby the differences which lead to strikes and riots and difficulties of that kind can be submitted to some tribunal the award of which both parties would agree to observe. If you accomplish that by legislation, or if you take a step towards the accomplishment of that, then you have accomplished a very great thing, but it does not seem to me, with all deference to the views of the hon. minister, that the legislation which he has now introduced into this House is legislation which is calculated to bring about any such useful results as those which he anticipates.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I look upon the Bill which is before the House as being practically an extension of the Conciliation Act, and looking at it in that light, I think we can make up our minds that it will not do any harm whatever. At all events, the Conciliation Act cannot be charged with having caused one strike in the country since it was put on the statute-book.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman think it much of a compliment to the Conciliation Act which was designed to prevent strikes, to say, that it had not caused any strikes.

Mr. PUTTEE. I do not. When the Conciliation Act was being passed in 1900 I expressed the opinion that it would not be very effective and that it would be far better for us to attempt something more radical. However, since the leader of the opposition has pointed out that during the last few years, in connection with the growing times strikes have also grown, it is perfectly fair for me to add that so far as the Conciliation Act is concerned it is not responsible for causing a solitary strike.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not suggest it did.

Mr. PUTTEE. The Conciliation Act has been useful in closing up a good many disputes ; not more than I expected it would and in comparison with the number of strikes in the country very few indeed. I believe that such a voluntary Conciliation Act is necessarily limited to disputes that have grown old, disputes which both sides are tired of, and disputes of trivial importance.

The Bill introduced last year was practically a compulsory arbitration Act. That Bill has been withdrawn and we may assume that the reasons given by the minister were sufficient cause for him withdrawing it. I agreed last year that the Bill instead of being passed into law should be submitted to the criticism of all parties in the country, and there is no doubt that it was condemned, and condemned almost unanimously. I regret that, because most of the people in condeming it also condemned the principle of compulsory arbitration. I belive that had that Bill of last year been more thoughtfully and carefully drawn, it would not have been so generally condemned. A number of organizations, however, made this distinction : they condemned the Bill but they did not condemn the principle of compulsory arbitration. For my part I am in favour of compulsory arbitration and I admit that in that respect I am not in entire touch with the majority of the labour men in this country. Since New Zealand put the Compulsory Arbitration Act into effect in 1896, I have carefully watched all the findings that have been made and all the operations of their various conciliation and arbitration boards, and up to the present time there has been no distinct set-back met with. It does look as if now they were coming to the first test. It is pointed out that these years have all been practically on a rising market, and the test of the Act has not yet come. But, Sir, I notice that the Australian commissioner who went to New Zealand, after thoroughly investigating, reported to his government in such a way, that they have not only adopted the principle of compulsory arbitration, but that they have stricken out the conciliation part of the Act and adopted only the arbitration boards. These are in operation now in Australia. I believe that compulsory arbitration is far better than any process that has yet been tried to do away with strikes. At the same time I must say that I do not think that public opinion in Canada is prepared for a compulsory arbitration measure. I am thoroughly convinced myself that it is the proper method and why I stay with it now is because my experience is that strikes are a loss to the labouring men themselves ; that the defeats are too disastrous and that the victories are too dearly bought. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that we have more strikes to-day than ever we had before. In the last few years the number of strikes has been increased and in the years to come the number will increase. We are not on the threshold of a period of peace in the matter of industrial disputes. Probably this is the outcome, first, of the combinations of capital that preceded the combinations of labour, but at all events we can rest assured that there will be more strikes in the future than there have been in the past. That is why I believe we should go to the full extent that public opinion will let us go, to try and provide for the proper arbitration or conciliation of those disputes that are bound to occur.

I am quite in sympathy with the leader of the opposition when he asked why this principle of compulsory investigation should only apply to the railways. Last year I introduced a Bill to amend the Conciliation Act, and for that matter I have introduced it again in this session, although I fear it will suffer the same fate of not being called when the Minister of Labour is in his seat. My Bill to amend the Conciliation Act includes the principle of this Bill we are now discussing as regards railway labour disputes, but I believe that the principle should be made general. Probably it would not affect a number of the smaller disputes, but we have had as many mining strikes almost as railway strikes and they were just as disastrous I believe. It seems to me that this principle should be applied to strikes in large factories, because public opinion in these matters is just as effective as in connection with railway matters. Most of our mining strikes and most of our big factory strikes hinge between those representing the unions and the manager; one manager. I believe that if there was compulsory investigation and the whole facts were ascertained and the findings made and published, that probably in most cases the directors and the shareholders of the companies would get a better grasp of the matters in dispute between their own manager and the employees. I quite think that it would be just as effective in settling disputes of this kind as in settling railway disputes. Now, in my Bill there was one section which does not appear in this Bill, and I submit that it contains a very material provision. The absence of the idea of it from the Bill of last year, brought forward very general condemnation of that Bill. I may state, Mr. Speaker, that the compulsory arbitration principle as operated in New Zealand and Australia does not attempt to arbitrate between the individual and the employer. It arbitrates between two organizations, the organization of the workers and the organization of the employers. The weakness of the compulsory arbitration Bill of last year was that it only recognized the individuals. As this would lead to the disintegration of the labour organizations, very naturally and wisely they repudiated it. I urged that the Conciliation Act should recognize the principle of the labour organizations by having added to it another section, which would read as follows:—

> In no case shall a conciliator or arbitrator stipulate, nor shall it be stipulated in any agreement promoted or recommended by a conciliator or arbitrator, that any employee shall relinquish his membership in any local, national or international trades union or labour association; nor shall an agreement subject any employee to a penalty on account of such membership.

I believe the inclusion of such a section would in no way weaken the Act, but would to a tremendous extent create confidence in it, and in the good intention of this parliament in passing that Act. It is no use of this House or any employer any longer attempting to ignore the existence of trades unions. They are a fact and a factor in labour disputes, which must be recognized. The disputes that arise without them usually have very little merit in them. Men in this country as well as in other countries have been compelled by the very force of circumstances to organize, and rightly so; and to ignore the fact in any conciliation Act or arbitration proposal seems to me only to weaken the confidence of the people who are going to be affected by it. The Minister of Labour has explained to us that this Bill is acceptable to what are known as the big brotherhoods, the railway organizations—the engineers, the trainmen, the firemen, the conductors and the telegraphers. These organizations accept this Bill, because they believe it will not affect them at all; and in that belief they are right.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the good of the Bill, then, if it applies only to them and will not affect them?

Mr. PUTTEE. They state in their letter that they have not had a strike in the Dominion of Canada for ten years. That is very nearly correct. As a matter of fact, I believe the last strike was that of the railway telegraphers in 1895, eight years ago. The reason that these organizations have not had a strike for eight or ten years is that they are strong now. In the early days they were the very people who had the greatest number of strikes. They were then always in trouble. Every one of these organizations is an international organization. The reason that they have not had a strike for ten years is that they are strong, and the question of their recognition has been settled. They are recognized by the railway companies as a matter of course, and that means peace and harmony. The hon. member for West Toronto wants to know what will be the use of this Bill if it does not affect these organizations. Well, I believe, making a very generous estimate, that the five big brotherhoods comprise less than 20 per cent of the employees of the railways of this country. There are several other organizations with far greater membership than they have, which will be affected by this Act, which will have to put it to the test. For instance, there are the switchmen, the boiler-makers, the machinists, the firemen, the trackmen, the bridge-builders, the freight handlers, and a number of others. At least four-fifths of the employees of the railways will be affected by the Act, and most of their organizations are not yet recognized by the railway companies. If I might digress for a moment, I would like to explain what recognition means. Recognition in connection with trades organizations simply means the giving to the second party to a settlement or agreement the right to see that that settlement or agreement is carried out; that is all it means. After a strike there is a settlement, or agreement. If the union is not recognized, there is no one to see on behalf of the employee that the conditions of the agreement in his favour are carried out. Therefore to settle a strike without recognition of the union is simply to lose the strike, so far as the employees are concerned; but to settle the strike, with recognition of the union, means that the officers of the union or its committee represent the other side to the bargain. That is all there is in recognition. The large majority of the men who are going to be affected by this Bill are not the brotherhoods who have endorsed it, but the other organizations, the majority of which have not yet been recognized by the companies; and I submit that that fact makes the inclusion of the clause which I have read all the more necessary. Without that clause, I believe the Bill will be weak, but with it, it will be strong. Now, instead of our having a new Bill, I believe the Conciliation Act should be amended. But because things are not done in just the way we wish, we must assume that there is some reason why they are done in another way. I regret that we have not been taken into the confidence of the hon. Minister of Labour and been told what the reason is. I think this principle should be included in the Conciliation Act, so that we may find out whether there is any value in it, or whether we should substitute anything else for it.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Yale and Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, as a representative of a district where there are a number of organizations of railway employees, I feel that I should say a few words on this Bill, more especially as I have been approached personally by members of those organizations, and have had forwarded to me resolutions relating to the Bill. Speaking personally, I believe a compulsory arbitration law would be in the interest of both employers and employees. However, I found an objection to such a measure on the part of the unions of railway employees. The chief difficulty seemed to be in the formation of the tribunal of arbitrators. They seemed also to think that the measure struck at the union to a certain extent. In this respect I am merely expressing what they said to me, not offering my own opinion. As this Bill was originally introduced by the hon. Minister of Labour last session, it provided for compulsory arbitration and copies were widely distributed for the consideration of those more particularly affected. In my district, the unions were opposed to the measure for the reasons I have stated. Then there was a second drafting of that Bill which was also objectionable, but in the present Bill these objections are removed by certain sections. I may say that I received resolutions asking me to oppose the Bill as introduced last session and as drafted the second time, but the gentlemen who represents in Ottawa the interest of the railway employees of Canada—at least he so assured me and I put faith in his assurance—went over the Bill with me very carefully, and he instructed me that the Bill as now drafted is satisfactory to railway employees. He also showed me letters which he had written to the unions, which had forwarded their protest against the measure, not as now submitted, but as drafted in the second place. At all events, he showed me the letters he had written, pointing out how the objections had been removed by certain clauses in the Bill now before the House, and assured me that it was satisfactory, and I have received no further instructions to oppose it. I do not agree in the opinion of the hon. leader of the opposition that this Bill is practically useless. Although there is no provision to enforce any award, there is a provision for compulsory investigation. In the case of a dispute, the employees should have no objection to the facts being made public and thoroughly investigated, so that the public may understand the points in dispute, nor should the employers have any objection to an investigation being had and being made public. Such being the case, this Bill, if it does nothing else, will have the effect of placing the matters in dispute before the public so that the public may judge who is in the right, and either party to the dispute will no doubt be very anxious to have the public opinion in their favour. There will at all events be the moral suasion of public opinion, and the ultimate success of either party will no doubt depend considerably on the verdict of the public. For those reasons I propose to vote in favour of this Bill.

Mr. W. R. BROCK (Toronto Centre). I did expect, Mr. Speaker, that we were going to have a Bill presented to us on this important question which would have some backbone in it. But instead we have a Bill which really amounts to nothing. In a question of this kind, we should not forget that there are two parties to the dispute. There is organized capital on the one side and organized labour on the other. In this Bill, we have provisions dealing with a corporate capacity, which can be attacked in the law courts, and from which damages may be exacted. I refer to the railway companies. But the other party affected by this measure and which is described in the Bill as 'labour,' is a body which occupies an entirely different position. No doubt, what is meant by the word 'labour' is organized labour, organized up to a certain point, and the most cowardly kind of organization—one that can attack capital but cannot be attacked in return. It seems to me that the first thing organized labour should do, if they want to be respected, is to organize under the laws of the country and place themselves in the same position as other organizations which we have incorporated. But they refuse to come under the law and are in the cowardly position of having neither a body to be kicked nor a soul to be damned. We are placing capital in a most unfair position. I do not stand here as the representative, in any shape, of organized capital, but as a Canadian anxious to see fair play and fair dealings, and I think that my hon. friends, like my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), are also anxious that there should be some fairness in the legislation we pass. This Bill is most unfair. The very fact of its being so flimsy, the very fact of their being so little in it, makes it all the more objectionable because when a Bill of this kind becomes law, that is the end of it. We are told this evening that international organized labour is an advantage to this country. The advantage to this country, under our existing laws, is that labouring men can go to the other side and get protection. We are very anxious on this side of the House that that matter should take a different turn and that we should be able to hold out inducements to these organized labour gentlemen to come to this country and be protected. We are anxious to give them the same protection here as they get on the other side, but I do not notice that the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) are supporting the policy of the opposition in this House—a policy which would place us in a better position to deal with labour and industries as they are dealt with on the other side of the line. The government should legislate for protection, not only for labour but for capital and industry in this country, and not bring down a Bill of this kind that has nothing in it. The only inducement to pass a measure of this kind is to be found in clause four :

> It shall be the duty of the conciliation committee to endeavour by conciliation and mediation to assist in bringing about an amicable settlement of the difference to the satisfaction of both parties, and to report its proceedings to the minister.

That is the whole thing in connection with this Bill. Well, we have that already. I do not see that you are going to put any more strength into it, or that you are going to place this Dominion of Canada in any better position to deal with conditions on the other side of the line by passing this Bill. Indeed, I think we shall be in a worse position, for we shall have made a pretense or an appearance of doing something while really doing nothing. Now, Sir, these labour strikes do not take place in this country of their own accord. There must be some motive power, some spirit in them ; and that motive power and that spirit I assert again, notwithstanding what has been said on both sides of the House, comes from forces antagonistic to Canada on the other side of the line. Why should the port of Montreal be crippled at the present time ? Simply because an endeavour is being made on this side of the line to provide a system of transportation by which the produce of this country will reach Europe through Canadian channels. I can understand New York and Boston using all the means that are in their power to block the city of Montreal and the city of Quebec as much as they possibly can. How can they block them ? Simply by promoting a system of strikes such as that taking place at the present time in Montreal.

Mr. MORIN. Or by destroying the Welland canal.

Mr. BROCK. Exactly. We know, Mr. Speaker, that, a few years ago, thinking that one of our vulnerable points was the Welland canal, men came over here in the interest, not altogether of the United States, but in the interests of disorganized labour in the United States, to blow up the locks of the Welland canal and so interrupt the transportation system of this country. Those who are standing for the improvement of our transportation system are being recognized in the United States as a force. So, organized labour is joined with organized hatred of Canada and Great Britain. For, make no mistake about it, that is the case. We know what is going on in the United States ; we know that there is a party there antagonistic to Canada ; we know from watching the debates in Washington that one of the strongest arguments there against anything that looks like reciprocity is to tell them that this will result in benefiting Canada, and it is voted down by an overwhelming majority. We cannot shut our eyes to these facts, we must recognize them. Therefore, what we should have on this side is something strong, something well defined—not such an effeminate Bill as this now before us. We want something that will assert ourselves as a nation. We are told by one of the hon. gentlemen on the other side that he has made this country a nation. Sir, we shall never make a nation with Bills of this kind. No one will respect them. We have heard the representatives of labour in this House, and even they are not satisfied with this Bill. And I am sure the country will not be satisfied with it. That is why I ask the government to withdraw this Bill and endeavour, at another session, to give us something stronger, something more manly, something more national. In this Bill we are dealing with disputes between railway companies and railway employees. The railway companies have capital to be attacked. You can bring them into court, get judgments against them and collect damages from them. But, on the other side, you have an organization which is no organization when you come to attack them. They simply scatter into fragments. You cannot sue them, you cannot collect damages from them, you cannot bring pressure upon them to make them amenable to the laws of the country. In the city of Montreal to-day damages to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars have been done by organized labour. What relief can we get ? If organized labour is in the wrong, can we attack them ? If we sue them and get verdicts, from whom are we to collect damages ? This is a matter which should be taken hold of in a statesmanlike way. I stand here regardless of what effect all this may have upon the voting power of this country. We should do what is right, regardless of that power. The very votes that we pander to are the votes that will turn against us if we show weakness. That has been so in the past, and will be found to be true in the future. I ask the government to bring down something stronger, something more manly, something more national than we have in this Bill.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that there is very little difference between this Bill and chapter 24 of the Statutes of 1900, the last Conciliation Act. The only difference that I can see is in reference to the parties to whom it may apply. The Bill passed in 1900 applies where difficulty exists or is apprehended between an employer or any class of employer and the workmen, while the other Bill applies to disputes between railway employers and their employees. I do not know what interpretation a member of the legal profession would put upon it, but it seems to me that the first Bill might apply to railways as well as to any other department of industry. Is it not a fact that, under the provisions of the Bill of 1900, the minister has himself already appointed the commissioners that are now inquiring into some labour troubles in British Columbia ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is referring to the commission now sitting in British Columbia. That commission is appointed under chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that it could equally well have been appointed under this Act of 1900, which has reference to the appointment of conciliation boards. The Act provides that the minister may :

(c) On the application of employers or workmen interested, and after taking into consideration the existence and adequacy of means available for conciliation in the district or trade and the circumstances of the case, appoint a person or persons to act as conciliator or as a board of conciliation ;

(d) On the application of both parties to the difference, appoint an arbitrator or arbitrators.

The report is made to the minister, and a memorandum of it kept. It provides also :

It shall be the duty of the conciliator to promote conditions favourable to a settlement by endeavouring to allay distrust, to remove causes of friction, to promote good feeling, to restore confidence, and to encourage the parties to come together and themselves affect a settlement and also to promote agreements between employers and employees with a view to the submission of differnces to conciliation or arbitration before resorting to strikes or lockouts.

The conciliator or conciliation board may, when deemed advisable invite others to assist them in the work of conciliation.

If, before a settlement is effected, and while the difference is under the consideration of a conciliator or conciliation board, such conciliator or conciliation board is of opinion that some misunderstanding or disagreement appears to exist between the parties as to the causes or circumstances of the difference, and with a view to the removal of such minunderstanding or disagreement, desires an inquiry under oath into such causes and circumstances, and, in writing signed by such conciliator or the members of a conciliation board, as the case may be, communicates to the minister such desire for inquiry, and if the parties to the difference or their representatives in writing consent thereto——

—The government may appoint commissioners to make the inquiry.

I take it that all this would apply equally well to railway employees as it would to employees in any other line. So it seems to me, all the power that the minister would have under this proposed measure, he already has under the existing law. Perhaps my interpretation may not be exactly correct, but I notice that in his explanation of it, he himself tells us that the object is to aid the boards of conciliation in promoting the settlement of trade disputes and difficulties that arise from time to time between employers and employees, and that it is hoped that the affirmation of this principle may prevent strikes and lockouts. He goes on and explains it in that way. Then he refers to the English Bill of 1896. Long before 1896 the system was in force. Since then I think statistics show that six-sevenths of the disputes have been amicably settled by consent of the parties, either through a board of conciliation or by the parties themselves while the boards were in deliberation. The first Bill provides for conciliation boards and arbitration boards, the second Bill provides for the same thing. I see no difference except that the first Bill does not apply to railways, but it lays down provisions where the Act might be invoked, and which I think would enable the minister to take up railway disputes as well as any others. If that be so, then this Bill is unnecessary. Now the duty of the committee is set forth here. There is to be a conciliation board, mediation and investigation. That is conciliation and inquiry. Now what is the difference between investigation and inquiry ? Both have to report back to the minister ; neither have any authority to enforce their findings, and the dispute is left an open question.

It should be the duty of the conciliation committee to endeavour, by conciliation and mediation——

The very same words as are employed in the other one.

—to assist in bringing about an amicable settlement of the difference to the satisfaction of both parties, and to report the proceedings to the minister.

Almost exactly the same words are used. So it seems to me this Bill is entirely unnecessary. Then it provides for a board of arbitration. But the only difference I can see between the board in the Act of 1900 and the board as proposed by this Act, is simply this, that in the old Act the minister may pay the members of the board what he thinks fit; in this case the members of the board get $10 each a day, and expenses. It is left to the minister how much he shall pay the chairman. It seems to me the only result of this Bill will be to give the minister an opportunity of employing a few more of his friends to act at $10 a day and expenses, to make an inquiry, or become a mediation commission. In this Act there is no provision for an arbitration, if I understand arbitration correctly. I have always understood that arbitration was an attempt to ascertain the differences between disputants, to adjust those differences and reach some conclusion. In this case no conclusion is reached, they only make an inquiry and report. Therefore in my judgment this might more appropriately be called a provision to appoint a commission of inquiry, than to appoint an arbitration commission. They have power to inquire into differences, only to inquire and report back to the minister. Now I do not know whether the first Act would give powers to the commission of inquiry to deal in the same way with railway companies and their employees as it does with other companies and their employees, but I think it does. If it does, there is no need for this Act because it is practically the same as the other.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). It seems to me a very unwise thing to put on the statute-book an Act that is of no use, and can be of no use. Now when the minister introduced his Labour Bill last year he used these words:

> Although this is hardly the occasion for any lengthened observations, still, as the measure is somewhat novel, perhaps a few words now would not be out of place. I would say that the proposition is in effect one of compulsory arbitration between railway companies and their employees in regard to the various subjects of controversy that from time to time arise between these parties. The measure is confined entirely to the railway world, it does not deal with any other than railway industries.

Now since last year the minister has found that there is a strong objection to compulsory arbitration. I will not say now whether I agree with compulsory arbitration or not. A year ago when the minister brought in this Bill, there may have been a general feeling that compulsory arbitration had been successful in Australia, and especially in New Zealand. There can be no possible object in a Bill of this kind unless it has power to do something. This Bill has no power to do anything. It has power to get certain information in connection with certain railway strikes, but the only final power it has is to make a report, and that report shall be published at the country's expense in the 'Labour Gazette.' There is no power to compel either sides to agree to an arbitration. There is no reason, under such a Bill, why either party to a dispute should refer their case to such a tribunal. We have an instance of this in what was called the arbitration board of the board of trade, in Toronto, which was copied, I think, from a scheme of the board of trade in England. After a great deal of trouble had been experienced on the part of members of the board of trade in various cities, a board of arbitration was appointed which it was thought would result in doing away with the heavy legal expenses which arose when disputes occurred between members of the board of trade, principally in connection with grain operations. It was thought the disputes might be referred to this tribunal, and so save large legal expenses. I think I am right in saying that this board of conciliation, or this board of arbitration, has been an absolute failure. When a man wants to get a dispute settled, instead of going to his friends in the board of trade, he goes straight to law, where he can get a decision and pay the costs of it, which sometimes amount to more than the award he gets.

Another weakness in this Bill is that it is confined to railway disputes. Now how can we define railway disputes? We have to-day, perhaps, the most serious strike that has existed in Canada, in the case of the dock labourers in Montreal. I would ask the Minister of Labour whether, under this Bill, he can call upon these dock labourers to arbitrate their disputes, and publish the result of that arbitration in the 'Labour Gazette.' I do not think he can, if I read the Bill aright. This Bill takes power to arbitrate strikes of the most trivial character between street railway companies and its employees, in a town of five or six thousand inhabitants; but it ignores entirely the larger interests connected with railways. This Bill is brought in with the idea of adjusting railway disputes, but it does not provide for arbitrating disputes between teamsters and their employers in any of the large cities of Canada. It is narrowed to a small section of labour, it absolutely has no power and I contend that it can do nothing but bring about soreness and friction between the parties who are supposed to be parties to the arbitration which may be held under the Bill.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock) stated that the railway organizations are perfectly satisfied with this Bill. If so, I feel that that entirely relieves me from making any suggestions to him towards perfecting the Bill. What I arose specially to say was this: Some very hard things have been said about the organizations that this legislation is supposed to specially affect, and I feel that I would not be doing my duty if I did not come to their defence, especially as I believe such remarks as have been made were not called for and should not have been applied to the organizations that this Bill affects. First, I will say, that the Order of Railway Conductors of this country, known as the O.R.C., have for a great many years had a special clause in their constitution that strictly forbids strikes to take place under the auspices of this organization. That proves conclusively that this organization are not in favour of strikes and that they would not allow any of their members to engage in strikes. The organization is composed of men of good common sense, who endeavour to reason out with the railway companies any question at issue and to obtain in that way the rights which they think they should have as servants of the railway companies. These men perform a very useful work in this country. They have an insurance fund in connection with their organization and they are doing their utmost to supply the railways with good, capable, efficient men, men who are not inclined to strike or to create difficulties with the railway companies. In other words, they have a very conservative organization, and they do not care to take part in any strike whatever. So far as the organization of locomotive engineers is concerned, it is conducted largely on the same lines. I cannot undertake to say that the locomotive engineers have nothing in their constitution preventing their members from engaging in strikes, but knowing the conservative head of their organization, Mr. Arthur, by reputation, who is not a Canadian, but who resides on the other side of the line, and who has been at the head of the locomotive engineers for a great many years. I know that he has always taken the stand that the locomotive engineers should not engage in strikes of any kind whatever if at all possible to prevent it. They are entirely opposed to them, though, I presume, at times they are compelled to join in them. The other organizations to which this Bill applies, I know, look upon the question of strikes in the same light. None of these men are connected with cowardly organizations as has been said. They are connected with what I believe to be good organizations and organizations that will not be a detriment to the people of the country in any way whatever. In so far as this legislation is concerned and the legislation introduced into this House last year, I will undertake to say—I may be mistaken—that the very organizations that this Bill specially affects and the Bill of last year specially affected were not the parties who asked for legislation of this kind in the sense in which it has been given to them. They did not ask to be specially legislated for; if there was legislation brought down to this House, they did not ask that any exclusive privilege should be accorded them over any other class of workingmen. They did not ask to be specially selected as the only workingmen to whom legislation of this kind should apply. I am not aware of the railway men ever making such a demand exclusively, but finding that legislation was introduced into this House last year that they as an organization took very strong objection to, the hon. minister will bear me out when I say that during the recess between last session and this session, a deputation of railway employees met the hon. minister with the view of presenting their objections to the legislation he introduced last year. As a result of that conference between the railway employees and the hon. minister the Bill of last year was entirely abandoned and this Bill is introduced now. I take it that the railway employees believe that the government were bound to bring down legislation of this kind, and that being the case, they made efforts to have a Bill introduced that would be less objectionable than the Bill of last year. Is there anything unreasonable, wrong or cowardly about that on the part of these men? I think not. We are here to legislate for all classes of the community in this country. We are not here to specially legislate for any particular class or to grant any particular class of legislation. We are here to endeavour to legislate in the interests of the whole people without doing any injury to any class of people. From my connection with railway men in this country, I may say that a large portion of them are as conservative as the remarks I have just made at this moment. They do not want anything of a special character, they do not want anything that will injure any other class of the community; all they want is reasonable and fair legislation granted to them as it is granted to other classes of the community. So far as this Bill is concerned it may be that there are some very objectionable features in it, but, at all events, let them be as objectionable as they may, they are extremely mild, as the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has said, and being extremely mild, I cannot see how they are going to injure any other class of the community. Now, it is held in some parts of Australia in particular that where organizations ask for legislation and where they step in to have an arbitration with their employers, they should be incorporated the same as railway companies and the same as manufacturing industries, and that being incorporated, if they fail to carry out any agreement which they have made they will be just as responsible as the employers of labour——

Mr. PUTTEE. They are only incorporated for the purposes of the Compulsory Arbitration Act.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not discussing that point, but what I am saying is that many people hold that they should be held quite as responsible as the employers of labour. I may also say that in Australia, as far as the matter of conciliation is concerned, there is a difficulty. Sums of money have been paid to persons who have acted on the boards of conciliation. It was discovered that these men derived by reason of their being selected as members of the boards of conciliation, a larger amount of pay than they could otherwise make, and that by reason of that they adopted means of creating and fomenting strikes and difficulties between capital and labour. For that reason the people objected to those boards of conciliation almost altogether. This is the objection they found to boards of conciliation in Australia, and I would be very sorry indeed if the conditions are the same in Canada as they are in Australia, because, if the conditions are similar the same difficulty would occur in this country. The hon. minister stated to-day that this Bill is based largely on the lines of a Bill introduced in the United States. If that be true, then the conditions will arise here perhaps that have arisen in the United States. For instance, when a difficulty occurs between the railway companies and their employees and both object to take part in a conciliation to settle the difference, I presume that under such circumstances the Bill would allow the Department of Labour to have a compulsory investigation irrespective of either or both of the parties. If the result of the deliberations of the department is published in the 'Labour Gazette' in order to create a public opinion against the party who dissents from the award, I cannot see anything particularly wrong about that. If a railway company does what is right to its employees they can have nothing to fear from fair and reasonable investigation. On the other hand if the employees are not willing to enter into conciliation, and if on investigation the government finds that the employees are to blame, then it would be in the interest of the country that such a public opinion would be created as would compel the employees to resume their occupation. Let me give an instance of what has occurred right here in the city of Ottawa. There is a difficulty between the trackmen and the Canada Atlantic Railway Company. I understand that two responsible gentlemen offered their services to the Canada Atlantic Railway officials to try and bring about a fair settlement and that the offer was refused. Now, what followed? I do not know of this personally, but I am told it, and if I am wrong I shall be willing to withdraw it; I am told that all the heavier engines of the Canada Atlantic Railway are in the shops to-day, that the company is afraid to trust them on the line because the track is not in the condition it would be if the trackmen were continuously at work. If that be true, then some interference should take place on the part of the Department of Labour, because it has gone beyond the question as between the Canada Atlantic Railway and the trackmen, and loss of life and accidents may occur at any time. If the company is not reasonable and will not have their affairs investigated, then they should be shown up in their proper light before the people of this country. I do not think that the Bill goes far enough to enable the board to get sufficient information to arrive at a proper conclusion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Turn to section twelve.

Mr. INGRAM. Section twelve reads :—

12. For the purpose of such inquiry the board shall have all the power of summoning before it any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, or on solemn affirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and produce such documents and things as the board deems requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which it is inquiring, and shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of witnesses, and to compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases ; but no such witness shall be compelled to answer any question, by his answer to which he might render himself liable to a criminal prosecution.

It would appear from this that they might obtain the necessary information to arrive at a fair conclusion. I am not a lawyer, but from my reading of the Bill it would appear that there is no provision to enforce the findings of the board because there are no penalties provided. However, when the Bill comes up in Committee we will have greater scope to discuss its different provisions. I want to assure hon. gentlemen in this House that so far as the railway employees of this country are concerned, this is the first instance of any legislation being conceded to them without their specially asking for it and in which they are considered exclusively the only workmen that should be legislated for. I do not know whether or not this parliament has the right to legislate as regards matters affecting the manufacturing industries, or whether that is within the purview of the provinces. I know that in the province of Ontario we have what they call a Mutual Arbitration Act, but I am bound to say that so far as I know that Act is practically a dead letter. It can only be acted upon by mutual consent, and to my knowledge there never has been a case where, by mutual consent, it was put in operation. However, that may be, if the provinces have power over these matters, then if the legislatures are not doing their duty they must be held responsible to the people.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). We are bound to give to any legislation tending to improve the relations between employers and employees all the help we possibly can.

In that light, there are some features of this Bill to which I would call the attention of the Minister of Labour. In section 2 we have the provision that this law will apply to all railway companies, whether under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada or of the legislature of any province. I question very much whether we have the right in this parliament to legislate in case a difficulty should arise between the employees of a railway under provincial jurisdiction and the company operating that railway. At first sight, I do not think we have that right, and it seems to me to be a matter upon which we should have the opinion of the Department of Justice. In case any difficulties arose between railway companies under the control of the local legislature and their employees, upon what ground could we intervene or bring the machinery provided in this Bill to bear? This leads me to submit this further consideration to the hon. minister. We have had no legislation of this kind, so far as I am aware, previous to 1900, and it seems to me doubtful whether we have any jurisdiction at all to provide legislation for the settlement of railway disputes between employers and employees. These difficulties arise in connection with the contract for the lease and hire of work, and that contract falls under the subsection of section 92 of the Confederation Act, which leaves to the local legislatures everything which has reference to property and civil rights. The difficulty which exists to-day in the city of Montreal, is one arising out of the conditions connected with the lease and hire of work, and I question very much whether this parliament has any jurisdiction in regard to matters of that kind. I suppose it might be claimed that under the general terms of the Confederation Act, which says that the parliament of Canada has the right to legislate for the peace, order, and good government of Canada, we might possibly intervene; but outside of these words, I think all difficulties connected with labour disputes are under the jurisdiction of the local legislature, and that has evidently been thought to be the case, since the hon. member who has just taken his seat has referred to the measure on the statute-book of the province of Ontario relating to this very subject. I do not by any means claim to decide the point, but I think it is one well worthy of the consideration of the Department of Justice before we go any further in the consideration of this Bill. I wonder whether the hon. Minister of Labour has considered the wording of chapter 24 of 63-64 Victoria, the Conciliation Act of 1900. It seems to me that everything which is provided for in this Bill is equally provided for in that statute. The machinery may be a little different, the wording is different, but the same object is attained. Section 4 of that statute says:

Where a difference exists or is apprehended between an employer or any class of employers and workmen, or between different classes of workmen, the minister may, if he thinks fit, exercise all or any of the following powers.

This Bill makes the same provision, except that its machinery is restricted to railway companies. There is some difference in the organization of the conciliation commission and afterwards the arbitration board; but if experience has taught the Department of Labour that the particular machinery provided for in this Bill is better machinery, why not modify the statute of 1900, and make it serviceable for everybody? —because strikes and labour difficulties are likely to occur between all classes of employers and employees; and I do not see why one kind of machinery should be provided for in the statute of 1900, applicable to difficulties that may occur, for instance, between shippers and longshoremen, and another and better system of machinery, applicable only to railway companies and their employees. There is another feature of this Bill which I think we ought to consider very carefully before we pass it. The machinery it provides for will be expensive, there is no doubt about that. In the first place, the conciliation commission may be entirely organized by the minister himself. I do not know whether that is the interpretation of the hon. minister; but, as I read the Bill, if both parties to the dispute refuse to take part in the nomination of a member of the conciliation commission, the minister then has the jurisdiction to name them himself, as well as to name the third member of the commission; so that there will be a conciliation commission named entirely by the minister. I presume that of course he would endeavour to choose members who would represent all the interests affected; still the facts remain that the minister or the department of the government alone would name the commission, a commission that would act at the expense of the Dominion government. But what would that commission do? Its functions are merely of an investigating and conciliatory nature. It makes an investigation; it ascertains the facts. Have we not a department, costly enough, which at the present moment has power to ascertain the facts? Without naming three men or incurring extra expense, the Minister of Labour has the entire machinery of his department under his control, and can ascertain the facts just as well as they could be ascertained by this special process. And that work is done at the present moment, as my hon. friend from Toronto says, by the deputy minister. In fact, as soon as that official sees one of these difficulties dawning, it is his duty to investigate the facts. But apart from that, I think he has the power to ascertain the facts under oath, in such manner as he sees fit. Then, in case the recommendations of this commission are not accepted by the parties, we have the action of the arbitration board. That board of arbitration would unquestionably be still more expensive. As I read this Bill, the functions of the arbitration board are very much the same as those of the conciliation committee, but their form of procedure is a little different. Instead of saying to the parties we have ascertained the facts and think you should agree on such terms, the arbitration board proceeds with a little more solemnity to ascertain the facts and then makes a report. It does not deliver a sentence of arbitration binding on the parties but reports to the ministers, and that report is published and communicated to the parties. These proceedings might have more weight than the proceedings of the conciliation committee but not much more, because the members of the conciliation committee are qualified and will probably be chosen to form the board of arbitration. We would therefore have two proceedings, held before two bodies, having different names but with very similar attributions, and I venture to say that these proceedings would lead to no binding result. There is the crucial point. The sentence of the arbitrator binds nobody at all, and we are simply making additional unnecessary expense, whereas at present the department has all the powers necessary to ascertain the facts, and the minister himself or those he employs have all the necessary authority and weight required to advise and suggest a remedy. It seems to me therefore that by this Bill we are simply introducing expensive machinery without much result. I listened attentively to what the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) said as to the necessity of these arbitration committees or boards rendering sentences which would be binding on the parties. I understand the hesitation of the hon. Minister of Labour to introduce such legislation. It is something very new and about which a great deal may be said on both sides. I believe with the hon. member for Winnipeg that, harsh as it may appear and as it might sometimes act in certain cases, it will be necessary for us, in view of the great labour troubles upon which we have just merely entered, to adopt some such principle in our legislation, in order to compel a settlement of these labour disputes. I say all this, subject to the doubts I have expressed regarding our jurisdiction, on which we should have the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice. As regards provincial railways I am afraid that we would come into conflict at once with the local jurisdiction. But on general principles, at the stage where conciliation and arbitration would be suggested as a remedy we have no jurisdiction over labour disputes. It is only where the peace, order and good government of Canada are concerned, as for instance in the existing conditions at Montreal, we might intervene.

Mr. MONK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Except with the consent of the House, I have no right to make any further remarks, but as some hon. gentlemen have evidently, by their observations, invited me to reply, I shall try and dispose of their criticisms. In the first place, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) seem to think that, under the Conciliation Act of to-day we could proceed as this Bill proposes we should. I endeavoured to make it clear in my opening remarks that the American legislation and incidentally our Conciliation Act have the inherent weakness that they can not be put into force execept with the consent of the parties. Under the Conciliation Act, no committee, no board of arbitration could be appointed except with the consent of the parties. Therefore these hon. gentlemen will see that we have no statute enabling the government to refer a matter of this kind to arbitration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was fully aware of that, and pointed it out in the ccurse of my remarks. But the point I made is this, that in the present Bill, as in the Conciliation Act, you are appointing a tribunal which will not have the power of enforcing the awards it may make.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At all events, if my hon. friend did not refer to the Conciliation Act, his friends beside him did. As regards the contention of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, that because the two parties are unwilling to come together, therefore it is improbable that any good will come from his measure, I would refer him for his answer to the anthracite coal strike arbitration. You could scarcely find two parties more opposed to conciliation or arbitration, when President Roosevelt undertook to bring them together. If there had been statutory power, it is doubtful if these two could have been brought together, but by virtue of his high office, the President was able to bring pressure upon them and, practically against their consent, bring about arbitration.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not a fact that the operatives were always willing to submit their case to arbitration ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That may be, but I understand that long before the proceedings were given to the public, Carroll Wright, the editor of the 'Labour Gazette' and the 'Bulletin' of Washington, was acting as an emissary on behalf of the United States government, endeavouring by solicitation and argument to induce the parties to come together. What was given to the public was not the commencement of the difficulties by any means. But in the end an arbitration was brought about. There was no power to compel either party to submit to the award except the pressure of public opinion, and under the influence of that pressure, the award has been practically acquiesced in. While on that point, just to encourage my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, to belive that there is something good in that measure, I will read what Mr. Francis Adams has said with reference to the Massachusetts railway strike :

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am afraid I did not make myself clear. I endeavoured to say as distinctly as I could that I think the object to be aimed at in efforts of this kind is to get the parties to agree to a tribunal whose award they will respect.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that it would be most desirable if we could get them to agree in the first instance. But that is not possible. When they are at war and holding each other at arms' length, an agreement is difficult to obtain. If, at that stage, some third party intervenes and brings them together, by degrees the pressure of public opinion and of the situation brings about peace. In the case in question, with which I am going to trouble the House, the strike on the Boston and Maine Railway, neither party consented. But the board of arbitrators for the state of Massachusetts had power to hold an arbitration. This is the history of the proceedings :

At four o'clock in the afternoon of the 12th of February, 1877, all the locomotive engineers and firemen in the employ of the Boston and Maine Railroad Company stopped work in a body, abandoning their trains. The move was not altogether unexpected, but the operation of the road was seriously interfered with. The commissioners did not at first intervene, neither party calling upon them. Indeed, both parties were unwilling so to do——

I commend this to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition :

—for each was apprehensive, apparently, of adverse action. During several days, accordingly, the commissioners preserved an attitude of silent observation. After the lapse of a reasonable period, however, the board concluded that it was plainly time to recognize the fact that the public was suffering serious inconvenience ; for then the Boston and Maine Railroad was, as it still is, one of the principal arteries of eastern New England. The president and directors of the company and the employees of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers were accordingly notified that the board proposed to take a hand in the business. This it proceeded to do, and immediate investigation was notified. Both parties appeared, for, without confessing itself in the wrong, neither party could help doing so, and professed a perfect willingness to submit their cases. No suggestion of a readiness to abide by any decision that might be given thereon was either asked for or given ; but the board proceeded to hear witnesses and to elicit the facts. The inquiry was continued through three days ; and, on the 21st of February, the report of the board was made public, appearing in full in all the newspapers of that date. In it the commissioners, after carefully and judicially sifting out the essential facts from the evidence submitted, placed the responsibility for the trouble where the weight of evidence showed it belonged ; and thereupon proceeded to make such recommendations as in its judgment the exegencies called for. The effect was immediate. An authentic record was before the community, and public opinion, crystallizing, made itself decisively felt. It is not necessary to enter further into the history and merits—the rights and the wrongs—of that particular struggle. My object is merely to call attention to what was then done, and done successfully, as constituting the nearest practical approach consistent with our American political and social system to what is known as 'compulsory arbitration.' It was compulsory inquiry only, and an appeal thereon to the reason and sense of right of all concerned. Reliance was placed in an enlightened sense of right of all concerned, and an informed public opinion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There was no power, I suppose to enforce the decision ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. None whatever.

Mr. INGRAM. Only public opinion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing but public opinion. Neither party was willing and neither party consented. But the board at the right time, at the psychological moment, intervened, brought about an inquiry, made recommendations, gave them to the public and threw the responsibiliy for further trouble upon the party who refused to act upon them.

Mr. BROCK. After both parties were financially exhausted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) may have information on that point, but I have none except what appears here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long had the strike continued ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The strike began at four o'clock on the 12th of February. Action was taken after 'several days' according to the report. A strike lasting several days would hardly have ruined the Boston and Maine Railway, one of the main railways of New England.

Mr. BROCK. I thought the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir William Mulock) was speaking of the great coal strike in which the President of the United States intervened.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No; I was not referring to that.

Mr. BROCK. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He had been speaking of President Roosevelt and I thought he was still referring to that case.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I quite understand the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Brock's) mistake.

Mr. INGRAM. The strike commenced on the 12th February and the board reported on the 21st.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That would be nine days.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When did the strike end ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Instantaneously. The account does not say that the effect of the report was magical but it was almost the same. Yes, here are the words— 'the effect was immediate.' So, the strike ended at once. Neither party was willing to assume the responsibility of refusing to act upon the advice of disinterested parties, doubtless men of standing in the community, men whose judgment satisfied the public as to where the responsibility rested. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) used some strong language, I think stronger than he really meant. I do not think he would really wish to be remembered as having spoken in that strong way about the labour unions. I am going to be more considerate than my hon. friend. I think he spoke in the heat of the moment. I do not think that the men who comprise these unions are fairly chargeable with being unmanly or cowardly.

Mr. BROCK. I wish to state my position. We were speaking of the two organized parties, organized labour on one side, and railway companies organized under the law on the other. From the railway companies side damages can be collected, but not from the other. Therefore, as an organized body this is a cowardly body. I did not speak of them individually.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) said. The hon. gentleman is not satisfied with this measure, because he says it is not strong enough. I do not know how far he would be willing to go as an employer of labour. He may be willing to go a long distance. But probably there are employers close to him who would not be willing to go so far. Up to the present moment, I think I am right in saying, the employers generally would not be favourable to any law that would go further than what might be called a moral law, one that would bring to bear the pressure of public opinion. I doubt that the manufacturers, who are the great industrial employers, would assent to a stronger measure than this. If there is any stronger measure that they would assent to, I should be very glad to hear what that measure is. The hon. senior member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has left the Chamber, and I cannot so advantageously refer to his remarks. He took exception to this Bill, putting it in somewhat different language from the other members, but with the same idea. He complained of the measure because it did not contain power to compel obedience to the award. Again I would ask him, as I ask my hon. friend from Centre Toronto, have they no regard for the power of public opinion ? For that is the power to which we appeal, and, in the long run, I think it the most efficient of all powers that govern the action of persons who serve the public. At all events, in this age I think it is altogether fitter to appeal to the power of public opinion than to the power of the policeman or the sheriff. There are only two powers, the local power and the power of public opinion. For the present, at all events, this measure proposes to appeal to the latter only. Now, exception is taken to this measure as being confined to railways. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that the Conciliation Act gave all the powers in question. I have already pointed out that the Conciliation Act does not meet the case, simply because it could not be put in motion except by the consent of both parties. But supposing that consent were waived, it would still be inapplicable. A Conciliation Act applies to what are commonly known as industrial disputes, this measure is limited solely to disputes on railways, that may lead to certain consequences. Section 3 reads :

> Whenever a difference exists between any railway employers and railway employees, and it appears to the minister that the parties thereto are unable satisfactorily to adjust the same, and that by reason of such difference remaining unadjusted a railway lock out or strike has been or is likely to be caused, or the regular and safe transportation of mails, passengers or freight has been or may be interrupted, or the safety of any person employed on a railway train or car has been or is likely to be endangered.

Then the minister may proceed. This is dealing with a special class of cases in which the general public have a special interest. Whilst the general public may be interested in a degree in an industrial strike between a private employer and his men, it is a different kind of interest altogether from the interest of the general public in the safe and satisfactory operation of public railways. In these the public have another interest besides the general welfare of the country, they are concerned directly in the safety of the passengers and the satisfactory transportation of freight and mails, all of which are essential to carrying on the trade and commerce of the country. It is a special case of special importance, in which the public are chiefly the interested parties. A railway company is given special rights and powers superior to those of the individual. It is given powers of expropriation, power to operate its railways even though such operation may endanger life and property under certain circumstances. It has extraordinary powers, powers to which the private interest of the individual must be subservient. The railways are undertakings to promote the public welfare. Those concerned in the operation of railways, either as proprietors or workers, are a portion of the general public. Therefore the justification for legislation of this kind in regard to railways rests entirely upon a different principle from legislation applicable to troubles between private employers and their workmen. For that reason it was deemed wise to bring forward a special Bill dealing with a special case.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier suggested that perhaps there was no power under the British North America Act to pass this Bill. Well, I do not think my hon. friend was serious in that observation. This Bill does not propose to affect property and civil rights in any way ; it proposes to hold an investigation. Is there anything in the British North America Act to restrict us in making an inquiry into any matter or any conditions in Canada ? I know of nothing.

Hon. Mr HAGGART. In other words, it is constitutional because it does not do anything ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is constitutional because it is not unconstitutional. It does not affect property and civil rights.

Mr. CLARKE. It is only intended to affect public opinion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware that public opinion is limited to a provincial legislature for its expression. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier contended in the early part of the day that we had ample power to settle strikes, and that we should go down to Montreal this afternoon and settle the strike there. Has the British North America Act undergone any change since this afternoon ? It has just the same force now as it had when the hon. gentleman was addressing the House with such force this afternoon. I think no one would argue that we have not power to issue this commission of inquiry. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) suggested that the fact of the arbitrators being paid might have a tendency to promote strikes.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. What I said was that in Australia they find that paid members of the board foment strikes and difficulties of that character for the purpose of obtaining their daily pay. I did not express my own opinion at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then I misunderstood my hon. friend. But I will point out that the objection cited by the hon. member for East Elgin could have no force here because in the New Zealand Act—the Australian Act is taken from the New Zealand Act,—there is a standing board, and therefore the arbitrators know before hand that they will be called upon to act. In this case there is no standing board, but only an arbitration board to be chosen pro hac vice. Therefore, until a strike is threatened or commenced, there can be no person chosen and no one knows who the arbitrators will be.

Mr. INGRAM. I said if the same conditions existed in both countries the same results might follow.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am pointing out to my hon. friend that the law there is different, no arbitrators are appointed until the difficulty arises, and the commission is only constituted when the parties to compose the board are notified of their appointment. Mr. Speaker, I think I have reviewed the technical objections that have been taken to the measure, and I have no hesitation in inviting the House to read this Bill the second time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has mentioned the fact that the railways have extraordinary powers. I do not exactly see any connection between that fact and anything in this Bill. I would like to understand this : It is expected by the Minister of Labour, if we may judge from the illustrations he has produced to the House, that this measure will produce important results, such results as was produced in Massachusetts in settling an important strike in a period of nine days. Now, if there is any such virtue in this Bill, why should it not be applied to strikes such as that now going on in Montreal ? Is there any reason to suppose that this measure will be less successful with a strike of that kind than with strikes upon railways ? Is there any reason that can be suggested why the measure should not be as useful in one case as in the other ? If it will produce such results, why we might have had this Montreal strike settled already, we might have had the Canada Atlantic strike settled long ago. I have not yet understood from the Minister of Labour any valid reason given why this legislation, from which he expects so much, should be restricted to railway strikes. I am not asking this for the purpose of embarrassing the minister, but only to understand what is in his mind on the subject.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend will see that however sanguine one is in regard to the efficacy of this measure, it must be remembered that it is only a tenative one. It was begun last year with reference to railways alone, and has been continued with respect to railways alone, because of their special character. They stand on a different footing. I stated before and I repeat it now, that we hope public opinion will favour the extension of this principle beyond the present limited scope of railways, but I doubt if public opinion in Canada to-day is sufficiently prepared to say that we should pass even what some hon. gentlemen call this weak measure and make it applicable generally throughout Canada to all sorts of industrial establishments.

Mr. CLARKE. Why should you have any objection to this measure being applied to other industrial establishments if it depends on public opinion ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are a great many measures that might be passed but it is usual for legislatures to wait until public opinion is reasonably ripe before thrusting them upon an unwilling public. If public opinion were against this mode of treatment, then, to proceed with undue haste might set back the movement rather than accelerate it. There is such a thing as making haste too fast and if, later on, public opinion, from the working of this measure in regard to railways, comes to the conclusion that it will be beneficially extended and made more general that extension will take place and good will come from it, but if we had a large part of the public perhaps resisting it we would be forcing it upon an unwilling public. There is nobody in this House who can speak for the employers of labour and say that they would consent to this measure. There is no member of this House who will say that even the employees would consent to this principle being made general. I, however, believe that a considerable number of them throughout the country would welcome it, but it is impossible for any one to get up in this House and say that the general public want this measure to be extended and to to have general application.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. minister on what authority does he say that no person in this House can speak as to the opinion entertained by the employers of labour as to whether the extension of this principle to their different crafts would be acceptable or not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there is no member of this House who has any authority to speak on behalf of the employers of labour in Canada. I am not aware that the employers of labour have met and expressed an opinion upon this subject. If they have and if there is any one who could speak on their behalf, no one would rejoice more than myself at such an announcement, and I am sure the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) would agree with me.

Mr. CLARKE. It will be a pleasure to me to agree with the hon. gentleman, though it will be a hard matter sometimes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with me at the present moment that even he, however well informed he is as to the state of public opinion, either in the ranks of the employers or in those of the employees, and however courageous he may be, will not at this moment undertake to speak on behalf of either one and to say that either one would give his consent to the extension of this principle.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister is certainly right in saying that I would not undertake to speak for either party, for the employers or the employees. I am sure that every person on this side of the House earnestly desires that all the good the hon. minister expects from this Bill may be accomplished and more than accomplished. I understand from what the hon. gentleman said during the explanation which he made upon the second reading of the Bill, that he had consulted all the employers and employees who will be affected by the operation of this Bill when it becomes enacted. That being the case, and anticipating, as the hon. gentleman does, and I hope rightly anticipating, great benefit from the passage of this Bill, surely if it is to be of any practical benefit to both employers and employees it was the duty of the hon. gentleman to instruct some officer, or officers, of the Department of Labour, to ascertain from employers of labour other than those engaged in conducting railways, and from employees other than those engaged on railways, what their opinion would be if general legislation of this kind were passed instead of leigslation applying solely to the operation of railways. If there is to be any benefit derived from the operation of this Bill in its application to railways, why not extend the benefit to others ? Why not to steamers, why not to those large industrial establishments scattered all through the country, why not have all these great industries brought under the operation of this Bill ? Surely there has been a dereliction of duty on the part of the officers of the Department of Labour, if not on the part of the hon. minister—I say it, of course, with a great deal of respect—in not taking steps to ascertain what the opinion of the employers of labour and of the employees in Canada is as to the general application to other industrial establishments of the principles of this Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has been in public life many years. He is well aware that public opinion is not obtained in regard to great legislative measures by any such procedure as that. You could not send out a bulletin to five or six million people and ask them what their opinion is on a proposed measure. There is a well recognized way of ascertaining public opinion. Subjects are discussed in the House, in the country, on the platform and in the press and gradually public men come to form an opinion as to what is the will of the people, and from their places in parliament they make their opinions known. If the hon. gentleman who is in touch with public opinion in a great industrial centre is able to speak for his people we may make some progress, but there is no such practicable method as he suggests for ascertaining public opinion. This discussion will perhaps lead to the general public taking an interest in this idea. From time to time discussions on this line are developed. This afternoon I threw out a hint which I hope will bear fruit, that the employers and employees should endeavour to consider this question, and perhaps they might organize with the object of getting representatives together to debate it. But it cannot be done without the fullest discussion, and that is a process involving a considerable length of time. Employers or employees would not be able to give a valued opinion upon the question without full discussion. Discussions such as these prepare public men to consider public questions and to give valued opinions upon them. I have to thank the House for allowing me the privilege of a second time of addressing it on the subject, although I had no intention of suspending action for the purpose of considering any of the points that were raised by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I intend to say a few words in reference to this, what I call, peculiar legislation, introduced by the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), legislation introduced for the purpose of informing the community and which is to be acted upon by public opinion. The hon. gentleman mentioned some legislation of this kind in the state of Massachusetts, and we had legislation of a similar character introduced in 1900, legislation, as the hon. minister says, which is intended to carry out some views, or some ideas of some people in this country with means of enforcement and penalties attached when its provisions are not carried out. This legislation has no effect at all. This Bill is evidently prepared on the lines of the New Zealand legislation, introduced in 1894 or 1895, providing for the creation of conciliation boards and boards of arbitrations. I listened to the hon. minister and he particularly stated that as long as times were prosperous and as long as wages were advancing in the country the awards of the board of arbitrament would be accepted both by the employees and by the employers of labour in the community. But the moment depression comes, it is likely one or the other will object to the award. I have read an American author who speaks highly of the New Zealand system, and who says it is in advance of any legislation in any part of the world. I have also read the report of the Australian commissioners who inquired into the New Zealand system with a view to its adoption in Australia. On the other hand, I have read a New Zealand author who condemns the system altogether, and indeed the opinion now seems to be, that the result of the arbitration law in New Zealand law is not as satisfactory as its friends hoped for. I believe there is a necessity for legislation in some direction for the settlement of these labour disputes, but whether it is within the authority of this federal parliament or of the provincial legislatures is a question for serious consideration. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) pointed out that this Bill took jurisdiction over provincial railways and electric railways, as well as Dominion railways, and the minister replied to him that this Bill was only for the purpose of finding out the facts and influencing public opinion. It is notorious that the control over provincial and electric railways is in the provincial legislatures, and thus it is that we are legislating here to influence public opinion to influence the local legislatures to pass laws to remedy grievances. The minister told us that the simple fact of the finding of an arbitration board in Massachusetts so influenced public opinion that the disputants were compelled to settle a strike. If the hon. gentleman inquires, he will find that the Massachusetts Railway Commission has the power to remedy such grievances, but legislation of this kind, although it may be passed by the legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is not the sort of legislation that is usually adopted by a British parliament. What is the need of this Bill at all, if it is only for the purpose of reporting the facts. The government have power now to appoint a Royal Commission at any time, and the report of that Royal Commission may affect public opinion and what is better still, it brings the matter before this House. There should be an alternative in this Bill, so that if public opinion is not sufficient to enforce the award of the board of arbitration, then the law should step in to enforce it. That is what I would call proper legislation. This Bill is simply parade legislation. It can be of little or no utility when there is no penalty provided to enforce its provisions.

Mr. CLARKE. I congratulate the Minister of Labour upon the decided change he has made in this Bill as compared with the Bill which he introduced last session. Last year's Bill was on the lines of compulsory arbitration, but the minister had an opportunity of meeting those who would be affected by such legislation, and he ascertained public opinion so quickly that the result was that he introduced the measure which we are now discussing. I shall not offer any opposition to this Bill. It certainly cannot do any harm, but I do not expect that much good will come from it. However, the minister hopes a great deal from the Bill, and I trust that his expectations will be more than realized. Last year, with a great flourish of trumpets he proposed compulsory arbitration ; but he recedes from that position now, having ascertained what public opinion was in the meantime.

An hon. MEMBER. What was it ?

Mr. CLARKE. The result was the emasculation of last year's Bill and the presentation of the present Bill, and I think the minister acted very wisely in accepting the suggestions that were made to him. My hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) who takes a great deal of interest in matters affecting the working classes, tells us that this Bill is acceptable to the railway employees whom the minister had the pleasure of meeting, and he says that the reason it is acceptable to them is because it does not affect them in any way. They are perfectly satisfied with the provisions of the Bill, because it does not affect them in any way. That I believe is the fact, except in so far as the findings of the arbitration commission may affect them through its effect on public opinion. I hope the Bill may have some good effect, and I am not going to offer any opposition to it; but I have not heard any sufficient answer to the question propounded again and again on this side of the House, why, if this measure is going to work satisfactorily—and I sincerely hope it will—its provisions are only made applicable to railway disputes instead of being made applicable generally to all industrial disputes in the Dominion of Canada. The minister has nothing to fear from making the application of this Act general. I am satisfied that the measure is so harmless, if I may be permitted to use that expression, that its application to all the industries of the country would not be opposed by the working classes. They are always willing to place their side of a case before arbitrators or before the public, and I am perfectly satisfied that if they were all brought under the provisions of this Bill, they would willingly accept it and it might do some good.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Bill of my hon. friend is based on the ArbitrationActs passed in the United States. The first two states to establish boards of arbitration were the state of New York and the state of Massachusetts, in 1886. Fourteen other states have since passed similar laws. These states are: California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Missouri, Montana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Ohio, Michigan, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana. The state boards in the United States are composed, just as the Bill of my hon. friend provides that this board shall be composed, namely, of three members—one an employer, one an employee, who is generally appointed at the recommendation of the labour organizations, and the third of another class. The state board of arbitration may be invoked by the desire of both parties to a dispute, or the board may interfere itself.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the Acts compulsory, then?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the powers of enforcement?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When both parties agree to submit a labour dispute, the result is binding. Only in Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin have state boards been appointed; in all the other states the law has been a dead letter. The report of the Industrial Commission, which I hold in my hand, and which is a very interesting document says:

> It is very difficult to estimate correctly the amount, nature and value of the work of the state boards of arbitration.

The resumé of this report is that these state boards have not done much. There are only three or four states in which they have done some active work. Outside of these states they have not accomplished anything. As some hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this Bill have said, it cannot do any harm. I hope that it will do good; but if we are to judge of the results of this legislation by the results which have been achieved in the United States, I am very much afraid it will not do as much as some of our friends expect it will. However there is no harm in trying, and, so far as I am concerned, I am glad the hon. Minister of Labour has introduced this Bill. We have not so far tried any device for settling our labour disputes, which are becoming dangerous, and it is time we tried something. On that account I think both sides of the House will be pleased that the Minister of Labour is doing something, and if he does not succeed, he will try to do something better in another year.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 1,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I move to insert in the fourth line the word 'may' between the words 'strike' and 'interfere.'

Mr. CLARKE. What is the object of inserting the word 'may'? According to the argument of the hon. gentleman, the reason this Bill is enacted is because these strikes do interfere with the carriage of mails, etc. Is there any doubt about it? What is the sense of putting in the word 'may'? It destroys all the arguments made this afternoon for this legislation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman's objection is well taken, and I will not press the amendment. I was asked to make it, but I had not read it very carefully.

On section 3,

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose by this the government take power to appoint two members of the committee, and three if necessary. The minister may appoint the two first and name a third in case none of the parties make a selection.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Each party will be called on to appoint one, and these two may appoint a third, and it is only when either or both the parties make default that the minister acts.

Mr. LOGAN. This section provides that each party to the dispute may choose an arbitrator, and if the two arbitrators cannot agree on the third, the choice of the third will be left to the minister. But in cases of dispute on the Intercolonial Railway that would give an unfair advantage to the government. The men would choose one of the arbitrators, the Minister of Railways would choose another, and in case these two could not agree, the Minister of Labour would choose the third. So that the government would have the choice of two of the arbitrators and the men would only have the choice of one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not intend to press the Bill to a final reading to-night. My hon. friend has already brought this point to my attention, and I think there is something in it. It would be quite right, in the case of the Intercolonial, to give the appointing of the third arbitrator to an outside tribunal, in case the two others could not agree, but as I do not intend to press the Bill to its third reading, my hon. friend will have an opportunity to make any suggestion at the final stage of the Bill, and have it amended to meet the difficulty he mentions.

Mr. LOGAN. This objection has been raised by the men on the Intercolonial Railway, and I have written to the principle officers of the union, making certain suggestions. I have suggested that the third arbitrator should be chosen by the Chief Justice of the province or the Governor in Council of the province, but I have not yet received any intimation from the union as to which they would prefer, or any suggestion as to what else they desire shall be done.

Mr. INGRAM. As this Bill has been read the second time this afternoon, I do not think that it is proper that we should proceed with it in committee.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If any hon. gentleman wishes, I shall not press it. I thought that the House was anxious to put it through committee.

Mr. INGRAM. In view of the discussion on the Bill, hon. members on both sides may receive certain suggestions that might improve it, and as it is a government measure, a delay of a couple of days would not interfere with its passing.

Progress reported.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 109) to correct a clerical error in the Act to incorporate the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick.

RETIRING ALLOWANCE OF JUDGES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. C. Fitzpatrick) moved that Order No. 17, namely: House in Committee on resolution regarding the retiring allowance of judges be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

QUESTIONS.

RAILWAY LAND GRANTS.

Mr. SCOTT asked:

1. With respect to so much of the railway land grants as has been reserved for, earned by, and selected by each company to which such grants have been voted, what is the area remaining unpatented in each case, (a) in Manitoba, (b) in North-west Territories?

2. What is the date on which it is intended in each case that these lands shall be patented?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The answer is as follows:

In Manitoba.

Name of Railway.	Area earned and selected and not patented. Acres.
Canadian Northern Railway..	253,698·53

The company is proceeding with the selection of its lands and has advised the department from time to time of parcels of land it is willing to accept if found to be available. Patents are being issued for the lands selected.

Manitoba South-western Colonization Railway, 313,402·82 acres.

Patents for the lands earned by this company up to 900,000 acres can only be issued on the order of the Manitoba government, under the provisions of an order of His Excellency in Council, dated April 5, 1886, that province having aided the construction of the railway by the issue of debentures to the extent of $900,000.

In the North-west Territories.

Name of Railway.	Area earned and selected and not patented. Acres.
Alberta Railway and Coal Company....	22,048·42

The issue of patents for these lands is stayed at the request of the company for a short time pending readjustment as to a few hundred acres.

Calgary and Edmonton Railway, 304,288·90 acres.

The above area of selected lands, which is now in course of being patented, closes out the land grant of this company except an area of 407,402 acres held as security by the government under the transport contract between the government and the company, dated June 21, 1890.

Canadian Pacific Railway, main line, 3,044,635·53 acres.

These lands are in the Edmonton district and are unsurveyed. Contracts for the surveys are let. The lands will be patented as soon as surveyed.

Canadian Pacific Railway, Pipestone extension of Souris branch, 200,320·00 acres.

These lands are in a block of townships about thirty miles north of Battleford and are unsurveyed.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Manitoba South-western Colonization Railway, 680,189·28 acres.

Patents for the lands earned by this company up to 900,000 acres can only be issued as already stated.

Manitoba and North-western Railway, 354,000·00 acres.

A large proportion of the lands are unsurveyed. Survey is to be made this year. There remains only a small area to be selected by the company to complete the area earned, and patents to close out the grant, so far as surveyed, are in course of preparation.

Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company, 169,434·00 acres.

These lands are partly unsurveyed but the contracts for the surveys are let. Patents are being issued for selected lands where surveyed.

SOUTHPORT AND MURRAY HARBOUR RAILWAY.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked:

1. Were tenders invited for building the railway between Southport and Murray Harbour, in the province of Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, how many tenders were received; what were the names of the tenderers; and amounts of their respective offers?

3. If tenders were not invited for building the whole line, what part of the work was let by public tender; and what part by private contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

These questions were answered last session, but I repeat the information.

1. and 2. No, tenders were not invited for the whole section from Southport to Murray harbour.

3. Tenders were invited for the first section—Mutch's Point to Village Green, 11½ miles. The second section extending from the 11½ miles to the terminus was given to the contractor, who had the work of the first section, by extending his contract to cover the said section.

HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked:

1. What is the name of the contractor building the Hillsborough bridge, Prince Edward Island?

2. Were tenders invited for said work, and was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?

3. What were the terms and conditions for carrying out said contract?

4. When is the contract to be completed; and is the work being satisfactorily prosecuted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. M. J. Haney.

2. Yes, tenders were invited for this work, and the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer.

3. The work is being carried out under the usual terms and conditions embodied in the form of contract adopted by the department.

4. The date for the completion of the contract is December 31, 1903. Yes, the work is being satisfactorily prosecuted.

TELEPHONE COMPANIES IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. What telephone companies are operating in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island ?

2. Who are the shareholders in the said companies ?

3. What is the par value of the shares of the said companies, and what is their present market value ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The government has received no official returns from the telephone companies referred to. These companies are organized under provincial charter and make no returns to us. We are not supplied with lists of their shareholders, nor do we know what their stock is selling at or anything of their business.

THE RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways, was read the second time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) moved that the House go into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) to state whether he intends to refer this Bill to a special committee for the purpose of giving the railways interested an opportunity to state whether the Bill is acceptable to them or not, and to offer any suggestions they may desire to offer. I would also like to know whether he has received any representations from the different railway companies throughout the country or from boards of trade and others with reference to the scope and nature of the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not contemplate making any motion to refer this Bill to a special committee, at this stage at all events. I have not heard from the railway companies. I put the companies in possession of copies of the Bill as soon as it was printed and introduced in the House, and gave them to understand that I would be much pleased to receive from them their views with regard to any of its provisions. There was an understanding that they would meet to discuss the question and put their views in writing. They had hoped to do this before now, but they have not been able to hold the meeting yet. Still, I think we are in a position to make considerable progress with the Bill, in relation to those portions of it that may not be contentious, reserving, if need be, for later consideration, any clauses in which the companies or parties interested state they desire to be heard. They may be heard in the form I mention—that is, they may communicate their views in writing as I suggested they should, and these communications could be printed and distributed for the use of hon. members on both sides. It is not customary to refer government Bills to a special committee or to a general committee for that matter; and nothing has yet appeared that makes it seem desirable or necessary to make an exception in this case.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). I presume that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) would not object to my stating what the proceedings were in relation to the last consolidation of the railway law in 1888. Mr. Pope was then Minister of Railways, and, if I remember well, Sir John A. Macdonald was acting Minister of Justice, or, possibly, it may have been Sir John Thompson. The Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Justice met at different times with the counsel of the railway companies; for, after all, while parliament controls all legislation, yet, there are none so largely interested in any proposed changes in railway laws as are the railway companies. A discussion, taken part in by the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Railways and the representatives of the railway companies, would boil down, to use a common expression, all disputed points. As a matter of fact, the procedure followed in that case expedited the progress of the Bill very materially. This Bill is a great deal broader than that of 1888. That was simply a consolidation with certain amendments—quite numerous—and the introduction of the system of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The changes in the present Bill are not only in regard to the establishment of the Railway Commission itself, but that commission is given powers far beyond anything for which we have a precedent in our legislation. So, it seems to me, it would relieve the House a great deal and ensure more rapid progress if the minister would follow out some such plan as a preliminary step. Of course the Bill would have to come again into the Committee of the whole House to be fully considered here. Not only did the procedure in 1888 lessen the labour of dealing with the Bill, but the minister was in a position to give us information as to any objections which had been raised, and he was able to refer to the Minister of Justice where necessary. It is true that the Bill of 1888 was not referred to a special committee. But it is also true that since that time we have generally sent amendments of the railway law to the Railway Committee. The scope of the present Bill is so large that I would not, for my part, suggest its being sent to the Railway Committee, but I would suggest, that it would be well to consider sending it to a special committee, particularly, if the minister found it was going to take too much of his individual time. A special committee of twenty or twenty-five members could best deal with legislation of this sort involving many details and matters of great importance. This Bill is not a consolidation. I find, on reading it that it is not like the Bill presented by the minister last session. That was a consolidation but this is a new law, and, above all, it introduces the system of a railway commission and gives that commission far more extensive powers than the Railway Committee of the Privy Council ever had. I venture to suggest that better progress would be made, if the minister would agree that, in view of the importance of hearing railway authorities on the subject, this Bill should be sent to a special committee to be threshed out there. This would have the effect of lessening the labours of the Committee of the Whole. It was found in the case of the Criminal Code and of some other matters, that the work of a special committee greatly lessened the labours of the House, and when the Bill came into Committee of the Whole it was found that the work had been much shortened by the labours of the special committee, assisted by the ministers, and reduced the time that the House found it necessary to give to the consideration of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may be allowed to make a remark in answer to my hon. friend. I suggested in my previous remarks that I had invited from the railway people a full expression of their views, and wished them to criticise the Bill in the amplest manner. I have not the slightest desire that this legislation, though I am promoting it, should be adopted if, upon full consideration, it is found that any of its features are not well calculated to further the object which we have in view ; that is, while not injuring the railway interests of the country, to promote the interests of the country as a whole. I have asked the railway people to put their views before me in writing, and if they have not done so it has been through no fault of mine. They have no doubt good reasons for having failed to do so. I understand that Mr. Hays has been absent, and the other gentlemen who are associated with him did not wish to take action until his return. We have hesitated in proceeding with this Bill for that reason, and for that reason alone. I am anxious to make progress with the Bill, and it is important that the session should not be delayed and made to drag along from this cause. There are many members of this House who are interested in special features of the Bill, and in respect to which they desire that some legislation should take place this session ; and I have promised them in the Railway Committee, where these subjects have come up, that this Bill would be put through, and that it was the intention of the government to press it upon parliament. We have been delayed in doing so because we were waiting to hear from the gentlemen of whom I have spoken. I think it would be an advantage if we were to proceed with the Committee stage and dispose, at all events, of many features of the Bill, which I think are entirely non-contentious, about which there will be no difference of opinion. I think it is important to do this for the further reason, that the Bill is not entirely a transcript of the existing laws, nor was the Bill introduced last year a mere transcript of previous laws. It is a revision of the existing railway Acts, as was the Bill last year, and I think it does not differ in many material respects from the Bill introduced last year, except that we hope to perfect it in its phraseology and in its form. I think it is much improved in that regard. Now if the House is prepared to adopt that course and take up the sections one by one, I am sure it will be an advantage ; and even though we may come across some features of the Bill about which there may be a difference of opinion, I think it would be an advantage if we were to have the views of the members of the House upon those points. The discussion could not be otherwise than helpful, and I am sure time would not be lost. Any feature of the Bill about which a difference of opinion might develop, and which might specially interest the railway people, we would defer for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We know that the railways are greatly interested in this Bill. To my knowledge, I think all the managers of railways have formed themselves into a committee for the purpose of considering the provisions of this Bill, and the Committee have had it under serious consideration ever since it was introduced into this House, along with the legal talent of the different railways who have been suggesting amendments to it. I believe they have prepared a report. It may be the fault of Mr. Hays

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The report has not yet been prepared, at least the railway people have not yet matured their report.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether they have or not, but I am sure they have prepared the report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am giving the hon. gentleman Mr. Hays' statement.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I cannot say that I have under my hand the printed report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman appears to be better informed than I am.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minister may not know about the report; but it would assist the Committee and assist the minister in the consideration of this matter if the report containing the objections of the railway people were in the hands of the House before we proceed to consider the Bill. The hon. gentleman may or may not have seen the report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I assure the hon. gentleman I have not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, and take it for granted that he has not seen the report, but others than the minister are really in possession of the report. The fact that the minister has not seen the report does not prevent others from having seen it. Perhaps it would be better to wait for that report before we proceed with the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). The two parties who are interested in this Bill are the railways and the public. It was reported two or three weeks ago in the press that the railways would make very important representations to the government in regard to the terms of this Act. They have since been working on it, I am informed. I am also informed that certain bodies representing the general public have been corresponding with the Minister of Railways, telling him that they desire to be heard in respect to this Bill. They have noticed in the press reports that the railways intend to ask for amendments, and they have been waiting until the government were in possession of these amendments before they came themselves to interview the government. I understand that the Toronto Board of Trade are in that position. They have been making representations to the Minister of Railways, and desiring to be heard after the railways have made their representations. If the Minister of Railways sees fit to adopt these amendments which the railway people produce, then the board of trade desire to be heard in regard to these amendments. But they do not want to make two trips here for that purpose. Perhaps the Minister of Railways may have representations from other bodies representing the general public, as we know that the public are a good deal interested in this Bill. I would urge the minister of Railways to postpone the second reading of this Bill until he has the representations of the railways, and until he hears the organizations representing the public, neither of which bodies have yet been heard by him. It seems to me that it would be a waste of time to go on and read this Bill a second time, and consider it clause by clause, until we have heard more from the parties interested. I hope the hon. minister will give these organizations which desire it an opportunity to be heard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp), that I was communicated with by the Toronto Board of Trade and I am not sure but that there may have been one or two other associations, perhaps the Manufacturers Association, and perhaps some other associations which also communicated with me; but I know the Toronto Board of Trade has done so and I stated to them what had transpired. I very frankly stated to them that I had asked the railway people to present to me, if they could, a statement of their criticisms upon the Bill, and when I received that I said that I would put them in possession of it. Then, I thought would be the proper time for them, if they wished to formulate any views, to do so. I have not received that information from the railway companies. It is apparent that these gentlemen have been communicating in the wrong direction. Instead of communicating with the Minister of Railways and Canals, they should have communicated with the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals because the ex-minister has been taken into the confidence of these gentlemen to a much larger degree that the present minister has been favoured. Therefore, I have not been able to carry out my undertaking with them. If I have failed I have not failed for any other reason than for that stated. I still adhere to the view that nothing would be lost and that everything would be gained by proceeding into Committee on this Bill. I know very well the clauses of the Bill that will invoke the most criticism and I am sure the House will accept my statement and that when in committee the committee will accept the statement I make, that I will not press any of the clauses which I have reason to believe are likely to be contested in the interests of the railway companies or anybody else; but that I will be willing to afford them every opportunity of being heard.

Mr. KEMP. I do not think the hon. minister's mind is sufficiently ingenious to imagine what the Toronto Board of Trade have in their minds in regard to this Bill. I have been informed that they have a great many amendments to suggest and I think we would only lose time by proceeding with the Bill.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) to another difficulty in discussing this measure; that is, if the hon. minister proposes to go on with the clauses relating to the commission. Personally, I am in favour of the principle of a commission, but I doubt whether I can vote for the clauses as they stand until I know how far the clauses will extend; that is to say, whether they are to be binding upon all the railways of this Dominion, or only a few of them. Strongly as I feel there would be an advantage even to the railways themselves from the appointment of such a commission as this, I feel also that the effect of the Bill would be mischievous if one or more of the large companies were exempted from its operations while others were bound by them. We all know that the Canadian Pacific Railway, at least, claims to be in such a position under its special Acts that you cannot do with it what you propose to do under this commission. I think it would be a grave injustice that one company should be made subject to this commission and to the decrees of the commissioners, while the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other company should be absolutely free. I think that must be a proposition which no hon. gentleman in this House can dispute. We cannot very well, in the absence of the representatives of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other companies, decide here for ourselves which company is bound, and which is not bound by the provisions of the Bill as it stands. The only way, it seems to me, in which we can deal with that question, is the way which has been suggested; that is, to appoint a committee to hear the contentions of the several railways as to whether they are possessed of parliamentary powers which prevent this Bill being applied to them. We may spend hours and hours and days and days in going over the various provisions of this Bill and ultimately find all our work useless simply because we have no power to deal with some particular railway company whose freedom from control would make the Bill of very little use. I do not want to refer here at length to the question of the government railways. The hon. minister has said that he exempts the government railways from the operation of the Bill. I think that is wrong. I do not agree with him in that, but I am dealing now, simply with the question of other railways which cannot appear in this House and state the objections they may have to what is proposed against them here.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section two, paragraph (m)—

Mr. LANCASTER. I would ask the minister why he limits the authority, of the judges under this Bill to judges of the Superior Court. The judges of the High Court which is the Superior Court in Ontario, are located in Toronto when not on circuit, and as a great many things may arise under this Bill which would require immediate attention, I would suggest that the County Court judges who are perfectly competent to act should be clothed with powers under the Bill. It would save a great deal of expense and would greatly facilitate the operation of the law if the County Court judges were given jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Since the Railway Act was passed it has been the law that the Superior Court judges should have jurisdiction, and I would be inclined to adhere to the existing law unless very strong reasons were given for the change. The judges have not many duties to perform under this Act. One duty of theirs, which occurs to my mind, is, that they have jurisdiction in connection with the expropriation of land, and I personally would not think it desirable that we should change the law in that regard. Then again, when rules are made by the commission, in order that they may become rules of court, application has to be made to a judge of the Superior Court, and I can see no reason at present why that should be changed.

Mr. LANCASTER. The procedure in expropriating land is, that the railroad gives notice to the land owner, and in that notice the company appoints an arbitrator, and they ask the land owner to appoint another arbitrator, then those two have to agree on a third one, but if they cannot agree, application has to be made to a judge of the High Court at Toronto. Suppose the land is in the county of Lincoln, which I have the honour to represent, could not the judge of the County Court there pick out an arbitrator a good deal better than a judge sitting in Toronto? The judge in Toronto has to rely on affidavits and he generally appoints a judge of the County Court, but if the judge of the County Court himself has the appointing power he could appoint the judge of another county court, or he could appoint any one he thinks fit. The application could be made to the county judge at home and it would save a great deal of expense and trouble. I think the legal gentlemen from Ontario on both sides of the House will agree with me that better and cheaper results would be obtained by giving the County Court judges power to deal with the expropriation of land. In Ontario we have railways incorporated by the province, and in relation to every one of these the County Court judges have to do with the expropriation proceedings and not the Superior or High Court, and practical experience has taught us that it works very satisfactorily. There has not been the slightest complaint against the manner in which the County Court judges have discharged these duties. As to making an order of the Railway Commission a rule of court, I would remind the minister that in the province of Ontario the County Court judges are local judges of the High Court, and every day of their lives they are making just such orders in regard to other equally, or more, important matters as they would be called upon to make under this Act. There are only ten judges of the High Court in the whole province of Ontario who have original jurisdiction. I firmly believe that it would be a great improvement in the Bill if we conferred this power on the County Court judges concurrently with the judges of the Superior Court if you like.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The matter brought to the attention of the House by the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is well worthy of consideration. The hon. gentleman is much more conversant with the later rules of procedure than I am, and he no doubt knows from practical experience whereof he speaks. The old principle of the Railway Act, as the minister truly says, was adopted a long time ago, and things have changed since then. While I would not, without further consideration be prepared to confer this power on the County Court judges, yet I think the minister should seriously consider the suggestion. The difference between the High Court judges and the County Court judges was more accentuated in times past than it is at present. The judges of the County Courts are now judges of the Superior Court in local matters, and this jurisdiction has been conferred on them for the very purpose of saving litigants the expense and inconvenience of going long distances from home when they are interested in litigation. From my experience, I would be as well satisfied to have the County Court judges appoint arbitrators as the Superior Court judges. They would be not only much cheaper but more quickly got at, which are advantages not only to the localities but to the railways themselves. There might be a number of other cases in which a County Court judge might very well be substituted for a Superior Court judge in Ontario. I would not be prepared to say that I would make this substitution in all cases. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Lincoln is well worthy of consideration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The clause must stand for further consideration. The argument which the hon. member has presented on the score of reduction in the expense of expropriation proceedings is one that occurred to my mind.

Mr. RUSSELL. It seems to me the question raised by the hon. member for Lincoln does not properly come up for discussion now. This clause simply says that judge shall mean a judge of the Superior Court where the context does not otherwise indicate. If it is desired to give jurisdiction to a County Court judge or a District Court judge, that will have to be specially provided for and will not interfere with this definition. I doubt very much if these definitions are of any real utility, because I cannot conceive of any case in which the statute itself should not say which court or which judge should have jurisdiction. But in any case there can be no difficulty in letting this definition stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 2, subsection t,

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What object is there in leaving out the word 'map'? In some cases, if the words, map or plan are not used, there may be an uncertainty in the sense, because I understand that the two words have been held to have different meanings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the clause says that the word plan means the ground plan, it means all that it is required to mean, and all that the word map means. You could not make any more or any less of it than a ground plan.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Unless the minister has some reason for considering the old language defective, I think it would be wise to stick to it, because there have been decisions based on different meanings for the two words.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What difference would the hon. gentleman suggest there could be between a map of the land proposed to be taken and a plan of the land proposed to be taken?

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that the word map means much more than the word plan. The word map includes the land, its ridges, rivers, streams, &c., whereas a plan may simply be an indication of the running of the line over the land. This is probably the reason why both words are used in the old Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you refer to section 122, you will find that it defines just what the plan must disclose.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But the old law used the words map or plan even in that section. If you take section 123 which is the same as section 122 in the new Act, you will find that the expression is 'map or plan.' The minister rightly asked me to point out a distinction. Well, one can put on a map more than on a plan. It may be a good thing that more should appear than on the plan, but if you have more, it would not be the plan. There may be topographical information which would be very important, but in the interpretation the court would infer that, as we had changed the wording from that of the old Act the change was intentional on our part, and they might rule that because more was put on it than was necessary for a 'plan' and that the Act was not complied with. I agree with my hon. and learned friend (Mr. Casgrain) that the word 'map' is a larger expression than the word 'plan.' And we must remember that we are dealing with technical construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) to press the view that if the plan were to show more than would be required, it would be ruled that this was a defect in the plan.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. They might do so, as we are changing the law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can hardly imagine that such would be the case. The Act provides that if there is a deficiency in the information on the plan, the minister may require additional information to be shown.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I agree that if section 122 stood alone this would be a definition of the word 'plan' and would include 'map.' But there may be other sections in which the word 'plan' only is used, and it seemed to me, therefore, the wider term should be used in the interpretation clause, subject, of course, to any other section where it is necessary that the word 'map' alone should be used.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The point seems to me of no great importance, and if hon. gentlemen desire to put this in, we will not object.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What do hon. gentlemen who have had experience as counsel for the railways say on the subject? The words in the old law have stood for a great many years, and I do not see any reason why in this Bill the two terms 'map' and 'plan' should not be used. I think that, unless there is some distinction, you will find that in every case they are used as corelative terms. In the case of the word 'judge,' my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) showed that, owing to the extension of the duties of the County Court judges, there was a reason for changing the wording. But in this case it is simply the cutting out of one word.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But we indicate in the Act in explicit terms just what information we want, and, if that is supplied, it does not matter what we call it. And, if the word 'map' means more than the word 'plan,' why should the meaning of it be circumscribed? What you want is, before the land is expropriated, that it shall be clearly shown what the boundaries and other facts are. It seems to me it makes no difference whether you call it one name or whether you call it another.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I may be unduly adhering to the idea of no change, but I think I can see something more than is in it. A map may cover all that a plan covers and more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it covers more than we require, we do not want it.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But there might be cases where you would be quite willing to accept it. I agree that this section 122, though longer than section 123 of the old Act, is an improvement. I believe that all these clauses should be terse, but I agree that certain additional requisites have been included in this section and that the section has been improved thereby. But I cannot see any reason for cutting out a very significant word, particularly as it has been there so long.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me call the hon. gentleman's attention to the old Act, upon which he rests so much, and which he thinks must be adopted if we are to avoid danger of misapprehension:

> The expression 'map' or 'plan' means——

What?

> —a ground plan of the property taken or intended to be taken.

'Map or plan' means a plan. Then, what is the use of adding 'map'? How is there any possibility of misapprehension about it?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. In this way—as I understand the interpretation clause—wherever it is used it means a plan. There is a distinction between a map and a plan, but in the interpretation clause we can make them mean the same thing.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Why should we?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Because the interpretation clause will make an article what it is therein termed no matter what it might otherwise be. Whether it be a map or a plan, you make it a plan.

On section 2, subsection U:

> The expression 'railway' means any railway which the company has authority to construct or operate, and includes all branches, sidings, stations, depots, wharfs, rolling stock, equipment, stores, property real or personal and works connected therewith, and also any railway bridge, tunnel, or other structure which the company is authorized to construct.

Mr. KEMP. I would like to inquire why express companies have been omitted from the operation of this Bill?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have not come to that yet.

Mr. KEMP. I should have brought this point up under subsection C, which defines the meaning of the expression 'company,' but that subsection was put through rather hurriedly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman wants to raise any point regarding express companies, he must do so in some other connections than this, because so far we have not dealt with any provision excluding express companies. We have not passed any clause declaring that express companies are excluded from the operation of this Bill, and have not changed the law in that respect.

Mr. KEMP. When subsection C was under discussion, I did not notice that the expression 'company' was confined to railway companies, or I would have asked that it should also include 'express companies.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why 'express companies'?

Mr. KEMP. Because they are closely allied to railway companies, and this Bill should control express companies as well as railway companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would never do to say that all the provisions we are making in this Bill with regard to railway companies should apply to express companies. If the hon. gentleman wants a certain control exercised over express companies by the Railway Commission, it will be open to him to ask the committee to adopt some provisions with regard to that subject.

Mr. KEMP. But should not that come properly under paragraph C, which defines what the expression 'company' means?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Paragraph C provides that whenever the word 'company' is used alone, it means a railway company, and that is in the law as it stands to-day. If you want to make any enactment with regard to express companies, it is quite open to you to do so, but such enactment would not be germane to the subject we are now discussing.

Mr. KEMP. Is there any other place in the Act where I can bring this point to the attention of the committee?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The present law provided that express companies should be given every facility, and that no discrimination should be exercised regarding them by the railways. We are not changing that.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. minister intend to take jurisdiction over the rates of express companies?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope the hon. gentleman will not bring that question up now.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am reserving the right to bring it up later on and am simply asking the hon. minister whether he has taken such jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When we come to that phase of the Bill, we will discuss that point.

Mr. MACLEAN. When we come to that phase of the Bill, we will find no provisions for express companies and may overlook the matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is not likely to forget. Do not let us be drawn into a discussion as to whether the Bill should include express companies when we are dealing simply with explanatory clauses.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This clause is different from the old Act. The present law says: 'Which any company is authorized to construct under a special Act.' You make it read: 'Which the company is authorized to construct.' You leave out the words 'under a special Act,' and change the word 'any' to 'the.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can well understand why we should not put in any reference to a special Act. It makes no difference whether the Act is special or general, under which a company is authorized to construct. What particular service would there be in adding these words 'under any special Act'?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know why they are in the present law or what effect they had, but I am asking simply why they were left out.

Mr. BARKER. I think I understand the reason. They are properly left out. Branch railways of six miles are now constructed under the general Act, and it is necessary that this clause should cover these as well as those constructed under a special Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It covers all.

Mr. BARKER. I am arguing in favour of the section. I say that the reason is, the word 'railway' must apply to other railways than those constructed under special Acts, because every railway branch of six miles comes under the general Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, it does not. The company gets power under a special Act to construct additions to the road, and the provisions of the general Act are made to apply to this special Act. I do not know that it makes any difference, but I could not understand why these words were left out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If they have power to construct a railway, it does not matter whether that power is given in a general or a special Act.

On section 2, subsection V:

The expression 'rolling stock' means and includes any locomotive, engine, motor car, tender, snow plough, flanger, and every description of car or of railway equipment designed for movement, on its wheels, over or upon the rails or tracks of the company.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That is an entirely new clause and requires particular care. It may have a financial effect. There are many decisions as to what constitutes rolling stock, because rolling stock is often held under lien and may be liable for the payment of bonds. Why should it be necessary to make this definition at all?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has been found in actual experience, and in conferring powers upon the Railway Commission with respect to furnishing this description of rolling stock or that description of rolling stock, that the provision contained in this clause was desirable.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Has the minister considered what might be the financial effect of it? I think the Minister of Justice will agree with me that when we make a definition of the words 'rolling stock,' nothing else can be included. The words 'rolling stock' has been defined by a long series of decisions, just like the words 'working expenses,' which we have never changed, and millions of dollars depend upon the meaning of the phrases 'working expenses' and 'rolling stock.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This clause will have no retroactive effect, it only applies to what may be ordered hereafter. If there has been any contract in which the words 'rolling stock' are used, that contract would not be affected by this Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid this clause goes a little further than the minister intends. We are now discussing clause (v.), which is a part of section 2 of the Bill, and the very first words of this section are :

In this Act, and in the special Act incorporating any railway company to which this Act or any part thereof applies, unless the context otherwise requires——

The context might mean a good deal more than this Act provides for. We must read clause (v.) in the light of the first words of section 2. As my hon. friend from Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) says, these special Acts are passed every day, and it might be the context of a special Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I understand the hon. member for Norfolk to say that it is dangerous to introduce this change because it may affect existing contracts. I do not think it is possible it can affect any existing contract. That is my opinion, expressed off-hand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). According to the views expressed by my hon. friend from Norfolk, that word 'rolling stock' has attained a meaning through a long series of decisions. Assuming that he is right, then certainly you might possibly change the meaning of a contract by this legislation. The Minister of Justice will see that it would be possible. For example, if the words 'rolling stock,' as used in this Bill, had a particular meaning assigned to it by a series of decisions, then it would bear that meaning in the contract. You have the meaning of the words 'rolling stock' ascertained by judicial decisions. A contract has been made reciting the provisions of the special Act, reciting the provisions enabling rolling stock to be charged, and you have this Act affecting the meaning of the words used in the special Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend suggests that possibly, if a contract had been passed previous to this Act coming into force, the meaning of the words 'rolling stock' in it, might be affected by this Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I would not go that far. There might be a good deal of force in the observations of the Minister of Justice with regard to that, but you do not need to go that far. You might take a case where arrangements have been made for drawing up a deed. Negotiations have been going on, you draw up the deed, and it would have possibly the meaning assigned to it by this statute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If hon. members will reflect upon the nature of the questions likely to arise, their minds will be set at ease. If you turn to the old Act, subsection (x.) of the corresponding section, you will find the question of rolling stock comes up in this way :

The expression 'working expenses' means and includes all expenses of maintenance of the railway, of the stations, buildings and works belonging thereto, and of the rolling and other stock, and movable plant used in the working thereof.

The term 'rolling stock,' I think, is never used in any special Act, according to my recollection. There is no possibility of any misapprehension arising as to the interpretation and meaning of it, if I am correct in what I say, and I think the recollection of every hon. gentleman will coincide with my own. The object of the incorporation of this clause in the Bill is more particularly to define for the purpose of this Act and of the administration of a railway commission under it, what is the meaning of 'rolling stock' rather than leave it to uncertainty. I do not know of any legal interpretation that has been given by a court in any case of the word 'rolling stock,' but we have proposed that this commission may require that a certain kind of rolling stock shall be provided for a certain purpose and they may indicate just what shall constitute that rolling stock. They shall say whether there shall be a snow plough or a flanger as part of the rolling stock, or whether it shall consist of any other of these particular descriptions of cars which are mentioned in paragraph (v.) It is only in the matter of administration that there might be any serious question arising at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The argument of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is, that any railway can come under the special provisions of this Bill and can get its charter under the Act. Is there any provision of that kind in the Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These railway companies would come under the control of this commission.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not under the control but the provisions as to the charter would apply to them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the provisions would apply.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They would come under the special provisions of this Bill just as if they had received their charter under it and the argument of the hon. minister is that if they came under this Bill the terms of this Bill would apply to them as to rolling stock and as to the railway equipment just as if the charter had been issued under this Act and this might effect their bonds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It cannot effect any existing contract at all. It does not apply to any existing contract. How could it affect any existing contract by any possibility ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is just the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If so you could never change the law at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. My argument is this : Here is a railway, say, the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Company, which has received a special charter. It chooses, instead of continuing under its special charter, to come under the provisions of this Bill and all its provisions in reference to railways will apply to that company and all the other special provisions of its charter are annulled. It is just in the same position as if it had received its entity under this Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is nothing annulled. This Bill recognizes that any special privileges or provisions or powers which have been conferred upon a railway company by any special Act are not taken away. They continue. This is a general railway Bill which applies to all railways, except where, under a special Act there has been an exception from some inconsistent provision named or power conferred. The General Interpretation Act says :

> The repeal of an Act, or the revocation of a regulation, at any time, shall not affect any Act done or any right or right of action existing, accruing, accrued or established, or any proceedings commenced in a civil cause, before the time when such repeal or revocation takes effect ; but the proceedings in such case shall be conformable when necessary, to the repealing Act or regulation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is the General Interpretation Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We could not change the law at all for any purpose without damaging anybody unless we could do it in this way.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have a special interpretation clause in this Bill and one in the General Interpretation Act, and I would like to ask the hon. minister whether these do not more or less conflict. The hon. minister has quoted the General Interpretation Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That gives the effect of the repeal of a law.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it not be better to put in the very words he has mentioned and to say that this Bill shall not apply except in such and such cases ? He says it would not apply to those companies that are operating under their special Acts. Would it not read better if that particular exception were put into the clause that we are now passing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would have to put it into every clause in the Bill. Unless the context of any Act incorporating a railway company, or any special Act, requires otherwise, then, these general provisions apply. What more could you possibly ask ?

On section 2, paragraph (aa)—

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You extend this to passengers as well as to freight ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I want to make a change. I beg to move that we insert in place of 'the expression' 'to charge,' the verb 'to charge.' My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) asked me whether we include passenger rates as well as freight rates. Certainly. We have shortened the expression. You will find the word 'tolls' as it is defined.

Paragraph (bb) reads :

> The expression 'traffic' means and includes passengers and all goods conveyed by railways and also all rolling stock.

I propose to strike out the word 'expression' and insert 'verb.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does my hon. friend the minister think it a desirable amendment. I should think 'the word' would be much better, because later on you would have to say 'the definite article' 'the noun' and so on.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not see any objection to the word which my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) thinks so ridiculous. I do not see why he should not say the verb 'charge' should mean such a thing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I never saw any drafting just of that kind. It may make it more definite but it is rather unusual.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. In the old law the expression 'toll' or 'rate' was made to apply to passengers, but in this section you leave out the word 'passengers.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will find in section (bb) that the expression 'traffic' includes passengers.

Mr. LANCASTER. You want us to play hunt the slipper through the Act to find out what it means.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you insert the word 'verb' here you will have to say in (bb) 'the noun traffic' because the word 'traffic' is used as a noun and also as a verb, and in (cc) you will have to use the expression 'the noun train.' I never saw an expression like that in an Act before.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am quite sure I have seen it, but I do not remember where.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is very unusual. I should think the clause as it is at present is perfectly plain.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If I were to look hurriedly at this Act to find out what 'toll' means I would say that it did not include 'passengers.' You would never think of looking under the word 'traffic' to find out what 'toll' means.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These definitions take these forms in the present Bill, because they are precisely a transcript from the English Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Very well then.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman thinks it important, I have no objection to insert the word 'passengers.'

Mr. MACLEAN. It is clearer the way it is now, and we are following the English practice.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose we can do almost anything by Act of parliament, but is it not stretching our powers by saying: that traffic means and includes passengers and all goods conveyed by railway and also the rolling stock.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The old definition is worse.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The old definition says that traffic means animals, cars trucks and vehicles, and it is a wonder my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has not had many a hearty laugh over this clause in times past. I think this present definition is a great improvement on the old one, and I propose to improve it still further by eliminating some unnecessary words so as to make it read:

The expression 'traffic' means and includes passengers, goods and rolling stock.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

On section 2, subsection ee,

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That is new; what does it mean?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the first place, what is the use of saying that undue preference means and includes an undue preference?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The operative section in the Act is section 253. It is an important clause, and I think it is pretty comprehensive.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me the expression undue preference is defined in that section. If that is the only section relating to it, I do not see why you need this definition here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The expression undue preference is used in other parts of the Act. This clause may perhaps not be really necessary, but I do not think it is harmful.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does the minister not think it might limit the meaning of the expression, and take away from the court the discretion which they should exercise? They would have to refer to this clause to find what undue preference meant, and they could not go beyond that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is covered by section 253, why not limit it to that section? At any rate, I cannot see any reason for saying that undue preference shall mean undue preference.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The courts have placed a distinct and precise meaning upon these words. What was aimed at here was that undue preference should be included, so that whatever meaning might be attached to those words should not be in the slightest degree circumscribed, but that if there was any additional expansion of the idea possible, it should be included. I do not attach very much importance to the clause.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It is a new clause, and section 253 is very full.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will strike it out.

Subsection struck out.

On section 2, subsection ff:

The expression 'working expenditure' means and includes all expenses of maintenance of the railway, and all such tolls, rents, or annual sums as are paid in respect of property leased to or held by the company, apart from the rent of any leased line, or in respect of the hire of rolling stock let to the company; also all rent charges or interest on the purchase money of lands belonging to the company, purchased but not paid for, or not fully paid for; and also all expenses of or incidental to working the railway, and the traffic thereon, including all necessary repairs and supplies to rolling stock while on the lines of another company; also rates, taxes, insurance and compensation for accidents or losses; also, all salaries and wages of persons employed in and about the working of the railway and traffic; and all office and management expenses, including directors fees, agency, legal and other like expenses; also all costs and expenses of and incidental to the compliance by the company with any order of the board under this Act; and generally all such charges, if any, not above otherwise specified, as in all cases of English railway companies are usually carried to the debit of revenue as distinguished from capital account.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I see that in this clause it is provided that working expenditure shall include 'all necessary repairs and supplies to rolling stock while on the lines of another company.' But supposing they are on the lines of the company itself ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are included in the general definition of a railway. Rolling stock is included in the general definition of a railway, which is found in subsection U.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This section covers 'also all costs and expenses of and incidental to the compliance by the company with any order of the board under this Act.' This board can do almost anything, and under this clause the company might have to assume a large financial responsibility and give that a preference over the securities of the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose a company was in the hands of a receiver, and some question arose as to whether or not the receiver would be entitled to take out of the earnings of the company what might be necessary to comply with any order of the railway board, it is clear he could do that under this Bill. But in the absence of any such provision, the receiver might hold that he had no right to appropriate that money but that it should go to the bondholders, or even though the expense was ordered by the railway commission. If the railway commission ordered something to be done in the interests of the public, the expense of doing that should be paid as proper working expenses.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I have not had an opportunity of giving the requisite consideration to the Bill to know what the board could or could not order. It would require a great deal of consideration to know that. The point I am making is that the powers given the board are so broad that they might impose a pecuniary obligation on the company and give that a preference over the bondholders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then curtail the powers of the commission when you come to that.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Suppose there was a question of damages. The board have considerable authority even in fixing damages. Would it be right to give into the hands of this board, from whose decisions there is no appeal, the power to say that any order they may make for the payment of money shall become a preference over the bondholders without their consent ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that my hon. friend correctly comprehends the meaning of this clause : 'and also all costs and expenses of and incidental to the compliance by the company with any order of the board under this Act.' That would not cover the case of damages such as the hon. gentleman refers to. This simply means that if any costs are incurred in any proceeding by reason of any order of the board—for instance, suppose the board should require an investigation into some matter or should require some returns or statistics which would entail some expense —it would be proper that the costs should be paid out of working expenses.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the term 'working expenses' is used in contradistinction to capital expenditure. Will it be possible for the board to make an order upon a railway company which would involve what would properly be capital expenditure ? May not confusion arise from this definition ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose the railway commission were satisfied that certain appliances ought to be put on a train, a compliance with that order might involve the necessity of capital expenditure by the company. The company might not be able to meet that expenditure out of ordinary revenue. But I think that I am correct in saying that this section could only be interpreted as having reference to the case of a defunct railway, which has gone into the hands of a receiver and in which the question might arise as to what are working expenses and as to what is capital expenditure. This question does arise, and it was deemed advisable that we should provide for it in this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, these elaborate interpretation clauses sometimes lead to curious results. For instance, there is the expression 'working of the railway and the traffic thereon.' Now the word 'traffic' includes passengers. This would mean then, working the passengers as well as the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not follow, because 'traffic' includes passengers that it must always be passengers.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If I understand the minister aright he is doubtful whether under the present law regarding working expenses the board would have the right to take costs and expenses out of that fund. Under this section working expenses includes 'all costs and expenses of and incidental to the compliance, by the company with any order of the board under this Act. This would not mean any pecuniary——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Or anything that the court might order them to pay ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Only their costs and expenses incidental to such cases, but not damages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The end of subsection 2 is absolutely new. Would the hon. gentleman say what the object is ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess that I am a little at sea to understand it. The subsection says :

The provisions of this section shall apply to the construction thereof, and, to the words and expressions used therein.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That is to say you read the sections together and use one to interpret another ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is it not the general rule in the interpretation of statutes ? I think it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have always heard that rule expressed by the court wherever a statute was to be interpreted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It may possibly be.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not unusual. You will find it in the General Interpretation Act.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall section 1 as amended be adopted ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Carried.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, it may be necessary to come back to this at some future time.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Better leave it open.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; if any hon. gentleman desires to reopen it, I will raise no objection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In this subsection (gg) appears the words :

And the expressions 'clerk of the peace' and 'sheriff' respectively include the like persons as in other cases.

What is the meaning of that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is based upon 51 Vic., Chapter 29, section 2, where these words appear. I must confess I do not quite see the object of them. But I apprehend they must mean something, and it did not look to me as if it would be harmful to leave the words there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not suggesting that it is harmful, but I do not quite see what it means.

On section 3,

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should allow the sections under this heading, 'application of Act' to stand. This is really a most important division and the matter dealt with, I submit is one that he should discuss with the railway people. The next division deals with the Railway Commission. That is a section more fitting for a general discussion, and does not involve the technical considerations that this part involves.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to discuss that very question, the application of the Act, now.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. My suggestion is that, as the question is so technical, it would be better for us to go on with the consideration of the Railway Commission until the hon. minister has had some discussion of this subject with the railway people. Of course, if the committee desires to discuss the matter now, I have no great objection.

Mr. KEMP. Can we inquire now from the minister under this heading whether express companies are excluded in the Bill, and, if not, will he include them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not come to express companies yet.

Mr. KEMP. But if section 3 was made to include express companies, it would cover the whole thing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) would, after consideration, think it well to insert anything about express companies in this portion of the Bill.

Mr. KEMP. The only other place where it could come in is section 278.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. member succeeds in satisfying the committee that the proposed legislation is not ample to cover the matters he has in mind, and if we agree upon an amendment to the Bill, we can easily refer back to this clause and put it in. I think we had better proceed with the next portion of the Bill. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) that he do not press his objection to that. The subject is very easily understood.

Mr. KEMP There is express freight as well as ordinary freight and, if the minister intends by this Bill to regulate freight rates, all kinds of freight rates should be included. There is no place in the Bill where this question can be discussed to better advantage than now. The only other clause that refers to express companies is 278, and under that there is no power such as I refer to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would much prefer that the hon. gentleman should defer this, because we come to the question in due course, and then the matter of express charges will come up when our minds are directed to it. If he insisted on it what amendment would he propose ?

Mr. MACLEAN. Has not this Bill for its object the regulation of railway charges? An important part of the charges on railways are the express rates. If the Bill is to apply to railway freight and passenger rates, it ought to apply to express companies, especially now when the railway companies are their own express companies. The Minister of Railways and Canals comes down here with a general Act dealing with railway questions, and ignores the question of express charges. I think he is failing in his duty, and we ought to bring the express companies forthwith under the operation of this Act. As I am referring to that, if it is the intention of the government to establish a board of Railway Commissioners, I want to tell the minister that there are other companies that ought to be brought under the jurisdiction of that board and within the scope of this Act. Now they all ought to come under the jurisdiction of this board of commissioners. The Minister of Justice has been looking for a way, I am told, how to regulate the telephone and telegraph companies. Here we are creating the very board that ought to do these things. I make the suggestion now, and I think it will help the minister to solve the question that the special committee has before it now dealing with these telephone companies, that here we are creating an important board that can deal, not only with telegraph and telephone companies, but railways and express companies. I hope the minister will tell the House now that, in appointing a commission to regulate railways, that commission will have jurisdiction over express charges put upon traffic in this country.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). The board has now jurisdiction over the tolls.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where ?

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). If you turn to the latter part of section 279, you will read :

> Whenever the company files with the board and publishes any tariff, and such tariff comes into force and is not disallowed by the board under this Act, or participates in any such tariff, the tolls in such tariff while so in force shall, as against such company, its officers, agents or employees, in any prosecution under this Act, be conclusively deemed to be the legal tolls chargeable by such company, and any departure therefrom shall be an offence under this Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. But the 'company' means a railway company.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). But it should apply to express companies.

Mr. MACLEAN. So it should, but it does not, by the present Act. Express companies are levying immense charges on the traffic of this country, and if we are dealing with railway companies in connection with their charges on traffic, we ought to deal with express companies in the same way. This board of commissioners should have them under review, and should pass on their charges. A great deal of the traffic of this country is handled by express cars and companies. Year after year I see three or four express cars on the main trains, both of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now we are here creating a board of railway commissioners, and why not give them jurisdiction over this matter ? Now the Prime Minister has come in, and I will say to him what I said to the Minister of Justice a moment ago, that here an opportunity has come to widen the jurisdiction of this board of railway commissioners and to give them jurisdiction and control over cognate matters, namely, telephone and telegraph companies, and their conduct towards the people. I am in favour of the establishment of this board of commissioners, but I want their powers and jurisdiction widened so that they will not only deal with railway charges, but with express charges, with telephone charges and telegraph charges, in their relations with the general public.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said a little while ago that it is very inconvenient to take up these questions out of their order.

Mr. MACLEAN. But it may be necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let my hon. friend have a little patience. That is his great fault, an entire absence of patience. He cannot restrain his impetuous ardour, if he has anything in his mind that he thinks ought to be kept prominently to the front. What I have said to the hon. member for Toronto, and what I repeat to my impetuous friend who has just spoken, is that he should have patience, and wait until we get down to the subjects of this Bill that are germane to the matters which he is anxious to deal with. If this Bill is found to fall short of dealing with these matters he has in mind, it will be open to him to propose amendments, and he will find a disposition on the part of the committee to yield to any reasonable suggestions. There are provisions in this Bill touching upon those cases. If there are not, let us make such provisions when the time comes.

Mr. MACLEAN. Where are they ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not there now.

Mr. MACLEAN. We are dealing with companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend would put the cart before the horse. He declares that the express charges should be dealt with, and we declare that we should first provide for a commission. I can well understand the trouble of my hon. friend. He is here just now, and he may be flying away next day, and may not be back. It may not be convenient for him to be here when the subject comes up for consideration in its proper course. I say to him that he must have regard for the convenience of other people and allow us to proceed with this Bill in proper order.

Mr. MACLEAN. If there is anything germane to the discussion of this clause, it is just what I now propose. We are here deciding what companies the Act shall apply to, to railway companies and their charges, and I say, let us make it apply to express companies and their traffic charges. Now does the hon. gentleman say that he is introducing a broad and general railway Act, appointing a board of railway commissioners to deal with railway questions, and yet that he will not declare in this Bill that he deals with express charges of railway companies?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because there are express companies operating who do not do one-half of their business on railways at all. When we come down to tolls and charges imposed in respect of traffic——

Mr. MACLEAN. I think it is the hon. gentleman who is impetuous, who is impatient. Now I repeat again—and I hope his colleagues will take him in hand in this matter—he has a Bill dealing with this question of transportation companies and charges, and he says that when he comes to some subsequent details he will see about these other companies. I say now is the time when he is defining his jurisdiction to say what companies are to be included. I say we ought to include express companies and their charges. If he is to regulate only the freight and passenger charges, the Bill is altogether insufficient. We were told that we were to have a broad, general Act. Why does he wish to let express companies out? Traffic on the express companies is increasing all the time. I hope the hon. gentleman will let the matter stand. We had better call it six o'clock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know my hon. friend is anxious to get off this evening, so I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Public works—chargeable to income—dredge vessels, repairs, $30,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). We are asking for this $30,000 to make provision for paying the expenses of the general repairs required to be made to the hulls, machinery, dredges and scows in the different provinces which are the property of the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. This is to cover repairs to all of the dredging plant?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is for general repairs and improvements.

Mr. SPROULE. How many dredges have we now belonging to the government?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think there are twenty.

Mr. SPROULE. That is $1,500 apiece. Is this repairing done at Sorel, or at the points at which the dredges are stationed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Those dredges that are in proximity to Sorel are repaired at the government shop there. But when they are in other localities they are repaired by contract at some of the shops in the towns or cities where they may be. Of course, this includes scows as well as dredges.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the work done by contract or by day labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is done by contract generally unless in the case of some small repairs, which are done under the supervision of the officials.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would like to inquire what progress has been made in the construction of the new hydraulic dredge for the maritime provinces, which is being built at Sorel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would like to say that if that question were brought up when the vote for that work is under consideration it would be better, but I have information from the department that progress has been very slow unfortunately, rather slower than the hon. gentleman would expect or like.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is not a very clear answer. When I left office it was understood that the dredge would be ready by the month of July this year. I do not know what has been done since my hon. friend has taken charge of the Department of Public Works. I know how the office should be managed in Sorel. I would like to know what progress has been made in the construction of that dredge and when we can expect it will be ready for work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My information is that there is no such understanding in the department. The officers of the department inform me that they had reported to the minister that they could not expect to have the dredge finished this year. There has been no change, so far as I know, or any action taken that might cause delay, so far as I am personally concerned. And so far as I know, regarding the officers of the department, they have been urging the progress of the work in every way. From the first I was informed that it was not possible to complete it this year.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is out of the question to tell that to me, as I happened to be there a month before I left office. There is correspondence in the Department of Public Works—my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) will find it—to the effect that the dredge was to be ready by the month of July, and it should have been ready by that time. There is no reason, unless the work has not been proceeded with with the celerity and activity which should have been displayed, why the dredge should not have been ready by the first of July. The hull was very far advanced, the material was nearly all delivered, and I cannot understand why the dredge will not be ready by the first of July. I invite my hon. friend to look personally into that matter, because I know how difficult it is to administer patronage in Sorel. I do not know what changes my hon. friend has made in the way of distributing patronage there. I had any amount of trouble when I was in office. Although I was born near there, although I know nearly everybody there, I had any amount of trouble, and I was obliged to act in a pretty stiff manner at times. I do not know who is managing the Sorel patronage now, or in whose hands it is, but I know very well that without strict supervision it is a very easy thing in Sorel to employ three men instead of one. I invite the minister to be careful. His officers will tell him, if he takes them into his confidence, something about that. The shipyard in Sorel is one of the best on the continent, but of course it has to be administered according to strict business methods. If there is not strict supervision exercised, it will be a sink hole. I again invite the minister to be very careful as to the way patronage is to be administered there. I make these remarks because I do not want to be responsible for the delay. The officers of the department know that I am within the truth when I say that that dredge should have been ready by the first of July, or at the outside by the first of August. I cannot understand the reason for that delay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In view of the statements made by the hon. gentleman on previous occasions, and in view of the urgent necessity of having a dredge in the lower provinces I did look into this matter. I may say to the hon. gentleman that he will be fully responsible for the conduct of the department, for the reason that there has been no change made at Ottawa and neither has there been any change made at Sorel. The supervision is the same now as it was before. If there is any correspondence in the department to which he refers between any of the officials, I wish he would give me the names because I am giving the information to the House and to him as it is given to me by the chief officers of the department. There has been no change made whatever; no change in the instructions; no change in the supervision, and so far as I am personally concerned any action that I have taken and any intimation I have given has been in the direction of urging that all speed be made towards carrying out this work. I have no information from any of the officers of the department or from any source, that there has been any change made whatever. The only personal action I took was to urge on the officers the necessity of having this dredge completed as quickly as possible.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Might I inquire whether the whole work will be done in Sorel or if part of the work will be done outside.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was so anxious that this work should be completed this year if possible, that I consulted the engineers of the department to see whether or not some assistance could not be had from outside. After full consideration they reported to me that the work had gone so far and was in such a state of progress, that they did not think we could get a great deal of assistance by having any of the work done outside. It was decided on their recommendation to go on and try to complete the work as quickly as possible in the shops at Sorel.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell me what are the reasons why the dredge is not ready now; what part of the work is behind; is it the hull or the machinery.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Generally speaking it is both. Some of the machinery has been bought and delivered but the building of the hull, &c., is not far enough advanced to use the machinery that has been delivered. There has been delay in regard to all parts of the dredge.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If my hon. friend will look again himself into that matter from a business standpoint—let me say immediately, not from a political standpoint exclusively—he will find out that why the dredge is not ready is because there have been changes in the way of administering patronage in Sorel. I take it upon myself to say that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman has any information with regard to changes I wish he would give it to me, because, not with my knowledge has any change been made and the officers of the department report to me the same. I may say that I did not know there was politics in it in any respect. I thought the shop was being conducted as nearly as possible on business lines, and that when I took over the department the men in charge were men who were worthy of the confidence of the minister. If there is any information to the contrary I would like very much to have it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not in any way impugn either the ability or the good will of the officers of the department; very far from it. But I invite my hon. friend to administer the shops at Sorel not from a political standpoint, and I weigh every word I say now because I have passed through the mill. There are reasons which are not desirable to state in the House, why I say what I am saying, and if the minister carefully looks into the matter again with his officers—I know that the officers of the department are not going to say anything else than they say now; they have to be loyal to their department—but I am very much afraid that a change has been made in the way of administering patronage in Sorel. I happen to have a certain number of friends there and I believe I am right in saying what I say now. I have very strong reasons to know that a change has been made in the way of administering that part of the department of Public Works. I do not wish to say any more except this : that shipyard has cost a large amount of money and it is a credit to the government and to the country, and it would be a great pity indeed if that shipyard be destroyed through improper administration of patronage in Sorel. All those who know the state of affairs in Sorel—I am speaking within the hearing of several members of parliament who know what I mean—all those who know the way things may be at times managed at Sorel will agree with me that it would be a great pity indeed. I am very sorry that the dredge is not ready. The port of St. John and other ports badly need that dredge, and for the life of me I cannot understand why it is not ready at the time I know it should have been ready. I have given my personal attention to that work; I have inspected the shipyards over and over again, and well—all I can say is that it is a great pity that such delays should take place when a work of that importance is on hand.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works a question, not from a political but from a practical standpoint. If there is anything more than another that the present Minister of Public Works prides himself upon it is that he is a practical man. Here the minister is asking for a vote of $30,000 to repair twenty dredges. He asks a blanket vote of $30,000 for general repairs on these twenty dredges. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that no public company, concerned with such a matter as this would give a blanket appropriation of $30,000 to its management. I do not understand that the practical affairs of this department are to be treated in any different way from that in which business corporations carry on their business. I say that it would be considered an absolute absurdity for the management of any corporation to ask for authority in a blanket form to expend a round sum of money over so many dredges. One dredge may require $5,000; another $1,000, and not until two years hence will the parliament of this country know how this $30,000 has been expended. At the end of that time we may find that what would only require $1,000 to repair, will have $5,000 spent on it, while another that requires a very large repair has not had one dollar expended on it, but the latter will come up later for a very large expenditure. I think it is almost useless for the opposition to attempt to criticise the estimates unless we are informed more fully than we have been in the past what the minister proposes, not as to twenty dredges in bulk, but as to each of them. I do not ask him to state in the printed estimates what he is going to do, but he must have from the officers of his department a report as to what each dredge requires, and I think we are entitled to that information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are twenty dredges and perhaps sixty tugs, barges and scows. The estimate is of course made upon the experience of past years, and we must depend considerably on the ability and honesty of the engineers and other officials. No person can foresee the damage that may occur to plants such as this. It is to be hoped that the money will be expended under proper supervision, and only when it is required. This vote is taken for general repairs which may be urgently required, and we are depending, as any business man must, who has a plant of this kind, on the integrity and ability of the officers in charge. I cannot imagine that it will be of any benefit to any of the officials to expend any of this money on the plant unless it is really required. While I cannot speak personally on the matter, the chief engineer of the department informs me that this is the usual vote. I shall be very pleased, when I have an opportunity, to look into the matter and see if any change can be made to advantage. At present I do not see that anything can be saved.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does the minister intend to expend part of this $30,000 on repairs to the dredges employed on the St. Lawrence channel works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. it does not apply to the St. Lawrence fleet at all.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will he be good enough to tell me, then, on what dredges he intends to expend it this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the maritime provinces, on the 'St. Lawrence,' the 'Canada,' the 'New Dominion,' the 'Prince Edward,' the 'Cape Breton,' the 'George Mackenzie,' the 'New Brunswick,' the tug 'Cricket'; in Quebec and Ontario, the 'Challenge,' the 'Nipissing,' the 'Ontario,' the 'Queen,' the 'St. Louis,' the 'Richelieu,'; in Manitoba, the 'Winnipeg,' the 'Sir Hector'; in British Columbia, the 'Mud Lark.' The other votes to which my hon. friend refers are, I think, special votes for special purposes. When we come to those items, I shall have the explanation.

Mr. BARKER. What I would like to get at is this : Has the hon. gentleman received from his officers a statement of what these several dredges require now in the way of repairs ? That is the way every business man conducts his business. He does not allow a blank sum to be voted for repairs but he has a report to show either that machines are in good order, or, if they require repairs, stating just what repairs they require. If we are to be told two years hence that these dredges are all out of repair, then I think we are entitled to know now how much the minister proposes to expend on each dredge, to put it in a proper state of repair.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These estimates are made up on the very basis the hon. gentleman suggests. The estimate made by the officers of the repairs required in each case is as follows : The 'St. Lawrence,' $3,954; the 'Canada,' $3,500; the 'New Dominion,' $2,000; the 'Prince Edward,' $2,500; the 'Cape Breton,' $3,500; the 'George Mackenzie,' $1,000 ; the 'New Brunswick,' $1,200 ; the tug 'Cricket,' $750 ; a new sand pump for the maritime provinces, $1,500 ; Ontario and Quebec, tugs and scows, $2,500 ; the 'Nipissing,' $2,500 ; the 'Ontario,' $2,500 ; the 'Queen,' $2,500 ; the 'St. Louis,' tugs and scows, $1,800 ; the 'Richelieu,' $2,000 ; the 'Sir Richard,' $2,000 ; two stone lifters, $2,500 ; one marine boiler, $2,500 ; a new dredge now being built at Sorel, $3,000.

Mr. BARKER. I think the hon. gentleman has got beyond $30,000 already.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so. These are the reports of the chief engineer of the department. So far he has asked for only $30,000, which is in the Main Estimates. He goes over in detail the requests of the resident engineers and the officers in charge, and does not always allow them. He cuts these down.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Are not all these dredges at work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are commencing work now.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If I understand correctly, that money is asked for repairs next year.

Mr. BARKER. It is for repairs made now.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, all those dredges are in working order. I think they were in fairly good shape last year. We had them all repaired.

Mr. BARKER. The question I asked the hon. minister is what amount is required now to put these in good order at present.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We are simply being asked to vote $30,000 for repairs next year. These dredges are at work now.

Mr. BARKER. The question I asked the hon. minister was what is required at present to put these dredges in repair. We can then ascertain what is likely to be wanted for incidental repairs during the season.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Most of these dredges only work during the summer season, and are repaired during the winter. In every instance except one, they are at work now. If we were left without a vote of money, and with twenty dredges, scows and barges on our hands, and nothing to keep them in repair, they would soon all stop work, I am afraid, judging by our experience in the past. The expenditure for the year before will be found in the Auditor General's Report, but up to the 30th of December this year, we expended $10,654 out of this vote. The chief engineer tells me that the repairs necessary since that time have swallowed up nearly the full amount remaining.

Mr. BARKER. Then I understand that the department has spent $10,000 more than parliament has authorized.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. What I said was that up to the 31st of December, 1902—which is six months later than the Auditor General's Report—$10,654 had been expended out of last year's appropriation.

Mr. BARKER. Are all these dredges at present in good working order ? I ask that because two years hence somebody will be here criticising the figures in the Auditor General's Report, and should be able to know whether we started with twenty dredges in good working order, and what was the amount expended from this date on incidental repairs. Does the hon. gentleman say that at present everything is being kept in perfectly good order ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would not like to go so far. Many of these dredges are old, but they are all in fairly good shape to go to work, with one exception.

Mr. BARKER. Then the money you propose to expend out of the $30,000 is simply to cover incidental repairs during the year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I have explained, this vote was taken for the general repairs to these dredges, scows and barges for 1903-4.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman says that all the dredges except one were in fair working order. What is the name of that one ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The 'Challenge.'

Mr. CLANCY. There seems to be a peculiar uniformity in the sums required for the repairs of the dredges. The sum is estimated at $2,500 in each case. Has it been found that the expenditure is of this uniform amount in each case, or has the hon. minister simply taken the whole sum and made a rough average ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend could not have listened very carefully to the estimates I gave. They ran from $750 to $3,954. It is perfectly true that in the case of dredges of the same capacity, having the same tugs and barges, it has been found that $2,500 is the average amount required to put them in repairs and keep them in order. That is the report of the engineer of the department.

Mr. BARKER. I presume, as this money is required for incidental repairs, that the work shall be done by day labour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If a new boiler is required, we call for tenders. In the case of a breakdown, we get the parts of machinery required from the different manufacturers. Where it is the question of some repairs—iron work or carpentering—that is done by day labour. In a city or town, where there is a shop, we go to the shop.

Mr. GERMAN. In my opinion the government should consider carefully whether or not any more money should be voted for the construction or repairing of government dredges. In my opinion the government would do well to dispose of every dredge it has, and instead of endeavouring to do the dredging of harbours by government work, it would be more advantageous to have that work done by contract. Tenderers would then have the desire to procure and maintain sufficient plant in Canada to do the work called for. At present we have not many contractors with sufficient dredging plant to do the work which is frequently offered, and we find that the government will employ American dredges to do work which our Canadian contractors should be allowed to do. My information is that in the United States all the harbour work is done by contract. It is well known that the contractors will do more work and better work in the same length of time than can be done by government dredges. I know something of the government dredges at the present time, and I know that the government scarcely have one dredge that will do half the work in one day that can be done and will be done by a contractor, and better done too. The government dredges do not work the same number of hours as the others, nor do they work at the same rate of speed. The government have a lot of old dredges on which they are spending money year after year to maintain, but which it would be better to tie up at a dock and leave, and do the work with up-to-date dredges under men who understand their business. This would be very much better and cheaper than to continue the dredging situation that now exists.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. So far as Ontario is concerned, my hon. friend (Mr. German) is about right. The government has only old dredges there. The case was absolutely the same in the St. Lawrence when this government took office. But the hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says that the government dredges that have been built during the last four or five years are not equal to those owned by the contractors. He is altogether mistaken.

Mr. GERMAN. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, two and two make four, not five I am able to say there is not one contractor in this Dominion who has a dredge equal to those that are working on the St. Lawrence to-day. That is a clear statement and it cannot be disputed. The dredges that have been built at Sorel and the one built by the Polson Iron Works are about the best dredges on this continent. And I say, more than that, that the new hydraulic dredge that has been built by the Polson Iron Works and which is working on the St. Lawrence to-day has a greater capacity than that of any other dredge in Canada. It has a capacity of about a million yards a month; and there is no other dredge in this country—there are very few on this continent—that can do the same amount of work. The hon. gentleman (Mr. German) says that he has had experience so far as government dredges are concerned. Well, I have had some experience too. I know that the dredging on the St. Lawrence, is carried out for three or four cents a yard—not more than five cents a yard—and that the contractors elsewhere are charging as high as fifty cents a yard.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is not my fault Yes, there are contractors who are charging more than that to-day.

Mr. CLARKE. Where ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Public Accounts Committee may investigate. It is not my business. I speak of the Department of Public Works, with which I was connected, and I make bold to say that the dredging carried on by that department with dredges owned and controlled by the department costs three or four times less than the dredging carried on elsewhere by contract. The Public Accounts Committee will meet soon; my statements will be clearly printed, and nobody can prove that they are not right. The dredging on the St. Lawrence to-day is carried on at a cheaper rate than dredging has ever been carried on in this country. Now, if my hon. friend will think over the position twice, he will admit that the work of improving the St. Lawrence cannot be carried out unless you have ship-yards to repair your plant. The department has a large plant. Of course there will be breaks every day. The dredges are working in hard material, taking up stone and rocks, and there are sure to be breaks and all sorts of accidents. To carry out successfully a work of that kind you must have ship-yards of your own. The plant that is at the disposal of the government to-day is the finest plant that any concern on this continent owns, and it would be a great pity indeed if it were ever destroyed. But, of course, if we are contented with old dredges such as the hon. gentleman has seen at work, I freely grant that we are working in the wrong way. These old dredges should have been replaced. But it requires money to build dredges. Every time I came before this House and asked for money, I was told that I was spending a lot of money. We have not spent enough in improving our waterways. One of the most competent men on transportation, Mr. Hays told us to-day elsewhere that we could not handle the trade that is in store for us; and he is perfectly right. The St. Lawrence channel should have been deepened and widened long ago. But it takes time to build dredges. There are not in this country any contractors who have dredges to carry out the work on the St. Lawrence and we have been obliged to build, year by year, the dredges that are carrying out the work. Now, the dredge that is being built in Sorel for the maritime provinces will probably be the best dredge in the world.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). When will it be ready ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) has given us to-night the very sad news that it will not be ready this year. I am very sorry for it. The plans for that dredge were carefully prepared by a man of large experience who was in a position to take advantage of the knowledge of the world in building dredges. He was employed first by the Harbour Commissioners in Montreal. He then went to the United States and was employed on very large works on the Mississippi river and elsewhere. He came back to this country. Then he made a trip to the old country to take advantage of the new knowledge on the Clyde and other places there. So that plans for that dredge was prepared with all that knowledge available. I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. German) on reflection, will admit that, under the present circumstances it would be very bad policy indeed for the department to discard all that magnificent new plant which has been built with every possible care and on which we have spent large amounts of money, and replace it with dredges owned by contractors. I say again there is no contractor in this country, no firm of contractors that has dredges, I will not say equal, but dredges that can be compared with the new modern dredges that have been built by the department during the last year. Let my hon. friend look carefully into that question, and I say again he will find that the dredging carried out in the Department of Public Works with dredges owned by the government and under our own control costs three or four times less than the work costs when it is carried out by outside men. You cannot possibly get contractors to carry out dredging for less than twenty or twenty-five cents a yard, or eight dollars an hour—and small dredges at that. The dredging carried out on the St. Lawrence does not cost more than four or five cents a yard. These are the facts as they are.

Mr. GERMAN. Notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's (Hon. Mr. Tarte's) assertion that the government is doing work cheaper than the contractors are, I beg to differ with him. And, as this government seems to be prolific in commissions, if they will appoint a commission to look into the whole matter, they will find that the work can be done by contractors cheaper and with greater satisfaction to the country than it can be done by the government. Now, I am well aware of the fact that the late Minister of Public Works did, with a great deal of eclat, construct and launch an enormous dredge in the city of Toronto. I believe it is called the 'J. Israel Tarte.'

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Not a bad name.

Mr. GERMAN. Not a bad name, a very good name. It cost an enormous amount of money. It can do a certain class of dredging work, but in soft material only, and when that class of work is exhausted the dredge will have to tie up, and will lay there as a white elephant on the hands of the government. The hon. gentleman says that the government has much better dredging plant than the contractors. I do not dispute that, because the government is in the dredging business. But I say the government, instead of going into the dredging business, should allow this work to be done by contract. They should follow in that respect the example of the United States government. If they would inquire into this matter carefully they will find that in the United States the work in harbour improvements is done much cheaper than it is done in Canada by government labour. Now, I think that our whole system of letting work by contract in this country is wrong, our system of tender is wrong. It could all be changed with great advantage. But when the hon. gentleman says that the government can do this dredging work for from three to five cents a yard, while the contractors get from twenty-three and twenty-five to fifty cents a yard for the same class of work, I differ with him, because he is entirely mistaken. He says that the work which that large dredge, the 'J. Israel Tarte,' is doing, is being done for three or four cents a yard. I doubt its being done at that figure, and I venture to say that any firm of contractors would take that work and do it cheaper than the government is doing it. Dredging work is being done on the Welland canal to-day for less than one-half of fifty cents a yard, and it is a very expensive class of work. It is being done for twenty-three cents a yard. But that is just taking two feet off the bottom of the canal, a skimming process, which is exceedingly expensive. But when contractors get into a class of dredging where they can get, in contractors' parlance, a face for the dredge to work on, ten cents a yard is not a high figure, with any kind of a good dredge. Eight, ten or twelve cents a yard is a good figure, and even less in a certain class of work. I still assert that the government would do well to consider carefully whether they should not go out of the dredging business and get their work done under a different system altogether. Then we would get rid of having every year $30,000 to $50,000 to quarrel over in this parliament for repairs to these old dredges; because they will all be old shortly, and it costs an enormous amount of money to keep dredging plant in repair. Every winter contractors have to spend a considerable amount of money in repairs to their plant. It is a difficult plant to keep in repair, and parliament will have to spend a great deal of money year after year for the repair of their dredges. Dredges are continually getting old, and as they get old it costs more to keep them in repair. I say again that I believe it would be well for the government to consider whether they should not do away with the whole system of doing this class of work by government dredges.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When I spoke of that figure of three or four cents a yard, I did not refer to the dredge which, unfortunately it seems, bears my name. That dredge, I believe, will do work for less than one cent a yard, but the elevator dredges that are doing work on the St. Lawrence cost three, or four, or five cents a yard. There is no contractor in this country to-day who has dredges that can do work for the same price. I know what dredges are available, I know the kind of work which is being done on the Welland canal. If one of our dredges was there, it would not cost twenty-three cents a yard. The contractor who has that work must make large profits indeed. I know what dredging costs, I have inquired into it carefully, and I say without hesitation that the dredging work carried out by the Department of Public Works costs a great deal less than any dredging done by any other department here. Let us compare notes at the next meeting of the Public Accounts Committee. I make bold to say that the dredging done by the Department of Public Works under the control of the head of that department, though it may cost three, or four, or five cents a yard; you will find by comparison that it will cost twenty to twenty-five cents a yard, the same kind of work, when done under the system my hon. friend advocates. The contractors are realizing large profits indeed out of this business. Let the House understand me well, it is the best business that the contractors have on hand. I know what I am saying, I have gone carefully into the figures. I know that the contractors are all anxious to see the Public Works Department dispense with their dredging plant. There is no jobbing, and no profit to be made out of a government dredge that is being worked by the department. The contractors are perfectly right in desiring to get the contracts. They are not in the business for love. But I strongly protest against the idea of dismantling those splendid modern dredges that have been built during the last five or six years, dredges that will do work three or four times cheaper than any contractor has done so far.

Mr. SPROULE. It has not been the experience in our part of the country at least that contractors will do dredging cheaper than the government. For many years we have made it a point, when an item is put in the estimates for dredging harbours in our part of the country, to endeavour to get government dredges, because government dredges will do twice as much work for the same money as contractors will, and do it much more satisfactorily. No contractor will pretend to dredge for less than eight or ten cents a yard, and it is a fact that the government dredges have taken it out time after time for five cents a yard. Then there is this in favour of a government dredge: When a government dredge is put into a harbour it will take out the material whether it is hard or soft. When a contractor does the dredging and is paid so much a yard, the dredge goes into a locality where the material is soft, and he will take it away down very much deeper than is necessary, because he is paid for it by the yard and he is getting out so many yards. Then when he comes into a hard place he will skip over it, and you will find that the bottom of the harbour is very uneven after the work is done. That has been the experience in our country over and over again. For these reasons I know that when an appropriation is made for dredging, an effort is always made to get a government dredge if possible.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I should be glad indeed if one or two of these old dredges that our hon. friend wishes to see condemned, were sent down to Nova Scotia, where we have been suffering for years for the want of dredging. I think it is over two years since this modern dredge was promised to us, and apparently it will be two years more before it is given to us. Now, after that dredge is completed, I am not so sure that it will be a success in some places in Nova Scotia. It will succeed well where there is a sandy or muddy bottom, but when you get hard and rough work it will be found that the spoon dredges are the only dredges that will be successful. But we will leave that alone and we will plead with the hon. Minister of Public Works just now to send a couple of those old dredges down to Nova Scotia, where we are suffering for the want of them. Money has been voted for dredging in the county of Lunenburg year after year, but there is no dredge to do the work. There is no part in the Dominion that is suffering so much to-day from the want of dredges as the province of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And there are not dredges enough to do the work elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) has raised a very important question that requires the very serious consideration of this committee. I find that in the various parts of the Dominion the work that seems to be most necessary and urgent is dredging in the harbours and ports. I have to some extent been looking into the matter and I find that we are in this position in Canada, notwithstanding what my hon. friend says about it being a profitable business, that we can hardly get a contractor to undertake dredging work for us. Some dredge owners have notified us that unless we pay higher prices, owing to the increase in wages and the cost of living, they will go to the United States where they say they can get plenty of work at higher prices. If we are going to do the urgent work that is required in some parts of Ontario and elsewhere in the Dominion we will have to pay higher prices this year than we have been paying in the past. It may be that some of these dredge owners have lost money. If any hon. gentleman states that dredging can be done at so much a yard, unless he is referring to some particular location, and to some particular kind of material, his statement is likely to be very misleading. A man may have a contract at sixty cents a yard and lose money on it, while, if the work is to be performed at another place, he may make money at ten cents a yard. It is no criterion to go on to say that dredging can be done at so much a yard unless we know the conditions. I may say that in almost every case, unless we are prepared to give an increase in price to the contractors, we cannot get them to enter into a contract at all. We prefer to give the work to such dredges as we have in Canada but the work is so pressing in some of our more or less national ports that unless we bring in dredges from the other side we will be unable to meet the demands of the country. If we do so, we must pay the same rates as they are able to get there. We have not been able to get any offers this season from dredges on the other side. The report of the department shows that for a dredge of 500 yards or 600 yards capacity per day, we have been in the habit of paying, in past years, under certain conditions, $8 per hour, or $80 per day. There are very few places now where we can get dredges of that capacity for less than $10 per hour, and for much larger dredges we have to pay as high as $12 and $13 per hour. The dredges, it is true, that we have, are somewhat old, but I am told by the chief engineer of the department that the average is about $35 per day for the size of a plant of a capacity of 500 yards or 600 yards per day. That is a matter that has to be looked into most carefully. I am not prepared to say offhand whether it is cheaper to have dredges under the control of the department or whether it would be better to let all the work by contract. At the present time we cannot get anything like the amount of work that is urgently required to be done taken by contract at all. We are applying to the owners of plants on the other side of the line to see if we cannot reach some of the most urgent cases. The information of the department is in contradiction of my hon. friend from Welland, because the figures show that dredges of the same capacity are averaging about $35 per day. The most urgent work from one end of the Dominion to the other that I know of in the way of public works is the dredging which is required to be done, and I think every dollar we vote ought to be expended to the best possible advantage according to our best information. At the same time I think we would make a great mistake if we hesitated to vote a reasonable amount of money to make the necessary improvements to our ports and harbours.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did I understand the hon. minister to say that the cost of dredges ran as high as $35 per day ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Small dredges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer says that the average cost of the dredges of the class that we are now referring to that will be repaired by this vote is $35 per day.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is that a dredge of 500 yards capacity, and does it include attendance, scows, and tugs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That includes everything.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the fact that a dredge is very badly needed to improve the navigation of the lower St. Lawrence from Quebec down. On several occasions the corporation of pilots and the harbour commissioners of Quebec have applied to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to have a certain point of the lower St. Lawrence called Chenal Beaujeu, below Crane island, widened and deepened. There is a pass at that point where at low tide steamers have only twenty-five feet of water, and in cases where they require from twenty-seven to thirty feet of water they are delayed from two to three hours. In every case where a request has been made to have this work done the explanation has been given that the Department of Public Works had no dredges for the work for that particular point, but that all the dredges were occupied between Quebec and Montreal dredging the river. The work to which I refer has not been done and the condition of the river at this point is a great impediment to navigation. The pass is a rather narrow one, being about 800 feet in width and it is curved so that not only has the river at this particular point to be deepened but it has to be widened and straightened. There are also several sand banks formed at a certain distance from the several wharfs which the government own on both sides of the St. Lawrence from Quebec down to Rivière du Loup. The shore ice in the spring of the year will lift large boulders from the two shores of the St. Lawrence and they will be carried down by the stream, the ice will dissolve by the action of the water and by the rising of the temperature and these boulders will be deposited wherever the ice happens to break up. In several instances these sand bars and rock obstructions are formed by the ice dissolving near these wharfs. I know several localities which have applied for relief. In these localities, some thirty or forty years ago, we had at the end of our wharfs, six, eight or ten feet of water while now we have only three, four or five feet of water. I have on previous occasions drawn the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this matter and I know it is no fault of his that it has not been done before this. I believe it would meet with the endorsation of the House and the country if money were appropriated to improve the lower portion of the St. Lawrence, which, after all is the most important part of that navigation. You talk about dredging the channel between Quebec and Montreal, but to my mind it is a secondary consideration, because all the steamers that go to Montreal have to pass by Quebec, and the port of Quebec is the only port where you have a great depth of water on each side without any dredging being necessary. I appeal to the Minister of Public Works to ask parliament for a certain sum of money in order that we may have a dredge for the lower St. Lawrence. We are told now that the dredges are all occupied between Quebec and Montreal, but we are urgently in need of relief in that part of the St. Lawrence to which I refer. I urge the minister as strongly as I can, to look into this matter carefully and to give prompt relief to the situation.

Mr. McLENNAN. I desire to direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact, that the county of Inverness, which I have the honour to represent has within its confines three large coal mines now in course of development. One of these is owned by the well known firm of Mackenzie & Mann, and with the assistance of the Dominion and provincial governments and the municipality of Inverness, they have been able to build a railway to facilitate the shipment of their coal. The other two companies are not so fortunate. They are depending on the natural harbours in their vicinity, but their shipping trade is hampered because of the want of a dredge to deepen these harbours. Both American and Canadian capitalists are interested in these mines, and a greater depth of water in two of these harbours is absolutely necessary to the successful pursuit of their undertaking. From this time out it will be absolutely futile for these gentlemen to develop their mines further, unless some assurance is given them by the government that dredges will be sent to work in these harbours. The remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) remind me that the coal mines of the county of Inverness are the nearest coal areas to the St. Lawrence. A reference to the map will show that the western coast of Inverness is right opposite the mouth of the St. Lawrence across the gulf. That being so the greater is the pity that accommodation is not afforded to these enterprising people who have taken hold of these mines to take advantage of their geographical position. I have every hope that the Minister of Public Works will see to it that the development of these valuable properties will not be impeded for want of dredging in those harbours. A dredge was employed there before, and I trust that that dredge will be sent back to complete the work so vigorously begun. I leave the matter entirely in the hands of the minister, feeling confident that he will do justice to that important part of the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I wish to say in reply to my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) that I fully recognize the importance of the matter which he has brought to the attention of the House. In view of the great necessity and urgency there is for dredging below the city of Quebec, I cannot understand how it is that they have not had a better dredging plant there. I realize that nothing will so check the development of the resources of the country as lack of shipping facilities in the various harbours; and recognizing that, we have put a vote of $75,000 in the estimates to enable us to build or purchase a dredge to be used below Quebec. Now, as to the remarks of my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) I can assure him that with such plants as we have at our disposal, it is the intention to go on with that work to which he has referred.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The government works are now completed on the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Kingston, and there will be more or less dredging required there. Is it the intention of the government to put a dredge on that section ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have some dredges on that stretch of the river now, and wherever we can hire a dredge we are doing so to carry on some of the most urgent work. I think I have been able to hire a dredge in the last day or two to work in the hon. gentleman's constituency, so that ships may enter the harbour and go up to the wharf. There has been a great demand from merchants and shippers in that district, and I believe I have now been successful in meeting their wants.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In looking up what the government has been paying for some of these dredges, I fully agree what has been said, that it would be much cheaper and in the interests of the country, if the government had a good dredge of its own rather than to engage at exorbitant prices some of these small dredges that are practically worn out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I misunderstood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid). The new dredge for use in Ontario will, I hope, be completed and be working during the next month or so.

Mr. LAW. I do not feel that I would be doing my duty to the constituency I have the honour to represent, if I did not avail myself of this opportunity to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the urgent necessity for dredging in the county of Yarmouth. Anybody who has visited the town from which I come, knows that we are handicapped to a very great extent in our harbour facilities. It is true that the government has favoured us with a dredge for two or three seasons, but the work is incomplete and consequently not much good has resulted from it. The government had plans made of the harbour a year or two ago, and if the government would give us for one other season such a dredge as the new one which is being built, I have no doubt that the plans made by the resident engineer could be fully carried out, and it would be a very great convenience for the county of Yarmouth. We are the stepping stone as it were between the United States and the maritime provinces. We have one or two boats a day coming in there from Boston, carrying a very large number of passengers who are distributed over all parts of Nova Scotia. Our harbour is nothing but a zig-zag channel, and it is almost impossible for steamers to get in or out during foggy weather or in the dark. While I am on my feet, I would like to say in reference to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. German) about the government selling its dredges and getting the work done by contract; that I do not agree with him at all. I cannot see why the government is not in a position to do the dredging as cheaply as any contractor can do it, and more cheaply. The dredges which contractors would buy and work would get old, just like the government dredges. I can only speak of the dredge 'Canada' which we had in Yarmouth for a few seasons. I doubt if any contractors on earth could do better work than was done by that dredge for her capacity. She worked late and early, and did good work. I hope parliament, instead of curtailing this vote, will see its way to vote larger sums for dredging throughout the whole country, especially in the maritime provinces. No money that parliament votes does more good than the money voted for dredging purposes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has just said that he cannot understand why no dredging plant has been used below Quebec. When he has been a little longer in the important position he occupies, he will understand readily. There is a high tide below Quebec which allows the largest ships to reach the inner St. Lawrence. When we took office, there was really not one dredge available for work done there. It was solid rock that had to be excavated.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Solid rock at Chenal Beaujeu ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. At Crane Island it is solid rock.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The department has heretofore represented differently, that it is sand.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No.

Mr. TALBOT. Have any soundings been taken by the Department of Public Works at Crane Island ? If soundings have been taken, the report must be that there are several feet of sand on the top of the rock.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But there is solid rock at the bottom.

Mr. TALBOT. And that steamers are fairly ploughing their way through that mud at the risk of their boilers.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I quite agree that there is sand, and there is rock also. However, there were no dredges available, and that work could not be carried out just then; and there was not so much hurry for it because of the tide. I would have been only too glad, if it had been possible, to have that piece of work done, which, if I remember rightly, is only two or three thousand feet long; but the reports in the department were to the effect that the dredges that were available were not capable of carrying out that work. It is unfair to insinuate that I am to blame because that work has not been done.

Mr. TALBOT. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Minister of Public Works said he could not understand why that work was not done before. The tide was there, and it is still there, and there was more pressing work to be attended to. If the House will allow me to give my candid advice as to what should be done, I will say this : We all admit that there is a large quantity of dredging necessary in all parts of this country. Business is developing; harbours and rivers urgently require dredging. If I were in the position my hon. friend occupies, I would not hesitate one minute to come before this parliament and ask for all the money necessary to build a proper plant to carry out that work. I quite grant that in some parts of the country it must be as well to hire dredges; but there is so much dredging to be done in all parts of Canada that for twenty-five years to come the largest fleet of dredges we can supply will be required. My hon. friend has only to look at the records of the Public Works Department to find thousands of requests from all parts of the country for dredging. We have to face the situation. We have been too cheese-paring in the past; we should have spent more money to improve our waterways. My frank advice to the government to-day is not to hesitate, but to go ahead. Parliament will not at all grumble at the demands which it may be necessary to make upon it for improving our waterways.

Mr. TURGEON. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the necessity of dredging along the north shore of the province of New Brunswick. The trade of that district has been very much hampered for the want of it. I may say that the harbour of Caraquet, the harbour of Shippegan and Little Shippegan, in fact, all the harbours of the counties of Restigouche, Kent, Northumberland, as well as in the county of Bonaventure in the province of Quebec, are in much need of dredging. The hon. Minister of Public Works has referred to the great appliances for dredging now used in different parts of the country; but if we have to wait until such appliances have completed their work in the large places, before they can come to the smaller harbours, our trade will have to take another direction. I know that the hon. minister is endeavouring to give every case his best attention. I called his attention yesterday to the necessity of doing some dredging in the harbour of Tracadie, where large lumbering interests are suffering. I hope he will be able to meet the necessities of these cases, on which I think reports were made by his own officials. A report was made in 1893, I believe, recommending some dredging in the harbour of Bathurst, one of the greatest in northern New Brunswick, and ever since we have been waiting from year to year for a dredge. I would ask the hon. minister to consider the suggestion that he should purchase at once either in Canada or in the United States a dredge for service on the north shore of New Brunswick, or in the Baie des Chaleurs. I believe we should have a dredge for that locality which could be moved from place to place according to the most urgent need. There is trade enough to be done on both sides of the Baie des Chaleurs to warrant such an expenditure, and I hope the suggestion will receive his best consideration.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that this question has developed considerably. We started by discussing repairs generally, and we have had speeches from several hon. gentlemen, including the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Law), and the hon. member who has just taken his seat, asking for dredging to be done in their constituencies. We have an hon. gentleman who is interested in the policy of the Department of Public Works. I refer to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). That hon. minister distinctly stated that it was the intention of the government to give the Department of Marine and Fisheries the work of improving our harbours and rivers. If that be the policy of the government—and that policy was solemnly stated during an election contest—we ought to have the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries here to give his views as to what will be done in the future regarding the various matters brought up in this debate. No doubt the Minister of Public Works is giving all the information he can, but, under the circumstances, he is not in a position to formulate before this House the policy which the government intends to pursue in the future with regard to the different works which hon. gentlemen opposite have pressed on the government to-night. We should have the hon. Minister of Marine here to tell us what will be his policy in these matters, when he takes over into his department that branch of the Public Works Department which deals with our harbours and our rivers. We should have a definite policy laid down by the minister who is to be responsible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A definite policy about what? Is it about repairing dredges, or what else?

Mr. CASGRAIN. As I have said, the question has drifted far away from the repairs of dredges. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been permitted to go into other questions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the hon. gentleman speaks about a policy, it is only fair that he should say upon what matters he wants a policy pronounced.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We have had the hon. members for Yarmouth, Inverness and Bellechasse urging their views, and we ought to have some definite announcement as to what is the general policy of the government on the matters brought up by these hon. gentlemen, and in order to have an authoritative statement of that policy we should have here the hon. minister who, according to the declaration made by him at his election, is very shortly to run that branch of public works which has to do with harbours and rivers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Is it possible to very much improve on the advanced policy inaugurated in 1896 and carried on up to last year?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have not any opinion to express on that point. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) no doubt did a great deal to advance the policy which the late government had begun. But I would like to know whether there is to be a change in that policy, or whether it is to be followed out?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It seems to me that the answer I gave my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) was plain, frank, clear and distinct, when I said that I had already placed in the estimates appropriations to provide dredges for the important works which he and others have represented as so much required below the city of Quebec. As long as I occupy the position, I shall be responsible for the policy of the department and be prepared to declare it as soon as I have received the sanction of my right hon. friend the Premier and my colleagues. I agree that my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works appreciated much more than some others the requirements of the country, and very much more than those who preceded him. I trust that we all recognize the great necessity for the improvements started in 1896, and I have no doubt that the policy then begun will be continued even to a greater extent.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I trust that my hon. friend will go ahead quicker even than I endeavoured to do. If he does, he will get my cordial support. I did the best I could and the Department of Public Works did the best it could. I should be very sorry indeed if that department were dismantled, as seems to be announced. The department is a unit to-day. It is organized on a solid basis. Its officers work together. They are proud of their work. As a French Canadian, let me say that the Department of Public Works has been largely manned by men of my race. I should be very sorry if that department, which is the only one where French influence has a good deal of weight, were dismantled, and I would appeal from such a decision to the larger tribunal of this country. I hope such will not be the case. The announcement has not been formally and clearly made. The Department of Public Works has done splendid work during the past few years. All the officers have given their best energies to the work. It has been said that we have drifted a little far from the $30,000 for repairs to dredges, but perhaps I may be allowed to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works whether he has taken into consideration the report made to him with reference to the dredging of the north channel below Quebec, and whether any decision has been arrived at?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not had an opportunity of considering that report yet.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is one of the reasons also why the other channel has not been dredged so far. The two departments of Marine and Public Works have been discussing whether it is better or not to improve the north or south channel. That is one additional reason why the improvement of the south channel has not been made. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has said, in discussing the item which is under debate, that he fears that he will be obliged to pay more this season for dredging work. I would like very much to know in what parts of the country and on what works he expects to be obliged to pay more?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was referring more particularly to the arrangements we are trying to make for dredging on Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. These are very broad limits.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, it is a very broad question.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But my hon. friend knows the works on which he expects to spend money. He says that he expects to be obliged to pay more for dredging in certain places. Surely it is a fair question to ask him what these works are. I do not mean to embarrass him——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not feel at all embarrassed. I said the hon. gentleman's question was a general one, and I thought it called for a general answer. I thought the answer I gave him would indicate to one familiar with the work, as he is, the points I wished to refer to. But if he wishes the details, I may say that on the Kaministiquia river we have been paying fifteen cents a yard. The owners of dredges there decline to work any more at that figure. At Point Edward, Sarnia, where the great transportation companies of the country are urging us to carry on dredging so that the vessels may approach the wharfs, and not be obliged to do business through American ports, we have to pay from $1 to $3 an hour more. We have no option, for there are no dredges offering. We have advertised and communicated with different parties and are doing our best to make an arrangement at the lowest possible price. I think it was in answer to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) that I said we might have to pay higher prices. We have to take into consideration the question of departing from the policy of maintaining our own dredges. It is a serious question, and the mere statement on the part of anybody that it costs more will not be sufficient. It will have to be decided by a careful calculation based upon the actual figures.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the hon. minister has the information at hand, I would very much like to know how much dredging he will do at Point Edward ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The appropriation for the current year is $10,000. But I do not think it will complete the work. The main estimates now under consideration, contain amounts that, with few exceptions, are for works that have been undertaken and are in progress. When we are discussing new works, I shall be able to give further information. The chief engineer advises me, that, with the amount of money we have we shall make a fairly good approach to the wharf, so that the trade will not be stopped at that port.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is a very important work.

Mr. CLARKE. How much does the hon. minister expect to have to pay for dredging at Fort William ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The material to be removed there varies very much. We have rock, hard-pan, boulders mixed with sand—a great variety of material. As has been explained, it makes a great difference whether a dredge has work to do that allows it to stay in one place and go deep, or whether it can skim along and take off only a few feet. Also, the distance to which the material has to be removed is a factor in the calculation. We have been asked as high as twenty-five cents a yard in that section.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the hon. minister going to pay twenty-five cents a yard ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not if we can help it. That is a serious question that has to be considered. The government is like a merchant or anybody else, it must simply make the best arrangement it can. We are negotiating now, trying to get the best prices possible. If we cannot get the work done at the price we want to pay, then it becomes a question of paying the price demanded of us or stopping the work.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope the hon. minister will be able to give us further information with regard to the work at Port Arthur. I was there last fall, and I know that the people are very anxious to have the work gone on with. I believe it is a work of very great importance, for Port Arthur and Fort William are ports that are increasing in importance every day. We are indebted to the minister for the information he has given us, and apparently given us under great difficulties in view of the fact—as it appears to be from what has been said by the hon. ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that this important department is to be disorganized. We are also indebted to the hon. ex-minister for the valuable information he has given us. I agree with that hon. gentleman that the policy of the department ought to be to construct first-class modern dredges, and carry on the work as a government work. The hon. minister says that the cost of operating one of these dredges, with a capacity of six or seven hundred yards, including tugs and scows, is about $35 a day. If the hon. gentleman's statements are correct, and contractors are not satisfied with $8 an hour or $80 a day, I think he should take a larger appropriation for the purpose of constructing government dredges, for it is evident that it will pay to have new dredges. It is better to spend money in building modern dredges than to pay $8 or $10 an hour for dredges of no greater capacity than 600 yards a day. But would not the ex-minister be a little more explicit ? He has warned the committee that there is some scheme on foot to dismantle or disorganize the department. If the department is well equipped—and I understand that it is—it would be a national misfortune to have it destroyed. If it is the policy of the government to give up this national workshop at Sorel, and give over the work to contractors, we should be informed of it. It is of great importance to us that we should know what the hon. gentleman means by the warning he has given us. Would not the minister (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) frankly give us the information?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What information does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) refer to ?

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman's predecessor in office has twice drawn attention to the fact that there is a scheme on foot to dismantle this department, to disfigure it, to render it less efficient than it is, to discontinue the policy which has been followed for the past five or six years, and which has been attended with such gratifying results. If there is anything in that statement I think we are entitled to know it before we vote any more money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot give information on a subject of which I know nothing. I think I have answered every question the hon. gentleman has put me frankly and courteously. If the hon. gentleman knows of any scheme, it is for him to answer and not for me.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am ready to answer it. We have read a lot of electoral speeches and newspaper articles to the effect that the dredging branch of the Department of Public Works and the harbour improvements are to be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But as the government has not yet proposed any such change to the House, I do not think this is the time to discuss it. The hon. gentleman is quite right in asking for information. But as the Prime Minister is not here, I suppose nobody will answer it in his place. While I am on my feet, I will take the opportunity of advising my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works to be very careful indeed in the work to be carried out at Port Arthur and Fort William. Perhaps he has not yet had time to look carefully into that important question. Fort William and Port Arthur are the centres of the trade between the west and the east. We should provide those two harbours with every possible improvement. There has been some work done in the past, but a good deal more requires to be done in the future. I think my hon. friend would do well not to make any bargain that would bind him to do that work piecemeal. The Mission river should be dredged, deepened and widened. Before I left office I instructed one of the ablest officers of the department, Mr. Coste, to make a report of the whole situation. I have been there myself and have inspected all these points, which are of great importance indeed. Let us make Port Arthur and Fort William the rivals of Duluth. Duluth is but a comparatively short distance from these centres of Canadian trade. Fort William and Port Arthur are outlets to our grea North-west, and they should therefore be equipped in a proper way. This is not the time perhaps to discuss that question, but I thought it was well for me to ask my hon. friend not to give any contracts now before looking carefully into the situation and coming before us with a complete plan. I thought last year we had about completed all the necessary works in the Kaministiquia river. There was not much left to be done.

Mr. CLARKE. Some dredging to be done near the mouth, I think.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is always dredging to be done if you want to do it. But a general plan should now be adopted and carried out.

Mr. BRUCE. I beg to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that there is nothing in the estimates for the port of Hamilton. I notice that there are applications for all the little fishing villages along the coast of the St. Lawrence, but there is nothing in the estimates for the great port of Hamilton, a port large enough to float the whole British fleet. Looking over the Public Accounts, I notice that $40,000 was expended last year on a little ditch leading through the shallows into Toronto, but not a dollar for Hamilton. I trust the Minister of Public Works will not forget Hamilton when he comes to disperse his $13,000,000 of a surplus.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of Public Works referred to Point Edward in Sarnia as if he intended to do some dredging there. I might ask him what he intends doing at Port Stanley ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have completed arrangements to have a dredge at Port Stanley very early during the season. Probably it will be necessary to go more fully into that matter when the supplementary estimates are brought down.

Mr. INGRAM. I was not in when the item was first read, and do not know what explanations the minister gave. May I ask him how many dredges there are in Manitoba now, and if the 'Sir Hector' is one of them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I believe one of the tugs in connection with the dredge there is named 'Sir Hector.'

Mr. INGRAM. Is the dredge you have out there an old one or a new one ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. One is an old dredge and one is comparatively new.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year the department was doing some repairs on the old dredge. I would like to know whether the repairs are completed, and if they are, will that complete all the repairs ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I want to say a word to the committee at this stage. I allowed a wide latitude to the discussion of this first item so as to give the members of the committee an opportunity of expressing themselves on the general question of dredging, but they are now leaving that and taking up some items which are immediately below, which they can discuss when they reach them. I now desire to inform the committee that having given them such wide latitude in discussing the question of dredging, when I call the next items I expect a relevancy of discussion on each of them. Now, in order to give the hon. member for West Elgin an opportunity of speaking, we will call the second item, which has reference to the Manitoba dredge.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We have not called that yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No, but it is not in order to discuss the general dredge question on the item of the Manitoba dredge.

Mr. INGRAM. Very well, I will put myself in order by asking about the first item. What about the vessels comprising this item of $30,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained at considerable length this item of $30,000. But as the hon. gentleman may not have been in, I will explain it again. This is to provide for defraying the expense of urgent and general repairs to the hulls and machinery of the dredges, tugs, scows and barges, which are the property of the government, in the different provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). We have wandered considerably from the matter that is before the committee, but there is one question which I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works, and that is if the government own any dredge of sufficient capacity to dredge out the present administration ?

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Chairman, you have been good enough to allow me the same latitude as you have allowed other hon. gentlemen before me. I would like to refer to a question which was asked the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) last week, and to the answer that he was supposed to give us before this. Last week a question was asked in regard to the division of the Public Works Department and the right hon. First Minister promised to bring an answer down last Monday, but the answer has not yet been given to the House. I think it is quite important that we should know something about that subject, that we should know whether the department is going to be dismantled or not. Several days have elapsed since last Monday and I will say——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I decided upon this matter the other night that the question of the policy of the government in dividing the various duties in connection with the Public Works Department and the Department of Marine and Fisheries was not a question that was referred to the Committee of the Whole and that it was wholly and entirely irrelevant to the discussion of the questions that were placed before us for consideration. Having looked into that matter more carefully since I gave that decision the other night, I must inform the committee that if they want to find out the policy of the government they must find it out in the House when the Orders of the Day are called. Any hon. member can ask the government to explain their policy in regard to this matter, but it is a question, in my opinion, that we cannot take up and discuss in committee. It is out of order. It is irrelevant.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Chairman, of course I bow to your ruling, but I think we can get over that difficulty. I am going to move that the committee rise and report progress. I think we should not pass any more of these items before we know what is the policy of the government upon this question. It is an important question. It is perfectly well understood in this House and understood by the country that an announcement in regard to it has been made in the speech from the Throne. In the speech from the Throne I find this :

> Bills with respect to the creation of a railway commission, the amendment of the patent laws, the militia Act, Chinese immigration, the reorganization of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the settlement of railway labour disputes and various other subjects will be submitted to you.

Here we are far advanced in the session, probably not so near the end of the session as some hon. gentlemen may desire, but fairly well advanced in the work of the session, and we have not had any intimation from the government yet as to what is the policy of the government in regard to what my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) called the dismantling of the Public Works Department. Here we are asked to vote large sums of money in connection with public works that, if report is true, will be spent next year not by the Department of Public Works, but by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It is in the remembrance of every hon. member of this House that when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries went before his constituents, one of the excuses which he gave why he accepted the Department of Marine and Fisheries and why he did not insist upon having the Department of Public Works which my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's, had just left, was that he was to get one of the most important portions of the Department of Public Works transferred to his own department; that is the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It was laid down then by the government candidate, not only by the government candidate, but by a minister, speaking, I take it, for the ministry itself, that this part of the Public Works Department which deals with the question of transportation, the most important question now before the country, the question of improving the harbours and rivers in this country, was to be transferred to his department. That was the language which was used in regard to the policy of the government by the hon. minister who then went before his constituents, that was the reason which he gave to his constituents for not insisting upon the right he had of succeeding the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, in the Department of Public Works. Now, as I said before, we are asked to vote large sums of money for the Department of Public Works, which, in all probability, if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was telling the truth, which I do not doubt for one instant, will be spent by him, will be spent by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and which will not be under the control of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. I know my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works means well, I know he is doing everything he can to give all the information in his possession to this committee, but I say that if he is to be succeeded in a short time, or at the end of this session, in a part of his department by the hon. gentleman who is now at the head of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, he cannot really tell this committee what will be the policy of the department when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries takes that part of his department over. Therefore, it seems to me that it is a most important question that we should have solved at this moment and before we go any further in voting money, before we put into the hands of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, any more money, before we give him the spending of any more funds, we should have the policy stated which is to be carried out by his successor in regard to that important part of the public works of Canada. What is his successor going to do ? Can my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works give us what is going to be, as the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, put it, the ensemble of the policy of the Department of Public Works ? How does my hon. friend know that if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries becomes vested with this part of the department he will follow out the policy which the hon. Minister of Public Works is laying down to the committee now ? How can my hon. friend say that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not follow the policy which was propounded to this House by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), that he will not tie up all these dredges which have cost such a large amount of money and will not employ contractors to do the dredging ? Can my hon. friend say that this will not be the policy of his successor ? Probably his successor will be appointed at the end of this session, if the rumour which is now current turns out to be true. I think that we should get the unanimous support of this committee in not voting any more money, in not putting any more funds into the hands of the hon. Minister of Public Works until the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is here to tell us if he is going to follow the policy which is laid down by my hon. friend. But, the principal question and the question which we must insist upon having an answer to now, is : What is the policy of the government in reference to the Public Works Department ? Is it true that the Public Works Department is to be divided into two, is it true that this most important part of the Public Works Department; that is, the administration of the questions which we have been discussing here to-night and the spending of this money which we are asked to vote to-night, is to be left in the hands of my hon. friend, or is to be transferred to the hands of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries ? Is it true that the Department of Public Works, which, since confederation, I believe, has been what it is to-day, is to be dismantled, to use the term employed by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, or is it to remain as it is to-day ? In other words, are the pledges which were given to the electors of Maisonneuve to be carried out ? Are the promises which were given to the electors of Maisonneuve to be realized by the government ? Is that the policy of the government, or is the Department of Public Works to remain as it is with my hon. friend, who so worthily fills the chair ? Is it to remain in his hands, or are we to have it divided and this part given over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ? Even the supporters of the government should insist upon a categorical answer being given, before we vote any more money to this department.

Mr. INGRAM. This is a very serious matter. We find that a minister differs from his colleagues and he is obliged to leave them. What follows ? A number of gentlemen come here to Ottawa to urge the appointment of a successor to that minister, and finally Mr. Préfontaine is selected. But instead of getting the Department of Public Works he was trusted with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and he returns to Quebec and holds out the hope to his electors that the departments will be divided, and that he will administer the Department of Marine and Fisheries as well as a large portion of the Public Works Department. I would like to point out to the Minister of Marine——

An hon. MEMBER. He is not here.

Mr. INGRAM. He is not here and is hardly ever here. I want to point out that while the province of Quebec administered the Department of Public Works—and probably it was right that a minister from that province should preside over that department—yet now that the department is put in charge of a representative of the province of Ontario it will be a reflection on the largest province of the Dominion to have that department cut in two. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) who is now the minister discharges the duties of his position with credit to himself and the country in view of the short period he has been in office, and it would be a reflection on the province of Ontario to denude him of any portion of his functions. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) no doubt took part in preparing the announcement in the speech from the Throne, that there would be a reorganization of this department. He was bold to take upon himself to declare in the province of Quebec that the department would be divided and to circulate his declaration in the press, but when he sat in this House a few nights ago he was not so bold. He was not—may I say, man enough—to get up and say whether the statement he made in Maisonneuve was true or not true. We found the other evening that the gentleman who is now leading the House (Hon. Mr. Fielding) was afraid to trust his friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) who had been too glib on many other occasions, to reply to the question put to him, and so he endeavoured to protect the baby Minister of Marine and Fisheries—I mean baby in the sense that he is the younger member of the cabinet. Then, when the attention of the Prime Minister was drawn to this matter, in order to relieve the tension, he promised that he would announce the policy of the government on this question in a day or two, but we have waited for many days and no announcement has been made. In view of the announcement in the speech from the Throne; in view of the statement made in this House a few days ago, we want to know now what the policy of the government is before we vote any more money. I warn the government that it will be a very dangerous thing for them if they attempt to divide that department. If the present minister (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is not administering his department well, then the honourable thing to do is to ask him for his resignation, but do not cast a reflection on the province of Ontario by saying in effect that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is not capable of administering the Department of Public Works. If I were to believe all that I have read in the Montreal 'Herald,' and all that I have read in the Montreal 'Witness' with respect to the conduct of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) when he filled an important office in the city of Montreal; if I were to believe all the statements that have come from his own political friends, then I would hesitate much to see a change made in the Department of Public Works, which is one of the great spending departments in this Dominion. I warn the government that in the province of Ontario, and I have no doubt in the other provinces as well, there will be a strong feeling of resentment at such a change taking place. I trust that if the government have any idea of making this change, they will at once change that idea, because I can assure them that this country will not tolerate a change of that character.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. CLANCY. The ministers cannot afford to sit there in complacent silence and take no notice of what has been said from this side of the House. I ask the leader of the House if it is not fair play that we should now know what the proposed reorganization of the Department of Marine and Fisheries is to be. It was announced in the speech from the Throne, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries no doubt sat at the Council Table when that announcement was prepared. Knowing what the mind of the government was before that, he went to his constituents and made the announcement in more detail, and now the leader of the House is in all justice bound to tell us what is the intention of the government with regard to this matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no wish to be discourteous, but I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) has overlooked the fact that the question was asked some days ago, and that all the information that it was proper to give to this question was then politely given. Life is too short to have these things repeated every day.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has with politeness and splendid indefiniteness answered my question. Let me remind him, however, that when questions are not answered they can be asked again. We will take care to remind the hon. gentleman that the question is not properly answered. Does he mean to say that when a policy is announced in the speech from the Throne, it becomes a state secret. Does he think that this is not a proper thing for the country to know, especially when we are voting money for this department, what are the details of a change of such importance. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is dealing with the House as candidly and frankly as he ought to on a question of this kind? When he says that life is too short to answer, he is not quite courteous, implying that it was not a proper question to ask. That is not the way to dispose of the matter, because it is a question on which the House has a right to have information when we are proposing to vote money for the services of the country. I would be the last to press for information on an important question of policy that had not been matured; but this matter has been thought out, and now the hon. gentleman says life is too short to answer the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Life is too short to keep on answering it.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman ever answer it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the answer?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps my hon. friend was not here. The answer was that when any Bill for a change in any of the departments was presented, the House would be fully advised of its object and purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that we have not to depend on the courtesy of the hon. gentleman leading the House when a subject takes the shape of a Bill, because it is public property.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend knows, he need not ask.

Mr. CLANCY. It is because I do not know that I ask. For the hon. gentleman to say that the information will come with a Bill is not an answer. The hon. gentleman knows that the First Minister thought the matter of sufficient importance only a day or two ago, to say that he would put the House in possession of the information in the early part of this week. We have reached past the middle of the week, and I think the hon. gentleman ought to say that he will give the House the information, as promised by the First Minister.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In view of the announcement in the speech from the Throne, that this department was to be reorganized. I think it most unfair that these estimates should have been placed before this committee first; and also, in view of the fact that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries absents himself from this House while these estimates are being passed, and when he could have stated his policy in case he should have the spending of the money. Under these circumstances, and as there is no doubt of the reorganization of this department taking place during the present session, I think these estimates should be allowed to stand, until this reorganization takes place. I therefore now beg leave to move——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I wish to suggest, then, that these estimates stand until the reorganization is announced to this House.

Mr. McCREARY. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time this wrangling were at an end. We sit here night after night endeavouring to pass estimates, and we have not yet got half through with the estimates of one department. I think that if some of these gentlemen lived three or four thousand miles away from here, they would not be so much disposed to waste the time of the House. The hon. member for East Elgin said that it was a serious matter whether this money was expended by the Minister of Public Works or by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It may be a serious matter, from a party point of view, but I submit that not one per cent of the people of Canada care which department spends the money, so long as it is spent properly and well. I see three or four officials here, who have been coming here for several nights, while these estimates have been before the House. How long is this thing to go on? It is a crying shame that the money of the people of Canada should be wasted in this manner. If there is anything in these items which hon. gentlemen opposite object to, it is their duty to move that it be struck out; but they are afraid to do that, because it might affect some of their friends. If this thing is to go on we should meet here on Monday morning at nine o'clock, and sit right on doing business till Saturday night. I thank God the time is coming when the dog will wag the tail instead of the tail wagging the dog—when the western members will make these members come here and stay here. It may not be at the end of this census, but it will be at the end of the next census. We had three or four weeks of oratorical fireworks over the budget, during which we had a rehash of speeches that are gray with age—yes, some of them are bald-headed, and with whiskers on them. If you look at 'Hansard,' you will find some of these same speeches were made twenty-five years ago. I trust that the men who are objecting to these estimates will seriously consider the losses that many western business men have to suffer in coming here. It is no wonder that it is hard to get men in British Columbia or the North-west Territories to come down here. If they could get through in two or three months, they would not mind; but, very few can afford to be away from their homes half the summer. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite to take these things into their consideration.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not one of those who take up the time of the House speaking on the budget. I have not spoken on the budget since I have been in the House. I have my own reasons for that. I think a good many government supporters wish to have an opportunity of speaking, and that is a good time for them to do so. I think the hon. gentleman has not seriously considered this question, or he would not have spoken in the manner he has done. We find a minister leaving the city of Ottawa and going to the province of Quebec and giving the public information which has been refused to the members of this House. Is that a proper position in which to place the members of this House. If the hon. gentleman, when he made that statement in Quebec, made an incorrect statement he should be manly enough to get up here and deny it.

An hon. MEMBER. What was the statement?

Mr. INGRAM. That the Department of Public Works was to be divided and that he was to administer a portion of that department in addition to his own. That declaration the hon. Minister of Marine has not contradicted in this House. He was accompanied by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) and North Ontario (Mr. Grant) to the city of Hamilton, and if we cannot get the information we desire from the hon. Minister of Finance, perhaps these hon. gentlemen, who had the confidence no doubt of the Minister of Marine at Hamilton, may be able to enlighten the House. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) is not open to the charge of criticising the items of the expenditure. If we were to depend on the government supporters for criticisms of these items, there would be no check on the expenditure at all. We are therefore within our rights when we ask for information on these important items, and in doing so we are not asking any favour from our hon. friends opposite. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very apt during elections to accuse the opposition of not having moved to strike out certain items of expenditure. But do they forget that during the eighteen years they were in opposition, and when they were given credit in the press to some extent for the manner in which they discussed the estimates, out of over $600,000,000 asked by Conservative administrations, only a trifle of that total was objected to by the then opposition. It is not the duty of an opposition to simply object to an item and then call for a division. You cannot point to any opposition in any enlightened country which follows that course. If we were to do that, we would be here from January to December. It is not our policy, nor is it our duty to place ourselves on record, by calling for a vote on every particular item. We recognize that the hon. Minister of Public Works has not been long in the position, and are therefore not harrassing him with all kinds of serious questions. We could ask him very important and serious questions, but as he is a new minister in that department, it would be unreasonable to expect him to answer serious questions in connection with items with which he cannot possibly be acquainted. Therefore our courtesy to that hon. gentleman has been such, that we even find government supporters finding fault with us for the mildness of the criticisms we offer from time to time on the expenditure of his department. The opposition are entitled to ask any questions they chose with reference to the estimates, and we propose to exercise that right. Whether our criticisms be mild or severe it is for us to consider. We are not here by reason of the good graces of hon. members opposite, but are here because we have secured the votes of the people in our respective constituencies and have won our elections in an honourable manner and are proud of it. I am very glad that these remarks are so highly applauded and that hon. gentlemen on both sides appreciate that fact. I would wish very much that hon. gentlemen opposite could make the same statement.

An hon. MEMBER. What about Gamey?

Mr. INGRAM. I am very glad to have that interruption. Sir, if the gentlemen who who have sworn against Mr. Gamey, if I may put it in that way—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. INGRAM. I am quite in order. If the gentlemen who have sworn against Mr. Gamey have sworn quite truthfully, there is one thing I can congratulate Mr. Gamey on, and that is that the money deposited in court and before the commission, if the statement of these hon. gentlemen are to be believed, he will have the satisfaction of spending for his private purposes or whatever purpose he chooses.

An hon. MEMBER. What has that to do with the items ?

Mr. INGRAM. We are not confined to the items now, but have a roving commission and we propose to take advantage of it until the government are prepared to come down and give us the information we require. The chief object of this government seems to be how best they can accommodate themselves to every wind that blows in order to secure votes and keep in office. I remember when the government came into office in 1896, they were most innocent and unsophisticated, they were in their childhood and kindergarten days, and whenever the opposition asked a question, they got up and answered it frankly. They changed their tactics, and you cannot get them to answer any question now until they get a good 'ready' on, and I tell you it takes a long time for the government to get a 'ready' on. I am glad to find my hon. friends opposite so heartily enjoying themselves. I am glad to find them taking my remarks so pleasantly, and I trust I shall always have my remarks accepted as pleasantly by hon. gentlemen opposite. The members of the government seem lost to all sense of duty and fair-play, and persist in remaining silent in their places and refusing to give the information we ask and to answer the very important question we have put. I do not know whether my hon. friend the Finance Minister considers that the very indefinite answer he has given is going to satisfy the public or the opposition. But I can assure him that from time to time, we will persist in our efforts to secure the information we ask. The government will certainly make a very great mistake if it should divide up the Department of Public Works and hand a portion of it over to the Minister of Marine (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine), who seems to think that it is no part of his duty to occupy his seat in this House at any time in the day. Considering the fact that he is a kindergarten minister, he is not making the best use of his opportunities. One would naturally expect him to attend school and try to get information from time to time as to how he should administer his department. But he does not seem to think it any part of his duty to remain in this House. But let me draw attention again to this fact, that it would be of great service to the hon. gentleman, who is now filling the position of Minister of Public Works, to have the hon. Minister of Marine in his place to give him his assistance on items affecting the harbours and rivers of the province of Quebec. If he were in his place and ready to give information that would be of advantage to the House, there would not be members on the other side, like the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) finding fault with us. Why does not he lecture the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries for not being in his place and doing his duty? Where is the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I think that in justice to the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) it ought to be stated that he is in Montreal attending a conference with the Minister of Labour, the representatives of the steamship companies and the representatives of the stevedores, for the purpose of trying to bring about a settlement of the strike.

Mr. INGRAM. I am very glad to hear that, and I am prepared to compliment the hon. minister on doing his duty in this particular instance. Now, will the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) explain why the hon. minister absents himself so much as he does on other occasions? There is not a single man to explain why the minister's place is vacant from day to day. But one hon. gentleman rises when it happens that there is a defence to be offered for the minister's absence.

Mr. TALBOT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will allow me one question, I would like to ask him why this question is not put when the hon. minister is here?

Mr. INGRAM. The question was put the other day when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was in his place, and he had not the moral courage to answer it. But he blushed over it—he blushed a deep red, when he found the Prime Minister taking his place.

Mr. TALBOT. He could not blush blue.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps not, but I think he felt very blue at the time. I do not wish to take up more of the time of the House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. GALLIHER. Go on.

Mr. INGRAM. Some hon. gentlemen who live a long distance from Ottawa, evidently are not anxious to go to their homes.

Mr. GALLIHER. I don't mind.

Mr. INGRAM. Evidently the hon. gentleman is comfortably situated in Ottawa, and has made up his mind that it will take up some time to get through the business of the House. I did not think he would be content to stay here considering the black eye he got the other day. This lead question is as serious a question in its way as the question of the Department of Public Works. It might be a good time now for the hon. gentleman to put his oar in, to use a common phrase, and ask the government what they are going to do with regard to lead. This is a broad motion we are discussing now, and all the malcontents in the House have a golden opportunity, an opportunity they should take advantage of, especially as the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) seems to be in good humour. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) might impress upon the minister the importance of putting a duty on lead. I will give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to rise. Well, the hon. gentleman does not speak. Now I do not wish him to go back to his district and say he has not had an opportunity of drawing the attention of the Minister of Finance to this question.

Mr. GALLIHER. I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) for so carefully looking after the interests of my district; but I do not mind informing him that I am quite capable of attending to that myself.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had some valuable information from the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). He says that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is attending a strike. It would seem that most of the members of the government have been on strike all session, for they have not been here. Nor will they allow any body else to work in their places. They have their pickets out, one in China, one in England, one in Montreal; and I do not know where the rest of them are, but when we require information of them, there is a notable absence of them from this House. which makes it very difficult to carry on the work of the session. I think we are quite within our rights and properly discharging our duty when we ask the government at the earliest possible moment not only to make, as they did early in the session, an explanation of the ministerial changes which took place before the opening of parliament, but an announcement of their policy. They have intimated in the speech from the Throne that they are going to reorganize some of the departments. Surely we are not going to continue the work of the session until we know what reorganization is to take place. We are voting money on the demand of the Minister of Public Works to be spent—if we are to believe what we see in the ministerial press —by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, yet we have nothing from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to the line of policy he will follow in spending the money. This House has a right to know the facts; and I respectfully submit that it is the duty of the government to state those facts at the earliest possible moment. The Prime Minister, in giving the explanation of ministerial changes, said that it was not so important to give this information now as at one time in the past, because, in these modern days these changes had not the importance they had at one time, for in these days of publicity there was nothing he could tell the House of which the House was not already informed through the press. That is exactly why we are asking these questions—because an intimation was given through the press some time ago, and notably in the province of Quebec during an election campaign by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that certain important changes would take place whereby a great deal of the work now being done by the Public Works Department would be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, so that he would have the expending of large amounts of money and would be able to inaugurate a policy of his own. I would like to inquire, Mr. Chairman, what so greatly amuses the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman). Has he no interest in the business of this House ? When will he be able to give information as to the changes to take place in the department he is going to come into ?

Mr. HYMAN. I do not know why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) should draw attention to me, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPROULE. Simply because I saw the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hyman) doing that for which he often, as Chairman, calls members to order in the Railway Committee.

Mr. HYMAN. For smiling ?

Mr. SPROULE. No, for interrupting a member of this House when he was speaking. I was interrupted——

Mr. HYMAN. I beg to say, Mr. Chairman, that I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman in any possible way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SPROULE. I have nothing to take back. I want to say what I intended to say when I had only part of the sentence out. I was interrupted by an outburst of mirth that could be nothing but an interruption—there was no sense in it.

Mr. HYMAN. I inform the hon. gentleman that it is the leader of the opposition who is smiling.

Mr. SPROULE. A smile carries with it no noise, but the noisy laughter from the other side—if I were to quote Scripture, I might characterize it, but I will refrain from doing so. I say that we are not only within our rights, but we would be doing less than our duty, if we do not ask for this information and demand an explanation from the government. What are going to be the departmental changes they are going to make? What is going to be the policy of the government with respect to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which has been charged with the expenditure of the money we are asked to vote to-night ? We have a right to know that before we allow a dollar of this money to be voted. There is no justifiable reason for making any reflections upon the opposition when they are only doing their duty in this House to the people who sent them here. I think the government would greatly facilitate progress of business if they availed themselves of the earliest opportunity to give that information to the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think at this stage it would be in order to read from what I may call an official report of the speech made in Montreal by the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on the occasion to which I have alluded just now. The speech was not made during the election campaign, it is true, but a little while previously, before a Liberal club in the east end of Montreal. This is a verbatim report of the speech which he made.

An hon. MEMBER. Are you going to read it all ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I will if the hon. gentlemen opposite wish to hear it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If it is a good speech read it all.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was a good speech, well reported. I will begin by reading it in French. I call the attention to this of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan), who has a great many French Canadians in his constituency, and he may understand himself the version which I am going to read.

An hon. MEMBER. From what paper are you reading ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. From 'La Patrie.' Have hon. gentlemen any objection to 'La Patrie' now ? Do they think a verbatim report of a speech in 'La Patrie' is not a correct report ? I may say that the same reports were published in the 'La Presse,' which I do not think hon. gentlemen will repudiate. Here is what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said on that important occasion, when he was giving what he called the policy of the government :

"REPARTITION DES TRAVAUX PUBLICS."

Mais on vous dira : le département des Travaux publics est un département qui dépense des millions, qui a un patronage énorme et, par le fait qu'on va l'enlever à la province de Québec, on va enlever tout ce patronage-là à la province de Québec. Messieurs, soyons raisonnables, examinons la situation telle qu'elle est. Les travaux publics, à l'heure qu'il est, ont, en effet, une dépense à contrôler de plusieurs millions. Ceci est dépensé en bâtisses publiques, en entretien de bâtisses publiques, y compris les bâtisses du parlement d'Ottawa, et la construction de nouvelles bâtisses partout, dans chaque partie du pays, où il est besoin. De plus, le département des Travaux publics, jusqu'à aujourd'hui, s'est occupé à faire le creusage de nos rivières, à faire les travaux d'améliorations dans le port de Montréal avec l'aide, bien entendu, de la commission du havre et avec l'aide du département de la Marine et des Pêcheries. Mais si l'on met chacun à sa place et si l'on dit au département des Travaux publics, et cela non pas purement et simplement par des paroles, mais par des actes ; si l'on dit simplement vous n'aurez sous votre contrôle, strictement parlant, que les travaux des bâtisses publiques et les améliorations publiques qui ont rapport avec l'entretien du pays ; mais tout ce qui a rapport à la navigation, tels que les travaux de creusement des rivières, tels que les travaux de construction de quais, de construction d'élévateurs, tels que les travaux de cales sèches et ainsi de suite, si l'on dit : Tout cela, cela dépend de la navigation, et cela dépend par conséquent du département de la Marine et des Pêcheries, et qu'on le mette dans une loi, est-ce que vous n'avez pas là toutes les garanties que vous pouvez désirer? Mais l'on vous dit aussi : " C'est pour en faire accroire à la province de Québec qui a toujours été sacrifiée." Eh bien, messieurs, encore une fois, je vous le répète, soyons raisonnables. Si je vous dis, comme je l'ai dit d'ailleurs deux fois, que j'ai accepté un portfeuille dans les conditions qui viennent d'être sanctionnées, c'est parce que j'ai cru sincèrement aux promesses qui ont été faites, aux déclarations qui ont été faites, et c'est parce que je suis convaincu que cette parole donnée, cet engagement pris seront réalisés. Il ne peut pas y a voir de doute là-dessus. Et je peux vous dire plus, messieurs, et je demande si l'on peut me contredire. On a prétendu que l'honorable James Sutherland, actuellement ministre des Travaux publics, avait intrigué et avait insisté pour avoir ce département. Eh bien, je vous déclare ici et pe défie la contradiction là-dessus : l'honorable M. Sutherland n'a abandonné le ministère de la Marine et des Pêcheries qu'à contrecœur et malgré lui, et parce que tout simplement il était entendu qu'une partie des travaux, ceux dont il ne veut pas s'occuper et qu'il prétend de voir appartenir au département de la Marine et des Pêcheries, devaient paser au département de la Marine et des Pêcheries. Je pourrais vous dire qu'il a même été suggéré —ceci je ne suis pas en position de l'affirmer— mais il a été même suggéré que tous les canaux du Saint-Laurent seraient mis sous le contrôle du département de la Marine et des Pêcheries.

Now, in case my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has not understood all this quotation, with the permission of the committee, I will translate it into English :

But we will say, the Department of Public Works spends millions of dollars and has an enormous patronage, and therefore we are going to take away from the province of Quebec this patronage which has always belonged to Quebec.

Mr. BUREAU. You say 'we.' Is the French 'we' or 'on' ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is 'on' here. In the bad French in which this speech was delivered, 'on' means 'we.'

Gentlemen, let us be reasonable, let us examine the situation as it is. The Department of Public Works at this moment are spending several millions of dollars. This sum is spent in public buildings and their maintenance, including the parliament buildings at Ottawa, and in the construction of new buildings in every part of the country where they are needed. Moreover, the Department of Public Works until now has had the dredging of rivers, has carried on the improvements in the port of Montreal, with the assistance, of course, of the harbour commission and of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But if we put every man in his place, and if we say to the Department of Public Works, not only by words but by deeds, you shall only have under your control the works on the public buildings and the public improvements which relate to the maintenance of the country, but everything which concerns navigation, such as dredging the rivers, the construction of wharfs, the construction of elevators, the building of dry docks, and so on, if we say that all this concerns navigation and therefore concerns the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and if you put this into a law, is it not true that you have there all the guarantees which you can desire ? But you are told: This is to make the province of Quebec believe that you are not sacrificed. Well, gentlemen, again I repeat, let us be reasonable. If I tell you as I have already said twice, that I have accepted the portfolio under these conditions, and that they have been sanctioned, it is because I sincerely believe the promises which have been made, the declarations which have been made, and it is because I am sincerely convinced that these promises and declarations will be realized. There can be no doubt of this. I could say more gentlemen. I will not be contradicted upon this point : It has been pretended that the Hon. James Sutherland, the present Minister of Public Works, has intrigued and insisted upon having this department. Well, I can tell you, and I defy contradiction, that the Hon. Mr. Sutherland gave up the Department of Marine and Fisheries against his own will, and because it was understood that that part of public works with which he did not wish to busy himself, and which he pretends belongs to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, should pass to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I could go further. It has even been suggested, though I am not in a position to affirm this, but it has been suggested that all the canals of the St. Lawrence should be put under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, Sir, there can be no two opinions about the declarations that were made in this important speech. It was not a speech made in the excitement of an electoral contest, it was not a speech made upon the hustings, where you are face to face with your opponents, but it was a speech deliberately made before a Liberal club, by this minister who came there to propound what he called his policy and the policy of the government. He said there in so many words that everything which related to navigation, the building of wharfs, the dredging of rivers and harbours, the building of dry docks, &c., was to be put in his department. Now, Sir, have we not a right to ask the government whether this is really their policy? After what has been said in the speech from the Throne, have we not a right to know whether this is really the policy of the government? Have we not the right to have that policy of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which will control these important works, and to have a statement given to the committee by the hon. gentleman who is authorized to give those explanations, and who will have these works under his control? Will any hon. gentleman say that we are wasting the time of the committee in bringing this question before us? I will not retort by saying that there are some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, particularly some hon. gentlemen who come from the same part of the country as the hon. gentleman who spoke a little while ago, who are wasting the time of the House. They come here to express the views which they think they should express in the discharge of their duties. We come here to do the same thing. We are all animated with the same wish to do our duty to the best of our ability, but at this advanced stage of the session, taking these declarations into consideration, and taking the importance of these works into consideration, I say that we should be in a position to know whether or not this policy of dividing the department of Public Works and giving part of it to the Marine and Fisheries is to be carried out by the government, and whether or not it is to be carried out at this session.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I do not make any apology for again renewing what seems to me to be a very fair request. I quite agree with hon. gentlemen who say that we have no time in this House to waste. A very serious charge is made. It is that an hon. minister of the Crown absents himself from his place in the House because he is unable to rise and make a denial of a serious charge which was made against him. I was not present at the time and I wish to be set right if I make an incorrect statement, but I have been told that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) was in his place in the House when he was confronted with having made this statement by an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, that he refused to answer, and it is a noticeable fact that the hon. minister has not been found in his place since, when this question has been likely to come up. I see it reported in two papers in Montreal that the hon. gentleman is not in Montreal but that he has returned to Ottawa, though I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman who had the courage to make the explanation believed that he was presenting a statement of fact. I repeat that it is not wasting the time of the committee to insist upon the rights of the committee to have an answer to a question of that kind. It is not taking any unfair advantage of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to discuss this question, because the charge is made that he has absented himself from the House and is absenting himself from the House in consequence of this very awkward question. If a minister of the crown will publicly make declarations of that kind they are not to be taken as individual utterances. The country understands too well and hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House understand too well the gravity of an utterance of a minister of the crown. He is always supposed to speak for the government and especially upon such an important question as this. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has read here, and no hon. gentleman, it seems, is prepared to get up and contradict it, from a speech in which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, speaking before the Liberal Club only a few months ago, in the city of Montreal, declared that it had been the work of certain newspapers unfriendly to the government to say that the present hon. Minister of Public Works had been conniving against the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in regard to the shuffle of the portfolio. He gave that statement a denial but he added the very important statement that the Department of Public Works was to be divided, and he went so far as to specify the items which were to be taken from the Department of Public Works and placed under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It was said by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that that great spending department had been administered by a minister from the province of Quebec for many years. I am not going to discuss the propriety of placing the department under the charge of a minister from the province of Ontario. I have no right to discuss the propriety of doing that, but I have the right to call the attention of the committee to the fact that a compromise was to be made, that if the department was to be taken from some gentlemen representing that great province—I will not say from the people—that gentleman was to be compensated in some way by dividing the work and giving it over to him. This is not a light matter and it is not one upon which there should be a single moment of the time of the House wasted. I think it is a serious question and I am disposed to discuss it in that light. I repeat again that a minister of the crown was charged with having left his place in the House, with having refused to answer any question when he was in the House, and that he is not found in his place when he might know that this question would come up at any time. The government have been silent on the question, and I was astonished at the hon. gentleman who claimed that the time of hon. members from the western part of this Canada of ours is more valuable than that of hon. gentlemen from the east. He said that the eastern members of the House were wasting time. I confess that I expected a good deal more from that hon. gentleman. I did not expect that he would rise in a spirit of banter and take upon himself the right to lecture this side of the House upon what is the proper course to adopt. I think it is the proper course to adopt to insist that hon. members of the House should be in possession of such information as they are entitled to. I think this is a matter of such gravity that the government cannot afford to entirely ignore it. These hon. gentlemen sit silent in their places afraid to make a declaration upon a matter that is so pressing in its nature that it does not seem to me that a single moment should be lost in placing before the committee the information which is asked for. If hon. gentlemen were desirous to get on with the work they would give the information that we are asking for. I regret that we have not accomplished more than we have up to this time, and I would ask the hon. gentleman who is now leading the House (Hon. Mr. Fielding) if he thinks it is the best way to get on with the work of the committee to pursue the course which he is pursuing in regard to this question. I am sure that there is nothing about it that the committee cannot fairly ask to be given to it. On the other hand, I am well persuaded that the course adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite will not facilitate the work of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Chairman, I would take the liberty of asking the hon. gentleman who is now leading the House (Hon. Mr. Fielding), in view of the very serious statement that has been made here to-night, that the present hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) said that this divison had been sanctioned by the government, if an Order in Council has been passed, or if any action has been taken by the government in reference to dividing this office, and, furthermore, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) if it is true that he voluntarily handed over such work as was too onerous for him and that he was willing to make over to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries the work which was outlined by that hon. gentleman in his speech in Montreal. I would ask the Finance Minister, who is leading the House so ably, and in his own inimitable manner: what are the facts of the case ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I much regret that I am unable to add anything to the very valuable information I have already contributed to the debate.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) if the statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is true; that he voluntarily said he could not carry on all these works and that he was willing to hand over certain of them to his brother minister from Quebec.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not imagine that the statement was ever made.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is a serious reflection on 'La Patrie.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as I am personally concerned I never said to the Premier, or to any other person either in this House or out of it, that I wanted the portfolio of Public Works or any other position in the government.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Or did not ask to be relieved from these works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I had my own way I do not think I would occupy any position in the government. I consented on the request of the premier to take the position. I think, Mr. Chairman, this matter has been very fully discussed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are a few items under the consideration of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The premier has made an announcement to the House on this matter. So far as these individual items are concerned they are matters of routine for maintaining the plant that belongs to the government, and whether there should be changes or not it would make very little difference. We have had a very lengthy discussion and we know what the feeling of the opposition is, and we might proceed with the business of the House. When the Prime Minister is in his place, he will make any announcement he has to make in regard to the matter.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not expect that this debate would be raised to-night, but the question we are discussing is of pretty large importance after all. There is no doubt whatever that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made the speech that has been read to-night. The speech was reported word for word verbatim by Mr. Haines who was then my private secretary. It was reported for 'La Patrie' and 'La Presse' at the same time.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). By different reporters.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, by the same man.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They both must be right then.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is no doubt whatever that the report is altogether correct, word for word. It was stenographed in the ordinary way. I had taken charge of 'La Patrie' and I instructed Mr. Haines to go in the ordinary manner and take a report of what the Minister of Marine said. It was a very interesting occasion indeed. A minister of the Crown was making his first speech as a minister. The speech was reported in all the newspapers, in the English papers as well as the French. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said then, and he stated it over and over again, not once but ten times at least during this election campaign, that the dredging part of the Department of Public Works would be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. As to that there cannot be any dispute whatever. The point has been raised here now and it is just as well to have it out. We are discussing the items of dredging for the Department of Public Works, and if this money is to be spent by the Department of Marine and Fisheries then the minister of that department should be the man to answer the questions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is not fair to ask the House to vote money for the Public Works Department if that money is to be spent in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Whether the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) has said what he was not authorized to say, or whether he has said what he was authorized to say; that is his own business, but there is no doubt that he said it. He stated so in his own election and also in the election campaign in Terrebonne and Two Mountains.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And he has never been asked for his resignation.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It has never been disputed that he made the statement. If the policy he then announced is not going to be carried out, well and good, and I hope it will not be carried out; but if it is to be carried out, then the House should be informed of it so that we should not be asked to vote money for one department and for one minister that would be spent by another department and by another minister. There might be questions asked from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) that would not be asked from my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland). I for one would ask from the hon. gentleman who is Minister of Marine and Fisheries questions that I am not inclined to ask from my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend who leads the House (Hon. Mr. Fielding) should recognize that we should not proceed any further until we know. The Prime Minister stated a few days ago that he would be prepared to make an announcement within a short time, and it is only good parliamentary practice not to proceed any further unless the present leader of the House is prepared to tell us that no change will be made. If the Department of Marine and Fisheries is going to spend the money which we are voting to the Department of Public Works, we have the right to know it. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had not made this statement I would not speak as I do but he has made the statement, and he is accountable for it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have been asked to account for what I have said on former occasions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is my right and the right of parliament to know whether the statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been authorized or not. If it has been authorized we have no right to vote the Department of Public Works, money that the Department of Marine and Fisheries will spend.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He should be treated as——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear. Say it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How will I say it? He should be treated as constitutionally as I have been treated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. Since I spoke last I have to announce another very important bulletin. I did not question the statement made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) until I read the Montreal 'Herald,' and I cannot account for the friendliness of the Montreal 'Herald' to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries these days, unless it is that the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is in Japan, and his newspaper is taking liberties that it would not take if he were here. The Montreal 'Herald' in its Ottawa news announces that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has returned to Ottawa, and for the information of the House I will read what he says. I am sorry I am not able to read the same article in French, so that the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) could see again the word 'ungh.' With us that is a common word in the Indian language; but I was not aware that it was so commonly used in French. Here is the correspondence in the 'Herald.'

Ottawa, May 7.—Hon. Raymond Préfontaine returned from Montreal last night where he was looking into the situation with respect to the longshoremen's strike.

Mr. Préfontaine says he saw both the shipping interests and the longshoremen, and from what he has heard of both sides he does not see any possible solution to the strike, other than that it will have to be allowed to work itself out.

So it would appear that neither the government nor the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are in a position to render any assistance to bring to an end the strike now going on in Montreal. Then, he said :

So far as the longshoremen are concerned, the strike is practically over.

That seems a strange sentence to follow what I have already read.

They admitted this to him, and said that until they were willing to submit to the stevedores terms, with respect to discrimination against union men, the fact that the stevedores have now some 1,500 men engaged in their places, shuts out all but five hundred of the strikers and they now say, what is the use of giving in, it will, they say, do them no good. They argue that they may as well stay out and endeavour to bring out other unions in sympathy with them.

Yesterday, the stevedores had at work 1,111 longshoremen, 146 carpenters, 188 checkers, and 126 teamsters. These men have all been engaged for the season, and the strikers recognize that if they are taken back that the shipping interests will have to pay compensation to the men now engaged in their places

Mr. Préfontaine says that there will undoubtedly be large loss to trade and to shipping, but there is no way to help it. Of course the entire number of men cannot be replaced at once but they will be replaced in a very short time. the most important feature to his mind is the replacing of the teamsters who have left a job paying $10 per week. The transportation companies claim that they will be able to do this and are doing it. Mr. Préfontaine thinks that it will be but a short time until the whole matter is straightened out.

These contradictory sentences are something I do not understand.

Mr. TALBOT. Reporters' work.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I suppose, is not to be held responsible for this. Would the hon. gentleman say that the reporters who reported his speeches on other occasions made incorrect reports ?

Mr. TALBOT. That is not a report of his speech.

Mr. INGRAM. It is a report of an interview. I am not bale to trace out the closing sentence in the interview, and therefore I will have to leave it. What I want to point out is that the statement made by the hon. member for Bonavénture (Mr. Marcil) does not appear to be in accord with this statement.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I would state that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries came to Ottawa last night, but returned to Montreal this afternoon at 4 o'clock along with the Minister of Labour to attend a conference between the shippers and the longshoremen, as a result of a visit to Ottawa this afternoon of the president of the longshoremen's union, Mr. O'Neil. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is certainly performing a great duty for the city he represents in attending that conference tonight.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, in view of the absence of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I think these items should stand until he is present, because they may come under his department. Now, I propose to deal with some questions which have been raised here before. I do not see the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) in his place. I notice that when the North-west members have a field day in this House, such as they had yesterday, they generally follow each other. But the hon. member for Selkirk did not take part in it; he was the silent member yesterday. He has broken out to-day. We were told in that discussion that freight was congested in the North-west; but we heard to-day in another part of this building that in the city of Montreal 1,500 cars had lain on the sidings for months. If one of the members for Assiniboia were here—I understand that we are not going to have him long with us, because he is going to accept a seat in another part of this building—he could explain why this congestion took place in Montreal. Perhaps he could also explain why the discussion was entered into yesterday. In my innocence I said I did not believe the hon. member for Western Assiniboia had any ulterior motive; but I found that in another place to-day reference was made by the mover of a certain Bill to the importance of moving the congested freight in the North-west Territories. Whether there was any connection between that discussion of yesterday and what took place in another part of this building to-day, I do not know. Then, I do not wish to miss the chance of giving the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) an opportunity to explain about those market gardeners. That is another serious question; and I am bound to say, from my long acquaintance with that gentleman, that he does not lack moral courage in getting up in this House and expressing an opinion. I know he did not miss an opportunity when he used to discuss the question of free trade. I do not know whether he has changed his views; if he has, I would like him to explain the change. An hon. gentleman interjected the question to me, what about Mr. Gamey ? My leader, who came in a few moments ago, may wonder why the remarks I am making are so rambling. I may say that while I was making a few remarks a short time ago, strictly to the question under discussion, several of these interjections were made, and that is my excuse for making these rambling remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad the expressions of assent on the other side of the House bear out the statement I am making. I am glad to see the hon. gentlemen smile. It is only on rare occasions that they do.

Mr. COWAN. A pretty dry smile, though.

Mr. INGRAM. I heard one hon. gentleman remark that the House was not very full to-night, and my observation is that hon. members are not full except on this important question. On this important question they are full——

Mr. COWAN. Of wind.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman refers to wind. I am aware that the only representative of a gas county comes from Essex. And finding that he has a large supply on hand, I will give way to him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Apart from any jesting manner in which this subject may have been dealt with to-night, I would submit to the hon. Minister of Finance that the period has arrived when we should have some information on this matter. It was announced in the speech from the Throne that a measure would be introduced for the reorganization of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Yet, although this House has been in session for two months of the four during which it is supposed to last, this measure has not yet been brought down. We also had the announcement made previously by a Minister of the Crown that this department was to be reorganized in a particular matter. This question was brought to the attention of my hon. friend the Prime Minister in a rather urgent manner as far back as last Friday, and he promised that a statement of the policy of the government would be made at a very early day. Is there any reason why it should not have been made long ago? The announcement that the Department of Public works was to be reorganized was made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries some three or four months ago. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister lectured Lord Dundonald yesterday by stating that he should only give advice to the people through the hon. Minister of Militia, and I presume that, on the same principle, an announcement of this kind should properly be made in parliament, so that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has laid himself open to the same strictures as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister passed on the General Officer Commanding our militia. As has been said by the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte), this is a question of some importance to the country, and certainly now that parliament is in session we should have an authoritative announcement regarding it. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when in opposition, always insisted that the proper time to ask for a redress of grievances was before the passage of supplies, and it certainly is a grievance that when a minister of the Crown was able to announce the details of a measure months ago, the government should be unwilling or unable, now that parliament is in session, to declare its policy. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works appealed to me. Well, while I am glad to assist him in passing the routine items, he must be aware that there is force in our objection that we ought to know when voting this money, who is to have the expenditure of it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am quite willing to take the assurance of the hon. Minister of Public Works, if he is in a position to make an announcement, for I have never yet known my hon. friend to make any promise, either in public or private matters, which he has not carried out. I am quite willing to accept his statement, if he is in a position to make one, but I do not think that, in justice to the House, he should expect us to pass these items until we have some definite declaration as to whether the expenditure is to be made by the Department of Public Works or by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I am sure that my hon. friend will look at this matter in a reasonable way and either make some definite announcement or allow the item to stand until the government is in a position to do so. I think that is a fair position to take and one which I think my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would be prepared to take if he were on this side.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In asking the House to vote these items, I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that I have every reason to believe that, as long as I occupy the position of Minister of Public Works, I will be responsible for the expenditure of this money.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is that in contradiction to what the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From my standpoint at least, I have felt called upon in my position of Minister of Public Works to answer every question put to me directly, and have always endeavoured to do so, and I can assure the House that I have every reason to believe that the statement I have made is correct.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Then we are to understand that these items will be expended by the Department of Public Works the next year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is what I have said.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In that case, we on this side ought to accept that assurance.

Dredge vessels, Manitoba, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is intended to practically renew the dredging plant which has been in service a long time. There is considerable work to be done there.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is the dredge at work now or is it going to be put at work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told that it will be able to do the work this season.

New dredging plant, maritime provinces—hydraulic dredge, $200,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is a very large item and we should have full information regarding it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for a new hydraulic dredge which is not yet completed. It is to be hoped that it will be completed and ready for service at the beginning of next year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is $520,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it a suction dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Combined suction and elevator.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that this refers to the dredge 'Fielding' now being constructed at Sorel, and that the hon. minister says it will not be completed until the end of the year. Does he refer to the fiscal or calendar year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The calendar year.

Mr. CLANCY. That is, it will not be ready for work this coming season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The best hope I can give, after consultation with the engineers of the department, is that it will be ready for a year from now.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has the hull been launched or is it still in the yard ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has not been launched.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When was it begun ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) seems to be anxious to know more about that dredge—

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I put a question which I think I have a right to do—

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Quite so.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Perhaps, I ought to apologize to the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte)—

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Not by any means. I was merely offering to answer a question, on which, perhaps, I am a little better informed than the Minister of Public Works is. That is all I meant.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was begun a little over two years ago.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, it was begun about a year ago. Let all the information be brought down. I know what all this means. Some of my hon. friends mean to convey the idea that the work was not being pushed as quickly as it might have been. Some of my former colleagues seem to be anxious to throw blame on me. They have no right to do so. Let me say immediately that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was altogether wrong in taking offence at what was simply an offer on my part to answer a question on a point concerning which I was informed. That dredge was begun a little over a year ago. It was a difficult piece of work. The engineer, Mr. Robinson, who is one of the best engineers on this continent, prepared the plans. He was obliged to change those plans after a trip to England. There is no other dredge of the same kind in the world—it is an experiment. It is being built as a sea-going dredge. It is really a steamer, a self-propeller, and will be both a suction and an elevator dredge. It is to be a self-hopper, but, at the same time, the department will be in a position to use scows when necessary to do so. So, it is a difficult and very complicated piece of work. Mr. Robinson, in spite of his ability and knowledge has been obliged to change his plans. This took some time. Then, we had a great deal of trouble to buy material. All those who are engaged in ship-building or in iron construction of any kind know how difficult it has been to procure material. A month before I left office I went to Sorel and had a consultation with Mr. Desbarats, who has been specially in charge of the work. Of course the chief engineer, who is on the floor of this House to-night, has only a pretty remote supervision of the work. Mr. Desbarats being in direct charge. That gentleman told me that the dredge would be ready by the month of July, or August. Not only that, but the Minister of Public Works will find correspondence to that effect in the department. I do not say that the dredge is not ready because I left office. I do not desire to blame my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland). I am sure he has done everything he has been able to do. At the same time I must disclaim responsibility for the delay—I know what a change in the head of a department means. It may be that there have been changes in the way patronage has been administered there. I believe there has been a change, and this may be one of the reasons why the work has not been proceeded with as quickly as it should have been. I believe I am not far from the mark in saying that. At any rate I do not blame my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. He has no interest in delaying the work, and I am sure he has done everything he could to push it forward. I do not know whether he has gone down to Sorel to visit the shipyards. But I know that his colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Prefontaine) has gone several times—in view, I suppose, of the fact that he thought he would be entrusted with carrying out these works. But I have only to say that I am surprised that the work is not to be completed by the time it was understood that it would be completed when I left office.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have had a most interesting discussion on the subject of dredges and dredging. There has been a considerable conflict of opinion on the question whether this work ought to be carried out with dredges under the control of the government or let out to contractors. It seems to me that an important element in the consideration of the question is to know how soon the dredges can be got ready. We have been told by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that when he came into office in 1896 there were practically no dredges at all, and that it has been necessary, in the time that has since elapsed, to equip the department in this respect. It seems to me that it was a very fair question to ask when the dredge was begun, and it is only proper that when a question of that sort is put, that we should have an answer that we can rely upon. I put the question to the minister in whose department the work is being done and who ought to be able to give the information. After consulting his officials on the floor, he told me that the work was begun two years ago and that it will take another year before it is finished. Is that correct or not? For the ex-Minister of Public Works says it is not. The House ought to be enlightened on that point.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Let us discuss it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) must know that when I make a statement with regard to matters that have taken place in the department, I make it on the authority of the officials of the department and not from my own knowledge. I remember very well the hon. gentleman's statements in the House and out of it to myself privately. We were all anxious that the work should be proceeded with, as the hon. gentleman's idea was that the work could be carried on more quickly at Sorel than it has actually been carried on. I felt anxious about it because I knew that the dredge was urgently required. After examination I do find that there is a difference of opinion between the officials of the department and my hon. friend as to when it may be completed. If everything goes well, we expect it will be ready at the beginning of next year. The first vote—

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The first vote I know all about.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can only speak from the information I find in the records of the department. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that there is no official of the department who would willingly make a wrong statement with regard to the business of the department. I found that the first vote was in 1901-2. The work in one sense was not commenced then, though it was fully in hand. The material was purchased, goods were purchased, and the work has been going on more or less ever since. Up to the present time there has been expended $285,000 on this work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I want to explain further in regard to that work. The Minister of Justice seems to be anxious to know all about it. The first time an amount of money was placed in the estimates was in 1901-2. Everybody knows that after an item is voted in the House, the work does not start immediately. Parliament is prorogued, and then preparations are made to go on with the work. The money was placed in the estimates, but that was not the beginning of the work. I instructed Mr. Robinson, after a certain time, to prepare plans, and that took a good deal of time. Practically the work has been going on for over one year. Now I do not wish to leave the committee under the impression that I blame the Minister of Public Works for the delay. Nothing of the kind. I know he has done everything he could, and I am only sorry that the dredge is not completed.

Mr. CLARKE. As I understand the ex-Minister of Public Works, he complains that possibly the distribution of patronage in a different way is causing the delay. Is there any information to be given to the committee on that subject? This is a serious matter. This dredge is going to be a valuable addition to the force, and is going to cost a large sum of money. The hon. gentleman, before leaving office, I understand, had purchased the greater part of the material for the construction of the dredge, and he makes the suggestion tonight that possibly the method of administering the patronage of the department is causing delay. Is there any change in the method?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am unable to answer that question with regard to time. The first vote was taken in 1901, the second in 1902, the next in 1903. This is the fourth vote that is being asked for in connection with this work. I may say that no change has been made that I am aware of in regard to this work.

Mr. LENNOX. The ex-Minister of Public Works appears to be speaking of something that he knows pretty well when he says definitely that there is a question of patronage that enters into this matter, and prevents the rapid completion of the work. He suggests what has not been answered by the Minister of Public Works, that by reason of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries having in contemplation to carry out that which he had announced upon a public platform, and to secure for himself enlarged powers and patronage, is himself delaying the matter in order that he may secure that larger control of public works, and obtain possession of that larger patronage. I think we should have some explicit statement by the present Minister of Public Works that this difficulty which seems to have arisen will in some way be averted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What difficulty does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. LENNOX. I will explain more fully. I say that he should assure us that this difficulty shall not continue to stand in the way of carrying out this work. I repeat that it appears that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries has promised in the province of Quebec that he is to have a larger share of public works.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I call the hon. member to order. The question of the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in regard to the division of the duties of the two departments has been ruled out of order.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No, only as to one item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If it is not relevant to one item, you cannot raise it on another item.

Mr. SPROULE. I draw the attention of the Chairman to this fact, that we are endeavouring to get information as to the cause of the delay in finishing this dredge, and it is in connection with that item for the dredge that we are discussing the statements of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am now ruling on the position taken by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), who was going on to discuss the question of the division of the duties pertaining to the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a question that had been under discussion the whole evening on another item. Now this is what Bourinot says :

> It is irregular to discuss any matters in committee which are not relevant to the resolution under consideration.

Now I do not see any relevancy between the statements made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to the future intentions of the government to make a division of the duties pertaining to these departments, and the item in the estimates which is before the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think, Mr. Chairman, you misunderstood the matter which has been brought up. I do not think the hon. Minister of Public Works has the slightest objection to giving the information. The question is simply as to whether the money is to be expended by the Department of Public Works, or by some other department. It is absolutely relevant and it is not exactly the question which you have been settling.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman was not in when I made that statement before, and I am sure if he had been he would have been perfectly satisfied. As to any change of patronage, or any change in the officials, I have stated most distinctly that there has been none at all. There has been no interference in any way and no change that I am aware of. If there is anything more in this regard upon which he wants information, I have not the slightest idea what he is hinting at.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to submit to your ruling in the matter. It is not very material to my purpose in dealing with the question that I have to deal with whether I shall pursue exactly the same lines that I was pursuing or not. But I was asked a question by the hon. Minister of Public Works and I propose to answer it, and I hope, that I shall have the hon. Minister of Public Works copying my example and answering the question explicitly and definitely. What I submit is this : We have had a statement by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that the difficulty which has arisen and which has caused the delay has been the question of patronage. We have had it further stated by the ex-Minister of Public Works that it has arisen in connection with the question as to what power shall be exercised hereafter by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I ask the hon. Minister of Public Works to state whether that state of things exists or not. If it does exist, why then, it is a very serious difficulty and one that should be developed by this committee and one that should be a reason for not passing this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will answer in the hon. gentleman's own language and say that it does not exist. I hope that is clear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We, of course, understand in regard to all the other items the assurance which the hon. minister has already given equally applies ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

New dredging plant—Ontario and Quebec, $75,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asking for this amount of money that we may be able to provide a new dredge for the important work that is necessary to be done below Quebec. I know that it will take some time to build this dredge. If it is possible to purchase a dredge, as I have been ready to do, I would be very glad to do it. But we cannot commence, I think, too soon to appropriate some money for the purpose of building a new dredge. I am informed by the chief engineer that a dredge suitable for the work can be built for $75,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is that a dipper dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If I understand the hon. minister, this dredge is going to be used below Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is a dipper dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Must we understand that this is to dredge the channel opposite Crane island, for instance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. This is for dredging at various points along the river and harbours and at the approaches to wharfs.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That dredge will not be called upon to work in deep water ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will not be used for channel work. It would not be suitable for that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is that dredge to be built to dredge, for instance, the approaches to wharfs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, for instance, we have an application from Murray Bay.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it going to be a steel dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What will be its capacity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Between 2,000 yards and 2,500 yards.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Where is that dredge going to be built ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If we could have it built at the government shops it is the intention to do so. There is such an urgent demand that if we could purchase a dredge we would be glad to do it, so as to be able to do the work during the present year. If not we will have to build a dredge.

Mr. REID (Grenville). About what capacity of dipper is used on a dredge of that size ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that it will be a three or four yard dipper.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Of course, there is some difference between buying a dredge and building one. I think the committee ought to know whether the hon. minister intends to buy a dredge or build one.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think there is a very material difference. There is a lot of work that we must do. It has been represented to me that we might possibly buy a dredge. I do not know of any dredge for sale at the present time; in fact, from the inquiries the department has been making, I do not believe there is one in the Dominion of Canada to-day suitable for the work that can be bought. If we could buy a suitable dredge, I think it would be the best policy to buy one. But we are taking the vote for the purpose of procuring a dredge and from my information there is not one which could be bought and we may have to build one.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What are the dimensions of the dredge going to be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the dimensions or plans prepared yet. I am asking for this vote for the purpose of procuring a dredge or building one.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister a question in connection with the item we have just passed which I did not have the opportunity of asking at the time. What will the other dredge cost to complete and what will be the cost of this dredge that we are now discussing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The large dredge is estimated to cost $520,000, and the chief engineer informs me that according to the plans and specifications which he proposes to draw for this one, it can be completed for $75,000.

New dredging plant, Manitoba—self propelling snag-boat to work in Red and Assiniboine rivers, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you purpose building that in Manitoba ?

Mr. PUTTEE. I would like the hon. Minister of Public Works to explain this item and to state whether there is any probability of having that boat built this year ? This is a revote. This boat has been needed badly on those rivers for some time. The item, I believe, has had a great deal of consideration. I would ask if there is any probability of having the boat built this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that this amount has been voted for some three or four sessions, and on inquiry from the engineers I find that no action has been taken. I have asked for a further report as to what work is to be done and as to the necessity for this snag-boat. Until I get that information from the resident engineer, I could not pledge myself to spend this money, although we are asking for it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I see that the item just passed of $75,000 is for Ontario and Quebec. Is there anything for Ontario in that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will have the new dredge for Ontario ready in four or five weeks. It has been customary to take this vote in this way.

Mr. McCREARY. It was almost impossible to get material or labour for this class of work in the west last year. As a matter of fact, I believe it will require 25 or 30 per cent more to build the same kind of a snag-boat this year, because material and labour have advanced, and I think the resident engineer will ask for $12,500 more in the supplementaries.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Where do the snags come from ?

Mr. DAVIS. You will strike one soon.

Mr. McCREARY. The Red River and the boundary line of Lake Winnipeg is filled with trees and snags and one thing or another, and vessels drawing two or three feet of water cannot pass along that river at low water until it is cleared.

New dredging plant generally, $60,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the construction of new plant to meet the exigencies of the government dredging service. I may say that these applications have been sent in as urgent in regard to the dredges in the various provinces. It covers new barges and tugs, &c. I may say that if all these applications were granted they would amount to over $300,000, but the chief engineer after going over them thinks he could do with a vote of $60,000 to keep the plant in working order.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for new plant or repairing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Practically for new plant.

Mr. SPROULE. Where will these be built ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They will be purchased by contract.

Mr. BLAIN. How many shops has the government for the construction of dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have only one shop at Sorel.

Mr. BLAIN. How is it possible to construct this new $75,000 dredge when the $500,000 dredge will not be built until next year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That large dredge will be out of the way and the other work will be going on. I have had little opportunity of looking into the shop at Sorel, but the information I have received from the engineer of the department is that for repairing and building such a dredge as this, and tugs and scows, we can do that cheaper than by going to the other shops. As to doing this very large and important work where we have to purchase considerable machinery, I am not prepared to say at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. How will the minister provide for this new plant ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will advertise for tenders.

Mr. SPROULE. Every shipyard will have an opportunity to supply them?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Dredging—Quebec and Ontario, $75,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Where is this money to be spent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is taken for the maintenance of the government dredges. There is one at Kingston, and my intention is to send one to Port Hope and one to Gananoque, and to different parts of the province.

Mr. INGRAM. We should have a statement as to how many places the work will be done in.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot remember all the places now, but, if my hon. friend is agreeable, I will bring down the programme and lay it on the Table.

Mr. INGRAM. Very well.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister also bring down the information I asked for, as to the different counties in which these dredges were at work last summer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can give my hon. friend that information now. The 'Challenge' was at Kincardine, Midland, Owen Sound and Collingwood. The 'Ontario' at Port Stanley, Rondeau and Kingsville. The 'Nipissing' at Burlington Piers, Bronte, Hamilton, Port Hope and Bowmanville. The 'Queen' at Oshawa, Bowmanville, Dunbarton and Pickering. The 'Sir Richard' at Hawkesbury, Grenville, Bath and Adolphustown.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 12.25 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 8, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 169) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of James Sinclair Macdougall.—Mr. Malouin for Mr. Gallery.

Bill (No. 170) to incorporate the Nipigon Iron Range Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 171) to incorporate the Chatham, Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Railway Company.—Mr. Stephens.

DISALLOWANCE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA STATUTES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax) moved :

That the correspondence relating to the disallowance of the statutes of the province of British Columbia be printed forthwith, and for that purpose rule 94 be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

PACIFIC CABLE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my hon. friend the Prime Minister whether he is able to give any information to the House as to the probable liability which we will incur by the reason of the recent developments in the Commonwealth of Australia with respect to the Pacific cable. It is not necessary for me to recall the circumstances to the House. I refer to those which have been given publicity in the public press. The colony of Victoria, it appears, made certain concessions to the Eastern Telegraph Company and the government of the Commonwealth proposes apparently, in lieu of those concessions, to grant a concession extending all over that commonwealth for a limited period of years. That is, briefly speaking, the position of the matter, as I understand it, but of course my right hon. friend would be much more familiar than I with the particulars. I understand that negotiations have taken place between this government and the government of Australia with regard to the policy of the latter in this connection, and it would be desirable for us to know what has taken place. If my right hon. friend is not in a position to inform the House now, he can take this as a notice, and give the information at a later day. But we would like to know what communications have taken place and what effect this change of attitude of the Commonwealth of Australia is likely to have on the Pacific cable scheme.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Briefly stated, the position is this : Shortly before the Commonwealth of Australia was formed the government, not of Victoria, but of New South Wales, had made a contract with the Eastern Telegraph Company, which is not, we think, in accord with the undertaking assumed by the different governments which participated in the establishment of the Pacific cable. We protested at the time, but when confederation of the Australian colonies came into effect it was too late to overcome the difficulty. The arrangement was made for an indefinite time, but the government of Australia have since contemplated making an arrangement whereby the Eastern Telegraph Company would shorten the monopoly granted them to ten years, but it would be extended, not only over New South Wales, but over the whole continent of Australia. We think that this last arrangement would be more detrimental than the first. It must be evident that if, during ten years, the Eastern Telegraph Company have power to establish telegraph stations all over Australia, at the end of the time they will have a practical monopoly and retain control of the whole business, and thus come in conflict with the Pacific cable. We have protested to the Australian government, and the best information we could give to the House would be to bring down the correspondence, which I will be happy to do at an early day.

SUPPLY—MONTREAL LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the government whether they have any information to give regarding the strike at Montreal ? It may be that negotiations are in such a condition that it may be not advisable for the government to say anything, but if there is any information which they can give, the House is entitled to it. I would like to call attention to the fact that the Mayor of Montreal has said that, from first to last, he has not had a single communication with the Minister of Labour. The language attributed to the Mayor of Montreal, referring to the hon. Minister of Labour, is as follows :—

Not a word have I heard from him, but I expect however, some news from that quarter to-night. Sir William Mulock's place is right here in Montreal at the present time. He is Minister of Labour as well as Postmaster General, and in a juncture like this should be right on the spot to do what he can to help along the trade of Canada.

I gathered from the debate in the House the other day, that some communication had been made to the government by both parties in Montreal, but it appears that the principal officer of that city has not been communicated with in any way by the members of the government, from whom we might have expected some communications with regard to the very serious condition of things existing there. However, I do not rise for the purpose of making any comments on that, but merely to ask whether the right hon. gentleman has any information which it would be proper to give to the House at the present time with regard to the condition of the strike ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think it would not be advisable until some kind of settlement has been reached, to give fully the particulars as to the action of the government with regard to the strike. At the present moment, I have only to say—and I hope it will be satisfactory to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax)—that the Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) are now in Montreal, having left yesterday, for the purpose of doing what they can to obtain a settlement.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Perhaps I may be allowed to say that I have received a telegram from one of the large shipowners to this effect :

Union men beginning to return. Expect full settlement to-day.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—slides and booms—St. Maurice district—improvements of boom works to facilitate the floating and storage of logs, &c. $50,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Hon. James Sutherland). This vote is to meet the requirements for improvements and additions to the works on the St. Maurice, to afford increased facilities for the descent of timber on that river. These improvements are found indispensible to meet the requirements of pulp mills and other large manufacturing establishments now engaged in developing the great resources in that district.

Mr. MORIN. Will the hon. minister please tell us what is the revenue from these slides and booms ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The revenue reported for 1901-2, the last year for which we have returns, was $13,-565.48.

Mr. WILSON. What is the amount spent for salaries and other expenses ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The vote to be asked for this year is about $47,000. I shall be glad to give information in more detail when we are discussing the vote for salaries on this work.

Mr. WILSON. Was there not a revenue to the government over and above expenses?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no.

Mr. WILSON. How much was the deficit ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) refer to the capital expenditure or the annual expenditure ?

Mr. WILSON. The annual. We want to know how much the operating expenses exceed the receipts.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total expenditure on these slides and booms on the St. Maurice ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would be better if this question were brought up in the discussion on the proper item. I may say to my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) that, as near as I can figure, the deficit for the last year would be something like $23,000. In answer to the question of the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart), the total amount expended on the St. Maurice slides and booms has been $1,271,282.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the slides and booms in every other part of the country pay something over and above the expenses. Here is an expenditure of over $50,000 following an expenditure of $50,000 last year, and there is an expenditure on operating expenses of $23,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) did not understand that this vote of $50,000 is practically on capital account, for permanent improvements. The deficit is on operating expenses, for which there will be a vote later on.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand perfectly well. I understand that $23,000 is expended in wages and other operating expenses.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the deficit.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And a deficit too? A deficit on operating expenditure. That is the most extraordinary statement I have heard for a long time. The total receipts are $13,000 a year, and on that a deficit of $23,000, and this on works that have cost on capital account over a million dollars, on which we spent $50,000 last year and for which we are asked $50,000 this year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The receipts, no doubt, will be very largely increased when the improvements are made. But, under present conditions, I do not think they will be equal to the operating expenses. My hon. friend will see that, as I have stated, over a million and a quarter of dollars has been expended on these works. The $50,000 I am now asking for is reported by the chief engineer to be necessary to put these works in a position to be useful and to keep them from being damaged. With the large amount spent during the past year or two, the work will be put in very fair permanent condition. The question asked by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) was as to operating expenses, which are quite separate from this.

Mr. MORIN. What kind of improvements does the minister intend to make with this $50,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At Point à Trudel: Construction of two mooring piers 40 feet by 40 feet by 35 feet, $7,000 ; construction of 12,000 feet of five ply booms, $11,000 ; at Ste. Flore ; reconstruction of one mooring pier 30 by 40 by 30, $5,000. At Les Hêtres : Construction of a new mooring pier 30 by 40 by 30, $7,000 ; construction of 600 feet of two ply boom, $2,500. At Pointe à Marchesault : Construction of 450 feet of five ply boom, $4,000. At Point à Bernard : Construction of a mooring pier 40 by 40 by 35, $7,000. At Ils aux Toutres : Completion of a jam pier 30 by 30 by 10, $1,200. Add for works not yet determined and contingencies, $5,300. Total grant required for 1903-4, $50,000.

Mr. WILSON. The minister finds fault with our asking for detailed information on this item. Will he kindly tell us where we can ask for it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not find fault, I merely suggested that these answers would be more appropriate under collection of revenue, item 238.

Mr. BLAIN. Did I understand the minister to say that there was a deficit of about $20,000 last year ? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain a statement made by his predecessor on this item in the House last year when he said :

> We made out of these St. Maurice booms and slides $20,000 last year. This is one of the rare works that brings us financial results. We are earning more money than we have spent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is true that the records of the department show that in the year to which the ex-minister was then referring, the revenue was $21,322, speaking for the year 1901-2. We have not the returns for this year. No doubt the revenue this year will be pretty near twice what it was last year. We estimate it will be about $25,000.

Mr. BELL. I find on reference to the Auditor General's Report, volume 1, page B—316, last year, the total expenditure was $153,012, and the total revenue was $13,000. There was only $50,000 voted last year, or $103,000 less than was expended. There was consequently a deficit of $140,000 for that service last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is referring to the year 1901-2.

Mr. BELL. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was a large amount expended in addition to the vote. I think there was a special warrant providing for the expenditure of that large amount on account of the breaking of the booms and a large number of logs being lost, in July of that year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the policy of the government with regard to the construction of these booms ? Is it the policy to build these booms all over Canada, in rivers where lumbering operations are conducted, or is it a policy that is pursued on this river for some special reasons ? Are there any conditions affecting this river which distinguish it from rivers of a similar character all over Canada in which persons interested in lumbering operations have to build their own booms ? Then there is another matter which I think we ought to know something about. We voted last year $50,000, we are spending this year $50,000 more. Are the works of such a character that we may expect to have the government, year by year, coming down with appropriations of $50,000 to $100,000 for this service upon the river in question ? When is this expenditure to end, or is it like the song of the brook, which goes on for ever, though men may come and men may go ? May we expect any finality with regard to these expenditures ? Then there is another matter I do not understand. There was a certain amount of revenue from these works last year, and a certain amount spent for operating expenses. What are they exactly, and what is the net deficit on the operations for the year ? From what the hon. gentleman said, there seems to be a deficit in the operation of these works of $23,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that is about the sum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We ought to know what the gross revenue is, what the gross operating expenses are, and what the net cost to the country is, of operating the works upon this river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has been no change of policy since confederation with regard to slides and booms. I understand that there are three systems that have been kept up in the Dominion, the Trent valley, the Ottawa and the St. Maurice. On most of the streams, I think the companies attend to these works themselves. This has certainly been a very expensive work. Since 1867 the expenditures have amounted, as I have said, to $1,271,282. I am informed by the chief engineer of the department that a year ago these works were swept away by flood and storm, and it required this large expenditure to make repairs. There has been a great development in that district during the past few years. I am informed that the improvements made last year, for which this $50,000 was voted, puts the system in fairly good shape. It would be rash for me to say that works of this magnitude, costing over a million and a quarter dollars, would not cost something each year to maintain, outside the operating expenses. However, I may give the information given to me by the chief engineer of the department as to what state he expects this vote will put the works in. He believes, that, without any unusual accident or unforseen occurrence, this amount will complete the construction that is necessary and any vote that will be asked for in future years will be for repairs.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this vote which is being asked for now for new construction, or is it for a portion of the repairs that have already been undertaken?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for new construction entirely.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is this new construction necessary?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Owing to the immense increase in the number of logs coming down to the pulp mills. The chief engineer informs me that last season over 3,000,000 logs passed down through these slides and booms. Of course, that would materially increase the revenue for the present year when the returns are made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why does not the hon. Minister of Public Works put a duty on the logs coming down so that the government shall be put to no loss from the building of these works as they do in every other part of the Dominion? On the Madawaska, the Coulonge and every other river on which there are booms and slides provided by the government we get a handsome return from them. This river is the only one on which it would seem that there is an immense deficit. The justification, as I understand, for the issue of the Governor General's warrant was, that a portion of this work was swept away by a freshet which led to the abnormal expenditure of $153,000. Was that the actual damage done?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was really more than that. This $153,000 was all expended in making these repairs.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. minister answer the first question I asked him? I made the statement that in every other part of the country, the parties who use these booms and slides pay a fair amount for them. I may be misinformed, but I understand that the amount they pay yields more to the government than that which they are called upon to expend. Why is it that a like charge is not made on the St. Maurice, so as to recoup the government for the enormous expenditure they are making in that section of the country?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My information is that the dues collected are the same on the St. Maurice as on other rivers and that they are the same as are charged by the companies. The reason for the deficit is the large amount expended on these works and the apparently large amount required for operating expenses each year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is no explanation at all that the hon. minister has received from the officers of the department to say that the charges are the same as those made by the companies. You charge a man the same for the use of a boom at the mouth of the Coulonge, for instance, where the expenditure is very small, as you do for a boom on the St. Maurice, where the expenditure is large. Why should he pay the same for the small advantage that he gets from the use of a boom at the mouth of a river as he would pay where there has been an enormous expenditure on works like those in the St. Maurice? Why should you not make a larger charge on account of the larger expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows that these tolls were fixed by Order in Council many years ago and when he, perhaps, was a member of the government. There has been no change made since that time. The point that the hon. gentleman has raised, in view of the large operating expenses, is an important one, and I shall consider it worth my while to look into it, and see whether there cannot be some change made with regard to the tolls which are being charged, although they are now the same as they have been for many years past.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. One reason that was given, I remember, when we were in the government, for the dockage or slidage received for the passage of logs down the St. Maurice, was that it fully recouped the government for the expenditure. But, things have changed within the last five or six years. There seems to be a greatly increased expenditure. I am taking the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works that was made a couple of years ago, and that was read by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) to the committee that that was one of the few works on which an expenditure had been made by the government which fully recouped them for the outlay.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he could state the amount of money that has been spent on these works within the last six years ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be very pleased to have the department make up a memorandum of the amount expended during the past six years on these works.

Mr. WILSON. Is it a large amount ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it must have been a very large amount. There has been a deficit every year since these works have been commenced between the receipts and operating expenses.

Mr. WILSON. How long is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These works have been carried on by the Dominion since 1867, and previous to that, I believe, they were erected by the old province of Canada in 1851.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the hon. minister if these booms and slides are used for any other purpose than the passing of timber and logs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no other use that I know of except the passing of logs through.

Mr. HALE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why it is that the government has anything to do with this matter ? It is not the custom in other parts of this Dominion to expend money simply for the use of lumbermen. They have to build their own slides, booms and piers in all other sections of the country and especially in the province that I come from. I would like to know why it is that the government is called upon to spend a dollar on these works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Hale) must know that he is mistaken, notwithstanding the fact that he has been a member of this House for a long time. It is not correct to say that no expenditure has been made by the government in other places in regard to these works. I have explained already this afternoon that ever since confederation there have been public works upon the Trent, the Ottawa and the St. Maurice. As this work was first started in 1851, I can hardly give the reason that prompted the parliament of that day in undertaking it, but certainly, it has been continued every year since then up to confederation and every year since confederation. I am not prepared at the present moment to announce any change of policy in regard to it. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is one worthy of consideration. No change in the tolls has been made for many years. I could not say offhand, nobody could expect me to, and I do not think any hon. member would take the responsibility of saying without inquiry into the subject whether these tolls should be increased or not, but it is a question well worthy of consideration. Considering the difference between the receipts and the expenditures, it may be well to consider whether a saving cannot be made.

Mr. HALE. Will the minister tell me whether there was ever a dollar of public money spent in the province of New Brunswick for booms and slides in the interests of the lumbermen of that province ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not aware of any expenditure having been made by the Dominion parliament in New Brunswick, on booms or slides.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Did I understand the minister to say that the income from these works was $13,000 a year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. I was asked what the revenue for 1901-2 was and I answered that it was $13,565.48, but that is not the annual revenue.

Mr. BARKER. Is that gross or net ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Gross. I can give in round figures the gross revenue from 1896 to 1902. In 1896 it was $22,000; in 1897-8, $29,000; in 1898-9, $29,000; in 1899-1900, $16,000; in 1900-1901, $21,000; in 1901-1902, $13,565; and the estimate for the present year will be about $30,000.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Considering the enormous capital expenditure that has been made on these works, and considering the small revenue obtained from them it seems to me that the government should take into their serious consideration, whether they should not abandon these works altogether. I do not see why we should go on spending large sums of money annually for a work which is of no public benefit to the country, and only for the benefit of private individuals. I cannot understand how such a policy can recommend itself to the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot agree to the proposition that the development of that section of the country is not a benefit to Canada generally. I may say to my hon. friend from New Brunswick (Mr. Hale) that although, so far as I know, the government has not built or maintained the slides and booms in that province, yet they have expended a good deal of money on improving the rivers for the floating of logs. I think it was probably in the interest of the country that that was done, and it is recognized that the removing of obstructions and the improvement of waterways for the purpose of developing our natural resources, is a wise expenditure. In the earlier days of the country these works were thought so important that many of them were started with public money.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I cannot understand what justification there can be for an expenditure which is only in the interest of the private individuals upon these rivers. Why should the public be asked to pay out money for the benefit of private individuals, when the public get no return from it. What excuse is there for it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The same excuse as for any other expenditure. When we build a canal or a railway, or even take the tariff, these are all more beneficial to some people than to others, but it is supposed to be for the general benefit of the country. The maintenance of these slides and booms are supposed to be one of the most useful works carried on by the Dominion for the benefit of the district in which they are situated. I am not prepared to say that some changes should not be made. That matter will have my consideration. We could perhaps make the operating expenses less, or as has been suggested by the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) there might be a change in the tolls which would make the annual expenditure and revenue come closer together. I am not prepared to say that something in that direction may not be done, but I do not think that at the present time the country would be prepared to endorse the abandonment of these important works altogether, unless they are taken over by companies as they have been on some of the other important streams.

Mr. McGOWAN. It seems to me that it is a provincial matter altogether. Has the minister considered the question of handing over these works in the provinces ?

Mr. HALE. While it is true that there has been a small amount of money expended on the rivers of New Brunswick for improving navigation, it is also true that no Dominion money has been expended on these rivers for the purpose of assisting the lumbermen to drive their logs.

Mr. BARKER. The gross revenue was $13,000 last fiscal year, and the minister is taking an appropriation of $47,000 this year for the actual expenses of the staff in operating these works. Therefore we only realize less than one-third our annual expenditure. In addition there has been spent on capital account for the last four years including this year, a sum of $170,000—or at least we made appropriations for that amount. We have expended all this money on a concern which is repaying us only about one-third of our annual expenditure for operating it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister has given us a statement of the gross revenue each year since 1896 ; would he be good enough to give us a statement of the annual expenditure each year since 1896. Can he also inform me whether or not in the total expenditure of $1,280,000 he includes the amount for operating expenses as well as the capital expenditure so called?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total expenditure for construction from 1867 to the 30th of June is $508,956.86, and the total expenditure for repairs, staff, and maintenance for the same period is $762,515.29, making a total expenditure of $1,271,471.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What about the other question which I asked the hon. gentleman ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I promised to bring down the information as to the expenditure both on capital and on operating expenses since 1896. That I will bring down to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the hon. gentleman for just a little more information ? I have an indefinite idea of the nature of these works, but I would like the hon. gentleman to give us as full a statement as he can as to the exact purpose they fulfil.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have never been myself on that part of the St. Maurice river ; but I understand that at a great many points there are rapids and falls. The slides are for the purpose of floating logs past those rapids and falls, and the booms of course are built for the storing of the logs, so that they should not be lost by those bringing them down from the upper country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Works of exactly the same kind in the province of Nova Scotia are undertaken by private individuals, even on more navigable rivers than I think this one is. Is this river navigable for any other purpose than the passing of logs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A very considerable portion of it is navigable. I could not say offhand how much. I may say that in the province of Quebec these are the only works of the kind which are now maintained by the government. In the province of Ontario the same conditions prevail as in the province of Nova Scotia, with two exceptions. These works are being very rapidly placed under the control of the lumber companies. I understand that on the Ottawa river the companies find that they can operate these works at much less cost than the government tolls amount to, and I have had an application lately to hand over to the companies the balance of the works on the Ottawa river in charge of the government. This is the only instance in the province of Quebec where works of this description are operated and maintained by the government.

Mr. BLAIN. In view of the very small revenue derived from these works last year, $13,000, will the hon. gentleman tell us how many men the government have employed on them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope to be able to give the hon. gentleman that information later this afternoon.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me a distinction should be drawn between the different parts of the works for which this vote is taken. There may be a strong necessity for improving the character of the bed of the river, and there may be some necessity for a public expenditure to provide slides ; but why should the government of Canada provide the lumbermen with booms, which are generally considered a necessary part of the outfit of any company handling lumber? I would like the hon. gentleman to tell us what portion of this money is spent on slides, and what portion on booms.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must remind my hon. friend that during the years he has sat in this House he has never offered that criticism before. As I have stated already, these works were commenced in 1851, and since confederation their construction and maintenance have been carried on just as they are at present. While I am willing to admit that the operating expenses are a fair subject of criticism, I am unable to announce at the present moment any change of policy in regard to their maintenance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know numerous instances in the province of Nova Scotia in which lumbermen operating on navigable rivers are obliged not only to make the booms, but to buy land on each side of the river for this purpose. It may be that the importance of the lumbering industry on this river makes some difference. I do not know how important it is. Apparently, however, it is not important enough to make this a very profitable matter for the government. There seems to be no good reason why the government should deal with one part of the country in this way, and not with another.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not a very good argument in favour of government ownership, is it ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, it is not. Another rather curious circumstance is that in one year the revenue from the works was $29,000, whereas last year it was only $13,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Without dealing in any way with the expenditure on these works, I think it is necessary to bear in mind in whom the property in them is vested. They were created previous to confederation and were the property of the old province of Canada, and at confederation they passed into the possession of the Dominion of Canada, being part of the works referred to in the third schedule of the British North America Act as river and lake improvements. They were taken over and have been dealt with ever since as Dominion property. With regard to the question whether the time has come when we should abandon these works on which so much money has been expended, the question arises, to whom should we abandon them ? Are we going to allow them to fall into decay and become an obstacle to navigation instead of being an aid to navigation ? We cannot force the lumber company to take them over, nor can we force the province to do so. What are we going to do with them ? Perhaps I might say a word respecting the character of the improvements. The St. Maurice river is a very large river on which large lumbering operations have heretofore been carried on. It was at one time the centre of the manufacture of large quantities of pine. Of course the pine has all disappeared, and for a number of years these works were not looked upon as of very great value, and did not produce very great results, but since spruce lumber has gone up in price, these works have become of greater value, as there is a great number of spruce limits on the river. In order to drive the logs, they must pass two of the biggest falls of the Dominion, one which is the Shawenegan. It is impossible to drive down these falls, so that a slide is erected at that particular point for the purpose of avoiding the falls. That is absolutely necessary in order that the logs may reach safely the mouth of the St. Maurice, which empties into the St. Lawrence. In driving the logs, you have not only to pass the Shawenegan Falls, but also the Tuque Falls. I think that some hon. gentlemen have seen the Shawenegan Falls and would know how impossible it would be for logs to come down them. It is to enable that river to be used for the purpose of lumbering that these slides and booms were built. The booms are not the usual booms used by lumbermen, but are booms to collect the logs at the head and at the foot of the falls, where they are gathered together and driven down the next slide. I may say that there is no other river in our province, except the Saguenay, on which there are slides built by the government. The slides on the Saguenay were formerly built by the government but abandoned years ago and taken over by the firm of Price Bros., who then had a practical monopoly of the lumber industry on that river. At present no other slides are maintained in the province of Quebec by the government except those I have mentioned.

Mr. INGRAM. Where do these logs float to ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Down to the mouth of the River St. Maurice, which empties into the St. Lawrence immediately below Three Rivers. At that point there are some of the largest lumber mills of the country. It is known as Three Rivers, because the St. Maurice has three mouths there through which it empties into the St. Lawrence. The pulp mills are above the Shawenegan Falls. The point I wanted to make is that these slides, so far as my knowledge goes, became the property of the Dominion at confederation. We assumed control over them, and I fail to see how it is possible for us to abandon them.

Mr. INGRAM. The other evening we passed an item of $100,000 for improvements at Three Rivers, and I understood that that item had something to do with the river down which these logs are floated.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That $100,000 was for wharfs on the St. Lawrence and these slides are on the St. Maurice.

Mr. INGRAM. Then none of this $100,000 is to be spent on the St. Maurice at all ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, the slides are a long way up.

Mr. MORIN. If the government were willing to sell the booms and slides, would they be allowed to do so ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Parliament could give the government authority.

Mr. MORIN. Then I would advise the government to sell them as quickly as possible or to give them away.

Mr. INGRAM. In the case of settlers coming in to take up waste lands and cut logs, do they enjoy the same privilege as lumbermen ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Every one is on equal terms. The tolls are fixed by Order in Council.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are not the booms used for these slides in the same condition as the booms on the Ottawa—specially for the benefit of lumbermen and nobody else. I cannot see why the same principle should apply now as in years gone by. In my younger days, lumber consisted of square timber.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is no square timber now on the St. Maurice.

Mr. COCHRANE. Therefore the circumstances have changed, and the same principles do not apply. The slides were built to allow square timber to come down, and it was necessary to have slides. But I venture the assertion that there is no demand for them now for square timber. The booms were built—specially for the benefit of lumbermen who were floating down logs. The logs come down altogether, and when they reach a certain place they are stopped by booms and collected by their different owners. While I would not have the slightest hesitation in supporting any expenditure for the benefit of the public as a whole, I cannot see why we should maintain booms at this enormous expense for the benefit of these lumbermen.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have much more use for them than before. But the point my hon. friend raises is one on which I have no opinion to express. In reply to my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I beg to say that the reason why there was less revenue in the year 1901-2, as compared with the previous year, was the very low water which caused the logs to become stranded at various points, so that they could not get down. That will account to some extent for the large increase this year in the tolls collected.

Mr. MORIN. Are the tolls charged so much per log or per thousand feet board measure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So much per log. If my hon. friend from Peel would look at page 26 of part 7 of the Public Works Report, he would find a list of employees.

Slides and booms generally, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that we spent up to the 31st of December, 1902, $956.96. This was on the Ottawa slides and booms and the St. Lawrence slides and booms and the Gatineau slides and booms. This sum has been voted every year for many years, and sometimes a considerable amount is expended. The year before there were some $3,000 spent, and this year some $700. The expenditure depends on the urgent necessity of the work.

Roads and bridges—Portage du Fort—bridge over the Ottawa—works of reconstruction, provided the Quebec and Ontario governments contribute $5,000, including approaches, $16,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a revote of $16,000 that has been taken for several years. Negotiations have been going on between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec ; but now the money has been paid over by these provinces under agreement with the conditions on which this vote was given. The plans have been prepared and advertisements are out for tenders.

Mr. CLANCY. Has any expenditure been made by the federal government in the meantime ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No expenditure this year.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this an entirely new work, or has a bridge at any time previously been erected at this point across the Ottawa? Because, it seems to me that the policy of building such works, unless we are already committed to them, is not a very good policy. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec should build their own bridges. Of course, there may be circumstances which justify this.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This bridge was built by the Dominion before. But it was washed away. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec contributed to the original structure, and the same conditions are to be carried out now. Of course, there is no rule or principle laid down for the building of these bridges. We have given assistance to interprovincial bridges in different parts of the country. From what I have heard, this is a very deserving case. There is a vote for another bridge, not on the same river, which will come up at a later stage, which also, I think, deserves assistance from this House.

Mr. BARKER. Is this the bridge, mentioned in the Auditor General's Report for 1901-2, page V—320, on which $16,000 has been spent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was for the reconstruction of the bridge at the same place, from the main shore on the Ontario side to Portage du Fort Island.

Mr. BARKER. Is this the same bridge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Practically the same. This is for the construction of a bridge from the island to the other shore.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to understand this clearly. In view of the statement of the hon. minister that the contribution of the two provinces have been forthcoming, and that plans have been prepared for the work, I asked the hon. minister if any expenditure had been made in the meantime, and I understand him to say none had been made. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) points out that a sum equal to that now asked for, and is described as a revote, has been expended on this same work. The hon. minister now explains, as I understand him, that this has been a revote from year to year, and that no money has been expended by the federal government, pending the settlement of the question of the contribution by the provinces.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I replied to the question as I understood it. I am strictly correct in stating that no money was expended, but that this is a revote of the total amount. My hon. friend refers to a bridge which has been built from the shore to the island. It is not the same work as this, but it is practically in the same locality. Until this portion is built, the river is not bridged from province to province. There are two bridges, one from the shore to the island, and the other from the island to the opposite shore. The bridge referred to by the hon. gentleman, that from the Ontario shore to the island, was completed during the past year.

Mr. CLANCY. What province does the island belong to?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister informs me that he believes that the island is on the Quebec side.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, this is a Quebec bridge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Ottawa river divides the provinces, so that this is an interprovincial bridge. But the river itself is divided by the island.

Mr. CLANCY. I cannot see that exactly. The river between an island that belongs to Quebec and the Quebec main shore is not a provincial boundary. The provincial boundary is on the other side, between the island belonging to Quebec and the Ontario shore. As I understand it, the bridge from the island to the Ontario side has been built, having been contributed to by Ontario, and now the bridge we are called upon to vote this money for, is wholly in the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows that we utilize the island to bridge the Ottawa river. I am not sure as to control of the island, but the deputy minister tells me that he is under the impression that the island is towards the centre of the stream, more on the Quebec than on the Ontario side.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think that makes any difference. Take, for instance, an island in the St. Lawrence. An island on the American side is United States territory, and they have exclusive control of it. We may use the stream on either side for navigation purposes, but the territory is American territory. I think the same principle applies here. I am not finding fault with the expenditure of money, but if I understand it aright, the Ottawa river is the boundary line between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. That river is already bridged. That forms the boundary between the two provinces. The bridge that is to be built is from territory that belongs to the province of Quebec to the mainland. The river is as much a river of the province of Quebec as though it were a river in the mainland. That is the view I take of it. Has Quebec contributed to this bridge that has been built?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. When ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year.

Mr. COCHRANE. What amount ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Five thousand dollars. I understand the matter as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) does. But this has been considered in the past as an interprovincial bridge, and it is being treated as such now.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman tell us generally how much has been spent on the bridge during the last ten years, and how much has been contributed by the provinces ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. According to the memorandum I have here the expenditure was $43,098.27. I have not a memorandum of the amount contributed in the past by the provinces for this work.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the $16,000 the hon. gentleman is asking for now, cover the expenditure of last year ? Or did he expend $16,000 last year, that amount being supplemented by $5,000 from each of the two provinces, and is he now asking for another $16,000 to be supplemented in the same way ? And, if so, will this complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, my information is that the estimate of $16,000 is the total amount we are asked to contribute for this work.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman expended $16,000 last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But that is completed, we are not asking for anything more.

Mr. CLANCY. I confess my dullness, because I am not able to understand what the hon. gentleman means. Here is a work for constructing a portion or a whole of a bridge that is considered interprovincial. The hon. gentleman says that a sum of forty odd thousand dollars has been expended on that from the outset; that he is unable to say what proportion has been contributed by the Dominion and the respective provinces; that the $16,000 was expended on that portion of the bridge last year, and $16,000 more is being asked for this year——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was asked what amount had been expended on the old bridge in this particular place where we are now proposing to build a new one, and I said $42,098.27. But I said that bridge was practically out of existence, and that to be of any use it has to be renewed. I explained that the other portion of the bridge on the Ontario shore has been built and completed. My information from the department is that no further appropriation is required for that work, and that this $16,000, along with the contributions from the provinces, will complete the structure.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we are gradually approaching to some understanding of this whole matter. I think it is important that we should fully comprehend the exact position that we are in. I understand from the Minister of Public Works that the bridge formerly built across the Ottawa river at Portage du Fort was swept away, the bridge has practically no existence, and that the estimate now asked for is to proceed with the construction of a new bridge, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec contributing sums towards the construction of that bridge. Now my mind is that the whole policy is wrong, that this parliament is not called upon in any shape or form to contribute towards the construction of a bridge at Portage du Fort across the Ottawa river; because if you are going to construct a bridge at Portage du Fort you might be called upon to construct a dozen other bridges along the Ottawa river, or over other rivers which form the boundary between the two provinces. To my mind no good reason can be advanced why we should build a bridge there at all. The bridge has been swept away, and I think now is the proper time for the government to consider what their policy should be in the future. This is altogether different from the public works we discussed this afternoon down at Shawénegan Falls, which we actually had on our hands, and it was necessary to carry it on or allow it to go to waste. But here the case is different. There is no bridge, the government has no asset there, has nothing to improve. They lose nothing by failing to contribute towards the erection of this bridge—unless it may be that they would lose a supporter on either side of the river. But that is not a policy we desire should be pursued. I think that it should not be looked at in that light, and that we should now, when there is no bridge there, when it has been swept away, when there is no asset for the government to protect, I think it is time the government should sit down and consider the question as to whether they should contribute one cent towards the construction of a new bridge, or whether they should leave it to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, whose duty I am satisfied it is to erect the necessary bridge for transportation from one side of the river to the other. I would feel much like moving that this item be struck out of the estimates. But instead of pursuing so radical a course as that, I would like the minister to look this matter over, to let this matter stand until the government has had time to consider it, and then if they come down to the House again and say they believe it is their duty to build the bridge, the House can take such action as they think fit. I hope the minister will not press this vote. The vote of $16,000 was passed last year, possibly, without much discussion, and without a full understanding of the position in which we stood. I understand from the minister that no money was spent on this particular bridge, it was on another bridge that the estimate of last year was asked for. Then we have the matter much mixed; but I certainly understood the minister to say that the bridge for which he is now asking this $16,000 was entirely swept away, and that practically we have no bridge. I do not understand that any construction has yet been entered upon. The money we voted last year is asked to be revoted again. If an expenditure of $16,000 took place last year, in the estimates it would appear that the $16,000 now asked is a revote of what we voted last year. I do not understand that any money has been expended on this bridge, and I founded my argument for a reconsideration of the whole policy of the government on the ground that no expenditure was made last year, that the bridge had been swept away, that nothing has been done to restore it, and that we are now in the same position as if the bridge had never been built at that point. We have nothing to lose by striking this item out of the estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the minister tell us out of what vote the money was expended last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will have it hunted up and hand it to my hon. friend. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) seems to expect me to be something more than human. I am to have a new policy for the old Conservative party and a new policy for the present government in all these matters. If in years gone by we voted $40,000 or $50,000 for a similar work, he seemed to think that the policy was in the interest of the country, that it was all right, when the money was expended by the government he was supporting. Last year we voted $16,000 for this very piece of work, as we did the year before, but for the other half of it. He has for several years found no fault with the policy that has been carried out. My hon. friend seemed to think that building an interprovincial bridge by the old government, costing $40,000 or $50,000, was good policy and in the public interest.

Mr. COCHRANE. May I ask the hon. minister : Did he think so ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I did, and so far as my judgment goes we may differ as to some matters, but I really think, when we look into the conditions connected with this work, we will find that it deserves to get a proper appropriation. There are other appropriations, perhaps, voted in regard to which we may have our own individual opinions, but, in this particular case, I think, taking all the circumstances into consideration, it is one that commends itself to parliament. When you have built half of this work, when parliament has twice been committed to it by making appropriations towards it, and when this is the third time that a vote is asked when the money is really required to be expended, I appeal to hon. gentlemen if it is not a vote that commends itself to our favourable consideration.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no doubt that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario have agreed to contribute towards the construction of this bridge, and there is no doubt that the Dominion government has contributed also. But, if the hon. minister will refer to page V—320 of the Auditor General's Report, he will see that the method adopted by the government for doing this work is very objectionable. In the first place, the hon. gentleman will see that the Berlin Iron Bridge Company received on the contract for the superstructure of the bridge, complete, $13,700. I would like to know whether the Berlin Iron Bridge Company in their contract agreed to put up this bridge themselves and find the labour for that price.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that that was the contract.

Mr. INGRAM. And did the bridge contractors furnish their own labour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Now, there is a total expenditure of $16,497.36. The hon. gentleman will please deduct $13,700 from $16,497.36, and he will see that will leave a balance of about $2,700 or $3,000. I want to draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that we have first an inspector who received $409.95, then we have, for building approaches and foreman, $633.60, then we have a conductor who received $215.25, and then we have three general officials from Ottawa going out to do something around this bridge at $131.54. We have had the department stating all along to this House that they had a number of architects in the department ; yet, we find that there was paid to an architect, or to some person, 5 per cent of the contract price of this bridge for preparing the plans—some gentleman in the Canadian Pacific Railway office in Montreal. If this method is to be pursued in constructing a work that only costs $13,700, it is very extraordinary and some different method ought to be pursued than that. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain it away. That is as I understand it from the figures I have quoted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find the hon. gentleman's criticism is perfectly fair. The chief engineer informs me that the reason this 5 per cent was paid for these plans was that they would have to employ a special staff for bridges of this description, and they find it cheaper to get an outside expert to prepare these plans and specifications than to have them made in the department.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is there special about an iron bridge ? I think if you have not engineers who are capable of preparing plans for an iron bridge at this day in our history, you had better ship them and get somebody in their places who are up to date.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is probably not from lack of qualification on the part of engineers of the department that this work is not done there. There are several engineers in the department, I think, who are capable of preparing plans and specifications for this work.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the hon. minister is truly honest, was it not from the fact that somebody wanted a job that had not one ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the hon. ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is not in his place to-day, I am hardly able to answer that question as to the motives that prompted him in regard to some of these expenditures. I suppose that all I can do is to promise to try and do a little better in the future.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to assume that the hon. minister is not going to pursue this method of conducting public works in the future ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is a very wide question. What I do say is that I will try if possible to make some reduction in regard to these incidental expenses. This is a technical question. The chief engineer informs me that he finds it cheaper to deal with a work of this kind outside than to deal with it in the department. Although I am responsible as the minister, I do not want to dispute the chief engineer in regard to that. I think that considerable saving may be made in this direction, and as far as I am personally concerned, I will endeavour to see if it cannot be done.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me perfectly absurd to say that with an expenditure of $13,700, on an iron superstructure we should spend $1,900 for supervising the job. If we have a plan prepared at $600, and two or three superintendents getting $1,500, it strikes me that there is something radically wrong, and that the hon. minister should not hesitate to tell us to-day that he will not only try to do better, but that he will say that this will not happen again. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should assume the responsibility for this expenditure. The hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) is responsible. The hon Minister of Justice is just as responsible as the hon ex-Minister of Public Works is for this expenditure. I will not allow the hon. Minister of Justice to shirk the responsibility of the ministry because the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works is not in the House. The ministers are just as much responsible for his conduct when he was Minister of Public Works in the administration as they would be if he were Minister of Public Works to-day. They should not attempt to shirk their responsibility. It would be more manly for them to justify the expenditure instead of attempting to shirk their responsibility by saying that the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works is not in the House. The hon. Minister of Justice was in office when the money was expended. The hon. Minister of Public Works was not in the cabinet at that time, but the other members of the government are just as responsible as the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Why am I brought into this thing ?

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). We want justice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is not what you want.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I want my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) to be fair. I have stated before that as a member of the cabinet I do not desire to shirk the responsibility, nor do I know that the premier or any other member of the cabinet does. The question asked me was whether this had been given to an outsider for some reason or other, and I said I could not answer that. We have to take the responsibility for the expenditure, and unless a minister acted without consulting his colleagues—even then I suppose the Prime Minister is responsible for his conduct.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the money been paid by the provinces ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that the money has been paid over and is now in the hands of the Crown. The arrangement was that each province was to contribute $5,000 towards the whole cost and that money has been paid.

Mr. INGRAM. We are paying $32,000 as against $10,000 paid by both local governments. Has the minister given a contract for this work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract has not been let.

Mr. BLAIN. The wording of the item would indicate that there is some doubt as to the provinces paying their share.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The money has been paid.

Mr. BLAIN. Which province does the island on which the bridge will rest, belong to ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say. It might possibly be a federal island, but there is a recent decision of the Privy Council which might place it in the province of Quebec. I cannot give a judicial opinion on that.

Mr. BLAIN. Would not that be a matter for consideration before the bridge is built.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot see that that enters into it at all. Different decisions have been given by the Privy Council as to the rights of the provinces in the ownership of the foreshore and so on, but there is no doubt about this being a navigable stream, and under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. WILSON. It is not an ordinary thing for the Dominion government to build this kind of a bridge, and the minister should give us the reasons why the government was induced to build this particular bridge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have given a history of the bridge. It was the policy of the old government and it happens to be the policy of this government.

Mr. WILSON. It is no answer to say that it was the policy of the old government. The late government was defeated, I think not for the good of the country. It is no justification for a minister of the Crown to say that he is following this course because his predecessors did. The House ought to know what induced this government to undertake this work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that it was the policy of this government because it was the policy of the late government.

Mr. WILSON. You gave it as a reason.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not. I said it was a policy that was in existence for a great many years and that it was the policy of the late government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) wanted to make out that this was the first case of such a thing in the history of the country, and I told him that it was not a new thing, that it is a policy which has been in existence for a great many years, and that it was followed by the late government. The principle that governs this was to assist the people of these districts to have a bridge across a river under the control of the government, and which river divides the two provinces.

Mr. WILSON. I am just as wise now as I was before. If this river is bridged by the Dominion government because it is a navigable stream, does the same rule apply to all navigable rivers. The minister finds fault because I said that he tried to justify this because it had been the policy of the late government and the policy of all governments since confederation. That is no argument for me. The question is whether or not it is right that this should be done, and I want to know the reason why the government chose this particular river to build a bridge over. If it is done in all cases then that might be an answer, but if it is only done in special cases why was this particular stream selected ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member tries to make out that I said we did it because the late government did it. I did not say anything of the kind. I said it has been a common practice by both governments.

Mr. WILSON. That is no reason.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say it was a reason, and I am glad my hon. friend agrees with me that it is no reason. The reason is because it is an interprovincial bridge and after consideration it was thought well to give a grant towards it.

Mr. WILSON. Is that a common practice.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been a common practice.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the minister to say in his previous explanation that this was out of the ordinary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not insinuate anything of the kind.

Mr. BARKER. The leader of the opposition asked the minister to give him the authority under which this money was spent, and the minister promised to do so.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Deputy Minister misunderstood the question. This money was voted last year and the year before. But what my hon. friend the leader of the opposition wanted, was the vote the money was spent out of in the year 1901-1902. I will have that hunted up and sent across.

Ottawa city—bridges over the Ottawa river, the slides and the Rideau canal and approaches thereto—ordinary repairs, $7,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is to provide for the usual necessary ordinary renewals and repairs to bridges in the city of Ottawa and the approaches thereto, the maintenance of which was assumed by the government under Order in Council of the 17th of June, 1885.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman tell us where the Minto bridge is ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think there is any bridge under the jurisdiction of the department of Public Works known as the Minto bridge.

Mr. INGRAM. I know that, but I wanted to find out where it was.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister informs me that one of the bridges on the way to Rideau Hall, under the control of the Ottawa Improvement Commission, is called Minto bridge.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood that the Ottawa Improvement Commission had no control over bridges. I understood their work was to beautify the streets of Ottawa. I would like to know whether, in building this bridge, they have not gone outside of their duties.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think one of the first works they did was to build the bridges across the Rideau river. The bridges have no connection with the department in any way.

Mr. WILSON. Is the Dominion government responsible for all the bridges over the canals ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think probably the Dominion government build and maintain all the bridges over the canals throughout the Dominion.

Dominion traffic bridges throughout Canada, including approaches, $5,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for necessary repairs to bridges built by the department in the North-west Territories, &c.

Land and cable lines, maritime provinces, $28,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The vote of $18,000 is to make provision for the construction of a telegraph line on the east coast of Cape Breton Island from St. Peter's canal to Louisburg, together with an extension from Louisburg north to Scatarie island lighthouse, and also an extension of the line from Gabarouse to North Sydney. This work is under contract, and this vote is expected to complete the work. The vote of $10,000 is for completing the construction of a telegraph line from St. Peter's to Canso and connecting Port Mulgrave with Port Hawkesbury by cable. This is under contract. Its total cost is $13,900, and the present vote is expected to complete the work.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who has the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. M. Cameron, Maple, N.S.

Mr. COCHRANE. Were tenders advertised for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The disadvantage under which the province of Prince Edward Island has been labouring for a great many years in regard to telegraphic communication is well known to this House. For the last two years, while I have had the honour to represent a portion of the province in this House, I have brought this matter to the attention of the House, and on each occasion I have been promised that the matter would receive attention at the hands of the government; but finally we have been humbugged by the government, for the matter has not received their attention, though it is one closely affecting the commercial interests of the province. As on different occasions I have with others, as the pages of 'Hansard' will verify, pointed out the grievances under which the people of Prince Edward Island suffer in this regard, both retarding their commercial growth and preventing the press despatches and news of outside world reaching them except at great cost—think it unnecessary to deal further with this phase here. The question now is as to the remedy, and I consider the government has the ready means in their hands. I understand that a delegation from the different boards of trade of Prince Edward Island have come here to interview the minister and the government on this matter, and I trust that due attention will be paid to their representations and some remedy provided for the exorbitant rates which the people of Prince Edward Island have to pay for their messages, and for the disadvantage which they are under in having no night service or night rates. I understand that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company are willing either to sell out to the government or to reduce their rates to the regular service rates paid in the maritime provinces, and to give a night service, provided the government will guarantee them against any loss. The Dominion government is under obligations to give the province an up-to-date service, and it seems to me that the difficulty could be readily overcome if the government would take it up in a businesslike way. I have here the resolutions passed by the boards of trade of Prince Edward Island, and the report brought in by their committee. It is quite a lengthy report, but it will certainly put the members of this House in possession of the facts in regard to the situation in Prince Edward Island, and I will therefore take the liberty of using a little of the time of the House to read it :

The adjourned meeting of the Board of Trade to consider the improved telegraph service was held last night. The meeting was a most representative one, among those present being Premier Peters, Hon. D. Farquharson, D. G. Cameron, Montague and other prominent men.

President Messervey occupied the chair and after stating the object called upon F. L. Hazard to read the report of the committee appointed at a previous meeting to fully investigate the question. The following is the full REPORT.

The committee beg to report as follows :

By the Act of the legislature of Prince Edward Island, 17 Vic. cap. 4. (1853) section 2 : It was enacted that the 'New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company' may establish, construct, purchase and keep in order and work any line or lines of magnetic electric or other telegraph, or means of telegraphic communication in any part of this island, or its dependencies, or places under its jurisdiction, or between any point or points therein and any other island, province, country or place in or near the continent of America or in or near the continent of Europe ; or in the Atlantic ocean ; and during the existence of the said corporation no other person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, shall be permitted to extend to enter upon or touch any part of this island or the coast thereof, or of the islands or places within the jurisdiction of the government of this province with any telegraph cable, wire or other means of telegraphic communication from any other province, state, country or place whatsoever beyond the continent of America.

By the Act of 28 Vic., cap. 13, section 1. It was enacted that, so long during the term of ten years from the passing of this Act (passed April 15, 1857) as the said New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, shall maintain a regular telegraphic communication between this island and the continent of America and Newfoundland, and shall likewise during said period at the cost and charges of the said company, build, erect and maintain telegraph offices and stations at either end of the electric cable connecting this island with the continent of America and Newfoundland, that is to say at Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine respectively, and shall likewise maintain operators at the said stations for the purpose of transmitting intelligence from and to this island and to the post office in Charlottetown at the same rate and charges as at present received by the said company for the transmission of messages, there shall be paid to the said company from the public treasury of this island yearly and every year during the said period of ten years, the sum of three hundred pounds of lawful current money of this island in equal half-yearly payments.

By the Act of 32 Vic., cap. 34, (1869), section 1. It was enacted as follows : If the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company shall on or before the 1st day of July next, lay down in proper working order a new submarine telegraph cable, across the Strait of Northumberland so as to connect this island with the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the continent of America generally ; that is to say, at or near Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine respectively or at some convenient points on each side of the said strait and shall open offices and provide operators at Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine or some other convenient points on each side of the straits to the satisfaction and approval of the government of this island, then so long after the completion of such telegraphic communication and conection as before mentioned as the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company shall maintain a regular telegraphic communication between this island and the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and the continent of America generally and shall likewise during the same period at the costs and charges of the said company build, erect and maintain telegraphic offices and stations at either end of the electric cable, connecting this island with the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the continent of America generally, that is to say at Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine respectively and shall likewise maintain and provide properly qualified operators at the said stations for the purpose of transmitting intelligence from and to this island and to the post offices in Charlottetown and Summerside respectively at the same rates and charges as regards the transmission of inland messages between one post office and another in Prince Edward Island as heretofore charged by the company and at a rate not exceeding fifty cents additional on former charges on messages passing out and into this island through the sub-marine cable and in the ordinary proportions for any additional number of words in each message, and also in the event of any of the people or government of this island erecting good and sufficient posts free of cost to the said company for an extension of the land-line to Cascumpec or Alberton, the said company to furnish the wires and insulators therefor and perfect telegraphic communication to Cascumpec or Alberton as the case may be and maintain said lines in proper working order and also keep up and maintain telegraph offices and stations and operators at Charlottetown, Summerside, Cascumpec or Alberton for the transmission of messages, there shall be paid to the said company from the public treasury of this island the sum of £600, of lawful current money of the said island in lieu of any former contract by half-yearly payments. . .

Section 2. Provides that all the rights, privileges, profits and monopolies with respect to extending, erecting, maintaining and building the said lines of telegraphic communication within this island in conection with it internally . . . . . and all other rights, &c., given to or conferred on the said company by the Act of the general assembly of said island, 17 Vic. cap. 4 (1853) are hereby conferred, restored and given to the said company.

Section 4. Provides that in case of failure of said company to perform, keep in order and maintain the telegraphic communication aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the lieutenant governor . . for the time being in council to contract with any person or persons willing to become bound to keep up or maintain the same or such part thereof as the said lieutenant governor . . in council shall require to be contracted for and in such case the privileges and monopolies hereby granted to the said company shall have no force or operation as against any such other person or persons who may contract to become bound as aforesaid.

Section 6. Provides that, in order to enable the government to carry out in good faith any arrangement respecting telegraphic comunication, already made or negotiated or which may be hereafter made or negotiated with the said New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company or any other company, person or persons in connection with or within this island or any point or points therein whether hereinbefore named and specified or not, it shall be lawful for the lieutenant governor with the advice of the executive council from time to time if it appears advisable, to alter, change, relax, or dispense with and again if need be to require to be performed any of the services in respect of telegraphic communication required to be performed by the first section of this Act, and also from time to time if need be, to make such further or other arrangements respecting telegraphic communication as shall be found necessary and advisable, and to apply the sum of money hereby granted to defray the costs of such altered arrangements so far as the same can extend or provide for the same.

It is this last mentioned Act, that now so far as the committee has been able to ascertain forms the existing contract between this province and the present Anglo-American Telegraph Company—which latter company claims to have possessed itself of all the rights and privileges conferred upon the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company by the before mentioned statutes—but, whether or not this latter contention can be fully maintained the committee express some doubt.

I may also say that the Hon. Sir Louis H. Davies, when Minister of Marine and Fisheries, gave as his opinion to this House that this company had no monopoly for cable communications to Prince Edward Island. In the 'Hansard' of 1900, page 1720, he is reported to have said :

This company was established in 1853, and it had a certain monopoly granted to it, but that monopoly does not extend to the laying of a line beween Prince Edward Island and the continent of America. It does extend to the laying of a line between Prince Edward Island, England and Europe, but not to the laying of a line between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of America, and although the company sedulously seeks to create the impression everywhere that such a monopoly does exist, I have given my attention to the whole matter very closely, and find that such a monopoly does not exist.

This Committee, in its report, came to the same conclusion, and consequently there is no excuse for the government failing to take hold of the matter. If they cannot deal directly with the Anglo-American Telegraph company, they should take the matter in their own hands and put in an entire government service, or at any rate, deal with it in some way that would remove all grounds for complaint. Under the terms of the union, when this province became part of the government in 1873, it was agreed that the Dominion government should assume and defray all the charges for various services, among which is the maintenance of telegraphic communications between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. And it stands to reason that the telegraphic communications thus stipulated should be such as is afforded the other provinces. We simply come before the government and ask that we should be put on the same plane as the province of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and that the rates for sending messages and the hours in which they may be sent shall be the same as in those provinces.

By section 92 of the British North America Act, subsection A of subsection 10, it is provided that the provincial legislatures shall have exclusive powers over local works and undertakings other than :

Lines of steamer other than ship, railways, canals, telegraph and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces or extending beyond the limits of the province.

It is evident therefore, that the Dominion government is seized with the duty of maintaining regular telegraphic communication with the provinces of Prince Edward Island and with this province. The committee reported :

That the province requires at the present time an up to date day and night service Sunday included, at the same rate per message and for additional words—this to include the privilege of sending night despatches at reduced rates—as charged in the other maritime provinces.

I pointed out last year the immense disadvantages under which the people of Prince Edward Island are labouring in this connection. I showed that the rates charged for sending messages were more than treble those charged in the other maritime provinces. The committee suggested the following measures by which the government should deal with the subject, and, as I have pointed out, the Western Union Telegraph Company are perfectly willing to deal in any reasonable way with the matter. The suggestions of the committee are as follows :

1. That the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, even if entitled to all the privileges granted to the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company do not possess an absolute monopoly over the telegraph system of this province and that it is competent for the government to contract with any other company or persons, so long as the company or persons contracted with do not extend any telegraph cable wire or other means of telegraphic communication from any other province, state, country or place beyond the continent of America.

2. That the government under section 6 of 32, Vic. cap. 34 (provincial statutes) has the right to require that the present contract, if still a binding one, be so altered as to give the required additional telegraph service.

3. That inasmuch as the present company close their office from 8 p.m., to 8 a.m., each day and from 8 p.m., on Saturday until 8 a.m., on Mondays, it cannot be successfully contended that they have kept up regular telegraphic communication in accordance with the spirit of the Act, and consequently that a forfeiture of any rights they possessed has taken place, and it is competent for the government to contract with any other company or persons for an efficient service as provided for in section 4, of the Act of 22 Vic. cap. 34 hereinbefore mentioned.

4. That the government might acquire by purchase or expropriation the ownership of the cable across the straits and thus be in a position either to operate it or lease it subject to such terms and conditions as would prevent difficulties occurring or exorbitant tariff charges being made in future.

5. That failing any of the foregoing propositions commending themselves such terms can be made by the Dominion government by the payment of increased subsidy so as to place this island on an equal footing regarding telegraphic communication with the other provinces, and in this latter connection it appears that there are no insuperable difficulties as a proposition has already been made by the Anglo-American Telegraph Company by the letter of Mr. J. H. Carson, the manager of said company to Sir Louis Davies, dated 21st March, 1900, and to Attorney General Peters, dated 25th February, 1901.

These suggestions are thrown out by the committee as feasible methods by which the matter may be dealt with, but they do not commit themselves to any of them. It is for the government to carry out the terms of union, and give the island an up-to-date service. The matter, as I have said, has been before the House a number of times. When I brought it up two years ago, Sir Louis H. Davies said he had the matter in hand and that it would be attended to forthwith, and asked us not to insist upon communications being brought down at that time. Last year I brought the matter up, and the Minister of Public Works replied :

I have to assure my hon. friends that the government will give their best consideration to the important point which has been raised. It is not the first time that I have heard complaints about the Anglo-American Company.

It is like everything else that Prince Edward Island asks for it has to be brought up year after year, and even then the people's complaints are not really listened to.

The hon. gentlemen who have spoken are right in saying that we have the means of reaching them. Several members of the government will be in England in a short time, and, if circumstances permit, I expect to go there myself. I will try to have a short and interesting interview with these gentlemen of the Anglo-American Company.

And so on. Now, the matter is in the same state, practically, as it was last year. The present Minister of Public Works has, on several occasions, looked after the interests of Prince Edward Island in a praiseworthy manner. I trust he will not content himself with merely saying that he will look into this case, but that he will take it up and deal with it this session, so that an end may be put to this outrage upon the people of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. HACKETT. While I have no desire to detain the committee from the important business now before it, I feel it my duty to make a few remarks on the question brought forward by the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey). This question is one of vital importance to the people of Prince Edward Island. The grievance is one under which they have laboured for nearly fifty years. A monopoly was fastened upon them about fifty years ago, and from that time until the present they have contended against it—without any result it is true. Although Sir Louis Davies, some two years ago said in this parliament that there was no monopoly, that the telegraph service of Prince Edward Island was as free as the telegraph service of any part of Canada, yet the fact remains that the monopoly is still in existence, that the people of Prince Edward Island are charged additional rates for telegraph messages over the short cable of nine miles between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. I would therefore urge upon the government that every means should be taken to end this grievance. The hon. member for East Prince has read the speech of the Minister of Public Works of last year. Notwithstanding what the hon. minister said, nothing has been done, and the people are still suffering under the incubus of a monopoly. What aggravates the difficulty is that our mail service in Prince Edward Island is so irregular in the winter season that our merchants, farmers and others engaged in business transactions with the outside world are debarred for weeks from receiving letters from outside the island, or sending letters to outside points. This is all the greater reason why something should be done to redress this grievance with regard to the telegraph system. If we had a fair telegraph service, our business men would be able to carry on their business under more reasonable conditions. Under the present system we are charged an extra rate for this cable when we can use it, and the telegraph offices are closed from eight o'clock in the evening until eight o'clock in the morning, no telegraph communications being received from the mainland between those hours. It does not need to be said that this question is of the most vital importance to our people. My hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) has read the resolutions passed by the boards of trade in the provinces. As I am aware that a delegation is in the city at the present time to interview the government with regard to this matter, I feel it my duty to speak a few words on behalf of the people of my province. My hon. friend from East Prince has entered very fully into the case. He has shown that the boards of trade, who thoroughly understand the situation have, by resolution, placed on record their views on this subject, representing in this matter the whole of the people in Prince Edward Island from East Point to North Cape—not a very large province, it is true, but I still claim, one of the fairest and finest provinces of the Dominion. I trust that the government will take action, and, if they cannot make an arrangement with the Anglo-American Company, will take over the service themselves. Mr. Marconi with his wireless system has sent messages from Glace Bay, Cap Breton, to Great Britain. If the Anglo-American people have a monopoly of the cable, why cannot the government enter into a contract with Mr. Marconi to establish a service between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse, and so give the people the telegraph facilities to which they are entitled. I have only one word to add to what my hon. friend from East Prince said. There are only two of us in this parliament who represent the people of Prince Edward Island, who seek to advance the interest of the people of that province and are ready to voice their wishes. The other members from the island are as dumb as oysters. Even when they are here they have nothing to say, and generally they are not here. We are here to attend to the interest of our constituents, and I ask the government to take this matter of our telegraph system into their most serious consideration.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I understood the hon. gentleman who first spoke, he said there was a deputation here now desirous of laying this matter before the government. Personally, I have not had it brought to my attention, but I would be pleased to hear what the deputation has to say, and give their representations full attention. I am not familiar enough with the matter to make any promises at the present time.

Mr. BARKER. The minister has given me the book that the leader of the opposition asked for, and I wish now for a moment to go back to the item 137. When parliament granted the $15,000 it was on condition that the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario should contribute each $5,000, those are the words in the vote. Now we are expending another $16,000, and I presume on the same conditions, that the provinces should contribute each $5,000. But the word 'each' is not in this vote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps my hon. friend misunderstood me. The total amount contributed to this whole work is $5,000 from each of the two provinces. My hon. friend thinks that each province should contribute $5,000 now. I understand from the deputy minister that the conditions were that the provinces were to contribute $5,000 each to the whole work, and that would include both branches.

Mr. BARKER. It was not so expressed when, in 1901, parliament granted $15,000 for this bridge on condition that the two provinces should each give $5,000. Now we are giving a vote corresponding with that vote of $15,000. There is no doubt that parliament, in granting that $15,000, did so on the understanding that $10,000 should be contributed by the provinces, making $25,000 for the whole work. Now we are giving $16,000 more, and I presume that the two provinces will give $10,000 again.

Mr. INGRAM. If the word 'each' was put before the word 'provinces,' that would meet the case.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In this particular case, I was under the same misapprehension as my hon. friend. The deputy minister informs me that we have got the money in our hands, it has already been paid over. I have no objection to putting in the word 'each.' But it may be that if we put in the word 'each,' the Auditor General might say that was another vote, different from the one we had before.

Mr. BARKER. I have no doubt that parliament, on the previous occasion, gave the $15,000 on the understanding that $10,000 would be put along with it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can only give my hon. friend the information I have from the department. The deputy minister informs me that was the understanding.

Mr. BARKER. It was so expressed in the estimate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was under that impression myself, but I am now giving the actual facts. There is no use changing it, so far as this particular vote is concerned, because the $10,000 has recently been paid into our hands.

Mr. INGRAM. For that reason there should be no objection to putting in the word 'each.' 'The works of reconstruction provided the Ontario and Quebec governments contribute $5,000, including approaches.' That might mean $2,500 each.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec have paid their money. I think these words should come out, because the condition has already been complied with so far as they have any intention of complying with it. If it remains as it is now, I think the Auditor General will rule that this money cannot be paid unless they make a further contribution, and the minister tells us that is not the intention. So it seems to me these words, to carry out his intention, would have to be omitted.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman say when the money was received ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would have to get the exact dates from the department. We are in this position now, that we shall have this vote of $16,000, and the $5,000 from each of the provinces, as cash on hand to carry out the work. There cannot be any dispute.

Mr. INGRAM. It would make a good deal of difference if the money had been received before this item was put in the estimates by the council. In that case the word 'each' should be put in.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since the hon. gentleman has brought it to my attention, I will refer the matter to the Department of Justice.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). I just heard the closing remarks of the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett). I do not think there was any occasion at all for such a statement, because the members from Prince Edward Island supporting the government attend very strictly to their business. If my hon. friend wishes to make any political capital by making remarks of that kind and having them published in the island press, he is mistaken. It is really not worthy of the hon. gentleman himself. He knows as well as anybody else that we are attending to our business here. I can tell the hon. gentleman that only this afternoon we were attending to that very matter. There is a delegation here now to interview the government, and members supporting the government are working with those gentlemen. I think the matter will be advanced in that way better than by the speeches the hon. gentleman made.

Mr. COCHRANE. What have you been doing these number of years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What were you doing for eighteen years ?

Mr. COCHRANE. I have no objection to your saying what you please. But get up on your feet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no man in this House who talks more without getting on his feet than the hon. member for Northumberland ; he is constantly interrupting. We take it good naturedly, and when anybody else makes an observation, he might as well take it good naturedly.

Mr. COCHRANE. There is no man in the House who talks more than the Finance Minister and says less. When he talks about the last eighteen years, he was not in this House, he was controlling a smaller portfolio than the one he controls now, he was discussing the propriety of a dissolution of the union, and of his province going into the republic of the United States. I will not allow the hon. Minister of Finance to criticise my action in this House. I was here before the hon. gentleman was, and I know the history of the hon. gentleman very well. Therefore, I am not going to be lectured by the hon. gentleman, although he is occupying a position that he little deserves, a position which his ability does not warrant.

Mr. HACKETT. I am pleased to hear the explanation of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes) in this connection, and I am also pleased to find that he accompanied the delegation, and is using his influence with the ministry. I trust that his influence will be successful, and that with this delegation the hon. gentleman will succeed in getting for the people of Prince Edward Island the telegraph service, which they are so much in need of.

Quebec—to repair and improve roadways and increase operating facilities generally to eastward of Godbout, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a vote of $1,000 for maintaining roadways in connection with the lines there.

Mr. HUGHES (P.E.I.)

Belle Isle—telegraph line between extreme ends of island, $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister explain this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a revote of $5,000 to be applied to the construction of a line between the extreme ends of Belle Isle, carrying it along the ridge in the middle of the island. This amount has been revoted several times. The Department of Marine and Fisheries are undertaking considerable improvements in the lighting there. A new lighthouse is being built, and there is under consideration some arrangements in regard to the wireless system of telegraphy. Until these are completed, I cannot give any further information in regard to this work. This is a very important point in connection with shipping and some arrangement will come in a very short time.

Mr. BLAIN. Would it be in order to give some explanation in regard to the Marconi system of telegraphy ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid I am not capable of giving any information that would be of any use at the present time.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. Finance Minister would give us that information ?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. Minister of Finance made the arrangement with the Marconi people and he will be in a position to give us some information in regard to it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) is hardly correct in saying I made the arrangement. The arrangement and the contract were made with the Prime Minister, but, however, that is not important. I really do not think there is anything to say concerning the Marconi business that has not been already given to the public through the press. When the government contributed a sum towards the erection of a station at Table Head, Glace Bay, we were assured by the Marconi people that they had every reason to believe that they would have commercial telegraphy established before the present day. They seem to have made a success of it scientifically, and several months ago there was general rejoicing at what seemed to be the complete success of the system. They had been sending some messages, not commercially, but some hitch has since occurred. We were constantly being assured by them that they were on the verge of success. Scientifically it is a success, but they do not seem to have been able to apply it to commercial purposes up to this time. The last communication we had from Mr. Marconi, some months ago, was to the effect that they expected to engage in commercial business at an early day. We felt assured that they would soon be able to engage in commercial business. However, we are not in a position to add anything to what has been stated in the public press. There seems to be some hitch, the particular nature of which we do not understand. All I can say is that they have assured us that everything is going well and that within a short time they hope to make it a commercial success.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that mean as to the actual success of the working of the system, or does it mean a financial success ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it means that we will have commercial wireless telegraphy in operation in a short time. They gave us repeated assurances in a general way that that would happen. But although they seemed to have established it for a short time, something went wrong and at the present time they are not sending any messages, and they are not in a position to do a commercial business.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no doubt that the system is successful ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no doubt that the system is scientifically successful. They have sent messages, but they do not seem to be able to send them on a sufficiently large scale to warrant them in undertaking a commercial business, so that we have not had any benefit from it so far. But, they are forming a company in Canada for the purpose of making their connections. They seem to have every confidence in the success of the system, but the public seems to have been a little anxious in consequence of the fact that they have not yet been so successful as they expected in that they have not been able to undertake a commercial business.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. minister will tell us how much the Dominion government contributed up to date towards that system, and perhaps, while he is on his feet, he will make a statement as to whether the government intend to contribute any further sum, if so, on what conditions, and whether they are as hopeful now as when the government made a statement some little time ago in regard to this system.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Speaking from memory, the full sum which we agreed to pay, $80,000, has been paid. We have made no other arrangements. We do not contemplate paying any sum of money other than that originally agreed upon, which was $80,000. I think I would be justified in saying that we are as hopeful now as at any time. A couple of months ago there seemed to be a general conviction that the thing had been accomplished scientifically and commercially. In fact some messages were sent. We have had assurances from Mr. Marconi that it would be made a commercial success. From everything we have seen of Mr. Marconi we have very great faith in him. He is a great inventor, and he has assured us that he has perfect faith in the system, and we are hopeful that it will turn out all right.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister tell us whether the money was paid to Mr. Marconi himself, or to the company in which he is interested ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was paid to the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company, with which he is connected. The contract was made with the company, although the original negotiation was held with Mr. Marconi. The contract was made with a company called the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company.

Mr. BLAIN. Who compose that company ? Are they Canadian capitalists, or old country capitalists ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is an English company.

Mr. BLAIN. Altogether ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Entirely so. They have since organized a Canadian company for some department of their business, but the contract was made entirely with these English people.

The Magdalen Islands—land lines, renewal of wiring, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount is called for by the general superintendent of government telegraphs to make provision for renewing fifty miles of wiring of the Magdalen Island lines. These lines were built in 1879, and the system has been damaged by sleet storms. It is calculated that the work will cost $2,000.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. minister state what was the sum spent last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The amount spent last year was $1,119.50. The total estimated cost of this work is $4,000. The balance of $800 will be expended between now and the 30th June next.

Mr. COCHRANE. Has the telegraph system always been under the Minister of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. Ever since the department was formed.

Mr. INGRAM. Was there not some mention made of handing these telegraph lines over to the Port Office Department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never heard of it at all.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman say he never heard of it ? I am not saying that it has been suggested to him personally by any action that has been taken, but I assume that the hon. gentleman is a very careful newspaper reader, and upon that ground I have a shrewd suspicion that the hon. gentleman has heard of it already.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose I owe an apology to the House, but as a matter of fact I seldom read the papers, especially certain portions of them. I am not aware that such a proposal was made at any time, either in the papers or out of them.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did the minister hear it through the Marconi system ?

Mr. SCOTT. Before we leave the consideration of these telegraph items, I would like an explanation from the minister respecting the great void that appears here under the head of the North-west Territories. Last year there was a vote of $62,700 for telegraph lines in the North-west Territories, and this year that item is reduced by $62,700.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That appropriation was made for work that is completed or which will be completed before the 30th of June next.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it intended to carry out some further extensions of the North-west Territories telegraph lines in the coming year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These representations will be taken into consideration, and when the supplementary estimates come down we will know.

Surveys and inspections—$50,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote provides for the surveys and inspections made during the fiscal year in connection with the hydrographic survey of the St. Lawrence on the Canadian side of the international boundary between Kingston and Pembroke.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will this be carried out by the Minister of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I was in the Department of Marine and Fisheries I advocated that the hydrographical survey should be controlled by one department, and I thought it should be transferred to the other department, because they have an organization of boats and staff which ought to do it better than to have it in the different departments, as it is at the present time. However, the word hydrographic survey is misleading. It is not a hydrographic survey, as it is generally supposed, but it is for the surveys made for dredging, and consequently is under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BARKER. I have some inquiries to make with regard to this item, but it is now six o'clock.

Some resolutions reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ONTARIO AND QU'APPELLE LAND COMPANY.

House went into Committee on Bill (No. 62) respecting the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company, Limited.—Mr. McCarthy.

On section 2,

Mr. BARKER. I would like to call attention to the rather unusual terms of this section. It provides that from time to time the paid up capital subscribed may be refunded to the shareholders.

Mr. McCARTHY. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the last three words of that section, 'or provided for,' were struck out in the Private Bills Committee. Perhaps that may meet his objection.

Mr. BARKER. What does that mean : 'provided that all the liabilities of the company at the time of any such payment are paid' ? There may be ninety-nine cents on the dollar of the capital returned, and liabilities not yet accrued might be in existence. I do not want to interfere with the general object of this Bill, but I think the House should protect the creditors.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will see by the first section that there must be enough land retained to answer for the paid up capital and the liabilities.

Mr. BARKER. Nobody can say that the lands are enough to pay the liabilities. My impression is that the only safety for the creditors is in requiring that the shareholders shall remain liable.

Mr. McCARTHY. The shareholders will not be relieved. If a shareholder has fully paid up his capital, his liability is relieved at once. The capital of this company is fully paid, so that there is no liability of shareholders. The directors' liability, however, is still there.

Mr. BARKER. I know that when a shareholder pays up, his liability ceases; but when a company returns to him his money, the position is reversed. I would like to ask what the Minister of Justice thinks of this kind of legislation ? The company might pay back to the shareholders ninety-nine cents on the dollar of their paid up capital, leaving one cent on the dollar to meet a large liability to the public.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the liabilities are met at the time the payment is made, then no liabilities exist. Any future liability can only be incurred in respect to the assets then in existence; and if any creditor advances money to the company, he is assumed to be astute enough to inquire what assets are being pledged in respect of that liability. If that is so, the creditors are amply protected.

Mr. BARKER. As the Minister of Justice is here, I should like to have his opinion of this legislation. Here is a corporation ready to go into business. It may incur liabilities up to to-day; and to-night ninety-nine per cent of the capital may be returned to the incorporators, people speculating or dealing in lands, and the company may go on incurring further liabilities with only one cent on the dollar in the treasury to meet those liabilities.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. As I understand, the capital is to be paid off out of the assets of the company, and will be reduced to the extent of those payments, and that reduction can only take place when the liabilities of the company have been liquidated; so that, for any future liabilities of the company, the creditors will have to be careful not to contract with the company beyond its capacity to pay. It seems to me the chief result of this Bill will be to destroy the credit of the corporation.

Mr. BARKER. I have no doubt it ought to destroy the credit of the corporation, because no man would see what his security was. But is it right to create corporations that may be in such a state ? You create a corporation that may have a capital of $1,000,000. The directors may reduce that million dollars capital to $20,000 or $5,000, but how does the general public know that that reduction has occurred ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The general public is supposed to contract with a company with a knowledge of its Act of incorporation, and when the credit of the company has been very materially impaired by the reduction of its capital, the general public will be put upon inquiry.

Mr. BARKER. They ought not to be put on inquiry, and we ought not to pass legislation which is very much like the wildcat legislation of the western states, where the public do not know what kind of corporations they are dealing with. This legislation will not only affect this particular company, but every other corporation in the country.

Mr. McCARTHY. The explanation given by the parties interested in the Bill before the Private Bills Committee was——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Who are the parties interested ?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. E. B. Osler, was chairman of the committee, and Mr. H. S. Osler explained that this was similar legislation to that obtained in England by the Hudson Bay Company and the Canada company.

Mr. BARKER. Was that a good reason ?

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member has insinuated that this is only wild-cat American legislation.

Mr. BARKER. I think it is.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then it is also wildcat British legislation.

Mr. BARKER. That may be so.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not appeal to me in the same way as it does to the hon. gentleman. It seems to me that if anybody wants to guard against a reduction of capital by a company, the first thing he would do would be to ascertain what enactments and power that company has. He is put upon inquiry to ascertain what is its charter and to what extent its capital has been impaired before he makes any investment or enters into any contract with it. It seems to be perfectly clear and reasonable legislation.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any other companies doing business in Canada under a charter of this kind whose charter has such a clause as this ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think we have just passed a charter with the same clause in it. Before I could give a positive opinion on a question of this sort, I would have to read the Act and do not want to commit myself to any off-hand opinion. But having passed Bill (No. 61) which has a similar clause, we are committed to some extent to the principle. The clause in Bill (No. 61) is identical with the one we are considering.

Mr. BARKER. I do not wish to commit the hon. minister to any definite legal opinion, but the point is a simple one. Perhaps the hon. member from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who has charge of the Bill, can tell us if this company is asking special privileges not granted other companies.

Mr. COWAN. We have just passed a Bill with a similar clause. The matter was discussed very fully in the Private Bills Committee, and Bill (No. 61) and this one are of exactly the same character.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not just the point. The hon. member for Simcoe has gone outside of Canada for an example of legislation similar to this, and I ask whether, in any charter already granted to a company, there is the same kind of clause.

Mr. McCARTHY. The legislation respecting land companies is limited in this country, and this is not a new departure. The business of a land company is of necessity a winding up business from the time it begins to sell its lands. Our company's Act says that the capital of a company should not be impaired, and there was doubt in the minds of the directors whether they could distribute among companies, the shareholders, the proceeds of the land sold, because the lands are the capital of the country. This clause was therefore inserted, following the precedent set in the case of the two oldest land companies doing business in Canada, the Hudson Bay Company and the Canada Land Company, whose charters were obtained in England. This was the explanation given the committee, and after full consideration the committee passed the Bill, but struck out the last three words of this clause 'or provided for,' making it thus absolutely necessary that the liabilities of the company should be absolutely paid before the proceeds of the land sales could be divided among the shareholders. It is not sufficient that the company should provide for the payment of the liabilities, but the liabilities must actually have been paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the idea is that the only profits of the company are the proceeds of lands sold and paid for, and the directors could not divide, from time to time, these proceeds without this provision. Otherwise they would have to retain all the assets of the company and would not be able to declare any dividend until it was finally wound up.

Mr. BARKER. My objection is this. Any man who subscribes to stock in an incorporated company is liable for its debts up to the amount of his unpaid subscription. If he should get that stock refunded, he ought to still remain liable for the amount of his subscription just as if he had never paid it. Otherwise the creditors would not know where they are. This Bill does not say anything about the real liabilities of the company, but authorizes to pay over its assets to the shareholders, provided it has settled all its apparent liabilities up to the time of such payment. There is a great deal of danger in this. A man might get his stock refunded, while possibly the liabilities of that company remained unpaid, and he would not be liable to pay for his stock in full.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What provision will there be to ascertain that all the liabilities of the company have been paid before the assets are distributed? One answer no doubt would be that the burden is imposed on the directors of seeing that the liabilities are paid up, as otherwise they would be personally liable, but possibly their financial ability might not be equal to meet certain liabilities outstanding.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no doubt about the present directors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know anything about the present directors, but they may be changed next year or the year after.

Mr. McCARTHY. This is really a process of winding up and it is the same legislation as was granted the Hudson Bay Company and the Canada Company. It seems to be the only way in which these companies can be wound up.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The assets of the company are being devoured gradually by the sales of lands.

Mr. McCARTHY. There are no liabilities really.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The duty is certainly imposed upon the directors of seeing that the liabilities are paid before making this distribution.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There would be personal liability on default, I imagine.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I believe there would be.

Surveys and inspections, $50,000.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has already made some explanations about this item, but I would like to ask about the nature and place of these inspections.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When application is made for a work it is necessary, first, to have a survey and inspection made so as to be able to form an idea of the cost of the work. In fact, no progress can be made until a careful survey and inspection of the location have first been made. This applies particularly to the building of wharfs, piers and that sort of thing, where an examination of the depth of water, the kind of soil, and so forth, has to be carefully made, before plans and specifications can be prepared. The list of places is a very long one. A number of surveys were made last year in the various provinces.

Mr. BARKER. In the Auditor General's reports this item has been divided under eight or ten heads. It is very desirable that the minister should tell us now what he proposes to expend under the various heads. The items run from $1,000 to $6,000. I do not like this blanket system of $50,000 for general surveys and inspection. If the hon. gentleman would just tell us the various items of the expenditure, and what he wants for each place, we would then know hereafter, when we come to inspect the accounts, exactly what has been done under each head.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not aware that there has been any consolidation of votes. I think the same amount was voted last year, but of late years there has been an increase in the expenditure for this purpose, on account of the increased number of public works to be attended to. I may say that so far as my personal experience goes, this vote is properly used, and is of great advantage to the country. Many votes have been given in the past before sufficient data have been obtained in the way of a survey and inspection, and in some cases the work would not have been undertaken had there been previously an inspection and survey. I find that during the year 1901-2 over a hundred surveys and examinations were made in the various provinces. These of course are made by men competent to do that kind of work, and their travelling expenses, being included in the item, make it considerable. But that is one of the items that, if properly controlled by the department and expended by proper officers, will be a great saving to the country, and will enable this House to obtain as full information as possible with regard to all these matters.

Mr. BARKER. I did not expect the hon. minister to tell us the travelling expenses or any thing of that kind, I do not ask anything that is unreasonable. But take the last report of the Auditor General under this head, and we find items such as these: Hydrographic survey, Kingston to Prescott, $4,653. Hydrographic survey, Kingston to Prescott, steamer 'Jessie Bell,' $5,244. That is the kind of division I would like to see made of this general item. I want to know, for example, how much of this money he is going to spend on any particular survey, not the details of that survey. When we come to the expenditure, it is all divided up in sums of from two to four and five thousand dollars. Surely the hon. gentleman can tell us what work his officers have advised him to do for which he wants this $50,000. Then when the accounts are investigated later on, we will see how far the hon. gentleman's work during the year has been in accordance with what parliament has authorized.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I explained before six o'clock, the words hydrographic survey' as used in this vote are a little misleading. It is not the intention of the department to carry on a hydrographic survey in the sense in which that word is generally used, for the purpose of preparing charts for navigation purposes. These surveys and inspections are made for work that the department is called upon to do, and it would be impossible for me to say at the present time just what applications may come in or what work may be undertaken. The work for the past year of course is shown. Some important surveys will have to be made, for instance, owing to the development of the country in the Lake Superior region, at Fort William, Port Arthur, and these places. I find that in the department we have not sufficient data to work upon in order to award a contract for dredging, for instance. Every application that comes in is considered by the department. I may say that the people of almost any district are entitled, when an application is made for certain improvements in the locality, at least to have an examination and report by the department as to the nature and the cost of the work, so that the government and parliament may know what is required to be done. Without that information we, as representatives here, are quite unable to say whether or not the work should be undertaken. In regard to dredging that is to be done, or works which are to be let by contract, it is impossible to proceed with any degree of discretion unless we first know the conditions as they are revealed by a survey and inspection. My hon. friend will know that there are many applications for dredging in various harbours, and a survey has to be made so as to enable us to know what the depth of water is, and what amount and kind of material has to be removed. When building wharfs, piers, &c., a survey has to be made. While I could give my hon. friend a list of the places where surveys were made for the past fiscal year, I think it would be impossible to give a full list of the places at which it is expected that we shall make surveys during the year 1903-4, except that I might mention some of the larger works that we are engaging in throughout the province of Ontario, for instance, on Lake Superior; then there are many of the smaller places on the St. Lawrence, in fact, almost the whole distance where work is being demanded, on the Saguenay, at points in the lower provinces and at the various ports on the Atlantic as well as on the Pacific ocean. So that, my hon. friend will see that these surveys and inspections are made and reports received from all points wherever applications are made, and that it is necessary to make a survey so as to enable us to decide upon the desirability of going on with the work or otherwise.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is asking now $15,000 more than was expended in 1901-2 for this purpose. The last vote was $35,000 and he is now asking $50,000. When we look at the accounts of the expenditure under this $35,000 vote we see that there are various surveys that must have been contemplated in advance. The hon. gentleman must know of a great deal of the work that he contemplates surveying and inspecting during the year. All we ask is that he should give us certain particulars and then if he wants a general sum for contingencies let him add an item for that purpose. The hon. gentleman does that in other matters. He takes an appropriation for repairs here and there, and then a general appropriation for general repairs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) that in 1901-2, to which he refers, there was a vote of $25,000 and a supplementary vote of $10,000 which makes $35,000. That was found insufficient for the work that had to be done. Last year there was a vote of $50,000 which it was found will be fully expended before the 30th of June. It is so reported to me by the chief engineer of the department. Owing to the great increase in the number and importance of works to be undertaken I find it will be necessary for that same amount to be voted for 1903-4. I might give my hon. friend an illustration to show how this work has increased. During the fiscal year 1896-7 the number of works examined and reported upon was 244. During the year 1901-2 the number was 463, and we have a great many more than that for the coming year. My hon. friend will see that the expenditure has about doubled the amount expended on public works in 1896-7 was $695,438, while in 1901-2 the amount expended was $3,785,000, or five times as much; yet we are not asking double the amount formerly voted for surveys and inspections. In these matters, of course, a minister has to be guided, especially one with the limited experience that I have had, by the advice of the chief engineer of the department.

Mr. BARKER. I quite admit all that the hon. minister says, but the hon. minister certainly does not put this item in his estimates without asking his deputy precisely what he wants the money for. All I claim is that in this committee we are entitled to ask the hon. minister what he asks his deputy and to get as much information from the hon. minister as he gets from his deputy.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have given the very fullest information so far as I have been able to obtain it from the officers of the department. I suppose it would only weary the hon. gentleman to read over the long list of places where these inspections were made last year. I have given him the information furnished me by the chief engineer as to his estimate of what would be required for 1903-4. The expenditures on these surveys are all accounted for in the report for the following year and then would be the time for the House, if it thought that there had been surveys and inspections that were not warranted, or that had been extravagantly made, to discuss the question. When we look at the works which have to be undertaken I do not think that we can do otherwise than accept the advice of the chief officials of the department in regard to the appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How was this work done ? It is not done by officers of the department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When, from time to time, officers of the department have not time to do this work we engage technical officers to do it. The great majority of the technical officers are what are called temporary officers and would not be on the permanent staff, but as soon as they are appointed to undertake this work they become officers of the department and are paid out of this vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that $50,000 should accomplish a good deal of surveying ? The inspections of buildings under construction, are, I understand, usually made out of the vote for particular buildings, so that this would not include any inspection of that kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not think so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What inspections would it include ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Only harbours and rivers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For example, does the Department of Public Works make any inspection of Halifax harbour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If an application was made for work to be done there the department would have to make a survey and inspection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If a work was proposed there which would interfere with navigation, would that be under the jurisdiction of the Public Works Department?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then that is one class of work that would require a survey and inspection?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We would have to make a more careful survey and inspection so as to know what it would cost to remove the obstruction to navigation if an application were made.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not mean where there is an obstruction of navigation, but, suppose it were proposed to build a wharf that might interfere with navigation, or to erect a bridge, is it part of the work of the hon. gentleman's department to have a survey made and a report presented for the purpose of determining whether or not a certain consent which is required by statute should be given?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Exactly, that is what a part of this vote is for. Applications are made for corporations or private individuals to erect works on harbours and rivers and an inspection and report have to be made by a technical officer of the department before the consent of the department can be given to the erection of a work.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps I could point to an apt illustration of what the minister means. Application has been made to his department for some improvements in the river Sydenham at or near the town of Dresden, and I suppose the minister will send one of his technical officers up there, out of this vote, to report with regard to that application.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a fair illustration of how this money is expended. Instructions have already been given to an officer to visit the place and to report on the work that is requested to be done on the Sydenham river. I am not sure but that the officer may have gone; if not he will be there within the next few days.

Mr. CLANCY. I feel very much relieved because I was afraid the officer would not start until after the session.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I promised to send him and I have done so.

National Art Gallery, $7,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What works of art have been added during the past year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only work of art purchased during the past year is a painting by Tencate called 'The Pedlar.'

Mr. INGRAM. Who are the committee on selection?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Brownell and Mr. Taylor. I think this is a very good picture. There was a large price asked for it and we bought it very reasonably.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there any intention to improve the Art Gallery building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope we will have a better building before long.

Chief engineer's office—salaries of engineers, draughtsmen and clerks, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $59,200.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work of this branch of the department is five times as great now as it was a few years ago. Last year I find that the full amount was required. I have not had an opportunity of looking into the matter carefully, but if this amount is not found to be sufficient, I will have to ask for a supplementary estimate.

Mr. CLANCY. There appears to have been an over expenditure last year of about $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes; the amount was over-expended the year before, and a supplementary vote was taken.

Mr. CLANCY. Where did the minister get the money in the meantime. Was it by Governor General's warrant?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was voted in the supplementary estimates for that year.

Mr. BARKER. It does not so appear from your estimate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The amount was over-expended and that will have to be provided for in the supplementary estimates for the current year.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the minister what is covered by the expression in this item 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I understand the Act aright—I do not know whether I shall ever understand the Civil Service Act—none of these men could be employed at over $400 a year unless these words were inserted in the vote. They are all technical officers and their salaries are very much over $400 a year.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to make a few remarks about the administration of the Civil Service Act. We discussed it early in the session, and there seems to be a great difference of opinion with respect to it, not only as between ministers but as between gentlemen on both sides of this House. At that time the chief question was as to carrying out the provisions of the Civil Service Act with regard to section 15, and the Minister of Finance stated, as appears by 'Hansard,' what he thought was the practice of the departments under that section. I have since discovered that the Minister of Finance was absolutely wrong in his view of what was being done under these mystical words we see so often in the estimates, 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' The Minister of Finance told us with regard to section 15, that it was merely a question of the order in which certain routine proceedings took place. We were then discussing a chief clerkship; and although the question may not be strictly within this item, I may as well refer to the matter here as elsewhere.

The procedure provided by the Act is: First, that the deputy head of the department shall report that the officer is necessary for the proper performance of the public business in the department, stating his reasons for arriving at that conclusion; next, the concurrence of the head of the department in that report; and, third, the salary being voted by parliament. There was a great deal of discussion at that time as to the order of these three events. The Finance Minister laid it down that the order was exactly as stated in the Act, in which I entirely concur with him. If that order were carried out, and it were represented to this House that it was being carried out, we would have nothing to complain of. Everybody knows that the deputy head of the department occupies not only a very responsible position; but one in which he is protected by the state. He can only be removed in a particular way, and he is an officer on whom we can rely, owing to the independence of his position. Therefore, under the Civil Service Act he must initiate expenditure of this kind by recommending the creation of the chief clerkship and the several other officers mentioned. Now, I wish to refer to some matters bearing on this subject which appear in the Auditor General's report, and I do so for the purpose of showing that, although the Finance Minister was quite right in his view of the statute, the statute is being utterly ignored by the department. At page 49, Vol. 1, of his report the Auditor General sends to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals this request:

I have the honour to request to be furnished with a copy of the report, referred to in section 15 of the Civil Service Act, recommending the creation of an additional chief clerkship in your department.

Such recommendation, as the Finance Minister agrees, was the first step towards the creation of that clerkship. Some time afterwards the Auditor General writes again, because he got no answer. The next step is that the Secretary of the Department of Railways and Canals, Mr. Jones, writes to the Deputy Minister of Justice:

By direction I beg to hand you two letters from the Auditor General, dated respectively the 3rd and 12th instant, and also a memorandum from the office of the law clerk of this department, all bearing upon the promotion of Mr. F. A. Dixon of this department to the office of chief clerk and the requirements of the Civil Service Act in that connection.

I am to request that you will be pleased to advise whether it is necessary in this instance to comply with the provision of section 15 of the Civil Service Act as requested by the Auditor General.

Attached to that is the following memorandum signed 'R':

Memo re attached.—Section 15 of the Civil Service Act reads as follows:—

15. A chief clerkship in any department shall only be created by Order in Council, passed after—

(a) The deputy head has reported that such an officer is necesary for the proper performance of the public business of the department, stating the reasons on which he has arrived at that conclusion.

(b) The concurrence of the head of the department in such report; and—

(c) The salary has been voted by parliament.

In schedule B of the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1903, there is an item:—

'For the promotion of F. A. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,800.'

Parliament has thus voted the salary as required by paragraph (c) above, and it has done more, it has waived all the provisions of the Civil Service Act which affect the promotion.

Therefore, according to the contention of the department, when we pass an item in these estimates, with the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' we waive the whole provisions of the Civil Service Act, notwithstanding what the Finance Minister says. Then the matter goes to the Justice Department and there is a reply by Mr. Power, acting Deputy Minister of Justice:

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this day's date with respect to the promotion of Mr. F. A. Dixon, of your department, to the rank of chief clerk.

I understand that the Auditor General contends that the promotion of Mr. Dixon cannot lawfully be made unless a chief clerkship has been created in the manner provided by section 15 of the Civil Service Act, and that an opinion is desired from this department as to whether or not the position of the Auditor General in this respect is correct.

In reply, I beg to state that by the Appropriation Act of last session the sum of $1,800 was granted to His Majesty for the financial year ending June 30, 1903, 'for the promotion of F. A. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' I am of opinion that the effect of this provision in the Appropriation Act is, not only to provide the salary for the current year, but also to waive any and every provision of the Civil Service Act which stands in the way of Mr. Dixon's promotion, the provisions of section 15, as well as those relating to promotion examinations, and I think that the Governor in Council may promote Mr. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk, notwithstanding that a chief clerkship has not been created for the purpose in the manner provided by section 15 of the Civil Service Act.

In other words, we have been passing item after item in the estimates, with these words attached, 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' and the Law Department treats that as waiving every provision in the Civil Service Act. The Minister of Finance told us otherwise. He represented to us—and I have no doubt he said just what he believed was the truth—that the regular order was being proceeded with; but the Railway Department certainly did not act in accordance with that view. The moment it got the estimates passed, it used these words as a waiver of everything contained in the Civil Service Act. Then, there is a further letter from the Secretary of the Railway Department to the Deputy Minister of Justice :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 14th instant, by which you report in respect of the promotion of Mr. F. A. Dixon, of this department, to the rank of chief clerk.

In reply, I am directed to say that under date May 20 last, an Order in Council was passed whereby Mr. Dixon was promoted to such clerkship, and it is presumed by the department that that is all that is necessary in the matter.

Be pleased to advise if that is the case.

So that although there is an Act of parliament saying that this thing shall not be done until the first step is taken by the deputy head of the department recommending the chief clerkship, yet, by passing these estimates with these few words attached, we have been waiving the whole Civil Service Act without knowing that we were doing so. For that reason I think parliament is bound to be a little careful about the wording of the estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that we ought to give careful attention to these words, and see what they mean in each case. Every Act of parliament is capable of being amended, and when we introduce into the Supply Bill the words, 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' undoubtedly to the extent of these words, and in the case to which they refer, we amend the Civil Service Act, and we must be prepared in every case to give a good reason for doing so. I think that the statement I made in the former discussion as to the general practice and policy was correct, but there may be exceptional cases, such as the one referred to, in which the Act must be departed from. As to the particular item, it is for the 'salaries of engineers, draughtsmen and clerks, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' These officials do not come under the provisions of the Civil Service Act as to classification. There is no question in their case of promotion to any particular grade in the civil service. They are technical officers, they have no special rank in the service, and they have to be treated as technical clerks. If you were to apply to them the provisions of the Civil Service Act, they could only be paid $400 per year. This does not make any change in their classification, but solely deals with the question of their salaries. They are not civil service men called upon to pass any special examination ; they are technical officers, and the only object of the words is to enable the government to pay them more than $400 per year. Officers of that character cannot be obtained at that rate, so that the question in their case is not precisely the same as in the case of Mr. Dixon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The case of Mr. Dixon referred to by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is a most outrageous one. What possible reason was there for repealing the provisions of the Civil Service Act in his case ? Why should not the deputy minister consulted in that case, have first reported that that officer was necessary for the performance of the public service ? How does the hon. Minister of Finance justify the repeal of that provision of the Act in his case ? There are so many of these amendments in the Civil Service Act that we are getting tired of seeing them in the estimates. I have counted up twenty or thirty cases on a single page of the estimates last session, in which that provision of the Civil Service Act was repealed. We cannot possibly follow up every one of them, and the result is that you have an outrageous abuse of the powers of parliament in that regard. There is no possible reason why the provisions of the civil service should not have been carried out in the case brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Hamilton. Yet we have the Department of Railways setting the law at defiance and smuggling this item through the House without any explanation. I say that it was a most disgraceful piece of business. I do not know anything about Mr. Dixon. It may be desirable indeed that he should be a chief clerk, he may be a very deserving officer, and no doubt he is, but what I am objecting to is the means taken to violate the provisions of the Civil Service Act without the slightest shadow of excuse. At least I have heard none from my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to-night. I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Works before this item passes, for a statement as to every one of these gentlemen to whom these words may apply, in order that we may fully understand what we are doing. We have made mistakes of this kind in the past, which are now brought to our attention by the Auditor General, and it is high time that this House should see that an end is put to this abuse.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There have not been any mistakes. I have differed from my hon, friend in the past in his criticisms of these items, and I do so again. It is true that items of this character appear occasionally in the estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Occasionally ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I use the word advisedly, for in proportion to the total number of officials in the service, the exceptions made by these items are very small indeed. A year ago I took the trouble to have the figures prepared of the number of officers affected in this way, by the votes; and in proportion to the total number, it was by no means large. It is not conceivable that in a service where there are hundreds of officials, there will not be some special circumstances to justify a departure from the ordinary rules, and it must remain for the minister responsible in each case to explain the departure. I have no recollection of the case of Mr. Dixon mentioned in the Auditor General's Report, and I cannot recall the particular reasons which my colleague the hon. Minister of Railways gave for the promotion of this gentleman. But I have no doubt that the Deputy Minister of Railways was thoroughly conversant with the transaction and a party to it. I have never heard of the deputy minister refusing to give the certificate. As appears by the wording of the vote, that certificate was not necessary and was not obtained, and in the absence of any information to the contrary, we are bound to believe that my hon. colleague had some good reasons for the step he took. We have not this item before us now except incidentally, but I would not like the committee to think that these exceptions are made without special cause. A man may be of exceptional merit, we may be in danger of losing his services, and may find it necessary to give him a larger salary than is assigned to his rank under the Civil Service Act. Would it not be quite proper for the minister, in such a case, to say that he was entitled to a larger salary than the Civil Service Act allows and to ask parliament to vote that salary, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act ? It is in such cases that most of these exceptions are made. There are not many cases where exceptions are made to avoid examinations. With such cases I have not much sympathy, but I have warm sympathy with the case of a man, in whose favour an exception has to be made on account of his personal qualifications. I have no sympathy however for that class of item when it is only designed to exempt him from undergoing the examinations provided for in the Civil Service Act. I think that we should insist on examinations, but these exceptions are not more numerous than formerly.

Mr. INGRAM. How many temporary clerks are there in the chief engineer's department now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are all temporary clerks.

Mr. INGRAM. There are permanent clerks, according to the Auditor General's report, but I would like to know how many temporary clerks there are.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are fifty-one.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year there were forty-two, and they have increased to fifty-two. It seems strange that there should be so many temporary clerks in the chief engineer's office. Surely, it is possible to have some of these men made permanent and enjoy all the rights under the Civil Service Act, and thus avoid the necessity of having to come down every session and provide for an expenditure of this kind. Hon. gentlemen say that they cannot obtain the services of a certain class of men without paying them more than the minimum amount of $400, and they therefore ask this additional expenditure every year, but would it not be better to make as many as possible of these clerks permanent ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The term 'temporary clerk' is apt to be somewhat misleading. We have temporary clerks who have been in office twenty years. They are practically permanent, but are ranked as temporary. The particular branch of the service referred to is a technical service which does not necessarily require the clerks to pass the civil service examination, so that there is no reason why these people should come under the operation of the Civil Service Act. Take architects, engineers and professional men of any class, they would not be any the better because they passed the civil service examination, which is imposed on ordinary clerks. These are, for the most part, practically permanent officers, but they have the rank of temporary clerks and are treated accordingly. Though I have not looked up the estimates, I am satisfied that this item has appeared for many years in the same way.

Mr. INGRAM. Of course, it has, and that is exactly what we are trying to get rid of. I have in mind now the case of a gentleman who was employed in the department of the Interior for about twenty-five years, all the time as a temporary clerk. For ten years or more he was in the outside service and for another ten years in the inside service. He did everything he could to have his name placed on the permanent list. But this was objected to. Being only in the temporary service was a source of annoyance to him. He did not see why he should not be on the permanent list, and, when I was referred to, neither did I. I investigated the matter and wrote to the department and tried every way to induce the minister to have the man's name transferred to the permanent list. After a great deal of persuasion this was done. It is rank injustice to an officer not to have his name on the permanent list, if he is really a permanent officer. After he has been in the service ten or twelve years, why should he be still considered a temporary employee ? The position is a most unpleasant one for him. Should anything occur in a certain direction, he would be beholden to those who came into power to retain him in his position. A man who has rendered faithful and efficient service should not be treated in such a manner.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know of the particular case to which the hon. gentleman refers, and it may be that his reasoning, as applied to that case, is quite right. But, as a matter of fact, we may have a person in the position of a temporary clerk whom it would not be expedient to have in the regular service.

Mr. INGRAM. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, there are people doing a class of work which does not demand a larger salary than that they are receiving. I know of such cases in the temporary service, persons who are doing a given class of work, doing it well and faithfully; but the work is of such a character that there is no reason for adding these officers to the permanent staff, where they will advance to higher rates of salary than would be fairly proportioned to the work they are doing. I am not sure that we may not find it necessary to have a further classification so as to provide for some employees who are now classed as temporary.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister forgets that when officers have been refused their annual increase the reason given by himself and others was that the officers did not merit it. As a matter of fact, in many cases the government did not give the annual increases, notwithstanding the objections raised by the opposition. Well, if the government have control of the annual increases of these officers and can refuse those increases as they please, there is no force in the argument of the Minister of Finance, for it would not be necessary that these officers, even if put on the permanent list, should receive increases of salary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is quite correct in a sense. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) is aware that, while we still contend that the annual increase is not a legal liability, there is moral force in the argument that people expect these increases; and we have taken that view and have granted the increases almost without exception. Once a man gets into the permanent service, he looks for these increases, and, as a rule, the officers are getting them. But it may be that an officer is doing a certain line of work, and doing it satisfactorily and getting fair pay for it, and yet there may be no reason why he should be in the line of promotion and have an increasing salary.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not find that similar cases are treated alike. Perhaps, the hon. minister can point out why a clerk living in Ottawa who is an assistant draughtsman, who must pass the civil service examination and is appointed to the inside service, is in a different position from that of the man doing similar work residing in New Westminster or elsewhere. The same is true of a paymaster. Whether in the inside service or in the outside service, they perform practically the same duty and, if they have been employed for years there is practically no difference except that one is on the permanent list and receives statutory increases unless he does something to disentitle himself to them, and the other does not. What my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has pointed out is perfectly true. Yet, as the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has shown, by the simple words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' in the estimates, the government take to themselves power to treat these officers differently from others and in a way never contemplated by the law. This came up in another form not many days ago, when I called attention to the anomaly of a large class in the civil service who practically had no status in the service—clerks doing the work of permanent clerks yet not on the permanent list. I can understand exceptional cases, as, for instance, engineers, who do not require to pass the civil service examination, and who are in a class by themselves. But I have pointed out that there are cases in which men are provided for in that way and do not come within the class. I think we ought to have such anomalies corrected, because, as the hon. member for Hamilton pointed out, they involve possibilities of grave abuses.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of late, we have been considering the question whether we may not be obliged to create another class in which many of these temporary clerks who are practically permanent may be placed. I am not saying definitely that this will be done, but I am only pointing out that the matter has not been overlooked. There are some who are practically permanent officers, although called temporary, who have the same positions as permanent officers except with regard to the name. I confess that I rather sympathize with the idea that they should be put on the permanent list. Still, there are cases where the service can be had at the present rate of salary, and there is no reason why the officers should be transferred to the permanent list.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not heard in the remarks of the Minister of Finance the slightest justification for promoting this gentleman, whom I mentioned, without going through the procedure provided in the statute. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is familiar with the facts, and so he cannot justify the action of the government. But I propose to ask the Minister of Railways to justify this action at the proper time. I will say no more about it except that I regard it, in the absence of an explanation, as an outrageous abuse of this method which has been employed so often to dispense with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) under what statutory authority these gentlemen are employed. I would like to understand this before we get through with this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Application is made by the head of the branch to the deputy minister and he recommends the appointment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman's department is the creature of the statute, and I do not understand that he has authority to employ any one except so far as there is provision in the statute enabling him to do so. I suppose this authority must be found under some general provision of the Civil Service Act. I would like him or the Minister of Finance to tell us what clause it is. I thought I had found the clause, but I am not sure of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Irrespective of the Civil Service Act, this vote is authority passed by parliament to employ persons within the limits of the vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then this means the abolition of the Civil Service Act so far as the hon. gentleman's department is concerned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Civil Service Act has never applied to these officers, so far as my recollection goes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought there was a provision in the Civil Service Act for the employment of temporary officers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is—employment at $400 a year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it not under the provisions of that clause that you really get these gentlemen into the department, and then waive the Civil Service Act and give them higher salaries? You get them in as temporary employees at $400 a year, then waive the provisions of the Act, give them higher salaries and keep them on as temporary employees for twenty-five years or more. That is the way the law is carried out at present. At least, that is the way it seems—I do not profess to understand it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Supposing it is as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) what is wrong about that?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is just this much—that the law says you may employ temporary assistants at $400 a year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But you come in and amend the law by this vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then in order to carry that out thoroughly, you propose passing an item 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' and you follow the provisions of that Act as closely as you can by giving them any salary that you see fit, and keeping them on as temporary employees for any number of years.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There must be a provision in the estimates each year, and parliament has full control of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Justice will not regard that as a desirable scheme of legislation.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It has continued on ever since 1885, this very item.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not care. If it is wrong, the fact that it has continued a long time is all the more reason for curing it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not say it is wrong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is continued on a wrong basis since 1885, we need not continue it for ever on that ground. I have asked the Minister of Finance for two or three years to consider whether it would not be better to make some amendment in the Civil Service Act by which we may avoid the appearance of this item. It is unnecessary to go over the old ground which I have urged so often, namely, that one branch of the legislature is repealing in this way a provision which has been enacted by both branches. The other branch of the legislature cannot deal with appropriation Bills except as a whole, and we in this House are repealing the provisions of the Civil Service Act in a hundred different ways every session, in a most sweeping way, as announced by the hon. minister tonight, and the other branch of the legislature has nothing to say about it. The Minister of Finance will say that we have worked along very well, and found it a practicable way of dealing with these matters. How many of these men are included under this sweeping repeal? Are the whole fifty-two?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are all these gentlemen in effect permanent employees?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the majority are old employees who have been many years in the service. Some hon. gentleman opposite said there was an increase of ten or eleven. The deputy minister informs me there is a decrease of two.

Mr. INGRAM. It was the hon. gentleman himself who told me there were fifty-two, and I showed there were forty-two last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My deputy informs me differently. There is no desire to cover up anything. I was going to give an illustration of what has been the custom with regard to this branch ever since it was established. We will take the chief engineer of the department, Mr. Lafleur, who I understand has been twenty-two or twenty-three years in the service. He has always drawn his pay out of this vote, under this plan. None of these, I understand, are permanent officers except two, very few of these are at Ottawa. Twenty-four are at the head office, and there are men doing work all over the Dominion. In Nova Scotia, for instance, there is the chief engineer at $2,000, the assistant at $1,825, the assistant draughtsman at $547. We could not get men of this class unless we gave them salaries commensurate with their duties. My own opinion is that it would be better if we paid these technical officers a little higher salary. At Halifax there are the late resident engineer, the two assistant engineers and the draughtsman, all from $800 to $2,400. Prince Edward Island has a resident engineer. I understand most all these men have been there for many years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought there was some provision in the Civil Service Act which would help out the hon. gentleman's position. I thought there was a provision about men possessing technical qualifications.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They would be subject to the limitations of salary then.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then that is a most absurd provision.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. To get over the examination.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. An engineer, for example, could not come in at a higher salary than $2,400, and that will not get the service of a high class engineer.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be better to amend the Civil Service Act so far as the salary is concerned, so as to get rid of this difficulty of violating it all the time? We know that in this country you cannot get men of high technical qualifications for small salaries such as have been named. Why should we every year be passing these items 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Servce Act' when we know perfectly well that we must pay men higher wages than that which the statute provides.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not believe we could make any amendment to the Civil Service Act which would render it unnecessary at times to have these exceptions. We cannot make a Civil Service Act which will reach out its arms and take in all the public service throughout the Dominion; it never has been possible and never will be possible. There are always special cases to be dealt with. My hon. friend is wrong in assuming that these are exceptional estimates. We can show from past experience that many cases have occurred in former estimates. I do not wish to shelter myself behind any moss grown practice, but I am persuaded that no change you can make in the direction the hon. gentleman has suggested will prevent the necessity of coming here session after session with some exceptional case which we cannot deal with in the general terms of the Act.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman should see in the vote we are dealing with now that out of some thirty-two persons employed, ten are persons who are not doing technical service. The hon. gentleman said that they called themselves technical; I think it is the hon. gentleman who has called them so. We ought to cure that anomaly, first, because it would put the service on a better footing, and next, because it is so easy to class these persons. I agree with the Minister of Finance that there are certain persons that must be employed in the department for which an exception must be made, for example, such as resident engineers in the various provinces. Now there is another class of persons employed in the service to which I have referred, and I have pointed out to the hon. gentleman that there are nearly one-third of the number of persons—I am not saying one-third of the aggregate salaries—but persons employed at lower salaries who ought to be put on the same footing as civil servants in the inside service. Then they would be entitled to their statutory increases if they were entitled to them by reason of good service. That is the point I am endeavouring to make. If they are good men, they are entitled to get paid for such services as they render, and they should be put on the same status as a member of the civil service. I think the very fact that one-third of the persons employed do not properly come within the vote we are taking now is a sufficient reason why the hon. gentleman should take this matter up.

Mr. INGRAM. Every year the different departments come down and ask for additional sums under this head. I would like to have that point made plainer. If parliament grants a vote under this head does that take away any rights or give any rights to the persons for whom the money is being voted? Can they come in under the Civil Service Act?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They can not.

Mr. INGRAM. That is what I would like the hon. Minister of Justice to explain.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No doubt the intention of the head of the department who introduces an item of that kind is to evade the Civil Service Act by adding these words to the item.

Mr. BARKER. Why did the hon. minister not tell us that he was trying to do it?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think we are trying to do it. Parliament is doing it and doing it very effectively. That is what I would like to point out in connection with the Dixon case, as to which the hon. gentleman declaimed in a manner which is not usual to him. The Dixon case is not one for which the head of the department is responsible. The Dixon case is one in which parliament is responsible.

Mr. BARKER. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The Dixon case is not one of those cases where the words were added 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' The Dixon case is one in which it is said by parliament that he is to be permitted to become a chief clerk. Parliament adopted the item and parliament said that he should be a chief clerk. The government did not do it. Parliament did it, and a discussion now as to the reason why parliament did it seems entirely beside the question. Parliament discussed that item. That item was submitted to parliament, it was discussed, the reasons in support of it were given then, and it seems to me that it is out of the question to discuss it now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What page?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The words in the Auditor General's Report are quoted from the estimates of last year.

Mr. INGRAM. The explanation of the hon. Minister of Justice is very good so far as it goes, but we want it to go a little farther. In the item that we are now voting, are these words:

Chief engineer's office—salaries of engineers, draughtsmen and clerks, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

I want to point out to the hon. Minister of Justice that by reason of these words—

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Would my hon. friend permit me? In connection with the Dixon matter, I find in the estimates of last year, under the heading of Department of Railways and Canals:

For the promotion of F. A. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk.

Parliament was notified. Parliament concurred, and the matter was disposed of.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that; but what I thought the hon. gentleman was going to give was the explanation submitted to parliament by the responsible minister at that time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Surely my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is not serious when he asks me to do that now? That item was submitted to the House last year by the responsible minister, the House discussed it, and why should we give the reason now when parliament adopted it last year?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the hon. gentleman had it in his hand.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, the hon. gentleman was not serious.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was perfectly serious. I am speaking of the action of one of the hon. gentleman's colleagues. I thought he was coming to the assistance of his colleague.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did that last year probably.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He may have to do it again.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is disposed of.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, the hon. gentleman is mistaken if he thinks it is disposed of, because I can tell him that it is not, and that it will be heard of again this session.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not say it would not be heard of, but the question is legally disposed of.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not disposed of.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Parliament has disposed of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Parliament will have to dispose of it again, or discuss it, at least.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, yes, you will discuss it; there is no question about that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I simply wanted to make that plain to the hon. gentleman, because he was under a misapprehension about it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend can discuss it if he chooses. I state my opinion, and he states his.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have given my opinion, but you have no opinion, as far as I can see.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is absolutely delightful.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am glad the hon. gentleman is pleased.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Perfectly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am glad he is in such good humour to-night.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I generally am.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not very often we have such a delightful exhibition of the hon. gentleman's humour as that which he has afforded just now. When I submitted to the committee that it was rather a remarkable thing that a vote should have been brought before the House last year by which a provision of the Civil Service Act was unnecessarily dispensed with, in my opinion, I think I was bringing to the attention of the committee a rather peculiar action on the part of the hon. gentleman's colleagues, and the hon. gentleman makes answer by saying: Oh, that is disposed of. I suppose it is disposed of in just the same way that we found a certain item last year voted for a particular purpose, and applied to another purpose. Perhaps that will be heard of again also. These are things for which the members of the government are responsible, and the fact that parliament, under a misapprehension, or without sufficient explanation, has passed an item of that kind, does not preclude a discussion of it in the following parliament, as I think the hon. Minister of Justice will understand. If he does not understand that now, perhaps he will understand it later on. That is all.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am quite willing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is very kind indeed and we are very much obliged to him for his willingness. Otherwise we should not venture to mention the matter. As far as this particular item is concerned, does not the hon. Minister of Public Works think that this part of the work of the department might be carried out under some better scheme of observing the law? The hon. Minister of Public Works is a business man, a practical man, and does he not think it would be well to deal with the engineer's department in such a way to give effect to the Civil Service Act. Notwithstanding the doubts cast upon this matter by the hon. Minister of Finance, I think as far as the engineer's department is concerned, that a better provision might be made. I am not attempting to cast the slightest reflection upon the work of the officers of the department. Knowing Mr. Dodwell and other members of the staff at Halifax, who are very capable officers, and who have been in the service a long time, I cast no reflection upon them, but I should like to see them put upon a better basis than by excepting them from the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot discover any difference between the estimates of last year and the estimates of this year, and that is what makes me a little foggy on the question. I find several items here, but I do not find the name of Mr. Dixon and that is what makes it foggy to me. Do these words in an item give the person who receives a salary under that item, any rights that he would not have under the Civil Service Act. I understood the Minister of Justice to say they did.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It seems to me that it is clear and simple and there is no necessity for my hon. friend being befogged.

Mr. INGRAM. All right.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Under the Civil Service Act it is provided that a chief clerkship can only be created by Order in Council. That Order in Council has to be passed on the report of the deputy head and in that report of the deputy head the head of the department must concur. That is the procedure that in the ordinary course under the Civil Service Act ought to have been followed. Now, the Civil Service Act is an Act of parliament and the Subsidy Act is an Act of parliament also. The Civil Service Act can be amended by parliament at any time, and it is amended by the Subsidy Act if there is anything in the Subsidy Act contrary to the provisions of the Civil Service Act. In the case of Dixon, he could not have been created a chief clerk under the Civil Service Act except after compliance with formalities I have mentioned; but parliament, by the Subsidy Act of last year comes in, and creates him a chief clerk and to that extent it amends the Civil Service Act, so that thereafter he is a civil servant entitled to the rank of chief clerk. He is dealt with as chief clerk thereafter as a result of that amendment contained in the Subsidy Act. That is very simple.

Mr. INGRAM. That is, by putting his name in the item and submitting it to parliament.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. But I do not find his name submitted to parliament.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If the hon. gentleman will look at the statute of last session he will find 'for the promotion of F. A. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk.' There is the name and he is promoted to the rank of chief clerk. In this particular case before us, you say that a certain number of temporary clerks are to be employed notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, but that is a different thing altogether from the promotion of a particular individual to a particular class in the service.

Mr. BARKER. We ought to be indebted to the Minister of Justice for warning us that when passing estimates in future we must be very careful indeed about words, lest we are amending Acts of parliament.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) to say whether or not in his opinion—for after all, if he will permit me to say it, there are few men whose opinion I have a higher regard for—in his opinion is not the Subsidy Act an Act of parliament which amends any previous Act so far as the previous Act is effected by it.

Mr. BARKER. I understood the minister to say that when these words are put in the estimates, we do away with the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. That is practically amending it. My object in citing the case of Mr. Dixon was to show how the departments were using the estimates in cases of that kind. Let us take the case upon which all the discussion arose. Mr. Pugsley was appointed at $1,800 notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and the Minister of Railways and Canals explained why Mr. Pugsley should get $1,800. He said :

He has been performing duties in the accountant's branch previously done by the assistant accountant. He is a faithful and industrious officer and we have promoted him to the first-class.

The Minister of Railways and Canals therefore spoke as if the Civil Service Act had been complied with and we were simply voting the money ; and further on the minister said :

We are only asking for the amount of money we require.

Surely the minister, in using these words, intended the members of this House to understand that the law was being complied with. There was further discussion, and the hon. member for East Grey said :

Therefore the Civil Service Act is being entirely ignored by the government.

Now, I want to point out what the Minister of Finance said in reply to that, and the Minister of Justice will see that hon. members would infer that the Civil Service Act was being complied with in its strictest terms. The Minister of Finance says :

I think my hon. friend's remarks are based upon a misconception. His argument is that you must first create a clerkship before you come to the House for a vote. My hon. friend is mistaken. The Civil Service Act distinctly declares the reverse. Section 15 provides that the chief clerkship in any department shall only be created by Order in Council passed after the report of the deputy, and after the concurrence of the head of the department in such report, and after the salary has been voted by parliament. These various conditions must be first complied with before the Governor in Council creates an additional clerkship.

The Minister of Finance in using these words intended this House to understand that every provision of that Act which he said must be complied with was being complied with, and having regard to what the Minister of Railways and Canals had said a minute before, that we were simply voting the money. The Minister of Justice may now say what he pleases and so may the Minister of Finance, but I say that there is not a member of this House on either side who ever supposed that in voting these estimates he was doing more than voting the money that was asked for, and he never for a moment believed that he was dispensing with the Civil Service Act except in regard to the amount voted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have a recollection of the circumstances. In the first place, I was not explaining the railway estimates; but the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) opened up a general discussion upon the question whether we could appoint a first-class clerk without having a report of the deputy and the Order in Council creating the office before the vote of parliament; and my observation was to show that the voting of the money was one of the first conditions. The discussion attending that particular vote had to be looked after by the Minister of Railways and not by me, for I had no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. minister told us the three things that had to be done, and he said that these various conditions must first be complied with before council creates the office. Yet the Minister of Justice advises the Minister of Railways that these various conditions need not be complied with, because we voted the money with these words attached.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because we voted the money, we complied with the first condition.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then you were evidently deceiving the committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has no right to make that remark. It is not correct.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the opposition could be carried out, it would be a great relief to the minister. When a vote is brought in, with the words referred to attached to it, there is a suspicion that the department is doing something not in accordance with the law. In this particular case it has, I think, been made plain to the committee that the services of the department could not be carried on unless such an arrangement were made. I have not myself given much consideration to the Civil Service Act. There are some provisions in it which are intended to do good; but I am not sure that it is on the whole of much advantage to the country. But under this item there has been no abuse of the powers given by these words.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have been looking up the Dixon case in 'Hansard' of last year. His salary was voted in the first place just as a salary to a first-class clerk. Then, in the closing days of the session, the Minister of Railways brought in the item without making the slightest explanation to the House that it was intended to do away with the intervention of the head of the department ; but he said simply this :

There is no difference in this gentleman's salary. The salary is voted in the main estimates, but on the basis of his being a first-class clerk. He is now made a chief clerk, his salary as chief clerk being the same as the highest salary attained by a first-class clerk.

Would anybody suppose, with that explanation of the Minister of Railways before him, that the provisions of this statute which I have referred to, were intended to be deliberately violated ?—the provisions which require that the deputy head has reported that such an officer is necessary for the proper performance of the public business in the department, stating the reasons on which he has arrived at that conclusion, and, secondly, that the concurrence of the head of the department has been obtained. If the Minister of Justice supposed that I did not understand that the voting of the item was amending the Civil Service Act, he exhibited less keenness of intellect than he usually does.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not assume that my hon. friend did not understand it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The point I was making was that it was an improper thing for the Minister of Railways and Canals to bring the item to the House without informing the House at the same time that he intended departing from two such important conditions of the Civil Service Act as those which I have just read, an omission which has not yet been explained to the House by the Minister of Finance; and I understand that this not being his department, he is not in a position to explain it. The Minister of Railways and Canals may have a good explanation, but in the absence of an explanation, it looks as if the provisions of the Act had been deliberately violated.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Would it not be reasonable to wait for an explanation from the Minister of Railways and Canals, instead of assuming that there is not an explanation ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not going to that extent. I am going to assume that the Minister of Railways and Canals has a good explanation, but I shall in the meantime wonder what it can possibly be.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The point I took was that when the item was introduced into the Appropriation Act, in the terms in which it was introduced, those who read it must be presumed to understand that it amended the Civil Service Act, because in law it did amend it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Although the Minister of Railways and Canals said simply, 'he is now made a chief clerk.'

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. His words could not affect the terms of the vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know they could not, but we would expect a certain amount of frankness in the minister in dealing with a matter of that kind.

Mr. CLANCY. There seems to be no doubt about what has been done, but there is some difficulty in getting at the reason why it was done. With regard to the case of Mr. Dixon, I am in no way quarrelling with his being made a chief clerk. He may be a very worthy gentleman; I know nothing about him; but the formalities required by the law in making him a chief clerk were utterly ignored. Then, why should the minister come down without any explanation, and satisfy himself simply by putting these words in the estimates ? Perhaps it is not convenient at this moment to give the explanation as regards Mr. Dixon's case. But here is an evil which may lead to serious results. The deputy head must refuse to give the recommendation, and the minister could override his refusal by putting these words in his estimates : 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' and repeal the Act to that extent. The practice is certainly open to very grave objection. I think, unless some very extraordinary reason can be given, the minister has no right to ignore all these healthy formalities, and to promote a clerk in the department simply by inserting these words in the estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, I am not in a position to say anything about any other department; but there is no question in regard to this particular vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the discussion to-night ought to lead us to one conclusion, that is, that the exception introduced is altogether too sweeping. We are told by the Minister of Justice, in a somewhat cynical way, that everything in the Civil Service Act is repealed by the insertion of these words, and that parliament has nothing to do with the matter afterwards. It seems to me that that should be a warning to us to deal only with particular sections of the Act. It cannot be necessary to repeal the entire Act with regard to these men, and I submit that it would be far better to indicate the particular sections sought to be repealed. If that had been done last year, the attention of parliament would have been drawn to the Dixon item at once, and we would have asked for an explanation. But it was passed, as many of these were passed, with the impression that it was only a technical provision which was repealed. Is it necessary to ask that the whole Act be repealed, so far as these men are concerned? Cannot my hon. friend indicate what particular section he requires to be repealed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that my hon. friend magnifies the evil. I am informed by one of the officials that in the case of a number of the clerks of his department referred to, they actually do possess the qualifying certificates, and it would not make any difference to them whether the Act were amended or not, but the bulk of these people are technical officers, in whose case the civil service examination is not required. In the case of professional men, it would be an extreme thing to demand that they should pass an examination. We will not do great harm in following the usual practice during many years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has done service in pointing out how far this provision goes. That never occurred to us until this discussion came up. It is a very sweeping dispensation indeed and may have the effect of going further than the hon. Minister of Justice indicated to-night. I see no reason why we should repeal the entire Civil Service Act simply because one of its provisions stands in the way of a political appointment. Where it is necessary to depart from any one or more of the provisions of the Act, the government should indicate definitely and explicitly what provisions they intend to dispense with, and should dispense with these alone. My hon. friend the hon. Minister of Finance told us the other day that a man should never say anything more than is necessary. I admit that that is a good rule, and my hon. friend usually follows it, but he has not done so in these cases. He is saying more than is necessary, because he is sweeping away the whole Act, when he only wants to dispense with one or two of its provisions. I shall not insist any further to-night, so far as this item is concerned, but will probably on future items leave to my hon. friend to consider whether that cannot be done.

Chief architect's office—salaries of architects, draughtsmen and clerks, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $32,200.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will consider the discussion which has just taken place as having been repeated on this item, and put it in 'Hansard' to save time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it exactly the same thing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. This is practically the same. These are men who are not on the temporary staff. There has been one addition to this, of a district engineer.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance said a moment ago that the chief architect's office was precisely in the same case as the chief engineer's. But looking at the Auditor General's Report, I see that they are all employed in Ottawa, or nearly all. Why should they be treated differently from ordinary civil servants ? A great deal of this work is not technical, and I do not see any reason why these men should not be brought under the Civil Service Act.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The majority of them have been in the service a long time. None of them probably, at the beginning, could have been engaged under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and if any of them have to be replaced, you could not get others to fill their places, if they had to come under the Act. Even a typewriter in this branch could not be got for $200 per year.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is filling up the service, under that heading, with a class of men who are doing the same kind of work as is now done in other offices by men who have passed the required examination, and he should not make any distinction between them. Let the hon. gentleman look at the list and see the work they are doing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have said that I did look over the list in the chief architect's office, and I did not see that these officers could be employed at all at any thing like $400 per annum.

Mr. CLANCY. There are persons who have passed the examination and who are employed in his department as temporary clerks.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Why should they be treated differently from other civil servants? It simply amounts to this, that by avoiding the provisions of the Civil Service Act, these persons may be kept on as temporary clerks during their whole lives, when they are performing precisely the same services as are done by permanent clerks. Take the assistant clerk of works, Mr. Boulanger, who is paid $912 per year, why should he not be put on the permanent staff and be given his class, whether first, second, or third, or chief clerk, and be thus given the means of promotion to the highest position in the service ? There is such an anomaly in this whole procedure that we should put an end to it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite accept the criticism of my hon. friend in the spirit in which he has made it. I should be very glad if some amendment were made to the Act which would place those men in a different position, but at present we could not put them on the permanent staff, nor do I see any disadvantage or advantage to them or to the government in either case, since we have done away with the Superannuation Act. The only advantage to them would be that if put on the permanent staff, they would have to be appointed by order in council, and it would be more difficult to dismiss them than it is at present, in case they did not give satisfaction. The only difference that I can find out is that according to the Act they are appointed under order in council, and if they will not do their work it is somewhat difficult to dismiss them. I have been inquiring as to the difference between one staff and the other——

Mr. CLANCY. Is the difference not clearer since hon. gentlemen opposite have reluctantly recognized their duty to keep their contract with the civil service and give them their statutory increases ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I think that under this the minister is responsible for the salaries paid. He could give a statutory increase or more if he wanted to.

Mr. CLANCY. But should that depend on the mere smile or frown of the minister ? Should not the clerks in the service of the country be in a better position than that ? It seems to me that if an officer in the public service is doing good work, he earns the salary he receives. And, if we say the civil servants are entitled to statutory increases, that ought to be made so plain that they would not be indebted to the minister for receiving those increases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think that is a proper way of putting it. I have pointed out that there is very little difference between these two classes. The real reason for the position of this class must be the one I have suggested. For instance, you want a draughtsman. Say the salary earned by a draughtsman in the ordinary way of business is $1,000. You cannot hope to engage a draughtsman to work for the department for $400 a year. He does not give a rap for your permanent staff or anything of that kind. If he cannot get the salary that his qualifications enable him to earn outside, he will leave the employment of the government for the position where he can earn more—as they can often do. The intention of the Civil Service Act, no doubt, is good, and on the whole it may result in good. But I know there are many deficiencies in it, and that some departments of the public service are very much injured by it. We have employees who were appointed by Order in Council and who are under the superannuation law who ought to be dismissed, but nobody has the heart to take away their superannuation. What I am pointing out is that the only object in taking the appropriation in the form proposed is that in these branches it is necessary, in order to engage qualified men, to pay the salaries that are generally paid throughout the country.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is giving the theory of the case rather than what really happens. Is he prepared to say that young men would not be glad to come in at these low salaries and get their training with a view to rising in the service and receiving the higher remuneration which their improved abilities would entitle them to ? If we have a Civil Service Act at all, it should be fairly well adhered to, and I see no reason for an exception in this case. Whatever the hon. gentleman's theory may be, the practice of the department seems to be the common sense and business practice. Take the case of a young man commencing as a draughtsman at $400 a year. It is a small sum, but many a young man would be glad to commence at that if assured that he would have the chance to rise. But he is hampered, for the attitude that the government takes toward him virtually to say : We can dismiss you when we like. He naturally feels that he is liable to be dismissed after he has given his best years to the service. Of course, in every service you will find drones, and in a service the size of ours there will be drones whether they are appointed under the Civil Service Act or are engaged as temporary clerks.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not particularly referring to this item, I think I was right in saying that the Civil Service Act is not altogether a good thing for the service, not altogether a good thing for Canada. I say that in the various branches we are driving young Canadians out of the country, young men who have developed and shown by their course in college or in other way that they have brains—these men are driven out of the country by the picayune salaries paid under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman should have realized that long ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have always thought that, and the more experience I have the more strongly I believe it. We have not the class of men in the service that we should have. We talk of a matter of $40 or $50 on a man's salary, but a good man will save a hundred times that, yes, he may save hundreds of thousands of dollars in the conduct of the works of the department. A young man who has shown himself possessed of ability seeks a position in the engineer's office. He is offered $400 a year, with the prospect of rising in twelve years to $1,400 a year. These men are able to earn from $1,000 to $5,000 a year as soon as they leave college.

Mr. CLANCY. Has not the hon. minister the means of overcoming that ? If he finds a young man in his department who shows ability, is it not possible by the recommendation of the deputy head, confirmed by the minister and the passing of an Order in Council to advance such a man ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At $1,400 a year—you can't keep them at that.

Mr. CLANCY. You could promote him to be chief clerk.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is only $2,400 as a maximum.

Mr. CLANCY. I can say this—that while hon. gentlemen on this side have been in opposition, something over six years, the civil service has never been made a mark of attack as it was in former years. I believe very heartily that Canada ought to have a good service and that that service ought to be adequately paid for. There is no reason why a man who is employed in the service of Canada should be made a subject of discussion. There always may be the question whether he is needed or not, but every good man in the public service should be well paid. Speaking for myself, I am prepared to give hon. gentlemen opposite support in appointing good men to the service and paying them reasonably well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What can you do under the established rate of salaries ? They are altogether too low. If I were to take the responsibility of appointing some bright young Canadian at a salary of a few hundred more it would be considered a case of favouritism or something of that kind. I can name young men from my own county who have left college and in a few years were earning from $4,000 to $18,000 a year. Many of them would be a great credit to the public service.

Mr. CLANCY. These are the exceptions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are getting pretty nearly to be the rule. If the hon. member will look over the various departments he will find that our bright young men will not accept positions under the Civil Service Act, and that in order to get good men we have to give them something like a reasonable salary to start with.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I am glad to hear the admission that the civil servant is underpaid. We live in a happy time when there is a large surplus.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is deceiving himself. He has not counted the money right.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I have confidence enough in the Minister of Finance to believe that his statement is correct, and if the hon. gentleman has not, I am sorry for him. Now I think there should be a commission appointed to inquire into the condition of the civil service from top to bottom. I do not think that any part of the surplus could be better applied than in putting the civil service in that position, that would enable men to live as they should in this country. Now, in Halifax we had this misfortune, that when we came into the confederation the salaries were low, and they never got up to that standard that they reached in other provinces. In the province of New Brunswick, Sir Leonard Tilley had foresight enough, when his province entered the confederation, to increase the salaries of the civil servants in the city of St. John, and perhaps all over that province. I know from the condition of the Post Office Department and the railway service in Halifax and neighbourhood, that those people are all underpaid, and it is time that something was done to bring them to such a standard that they can live with some comfort. There are young men with growing families who are receiving salaries so inadequate as to be unworthy of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he thinks of his leaders when they refused the civil service the statutory increases, knowing that the cost of living was increasing, and that their salaries were far below what they ought to be. Has the hon. gentleman changed his mind, or why has he been so silent on this subject for so long a time ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. This is the second time I have brought this matter to the notice of the committee.

Mr. CLANCY. But I should like to hear from the hon. gentleman more than a mild protest. I have never heard him say once in this House that he disapproved of the conduct of the ministers in refusing the statutory increases.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I do not want the ministers to confine themselves to a few cases, I want them to deal with the whole subject from top to bottom, beginning with the deputy ministers and even with the ministers themselves. I do not think that they are overpaid, because I do not think, in view of the anxiety and turmoil of political life, that they will live long in this service. I think it desirable that our prominent men should continue a long time in public life. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I am not afraid at any time to give an expression of my opinion, and to disapprove of the government when I think they are wrong.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has suggested that the ministers are wearing out their lives. I agree with him, and we have some solicitude as to how long they are going to stand it. But the hon. gentleman can give practical effect to his sympathy for the weary ministers by supporting a want of confidence motion and giving them relief.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has no confidence that he would be able to get as good a government to replace them.

Temporary clerical and other assistance, inclusive of services of all persons required who were first employed after July, 1882, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $36,000.

Mr. CLANCY. I see there is an increase of $2,000 on the item for telegraph service, salaries of staff. Why is that increase?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was one additional divisional superintendent, and there has been a great increase in the telegraph system. There are five superintendents altogether on the list. I have explained that the Department of Railways and Canals pay the other half of the salaries.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 11, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE NEW CANADIAN COMPANY, LIMITED.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved that the Order for third reading of Bill (No. 83) to incorporate the New Canadian Company, Limited (Mr. Lemieux), be discharged and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for reconsideration. He said: This Bill was sent to the wrong committee, and there are one or two things in it which require to be amended. The undertaking is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, but in the preamble it is declared to be an English company incorporated by the British parliament. In order that it may be amended in such a way as to be able to accomplish its objects, it should be referred back to the Railway Committee.

Motion agreed to.

THE NORTH-WEST BANK OF CANADA.

House went into Committee on Bill (No. 51) to incorporate the North-west Bank of Canada.—Mr. McCreary.

On section 1,

Mr. HENDERSON. When this Bill was before the Banking and Commerce Committee, its name was changed to 'The Northern Bank.' I was under the impression that the committee were of opinion that a better name would be 'The North-west Bank,' and I have been informed that such was the feeling of the committee had that name been submitted. It is a name that will better meet with the wishes of the people, and one to which I do not think the promoters would object. I therefore move that the name of the bank be changed to that of 'The North-west Bank' instead of 'The Northern Bank,' as in the amended Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This matter was referred to in the committee, and the promoter was content to accept the name 'Northern Bank,' and I do not see why we should depart from the usual custom and change a name which has been accepted by the promoter of the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. The parties interested were perhaps not all there, and if I mistake not the name 'Northern Bank' was accepted as a compromise. My own impression is that they would prefer the name 'North-west Bank' to the 'Northern Bank.' If my impression be correct, I think we ought to change the name. I think they were only suggesting the name 'Northern Bank,' because they thought they were not to be allowed the name 'North-west Bank'; and I offer the House the opportunity to change the name to 'North-west Bank' instead of the other, which I do not think at all meets the wishes of the people out there. To my mind, it is not nearly so good a designation for business purposes as the name 'North-west Bank.'

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario). I think I was the one who seriously objected to the name 'North-west Bank.' The head office of the Western Bank of Canada is in the riding I have the honour to represent. The Western Bank of Canada thought that this was rather an infringement of their name, and I think so too, and so did the committee. The promoters of the Bill were willing to accept the change of name to the 'Northern Bank' instead of the 'North-west Bank.' I am still of the same opinion as before, and if the promoters were satisfied and the committee reported in favour of the change of name I do not see why there should be any objection. I think there are sufficient geographical and other names in the language to give the bank a new name entirely. I remember that when, two years ago, a bank applied to this House to be chartered under the name of 'The Empire Bank' it was objected to by the representatives of The Imperial Bank and the name was changed to 'The Sovereign Bank.' If it has been the policy of the department, the government and parliament to protect the names of banks, why not make a change in this case in order to protect the name of a bank that has already been in business for twenty years, that has served well the section in which it works, and that is now proposing to enlarge its capital and extend its operations into the North-west Territory ? Under the circumstances, I think the name can well remain as it now stands in the Bill.

Mr. McCREARY. When the matter first came up in the Committee on Banking and Commerce an objection was raised to the name 'North-west Bank of Canada.' I at once asked for two weeks' enlargement, and wrote to the solicitor of the provisional directors in Winnipeg on the subject. He wired me if the change in the name was to be made, to ask that it be changed to 'Northern Bank,' omitting the words 'of Canada.' I suggested that to the committee, and that was adopted, I presume that the solicitor consulted the provisional directors before he suggested this new name. In regard to the name 'North-west Bank,' when the territories are given autonomy, as, no doubt, they will be before very long, the name would not have so much significance as at present. I think the name 'Northern Bank' would be suitable. We have on the other side of the line very large institutions with similar titles, such, for instance, the Northern Securities Company. I think the name 'Northern Bank' would be quite sufficient without the words 'of Canada'—just as suitable as 'North-west Bank.'

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

EMPIRE ACCIDENT AND SURETY COMPANY.

House went into Committee on Bill (No. 107) to incorporate the Empire Accident and Surety Company.—Mr. Calvert.

On section 11,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick). I would draw the attention of the promoter to this clause. My hon. friend (Mr. Calvert) will remark that the name of the company does not contain the word 'limited,' and, under this section, section thirty-nine of the Companies Clauses Act is not applicable. That section, No. 39, reads as follows :—

> The directors of the company shall be jointly and severally liable upon every written contract or undertaking of the company, on the face whereof the words 'limited' or the words 'limited liability' are not distinctly written or printed after the name of the company where it first occurs in such contract or undertaking.

So, my hon. friend will see what the incorporators are exposed to if this goes through in the present form. It would be better to have the committee rise and report progress, so that there may be an opportunity to look at this clause.

Mr. ROSS (South Ontario).

Mr. CALVERT. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 159)) to incorporate the Canadian Yukon Western Railway Company.—Mr. Davis.

Bill (No. 160) to incorporate the Stewart River Development Company.—Mr. Davis.

Bill (No. 161) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Woolf Valve Gear Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 162) respecting the Hamilton and Lake Erie Power Company, and to change its name to the 'Jordan Light, Heat and Power Company.'—Mr. German.

QUESTIONS.

MEDICAL INSPECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria)—asked :

1. Has the government appointed any medical officers ; and if so, how many, for the purpose of inspecting immigrants entering Canada ?
2. When were such officers apointed, and where are they stationed ?
3. Do such officers inspect immigrants whose destination is the United States ?

4. How many immigrants have been rejected and refused admission to land in Canada by such medical officers ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. Yes ; one chief medical officer and two local medical officers.

2. First November, 1902. Fifteenth January, 1903, and 25th April, 1903 ; the chief medical officer at St. John, N.B., with general supervision, and the two local officers at Halifax and Quebec, respectively.

3. Yes, when necessary.

4. Two hundred and ten.

CANE BROTHERS, NEWMARKET, ONT.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria) —asked :

1. Have Cane Brothers, of Newmarket, Ontario, at any time had license to cut timber on any islands in the Georgian bay, under the authority of the Indian Department ? If so, what was the date of same and what islands were so under license ?

2. Did Cane Brothers, if not licensed to cut by the Indian Department, at any time cut timber on any island or islands in the Georgian bay under the control of the Indian Department. If so, when and what quantity of timber was cut by them ; and on how many islands was the same cut ; and if any cut by the said Cane Brothers, what disposition was made of the same ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. The Messrs. Cane Brothers, of Newmarket, Ontario, have not at any time had license to cut timber on any islands in Georgian bay, under the authority of the Indian Department.

2. The Department of Indian Affairs understand that many years ago, namely about 1886, the Ontario government granted a timber license to the Georgian bay Lumber Company to cut timber on certain lands on the Georgian bay, and that Messrs. Cane became transferees of this license. Subsequently a dispute arose between the Ontario and Dominion governments as to whether these lands belonged to the Ontario or Dominion governments, and this dispute is still unsettled. The Ontario government continues to assert ownership over these lands, their licensees accounting to them. In 1894 the Dominion government endeavoured to take possession of some 940 logs cut on what is known as Baxter Island, claimed by Messrs. Cane as covered by their license and which logs they claimed were their property ; but subsequently, namely in 1894-5, the Dominion government discontinued such efforts. Since then the question of the ownership of the islands has remained in dispute and it is presumed that the transferees of the license account to the Ontario government in respect of any timber cut on the lands in question.

There are a number of other disputes between the two governments as to the ownership of other lands claimed as Indian lands, and matters arising therefrom, and negotiations are pending for the reference of all such disputes to arbitration.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What amount was paid for drawing the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Prince Edward Island, with regard to the building of the Hillsborough bridge ?

2. To whom was the money paid ; what were the names of the parties, and amounts paid each, respectively ?

3. Was the cost for drawing this agreement to be paid exclusively by the Dominion government, or partly by them and partly by the local government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). No amount has been paid by the Dominion government for drawing the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Prince Edward Island for the building of Hillsborough bridge.

LEASE OF FALSE CREEK, B.C.

Mr. WILSON—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria) asked :

1. Has any portion of False Creek, Vancouver, been leased to Messrs. Burnett & Kelly ? If so, what is the area so leased ?

2. What is the duration of the lease ?

3. What is the rental per annum ?

4. Have any protests been received from any public bodies in Vancouver against the granting of the said lease ? If so, from whom ?

5. Upon whose recommendation was the lease granted ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). If this question has no reference to the foreshore the answer will be as follows : No portion of False Creek reserve, Vancouver, has been leased to Messrs. Burnett & Kelly. If it belongs to the foreshore the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) will be the proper person to answer for that part of it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suppose the question will then stand until the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) is in the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. MORIN—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Before accepting the Ross rifle, did the Department of Militia and Defence submit the said rifle for examination and approval to experts ?

2. If so, what are the names of those exports ?

3. What report did they make to the department ?

4. Is the department, or the Minister of Militia and Defence, aware if the rifle in question has been offered to the imperial government or to that of the United States, and with what result ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Yes, to a board of officers.

2. Colonel W. D. Otter, president. Members : Colonel J. M. Gibson, Lieutenant Colonel W. P. Anderson, Lieutenant Colonel Sam Hughes. M.P., Major F. M. Gaudet.

3. The report is that the rifle has features which are a positive advantage over the Lee-Enfield.

4. No.

TRANS-CANADA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WILMOT—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

Has the government entered into any contract with the Trans-Canada Railway Company for the construction of any portion of its line, and have the plans and profiles of the same been deposited with the government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). No contract has been entered into by the government with the Trans-Canada Railway Company, but the company have sent to the department plans of two short sections of the line, one ten miles from Nelson river westward, and the other twenty miles from same point eastward.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—TRAFFIC ARRANGEMENT WITH GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. KEMP—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. At what point, or points, does the interchange of freight traffic between the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway take place ?

2. Is there an agreement in existence in respect to the apportionment of earnings ; and what is the nature of such agreement, and the date of same ?

3. What are the proportions earned by each company for freight transferred from the Grand Trunk to the Intercolonial, and vice versa, in all cases ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. At Montreal, St. Hyacinthe and Chaudiere Junction.

2. There is an understanding as to the apportionment of rates. But further information to reply to this question is being asked for from Moncton.

VALLEYFIELD STRIKE, 1900.

Mr. MORIN—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Was there a strike of the employees in the cotton mills at Valleyfield in the fall of 1900, just previous to the election in that constituency ?

2. By whom was it provoked ?

3. Was Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour, sent to Valleyfield to try to settle the strike ? If so, by whose order was he sent ?

4. What did he accomplish ?

5. Did the employees of the cotton mills secure higher wages ?

6. Were the militia ordered out there ?

7. If so, what was the cost of the troops ?

8. By whom was the said cost paid ?

9. Has the town of Valleyfield paid the costs ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. Yes.

2. On October 22nd some 200 labourers engaged on excavation work for the Montreal Cotton Company at Valleyfield went on strike for higher wages, and the strike of the employees in the cotton mills followed on the evening of the 26th, being of the nature of a protest against the bringing in of two companies of infantry from Montreal at the request of the company for protection against certain acts of the striking labourers.

3. Mr. King, deputy minister of Labour, was sent to Valleyfield by order of the Minister of Labour on receipt of a request dated October 26th, from the secretary of the 'Union Ouvriere,' that the government send a representative to Valleyfield in connection with the strike. On receipt of the communication from the secretary, the Minister of Labour immediately telegraphed to the solicitor of the company, the secretary of the union and the Mayor of Valleyfield, offering the friendly intervention of the Department of Labour, and the deputy minister proceeded at once to Valleyfield.

4. A full account of the negotiations conducted by the deputy minister while at Valleyfield, and their results will be found at page 102 of the issue of the 'Labour Gazette' for November, 1900.

5. No.

6. As above stated, the Mayor of Valleyfield made a requisition for the services of the militia on October 25th, at the request of the company, and two companies of infantry arrived in Valleyfield from Montreal that night.

7, 8 and 9. The Department of Labour has no information on the subjects referred to in these questions.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax) moved for :

Copies of all Orders in Council, and all correspondence between the imperial government, or any departmental officer thereof, and the government of Canada, or any department, or officer thereof ; and all reports respecting the purchase in Canada, by or through the government of Canada, or any department, or officer thereof, of any horses, hay, oats, material, supplies, animals, or merchandise, for the imperial government, or any department, or officer thereof, during the years 1900, 1901, and 1902.

He said : Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) informed me that he had no objection to make to the passing of this motion, provided it was amended so as to read as follows :

Copies of all Orders in Council, and all correspondence in connection therewith, respecting the purchase in Canada, by or through the government of Canada, or any department, or officer thereof, of any horses, hay, oats, material, supplies, animals, or merchandise, for the imperial government, or any department, or officer thereof, during the years 1900, 1901, and 1902.

I am perfectly willing, for the present, to put the motion in that way, provided it may not be held as an estoppel in case I wish to move for any papers that may be covered by the words which are struck out. I do not exactly appreciate the difference between the motion as proposed by me and the motion as amended at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance, but with that understanding, I have no objection to let it go in this form at present, and when the papers are brought down, I will understand better what is proposed to be covered by the motion as amended.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) reading the motion as I gave it to him ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, exactly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be satisfactory. On a previous occasion on this question, I was asked across the floor of the House if the government had managed this business for the imperial government, and I replied that while we were aware that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) was lending his friendly assistance to the imperial government in this matter, practically it was not dealt with as a Canadian government matter at all. I want to qualify that statement now to a certain extent. I found afterwards, on looking over the papers, that at the first stage an Order in Council was passed which virtually assisted with the credit of the government of Canada in the first steps that were taken. After a short time operations took a different form, the imperial government provided the funds, and the whole transaction from that time forward was conducted as an imperial government transaction. I find it is necessary to make this qualification, because, at the first stage, an Order in Council was passed authorizing advances to be made by the bank. Of course, we had no power to authorize advances, but the assurance that the Canadian government was behind the transaction undoubtedly had its effect with the bank at the beginning, but at a later stage, and as respects probably four-fifths of the whole transaction, that would not apply. I think in view of the answer which I gave to the question put by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) I should make this explanation, because the statement I then made was not exactly correct.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the motion carries I would like to know, if under this motion as it now reads, we will have all the operations that took place between the imperial government and the Department of Agriculture here ; all the purchases of oats, hay, provisions, &c.; or, are four-fifths of these operations going to be kept from our knowledge ? As I understand the statement made by the Minister of Finance, the transactions began by an advance on credit given by the Canadian government, and under which a part of these supplies were purchased. These, as I understand the Minister of Finance, we are entitled to under this motion as altered. But, four-fifths of the transactions having taken place under advances made by the imperial government—perhaps direct to the Minister of Agriculture or to somebody employed in the Agriculture Department—four-fifths of these transactions will not be taken cognizance of under the present amended motion. I do not think that is right ; I think we should have the whole of them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The motion as amended in the suggestion I made to the leader of the opposition, and which he for the moment has accepted, is designed to cover the Orders in Council and papers of the character which are referred to, and anything which relates to the transaction on the part of the Canadian government. But it is not contemplated at present that we shall bring down accounts of the expenditures, because practically no expenditures were made by the Canadian government. An Order in Council was passed in the beginning on which the banks were assured that the government of Canada would see them through this transaction. Of course, we had no legal authority to advance moneys to the imperial government. That Order in Council was given and there was a moral assurance—there could be no legal assurance—but there was a moral assurance given by the Canadian government at that first stage. It was then expected the accounts would have to be dealt with as Canadian accounts, and I think, speaking from memory, it was provided that the accounts should be submitted to the Auditor General. Subsequently, however, that was not carried out. The whole transaction was managed as an imperial transaction. In the form in which the motion will pass, it will call for the Orders in Council which have been passed on the subject, and the papers in connection therewith, but it is not contemplated to include in that order the accounts for the purchases that were made.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

TOWNSHIPS OF MARA, RAMA AND MORRISON—FLOODING OF LANDS.

Mr. GEO. D. GRANT (North Ontario) moved for :

Copies of all reports, corespondence, petitions and papers, filed in the Department of Public Works, or other department, in the matter of the lowering or regulating of the water of Lakes Simcoe and Couchiching ; and the relieving of lands in the townships of Mara, Rama and Morrison, from floods occasioned by the overflow of said lakes.

He said : I desire to direct the attention of the ministry to a grievance of long standing affecting the three townships mentioned in the motion and which are situated in the north riding of the county of Ontario. These three townships of Mara, Rama and Morrison, are every spring more or less flooded by the overflow of Lakes Simcoe and Couchiching. Those townships are adjacent to and lying east of the lakes; they are low-lying lands and difficult to drain. In these three townships the grievance has been felt severely for years, in as much as the community is depending more and more on agriculture, the pine and wood being practically cut out. Many years ago when the lumber industry was still thriving in that section the inconvenience and loss was not so manifest. The township of Mara has spent several thousand dollars for drainage in the last ten years; the provincial government has also lent its aid, and large drains across the township have been dug to Lake Simcoe; these have proved ineffectual. The difficulty is this, that in the late winter and early spring the lakes overflow the lowlands and on their receding, leave a considerable depth of water on these lowlands towards the interior of the township. Drainage is difficult, and this water lies on the surface often until the month of June, and, in a wet season, all summer. During some seasons in the past it has been utterly impossible for a number of the farmers to get in their crop, because of this.

As to the filling up or narrowing of the outlet from Lake Couchiching into the Severn river, an artificial obstruction has been put in on the west branch of the Severn river and contributes to the trouble. On the centre branch of the river, is a dam which also is a factor. These outlets can be so improved or enlarged to regulate the water of the lakes, particularly in the spring of the year.

It is represented by persons affected, that if the surplus water was let off in the early spring, before the spring freshets, the overflow would not take place, in fact the agitation is for the regulation rather than the lowering of the lakes. In the past when this matter has been discussed, some opposition was offered by the lumbermen who operated on these waters and also by vessel owners. There can now be no objection from these sources for lumber operations have ceased, nor are there any mills depending for their power on the depth of water at the immediate outlets. As regards navigation, the objection is not well taken, because by a proper system, the freshets can be let off and artificial barriers placed at the outlet and the water kept up to the mark where navigation would be safe and easy. Besides that, considerable dredging has of late been done in the channel or narrows between the two lakes, and in other shallow places, insuring greater safety and ease for vessels.

The county of Ontario has suffered for many years severely, from this matter; the annual loss is hard to determine, but it is undoubtedly true that lands worth in the neighbourhood of $100,000 are, in many years, rendered wholly unremunerative to their owners. The land itself is excellent and if relieved of the floods, would add greatly to the wealth of the townships.

As long as these annual floods occur, the thorough drainage of the township is practically impossible, inasmuch as a great part of the area affected is either below or on an equal level with Lake Simcoe.

The township of Rama is also a heavy sufferer, more particularly through the flooding of the Black river and some of the smaller lakes which drain into the Severn; the cause is practically the same; in fact the one remedy in the enlarging of the outlet and regulating the outflow, would be an enormous benefit to the three townships mentioned. The residents themselves have done a great deal and have been at great expense towards rectifying the evil and are very much in earnest in pressing the matter on the government's attention. I feel quite sure that a competent engineer can solve the difficulty and with small expenditure comparatively, when the amount of benefit to accrue is considered.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I would have thought that the works referred to might come more properly under the jurisdiction of the province. However, there is no objection at all to the resolution, and the matter seems to be so important that I will have a careful investigation and a report made upon it by the engineer of the department.

Mr. S. HUGHES (North Victoria). I may say that this matter was before the House some years ago. It is entirely under the jurisdiction of the federal authorities, inasmuch as it forms a part of the route of the Trent canal. I can assure the minister and the hon. gentleman who has made the motion that there is very little land flooded, and no damage has been done, and that much opposition will come from the municipalities along the southern shores of the lakes, especially those in the counties of York and Simcoe, against lowering the waters of these lakes below their normal level. The obstructions in the river Severn were removed some years ago, as will be found on reference to the department, and, so far as can be ascertained, there is no cause of complaint at the present time. If any attempt is made, such as was made some years ago, to have these waters lowered, below their normal level, very serious opposition will be offered by the vast majority of the people all around the lakes, and those who would be benefited can be numbered on the fingers of one hand.

Motion agreed to.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WINTER COMMUNICATION.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (East Prince, P.E.I.) moved for :

Copies of petitions, engineers' reports, estimates and correspondence, in reference to the building of a pier at or near Carlton Point, Prince county, Prince Edward Island, in connection with promoting the efficiency of winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

He said : I understand that two petitions have been forwarded to the Governor General for the construction of a pier at or near Carlton Point on the Prince Edward Island side of the Northumberland Straits, for the better carrying out of the winter service between the island and the mainland. These petitions, I understand, have been numerously signed by prominent people all over the island, and I shall take the liberty of reading to the House the resolutions on which they are based. The following resolutions were passed at a mass meeting held at Emerald, on February 5th, 1903.

To His Excellency, the Governor General in Council :—

May it please Your Excellency :

The memorial of the undersigned inhabitants of Prince Edward Island hereby showeth :

That the life and prosperity of a province is largely dependent upon its system of communication with the outside world ;

That ' continuous communication ' was a principal condition of Prince Edward Island entering into the Canadian confederation at all ;

That great loss and inconvenience have resulted to us as a province because of such communication not having been kept up, as a consequence of our not having united long ago on the shortest, easiest and most continuous way of such communication ;

That distance in the matter of a winter route is, other things equal, a prime factor in its adoption to the public service ; and that the route between the capes—Tormentine and Traverse—offers immeasurably the shortest, and we believe all things considered, the most regular and expeditious way as that which we are forced to have recourse to in extremity for mails and passengers, even with open boats ;

Therefore, consonantly to a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Emerald on the 5th day of February last, which reads as follows :—

' Resolved that this mass meeting of islanders do hereby urge upon the government as of absolute and pressing necessity the immediate construction of a pier at or near Carlton Head, on this side of the strait, and further

' Resolved that the department in charge be requested to push to its completion at once the necessary dredging at the Tormentine pier for the safe docking of steamers and also to proceed with the construction of such other work as may be essential to the safe, speedy and efficient navigation of the strait between the —capes—its natural ferry—winter and summer.'

We respectfully ask that a sufficient sum be placed in the estimates at the next session of parliament to secure to us these necessary works and give Prince Edward Island that communication it has a right to under the terms of confederation.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The other petition was circulated in Summerside and throughout the west and I will take the liberty of reading it also :

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council :

May it please Your Excellency :

The memorial of the undersigned humbly showeth :

That a petition emanating from a public meeting held at Emerald, Prince Edward Island, on the 5th February, has been extensively signed, requesting that a pier be constructed at or near Carlton Head on the island side of the Strait of Northumberland, and that such dredging and other works as may be essential to the safe, speedy and efficient navigation of the strait between the said capes—' its natural ferry summer and winter'—be constructed forthwith ;

That your memorialists respectfully desire to dissent from that portion of said petition which refers to the summer service, knowing as we do that the present Summerside-Point du Chêne route, with its safe, natural harbours is more direct, has better connections, occupies less time, and in regard to distance is shorter as a summer route than that from any station on the Prince Edward Island Railway to Painsec or any point west on the Intercolonial Railway than the capes route ;

That in other respects your memorialists fully concur in the prayer of the said petition.

Your memorialists therefor respectfully ask that a sum sufficient be placed in the estimates at the next session of parliament to secure such necessary works as may be required for said winter service to be operated in conjunction with Summerside harbour when the latter is navigable.

The causes which have led up to these petitions are well known to this House. You know the difficulties under which we have suffered for years, culminating in the disaster of last winter, and it is to avoid a repetition of such mistakes that the petitions are presented to this House. This is not a new scheme. A petition was presented last year, signed by some 800 names, and the Minister of Public Works then promised that the matter would receive attention. He said :

I am very thankful for the information given me, and will give more attention than ever to this important question. If it be true, as I hope it is, the communication between the island and the mainland can be shortened to eight miles, there is no government which can refuse to undertake that work, but there must be some obstacle in the way or it would have been done long ago. However, we are in a century of progress, and I will give my best attention to the statements just made. I will have my officers go again into that important question, and if it can be done, I will pledge myself to do it.

Unfortunately, we have not got the then Minister of Public Works with us. We are changing ministers around so fast that the promises of one will not hold apparently for the next one. However, the matter now comes before you, supported by these two petitions and the experience of last winter, and I hope something will be done. Before dealing directly with the subject matter of these petitions, I want to go back over recent history in connection with the terms of union, by which we were to have efficient steam service between the island and the mainland, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway, and the railway system of the Dominion. Only a year or two ago a claim was made for the nonfulfilment of these terms, and a part payment for nonfulfilment of $30,000 annually was granted to the island.

I may say, judging by the experience of last year and the failures of business people on the island owing to that experience and the general set back thereby caused our commercial interests, that $50,000 per year, if this thing continues, will fall very far short of in any way compensating for the damage which will be caused each year to our people commercially. One would have expected that, after admitting its failure to carry out the terms of confederation, the government would have used every means possible to give us the continuous communication we require, but instead they have been getting further away from that desired end. It is not very agreeable to us to have to press this matter on the attention of the House year after year, but we are only demanding our rights. I for one do not like to be getting up here session after session and calling the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to this important question, but at the same time I feel that I would be derelict in my duty to the people I represent and to this Dominion if I did not do so. Last year was the worst in the history of the island as regards winter communication since confederation, all circumstances considered, and if the government persist in neglecting to carry out its obligations, the results will be still more disastrous to the interests of Prince Edward Island and the people of the mainland who are depending on the island's products. There are two winter boats, the 'Stanley' and the 'Minto,' which perform the winter service. As far back as the time of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, when the Pictou route was packed with ice during certain seasons, we advocated the Summerside and Cape Tormentine route, but there was always a pull in the eastern end of the island against the western. The objection was raised that there was not sufficient water in Summerside harbour, and that the 'Stanley' when performing her summer service would lie in the offing. When the Hon. Sir Louis Davies was Minister of Marine this same objection was pressed, and it was not until the fall of 1900 that the 'Stanley' finally came to Summerside. It was then found that there was just as much water, and even more, in Summerside harbour than on Pictou Bar. In 1900 the service was impeded in an unusual way. The scare of small pox at the Cape was raised, and the boat was taken away to Charlottetown, so that on account of these interruptions, the service did not receive a fair test. In the fall of 1901, we again had the 'Stanley' put on the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and she made more round trips during the same time she was on that route than did the 'Minto' on the other route, and that despite the fact that no preparations were made for her coming either at the Cape or Summerside. There was no loading preparation made either at the Cape or Summerside harbour, and no information as to when the boat would run or how she would run, or whether she might not be taken off the route at any time, as was done in the previous year. There was continual bungling of the service, and yet she gave better service than was performed by the 'Minto' between Charlottetown and the mainland, and the test was acknowledged as satisfactory. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of Marine of last year (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) will testify to the fact that the trial service between Summerside and Cape Tormentine was in all respects successful. I now come to last winter's operations. One would naturally suppose that when the government had found out that this route was feasible and gave satisfaction, one of the government steamers would have been commissioned for that service before the harbour froze up. But instead of the 'Stanley' being sent to Summerside when the summer service was over, it was not until some time later that she put in an appearance there. It is but natural to suppose that trade will flow along the line of the service which the people expect to be kept up. The time when the summer service ceases is the most important of the year. It is just then that the people are getting in their fall importations and exporting most of their produce, and that was the time that the government should have had that boat in Summerside ready to take up the winter service, and the shippers should have had every facility for using that route as would have been afforded them had any private company undertaken the work. But instead there was no information given the public. The Northumberland steamer of the summer service made her last trip on December the 10th, and the 'Stanley' did not put in an appearance until December the 18th, so that the shippers were ignorant as to which way to send their shipments. A great deal of freight had been sent to Cape Tormentine, and, contrary to the shippers' instructions, this freight was carried all the way round by Georgetown, thus costing the shippers an undue amount of freight. Nor were any proper arrangements made with the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island railways, and there was a lot of shuffling for more than a month before any decided freight arrangements were made in this regard. The hour of departure of the boat was ill-advised. It left at eleven a.m., when there was only a half day to load and unload and get back in day time, when instead the boat should have been away by seven o'clock in the morning and have a chance to discharge freight and get back by daylight. Neither was any information given to the travelling public that the 'Stanley' was in commission on this service. The Boston and Maine Railway Company had to send down a man to find out whether the service was really being carried on at all. The excuse was given for the boat not being ready to take up the service on time that there was no coal, and that the government were waiting for coal in Pictou. But is it not absurd that the department should urge the excuse that they had no coal for their steamers at a time when the harbour was freezing up? Why, they could have got plenty coal at Summerside or could have brought it by train to Cape Tormentine and have had a continuous supply there, and the coal would not have cost them more than a dollar a ton extra. But for the sake of one dollar a ton, the service was broken, the shippers did not know which way to ship, and things were all in confusion. The freight to be carried on that route would have amply repaid the one dollar per ton extra in coal. Again, up to the time the boat was put on the service the agent of the Marine Department in Charlottetown could not give any information as to whether the boat was going to run on this route at all. Remarks have been made in this House about the service having proved a failure this year. To refute this criticism, let me just give the House a record of the work done by the 'Stanley' each day until she was unfortunately caught in the ice off of Summerside harbour:

The ss. 'Northumberland' made last trip from this port December 10, 1902.

December 18, 1902. The ss. 'Stanley' arrived about 10 a.m., from Pictou. At 1 p.m., left for Tormentine in a snowstorm laid outside Summerside light all night. Next morning, 19th, proceeded to Tormentine (without returning to Summerside to take passengers that arrived on evening train, who had to stay in Summerside till the 20th), returning about 4.20 p.m.

" 20. Left for Tormentine with local mail, returning 21st without any mail.

" 22. Made round trip, returned about 1.15 p.m. No mail coming.

" 23. Made round trip, returned about 1.15 p.m. No mail coming.

December 24. Made round trip, returned about 3.15 p.m. No mail coming.

" 25. Made round trip, returned about 3.15 p.m. Mail both ways.

" 26. Did not cross. Went outside harbour and returned.

" 27. Made round trip, returned about 4 p.m., with mails.

" 28. Sunday at wharf.

" 29. Made round trip, returned about 5 p.m., with mails.

" 30. Made round trip, returned about 3 p.m., with mails.

" 31. Made round trip, returned about 4.30 p.m., with mails.

January 1, 1903. Made round trip (change of time), leaving, returned 4.30 p.m. Mails.

" 2. Made round trip (change of time), leaving, returned 3 p.m. Mails.

" 3. Made round trip (change of time), leaving, returned 3 p.m. Mails.

" 4. Sunday at wharf.

" 5. Made round trip, returned about 2.25 p.m. Mails.

" 6. Made round trip, returned about 3.30. Mails.

" 7. Did not cross.

" 8. Snowstorm went outside harbour and returned at 11 a.m.

" 9. Left at 9.30 a.m., returned to Tormentine over night. Returned on the 10th about 11.15.

" 11. Sunday at wharf.

" 12. Left about 7 a.m., in a gale of wind from west and very cold. Should have laid at wharf.

She should have laid at the wharf all this day, which was one of the worst days of the year, with the barometer showing that we were going to have very heavy weather. The captain went out contrary to the advice of his pilot and mate. He was caught outside in the gale that was threatening and that was on him even before he went out. He was caught in the running ice and was carried down against the board ice. We will let this pass as possibly an error of judgment. No one will deny that the service up to this time could be a better vindication of this route as regards the number of crossings, and if the department had used judgment and had boats at proper season and freight arrangements and time of leaving arranged, it would be hard to improve. Now, take the history of the boat from that time. It will show to this House still further the neglect of the government in failing to provide for this service. I have already shown how they failed to have the boat on the route, and now I am going to point out that the whole blame for breaking up the winter service is with the department and the government. She was caught there on the twelfth, and lay there ten days, and during that time not a single effort was made by the government to move her. About the tenth day, as representative of East Prince—she was lying outside of Summerside harbour where I live—in company with the official port-warden who is the representative of the fourth district in the local legislature, the mayor of the town, and the stipendiary magistrate, I drove out to the vessel. We ordered about a dozen men with implements to find out the condition the vessel was in and what means should be taken for her release. The official port-warden said to the captain: Your ship is in a dangerous condition, the ice will break up inside of you, and you will be carried out; but, as things are, she can be cut into the harbour. The captain replied: I will not spend a dollar on getting her in. We asked the captain to call for assistance from the shore, but he would not do so. He said: My vessel is safe. We set the men to work to find out the best means to release the steamer and the thickness of the ice jam in which she was locked—leading into Summerside harbour—I wish to give the House the measurements of the ice on that day. The first seven yards there was thirteen feet of lully and raft ice at the bow; the next thirty-four yards there were three feet of ice; the next fifty yards, one and one-quarter feet of ice; the next sixty yards, two feet-six inches of ice; the next eight yards, five feet of ice; the next one hundred yards, three feet of ice, the next one hundred yards, one and one-half feet of ice; and for the next three hundred yards, ice hardly safe to drive a horse upon—not one foot thick. Yet the report has been made and members will rise here and state, and even the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has represented that she was in board ice fourteen feet thick. The condition of the ice was such as I have stated. Yet that boat remained with freight and passengers aboard, with freight piling up on both ends, for ten days and not an effort made by the government to get her out. We reported the condition of the ice, and yet the captain would do nothing. We held a meeting of the board of trade and decided that we would put our hands in our own pockets and send men out next day to commence cutting her out. We sent thirty men out the next day. They did not make much headway, because they were late in getting ready. That very same night, there was a gale of wind off shore, and the steamship went adrift in the raft ice where she had been lying for ten days without an effort being made to move her. I believe that throughout all that time the agent of the marine department did not even go to investigate her condition. It was left to private parties to do what was done, and private parties had to pay the bill. On the fifth of February a mass meeting was held at Emerald and a petition was prepared as before set out; we also immediately wired the department to ask that something should be done to release the 'Stanley.' With the red tape and humbugging of the department, it was two or three days before anything was done to try to get her clear. On the twelfth of February the 'Minto' was sent to her relief. The 'Minto,' meantime, as I shall point out, could not perform her service on the eastern route on account of ice in Pictou harbour; so, she was sent to the relief of the 'Stanley.' On February 28th, the 'Minto' broke her propeller blade. Captain Brown, about that time reported that the boat could not be released from the ice until about the end of April. That was reported to the department. I claim that she could have been released from the ice when she was outside Summerside harbour, and people competent to give an opinion, who were there and saw the position of the vessel and the condition of the ice, said she could have been released within three days if the proper means at hand had been set to work to cut her into the harbour. Had this been done there was hardly a day from that time until the spring of the year, when the boat could not have performed the service on that route. On March 12th, the government having failed to do anything, the board of trade of Charlottetown took hold of the case. By this time the vessel had drifted over fifty miles and was frozen in near Pictou Island. These parties took hold of her, and the 17th the boat was liberated at a cost of $1,200. The expenditure necessary to release her, had it been made at the proper time, would have saved many failures in Prince Edward Island, and the service to and from the Island could have been carried on. There need have been no such blocking of the service as there was but for the neglect, the culpable neglect of the department and the government. It was not, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says, not as the hon. member for Pictou would have you believe, because the boat was in the ice, or because the 'Minto' broke her propeller in trying to relieve the 'Stanley,' nor, indeed, as the hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes), would represent, from both boats not being on the eastern end, but because the government failed to perform the duty of having the 'Stanley' released when that might have been done, when she lay for ten days off Summerside harbour.

Now, what all this means to the people of Prince Edward Island, perhaps the members of this House cannot readily realize. Farming operations have changed in the island during the past fifteen years, and the people have gone into the raising of dairy products, butter, eggs and prepared meats, and working up a trade in the hope that they would be able to depend upon a winter service. Our winter business was being carried out at Sydney, and Halifax and on the mainland generally, while a great many of our shippers had prepared to carry on an extensive business with the old country. But this set-back of last winter has paralyzed the whole trade of the island, and as I said before, has resulted in the failure of not a few of our merchants. There were thousands of dollars worth of fish waiting for shipment at Georgetown that had to be thrown into the fields. I understand that these same gentlemen who had a right to depend upon this service being fulfilled, when the 'Minto' had several times failed to take their produce across to Pictou, are looking for some remuneration from the government on account of their products being spoiled at the port of Georgetown while waiting shipment. I sincerely hope that the government will take their claims in hand and give them some relief in this matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the way in which the service was performed in giving us 'continuous communication between the island and the mainland' last winter. I want to point out to this House that the necessity devolves upon this government of providing at once another winter boat to carry on that service. The Canadian trade returns show that the winter trade of the Dominion of Canada is very nearly as large as the summer trade. For the months of July, August and September, 1901-02, the imports were $48,782,832 ; and for January, February and March, $45,743,796. The exports for the three summer months I have named, were $55,948,525, and for the three winter months, $31,554,434. It will be seen, therefore, that the winter trade of the Dominion is nearly as large as the summer trade. We have no means of telling just what proportion the island contributed to this trade, but it stands to reason that if facilities were provided for the island during the winter season, her winter trade would be almost as much as her summer trade. In fact, this can be readily shown from the position of the island in respect of transportation facilities in summer. We have two steamers of the Steam Navigation Company making daily trips with full cargoes ; we have the Plant line making two trips a week ; we have two steamers of the Black Diamond Line, two of the Dobell Line, and one of the Quebec Steamship Company ; we have the City of Ghent between Halifax and Sydney ports, and we have sometimes a direct steamer to Great Britain to carry away our products during the summer, besides numerous other small craft that are continually in operation. Now it stands to reason, that it requires all these boats to do our service in the summer time, we want increased facilities for our winter service. At the time the 'Stanley' commenced running with the 'Minto' they got along fairly well, but since the trade has been growing, the 'Minto' and 'Stanley' are not able to perform the service satisfactorily, and it will require another boat of much larger carrying capacity and better suited to cope with the ice conditions, in order to do the trade of the island.

Now, I have placed before you the demands of the people of the island for relief. I think the Department of Marine and Fisheries understands very well that the 'Stanley,' which is now fifteen years old, when she went last year to perform that service between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, was not in a condition to be put on the route. It was easy to see that the plates of that vessel were indented in many places, and when she got into a jam of ice, it was almost impossible for her to back out. The attention of the department was called to her condition last year, and they were asked to make repairs to the boat, but now she is in a much worse condition than before. It behooves the present government at once to set about acquiring a new boat, because the 'Stanley' is practically unfit for the service.

Now, there were some special features in regard to the performance of this service ; for instance, the matter of special trains to meet the winter boats and transfer the passengers and mails to their destinations. Time and again, as the boats arrived at Summerside or Georgetown with perhaps two or three days' mail and thirty or forty passengers, we could not get a special train to carry these mails and passengers to Charlottetown. And time and again private individuals had to put their hands in their pockets to pay for these trains. I know myself of one occasion when the vessel came over with thirty or forty passengers and the mails we had to wire to Charlottetown to the board of trade, and one of the hon. members for Charlottetown had to take the money out of his own pocket to pay for a special train. We not only had to put up the money to get a special train for passengers, but our special train had to carry His Majesty's mails free. More than that there has been wrangling going on between the Post Office Department and the Railway Department, and the Minister of Railways and Canals got up in his seat when this question was up some weeks ago, and said this was the first time he had heard of it. I can take up 'Hansard' of last year or the year before and point out where he acknowledged that our complaints were justified, and he promised to remedy them. There is no excuse the department can offer for inflicting this inconvenience upon the people, and there is no excuse for this wrangling between the Department of Railways and Canals and the Post Office Department as to which is responsible for carrying the mails, or to which department the expense should be charged.

Then there is the Capes route. At the time when two boats were locked in the ice, the Capes service was not ready. I have in my hand a paper stating a case where $150 was paid by two travellers to carry baggage from the island to the mainland :

Mr. J. A. Thompson, of P. Garneau fils & Co., of Quebec, and W. F. Macoun, of Hodgson, Sumner & Co., Montreal, who have been delayed for some time on account of the tie-up of the winter steamers, came to the city from Georgetown this morning and leave to-day for the Capes, where they have made arrangements by telegram with Captain Allan to transport their trunks across to-morrow morning. It will require six boats and the cost of each traveller will be upwards of $75. These gentlemen have now been delayed upwards of two weeks waiting for winter steamers.

I know for a fact myself, having had to cross by the Cape when the boats were tied up, that there were not enough boats in the government service to carry the baggage and passengers offering. I do not know whether the member for King's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes), is prejudiced against this route from local feelings and is actuated with a desire to try and throw cold water upon it, but we are advocating it in the belief that it is the best possible place for communication between the island and the mainland. The hon. gentleman points out that if you put two boats on the Georgetown route satisfactory communication will be ensured. The principal reasons why the Summerside-Cape Tormentine route has been advocated and tested were because it has been found that for the last thirty years there were times in each year when the steamers were locked out of either Georgetown or Pictou for days at a time. The board of trade in Charlottetown in 1898 sent a resolution to the government with the following complaint:

During each winter it invariably happens that for several weeks, owing to the ss. 'Stanley' being unable to make regular crossings in the severest weather on account of heavy ice, the mails have been transferred to the capes routes.

That is why we advocate the Cape route and that is why the hon. member for Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Farquharson) advocated the Cape route and the building of a pier at Carlton point last year. That is why the representative people put their names to this petition. It has been known for thirty years that there are times when you cannot get into or get out of Pictou harbour. There are certain times of the year when under certain conditions Pictou harbour is inaccessible. It is impossible either to get in or out of that harbour. If you will glance at the map you will see that Pictou harbour is not very well situated geographically for a winter port. The harbour opens to the north-east. Due north of the harbour and distant seven or eight miles from Pictou, lies Pictou Island, extending four or five miles in an east and west direction, and forming a bay within, which is open to the full force of the north-west and especially to the north-east winds. During a winter like the present, the prevailing winds are north-west, north and north-easterly, and these have packed the bay with hard ice, only take this year's experience of Pictou and it will be seen the Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not understand or has been misinformed when he states that the trouble resulted from the 'Minto' going to the relief of the 'Stanley,' and that had both boats been on eastern routes, continuous communication would have been assured. Look at the facts and the records, which show that on February 2, the 'Minto' became frozen in at Pictou. She made no attempt to get out until the 7th, when she succeeded in working her way to a point three miles beyond the lighthouse, and was obliged to return. The captain reported that, 'it will be impossible to move until there is a strong southwest wind and high tide.' On the 8th, 9th and 10th she was unable to move. On the 11th she reached Georgetown. On the 12th she got back to Pictou. On the 13th she could not get out. On the 14th she left Pictou. On the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th she fought her way from Pictou harbour to a point five miles east of Pictou Island, a little east of her regular course. At this time the 'Stanley' was off Arisag. The two steamers retained these positions until the 25th, when the 'Minto' succeeded in coaling the 'Stanley.' During all this time it is admitted by those in a position to know, that Pictou harbour was inaccessible and it is a well known fact that when the 'Stanley' towed the 'Minto' to Pictou on Tuesday, March 17, she encountered a belt of ice at the entrance to the harbour which had to be blown up with dynamite before she succeeded in forcing her way through. So that Pictou harbour at all times of the year cannot be counted upon to give us regular communication, while, if we use the two routes we can generally count upon a fairly good service. I do not intend to go into the merits of the Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine route. I pointed out the advantages of these routes two years ago as regards distance, and as regards the condition of the ice. There is hardly a time that they could not cross at that place and I am assured by experienced men who are familiar with the conditions there, that if proper landing facilities were provided, a service could be carried on much more regularly there than at present.

There is no doubt in my mind that a tunnel would be a feasible scheme, that it would put an end to this bickering over the winter service for all time to come. While the funds of this Dominion are rolling in so plenteously and we are spending millions in improving the west, building railways and giving subsidies, I cannot see why the government does not take this matter seriously in hand and have an investigation made. It could only be a matter of $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 and surely the east is entitled to some consideration while so much attention is being given to the west. We have no complaint to make about the development of the west, or about the money which is being expended to improve the west, but we certainly must look after the interests of the east. Only last year, the government paid $1,000,000 as a part payment, not as full satisfaction, for the non-fulfilment of the terms of union in respect to crossing the straits in winter. It may not be very long before our people will be asking for another $1,000,000 and if the financial and commercial disaster resulting from the failure to maintain the service last year are to be repeated in the future, $1,000,000 will not give satisfaction to the people of Prince Edward Island. This is a serious matter, and the government should take into consideration whether it would not be well to consult engineers and competent persons as to the construction of the tunnel between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. But, in the meantime we must have a pier. We must have facilities. The tunnel cannot be built in a year, nor in four or five years, and in the meantime we want facilities to carry on our winter service. We want a pier at Carlton point and we must have a new steamer. The steamer 'Stanley' will soon be no good and the steamer 'Minto' has certainly not sufficient capacity to carry the traffic between the mainland and the island. The people of Prince Edward Island have certainly been long suffering. They have been putting up year after year with a great deal of humbug and mismanagement—absolute mismanagement—on the part of the government. I can call it by no other name; there is no excuse for it, as it has been repeated year after year and we have observed it very closely this year. We can get no satisfaction. It probably may be that the captains want to carry out the service satisfactorily. A representative in the local house made the charge that he knew that one of the captains was following instructions in not carrying out the service and that he could prove it. It is a general idea prevailing in Prince Edward Island that they are trying to give a black eye to the Summerside-Cape Tormentine route. The department at Ottawa may be trying to carry out the service, but they apparently do not understand the situation, they do not understand the changes in conditions that are liable to take place within a day in regard to ice and unless you have a local board of control or an agent of the department who has backbone enough to go ahead and perform the service without being hampered with a lot of red tape from Ottawa we will never have a satisfactory service. We ought to have some person on the spot who is in a position to dictate how these steamers shall be run. We must either have an agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries down there who is capable of doing the work or a board of local control such as is advocated by a great many representative men on the island. I do not wish to take up any more time of the House upon this question except to say that while the people of Prince Edward Island realize, it is time the government realized, that this matter has to be dealt with in a business-like way, they have the experiences to show that improvements are needed without delay. They are in a position to know that the two boats we have are not sufficient to perform the service and that we want landing facilities at Carleton point. I beg leave to move the motion which stands in my name.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Copies of all reports, correspondence, petitions and papers that are to be found in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or in any other department, concerning the construction and placing of fish-ladders in the Rivière du Nord, crossing the county of Two Mountains, from its confluence with the Ottawa river, at St. André, in the county of Argenteuil, to St. Jérôme, in the county of Terrebonne, for the purpose of preventing the destruction of fish in the Rivière du Nord.—Mr. Ethier.

Copies of all correspondence, Orders in Council, and other documents, in anywise relating to improvements or work done by the government of the United States: 1st. In the Detroit river and Lake Erie; 2nd. In other international waters.—Mr. Cowan.

Copies of all Orders in Council, memorials, letters, telegrams, and other correspondence, and all other documents and communications in writing, between the first day of January, 1897, and the first day of May, 1903, relating to, or concerning, or in any way having reference to the granting of provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories, or the creation of the said Territories into a province, or provinces.—Mr. Borden (Halifax).

KLONDIKE MINES RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. C. F. McISAAC (Antigonish) moved:

That the petition of the Klondike Mines Railway Company, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for presenting petitions for private Bills, be now read and received and referred to the Select Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. McIsaac) would state what is the reason for asking to extend the time in this particular case. I have no doubt that there may be good reasons, but if we extend the time in this case we will be obliged to extend it in all cases, unless the present application is based on exceptional grounds.

Mr. McISAAC. The charter which it is sought to extend will not expire for a couple of months yet. The promoters of this railway have recently come out from the Klondike, and on reaching Ottawa they found that they would be required to furnish certain information to the Railway Department which they were not able to get before the expiration of the time. The full information has not yet been placed in my hands, but they will be able to give this information to the Standing Orders Committee and all they ask at the present time is to have this matter referred to the Standing Orders Committee, to which the reasons will be submitted.

The PRIME MINISTER. I told my hon. friend that we would reserve judgment as to the merits of the case, but this motion is simply to allow the matter to go to the Standing Orders Committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is understood to be merely formal I shall raise no objection, but I should think that in a case of this kind some special reasons should be given to the House, because we are departing from our rule in acceding to the request of the hon. gentleman. However, as the Prime Minister is satisfied to let it go, I shall raise no further objection.

Motion agreed to.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 39) to make further provision for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—Mr. Brock.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think it is somewhat objectionable for my hon. friend to attempt to define the word animal in the way attempted here. Under it, if there were a canary bird, for instance, in a car, it would be incumbent on the railway company to make provision for its comfort and convenience.

Mr. BROCK. My desire in bringing in this Bill has been to avoid anything which might reduce it to an absurdity. I am very anxious to have it passed, and would be willing to strike out the word bird, if the hon. gentleman desires to do so. I may say that one of the objects of the Bill is to prevent cows being crowded together when being taken to market, and to prevent small animals and birds being crowded together in coops. I do not suppose many canary birds are carried in freight cars.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Would my hon. friend allow me to offer this suggestion ? Certain amendments to the criminal code are now being considered in the department by a gentleman who has had large experience in the drafting of Bills of this kind ; and if my hon. friend will do me the favour of calling on Mr. Fraser in the department, he might be able to meet some of the objections which my hon. friend has in view, and make the Bill more workable than it is in its present shape.

Mr. BROCK. Would it be possible, under these circumstances, to get it passed during the present session ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, yes.

Progress reported.

Mr. McISAAC.

FIRES CAUSED BY RAILWAYS.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. Johns and Iberville) moved second reading of Bill (No. 23) to indemnify those who suffer damages in consequence of fires caused by railways.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Explain.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the Bill which is now before the House to be read a second time, is the exact copy of a Bill introduced last year in the British House of Commons, and the second reading of which was carried by 307 against 80. In spite of that vote, the Bill, presumably through the adverse influence of the leader of the House, did not become law.

According to the jurisprudence which now prevails in England and in Canada, railway companies are not responsible for the fires they may start in running their trains, provided they show that their engines were at the time in perfect order. Such enactments, as I shall show, are contrary to common law. Railway companies, here and in England, enjoy privileges which are granted to them by their charters. Were they in the English-speaking provinces, as in the province of Quebec, left under the operation of the English common law, they would be held responsible for all losses inflicted by them. The whole question is dealt with at length in volume 7 of the reports of the Ontario Court of Appeal, at page 166 of which the following statement of principle is made :

> The general rule of common law is correctly given in Fletcher vs. Rylands, that when a man brings or uses a thing of a dangerous nature on his own land he must keep it in at his own peril, and is liable for the consequences if it escapes and does injury to his neighbours.

The judges of the Privy Council, in the now famous case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company vs. Roy, make a similar statement (see page 231 of the reports, Appeal cases, 1902). The judges of the Privy Council admit that, should the English common law obtain, the railway companies might be held responsible. They are exempt from responsibility solely on the ground that the authority of parliament is supreme; and that parliament having authorized the railway companies to do the very things that are complained of, namely, to use engines for the carrying on of their business, they are not to be held responsible for losses inflicted. Herewith is what the judgment of the Privy Council sets forth, among other things :

> Much was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent as to the peculiar jurisprudence of Quebec ; but in truth there is no such difference between the law of England and the law of Quebec in this respect as he seemed to suppose. The law in England, equally with the law of the province in question, affirms the maxim 'sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas,' but the previous state of the law, whether in Quebec, or France, or England, cannot render inoperative the positive enactment of a statute, and the whole case turns, not upon what was the common law of either country, but what is the true construction of plain words authorizing the doing of the very thing complained of.

The legislature is supreme and if it has enacted that a thing is lawful, such a thing cannot be a fault or an actionable wrong. The thing to be done is a privilege as well as a right and duty, and it seems to their Lordships, it come within the express language of the code (article 356).

As may be seen, the admission is fairly made that it is a privilege pure and simple which parliament has granted to a railway company ; so that if we were to go by the common law, whether English or French, the company would be responsible for the fires it may start on neighbouring properties.

Then again, it seems to me the principle of this Bill cannot be controverted. A railway company should have the right to use its own property, but not the right to use that of its neighbour as well ; and if sparks from its engines set that property on fire and cause losses, the company is actually using that neighbour's property, and not only using it, but misusing it. For these reasons, I trust the principle of this Bill will be agreed to by this House.

Across the line, the States of Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and North Carolina, among others, have enacted laws which provide that railway companies will be responsible for the fires started by their engines. At the last session of parliament, I introduced a Bill on the same lines as this one. The hon. the Prime Minister at the time spoke favourably of the object I had in view. As a measure introduced by a private member has not, as a rule, much chance of passing, I think the best thing I can possibly do will be to hand over this Bill to the government requesting them to have it passed this year. It may be objected that this Bill is not worded as it should be, and that a matter of that kind does not fall within our purview. I am not of that opinion, for if railway companies enjoy privileges granted by this parliament, that same parliament has the right to enact that such companies will be responsible for the losses they cause, and that those who suffer such losses shall be entitled to claim damages. Besides, the matter of the wording of the Bill is a secondary one. It enacts that in case of a fire brought about by a railway company those who are made to suffer from such fires, will be entitled to recover compensation from the company. It does not matter much whether we say that the company shall be responsible for the losses, or that it shall be dealt with in conformity with the common law, notwithstanding any privileges granted by this parliament. The common law is the same in all the provinces ; and it is only by virtue of a special enactment of this parliament that railway companies were declared exempt from any responsibility for losses brought about by the running of their trains.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) I approve of the principle which the Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Demers) has for its object to sanction. In consequence, I shall have much pleasure in voting for the Bill, which, to my mind, lays down an equitable rule in connection with the matter. However, I have some doubts as to whether such a law would wholly meet the purpose which my hon. friend has in view. We are dealing with a question which has been very much discussed by jurists, especially in the province of Quebec, and several have given it as their opinion that the passing of a direct Bill such as this one would be an infringement on the legislative powers of the provinces. After listening to the argument just made by my hon. friend, I admit there may be some doubt on this point. As I am in favour of some such measure being passed, I hope the Bill will be agreed to in consideration of the principle it involves.

In the course of this session, I prepared a Bill dealing with the same matter ; but I was content with laying down in a general way, the principle of the railway companies' responsibility, in the shape of an amendment to the Interpretation Act of the laws of this parliament. This could not have been looked upon as an infringement on provincial rights in the matter of legislation.

As regards the province of Quebec, the principle is already embodied in our laws, and has been recognized by our courts in the case of Roy. That point is quite clear to my mind, in spite of the contention of the hon. the Minister of Justice to the contrary. In an interesting work, the hon. gentleman has endeavoured to show the difference that exists between the legislative power in France and the legislative power in Canada, and has pointed out how much greater it is in our case. But, notwithstanding the force of his argument, I still believe that the question of losses arising from the running of railway trains is one that falls within the purview of provincial legislatures.

In the province of Quebec, if I understand matters rightly, there is an action against any railway company for losses arising from fires set by sparks from its engines. But in the other provinces the law is different. In those provinces, I understand the principle of the English common law is strictly adhered to, and a company incorporated by parliament and enjoying its privileges with the necessary caution, is not to be held responsible for losses inflicted.

Should this Bill become law—and I hope it will—its effect will be to extend to the whole Dominion the very wise principle which obtains in the province of Quebec. If such an enactment be intra vires, it will bring about a change in the common law of the other provinces, and place the railway companies incorporated here on the same footing as those incorporated in the province of Quebec. Farmers will be benefited by the passing of such a law; but should it be ultra vires, I think the railway companies will take that ground for having it set aside. At all events, I am in favour of the Bill.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I cheerfully give my support to this Bill, the object of which my hon. friend, the member for St. Johns and Iberville (Mr. Demers) has so clearly explained. For a long time past the need of such a law has been felt. It is repugnant to reason that railway companies should enjoy privileges such as the new jurisprudence of His Majesty's Privy Council seems to allow them to enjoy. You will remember, no doubt, that this jurisprudence was very forcibly laid down in a judgment rendered by the Privy Council in a case wherein the powerful Canadian Pacific Railway Company and a poor farmer of the province of Quebec, named Adrien Roy, were the interested parties. On a previous occasion, I recounted the various stages through which this now celebrated case was made to pass. About 1901, a Canadian Pacific Railway train, having crossed the property of this settler, a fire started by cinders from the engine destroyed his wood lot and farm buildings. He entered an action for damages against the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the case came up before Mr. Justice Langelier, of whom our bench and bar are justly proud. The judgment of the court awarded the plaintiff damages to the extent of $400 and costs. The case was taken to appeal and the judgment of the Superior Court unanimously maintained. The judgment rendered by the Court of Appeal is a very elaborate document and gives a complete review of the jurisprudence heretofore followed in the province of Quebec. It is a judgment indeed, and it was to be hoped that it would be upheld by the Lords of the Privy Council. However, the Canadian Pacific Railway wished to exhaust all resorts and by means of the appeal of favour, took their case before the Privy Council. Well, notwithstanding the rational construction put by our courts on article 1053 of our civil code, notwithstanding a long list of judgments rendered by the Superior Court and the Court of Appeal, the Privy Council reversed the judgment referred to and established a new jurisprudence, new, at any rate, as regards the province of Quebec. That decision caused a great commotion in our judiciary circles, and was the object of much adverse criticism. I, myself, called the attention of the Minister of Justice last year to this new interpretation of our law. It has always appeared to me that, even under the Railway Act, companies causing losses to properties, situated along their lines, could not escape the responsibility laid down by articles 1053 and 1054 of the civil code. That is also the opinion of the judges of the Superior Court and of the Court of Appeal. In spite of all that, whether we like it or not, we are bound henceforth to go by the new jurisprudence laid down by the Privy Council. The way out of the difficulty is clearly shown in the provisions of the Bill now before us. If we are unwilling to grant special privileges in behalf of railway companies, if we wish them to be on an equal footing with individuals, it goes without saying that the Bill of my hon. friend the member for St. Johns and Iberville (Mr. Demers) should be voted by parliament. This is an opportune time for doing so. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is moving just now for the consolidation of our railway laws. Why should not the principle so clearly laid down in this Bill be embodied in the general law? Such an amendment is imperative if we wish to uphold the principle enacted by our code, and render the railway companies responsible for the losses inflicted by the running of their trains. I shall give my support to the Bill with the hope that the Minister of Railways will find in it the way out of the difficulty created by that unfortunate judgment of the Privy Council.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Yale and Cariboo). I think the Bill is far-reaching in its effects, and it is desirable that it should have its second reading and be referred to the Railway Committee, where the different interests concerned may be heard. I have no objection to its second reading, but am of opinion that it should be referred to the Railway Committee, where we will have every opportunity of hearing every objection that may be raised by those interested.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I agree with my hon. friend who has just spoken that this Bill should be referred to the Railway Committee. It is intended to give compensation for damages in the case of fires caused by sparks from railway locomotives. A Bill of a similar character was introduced in the English House of Commons but not proceeded with when first introduced. It was again reintroduced in the month of February, 1901, and its second reading was carried by a majority of 370 to 80. This shows what the feeling is in England with respect to legislation of this kind. I myself think that the discussion which has taken place in this House regarding the judgment rendered by the Privy Council in the case of Roy and the Canadian Pacific Railway went further than was quite justified by the circumstances. There was no encroachment by the judgment of the Privy Council on the civil laws of the province of Quebec or any of the privileges enjoyed by that province. The principle laid down was this: that when a legislature—the parliament of Canada, for instance—creates a corporation, which it has power to create, so long as that corporation exercises the powers granted it in the manner provided by parliament, there can be no fault on its part for which it may be held responsible in damages. The principle on which the law in the province of Quebec governing damages is based, is that every man is responsible for the damage caused by his fault or that of his agent. But how can there be fault on the part of a corporation, if it is merely carrying out the powers conferred upon it by the legislature which brought it into existence and in the manner provided by that legislature? That is the only question the Privy Council determined. It did not attempt to interfere with the laws of the province of Quebec. The principle laid down was this—and the judgment is based on the doctrine well established everywhere—that there can be no liability for acts done under statutory authority when there is no negligence.

Take the case of Roy and the Canadian Pacific Railway. It would appear—and I am not satisfied that the fact is absolutely true—that sparks from one of the locomotives of the Canadian Pacific Railway, set fire to a building owned by the plaintiff. The point decided by the court was that, so long as the locomotive was equipped with all modern appliances, as required by statute, the company was not in fault and there could be no recourse in damages against it. The statute which authorizes the company to operate its railway determines also the conditions under which the railway may be operated and the locomotives constructed, and one of these is that the locomotives must be equipped with all modern appliances. So long as you comply with the statutes, where can fault come in? That is all the Privy Council held. It is a necessary incident to the exercise of our parliamentary authority and the full enjoyment of our parliamentary institutions, that if this parliament has power to legislate with respect to corporations, it must have the power to vest these corporations with everything required to give effect to that legislation. It would be an impossible condition if a large railway corporation, incorporated by this parliament, would be subject to the local laws of every province regarding the powers conferred upon it. For instance, if the Canadian Pacific Railway should be made subject, as it passes from one province to another, to every local law in respect of the appliances it must use, the operation of that railway would be rendered impossible. It is absolutely necessary that when we give to a corporation powers within our authority, that corporation should have the right to exercise those powers uninterfered with by the laws of any particular province. That certainly is necessary if our institutions are to have full operation and our legislation to have proper effect. This Bill, at first sight, seems to me entirely within our authority, if we think proper to pass it. If we, by our legislation here, can interfere with the civil or common law of any particular province—the civil law of Quebec or the common law of any other province—we can of our own notion restrict our legislation so as to say that it shall not operate in such a manner so as to amend the civil law or the common law of any other province. Whether that would be right and proper is another question. But, while I have not considered the matter very carefully, it seems to me that we have the power to pass such legislation. The matter should go before the Railway Committee in order that all parties may be heard. This is very far-reaching legislation. It is going to undo the legislation we have had heretofore with respect to damages caused by fires arising from the sparks of locomotives.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it will be proper to send the Bill to the Railway Committee, because, so far as the majority of the provinces are concerned, it will alter the law to a very considerable extent, governing the liability of railway corporations. In my own, and I think in all the maritime provinces, the law is that railway companies, authorized by Act of parliament to operate railways, are not liable for damages of this kind, unless occasioned by their negligence. It is entirely a question of negligence. I have not any doubt, speaking without much consideration, as to our power to pass the Bill, because, while this parliament can create a corporation and give it power to operate a railway, it can attach to that power any conditions it sees fit. If a railway company acts in accordance with its charter, it is not liable, except in case of negligence. But it is perfectly competent, as pointed out by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, for us to give that power subject to the condition, if necessary, that certain civil liabilities shall attach to the operation of the railway, even although no negligence can be proved. I would therefore concur, so far as I am concerned, in the proposal of the hon. Minister of Justice to send this Bill to the Railway Committee.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time and referred to the Select Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that Bill (No. 48) to amend the General Inspection Act be read the second time and referred to a special committee, composed of Messieurs McCarthy, Thompson (Haldimand), Parmelee, Henderson, Wilson, Sherritt and Cowan.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have no objection, provided this be not regarded as an affirmation of the principle of the Bill.

Motion agreed to.

INSOLVENCY ACT.

On the Order being called for :

Resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Monk for the second reading of Bill (No. 53) respecting insolvency.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Stand.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this matter has been pretty fully explained, and I would like to take the sense of the House upon the Bill.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) prefers it. But I had the misfortune to be absent when he explained the Bill to the House, and I am sorry to say that I have not had an opportunity to read what he said. I meant to do so before the Bill should come before us again. Probably I shall have an opportunity to read his explanation within the next few days, and shall be better able to discuss the Bill if it is postponed now and brought up again.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) has overlooked the fact that this is the last opportunity we shall have during the present session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Not the last.

Mr. MONK. Only one more day.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is right. But my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will admit that, with the House so thin as at present, he could not have the sense of the House upon the question this afternoon.

Mr. MONK. I should be satisfied to have the sense of the House as it is now composed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONK. If it is impossible, of course, I submit. But I very much fear there will be no other opportunity to take the sense of the House upon this Bill, and I would like to take it now.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will have the opportunity of taking the sense of the House next Monday. And I certainly would prefer it.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to insist unduly ; but I shall insist upon a division if I am in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. There can be no question that the hon. member (Mr. Monk) has the right to move the second reading of the Bill now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the government will say that there will be an opportunity.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly. I have said so to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) and I say so again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not later than next Monday ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not later than next Monday.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Order allowed to stand.

FRUIT MARKS ACT.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (South Wentworth) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 86) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901. He said : My proposal is to add to the Fruit Marks Act, 1901, the following, immediately after section 9 :

9a. Whenever any person having at least a carload of fruit packed in close packages ready for shipment desires it, the Department of Agriculture shall send a qualified inspector as expeditiously as possible to examine the same and brand upon the packages the grade of the fruit therein.

The Fruit Marks Act was passed two years ago and amended a year ago. So in its amended form, it was in operation last season. There was a very heavy crop of apples of poor quality, so that there was an opportunity to test the Act to the fullest extent. It worked remarkably well in many ways. There was one difficulty, however. The inspector was empowered to examine apples anywhere, and, if he found them wrongly branded to mark them. But the Act did not provide that a man, having apples to sell, could have them branded according to their quality by some authority —in this case the authority of the government. To have this done would be an enormous advantage to the growers and shippers of apples. The man who already has a good brand established or is able to establish a brand does not need such a law as this. Perhaps it would be no advantage to him. But it would be an enormous advantage to the ordinary grower who has a carload of apples—or it might be made to apply to less than a car. When this Act was first proposed in the Fruit Growers' Association, this feature of it was discussed. But it was agreed by all that it would be desirable not to have the powers of the inspector extended so far ; the promoters of the Bill had the idea that it would be advisable not to load it up with too many clauses at once, but that it should be tried for a year or two as finally proposed to the House, that all might see how it would work. It has been in operation for these two years, and all those engaged in the business find this fault with it. Any one who is at all conversant with the trade in apples will readily understand what an advantage it would be to a man to have his apples branded with a mark to show that they were of the grade he thought they were. Every one almost, has a different idea of what a No. 1 grade of apples is. But, if a farmer had a carload of apples ready for sale, packed, as he thought, in accordance with the requirements of the Act, and could have them branded No. 1 by a government inspector, he would not have to establish a brand, but it would be already established, and he would have a marketable commodity ready to place on the market either in this country or in England. The market would be prepared for him, and he would have no difficulty in selling. My idea is that the cost of inspection would be defrayed by fees. I hope the House will consider the Bill favourably, and allow it to take its second reading now. It can be further discussed when it comes up in committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I regret that the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) who takes a very deep interest in this question, and who introduced the Bill which my hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Wentworth) proposes to amend, is not present. I would prefer, if possible, that the motion should be delayed. The hon. Minister of Agriculture is expected to be here in about ten days. Still, if the hon. gentleman feels that he is ready to go on and wishes to proceed, we have no right to ask him for further delay. But if it is as convenient to him, I would suggest that it stand until the arrival of the minister, and I move that the debate be adjourned. Meanwhile, I will say that from the advice I have received I think this Bill goes very much beyond what was the intention of the minister in proposing the Act in question. It was not designed that there should be an inspection of fruit by government inspectors except in a secondary degree. The design is that the inspection should be made by the fruit grower or the fruit packer who is in a position to have personal knowledge of the contents of the package, and that government inspection only comes in at a later stage where the inspector has a right to mark a barrel or package of fruit which is found to have been falsely marked. I am inclined to think that the passage of this Bill would involve the employment of a much larger number of inspectors than we have, and that the thing could hardly be worked out successfully. Government inspection in this case cannot be so intelligent as the inspection by the fruit grower or producer himself. My hon. friend proposes that where a carload of fruit is ready the government inspector shall examine it. But how can a government inspector examine that whole carload unless he opens up each package? That, I think, will be found manifestly inconvenient. Surely it would be better in the interest of the fruit grower that he should have the responsibility of marking his fruit himself; the responsibility is upon him, if he is a man of good reputation, and establishes a brand for his fruit, and he desires to preserve that reputation. If on the other hand, his brand turns out to be unreliable, he must suffer the consequence. But I am inclined to think from information I have received—it is not a subject upon which I am as well informed as the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Smith)—but from the advice and information I have received from officers of the department, I am inclined to believe that the object he has in view cannot be carried out, that the scheme is unmanageable, that the inspection and marking of fruit can best be done by the grower or packer who has a personal knowledge of the contents of the package. Any attempt to have a government inspection without an examination of each package would, I am afraid, be found to be unworkable. There are some things from which you can take a sample, and you can brand a number of packages, possibly by testing a sample, because you have a guarantee that comes from their common origin. I am afraid that is not possible with fruit, where the fruit is gathered from different growers and packers. At all events, I would suggest that my hon. friend, who is an experienced fruit grower, and attaches importance to his Bill, would let it stand over until a later stage, because in a few days the minister will be here, and from such information as I have at present, I should be obliged to ask my hon. friend not to press his Bill.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I will consent not to press the Bill in the absence of the minister, but I would like to have an opportunity of bringing it up again. It might pass its second reading now, and be discussed in committee later on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise my hon. friend that there will be an opportunity to discuss it at a later stage, so he will lose nothing by delay. I would make the same observation to my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) who has a Bill on the same subject coming on a few minutes later.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CONCILIATION ACT.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 95) to amend the Conciliation Act, 1900. He said: This Bill is exactly similar to the one that was presented by myself last year, and I presume that during that time it has received some consideration at the hands of the Minister of Labour. In dealing with this matter I might express the wish that the Minister of Labour would give us his own opinion, and some account of the actual operations of the Conciliation Act during the three years it has been in force. There are at the present time, as was shown by the debate in this House last week, a large number of industrial disturbances in the Dominion. In nearly every province attention is being drawn to disagreements between capital and labour; therefore I think, Mr. Speaker, the House will be inclined to give some attention to a proposition which aims to improve the Conciliation Act as much as possible. I notice that the Minister of Labour has gone definitely upon record as altogether in favour of the principle of compulsory investigation rather than compulsory arbitration. I would like to be able to think that these attempts and these experiments that he is making would be effective. But I cannot persuade myself that they will be really effective, not that they will not affect any disputes, but that they will not practically affect any considerable number of the disputes that we are having and that we are likely to have in the future. I submit that we have no warrant whatever to expect in the near future any cessation in the number of labour disputes in this country.

We have seen during the last five years, and more than ever during the last three years, an increase in the number of these disputes. The reason probably has been the general wave of prosperity that has advanced over the country. Everything has been advancing in price, in cost, and labour seems always to be the last to advance and to obtain a share of the prosperity. In this respect prosperity has been practically a curse to the wage earner. The wage earner, whose wages have a tendency to remain at the same figure, cannot get them advanced in many instances without going in to industrial trouble, and he has often had to sacrifice weeks and weeks of his salary in an attempt to get his wage scaled up to meet the requirements called for by the increased cost of everything on which he has to spend his wages. Speaking especially for the city I know best, prosperity has been a most serious drawback to the men who work for wages. Of course, I claim that we have no right, at all events, to condemn the principle of compulsory arbitration so far as we know what its record has been. It has only been in operation seven or eight years, I think, under a British form of government, that is in New Zealand. They have experience there as well as we have in rising markets, and there is no doubt that the Act has been successful in abolishing strikes. There is some difference of opinion at whose cost success has been gained. It is very generally supposed that the worker has gained the largest number of awards made. On the other hand, I think we can find in New Zealand itself that the workers, although they agree to the principle are no more enthusiastically in favour of it than are the employers themselves. The employers claim this one thing for the Act, at all events, that it has abolished suicidal and industrial disputes in the matter of strikes and lockouts.

It is taken into the court; it is separate altogether from the local court, but, at the same time into the court where the dispute is considered and adjusted while the men are at work, while the wages are being paid, while industry is continued, and whatever the result is you have the award loyally accepted by both sides. At the present time I believe there is a probability of one award finally being put to test. For myself, I shall watch with some concern the outcome of this matter, although I am not prepared at all to agree in advance that any objection to an award, either on the part of an employer, if the award may be against him, or on the part of the employee, if the award be against him, or if one or two objections are to be taken, it shall be considered as a condemnation of the principle of compulsory arbitration. If it were possible, and I believe most things are possible in this country, if we attempt them in the right way, even by means of legislation in this House, I favour this principle because I believe it makes for industrial peace. In view of the enormous distance that there is in this country between the present condition and industrial peace, I believe it is something to be looked for and to be worked for. The Bill that I have introduced simply attempts, or seeks to amend the Conciliation Act of 1900. I am ready to believe that there is some merit in the suggestions that have been put into these clauses because I find the idea exactly carried out in the Bill that this House was discussing the other evening, called an Act to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes. That Bill seeks practically to apply the same principle that is involved in Bill No. 95, but it applies it only to railways. There seems to be no doubt that the promoter of the Bill expects good to result from it, but the question that is raised and the question that must be raised in everybody's mind is: Why not extend the principle of that Bill to other industries that we can affect, to the mines especially and to large manufacturing industries? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the principle is good in connection with railways, it would be equally good in connection with the general industries of the country, and I do submit that the probabilities are that it would be a great deal more useful and that it would certainly be a good deal more availed of. At the present time, as was shown in the debate the other evening, the larger organizations in connection with railways have got beyond that period in the life of labour organizations when strikes are necessary. They no longer strike. The principal railway organizations of this country and of this continent no longer have to resort to strikes. Their differences are settled by conciliation, by conferences, by appeals, first to one official then to another official, right up to the vice-presidents and presidents of the road, and if there is no agreement then come to with the representatives of the railway system, the chief officers of other systems are called in both by the railway corporations and by the labour organizations. This practice for the last eight or ten years, has resulted in practically abolishing strikes on Canadian railways in so far as the old established brotherhoods are concerned. Strikes by the newer organizations which are brought about by the desire of the railway companies not to have to deal with any other bodies of employees as bodies, are continually arising, they will arise in future and this railway Conciliation Bill will be brought into operation to that extent, but I believe not in the same degree as it would be if applied to the general business of the country. Although the Conciliation Act is something to the credit of the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), I believe he could tell us that it does not, as a matter of fact, affect many of the disputes that arise, and that under this Act they are settled neither satisfactorily nor unsatisfactorily, because they simply wear themselves out in the course of time, and the reason for this is not because the parties to the dispute are necessarily opposed to conciliation. In any serious dispute, I take it, and it is a fact, that either party would welcome conciliation if it could be brought about by a third party without either of the disputants appearing to solicit it, because, in the matter of a labour dispute, as in a larger dispute, the party who is calling for an armistice, the party who is calling for cessation of hostilities or for intervention, is practically admitting that he is beaten, and employers will not ask for conciliation because they are afraid it will give heart to the men on strike, and labour organizations which have a strong fund to support their members, are reluctant to ask for conciliation because they are afraid it will be taken as an admission that they have lost the day, and that finally in the award it will be used against them. It was this important consideration, I believe, in connection with the big strike in New Zealand, in 1890 or 1892, that first led the statesmen of that country to formulate their Compulsory Arbitration Act, which Act practically operates altogether independently of the expressed wish of either of the parties. I believe that if our Conciliation Act could be so amended that it could be put into operation, at all events, as far as conciliation is concerned, and if the minister had the power and also the duty in connection with the labour dispute of making an investigation and attempting conciliation, the probability is that it would be found easy to bring the parties together and would result in the ending of many industrial disputes.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) has not concluded his remarks ?

Mr. PUTTEE. No, I have not quite concluded.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, out of respect to the memory of the late Mr. Justice Mills, for a long time a prominent and very much respected member of this House, and so as to permit hon. members to attend his funeral, which will take place this evening, I now have the honour to move that the House do adjourn.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I esteem it my duty, Sir, under the circumstances and out of the respect that we owe to the gentleman who was so long a prominent figure in the public life of Canada, and who at the time of his death occupied a very high position on a judicial bench of this country, to second the motion.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 12, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TRANS-CANADA RAILWAY—CORRECTION.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I would like to correct an error in an answer given by me to a question yesterday. I was asked if there had been any contract entered into with the Trans-Canada Railway Company for any portion of the line. The other portions of the answer were all right, but in the first part I overlooked the fact that a contract had been entered into last January for sixty miles of a railway which is really a portion of the Trans-Canada Railway.

TO CHANGE THE NAME OF HUDSON'S BAY.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 173) to change the name of Hudson's Bay.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. MACLEAN. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen will hear me. I think there is good political reason and good national reason for the introduction of this Bill. It is an assertion of our supremacy over the waters of Hudson's Bay and the adjoining territory. We have not been very successful in maintaining our supremacy and control over the northern half of this continent in the past. We lost the great valley of the Mississippi through inattention; we lost Louisiana; we lost Texas; we lost Oregon and the Pacific coast——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). And the state of Maine.

Mr. MACLEAN. We lost Alaska——

Mr. LEMIEUX. And you lost North Ontario.

Mr. MACLEAN. And hon. gentlemen opposite may lose something else later on—they may lose their present seats. Our right and title to a portion of the Yukon is now disputed. And, as has been said, we lost the state of Maine. And nearly all these losses occurred because Canadians themselves failed to assert their rights and to assert their supremacy over their own country. The Hudson's Bay country is coming to be a valuable country. I believe there is a great future for us in that respect, and I say we ought to begin now to assert our supremacy in regard to that territory, we ought to give it a distinctively Canadian name, and I do not know any better name to apply to those waters than to call them the Canadian sea. There are but two seas larger than Hudson's Bay, the Mediterranean and the Carribean sea.

Mr. CLARKE. What about the Caspian sea?

Mr. MACLEAN. The Caspian sea is much smaller than Hudson's Bay, and we ought to be patriotic enough and Canadian enough——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman intend to include all these three seas in his Bill?

Mr. MACLEAN. Does the hon. gentleman think I do? I am comparing these seas to Hudson's Bay, though it is not a bay, it is a great sea with an area of over half a million square miles. The area of Hudson's Bay is larger than that of all our lakes combined. The great lakes of Canada only include 100,000 square miles, but Hudson Bay includes half a million square miles, and has a name that is not properly applied to it. It may be said that I propose to remove an old historical landmark and to change the name. But, Sir, the discoverer of Hudson's Bay, or rather the man by whose name it is known, has a monument in the Hudson river in New York state, and he would still have a monument, if this Bill goes through, in Hudson Straits, and he is embalmed in Rip Van Winkle in a way that will last for ever. The motion I make has been suggested to me by men who have been studying the facts in connection with Hudson's Bay, by men who have been studying the geography of that country, by men who have been reading the history of the country, and the way in which we have lost territory. I think a very good opportunity is now presented to us for asserting our supremacy in that country. I hope it is true that the government in some way are already asserting supremacy in that country, that they are at the present time collecting customs duties there and planting the flag. If we do not plant the flag in Hudson's Bay, there are enterprising men and rivals of ours who will soon do it, and who have been setting up pretensions there, as they have set up pretensions in the Yukon. These things ought to cause us to reflect, and while hon. gentlemen opposite who have not been very anxious about protecting Canadian territory, and who have been anxious to see the old flag removed from the northern half of it—some of them may jeer and laugh at it——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, Oh.

Mr. MACLEAN. Now the sore point comes. Now I touch on the raw. Now is the time to turn the other way. In the light of all our past experience, of this loss of territory, of this abandonment of territory, I say it is in the public interest that such a Bill as this should be introduced. It is the duty of the government to show that they take an interest in a question like this, that they are interested in the maintenance of Canadian supremacy on this half of the continent, and that they are doing something now to hold that country for Canada. I hope they intend to give some encouragement to our friend Capt. Bernier in his efforts to plant the flag on the North Pole. I am quite willing so far as I am concerned, to support that scheme. I say this Bill is of the greatest national importance, it is important to the empire, and although it may be modified in the way it is drafted, I hope it will meet with the unanimous support of this House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—THE TREADGOLD CONCESSIONS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I beg to bring before the notice of this House the question of which I gave notice some time ago, concerning the Treadgold concessions, in the Yukon. At the last session of this House a debate arose upon these concessions, but it was in the dying hours of the session, and not as much attention was given to it as would otherwise have been given. I find on referring to the 'Hansard' that the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton), in replying to some remarks made by the leader of the opposition, spoke as follows:

Perhaps it would have been more satisfactory to the House if, at an earlier period of the session, when we were not in a hurry with the proceedings necessarily pressing upon our minds at the close of parliament, a fuller discusion of this whole matter could have taken place. I have only to say that I should welcome the subject if it is brought up by my hon. friend or by any other member of the House, at some future time, because the whole subject is one in regard to which I will welcome full and complete discussion.

Now, Sir, we are only complying with the invitation given to us last session by the hon. gentleman, in bringing this matter to the notice of the House. As hon. gentlemen will see, it is an important matter, these are very important concessions, and we think it is advisable that the House should know the conditions under which these concessions were made, their importance, and the extent of the grants which are given to Mr. Treadgold and his associates. There were two sets of Orders in Council. The first set is composed of three orders which were passed on the 12th of June, the 29th of June and the 7th of December, 1901. Then on the 21st of April, 1902, as I will show later on, after some representations had been made to the government, the Orders in Council passed in 1901 were cancelled, and the Order in Council dated the 21st of April, 1902, was passed, making almost the same grants to Mr. Treadgold and his associates. It is necessary for me first of all to point out to the House the importance of the water supply in the Yukon, and of some system by which miners in the Yukon district may be supplied with water. I can find no better authority upon this subject than the remarks which were made on the occasion I have alluded to by the Minister of the Interior. Speaking on the 13th of May last, he said:

The whole subject has given the government a great deal of consideration, and anxious consideration, in order to bring about the best results. A question which has not yet been realized in regard to the development of the mining ground of the Yukon Territory as completely as it will be realized, is the question of the water supply. So long as the rich pockets upon the creeks now well known continue to be worked, the effects of the lack of a proper water supply are not likely to be seriously felt. But as soon as these beds begin to be exhausted—and we are getting pretty near to that now—the difficulty about the water supply will press for attention. There is an enormous quantity of gravel of a much lower grade than the miners have been heretofore operating upon, which it will be necessary to work if that portion of the country which is producing the largest quantity of gold is to be kept up to its present position. It was the desire of the government to secure the inauguration of some scheme whereby water would be brought in on a large scale, and, to do that we felt that it would be justifiable and proper in the interest of the country that pretty liberal privileges and concessions should be given.

In order to further show the importance of the water supply in the Yukon. I beg leave to quote from a letter which was addressed on the 11th of November, 1901, by an engineer of repute in the Yukon, to the then Minister of Justice, he said:

The cutting of the timber and opening up of the country has changed the conditions so that as soon as our spring opens up the snow melts much faster than in past years when we had more timber. The majority of miners who are situated on small streams, gulches and hillsides find that their water supply dries up so early in the summer that they had not even time to wash out their winter dumps, so that the water supply is a very serious one, and the lack of it has retarded the mining interests in the past year very much. . . . . It would require, at least 10,000 inches of water distributed through the district—the district referred to is at least sixty-three miles—to supply the different miners within this district, water to wash their gold from their different claims that are now known to be good properties, to say nothing of other ground that may prove good on being developed.

Water must take the place of wood; most of the creeks have had all the wood cut from them. The miners have had to go some distance, so that the cost now runs up to $25 per cord in some places, and will cost more as it becomes more scarce. In using water, all of the higher banks can be washed from top to bottom, instead of working only a few feet, of the drifted ground three feet more or less where it is found the richest. All of the creek beds that have been partially worked by the ordinary method can be worked over again and be made to pay by the use of water.

This is a very important statement in view of what has taken place in granting the concessions of which I have spoken.

So you see it is important that some means must be taken whereby a supply of water can be placed at the disposal of the Yukon miner or the gold will not be removed for hundreds of years.

In 1900 a petition was signed by the inhabitants of the Yukon territory to the Governor General. I see that a committee had been entrusted by their fellow citizens in the Yukon with the duty of making representations to the government in regard to what was going on in the Yukon at that time. These gentlemen, in the first paragraph of this petition say:

That on the 13th day of February, 1900, the undersigned were duly appointed a committee of the citizens of the Yukon Territory, to petition for and secure representation of the said citizens on the Yukon council and in the House of Commons of Canada.

Then, they go on to say, amongst other things, speaking of the concessions which have been made in the Yukon:

On the 25th day of November, 1897, the then gold commissioner, contrary to the mining regulations then in force and in direct breach of faith with the miners who were then exploring and prospecting Dominion creek, closed the said creek against locations, and in 1898, the gold commissioner, together with the then commissioner of the Yukon territory, closed the hillsides and benches along said Dominion creek, against locations by the free miners of the Yukon Territory, and this closure was enforced by the recognized authorities until the 11th day of July, A.D. 1898.

On the 13th day of March, 1899, contrary to the regulations made by Order in Council, all benches and hillsides on Bonanza and Eldorado creeks——

I understand that these two creeks are amongst the most valuable in the Yukon district.

—were closed against locations by free miners and said action, was, on the 5th day of September, 1899, confirmed by the Privy Council of Canada, and said districts have never been reopened to the locations of placer mining claims.

During the time when these closures were being made and enforced on the various creeks, hillside and bench claims, in the gold mining region of the Yukon Territory, large parts of the said closed portions and other parts of the Yukon Teritory were granted by the government of Ottawa to certain persons many of whom never at any time were in the Yukon Territory, as hydraulic concessions, and certain fractions have been granted in compensation for alleged grievances, which alleged grievances ought never to have been in existence.

Thus while the creeks were closed to the ordinary and necessary prospector as above set forth, in the autumn of 1899, the relocation of abandoned claims were entirely done away with in the Yukon Territory. Population was driven from the Yukon Territory by what was a practical prohibition of development, large tracts of richest placer mining ground of the Yukon Territory have been handed over in concessions and the said concessions include and take in valuable fractions which have been denied to the prospector and have been handed over to the concessionaires for the small sum of one hundred and fifty dollars per mile, so that at the present time prospection and new discoveries have practically ceased.

They then pray to the Governor General in Council as follows :

Wherefore your petitioners pray that :

Third, the necessity of opening for location to free miners all parts of the Yukon Territory owned by the government which are fit for placer mining.

Fifth, the necessity for altering the hydraulic mining regulations so as to secure for the free miner the right to locate, record and work any ground which is fit for placer mining whether covered by a concession or not.

Sixth, the adoption and enforcement of such mining regulations as will encourage to the utmost the prospector, first, the miner, second, and the investor, third, and throw open the country for the fullest and free development.

Now, Sir, while these locations were closed, as was represented by this petition to the Governor General this was going on in Ottawa here : In March, 1898, the Minister of the Interior directed that Bonanza, Eldorado and their tributaries and benches should be closed against location. This was followed on October 7, 1899, by a regulation closing all lapsed claims in the territory against re-location. In the year and a half which followed, without the knowledge of the Yukon people the greater part of our richest placer ground was included in so-called hydraulic concessions. On Hunker creek were granted—the Williams (2½ square miles) ; the Milne (2 square miles) ; the Anderson (2½ square miles). On the Klondike, including Bear and Lindow creeks, was granted,—the Boyle (50 square miles). On Bonanza—the Philip (5 square miles) ; the Bronson & Ray (15 square miles), and the Matson-Doyle (3 square miles) were granted. On Quartz creek another concession (about 4 square miles) was granted to the same Boyle, while the other creeks heretofore mentioned were almost similarly blanketed by concessions which were obtained by fraud in most cases.

Then came the Order in Council of June 12, 1901, to which I now wish to direct the attention of the House. The Order in Council consists of the preamble and the tender made by Treadgold and his associates was included in the Order in Council, as appears to me, without any amendment whatever; that is to say that these gentlemen made a proposal to the government, they wrote the government a letter in which they said : We want a concession in the Yukon on such and such terms, and the government simply took the letter and incorporated it in the Order in Council without, as it appears, as far as I can see, changing any part of it. The preamble of the Order in Council says :

Whereas the mining now carried on in the Klondike district is, because of the inadequate supply of water necessarily confined to the washing of the richest gravel only comparatively small in area, thus leaving large tracts of gold-bearing gravels unworked ; and from the information obtained from the gold commissioner of the Yukon Territory and others it is believed that the riches of the Klondike district can only be properly utilized by such a water supply as that which the before mentioned applicants are prepared to establish.

Then the Order in Council goes on to say that :

Therefore, the Governor General in Council is pleased to order and doth hereby order, that the said application by the said Malcom H. Orr-Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold and Walter Barwick, bearing date the 31st May, 1901, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and which is hereby made a part of this Order in Council, shall be and the same is hereby accepted.

This Order in Council is the most extraordinary document, perhaps, to which the attention of this House has ever been called. A proper value can only be put upon the concessions made by this Order in Council when the Order in Council is properly dissected and properly reflected upon. First of all the Order in Council gives the concessionaires, or the grantees :

The sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river at any point or points between its entry into the Yukon river and Flat creek for the purpose of generating power with which to pump water to work the auriferous deposits in the district hereinafter termed 'The District') comprising the beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, of Bonanza, Bear and Hunter creeks and their tributaries.

I will show afterwards by quoting from some authorities who live in the Yukon Territory the extent of the district and I think I will be able to show that the district comprises probably the richest part of the Klondike. These people have a prior right to divert the water and establish their pumping stations so as to create this power over an extent of forty miles of country from the Yukon to Flat creek. Then, having given them the sole right to thus divert the water of the Klondike river, the Order in Council goes on to give them :

The prior right . . . to divert and take water from the Klondike river for distribution and use in the district especially upon the hills and benches.

The right on any creek or tributary within the district to divert, take, impound and store for mining purposes any water not used by any free miner for the working of his claim on such creek or tributary under the regulations now in force for placer mining, or respecting the diversion of water for mining purposes in the Yukon Territory.

Afterwards, by an Order in Council of the 7th December, 1901, this right on Rock creek which is the principle creek in that district, was limited to 2,500 miners' inches. I presume that many gentlemen in this House are as ignorant of what is a 'miner's inch,' as I was before I began the study of this question, and it will probably be well to define the term here. When you say a 'miner's inch' one would think that this was a small quantity of water, but I find in the official 'Gazette' of 1902 page 82 that a miner's inch has been defined by the Department of the Interior as follows :

A miner's inch shall mean the passage of one and a half cubic feet of water per minute.

And if we consult the dictionaries, we find that a miner's inch is defined to be :

The amount of water that will pass in twenty-four hours through an opening one inch square under a pressure of 6 inches.

I have also heard from a competent authority, that a miner's inch is equal to a volume of water twelve feet square.

The Order in Council goes on to give the right :

The right at any point or points in the bed, banks, valley, slopes and hills of the Klondike river between its mouth and Flat creek to construct and maintain dams, cribs, intakes, flumes and any other works necessary for the generation of power and the right of entry upon and way through any lands and any mining ground for the purpose of such construction and maintenance.

The right to purchase any Crown lands required by the grantees for the purposes of their works at a price not exceeding ten dollars per acre, saving and reserving all the timber, mines and minerals upon or under such lands.

The right at any point or points in the district to build, maintain and operate pumping stations, electrical works and reservoirs.

The right of entry upon and way through any lands and any mining ground for the purpose of constructing, laying and maintaining flumes, ditches and pipe lines for conveying the grantees' water supply to any point within the district.

The right of entry upon and way through any lands and any mining ground within the district and within the Indian river district for the purpose of constructing and maintaining overhead or underground wires and any other structures for the transmission of electricity for any purpose whatsoever throughout the said districts, and the right to levy and collect such tolls as may be approved by the Governor General in Council for the use of electricity in the said districts.

Then it gives the right

To use, distribute and dispose of the water delivered by the grantees within the district.

Therefore these grantees got first of all, the sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river in this large district ; they got the prior right under this Order in Council to take all the water which is necessary and which they wanted to take, and then they got the right to use, dispose of, and to distribute this water within the district. They got this right subject to no payment except the royalty :

The right, subject to no payment except the royalty prescribed upon output, to enter upon, make entry for any work all mining locations now or hereafter abandoned on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks and their tributaries.

It would seem at first glance that this power is not very important, because as the House wil notice it only gives the right of entry over the abandoned claims, but anybody who knows anything about this question ; anybody who has studied it at all, will see that this right is of paramount importance. Abandoned claims are not at all claims which have been abandoned because they are not good claims. For instance, when a miner has staked out a claim and he has not sufficient means to work it, or has not sufficient appliances, he will work it for a short time, and then abandon it, but here are a great many claims, there are thousands of claims in the Klondike as in all other gold-bearing regions, which have been abandoned and which have been worked over again at enormous profit. The House will, therefore, see the importance of the statement which was made in the petition to the Governor General in Council that I have just read. The House will also note the importance of the closing up of this rich district to the prospector and to the free miner ; the prohibition which was imposed upon them against retaking or reclaiming the abandoned claims. The House will remember that at a certain period in 1898 and 1899 these districts were closed against the free miner by regulations emanating from the department at Ottawa. These very same claims, the abandonment of which had been ordered by regulation of the Department of the Interior, were handed over by this regulation to the grantees, the only obligation imposed upon them being the payment of royalty. There was no stipulation for any other payment whatever. Therefore, at once, these grantees came into competition with the free miner, and with such competition the free miner was not in a position to compete, and so these gentlemen got the abandoned claims that were to be found in this very rich district. I call the attention of the House particularly to this, because it is one of the parts of the Order in Council which was not repealed or changed in any manner, shape or form, by the subsequent Order in Council which was passed on the 21st of April, 1902.

Then they have the prior right :

The prior right, if mineral-bearing lodes or deposits of any kind whatever be discovered through the operations of the grantees upon Crown lands, or upon lands or locations owned or leased by the grantees within the district, to enter upon and purchase locations embracing the discoveries in the manner prescribed by the regulations governing mining in the Yukon Territory.

Then they have the right to take timber from Crown lands subject to the payment of dues, and they have also :

The exclusive right, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to construct, lay, maintain, supply with water and operate bedrock flumes, and any other flumes for supplying water in the district ; provided that every free miner shall have the right of constructing flumes for the purpose of conveying to his claim the lawful amount of water to which he is entitled under the regulations now in force for placer mining in the Yukon Territory, and any water that he shall purchase from the grantees ; and he shall also have the right of constructing flumes for the purpose of draining his claim.

Therefore, under this Order in Council, they have the right to dispose of and sell the water which they had the prior right to take out of the Klondike, and they were the only people who could lay pipes or flumes so as to distribute this water throughout this district. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be in order to discover what is the area of the territory which was handed over to these concessionaries. I quote from 'Hansard' a question which was put to the ministry during last session of parliament. It is as follows :

What area of the Klondike is by this concession given over to such syndicate, and closed to the general public ?

The answer to that question was given in the following words by the Minister of the Interior :

Claims on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks and their tributaries, which have been staked out by miners and thereafter abandoned and allowed to lapse.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Now, Sir, this will not probably give the House a true conception of the extent and the value of this immense concession. I beg leave to quote from a newspaper which no doubt my hon. friends on the Treasury benches know very well. It is the Dawson 'Morning Sun.' This paper, I may tell the House, is the government organ in the Yukon ; or it is the most friendly paper in the Yukon to the ministers, and the fact of the matter is that the Saturday edition of the Dawson 'Morning Sun' is the official 'Gazette' for the district. I find this among the papers in a return which was brought down by the government in reply to a motion made in the House. The 'Morning Sun' of February 14th, 1902, came out with some startling headlines. I must say that it seemed to take a long time for the people of the Yukon to correctly seize the importance of the concessions which had been handed over to Mr. Treadgold and his associates, but they apparently woke up one fine morning, and the Dawson 'Morning Sun' came out with an article which I shall quote, and which was preceded by very large headlines. Some one asked me a moment ago what this district comprised, and in answer to that I shall quote this newspaper, which I suppose is well informed, and which would certainly not give information to the public wantonly, nor would it be likely to give any information which would be false, especially if that information were to injure the government which this newspaper then supported. It says :

WHAT IT MEANS.

Three hundred and fifty square miles of territory.
Two hundred and twenty-five thousand square acres.
Twenty thousand dollars a day earned now.
Five hundred and twenty thousand dollars a month earned now.
Three million one hundred and twenty thousand dollars earned in six months.
Ten million dollars earned in three years.
Three thousand eight hundred relocations last year.
Three thousand seven hundred renewals last year.
Loss of revenue to the government.
Loss of business to merchants.
Shrinkage in securities.
Values reduced.
Miners deserting territory.
Confidence gone.

The 'Sun' then goes on to say :

Public opinion was quickly aroused when the 'News' appeared on the streets last night with the first exposure of the gigantic mining grab attempted by Treadgold & Co. A mass meeting was quickly arranged for and the A. B. Hall promptly engaged for Monday evening at 8 o'clock. Every man who has anything at stake in the country should be present and support the resolution which will be presented for the endorsement of the people present.

The map published in the Daily 'News' yesterday, showing the dimensions of the enormous wet blanket upon future development which is cast upon the Dawson mining division by the Treadgold concession, was an object lesson that probably did more to arouse a deep public interest in the subject than any arguments against the creation of this iniquitous monopoly that have been or can be made.

The map shows a territory covered by this concession of about 350 square miles, or over 225,000 acres. It shows also that this is the richest portion of Yukon territory in its number of gold-bearing streams and its mining development. It shows about eighty streams that have been located and in addition many others that have not as yet been named. With this area there are thousands of claims—creek, bench and hillside—that would in a short time be staked and developed were it not for the fact that the individual miner has been robbed of this mining territory so near to his base of supplies, in order that a wealthy syndicate might be made a present of it; to have and to hold until 1905, whether they do any development on it before that year or not.

That some of the claims embraced have been abandoned is no argument. In every placer mining camp claims are abandoned as worthless and afterwards relocated and worked at a profit. Many of the Klondike pioneers, for instance, abandoned their claims on Eldorado, and even during last year only 3,800 miners relocated claims that other miners had abandoned. Here follows a list of the principal creeks and gulches that are closed to development by the concession.

The paper goes on to give an enumeration of the creeks and their tributaries which were conceded to these people, or over which they had a monopoly; and it gives this result: the Upper Bonanza, with fourteen tributaries; Last Chance, with three tributaries; Hunker Creek, with sixteen tributaries; Eldorado, with eleven tributaries; Lower Bonanza, with twenty-six tributaries; Bear Creek, with one tributary; and Gold Bottom, with three tributaries. The paper adds:

> In addition to the above are innumerable creeks and gulches which have no names that appear on any map, but upon each and all of them there are claims a number of which lapse each year.

The House will see the value of the concession which was given to these people, not by any comment I am making on the Order in Council, but by the explanation given by this organ of the government, and, I take it, a paper which must be well informed as to the state of affairs in the Yukon territory.

Now, what were the conditions imposed on these people by the Order in Council?—Because the House will say, surely these great privileges and monopolies were not given to the grantees unless some conditions were imposed on them, or unless an equivalent was given, if not to the government, at least to the unhappy miners who had been, I may say, defrauded by the concessions which were given by the government. By the Order in Council which was passed on the 12th of June, 1901, it was provided:

> The grantees shall before December 31, 1902, have expended upon the objects of their enterprise at least the sum of $250,000.

It was also stipulated that before the end of December, 1902, they were to deliver within the district during the summer season of 1905, not later than July 1, 1905, at least 1,000 miners' inches of water. I may say that by the Order in Council of the 7th of December, 1901, this was altered. They were still obliged to expend $250,000 in work so as to bring this concession into operation, and to supply the miners in the district with at least 2,000 inches of water. There were other important particulars in this first Order in Council which were not changed by the second, and this very important concession was given to them:

> The grantees shall not be required to pay to the Crown or to the district or local authorities any rentals, occupation rents, assessments, or other dues in respect of any lands except timber lands, or in respect of any flumes, drains, properties or profits other than import customs duties, school taxes and a royalty on the gold mined in the mines owned by them, or any tax or assessment which may be substituted for such royalty.
> The properties of the grantees shall be exempt from representation.

To the ordinary mind the word representation here does not mean much; but when I tell the House what it means, the House will see the enormous value of the concession given to these gentlemen. Under the regulations, which I have here, the ordinary free miner is obliged first of all to pay $15 to become a free miner; he is obliged to get a certificate, which costs $10 or $15, and he has to pay every year a renewal fee of $15. That is not all: he has either to work his claim to the extent of $200 or pay $200 to the government every year. That is what is called representation. These gentlemen, for some reason, were exempt from representation. They were put on a footing much better than that of the ordinary free miner. They had not to pay anything for their certificate; they had not to do any work whatever on their claims; and if they did not, they were not obliged, like the ordinary free miner, to pay this sum of $200 to the government. The House will see at a glance what an enormous loss of revenue this is to the treasury of the country. Why was this concession given to the grantees? I would like some explanation on that point. Then, under the regulation which was passed in accordance with this Order in Council, they have the greatest rights of expropriation.

> The rights conferred upon the grantees shall extend for the period of thirty years, at the expiration of which period all exclusive and prior rights granted to them shall cease and be determined, but the works and structures built by the grantees together with the lands, rights and easements which they shall have purchased and acquired shall remain the grantees' private property.

The grantees shall have the right to assign the rights conferred upon them to any company or companies or to any persons associated together for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects of the grant or any part of them.

Now, I call the attention of the House to this part of the Order in Council :

The charge which the grantees shall be entitled to make for the use of such water on each claim shall not exceed one dollar per miner's inch per hour.

So that the miners were obliged to take water from these people. They could not build a flume for themselves or take any water from the Klondike to work the richest parts of the Klondike, but they were obliged to pay these people one dollar for every miner's inch of water per hour. By the Order in Council of 7th December, 1901, this charge for water was reduced from one dollar to twenty-five cents per miner's inch per hour. The implication is that there must have been something wrong in this concession at the outset—that the enormous price put upon this water was put upon it either in absolute ignorance of the position of affairs in the Yukon or from some other motive, which I will not characterize at this moment. As I have said, it took some time before the citizens of the Yukon realized the extent and the importance of the monopoly which had been given to Mr. Treadgold and his associates. I find in the return brought down, a communication from the late Senator Wood, to the Department of the Interior, inclosing a letter from the firm of Holme Miller & Company, of Dawson. This letter is addressed to the firm of the late Senator Wood, in Hamilton, and is dated February the 13th, 1902, some time after the passing of the Order in Council, which was passed on the 7th of December, 1901. From that moment therefore the government were made aware of the appalling state of affairs created by this concession. They were then put upon their guard and notified to have this condition of things put an end to immediately. The letter is as follows :—

We are sending you a marked copy of a Dawson paper, which marked article we wish to call your attention to.

If this is allowed to stand, it means that two-thirds of our gold-bearing area is closed to the prospector and miner, and absolutely tied up for a period of three years and possibly longer. It will mean a falling off in trade in all lines from 25 per cent to 50 per cent. Surely you cannot be so disinterested in the development and the advancement of this section as to sit quietly by and to allow such an outrage to common decency in matters of government to be committed.

Every manufacturer, every wholesaler in Canada is indirectly interested in this matter, and should not rest until this order of affairs is reversed.

Just such administration of affairs in the Yukon has driven over 8,000 honest, law-abiding English, Canadian, Australian, and American prospectors from this section, and if this condition of affairs continues to exist, there will be nothing left but a skeleton of a once prosperous and wealthy community.

If you could come with us to a visit to the creeks we would show you miles of ground held under concession lying idle, while adjoining ground resembles a human beehive, alive with men delving for the golden treasure.

We do not over-estimate this matter. We have been silent heretofore, but the time is now arrived when every man, every woman and every child in the Yukon Territory should enter a protest against a measure aimed against their prosperity and their homes.

Believing you will consider this matter carefully and act accordingly.

We remain, yours truly,
HOLME, MILLER & CO.

In a subsequent letter of February the 17th, the same gentleman writes :

We are sending you to-day marked copies of the Dawson 'Daily News' and the 'Morning Sun.' The latter paper is the government's organ here. We wish to call your attention to the articles referring to the 'Treadgold grants.'

We wish to enlist your services in an endeavour to have this grant repealed. This means the success or failure of many a business enterprise in Dawson. To us it means a loss in trade of 25 to 50 per cent. Neither the 'Daily News,' which is an independent paper, or the 'Sun,' the government's organ, over-estimate the damage this grant will do to the commercial interests here.

If there is anything you can do in this matter, any influences you can bring to bear, we trust you can see your way clear to do so.

This firm must have been a reputable concern or the late Senator Wood, who was a very estimable gentleman and a very good friend of the government, would not have thought it worth while to transmit this communication to the department with the extracts from the newspapers referred to. I am not making any comments on the concession, because no comments of mine could convey such an idea of the iniquity of the grant as those passed by the people themselves in the Yukon district. The 'Daily Sun' of the 15th February said—and I am taking this again from the return laid on the Table :

People are just commencing to realize the enormity of the steal attempted by the Treadgold concession holders. No other term will correctly indicate the nature of the transaction. Rights which belong to the public are being taken without compensation or shadow of authority. What can this be called other than a theft ?

There was also a meeting held at Dawson city, a full report of which is given in the 'Morning Sun' of the 16th February. This was not a meeting of citizens, prepared in any event to condemn the government unheard, it was not a meeting of opponents of the government, but a meeting of the Liberal club of Dawson city.

The 'Sun' said describing this meeting :

An earnest and enthusiastic meeting of the Liberal club was held last evening at Pioneer Hall for the purpose of discussing the recent Order in Council concerning the Treadgold concession.

That meeting was presided over by the Crown Prosecutor, who was then held in great esteem in government circles, and who is now the governor or commissioner of Yukon. The 'Sun' report goes on to say :

One hundred and fifty members were present, and vice-president F. T. Congdon, called the meeting to order. He stated that, while the meeting had been called at the instance of the Liberal club, the subject under discussion was of such vital interests to the country that anyone who felt interested would be privileged to speak.

Mr. Congdon spoke of the aroused feeling of the people—aroused justly on account of the injustice of such a grant, and that it was the duty of the Liberal club to point out the wrong that had been made. He declared it to be a violation of all the principles of government, and that it had evidently been gained by the grossest misrepresentations. They should not go to extremes in the matter as was being done at present but calmly discuss its great mistake. The government should not give such grants, for it was but the trustees of the people and it was the purpose of the people to see that they were considered in such affairs. He read some extracts of law on contracts and closed his remarks by saying that with a united effort of the Liberal club they should get good results from the commissioner's visit to Ottawa.

I believe that Mr. Ross, the present member for the Yukon district, was then the commissioner and was on his way to Ottawa. The 'Sun' report continues :

The next speaker called on was orator Charles Macdonald, who said :

I have not the slightest reluctance in improving this oportunity to state my feelings concerning the Treadgold concessions. I only wish that men more conversant than myself—and there are many here—had been called upon. But we would be false friends to the Liberal government if we did not point out the mistakes of the party. (Hear, hear.)

As we all know a mighty concession has been given, yet the government has no right to make such a gift, for it is merely the trustee of the people. This matter of the Treadgold concession must and cannot be carried into effect. It is our duty to act promptly (hear, hear) and point out the wrong. There can be no two opinions. It should not become law. (Hear, hear.)

It is rather strange that these gentlemen up there, friends of the government, should have felt called upon to read this lesson to the government. It is rather strange that they should have felt under the necessity of impressing on the government what is an undoubted principle of constitutional law, namely, that such a concession as this should not be given by Order in Council. Again I quote from the 'Sun':

Mr. A. F. George, another newspaper man in the Yukon, likened the Klondike to a great reservoir upon which the country drew for a supply. He made a pretty illustration of how a claim being abandoned to-day in one district would be made up by the discovery of another. He had worked out two claims himself, and yet there was ground still untouched and awaiting the hands of the miner.

'Now,' he said, ' if this opportunity is taken away from three or four thousand men, the work in this district, as individuals, we will only have in its place in a few years five hundred men and our boss, Mr. Treadgold.'

Mr. George thought there should be a rattling of dry bones and made that remark apply to his belief, that not only this, but other concessions should be looked into.

Mr. F. G. Stackpole said :

I have been a Liberal all my life, but I would not stay with any party that has acted like the present government. My interests are in the Yukon and that's the part I am wanting protected.

Alexander I. McFarlane did not hesitate to say that if the government was in ignorance of this country, it was about time to quit sending delegations to Ottawa, and have them send delegations here. He suggested that Mr. Sifton be asked to take a trip in over the ice.

Now, it is strange that the government had not more information about this country. This was in 1902, and work has been going on in the Yukon since 1896 or 1897. The government had their officials there, and I believe some of the ministers had visited that country. At all events it was their bounden duty to know the state of that country, to know the condition of affairs there; and if they passed Orders in Council, giving concessions and grants deserving of this denunciation by their friends, what should be the opinion of members of this House before whom are being placed all the facts of the case ?

The resolutions were moved by Mr. J. H. Davison and seconded by J. C. Noel.

I know Mr. Noel, and I know that a better Liberal or a more devoted admirer of my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does not exist in the country. The resolutions passed were as follows :

That a committee be appointed to collect statistics and other information regarding the concessions and the probable consequences of its operation, with a view of providing the commissioner with the same.

It is further resolved that telegrams be sent to the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and to the other members of his cabinet protesting against the Treadgold Order in Council and praying that its operation be suspended pending the arrival at Ottawa of the commissioner of the Yukon Territory.

Whereas, the Liberal association of Dawson has summoned this meeting of the association to discuss the Treadgold concession and to make such representations in respect thereto to the government as might be deemed necessary, and has invited all Liberals, whether members of the association or not, to attend this meeting ; and

Whereas, this meeting has the greatest confidence in the judgment and ability of the commissioner of the Yukon Territory and in his desire and determination to guard the interests of the people of this territory ; and

Whereas, in the opinion of this meeting their confidence in the commissioner is shared by the people of the territory at large ; therefore be it

Resolved, that the meeting requests the commissioner to undertake the presentation to the government of the representations which it is desired to make in regard to such concession, and that the meeting urges the commissioner to use all his great influence to secure a cancellation of the obnoxious features of the recent Order in Council, and the other Order in Council relating to such concession, and to relieve this territory from the disastrous consequences certain to ensue if such Order in Council is allowed to stand in full ; and be it further

Resolved, that the commissioner's attention be called to the fact that he be requested to represent to the government that, in the opinion of this meeting, the insertion of such features in the Order in Council could only have been procured by the grossest misrepresentations and fraudulent concealment ; that it never could have been represented to the minister who proposed said orders, or to the Governor in Council that the orders were an interference with the abrogation of vested rights ; that it was retroactive in operation and most far-reaching and uncertain in effect ; that it was certain to produce distrust and lack of confidence among the mining communities of this territory, and prove fatal to the progress of the territory ; nor could it have been presented and made apparent that the only consideration promised for the enormous interest granted was a monopoly to supply water at an exorbitant and prohibitive price.

Then the 'Sun' goes on with its comments as follows :

The whole populace of Dawson and the creeks is in a furore of excitement bordering on consternation over the far-reaching effects of the amended Treadgold concession . . . Hunker, Bear and Bonanza and all of their tributaries and ground contiguous thereto are within the reach and grasp of the great concessionaire syndicate. That means every paying creek in the country flowing into the Klondike river. Those which empty into the Indian river and the Yukon are the only ones omitted and every miner in the country knows how few those are. . . . . Only a few days remain to the people here who hope to retain what they consider their most sacred rights before it is possible that the giant octopus will have fastened its tenacles upon the country that the poor prospectors have conquered and placed in the list of proud territories of the Dominion of Canada and which with the process of strangulation once in effect, will divest the country of its population and cheat the government of its income from this source. . . . It was the talk all round and there is no use trying to deny or conceal it—that the Treadgold concession will sap the life of the country. . . . Not for the mining industry alone do the people object but on account of the life of the city of Dawson itself. They are firmly of the belief that the place will be little more than a memory with the Treadgold people in power, and that where now palatial public buildings and costly banks and big stores and warehouses all stand, will be no more than a reminder of once when there was a prosperous country somewhere in the far north.

Mr. CLARKE. What is that from ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is from the Dawson 'Sun,' the government organ in the Yukon. It says also :

It is apparent that there must have been a vast combination of misrepresentations regarding the Yukon formed to assail the authorities at Ottawa to induce them to come to the conclusion that this territory cannot get along without Treadgold, and that it is a very insignificant matter to hand over to him all the abandoned claims on certain creeks. It is certain that nobody outside knows much about the Yukon, and the editor confesses that he has been here for so short a time, that for a while, and until he was enlightened, he could not see any great value in abandoned claims. He said, and, no doubt the authorities at Ottawa said : What good would the claims be if the present owners valued them so little as to lose them rather than pay the small renewal fee ? Why not give them to some one like Treadgold, who will appreciate them and work them ?

One only needs, however, to examine the matter for a little on the spot to understand fully how erroneous such an idea is, and to appreciate how great must have been the imposition practiced to obtain such an order. Treadgold and his associates are horribly anxious to develop this country. They are grieved to think our people are suffering for water. It will be observed, however, that their efforts to develop are confined to districts where other men have found and opened the richest mines on earth. They do not care to strike out into new regions for themselves. They cannot be induced to leave the Klondike. Their excuse for confining themselves to this region is that Bonanza, Hunker, Eldorado, &c., are in distress for water, and they desire to relieve this distress at the small cost of twenty-five cents per miner's inch.

I have read these copious extracts to show what the real nature of these grants is. I think it is most interesting to know that these comments should have been made upon the first Orders in Council, because it seems to me, as I shall endeavour to show (with good result, I think), that there is no material difference between the Order in Council now in existence and the Orders in Council against which these denunciations were launched not only by adversaries of the government, not only by people indifferent in politics, but by the Liberal club and by some of the strongest partisans of the government in the Yukon district. I have already said that the new Order in Council was passed on the 21st of April, 1902. Now, Sir, I will not read all the new Order in Council, but I will simply indicate to the House some of the salient points of that order. Some of its clauses were exactly the same as those of the former Order in Council. Let me say at the outset that the sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river at any point or points between its entry into the Yukon river and Flat creek was preserved to the grantees by the new Order in Council. So they have the sole right to take the water from the Klondike river for a distance of forty miles between Yukon river and Flat creek, to erect pumping stations so as to pump water to work the auriferous beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, or Bononza, Bear and Hunker creeks, exactly as granted to these gentlemen by the first Order in Council to which I have referred. In the second clause there is a difference—a limitation. It will be remembered by the House that, at first, a right was given to the grantees to take water from the Klondike river for distribution from the Klondike without any limitation. By the second Order in Council they have not the right to take all the water they chose from the Klondike river for the purpose of operating their own works, but they have a prior right to take water from the Klondike up to 5,000 miners' inches.

Now, I submit to the House that, having this prior right to take from the river the water for distribution and use in the district up to 5,000 miners' inches, nobody else could come into that district and take water. It stands to reason that these gentlemen have still, under the second Order in Council, the right to build dams across the river, the sole right is given to them to expropriate property for the object of their concession. They have the right to erect pumping stations, they alone have this right, they have the sole right to divert water from the Klondike river according to this first clause. So I say this is a monopoly ; and nobody else, even if he had authority, even if he got a subsequent grant from the government, would be so foolhardy as to go up there and establish competing pumping works, or works of any kind so long as this concession is given to the present owners. Then they have the same rights to purchase any Crown lands, and build and operate pumping stations, and enter upon any lands or mining grounds, to construct and maintain overhead and underground wires for the purpose of supplying this district with electricity and electrical power. They have the right,—

Subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to establish, distribute and dispose of by sale or otherwise, the water delivered by the grantees within the district.

Now, a notable omission of this Order in Council is that these people have the sole and exclusive right to divert the waters of the Klondike, the prior right to take the 5,000 miners' inches. They have the sole right to use, and the sole right to distribute this water, and no price is imposed upon them by this Order in Council. The first Order in Council said that the price to be paid by the miners was $1, this was subsequently changed to 25 cents per miners' inch per hour. This Order in Council does not say what price these people are to pay. Therefore, to anybody reading this last Order in Council it will be evident that these people have there a monopoly to distribute and to sell water, that nobody else can distribute and sell it, and that they can sell it at any price they deem fit. They can sell it at one dollar, or two dollars, or fifty cents for a miners' inch per hour, there is nothing to restrict them. Therefore, I say this Order in Council is at least as bad as the former Orders in Council which were repealed by the Order in Council of the 21st of April, 1902.

The grantees have the prior right if mineral-bearing lodes or deposits of any kind whatever be discovered through the operations of the grantees upon Crown lands, or upon lands or locations owned or leased by the grantees within the district, to enter upon and purchase locations embracing the discoveries in the manner prescribed by the regulations governing mining in the Yukon Territory; the right, subject to no payment except the royalty prescribed upon output, to obtain entry for and work all mining locations now or hereafter abandoned on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks and their tributaries.

The House will remember that one of the features which was most denounced by friends of the government in the first Order in Council was the right these gentlemen had of making entry for and working abandoned mining claims in this rich district. The very same right is given to them by the subsequent Order in Council. Then again :

The grantees shall not be required to pay to the Crown or to the district or local authorities any rentals, occupation rents, assessments or other dues in respect of any lands except timber lands or in respect of any flumes, drains, properties or profits other than import customs duties, school taxes and a royalty on the gold mined in the mines owned by them, or any tax or assessment which may be substituted for such royalty.

Here again one of the objectionable features which was to be found in the first Order in Council is reproduced in the second Order in Council. The only material difference between this Order in Council and the others, so far as I have gone, is that by the first Order in Council a prior right was given to these gentlemen to divert the waters of the Klondike without any limitation whatever ; whilst in this Order in Council they still have the prior right to divert that water to the extent of 5,000 miners' inches per hour. But, I say that when these people have this prior right, after having been given the sole right to divert the waters on this extent of territory, nobody would dare to go up there and establish any hydraulic or other system for supplying water to the miners in face of the monopoly created by this second Order in Council. The rights conferred upon the parties by this Order in Council extend also for the period of thirty years, and they also have the right, as they had under the first Order in Council, to assign their rights to any person or corporate bodies.

The House will remember that one of the conditions imposed upon these people was that they were to do work within the short space of a few months to the extent of $250,000. They were to give evidence of their bona fides, and of their ability to carry out this concession, by spending in that district for the benefit of the miners the sum of $250,000. They were also obliged to bring in at least 2,000 miners into this district before ; they could make entry for and work upon these claims in the rich creeks I have already mentioned. Singularly enough, by the Order in Council, no such conditions are imposed upon these gentlemen. They are not obliged to expend this $250,000, and they are not obliged, either to construct or to make those works within the time specified by the first Order in Council. The question presents itself. Where has this $250,000 gone ? That question would strike anybody. These people came up with the evident intention of establishing these works and of putting up a large sum of money to show their ability to construct these works, to show their bona fides, and all at once, by this Order in Council, they are relieved of this obligation of spending $250,000, and even for the space of six years to do any work whatever in this district. So under the Order in Council which gives them the right to assign these powers given to them, they may, during six years, hold up this country as it were, while they are floating their company in England, while they are trying to get somebody in England to put money into this scheme, while they are trying to float a company which will take hold of this valuable concession. If this Order in Council is maintained by this government, I have no doubt a company will be formed to reap the rich benefits which have been sown by Mr. Treadgold and his associates.

Now, Sir, a short time after this second Order in Council had been passed, as we know, an election was held in the Yukon district, and the electors sent here my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) who now represents this district, but who, I am sorry to say, is not in the House. It would have been well if he had been here, and I have no doubt that the reasons of his absence are valid and good reasons, and that he would not be absent unless it was absolutely impossible for him to be here. I regret it, because I have no doubt that he could have given to this House his experience and a great many explanations which this House needs in order to grapple with this most intricate question. As I said before, an election was held. Now what was the first plank laid down by the convention which selected this gentleman who now represents that district, the convention which gave him written instructions as to what he was to do when he came into this House. I hold in my hand now the Liberal platform which was adopted by the Liberal convention at the election in question. Among other things, here is what was laid down as one of the planks of that platform :

> Whereas, the supply of water and power to the mines on the creeks is one of the most serious questions of the day in the Yukon territory, and whereas, in the opinion of the convention the matter of such supply on fair and reasonable terms could best be dealt with by the government itself and should not be left to private individuals ;
> Therefore, be it resolved, that the government be requested immediately to make careful examination and obtain reports upon the subject with the view of cancelling forthwith the Treadgold concessions, and undertaking such supply as may be needed.

Now, Sir, this is not the concession which was given to these people in the first Order in Council, this is not the concession condemned by the Liberal convention, which was given by the first set of Orders in Council to Mr. Treadgold and his associates; but this is the Order in Council which was passed during the last session while we were sitting here in the House on the 21st of April, 1902. One of the very first planks which was laid down in the Liberal convention called before the election in the Yukon district is that representations should be made by the member who is to be elected for the district so that the government shall forthwith cancel this Treadgold concession.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that the one that is in force to-day ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is the one that is in force to-day—the Order in Council which was passed on the 21st April, 1902, and which is still in force. The platform goes on to say :

> Resolved, that in the opinion of this convention many of the concessions now held were obtained by fraud or imposition.

The House will remember that I read over a list of the concessions—the Boyle concession and others which were given by this government, and against which the citizens of the Yukon district protested in a petition addressed by them to the Governor General in 1900. It is alleged that these concessions were obtained by fraud, that they were obtained by misrepresentation, that they were obtained by concealment. The convention went on to complain that the government had given these concessions to some of its own favourites. It says that :

> It is in the interests of this territory that such concessions should be annulled and to that end that an inquiry should be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances of such fraud and imposition, and action taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

I would ask my hon. and learned friend if he has instituted the inquiries in regard to these concessions which are called here by the friends of the government fraudulent concessions ? Then it goes on to say :

> Resolved, that a policy should be adopted which would prevent the obtaining of concessions for hydraulicking except in places where the dirt is of such low grade that it could not profitably be worked by other methods; and that before any hydraulic lease should issue, notice should be given by the applicant by publication in the newspapers of his intention of applying for such lease, so as to enable protests to be entered against the granting of the same; and that the owners of hydraulic concessions already granted should be compelled to carry out the strict terms of their leases, and that in default of their so doing, their leases should be cancelled.

While these leases continue in existence nobody can work the mines for which hydraulic leases are given. This vast mining territory is there idle and, as is stated in the papers from which I have read, the men are leaving the Yukon because they cannot work these claims. That is the platform adopted at the Liberal convention which chose the hon. member who now represents the Yukon territory (Mr. Ross), and his answer is contained in a letter which I also hold in my hand :

I have received—

Mr. Ross says—

—a copy of the platform adopted by the convention which honoured me by its nomination as a candidate for the House of Commons for Canada. I freely subscribe to every measure suggested therein.

That hon. gentleman comes to this House pledged to have this concession repealed and to have it cancelled forthwith. Why is it not cancelled to-day, because it was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation ? The Order in Council still exists to-day, and such a monopoly exists as will drive people away from the Yukon and prevent them from coming in to work the mines. He gives them solemnly a pledge to see that this Order in Council granting this and other concessions, which it is alleged were obtained by fraud, should be immediately cancelled, and that this country should be relieved from what the 'Daily Sun' describes as a giant octopus. He goes on to say :

I recognize that the whole business life of the Yukon depends upon the success of the prospector and miner, and they above all others must be encouraged. With this in view I shall advocate the reduction of fees, which, I think, may now be safely done without impairing the revenue; the thorough investigation of the charges of fraud made in respect to the manner in which certain concessions are alleged to have been obtained, and if such fraud is established, the immediate commencement of such proceedings as may be required to vacate the grants, and the enforcement of strict compliance with the conditions embodied in all Crown grants in the Yukon.

I am sorry that it is impossible for the hon. gentleman to be here, because I have no doubt he would give some good reasons for his silence so long in this House after having received this command from his constituents to see that these concessions were forthwith repealed. At the same time some questions were put to him by a gentleman in the Yukon representing a certain section of the electors of that district, and here are some of the questions :

1. Will you pledge yourself to advocate for and insist upon the immediate cancellation of the Matson, Doyle, Bronson and Ray, Boyle, Slavon-Gates and Miller creek concessions ?

2. Will you agree to advocate for and insist upon the cancellation of the Treadgold concession ?

3. Will you pledge yourself to advocate for and insist upon the punishment and exposure of officials both in Dawson and Ottawa by whose fraud or culpable negligence or inefficiency those concessions were granted in the first instance, or are now continued in force after the same by their terms should be cancelled ?

I again call the attention of the House to the fact that the Order in Council of the 21st April, 1902, is still in existence in the Yukon.

6. Will you support the appointment of a commission of five persons, of whom two shall be nominated by the premier, two by the leader of the opposition, and one by yourself, to inquire into the administration of the Yukon country, both local and federal, in all departments, and report ?

The hon. gentleman was not himself able to give an answer to these questions, but it was answered by his right bower, the gentleman who is now Governor of the Yukon territory, Mr. F. T. Congdon, who wrote as follows :—

Dawson, November 4, 1902.

C. M. Woodworth, Esq.,
Dawson, Y.T.

Sir,—I beg to say that your questions were received and forwarded to Mr. Ross at too late a date for it to be possible for him to have answered them by this time. I know the views of Mr. Ross as well as any one can and have no doubt he will advocate the course of action you suggest in your questions.

So that this hon. gentleman was elected on the distinct pledge that he would come to Ottawa and have these concessions cancelled forthwith. This Order in Council should be cancelled now if everything I have read from these documents is true. It should never have been passed in the first place. After all the condemnation which has been brought down upon the heads of the government by the passing of the first Order in Council, this second Order in Council, which does not materially differ from the first Order in Council, should never have been passed, and I say that the government should be condemned by this House for passing the second Order in Council after having been warned by its own friends of the detrimental effects which this concession would have upon the Yukon district. I have evidence of this in a question which was put to the administration not long ago. The Dawson board of trade telegraphed to certain gentlemen in this House, and amongst others to the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in the following terms :

Oppose any attempt to pass Order in Council or Act in parliament that will in any way confirm Treadgold concession. Are having monster petition signed and reliable data prepared to forward to Ottawa, asking government to aid in furnishing water for mining purposes. People are a unit in making demands and will insist on government protection from monopoly of Treadgold octopus.

To which the right hon. leader of the government replied :

You are altogether mininformed as to what you call the Treadgold concession.

No such action contemplated either by legislation or government order.

The people of the Yukon should have had a satisfactory answer from the right hon. leader of the government, but this was a rather ambiguous answer. I do not quite understand the reply which the right hon. leader of the government made to the very distinct telegram which was sent to him by the president of the Dawson board of trade. The right hon. leader of the government says :

No such action contemplated either by legislation or government order.

What does the right hon. gentleman mean? Does he mean that this Order in Council required no confirmation at the hands of this parliament ? Does he mean that the Order in Council is a valid concession of the franchise which the government purpose to give these people ? Is that the meaning of the telegram; or does my right hon. friend by this telegram mean, that he will not do anything at all; that he will let this concession stand or fall on its own merits, but he will not ask his government or ask this House to confirm it in any manner whatever. I really do not know what the right hon. gentleman meant by this. However, this fact remains; that the Order in Council has not been repealed; that it is still in existence, and that although it is as obnoxious and as illegal and as unconstitutional as the first Order in Council, no steps have been taken yet by the government to repeal it and to give satisfaction to these people in the Yukon who have been crying out against this shameful state of things. The Dawson Board of Trade, after having seen this telegram also sent a petition which is on file here, and which is signed by a large number of the people of the Yukon. The Dawson Board of Trade addressed a letter to the newspapers in which the Treadgold concession which is now in force is commented upon in the following terms :

The Treadgold concession and water grant as granted by an Order in Council and which when ratified by the parliament at its next session will become law is, in the opinion of this board, one of the most iniquitous measures that was ever inflicted upon a people, and (in the consideration of the Dawson Board of Trade) will work a great hardship upon the people of this territory since it will mean the virtual bankruptcy of all the property owners of Dawson and surrounding territory, and instead of the Klondike becoming the prosperous country we expect, it will virtually become the property of Mr. Treadgold and those who are associated with him in his scheme.

In this community the Treadgold concession is called 'the infamous Treadgold grant,' and is alluded to as an 'iniquitous concession,' and in the petition which was sent to the House of Commons this language is used. After reciting part of the Order in Council, it says :

2. That the benefits conferred upon the grantees are of incalculable value and involve an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this territory for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.

3. That in the opinion of your petitioners the accumulation of extraordinary powers in the hands of a single corporation such as is affected by the above Order in Council, will lead to the paralysis of the independent, commercial and industrial life of the community and will prove in the highest degree oppressive and injurious to the public welfare, since the grantees are thereby enabled to crush out competition and to reduce to a position of practical servitude the individual miners in the extensive district affected, which includes the richest portion of the Klondike.

4. That the need of this territory is not the creation of monopolies, but their prevention, and the encouragement of the individual miners by securing equal privileges and opportunities to all as far as the law and the administration can provide them.

5. That for the promotion and development of the mining industry of the Yukon, a cheap, abundant and effective water supply, furnished at a minimum of cost by the government at the earliest possible moment, is absolutely essential.

Your petitioners therefore pray :

1. That the Order in Council of April 21, 1902, may be cancelled completely, and that no special privileges shall hereafter be granted within this territory with respect to wood, mining, water or any other class of rights affecting the general public; but that all persons shall be restricted in such matters to the rights conferred upon every member of the community by the mining regulations.

Now, Sir, the House will see that the very same condemnation which was brought down upon the government for passing the first Order in Council is brought down upon their heads to-day for passing the second Order in Council. I take it that the Dawson Board of Trade, in the very nature of things, is not composed entirely of opponents of the government, and in the estimation of that board of trade this huge monopoly conferred by the second Order in Council should be cancelled immediately. They state that if it is not cancelled it will do a great injustice to the miners of the Yukon district, and that it is calculated to injuriously affect the interests not only of the Klondike but to injure the commercial interests of Canada as a whole.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Dawson city council passed exactly the same resolution and sent a petition to the House of Commons, and these resolutions being couched precisely in the same terms as those passed by the Board of Trade which I have just read, it will be unnecessary for me to repeat them. And here I am again face to face with my friends of the Liberal club of Dawson. You will remember, that although they are friends of the present administration, they thought it was their bounden duty to condemn that first concession which was given to Mr. Treadgold and his associates. Apparently they do not find a very great difference between the first concession and the concession which is in existence to-day. They do not find the great changes which the Minister of the Interior tried to persuade this House last session had been made in the second Order in Council. On the contrary, they go on with their agitation against the second Order in Council and they have petitioned the government and this parliament to withdraw or to cancel the second concession as being just as bad as the first one, against which they protested in the month of February, 1902. The petition of the Liberal Association of Dawson and of the Yukon Territory, goes on to say :

That the development of the resources of the Yukon has been seriously impeded by the appropriation of extensive areas of rich placer ground by hydraulic concessions believed in some instances to have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation.

This alludes not only to the Treadgold concession, but it relates also to the other concessions which are mentioned in the petition to the Governor General in Council in 1900, and which were referred to in the platform of the Liberal convention when the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) was elected, and also in the questions which were put to the hon. member (Mr. Ross) and which he answered by his friend Mr. Congdon, before he was elected. These concessions not only include the Treadgold concession, but also the concessions which I enumerated to the House. We find the Liberal club stating that these concessions were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. Now, Sir, if the government has been the victim of fraud or misrepresentation, it is its bounden duty to immediately cancel not only the Treadgold concession, but the other hydraulic mining concessions which were given to the other parties I have named. This demand is made on the government by their own friends in the district and by people who seem to know what they are talking about. The petition of the Liberal club says :

Your petitioners therefore pray :

That the Order in Council of April 21, 1902, granting certain rights and privileges to Malcom Orr Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold and Walter Barwick, may be rescinded absolutely.

That the government institute forthwith a careful investigation by competent engineers and obtain reports upon the subject with a view to undertaking the construction of a public water supply as a national enterprise.

That the water of Rock creek be retained by the government for public purposes and that no special privileges either in such creek or with respect to wood, water or mining rights within this territory, be granted to any individual or private corporation, but that all persons be restricted in such matters to the rights accorded the general public under the mining regulations.

That all hydraulic concessions whose owners have not observed the conditions of their leases and the provisions of the mining regulations may be rescinded.

That an inquiry may be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

That the Attorney General of Canada do issue a fiat authorizing prceedings to be taken in his name in every case where action is begun against an hydraulic concession in which fraud or misrepresentation is charged, including all such actions as are now pending.

Therefore, I repeat, that in view of these petitions signed by the great majority of the people in the Klondike district, and the great majority of the Liberals at that, it is the bounden duty of the government to see that these concessions are cancelled. It seems to me that if the inquiries which have been asked for in these petitions are not granted, it is either because the government wants to favour those to whom these concessions have been made by fraud and misrepresentation, or, that the government itself is guilty of fraud in giving these concessions to these individuals.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not see how the government can escape from that dilemma. Now, Sir, a delegation has been appointed, not only from Dawson City, but from the different points at which gold is mined in the Yukon district. That delegation is composed of Mr. Clarke and Mr. Pringle. Mr. Pringle, I am told, is an excellent Liberal, and he is coming to Ottawa or has arrived here, to insist on the cancellation of this Treadgold concession. At a meeting which was held at Bonanza, Mr. Pringle spoke as follows :

The assay office is the most pressing demand. I say it now and I said it then. The Treadgold concession is in fact the paramount question, after all. Because, if Treadgold owns the country, there will be no gold to assay and no need for banks. But the miners want the assay office first, and they want the Treadgold concession cancelled next.

I am a Liberal and have always been a Liberal. But it seems to me the Liberal government in its administration in the Yukon has driven a coach and four through everything I ever knew that was Liberal.

We can live in this country if you stop graft. I stand against graft.

The appointed members of the Yukon council refused to sign our telegram to Ottawa against the Treadgold concessions because they said it would be a slap in the face of the government. They will vote against us for the same reason when the council meets.

The telegram which was proposed to be sent by the council of the Yukon to the government is in the following terms—it was signed by Messrs. Clarke, Pringle, Thompson and Landreville, the elective members of the council :

We, the elected members of the Yukon council ask the government to recind the Treadgold concession in toto.

We represent a people who are absolutely united in their demand for the cancellation of the present Order in Council. Its continued existence means the ruin of business and of the placer mining industry in the Yukon Territory.

That telegram was sent to the government.

Now, Sir, not only were these grants made improvidently, not only were they most detrimental to the best interests of the Yukon and of the country at large, but it seems to me that they are absolutely illegal—that the Governor in Council had no right to make them. There is no doubt—and on this proposition I think I shall be borne out by my learned friend the Minister of Justice—that public lands or the public domain belonging to the Crown cannot be granted by Order in Council, except in those particular instances in which the Governor in Council is by statute given power or authority to make such grants. I think that is a sound proposition in constitutional law ; for, after all, the government are only a committee of this House, and they have no other powers than those which this House specifically delegates to them. They have power to administer, but they have not power to grant or even sell any part of the domain of the Crown. Take, for instance, the Dominion Lands Act. By section 29 of that Act, specific power is given to the Minister of the Interior and his agents under certain conditions to grant public lands to settlers ; but this provision goes to show that in other circumstances the Crown domain is sacred, and can only be conceded or sold by the authority of parliament, and not by the authority of the ministers, who are only a committee of this House. The Crown domain consists not only of the public lands of this country, but also of the rivers and streams which flow through it. Of course, the navigable streams all belong to the public domain and cannot be given away, granted or sold by Order in Council. But in a territory like the Yukon, where the government is the proprietor, the owner, on both sides of streams which are not navigable, I take it that the Crown is equally the proprietor and owner of the streams. These concessions which were granted by the Order in Council were concessions to private individuals of certain parts of the Crown domain. The very franchise itself by which these gentlemen were permitted to build dams across rivers and streams, to build pumping stations anywhere they saw fit, to maintain electric works for the purpose of transmitting electric power all through that district, to expropriate private lands and lands belonging to the government, is a franchise that belongs to the Crown. Every day before the Private Bills Committee and the Railway Committee, persons appear for the purpose of obtaining franchises belonging to the Crown for the purpose of expropriating the lands of private individuals or lands belonging to the Crown ; and if it were only a franchise in the water that was given to these people, it would be a grant of a certain portion of the property vested in the Crown, of which the Governor in Council had no right to divest the Crown. The authority under which the second Order in Council was passed is stated in the preamble of the Order in Council itself. The following statutes are quoted : Clause 47 of the Dominion Lands Act as amended by section 5, of chapter 15, of 55-56 Victoria ; section 8, of the Yukon Territories Act, as amended by chapter 11 of 62-63 Victoria. The minister has taken the precaution of giving us the quotation from the statutes under which he proposes to Act, and he says in the preamble of this Order in Council that it is in virtue of these two statutes. No doubt, if he could find any other statutes which would give the Governor General in Council power and authority to make these concessions, he would have quoted them also. Now, let us take the first statute which he quotes, the 47th section of the Dominion Lands Act, as amended by section 5, of chapter 15, of 55-56 Victoria, which reads thus :

Lands containing coal or other minerals, including lands in the Rocky Mountains park, shall not be subject to the provisions of this Act respecting sale or homestead entry, but the Governor General in Council may, from time to time, make regulations for the working and development of mines on such lands, and for the sale, leasing, licensing or other disposal thereof.

The effect of this statute is this : First, it takes away from the minister and the Governor General in Council the right to do with these lands what the minister does with the ordinary Dominion lands which he concedes or grants to settlers. The legislature says by this section, that he shall not treat mineral lands in that way, but that he can make regulations for the working and development of mines on such lands, and for the sale, leasing, licensing or other disposal thereof. So that what should have been done would have been to pass regulations for so dealing with this part of the public domain. The regulation takes the place of the law. For instance, under the Dominion Lands Act the settler applies for a part of the public domain as a homestead. Therefore, if regulations were passed for the sale or lease of mineral lands, anybody could come in and say to the government : I have complied with the regulations and am entitled to a grant of mineral lands.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are these all mineral lands ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes. This is the very section which is quoted, and I do not see how the minister can take any relief from it. He is doing exactly what the law forbids. The law says that he can only lease or grant lands under the general regulations which govern all the subjects of Her Majesty, so that any man who complies with these regulations and conditions is entitled to the benefit of them. But until he does comply with them, the Governor General in Council is powerless to grant, concede or sell any part of these mineral lands. Let me however refer to the second statute quoted in the preamble of the Order in Council and see whether the hon. gentleman can take any relief from it. This statute is section eight of the Yukon Territory Act, as amended by 62-63 Victoria. I call attention to this section because I cannot see how the Minister of the Interior could have gone before his colleagues and quoted to them this law as authorizing him to make this concession. I cannot come to any other conclusion than that this grant was put through council hastily and carelessly, and that none of the hon. gentleman's colleagues could have looked at the statutes or realized the enormity of the concessions which they were asked to give. Section eight of the Yukon Territory Act, as amended, says :—

> Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Governor in Council can make ordinances for the peace, order and good government of the territory, and of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein ; but no ordinances made by the Governor in Council or the commissioner in council, shall——

So that the very statute which the hon. gentleman quotes in the Order in Council says that the Governor in Council shall have no right to appropriate any public land or other property of Canada without the authority of parliament. The very authority which the hon. gentleman quotes is against him. It is an authority which says that he cannot do what he proposes to carry out. I await the explanation of the government on this point with a great deal of interest. Of course I know that we can sometimes drive a coach and four through any law, but it will certainly require great skill to overcome these two statutes cited in the Order in Council. It seems to me that these concessions should be immediately repealed. They are certainly against the interests of the miners and other citizens of the Yukon. They will certainly prove prejudicial to the interests of Canada as a whole, and I beg therefore to move :—

> That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor :—
> This House regrets that by an Order in Council of date the 21st day of April, 1902, the government for the ostensible purpose of establishing hydraulic works to supply water for the efficient working of auriferous deposits have granted to one A. N. C. Treadgold, of London, England, and his associates, vast powers, franchises, and concessions in and upon the beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, and in and upon the waters of Rock creek, in the Yukon Territory, with the right to establish for the benefit and advantage of the concessionaires in and through the region and district through which these rivers and creeks run, hydraulic, electrical and other systems, and to enter and to take up and operate mining and other lands :
> This House is of opinion that the said powers, franchises and concessions constitute in favour of the said Treadgold and his associates a gigantic monopoly, which, while depriving the treasury of enormous revenues, is most detrimental to the mining industry of the Yukon :
> And that in so making the said grants and concessions by Order in Council, the government have exceeded their authority and have committed a gross breach of the duty entrusted to them under the constitution.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The subject, Mr. Speaker, which the hon. gentleman has brought to the attention of the House is one of considerable importance, largely involving legal questions, but at the same time not free from questions of public policy. The hon. gentleman quoted some interesting extracts from newspaper reports and other anonymous communications and utterances of various kinds.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not one anonymous.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman give the names of the gentlemen who wrote the various documents, editorials and so on, which he quoted ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I said that it was the editor of the Dawson 'Sun' who wrote the articles, and that these were sent to the government by the late Senator Wood.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend has taken the proceeding—unusual in courts of justice though not always in popular tribunals—of quoting newspaper reports and articles, and other uncorroborated utterances and building thereon an elaborate argument, which may appeal with some force to people who are not familiar with the facts. It appears to me that the address and the argument of the hon. gentleman on this occasion would have been much more fittingly made in the Yukon district itself, at the time, shortly before this session opened, when the people there were given the opportunity of pronouncing a verdict on the administration of this government. This is not the first time that hon.

gentlemen opposite have taken advantage of their position as members of this House, to rise in their seats and attempt to vilify the administration of the Yukon, and spread broadcast throughout the country the most unfounded aspersions on the policy and the conduct of the government. While I am not taking any exception to the ventilating of this matter again in this House, I think that I have the right to point out that there was a most appropriate occasion, not long ago, when the hon. gentleman could have addressed to a tribunal composed of the people directly interested, the arguments he has just made here. I refer to the electors of the Yukon. Why the present session should have been selected rather than that occasion, it is for the hon. gentleman to explain. During many sessions another hon. gentleman in this House took the interests of the Yukon district under his special care. He was the self-constituted guardian in this House of everything dear to those people. I refer to the hon. and senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). But neither did that hon. gentleman venture beyond these precincts. Neither did he go to the Yukon and there make his charges before the people who are most familiar with the facts and best able to pass judgment on them. But he preferred making them at this convenient distance. Now, there was abundant opportunity given at the late election for hon. gentlemen opposite to have denounced before the electors of the Yukon the administration of that district in their most vigorous fashion. They were given ample notice. They had six months notice. We passed an Act a year ago giving representation to the people of the Yukon; and we challenged these hon. gentlemen on the floor of this House to meet us during the recess before the people of the Yukon and fight out these charges, so properly determinable by the people, before the electors themselves. Sir, they did not appear on that occasion; they abandoned the issue. They had not the courage to make the charges before the electors of the Yukon. We put a candidate in the field and the electors of the Yukon returned him as a supporter of this government by an overwhelming majority. Unfortunately that hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross, Yukon) for reasons which we all regret, is absent from the House to-day. He is absent from Ottawa. Otherwise, perhaps, he would be heard upon this matter. It is also to be regretted—and by none more than by myself—that the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) who is so familiar with the details of these transactions, is also absent from the House, attending to public business of a high character in London, England. I can only speak from such information as comes readily to my hand through reviewing the papers in the department. To that extent, therefore, I will address myself to the particular subject in question.

The hon. gentleman took many exceptions to the Order in Council. Let me first, so far as I know it, describe the situation and the outlook for the government. When the Yukon was discovered and it was learned to be rich in placer mines, everything was prosperous. But the time came when the placer mining began to give out. Still, every one felt that there must be a future for that district, and it was the duty of the government to endeavour in all possible ways to aid in furthering mining operations. There are many kinds of gold mining. There is placer mining, hydraulic mining, quartz mining, as well as the recovery of gold from water. These are various methods for utilizing the rich gifts of Providence to the Yukon. When the lower claims near the water level became exhausted, it was necessary to consider by what means the government could succeed in delivering water on the elevations, that it might be available there for washing out the gravel upon the benches and hills. Manifestly, that is a task not to be carried on by each individual for himself. Business suggests at once that a large scheme for the development of power and the pumping of water is the proper way of supplying the individual with the necessary water. It is just as it is in cities to-day. Municipalities deem it wiser to establish water-works and operate public service, rather than leave it to each individual as in primitive times, to supply his own conveniences. And so, for the purpose of working these claims above the creek and a little distance away from the water, it, manifestly, is the more businesslike and economical and profitable method to carry on that business by having a company or some wholesale system, whereby each person can purchase just such water as he requires without each having to duplicate the capital expenditure necessary for the establishment of works to supply himself with water. And so, the Department of the Interior endeavoured to obtain offers in order to provide water for the upper mining district. Many schemes had been suggested. But the Department of the Interior was extremely desirous of placing this franchise, if possible, in the hands of men of reputation, men of financial strength. My hon. friend has read from the newspapers charging fraud all round, he has charged concealment, misrepresentation and fraud. I do not know whether he alludes to the gentlemen to whom these grants were made. But, if he does, I think they have good ground to complain. One of these gentlemen is well known to every hon. gentleman in this House. He is well known in this country; and highly as I respect the reputation of my colleagues on both sides in this House, I think I am not going beyond the facts when I say, that there is no man who enjoys more the respect of the people of Canada as an upright man than one of the grantees whom my hon. friend charges with having been guilty of fraud of many kinds towards this country. I refer to Mr. Walter Barwick. I would also say to my hon. friend who tells us that he is so desirous of investigation that I am sure he must well know that it has been long the fixed intention of the government to hold such an investigation. The hon. gentleman must remember that, when the election was held, promises were given to the people of the Yukon that there would be a commission to inquire into the whole administration of that territory. There has been no opportunity since that date until the present to send in commissioners. I doubt if navigation is more than open, even if it is yet open. When the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) returns to Ottawa, —he is at present in British Columbia, I understand—and we can have the benefit of his advice, it is our intention to fully carry out the representations made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that hon. gentlemen may be good enough to mention or entertain in regard to any matters connected with the Yukon administration. I give that public notice to my hon. friend, so that, in addition to the advantage he has had of ventilating his views on the floor of this House, he will have an opportunity to make good, if he can, any of his charges or suspicions before a tribunal where newspaper extracts and letters will not be the only evidence, but where gentlemen will have the privilege of pledging their oaths to the truth of all they say. I would point out that, in his zeal to magnify, he has entirely misapprehended the scope of the Order in Council. He reads from newspapers to show that we abandoned 350 square miles of territory comprising all these rich creeks and gulches and rivers. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer, and he proposed to make a legal speech and to give the legal effect of documents; yet there is not even a layman in this House but, I am sure, will see that he has entirely misrepresented—I speak without meaning anything offensive—he has given to the House an entirely erroneous impression of the scope of the concessions spoken of. Though there is a grant of power to erect a dam upon the river, to take water and generate power, and because that gives these concessionaires the right to sell that power throughout that district, by what process of reasoning does he say that the whole district with all its wealth is handed over as a grant to these concessionaires ? Why, Sir, when you grant a privilege to erect dams and generate electricity on a river and give the grantees the right to sell that power to the public, unless you restrict the deed, the grantees have the right to sell power throughout the whole of Canada. And if it should happen that such a grant were given, my hon. friend, according to his present reasoning, would argue that such a grant carried the exclusive possession and ownership of Canada. That is the necessary result of his reasoning—because they are given the privilege of selling electricity over a certain area, that carries with it all other possible rights. Now, what does the Order in Council grant? The Order in Council of June, 1901, differs materially from the Order in Council of 1902. My hon. friend says there is no material difference. Let us see. He is a lawyer, and has carefully studied these questions, he has had these papers in his hands since last session and knows all about them. I have the two copies here, my hon. friend has the two copies also. Let us see if he will adhere to his statement that there is no material difference between the one and the other Order in Council. Under the first Order in Council a considerable term of years was granted. Under the first Order in Council it was necessary for certain works to be done within a certain time. There has been a modification, my hon. friend will say for the worse, by having substituted six years for a shorter period. I merely remark that in one sense the work required under the second Order has not to be completed as quickly as under the first. But I pass to the new section, and I commend it to the hon. gentleman's attention :

> Provided, that if any power is developed and rendered available by the grantees under this section which they do not make use of, then the same should be offered for sale to the public, and the rates to be charged therefor shall be subject to the control of the Governor General in Council.

Now, I would say that is an entirely new clause. When the first Order in Council was a subject of criticism in the Yukon, a meeting of the miners was held, and they appointed two delegates to come to Ottawa and ask for modifications, not for a repeal of this Order in Council. The majority of the miners of the Yukon, so far as we know, do not desire the repeal of all the Orders in Council, they do not ask for a repeal of the old Orders in Council, but they ask for modifications, and the modifications they asked for were of the following character : They objected, for example, to the exclusive right given by the first Order in Council to erect bedrock flumes. That was regarded as a very objectionable feature of the first order. That objectionable feature is removed, and does not appear in the second Order in Council. Not only does it not appear, but privileges are given to every person, reserved to every person to erect bedrock flumes. One of the great questions in the Yukon in regard to the first Order in Council was the exclusive right granted to construct, maintain and use bedrock flumes. People were excited upon that point, and they sent two delegates, Mr. Williams and Mr. Sugrue, to consult with the government and ask that all objectionable features might be removed from the first Order in Council. That was the first point that the people proposed, and that point was arranged. That former objection disappeared, and yet my hon. friend says there is no material difference in the two Orders in Council.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says that the majority of the miners did not want that concession repealed. I would like to ask how the majority of the miners voiced their opinion ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The two representatives of the miners who came to Ottawa, purporting to represent the opinions and wishes of the miners, did not ask for repeal, but for modifications, and those modifications were granted. I think it is reasonable to assume, when they came down on a mission of that kind and presented their arguments, that they were voicing the sentiments of those they were representing here. Again, my hon. friend says there is no difference between these two Orders in Council. The first Order in Council allowed the grantees to develop power and use it all for themselves. There was no duty cast upon them under the first order to sell power to anybody. How is it under the new Order in Council ? Will my hon. friend tell me this is not a material change ?

> Provided that if any power is developed and rendered available by the grantees under this section which they do not make use of, then this same shall be offered for sale to the public.

Is that not a material change ? My hon. friend does not see that under the new order the public are the beneficiaries to the extent that they have a right to purchase the power that may be generated under this concession.

Mr. POPE. At what price ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will proceed to read. Hon. gentlemen should restrain themselves, they will get all this information in due time. They would have been much wiser if they had known the Orders in Council before making these inflammatory speeches.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We know them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) asks at what price.

> The rates to be charged therefor shall be subject to the control of the Governor General in Council.

That is the way the rates are fixed in this country in many other cases. The Governor in Council fixes the railway rates and many other kinds of rates ; and here the Governor in Council, responsible to parliament and to the public, are the parties who stand as an independent tribunal between the buyers and sellers of power, so that under the amended Order in Council the general public have vested rights entitling them to power and entitling them to protection against unfair prices.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the power mean water ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. There the hon. gentlemen show a limited knowledge of this scheme. Power means the electrical power that is going to be developed by the use of water. There is going to be a dam, or a backing up of water. Hon. gentlemen smile ; let me read the clause :

> The sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river at any point or points between its entry into the Yukon river and the Flat creek for the purpose of generating power with which to pump water to work the auriferous deposits in the district.

This is an entirely different proposition from the right to take water from the bed of the river and to raise it up, whether it may or may not return to the river.

Mr. CLARKE. Have these concessionaires no right to sell power under the first Order in Council ? Had the public no right to compel them to sell power ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will see about that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is there anything in the Order in Council about it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When they have the power generated then they have to sell it, if there is any one to buy it, and if there is any to spare. I turn to section 2. Under the first Order in Council it has been correctly stated that the grantees had the right to divert and take water from the Klondike for distribution in the district generally, for the use of benches and other claims. Under the new order, the amount that they may take exclusively is 5,000 miners' inches.

Mr. CLARKE. How much does that amount to ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wonder if the hon. gentleman has any idea how much water is available in that district.

Mr. CLARKE. We are asking for information. What volume of water does that 5,000 inches mean ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will explain that in a moment. Let me first explain that under the second Order in Council there is a prior right given to license holders :

> Provided that licensed holders of mining locations situated on the Klondike river should be entitled as against the grantees to the use of a flow of water sufficient for working their claims but not exceed in all 3,500 miners' inches, equal to 5,250 cubic feet per minute.

A miners' inch, therefore, is equal to a cubic foot and a-half per minute. First of all, license holders take their 5,250 cubic feet per minute, then these grantees are entitled to take 5,000 miners' inches per minute. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) desires to know what proportion that bears to the capacity of the river. I have here a memorandum from Professor Haanel in these words :

On the authority of Professor Herdt, of Montreal, the velocity of the Klondike is seven miles an hour, the average width 275 feet and the average depth 3½ feet. This will correspond to a delivery of 395,266 miners' inches.

The miners' inch was defined by Order in Council of the 19th of May, 1902, to be a discharge of 1½ cubic feet per minute.

Thus the hon. gentleman will see that these 395,266 miners' inches representing nearly 1½ cubic feet per minute of a flow would certainly leave what is called a margin for the general public even if some one was to get 5,200 cubic feet per minute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the miners were to have 3,500 miners' inches and that all the rest was to go to these concessionaires. The Order in Council says :

Provided the licensed holders of mining locations situated on the Klondike river shall be entitled as against the grantees to the use of a flow of water sufficient for working their claims but not exceeding in all three thousand five hundred (3,500) miners' inches, equal to five thousand two hundred and fifty (5,250) cubic feet per minute.

After the miners get their 5,250 cubic feet all the rest will belong to these concessionaires.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That may be the hon. gentleman's opinion as a member of this House, but I do not think it is his opinion as a member of the bar.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will tell the hon. gentleman what my opinion is as a member of the bar if he wants it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure he would not say that it would lead to any such conclusion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is your conclusion ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My conclusion is that the license holders on the Klondike river have a prior right to 3,500 miners' inches. The grant made to the grantees is named. If the whole of the rest of the water was to be given to the grantees what would be the sense of saying that they should have the right to the use of the water up to 5,250 cubic feet. I am sure my hon. friend will not press that point any further.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is evidently right and you are evidently wrong.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not so very long ago that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were evidently right on a legal question—the construction of the British North America Act. One after another got up in this House and presented an elaborate and learned argument to show that the representation of the various provinces should go in a certain way. It was found a few days afterwards by the Supreme Court that every one of these hon. gentlemen was wrong in his opinion of the law. They are bold to give their opinion again on the law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are you paying a compliment to the Supreme Court now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not paying any compliment, but I am just paying what is justly due to the Supreme Court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman would just give his own construction as he says we are wrong as to sections 1 and 2.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does my hon. friend refer to the first or second Order in Council ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To the second Order in Council—that of April 21, 1902. I want to understand it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is fair. Under section one, the concessionaires are given power to erect dams on the Klondike and take water from the Klondike for the purpose of generating power with which to pump the water for use in a certain district named. Power is not given to them to take water for hydraulic or mining purposes, but to take water to generate electric power which will in turn set their machinery to work which will pump the water. That is the power which is given to them.

Mr. CLARKE. Have they the sole power to do that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) has the clause before him.

Mr. PRINGLE. As I read section one of the last Order in Council it says :

The sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river at any point or points between its entry into the Yukon river and Flat creek.

Then it says :

Provided that if the right given by this section is not exercised within six years from the date hereof, it may be revoked by order of the Governor General in Council.

Is that right to be tied up for a period of six years to these concessionaires ? Could not these concessionaires by injunction restrain any other company or individual from taking water from the Klondike river between these points.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman does not appear to know that this Order in Council as yet has no legal validity. It gives no legal right. There are other things that have to be done with Orders in Council before they can have the force of law, but this Order in Council is an evidence of faith towards the concessionaires in the hope that they may be enabled to induce capital to come to Canada and erect these works.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. Postmaster General admit that the Order in Council is not valid ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I mean to say that an additional step has to be taken to confer legal rights under the Order in Council.

Mr. PRINGLE. What additional step ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Orders in Council such as these dealing with mining rights do not give powers to the grantees to exercise these rights until these Orders in Council are gazetted. Then, they become law. They are not gazetted at the present time. They are reserved, but if the concessionaires should show that they are able to raise the funds to erect these valuable public works, then it will be for the government to consider whether or not they would confirm the concession, but at the present time they simply have these Orders in Council indicating what they think it would be proper to do provided they could see that they are able to proceed satisfactorily.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What about the telegram from the board of trade ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I now come to section 10. The hon. member for Montmorency said that there was no material difference between the two Orders in Council. The meeting of miners asked that in addition to relief from the monopoly in respect to bed rock flumes there should also be a change in the regulations in regard to abandoned claims. They contended that in a former Order in Council the grantees secured rights to abandoned claims and were not therefore obliged to do any work in the way of providing hydraulic power. But, the abandoned claims would not have had any value without the addition of the water. When the representatives of the Yukon miners appeared before the government, this point was thoroughly discussed and a new clause was framed and this has taken the place of the old one in the new Order in Council. I would refer my hon. friend to section 10. Section 10 reads as follows :

> The right subject to no payment except the royalty prescribed upon output to make entry for and work any abandoned mining claim or claims on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, such right to be exercisable only when the grantees by the construction of works in pursuance of this franchise are in a position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working thereof.

Under the former order, it was argued that they might appropriate the abandoned claims and never expend a dollar in the erection of these works, but under the present order that is entirely changed, and they have no right whatever to an abandoned claim until they have laid water to it, and then they have only the chance of the general public who may step in and stake a claim and prevent the concessionaries getting it. So far as staking abandoned claims is concerned, they are only given the same rights as are given to any other person who may go to the Yukon. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) takes exception to the clause in this agreement which exempts the grantees from representation or the payment of fees. It is correct that the grantees are so exempt, but there are reasons for that. It is the effort of the government to induce these grantees to proceed and if possible to successfully carry out this undertaking. This is not a very attractive proposition to the grantees. Up to this moment they have not been able to find capitalists to see anything in it. They got the first concession in January, 1901. Over two years have elapsed since then, and if this were such a valuable franchise ; if there were such fortunes in it, don't you think that the shrewd business world of London, where those people are men of influence, would have long since contributed to the capital to provide for the carrying out of this alleged improvident transaction ? But as yet they have not been able to convince any person that there is any money in this enterprise. When the second Order in Council was passed, consideration had to be had to expenditures already made. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) says that under the new arrangement we abandon the clause requiring the expenditure of $250,000. That is correct. The first Order in Council called for the expenditure of money, and the grantees proceeded to expend money. They engaged some of the most able hydraulic engineers of England ; they sent out to the Klondike Sir Thomas Tancred, a very high authority, and they expended a large sum of money in investigation and research.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told by Mr. Barwick, that up to the time of the cancellation of the order the grantees had expended over $50,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was there any work done on the ground ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not on the ground. They had to pay very large fees to the engineers, and other expenses, which Mr. Barwick informs me amounted to over $50,000. They had that amount of money at stake when the first Order in Council was cancelled, and therefore, they had the material interest of following their money in prosecuting the work. They have already, therefore, $50,000 in jeopardy, all of which will be lost unless they can turn the grant to practical use.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there anybody else invited to go and examine the ground and see what the proposition had in it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there were various parties making other proposals.

Mr. CLARKE. Will these proposals be laid on the Table ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I only know that from general hearsay.

Mr. CLARKE. Newspaper reports ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told that all the papers have been brought down. Then I come to another provision in this agreement, and I think hon. gentlemen will see that it is a clause which does a great service to the community. The scheme, whilst giving to the grantees the right to erect works, to generate power, and the right to make use of the water the same as others ; does not give them the exclusive right, but entitles the general public to water just the same as the general public are entitled to water from the city of Ottawa. The public of the Yukon have the same right to water and power as any private citizen in this city, and therefore, this is a public enterprise in which the whole community, on payment of a proper toll, will be entitled to share. Under the regulations it is left to the Gold Commissioner to fix all compensation arising under this grant. If the private user desires to have the price fixed, and if he cannot agree with the company, the Gold Commissioner fixes the price subject to an appeal to a higher tribunal.

Mr. CLARKE. How does the Gold Commissioner or the government know whether the price fixed is a reasonable one or not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Gold Commissioner lives in the Yukon, and the people of the Yukon will know. There will be some way of ascertaining what is reasonable ; that is a question of opinion. At all events it is left to the Gold Commissioner and the Territorial Court of the district to settle a question of that kind. I do not know of a fairer tribunal ; perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) does. However, that may be, in trusting the rights of the people in an important matter of this kind to the Gold Commissioner, with the right of appeal to the Territorial Court, it does not, at least to my mind, indicate carelessness, improvidence, or fraud when we are trying to bring water within the reach of the people in order to develop that country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir William Mulock) is relying on the words : ' Any question of compensation.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, certainly, under the grant. The three differences which I have pointed out to the House are the three variations that the representations of the miners' have asked to be made. These three variations were made, and I would mention this circumstance : that when the Minister of the Interior contemplated considering the change in this Order in Council, he found no hesitation whatever on the part of the grantees to the change being made. On the contrary, so little importance did they attach to their rights under the circumstances, they being so unprofitable up to that moment, that they readily consented to the cancellation of the Order in Council. There are a number of provisions in the Order in Council of 1901 which have been omitted from the new Order in Council. For example, section 3, of the old Order in Council has been omitted, and it reads as follows :

> The right on the creek or tributary within the district to divert, take, impound and store for mining purposes any water not used by any free miner for the working of his claim on such creek or tributary under the regulations now in force for placer mining or respecting the diversion of water for mining purposes in the Yukon Territory.

That section has been left out of the new Order in Council. Again under the old Order in Council, it was provided that the grantees should have an extension of time for the completion of their works in the event of delay caused by various things, such as floods, war, civil commotions, accidents to machinery or works, and other inevitable causes. That is omitted from the new Order in Council, and they are held more firmly to the time than before. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have pointed out a number of very material variations between the old order and the new ; and yet my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) said he saw no difference whatever between the old and the new. With reference to that part of my hon. friend's speech wherein he first of all stated that there had been large tracts of country withdrawn from entry, I think he was under the impression that they were withdrawn from entry before the granting of the first Order in Council. I take the liberty of correcting him. He read from the Dawson ' Sun ' a statement showing, as he supposed, a large area which that paper said was granted to these concessionaries. My hon. friend seems to suggest that entry had been closed in respect to a number of these creeks in order to enlarge the area to be granted to these concessionaries. He tells us it will have that effect. On that point he was not just.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is not my contention. Do not put words in my mouth which I did not use.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not intend to do so. I have given the hon. gentleman credit for a desire not to mislead, but I want to correct him. It is true, at one time, Dominion creek and Bonanza creek and their tributaries were closed against entry; but it is not correct to say that they were closed against entry at the time of the granting of the first Order in Council. They had been re-opened prior to that time.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the exact date.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have it here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then the hon. gentleman can give it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The 11th of April, 1902, by a telegram from the Minister of the Interior.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, that is wrong.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then the return to the motion is wrong, because that is where I got it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can give the hon. gentleman the text of it if he wishes :

Office of the Gold Commissioner of the Yukon Territory,
Dawson, Y.T., April 11, 1902.

The Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the following telegram from the Hon. Clifford Sifton to the Gold Commissioner : 'Throw open for entry at once all the lapsed and abandoned claims withheld from entry by reason of Treadgold Order in Council.'

The minister's instructions in this matter have been carried out, and upon the receipt of the telegram the following notice was posted by the Gold Commissioner :

Dawson, Y.T., April 17, 1902,
4.30 p.m.

Notice is hereby given that from the above period all the lapsed and abandoned claims withheld from entry by reason of the Treadgold Order in Council are open to locations by free miners under the Placer Mining Regulations.

(Sgd) D. PATULLO,
Assistant Gold Commissioner.

Might I ask my hon. friend, while I am on my feet, to state which of these Orders in Council were cancelled and which were not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will try to answer that question; but I will say to my hon. friend first that the telegram which he has read does not touch the point to which I am referring. I will read a memorandum from Mr. Ryley, of the Department of the Interior :

The claims which were reserved from entry on Dominion, Bonanza, and tributaries, were open for entry some time before the Order in Council of June, 1901.

This memorandum was sent to me from the gallery. I suppose that if the officer had been in the department, he would have given the exact date. So that it will be seen that the grant is not so large as my hon. friend thinks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If that had anything to do with this, why was it not brought down with the return ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose there are many things which might have to do with the debate here which would not form part of the return. It would depend on the wording of the order. I do not know what the order called for.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to summarize the effect of this order. The order in a nutshell is that if the grantees should succeed in raising capital, it will be their privilege to erect works upon the Klondike for the purpose of generating electric power. It will be their privilege to use, subject to certain restrictions, water for hydraulic purposes. It will be the right of the public to take such power as the concessionaires do not use, and to pay therefor such price as may be fixed by the Governor in Council. It will be the right of the public to compel the company to sell to them whatever water is available at such price as may be fixed by the Gold Commissioner, or, in case of appeal, by the Territorial Court of the district. These material rights are secured to the public, and all they have to pay for these rights is what may be fixed by the Governor in Council or by the Territorial Court. The public are not excluded from an inch of the country. They have an equal right with these grantees to enter on any of the abandoned claims. The only exclusive grants conveyed to the grantees are in respect to the water privileges for generating power, and, sub motu, to use a certain portion of the water themselves. You cannot find in these documents anything giving the grantees any exclusive privilege except as the people's representatives fix. These are some of the reasons, and the chief reasons doubtless, why capitalists have failed to find in this scheme any such attractions as to induce them to embark capital in it.

Mr. CLARKE. Have these people not six years to raise that capital, and is not that privilege tied up for that time ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not tied up one day if we choose to repeal it. These gentlemen, we hope, will succeed in raising the money necessary to build these works. If they do not, hon. gentlemen opposite will have the credit of preventing them. They have already paralyzed the enterprise.

Mr. CLARKE. Have any petitions been received from the Yukon in favour of this concession being continued ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have received the most complete communication from the Yukon in regard to this matter, and the general policy of the government that could be desired. We heard the voice of the people a few months ago. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the candidate of hon. gentlemen opposite lost his deposit. So you see there is some money left in the treasury there yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Because the other candidate was pledged to repeal this concession.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Sent here on purpose to repeal the concession.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that he was. He was pledged to promote the best interests of the Yukon, and he is doing it, and we are doing it. I wish hon. gentlemen opposite were doing the same thing. I may not have dealt with this matter to the satisfaction of hon. gentlemen opposite; but I think I have dealt with it at least in such a way as to show the House and the country that this measure is one in the interest of the Yukon. Unless it is prevented from coming to fruition by obstacles thrown in its way, the time is not far distant when the people who make these charges will wonder at the attitude they have assumed; and among those who will be repentant for their mistakes will be some hon. gentlemen opposite, who will have ample opportunity to do so in the shades of opposition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman did not give the information I asked for. I asked him to state which of these Orders in Council had not been gazetted, I understood him to say that the Orders in Council did not come into force until they were gazetted. It is perfectly obvious that the first Order in Council must have been gazetted because it was acted upon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By the closing of the abandoned claims to public entries, as the correspondence amply shows.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that the closing of the claims proves that the Order in Council was acted upon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman state whether or not the Order in Council was gazetted ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am pleased to give the hon. gentleman any information necessary, and there is no occasion for him to show any temper or heat, though I suppose we should make some allowance. The second Order in Council was never gazetted. I did not make any inquiry, but if I can see any of the officials before eight o'clock, I shall do so.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under what law was it passed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows all the law.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is why I want you to state it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the Dominion Lands Act, section 51.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Which does not apply at all.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROBERT A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with every attention to the remarks of the Postmaster General and Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I only wish that the task of replying to the hon. gentleman had fallen on worthier shoulders. It is probably for me rather a difficult task to stand up here and advocate the claims of those whom we may term the gum-boot miners, the men whose enterprise, labour and endurance of hardships have made for Canada all that is worth while in the Klondike to-day. I was surprised to find the hon. Minister of Labour standing up here and, instead of advocating the cause of the miners, advocating the cause of the concessionaires of the monopolists, of the men who have obtained as I shall show an iniquitous concession from this government. And, Sir, what is the answer of the hon. Minister of Labour to the very able arraignment made by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) ? His one answer to the accusation is : Why, Sir, in the election of December 2, the Hon. Mr. Ross was returned as a member of the House of Commons; he was returned as a supporter of this government. But let us for a moment pause and see on what platform the hon. gentleman was returned. Was he returned as a supporter of this concession which we are now attacking ? Or was he returned as opposed to that concession ? Let us look for a moment at the platform of the Liberal party, in that election and see what it advocated. Let us examine the address of the hon. gentleman who was returned as a supporter of this government. I think this examination will convince you that he was returned pledged to oppose this concession, pledged to see that this concession was abolished. This is the platform adopted by the Liberal convention, and in every clause it is an arraignment of the present government. It begins :

Whereas, in the opinion of this convention the continued prosperity of the Yukon Territory depends chiefly on the efforts of individual miners and prospectors whose work is conducted under most difficult conditions, and the stability of the business of the country will be insured by furnishing regular employment to workmen ; therefore, be it

Resolved, that every effort should be made by the government to secure, and have such changes adopted as would secure, the ends desired ; that this convention most strongly recommends :—

1. Reduction of fees for miners' licenses and for recording and renewing claims.

2. The abolition of payment of commutation for assessment work, and compelling the performance of assessment work upon the claim itself or upon the claims as grouped.

Then follow seven or eight clauses, and the platform continues :

Whereas, in the opinion of the convention the matter of such supply——

That is dealing with the supply of water——

——on fair and reasonable terms should best be dealt with by the government itself, and should not be left to private individuals ; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the government be requested immediately to make careful examination and obtain reports upon the subject with a view to cancelling forthwith the Treadgold concession and undertaking such supply as a national enterprise.

Then, Sir, the hon. Minister of Labour said that the government were accused of granting these concessions by misrepresentation and fraud. Who accused them of it ? Was it not the Liberal convention who accused them ? At a meeting of Liberals held in the Yukon, the resolutions were passed stating that these concessions were granted by misrepresentation and fraud, and asking the government to cancel these concessions or, at least, to have an investigation in regard to it. Now, the platform goes on to say :

Resolved, that in the opinion of this convention many of the concessions now held were obtained by fraud and impositions ; that it is in the interest of this territory that such concessions should be annulled, and to that end that inquiry should be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances of such fraud and imposition and action taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

I repeat that these accusations of fraud and imposition come from the Liberals in the Yukon. I will not read all the platform adopted by the Liberal convention. But I will read the last clause :

And that the owners of hydraulic concessions already granted should be compelled to carry out the strict terms of their leases, and that in default of their so doing, their leases should be cancelled.

What was the answer of the Hon. James Ross to the platform of the convention as laid down ? In his address to the electors of the Yukon, he said :

I freely subscribe to every measure suggested therein. In respect to most of the planks, they are in perfect accord with the policy I have sought to have adopted in the Yukon. I recognize that the whole business life of the Yukon depends upon the success of the prospector and miner and they above all others should be encouraged.

Then in regard to the charges of fraud and misrepresentation, what does the hon. gentleman say ? He says :

The thorough investigation of the charges of fraud made in respect to the manner in which certain concessions are alleged to have been obtained, and if such fraud is established, the immediate commencement of such proceedings as may be required to vacate the grant and the enforcement of strict compliance with the conditions embodied in all crown grants in the Yukon.

And let me read one other little paragraph :

I believe that the Yukon is only in its infancy and that so far from its resources being exhausted, they have scarcely been touched, and the prosperity of the future will dwarf into insignificance all the success of the past. I was engaged in an endeavour to revise and codify not merely the mining laws but all the laws specially applicable to the Yukon when my illness interrupted the work. I think this work most essential in order that the laws may be fixed, clear and certain. With respect to the mining laws I propose to have them codified and then submitted to representative miners for criticism, alteration and approval in order that they may as far as possible meet with the approval of the mining community.

So, there is the platform upon which the Hon. James Hamilton Ross was elected as a representative of the people of the Yukon and as a government supporter in this House. Now, the hon. Minister of Labour dwelt a great deal upon the election of Mr. Ross as a government supporter. Let me say a word further in regard to that election. I find from the returns that, at that election, there were 5,160 votes cast, of which Mr. Ross received 2,971, and Mr. Clarke, 2,079, there were 100 spoiled ballots. But I find, from examination of the papers, that there was a great deal of dissatisfaction with regard to that election. I know that in the election which followed, on the 17th of January, the three leaders of the poll aggregated only 1,618 votes, though circumstances were such as to favour a larger vote than that of the 2nd of December, and the element beaten on the 2nd of December was triumphant on the 15th of January all along the line. At Miller's creek, where the whole population does not exceed forty, there were 161 votes cast for the hon. member for the Yukon. At Cariboo crossing where the population is less than twenty, 109 votes were cast for the hon. member for the Yukon. So I do not think that the Postmaster General should take such great credit for the election of the Hon. James Ross.

Now, Sir, while I am pleased with the statements made by the Postmaster General in regard to the charges of misrepresentation and fraud, let me for a moment refer to a very large meeting that was held by the Liberal party in the Yukon, where resolutions were passed in reference to this matter. This was a meeting of the Liberal Association :

The Liberal Association of Dawson met at the Pioneer Hall on Saturday night, and condemned in no uncertain tones the Order in Council of December 7, making Treadgold & Co. heirs to all the Klondike on this side of the Dome. A resolution was passed unanimously calling on the ministers of the Crown to secure its cancellation, and also to Mr. Commissioner Ross urging him to use all the powers at his disposal to prevent the law ever being enforced. A resolution was also passed unanimously that the first resolution be telegraphed at once to each of the ministers and to Mr. Ross.

This meeting was held in March, 1902.

The vice-president, F. T. Congdon, called the meeting to order and stated its objects. Mr. Congdon's remarks were to the point at once. He pointed out that public feeling had in a few days been aroused as it had not been aroused in a long while, yet he thought that notwithstanding the seriousness of the occasion and the enormity of the mistake that had been made, it was not an occasion warranting extreme action; indeed, he thought that the best results would be obtained by calm discussion, and the proper advising of the ministers in whose hands lay the remedy. Above all he thought no political capital was to be made of the ill-advised action of the government. The grant or Order in Council of December 7th had clearly been secured by the grossest misrepresentation and in violation of all the principles of right. Canadian soil was not the property of the government. The government only held it in trust for the people at large.

Who is it that makes this statement? The man who is the present Governor of the Yukon, the man who is a supporter of the present government. He goes on to say:

The facts so familiar to each and every one of his hearers, he believed it had not been called to the attention of the government, and he thought the government had been grossly imposed on. The Order in Council has already been passed and the law of contracts stood in the way of the cancellation of the contract at the will of one of the makers; but there is another provision of the law just as powerful and binding where a contract can be shown to have been made by misrepresentation and fraud, its provisions could be set aside, and he believed there would be no difficulty in this case in showing such misrepresentations to have been made and many important facts withheld.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were resolutions passed at that large gathering of Liberals in the Yukon, and this is one of the resolutions:

Resolved, that the commissioner's attention be called to the fact, and that he be requested to represent to the government that in the opinion of this meeting, the insertion of any such features in the Orders in Council could only have been procured by the grossest misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment; that it never could have been represented to the minister who proposed said Orders or to the Governor in Council that the Orders were an interference with and abrogation of vested rights; that it was retroactive in operation and most far reaching and uncertain in effect; that it was certain to produce distrust and lack of confidence among the mining communities of this territory and prove fatal to the progress of the territory; nor could it have been presented and made apparent that the only consideration promised for the enormous interests granted was a monopoly to supply water at an exorbitant and prohibitive price.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I regret sincerely the absence of the hon. the Minister of the Interior. If we are to believe report, he sailed from England on the same ship that Mr. Treadgold sailed on, and they are now, no doubt, in the city of London. I regret his absence, because I would like to have heard his explanations in regard to all these different concessions, and especially in regard to this Treadgold concession. I regret also the absence of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross). I find, Sir, that he is paraded in the official organ of the Liberal party as having reached parliament and as having obtained great and important results for the miners of that section of the country. Let me just refer to the reception of Governor Congdon upon his arrival in the Yukon, and to his statements in regard to this Treadgold concession. I will refer to the Yukon 'Sun,' the official organ, as I understand, of the Liberal party. There is also an interview with Governor Congdon in the 'Dawson Daily News.' What does the Governor say in regard to this concession:

As to the Treadgold concession, I may say I favour its cancellation.

This was on Thursday April, 9, 1903, months after the election of the hon. member for the Yukon.

I am in the same position regarding the subject as I always have been. I am satisfied that he should have no more privileges than any one else. I will not say that I favour the total cancellation——

He has changed his mind since being appointed Governor. Prior to his appointment as Governor he was in favour of the total and absolute cancellation of the Treadgold concession. He now says:

I will not say that I favour the total cancellation of the Treadgold concession, that is, I shall not put it in that way, but say I believe he should have no privileges that others do not have. As to what parliament is likely to do with the matter I cannot say. I feel that if the government will install a supply of water for the camp it will be a great enterprise and give an impetus to the mining industry. Mr. Ross is working on the scheme, and will urge parliament to send a corps of experts here to investigate the feasibility and desirability of such a system. It is the intention of Mr. Ross to get the government to send the most competent engineers that can be found in the world. Parliament doubtless will deal with this matter deliberately, and it is not to be expected an appropriation will be made for the installation of such a gigantic plant now in the short time the session will last. Heavy projects progress slowly, and if Mr. Ross succeeds in getting an appropriation this season for the expenses of a corps of experts to investigate the field and desirability of the scheme, he will be doing well. If after all a government supply of water is not to be obtained we should have water from some source. But the government does not know our needs and will first have to satisfy itself as to the prospects for permanency of the placers and the need of water over the camp as a whole. The needs of a few would not justify such a great expenditure as is contemplated.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the date of that paper?

Mr. PRINGLE. April 9, 1903, the 'Dawson Daily News.' Now, Sir, let me quote from the 'Yukon Sun.' One cannot read any of the editorials of the 'Yukon Sun' without coming to the conclusion that it is the organ of the Liberal party in that territory. In the first place, I will quote from the 'Yukon Weekly Sun' of Saturday, April 4:

The Treadgold concession stands a poor show. Must be ratified by the present parliament or it falls to the ground. Mr. Ross will oppose its ratification.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is he not here?

Mr. PRINGLE (reading):

If the Treadgold concession comes up in the House for ratification, Yukon's member will oppose it. Section 5 of 'An Act to amend the Yukon Act,' passed last session, provided that all regulations passed applying or relating to Yukon Territory, will remain in force only until approved by resolution of both Houses of parliament. From the records received here from Dawson, it appears that people there are under a misapprehension in regard to this provision. All the regulations to be operative must be approved by parliament to keep them in force beyond the date of prorogation of the present session. The Treadgold Order in Council must therefore be approved at the present session or it will fall to the ground. As already said, if it comes up in the House, Mr. Ross will oppose it.

I have been in this House since the opening almost every day, and up to the present time I have not heard any great opposition coming from the hon. member from the Yukon. That hon. gentleman has been doing great things, but, I challenge any hon. gentleman here to tell us what he has done in the House. Here is an editorial in the official organ of the Liberal party at Dawson, the Yukon 'Sun' of March 28th. It says:

JIM ROSS, M.P.

Is he a lightning striker? We should remark that he is. Saturday afternoon he arrived at Ottawa. Sunday he received the members of the House and Senate and made friends for Yukon. Monday he was introduced in the House, upon which occasion he was cheered to the echo. The premier of Canada introduced him. Immediately after the introduction he secured the passage of a Bill granting extended powers to the Yukon council. Tuesday he spent the forenoon in the Department of the Interior looking after matters pertaining to the Yukon. Wednesday he had the price of free miners certificate reduced to $7.50.

I can give him or somebody credit for having these fees reduced. I find that it was managed within a very short time, and the fee is now reduced to $7.50. Then it says:

The record fees from $15 to $10, renewal fees from $15 to $10, and payment of money in lieu of assessment work abolished. What he did yesterday is not known at the time this is written, but the telegraphic advices pointed on the first page of this issue will tell. If Jim Ross keeps up his present gait it will only take him a week to perform all the seeming impossibilities of the platform prepared here for him, bound him to.

Why, the platform provided for him bound him to abolish this Treadgold concession, and according to this editorial of the official organ of the Liberal party in the Yukon, if he kept up his gait, in a week he was going to have this Treadgold concession abolished. He seemed to have slackened his gait, because we have not heard anything of the Treadgold concession since the hon. member arrived in Ottawa. It says further:

The judgment of the voters of the Yukon in electing Mr. Ross is apparent. No man would have the assurance to even insinuate that Mr. Clarke could have done the good work for the Yukon that Mr. Ross has already done. Mr. Ross goes to Ottawa as a friend of the party in power. He was received with distinguished honours and is able to win some consideration for us each day. Mr. Clarke would have gone as an avowed enemy of the party in power, would have talked anarchy to every reporter who would listen to him along the route, and we would have received about as little consideration in parliament as he might with reason expect. The judgment of the people of the Territory of Yukon can be depended upon. And that judgment was never better demonstrated than in their selecting 'Jim' Ross to represent them in parliament.

But, in the same edition of this paper, Mr. Jim Ross is going to abolish the Treadgold concession, and he is going to establish a national work to supply water for the miners of that country. Now, it is not very hard to understand, after the explanations I have given in regard to this election, how the hon. member was elected for the Yukon. I find, at any rate it is alleged in certain documents, that in the Yukon Territory, there is one official for every fifteen miners in the district, and I have no doubt that these officials did not neglect to vote for the hon. gentleman. I desire to approach this matter in a fair, impartial and calm spirit. The hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) accused the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) of making an inflammatory speech. In that he accused him improperly. I think, we in this House, should agree, and that the hon. the Postmaster General, who is also Minister of Labour, should agree with the proposition that the policy should be to give every advantage to the practical miner over the mere speculator, and that is the policy that I desire to advocate.

I know that it is very often difficult to advocate the policy of the miner against the hon. Postmaster General, who is advocating the policy of the monopolists, and who is advocating the policy of these concessionaires. I would have expected that the hon. Postmaster General would have advocated the cause of the miner, the cause of the labourer, the cause of the men who have done so much to bring to the knowledge of the people of the world Dawson and the Klondike. We have only to look back a few years, to the time when these names were unknown throughout the civilized world, but to-day, Dawson and the Klondike are known from one end of the world to the other, and if they are known they are known through the efforts of the hardy men who went into that country as prospectors and who developed the mines of that region. These are the men we should protect, and these are the men who are entitled to the protection of the members of this House. Let me quote briefly from a little work that was published by a man who was in Dawson City and who went into that country to see the conditions existing there. What did he find? Did he find that the affairs of the country were administered properly? No Sir, he found that the condition of the miners there under the regulations adopted by the government was worse than the condition of the Uitlanders in South Africa. The work is entitled 'The Klondike Stampede' and it is edited by Mr. Tappan Abney, special correspondent of 'Harper's Weekly' in the Klondike. He says:

In the Klondike, those who best knew the country's needs had no voice whatever in its government; all laws were made at Ottawa, and those sent out to enforce them were responsible only to the home government, or to the officials to whom they owed their appointment. Dawson was an 'alien' camp, where, if the position of the majority of the residents was different from the 'Uitlander' at Johannesburg, it was only that the laws were in intent more liberal. Distant, weeks and months from the seat of responsibility, it is not difficult to understand how, even if government intended well, the condition of the miner might be scarcely better than that of his unfortunate confrere in the Boer republic. In fact, conditions which actually prevailed at Dawson were likened by British citizens direct from the Transvaal as even worse than what they left.

The natural difficulties that stood in the way of putting into immediate operation an effective government were so great that one should not judge the Klondikers too harshly. On the other hand, if there were not serious disorders it was due less to the quality of government than to the orderly character of the population, and to the fact that men were there enduring the privations of an Arctic climate to make their fortunes and get away, not to help set in order the political households of their Canadian friends.

Now, Sir, he goes on to say

While the law required the 'gum-boot' miner to stake in person, so-called 'dredging permits,' in five-mile blocks, were granted over fifteen hundred miles of Klondike and Yukon streams to men who, for the most part, had never seen, nor intended to see, the Yukon. Such, in brief, are the regulations now in force which further provide for the sale of timberberths to private parties, whereby miners are virtually prevented from cutting wood, even for their own use, except on such terms as the monopolists concede. The tendency of the new legislation is against the 'gum-boot' miner, the man whose enterprise, labours, and hardships have made for Canada all that is worth while in the Klondike to-day. This is always the inevitable trend, but never in any camp has so much been done in so short a time in that direction as in the Canadian camp.

He goes on to deal with the public officials in the Yukon, and he says:

Afterwards, emboldened by the impotency of the commissioner to correct these abuses, favoured ones began to be admitted during office hours, upon passes, and recorded claims ahead of men who had been waiting often for days in line outside. It became recognized by everyone who was obliged to deal with the office that the only way of getting even what belonged to him was to bribe an official. Appeal to the Gold Commissioner was as likely as not met with dismissal in an arbitrary, unjust, or illegal manner. During the greater part of the rush there was no one to verify measurements of claims (only survey by Dominion land surveyors being recognized officially). The commissioner was in ignorance of the location and identity of creeks; he would give two different names to the same creek, not knowing them to be the same; he would grant the same claim to different men, and yet refuse, when the fact was proven, to refund the record fee to one of them; he allowed two discoveries on one creek, and claims became so mixed, in consequence of overlapping between discoveries, that he was obliged to close the creek, to the great loss of miners, who were not allowed to record (pending arrival of official surveyors), and who were holding the claims in person, in compliance with the mining law. Thus, between the incompetency of the commissioner and the corruption of his clerks, legitimate business came almost to a standstill. The general law of Canada, providing that no person should suffer from the incompetency of an official, was of no effect to the poor miner, who had neither money nor time to obtain the remedy.

The author of this work is an entirely independent man who went into that country, and he tells here of the way in which he found the public business administered. It is my opinion, Sir, that the evils were not so great at the time that work was written as they are at present. Since the publication of that work we find that large concessions have been granted in that territory to what are called concessionaires, and that the miners have been practically driven out of certain sections of the country. We find that as early as 1898 the government began to close the placer ground of this territory against location by the placer miners. In that year a large tract of Dominion creek was from time to time closed. In the same year also, fractional claims were closed against location. In February, 1898, the Minister of the Interior directed that Bonanza and Eldorado, and their tributaries and benches should be closed against location, and I may say that so far as I can ascertain these were amongst the richest creeks in that section of the country. This was followed in October, 1899, by a regulation closing all lapsed claims in the territory against relocation. In the year and a half that followed, silently at Ottawa and without the knowledge of the Yukon people, and on the flimsiest pretexts, the greater part of the richest placer ground was included in what was called hydraulic concessions. On Hunker creek were granted to Williams two and a half square miles; to Milne, two square miles; to Anderson, two and half square miles. On the Klondike, including Bear and Lindow creeks, to Boyle, fifty square miles. While the miner could only take up so many feet as a claim, the government were granting here concessions of from ten to fifty miles. On Bonanza there was given to Philip, five square miles; to Bronson & Ray, fifteen square miles; to Matson & Doyle, three square miles, and on Quartz creek, four square miles were granted to the same Boyle. I may say that this man Boyle seems to be a very favoured individual of the government of this country. He seemed to have no trouble in getting concession after concession in the richest and best portion of the Yukon Territory. I find Mr. Boyle sold these concessions later on to other parties at enormous figures. As I say, on Poors creek another concession of about four square miles was granted to the same Boyle, while the other creeks were almost similarly blanketed by concessions which were obtained—in the words of the Liberal convention; in the words of the Liberals present at that meeting—I am only repeating their language when I say that these concessions were obtained largely by fraud.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PRINGLE. Now Sir, the miners of the Yukon take this ground, and it seems to be a proper ground to take—the Liberal party in the Yukon take this ground, and they evidently consider it a proper ground, namely : that these concessions which were granted on misrepresentation and fraud should be annulled. I believe, Sir, that every one of them can be cancelled because of the breach of the conditions stipulated in their leases.

Now, Sir, we come to Mr. Treadgold, and I want to say here that I have not a word to say personally in regard to Mr. Treadgold, in regard to Walter Barwick, K.C., in regard to Mr. Ewing or any of the men who have obtained concessions from this government. I have nothing whatever to say with regard to these men. I don't think they are philanthropists; I don't think they were getting this concession for the benefit of the miners, but I do think and I have no doubt that they were getting this concession for the benefit of themselves, and a very valuable concession it was. If the report of the Dawson Board of Trade, and if the report of the engineers of that company be correct, it was a concession which would make these men millionaires in very short order. Mr. Treadgold appeared on the scene in 1898, and I am informed that he was welcomed to the Yukon as being a representative of British capital. He began at once to acquire placer claims of value. In 1899 and 1900 he purchased interests in the Boyle concession, and other of the infamous concessions which I have already referred to. On the 31st of May, 1900, on the pretense of bringing water to work low grade gravels, he, with Walter Barwick, K.C., and O. N. Ewing, asked for a controlling interest in the rest of the Klondike basin. It is interesting to turn to the request of these concessionaires. On the 31st of May these gentlemen put in their requisition to the hon. Minister of the Interior and in that requisition they state :

> The applicants are prepared to undertake the establishment of hydraulic works which will supply water to the auriferous deposits now without water, &c.

In that request of theirs they asked for concessions which the people of the Yukon contend should never have been granted; and, Sir, was there any change made when the government passed the Order in Council ? The Order in Council was passed in the identical language in which these gentlemen asked for the Order. There does not appear to have ever been any discussion by the minister as to whether the request of these gentlemen was reasonable or unreasonable. The Minister of the Interior evidently advised his colleagues that they must grant to these applicants everything they asked for, and the Order in Council was passed on the 12th of June, 1901; and what were they to get under that Order ? They were to get one dollar per miners' inch per hour for water supply. It was a most iniquitous concession, on their own showing, because they came down very shortly afterwards and said : 'We will be very glad to take twenty-five cents per miners' inch.' The Order was amended shortly afterwards, I think on the 29th of June, 1901, as follows :

> The charge which the grantees shall be entitled to make for the use of such water on each placer claim shall not exceed 25 cents per miners' inch per hour.

These gentlemen came down very quickly from a dollar to twenty-five cents.

Now, the hon. Minister of Labour has accused the hon. member from Montmorency of speaking from unofficial documents, from newspapers and from anonymous communications, and he has spoken disparagingly of every source from which the hon. member from Montmorency spoke. Why should he condemn the Yukon Board of Trade, a body composed of both Conservatives and Liberals ? I was surprised, Sir, to hear him condemn that body and term them irresponsible parties. Here is what the board of trade says in regard to this matter :

> The Treadgold concession and water grant, as granted by an Order in Council which, when ratified by the parliament at its next session, will become law, is, in the opinion of this board, one of the most iniquitous measures that was ever inflicted upon a people.

The Dawson Board of Trade may be irresponsible, but they are the best representative body we can find in the Yukon Territory, and they say that in their opinion this concession—

Will work a great hardship upon the people of this territory, since it will mean the virtual bankruptcy of all the property holders of Dawson and surrounding territory, and instead of the Klondike becoming the prosperous country we expect, it will virtually become the property of Mr. Treadgold and those who are associated with him in his scheme.

Why is this concession granted? Is it granted for the benefit of the miners of the Yukon or for the benefit of these individuals? We know that everybody in that country is opposed to it. The hon. gentleman said that he had petitions from some sources favouring the concession. I would ask the hon. gentleman to lay those petitions on the Table of this House; we want to see them, because we are advised that the people of the Yukon are a unit against this concession, and we are advised that when the hon. member for the Yukon takes his seat in this House, he will give us active and vigorous assistance in doing away with it.

Let me read a little from the petition of the board of trade:

The petition of the undersigned residents of the Yukon Territory humbly showeth:

1. That by Order in Council of April the 21st, 1902, certain privileges are granted to Malcolm Orr Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold and Walter Barwick, in connection with the proposed establishment by them of a system of water supply for washing out gold-bearing gravel in the district therein described, including the Klondike river, Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks and their tributaries.

2. That the benefits conferred upon the grantees are of incalculable value and involve an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this territory for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.

3. That in the opinion of your petitioners the accumulation of extraordinary powers in the hands of a single corporation such as is effected by the above Order in Council, will lead to the paralysis of the independent commercial and industrial life of the community and will prove in the highest degree oppressive and injurious to the public welfare, since the grantees are thereby enabled to crush out competition and to reduce to a position of practical servitude the individual miners in the extensive district affected which includes the richest portion of the Klondike.

4. That the need of this territory is not the creation of monopolies but their prevention, and the encouragement of the individual miners by securing equal privileges and opportunities to all as far as the law and the administration can provide them.

We have a computation made by a very competent gentleman as to the revenues that would be derived by these concessionaires from the concession which is being granted to them by this government. If this computation is at all correct, the amount of money which these people would derive in a very short time is simply fabulous. Let me refer for a moment to the statement made:

Now in order to convey to you some idea of the magnitude of the grant which Mr. Treadgold and his associates are looking for and which it appears likely they will receive, if the intention of the Minister of the Interior is allowed to be carried out, it having been recommended by him, we believe that the said Treadgold and his associates receive the sole and prior right to divert and take water from the Klondike river up to 5,000 miners' inches for distribution and use in the district, said district comprising the beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, of Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, and their tributaries, also the right to divert and use the water of Rock creek, which water we are informed by Mr. Joseph McGillivray, a mining engineer of long experience, amounts to 8,000 inches, natural flow, and which would give Mr. Treadgold and associates the sole right to divert and sell 13,000 inches of water. Now, a miner requires with which to sluice his dirt 50 inches of water, which is the amount considered necessary to make a sluice-head, and should the Treadgold Company at the rate which, we understand, is the contemplated charge (25 per cent miners' inch per hour) it would cost the miner $12.50 per hour or $300 per day of 24 hours, which is the length of the working day here during the summer season. Now this grant of 5,000 inches from the Klondike river and the natural flow of Rock creek, amounting to 8,000 inches, making a total of water at Treadgold's command of 13,000 inches, or 260 sluice-heads of 50 inches per sluice-head, costing the miner in this country $78,000 per day, or $10,140,000 per year of 130 sluicing days, which is the length of the sluicing season here, would mean this: that the holder of the same would practically own the country, all the hill claim owners would have to come to him for water, or allow their claim to remain unoperated for lack of same, and Mr. Treadgold and his associates would be receiving all the profits that would accrue from the thousands of hill claims, situate on the immense and huge gravel deposits with which this country abounds.

I do not see why these gentlemen should get a concession of such tremendous advantage to them. The hon. the Postmaster General has predicted that the opposition will repent the attack on this scheme. It was equally predicted that he would repeat the attack made on the Yukon Railway deal of some years ago. Let me just refer for a moment to the language of the right hon. the Prime Minister, when the little item of $328,508 which this country had to pay to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, was before this House. Here is the item:

To pay amount of judgment of Exchequer Court in favour of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann to recoup them for their outlay in connection with proposed contract for a railway from Stickeen river to Teslin lake.	$327,678 10
Costs for evidence, &c..	830 20
	$328,508 30

In the discussion on this item the right hon. gentleman said:

Of course I am bound to say at once that there is no legal recourse against the Canadian government which can be enforced in a court of law, but we admit that Mackenzie & Mann have a moral claim against the honour of the Canadian people against the honour of the Canadian government and against the honour of the Canadian parliament for the money which they have expended in an enterprise which was national in its character, &c., &c. For these reasons we submit to the Canadian parliament that these men should not be subjected to the heavy loss which would be entailed on them, but as this is a loss which must be borne by somebody, it should be borne by the country and not by the contractors, &c., &c. Of course, if it had not been for the charter which parliament had granted—I will not say improvidently or imprudently, granted, but granted in ignorance of the conditions existing in that country, there would not have been any necessity for such haste.

I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Postmaster General will come down later on in the day and seek to get some compensation for these gentlemen's interests in the Treadgold concessions, because he has told us that they have expended over $50,000 in that concession. Though I am satisfied that this government will never in the face of the opposition from their own friends in the Yukon, in face of the opposition of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) who was elected to represent the Yukon district in this House, permit this iniquitous concession to become law, they will no doubt ask for a vote to recoup these people for the expenditure they have made in connection with this concession, just as was done in the MacKenzie & Mann affair. I am not reflecting in any way on Messrs Mackenzie & Mann or anybody else in connection with their scheme, but I say that when the government rushed into it, the conditions of the country were not known or the government would never have committed such a piece of folly. Let me quote again from the work of Tappan Abney on 'The Klondike Stampede.' Referring to the Mackenzie & Mann deal, Mr. Tappan said :

> The Canadian Minister of the Interior, the Hon. Clifford Sifton, granted to a firm of contractors, Mesrs Mackenzie & Mann, provisional right to construct a railway from the Stikeen river to the Teslin lake, in return for immense grants of gold-bearing land in the Klondike. Surveys were made and material delivered at the terminus of the proposed road, and tickets were sold in the principal cities of Europe and the United States for through passage to Dawson.

But, he added :

> Before the agreement with Mackenzie & Mann was ratified by parliament, however, a committee of miners sent out from Dawson in the fall of 1897 to protest against the royalty tax, discovered and pointed out to parliament the true inwardness of the proposed franchise, the profits on which had been already figured out as $34,000,000, and, as a result of the flood of light they let in upon parliament concerning the Yukon, the Bill was killed.

Then he proceeded :

> 3,750,000 acres of mineral land in Klondike were to be granted to the contractors, whereas the whole area about Dawson that had been prospected contained only 864,000 acres. They were to be allowed to run their lines along 960 miles of creeks, whereas Bonanza and Eldorado are only thirty-one miles long ; the land was to be held in fee simple, instead of by annual lease ; and royalties on gold were to be only one per cent instead of ten per cent, which were required of all others. In return for which they were to build a narrow-gauge railroad, from a terminus only twenty-six miles nearer Dawson than Skagway—150 miles of tracks, useless for seven months of the year—with right to charge exorbitant tolls, and with a monopoly of railway ingress to the Yukon for five years. It was a grab of nearly everything worth having in the Yukon district.

If that Yukon agreement was a grab of nearly everything worth having in that district, this Treadgold concession, if we are to believe the Liberals of the Yukon, the board of trade and the miners of that district, is a grab of nearly everything worth having in that territory.

I would like to refer for a moment to something that certainly is not ancient history. I should like to read a telegram sent on March the 6th, 1903, by the board of trade, and to comment on the reply which was sent by the right hon. Prime Minister. I may be very obtuse, but I cannot comprehend exactly the meaning of that answer. This is the message which the board of trade sent :

> Dawson opposes any attempt to pass Order in Council or Act of parliament that will in any way confirm the Treadgold concession, are having monster petitions signed, and reliable data prepared to forward to Ottawa asking the government to aid in furnishing water for mining purposes. The people are a unity in making demands and will insist on government cancelling monopoly of Treadgold's octopus.

The reply to that telegram is dated, Ottawa, March the 9th, 1903, sent to H. C. McCullough, president of the board of trade. Evidently the right hon. the First Minister did not share in the opinion of his hon. colleague, the Postmaster General, that this is an irresponsible body.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will allow me ? On several occasions he has charged me with saying that the board of trade of Dawson is an irresponsible body. I said nothing of the kind. I did not allude to them ; I did not say anything to embrace them, I alluded to the quotations from the press and scrap information of that kind.

Mr. PRINGLE. Well, I should sincerely regret to misquote the hon. Postmaster General. What I understood him to say—and I took a note of it at the time—was that the hon. member for Montmorency quoted from irresponsible parties.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that all his quotations were from irresponsible parties. I pointed out that there were quotations of the kind I said.

Mr. PRINGLE. Would the hon. minister tell me which of these quotations were from irresponsible parties Were they the quotations from the convention of the Liberal party ? Were they the quotations from the platform of the Hon. James Ross ? Were they the quotations from the platform of the Liberal party as laid down in their convention ? Were they the quotations from the board of trade ? Or what quotations were from irresponsible parties ? If the hon. gentleman will tell me, I will be in a position to take that up.

Now, Sir, failing to get an answer from the Postmaster General, I will proceed with a discussion of these telegrams. To my mind they are ambiguous, I will not say they are deceptive, though that is the term used by some of the parties in the Yukon. What does it mean ? Does it mean that no confirmation is needed ? Does it mean that the Treadgold concession is dead, and that there is no action contemplated by legislation or government order ? Here is the telegram which is signed by the right hon. the Prime Minister :

You are altogether misinformed with regard to what is called the Treadgold concession. No such action contemplated either by legislation or by government order.

Now, what is the action referred to by the telegram sent to the Dawson Board of Trade ? The only construction that we could place on it is that there is no action contemplated either by legislation or by government order to confirm and make legal and valid this Order in Council that the Postmaster General has told us is not binding as yet, and cannot be binding until such time as it is published in the official 'Gazette.' I do not wish to weary the House, but I wish to refer to one or two other points in connection with this matter, which seems to me a very important one so far as the miners of this country are concerned. And it is worth noting that, while we have labour representatives in this House, I do not know that they will get up to advocate the cause of the labouring men in the country if it interferes with a concession granted by the government. We have a statement made by the Postmaster General that the deputation waited upon the government last year, but that they never asked for the abolition of this concession, but only for certain changes to be made in it. I have here the report of these gentlemen on their return to the Yukon. Let us see what they said :

Gentlemen, as there seems in some quarters to be a desire for a report as to the results of our mission with regard to the Treadgold concession, I wish to lay before the committee a synopsis of our doings at Ottawa.

According to instructions, we met and conferred with the Hon. Jas. H. Ross on our arrival, and found him disposed to assist us in every way possible.

An interview was arranged with the premier and the hon. Minister of the Interior, at which were present Hon. James H. Ross, Ralph Smith, Arthur Wilson, and myself. The matter was laid before the premier and Mr. Sifton in its entirety, and the total abolition of the concession was demanded.

It is not for me to say who was right or who was wrong. But when the Minister of Labour gets up in this House and says that this deputation never asked for the abolition of the Treadgold concession, it is only right that I should refer to the report of these gentlemen when they returned to the Yukon. Now, what did they find out ?——

We found out that the concession had been already granted and that the only method by which we could secure redress was by working with the government, which showed every disposition to rectify the mistakes which had been made.

But, Sir, what did the government do ? They rescinded the Order in Council, rescinded it in toto, and then issued another order which gave to these people greater concessions than they had in the first order. We find, subsequent to the time when this deputation arrived in the city, and subsequent to the interview with the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior, the order was passed rescinding the Order in Council of the 12th June, and subsequent order. It says :

Extract from a Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, Approved by His Excellency April 21, 1902.

On a memorandum, dated April 17, 1902, from the Minister of the Interior, stating that he has been in consultation with the Hon. James H. Ross, Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, with regard to certain objections which have been raised to the Orders in Council of June 12, 1902, June 29, 1901, and December 7, 1901, granting Messrs. Malcolm H. Orr-Ewing, of Malvern, England; A. N. C. Treadgold, of London, England, and Walter Barwick, of Toronto, Ontario, certain rights, powers and privileges, as set out in the above-mentioned Orders in Council, and such objections have also been the subject of consultations with the grantees.

The minister recommends as the result of the said consultations, with the assent of the said grantees, that the Orders in Council cited above, be rescinded.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these Orders in Council were rescinded. If the government had made mistakes in regard to these Orders in Council they had the consent of the grantees to rescind them, and they were rescinded on the 17th April. At that time the government was possessed of the knowledge that the people of the Yukon were utterly and totally opposed to these concessions. Yet, three days afterwards, on the 20th April, they grant to these very same people concessions which gave to them greater rights than they previously had. I shall take that subject up a little later on, and shall show that by the last concessions granted to these people they had greater rights than under the previous concession. Now, let me refer also, while I am on the subject, to the statement made by the Minister of the Interior with regard to this deputation. In 'Hansard' of last year, 1902, volume 2, pages 4951 and 4952, you will find a discussion that took place last session in regard to this deputation. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) asked the Minister of the Interior the following :

I would like to know whether the concession in its amended form has met with any opposition in the Yukon at the present time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so. Mr. Ross informed me that the delegates who had been sent from Dawson had seen the amended Order in Council and agreed that it would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With regard to the abandoned claims, the information I have would show that in many cases those claims afterwards proved to be very valuable. Another objection that was brought to my attention was that a scheme of this kind was not required in the Yukon at the present time, because it could not be properly carried out until the lower levels had been more thoroughly worked. As I understand it, the operations of a scheme of this kind would prevent the working of the lower levels. Am I correct in that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one other circumstance I would like to mention. There was a memorial of some kind presented to the minister by a number of miners. I saw a copy of that printed in the public press. I would like to know whether the amended Order in Council meets the objections either wholly or partially which were made by the miners in this memorial ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To all intents and purposes, I think I can say that it does. I went over the memorial with the delegates, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Sugrue. Mr. Wilson was one of the elected members of the Yukon council and Mr. Sugrue was a newspaper man. I went over the memorial with them, and they agreed that the Order in Council in its amended form substantially met their objections. Possibly some of the abandoned claims may turn out to be very valuable.

Now, Sir, does that agree with the report of the delegates upon their return to the Yukon ? In their report they state an entirely different set of affairs. They say :

We found that the concession had already been granted and that the only method by which we could secure redress was by working with the government.

Now, Sir, it has been stated here by the Minister of Labour that the hon. member for the Yukon was returned to this House as a government supporter. No doubt he was returned as a government supporter. But I want to remark that he was pledged from the start to the finish of his campaign to oppose this Treadgold concession. I have read you the platform of the Liberal party, I have read you his endorsation and his acceptance of that platform. Let me also read you the statements made by Mr. Congdon on Mr. Ross's behalf during the campaign. Mr. Congdon was an active supporter of the Hon. James Ross, now the Governor, and in his speech at South Dawson during the campaign, on October 14, 1902, he said :

The government had entered into a contract with Treadgold and only the parliament of Canada could abrogate that agreement. Mr. Ross had asked for the cancellation of the Treadgold concession, but the government found itself tied in such a manner that it could only secure a modification of the grant.

Now, Sir, that shows that Mr. Ross was advocating the cancellation of that concession. Then there was another statement made by Mr. Congdon, but as that was referred to by my hon. friend from Montmorency, I will not now refer to it. I say that throughout that territory there has been a constant agitation against that concession, an agitation by all parties irrespective of politics. Let me refer you to one or two resolutions that were passed at a mass meeting of citizens held April 2, 1902. There were statements made there which I think would be unfair probably to make in this House. Men standing high in the politics of this country were connected with some of these concessions in statements made at that meeting. I think, Sir, it would be entirely unfair for me to repeat those statements, as I have no proof and nothing to show that these men were in any way connected with these concessions. This is a report of the meeting at which certain statements were made by Mr. Woodworth and other gentlemen. I will simply read the resolutions, and not the statements which were made by these men. The resolutions passed at this meeting held in Dawson are reported in the press of April 22, 1902. The first resolution is this :

We request the government of the Dominion of Canada to immediately inquire into the means by which the Anderson, Milne, Boyle, Bronson and Ray, Doyle Matson, Slavin and Gates and Miller creek concessions were obtained, as to whether said concessions were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation and granted in error and improvidence, and as to whether the regulations have been complied with in the grant or continuance of said leases.

Whereas, the Anderson, Milne, Boyle, Bronson and Ray, Matson, Doyle, Slavin and Gates and Miller creek concessions comprise much of the richest known placer mining ground in the Yukon Territory and ought never to have been leased to the pretended lessees.

Therefore, resolved, that all ground within the limits of said concessions be open to location by the placer miner whether held by concession or not.

Whereas, by express agreement of the holders of the Matson and Doyle concessions are entitled to the mining claims forfeited within the bounds of their concessions, providing they file a plan and apply for the same within one year from date of lapse of said claims, and whereas, under express or implied agreement the Slavin and Gates, Bronson and Ray, Boyle, Milne and Miller creek concessions in a similar manner are claims lapsing within their boundaries, and whereas all said concessions were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation and comprise within their boundaries some of the richest placer mining ground in the Yukon Territory, therefore resolved, that the government of the Dominion of Canada be requested to take steps to prevent said lapsed ground becoming a part of said concessions.

The leases and agreements by which the Anderson, Milne, Boyle Bronson and Ray, Doyle, Matson, Slavin and Gates and Miller creek concessions be cancelled and revoked upon such terms as may be just.

Now, Sir, I will deal for a few moments with the Order in Council granted on the 21st of April, 1902. The Minister of Labour has gone over these concessions clause by clause, and he has endeavoured to point out to this House that the concessionaires did not obtain so much by the final Orders in Council as they obtained by the previous orders. I cannot agree with him in that contention. Now, Sir, in clause 1 of the Order in Council, 21st April, 1902, the first paragraph of that Order in Council is identically the same as the first paragraph of the Orders in Council previously granted, and which had been rescinded. Under that first paragraph these parties are given—

The sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river at any point or points between its entry into the Yukon river and Flat creek for the purpose of generating power with which to pump water to work the auriferous deposits in the district (hereinafter termed 'The District') comprising the beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, of Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, and of their tributaries.

Now, I say that they are given the sole and absolute right and by the section that follows they are given six years to exercise that right. They tie up for a period of six years the development of the water power in that locality. Mr. Speaker, I take the ground that if any man went in and attempted to develop the power in that district these gentlemen could at once apply for an injunction and restrain him from doing any work in that connection. It has been my pleasure to read several of the best works in regard to placer mining in the State of California. I recognize that in a new country such as the Yukon there are difficulties in the way of government, in the way of making orders and regulations incidental to meeting the requirements of the people, but I venture to say, Sir, that you cannot find in the history of any mining country where a concession was given such as the Treadgold concession. I find in the history of California that in the placer mining districts of that state, during the boom in placer mining, there were 6,000 miles of sluices built. There was no monopoly given to any one company, and there was no concession such as this tying up the whole country. Companies were formed and there was competition between these companies and that competition gave to the miners a reasonable rate for the water which they required. There was no such concession as this monopoly which has been granted in favour of the concessionaires. Now, the hon. Minister of Labour also referred to a little change that was made in regard to section 3. He says that :

The right to divert and use the water of Rock creek subject to any grants lawfully subsisting and subject to the rights of free miners' bona fide working claims.

And so on is a change. I would like to just point out to the hon. Minister of Labour in regard to the water of Rock creek that there are no claims worked on Rock creek so that the reservation in this case amounts to nothing. Rock creek was a source of water for distribution to the Klondike river. There are a number of clauses in this Order in Council and it would take me a very long time to point out all the iniquities of them. The hon. minister has pointed to section 10 of this Order in Council. I do not know why he did. It is a most sweeping clause. Clause 10 reads as follows :

The right, subject to no payment except the royalty prescribed upon output to make entry for and work any abandoned mining claim or claims on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks.

Up to that point it is absolutely the same as the previous Order in Council, but this language has been added :

Such right to be exercisable only when the grantees by the construction of works in pursuance of this franchise are in a position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working therof.

I fail to find in this final Order in Council where the grantees are bound to do anything. They are not bound to expend one dollar, while, in the former Order in Council, they are bound to expend $250,000. By this Order in Council, I repeat, they are not bound to expend one dollar.

Now, I am not going to take up the legal aspect of the case, because there are those who will follow me who will deal more particularly with that subject. My mind is in a very hazy condition in regard to the legal aspect of the case as construed by the hon. Minister of Labour. He tells us in one breath that this Order in Council is no good, that it does not become any good until such time as it is officially published in the 'Canada Gazette.' In another breath he tells us that the Order is good. From my reading of the statutes I am satisfied that the Order is not good. We have to speak of the Order in Council just as we find it, and we find that in the preamble of the Order in Council these hon. gentlemen quote as their authority for the passing of that order certain statutes being section 5, Chap. 15, of the Act 55-56 Vic., and section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act as that section was enacted by section 2 of chapter 11 of 62-63 Vic. Let us look at 62-63 Vic. for one moment :

Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Governor in Council may make ordinances for the peace, order and good government of the territory, and of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein ; but no ordinance made by the Governor in Council, or the commissioner in council, shall—

(c.) appropriate any public land or other property of Canada without authority of parliament, or impose any duty of customs or any excise ; nor shall any tax be imposed except as in this Act provided.

I say that this statute is the authority against the contention of the hon. minister, and that they have no authority to give away or to grant the public domain of this country without coming to the parliament of Canada. Now, I must apologize for taking up so much time, but I feel that while these men are far distant from us, some members of this House have to advocate their cause. There is no doubt a great grievance existing in that country. There is no doubt that concessions have been granted since 1898, which have been to the detriment of the miners of that country. There is no doubt that this concession which we are now discussing is a concession which will destroy that country, which will have the effect of injuring not only the trade of that country but of injuring the trade of Canada, and I say that my only excuse for taking up some much time is that I felt that it was a pleasure to advocate the cause of the miners of the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker, there are two or three phases of this question that I would like to offer a remark or two upon, and which have been mentioned by my hon. friend who has just spoken. There is no member of this House, I may say, if the hon. member will permit me, for whom I have a greater respect, or of whose courtesy and ordinary fairness I have a higher opinion than I have for that of the hon. gentleman. I must confess that he presented to me, as I think my hon. friend presented to the House, a striking example of how prejudiced and unreasonable a frame of mind an hon. member of this House can get into when he honestly and sincerely thinks that he is as fair and impartial as a man can be. The hon. gentleman has approached this question, as he assured us, in a spirit of the utmost fairness; yet, I think the first adjective that he applied to the transaction was that it was a transaction of a most iniquitous character. How calm and how impartial my hon. friend must be, when, in discussing a plain, and it seems to me a very reasonably clear business transaction, he has no more moderate or reasonable a criticism to pass upon it than to declare that it is an iniquitous transaction. Now, Sir, my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) asked this House to express its opinion with regard to this transaction. And what are the terms of his amendment ? It says :

That this House is of opinion that the said powers, franchises and concessions constitute in favour of the said Treadgold a gigantic monopoly, which while depriving the treasury of enormous revenues is most detrimental to the mining industries of the Yukon. And that in so making the said grants and concessions by Order in Council, the government have exceeded their authority and have committed a gross breach of the duty entrusted to them under the constitution.

I presume that my hon. friends opposite, will at least admit that they are under some obligation to furnish to this House evidence to justify it in expressing the opinion set out in the motion. I shall take the liberty of examining somewhat closely the terms of the resolution, to ascertain if I can, what evidence has been furnished—dignify it if you will by the name of evidence—to justify the House in putting itself upon record in such a form. Is it because there is a monopoly in the terms of the Order in Council, that my hon. friend has objection to it ? Is it the monopolistic character of this grant that he makes the most complaint of ? Well, I am at a loss to understand how it would be possible, under the conditions which must exist in the Yukon, to have a privilege of this kind exercised except it would be in a monopolistic form. To go back to the original conditions that existed in the Yukon ; we know that for two or three years after the placer mining qualities of the territory were discovered the richest yield in these placer diggings was capable of being taken out with ease, and a trifling outlay then brought large financial results. As the years went on, the conditions changed and year after year it becomes less possible to take out placer gold except by the exercise of greater labour and the introduction of machinery. Unless you can resort to mechanical appliances ; unless you can get the hydraulic system in operation in that country, you cannot under present conditions turn to profitable account the admittedly large deposits of placer gold which are to be obtained in that territory. You have got to have mechanical means to assist you, and these mechanical appliances have been found necessary in other countries where placer gold digging has been followed with any success. It is therefore conceded that in order to work these placer diggings expensive hydraulic machinery must be employed. Now, Sir, it goes without saying that such appliances can only be obtained by a very large outlay of money, and by persons or companies having considerable capital at their command. In the very nature of things it requires a monopoly to carry on such work. The hon. gentleman told us that in certain placer districts of the United States it had been possible to allow two or three companies to operate on one of these rivers. How are you going to put in these creeks in the Klondike three or four different systems, with three or four different mechanical plants, to compete one with another. In the first place it is necessary to have the head water dammed and there cannot be four different dams across one river at the same point. To accumulate the water so that it may be obtained to sluice down the river, it cannot be done by more than one concern. Unless I totally misapprehend the conditions which exist there can only be one company in operation and if that be the case then that company must of necessity have a monopoly. I do not believe therefore that this House will be justified in condemning that transaction because it is a monopoly, when in the very nature of things, if you require that this hydraulic process should be employed to maintain that industrial enterprise in this country, it has to be done in form of monopoly, and cannot be done in any other form. Therefore, to condemn the monopoly, in the words of this resolution is to condemn a thing that is imperatively necessary, unless you are to abandon this country altogether and allow these deposits to go unproductive. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) goes on to say in his motion :

While depriving the treasury of enormous revenue.

What evidence is there that under the operation of this system—which as I have said is a necessary and proper system—what evidence is there that it is going to deprive the country of an enormous amount of revenue. Every dollar's worth of gold that is taken out by this process is taken out subject to the royalties which are imposed upon the production of gold taken out in any other part of that district. There is no difference between the royalty upon this and the royalty upon any other gold.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What about representation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can very well understand that there are reasons, very strong and proper reasons, why, in order to induce men of capital to put in $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 and perhaps more to construct this machinery, there would have to be very attractive and valuable inducements held out to them, and concessions would have to be made in the way of the removal of restrictions which would generally be applicable, and might very properly be applicable in the earlier history of the country when placer mining was conducted under very different circumstances. You must bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that in adopting this system the government had the idea in mind of insuring the continuance of the development of that country, so that all the placer mining should be made as profitable as possible. In order that that should be done a large expenditure must necessarily be made, and in order that the money for this expenditure could be obtained you had to offer to capitalists an attractive proposition. We happen to know that when the question of the hydraulic development of that section of the country was first mooted a number of people visited Ottawa from the United States and elsewhere. When some people heard that we were going to impose conditions upon this system of mining they turned away their faces and went away from the country, because they said : The conditions that you are talking about imposing are such that it would not be profitable for us to embark in this enterprise and to risk a large amount of money contingent upon the possibility that the country might not prove as rich in its gold-bearing properties as was represented. There were persons who came to Ottawa at that time, and who, as I am credibly informed, were satisfied that they could not embark in the enterprise under any condition which the government would entertain favourably. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) does not appear to consider that you ought to present an attractive programme to people whom you invite to go into operations of this character. The hon. gentleman thinks that every body should see at a glance that it was certain to be an enormously profitable undertaking.

My hon. friend from Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle) said that the amount of money the Treadgold syndicate would make was simply fabulous. He figured out that they would make ten million dollars a year profit. Well, if any one who had command of the means would believe that my hon. friend's statement was to be relied on, he and everybody who had the same belief would be tumbling over one another in order to secure this concession on any terms, and would not care how drastic or severe they might be. The negotiations were not conducted by the Minister of the Interior alone. It is only fair and just to him to say that all through this transaction he was acting in conference with his colleagues and with a sub-committee of Council. Realizing that we were dealing with new problems to us, we were doing the best we could to reach a conclusion and to arrange a bargain which would be advantageous to the country and just to all concerned. Reflections are being cast on the Minister of the Interior, and this is spoken of by hon. gentlemen opposite as a fraudulent transaction, as a transaction which is based on fraud. What is the evidence to justify any such statement as that? The present Judge Davies, of the Supreme Court, I am reminded, was one of the committee, and was aiding and assisting us in these negotiations.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What does that prove ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend from Cornwall and Stormont refers to the fact that the formal application made by the Messrs. Treadgold was received one day and was immediately and instantly accepted and replied to by the government the next day ; the idea intended to be conveyed being that these gentlemen swooped down on the government, gobbled them up, and carried away in an instant the contract for these concessions. If my hon. friend had been here for the months during which these negotiations took place, he would have known very much better. He would have known that the reason the letter came to be dated so short a time before the Order in Council was passed, was because the negotiations which had taken place from day to day, from week to week, and from month to month, were finally concluded, and when they were concluded, the terms that were acceded to by the government were put into the form of that application.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him how much deliberation was expended on the question of allowing them to charge a dollar an inch for the water ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A very great deal. I confess that the question was absolutely new ; and, as regards a reasonable price, we had to confer with others ; but upon the best opinion we could get, the amount was put in, because it was believed it was a fair price. We found afterwards that we were entirely mistaken ; I frankly acknowledge that ; as people are likely to be mistaken when dealing with entirely new matters, as to a new country, far away from the scene where the decisions are arrived at and where the administrative acts take place.

Now, our hon. friends have no evidence to prove that this arrangement, in addition to being a monopoly, is going to deprive the treasury of enormous revenues. If it is a successful adventure, that is to say, if these people are able to raise the necessary money to carry out the undertaking, it may prove to be a very great money saver to the country ; and the country may secure the development of that section of the Yukon, which might not, under any other conditions, be susceptible of development. It may in that way bring enormous revenues to the country which we would not otherwise have. But there is no testimony that it might involve a loss to the treasury of any large sum.

Our hon. friends ask the House to say that this arrangement would be most detrimental to the mining industry of the Yukon. What evidence have they adduced in support of this proposition ? How is the mining industry of the Yukon going to be harmed if we succeed in having this great hydraulic system in operation in that country ? Where does the power reside to say what is the proper compensation to be paid to these people for the privileges which they are able to lease or sell to the owners or licensees of mines in that district ? Does not the Governor in Council hold in his hand all the necessary power to prevent any wrong being done to the miners ? What do the licensees throughout the district want ? They want water. And what may they properly give for it ? What is a fair price for it ? My hon. friend says they are going to be asked 25 cents per miners' inch, and that it is going to cost $300 a day to every one who has a sluice. Well, does anybody imagine for a moment that the government would permit, having power to prevent it, the continuance of a system which would compel the miners to pay an exorbitant sum away beyond what would yield a fair return of profit to these people on their undertaking ? Nobody believes that the government could for a moment tolerate the continuance of such a condition of things.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will my hon. friend permit a question ? I would like to know where there is any specification whatever in the Order in Council as to what price the miners are to pay for the water.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will show my hon. friend where it is. We have named no price in the order for the use of water. It does not at all follow that it was necessary to name any price. On the contrary, we think it is quite unnecessary to name it. If the miners are called on to pay for the use of the water which is brought down to them or let out to them, and which they are using upon their locations, then the amount they shall be compelled to pay would be under the control and direction of the Governor in Council, and I will show my hon. friend where that is to be found.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I succeed, Mr. Speaker, in pointing out to this House that the power is reserved, in sufficiently clear and explicit terms, in this Order in Council or grant to protect the people from being imposed upon by excessive rates, where in all conscience are you to find any injury that is being done to the mining interests in that country ? What the mining men want is to have the government spend out there, some $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 in order to construct hydraulic works. They know that they cannot perpetuate the Yukon as a gold bearing country unless works of this kind are established, and they want the government to construct them out of the exchequer of the country, because they think, no doubt, that they would then enjoy greater advantages than if these works were done by a company. That is why we are hearing complaints to-day. My hon. friend asks me to point out where there is anything in this Order in Council showing control by the government of the rates for the use of the water.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section nine reads :

That these grantees shall have the right, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to use, distribute and dispose of the water delivered by the grantees within the district.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Where are the regulations ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has a copy of this. I refer to regulation C.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman to read A and B first ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am happy to oblige my hon. friend :—

(a) The grantees shall allow all free miners within the district to tail their sluices, hydraulics, ground sluices and drains, free of charge into the flumes and drains of the grantees, yet not in such a way as to damage or obstruct the free working of the flumes and drains of the grantees by rocks, stones, boulders or otherwise.

That throws no light on that branch of the question.

(b) The grantees shall compensate the owner of any mining claims or lands for any damage which any such owner may sustain by reason of any of the grantees works breaking or being imperfect.

That does not bear on the question.

(c) Any question of compensation arising under this grant.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend, of course, with his astute legal mind, would make out that the compensation must have relation simply to the compensation implied or referred to in the preceding regulation 'B.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If that were the intention, instead of saying 'any question of compensation arising under this grant' the words used would be 'any question of compensation arising under these regulations.' My hon. friend laughs.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend cannot dispose of a legal argument simply by a laugh.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put him a question ? How is it that in the first Order in Council, when anything is said about what is to be paid for the water, it is not the word 'compensation' which is used but the word 'charge.' In the regulations, which accompany the first Order in Council, is the following clause :—

The charge which the grantee shall be entitled to make for the use of such water on each claim shall not exceed $1 per miners' inch per hour.

How is it that the word 'charge' has been changed to that word 'compensation,' when in the clause immediately preceding, the regulations speak of compensation for damages to the owner of any mining claim.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say, as I read and interpret this clause, that if there were to be a limitation, such as the hon. gentleman puts upon the general language of sub-clause C of the regulations, that sub-clause would refer specially to the previous regulation B, and thus be clearly restricted to it. Subclause says : 'Any question of compensation arising under this grant shall be determined'—by whom—by the Gold Commissioner subject to appeal to the Territorial Court of the district, and the said court may, upon special circumstances being shown, make an order for the taking of further evidence.' Take these two clauses together, and they seem to remove the question beyond doubt—clause nine :—

The right, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to use, distribute and dispose of the water delivered by the grantees within the district.

And sub-clause C of the regulations which I have just read. That being the interpretation of clause C, there does not seem to be any solid basis upon which the miners in the Yukon can say that their individual interests are likely to be prejudiced by this grant or that the general mining interests in the country are in the slightest degree prejudicially affected. There is no foundation for this argument, nor is there anything in the Order in Council itself which in any way militates against the most complete right of any miner in the country, once these works are completed, making application for and obtaining a license to mine in that country anywhere so long as the privilege he asks for has not already been taken by another. Only when these works are actually completed does it become a right in the grantees to claim that wherever there are any licenses or any ground abandoned, because the parties did not think it worth while, although water was available, to hold and continue the work alone, they are entitled to take this abandoned ground. It does seem to me there can be very little justification for criticism of any kind upon an Order in Council, restricted and surrounded by such safeguards as these regulations, and it affords almost conclusive evidence of the inability of our hon. friends opposite to take any reasonable view of any transaction by their political opponents, when they denounce, as they are doing, so well considered and well prepared a proposition. The concluding portion of the resolution says :—

And that in so making the said grants and concessions by Order in Council, the government have exceeded their authority and committed a gross breach of the duty entrusted to them under the constitution.

I think my hon. friend rather failed to make clear the proposition that there has been any act on the part of the goverment in this transaction which is at all in excess of the powers properly belonging to it. It is quite true that this Yukon country belongs to the Crown. It is quite true that it is not in the power of the Governor in Council or any minister of the Crown to dispose of or sell, any property of the Crown except and until there has been a statutory enactment conferring that authority. No man would argue for a moment that, because a Minister of the Interior has become minister, he is invested with powers, by reason of that, which are not derivable and are not founded upon some Act of parliament. But there is such an Act of parliament going the full length and justifying all that has been done in connection with this grant and all the powers to which have been, on the face of it exercised by the government. Section 47 of the Dominion Lands Act has been referred to. That section has not only been re-enacted and affirmed, but has been somewhat enlarged by subsequent legislation. This is to be found in the revised statute of 1886, chapter 54. Section 47 declares :

> Lands containing coal or other minerals, whether in surveyed or unsurveyed territory, shall not be subject to the provisions of this Act respecting sale or homestead entries, but shall be disposed of in such manner and on such terms and conditions as are, from time to time, fixed by the Governor in Council, by regulation made in that behalf.

Now, if any wider language is necessary than that——

Mr. CASGRAIN. That has been repealed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has been repealed and another section has been substituted, and I say that section is even more explicit and clear. For, if you will turn to that Act, chapter 15, of 55-56 Victoria, you will see the enactment is as follows :

> Clause 47 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor :—
> Lands containing coal or other minerals, including lands in the Rocky Mountains Park——
> —shall not be subject to the provisions of this Act respecting sale of homestead entry, but the Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations for the working and development of mines on such lands, and for the

Let hon. gentlemen note this—> —for the sale, leasing, licensing or other disposal thereof.

Can there be broader language than that ? The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make regulations for the development of the miners, for the selling of such lands, for the leasing of such lands, for the licensing of such lands, any one or all which would be within the scope of what has been done under the present Order in Council.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this a regulation for the sale ?

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are general regulations which authorize the sale.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where are they ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are general regulations. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) has them and he will refer to them if occasion arises. If there were no other regulations, this would be a regulation as respects this transaction as fully and completely as it would be necessary to have one made. But I do not make the argument that it is necessary to regard this as a regulation, though I could very well do so. I would be correct in doing so. Regulations have, however, been made and have been promulgated, and under the regulations that have been promulgated all that has been done under the Order in Council was in the fullest degree authorized. So, my hon. friend has not taken substantial ground. He is following a delusion; he is deceiving himself, when he supposes that an Act of parliament which says that the Governor in Council has power to sell or lease these lands in any such manner and under such regulations as he choses, is not sufficient to cover this case. I think there can be no ground for the belief that a constitutional doubt arises as to what has been done. Yet my hon. friend will subscribe to this resolution which says that the government has exceeded its powers. We are the government and they are the opposition, and it is not necessary to use any argument to convince them that we never do anything right, while they are unimpeachable, their opinion is the standard of correctness and propriety, and so they can vote for this resolution without the slightest hesitation or reluctance. I intended to refer earlier to the statement of the hon. member for Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle), when he took occasion to drag in the question of the Mackenzie & Mann contract and to say that this is a similar contract and one in which the government has been guilty of improvidently and unreasonably committing itself to a bargain such as never should have been sanctioned or approved. He may well remember in that connection the fabulous calculations that were made as to the untold millions that were going to be made out of the Mackenzie & Mann contract if it became law. I remember hon. gentlemen opposite, one after another, rising in their places, with eyes glittering at the prospect pointing out the hundreds of millions of dollars, and the hundreds of thousands of acres of land which were being given away, lands which were simply a land of gold—all you had to do was to go out and dig it up. Why, it was so vast in extent, so enormous in its richness that we were simply throwing away wealth that would have made the whole country rich, and probably would have sufficed without the imposition of other taxes to maintain the government institutions of the country for a century. And, notwithstanding all this, and though these lands have lain there open to any man who choses to make application for them, teeming as they told us with this incalculable and inexhaustible wealth, yet not a single individual has been found who has discovered enough to make it worth his while to apply for a square mile or for even a hundred square feet of that whole territory for mining purposes—not a single solitary one. I recall to my hon. friends, therefore, the wild folly of their statements when this subject was under discussion, and I ask them to beware that they are not putting themselves in that same untenable and indefensible position that they put themselves in when they opposed the proposition that we then laid before them. They talk about the enormous amount of money to be made out of this Treadgold venture. They are talking in the same strain as before. They are asking parliament to forget that there is a public opinion in the country which would not tolerate the imposition by this syndicate of any more than reasonable, just and proper rates. They ask parliament to forget that these people would always exercise the privilege given under their charter in the full light of day and under the full control of the government of the country.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). Mr. Speaker, I was prepared, when the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) stood up to discuss this question and, when I heard him find fault with the remarks that have been made by hon. gentlemen on this side who preceded him, to hear this question discussed without any exhibition of prejudice or feeling. But if the hon. member who preceded the Minister of Railways and Canals in discussing this question to-night, showed any spirit of prejudice, I venture the assertion that he has been entirely outdone by the Minister of Railways and Canals himself. Looking at this question from a general standpoint, it appears to me that the same rule applies to this Act as should be applied to other legislation or legislative acts. The general principle should be that any legislation or legislative Acts which tend or pretend to confer upon any individual, or any corporation or body of people, rights that are different from the rights that are enjoyed by the public in general, should be such as will bear the very closest scrutiny by the opposition and by the country. But I do not think, in viewing the Orders in Council that have been under discussion here to-day that they come within that category, for they strike me as being in direct violation of that very wholesome principle. That Order in Council bears upon its face its own condemnation. It is perfectly apparent from the terms of that Order in Council and the offer that was made by Mr. Treadgold and his associates, that the Treadgold company did not forget, when they were presenting their memorial to the government, to ask for almost everything that was in sight. And, Sir, notwithstanding the greed, if I may use the term, displayed by the Treadgold Company in asking for these concessions, it appeared that the government was perfectly willing to go them one better. They have signified their willingness to go them one better in the language that they used in the Orders in Council. After reciting the offer that had been made by these people, the government say :—

> And that the said parties shall be and are hereby granted all and every the powers, privileges, rights and franchises asked for.

Well, Sir, it is wonderful to my mind that the Treadgold Company did not ask for a fence around it, and if they had, I do not doubt the government would have given them a fence, and also given them a gatekeeper, judging from the way they have treated this company. Now, it has been said, and said correctly, that while the government were so generous in granting to the Treadgold Company these rights and privileges, they were yet careful enough only to grant these rights subject to certain conditions. Well, one is apt to understand the use of that term 'condition' as implying that some onus or some duty is placed upon the person against whom that condition is established, or that some duty is cast upon that person in regard to the granting of the right. But I call the attention of the House for a moment to one or two of these conditions, and the manner in which the Treadgold Company were tied up by the government's action. I would point out that the government said to these people when they came and asked for these rights, yes, take all you want, all you ask for you may have; but you must take those rights subject to these conditions. The first of these conditions is, yes, take all you want but you must not pay any taxes upon it. That is the first condition, certainly a very onerous one, and the Treadgold people must have struggled and argued strenuously with the government to prevent them from imposing such an onerous condition as that. But perhaps they thought that was the only condition of an onerous nature that would be imposed upon them, and so no doubt they waited for the next clause of this Order in Council. The next clause goes them one better, and says: Yes, you may have all these rights that you are asking for in this memorial you have presented to the government, and in addition to your not paying any taxes, we go you one better and we say that you should not pay any rent, nor should you pay any occupation rent. No doubt the Treadgold people felt themselves very greatly aggrieved by that condition, but that is the language of the condition that is imposed upon them. Let me point out something more. After granting to these people all they asked, and saying they should pay no taxes, no rent, and no occupation rent, that they should only pay the royalty upon the output equal to the very lowest royalty that was imposed upon gold and silver, then they added another clause as if to make the matter doubly binding and doubly pleasing to the Treadgold people, for they say: Yes, and even if you don't work the mine, we will put the further condition upon you that you won't have to pay the $200 to the government. Why, Sir, you may go through the whole list of these conditions and with very few exceptions they are of the nature I have described.

Now one word with regard to some of these matters where I think it is perfectly apparent to any careful reader that the government have wrought an injustice and injury to the free miners of the Yukon territory. You will notice that in the regulations of council which have been referred to here to-night, in the first clause, subsection one, which has been read more than once, it says:—

Provided that license holders of mining locations situated on the Klondike river should be entitled,

And so on, as against the grantee. Now what does that mean? Could language make more plain the meaning and intention of the concessionaires and of the government? It says: License holders who may hereafter procure licenses, but it confines the benefits which are there pretended to be granted, to these miners who are already holding licenses, and it does not extend to any future miner who may go in there in opposition to this corporation. It seems to me to be an extraordinary block to free miners going into that country. Yet the Minister of Railways and Canals will ask this House and gentlemen who have discussed this question,, where or in what way is this going to effect prejudicially the miners of the Yukon Territory? Sir, is it not perfectly plain that such a clause as that in these regulations, absolutely shuts out future competition over a large portion of that country to free miners? But that clause has a still more sweeping effect, taken in connection with the other clause of this regulation which provides that upon a claim being abandoned these people may enter upon that claim and work it. Now take that clause in connection with the regulation in regard to the supply of water. If there is a shortage of water, if there is not water enough to work all these mines efficiently, then the water is to be divided proportionately between them. Yet, I say, taking these two Orders in Council and taking these regulations I have referred to, the result will be almost inevitable, it seems to me, it is impossible to work it out in any other way, that these miners who are already in there and who alone are protected by that first subsection, will, a large portion of them, be shut out by the operation of this Order in Council. That is another way in which, I say, it appears clear to me that the Order in Council is going to work prejudicially to the interests of that country. Now, I want to call attention to just one other clause in regard to this matter and that is to clause thirteen. I shall not take occasion to refer to those clauses which have been spoken of particularly, but this feature of section thirteen has not, I think, been mentioned in this discussion. Section thirteen provides that:—

The right, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to construct, lay, maintain, supply with water and operate bed-rock flumes, and any other flumes for supplying water in the district.

What does that really mean? It means that Mr. Treadgold and his associates are granted this right and this exclusive right for the purpose of prospecting that country. When they build their bed-rock flumes in these rivers and creeks they cannot do it without discovering where the best mining locations are all along that line, and when they discover a mining location this Order in Council provides that they have the right to grab it up the same as they grab all the others. That in itself is sufficient to condemn that Order in Council and to show conclusively that the concessions that are granted, as far as the interests of that great country are concerned, were disadvantageous to the Yukon Territory and to the miners there. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals took occasion to ask opposition members who are discussing this question to furnish some evidence that the concessions granted to these people, were operating, or were going to operate disadvantageously to the people of that country. I am surprised that the hon. minister should ask such a question in the face of such an array of testimony as has been offered from this side of the House during the discussion. When he asks that question he actually discredits his own party, and he actually discredits the best people in the Yukon Territory. In addition to what has been already quoted in regard to the action of the Liberal party, of the Liberal club, of the board of trade and other bodies who, we have a right to assume, are familiar, from their contact with that subject and from their living in the country, with the conditions and needs of the territory, I am going to present to the House an expression of opinion from the citizens of Dawson. I hold in my hand a paper printed in Dawson, which, in its issue of February 20, last, contains the report of a meeting of citizens of Dawson held for the purpose of discussing the railway policy of the government and amongst other things the Treadgold concession. A number of resolutions were passed by that meeting. These resolutions were to be forwarded to the government and the government were urged to take action upon them. The sixth resolution demanded :

The cancellation of all hydraulic concession leases fraudulently obtained, also hydraulic concession leases, the terms of which have not been complied with that are now liable to cancellation.

Seventh. The strict enforcement of the terms of all hydraulic concession leases, so that the holders of same will be obliged to operate and mine the ground held by them.

There is another way in which this Order in Council operates to the disadvantage of the people of that country, as has already been pointed out. It ties it up for six years. Those living upon the spot and being familiar with the subject say : compel these people to operate and mine the ground held by them.

Eighth——

And this is a sweeping one——

The cancellation in every instance of hydraulic concession leases where the same are in any way liable to cancellation, so that the ground now tied up and lying idle within the boundaries of the same be thrown open to miners and worked.

There was an opportunity offered to this government, as has already been pointed out, before the passage of the last Order in Council to rescind the first Order in Council and to meet the requirements of the people of the Yukon Territory, thus serving the best interests of these people and the best interests of the mining industry of that country. They did pass an Order in Council rescinding the former Order in Council, but they were not content with satisfying the people of the Yukon but they showed that it was not their interest to serve the people of the Yukon, but that their interest lay in some other direction, and accordingly the last Order in Council was passed. Speaking to the resolution which I have just read Mr. George Black, a citizen of Dawson, made use of this language.

Every man in the territory wishes that the laws should have the approval of the people and meet with the requirements of local conditions. If the mining law in this territory had been made with the approval of the people the country to-day would be in a different condition. But we have the experience of the past four or five years and it is not too late for the people to act. . . . .

If our laws had been made by the elected representatives of the people, we would have no need for this meeting to-night. Concessions would not have been plastered over the country.

I must warn the people against any decrease in vigilance in relation to the Treadgold concession. As it stands to-day the owners of that concession have the sole right to sell water. When the monopoly clause was taken from the Treadgold concession the right of other people to secure water rights was also cancelled. So in reality Treadgold has still the sole monopoly on the water rights.

That is the view which people living in the Yukon and who are familiar with this subject take of the matter and I think we are pretty safe in acting upon their judgment. I am surprised in the face of evidence of that nature that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should stand up in his place in this House and ask for further evidence than that which has been given him to show that this is a monopoly. Now, he takes occasion to remark further that works of this character must be carried on by companies in the nature of a monopoly. I cannot, for my part, agree with the statement. The statement may be right to a certain extent, it may be necessary to induce, in some way, companies, or corporations, or capitalists, to invest their money in enterprises of this kind for the development of the country, but it is only necessary to go as far as the interests of that country demand and it is not necessary, as the government has done, to practically give away the Yukon Territory to a monopoly in order to secure a supply of water. As I understand the attitude taken by the opposition during the discussion of this question they do not object—I do not, at any rate, for one, object—to one company investing their money in this enterprise for the purpose of benefiting the territory and the mining industry there. I do not care whether there is one company or a dozen companies if the rights of the people are so guarded as against the one company, that the company will not be allowed to gobble up everything there is in the country. It has been truly said and I know from the researches I have made myself in different books, that in California and in Australia you cannot find an instance where a concession such as this, has been granted to any corporation.

While there are companies working there and providing water for carrying on mining operations; while there are such companies innumerable in California and Australia, I have failed to discover any company that has been given such sweeping rights, such exclusive rights, such privileges in defiance of the rights of the people as have been given to this Treadgold Company in the Yukon Territory. The Minister of Railways seems to take a very great deal of satisfaction from the fact, that, as he says, the right to fix the charge for supplying water to the miners in the Yukon may be regulated by the Gold Commissioner, and therefore that the people may safely conclude that the government would not—to use his own expression—be so foolish as to sanction the making of any charge that would be exorbitant or unreasonable. Why, Sir, the action of the government that he was reviewing at the very time, answered him completely. He said that the government would not be so foolish as to sanction a charge of say twenty-five cents per miners' inch for this water, but did he forget that a year or two before this very same government had sanctioned a charge of $1 a miners' inch or four times as great as the twenty-five cents which he thought the government would not be so foolish as to allow being charged. In view of this, what warrant has the Minister of Railways to say to the House or to the country, that the government would not be foolish enough to allow a charge of twenty-five cents. The minister gave us a construction of clauses (B) and (C) in the regulations, and he said that these two clauses must stand separate and apart as they meant separate and distinct things. Well, it is perfectly apparent to any one that such a construction as that can only be placed upon these clauses by torturing the English language. One clause says :

> The grantees shall compensate the owners of any mining claim.

The next clause says :

> Any question of compensation arising under this grant shall be determined, &c.

Why, it is absolutely plain that they cannot be read apart, and if it lacked any further evidence than the mere reading, look at clause (F) of the very same regulation in regard to the charge that is to be made, and see what it says. Does that clause use the word 'compensation ?' Not at all. It says that the 'charge' which the grantee shall make and so on. And if you want any further evidence look at the order made on the 7th of December, following, and see what that says. Clause (S) of the regulations therein contained uses the same language as in clause (F) which I have referred to, and instead of the word 'compensation' the word 'charge' is used there again. It seems to be only playing with the matter for the Minister of Railways to submit such a construction to an intelligent House of Commons.

Then the Minister of Railways took occasion to refer to the very great exertions that were put forth by the government, and the long time it had occupied in the discussion of these Orders in Council before action was taken by the government. Well, it strikes me as a very singular thing, that if the government did take all the care and trouble that the Minister of Railways would have us believe it did take, to use his own words, in negotiating and perfecting the matter in this Order in Council; it is a very strange thing I say that when they got it perfected and fully negotiated and satisfactory, that they had not the courage to make it law. Why have they refused; why have they delayed in making it law ? If it is right it should have been made law at the time, and if it is not right it should never become law, and the government have a perfect right now in the interest of the country to cancel it. I submit for these reasons, and for the reasons that have been urged by other members on this side of the House, that the government ought to avail of the first opportunity of rescinding this Order in Council. They cannot show their disposition to serve the people of the Yukon better than by voting for the resolution that has been moved by my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain).

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker. For my part I have no fault to find with the argument which has been made by my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter). May I be permitted to tender him my congratulations upon the fact that his speech has been singularly free from the fraud and fury which has characterized some of the previous utterances of members on that side of the House. But in all that has been said, no one so far as addressed himself to the question as to why the government was induced to pass this Order in Council and to give this concession to Mr. Treadgold and his associates. There must have been reason; there must have been some cause for the government to take the action which they have taken, and which is now challenged by the opposition. For my part I am quite ready to take that responsibility for our action which we owe to the House and to the country, and I do not despair that when the whole question has been examined by my hon. friends opposite, that even they will come to a different conclusion than that which has been expressed by them. The reason, and the wherefore, and the cause of this Order in Council, which in its disposition, I admit is somewhat unusual from the course ordinarily followed; the reason and the wherefore of this Order in Council is to be found in the history of the Klondike and in the conditions which now prevail there. The Yukon Territory is a territory embedded in gold, but in which there is a scarcity of water for mining operations. It is an established fact that at the present time there are claims which are worked with great profit, and there are other claims which could be worked with great profit also but for the fact that there is no water to work them. Early in the history of the Yukon the government was appealed to more than once to establish works whereby water could be collected for the purpose of affording facilities to the miners to work their claims. If you look at the several petitions which have been referred to this afternoon; if you look for instance at the petition of the board of trade, you will find that two things are demanded from the government. First of all it is asked that the Treadgold concession should be abolished. And, why ? Simply in order that something else may be substituted for it. That is to say, that as soon as the Treadgold concessions was abolished, the government should substitute works of its own for the purpose of collecting water and distributing it to the miners of that locality. Here is the petition of the board of trade. The argument contained in it has been cited three or four times and it is not necessary for me to read it again, but the conclusion, so far as my memory serves me, has never been read yet, and here it is :

Your petitioners therefore pray :

(1) That the Order in Council of April 21, 1902, may be cancelled completely, and that no special privileges shall hereafter be granted within this territory with respect to wood, mining, water, or any other class of rights affecting the general public, but that all persons shall be restricted in such matters to the rights conferred upon every member of the community by the mining regulations.

(2) That the supply and distribution of water for general mining purposes within this territory shall not be controlled by any private person or corporation, but either that it shall be undertaken by the Dominion government as a public work, or the power shall be given to the commissioner of the Yukon Territory in council to construct such a system and to raise the necessary funds by bonds guaranteed by the Dominion.

This was the alternative presented to us. There was a consensus of opinion among all the miners of the Yukon that the systems in existence were not adequate to the people's needs, and that something had to be done for collecting water, creating power and distributing water to the miners. How was that to be done ? We were asked to do it as a government work, providing the money by the issue of bonds or otherwise. The matter was looked into, and we found that works of that character demanded by the Yukon board of trade would cost millions of dollars—more than one million, and, if my information is correct, more than two million.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. More than $5,000,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. More than $5,000,000 I am told. The government were not prepared to expend such an amount of money for the purpose of creating the necessary power to distribute water ; and I want to know if hon. gentlemen opposite, who have criticised the action of the government in this matter, and who have constituted themselves champions of the miners of the Yukon, would be prepared to support the government in expending $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 in order to provide these works.

Mr. OSLER. Might I ask the hon. Prime Minister on whose or what report he bases the estimates for $5,000,000 ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand that it is upon the report of all the engineers who have tested the question. I am not prepared to say myself, though I am so informed, that these works would cost $5,000,000 ; but I am prepared to stake all the reputation I have that all the estimates will agree that they would cost at least $2,000,000 ; and I ask the hon. gentleman if he is prepared to advise the government to spend $2,000,000 in order to provide the works demanded by the miners of the Yukon. Nobody would ask the government to do that ; and if it was not to be done by the government, it would have to be done by private enterprise. Application was made to us. Capitalists came to us declaring that they would be prepared to undertake the risk and make the expenditure. We made a contract with them, if I remember rightly, in the summer of 1901. The contract was published in the Yukon, and exception was taken to it. It was represented among other things that the price we had fixed for the sale of water was too high. We had put it at one dollar. On investigation, I am bound to say, we found that it would be on the average too high. There is no question so difficult to determine as what should be the price of water in that district if such a work were to be undertaken. One dollar an inch in some places would not have been too much ; and in other places it would have been exorbitant. We reduced the price to twenty-five cents. We had a delegation of miners from the Yukon. That delegation was alluded to this afternoon by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and also by the hon. member for Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle). We discussed the matter with the miners, and they convinced us that even twenty-five cents per miners' inch would be exorbitant in some instances, and we had to provide another method. We cancelled all the Orders in Council, and passed another. We were criticised for doing so. What were we to do ? Were we to remain idle, while the miners in the Yukon were asking us to give them facilities to work their claims ? Only the richest claims were being worked. There were others that might be worked, but owing to the lack of facilities for water, they were not being worked effectively. Therefore we had to provide other methods. If we had failed to respond to the demands of the Yukon miners, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House would have been the first to blame us. Whether we act or do not act we are sure to be blamed by hon. gentlemen opposite. We thought that the worst we could do was to remain idle ; and we determined to do our best to meet the views and wishes of the mining population of the Yukon, who wanted facilities to enable them to carry on their operations. Therefore we passed the Order in Council which hon. gentlemen opposite ask the House to censure us for passing. Now, I am prepared to discuss this Order in Council. I am prepared to meet my hon. friends on the other side of the House in regard to the salient points of the attack they have made upon us. What is the first disposition of this order ? It is a very natural one. It provides that these Treadgold concessionaires shall have the power to erect dams and do all the work necessary in the bed of the Klondike river, between the mouth of the river and Flat creek, in order to create a generating power for electric purposes. But if we did that we ran the risk perhaps of interfering with the operations of the miners who have concessions in the Klondike river and who might be deprived of their water. If we made no provision against that, we might be subject to censure ; but the first thing we did was to provide that, prior even to the right of the company, the miners on the Klondike river would have a primary right to a flow of water sufficient to carry on their operations. Here is what the order says :

The sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river at any point or points between its entry into the Yukon river and Flat creek for the purpose of generating power with which to pump water to work the auriferous deposits in the district (hereinafter termed 'the district') comprising the beds, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, of Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, and of their tributaries.

Provided, that licensed holders of mining locations situated on the Klondike river shall be entitled as against the grantees to the use free from toll of a flow of water sufficient for working their claims, but not exceeding in all three thousand five hundred (3,500) miners' inches, equal to five thousand two hundred and fifty (5,250) cubic feet per minute.

This is what is reserved—the right of every miner to have his claim given priority to that of the company. The miners shall take the water first. No matter what improvements are made by the company, there shall be no interference with the rights of private miners in the Klondike. If it be possible in any way to safeguard the interests of the miner more effectively, I would like to know it. The company having erected its works is given the privilege of selling the power itself to anybody who wants it, and for any purpose whatever. But is the company allowed to sell the power at its own price, or to create such a monopoly as would destroy the operations of other industries ? No, Sir. A check is put upon the company—that same check which we impose in the case of similar concessions—and that is the power given the Governor General in Council to regulate the price. The Order in Council reads as follows :—

Provided that if any power is developed and rendered available by the grantees under this section which they do not make use of, then the same shall be offered for sale to the public and the rates to be charged therefor shall be subject to the control of the Governor General in Council.

This is the method always followed in this country in similar cases. It is the method by which we regulate the tolls on railways and by which we are asked to regulate the tolls of the telephone companies, and it is the best method yet devised in this country for the working of such franchises. Another power is given the company. The first object for which the company was granted its privileges was to collect and to distribute the water so that all these claims—bench claims, for instance—which are not now being worked may be operated. What is the provision on this point ? That provision has been criticised. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has taken the ground that we have not provided any check to prevent the company charging what it likes. I am prepared to discuss that point with my hon. friend. Let me call his attention to this point. It is a point which has been already made by my hon. colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals. But I want to call the attention of my hon. friend from Montmorency to it again. For I do not despair of my hon. friend. If he will only forget that he is a lawyer and bear in mind that he may, some time, be a judge and have to exercise a judicial mind and a judicial authority. I do not despair of convincing him that we have made all the provisions necessary to protect the miners against the greed of the company. Here is what I find in the Order in Council, and what my hon. friend very deliberately and adroitly avoided this afternoon. The right is given—

Subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to use, distribute and dispose of the water delivered by the grantees within the district.

This is very clear. The right is given the company to use, distribute and dispose of, by sale or otherwise, the water delivered by the grantees within the district. Let me now call the attention of my hon. friend to the regulations imposed in this connection. The regulations are not there simply for an ornament. They must be held to have a meaning. What are these regulations ? They are as follows :—

The grantee shall allow all free miners within the district to tail his sluices, hydraulics, ground sluices and drains, free of charge, in the flumes and drains of the grantees, yet not in such a way as to damage or obstruct the free working of the flumes and drains of the grantees by rocks, stones, boulders or otherwise.

Therefore the moment the company constructs a flume facing a claim, the owner of the claim has the right at once to bring his sluices to the flume and take the water. He has no permission to ask. The company cannot refuse. The right is guaranteed to him, whether the company is willing or not, to take his sluices to the flume and draw the water. My hon. friend will agree that the miner has no permission to ask, and that the moment he has tailed his sluice to the flume the water of the company flows into his sluice, and he is at liberty to use it. What follows ? There must be compensation. If the miner and the company agree upon a price, there is nothing more to be said, but if they do not, then section C comes in :

Any question of compensation arising under this grant shall be determined judicially by the Gold Commissioner, subject to the appeal of the Territorial Court of the district, and the said court may, on special circumstances being shown, make an order for the taking of further evidence.

I would ask my hon. friend from Montmorency to take the case as it stands. Let him suppose that he is the Gold Commissioner for the Yukon. The company has erected its works. I am a miner and have taken my sluice to the flume, and am using water from the flume to wash out my gold dirt. The company cannot prevent me from using the water. It cannot prevent me from taking my sluice to its flume, but the company says : You will pay me so much. I reply that its price is an exorbitant one. Then we go before Mr. Casgrain, the Gold Commissioner, and he determines what compensation shall be paid. If that is not clear, there is nothing clear. If that is not law, there is no law.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If I should give judgment in that sense, my judgment would be unanimously reversed on appeal.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let me tell my hon. friend that he minimizes his own ability to give a judgment which would be according to law, justice and equity, and to the terms of this agreement.

My hon. friend may point to the abandoned claims. In the first Order in Council—the Order in Council which was passed in June, 1901—we had given to the company the abandoned claims. That seemed to me perfectly fair. If a miner had abandoned his claims, it was perfectly fair to give the company the right to enter into that claim and work it, but when a delegation came from the Yukon a year ago last winter, they represented that, though perfectly fair, it might work great injustice. To-day a claim may be abandoned because there is not sufficient water to work it. But, as soon as this work has been done, as soon as it is possible for the miners to use the water, which it is contemplated they will receive if this agreement comes into force, the claims which are valueless now will become valuable. This was such a good reason that we determined to give this privilege. The privilege is given to the company of taking and working abandoned claims, subject to the payment of no fees except the royalty on the output, and for this purpose to enter upon Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, such right to be exercised only when the grantees by the construction of works in pursuance of this franchise are in the position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working thereof. That is all. So long as the work is not completed, they cannot take possession of any claim. But when the works are completed, when they can supply water to all the miners, if any of the miners then abandon their claims, surely there is nothing wrong in the company taking the abandoned claim and trying to work it for their own benefit. So far, it seems to me that no misconception can exist in relation to this matter.

That is the Order in Council we have passed—I have gone over the salient points, and I think we have satisfactorily answered all the objections raised. I am aware that the miners in the Yukon still are not satisfied ; I am aware that they have passed resolutions against it; I have received resolutions, as for instance from the Liberal Association, on this subject. I do not know if that resolution has been quoted by my hon. friends on the other side. They have quoted so many this afternoon, that, while I have endeavoured to follow them all closely, this one may have escaped me. Still, if it has been quoted before it will bear repetition. This is a petition sent to me personally :

The petition of the Liberal Association of Dawson of the Yukon Territory humbly showeth :—

1. That this supply of water and power to the miners on the creeks is one of the most serious questions affecting the Yukon Territory.

2. That in the opinion of your petitioners the provision of a water system whereby the miners may be furnished with water on fair and reasonable terms can best be dealt with by the government itself and should not be allowed to fall under the control of private individuals.

That the development of the resources of the Yukon has been seriously impeded by the appropriation of extensive areas of rich placer ground by hydraulic concessions believed in some instances to have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation :

Your petitioners therefor pray :

That the Order in Council of April 21, 1902, granting certain rights and privileges to Malcolm Orr-Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold, and Walter Barwick may be rescinded absolutely, that the government institute forthwith a careful investigation by competent engineers and obtain reports on the subject with a view to undertaking the construction of a public water supply as a national enterprise.

Well, Sir, notwithstanding the respect which a man has always for his own friends, and notwithstanding the high opinion I entertain of the petitioners who are my own political friends, I cannot but feel that they have put the cart before the horse. They say in effect: First cancel the concession and then hold an investigation. I think it would have been more logical to ask us first to have an investigation and then, if need be, cancel the Treadgold concession. And that is just what we intended to do. After the investigation we shall know whether the Treadgold concession should be cancelled or not. But, Sir, let us note the consequence. My friends of the Liberal Association ask us, if we cancel the Treadgold concession, to establish a national work to give them the water they want. I have only to say this in answer to the observations made by my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Porter). He asks, speaking of the Order in Council : Why have you refused to make this law; why have you not proclaimed it; why have you not gazetted it ? For the simple and obvious reason that we have received objections and remonstrances against it. We have amended it again and again so as to make it acceptable to the miners of the Yukon. Still, though we have amended it, in my opinion, in a way that should make it acceptable, still we have remonstrances from the board of trade and political associations asking us not to carry it further, but to cancel it. Before we proclaim it, before we place it beyond the possibility of being abolished, it is only fair and reasonable that we should investigate all the matters connected with it to see what should be done in the future. I am giving the reasons, why I think, we were justified in making this Order in Council, at all events, why the motion that is presented by my hon. friend should not be accepted by this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Did I correctly understand the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to give the opinion that these Orders in Council came into force only when they were gazetted ?

The PRIME MINISTER. So far as that is concerned, the others were cancelled.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is a remarkable answer. I ask my right hon. friend the question whether he expressed the opinion that these orders came into force only after they are gazetted. And he says they are cancelled. What was the use of cancelling them if they never came into force ? Will the right hon. gentleman tell me that ? It seems to me remarkable that the right hon. gentleman, who has studied this question for two or three years, can give no other answer to what seems to me a fair and courteous question than that which he has just given. I venture to say that the Order in Council of June, 1901, was acted upon over and over again, though it was not gazetted. I asked my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) whether it was gazetted, and I have a memorandum from him stating that it was not. Yet any one who has perused the file of correspondence knows that that Order in Council was regarded as valid and was acted upon. Yet he stands here and ventures to tell this House, and through this House the country, that an Order in Council is not valid until it is gazetted. I do not think he had better chide us on this side for not knowing what we are talking about when he places himself in a position of that kind.

My right hon. friend has told us something about this petition of his Liberal friends in the Yukon, and has taken about as logical a position with regard to that as with regard to the gazetting of these Orders in Council. He says that his Liberal friends in the Yukon have asked too much when they demand that this shall be made a national work. It is a pity that he was not always as careful about the requests made to him by his Liberal friends in different parts of Canada. He seemed very sensitive about this request. But is it necessary because his friends in the Yukon ask him to do something unreasonable that he should turn a deaf ear to a portion of this petition—

> The development of the resources of the Yukon has been seriously impeded by the appropriation of extensive areas of rich placer ground by hydraulic concessions believed in some instances to have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation.

Because they ask him to make this a national work, is it necessary that he should turn a deaf ear to the statement of his own political friends—a statement which is corrobated by the city council and the board of trade of the Yukon—that these concessions have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. My hon. friend the Postmaster General tells us that the government have been deliberating a long time about holding an investigation into this matter. Since when have the government been intending to hold an investigation ? And how does it happen, if they have been intending to hold an investigation into these matters, that, up to the present time, no investigation whatever was spoken of in the House until this matter was brought up on this side ? Has my right hon. friend any explanation of that, because if he has, I will sit down and give him a chance to make it to the House. Apparently my right hon. friend has none. Then further than that, I would invite his attention to this clause of that same petition by his Liberal friends :

> That an inquiry may be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained, in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

What are the premises ? The premises are that these mining concessions were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, and my right hon. friend who is responsible more than any other Minister of the Crown for the government of Canada, has not up to the present time seen fit to instruct his Attorney General to take the proceedings demanded by his Liberal friends in the Yukon. What further is there ?

> That the Attorney General of Canada do issue a fiat, authorizing proceedings to be taken in his name in every case where action is begun against an hydraulic concession in which fraud or misrepresentation is charged, including all such actions as are now pending.

So I think, even if my right hon. friend comes to the conclusion that it is not expedient in the public interest to begin these works as public works, he finds ample food for thought, for consideration, and what is more, for action, in the suggestions which have been made to him by his own political friends in the Yukon, who are familiar with these matters as no member of this House can be familiar with them. Has my right hon. friend the slightest idea as to what these gentlemen mean when they refer to fraud and misrepresentation by which these concessions have been obtained ? Has he heard anything during the past year ? Has anything been communicated to him ? Have any documents been shown to him ? Has he understood anything on this subject which he has not communicated to the House to-night ? Can he enlighten us as to what his Liberal friends in the Yukon mean when they say deliberately that these concessions have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation ? Perhaps some information on those points would not have been out of place when my right hon. friend proceeded to enlighten this House to-night with regard to this Treadgold concession.

Great deliberation was exercised in making this concession, says my right hon. friend, and says the Postmaster General, a deliberation of such extreme value that the sum of $1 per miners' inch was placed as the price to be paid by the miners of this country to those gentlemen who were being urged to accept this concession, a price which, within six months afterwards, was reduced by the government to twenty-five cents, and that reduction, I believe, was made with the consent of the concessionaires themselves. Yet my right hon. friend, and the Minister of Railways and Canals who enlarged upon the work performed by a sub-committee of the Privy Council, and the presence of a certain gentleman on it who now occupies a seat on the judicial bench, these gentlemen tell us what a marvellous amount of deliberation was bestowed by the government on these matters. Was there any difficulty in finding out what would be a fair price for the miners' inch ? How long does it take to communicate with the Yukon? Is there not a telegraph line which this government has erected, and which communicates with other telegraph lines in this country ? Could not my right hon. friend have got an answer back the next day ? How long does it take a letter to go ? What was the need of the extreme haste with regard to this matter which led the government to fix a price to be paid by the miners of that country for water to be supplied by these concessionaires, which their own action, six months afterwards, proved to be absolutely ridiculous and absurd? Yet my right hon. friend gets up and informs the House and the country, indeed two ministers of the Crown get up and inform the House and the country of the wonderful amount of time that was spent in deliberating upon the terms of this concession, and of the remarkable value of the services which they rendered to the country in giving their time and attention to this subject, and in framing a regulation which gave to the miners of the Yukon the privilege of paying one dollar per miner's inch for the use of water.

Now there are one or two observations made, both by the Minister of Railways and Canals and by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, which I am bound to say I did not expect to hear from either one of these gentlemen; because they both have reputations as lawyers in this country, and I hardly expected that either one of them would have adopted the argument in this House with regard to the meaning of this word 'compensation' which has been put forward by both of them. My right hon. friend has carefully assured the House that there is a provision in this Order in Council by which the price which the miners are to pay for water to be furnished to them is to be controlled by some tribunal, that is to say, by the Gold Commissioner, subject to appeal to the Territorial Court of the district. Did my right hon. friend, did the Minister of Railways and Canals, read the first Order in Council ? Did either one of them take the trouble to read that, and did they see at the end of it the subsection (f) in the regulations, which provides that the charge which the grantee should be entitled to make for the use of such water on such claim should not exceed one dollar per miners' inch per hour ? Those regulations are precisely the regulations which are also contained in the second Order in Council, and which are relied upon by my right hon. friend and by the Minister of Railways and Canals as determining the price to be paid. Will my right hon. friend say that these words fulfil any office in the second Order in Council ? which they do not fulfil in the first Order in Council ? Will the Minister of Railways and Canals say that ? Well, I think not. Here is the language of the first Order in Council :

(b.) The grantees shall compensate the owner of any mining claim or lands for any damage which any such owner may sustain by reason of any of the grantees' works breaking or being imperfect.

(c.) Any question of compensation arising under this grant shall be determined judicially by the Gold Commissioner, subject to appeal to the Territorial Court of the district, and the said court may upon special circumstances being shown, make an order for the taking of further evidence.

(f.) The charge which the grantees shall be entitled to make for the use of such water on each claim shall not exceed one dollar per miners' inch per hour.

Now, my right hon. friend bases his argument on the contention that provisions in (b) and (c) which I have read to the House, are contained in the second Order in Council and provide ample security to the miner that he should not be overcharged. Why, if these hon. gentlemen had not stood up in this House and made such an argument to-night, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I would not have believed that they would have attempted to make such an argument. Are not the same provisions contained in the first Order in Council which definitely fixes the charge ? Further than that, if anything were necessary to be added, let my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways look at the top of page two of the second Order in Council and see what is there contained :

Provided that if any power is developed and rendered available by the grantees under this section which they do not make use of, then the same shall be offered for sale to the public, and the rates to be charged therefor shall be subject to the control of the Governor General in Council.

What was the need of such a regulation as that if the provisions contained in the regulation quoted by my right hon. friend were quite sufficient for the purpose ? Why, Mr. Speaker, any one who looks at this Order in Council, who looks down the first, second and third pages, will see everywhere that these concessionaires for the purposes of their undertaking have the right of entering upon and using private lands, and every one knows that rights of that kind are not usually granted without provision for compensation. Therefore, it would be an absurd thing to expect that in an Order in Council of that kind you should not find, either in the Order in Council itself or in some regulation attached to it, a provision that acts, done in derogation of those private rights should be compensated for by the individuals who have committed those acts. It is the most reasonable and the most natural thing in the world; and yet my right hon. friend and the Minister of Railways and Canals seek to torture those words, and to make the people of the Yukon believe that there is some guarantee and some safeguard to the miners in the words which are contained in the first Order in Council as well as in the second.

Now, this matter has been gone over very fully by hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House and I was pleased with the frankness with which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) admitted beyond all question that this concession is a monopoly. He says it is a monopoly, and he says you must have a monopoly there because you cannot develop a country without creating a monopoly, and he says further that the miners of the Yukon do not know what is good for them. They do not understand their own true interests, that a monopoly of this kind is necessary in the interests of the miners of the Yukon Territory and with considerable force and with all the vigour and all the energy that are so characteristic of the hon. Minister of Railway and Canals he insists that the miners of the Yukon really need this monopoly although they are protesting loudly to this parliament and to the whole country that their interests are being absolutely destroyed by these regulations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have said that they needed it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They have said that they needed it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but they want the government to furnish it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That they needed this concession ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They said that they needed this water.

Mr. BORDEN Halifax). That they needed water ? They have water in the Klondike river and there is one mine owner in that district who raises 1,500 gallons of water per minute for his own use to a height of 300 feet at a cost of less than 25 cents per inch. I will give the exact figures in regard to it. There is one man who has done for his own property and at much less expense a considerable portion of what is proposed to be done by these concessionaires under this second Order in Council. I brought this matter to the attention of the House last year, I have a memorandum under my hand and if I thought it necessary to stop for the purpose I could give it to the House again.

I would like to ask my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) where are the details of these different schemes that were proposed to the government. In the Order in Council that was passed in June, 1901, we had a very pretty recital in these words :

Whereas, the details of different schemes submitted have been considered and discussed.

I do not see the details of any of the different schemes brought down for the information of the House, and if, as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals stated, different persons came and proposed different schemes to the government it seems a singular thing that the House should be deprived at this late date of the inestimable privilege of reading them and of considering what these different schemes really were.

Now, my hon. friend the member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) made some reference in the course of his remarks to the hon. member who represents the Yukon (Mr. Ross), a very able, and I believe, a very estimable gentleman, although I do not know him sufficiently well to understand whether or not he is worthy of all the encomiums which have been bestowed upon him in the government organ in the Yukon, or whether he can be called a 'lightning striker' on all occasions. Whether he can be called a lightning striker on most occasions, I do not know, but certainly in so far as this Treadgold concession is concerned, he cannot be considered a lightning striker because this parliament has been in session for eight weeks, and although that hon. gentleman was elected on a platform which pledged him to secure the repeal of this concession, he has not been able to attempt anything in regard to it. I was greatly amused indeed to hear the hon. Postmaster General boasting of the return of the hon. gentleman who at present is the representative of the Yukon Territory. I was particularly amused at that because the very platform on which that hon. gentleman was elected to this House was a platform which denounced the action of this government in regard to its administration of the Yukon Territory. Although the election of the hon. gentleman was heralded through the press of this country as a victory for the government, and as a certificate of good character for this government in regard to the Yukon Territory, it was a certificate of exactly the opposite nature because the hon. gentleman who now fills the position of representative of the Yukon would have been snowed under by 1,500 of a majority had he not pledged himself upon the public platform and through his duly authorized agents in that territory to do all he could upon coming to this parliament to remedy the evils caused by this government and particularly in regard to the concessions that have been spoken of. There is no doubt of that because the present Gold Commissioner of the Yukon, when certain eastern newspapers had reached Dawson and when he had read that these newspapers proclaimed that this was a Liberal victory, took occasion to write to a newspaper in the Yukon Territory to say that it was nothing of the kind and that the truth was that Liberals and Conservatives had joined together in support of that hon. gentleman who now represents the Yukon because he had pledged himself to undo the wrongs which had been done by this government and because they thought him more capable of obtaining a remedy for these wrongs than the gentleman who was his opponent on that occasion. Let the Postmaster General not descend to any pettiness of that kind because his own Gold Commissioner, appointed by him only a few weeks ago, has taken occasion to rebuke utterances of that kind and the language which he used then in rebuking these eastern newspapers is just as much a rebuke to the hon. Postmaster General for the language which he had used to-day. Now, the hon. Postmaster General talked in the style that has been heard sometimes in this House about irresponsible individuals who are making charges. When he was asked by my hon. friend from Cornwall to whom he referred by irresponsible individuals, the hon. Postmaster General was somewhat at a loss to answer, and eventually, on being asked if he made the assertion that the board of trade of Dawson was irresponsible he took back——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never made that assertion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, who was it that the hon. gentleman referred to as being irresponsible? Has the hon. gentleman, after cogitating over that matter for an hour, discovered who is irresponsible? I want the House to understand that he did not refer to one irresponsible individual but to irresponsible individuals. It is not the board of trade, it is not the city council, it is not his Liberal friends, it is not the members of the Liberal Association, it is not the editor of the government organ. We are reduced to the editor of the independent journal in the Yukon, who apparently is the only person to whom the hon. gentleman refers when he mentions irresponsible individuals. I will give the hon. minister some responsible individuals and I will give him some of their utterances, because my hon. friends who have been addressing the House to-night, have forgotten a very excellent presentment of this case which is to be found in a report of a committee appointed at a mass meeting of Yukon citizens, and I will tell him when I get through who it was who signed this report and I will ask the hon. gentleman whether he regards this individual as being irresponsible:

> The undersigned who were appointed by the general committee nominated at the mass meeting held at Dawson on the evening of Monday, the seventeenth of February instant, as a sub-committee to collect information and make a report in regard to the objectionable features of the Treadgold concession, beg to report as follows——

The hon. Postmaster General and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will observe that this committee took credit to themselves for doing what the government did. They collected information about this concession. They took apparently as much trouble in regard to it as the government might have taken considering the figure which the government directed the miners to pay for the water furnished them by the concessionaires. Then this is the result of their deliberations:

> It is easy to understand how intelligent gentlemen at the capital should be misled both as to the value of the water supply contemplated by the Treadgold concession, as to the size of the capital proposed to be invested by him and as to the value of the concessions made to him, but in the opinion of your committee no one in possession of the information which your committee has been able to obtain, by search at the gold commissioner's office, by numerous interviews with miners, engineers, and other men practically acquainted with the conditions of this territory, and from every source available, can doubt that the supply of water contemplated by the scheme of the applicants for the concession is a mere stalking horse under cover of which he may obtain absolute possession of enormous mining tracts practically embracing the richest known mining district in the territory.

Perhaps, in order to secure the attention of the Postmaster General to this, I may tell him that this report is signed by a very important friend of his. It continues :

It seems to your committee that while from a logical or scientific point of view the instruments containing the Treadgold concession are of a most imperfect and inartistic kind.

Notwithstanding, you will observe the great work of preparation which the government put upon it.

They are, from the point of view of Mr. Treadgold and his associates, framed with clever adroitness.

Does not my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) think that, after all, Mr. Treadgold put more work upon it than did the government ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It continues :

They are complex, involved and obscure, and as a consequence difficult to readily understand, and appear to have been purposely framed in that way to deceive into the belief that the Treadgold people were conferring an enormous benefit on the country and were receiving small return, whereas they are in effect giving little or nothing and receiving vast benefits.

What a different view they seem to take of the situation from that which my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals presented with so much ardour to the House to-night. He wanted something attractive for capitalists. He told us you could not get capitalists to come forward unless you had something attractive, so the government were bound to make this attractive—and I don't know whether the capitalists made it attractive also or not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The report continues :

Your committee has special reports made by individual members of the committee on the various features of the concession, which reports have been submitted to the committee and approved by it and are herewith attached and returned to the general committee for its information.

To summarize the many opinions and views adverse to the concession is most difficult, but your committee desires to lay special stress on the following particulars :—

(1.) That the concession instruments ignore to a very large extent and override the rights and vested interests already created by private enterprises and private capital.

(2.) That Treadgold makes no adequate covenants to insure fair and reasonable supply of water to miners who may require it.

(3.) That the maximum of price is too high and that his powers of impounding water and obtaining abandoned claims and his exclusive, sole and prior right with regard to water, afford him a most potent lever to compel payment of his exorbitant rates of abandonment of property.

(4.) That the closing to the prospector and the miner of large tracts of country, the ignoring of private rights, the exclusive rights and the other special privileges granted to the concession, will create a state of uncertainty in the most important section of the community that will be most injurious to the interests of the territory and will tend both to deprive the government of revenue and the business community of the territory of a large branch of trade.

(5.) That the expropriation clauses are not framed with due regard to the rights of individual owners and have no adequate provisions for indemnification.

I may say, of course, I should perhaps have explained before reading this : that it is directed to the Order in Council as at first framed, and whatever benefit my hon. friends on the other side can get from any differences between the first Order in Council and this Order in Council, they, of course, go to mitigate any criticism in the document I am reading. But I entirely agree with the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House to-night, and who have said that so far as the interests of this country are concerned, and so far as the protection of the Yukon miners is concerned, there is very little difference indeed between the concessions granted under the first Order in Council and that granted by the Order in Council of last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This report continues :

In conclusion your committee very greatly fear that if the concession is allowed to stand in its present form and without most radical amendments and alterations that a monopoly will be created that will practically comminate the richest part of the Yukon Territory. In the opinion of your committee the best scheme for supplying water for mining purposes would be one initiated, operated and controlled by the government, but above all it is undesirable that a monopolist of the water supply should at the same time be a competitor in mining operations with miners dependent upon him for their water supply.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And it is one of the most powerful criticisms that has ever been made against this concession granted to Treadgold and his associates : that not only do you put these gentlemen in practical control of the water supply of the Yukon, but you also put them in actual and every day competition with the very men to whom they are to supply that water.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER. Who signs that report ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We will come to the signature in a moment. It concludes :

Your committee believes that the government has been deceived in this matter, and if a commission were appointed to obtain evidence regarding the true facts of the matter, ample grounds would be furnished to justify the government in rescinding the various Orders in Council, and other instruments relating to the concession, if not in toto, at all events, in so far as they are most objectionable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, do you suppose that that report is signed by one of those irresponsible gentlemen who have been referred to by my hon. friend the Postmaster General to-night? Well, I do not know whether the Postmaster General will regard him as irresponsible or not. His name is Fred. T. Congdon, chairman of that committee, and at present he occupies the high position of Commissioner to the Yukon, to which he was appointed by this government just about one year after he signed that document.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to my right hon. friend that one of two propositions is true: Either there is something in these matters that have been so alleged, which the government should have investigated long ago, or else Mr. Fred. T. Congdon is not fit to be Commissioner of the Yukon.

An hon. MEMBER. Governor of the Yukon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Governor of the Yukon, or commissioner, or whatever his official title is; he has put his name as chairman of that committee to a document which contains as grave an indictment of this concession as anything which has been said on this side of the House to-night—as grave an indictment of this concession, I repeat, as anything which has been said by any gentleman on this side of the House to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And yet, without such investigation as is demanded here; without the government making any such amendment in that Order in Council as removes the objectionable features complained of, that gentleman takes the position of commissioner to the Yukon, and I believe he has lately said to the people of that country: that this question of the Treadgold concession is one to be dealt with by the government and the parliament here at Ottawa. And, Sir, we are now trying to get this government in this parliament to deal with it, and we are proposing a resolution here to-night which does not go one whit further in condemnation of this Treadgold concession than the voice of not only the business men of the Yukon, not only the civic government of the Yukon, but even of those gentlemen in the Yukon who are the best friends and supporters of the government that stands at the head of affairs in Canada to-day. And yet my right hon. friend thinks apparently that there is nothing in this complaint which demands any attention at the hands of this House, or which requires this House to hasten the action of the government by some such resolution as that which has been proposed by my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). I shall not go into the argument of the legal question. I have heard no answer to the argument which has been put forward by my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and by my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) and the other hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House to-night.

Until there is some answer given to it other than that which I have heard, I do not think it is worth while for me to take up the time of the House in attempting to discuss that question. In conclusion, it seems to me, not only from the legal standpoint, but, what is even of more importance from the standpoint of public policy in regard to these concessions, that the resolution which has been proposed to the House by my hon. friend from Montmorency is one that ought to command the support of this House and that ought to be assented to by this government; and this Treadgold concession, which has created so much scandal in that western country, should once and for all be done away with. If the government decides to deal with this matter, let it deal with it by open competition among people throughout the country who are willing to undertake a work of this kind. Let it deal with it in such a way that there shall be competition after the waterworks shall be once established. Let it deal with it in such a way at least that the government shall have complete and ample supervision over their operations after it has once established them in that country.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick). Mr. Speaker, with all the skill and all the ingenuity which is born of long experience in the disputes of the courts, my hon. friend who proposed this motion, and those who spoke previous to the leader of the opposition laboured strenuously to establish two things: First, that this concession was issued illegally and improvidently, and second, that the miners do not approve of it. I said that my hon. friends laboured strenuously to establish these two propositions, and I am forced to admit, in view of the heat displayed by the hon. leader of the opposition, that he must be thoroughly convinced that they did not labour successfully.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He found it necessary to add another count to the indictment which is brought against this concession, and he added, not by direct statement, but by inference, by suggestion, the charge of fraud. Now, my answer to that is that if the hon. leader of the opposition was in earnest, if he really meant what he said when he stated that this concession was tainted with fraud, it was his clear duty to say so in the motion he submitted for the consideration of this House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is my hon. friend referring to me?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am referring to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not quite sure. In the remarks I made I read merely a quotation from the Liberal club in the Yukon, and I said that statements made by gentlemen of the standing which I attributed to those gentlemen deserved consideration at the hands of this government.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend rested his case largely on that; but I said a moment ago that he proceeded further, and made the charge, not openly, but by means of an insinuation. I repeat the statement now, and I immediately proceed to prove it. My hon. friend said, in discussing this matter, that the hon. Minister of Railways suggested that this concession had to be made attractive to capitalists, and he added that the capitalists had made it attractive to other people. Tell me what that means if it is not an insinuation of fraud. Now, I say that if the hon. leader of the opposition intended to charge fraud, his clear duty was not to proceed by insinuation, but to make a direct charge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The charge had already been made by the hon. gentleman's friends.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No friend of mine, or no man would continue to be a friend of mine, who would make a charge of that description, not being prepared to prove it. Now, my hon. friend did not go over the ground covered by my hon. friends who preceded him, and I think that I have substantially answered the greater part of his speech. I would like now merely to refer to what he said with respect to the Commissioner of the Yukon, Mr. Congdon, and I would like to draw the attention of the House to this fact, that the memorandum prepared by the present Commissioner of the Yukon Territory had reference to the first Order in Council, that that memorandum asked for amendments to that Order in Council, and that these amendments having been made, and that that gentleman having accepted the responsibility of taking the position of Commissioner of the Yukon, declared thereby that he was content with those amendments; and, so far as those amendments go, the answer to the memorandum to which my hon. friend alluded is complete. I shall endeavour now to deal with some things that fell from my hon. friends who preceded the hon. leader of the opposition. They tried to make good the last charge to which I have referred, that is to say, that the miners of the Yukon do not approve of this concession, by referring to newspaper articles and to resolutions passed at miners' meetings. With those who are not familiar with the strong, vigorous and picturesque language which characterizes those who frequent mining camps, those resolutions and articles must have some effect; but I for my part take the responsibility of saying that while those resolutions and articles may express the first opinions formed of these concessions by the miners of the Yukon, their sober, second thought is represented by the evidence they gave on the 2nd of December last, when they returned the government candidate with a majority of 891. This not only shows how, on sober, second thought, they considered this matter, but it also shows that they are satisfied that this government will lend not merely a patient and willing, but an anxious ear to any representations they have to make, and that as the first Order in Council was amended to suit their requirements, if in the second objections are to be found, these objections will be met in the same spirit in which the first objections were met at the time the second Order in Council was passed. I am satisfied that the miners of the Yukon have confidence that this government will deal with them fairly and equitably, and that when it can be established that there is any real grievance existing in any part of this Dominion, no matter how remote it may be, that grievance shall be remedied by this government when it is made known.

I am going to deal with the second Order in Council. I do not intend to discuss the first, because, having been repealed, it is absolutely out of the way. But so far as I have been able to follow the argument of my hon. friends on the other side of the House, their argument is that that second Order in Council was unconstitutional, was illegal, that it was not within the power of the government to pass it. In giving my answer to that, I want to say that I give my firm deliberate opinion, because I have had occasion to discuss this question very recently in the Supreme Court in connection with the question of royalty in the Yukon, when this whole question of Orders in Council with respect to mining in the Yukon was before the court. For the benefit of my hon. friends, I will tell them that they can find the whole report of the case in the current number of the Supreme Court reports, Volume 32, number 4. The cases begin at page 586.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are these the cases in which leave to appeal has been applied for ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And granted ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. Leave to appeal was applied for and granted on both sides. The Crown appealed on one question, and the miners on the other. We may as well state the facts clearly while we are at it. What is my reason for coming to the conclusion that it was within the powers of the government to make this Order in Council ? Section forty-seven of the Dominion Land Act, as amended, provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations to provide for the sale or lease or other disposal of mining property in the North-west Territories.

The North-west Territories of course include the Yukon. Then it is provided that the Governor in Council shall have the power by regulation to determine the conditions under which this property shall be disposed of. Acting on the power conferred by this section, mining regulations were made, as far back as 1889, authorizing a subordinate official in the Yukon to dispose of the mines there. But if the Governor in Council has the power to determine by regulation the conditions under which this property shall pass out of the hands of the Dominion government, surely he has the right to do that himself. Surely what the Governor General in Council can do by deputy, he can do by himself. That is my opinion, and I think, without boasting, that it may have some value. If the Governor General in Council can by regulation authorize a subordinate official to sell, surely he can as effectively sell, by virtue of a deed passed by the Council itself. That is at all events my opinion and I give it for what it is worth, and perhaps my hon. friends may in time come to the conclusion that it is worth something. The development district depends very largely upon the creation of hydraulic power. So long as you have rich mining deposits it is easy to take the gold from the bosom of the earth by the ordinary means which the individual miner controls. But when you have exhausted the richer deposits and have to deal with what is called a poor pay streak, then in order to work that successfully, you must have hydraulic power. Therefore, the only question is, whether or not, in the first instance, it was right for the government to authorize the development of that power by a private company, or whether it would have been proper for the government itself to develop it. Whether right or wrong, the conclusion come to by the government was that it was better to give the development of that power to a private corporation—that it was more in the interests of the country that the work should be done by a private company than by the government. The question for the House to consider is whether the granting of that power to a private corporation was surrounded by such conditions as would make the grant as advantageous to the public as possible and as little onerous to the miners. What are the terms of the grant? I am now dealing with the only Order in Council which is in existence. That Order in Council gives to Mr. Treadgold and his associates two things. First, the right to divert the Klondike river for the purpose of generating power. They have first the right to divert and take water from the Klondike river in order to develop power, which power is to be used for mining purposes, but what my hon. friends were careful to overlook is that the right thus given is made subject to the right, which is vested in every miner, of himself taking first from the river sufficient water for the working of his claim, but not to exceed 3,500 miners' inches. The miner has the first right to take that amount of water from the Klondike, and it is only after he has exercised that right that Mr. Treadgold and associates are entitled to take any water whatever for the purpose of generating power. What is the meaning of that right to take 3,500 miners' inches? Let us take the definition of a miners' inch given by my hon. friend from Montmorency. He says it is equal to a volume of water twelve feet square, so that if you multiply 3,500 by twelve feet square, you will see that volume of water which each miner is entitled to take per minute. In addition to the right to take from the river the water necessary to develop power, the company have the right to distribute water in the district. Let me quote the words of the concession so that you may understand the extent to which this right to divert the water goes. Subsection two provides that the company shall have:

> The prior right—subject to the provisions contained in clause one—to divert and take water from the Klondike river for distribution and use in the district up to 5,000 miners' inches.

That is the right they have got, and I should be curious for somebody to make me understand exactly what that means—the right to divert and to take up 5,000 miners' inches. After they have taken that, is their right exhausted?

Mr. HEYD. Out of that 5,000 how much is already disposed of to the miners?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The miner gets his 3,500 miners' inches first before everybod else. Under section ten, the company have an additional right, subject to no payment except the royalty prescribed upon output, to make an entry for and work any abandoned mining claim or claims on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, such right to be exercisable only when the grantees, by the construction of works in pursuance of this purchase, are in a position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working thereof. What does that section mean? It means that after the hydraulic works have been built and are in operation and the grantees are prepared to divert the water necessary to enable any man to take up an abandoned claim and work it, then, if no one else will take it up, they can do so. After the company have developed the power and taken the water and are ready to distribute it, then only, and not until then, have they the right to take up any abandoned claim. Any one else can take it in the interval.

My hon. friends have objected that they have the right to take up the abandoned claims without being subjected to the preliminary formality or obligation imposed upon the other miners, that is, of paying the entry fee and representation fee. What does the representation fee mean ? The word indicates its meaning. Any man may go on property and work it, but, in order that he may maintain his title to it, it is necessary for him to expend at least $200 to develop that property every year, because a mining location is granted for a year. But, if a man goes away from the country—say, for instance, water is scarce and the facilities are not such as to enable him to work his property successfully—he is represented by the $200 in lieu of the work to be done on the property. That is what is meant by 'representation.' What is the reason for this fee ? It is to provide that the properties may not lie fallow, not remain undeveloped. But, if you have such conditions as that in connection with this enterprise, to carry out which, I am told, it will be necessary to spend perhaps four or five millions of dollars to develop power—I know nothing about the facts, but I am told this is the case—and if they develop the power, and take an abandoned claim and seek to develop it, what is the use of a representation fee from them ? Are they not represented by the works they have done and by the utilizing of the power that they have created ? It seems to me that the reason of the exception in their favour in that respect is absolutely elementary. Now, my hon. friend was very severe and very sarcastic when he spoke of the legal members of the government who had occasion to give a legal construction to this concession. He was good enough to say that no first year's student—if I understood him—would venture to take the responsibility for the opinion expressed by, for instance, a gentleman with such a reputation at the bar as that of the hon. Minister of Railways—leaving out the other two. I am afraid he is going to have another legal student, because I hold, and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the House, that the construction put upon the concession by the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is arguable, and not only that it is arguable, but that it is the only construction that can be put upon the document if you are going to give effect to all its parts. Take, first, section 2 :

> The prior right to divert and take water from the Klondike river for distribution and use in the district up to five thousand miners' inches.

Then, section 9 :

> The right, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, to use, distribute and dispose of by sale or otherwise the water delivered by the grantees within the district.

Section 2 is to be read in connection with section 9. The right to distribute the water and dispose of it by sale is vested in the concessionaires, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained. What are those regulations ? They are to be found on page 4. And one of them is that any question of compensation arising under the grant shall be determined judicially by the Gold Commissioner. I do not mean to say that that is drawn as artistically as it might be by a first-class lawyer. There may be better draughtsmen than the gentleman who drew this. But I say that it is susceptible of the construction put upon it, and if effect is to be given to it, this is the only construction. Then take section 10 :

> The right, subject to no payment except the royalties prescribed upon output to make entry for and work any abandoned mining claim or claims on Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, such rights to be exercised only when the grantees by the construction of works in pursuance of this franchise are in a position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working thereof.

There is a provision again that they shall deliver the water on the claims for the working of the claims. How is the compensation to be settled ? By private bargain, or in the manner fixed by subsection c, of the regulations. There is no other way under the Order in Council to determine the question and make an authoritative decision. That is the only construction you can put upon it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) put the same construction on the first Order in Council ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not looking at the first Order in Council at all. That has passed out of the realm of discussion. I am not going to argue on a thing that is not in force.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think my hon. friend would argue that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend draws my attention to the fact that one of the grievances alleged by the miners of the Yukon country is that the hydraulic company would enter into competition with the miners. What is the hydraulic power for ? They develop the power and they take the abandoned claims—the claims that nobody else wants—and develop them. So far as the miner is concerned, he is entitled to his own property and he is working his own property. The company do not compete with them. It is not because the hydraulic miner is in the neighbourhood dealing with another property that he competes with the ordinary miner. I do not see how there could be competition. That is the way in which this Order in Council appeals to me. The people of the Yukon country require the water for the development of their property. And not only that, but it seems to me it would be a matter of oversight on the part of the government if, with the knowledge we have of the properties in that country, we were not prepared to encourage any one who was willing to go in and develop hydraulic power. Any man who will go in there and invest four or five million dollars to develop hydraulic power deserves to be encouraged. He is going into a patriotic work to enable us to develop the country, which, without that would develop very slowly and would never come to its full state of development. So long as the powers given to the company are surrounded by such safeguards as will enable them to operate for their own profit and advantage, but not to the detriment of the people of that country, there is no blame attachable to the government. What, in fact, is the concession ? It is a grant to the hydraulic company the right to take from the Klondike river a certain quantity of water to generate power. And that right can only be exercised after the miners have been satisfied to the extent of having 3,500 miners' inches. After they have received that quantity of water the balance may be taken for the purpose of generating power. It seems to me the point towards which my hon. friends opposite should have directed their attention, was to show that when we granted to the free miner that quantity of water, 3,500 inches, we granted them a quantity insufficient for their works. Not a single word has been said on that point. From the representations that come from the Yukon, and, so far as my knowledge goes, having listened attentively to all that has been read, it seems to me that there is a complete misapprehension on the part of those who have made representations with regard to the nature of this concession.

It seems to me that the miners of the Yukon should have shown that when we gave them that quantity of water we did not give them what was necessary to satisfy their demand. If we gave them water necessary to satisfy their demand, and if in addition we supplied them with this power, it seems to me they ought to be thankful to the government for what we have done. We give them what they wanted, and we give them the additional advantage they have now. It seems to me that is something to the credit of the government. The grantees have the right, it is true, to take water from the Klondike river and distribute it in the district. You understand there is a difference between taking water from the Klondike river for the purpose of generating power, and taking water for the purpose of distributing it. They have got that latter power also, but no representation has been made, no statement has been made that either of these rights vested in the Treadgold Company operate detrimentally to the miners. No statement has been made that the miner is not entirely satisfied with the right which he has to take his quantity of water in preference to all the others. In addition to that, they have the right to enter upon an abandoned claim and to work it. Now what does that mean ? It means that after they have developed this concession a year—and they have already had it for a year without spending any money upon it—after they are in a position to deliver water on these claims, if any one else wants the claims they are entitled to have them. That is all they have a right to with respect to these abandoned claims, and there is nothing more in it. Looking at it in that aspect, there is nothing in this that we cannot justify, nothing which we cannot all stand up for, nothing in it which does not show foresight, and careful consideration. But if there is anything wrong in it, as the Prime Minister said when he addressed the House, as the Postmaster General said when he addressed the House, we are prepared to listen, as we were originally, to any grievance that may be made known to us and we are prepared to remedy it.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). I think most gentlemen in this House must have been surprised to hear the Minister of Justice argue gravely that the sober second thought of the people of the Yukon was in favour of this Order in Council because they elected the Hon. Mr. Ross to represent them in this House. Surely the hon. gentleman, in saying that, must presume a good deal upon the forgetfulness of the members of this House. After it has been proved that the Hon. Mr. Ross was elected on the distinct platform that he would see to getting this Order in Council cancelled, to assert that the sober second thought of the people of the Yukon was in favour of the Order in Council is most extraordinary on the part of the Minister of Justice. I understood the Minister of Justice to say further that the present governor of the Yukon had changed his mind as to the expression of opinion read by the leader of the opposition a few minutes ago. I have here a paper printed in Dawson one month ago, containing an interview with the governor of the Yukon, who gave his opinion at that late date upon this very question. It is very emphatic, and I will read it :

> As to the Treadgold concession, I may say I favour its cancellation. I am in the same position with regard to the subject as I always have been.

And his opinion had been expressed in that strong language that was read a short time ago by the leader of the opposition.

> I am satisfied that he should have no more privileges than any one else. I will not say that I favour the total cancellation of the Treadgold concession, that is, I shall not put it in that way, but say I believe he should have no privileges that others do not have. As to what parliament is likely to do with the matter I cannot say.

If anybody could say more emphatically that he remains of the same opinion that he formerly expressed, I do not see in what words he might say it. Now I wish to refer to a statute the Minister of Justice read, and to another statute that he did not read. Clause 47 that was read by the minister has this provision :

Lands containing coal or other minerals, including lands in the Rocky Mountains Park, should not be subject to the provisions of this Act respecting sale or homestead entry, but the Governor General in Council may, from time to time, make regulations for the working and development of mines on such lands, and for the sale, leasing, licensing or other disposal thereof.

That is sale or other disposal of the mines. But there is a section in the Yukon Territory Act passed in 1899, which reads :

Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Governor General in Council may make ordinances for the peace, order and good government of the territory.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What statute are you reading from ?

Mr. BARKER. This is the Yukon Territory Act of 1899, 62 and 63 Vic., Chap. 11, section 2.

Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Governor in Council may make ordinances for the peace, order and good government of the territory, and of Her Majesty's subjects and others therein; but no ordinance made by the Governor in Council, or the Commissioner in Council shall——

(c.) appropriate any public land or other property of Canada without authority of parliament.

That seems to me pretty clear and emphatic. But notwithstanding that Act, in this Order in Council the government did grant to Mr. Treadgold and his companions the right to purchase any Crown lands required by the grantees for the purpose of their works, at a price not exceeding $10 per acre. I think the Minister of Justice will have to admit, I do not see how he can get out of it, that this is in direct contravention of the Yukon Act which expressly provides that the Governor in Council shall not appropriate any public lands without the authority of parliament. The hon. gentleman then went on to argue upon other clauses of the Order in Council, and he laid some stress upon the provision that the properties of the grantee shall be exempt from representation, arguing that the reason they were exempted from the charges called 'representation' was because of the expenditures they were making, I presume, unusual expenditures. A few minutes afterwards the Minister of Justice tells us that they have been there for a year and have not spent a dollar, but under the very terms of the Order in Council they are not obliged to spend a dollar for six years; and yet during the whole of these six years they are free from the charges called representation. Surely by reason of this concession the public are excluded from these lands, while these people have practically a six years' option to use them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Read section 10.

Mr. BARKER—(reading) :

10. The right, subject to no payment except the royalty prescribed upon output, to make entry for and work any abandoned mining claim or cialms (and so on), such right to be exercisable only when the grantees by the construction of works in pursuance of this franchise are in a position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working thereof.

Certainly, but they have this right for six years, they can enter at any time within six years; the whole territory which comes within the provisions of this Order in Council is tied up subject to these conditions, and at any time within six years these concessionaires may come in and claim their rights. I was very much surprised, I confess, that the hon. Minister of Justice should have argued that there was nothing in the objection raised on this side of the House as to the construction of subclause (c) of the regulations in the last order. The hon. Minister of Justice said that he had nothing to say about the first Order in Council, but I think the House will see upon referring to the first one that there is a very substantial reason for the change. Not only do I think it is beyond doubt that the construction put upon clause C on this side of the House is the correct one, but by referring to subclause 3 of the old Order in Council, hon. gentlemen will see the reason for it. Subclause 3—I am reading now from the first Order in Council—says :

The grantees shall supply water to the owners of claims within the district subject to the regulations hereinafter contained.

When we turn to the regulations we find that there is a price put there for the water. If the hon. gentleman will show me in the second Order in Council one word from beginning to end that obliges these concessionaires to supply water, I would like to see it. This obligation has been deliberately omitted from the second Order in Council, and they have therefore omitted to mention any charge whatever for the water if the concessionaires do supply it. It is quite optional with these people to supply the water or not. There is not a word from beginning to end that obliges them to do it. Clause 9 gives them :

The right, subject to the regulations hereinafter contained to use, distribute and dispose of by sale or otherwise——

And so on. But it does not say that they shall supply the water. The first Order in Council provided that they should supply the public with water, and it provided the charge to be made. The second Order leaves it entirely optional whether they shall supply water or not. In the second Order in Council, the duty or obligation being struck out, there is of course no provision as to what the charge shall be. There is not a word providing what the charge shall be, nor are the concessionaires obliged to supply any water. If the people are not willing to pay what the concessionaires charge them, they will not supply them. There is no question of bargain and sale ; the miners and the public must pay for water at the price at which Mr. Treadgold chooses to sell it. There are other clauses in this original Order in Council which the Yukon people desired to have rectified, but no person who reads this first Order in Council and who then reads the second one can come to any other conclusion than that the second Order in Council was prepared by some person on behalf of the concessionaires. From the beginning to the end every clause has been carefully drawn in the interests of the concessionaires, and there is hardly a provision from first to last that one would regard as having been put in by the government on behalf of the public. Wherever we find a change it is in the interests of the concessionaires, except in one particular, and I am not quite sure that even that is against their interests. It would be interesting if the hon. ministers would tell us when they were all, as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) says, putting their brains to work in the forming of this Order in Council, how it came about that they omitted the original requirement of $250,000 to be expended by the concessionaires. Surely there must have been grave and serious consideration of that subject ; and, if so, what was the reason for omitting that provision ? How did it come to be omitted, and who suggested it ? Did the government insist upon throwing it off, or was that also a clause which was altered by the concessionaires in their own interests ? That payment of $250,000 was a very important provision in the original Order in Council. It has disappeared from the other, from the one which was to be an improvement in the interest of the public upon the previous one. What has become of that $250,000, equal to £50,000, the sum of money that was to be expended by these people ? When the miners of the Yukon protest that this is an unjust Order in Council, when a deputation comes all the way from the Yukon to interview the ministers, and when the ministers sit down to improve this Order in Council in the interests of the public, this clause requiring the Treadgolds to expend $250,000 disappears; and although this has been commented upon by one hon. gentleman after another on this side of the House, we have not heard from the hon. Postmaster General, who spoke at length on behalf of the department, or from any hon. minister, one word in explanation of how that condition was left out. I think we had a right to expect explanations, and it certainly would have been of very great interest to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, to the people of the Yukon and to the public to know exactly how that occurred. Then there was a further provision in the next clause to the $250,000 one,

> The grantees shall deliver within the district during the summer season of 1905, not later than July 1, 1905, a flow of one thousand (1,000) miners' inches, equal to fifteen hundred (1,500) cubic feet per minute.

That was another very valuable provision. If they were to exercise this concession they were to be required to do some work and to have the power ready for use by the 1st of July, 1905, but when this Order in Council was being improved on behalf of the miners and of the public, that provision was omitted. Instead of that provision that this work should be done by the 1st of July, 1905, we find this provision, which, the more it is looked at, the more extraordinary it appears. After granting the sole right and the privileges which have been referred to in regard to the water power, the second Order in Council says :

> Provided that if the right given by this section is not exercised within six years from the date hereof, it may be revoked by order of the Governor General in Council.

This is the one clause in the whole Order in Council that is subject to a positive condition. All the other rights are absolute. There is not from first to last any other provision which enables the Governor General in Council to take any action in respect to the rights given to the concessionaires.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What other powers can the concessionaires exercise if after six years they have forfeited the use of the water in the Klondike ?

Mr. BARKER. They have first the sole right to divert and take water from the Klondike river for the purpose of generating power with which to pump water.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose they lose that right ?

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. Postmaster General mean to say that the other privileges they have obtained under this Order in Council are of no value ? What about the privilege of providing water for the purposes of the public. There are two distinct powers given in this Order in Council. One enables them to provide power from the Yukon waters, and the other enables them to provide the people with water as a water company in a city might do. Is that not valuable ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is it not quite an ordinary thing to grant powers that are not terminable and yet do not exclude the granting of similar powers to others ?

Mr. BARKER. It is a very unusual thing to grant privileges to a water company without obliging them to supply water. I never heard of such a case.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no doubt there are plenty of cases.

Mr. BARKER. There is not a word in the Order in Council compelling the concessionaires to supply water to anybody. They have the right to do it, but you took out the peremptory words that they must supply, and you gave the company the mere privilege of supplying water if they chose to do so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only water they have the right to sell is surplus water.

Mr. BARKER. They have the right to sell all the water they please, that comes within what may be called their territory. What I am speaking about is a distinct thing altogether from the right to create and sell power. What does the Order in Council say about power ? The hon Postmaster General made a point of that. That provision is also in somewhat equivocal terms. It says that 'provided' any power is developed which the grantees do not make use of themselves it shall be offered for sale to the public. Is it likely that these people are going to generate power that they have no need of, unless it is to their interest to do so ? What is there to protect the interest of the public ? The Minister of Railways and Canals told us frankly that this is a monopoly, and if so why was it necessary to say that if they created any power beyond what they needed for their own use, they should sell it. Why was it not said that they must furnish water for those who needed it, and that the government could settle what the terms would be ? The fact is, that from beginning to end this Order in Council has been drawn by a set of gentlemen who are seeking to get from the public all they possibly can without undertaking any obligation whatever in return. That is the spirit of it from first to last, and any person who reads that document will come to that conclusion. In clause 5 they are given the right to purchase Crown land, a right, I say, which the government had no power to give. All through there are rights given and no obligations stipulated for in return. They have the right, subject to no payment, except the royalty prescribed upon the output, to make entry over and work any abandoned mining claims on Bonanza.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Read the next clause.

Mr. BARKER. It says :

Such right to be exercisable only when the grantees by the construction of works in pursuance of this franchise are in a position to deliver water upon such claim or claims for the working thereof.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman was proceeding to argue that although the concessionaires may lose the rights in section 1, they would have a lot of other rights. This right in section 10 would also fall to the ground if the concessionaires lost their rights under section 1.

Mr. BARKER. At the expiration of six years and not till then.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman was arguing differently a moment ago.

Mr. BARKER. No. I say that all these provisions are without limitation, if they are not limited by the six years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Section 10 is dependent on section 1, which cannot be perpetual.

Mr. BARKER. Does the Postmaster General think that it was right to give these concessions to the Treadgolds to subject the public of the Yukon to a concession deterring capital, and causing consternation, as this Order in Council did cause consternation ; and all because the government did not take a little trouble to care for the country's interests. Another clause gives Treadgolds the right to assign any of the rights conferred upon them to any person whatever. The whole order from first to last was given to these people, or rather prepared for them, so that they could farm it out as they pleased. They could act upon what part they pleased and sell out what they pleased, and the public of the Yukon were to be subject to them and under their domination. I do not want to take the time of the House further, but I repeat that I think there cannot be any question that under the Yukon Act I have referred to, there is no power at all in the government to contract that these concessionaires should have the land of the Crown at any price, or free. The Act expressly provides that there shall be no appropriation of the public lands without the authority of parliament, and yet all this dealing has been going on upon the assumption on the part of the ministers that they have the right to appropriate the public lands of the Yukon. We on this side say that they have no such right, and the Minister of Justice did not cite the Act to which I refer and which is express on that point.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). What struck me in connection with this interesting and important debate is that the government are perhaps most to blame for having gone into a transaction of this sort without their evidently having any knowledge of the requirements of the country. I asked the right hon. the Prime Minister whether he had any report as to the probable cost of the work which is supposed to be covered by the Treadgold concession, and I gathered from his reply that the government had no report, and had not caused any reports to be made as to what the cost of this necessary work would be. Surely, in the case of a private individual owning such a territory and owning valuable property rights which were to be developed to bring in revenue; surely before such a concession as this was granted a private individual would have had his own engineers and his own scientific officers to report as to the probable cost of the work proposed to be done by people asking for such a valuable franchise. I gather that the government took no steps to ascertain what the proposed work would cost. The first Order in Council was given in June, 1901, and very shortly after that strong opposition was made to the terms of the grant. Later on another order was passed altering in some points the case in which there has been practically a case in which there has been practically a continuous opposition and not one demand from the people of that country for the confirmation of this concession; from that day to this the government apparently have taken no steps whatever to ascertain what the cost of these works would be. Now, as a rule, I am against the government undertaking works of this kind, but I hold that it was the first duty of the government before granting the concession, to ascertain what the cost of such work would be to the concesionaires. In the face of the government having no such knowledge, they gave to this company an option—because it is simply and solely an option—for six years of what may be enormously valuable privileges, and the concessionaires are not required to spend a dollar of money for six years. Naturally a body of men with a concession like that, having six years in which to make the most of it, will not be in a hurry to carry the work out or to put such a concession on the market. The market for a year past has not been a favourable one for floating a concern of this kind. The conditions may change at any time within six years, and these men may take advantage of any change in the money market. Naturally they would do so. It would be quite proper for them to do so. Having obtained the concession from this government, it would be quite proper for them, as a pure business proposition, to hold it until they could bring it out at the most favourable time to float it. Naturally they will hold it until they can unload it with the largest amount of profit to themselves. And for six years you are depriving these miners, who you say are so anxious to have water, of the possibility of getting water unless these concessionaires can see the chance in the meantime of selling what you give them at a very large profit. I think it was the first duty of the government, when they found that such a work was required, to ascertain what such a work would cost, and how far it was required to be gone on with at once, and, having done that, to have invited tenders, or let the public know that they were open and willing to receive offers for building these water flumes and developing the water power in that country. On these two points I think the government are very seriously to blame, and have possibly committed that part of the country to a serious loss.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Casgrain.

Amendment of Mr. Casgrain negatived ; motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 1.15 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 13, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

PILOTS ON THE RIVER ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. LEMIEUX—by Mr. Bickerdike—asked :

1. Have any pilots been retired from the lower St. Lawrence river pilotage service on account of defective sight ? And if so, how many during the past ten years ?

2. In each case what was the condition of the form sense, colour sense, and light sense ; and what tests are used to examine these senses ?

3. What is the minimum acuteness of vision accepted as sufficient for (a) pilots, (b) apprentices ?

4. Is the same standard of vision, and are the same tests used, for all apprentice pilots and pilots throughout Canada ?

5. What was the acuteness of vision, and the condition of the colour sense, of the different pilots who have been involved in acidents during the past ten years in the River St. Lawrence ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. None.

2. No answer required as it is dependent on No. 1.

3. (a) Candidates for admission as pilots must pass an examination before an oculist and aurist selected by the commissioners as to their sight, colour sight and hearing. Such examination being the same as regard eyesight and colour-blindness that has to be undergone by candidates passing the examination for masters and mates. The minimum required as sufficient is one-third (de Wicker's chart).

(b.) Candidates for admission as apprentice pilots, before being indentured, must pass an examination before an oculist and aurist selected by the commissioners as to their sight, colour sight and hearing. Vision : only (de Wicker's chart) is accepted.

4. The commissioners do not know if the same standard of vision and the same tests are used for all apprentice pilots and pilots throughout Canada.

5. As up to 1902 pilots on the active list were not obliged to submit to an examination of their eyesight, until they had reached the age of sixty-five years, or that a complaint had been lodged against them that their sight was defective, consequently this question can only be answered in so far as accidents have happened to the pilots who were thus examined.

Charles Francis Brown, examined as a pilot of sixty-five years, on April 12, 1893, producing a certificate from his doctor that his sight and colour sight was in good condition, and was also tested at this examination in reading at different distances and in distinguishing colours. Pilot Brown is still on the active list, has been examined every year since 1893 by an oculist employed by the commissioners. At examination of 1902 vision was 1 (de Wicker's chart) and vision of colours was perfect. Pilot Brown grounded a sailing ship on June 27, 1893.

Jos. Phil. Couillard, examined as a pilot of sixty-five years and over, and branch renewed for one year by the commissioners on April 14, 1896. Acuteness of vision was one-half (de Wicker's chart). Condition of colour sight was good (weak). Pilot Couillard had an accident to a vessel in his charge summer of 1896.

Alphonse Asselin, pilot under sixty-five years, examined June 5, 1902. Acuteness of vision was 1 (de Wicker's chart). Vision of colour was perfect. Had an accident summer of 1902.

Joseph Eugène Lachance, pilot under sixty-five years, examined June 5, 1902. Acuteness of vision was 1 (de Wicker's chart). Vision of colour was perfect. Had an accident summer 1902.

Samuel Rioux, pilot under sixty-five years, examined June 5, 1902. Acuteness of vision was 1 (de Wicker's chart). Vision of colour was perfect. Had an accident 1902.

FISHING IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. LEMIEUX—by Mr. Bickerdike—asked :

1. Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries received the following petition :—

To the Honourable Raymond Préfontaine, Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

The petition of the undersigned fish merchants, fishermen and others interested in the fishing industry in the district of Gaspé, respectfully showeth :—

That the fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence are seriously injured by the use of trap-nets for codfish and herring which have been proved to be very destructive to the fisheries, owing to the fact that large and small fish are indiscriminately caught ; the claim that the large mesh gives freedom of way to small fish is not justified by experience, it being conclusively proved that the large fish block up the meshes, and the small fish, when in the trap, are unable to escape.

That the seining of herring, caplin and any other fish in the spring of the year and at all times for the purpose of fertilizing lands, is a wanton waste of valuable product, and a great detriment to the profitable prosecution of the fisheries, and should be discouraged by every possible means, in order that those fish may be used solely for the purposes of food and bait ; otherwise our cod-fishing industry will be ruined, as no bait can be procured. Your petitioners also pray that the trapping of all kinds of fish by means of steam trawling be made contrary to law.

Wherefore, your petitioners urgently request that you will be pleased to take the necessary measures to prohibit the use of trap-nets for codfish and herring, and also prohibit the use of herring, caplin and other fish for fertilizing purposes. And your petitioners, as duty bound, will ever pray.

2. What action does the Department of Marine and Fisheries intend to take on this question ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. Yes, through Mr. Lemieux, M.P.

2. The department, after fully considering the matter, has reached the conclusion that sufficient grounds do not exist for taking action on the lines of the petition.

The department does not feel justified in taking an action in the matter, as the three principal statements in the petition are not justified by the facts as officially reported.

The petitioners claim that codfish and herring have injured the fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Statistics officially published show that the cod and herring fishery during the past few years, has shown no decrease in productiveness. In fact, these fish have been unusually abundant, and any local decrease is accounted for by merely local circumstances—rough weather, &c.

The petitioners protest against the seining of herring, caplin and other fish in the spring to be used for fertilizing purposes. While the Fisheries Act prohibits the catching of fish for use as manure, the department has not felt justified in strenuously enforcing the law in this respect, as such fish as herring in the spring are in poor condition, and frequently not very marketable. Such fish as are not marketable, instead of being wasted are used on the land. To this the department sees no objection.

The petitioners protest against the use of steam trawls. This allegation is not found to have a very good basis according to the reports of the departmental officers. Steam trawling is so limited at present that special restrictive steps would not be justifiable.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC, LORNE SIDING, I. C. R.

Mr. BELL—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What number of cars of freight were moved into and out of Lorne Siding, Intercolonial Railway, in the years 1901 and 1902 ?

2. What were the receipts for passenger traffic at the same siding ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. In the year 1901 there were seven cars of freight moved into and ninety-six cars out of Lorne siding.

In the year 1902 there were four cars of freight moved into and ninety-two cars out of same siding.

2. Receipts from passenger traffic at Lorne siding in the year 1901, amounted to $81.06. And in the year 1902, amounted to $92.15.

HARBOUR MASTER, BATHURST, N. B.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

1. On whose recommendation was M. T. Daly dismissed from the position of harbour master at the port of Bathurst, N. B.?

2. Was his dismissal the result of an investigation ? if so, by whom was such investigation held ; and what charges, if any, were preferred against him ?

3. Upon whose recommendation was his successor, Hachey, appointed ?

4. Had said Hachey resigned his position as a branch pilot of the port of Bathurst, as required by law, before his appointment as harbour master ; or has he since done so ; and if so, when ?

5. Had the result of the late provincial election in Gloucester county, N. B., anything to do with the dismissal of the said Daly ?

6. Is it the policy of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, under its new head, to dismiss officers without any charge or complaint against them of non-performance of duty, but simply upon the request of a member of parliament supporting the government ? If not, for what reason was the said M. T. Daly dismissed from his position of harbour master for the port of Bathurst, N. B.?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. On the minister's who is responsible for such appointments.

2. No.

3. Upon satisfactory recommendation to the minister.

4. No.

5. Not so far as the department is aware.

6. No.

Mr. Daly was dismissed because he did not discharge his duties as harbour master in an impartial manner.

FALSE CREEK, VANCOUVER.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. Has any portion of False creek, Vancouver, been leased to Messrs. Burnett & Kelly ? If so, what is the area so leased ?

2. What is the duration of the lease ?

3. What is the rental per annum ?

4. Have any protests been received from any public bodies in Vancouver against the granting of the said lease ? If so, from whom ?

5. Upon whose recommendation was the lease granted ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, there has been no such lease.

Mr. BELL.

OYSTER FISHING, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. Was a petition received from Prince Edward Island last year (1902) asking the government to prohibit the spring fishing of oysters, and giving reasons for so asking ?

2. If so, what action has, or does the government propose to take, in this matter ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. No petition was received.

2. Answered by above.

PENSIONS, SOUTH AFRICAN SERVICE.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria)—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What are the rates of pensions paid to disabled, or partially disabled Canadians from South African service ?

2. Does Canada contribute towards the payment of the aforesaid pensions ?

3. In view of the low rates of imperial pensions, has the Canadian government considered the advisability of supplementing the imperial pensions ?

4. Does the Canadian government accept as final the medical reports of the imperial government on subjects for pensions ?

5. Will action upon this matter be taken this session ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) :

1. The rates are those provided by the imperial government for officers and soldiers of the regular army.

2. No.

3. The government has not considered the advisability of supplementing the imperial pensions.

4. Government has nothing to do with the matter of medical reports. But I may say that in cases where pensions were not settled until the applicants for pensions returned to this country, the reports of the Canadian surgeons have been accepted by the imperial authorities.

5. Requires no answer.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TALBOT asked :

1. Has the Grand Trunk received one or more loans in money from the federal treasury ?

2. If so, how often and in which years ?

3. What were the different sums borrowed ?

4. What sums has the company paid by way of reimbursements ?

5. What is the amount actually due by that company to the federal treasury, capital and interest ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). As to questions 1, 2, 3 and 4, the Grand Trunk Railway Company has received no loans from the federal treasury, i.e., has received no loans from the Dominion of Canada since the date of confederation, 1867. As to question 5, at the time of confederation the Grand Trunk Railway owed the province of Canada, according to the accounts of that province, $25,607,393.53, and this amount was taken by the Dominion as an asset, and still remains in the balance sheet of the Dominion at that amount, no payment having been made by the railway in respect thereof.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria) asked :

1. What appointments to commissions in the North-west Mounted Police have been made from January 1, 1902, to May 1, 1903 ?
2. What previous police, or military, record had each of these ?
3. Were any promoted from the subordinate or non-commissioned officers or men in the force ? If so, what are the names ?
4. What non-commissioned officers were passed over ?
5. Why were such so passed over ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. Five appointments : R. Y. Douglas, R. S. Knight, John Richards, William Parker and A. W. Duffus.
2. R. Y. Douglas, 36th Peel regiment, Canadian Militia; R. S. Knight, senior sergeant-major, North-west mounted police ; John Richards, sergeant-major, North-west mounted police ; Wm. Parker, sergeant-major, North-west mounted police ; A. W. Duffus, previously in North-west mounted police.
3. Sergeant-Major Knight, Richards and Parker.
4. Service and qualifications considered, none were passed over.
5. Answered by reply to question No. 4.

PIER AT ANNANDALE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What amount was expended on the pier at Annandale, King's county, Prince Edward Island, during the years 1900 and 1901 ?
2. What is the name of the foreman, or director, of the work, and his wages per day ?
3. What are the names of the men employed, and the wages per day paid to each respectively ?
4. What are the kinds and quantities of materials purchased for said work ; from whom purchased, and the prices paid ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). Mr. Speaker, I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) to move for a return, as this would call for a voluminous statement, and I will have the information at the earliest possible moment.

RANGE LIGHTS AT ANNANDALE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. What amount has been expended on range lights at Annandale, King's county, Prince Edward Island, since same have been erected ?
2. What are the names of keepers, and amount of salaries respectively ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. $975.41.
2. One keeper ; Alexander Robertson. Salary, $100 per annum.

CAPTAIN W. S. LARKIN.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Did the Minister of Public Works receive the following complaint against Captain W. S. Larkin, of the steam dredge 'Prince Edward'?

Hon. J. I. Tarte,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I have been employed on the dredge 'Prince Edward,' as a deck hand, for the past five years. The dredge is under the control of Captain W. S. Larkin, of Alberton, in this province. In common with some of the rest of the crew, I have to complain of Captain Larkin's conduct, which is objectionable on the following grounds :—

1. There has frequently been drinking and disorder on board, and the captain himself has often given evidence of over-drinking, and sometimes his conduct was violent.

2. His language was frequently blasphemous and indecent, and he often offended the religious convictions of some of the men on board.

For the reasons above mentioned, and for others with which I will not trouble you at present, life on board the dredge became so unpleasant that, though I am a poor man, I could not endure it further under the same conditions. I can put up with much, but not with further service under Captain Larkin. If he is allowed to continue in his present position, it will be a great injury to the Liberal party, of which I and my friends have long been supporters, and will have the effect of turning away more of those who object to having men of Captain Larkin's stamp, in places of authority.

I am respectfully yours, &c.,
FRED W. LLEWELLYN.

Murray Harbour, north, 1902.

2. Has the minister ordered an investigation into this matter ? And if not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). In reply to the question by Mr. Hackett I may say that there is no such letter in the department.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson) moved :

That the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :—That it is expedient to amend the Customs Act, chapter 32, revised statutes, and to provide as follows :—

1. That the expression 'duty' shall include 'surtax.'
2. That a change be made in the composition of the board of customs, and that an assistant commissioner of customs be appointed.
3. That authority be given for the employment of temporary officers of customs.

4. To better define the powers of the board of customs.

5. That further particulars be given in invoices ; and to provide that invoices may be made out in the currency in which the goods are actually purchased.

6. To define the rate of duty upon unenumerated articles, made of more than one material.

7. To extend the time for the submission of claims for refund, including claims for refund on account of damage.

8. That importers may be relieved from the payment of duty on damaged goods, abandoned in certain cases.

9. That the basis of allowance for damage on polished steel, and other articles, be changed.

10. To authorize the granting of relief from the payment of duty on goods, destroyed or damaged while in the custody of the customs.

11. That further provision be made for the valuation for duty purposes of medicinal and other preparations, and in respect of the testing of sugars, molasses, wines, spirituous and alcoholic liquors.

12. To authorize collectors of customs to require further proof in respect of invoices.

13. To vest in officers the power to administer oaths.

14. To confer further powers on the Governor in Council respecting special customs services and overtime of officers ; and also respecting the reduction of customs duties on imported goods.

Motion agreed to.

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY LABOUR DISPUTES.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 17) to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes.—The Postmaster General.

On section 5,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved : That the words in the second and third lines of section 5, 'the difference shall be referred' be struck out and the words 'the minister may refer the difference' be inserted in lieu thereof.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 6,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) wishes to move an amendment providing for the method of arbitration when the employees of the Intercolonial Railway are involved, and I incline to agree to what he has suggested. If my hon. friend reads his amendment and if it is adopted, then we will have to amend some other clauses so as to make them consistent.

Mr. LOGAN. When we were discussing this Bill before, I pointed out that in the case of a difference on the Intercolonial Railway the men would choose one of the arbitrators or conciliators ; the Minister of Railways would choose a second ; and the third would be chosen by the Minister of Labour. This would in effect be giving the appointment of two of the arbitrators to the government. In order to obviate that, I beg to propose the following amendment :

In the event of the establishment of a committee of conciliation, mediation, and investigation, or of a board of arbitrators to deal with any differences between the government of Canada in respect to the Intercolonial Railway and any of its employees, the power to appoint conciliators or arbitrators which otherwise in accordance with the foregoing provisions might be exercisable by the minister, shall be exercisable either by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the province of New Brunswick, of Nova Scotia or of Prince Edward Island (in this Act called the Lieutenant-Governor in Council) as the minister shall for that purpose in each case of conciliation or arbitration in writing name.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not make it apply to the government of the province of Quebec as well as to the Governor in Council of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick ?

Mr. LOGAN. There is no objection to that. I wish to include the province of Quebec in the amendment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will make the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) a subclause to section 7.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Suppose there was a general strike on the Intercolonial Railway extending over the four provinces through which it runs, which of the provinces would appoint the third arbitrator ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One or other of these provincial governments would be asked to name the third arbitrator.

Amendment (Mr. Logan) agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In consequence of the adoption of this amendment it will be necessary to insert in line 30 of section 3, and in line 33, after the word 'minister,' the words 'or such Lieutenant Governor in Council, as the case may be.' In section 6 it will be necessary to make similar changes. I beg to move that these changes be made.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. INGRAM. May I ask the hon. minister if this amendment has been approved by the representatives of the railway men ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Then I presume that after the Bill goes through the committee, it will not be read the third time to-day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, I will let it stand.

On section 20,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved that the words 'chosen by a majority' be added after the word 'number.'

Mr. INGRAM. By election, or how ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The word 'chosen' has been adopted, and there will be some way of choosing them.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 23,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved the following amendment :

In the event of the establishment of a committee of conciliation, meditation and investigation, or of a board of arbitrators to deal with any differences between the government of Canada in respect of the Intercolonial Railway and any of its employees, the power to appoint conciliators or arbitrators which otherwise in accordance with the foregoing provisions might be exercisable by the minister shall be exercisable either by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the province of Quebec, of New Brunswick, of Nova Scotia or of Prince Edward Island (in this Act called the Lieutenant-Governor in Council) as the minister shall for that purpose in each case of conciliation or arbitration in writing name.

Section, as amended agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. FOWLER moved :

That after the word 'strikes' in the fourth line the word 'may' may be added.

The preamble states possibly that these strikes do interfere with proper and efficient transportation, which imports in itself a violation of the Criminal Law.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. INGRAM. In view of the railway men having agreed to certain amendments, I want to point out, that, so far as I am concerned, I am endorsing the amendment which the railway men have suggested, without using my own judgment, because I do not want to interfere with a Bill which they think is in their interest.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Public works—chargeable to income—miscellaneous—to cover balance of expenditures of works already authorized for which the appropriations may be insufficient, provided that amount for each work does not exceed $100, $3,000.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I understand, Mr. Chairman, that under the item which you have just brought to the notice of the committee, we are entitled to discuss the general principle of some of the preceding items. I have not been fortunate enough to be present when some of the items regarding the province of Quebec came under the notice of the committee, and I desire now to obtain from the government, if possible, a declaration which, I think we are quite entitled to in respect of the control of these large expenditures which we have voted and are still busy voting in connection with harbours and rivers. If ever a Committee of Supply of this House was entitled to such a declaration we are entitled to it now—and I will briefly as possible explain to the House upon what I rest that proposition. When the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) came for re-election in the district in Montreal, in the division of Maisonneuve, he came at a time when there had been grave discussions in the province of Quebec, and more particularly in the districts of Montreal, and, perhaps, more especially in the division where he sought re-election, in regard to what was deemed at that time a shuffle of portfolios in the present cabinet. It is known to every member of this House that, after the resignation or dismissal of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) grave difficulties arose as to who should replace that gentleman in the cabinet of the right hon. the Premier (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is known to us particularly in the province of Quebec that very grave difficulties arose among the members of the party in the city of Montreal as to the claims of certain parties to the portfolio which had been left vacant. After a considerable space of time, pressure was brought to bear upon the right hon. the Premier in this direction—that the portfolio should not be given to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). Reasons were urged right and left. We heard some of these reasons on the street. But they were urged even in the government organs of Montreal. Two newspapers which support the government and receive support from the government, one to a very considerable extent, publicly, a day or two—yes, I believe even twelve hours—before my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was called to his present office, urged strongly and publicly that it was not right, for the reasons stated in these newspapers, that my hon. friend should succeed purely and simply to the estate left vacant at the head of that important department. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will remember in what scathing terms the Montreal 'Witness' claiming, as it has always claimed, that it was a supporter of the present government, urged upon the government and on all serious men of the party which support that government, that my hon. friend should not be given that portfolio, should not even enter the cabinet of the right hon. gentleman. Another organ, the official organ of the government in the city of Montreal, the Montreal 'Herald,' in a very strong article, a very few hours, as I have said, before my right hon. friend had fixed his choice upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, actually warned the government against the choice of my hon. friend and gave reasons therefor, with which reasons I shall presently make the members of the committee acquainted. I mention these facts in order to show that members of my right hon. friend's party in Montreal, even more than the members of the party to which I have the honour to belong, were eager, were anxious, and publicly expressed that anxiety, that my hon. friend should not be nominated to the portfolio of Public Works. The article of the Montreal 'Herald' created a great sensation, not only in political circles, but all over the city of Montreal, and throughout the province of Quebec. And these are the terms, calm, moderate, but forceful, in which the Montreal 'Herald' reviewed the situation but a few hours before that important nomination was made. I believe in that same number of the Montreal 'Herald' of the 10th of November, the announcement was made that my hon. friend had been officially chosen, and that his partisans had succeeded after a very severe struggle. It is entitled 'Cabinet changes.'

The announcement is made that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has asked Hon. James Sutherland, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to take the portfolio of Public Works, and has offered Mr. Sutherland's portfolio to Mr. Raymond Préfontaine, M.P., for Maisoneuve and Terrebonne. The translation of Mr. Sutherland from the one department to the other will be viewed with favour in Ontario, in which province it had been a standing complaint that the great spending departments of the government were in the hands of representatives of other and smaller provinces. The complaint has not been without reason, for Ontario is the largest contributor to the country's revenue. No doubt the consideration of this fact had its influence in bringing the premier to the conclusion to offer Mr. Sutherland the portfolio of Public Works. In addition, he was probably greatly influenced by a consciousness that Mr. Sutherland is peculiarly well qualified for the duties of his new office. It is well known that during late years Sir Wilfrid Laurier has learned to place great confidence in Mr. Sutherland's business capacity and sound judgment, and in entrusting to him the greatest spending department of the government he feels that he is placing it in hands that will not betray the trust. Mr. Sutherland's long tenure of office of chief Liberal whip brought him in close relationship with the members of both parties, and he is to-day one of the most popular men in parliament.

I am very sorry my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is not present.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, he is here.

Mr. MONK. (reading).

He is gifted with many of the qualities that go to make a successful administrator. Forceful, yet urbane, possessing great capacity for work, and having an intimate knowledge of the Dominion, its resources and its requirements, he is well equipped to give the Public Works Department a business-like administration.

Now comes the gloomy side:

It is to be regretted that the appointment of Mr. Raymond Préfontaine to the portfolio vacated by Mr. Sutherland is unlikely to be received with equal favour. There has been much debate over this matter, and it is to be assumed that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, finding himself confronted by a serious political crisis in his own province, has turned to Mr. Préfontaine as a popular and hitherto successful local leader, and one who, under much provocation, has shown a consistent loyalty to his chief. Those who have discountenanced Mr. Préfontaine's selection for this office did not under value the qualities which fit him for leadership, and which evidently appealed very strongly to Sir Wilfrid Laurier under present conditions. While thoroughly sympathizing with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, however, it is not for those Liberals who have observed Mr. Préfontaine's career as the practical head of the administrative machinery of the city of Montreal to feel that his selection for the head of an administrative department of the government satisfies their ideals of what ought to be. The 'Herald' particularly, during a five years' campaign against corruption and extravagance at the city hall, had no option but to conclude that his powerful influence had been and was being exerted against the city's best interest.

What Mr. Préfontaine's idea of his future may be, and precisely what view Sir Wilfrid Laurier may take of the matter, is not for us to know, but it is clear that in Montreal, where he has lived under the lime light of publicity, there must be grave misgivings concerning the wisdom of the selection, not only on the part of the more or less disinterested general public, but quite as much on the part of those whose particular concern is the welfare of the administration.

The article of the 'Witness,' I think, was even more pointed than this one. If I cite these articles, and particularly this one taken from a government organ whose very existence depends upon the existence of this government, it is in order to show that long before we went into that election campaign in Maisonneuve, that that question was agitating the public mind, and the impression gained ground that my right hon. friend, divided between two strong conflicting forces, had compromised himself, had been an opportunist once more, and had given the Department of Public Works to my hon. friend who occupies that position at the present moment, and had entrusted a department, a spending department, but a far less important department, in the judgment of the general public, to my right hon. friend who presented himself for election before the electors of Maisonneuve. Well, Sir, there were two issues before the great electorate of that division, two issues only. My hon. friend the member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to-day, we understood had parted from the present government, not as a man who elects a seat on the bench, not as a man who is translated to some other office, not as one whose portfolio had become vacant by death or other accident; but he had parted from this government upon a great question of principle, upon a question which we have been discussing in this House to an almost unlimited extent since we met in the month of March last. That hon. gentleman claimed that the protection afforded to manufacturers was insufficient, and that was one of the issues raised in that campaign. We who believe that the protection afforded to the industrial life of this country is insuffcient, deemed it to be our duty to go down before the electorate and defend the views to which we have given expression more than once since we have assembled in this session of parliament. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that upon that issue we were unsuccessful, and I am prepared to say, what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said very often since, that those most interested perhaps in the principles which we defended, seemed to think that their only hope of escaping punishment by this government was to elect my hon. friend the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who absolutely promised them sufficient protection for every one of the industries represented in that great constituency. We had gone into the constituency of Argenteuil, and we had heard the doctrine of free trade preached there ; and I understand that in the electoral division of Yarmouth, that doctrine was also preached in still less uncertain language. But in the electoral division of Maisonneuve those who, I think, should have supported the principles which we defended, deemed it expedient under the circumstances to elect my hon. friend, not in the hope that the principles which he advocated there would prevail, but with the expectancy that at least their interests would not be completely sacrificed after the promises which my hon. friend distinctly made to them.

That was one issue, Mr. Chairman, but there was another to which I must come at once, because it is an issue which is concerned with the argument which I shall lay before the committee. In the division of Maisonneuve we heard this argument : That my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) having quitted the government because of differences which had arisen between him and the government was no reason why we should be deprived in the city of Montreal of the portfolio of Public Works—not on racial or religious ground.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) says 'hear, hear.' What does he mean by that ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. Not on any narrow ground such as that, but because we claimed in the city of Montreal, and this has been stated here time and again within the hearing of every hon. member of this House, that important works were in process of execution, works which were under the control of the Department of Public Works and there was no reason why we, in that district, and the people of the province of Ontario should be deprived of that department because, forsooth, as expressed in this article in the 'Herald' which I have just read, and there were many others, the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and a certain number of his friends had no confidence in the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). That is what we claimed and so strong was that claim, that, as my friends from the province of Quebec are well aware, being a just and equitable claim, it was re-echoed throughout the whole press of the province, and if I wished to convince the committee of the truth of what I am saying, I would have to spend part of the afternoon reading quotations from newspapers, Liberal and Conservative alike, wherein it was claimed that it was an unfortunate matter that the right hon. Prime Minister of this Dominion had deprived the province of Quebec and the people under whose very eyes these works of improvement in the port of Montreal, in Quebec, and in the St. Lawrence were being executed, of this department at a moment, when, in the judgment of these people, that department should have remained under the control of a minister from their own province. In other words, we laid down the proposition that the people of the province of Quebec were not concerned with what certain members of the Liberal party must think of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, they were not concerned with the pressure which had been brought to bear on the government not to admit him to the department, but they had done nothing to deserve the deprivation of the services of that department. This feeling found manifestation in the vote of the electorate. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not deny that that was one of the great grounds urged during the election. He knows it and so do all those who participated in the campaign. How was that argument met ? I was not present in this Chamber the other day when the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) read the verbatim report of the first speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in that campaign, but, without taking up uselessly the time of this committee, I appeal to any hon. member of this House from the province of Quebec to state whether it is not a fact that the hon. member for Maisonneuve, in every single public utterance which he made during that campaign availed himself of the opportunity to state what, Sir ?—to state that he had accepted the Department of Marine and Fisheries upon one condition, and that was that everything which concerns transportation, to use his own language, from the extreme west to the Atlantic ocean, every expenditure connected with the carrying out and executing of the works of improvement of the St. Lawrence was going to be placed under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. He argued, and his friends argued, that it was an anomaly that works connected with harbours, dredging and deepening the St. Lawrence, canals, wharfs, and the carrying out of the plans of improvement in the city of Montreal, should be under the control of the Department of Public Works while the attending to lighthouses and buoys should be under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Transportation was one single, simple work according to them which should be under one department, and the government had decided that from the Department of Public Works would be taken everything in regard to the execution of improvements in reference to transportation and placed under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. There were numerous public meetings, there were articles in the newspapers, there were private assurances given right and left throughout that campaign, and I defy any one of my hon. friends who observed that campaign to any degree to deny what I have just stated. Why, Sir, if any confirmation were wanted of the description of the campaign which I have just given, surely the members of this committee will find it in the speech from the Throne, because in that speech hon. members will find a repetition of everything that was stated by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries during that campaign in Maisonneuve. Such was the feeling at that time that had my hon. friend come down to the electors of Maisonneuve and stated that it was not the intention of the government to modify in any way the machinery of the department to which he had been called, I have no hesitation in saying that the result of that election would have been different. We have proceeded during the sittings of this committee to vote, I believe, hundreds of thousands of dollars to be expended by the Department of Public Works, although, on this side of the House on more than one occasion, the government has been called upon to state to us what are the modifications which are going to be made in the Department of Public Works and if the present election pledges of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries are to be carried out. I believe that the government has put off that announcement by stating that when the time came to introduce legislation in regard to these changes the government would do its duty. What I claim now as one who was present and heard these declarations, and as an elector myself in the electoral district of Maisonneuve is that before voting this money not after, we have the right to know from the government clearly and explicitly, what are the changes that are going to be made, and if the assurance as given by my hon. friend when he came down to Maisonneuve to solicit the votes of the electors were really based upon the faith of this government, and if this government intends carrying out these pledges. I certainly under no circumstances would like to fulfil the part of an obstructionist, but I believe we ought to hold firm to the old principles of our constitution, that redress goes before supply.

I claim, Sir, that it is a grievance that we should be called upon to vote money here from day to day, without the government announcing whether or not these changes are going to be carried out. I believe that we would be justified on this side of the House, in preventing the voting of further moneys to the Public Works Department, if the government still continues to refuse that information which we are entitled to. We have the constitutional right to know what expenditures which we are voting to the Public Works Department are to be removed to the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not at present express any opinion on the wisdom of these changes in the departments. I do not say that they would be wise, but what I do say is that when we vote this money to be disposed of by a minister of the Crown, we have the right to a distinct assurance from the government, as to whether any reliance can be placed upon the statements of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) when he sought re-election from his constituents.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). For the tenth or twelfth time my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has brought up this question to which he has received an answer, on one occasion at least, if not on more than one.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. It is the first time I brought up this question. I have never mentioned it in the House before.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I have heard that there were dissensions on the other side of the House, and perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) does not now occupy the position he was supposed to hold in his party. His statement seems to confirm the rumours which I have heard that he is not so much a chief of his party as he is supposed to be, because if he has not brought up the question himself it has been brought up by those who sit behind him, and they have been answered. I would suppose that an answer given to the hon. gentleman's supporters would have been sufficient for himself, but since we have to take it that there is a division in the party, and that the answer given to his followers is not sufficient for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I have no objection to tell him once more. I would not have alluded to these rumours but for the fact that my hon. friend himself is the first to bring rumours into the discussion, and his speech of half an hour was based on rumours which he said were current in the streets of Montreal at the time my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was called to the government. He has announced that at that time there were rumours in Montreal to the effect that I was drawn in opposite directions as to who should be the successor in the cabinet of the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte). Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that he had better not take too much stock in these rumours. I suppose that representations are always made to a Prime Minister under such circumstances, but the Prime Minister has the responsibility of making the selection, and at all events I followed my own course and my own methods. And, Sir, when I concluded to bring into the government my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) I think I made no mistake.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is true that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and others, supposed that I had made a mistake, but that is not my opinion. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had been a member of this House for a number of years ; he was a leading member of the bar of Montreal ; and he was also prominent in the municipal affairs of the city in which he lives. As it happens, in municipal politics, as in other politics, my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) who was mayor of Montreal, did not give universal satisfaction to everybody. He had opponents ; I do not think he had any enemies, but he had opponents. There were those who did not agree with him in municipal politics, though they agreed with him in federal politics, and perhaps those who disagreed with him in municipal politics thought that I would go beyond the record and seek in the municipal politics of Montreal in order to be guided in the choice I was going to make. I made no such mistake as that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I was satisfied with my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as a member of the Liberal party. I did not go to seek what had been his record as mayor of Montreal, though had I done so, while I would have found some opposed to him, I would have found thousands of electors in the city of Montreal who were enthusiastic in his support.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no reason to believe that the choice I then made was a mistaken one. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) tried the issue in Maisonneuve and he knows the result ; he tried the issue in Argenteuil, and he knows the result ; he tried the issue in Terrebonne, and he knows the result ; he tried the issue in Two Mountains, and the verdict was the same over again. It is no wonder that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) met with a much deserved rebuke from the people of the province of Quebec. No wonder he was told on four different occasions that the course he followed was the most unpatriotic course that had ever been followed by a public man.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Why, Sir, the doctrine was laid down—I think by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) personally, but if not by him personally, it was laid down by his prominent political supporters and at all events it was laid down in his own organ—the doctrine was laid down that in this matter I had betrayed the province of which I am a native. In some of the speeches of those who at that time were his followers, whatever they may be now, the declaration was made that I had betrayed my native province, because forsooth I had called to the Ministry of Public Works, not a man from the province of Quebec, but a man from the province of Ontario. The doctrine laid down by my hon. friend's party, and I think by himself also, that the portfolio of Public Works belonged to the province of Quebec, and that it was betraying the interests of my own province to call to be an occupant of that office, any one but a member coming from the province of Quebec. Now, Sir, I say that on more than one occasion the people of the province of Quebec have shown that they were not to be misled by such low appeals to their prejudices.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. The people of the province of Quebec are not to be told that this portfolio or that portfolio belongs to such and such a province. In the composition of this cabinet, it matters not where a minister comes from ; whether he comes from this province or that province ; whether it is from that place or from that other place. As chief adviser to His Excellency the Governor General, it is my duty to select a minister, and to select him, who, in my judgment and opinion, is best qualified for the position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the portfolio of Public Works became vacant by the resignation of my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) I thought that I could not do better than to give it to my hon. friend and colleague ; my old friend ; my friend of twenty years association with me in the work of the Liberal party on the floor of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought that the business ability of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) was such as to enable him to occupy the position of Minister of Public Works, with some credit to himself and some advantage to the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. And, Sir, when I did so it was no disparagement to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). I thought that between these two portfolios it was advisable to give the one which I considered to be the most important to the man who had the most experience in public life ; the present Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Shall I be told that this was a betrayal of the interests of my province ? No, Sir ; but still, that was the issue upon which the election of Maisonneuve was fought by my hon. friend and his party. Now, Sir, two years ago there was a change in the composition of the cabinet. Two years ago the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Mills, was called to the bench of the Supreme Court, and a good appointment it was. I thought it advisable to recommend to His Excellency the successor of Mr. Mills, a gentleman from the province of Quebec, the present Minister of Justice (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick), and a good appointment it was also. Was there ever a rumour, a murmur, in the province of Ontario that by so doing I was betraying the province of Ontario ? There was not a murmur. It was admitted on all hands that the present holder of the portfolio was worthy of it. Nor has a word been said against the qualification of my hon. friend the present Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) for the position he occupies. Not a word would be said against that appointment even in the province of Quebec ; and when my hon. friend goes to the province of Quebec and tries to repeat what he has done before, tries to rouse the prejudices of the province, he will not do it at the expense of the present Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MONK. I cannot let my hon. friend state things which are not correct. I have never tried to rouse the prejudices of the province of Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. Here is what was said : There was a meeting at Three Rivers at which the hon. gentleman was present. It was a great pow-wow of the party, a rally to assert the principles of the great Liberal-Conservative party in the province of Quebec. My hon. friend was there as the leader of the party. I have not his speech, unfortunately ; but I have the speech of one of his prominent followers, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), and this is what that hon. gentleman said :

Mr. CASGRAIN. I will stand by it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will quote it in French, and then try to translate it into English :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Le ministère des Pêcheries peut avoir une certaine importance par suite du contrôle qui lui est donné des grandes pêcheries des côtes des deux océans, importance qui a été de beaucoup diminuée par le récent jugement du Conseil Privé ; quant au département de la Marine à part la construction et l'entretien des phares, des bouées et des lumières, il n'a de jurisdiction, d'après le statut de 1892, que sur des sujets qui donnent au titulaire peu d'influence et de prestige.

* * * * * *

Par l'action de Sir Wilfrid Laurier, le parti libéral a subi une humiliation, la province de Québec, est bafouée, et M. Préfontaine, en ramassant cette pitance que lui ont jetée ses nouveaux collègues, a montré qu'il n'a pas la moindre fierté personnelle, ni le moindre sentiment de l'honneur national.

My hon friend says the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries may have a certain importance, but it is only of minor importance. Then he goes on to say :

By the action of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Liberal party has been subjected to humiliation, the province of Quebec has been mocked, and Mr. Préfontaine, in stooping to take the sop which his new colleagues have thrown to him, has shown not the slighest personal dignity nor the slightest feeling of national honour.

If this is not an appeal to the lowest prejudices of the people of the province of Quebec, I do not know what would be ; and this was said in the presence of the leader of the party, who now protests that he never appealed to the prejudices of the people of the province of Quebec. If there is anything that can stamp the conduct of the hon. gentleman, it is the language which I have just quoted, which was spoken in his presence, and to which he never took the slightest exception. This is the sort of warfare to which we have been subjected in the province of Quebec. I called upon my hon. friend the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries to take the portfolio. I was in poor health at the time ; I had to leave immediately for the south ; but I told him that in my opinion the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries ought to be reconstructed, so as to give it a more extended jurisdiction on matters purely nautical than it had at that time. I am not aware what my hon. friend said in his election ; he is here to speak for himself ; but as to the question put by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), since he was not in the House to hear the answer given a few days ago by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, and since his colleagues behind him have not taken him sufficiently into their confidence as to inform him, I will now tell him that all the appropriations asked for by the Minister of Public Works shall be expended by him.

Mr. MONK. I am very sorry that my right hon. friend has given to this discussion a direction which I think is wrong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONK. I do think so. I asked a question in regard to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, to which my right hon. friend has given no answer. He admits, or seems to admit, that we have a right to information. He would not go so far as to deny that principle, but he satisfies himself with launching out against me, the most unjustifiable inuendoes. In a few muttered sentences which he utters with reference to the present incumbent of the office of Minister of Public Works, he states that the appropriations which we are at present voting will be expended under that gentleman's supervision. Now, I ask anybody if that is the pledge which was given by all those who supported my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the campaign of Maisonneuve. Is that a categorical answer ? No ; my right hon. friend knows perfectly well that what I stated in the campaign in Maisonneuve was true, that neither the Minister of Public Works nor any other member of this government would dare to come down into the county of Maisonneuve and confirm what my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries there stated. When my hon. friend was defied to produce a letter or a telegram from the right hon. leader of the government, or from any of his colleagues to the effect that the platform upon which he rested his election was approved by the government, that defiance was never accepted ; and we have the proof to-day, if proof was wanted, that the pledges given by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had no authority, and that there will be no such change in the department as my hon. friend stated that the government had decided upon. It is all very well for the right hon. leader of the government, who is surrounded by men who cannot think of anything but to applaud what he says, to come before this committee and impugn what I stated before the electors of my province. I leave these electors to appreciate the value of the indictment brought by my right hon. friend; but I wish to say to him that the accusation which he has formulated against me can very well be turned against himself and against his friends in that province. Since 1896, and before that time—and my right hon. friend knows it well—we have not been able to have an election in the province of Quebec without those very appeals which my right hon. friend charges me with making. And in the by-election referred to by my hon. friend, he has the audacity to say that the position I took in the province of Quebec, deserved castigation.

Mr. FRASER. You got it.

Mr. MONK. Well, it was after I made a speech before the Cartier Club of Montreal that my huge friend from Guysborough went before his electors and dared to say that the speech I had made was the most disloyal and unpatriotic speech ever made. On that occasion, as on many others, my hon. friend spoke about things of which he knew nothing. But let me return to the indictment of my right hon. friend. I appeal to any one who has followed the by-elections in the province of Quebec, referred to by him, to say whether those elections were not carried on, in his behalf, purely and solely upon the race cry. There was no other appeal made by hon. gentlemen opposite. In the division of Maisonneuve—and I speak on my responsibility as a member of this House—how was the canvass carried on ? Why, the Montreal 'Herald' declared editorially that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had, on more than one occasion, deserved the censure of the ratepayers of Montreal, and pointed out the manœuvres which were resorted to during that election. The electors were visited at night and asked whether they were going to vote for Mr. Labelle or for that great representative of the French Canadian race, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And when, Sir, an elector would inquire whether my right hon. friend was a candidate for the division, he was told: 'He is not exactly a candidate, but you know Préfontaine is nothing, Sir Wilfrid is everything. He is really the man you are voting for.' Sir, until the Liberals are prepared to discuss in the province of Quebec political questions upon their merits, free from such appeals, it will be very difficult for any man in that province not to receive what my right hon. friend calls castigation.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). And majorities.

Mr. MONK. Call it what you like, but I say that it is deplorable that in my own native province, where the few deliverances which I have made since 1900 have been written out and printed and are not subject in any way to the criticism referred to—I say that it is deplorable that in that great province we are moving towards a state of things when any fair discussion of political questions will become impossible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONK—and our great institutions for which we have done so much will not be able to work properly.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Thank you for the province.

Mr. MONK. Let me tell my hon. friend, who has made those appeals very often himself——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Never.

Mr. MONK—that if my right hon. friend should transfer his leadership to somebody else, the hon. member for Gaspé, who is essentially a time-server, will be quite prepared to transfer his laudation to whomever may be then chosen. I am not making these remarks for the purpose of disparaging my native province. Very far from it. But we can understand the strength of the bonds of blood, and I say that to take an unfair advantage of this sentiment to stifle free discussion is not the proper direction to give to political struggles in that province, and the day will come when my hon. friends opposite, who now use there no other argument, will find that they have brought about for their own selfish purposes, a state of affairs which will not redound to the good or the advantage of my native province.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine). I know, Mr. Speaker, this speech of the hon. leader of the opposition in the province of Quebec almost off by heart, because I have heard it many times. I heard it repeated ad nauseam during three or four weeks in the county of Terrebonne and particularly in the county of Two Mountains. My hon. friend treats us all the time to the same theme, namely, the sacrifice of the province of Quebec, because the portfolio of Public Works was given to the hon. minister who now holds it. He continually rings the changes on the sacrifice, as he calls it, of our compatriots in the province of Quebec. From meeting to meeting, from caucus to caucus, and from street corner to street corner, we hear this complaint continually harped upon.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend will remember that he never came to any of our meetings.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I took good care to keep away from them. But before citing to the hon. gentleman his own words, which he seems to have forgotten, and which were published in his own organ, the 'Journal,' of Montreal, let me once for all say in this House a word in reply to what has been so often repeated regarding my municipal career. For nearly eighteen years I have been a member of the city council of Montreal. Previous to that time, I was mayor of the municipality of Hochelaga, before that municipality was annexed to the city of Montreal. I have always been elected by acclamation by my fellow-citizens, and after serving eighteen years in the city council, my fellow-citizens of Montreal, without distinction of party, creed or nationality, elected me as their chief magistrate by acclamation. Had my career been so bad as some pretend, it would have been easy, in a large city like Montreal, to find somebody to oppose me. But no one dared present himself, and I was left peaceably in possession of the chair of mayor of Montreal during two years. At the expiration of my term of two years, I was again elected for another term, and I may say, without being boastful or showing pride of any kind, that I could have been re-elected in 1902 during my absence in Europe, had I so desired.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There was a good deal of uncertainty about that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Well, I am simply stating facts which I think can stand any attempt at contradiction by my hon. friend. My career in the municipal council was attacked daily and is being constantly attacked even now. In this House frequent allusions are made to it. But let me read only a few lines from an article published in 'La Patrie' on September 20, 1897, when I was about to be a candidate for the mayoralty:

Mr. l'échevin Préfontaine est notre prochain maire. Ses nombreux amis l'ont prié de se porter candidat aux élections prochaines, et il a accepté croyons a nous.

Alderman Préfontaine will be our next mayor. His numerous friends have asked him to be a candidate in the next elections and he has accepted, we do believe.

Cette nouvelle sera accueillie avec joie par tous les contribuables de notre grande ville.

The news will be received with rejoicing by all the tax-payers of our great city.

Voilà plus de vingt ans que M. Préfontaine est mêlé aux choses municipales et qu'il s'est pour ainsi dire identifié avec la prospérité et le progrès de Montréal.

For more than twenty years Mr. Préfontaine has been connected with municipal affairs, and he has identified himself with the prosperity and progress of Montreal.

Il a été maire d'Hochelaga avant que cette municipalité ne fut annexée à la ville et depuis plus de quinze ans il représente le quartier Hochelaga au conseil municipal de Montréal.

He was mayor of Hochelaga before that municipality was annexed to Montreal and for fifteen years he has represented that ward in the Montreal city council.

Grâce à son esprit d'initiative, à son travail, à son activité, l'ouest et l'est de Montréal ont été transformés ; des améliorations partout ont été faites ; nos rues one été pavées nos égouts ont été construits, nos parcs ont été embellis.

Thanks to his spirit of initiative, his work and activity in Montreal from east to west has been transformed. Improvements everywhere have been made, streets have been paved ; our drainage has been improved and our parks have been embellished.

Tout cela a coûté de l'argent, beaucoup d'argent.

All this has cost money—a great deal of money.

Mais les contribuables sont aujourd'hui fiers de leur ville, parce qu'elle fait l'admiration des étrangers qui la visitent.

This cost a good deal of money, but our tax payers are now proud of their city because it is the admiration of all outsiders who visit it.

Préfontaine a travaillé à la prospérité de Montréal avec cette énergie entraînante que tout le monde lui connaît.

Préfontaine has worked for the prosperity of the city of Montreal with the effective energy that everybody knows him to possess.

Son élévation à la mairie sera la récompense due à son labeur incessant.

La popularité dont il jouit dans les foules ne fera que s'accroître, quand il occupera le fauteuil de premier magistrat de notre ville.

His election to the mayoralty will be the due reward of his labour. The popularity he enjoys in the city will be increased when he occupies the mayor's chair.

That is the opinion of my hon. friend the member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), written on the 20th September, 1897. It seems that he has changed from the unanimous opinion of the citizens of the city of Montreal—for that I was unanimously acceptable was shown by the fact I have already mentioned, that there was no opposition, and I remained in the mayoralty for two years. I am sorry to have been obliged to bring this up, but I felt it my duty to do so, because the people may be misled by what has been written and said since then. But I think that nobody will be misled when I cite the exact words of the speeches made against me in the campaign which took place in the month of December last in Maisonneuve division. I will take the first meeting, which is reported in 'Le Journal' on the 26th November last. It is entitled 'The battle is in full blast.' We see in this report that Mr. Labelle, who was running against me in that election, spoke in the presence of the leader of the opposition for the province of Quebec, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). If these utterances of Mr. Labelle were not designed to arouse the national prejudices of one province against another, I do not know the meaning of the words. I translate from the report, which is in French :

Then comes the appreciation of Mr. Préfontaine, whose treachery to the province of Quebec cannot be either excused or explained. Of all those whom Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked to accept the succession to Mr. Tarte, Préfontaine was the only one who consented to bear upon his shoulders the humiliation to which he was exposing his compatriots. Let him bear the responsibility and let him not try to find elsewhere the reason of the opposition.

I must not give too many citations. It was the same cry everywhere. Every day the same thing was repeated at meetings of Conservative candidates. I have kept a number of these reports and printed appeals to the electors, with such lines as 'Treason to the Province of Quebec,' 'The Province of Quebec Betrayed,' and so on—these words often in red letters—distributed at the church doors and circulated in every way, in the hope of arousing the prejudices of the people. Now, let us see what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier says :

Mr. Monk added that it was to be regretted that the portfolio of Public Works was to be taken away from the province of Quebec and from our element, which already is not any too well treated at Ottawa. We have no good reason for the injustice put upon our province, and that injustice so put upon them the elector of Maisonneuve will resent.

Here are the exact words of the member for Jacques Cartier. Why did he pronounce them ?

Mr. MONK. I will answer, as my hon. friend asks me—it is because he is the only one who, under the circumstances, would accept that portfolio.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is confirmation of what I have been saying. Further citations of the hon. gentleman's words are unnecessary. But let me quote a few words further, for, time and again, the same thing was said, the same speeches were repeated—I had sacrificed the province of Quebec ; I had sacrificed my compatriots ; the portfolio which had been held by a member of the majority of the province of Quebec had been given to one who did not belong to that majority. All this was an appeal to the prejudices of the electors of the province of Quebec ; for, as you know, Mr. Chairman, ninety per cent of the electors there are of French origin. That is the meaning of the arguments used to the electors of Maisonneuve by all the Tory speakers that took part in the campaign. Not satisfied with having been crushed by the immense majority which the electors gave me in that election, they carried the same warfare into Two Mountains and Terrebonne, and on every hustings where I met the hon. member for Jacques Cartier there was a repetition of the same argument—the province of Quebec had been sacrificed by the portfolio of Public Works being given to an Ontario man. In the face of these attempts to arouse prejudice in the province of Quebec, had not we a right to try to explain to our people the position of affairs and make them understand the importance of the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Well, Mr. Chairman, I did try to explain, and my friends tried to explain that there were anomalies in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that there were anomalies in the Department of Public Works, and that it would be the aim of the government to try to bring order out of the confusion. What harm was there in that, I would like to know. And when the same announcement was made in the speech from the Throne at the opening of the session, I do not see why there should be so much trouble and discussion unless it is to bring up again the question that has been discussed during those four elections, and particularly during my election. Why, Sir, to hear these gentlemen during my election campaign, you would have thought that the maritime provinces, which in the past have furnished the occupant of the portfolio of Minister of Marine and Fisheries, were degraded, that their people were inferior, because they had been satisfied for thirty years with the small portfolio of Marine and Fisheries. What inferior people they must have been, these people of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, to have suffered so long the humiliation of filling the portfolio of Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Let me again cite from the language of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, as reported in the 'Journal' of the 28th of November, 1902. Speaking of myself he said :

He is so well aware of his inferiority that he has consented to replace Mr. Tarte in the insignificant role of Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But in belittling himself in that way, he is dragging his province along with him in his downfall. And to-day he is powerless to explain that degradation.

'Degradation' all the time. I am sorry that one of the ex-ministers and one of the leaders of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is not present in the House to-day, because he would be flattered at being treated in this manner by one of his leaders in this House, at being told that in accepting the portfolio of Minister of Marine and Fisheries he degraded himself. Just imagine, Mr. Chairman, how low he must have fallen. Of course, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier would not dare to go down to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and repeat language of that kind; but in the province of Quebec, among people who are supposed by a certain class of politicians not to understand political questions very well, such language is quite right and proper, when the aim is to arouse the prejudice of French Canadians against the government, because the Prime Minister had seen fit to confide to my humble self the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries, which is such a degradation to the province of Quebec. Those are the exact words of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, the leader of the opposition in the province of Quebec. If he is not trying to take advantage of a very small issue for political effect, I do not know the meaning of his speeches. Now, hon. gentlemen will find, on referring to 'Le Journal,' a great deal of edification in reading how the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island must have been degraded, because, ever since confederation, they have furnished the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, Sir, a great deal has been said about my declarations. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, but if, Mr. Chairman, you will refer to my first speech delivered before the Liberal club of the east end of Montreal, after having been sworn in as minister, you will see exactly what my declarations were. I pointed out to the people assembled there the importance of the department, because the cry had already been started. It was not a question of politics, it was purely an attempt to arouse the prejudices of our fellow citizens in Quebec against the government. I went there, and what did I say ? I said that there were certain works, certain functions, which were under the control of the Department of Public Works at the present time, but that their control by that department involved an anomaly which the government had decided to remedy. For instance, I mentioned the hydrographic survey. I said, gentlemen, how can you explain that the hydrographic survey, which is one of the most important services for the safety of navigation, is to-day performed partly by the Department of Public Works, from Montreal to Quebec, partly by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, from Quebec to Belle Isle, and partly by the Department of Railways and Canals, from Montreal to Kingston, and again by the Department of Marine and Fisheries from Kingston to and through the lakes ? I said : Why is it that so many accidents are happening to navigation ? When you try to discover the cause of these accidents, you will find that officers of the several departments throw the blame on each other.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is the hydrographic survey in the Department of Public Works now, or in the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is as I said, partly in the Department of Public Works, for the section between Montreal and Quebec, partly in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, from Quebec to Belle Isle, partly in the Department of Railways and Canals, from Montreal to Kingston, and again under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, from Kingston to the lakes. Therefore, you have four sections under different control on the one route, the St. Lawrence route. I stated at this meeting that that was an anomaly, that this work should be all under the control either of one department or the other. Arguing from that standpoint, what did I say further ? I pointed out another anomaly in the case of the harbour commissioners. I said that there were three boards of harbour commissioners, one at Quebec, one at Montreal, and one at Three Rivers, all under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries; but when you have any work to perform you must first get the approval of the Department of Public Works. Is it not reasonable to say that the Department of Marine and Fisheries should have something to say about these works, although they might be entirely under the control of the Department of Public Works as regards nominations and so on, since the works were executed with their own money borrowed on the credit of the government ? Still is it not reasonable that the Department of Marine and Fisheries should also have a word to say in the performance of those works ?

They can build a wharf where there is no water and the Department of Marine and Fisheries will have nothing to say about it.

They can build an elevator or anything they wish regarding transportation or navigation without a word of advice to be taken from the Department of Marine and Fisheries. These are the anomalies to which I referred. There are others. There is, for instance, the work of dredging the St. Lawrence and of sweeping the channel. I do not say that these works should be at once transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, because these vast works which have been begun must better be continued under the control of the Department of Public Works. But, surely a public man has a perfect right to discuss these questions and to lay these facts before his fellow citizens. My fellow citizens accepted my view upon these questions. They knew what I had done, they knew from my public record what I could do and what I would do, and they believed me in preference to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and his confreres who came into the division of Maisonneuve, and notwithstanding what they said about the treachery of the ex-member for Maisonneuve, and notwithstanding that they predicted that I would not be re-elected, my fellow citizens were satisfied to return me for that division. I went into Terrebonne which I had represented and I carried on the campaign in the same way as I had done in Maisonneuve. It was stated right and left that the treachery of which I had been guilty would redound against the Liberal party, yet Terrebonne had never, previous to my election returned a Liberal candidate. At the present time you have a Liberal sitting for that division and elected by a larger majority than has ever been given before. These are the facts and these are the results of the speeches of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and his friends who are trying to rouse the prejudices of the electors of the province of Quebec. I repeat again what has been so ably said by my right hon. leader that the province of Quebec is not led astray by such speeches. It has never been led astray by such speeches—I thank God it has not been—and it never will be. If what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has stated be true that canvassers were going around and asking the electors to vote for the right hon. leader of the government during the last election, that, was a pretty good argument. These canvassers and the people to whom they spoke knew perfectly well who was the candidate and in electing the Minister of Marine and Fisheries they knew that they were electing a faithful and loyal friend of the right hon. leader of the government and of the Liberal party.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Surely, Mr. Chairman, I am bound to say a word or two. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) has just read an article that makes it a duty for me to get on my feet. That article which, I apprehend, I never wrote myself, was published in 1897. I was a little younger then than I am now, and I was not in newspaper work as deeply then as I am at the present time. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was then asking the vote of the electors for the mayoralty. But, before talking of our municipal affairs, I would like to say a word or two as to the main question which has been raised. Let me say, first, that I was never of the opinion and that I am not of the opinion today that the portfolio of Public Works, or Marine and Fisheries, or Finance, or any other department, belongs to one province exclusively. We are a mixed community; we are, I hope, building up a nation here. I had the honour to be for nearly six years and a half Minister of Public Works for the whole Dominion, not for the province of Quebec exclusively, but for the whole Dominion. And whatever differences might have arisen between my political friends of former days and myself I believe they will never reproach me, whatever their race may be, with having been partial either towards or against them. The Department of Public Works did not belong exclusively to the province of Quebec. I would have been very glad indeed if it had remained within the province in which it had been for many years. I was so much of that opinion that in spite of the personal differences very well known between my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and myself, I distinctly stated in 'La Patrie,' and I had taken full charge of the paper then, that I would have not the slightest possible objection to the hon. gentleman being appointed Minister of Public Works. I stated that publicly and I stated it privately to my hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself. But political friends at that time were raising a violent opposition against the appointment of the hon. Minister of Marine. I had nothing more to do with it; I did not say a word one way or the other. But there was a great row raised and a violent agitation took place in the Liberal ranks against the appointment of the hon. member for Maisonneuve. Most of that opposition came, I may say, or a great deal of it at any rate, from those who had been opposed to the hon. gentleman in his municipal career. I do not believe that we are called upon to discuss within this House all our municipal difficulties in Montreal. However, since the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has seen fit to quote an article that was published in 'La Patrie' six years ago, let me say a word or two on that topic. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had been for many years Chairman of the Roads Committee of the city of Montreal, and he was mayor for two years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Four years.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. It is long indeed—very long.

Mr. BELCOURT. It might have been longer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It might have been longer, but the city of Montreal decided in another way. Those who were most violently opposed to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries were the strongest Liberals in the city of Montreal. In 1897 he was elected mayor, and he was elected in 1900 also. I may say that it was very difficult in the past to make any opposition to the hon. gentleman. I am speaking within the hearing of many people from the city of Montreal who took part in the municipal elections. The racial cry was the principal cry that the hon. gentleman used all the time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg to deny in the most formal manner what the hon. gentleman has stated just now. He cannot show a single word from me to that effect. It is all gratuituous. Let him try it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman knows very well that I am within Gospel truth. There was for a time an English majority in the city council of Montreal. My hon. friend and others made up their minds—I do not blame them—that the French Canadians should have their share, and they started a strong agitation to take hold of municipal affairs. The hon. gentleman made that fight on the racial cry. He and his friends made that fight on the racial cry for years and years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I deny it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend may deny it, but I am speaking the truth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I will accept his denial in the parliamentary sense, but my words will be read by the whole city of Montreal.

Mr. COWAN. You supported him apparently.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I said it was very difficult indeed to raise an opposition against him.

Mr. COWAN. You tried.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I tried and I succeeded.

Mr. COWAN. When ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The strongest Liberals came to 'La Patrie' and to myself personally, just as they went to the right hon. leader of the government himself on several occasions and represented to him that the city of Montreal was being wrecked and was being destroyed. The organization against my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) in municipal affairs was in the 'Herald' office. The 'Herald' people came to my office and to me personally. The leaders of the Liberal party in Montreal—I will give the names if I am asked to give names, because there is no secret about it—they came to me and they asked me whether 'La Patrie' would consent to take a hand in the fight, because they felt that if they had not a French paper to speak to the French electors, it was out of the question to have municipal reform in Montreal. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) had made an alliance with a certain group in the Conservative party—the 'La Presse' people—at the time. If there was not a French paper in a position to make a fight against him, a fight was out of the question. I give these explanations so that people will understand how 'La Patrie' was drawn into those municipal contests. It took us some time before we were able to get municipal reform in Montreal. In 1900, most of the aldermen who had followed my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) were defeated ; defeated to a man. He remained the only one of his group in the municipal council. He was allowed to be elected mayor. We had clipped his wings and he was allowed to remain there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In 1902 he tried his level best to be a candidate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was not here.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman went away, but he placed his candidature before the electorate and he could not be elected and he withdrew. But this is only municipal history, and I would not have alluded to it if I had not been invited by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) to do so. In 1897, it appears that 'La Patrie' supported him. In 1900 he was allowed to be elected under the conditions that have been described. In 1902 he was defeated, to his great happiness, because he has been made a minister since. Now, as to his last election campaign. There is no doubt whatever that he stated to the electorate that a part of the Public Works Department would be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. His words have been reported verbatim. What he announced will not be done. That is sufficient for me. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is right on one point, and that is, when he said that the hydraulic survey should be placed in the Marine Department. I share his views on that point. The reason why the Department of Public Works undertook the survey on the St. Lawrence river between Quebec and Montreal, was because that department was carrying on extensive dredging, and it was necessary to have information and data, but it was not the intention or ambition to trespass on the rights of any other department. The dredging work is nearly finished now. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) may take over the hydrographic survey if he chooses; after one more year's work it will be finished. I repeat that there is no sound argument to be invoked in support of the contention that one department should always belong to the same province. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has alluded to appeals that have, he claims, been made in the elections of 1896 and 1900. There were apepals on both sides. I have read a great many appeals in these two campaigns. I hope we will never hear them again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I hope that in future we will discuss political questions on their merits. The people of this country have grown big enough to discuss political questions on their merits. Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that I differ from him on the point that in the province of Quebec we cannot discuss any political question today on their merits because the name of the Prime Minister is supreme. The name of the right hon. gentleman is a powerful name, I am bound to say, in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I spring from the soil so to speak; I am the son of a farmer, and I claim that there is enough independence in the hearts, and in the souls, and in the conscience of the French Canadians, whether farmers or workingmen or anything else, to discuss political questions and to understand them as they deserve to be understood. There is no doubt that my right hon. friend's name is a powerful one in the province of Quebec, but I would not be afraid in any way to discuss with him now, as I have in past years, the political questions of the day, and I would not be afraid of the verdict, if I am right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The province of Quebec is equal to the other provinces of this Dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We are not carried away by a name, or by prejudices, or by passion. There may be people who are prejudiced, but there are prejudiced people in every part of the Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER. Everywhere.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, everywhere. I protest in a friendly way, but as firmly as I can against the assertion that the name of Sir Wilfrid Laurier is so powerful that we cannot with advantage discuss political questions in our province. The time may come when we may be obliged to discuss these questions with my right hon. friend, and the people of the province of Quebec will listen to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, to myself, to anybody who will appeal to them and give us a fair hearing. I am sure that the words spoken by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) do not express his real sentiments and views on this question. Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we from the city of Montreal, have relied too much on the indulgence of the House in discussing our municipal affairs, but as they are somewhat connected with our political differences it was just as well to settle our case kindly, as I have endeavoured to do.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have listened with a good deal of attention to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) and I am surprised that he has raised such a breeze in the House, over an incident which one would think should have been settled by what occurred here a few days ago. I would not have attempted to speak in this debate, were it not that the hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) had made some insinuations with regard to my humble self. He has stated that as a member of the Liberal party, I had appealed to passions and prejudices in the province of Quebec to sustain the Liberal party, or what he termed, the cause of the right hon. leader of the government. I beg to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), in the most respectful manner, in the most courteous manner, speaking from my seat in parliament—and this is the right place to make such a denial—that never in my political life did I make any such appeals as he said I made.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have met the hon. gentleman in four counties where elections were held recently; I have met him in many political discussions; and I call upon him now to say if I ever uttered in his hearing such appeals as he has mentioned. I say that I never did. But, Sir, let me show the course which the hon. gentleman has pursued in the province of Quebec for the last four or five years. Last year, speaking on the budget, I quoted the remarks which were made by him before the Morin Club, a very piwerful Conservative association in Montreal. I will again quote those remarks, not as reported in 'La Patrie' or 'La Presse' or any other French Canadian papers, but as telegraphed to the Toronto 'Mail and Empire,' the chief organ of the Liberal Conservative party in this country. Here is what my hon. friend said, as reported in that paper:

Laurier Fails in Duty to Quebec. His Premiership of No Aid to French Canadians. Notable Speech by F. D. Monk.

And the 'Mail' goes on to say:

By the very nature of his position Sir Wilfrid Laurier was obliged every day to make concessions. In the same way when the subsidies to the provinces came up for consideration, Prince Edward Island received a bonus. New Brunswick will also receive one, but Quebec's claims are left without consideration. The same thing applied to experimental farms. Every other province had one, but Quebec was left out. In the Immigration Department, conducted by Mr. Sifton, the French Canadians were practically eliminated. The immigration was directed to the far west, to the detriment of Quebec. Referring to the Montreal harbour works, Mr. Monk said that the necessary works have been delayed for years simply because the government is afraid to do anything for the province of Quebec, which gives Canada its Prime Minister. All along the line Mr. Monk claimed that Quebec province had gained nothing, but, on the contrary, had lost in prestige and advantages by having one of its own sons at the head of the government.

This is the language used by my hon. friend in every political campaign in our province, and he dares to state before this House that we, the members of the Liberal party, are raising racial issues against his own party, when, as I have clearly demonstrated, we have to answer such arguments as these on the platform. Sir, I have met lately the hon. gentleman in the county of Maisonneuve, and in the county of Terrebonne, and I am bound to say for the edification of this House, that this is the kind of language used by my hon. friend when he speaks to the French Canadian electors. I have here the verbatim report of the speech made by him shortly after the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was called to office. He was speaking at Three Rivers on Friday, the 14th of November last. I will translate it. This is what he sand :

What a spectacle is now offered to us ! Of what are we sorrowful witnesses ? You see the most important department of the government taken away from the province of Quebec. If Mr. Tarte has administered his department in a fair and proper way, why cannot there be found an honest man to succeed him ?

That is the way the hon. gentleman spoke of his own province and our public men.

Why have they chosen the occasion when there are so many public works here and in Montreal to be undertaken, to take away the department from us ? The reason for the hesitation which has attended the appointment of Mr. Tarte's successor, is that Mr. Sutherland was contending that the province of Ontario was entitled to the department. Why has not Mr. Préfontaine insisted that this department should be dismantled, and why has he not defended our rights ?

Sir, this is the verbatim speech delivered by the hon. gentleman at the moment the hon. member for Maisonneuve was called to the cabinet. I was present also when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries made his speech before the Liberal Club of Montreal East, and what did he state ? Did he state in a formal manner that the Department of Public Works would be merged in the Department of Marine and Fisheries ? Sir, I state here boldly that he did not. I heard what he said, and I listened carefully. He stated that at an informal meeting held the day previous with his colleagues, he was asked by them to make a report on the feasibility of a scheme to merge a part of the Department of Public Works into the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend allow me ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. MONK. This is what my hon. friend himself stated in an interview in 'La Presse:'

As an old fighter I congratulate him on his nomination. I do not know the intentions of the government on the subject of the changes which are to be made in the ministry of Public Works. If the modifications announced are made, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries must become very important. I hope sincerely that they will take place, because the St. Lawrence route, in which the province of Quebec is so interested, will benefit thereby.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Sir, I am reported faithfully, and I will not take one word from that interview. It is true, and I hope it will be found to be true at the end. But really my hon. friend is too old a parliamentarian to revive such dead issues. Does he fancy for the moment that there are not enough reporters, journalists and telegraph officers in this country to record what is being stated by public men during a political campaign ? Let me warn my hon. friend that each time he speaks in the province of Quebec, as he has spoken during the last six or seven years, he will be faithfully reported at least by the Liberal press of Canada if not by the Conservative press.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We are charged to-day by hon. gentlemen ; who, with their political ancestors, have for the last half century been raising in our province political issues of a racial and religious character. I appeal to the old parliamentarians who sit around me ; I appeal to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) who has stood the brunt of the battle for nearly half a century.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let him recall to this House how the French Canadian Liberals, who have borne the battle in the days gone by were treated by their Conservative opponents. Sir, for a number of years the Liberals in the province of Quebec were ousted from public life, nay, even from the church. They could not appear on a political platform. They were branded as bad Catholics and as enemies of society. But slowly and slowly the truth came out. They had a great leader in the person of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. In him we had a man who appealed, not to the prejudices of his race, but to their intelligence and their conscience, and he made the name of Liberal respected throughout that province, as it is to-day throughout the Dominion. To-day we are no more ousted from the church, we are respected by the powers that be, notwithstanding the unchristian, the unpatriotic attitude of the leaders of the Conservative party towards us. We all have learned, through the great lessons taught by our leader, the value of civil rights. But my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) I understand, has raised this debate in order not to let his hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) take the lead. We all know that to be the case. It is, as we say in French, 'un secret de Polichinelle,' it is secret which is running about every street in Montreal that my hon. friend from Montmorency is the would-be successor of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and the latter asserted this afternoon his leadership by bringing up an old issue which had already been thrashed out the other day. You are probably not aware, Sir, that after the election which took place during the months of November and December last, the leading Conservative organ in Montreal, 'Le Journal,' which was then his organ, but which has since veered around and transferred its allegiance and support to my hon. friend from Montmorency, informed him plainly that he could not continue to act as the leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, unless he changed his political tactics. It is well known that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has been disavowed by a section of his own party, and by the official organ of that party, and this explains why we are assisting to-day at this little comedy. Yesterday it was my hon. friend from Montmorency who took the lead by bringing up in the House the Treadgold question, and to-day my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier reasserts his title to the leadership by this attack on the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, notwithstanding the fact that my friend from Montmorency brought the same question before the House a few days ago. But I must say this of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier—and I say it in all seriousness—that he enjoys the confidence of his small but gallant phalanx of followers in the province of Quebec, and that, in my opinion, his rival, the hon. member for Montmorency, will not succeed in ousting him from the leadership.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, to answer at very great length, the rather impassioned address just delivered by my hon. friend from Gaspé, who seems to have a grudge against either the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) or myself.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not at all, you are my best friends.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend got rather excited and angry, for what reason I am not aware, except that he was anxious to follow the lead of my right hon. friend the First Minister and make an appeal on the same lines. But let me tell my hon. friend from Gaspé that these personal attacks come with very bad grace, especially from him, because if we desired to be disagreeable we could refer back to an election which he went through in Gaspé and bring up again some incidents in that election which would certainly not tell to his credit. But I do not propose to go into such personal matters nor do I propose to rake up ancient history, as my hon. friend did when he talked of the times when, according to him, the Liberals in the province of Quebec were ousted from the church by the Conservatives. I shall content myself with going back to the general elections which took place in 1896, during which the chief argument used by hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends in the province of Quebec was that the late Conservative government had got this House to vote $3,000,000 for the purpose of buying rifles and enlisting French Canadians to fight the battles of the empire. From parish to parish they went, trying to hound down the Conservatives because, they said, 'you voted $3,000,000 to buy rifles with which to arm our sons and send them to fight the battles of England in a distant land.' Would my hon. friend not call that an appeal to race and prejudice ? And I might point to an hon. minister opposite me who, though he is not given to raising his voice in discussion in this House, is most vehement on the hustings, and was one of the most guilty parties in this instance. Nor will I give more than a passing reference to an argument used in the election of 1900, by prominent gentlemen on the other side who came to fight me in that election, and whose principle argument was that the candidate they were opposing was born in Ontario and spoke English almost as well as French and sent his son to an English Protestant institution. Would my hon. friend not call that an appeal to racial prejudice ? Yet hon. gentlemen who were guilty of such appeals try to lecture us on this side because forsooth, in the exercise of our duty and of our rights, we say that the province of Quebec was humiliated when the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) accepted the portfolio of Minister of Marine and Fisheries instead of insisting on being given the portfolio of Public Works, left vacant by the resignation of the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte). We say that in taking that sop, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries humiliated his province. I have no need to rise here to explain the words which my right hon. friend the Premier read from the speech I made in Three Rivers. These words require no justification at my hands. I stand by what I there said, and I defy my right hon. friend to quote one sentence in any speech I have ever delivered in any part of this country of which I need be ashamed before this House. And that is more than my right hon. friend and a great many who sit around him can say. Dare they repeat what they said at Chicoutimi and other places in the province of Quebec during the elections of 1896 and 1900 ? I defy them to do it. I say again let them read, if it is not too fatiguing for them, the report of any speech I ever made either in the province of Quebec or in the province of Ontario and quote any sentence for which I need blush before my colleagues in this House or the people of Canada. What is the position I took in the speech I made at Three Rivers. I said that ever since 1878 the portfolio of Public Works had been held by a minister from the province of Quebec, that it was one of the most important in the gift of the Governor General and the Prime Minister, and that it had been in the hands of a French Canadian of the province of Quebec ever since that year. I said that this department had been ably administered by the minister who had just vacated it, and that, under the circumstances, it was the bounden duty of the hon. member for Maisonneuve to insist, as a condition of his entering the government at all, on being given that department. I further said, Sir, that if I had been in his place I would not have accepted the humiliation of taking an inferior department—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, Sir, I repeat it—the humiliation of taking an inferior department. I would have insisted upon having the Department of Public Works or one of the other most important departments in the gift of my right hon. friend. What further did I say? I said that it looked very strange, remembering what the 'Herald' had said, remembering what the 'Witness' had said, and what must have been said to my right hon. friend the leader of the government in relation to the past career of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—it looked very much as if my right hon. friend would not trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with any great spending department. And I declared that that was one of the causes for the humiliation of the hon. gentleman, and it became the humiliation of the province of Quebec in his person, when he accepted the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which is not an important department compared with the Department of Public Works, and is not a great spending department. These were the sentiments to which I gave expression. I have nothing to be ashamed of in them, and I repeat them here before the House in the hearing of my colleagues, and I know I shall have their support.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE IMPERIAL COMPANY.

House went into Committee on Bill (No. 71) to incorporate the Imperial Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). There seems to be some misunderstanding about this Bill, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 107) to incorporate the Empire, Accident and Surety Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 93) to incorporate the Shipping Federation of Canada.—Mr. Bickerdike.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 156) to incorporate the Montreal-Longueuil Bridge Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Bill (No. 158) to incorporate the St. Chrysostome Railway Company.—Mr. Brown.

Bill (No. 163) respecting the United Empire Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Thompson.

Bill (No. 164) to incorporate the Pacific Bank of Canada.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 166) to incorporate the Gaspé and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Gauvreau.

Bill (No. 167) respecting the Montreal Bridge Company, and to change its name to 'The Montreal Bridge and Terminal Company.'—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill (No. 169) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of James Sinclair McDougall.—Mr. Gallery.

Bill (No. 170) to incorporate the Nipigon Iron Range Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 171) to incorporate the Chatham, Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Railway Company.—Mr. Stephens.

Bill (No. 172) to incorporate the City and County Bank of Canada.—Mr. Rosamond.

SUPPLY.

House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Chairman, when you rose at six o'clock, I really had not very much more to say upon the subject which is occupying the attention of the committee, but still, in view of what has been said it seems to me that this discussion can be continued for some minutes more so as to get from the government what we have been trying to get for some time—a specific declaration of what is the policy of the government upon the important question as to whether or not the Department of Public Works is to be divided between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Public Works. Of course, after the very lucid explanation which was given here this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) probably the committee is enlightened and we should not say any more. On the other hand it seems to me that the government is bound to state whether or not the declarations made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on an important occasion are to be carried out by the government; in other words, whether the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was really authorized to make the statements which he did make. I noticed that both the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), when they spoke about this question, were not very definite in the expression of their opinions as to what really was to be done. The right hon. leader of this House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) also spoke, but we fail to find in anything which he said a definite policy laid down by him as to what really was to be done. When my hon. friend quoted what he said at this meeting of the Liberal club, or Le Club Liberal de la Partie-Est, I think it is, I noticed that he did not quote what is here put in his mouth by the newspapers of Montreal. I want to know if he repudiates the report of his speech which was given both by 'La Patrie' and 'La Presse' on that occasion, because both of these reports are identical in terms. Now, my hon. friend, as I read to the House the other night, said, in fact, this :

Gentlemen, let us be reasonable, let us examine the situation as it is. The Department of Public Works at this moment are spending several millions of dollars. This sum is spent in public buildings and their maintenance, including the parliament buildings at Ottawa, and in the construction of new buildings in every part of the country where they are needed. Moreover, the Department of Public Works until now has had the dredging of rivers, has carried on the improvements in the port of Montreal, with the assistance, of course, of the harbour commission and of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But if we put every man in his place, and if we say to the Department of Public Works, not only by words but by deeds, you shall only have under your control the works on the public buildings and the public improvements which relate to the maintenance of the country, but everything which concerns navigation, such as dredging the rivers, the construction of wharfs, the construction of elevators, the building of dry docks, and so on, if we say that all this concerns navigation and therefore concerns the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and if you put this into a law, is it not true that you have there all the guarantees which you can desire ? But you are told : This is to make the province of Quebec believe that you are not sacrificed. Well, gentlemen, again I repeat, let us be reasonable. If I tell you as I have already said twice, that I have accepted the portfolio under these conditions.

I will call the attention of the committee to this :

And, gentlemen, again I repeat, let us be reasonable. If I tell you, as I have already said twice, that I have accepted the portfolio under these conditions and that they have been sanctioned, it is because I sincerely believe the promises which have been made, the declarations which have been made, and it is because I am sincerely convinced that these promises and declarations will be realized.

So there are the words which were pronounced by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He distinctly said that all those works which are now under the control of the Department of Public Works were to be under his department. He went farther than that. He said : These are the conditions under which I accept the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries and these are the sanctioned declarations that I have authority for making to the country. These are the conditions under which I accepted office, and if these conditions had not been granted I would not have accepted. But, there is the indefinite statement that we have now before the committee. We have this statement simply from my hon. friend who spoke this afternoon that probably the hydrographic survey which is now in part under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries would be placed wholly under the control of this department. If the hon. gentleman had not come to the electors of the province of Quebec with the distinct statements he made in this speech, the result of the election in Maisonneuve would have been different from what it was when he was elected. It is strange, after what the right hon. leader of the House said this afternoon, if he had decided from the outset to take into his cabinet the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that it took so long to come to a decision, because it is in the remembrance of everybody that it took three weeks before my hon. friend was taken into the cabinet. And why, Sir ?—because it is well known also that deputation after deputation came up here to Ottawa to urge that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries be not taken into the cabinet, but that the hon. gentleman who sits here as speaker of this House (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) should be appointed one of the ministers of the Crown. Here is the 'Herald' of Montreal, not a Conservative organ, not one which is favourable to this side of the House, but one of the great organs of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, and it went so far as to publish the portrait of Mr. Speaker and to say :

The 'Herald' is to-day in a position to state that the Hon. L. P. Brodeur, member for Rouville, and Speaker of the House of Commons, will probably succeed Hon. Mr. Tarte as Minister of Public Works in the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

There is no doubt whatever that there was great wrangling in the Liberal ranks at that time. Deputation after deputation came to Ottawa to urge upon the Prime Minister that he should take into the cabinet the Speaker of this House (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) and not the member for Maisonneuve (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). We were told some time ago that a definite statement would be made to the House as to the policy of the government on this matter, and why is it that such a statement is so long delayed ? I take it, Sir, that the Department of Public Works, having been given to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), it will not be divided now, and that the hon. gentleman is a believer in the motto 'what we have we'll hold.' I suppose that the government should decide to take the Public Works from my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), or suppose they should now propose to diminish the importance of that department, I put it to gentlemen on the other side of the House, if the members from the other provinces, and especially from Ontario, would not resent such a change. There is nothing extraordinary in the views which I gave expression to, and which were quoted by the Prime Minister to-day. The province of Quebec had for a long time control of the Department of Public Works, and I simply expressed the views of one province at the change that had been made. I feel certain that were that department taken from the province of Ontario to-day we would hear the same protest from Ontario. In the Montreal 'Gazette' of November 12th, the Minister of Marine was interviewed, and this is the report of the interview :

'Will there be any new functions added to the Department of Marine and Fisheries' asked the reporter.

'Yes,' said the hon. gentleman, 'but that cannot be done until parliament meets and the change is ratified by the people's representatives. You see the duties of the several portfolios are at present defined by Act of the central legislature, so nothing short of an amending Act of parliament can affect the change. The St. Lawrence river works will be added to the Marine Department.'

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this interview has never been repudiated. The Minister of Marine continued :

'That will give us the service of building and maintaining our wharfs in the different waters of the Dominion. This will give my department the oversight of what is commonly known as transportation. I have had some opportunity for a study of the subject and I will give it more.' With regard to his Montreal critics Mr. Préfontaine remarked that he had nothing to say at present but time will show them. I am not the man they have represented me to be.'

That is a corroboration of the speech made by the hon. gentleman, but that is not all.

Some time after he had been sworn in as minister, he took the government steamer 'Frontenac,' and with certain of his friends he sailed down the St. Lawrence on a survey. The organs of the government in the province of Quebec announced that this was only the initial stage, and that the Minister of Marine was doing this as it were to take possession of that part of the Public Works Department, which he thought should be put into the Department of Marine. These were the excuses given by him when it was urged that when he had accepted the portfolio of Marine he had done a thing which was detrimental to the interests of the province of Quebec. Now, Sir, when the Prime Minister spoke this afternoon, he appeared to be inspired by a spirit of anger which I have seldom seen him exhibit. The only explanation which I can give for that is, that the Prime Minister was so annoyed at the Minister of Marine that he thought he would vent his anger upon my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. There was nothing in the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) which could in any way justify the tone and the manner of the Prime Minister, but the right hon. gentleman was so annoyed at his Minister of Marine that he thought he would take satisfaction out of the member for Jacques Cartier. Now, Sir, reference has been made to the existence of alleged differences among the members of the Conservative party in this House. Let me tell these hon. gentlemen opposite that there are no differences in our party. Never before was the Liberal-Conservative party so united as it is to-day.

Some hon MEMBERS. Oh.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Never before was the Liberal-Conservative party so united in its opposition to the gentlemen who sit upon the treasury benches. Never before was it so united in word and in deed, in the performance of the duty which it believes it owes to the people of Canada. If hon. gentlemen opposite can take any comfort from street rumours as to differences which exist between my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) and myself, they are easily satisfied. When my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), in 1900 was the unanimous choice of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec as their leader, I was one of the first to sanction that choice, and I welcomed it as a sure sign of victory at the next election.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, and my hon. friends on the other side know that what I am saying is true ; they feel it in their bones. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk), since being elected leader of the Quebec Liberal-Conservatives, has grown in the estimation and respect of every man in this House, and every man in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) deservedly has the esteem and respect of this House, and I can tell hon. gentlemen opposite, if they do not know it, that he has no more devoted follower than I am. My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) says I have ambitions. Sir, I have no ambition to be either the leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec or the leader of the district of Quebec. I have not the time, I have not the means, and especially I have not the ability to be leader, even if I so desired. But Sir, I am honoured in being an humble and ardent and zealous supporter of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. POPE. I feel compelled to say a few words in this, in some respects unfortunate debate, because early in the session I entered my protest against the removal from the province of Quebec of such an important department as Public Works, which had been presided over for many years by a member from that province. I agree that no province in Canada owns any particular portfolio, but I do say that the two great provinces of Ontario and Quebec have for many years been recognized as entitled to a fair share of the departments which control patronage and the expenditure of public money. These provinces represent the great majority of the taxpayers of Canada, and it is only right that they should have representation in some degree commensurate with the contributions which they make to the public treasury. Upon the ground, as a business ground, irrespective of parties or nationalities or religions, I think it is a sound principle for a Prime Minister to act upon in forming his government, that the two large provinces of Quebec and Ontario should have strong and prominent representatives in the cabinet. I do not think that will be considered a narrow or prejudiced or debatable ground. Well, there must have been some reason for not carrying out this well-recognized principle in this particular case. The ex-Minister of Public Works, we all agree, had been doing good work, according to his best judgment, and subject to the criticism to which every hon. minister, no matter how good his judgment may be, must be subject. He had been putting a great deal of labour and effort into the work of his department, with the object of rendering, to the best of his ability, good service to the country in carrying on the operations of that department and in dispensing the enormous patronage which was placed in his hands. The Prime Minister undertook to select a successor to the hon. Minister of Public Works, who had retired, and he took a long time to decide upon a man. It was not the decision of a moment. He consulted Liberals far and wide; he was sometimes in Quebec, sometimes in Ottawa, sometimes in Montreal; possibly he may have consulted business men, some of whom were outside the ranks of the Liberal party. In choosing a successor to the Minister of Public Works, he was not obliged to take the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He had the names of many other hon. gentlemen before him, the Speaker, for instance, and other men quite capable of taking charge of any reasonable portfolio. But the right hon. gentleman saw fit to select the hon. member for Maisonneuve. When he made that choice, he had the record of the hon. gentleman before him. That record was either one which should entitle the hon. gentleman to favour at the hands of the Prime Minister, or it was not. Having been at the head of the municipal public works of the city of Montreal, which is the largest city in Canada, and which has a very large expenditure, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had certainly been in the very best possible school for fitting a man to fulfil the duties of Minister of Public Works of Canada. He had been through the kindergarten experience, which is sometimes a good thing for men to have before entering the cabinet. He had made a record there. If that record was what it ought to have been, the Prime Minister was quite right in selecting him, and he should have given him the Department of Public Works. If that record was not what it ought to have been, the Prime Minister was wrong in taking him into his cabinet at all. As we look over the hon. gentleman's history, which he has made for himself in his native province, as that history is recorded, not by the Conservative press, but by his own friends, we shall be able to understand why the Prime Minister hesitated about placing under that hon. gentleman's control a great spending department like the Department of Public Works. That history has been read here to-day very largely from the Montreal 'Herald,' and it is not necessary for me to go over it again. I will quote, however, what the 'Herald' said on the 10th of November last:

> The 'Herald' particularly, during a five years' campaign against corruption and extravagance at the city hall, had no option but to conclude that his powerful influence had been and was being exerted against the city's best interest. What Mr. Préfontaine's idea of his future may be, and precisely what view Sir Wilfrid Laurier may take of the matter, is not for us to know, but it is clear that in Montreal, where he has lived under the limelight of publicity, there must be grave misgivings concerning the wisdom of the selection, not only on the part of the more or less disinterested general public, but quite as much on the part of those whose particular concern is the welfare of the administration.

As I looked over the files of this paper, and found these articles one after another, beginning in January, 1900, appearing in this leading Liberal organ in the province of Quebec, I saw denunciations against the hon. gentleman so bold and daring that their equal could not be found in any paper in Canada, Liberal or Conservative, against any other public man in Canada. The hon. gentleman said to-day that he had acclamations in the city of Montreal, that after he had been elected mayor of the city, he had been continued in that office during four years. Well, here is what the 'Herald' says on his retirement :

The need of the whole city is to be quit of Mr. Préfontaine's domination, and equally to be rid of the system he represents. Préfontaine-ism means the manipulation of the municipal authority for the benefit of those who have business relations with the city, and it means the neglect of public services, the corruption of civic departments, the dissipation of municipal revenues, which result when members of the council extend to themselves the preferential treatment meted out to great corporations.

That is the opinion expressed by the Montreal 'Herald' when the hon. gentleman was getting ready to retire. The hon. gentleman said he retired because he did not wish to run again. The Montreal 'Herald' does not concur in that statement. It said this :

Mr. Préfontaine was again desirous of being mayor. At the last moment he retired in favour of Mr. Wilson-Smith.

What was the result of this retirement in favour of Mr. Wilson-Smith ? I have no hesitation in saying that when he retired in favour of Mr. Wilson-Smith, he beat Mr. Wilson-Smith. That gentleman was not elected, but the man who was least expected to be elected, Mr. Cochrane, was elected mayor of Montreal. The outside world never imagined that Mr. Cochrane would defeat Mr. Wilson-Smith; but the very fact that this hon. gentleman whose history was told in the press of the city of Montreal, retired in favour of Mr. Wilson-Smith, was quite enough to satisfy the electors with the selection of Mr. Cochrane, notwithstanding the opinion they had previously held of Mr. Wilson-Smith. If that was the stamp that was placed on his candidature, then they did not want him, and Mr. Cochrane was elected mayor. Before I sit down I should like to refer briefly to the lecture which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister saw fit to give this afternoon with regard to the differences of opinion on this side. I have been considerably at a loss to account for this lecture, because I have never before heard that any such differences of opinion existed. Of course I am only a very humble follower of my leader, but still, as we on this side have no need of Privy Council Chambers in which our leaders may separate themselves from their followers and do business without our counsel, we form as a whole an independant caucus of our own, where we hold counsel together, and therefore if there be any difficulties among us they cannot fail to be known to every member of our party. I therefore think that I can speak with some authority on that point. Evidently some one of the right hon. gentleman's friends has been loading him up the wrong way, which, I must say, is rather cruel treatment, because he makes bad bulls-eyes enough when he does his own aiming without having his rifle loaded up and aimed for him by somebody else. He is certainly being misled, and considering that right hon. gentleman's health, it is very unfair for any of his associates to furnish him with information so utterly unfounded. I can, however, understand the right hon. gentleman's anxiety to find companions in misery, for he has certainly been rather tried of late himself. He has been compelled to part with one of his best ministers and to accept, after long hesitation, in the place of that minister, a gentleman who has been criticised by his own party press as no public man has ever before been attacked by the press of the party to which he belonged.

The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) took occasion this afternoon to inform the House that the race cry in the province of Quebec was first raised by the Conservative party. I was rather astonished to hear my hon. friend give expression to an allegation so glaringly contradicted by the facts. Sir, there was at one time in this country a gentleman who occupied the highest position among his compatriots, and who besides commanded the high esteem of this entire country. I refer to the late Sir George E. Cartier. His name has been revered by Liberal-Conservatives, from the day he first took part in politics down to the present. Was his life I ask you, Sir, a bed of roses ? Was he not rather dogged to his very grave by political organizations with which my hon. friend from Gaspé sympathizes ? Was he not held up to public obloquy by that very party in those days, the leaders of which to-day acknowledge him as having been the ablest champion of the French Canadian race in this country ? Sir, the same racial prejudices were then raised against him as are being raised against the leaders of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec to-day. He was accused of being too broad in his sympathies, of not being sufficiently patriotic from a narrow and sectional point of view, because his policy was to make all races and creeds in this Dominion work in harmony. But no man to-day would say that the late Sir G. E. Cartier was not in his life time the greatest defender of the rights and interests of his compatriots which the province of Quebec ever produced. And when the hon. member for Gaspé speaks of the racial cry as having been originated in the province of Quebec by the Liberal-Conservative party, I refer him to the attacks which were made by the Liberals of that day on the man whom they now recognize as having had all the qualities of a great leader. No, Sir, it was not the Conservative party which was responsible for the exciting of the people by the racial prejudices we have heard so much of during late years. But coming down to recent days, who was the father of national prejudice in the province of Quebec of late years ? Why, everybody knows that it was the late Hon. Honoré Mercier. It was he who set the province wild over racial issues. I have never heard that he was a Conservative. I have never heard that he ever had any sympathy or affiliations of any kind with the Liberal-Conservative party. And when we come down to the present day, let me say that there is no man in political life more keen than our able and our eloquent young friend from Gaspé to take advantage of every small opportunity which he thinks will weigh with his own nationality. Why, I remember when, during the election in Sherbrooke, when the present member for that county (Mr. McIntosh) was opposed by Mr. LeBaron, the cry was raised in favour of Mr. LeBaron that he was not only a French Canadian but descended from one of the oldest families of France, and had in his veins the best French blood in the country. My hon. friend from Gaspé raised the same cry in the county of Bagot, and in fact he never fails in appealing to national sentiment wherever and whenever he thinks such appeals can have any effect. I have always hoped, though in that hope I have been frequently disappointed, that our hon. friends opposite from the province of Quebec would, from their experience in this parliament, become seized with a broader national spirit, and when they went back again to the platform would resort to appeals of a different kind than those made this afternoon by my hon. friend from Gaspé and those around him. And I still do not despair that some day they will learn the great lesson of toleration and become convinced that it is not in the best interests of Canada nor of the French Canadian nationality in the province of Quebec to be continually trading on and prostituting what, in many respects, is one of the best sentiments of our nature.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think, Sir, that it is of some importance that the very words of my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, should be put on record in the official reports of the debates of this parliament. Whether the choice which was made by the right hon. the First Minister in selecting the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the portfolio he holds, be wise or not, does not concern me at present.

The right hon. gentleman has thought fit to make the hon. gentleman one of his colleagues. It was undoubtedly his right. He has done it after a good deal of consideration, I have no doubt. I think that an hon. gentleman whom we all respect very much, the hon. Speaker of the House, had the offer of the same position, that he accepted it, but the position did not come to him. I make that statement without divulging any secrets, for I was not in the secrets of the government then. I make the statement that the Speaker of the House got the offer of the position which the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries got later on, that he accepted it, but that—I do not know for what reason—he did not get it. That statement cannot be contradicted, because it is true. I go on quoting the words of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, so that they may be on record. It is of importance that the programme speech of an hon. gentleman who accepts a position in the government should be known, and that it should be followed, unless reasons to the contrary are given. I quote the words of the hon. gentleman to a greater extent than they have been quoted before, because it is of importance to the country at large to know how we stand in these matters. There is no doubt whatever that the hon. gentleman stated publicly, openly and solemnly that he had been authorized by his colleagues in the government to say that he would get from the Department of Public Works the control of the dredging, harbour improvements and other works relating to navigation. He made that announcement, and stated over and over again that he had been authorized by his colleagues and by the right hon. leader of the government to make it. I shall quote the utterances of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries word for word. They were reported not only in 'La Patrie' and 'La Presse,' but in the English papers also. There has been a campaign or discussion in the province of Quebec for about a month, especially between 'La Presse' and 'La Patrie.' I wrote most of the articles in 'La Patrie' to try to establish the position that the Department of Public Works should not be dismembered, while 'La Presse,' which was and still is, to a large extent, the personal organ of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, contended to the contrary, and held the view that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should have control of certain services now under the Department of Public Works. Let me quote the very words of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I will give them first in French :

L'accusation qui est portée contre le chef du gouvernement qu'il a sacrifie la province de Québec en me choisissant comme un de ses collègues et me confiant le département de la Marine et des Pêcheries, est une accusation dénuée de tout fondement de toutes les façons possibles.

Comment ? on pourra le dire ailleurs, dans d'autres parties de la province où je ne suis pas connu, mais on ne dira pas ici, à Montréal parmi la population qui me connaît depuis vingt-cinq ans, on ne dira pas à la population de Montréal et on ne lui fera pas accroire que Raymond Préfontaine est entré dans le cabinet Laurier en sacrifiant les intérêts de la province de Québec.

Il y a un autre sacrifice aussi que je n'aurais pas fait : c'est celui de négliger les intérêts de Montréal. Messieurs, en quelques mots—je n'ai pas besoin encore une fois de faire un discours politique ce soir, ni un exposé de mon programme, ni un exposé de la politique qui va être discutée d'ici à quelques jours dans les élections parlementaires qui vont avoir lieu, et surtout dans la mienne—laissez-moi vous dire que la question de l'acceptation du portefeuille qui m'a été donné a été discutée franchement, honnêtement, comme cela doit se faire entre gens honnêtes et entre politiciens qui veulent l'intérêt de leur pays. Et à cause de circonstances particulières dans les détails desquels il m'est impossible d'entrer ce soir, je vous dirai cependant que lorsque cette question-là a été discutée, le résultat du débat a été ceci : c'est que depuis 1867, depuis que la confdération existe, jamais le portefeuille de la Marine et des Pêcheries, qui a pris une importance énorme depuis quelques années, n'avait été confié à un homme de la province de Québec et à un Canadien-français. Ah ! l'on croyait que l'on était habitué à croire que le ministère de la Marine et des Pêcheries devait nécessairement être donné à un homme des provinces maritimes, à un homme qui n'avait d'intérêts à sauvegarder que ceux de sa petite province, que ceux de cette partie limitée de la Puissance du Canada. Nous étions habitués à croire cela et une partie du peuple le croit peut-être encore aujourd'hui. Mais si j'ai accepté ce portefeuille, c'est parce qu'il a été constaté que le département de la Marine et des Pêcheries devrait comprendre non seulement ce qu'il comprend actuellement, mais aussi le contrôle des ports, le contrôle des havres, le contrôle de la grande navigation, à partir, je dirai, des rives de la rivière Yukon, du Pôle Nord, jusqu'au Détroit de Belle-Isle. Eh bien, s'il a été décidé et s'il est parfaitement compris à l'heure qu'il est—et messieurs, je suis autorisé à faire cette déclaration—si aujourd'hui je fais une telle déclaration, soyez convaincus d'une chose: c'est que je suis autorisé à la faire, je suis en mesure de vous dire que je suis chargé, comme ministre de la Marine et des Pêcheries, de faire un rapport le plus tôt possible sur les différents travaux qui devraient être confiés au département de la Marine et des Pêcheries.

Parmi ces travaux sont ceux que je viens de mentionner. Et si le département de la Marine et des Pêcheries, comme je suis convaincu que cela arrivera, prend sous son contrôle tous les travaux du havre, tous les travaux du port de Montréal, tous les travaux de la navigation, de la petite et de la grande navigation intérieure et extérieure, ne croyez-vous pas que le département de la Marine et des Pêcheries sera le portefeuille peut-être plus important, au point de vue du patronage et des avantages que n'importe quel autre département ? (Applaudissements.)

Eh bien, je vous le répète encore une fois, afin qu'il n'y ait pas de malentendu là-dessus, on ne peut pas mettre en doute ma parole, car, messieurs, lorsque l'on parle avec la responsabilité qui s'impose à moi dans le moment, il me semble qu'à moins que l'on doute de la parole de tout honnête homme, on ne peut pas douter de la mienne, je vous dis et vous déclare que j'ai accepté le portefeuille de la Marine et des Pêcheries à condition que ce département-là représentât véritablement les grands intérêts de la navigation auxquels nous sommes si attachés ici, dans la province de Québec. . . . Le gouvernement m'a chargé de mettre à l'étude cette question-là afin que tout ce qui a rapport à la navigation soit mis sous le même contrôle et que tous les travaux qui en dépendent soient aussi mis sous la même juridiction.

I shall not translate it into English now—it is rather long. But in two words the hon. gentleman stated then and there that he was authorized by his colleagues to say, and he spoke as a minister of the Crown—he took great care to say that he was speaking as a minister, that his word should be accepted as such—that all the harbour improvements, everything that pertained to navigation from the Yukon down, even from the north pole—he went very far—to the strait of Belle Isle, would come under his control. He made that announcement. This cannot be denied or disputed. We have been told to-day by the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that he himself in an interview had said to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he would get something from the Department of Public Works. But my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, repeating what had been said formerly by the hon. Minister of Public Works, announced to-day, that, for the time being, the Department of Public Works would remain as it is, except that the hydrographic survey would come under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The plain facts of the case are before the country now. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries went to the electors of his own riding. He induced them to give him their suffrages. He announced that the Department of Marine and Fisheries would be enlarged by the addition of the works pertaining to navigation, which in past years had been carried on by the Department of Public Works. He also announced that a school of navigation would be created. We know now exactly where we are as to the first part of his announcement : he will not get the works from the Department of Public Works that he announced he was going to get. Now, I hope that we will get at least the school of navigation. It is in his department. We will get it, I am sure. I do not know if a constitutional excuse can be given by a minister of the Crown who takes it upon himself to state that he has been authorized by his colleagues to say that this, that or the other thing would be done. It may be very well to let the matter drop, but I do not know whether the electorate of either political party will be satisfied that they have been treated fairly on this occasion.

Mr. MONK. I would like to get from the government a clear and categorical answer to the questions that I put this afternoon. I asked the government this afternoon to tell us clearly what were the changes to be made this session in the organization of the Department of Public Works, and what attributions of the Department of Public Works were to be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. To these questions, which I put this afternoon, I consider that this debate has made it clear, that we are entitled to some answer from the government before we vote this or any other item. My hon. friend the member for St. Mary's division has interpreted the very vague intimations we have received so far as evidence of the assurance that we are going to receive, that is to say, that the Department of Marine and Fisheries is going to be endowed with a school of navigation. I do not require to learn anything in respect to navigation, I am not satisfied with that. The assurances which were given us at the time, and which have just been quoted by the ex-Minister of Public Works, were far more extensive, and we are entitled to know what part of those assurances, if any, are going to be carried out. It is news to me, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. the Speaker of this House for a time occupied the very ephemeral position of Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In partibus infidelium.

Mr. MONK. Yes. It will be news also to a good many people in Montreal, although I must admit that for a time it seemed nearly certain to us, even the outside public, that my hon. friend the worthy Speaker of this House had been really offered and had accepted that position. But the real question is the one which I have just reduced to writing, and to which I think I am entitled to an answer.

Mr. Chairman, the right hon. the Prime Minister is unfortunately not in perfect health, not in robust health, and I am sure there is no one who is more anxious to see my right hon. friend in robust health than I am myself; and whenever, slight as may be the occasion, that occasion is offered to me, I endeavour to make matters in this House as easy as possible for that right hon. gentleman. But his condition of health must not lead him to petulance and peevishness. The attack which that right hon. gentleman made upon me this afternoon I considered unjustifiable. I did not judge the act of the government in changing the Department of Public Works, whether it did change it or not; I did not prejudge that question. But in order to justify the position which I took here, that we should not pass the estimates without getting that information, I related as calmly as possible what were the issues raised in the election of Maisonneuve, an important election. After I had explained those issues I put my question, and the right hon. gentleman never even vouchsafed me an answer, but he made an attack upon me, because he considered that I had no right, as I did in that election, to raise that question, a most important question, of the transference of the Department of Public Works from the incumbent who had just occupied it to a gentleman of another province. What reason was there for that attack? My right hon. friend says it was not I who raised that question. But the campaign in Maisonneuve did not begin on the day of the nomination of my hon. friend. His nomination was brought to the notice of the public in the press of Montreal on the 10th of November, and on the 11th a number of citizens were interviewed and gave their opinions about that shuffle. Their opinions are consigned in an important newspaper of the city of Montreal, in its issue of the 11th of November. I will pass over the opinions expressed by men who are not in active politics and the opinions expressed by men who share our own in political matters. Now, let us see how, on the day following the announcement of the step taken by the right hon. gentleman and of my hon. friend's assumption of office, how that step was appreciated by his own friends. What did Senator Dandurand say, the first man interviewed, the manager of the Liberal party in the city of Montreal?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He is no more the manager.

Mr. MONK. This is what he said:

I believe that Mr. Préfontaine is named when I have received official notice of it. He has already been named minister six times and as often displaced.

What did Mr. Globensky say? He is an important member of the Liberal party in the city of Montreal, an aspirant to the bench:

I only regret one thing, that is that instead of the portfolio that has been given to Mr. Préfontaine, they have not made him Minister of Public Works, a position to which his high services and great administrative capacity give him an incontestible right.

Mr. Lafontaine, another gentleman of high position in the party, was interviewed, and makes act of absolute resignation:

I have implicit confidence in Sir Wilfrid. I believe that he has not made such a nomination without grave reasons and I approve his conduct. Roma locuta est, causa finita est.

That was Mr. Lafontaine's opinion. Mr. Morin, another friend of my hon. friend, said this:

It is unfortunate that the portfolio of Public Works has been given to an Ontario man.

That is Mr. Morin's opinion, a gentleman who worked for my hon. friend:

One must believe that grave reasons of state have decided this choice. The future will demonstrate that Hon. Mr. Tarte was the best Minister of Public Works that Canada ever had. He was a man who favoured Canadians of all provinces.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Who said that?

Mr. MONK. Mr. Morin.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Who is Mr. Morin?

Mr. MONK. The notary. Why, is it possible that my hon. friend (Mr. Geoffrion) does not know his own friend. What is the party coming to if they do not know their own friends ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. I thought it was the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin).

Mr. MONK (reading) :

I believe——

Continues Mr. Morin.

That the works on the river are now in charge of Hon. Mr. Préfontaine and that he will find a vast opening for his great activity in this new position. No doubt Sir Wilfrid Laurier in making this choice has been guided by very grave reasons.

Lieutenant Colonel Mackay, another great friend of my hon. friend from Chambly and Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion) said :

I am happy to see the Hon. Mr. Préfontaine named minister. It is a reward for his long services.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK (reading) :

Being of the province of Quebec I would have preferred that the portfolio of the ministry of Public Works should have remained in our province but if it is not so there were no doubt grave political considerations which required that this portfolio should go to an Ontario gentleman.

That was the opinion of Lieutenant Colonel Mackay, an important member of the Liberal party. I have already quoted the opinion of my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) but my hon. friend changes his opinion very often and very unfairly, I think. It is a matter of reproach among his own friends to the hon. member that he is a great glutton for patronage and I think he is willing to make great sacrifices in order to secure everything that patronage gives.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Do you quote that from the paper ?

Mr. MONK. I quoted my hon. friend's opinion to show that he had a very different opinion of the hon. gentleman then. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) was Solicitor General for a day. Perhaps, to-day, he expects to become so again. Changes take place very frequently. Mr. Primeau, lawyer of Montreal, is among the young Liberals who exercise, very properly, great influence in their party. He expressed exactly the same opinion as the others :

I do not know Mr. Sutherland but I find it very regrettable for the province of Quebec to lose the Department of Public Works, but, after all, there may be some compensation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Who said that ?

Mr. MONK. That is Mr. Primeau's language.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is your partner.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONK. I wish I possessed the secret of making my hon. friends laugh as easily as the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) does. I do not see anything very curious in his statement. He knows perfectly well that Mr. Primeau has never been my partner. This is how the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike), appreciates this event. My hon. friend was very cautious, but still he went very far :

I do not believe I am in a position to give an opinion on what is yet but a public rumour. In the second place the portfolio of Public Works belongs of right to the French element.

Then further my hon. friend says :

Upon this point the English element has not been consulted and therefore I deem it better to keep for myself what I think upon this subject.

Mr. Geoffrion, a most respected member of our community, commissioner of the port of Montreal and a relative of my hon. friend from Chambly and Verchères, which the hon. gentleman will not deny—

Mr. GEOFFRION. No, no.

Mr. MONK. He was still more cautious. He said :

To give an opinion immediately would be premature. It is better to wait and judge of the cause by the effect.

Mr. A. Beaudry, and whom my hon. friend from Chambly and Verchères knows, I am sure, said this :

I believe that the transfer from the Department of Public Works to the Department of Marine and Fisheries of the control of the channel of the St. Lawrence and the works of the ports as announced, the province of Quebec will really lose nothing.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). What is his name ?

Mr. MONK. I will give his pedigree to my hon. friend (Mr. Maclaren, Huntingdon) if he desires it. Mr. Wilson, with whom the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) is very well acquainted, who was a candidate against the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) in the election which brought that hon. gentleman here and who is a lawyer of prominence, said :

The Hon. Mr. Préfontaine is one of the oldest fighters of the party and one of the most enterprising. He is perfectly well qualified to form part of the government. I believe, however, that we are diminishing the prestige of our province in allowing the portfolio of Public Works to go to the province of Ontario.

This was the opinion of the Liberal candidate in Laval, a gentleman occupying a high position in the ranks of the Liberal party.

If as I understand it all the works of the St. Lawrence are to be under the charge of the Hon. Mr. Préfontaine, I think we ought to be satisfied. Otherwise we are subjected to great loss.

Here is another gentleman who is described as a prudent Liberal member of parliament. He would not give his name—prudent man. Perhaps it was the hon. member for Chambly and Verchères.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I gave an interview to the 'Witness' which I shall be pleased to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) read. My opinion on the admission of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the cabinet is in the 'Witness.' I wish he would send for it and read it.

Mr. MONK. I do not read the 'Witness' very often, but I will look it up. In the meantime I assume that he is the prudent member of parliament. This gentleman said :

It seems pretty well understood that the new Minister of Marine and Fisheries is going to have a large share of the patronage of the Department of Public Works in reference to the works of improvements at the ports of Montreal and Quebec. Above all things do not say who I am.

No, I do not think it is my hon. friend from Chambly and Verchères. If I have quoted these opinions it is in order to show that public opinion upon this question was very much excited. The election turned largely upon that question, and it is the duty of those of us who took part in that election and who voted in that election to ask the government if there is any truth in the assertions which have been repeatedly made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister wandered strangely from what was a simple question, and the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) quite unnecessarily wandered still further. I am not aware that there are any differences in the political party with which I am connected in this House. I have seen gentlemen on the other side torn asunder for months on all kinds of questions, but I do not know that there is any difference of opinion between us on this side. I can tell my hon. friend from Gaspé that during the many years that the Liberal party received no support from the province of Quebec, the Liberal party found nothing but injurious invective to hurl at that province. But what a contrast is there now. When in 1896 the Conservative party, rightly or wrongly, sacrificed itself for the triumph of the cause of justice and equity, the Conservative party, in spite of the result in the province of Quebec, judged it right, that the province of Quebec should be represented on the front benches of the opposition, and I accepted with pleasure what I consider to be most magnanimous treatment to myself as a representative from that province.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. It is not a very lucrative position.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. It is not a sinecure by any means, and if there are any gentlemen who aspire to that position I can tell them that so far as I am concerned, they are welcome to it.

Collections of slide and boom dues, including salaries of clerks, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that there is only one employee paid out of this vote, one clerk at Ottawa who looks after the accounts, and the balance is for expenses and contingencies in connection with these works.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you put in 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act ?'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister explains to me that this is to enable a clerk to be paid more than $400 a year.

Mr. McCORMICK. In the province of Ontario we have to make all these improvements ourselves, and it seems strange that the government should carry on these works for the benefit of the province of Quebec especially.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A part of the expenditure is for the province of Ontario.

Mr. POPE. What is the revenue from these slides and booms.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was $57,335.93 for the past season.

To provide for paying 'the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company' allowance re logs passed Chenaux boom, 1903-4, $1,800.

Mr. POPE. What is the reason for this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These works were first erected by the parliament of Canada or came in our possession after confederation, and under an arrangement made in 1883, they were taken over by this company and we agreed to pay them.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this in perpetuity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is liable to be cancelled at any time by notice, but I have not the particulars here.

Mr. McCORMICK. Do the government receive any tolls out of this.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find I have not the information. There are some receipts, which are probably equal to if not more than the amount that is paid out. I think we are entitled to four-fifths of the dues, but I have not the detailed information to give to my friend. I will have a statement prepared, and bring it down, showing exactly what the receipts of the past year have been.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that this is an allowance made to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company for taking over some slides from the government ? If it is, the item is strangely worded.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that this is the same wording that this vote has had since 1883.

Mr. FOWLER. What might be proper in 1883 might be entirely improper in 1902. The occasion for this expenditure may have passed by. I think the minister should allow this item to stand until he has more full and detailed information about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to let me know what information he wants? I shall be very pleased indeed to give it.

Mr. FOWLER. We would like to know the history of the whole transaction—why this sum of $1,800 should be paid every year to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, what are the conditions under which the grant was first made in 1883, how long it was to last, whether the time has expired, whether it is to be granted in perpetuity or not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only question the hon. gentleman asks is how long the agreement was to last. I have already explained that it is a yearly agreement.

Mr. FOWLER. That is only one portion of it. It is necessary for us to know the reason it was given in the first place, and the reason for its continuance. I quite understand that the hon. gentleman may not know, but his deputy minister should know something about it. We want to know whether the country gets any benefit from this. The minister does not seem to have any information about it, and therefore, I think the item should stand.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see by the Auditor General's Report of last year, that this Upper Ottawa Improvement Company paid $1,418.17 for boomage collected from December 1, 1900 to November 30, 1901, and the names of the different parties from whom it was collected are given: J. R. Booth, $2,516.55; E. B. Eddy Company, $274.20; W. C. Edwards and Company, $619.08; Gillies Bros., $684.98; and so on, giving a list of all the parties from whom collections were made; and then it says: one-fifth due to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, $1,418.17. From that I take it that there was about $7,090 collected.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The item of $1,800 is estimated to be one-fifth of the dues collected. According to the memorandum which I have, $9,500 was the largest amount collected in any one year, so that $1,800 is estimated to be sufficient.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the whole collection goes into the consolidated revenue fund?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then we can understand from the Auditor General's Report that these works have been given over to the Ottawa Improvement Company to collect all the dues and pay them into the government, and receive one-fifth of the receipts in return for taking charge of the works and collecting the dues?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Exactly.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask the hon. minister what check the government have on the collection, or whether it is left entirely to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company to make such returns as they please?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The collector of slides and booms in the department here keeps a check. The returns are made to him, and he is able to tell what the collection should be.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is there a government official stationed at the booms?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the government official is in the department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then there is no check by any government official to see whether the amounts returned are really right or not?

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that this item says:

Collection of slide and boom dues, including salaries of clerks, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

What does that mean—that any of these clerks get larger salaries than they would have under the Civil Service Act?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already explained that this one clerk gets a larger salary.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you his name?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Gagner has been a long time in the service.

Mr. FOWLER. What salary does he receive?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Three dollars a day.

Mr. FOWLER. How long has he been in the service?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About twelve or thirteen years.

Mr. FOWLER. What salary will he receive under the Civil Service Act?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $400, I suppose.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not wish to cast any reflection on the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, but it seems strange to me that there is not a government official at these booms to take charge of all these collections. At any other place where government collections are made, there is generally a government officer to take charge of them. In this case I would like to know why there is not a government official there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall be pleased to look into this account and see what the system of checking is. I shall be pleased to take note of my hon. friend's remarks and have an investigation made of the system and see whether the public interest is sufficiently protected or not.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there local persons in charge of these booms who receive commissions on these collections ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there are resident engineers who are officials of this department and who take charge of these works.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who are the members of the Ottawa River Improvement Company ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no knowledge myself, but my deputy informs me that Mr. G. B. Greene is the secretary.

Gatineau river—to provide for the use of Messrs. Gilmour & Hughson's booms at the Cascades in 1904, $600.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a boom which was built by Gilmour & Hughson at the head of the Cascades, and arrangements were made with them to pay them $600 for the use of those booms. This will be the seventh year under that arrangement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Last year it was $630.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was on account of some arrears. Gilmour & Hughson asked for a much larger amount, but we decided that $600 per year would be a fair allowance and last year there were some arrears.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the department get any income from this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The annual revenue last year was $819,234, and the total expenditure $3,370.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I asked the hon. minister whether there are any local men paid anything for taking charge of booms and slides, and he said no, but last year there was an expenditure of $125,916, and in that item there is an amount paid to A. H. Johnson, boom master, 229 days at $2 per day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No doubt I was misinformed and this man must have been in charge.

Mr. McCORMICK. I suppose that the number of logs cut along each river is given the department and the amount of tolls calculated ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the information in detail as to how the amount is fixed, but no doubt, the amount returned by the company is checked by the returns received from the Ontario government of the number of logs.

Repairs and working expenses, harbours, docks, hand slides, $130,900.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is required to cover the annual cost of the staff and repairs.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $30,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no increase in this.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The details are given at the foot of page 77 of the estimates.

Mr. FOWLER. Could the hon. minister give us some idea of what proportion the income from these slides and booms bears to the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total collections under this head of harbours, docks and slides for the last calendar year was $99,187.75. The total expenditure in connection with slides and booms is $81,900.

Mr. BLAIN. How does this revenue compare with that of last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About the same—there is very little difference.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the hon. minister stated last year that the revenue for the year before was $130,000, and, as I understand him, the revenue last year was something over $99,000. There is a difference of over $30,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think there must have been some mistake in the figures given last year. The figures I have given are those furnished by the accountant of the department.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see here an item of $4,500 for the Lévis graving dock. I would like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to increase the capacity of this dock. A great deal has been said about the dock not being of sufficient length to receive the large ships that come to Quebec, and so being inadequate to the requirements of the port. I would ask the hon. minister whether it is the policy of the Department of Public Works—or if not, whether it is the policy of the Department of Marine and Fisheries—to enlarge this dock. This is a subject that has been discussed for a long time in the press of Quebec and on the public platform, and the enlargement of the dock has been advocated as a policy which should be adopted by the progressive party now in power. I would like to know the views of my hon. friend on this question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that about two years ago this dock was very much increased in size—from about 480 feet to about 600 feet. I hope that the large ships coming into the port of Quebec will be able to use this dock for the future. But if this ever proves not to be the case, the matter will receive our consideration.

Mr. MONK. I notice a very considerable amount for slides and booms in the St. Maurice district—$11,100, being $1,100 more than last year. It seems a large amount. Are there many booms there, and were they in a bad state of repair ? I notice that we spent $10,000 last year in the same way. No doubt they should be kept in a good state of repair, but these seem large expenditures.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is an increase——

Mr. MONK. It is not so much the increase that I refer to as the total amount. In two years we are spending $21,000 to repair the booms. They must have been in very bad condition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find by adding the two items together that the total is the same as last year. The engineer informs me that the large expenditure we have been making is made necessary by the very large increase in the business.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to build other graving docks or dry docks this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no amount in the estimates for that purpose yet, but there may be in the supplementary estimates for 1903-04.

Mr. MONK. Is the minister able to say whether it is the intention of the government this year to put an amount in the estimates to build a dry dock in the vicinity of Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not answer that question. I think we have now on hand the sum of $250,000 for the general purpose. I do not know whether any more will be asked this year, or whether this sum will be expended.

Mr. SPROULE. I think an arrangement was come to some time ago by which the government was to pay a certain percentage of the cost to companies building dry docks. Is that sum you refer to for that purpose ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. My hon. friend is now referring to docks built by private companies. We increase the aid given to such companies for that purpose from 2 per cent to 3 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a motion on the paper now for that purpose ; we are increasing the rate from 2 per cent to 3 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. To what extent do you propose giving this encouragement ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The motion now on the paper, I think, probably will come up to-morrow, when I will be glad to give my hon. friend all possible information. At present I may say that the only change made is increasing the rate from 2 per cent to 3 per cent. The general principle is the same. It has been on the statute-book for some years. We propose to enlarge both the limit of the subsidy and the rate per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that there are $24,500 paid to the staff at Ottawa. How many men are employed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That includes the whole Ottawa river. If my hon. friends turns to page 26 of the report of the Department of Public Works he will find the list of employees and their salaries.

Mr. FOWLER. Why is it necessary for the government to maintain these booms at the present time ? On what principle do we maintain them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not been able to find that any general principle has been followed in the erection and maintenance of these works. Many of them were taken over at the time of confederation, some have been constructed since. Some have been given over to companies. I intend to give these items close investigation to see whether some better arrangement cannot be devised for constructing and maintaining these works, and at another session I hope to be able to present some scheme.

Mr. FOWLER. The lumbering business is one of the best in the country, and the government ought not to pay money for the convenience of the lumbermen, as this is evidently for their benefit. These works ought to be self-sustaining.

Mr. MONK. Did I understand the minister to say that the government has on hand the sum of $250,000 for the purpose of building graving or dry docks ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my memory serves me right, this sum is under the control of the harbour board, by Act of parliament.

Mr. MONK. These docks that are mentioned here at Lévis, Kingston and Esquimalt, were all built exclusively by the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Has the government come to any decision in respect to a dry dock in the vicinity of Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. A commission has been appointed to make a report on the best kind of dry docks, and on situations and so forth, but no decision has been come to.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell me whether there has been a report from three gentlemen appointed to make an inquiry ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A report has been made to the department by these three gentlemen, Mr. Keating, of Toronto, and Mr. St. George and Mr. Perrault, of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Have these three gentlemen been appointed by Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has an engineer of the Department of Public Works been engaged with these gentlemen in making that inquiry ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not particularly on the commission.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Have these three gentlemen been charged by my hon. friend to make an inquiry as to the choice of a site for a dry dock in Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Speaking from memory, I think they were empowered to report on the best kinds of dry docks.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman will permit me to say that neither of these three gentlemen have ever built a dry dock in his life. Mr. St. George was the municipal engineer of the city of Montreal when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) had control of our municipal affairs. He resigned from his office after the several inquiries that took place there. He has never had any experience in building docks in his life. Mr. Maurice Perrault is an architect who has never built a dock of this kind in his life. I know Mr. Keating less. He is a very respectable man indeed, but, while he is an engineer, he has never been engaged in the construction of such works in his life. I was very much surprised when I heard that the Minister of Public Works had appointed these three men over the heads of the officers of the Public Works Department who have been engaged in building docks and other public works. We had some experience in the choice of a site in the port of Montreal. Parties tried to foist upon the harbour commission a site. There was an option taken on a site for $50,000 and there was an effort made to foist a site upon the harbour commissioners for a quarter of a million dollars. There was a public meeting in the city of Montreal, a report of which has been published, held by the parties who wanted to make $250,000 out of the site. I am very much surprised to hear that such a commission of men, who have had no experience, has been appointed over the heads of the engineers of the Public Works Department, who have had a long experience in the construction of such works. The hon. Minister of Public Works would never have done such a thing if he had been better informed, I am sure. Mr. Maurice Perrault is a well known architect but he has never carried out any work of this kind. Mr. St. George has had no experience in that line of business. Let me say also that there is a site in one part of Montreal which the hon. Minister of Public Works will find by looking at the plans which are in his department. He will find by referring to those plans a site which will not cost a dollar to the country, a site which is alongside the shore and which is indicated on the plans of the Montreal harbour. That site is available. I speak of one site. There are other sites in other parts of the city that are also available. It is not necessary to appoint Mr. Maurice Perreault, or Mr. St. George, men who have had no experience in this line, to choose a site and much less to prepare plans. The hon. Minister of Public Works will find in his department several engineers who have had a long experience in that kind of work. Why has he put these men over them ? We are entitled to some information on this point because this is rather a peculiar appointment that he has made. Of course, he was very new in the department; he had just taken office when the appointment was made. I call his attention to the statement I am making now and which cannot be contradicted, and it is that these two men in Montreal are architects. One of them was the municipal engineer under the late regime that the electorate of the city of Montreal got rid of during the last two municipal elections. Mr. St. George resigned after the inquiries which took place. I do not accuse him of anything. He resigned after several inquiries had taken place. Mr. Maurice Perrault is an architect in Montreal. I want to know how it is that these men have been appointed to prepare plans and to choose a site for a dry dock in the city of Montreal when the hon. Minister of Public Works has in his own departments several engineers who have had a long experience in that kind of business.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know the gentlemen in Montreal to whom the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has referred and therefore I can say nothing about them, but when he speaks of Mr. Keating as a man who has had no knowledge of such matters, I must tell him that he is entirely misinformed. Mr. Keating was the city engineer of Halifax, and as such superintended the construction of one of the largest dry docks on the continent of America, and he has that kind of experience which comes from the supervision of a work of that character. I do not say that he was the engineer of construction, but he was the city engineer of Halifax, and the very fact that he had gained that knowledge in the construction of one of the largest dry docks on the continent, was one of the reasons why he was chosen for this work. In respect to the other gentlemen, I cannot say anything.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is mistaken in saying that these gentlemen were called upon to prepare plans for the dock. Representations were made to the government that a floating dock would be very much better for the purpose than a dry dock. A great majority of the members of the House, and I may also say, of the government are not familiar, perhaps, with the different styles of docks that are used and which are best suited to various localities. I do not know that I have a personal acquaintance with Mr. Keating, but I did ask some people from the city of Toronto as to whom they considered the best qualified engineer in that district for this purpose, and Mr. Keating's name was sent to me by a gentleman in whom I have the greatest possible confidence. I do not think that he is a supporter of my own, nor do I know that any of the recommendations of those gentlemen came from political friends. I was anxious that we should have the benefit of the services of the most highly qualified engineers to look into this matter. They can only make report. My hon. friend said that we were ignoring the engineers in the department. That is not so. They only make a report to the chief engineer of the department and he now has it under his consideration. I have not seen it, I suppose, because he has had it under consideration, but he will report upon their recommendations before any action is taken.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is rather strange to find two well known architects appointed on a commission to report on dry docks. I am very glad that the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) tells us that Mr. Keating has had some experience. I do not know whether he prepared the plans for the Halifax dry dock. I do not think he did, but he may have supervised the work. That does not establish in any way that the engineers of the department should have been ignored and that this matter should have been referred to men who do not belong to the civil service and are not responsible to parliament, two of them being architects, and one of them being the municipal engineer of the city of Montreal under the regime that has been got rid of by the municipal electors of Montreal. That is not, it seems to me, an appointment that should have been made under the circumstances. I am very anxious to see the report that these gentlemen have made. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works says that the report will be submitted to his department. Of course, it will be submitted to his department, but all the same it seems to me that this appointment is very irregular indeed. The commission is not composed of men who have had any experience in respect to dry docks.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Do I understand that these gentlemen were only appointed to visit sites in Montreal and make a report as to the most convenient site for a graving dock ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I explained to my hon. friend and the committee that they were to report on the various kinds of docks and especially as to whether a permanent dock or a floating dock would be more suitable. There has been a difference of opinion about these points. No power was given the commission except to report. It is an independent commission. I have no personal knowledge of these gentlemen but they were recommended by persons in whom I had confidence.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think the report is ready now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My chief engineer tells me that he has it under consideration now.

Mr. MONK. Is it in the department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Is there any objection to our seeing it ; it is a matter of very great interest to us.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is certainly no objection. It is a matter of public property, and I will have it brought down.

Mr. MONK. What is going to be paid to these commissioners.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the pay was fixed not to exceed $25 a day, but my memory does not serve me as to that.

Mr. MONK. With the exception of Mr. Keating, who may perhaps have had something to do with the dry dock at Halifax——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The city of Halifax contributed to the dry dock and if he did not prepare the plans, he reported on them as city engineer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If we have any engineer of high standing in the country, Mr. Keating is one of them.

Mr. MONK. What is the recommendation of the commissioners as to the site ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not seen the report, but I will have it brought down at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. TAYLOR. The ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) intimated that certain parties had an option on a site for $50,000, and they were trying to get the government to take it for $250,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is an old story. When I was minister an effort was made to foist on the Harbour Commission and on the Department of Public Works, a site for $250,000, on which an option had been taken for $50,000. Some parties tried to force that on the Harbour Commissioners. There was a public meeting held in Sohmer Park by these parties, but, of course, the effort did not succeed then. That is why I am a little careful when I discuss this item.

Mr. TAYLOR. It may be that this is the site recommended by these Montreal engineers.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Oh, no.

Mr. CASGRAIN. As I understand it, these gentlemen were appointed to report, first, on the site, and second as to whether a floating dock or a dry dock would be best for the city of Montreal. I can bear out what my hon. friend has said : that Mr. Perrault knows no more about a floating dock or an ordinary graving dock than I do, and that is very little indeed. He is an architect of the city of Montreal ; he is a member of the Quebec legislature, but I don't think he ever saw a graving dock in his life before he went to Point Lévis. As to Mr. St. George, he was simply the engineer of the city of Montreal, and in the exercise of his duties, his particular occupation was to see as to the best manner in which the city waterworks were operated. It seems strange that the government which has at its disposal men of vast experience as engineers, should go outside of the department to employ others. Of course, if they did employ men of high standing and men of experience, there would be some justification, as there is in the appointment of Mr. Keating ; but to appoint Mr. Maurice Perrault and Mr. St. George to find a site for a graving dock in the port of Montreal, and to decide as to whether a floating dock or an ordinary graving dock should be built, seems to me to be a most extraordinary proceeding on the part of the government. I do not know what is going to be the pay of these gentlemen.

Mr. MONK. The minister said it was $25 a day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to know when their pay began, and when it is going to stop ? I may tell the minister that at the last session of the Quebec legislature the Independence of Parliament Act was amended for the very purpose of allowing Mr. Perrault to accept this position from the Dominion government. This must be a permanent or a quasi permanent employment, because otherwise the legislature of Quebec would not have gone to the trouble of amending the Independence of Parliament Act to allow Mr. Perrault to help the Department of Public Works with his light in the selection of a site and in determining whether a floating or another kind of dock should be built in Montreal. I warn the Minister of Public Works that Mr. Maurice Perrault is a very high priced gentleman, and I happen to know it, because when I had the honour of being Attorney General of Quebec, the bills which he had filed with a preceding government came before me, and I may tell the minister that they were the most exorbitant bills I ever saw in my life. If he presents to this government such a bill as he presented to the province of Quebec for work done as an architect, I am afraid the Minister of Public Works will be appalled, and he will be very sorry for ever having employed Mr. Perrault. It seems to me, that in view of the competency of the gentlemen who are now in the Public Works Department, it is a most extraordinary thing that the government should employ two men who have no knowledge whatever and no experience whatever in such matters, and place them over the heads of their own employees. As I said before, these two gentlemen know no more about this thing than any member of the House does, and certainly they do not know as much as the engineers of the Public Works Department.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Have negotiations been entered into for the purchase of a floating dock ? I know that there are floating docks which are very successful now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were made to the department with regard to these floating docks, but no negotiations with regard to purchase have been undertaken.

Mr. MONK. I desire to advance the work of the committee as much as possible, but this is a matter of such great interest to us that we are justified in saying that we ought to see that report and the charges of the commissioners before we pass this item. I quite agree with those who have maintained that in view of the staff which we have in the Public Works Department we did not require these commissioners at all. If it were a question of selecting a site, I think the Minister of Public Works himself, with the information he could have obtained in Montreal from gentlemen connected with the harbour, could have come to a decision without this costly commission. As regards Mr. St. George, I am not prepared to make any condemnation of that gentleman. I have known him for many years as engineer of the city of Montreal, and I look upon him as a man of most honourable character. If it were a question of selecting a site, Mr. St. George's opinion would be valuable, but I am not aware that he has any special knowledge with regard to dry docks. I am aware, however, that he left the employment of the city for no other reason than that he desired to enter into a more profitable occupation. Mr. St. George I have known a long time; he resides in my county, and he is a perfectly honourable man.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think this discussion is out of order, as this vote has nothing at all to do with the matter of the committee or the building of a dry dock at Montreal. It may be interesting, politically or for some other reason, to spend a whole day in discussing these matters; but we have done very little work, and to ask that the item stand until information is brought down on a matter with which it has nothing to do, is, I think, very unfair. I think these items ought to be considered in connection with the expenditures which they are intended to provide for. My hon. friend will have an opportunity of expressing his views with regard to the dock almost any day of the session. I know there was a great difference of opinion on the subject, and it was thought by the government that it would be a good idea to have an independent commission of expert engineers make a report upon it. One would have thought that Mr. St. George, having been for a number of years employed as an engineer by the great city of Montreal, was a man of some character and ability. However, there will be many opportunities to discuss the question of a dock; and, as there is nothing contentious about this vote, which is the usual vote, I hope my hon. friend will not press his request that these items stand, after they have been under discussion for three or four days.

Mr. GALLERY. In reference to Mr. St. George, I understood one hon. gentleman to say that he was only superintendent of the water department of Montreal. I may state that he was both superintendent of the water department and city surveyor for years, at a salary of $5,300.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That would not give him any experience in graving docks.

Mr. GALLERY. As far as engineering is concerned, I think he is as good a man as you could get.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Even if he is a good engineer, that would not give him experience in graving docks.

Mr. MONK. I do not know what experience Mr. St. George may have had in graving docks, but my knowledge of him is that he is a perfectly honourable man. I have no objection to letting this item pass, although I do not agree with the hon. minister that this is not the place for us to ask for information on the question of a dry dock, which has been agitating public opinion for a long time. If the hon. gentleman says that he will lay that report on the Table, at the earliest opportunity, I have no objection to letting the item pass.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly; it will be brought down as soon as the engineer makes his report.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would like very much to know whether the crane for the Lévis dock which we were talking about when I left office has been placed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not yet.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is the work under contract or under way?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is not under way. I will inquire into that. It has never been brought to my attention.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand that this commission of three gentlemen was appointed to investigate the question of a dry dock or select a site. Now that their report is in, I suppose their duties are ended, and their services have been dispensed with?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Telegraph lines—Prince Edward Island and mainland, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This $2,000 is voted under an arrangement made at the time of confederation for maintaining the telegraph line with Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to ask the minister if he or the government has received any communication from the provincial government, requesting this amount to be withheld, until the Anglo-American Telegraph Company fulfil their contract to give us an up-to-date service?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I have no such communication. I was visited by a deputation, representing, I think, the board of trade, asking me to make some effort to have better telegraphic facilities with the island, better rates, and longer hours. The matter is now receiving the consideration of the department.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to ask the minister if it is not in the power of this government to withhold this amount while the company neglect to give us the service they should?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would not like to offer an opinion off-hand on that point. It is a question on which even the best lawyers might differ. However, the matter is now receiving the consideration of the department, in view of the application made for better rates.

Land and cable telegraph lines, lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels required for cable service, also maintenance of Marconi wireless telegraphy at Belle Isle, $80,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. minister tell us how the Marconi stations which have been installed, one at Belle Isle and one on the north shore, have been working during the last few months ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not myself given the matter much personal attention, but my information from the officers of my department is that latterly they have been working remarkably well.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would invite my hon. friend's personal attention to these two stations. I was informed by some of the officers that they were working splendidly, and I began sending dispatches myself and asking for reports every day, but the reports did not materialize very quickly. I say that some of the officers are very fine men indeed, but they take for granted that the Marconi system is working splendidly when it does not work at all. My hon. friend will find in the department a record of the telegrams which I sent asking for an answer, which did not come quickly. I think the House will agree with me that it is very important to know exactly how this Marconi system works. Every time there is some stock to be placed on the market, it works splendidly, but when the stock is placed, it does not work so well. I would like very much to know how these two stations work. Will my hon. friend be good enough to inquire how many days the two stations have been working. Occasionally on a dry day one of the stations would work, and the next day, although also a dry day, it would not work at all. Then on a damp day it would work splendidly, and on the following day, which was also damp, it would refuse to work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the matter is one of very great importance, not because of the small service we have, but for the experience this will give the country. I have not been able to give it personal attention, but I am informed that for a long time it was very unsatisfactory, but that latterly it is giving satisfaction. I am asking for a detailed report of all imformation regarding the working of the system and will have that laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Are all the cables in working order now, between the North Shore and Belle Isle, for instance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The cable at the Grosse Isle Quarantine station is out of order. We had a report recently that there is something wrong with the cable at Anticosti, but that is now being attended to.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is the cable at Belle Isle in full working order ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I know that for several seasons this cable has been out of order. I had occasion to write my hon. friend when he was Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), complaining that it was very seldom during the summer season that one could get a telegram to Point Aux Esquimaux. I had occasion to cable to Point Aux Esquimaux several times, and my dispatches were not received. It appears that there is a bay there, and the cable between the two points separated by this bay is almost always out of order, and the way dispatches are sent is to give the dispatch at one point to a schooner which takes it to the other point, some six or seven miles or more distant. This is not a quick method of sending telegrams. If the tide happens to be out or the wind is not right, you do not get your telegram delivered for five or six days.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is speaking of the cable on the North Shore off Anticosti as being out of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not say that it is now out of order, but am calling attention to the fact that it is too often out of order especially during the season of navigation. I wrote the ex-Minister of Public Works on the subject, as he will remember. I do not know what is the cause, but would ask my hon. friend to look into it. Some years ago the 'Scotsman' was wrecked off Belle Isle, and for want of communication between the mainland and Belle Isle the passengers on the 'Scotsman' could not get succour from the mainland. They were three or four days without relief simply because there was no cable communication. Now that you have the Marconi system, the object for which it was established is to give assistance in cases such as I have just mentioned and also to give information at Quebec and other ports as to the state of navigation in these straits—for instance as to whether there are icebergs in the straits and any other information affecting navigation. It is of the greatest importance not only that the cable of the mainland should be kept in perfect working order during the season of navigation, but that these Marconi stations should be so kept up that they will be of service to the country and navigation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that they had a good deal of difficulty with the cable itself to which my hon. friend refers, but that latterly it is working first rate. I am asking for all information and will have a report made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is Mr. Boyer still the chief officer in charge of the lines in the lower St. Lawrence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He is a good official, indeed, and I am glad that he has been kept on.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this amount represent the whole amount paid Mr. Marconi ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We pay no royalty. All we purchased we paid for. My understanding is that on account of the grant we have given, we get the instruments without paying any royalty, and the small amount referred to here is for the maintenance of the two instruments established there. That will cover the salaries of two men and any small repairs there may be. My deputy informs me that the estimate made for the maintenance of this service is $4,200, and I am asking for detailed information with regard to the daily work of these stations. That report ought to be down within the next week, as I do not see why there should be any particular delay.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Might I ask if this item, as well as the other we passed this evening, are in any danger of being transferred to the Marine Department.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Oh, we have had enough of that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I intend to spend this money if allowed to do it.

Mr. OSLER. I was absent for a time, and did not hear the discussion, but perhaps, the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) would give us an idea whether, so far, the Marconi system has worked so satisfactorily as to give evidence of being useful.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have had quite a discussion in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Osler's) absence. I am only too pleased to be able to tell him that the officers of the department consider that latterly the system has been working satisfactorily. What I have engaged to do—and I think it is of public importance to get the information—is to get a statement in detail showing the working of the Marconi system at Belle Isle.

Telegraph lines—North-west Territory, $20,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How far does the hon. minister propose to go to-night ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have been sitting here from three o'clock this afternoon, and it would be very proper for me to say that we took up a lot of time in discussing a matter not at all so important as the voting of these supplies. This is the third or fourth day we have been trying to get a discussion of these items. I think that this item, No. 238, ought to pass to-night.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I suppose there will be something in the supplementary estimates in regard to the Yukon line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have said so. I may say to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that I do not know of any item here the substance of which will not come up at an early day in case any body may wish to discuss them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is very good. Sometimes, the supplementary estimates have not come down at an early day. But my hon. friend says that they will——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will give an undertaking that they will be down at an early day.

Telegraph lines—British Columbia, $15,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is the same as last year. It is for the maintenance of these lines in British Columbia, the payment of salaries and small repairs. I have details here as to where the lines are located, the distances, &c., but my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram), of course, is familiar with them, and would not wish me to give details to-night.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where do we find the statement of the receipts of these lines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the Auditor General's Report.

Telegraph lines—Yukon Territory (Ashcroft-Dawson line and branches), $121,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. May I ask the hon. minister if he is in a position to tell us the receipts and expenditures on the Yukon lines ? If he has not the information at hand, I will wait until the supplementary estimates are before us. Is Mr. Crean still in charge of these lines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has he still Mr. Rochester with him ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who is really in charge, Mr. Rochester or Mr. Crean ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Crean.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Mr. Crean has more authority than Mr. Rochester ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, he is the superintendent. Mr. Rochester, I understand, is sent out to look after the accounts and straighten matters up. The hon. leader of the opposition has asked me to state the receipts and expenditures of last year. In round numbers the receipts were $111,000, and the expenditures $179,000.

Mr. CLANCY. Has there been any lowering of the rates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the rates were lowered from $4.50 to $3.

Mr. CLANCY. When ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last July.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would ask my hon. friend to bring down, as soon as he can, the details of the expenditure. I am somewhat in doubt as to the figures that have been mentioned. I know the hon. gentleman will give his best attention to that item, because when I left office there was some little difficulty that was not settled. I will take it very kindly if he will bring down the details of expenditure as soon as he can—that is to say, before we vote more money for this line, so that the House may know exactly where we stand. I generally had a statement every month, showing the income and expenditure, and I am appalled at the deficit which we have to face.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid, if my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) left some little difficulties existing when he left office, I found some little difficulties existing when I took office. I have been inquiring, and trying to find out how the matter stands ever since. We shall have to ask a supplementary vote, and we can have the matter further discussed. I gave instructions to have a full detailed report with regard to this matter, and I expect to have it ready next week.

Mr. OSLER. I would suggest that this item be allowed to stand over. The sum is an enormous one. During the first year of operating a telegraph in the Yukon, one can understand that the expenses would be heavy, but they might be expected to decrease after the line is in reasonably good order. This sum seems to be so large for the service, that I think we should have the fullest details of the expenditure before the item passes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite agree with that proposition, but I do not see any advantage in allowing this matter to stand. As I have already said, we have to ask for a supplementary vote, and I have promised to bring down the fullest detailed report, which I have ordered to be made some time ago, and which I am informed will be ready next week. There will be another item on which we can discuss the whole matter.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Can we expect that Mr. Rochester will be back before the end of the session ? I have confidence in his judgment and in his honour, and I would like to have him here, if he can be spared from his present post. When I left office I had instructed him to go up there and settle some little difficulties we had. I gave him full authority to take charge of the books and the whole business. I think my letter will be found in the Department of Public Works. I want Mr. Rochester's report.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Rochester is up there carrying out the instructions given him by the minister. There has been no change in his instructions, except that the deputy minister may have informed him that I wanted the matter settled and the fullest details obtained. With regard to the presence of Mr. Rochester here, I may say that when my hon. friend who was at the head of the department gets Mr. Rochester's report, if he is not satisfied with it, then he can get Mr. Rochester to come down. He may be back within the next few weeks, and we can call him back at any time. At present I think he is at White Horse.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that the revenue for the month of April, 1902, on the Yukon telegraph line, was $11,500. How does that compare with last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not yet a return for the present year.

Mr. BLAIN. In a general way, is the revenue increasing on the Yukon telegraph line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since the decrease in the rates in July last, I am afraid there has been a general decrease in the receipts. The increased business has not been sufficient to make up for the reduced rate.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister has before him the revenue for some one month during last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1902 the receipts, in round numbers, were, for July, $12,000; August, $12,000 ; September, $14,000; October, $12,000, November, $7,900; December, $4,733. We can only estimate the receipts since January as we have not the returns.

Mr. OSLER. Did you get the returns of these receipts by mail or by telegraph ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy informs me that they are telegraphed at the end of each month. The last return we have is for February or March.

Mr. SPROULE. It would seem that we are running that line at a loss of $89,000, and still we are told there will be another item in the supplementary estimates in addition. Evidently we are running it at a great loss. We were led to expect that after the line was completed there would be a reduction in the expenses of operation, but we have here for the staff $100,000, and it seems that won't be enough, because we are told there will be another item in the supplementaries for that purpose. We ought to get full information of the revenue and of the expenditures, and we ought to ascertain why the expenditure continues to be so high.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already explained to the committee that this item will have to be increased by some $50,000 or $60,000. I agree that the committee is entitled to the fullest information, and I am desirous of obtaining this information for the committee and for the department, so that we may know whether there is any prospect of reducing the expenditure.

Mr. OSLER. What is the length of the line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In round figures, about 2,000 miles.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How did that line work during the winter months ? Were there many breakages ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were quite a number of accidents through storms and trees falling, and for some days there was no service. But under the circumstances the service is fairly good.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I cannot understand why there is such a large deficit. During the last six months before I left office the revenue was a little over the expenditure, we had a little surplus every month. I am afraid there must be something wrong in the way the accounts have been prepared, because I do not see how we can be running behind so much. Generally we have a balance on the right side.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid my hon. friend must have been misled by the reports he was receiving. But as I say, we cannot discuss this matter intelligently until we have a full statement of the accounts before us, and this we will have in a short time.

Mr. OSLER. I think this item is altogether too large to pass. As the minister has not the information, I do not think we should pass it. I do not think we can pass blindly $121,000 on the promise of the minister that the matter will be discussed on the supplementary estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot agree with my hon. friend. If after full investigation of the accounts of the present year it is shown that this $121,000 will be sufficient, everybody would be very well pleased. I have given the committee the information which, probably if I had wanted to get this vote through I might have withheld. I have said that, basing it upon the estimate of last year, it will require $58,000 in round numbers, and that before a vote was asked for in the supplementary estimates we would have a full return in regard to the expenses and operation of the line and all the accounts explained and that we would then ask only what was necessary.

Mr. OSLER. How is this estimate of $121,000 made up ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for salaries and expenses in connection with the operation of the line.

Mr. OSLER. Give us the details then ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is very unreasonable at this hour of the night to ask me to go through this long list of names, but I will do it if the hon. gentleman insists.

Mr. OSLER. It seems to me that on an item of $121,000 we should have more information, especially when the hon. minister acknowledged that he has not the information to give to the committee.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never made any such statement.

Mr. OSLER. I beg pardon, because I understand that is what the hon. gentleman said. He said that he could not give the information as to the expenditures and how they were incurred until he had further information, and that he hoped later on when the supplementary estimates came down that he would be able to give that information. This is altogether too large an item to pass without having full information upon it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken. The accounts that my hon. friend is referring to I have given in detail and it is quite a different thing from the matter of voting money for the maintenance and operation of the line. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was asking for the full accounts in connection with the expenditure for the current year. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. OSLER. I am asking for the particulars of the expenditure under the estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend insists upon it I will have to read this list. But he will see how unreasonable his request is in view of the ten or twelve hour sitting we have had.

Mr. OSLER. Nothing is unreasonable when you are asking for information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, certainly not, when you are asking for information, but I will leave it to the committee if in connection with any item that has ever been presented in the history of parliament it is usual to require a minister to stand up and read page after page of the names of employees with the monthly pay they are receiving and to give every detail to show how the estimate is made up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is quite within the right of any one to ask for that information, but at the same time there is no desire to take up time unduly. Would it not be better to let the hon. Minister of Public Works hand the statement to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) and then we probably could dispose of these items in a few minutes at the next sitting of the House ?

Mr. OSLER. Yes, I only want to get the information as to how this expenditure is made up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Osler) has not been here for days and days, and weeks and weeks, during which we have been sitting night after night. We are most anxious to get on with the business of the House. If he would make any reasonable proposition I would be only too delighted to comply with his request.

Mr. OSLER. In your position surely you must expect to be called upon to do some work and you must not grumble if it takes you some time to get through with your estimates. All I want to know is what this expenditure is for. Is it for salaries, or for maintenance ? This is not an item that we can be reasonably asked to pass without full information.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Perhaps the hon. minister would be in a position to tell us what is the monthly expenditure for the working of the Dawson line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The estimate of the expenditure for next year for salaries, as it has been made up, is $123,885.12. I have detailed information showing every man's name, his occupation, and the amount of his salary.

Mr. OSLER. How many officers are there in this service ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 125.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us what was the expenditure, say, for the month of March ? We used to have a report every month of the expenditure and revenue.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The report has not reached the department yet as to the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has there been a telegraphic report for February ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The average salaries would perhaps be about $11,000 per month.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We thought it would be about that much when I left office. Again I say I cannot understand why we have such a deficit.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unless the salaries alone can be reduced very much next year I do not think there should be any objection to granting this present estimate now of $121,000 because I have explained to the committee that unless the expenditure can be materially reduced for the coming year we will have to ask for a supplementary vote. The ex-Minister of Public Works said that he had sent a man out there in whom he had every confidence to make a full inquiry and report. I have no reason to doubt either the honesty or the qualifications of the gentleman he sent there to make this report, and when we get it we will have the officers of the department make a detailed statement of everything in connection with the expenditure as to the building of the line and as to the operation of it during the past year. Then the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) as well as other hon. gentlemen can exercise their judgment as to whether any reduction can be made in future or any change in the rates charged.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I cannot understand how it is that we have lost such a large amount of money on that line. During the last six months before I left office the expenditure and the revenue were about equal. We had some little balance in our favour and I cannot understand how we made a loss of $70,000 a year. I am very much afraid that the accounts have been prepared by somebody in such a way as to charge to working expenses sums of money that should have been charged to some other account.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend who was in the department when this line was undertaken and built knows that what I say is perfectly correct. The estimates sent in for salaries alone amounts to $123,889.92; provisions, $11,540; freight, &c., $19,376; and other expenses, $24,000, amounting to $175,900, and the vote asked for is $121,000. This is perhaps a disappointing estimate in comparison with the receipts, but I desire the House to be put in full information of all the facts, to see if any change can be made in the expenses of operation, and the full information will be given when it is obtained. No one has a stronger desire than I have, to find out whether the expenses can be made to come closer to the receipts.

Mr. OSLER. Is there an office every sixteen miles ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a house of refuge every sixteen miles and the offices are about thirty miles apart.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I hope I have made myself properly understood. I instructed Mr. Rochester to take charge of the whole organization and I hope my instructions have been followed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as I am concerned no change has been made in the instructions given. Nothing has been brought to my attention to create any doubt as to his qualifications and good intentions, and whatever instructions were given, if he has carried them out faithfully, are the instructions he is working under.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has Mr. Rochester made any report as yet ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is in communication with the deputy from time to time, but his report as to the full statement has not come yet.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am quite sure that such a deficit as has been mentioned is not the genuine deficit of last year. I knew the circumstances before I left office, and unless there has been some accident and something charged to the working expenses which might be charged in some other way, I think the line is about self-sustaining.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will get all that information.

Mr. SPROULE. When a minister comes to ask for such a vote as this, he ought to be prepared to give us information and not ask us to vote $123,000 blind. We have had difficulty in getting information about this on previous occasions and every succeeding year the difficulty seems to be getting worse.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have given the estimate made by the officers of the department, and I have the details here as to the salaries and the persons who receive them. The estimate is based on the expenditure of last year and that is the only way an estimate can be made. I do not know what the hon. gentleman refers to when he says he did not get satisfactory information in the past. I have all the information on which this estimate is based, but we are speaking of a separate matter, namely, the details for the current year.

Mr. SPROULE. My complaint is that this is all estimate without any intelligent data being given.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is based upon the actual expenditure of past years as contained in the books of the department.

Mr. OSLER.

Mr. SPROULE. And if we ask for this information later on we may be met with the reply that it is not to hand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think that is a fair statement to make. These people have to be paid monthly, and I am sorry to say that as the appropriation has been overdrawn, they have not received their pay for some time. What we have been speaking about is the detailed accounts which have not yet come in.

Mr. OSLER. We should know the cost of operating the line and the cost of keeping it in repair. I do not think that there is any necessity for an office every sixteen miles in such a country as that, and that is perhaps the reason why there is a deficit.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have all the information here, but it would take a long time to read it, and I would be pleased if my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) would permit me to hand him a copy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister will send a copy to my hon. friend (Mr. Osler).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall be pleased indeed.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In moving the adjournment of the House, permit me to call attention to a telegram which I have received, and which will be very gratifying to members on both sides. The flag was placed at half-mast to-day, not only because of the funeral of the late Mr. Justice Mills, but also because the announcement was made of the death of Senator Cochrane, of Hillhurst, Que. A telegram has been placed in my hand from a member of Mr. Cochrane's family contradicting the report of his death, and stating that the hon. gentleman is much better.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business does the hon. gentleman expect to take up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are several notices of motion and resolutions in committee which will be taken up first, and after that Supply. The Minister of Justice will proceed with his estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are two or three items under Public Works which were allowed to stand, and they might be cleaned up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will proceed, then, with the Public Works' estimates first, and after that, if the Minister of Justice is present, we will take his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 14, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

FINANCIAL TERMS BETWEEN CANADA AND NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. BELL—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. How often and at what dates were financial terms arranged between the Dominion of Canada and the province of Nova Scotia, between January 1, 1872, and July 1, 1896 ?

2. By what amount was the sum payable to Nova Scotia increased by these different arrangements ?

3. What sum is at present at credit of the government of Nova Scotia, bearing interest, with the government of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). No financial terms were arranged between the Dominion of Canada and the province of Nova Scotia between the dates mentioned. There were general readjustments in 1873 and 1884 of the debt accounts of the various provinces, but they had no special relation to Nova Scotia.

3. The sum now at the credit of Nova Scotia in the debt account is $1,056,111.12.

ST. LOUIS INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, 1904.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

Is it the intention of the government to take part in the St. Louis International Exhibition in 1904 ? If so, will the Canadian commissioners be simply attachés to the British commission, as in Paris in 1900 ; or will they be given all the rights and privileges of an independent national commission, such as were granted to Canada at the Philadelphia International Exhibition of 1876 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It is the intention of the government to take part in the St. Louis International Exhibition in 1904.

The Canadian commissioner or commissioners who may be appointed will not be attachés to the British commission, but will be independent of it. The rights and privileges of the Canadian commission have not yet been determined.

DOMINION ELECTIONS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved :

That a Select Committee, composed of Messrs. Charlton, Casgrain, Russell, Barker, Demers (St. John and Iberville), Northrup, Thompson (Haldimand), and Ingram, and the mover, be appointed to consider the state of the laws respecting Dominion elections ; with power to report from time to time. And that the order respecting Bill No. 3, intituled : 'An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900,' be discharged ; and that the said Bill be referred to the said committee.

He said : Mr. Speaker, at an earlier stage in the session a discussion arose on the election law in connection with a Bill introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). In the course of that discussion I ventured to suggest that if any good could be accomplished in the way of improving the election law, it might be possible to bring it about by the appointment of a committee representing both sides of the House which would study the subject and which would probably then be able to make a report to the House. That suggestion found general favour, and after consultation with the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) I placed this motion on the notice paper. I am by no means too confident that we can reform all the evils which are sometimes mentioned in connection with elections. I am afraid that some of them lie more deeply than legislation, and that in respect to some of them we would have to reform human nature before we could entirely remove them. However, I think that no harm could possibly result but that some good may come of the study of this question by a joint committee in the manner suggested. Therefore without further words, I beg to move that a committee be appointed for the purpose named. I move the motion which stands in my name.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) be good enough to tell us whether this inquiry will involve the duty of looking into the conduct of elections, the actions of officers connected with elections and offences committed during elections ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not understand that the committee will undertake to look into any election that is past.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I mean the law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, anything which will help to improve the election law would, I think, come under the view of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The point I wish to make is this : At the present time only the deputy returning officer is allowed to place his initial upon, or to touch the ballot which is handed to the voter. It was my intention to bring in a Bill to deal with this subject, but when I saw that another hon. member had a Bill before the House, I thought that I would have an opportunity to offer an amendment. I think that not only the deputy returning officer should initial the ballot, but that the agent of the candidate should also be allowed to place any distinctive mark he chooses in proper form on the stub of the ballot, so that it may be identified. Would that point be eligible to be brought before the committee ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, in my judgment, it would. That is our intention.

Mr. BELL. I presume the intention of this motion is to lay before this committee all the laws at present relating to the conduct of Dominion elections, and those that are intended to deal with irregularities at elections. It will, I presume, involve the introduction of a new Bill, although I observe that Bill No. 3, introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), is referred to a special committee for consideration. I would suppose that the intention is to review all the legislation now in existence in Canada in reference to the conducting of elections and in reference to irregularities or wrongs done at elections, with the view of introducing a Bill that will cover the ground and probably of substituting some more efficient legislation than that which we now have.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would be our desire, and certainly all these matters will come within the authority of the committee, and if they should be able to reach a conclusion that would, I should think, be in the shape of a Bill to be submitted to the House. Certainly what the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has suggested would come within the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose that would include the Election Act as well as the Controverted Elections Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not see why we should not include both.

Mr. BELL. And no doubt it would also include the introduction of some measures which are altogether new—for instance, compulsory voting.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It might be so. The committee would have a free hand.

Motion agreed to.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) if they would find it convenient to lay on the Table of the House all communications or memoranda containing suggestions on the revision of the tariff? Of course, I mean those which are not of a confidential nature. It would be, I think, very convenient to have them. It would help greatly in the debate that we are going to resume shortly on the fiscal policy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I do not know that we could have any objection to it. I can only say that if the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) had desired it, I wish he could have asked for it at an earlier stage in the session. The correspondence will be somewhat voluminous. There is certainly no reason why we should object to the production of any part that is not marked 'confidential,' but I would expect that the motion which my hon. friend might make would call for so much that it would take some time and considerable work in the preparation of the return. However, from a governmental point of view, there is no reason why we should not bring it down if the House desires it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. With the indulgence of the House I would say that if I am expected to make a motion it might take a little more time than it would if my hon. friends would consent to bring down as much of the correspondence as it is possible for them to do. I suppose that these documents are in shape and that it would not be much trouble to lay them on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would be glad at a later stage to make an announcement on the subject. The point is quite new. I did not anticipate bringing the papers down, not, however, on account of any objection on our part. I did not suppose they would be asked for or desired.

Mr. BELL. They are not confidential.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some of them may be.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Those I do not ask for.

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY LABOUR DISPUTES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved third reading of Bill (No. 17) to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes.

Mr. CLARKE. I thought the hon. gentleman would have the amendments printed before he moved the third reading of the Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection. Let it stand.

Debate adjourned.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRY DOCKS—GOVERNMENT AID.

House went into committee on the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to repeal section 1 of chapter 9 of the statutes of 1899, and enact, in lieu thereof, the following section:—

If any company or body corporate, approved by the Governor in Council, as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with His Majesty to construct a dry dock, with all proper and necessary equipment, machinery and plant, for the reception and repairing of vessels, at a place, and according to plans and specifications approved by the Governor in Council, on a report by the Minister of Public Works, as sufficient for the requirements of the public at such place; the work to be completed within a time to be limited by such agreement. Then, provided the company performs the work according to such agreement, and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, under the supervision of whose department the work shall be done, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, of a subsidy not exceeding three per cent per annum on the cost of the work during twenty years from the time of its completion and acceptance by the said minister ; provided that such subsidy shall not exceed thirty thousand dollars per annum ; and that the cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work as estimated by the said minister. Provided also, that the subsidy shall not be payable for any portion of the said twenty years during which the dock is not in complete repair and working order.—The Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This resolution proposes to amend an Act which has been on the statute-book for several years. Some years ago the government constructed some docks as government works, but apart from that an Act was placed on the statute-book making provision for grants by way of aid to incorporated companies which might construct docks of the proper character subject to the approval of the government. The original arrangement was that that aid might take the shape of a subsidy equal to 2 per cent on the cost of the dock, for a period of twenty years, not exceeding, however, in any case, $10,000 per annum, which would be 2 per cent upon $500,000. That was the state of the law for some time. In the year 1899, an amendment was made whereby we still retained the 2 per cent, but we enlarged the amount upon which the payment might be made in order that docks of a larger capacity might be constructed. The Act as it now stands makes provision for payments of 2 per cent upon the cost of the dock, not exceeding, however, $20,000 per annum. The change which we now propose is to make the rate which we may pay by way of subsidy, 3 per cent instead of 2 per cent, and with a corresponding change in the total amount—instead of 2 per cent, or $20,000 we may pay in the case stated, 3 per cent, or $30,000 per annum. The change is entirely with respect to the rate per cent. It has been found that some difficulty has been experienced in floating companies to build these docks upon the present basis, and it is represented to us that if this increase be made, docks would be constructed in some places where otherwise they might not be. The only dock constructed under the old Act was the one at Halifax which was constructed by the joint aid of the imperial, the Dominion and the city governments. The city of Halifax paid a certain sum per annum, the Dominion government a certain sum per annum, and the imperial government gave a subsidy in consideration of which the ships of His Majesty's navy were received into the dock. There is a dock proposed and some progress has been made on it at Collingwood, Ontario, which no doubt would come in under the operation of this Act. They have been negotiating, and a contract was made on the basis of the present Act, but I think not much progress has been made, and I suppose the Collingwood Company would expect to avail themselves of the advantages of this Act. Another dock which has been brought to our notice is at the port of St. John, N.B., where it is represented that with this increased aid, the company will be able to establish a dock of a large character adapted to the increasing trade of the port. The policy of all governments in times past having been to aid works of this character, the only question is one of proportion, and inasmuch as 2 per cent has not been found a sufficient sum to bring about the construction of any docks in recent years, it is proposed to enlarge the aid by granting 3 per cent ; with the maximum of $30,000 per annum for a period of twenty years.

Mr. MONK. Have any companies, except that at Collingwood, applied for the aid provided for by this resolution ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I am correct in saying that no application has been made by any other company. Occasionally mention has been made of projects in other quarters, but I think I am right in saying that no application has been made by any company except the company at St. John and the company at Collingwood.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Of course the plans will be submitted in the usual way for approval by the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no change whatever in the words of the Act in that respect.

Mr. MONK. Is it contemplated that the government itself will not in future build any dry docks ? I speak of this, because for a long time we had expected that the government would construct a dry dock in the vicinity of the port of Montreal. Would we be met by the objection, that now that this system has been inaugurated it would be incumbent upon some private parties to organize themselves into a dock company in order to come under the provisions of this resolution ; or, would the government still persist in what has been promised to the port of Montreal, and build a dry dock there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must not discuss the question of any promise to any particular port ; but under this Act any body corporate, which would include the Harbour Commissioners, if they should see fit, could come in and obtain the benefits of this Act. Whether or not the government will in any case or in no case build or not build a dock in the future ; that is too definite a question for me to answer. In the present instance, the wording of the Act is such that if the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal desire to come in under the operations of this Act, they would receive the aid. As to whether or not the government will in that case, or in other cases undertake the construction of the work as a government dock, that is a matter that would have to be considered hereafter. I am not at present able to say anything more definite.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is not a new policy at all. It is simply the extension in a small way of the existing policy which has been in force for over twenty years. The inference which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) fears may possibly be drawn from this Bill, is an inference that could as well be drawn from any previous Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should have added that though the resolution before the House only deals, as the parliamentary rules require, with the money side of the question; in the Bill to be founded thereon, provision will be made that the tolls to be charged on any dock to be constructed hereafter shall be subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council. That has not been so in the past, but that restriction will be placed upon any docks constructed hereafter under the terms of this Act.

Mr. BENNETT. In considering an application to aid in the construction of a dock under this Act, would the first consideration be that there would have to be a certain amount expended for the work to be constructed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have made no rule in that regard. We have rather taken for granted that docks of large size would be undertaken. The only limit is that we shall only pay the 3 per cent on the fair cost of construction; and though the cost may be very much larger than the limit fixed, the amount of the subsidy cannot exceed $30,000. In the case of the Halifax dock the cost was very much larger than the estimated cost on which the government subsidy was paid.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not say that private enterprise must not be encouraged in cases of this kind. I think that what has suggested the present Bill is the case of the dock at St. John, N.B. Some very energetic citizens took up the proposal to erect a dock there. I understand that they received some encouragement or had some hopes of aid from the imperial government. Those hopes did not materialize. If I am not mistaken, they also received some help from the provincial government and from the city of St. John; but they could not get along without some further help. I quite agree with my hon. friends that the measure before the House to-day is worthy of approval. I may say also that the dock at Collingwood is being built by very energetic men. But we must not rely too much on private enterprise in large transactions of this kind. There is no country in the world which is more lacking in dock accommodation than Canada. The United States have many small docks, but they have not one large dock. During the last season there were in the St. Lawrence at one time four or five large ships which suffered damages and could not get accommodation either at Montreal or elsewhere. Suppose an accident happened between Belle Isle and Quebec; there is only one dock at Quebec, and one at Montreal, a very small one, belonging to a private firm. I would call the attention of my hon. friends on the treasury benches to the great importance of equipping our harbours with this necessary improvement. Graving docks are essential to-day, and they will become more and more essential as our fleet increases in size and number.

Mr. BELL. What about the dock at Lévis?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The dock at Lévis can only accommodate one ship at a time, and it is too narrow for the largest ships that ply in our waters. The boards of trade of Montreal and Quebec have applied for a second dock at Lévis. We should also have one at Montreal. I only say these few words in passing, in order to call the attention of my hon. friends to this important question.

Mr. BENNETT. While I do not propose to offer any objection to the resolution, perferring to wait until the Bill is brought down, it seems to me, on the face of the resolution, that unless the Bill goes further, a great deal of difficulty will arise. Since the case of the Collingwood dock has been instanced, let me call the minister's attention to the fact that there is also a dock at Owen Sound. I think the Collingwood dock was originally larger than the one at Owen Sound; but if this Bill goes into effect, the people of Owen Sound will no doubt come and ask that the dock there which has been enlarged at the expense of the company who own it, probably with the aid of the town, be assisted by the government. To my mind the government should lay down a hard and fast principle as a starting point, to the effect that the docks to be subsidized shall be placed at a certain distance from each other, or that only one dock shall be aided in a particular water. I am not in a position to state what was the original cost of the Collingwood dock; but unless a very large amount is expended in improving and enlarging it, it seems to me that $30,000 will be a very large grant towards it. Under the wording of the resolution, the $30,000 might be a greater inducement to the company than 3 per cent of the amount invested.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But they can only get 3 per cent on the cost of the dock, and in any case the amount must not exceed $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not notice that it was optional. When the Bill comes down, I think there should be some provision inserted in it as to the size of docks to be aided and the distance that they must be from each other. Otherwise assistance will be asked for very small docks, and the result will be a multiplicity of small docks instead of the establishment of a few large ones.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the hon. minister say that if this Bill becomes law, it will apply to the Collingwood dock ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What I said was that I supposed the Collingwood company would expect to come under this Act in the same way as the company which built the dock at St. John. As not much progress has been made with the work at Colingwood——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BENNETT. The dock has been there for twenty years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But I understand that the whole dock is to be reconstructed.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I read the resolution, the aid is to be granted towards the construction of new docks, but not towards the enlargement or improvement of existing docks. I would like to know from the minister what the intention is in that respect ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the Collingwood dock in its original construction had been subsidized by the government, then anything done later would be an enlargement ; but as it did not receive any government aid in its original form, all the work done on it now is practically new construction. I understand that there is none of the small original dock remaining, but that the whole dock is being reconstructed ; and, as in the first place it received no government aid, it will be treated as an entirely new construction.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The old dock at Collingwood was simply a hole and nothing else.

Mr. BENNETT. I understood the hon. minister to say that this is simply in pursuance of a policy inaugurated a number of years ago, and that the only change was an increase in the percentage from two to three. Might I ask whether under the Order in Council or statutory law, there is a condition precedent that the dock to be constructed should cost a certain amount ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is not any such condition, but the plans have to be submitted to the Minister of Public Works and by him to the Governor General in Council for approval. Whether there should be any amount fixed may be a matter for consideration, but we are simply following the policy laid down in the Act in times past.

Mr. BENNETT. I notice that the Act was first passed in 1899, so that it must have been passed during the hon. gentleman's term of office. Have any companies taken advantage of the two per cent clause ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Act of 1899 was an amendment. The original Act was passed many years before.

Mr. MONK. I think that we should encourage the building of dry docks, but under the provision of this resolution, it will be in the power of the government to grant very large amounts of public money without the special authorization of parliament. I would invite my hon. friend to consider that point when framing his Bill. For instance, when this resolution becomes law, the government will be empowered to grant over $2,000,000 of public money without the special authority of parliament—$30,000 a year for twenty years. And as the construction of these docks may become frequent, although we are proceeding on a law which has been in force a number of years, I think that it is worthy of consideration whether it is prudent to give such a very large power of disposing of public funds to the Governor General in Council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The best answer to my hon. friend is that this Act, in one form or other, has been on the statute since 1882, and up to the present we have only subsidized one dock under it. We may, therefore, conclude that the difficulty surrounding the construction and carrying on of large enterprises of that character will always impose certain checks on the demand for public aid, although, of course, by this amendment, we are making temptation stronger than it was in the past.

Mr. SPROULE. In my opinion the trouble will be that the percentage proposed, is not high enough, because these docks have not hitherto been paying investments by any means. The percentage is not sufficient inducement for capitalists to put money into such enterprises, and, I think, that the government might very well make it much higher.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend's criticism has something in it. It shows that the risk involved is a protection against any excessive payments under the Act. But I hope that the increase from two to three per cent will lead to the construction of one or two docks. The Collingwood dock will be finished and we will probably have one at St. John. Possibly other applications may come forward, and if there are sections where such accommodation is needed, we shall not regret supplying a portion of the means to furnish it.

Mr. BENNETT. What are we to understand by sections of the country ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier expressed the fear that under this Bill we might incur too large liabilities, but on the other hand my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says that financial responsibilities involved in the construction of these docks are such that unless we give very liberal aid, such works will not be constructed at all. He says that, even with the aid we are now giving, we will not find companies prepared to undertake the risk and the responsibility.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to say that this is a very old policy. Was it in existence before 1899 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said that the original statute was passed twenty years ago, which my hon. friend may not consider very old.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The first Act was passed in 1882.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Has the hon. minister received any applications from any parties in Owen Sound with regard to increasing the capacity of the dry dock there ? And is it the intention of the government to give such parties any assistance ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works is the one to whom any such application would be addressed, and I would leave him to answer my hon. friend. As to whether any assistance would be given, I cannot say at present. It is not likely that these docks will be constructed close together. The cost of construction will be large, and if the demands of business are met in any one place, business men will not build another dock close by. Each case will be decided on its merits by the Governor General in Council, and the limitations I have suggested will regulate and restrict applications.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). The reason why I asked whether any application had been made is because one of the strongest arguments used in favour of the Liberal candidate, that if elected, the government would furnish assistance for the purpose of enlarging the dry dock at Owen Sound. I would ask whether the government authorized the holding out of any such inducement on that occasion, and whether it is the intention by this proposed Act to enlarge the dry docks at Owen Sound ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If any application were made, it must have gone to the Minister of Public Works. If any application should come from Owen Sound or any part of Canada, it will be considered and dealt with on its merits.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Owen Sound is a very much larger and more important business centre than Collingwood. The business done there is very large, and It is important that the dry dock should be enlarged. This Bill is in the right direction. We require a larger dry dock in Owen Sound, and although the people there did not support me in the last election, to the extent they would, on account of these promises, I hope they will get the increased percentage on the same terms as Collingwood and other places mentioned by the Finance Minister.

Mr. BENNETT. It is now in order for the Minister of Customs to support the claims of Owen Sound, because when he was politically wrecked in South Brant he was put in dry docks in North Grey.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend from North Grey was referred to the hon. Minister of Public Works for a reply to the question he put, as to whether any communication had been received from any party in Owen Sound respecting the giving of government aid for the enlargement of the dock there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will take a note of the question and inquire whether any such communications have been received at the department or not. I cannot speak from memory. I did not make any promise and am not able to say what the policy of the government may be regarding this matter.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I did not understand the hon. minister to give a direct reply to the hon. member from Simcoe as to when this legislation by Order in Council on this particular subject was inaugurated. I see by the Bill that it repeals the clause of 1899. Was that the first legislation of this kind ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, that of 1882.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Was it on the same lines—that they could build a dock at any point they saw fit ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the wording of the Act is precisely the same in that respect as the Act of 1882; and, although, by the amending Act, power was given to the government to give this subvention to a dock anywhere, as a matter of fact only one dock was subsidized under the Act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask what success this company has had in obtaining subscriptions to stock. I have a circular issued by that concern in August, 1902, which says :

The Dominion government recognizes the necessity in the public interest of an enlarged dry dock and has decided to grant a liberal subsidy for a term of twenty years ; the annual payments to be based upon the outlays made upon the work, and to begin, upon its completion to the satisfaction of the government engineer. The Dominion government already grants a small bounty on the tonnage of steel steamships constructed in Canada.

This is a circular in which they ask subscriptions to the stock of the company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not understand what document the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) was reading from.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A document issued by the Collingwood Ship Building Company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already stated that there is a dock in course of construction at Collingwood, that, no doubt, it would get the benefit of this Act. Hitherto they have had the benefit of the Act authorizing a payment of 2 per cent. If this Bill passes, no doubt the Collingwood Company will expect that their company will get the benefit of it, as the dock is nearing completion.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I understand that this Bill is specially designed for the benefit of the dry dock in the town of Collingwood. Now, there has been a dry dock in Owen Sound for twenty years, and I would like to know if this Bill applies equally to Owen Sound ? We want our dry dock enlarged. And, if this 3 per cent is to apply to the enlargement of other dry docks, we want it to be applied to the one in Owen Sound. As I said before, Owen Sound is the most important shipping point on Georgian bay, or, for that matter on the upper lakes. Hence, I would like a definite answer from the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should like to be as definite as I can. I had the pleasure of visiting Owen Sound. It is a very charming place.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister was warmly received there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In many respects Owen Sound does its duty. My only regret is that some other parts of the county are not so sensible. I would like to say to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Thomson) that the only difference that I know between the two cases is, that I am not aware that the owners of the dock at Owen Sound have made any application for aid, whereas the owners of the dock at Collingwood have done so. When people want aid of this kind, though they may go to the Minister of Public Works, they generally find time to call on the Minister of Finance and ask that he do not stand in their way. I have heard from the Collingwood and St. John people. It may be that there is an application from Owen Sound, although they neglected to call on me; but to the best of my knowledge, no application has been received from them. If an application comes, it will have to be dealt with on its merits.

Mr. THOMSON (Grey). I may say that, even if the parties in control of the dry dock in North Grey failed to call on the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Finance did not forget to call on the electors of North Grey. We had the pleasure of a visit not only from the Finance Minister but also from the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) and the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), and they received their answer. Nevertheless, we want to have a large dock in Owen Sound, and we want this Bill to apply to that work.

Mr. INGRAM. When I asked the Minister of Finance if this would apply to the Collingwood dock, I understood him to say that the Collingwood dock people did not know anything about it. Now, it appears that these people called on the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say otherwise.

Mr. INGRAM. I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman, but I certainly thought he said that they knew nothing about this legislation.

Mr. HOLMES. Sitting here at a little distance from the Minister of Finance, I am not sure that I have exactly heard his answers to hon. gentlemen opposite, and I want to understand clearly. I understand that this is simply a provision under which dry docks throughout the Dominion, if not too close together, may, on certain conditions, obtain government assistance. Is that the point ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the point, except that the Act does not say anything about their being too close together. That is left to the government, but there is no limit in the Bill.

Mr. HOLMES. It does not apply to Collingwood specially or to any other place specially ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The day before yesterday, I received a letter from large contractors in Vancouver, which city I have the honour to represent, saying that, since the government have decided to raise this subsidy from 2 to 3 per cent, they expect to build a large dock. There has never been any question about this matter with us. We know that when the government bring down a Bill like this, they mean business. I think this is a very commendable proposition indeed, and I know that the fact of making this Bill law will result in our having a very large dock erected in Vancouver.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask on what authority the directors of this Collingwood Company make this announcement, in their circular of 1902, that :

The government has decided to grant a liberal subsidy for a term of twenty years ; the annual payments to be based upon the outlays made upon the work, and to begin, upon its completion to the satisfaction of the government engineer.

In the same circular, later on they say :

While we believe the improvements to be afforded by the additional capital will very materially increase the earnings of the company, we do not expect a higher dividend than six per cent per annum at present.

It would appear that they expect a large annual subsidy from the government for twenty years. Upon what authority did they make that announcement ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So far as concerns any past transaction the authority given to the government by legislation was to pay a subsidy of 2 per cent. From this time forward, if this Bill passes, we shall have authority to pay 3 per cent. The Collingwood dock is in course of construction, and it certainly is one of the docks that will have the aid of the government—there is no question about that. I think the information was given last year that the Collingwood dock was seeking and would receive aid. At all events it has been announced that the government would aid the Collingwood dock.

Mr. McCARTHY. I presume that the document quoted by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) is the prospectus of the Collingwood Ship-building Company. Every hon. member knows that a dry dock company makes little or nothing. A ship-building company, on the other hand, may make the dividends referred to in the prospectus. I cannot speak as to this company, having nothing to do with it, good, bad or indifferent. But the hon. gentleman will see that the prospectus is in respect to the building of ships, and one of the advantages which the company would have would be that they would be in a position to use this dry dock. The dry dock is only used to take a ship into for the purpose of repair. So, what the hon. gentleman has read applies to the prospective dividends in respect to the building of ships and not for the use of the dry docks for other purposes than repairing ships.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish first to be understood as not speaking in any spirit of hostility to any grant being given to the dry dock at Collingwood. Although I live in a lake town which does a very much larger shipping business, so far at all events as grain goes, than the town of Collingwood, I admire the pluck and energy of the people of Collingwood in constructing the large dock there, and in establishing certain lines of passenger boats which run to that point and have their headquarters there, and which are certainly a credit, not only to Collingwood, but to the Dominion of Canada. Now, speaking of this prospectus which is before the House, it is headed 'The Collingwood Ship-building Company,' and it throws a little light on what the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has said, that this prospectus is not referrable solely to any money that is to be expended in the advancement or enlargement of the dock at that point.

Mr. McCARTHY. I did not say it was not referrable to any money to be expended.

Mr. BENNETT. Not exclusively, he said; that is what I intended to convey. According to this document, the authorized capital is to be $2,000,000, which is referrable to the ship-building industry, and also to the establishment of a dry dock at that point. Of the capital issue there is paid up $550,000, and it is intended to issue $300,000 of new stock, of which $80,000 has already been subscribed. The date of that prospectus is August 12, 1902. Now, I assume that the largest part of this capital of $850,000 is to be put in the dry dock, and I have understood that the cost will nearly approach that sum. I understand that the company were of necessity compelled to purchase valuable real estate, so a part of the $850,000 would of necessity be expended for that purpose too. Now, the House must see that the amount to be expended upon the Collingwood dock as a whole will probably reach over half a million dollars. It was announced over a year ago that the Collingwood Dry Dock Company was to have the grant on these terms, then it may be taken for granted that any dock that is to be assisted, if this is to be taken as a precedent, must of necessity cost half a million dollars. Now, I submit that when a Bill is brought down following this resolution, it should be firmly laid down in the Bill that the cost of the dock must be a certain amount, otherwise what will be the effect ? Let me tell the Minister of Finance that in the province of Ontario the people have gone mad on what is known as the bonusing system, rival towns seeking to promote their interests will give bonuses to manufacturing concerns. We have there within a distance of seventy-five miles, on the coast line, the towns of Owen Sound, Collingwood and Midland, all ambitious. And if the government are going to grant such liberal subsidies as under this Bill they will grant, of necessity the result will be a great competition between these towns. I submit it is fair to the people of the town of Midland to have the government announce a line of policy, so that we may set our house in order and get ready for the government grant. When the Bill is brought down, it should state distinctly what amount must be the cost of the dock before it will be assisted by the government, otherwise it would be giving the government in advance a great deal of political leverage, because a certain town may be preferred by the government, and therefore get the benefit, while others may be cast to one side. I submit that when the Bill is brought down, there should be in it a clear cut statement as to what amount must be expended on the dock before it will receive assistance under this Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is another remark to be made in connection with this legislation. The Finance Minister is right in saying that the principle of making grants to dry docks by Order in Council was established in 1882, but the grant was then limited to $10,000. In 1899, after hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, they made it $20,000; but the necessities of Collingwood have become such that they now treble the grant and make it $30,000. Now, I can conceive that there may be cases, and probably this is one, where a small amount might be granted by Order in Council, say $10,000. The hon. gentleman also states what is no doubt correct, that when only $10,000 was granted, only one dry dock claimed assistance. But I object entirely to legislation of this kind, especially when you go beyond small amounts. Here the Finance Minister is asking us to authorize the government to issue as many million dollars as they please, provided some one will undertake to construct a dry dock. Now, when it comes to an amount that is equal to a capitalization of a million dollars, I think parliament ought to be consulted. When $10,000 was the limit the Conservative government found it was quite sufficient. Why cannot this government get up a scheme and bring it before parliament, providing that every sum to be granted must be subject to the sanction of parliament? This system is wrong in principle, it is liable to be abused, and it makes people suspicious of such a power in the hands of the government when they can exercise it by Order in Council. There is no better illustration of the objectionable character of this system than is furnished by the town of Collingwood. Does my hon. friend who represents it, and represents it well, claim that it is his ability alone that has made that town a Liberal instead of a Conservative town? There has been a lot of money spent and a lot of promises made in regard to public works in Owen Sound and vicinity about election times, not the last election, but the previous one, where we heard statements about 'cold justice' and 'warm justice,' and so on. We have a right to suspect that this power which is now sought may be exercised. I won't say it will be, but it puts the government of the day, I do not care which party may be in power, in the position of being suspected of using that power for political advantage. Any legislation of that kind, which enables a government by Order in Council to control public funds for party purposes, I am opposed to, especially if the amount is at all large. I approve of the restrictions such as my hon. friend from Simcoe mentions; I approve of assistance being limited to deserving places; but I think that before sums exceeding $10,000 are granted, parliament should be consulted before granting the money. In that case nobody could suspect the government, nobody would have a right to impute improper motives, and the government would be following a sound constitutional principle. There is no reason why it would not be just as easy to form a company to build a dry dock when the grant of a subsidy is subject to parliament as it would be if the government granted the subsidy by Order in Council. Again I say, I object to the principle of giving this power to the government without surrounding it with constitutional safeguards, more particularly when the subsidy amounts to a considerable sum.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I beg to say a word on behalf of the Collingwood people. I am largely responsible for the work that has been carried on there.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I am not saying a word against the Collingwood people.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When I undertook to recommend to my colleagues the construction of the works at Collingwood, the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy was a member of parliament. He was not then a strong supporter of the government. He was quite an independent member of this House. I was invited to a banquet at the board of trade. Banquets have something good about them, and that Collingwood banquet was a great one indeed. I found around the table energetic, sterling business men. They represented to me that if some encouragement were given to them they would do their share to promote the development of the port, one of the most important ports on the great lakes. I came down to Ottawa fully convinced that this was a deserving case. I represented to my colleagues that it was important that the government should carry out the improvements that had been undertaken there years and years ago and which were not completed. My colleagues were good enough to agree with the recommendations I made then. The improvements have been carried out. What has been the result of these improvements? The population of the town of Collingwood has nearly doubled and large industries have sprung up. The people of Collingwood have done their part and for the improvements we have made there we have been paid in hard cash in the shape of development and progress. Let my hon. friend permit me to tell him that there was no political cajoling about Collingwood. These Collingwood men are business men before everything else. The government treated them fairly and they have acted in good faith. These were energetic men. They gave their votes to my hon. friend here (Mr. McCarthy). It may be my fault to a certain extent. I do not regret it. There are thousands and thousands of people in this country who have no strong party leanings and who are business men before everything else. Well, in Collingwood I feel that we have dealt with men of that character. These men were Conservatives in the past.

Mr. MACLEAN. They were harbourites.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What I think is that they will always vote right. I am glad to say that they proceeded energetically with their part of the work. They had promised me that if the government would help them they would erect large works. They are to-day building ships on a large scale. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has settled there. He has erected a large mill and there are other large industries established at Collingwood. The population of the town has doubled.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I do not object to the expenditure. I said that this was a desirable expenditure but that there was such a large amount involved that it should first be approved by parliament.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. As to the Order in Council I am no longer on the treasury benches and it is not for me to defend that part of the argument, but after having been six and a half years a minister I believe I can properly say in the light of experience that I have the conviction that governments can as a rule be trusted.

Mr. CLARKE. Cannot ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, governments as a rule can be trusted—I say it again —whatever party they belong to. I do not believe that there enough men at the Council Board to do wrong. That is my experience. I have no interest in stating that. I have no political interest to serve in stating that as a public man for the edification of the people and also for their education, perhaps. Let me say again, and I will be borne out by those who have been Ministers of the Crown, that while there may be unworthy ministers, when you have to deal with the whole government there is not much to be feared.

Mr. BENNETT. I find that on the 22nd January a banquet was tendered at Collingwood by the board of trade and that on that occasion the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) was present as their guest. It was only fitting and proper that any needs of the town should be brought before the minister and I see that Mr. John Long who occupied the chair on that occasion made the complaint that he thought the town was suffering. His complaint was this :

> Now, as they were aware, the dock was being still further enlarged, and when finished would be equipped so as to accommodate the largest vessels floating on the lakes. He hoped the government would see its way to pay a greater per cent of its cost than two per cent which had been promised. He wished the government would take over the dock and pay for its cost, and the town would operate it.

Mr. Long then went on to speak about the ship building industry in that town, and as to the future of the industry he expressed very grave doubts and misgivings. He pointed out that they were brought into competition with the British ships and he said :

> At the same time British built vessels were allowed to come here and navigate in competition without any tax being imposed on them.

Mr. Long laid down two complaints; first there was the question of assistance to the dry dock and then the question of competition between the British vessels which were being brought upon the great lakes and those which were built at Collingwood. When the hon. Postmaster General came to reply he endeavoured to soothe the feelings of the Collingwood people present on that occasion. The hon. Postmaster General gave them an assurance as to what was to be done in respect to one of their complaints, but it will turn out, as I will show, that the hon. gentleman was entirely wrong in his view as to what could be done for the people of Collingwood. What did the hon. gentleman tell them ? He seems to have skimmed very lightly over the question of the dock, but he took up the question of duties on ships and he then and there told the people of Collingwood in his own language that they were to be given substantial assistance, that they were to be protected in the matter of the ship-building industry. Here is what the hon. gentleman said :

> As to the question of duties on ships, raised by Mr. Long, it seemed to him that no political economist could justify admitting free a finished article and taxing the raw material.

What did that mean ? It meant that the hon. Postmaster General was holding out to these people hope that British ships would have certain restrictions placed upon them or that certain concessions would be made under the tariff in favour of the Collingwood ship-building industry. What position are the government in to-day ? It is a question whether the hon. Postmaster General by his words meant that the government would be in a position to prohibit by this restriction of which he spoke, the entrance of British ships upon the great lakes, and yet he certainly must have meant that or he meant that the raw materials which were used in the construction of ships would have their duties reduced. The hon. Postmaster General evidently came down to his colleagues. By them he was told that it was impossible to place a restriction on British vessels coming upon the great lakes and as the government were afraid apparently to reduce the duties on the raw materials entering into the construction of ships they are endeavouring to carry out some of the promises of the hon. Postmaster General and now we find that one of these promises is being carried out by increasing this bonus from two per cent to three per cent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). There is not the slightest connection between the resolution now before the House and my references at the Collingwood banquet in question, to the condition described by speakers as to the manufacture and importation of ships—not the slightest understanding between the government and the Collingwood people. Both these questions stand entirely on their own merits separately and apart, and they are to be dealt with by the government separately and apart.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Chairman, without wandering any farther from the question, permit me to call your attention to the fact that this is a dock Bill, and while no doubt there are questions of duties on ships and ship-building aids, which are all very important, I should like to confine this discussion if I can to the matter before the committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is very gratifying to find that hon. members on both sides of the House appreciate what is being done in the way of development in the town of Collingwood. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) tells us, that after his first interview with the citizens of Collingwood he was impressed that they were an energetic business people, and that if they were encouraged they would develop the resources of that town and district in a manner which would be a credit to themselves and to all Canada. He tells us that having come to that conclusion he did aid the citizens of Collingwood. Truly, he did. And as a result of that aid Collingwood has embarked in a very large enterprise, namely the Collingwood Ship-building Company, which at the present time is employing seven hundred men where some years ago not a man was employed. They have that line of steamers to which my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has referred, and these steamers carry thousands of passengers to the town each year. That line can only be successfully operated by keeping our harbour in a proper condition. In view of what the Finance Minister has said, I do not intend to wander further from the subject, than to say, that when the Postmaster General was in Collingwood it was an accepted fact that the Collingwood Ship-building Company was to be assisted in the building of a dry dock, and at that time this increased aid was spoken of. Therefore when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) said that the Postmaster General was skating over very thin ice at that time, he is not correct. The only question before the people then was a question of giving increased aid to the dry dock, and that is being accomplished to-day by the legislation now before the House. But, Sir, that increased aid is not only for the town of Collingwood, it is to extend throughout the whole Dominion in favour of any worthy proposition for the building of a dry dock. Let me say that there is no money in the establishment of a dry dock per se. The ship-building company can only use the dry dock for the purpose of repairing ships, and the money which can be made out of ship-building—if money can be made out of the industry at all—is in the actual building of new ships. Is it not an argument in favour of this very small increase, that this ship-building company at the very inception of its business is able to find employment for seven hundred men; is it not an argument that that employment will be extended and work and wages provided for the people of Collingwood who by their labour will assist in the carrying on of this enterprise? The Collingwood company has already built three ships, and a great many ships now plying upon the upper lakes which hitherto had to go to the United States come there now to be repaired. We will therefore divert from the United States the repairing of these ships, and we will to that extent benefit our own country. That, Sir, is a laudable enterprise; it is an enterprise which will receive encouragement from the Canadian people when it is fully understood. I am gratified, Sir, that so far as Collingwood is concerned, we never can be looked upon with that suspicion which was suggested by the hon. member for Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale). This question has been very fully discussed, and I think we can take it for granted that very little objection will be offered by any member in this House to giving the Collingwood Ship-building Company the aid which has been asked by them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think, Sir, that the country is beginning to view with alarm the policy of increasing subsidies to companies of this character. I have in my hand a circular issued by this Collingwood Company last August, in which they speak of being able to pay dividends of 6 per cent per annum, and the circular states that the policy of the directors will be to still further increase their works and earn greater dividends. They say they have no hesitation in recommending the stock as a sound business investment which is likely to become more valuable within a reasonable time. I believe, Sir, that the people of the country at large without respect to politics, have no objection to reasonable encouragement being given to large business enterprises for the development of our industries and commerce. But there is a feeling of unrest and a feeling of alarm, when companies of large capital like this apply to the government to receive assistance which will enable them to pay larger dividends than that already paid by the Collingwood Ship-building Company. It is no wonder that when they are seeking such help from the government, they can give banquets to the ministers when they go to visit Collingwood.

Mr. McCARTHY. It was not the company that gave the entertainment. It was the board of trade and the municipal council of Collingwood which organized the banquet.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose the company was not at all interested in it, and took no part in it. I find it rather difficult to believe that. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) has made an attempt to separate the Ship-building Company of Collingwood from the dry dock company.

Mr. McCARTHY. I did no such a thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As far as I can learn they are one and the same company, and the earnings of the one are the earnings of the other.

Mr. McCARTHY. Decidedly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think, Sir, the members of this House will feel it incumbent upon them to pause before they increase the subsidies which have already been granted in this direction.

Mr. McCARTHY. I cannot allow the insinuation to pass, that the ship-building company was responsible for the entertainments which have been given in the town of Collingwood. That statement is absolutely without foundation. These banquets have been given by the citizens of Collingwood represented by the municipal council and the board of trade, and every man who went to that banquet paid for his ticket. It is that instinct of enterprise which has made the people of Collingwood what they are to-day. They do not sit down and wait for a company to entertain ministers or others when they visit the town. The citizens do that themselves and they pay for it themselves. I refrained from replying to the statement of the hon. member for Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), but in view of the insinuations he has thrown out, perhaps the question of politics can be referred to. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) has said that as a result of the treatment which Collingwood has received at the hands of the government, Collingwood sent a member to support the Reformers in this parliament. It is true that I have supported the government on most questions, but I supported the government because I thought the government was right. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) knows very well that the town of Collingwood has been voting for the name which I bear since 1878, and I do not expect that the insinuations which are sometimes hurled across the floor of this House, will ever get the people of Collingwood to change their allegiance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In respect to how many places have applications been made to the government for an increase of this subsidy? How many docks are likely to be built under the provisions of this proposed Bill, as far as the government is at present aware?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already mentioned that the only places from which we have had applications are Collingwood, Ontario and St. John, N.B. In the case of Collingwood, the matter was discussed in times past and it was agreed that we should aid that dock to the extent of the legislation then on the statute-book which was 2 per cent. In the case of St. John, N.B., no progress has been made, but they are endeavouring to establish a company and we have reason to believe that with this increased aid a company will be established to construct a dock in St. John. Reference was made before my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) entered the House, to the position of Montreal under this Bill, and I mentioned that if the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal should desire to avail themselves of this method of construction they would be a body corporate and would be entitled to come under the operation of this Act. There may be other places in which docks are thought of, but I think I am correct in saying that these two are the only cases that have been brought before the government. If there are any others, of course we will be prepared to look into them on their merits, upon application being made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand that there is a dry dock in existence in Collingwood for a number of years which at present they are rebuilding and extending. I do not see how this resolution can cover that case. Here is a dock partially built and you propose to give aid to it presumedly on the approval of plans at the present time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Although there was a dock of a certain character at Collingwood for years, this is practically a new dock.

Mr. McCARTHY. Absolutely a new dock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It may be treated as a new dock. If we had subsidized the Collingwood dock originally, then we would be obliged to treat this as an extension, but the original dock at Collingwood was a small concern and never received government aid. It comes under the operation of the existing law as a new dock, and not as an extension of the old one.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That makes the case a great deal worse. Here is a dock which is already in existence.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A part of it is in existence.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is a hole there.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A part of it is in existence and some of the works are in existence at the present time. The hon. gentleman intends to advance money for the purpose of purchasing the whole of it, or the value already existing is taken into consideration. It is not like a new structure.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is a new dock altogether.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Finance Minister says there is an old dock at present being repaired, and he looks on it in the light of a reconstruction.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The old dock has practically disappeared, and the aid under this Act will be upon the expenditure not on the old structure, but on the new.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there any part of the old one being rebuilt ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A very trifling part.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no building going on, is there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is rapidly approaching completion. It is practically a new work. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) argued as if this was a bonus to a company engaged in a private enterprise. The Collingwood dock, and all other docks which will receive aid under this Act are public docks, rendering a public service. No one who is acquainted with the importance of our inland navigation will fail to recognize the urgent need of providing dry dock accommodation on the upper lakes. The hon. member for South Grey does not find a supporter of his views in his colleague from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) whose criticism was, not that this was an unwise measure, but that we were not proposing sufficient aid. The hon. member for South Grey says the aid is too liberal ; the hon. member for East Grey says it should be more liberal. It is difficult for us to reconcile the views of these hon. gentlemen. This money will not only aid the ship-building industry, but it will be useful to all who navigate the upper lakes; and under the proposed amendment to the law—it is not before the committee at the present time, but will come in due course—the government will have full control over the rates to be charged for the use of the dry dock. This in itself will ensure fair rates, and prevent any extortion, or any private capital that may be invested in the work being unduly remunerative to the investors. When an estimate comes to be made of what rates should be permitted to be charged, a proper account will be taken of the amount of private capital invested in the enterprise, and the amount of the probable earnings, and the rates will be so fixed as only to admit of the proper maintenance of the work and a reasonable dividend to those who contribute capital to the enterprise.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the length of the proposed new dock ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is about 500 feet. I was at Collingwood in the month of January ; my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) was present at the same time ; and I am sure that he was as gratified as I was at the great industrial activity we saw in Collingwood. It gave me the greatest possible pleasure to see the prosperity of that town through the enterprise of its citizens. They were building two magnificent ships, capable of carrying 250,000 bushels of wheat at least. Those ships were expected to be launched in the course of a few months, and I believe one of them is now about to be launched ; and the people are reaching out for further contracts. The construction of such a dock as this will not only aid those who wish to use it, but will also make possible an extension of the ship-building industry at Collingwood, a branch of industry of the greatest importance. There are iron and steel works in operation on the north shore, in the Sault Ste. Marie district, and in many ways the general public will be advantaged by the construction of this dock.

Mr. COCHRANE. What was the length of the old dock ?

Mr. McCARTHY. 100 or 150 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. It is because of the knowledge I have of the difficulties which the shipping industry on the Georgian Bay and the upper lakes have had to contend with that I approve of this measure. For many years attempts were made to induce the government to aid in the construction of a dry dock at Collingwood or Owen Sound, but they would not grant sufficient aid. The assistance they proposed was so small that capitalists would not undertake the work, although the shipping on the Georgian bay and the upper lakes was rapidly increasing. Vessels needing the use of a dry dock had to go to the American side. The dock at Collingwood would not accommodate one of the Canadian Pacific Railway boats, which are over 300 feet long, while the dock is less than 100 feet.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). The dock at Collingwood, before the change took place, would accommodate one of the Canadian Pacific boats.

Mr. SPROULE. The vessel in the dock was partly in and partly out ; the dock could not properly accommodate it. Therefore, there was need to devise a means whereby a dry dock could be provided on the Georgian bay. If Owen Sound avails itself of this government aid, all the better, though it may be inadvisable to have two docks in the same district. If Collingwood raises the capital for a dry dock, so much to its credit. The principle of the measure is a good one, and if it has any defect it is that it does not go far enough, the amount being too small. We gave a large subsidy for a dry dock at Kingston, and for the graving dock at Esquimalt.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were built by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, they were practically built by the government; but on the upper lakes and the Georgian bay, where the shipping interest is greater than it is in any other part of Canada, the government have given no assistance at all. When they propose to give it, I can only say that for my part, I endorse the proposition, and the only complaint I have is that they do not give greater assistance.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down does not answer the point I raised at all; and my knowledge of his contrary nature is the only reason I venture to say a word in reply. My point has not reference to the amount or the place at all. I said that I knew of no more desirable object to which to devote public money, and I think Collingwood is entitled to a share of it in the nature of things. But I object to the principle of this Bill. I object to establishing a precedent for allowing any government by Order in Council to cover this whole country with dry docks, without submitting their proposals to parliament. I did not object to the sum of $10,000 proposed by the Conservative government; but this was a small amount. Hon. gentlemen opposite propose to grant three times as much. Judging by the past, I do not know that $30,000 will be enough for Collingwood; but what I say is that the government should bring down a grant, as they did in the case of Kingston and Esquimalt, and let parliament vote it. This grant of $30,000 a year, capitalized is equal to $1,000,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is only twenty years, and twenty times $30,000 make $600,000 payable every twenty years.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. With accumulated interest?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Only $600,000. Why, I have seen this House detained for weeks, when we were in power, over an item of $5,000. What I wish to protest against is this principle of expenditure by Order in Council. There is a feeling abroad that the government are going into lavish expenditure simply because they have a full treasury. In my opinion, that is the time to help the people by cutting off the duties on materials that do not need protection. I am not raising my voice against the expenditure itself in this particular instance, but what I am opposed to is giving authority to the government to dispose of large sums outside the control of parliament. It is contrary to the principles of responsible government and it lays the government open to suspicion. Our people do not want the government to be put in a position, that, even when they do right, they are liable to be suspected. Take this Collingwood item, if we were asked to vote $30,000 per year over a period of twenty years, for a dry dock there, I would be the last to object, but what I do object to is the passing of a resolution of this kind, which will put it in the power of the government to expend, without the direct sanction of parliament, such an amount for the construction of dry docks whenever they may see fit. I may be old-fashioned in my ideas, I may be too much wedded to the fine old principles of constitutional British government and legislation. But these principles have done good service for a thousand years, and I do not want to see any one of them swept away, and would rather be thought old-fashioned than allow legislation, such as is now proposed, to pass without protest.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend takes exception to the principle involved in this measure, and no doubt he is now sincere. But I would like to know when he experienced this change of heart? He objects to the principle of allowing the Governor General in Council to decide when the aid provided by this resolution should be granted, but when did he first discover that this was not sound policy?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. When the amount became large.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are not changing the principle of the law. That law was passed with the approval of my hon. friend. All we are doing is changing the percentage from two to three.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I was not in the House in 1882.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend was in the government when this law was on the statutes, and during fourteen years he saw nothing in it to criticise.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The limit was then $10,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the principle that my hon. friend is discussing and not the amount. It was the government which he supported that adopted the principle, and incorporated it in our statutes. My hon. friend entered that government, knowing that that statute was in existence, knowing what was in it, and he allowed it to remain without any objection on his part. The principle of that legislation was a good one until to-day, when suddenly it becomes most objectionable. When was it that this hon. gentleman became converted into such an ardent defender and advocate of popular rights ? Is it only since he has been in opposition and unable therefore to give effect to his views ? But the proper time for him to have given some practical effect to his ideas was when he had the power to do so. What is the use of a man holding such strong views and refraining from giving any expression to them until he knows that his protests can have no effect ?

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman might ask himself the same question. When did he become converted ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am now dealing with my hon. friend from South Norfolk, and while I am not questioning his sincerity to-day, I should like to know when his convictions became so radically and suddenly changed ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend finds fault with my hon. friend from South Norfolk for his change of principle. I think that the hon. minister might apply his own remarks to himself. He was the most rabid of opponents of all these Acts of parliament and resolutions, passed in this House in 1882, and at other times, giving the government the power to spend money by Order in Council. But this principle, which he formerly held, he has dropped, as he has done every other, since he came into office. We are now dealing with the question of giving $10,000 per year for the building of a dry dock, or two per cent on the cost of its construction now. What is now proposed is $30,000 per year or 3 per cent on the cost.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The principle is not changed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The granting of a small sum may be harmless in itself, but when you increase that sum and make it a large amount, then the question of principle becomes a very serious one. What may be indifferent when a small expenditure is at stake may become a very serious matter when it involves a large expenditure. I have in my hand a prospectus of the company in question, which states :

> The company possesses at Collingwood the only dry dock on the upper lakes, in Canada, capable of accommodating large vessels. It is proposed to increase its capacity so as to enable it to take the largest vessels trading, or likely to trade, on these waters.

They only intend to increase the capacity of the dry dock.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the date of that prospectus ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. August 12, 1902. The company go further and say that they have made an arrangement with the Dominion government for the purpose of assisting them in this work.

> The Dominion government recognizes the necessity in the public interest, of an enlarged dry dock, and have decided to grant a liberal subsidy for a term of twenty years ; the annual payments to be based upon the outlays made upon the work.

The payments are therefore to be made upon the work of enlargement and not upon the whole work. But the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Postmaster General led us to believe that this is an entirely new work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Practically, it is.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They state in this prospectus, in which they ask people to subscribe money, that they have a dry dock already, and that all they need to expend in this respect is enough to enlarge that dry dock.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) allow me to make an explanation with regard to that ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know nothing about that prospectus. But I can quite recall a statement made to me by people in Collingwood when I was there in January last. I think the statement was made by Mr. John Long, though I am not very sure. At all events, one of the gentlemen who knew all about this plan took me down to where the work was going on. He showed me the new work and told me that at first they had expected to be able to utilize part of the old work, but when they endeavoured to do so, they found it impossible, and they had to do away with the old structure——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. At what time was the hon. minister there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In January last. And the hon. gentleman has read from a prospectus issued, I think, in August, last. Evidently, at that time, they expected to be able to use part of the old wharf, but afterwards found that this could not be done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I know nothing about the circumstances, and did not even know that there was a dry dock there. But I know that this is the prospectus on which they raised money in the market, and I understand that at present their shares are listed in the stock exchange in Toronto. But, the statement made in this prospectus is that they had made an arrangement with the government for an advance——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is under the old law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The prospectus states that the Dominion government recognizes the necessity in the public interest of an enlarged dry dock and has decided to grant a liberal subsidy for a term of twenty years. And the hon. minister finds fault with the hon. member from South Norfolk for saying that this amounts to a million dollars.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not find fault with that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman said there was only $600,000. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) is absolutely correct—a guarantee of $30,000 a year for twenty years, when you have the undertaking also, is worth in any market in the world one million dollars.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How could that be ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This $30,000 a year for twenty years guarantees the interest for that length of time which enables them to borrow to the full value of this $30,000 a year. Then they have the undertaking, which is an additional security.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. They could sell it readily for a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Certainly. Is that not correct ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir William Mulock) makes that out.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. An annuity of $30,000 for twenty years may have various advantages to the person who is to enjoy it. But we are dealing with it from the standpoint of the Canadian taxpayer, who is to pay it. An annuity of $30,000 a year for twenty years amounts, on its face, to $600,000. But, this is to be reduced to its present cash value. An actuary would estimate that for you—the present cash value of $600,000 payable in twenty annual instalments and calculated at three per cent would be so much less, how much less I do not know. The taxpayer of Canada is not paying $600,000, but only the present value of that sum paid under the provisions named. But I will add to my hon. friend's argument for him. We are considering now only one dock, but, under this Bill there may be other docks. My hon. friend has the opportunity of magnifying this fund by multiplying it by as many docks as his imagination leads him to believe will be brought into existence. He could work up a large bill in that way.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is right looking at it from the point of view he speaks of—the present cash value of the sum to be paid by the government. But we are looking at it from the point of view of the advantage to the men who receive the money. It was from that point of view that my hon. friend from South Norfolk was looking at it, and from that point of view he is quite correct. But let me refer to the point to which I drew the attention of the Minister of Finance, and which he tried to get over by saying that this was virtually a reconstructed work. But, first of all, before they are entitled to any money, before any arrangement can be made, the plan must be approved by the engineer of the department. I understand that the work is nearly completed, or, at least is well under way. How, then, can this apply to this particular case? The work is to be built under the supervision of the engineer attached to the Public Works Department or there must be a report of the engineer that this money has been expended on the work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) allow me a moment ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Before that dock at Collingwood was put under construction, Mr. Coste, an officer of the department was authorized to supervise the work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is he on it ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was an agreement made ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. An Order in Council ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. An Order in Council passed when I was in office. The work is perfectly regular.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We shall be delighted to get the whole information from the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps I may be allowed to suggest that the difficulty is that my hon friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) came in late, and so had not the benefit of the information that was given to the hon. gentlemen who were here. I stated that we had agreed to aid the Collingwood dock to the extent of two per cent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But here is a new agreement. The old Act which limits the amount to two per cent on the amount spent, or in this case, $20,000. But there is a subsidiary agreement, evidently, by which the government promised to bring in legislation for the purpose of paying three per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is the resolution. Here is the expression of the intention of the government, and we have the announcement from the government that it is intended to apply to this particular dry dock. They made a bargain but they were unable to carry it out under the old Act, and now they find it necessary to have further legislation——

Mr. CLARKE. They could not deliver the goods.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For some reason which I do not know——

An hon. MEMBER. Banquet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have the assurance of the hon. member for Simcoe that none of the parties had anything to do with that, and I accept his statement. However, there must have been a bargain to give them assistance beyond that authorized by the old statute. It is time, in any case, that this system of grants by Order in Council, all this system of governing the country by Orders in Council was done away with. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) twits the hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) with being a supporter of this system in 1882. We have discarded those principles. The country has advanced, as the hon. Minister of Finance has assured us. This is a growing and a better time in intelligence and otherwise, and it is time that this kind of legislation was wiped off the statute-book—this governing of the country by Orders in Council and granting large subsidies to corporations or individuals without the direct sanction and support of parliament.

Mr. CHARLTON. The discussion has taken a rather wide range; and it strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that the criticisms of hon. gentlemen opposite in relation to this matter are somewhat captious and unfair. I am pleased to find that my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) has imbibed such correct and constitutional impressions with regard to the expenditure of money by Order in Council. It reminds me of the old days in opposition when a great deal of capital was made out of criticisms of that kind, and when perhaps we were not in possession of facts which might have modified our opinions with regard to the criticisms that were made. The government of which both my hon. friend from South Norfolk and my hon. friend from Lanark were supporters, distinctly recognized this principle in the matter of grants to dry docks. The principle of granting $10,000 to aid a dry dock in 1882 was on all fours with the principle of granting $30,000 in 1903, under the changed circumstances with regard to transportation, the size of vessels built and the extraordinary size of the dry docks necessary. I can see, Sir, no particular objection to the plan adopted under these resolutions on which a Bill is to be founded. I have confidence enough in the members of the ministry who meet in Council and discuss these questions in a business-like way, I have confidence enough in their ability to arrive at a correct opinion, to believe that in an adjustment of business matters of this kind they could be fairly trusted with the discharge of that duty. I have confidence enough in their honesty to believe that they would not stoop to anything irregular or improper in granting subsidies of this character and under the provisions of this resolution. I am not able to see how, if they were disposed to do so, it would be convenient or possible for them to travel very far from the paths of rectitude.

The building of a dry dock is a business proposition. The aid granted under this resolution by the government is not sufficient to build it. It is merely the granting of a certain amount of aid which will enable the parties engaged in the operation of building a dock, perhaps to float their bonds to secure the resources necessary for the purpose of going on and constructing a dock that otherwise they would be unable to do. I do not think it is necessary to come to the House of Commons with every separate and distinct proposition for the construction of a dry dock in the Dominion of Canada. Here is a general principle laid down. The government is protected in the request made upon it to grant aid by the fact that the parties making that request have got to put up more money than the government does, they have got to show their good faith and confidence in the scheme by investing the major part of the money necessary to construct the dry dock. An annuity of 3 per cent for twenty years capitalized, does not amount to the aggregate of that annuity for that time. Six hundred thousand dollars, the maximum sum of $30,000 per annum for twenty years, falls far short of the capitalized sum of $600,000.

Now, Sir, in the discussion of this question we have had exhibited here certain local jealousies, jealousies between different ports on the Georgian bay. There is Owen Sound, there is Collingwood, there is Midland, all thriving towns, all of them important shipping points, and it is necessary for the commercial wants of the Georgian bay to have a first-class dry dock in each one of these towns. One dock would serve the purpose as well as three; but if one would hardly have business enough to make it a paying investment, not enough in the locality which has put itself in the position of building a dry dock, which would be sufficient to meet the commercial wants of that section of the great lakes, why, that locality has a just cause in appealing to the government for aid, and the government is warranted in giving to that place or locality the aid necessary for constructing that dry dock.

Now, what are the circumstances upon the Georgian bay? There has recently been developed on that bay a large commerce, a large carrying trade in grain, a large passenger traffic, a large business in lumber, and there will be a large business in iron ore, a large business in various departments. There has been erected at Collingwood one of the finest ship-building plants on the continent, that has already turned out two large vessels, as large as the largest class of carriers on the upper lakes, a plant that is turning out two vessels now, and is prepared to add from year to year to the mercantile marine of the Dominion three or four of these vessels. This is an enterprise that is a credit to Canada, an enterprise that ought to command our respect and appeal to our pride. Well, it has been found necessary to have in connection with this business, resources and accommodations for the docking of these vessels. It was not creditable to us that vessels of this class had to be sent to Detroit, or Cleveland, or Buffalo, for repairs. We had no dry dock upon the upper lakes that would accommodate vessels of this class. One is being built at Collingwood and is approaching completion, a dry dock ample for all the purposes that will be required in docking the large class of vessels that sail the upper lakes.

Now, the objection is raised by the hon. member for North Lanark that part of this dry dock is an old dry dock, and, for some reason I am not able to understand, he says because this company is making use of a hole that has been dug there for the old dry dock, they are not entitled to this subsidy. Even if the walls of the old dry dock were capable of being utilized for the new dock, I am unable to understand why it would not be to all intents and purposes a new dry dock. But they were not capable of being utilized—they had to be torn down ; all they could use of the old dry dock was a little amount of excavation, the cross walls of the old dry dock had to be built entirely new, and to all intents and purposes it is a new dry dock. All the advantage derived by the company from the existence of the old dock was infinitesimal. Under these circumstances, I think we are wasting our time here in haggling over this matter in the way we are doing. I do not think it would be a workable method even to allow these things to drift along, and, before the government will give any assurance of aid to a company that desired to build a dry dock or make improvements of this character, to wait until parliament could be consulted. If that had been the case with this dry dock, it would not have been constructed even now, it would not be built perhaps for years hence, and it would have been a great loss to the public interest of the Georgian bay and a loss to the commercial interests of the Dominion for that delay to have occurred.

I was in Collingwood last week and saw this dry dock. It is a creditable work. The company had to buy land right in the heart of the town to extend their dock landward. They have got an enormous plant there. In connection with the ship-building they had to take up a railway track and move it landward, they had to destroy buildings to find room for their excavation, and they have gone on here and built a dry dock of a first-class character, a dry dock that will dock a man-of-war, that will dock a vessel with a carrying capacity of 300,000 bushels. The whole of the commercial interests of Georgian bay and the upper lakes realize that this is a work of the utmost importance, realize that it is a work that reflects great credit on the enterprise of the town of Collingwood. If Collingwood is enjoying the prosperity it deserves, it is because it has had wide-awake business men that grasped the situation with courage, men who are ready to invest their money, men whom the government might legitimately aid in promoting the construction of a work of this kind. The town has subscribed a large amount, the town has stood ready at all times to promote any of these enterprises that were calculated to increase its prosperity. The result has been the location of the Cramp steel works there.

Mr. BENNETT. They are pretty sick of it now.

Mr. CHARLTON. They will be all right in regard to that. They may be sick of it but they will, I hope, have reason to be gratified that they have invested that money. I think if we look at this thing from the proper standpoint, if we realize that a dry dock is absolutely needed and needed now and that it could not have been had now if we had resorted to the method recommended by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) and the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) if we realized that the commercial interests of the Georgian bay require that improvement, that there is no investment of public money asked for in this session that will produce more satisfactory results or that will be more necessary in the public interests than that which is covered by these resolutions, if we realize all these things, then, we had better drop this discussion and be thankful that we have this ship-building plant and this magnificent dry dock accommodation at Collingwood which is sufficient for the upper lakes and the effect of which can only be to promote the commerce of this Dominion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am glad to observe that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) seems to have a higher opinion of politics and politicians in this country than that which I am told he expressed a few weeks ago in a sermon which he delivered, I think, in this city.

Mr. CHARLTON. That applied equally to both sides.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand the hon. gentleman, of course, being on that side of the House, was speaking out of his more especial knowledge concerning his own party and indulged only in a surmise so far as this side of the House is concerned. But, I am glad to observe that the confidence of the hon. gentleman has been somewhat restored and that he agrees entirely with the very proper remarks of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that there may be confidence extended even to a government such as this. I understand that the remarks of the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) in regard to a dock partly constructed, or to a dock partly in existence, were intended in the sense that he desired to have this resolution drawn in such a way that it would be workable in regard to the Collingwood dock which has more especially been mentioned in this discussion. Any observations I have in regard to it are intended in the same sense. This resolution could hardly apply to a dock which has already been constructed. I do not know whether I correctly understood the hon. member for North Norfolk when he said that this dock was partly constructed now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is far advanced.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I have not considered the question very carefully, but it would seem to me to be possible that some different construction might be given to the words of the resolution in that regard. I do not pretend to have considered it very carefully, but I can see some force in the argument of the hon. member for South Lanark. To enter into a contract with a company which is about to construct a dry dock is an entirely different thing from entering into a contract with a company which has already substantially constructed a dock, and there are reasons of public policy why a resolution of this kind should be applicable in one case and not in another. However, this is a matter entirely for the hon. Minister of Finance, and I am only offering this suggestion because I think there may be something in what has been said by my hon. friend from South Lanark. Now, the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) has spoken of a change of heart. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) did not see fit to make any observation upon a change of heart on the part of the hon. Postmaster General. I do not know that it would be necessary for me to remind the hon. Postmaster General of certain changes that he has experienced—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could also compliment the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in the same way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)—during the last five or six years in regard to matters of public policy. I would almost think that some other member of the government might make observations of that kind rather than the hon. Postmaster General. There is one matter to which I would like to call to the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance and it is that the resolution in these terms seems to provide for a subsidy to a company which might have no need of any such assistance. I am speaking of this because this resolution does not apply to the Collingwood docks, but it applies to docks all over Canada, wherever they may be built. As I understand the situation it is impossible for this dock to be proceeded with at Collingwood without some assistance; nevertheless, we might not have similar conditions elsewhere, and I would point out for the consideration of the hon. Minister of Finance that while this Act is in force you might have conditions somewhere else in Canada which would enable a company to go on with the construction of a work of this kind as a fair commercial enterprise, yielding a legitimate return and yet the Governor in Council, it seems to me, would be bound to approve of that company. The only thing that seems to be required by the terms of the motion is that the company shall satisfy the government of its ability to perform the work. Such a company as that to which I have referred could abundantly satisfy the government that it would have the ability to perform the work. Would it not be worth while to consider whether or not some amendment might be made in the terms of the resolution in that regard? It may be that all this has been considered by the hon. Minister of Finance, and that he has some perfectly valid answer to give, but not having heard any answer up to the present time in that regard, I thought it well to bring it to his attention.

Then, there is another matter which I would like to mention. I do not know whether or not the terms of the resolution of 1882 were exactly embodied in the statute which is in force at the present time, but I observe in the concluding part of the resolution which was moved by Sir Leonard Tilley on the 16th May, 1882, this provision:

> And further, that these docks shall be free for the use of all vessels and dredges owned by or in the service of the Dominion government.

I do not know whether a provision of that kind has been considered by the government.

So far as the principle of the resolution is concerned I must say that I am in favour of granting this assistance to dry docks and particularly to docks on the great lakes. It should be the object of government in this country of all political parties to build up a great shipping industry on the lakes, to increase our mercantile marine there, and I do not think, so far as my limited information goes, that that can be effectually done unless we have dry docks of sufficient capacity on the lakes to accommodate the vessels of the very large tonnage which are required now in our inland navigation. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I approve of the principle of the resolution and I hope the dry dock at Collingwood will be completed and that it will be of material assistance in increasing Canadian shipping on the lake.

As far as the question of government by Order in Council is concerned, I have expressed my views in regard to that on more than one occasion in this House. I believe we should have as little government by Order in Council in this country as possible. I also believe that at present we have a little too much of it, as we possibly had before the present government came into power, but I am bound to say, so far as this particular resolution is concerned, that I do not see that the objections which are applicable in some other cases have really very much force. The only function of the Order in Council in this case is to signify approval by the government of the company. That approval is of course in regard to the ability of the company to carry out the work. It is quite right that the government shall not enter into an agreement for assistance to a company that is not able to carry out the work. You must have some tribunal to judge of the company's ability, and I do not see that you can constitute any other tribunal except the government itself for that purpose. Under these circumstances it seems to me, subject to the observations which I have already made, it is a proper resolution to be passed. I trust it will have the effect of stimulating the Canadian shipping industry upon the great lakes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I suppose the government have very carefully considered the raising of the guarantee to 3 per cent. When I had the honour of being a colleague of the Minister of Finance, we made an agreement with the Collingwood Company whereby they undertook to carry out their works for 2 per cent, and they are going on with the work now. The St. John, N.B., Company thought they could get along with the same guarantee of two per cent. They have received a guarantee from the local government and from the city of St. John, but they failed to get the guarantee they expected from the imperial government. The Collingwood Company is building their dock without any guarantee from the town of Collingwood, their only inducement being the two per cent which they are entitled to under the present law. If this Bill passes, of course the Collingwood Company would have the same advantage as other companies would have, but all the same the facts are that the 3 per cent for twenty years will practically cover the total cost of the work. It is a very good guarantee. I do not blame the Minister of Finance; I am sure he has gone carefully into it, and that he is satisfied himself that with a less guarantee the St. John Dock Company could not go on. The hon. Minister of Finance is a very careful man on matters of this kind.

I grant that cheerfully, and I am sure that he has given a good deal of attention to this matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. leader of the opposition in a criticism which is eminently fair, read from some words of the resolution of Sir Leonard Tilley in 1882, from which it would appear that any dock constructed under the provisions of the Act to be founded on the said resolution, should handle the dredges of Canada free of charge. I have not looked up the early history of the matter, but, however, that may be, it is quite evident that the Minister of Finance of that day, for good reasons no doubt, found it better to withdraw this stipulation, and while those words appeared in the original proposal to the House, they were not carried into the resolution or into the Act which was founded on the resolution.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It will still remain a question whether in view of the increased subsidy that is being given now, some such provision should not be inserted in the present resolution.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a fair question for discussion, but it would seem that we would be giving the company a subsidy with one hand and to a certain extent taking it back with the other. As to the point, whether in some cases the subsidy of three per cent may not be more than is necessary, we have a provision which will correct that. I propose that the Bill shall provide that the tariff of tolls for the operation of these docks shall be subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council. Experience has shown that it is difficult to raise capital for works of this character, and that such works when first erected are not as a rule profitable. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is aware that the Halifax dock was not for years a profitable enterprise. Even yet, I do not know that it is a money-making concern, although I am glad to know that in recent years it is busier than it formerly was. If experience should show in any case that an enterprise would pay more than a fair return to the promoters, we have the remedy in the shape of a reduction in tolls, and in that way the shipping community and all concerned will have the benefit of it. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will admit that is a fair answer to his criticism.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would admit to a certain extent it is an answer, except that you might have a company doing an enormous business and paying large dividends, and if the government reduced the tolls in such a case, then at the end of twenty years it might put the company in the embarrassing position, having its tolls reduced once, of undertaking to raise them again.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The usual way is that the subsidy would probably be converted into cash and would go into the original capital expenditure. It would not affect future transactions.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That might be, but there still remains the difficulty that if you reduce the tolls the company might be constrained to raise them again at the end of the twenty years.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). From the remarks of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) I would infer that it was the intention of the government to grant the increased subsidy of three per cent to the Collingwood Dry Dock, only, because Owen Sound and Midland are not many miles from that point. If that is the case, it would be a great disappointment to the people who own the dry dock at Owen Sound. The dry dock in that town is owned by the North American Bent Chair Company, who operate it, and at the last election in which I was the Conservative candidate, two members of that firm, who hitherto voted Conservative, canvassed their employees to support the government candidate because they expected a large subsidy from the government for the purpose of enlarging that dock. Now, if the hon. member for North Norfolk was inspired in his remarks—he was visited just a moment before he made them by the Postmaster General—I must say it would be a great disappointment to the people of Owen Sound—

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thomson) will permit me, that I am not inspired by the government. I was speaking only upon general principles, and I expressed my individual opinion that the dry dock at Collingwood would serve the purposes of the Georgian bay district. I have no objection to a dock being built at Owen Sound. I trust that my friends at Owen Sound will be able to raise the money to build one, and if they do they will get the grant under this resolution.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not mention the subject of Owen Sound to my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) nor was that very important centre in my mind when I made some observations to that gentleman on an entirely different subject.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I am very glad to hear the explanation, but the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) cannot forget that he said it would be out of place for the government to grant a subsidy to Collingwood, and also to Meaford and Owen Sound, they being so close together.

Mr. CHARLTON. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Well, words to that effect.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, not to that effect even.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I would like to hear the Finance Minister define clearly the policy of the government in this matter. It is a matter of great importance to the constituency from which I come. If these people canvassed the electors in the late by-election on the ground of receiving a large subsidy from the government, and if the government will not grant that subsidy, I would like to know it, and the people of North Grey, especially the people of Owen Sound, would like to know it. The town of Collingwood is not the only town that has constructed large vessels plying on the upper lakes. The largest and most palatial of these vessels were constructed at Owen Sound. I refer to the steamship 'Manitoba,' the ferry boat 'Ontario,' which plies across the straits at Detroit, and many other large vessels, including three cruisers which were built for the government of Canada. I would like the Finance Minister to declare specifically whether Owen Sound is to be permitted to participate in these grants. Before I sit down, I wish to congratulate the government on taking this step. I believe it is one in the right direction. For many years Canada, though possessing such a large body of fresh water, has been under such disadvantages for the lack of dry docks that a Canadian vessel of any capacity had to leave her own shores and go to an American port to be repaired. Such a condition of things was not to the credit of Canada, and I am very glad that the government have taken this step to promote the construction of dry docks in this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In order to remove any doubt as to whether the Act to be founded on this resolution will apply to a dock now under construction, I propose to insert the words 'dry dock' in the the fifth line, the words 'or to complete a dry dock in course of construction.'

Mr. CLARKE. Would you not also include the enlargement of a dock ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have other provisions relating to enlargement, which is a different matter.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I am glad to see that the government are keeping faith with these two ports. The prospectus which has been read is evidence that there was some understanding on this subject, in violation of the constitution. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Public Works was quite correct. He says he made an agreement at 2 per cent, and that was going as far as the law permitted. You cannot satisfy the public, nor do I think you can satisfy this House, that that company had not some promise on which they issued their prospectus. They would have no object in making absolute misstatements. It would be equivalent to a fraud to get subscriptions to their stock in that way. We have now legislation enlarging the scope of the government aid, not to meet a specific case, but generally. Whether Owen Sound will succeed in getting any portion of this aid the future only will tell, because, unfortunately for Owen Sound, my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Thomson) was elected to the opposition benches, notwithstanding this promise, and I am afraid Owen Sound will only receive cold justice, while warm justice will be given to Collingwood. Now, the Act does not go far enough. The hon. Finance Minister is making it broad enough to enable the government to keep faith with Collingwood at any rate, and we shall see what they will do with Owen Sound. But I rose to make a few remarks in reply to my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). His was an extraordinary speech. Sometimes we think him an extraordinary gentleman, and no doubt he is. He started by congratulating me on my conversion, as he put it, to sound constitutional principles in regard to Orders in Council, and he made quite a long speech justifying the government's departure from those principles in this particular Bill. My hon. friend is on record on this question, as on many others, and he ought to have a better memory than he sometimes displays in dealing with matters of this kind. In regard to Orders in Council, the hon. gentleman said :

The motion that I have put into your hands, Mr. Speaker, refers to a matter of very considerable importance, and to a line of conduct adopted by the government which, in my opinion, is a usurpation of power. The government, of course, must have a majority to sustain them as a government, but the majority should keep the government in its proper place. If it merely fills the functions of a majority and is guilty of slavish submission to the government, and permits the government to usurp the powers that a ministry of a free country ought not to possess, then the majority becomes subservient to the government and recreant to its duty to the people who sent it here. The independence of this House has been seriously impaired in the last few years from various causes, and I think we are gradually drifting into a course of procedure and into a policy in respect of which it is high time we should call a halt, and adopt a policy more in consonance with the principles of free and representative government. In the English colonies on this continent, from almost the time that they were established there was a constant struggle on the part of the people while these were crown colonies against the power exercised by the Governor in Council, and a constant demand made by the people for representative government, the benefits of which, though so highly appreciated by the early colonists, we seem in this Dominion at present to place a lower estimate upon than was placed upon them 150 to 200 years ago. The objections to the system of legislation by Order in Council are numerous.

I could give considerably more, but I will give the hon. gentleman's wind-up.

I wish to point out that in the last eight or nine years the government have, by Order in Council, adopted important fiscal legislation which should not have been adopted without reference to this House.

I think the hon. gentleman's approval of this measure, contrasted with his speech which I have quoted, justifies me in saying that his speech to-day was an extraordinary speech.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will say that in my speech to-day I have merely taken ground in favour of the expenditure of money which has been already authorized by this House, and the remarks he quotes do not apply to the present occasion.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I will leave the hon. gentleman to be judged by what he said, and I will venture to say that his speech, as reported in the first edition of 'Hansard,' at all events, will bear out my strictures upon him. Just one word with regard to the remark made by the hon. Postmaster General, that I had in any way changed my views on the principle of this legislation. I would simply point out that while, in many cases, the expenditure by Order in Council would be a matter of very slight import, where the expenditure involved was comparatively slight, and where it was much more convenient that such expenditure should be dealt with in this way, the question assumes an altogether different complexion when serious expenditure is at stake, and in such case I feel justified in insisting strongly that such, as a practice, is contrary to constitutional principles.

Resolution reported.

CUSTOMS ACT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to amend the Customs Act, chapter 32, revised statutes, and to provide as follows :—

1. That the expression 'duty' shall include 'surtax.'

2. That a change be made in the composition of the board of customs, and that an assistant commissioner of customs be appointed ?

3. That authority be given for the employment of temporary officers of customs.

4. To better define the powers of the board of customs ?

5. That further particulars be given in invoices ; and to provide that invoices may be made out in the currency in which the goods are actually purchased.

6. To define the rate of duty upon unenumerated articles, made of more than one material.

7. To extend the time for the submission of claims for refund, including claims for refund on account of damage.

8. That importers may be relieved from the payment of duty on damaged goods, abandoned in certain cases.

9. That the basis of allowance for damage on polished steel, and other articles, be changed.

10. To authorize the granting of relief from the payment of duty on goods, destroyed or damaged while in the custody of the customs.

11. That further provision be made for the valuation for duty purposes of medicinal and other preparations, and in respect of the testing of sugars, molasses, wines, spirituous and alcoholic liquors.

12. To authorize collectors of customs to require further proof in respect of invoices.

13. To vest in officers the power to administer oaths.

14. To confer further powers on the Governor in Council respecting special customs services and overtime of officers; and also respecting the reduction of customs duties on imported goods.—The Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson). The first clause has reference to the surtax. This is a new word introduced into our tariff and customs laws, and it was thought well that it should be defined and included in the term 'duty.'

Mr. MACLEAN. What is the definition of the word 'surtax' in the dictionary of the free traders? This is the first time we have had in Canada this expression introduced into our tariff laws. It is one of the most pronounced protectionist words, involving one of the most pronounced protectionist principles, and here we have free traders, who wish for free trade as they have it in England, adopting this expression. Let me offer them my congratulations.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the exact effect of making the word 'duty' include the word 'surtax'?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It would, I presume, be included in any case, but this puts it beyond doubt. With reference to these changes in the Customs Act, of which I have given notice, I may say that I am bringing forward these amendments, which are not very important, this session, so that they may be included in the consolidation of the Customs laws which is now taking place.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The present board of customs is composed of many of our appraisers, some of whom reside in Victoria, Winipeg, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Halifax. We have occasion at times to call the board together to discuss certain questions, and it may not be convenient, nor may the business be important enough, always to call officers from such distant points. It is proposed to specify that the Commissioner of Customs shall be chairman of the board, and leave to the Governor in Council the naming of such other officers as may be required to act with him and constitute the board. Of course, new members to the board could be added from time to time. As regards the assistant commissioner, I have already given the reasons, during the discussion on the estimates, why it was thought desirable one should be appointed.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the new members of the Board of Customs be members of the civil service?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They must be.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How is the board constituted at present?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is constituted of gentlemen in the different outposts. For instance, at Victoria, I think that the collector is one of the board. At Montreal the appraisers of dry goods and hardware are on it. At Hamilton one of the appraisers is a member, also at Toronto. Mr. Breadner, who is the chief clerk in the department here, is also a member of the board, and one or two of the other officers in the inside department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What functions do they exercise, as distinguished from those of the Commissioner of Customs himself?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. As hon. gentlemen will understand, questions arise, owing to the changing conditions of business and new lines of goods coming in, in which there will be differences of opinion as to the rate of duty that should be imposed upon a certain article. If these claims are not very pressing, we set them aside until a number of them are awaiting a decision. Then a meeting of the board is held and the members of the board in meeting discuss these matters and arrive at a decision. Opinions not always unanimous, but, as in every case, questions must be decided by a majority. When a decision is reached, it is reported to the Minister of Customs. If the minister approves it and signs it, that ruling of the board of customs has the force of statute law, subject, however, to an appeal to the Governor in Council.

Mr. KEMP. Is it contemplated under this new Act, and with these new appointments to provide, at the large ports—Montreal, Toronto and perhaps some others—appraisers who will understand each a particular line of goods? At the present time, a single appraiser is supposed to understand hardware business, textile business, grocery business and so on. The difficulty under which we labour in this respect grows more apparent as the country's business increases. I think the business going through these larger ports is sufficient to warrant the government in specializing more than we have done in the past. This is the system followed in the larger ports of the United States. Has the government in contemplation any such step as this?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course, this Bill will not be effective in that way; it is a matter of departmental arrangement. The question, of course, is one of importance. The objection is largely one of the expense and the multiplication of officers. No doubt it would be more satisfactory if we were able to increase our staff of appraisers, and, perhaps, at some ports where we have not them, we should have them. But, of course, the expense of the department has increased considerably of late; and, while we have endeavoured to keep pace with the business, we have hesitated to employ all the officers, or create all the new offices that, perhaps, might be desirable. We intend, to try to keep pace with the requirements of the service. If we find ports where the appraisers are overworked, I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) will have to be given effect to in one or more of the ports before very long.

Mr. KEMP. I think the argument given by the hon. minister will hardly be an excuse for not taking some definite step at an early day. As to the question of expense, what the government would save by levying the duties properly chargeable on goods would more than offset the expenditures involved by the appointment of these officers. If the hon. minister has looked into the system in the larger cities in the United States, he has found appraisers who are to be considered more as specialists than are those of our own country. My own opinion is that each appraiser with us is supposed to be informed with regard to too many lines of business. He can not do justice to all, and, the proper duty not being charged, the revenue is often cheated of what it should fairly receive. I do not see that the consideration of expense should stand in the way of the improvement I have suggested.

Mr. MACLEAN. The object of the Tariff Act and the appointment of the appraisers is, not only to collect revenue, but to carry out the principle of protection. There is a lack of appraising force in the Customs department, and by reason of this, Canadian manufacturers have been discriminated against. My own attention has been drawn quite recently to a case in which certain machines were brought into a city in Canada at a valuation of $1,000, when further investigation proved that they should have been brought in at a valuation of $1,800. The work of making this change had to be done by the manufacturer who was interested in the business in Canada. He found the American manufacturers sending the machines into Canada, and Canadian appraisers putting them through the customs at a valuation of little over half of what they were bought for. So, it is not only in the interest of the revenue, but in the interests of the Canadian manufacturer and the Canadian workman that the appraisers should be competent and sufficiently numerous, and that they should be encouraged to perform their duties in the way of protecting the Canadian manufacturer. And in that relation I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether there is any punishment for the perpetration of acts of this character?

Hon. Mr. PATERSON.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Section 8 of the Customs law provides that, if articles are undervalued by more than fifteen per cent, double the duty on the undervaluation shall be collected. This section is mandatory. Of course, where fraud is suspected and proven, penalties are levied upon the perpetrators of them. As to machinery coming in under-valued, in some cases second hand machinery is brought in, which may not have a market value. To meet cases of that kind, we added to our staff an agent who was for many years connected with one of the large machine works. If machinery comes in at a port where there is not an appraiser or where we are not satisfied with the valuation of the regular appraiser, it is the duty of this officer to proceed to the port and appraise the article and see that it is entered at proper value. In the larger cities, I think, the appraising is done very fairly. In Toronto, for instance, we have a textile appraiser, a grocery appraiser and a hardware appraiser. These are the principal ones. I grant you that one or other of these departments would have to take in stationery, boots and shoes, and other lines. But, I think, we are pretty well manned in that respect in many ports. In addition, we have the check of the department here. If anything seems wrong, the port is written to and, if necessary, the invoices are called for and an inquiry made; then, if there has been an under-appraisement, an amended appraisement is made and the amended duty is paid by the importer.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) has taken power to appoint an assistant commissioner. Is the gentleman who is to be appointed now in the service, or will an outsider be brought in?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is in the service, and has been since 1896.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has raised the question of penalties for under-valuation. I presume the hon. minister finds a growing tendency to attempt to defraud the customs by undervaluation. I understand that this is not a criminal offence under the Customs Act, as it is under the law of the United States.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is certainly an offence.

Mr. KEMP. A criminal offence?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It has never been so dealt with since I came into office. No parties have been proceeded against with a view of having them imprisoned. But they do, no doubt, proceed in that way, and there is generally a money penalty.

Mr. MACLEAN. Should there not be a clause in the Criminal Code dealing with offences of this kind?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think there is power under the Inspection Act to do that. As hon. gentlemen will understand, there are two sides to a question. Sometimes the entry may have an appearance of deliberate fraud, there are cases that look suspicious ; and where there really have been contraventions of the Act penalties have been put upon the offenders. But they put forward their side of the case and claim that they acted in ignorance of the law, that they bought the article for that price, and thought they had a right to enter it at that price. As the hon. gentleman knows, there are export prices ; foreigners, when effecting sales in this country to our own merchants, will quote an export price. Well, that is right enough, the Customs Department cannot interfere with that. If a man in another country wishes to sell his goods at 25 per cent under the domestic price, that is a perfectly legitimate transaction as between the seller and the buyer. But the law makes it imperative on the Customs Department to see that the duty is paid on the value of that article in the country of production, and that law we endeavour to carry out.

Mr. KEMP. Representations have been made to the Minister of Customs with respect to making the law more stringent with regard to undervaluation, and it has been proposed to adopt some clauses of the law in force in the United States. Is not that the case ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, there was a suggestion in some of the Toronto papers, I think it was in the 'Toronto News,' that we should adopt the practice of the United States in fixing the value for duty. Well, I think the writer of that article is under a mistake. The United States law is virtually the same as ours, it takes the value of the goods in the country from whence they are exported and levies the duty upon that value. It is the same in the United States, as it is with us in that respect. I do not know that you could fix any other standard. I have thought the matter over a good deal as to what should form the standard, say of the Canadian value. How would you determine the Canadian value of an article ? I think the fairest way is that when an article is sold in the country of production you get an affidavit from the seller, and at present as hon. gentlemen know we do not require such affidavit, it is something that we put in operation since I took charge of the department. But previous to that, all the exporter had to do was to certify his invoice as correct. Well, he sold goods, we will say, 20 per cent less than they were sold in the country of production, but the transaction was correct as between the two individuals, the buyer actually bought them for that money, but that was not the value at which they should be entered for duty. So the importer here would say, when he was called upon for an amended entry. Well, I did not know what the value was, the drummer told me that was the price. Well, the man who sells the goods knows, and we will oblige him to make a declaration on his invoice that the price appearing on the invoice is the price at which the goods are sold in the country from whence they are exported ; and when there is any advance, then that is noted upon the invoice. Say an article was charged at $1.00 and the selling price was $1.25 ; the difference is noted, and the entry is made upon $1.25 instead of $1.00.

At six o'clock Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 2,

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume at the present time, from the wording of this resolution, that there is no assistant commissioner. I notice by the Customs Act, chapter 32, of the Revised Statutes, that authority is given there to appoint an assistant commissioner. Why repeat it in the proposed amendment ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no authority in the present Customs Act, as we have it, for the appointment of an assistant commissioner. There was an assistant commissioner a few years ago, but I think that was changed in 1894, or perhaps before that. There is no provision in the present Act for the appointment of an assistant commissioner, and so we propose it now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I find, referring to chapter 32, which the hon. minister proposes to amend, that clause 4 says :

> There shall be a commissioner of customs who shall be the deputy of the Minister of Customs and an assistant commissioner.

I presume, from what the hon. gentleman new tells us, that the clause has been amended subsequent to the revision of the statutes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, and the assistant commissioner has been dropped.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), before the committee rose at six o'clock, was discussing the question of undervaluation. What I said that brought forth these observations was not in reference to the policy that had been promulgated, I think he said in the 'News.' I do not know what the policy was. I hardly know what it had reference to. What I was trying to impress upon the hon. minister was the fact that in our laws in regard to undervaluation, I have been informed, there is no such thing as a penal offence. There are money penalties, but there are no penal offences such as exist under the customs laws of the United States. I was under the impression that representations had been made to the government—I do not know whether they came under the observation of the hon. Minister of Customs or of some of his colleagues—recommending that the American law be considered, and that in such cases as it is practicable, the provisions in relation to undervaluation be embodied in our law. I do not see anything in these amendments looking in that direction. The hon. Minister of Customs said that because of the facilities for preventing undervaluation and fraud upon the revenue in the larger cities, undervaluation was not likely to take place in the larger cities to as great an extent as in the smaller towns, and that brings forward a very important matter. I, for myself, do not see that it is possible to have goods valued or to know whether the invoices represent the proper value at any of the smaller ports. I do not know how this thing is regulated in other countries, but I do know that in this country it is often said that when an invoice for goods is presented at an outlying place, it is likely to go through with greater facility than if the goods are passed through customs at a larger place. Of course, the hon. Minister of Customs has said that each invoice is reviewed by the department when it reaches Ottawa, but it is almost impossible to tell without being able to examine the goods and make a proper comparison, whether the valuation has been proper or not. The officers in these smaller places have not the information before them; they have not the price lists and necessary data. I think perhaps we have too many ports of entry, and that there are too many small places where facilities of that kind are given, and that, consequently, a great deal of fraud must result. I do not know whether the hon. minister has ever thought of making any changes in respect to the administration of the customs of this country that would obviate that kind of thing.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is this difficulty; in the United States I think they have no more ports of entry than we have in Canada.

Mr. KEMP. In the whole of the United States ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not mean proportionately. I think that, perhaps, in the whole of the United States, they have no more ports of entry than we have in Canada.

Mr. KEMP. That is what I understand.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Representations have been made to me by merchants in the larger places that it would be in the interest of the community if we had a less number of these smaller ports, and if the ports of entry were more concentrated. Well, there is that aspect of the case; there is no doubt about that. We do get a better examination of goods, but the difficulty we experience in reference to that is that the smaller places are asking for the convenience of customs officers, and the pressure upon the department was never greater than at the present time for more ports. I think that I have at present applications from perhaps twenty places now for customs facilities. They represent that they are many miles away from a customs port, and that they cannot receive their goods without going backward and forward and thus they are making out a very strong case. I cannot very well see that you can refuse one section of the community the facilities that are given to another within proper, reasonable bounds. To say that persons living conveniently, perhaps, to one of our larger places shall enjoy customs facilities, while others living at a greater distance and who are contributing to the revenue too shall not have the same conveniences is what presents the difficulty in not only attempting to close small ports, but in dealing with applications for new ports to be created. It would be a very difficult matter indeed after a place is once established as a customs port, even where the business would not warrant it, as far as the revenue is concerned and where the revenue actually will be perhaps 50 per cent of the sum required for the payment of the expense attendant upon its collection, to close such a port. All we have been able to do is—shall I say to resist the pressure as far as we can from other places in order that we should not increase the number of ports immoderately. Where you have ports now existing, where the revenue is a certain amount and where another place of equal importance and of equal revenue presents its claim to have customs facilities it is rather difficult to answer a request of that kind. The convenience of the public must, in a measure, be sought. It is accompanied with the disadvantage that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) has alluded to, and which we use as an argument when we are presenting the difficulties to those who are pressing for additional customs ports. It is one of the arguments that we have to make use of that we have better facilities for the examination of goods and determining what the proper value and rate of duty are at the larger places where we have competent officers. I have no doubt that the collector does his best to carry out the law, but in many of these smaller ports we have only the collector. He has to be the appraiser, he has to do the whole of the work, and he will do it to the best of his ability. However, there are no very heavy importations at these ports, and I think, taking it all in all, that perhaps no very serious charge can be made that the revenue is suffering or that other traders whose interests must be considered as well as the collection of the revenue are put under any serious disadvantage. Of course, you can understand that if at one port goods can be entered at a lower rate of duty, or that the proper valuation is not scrutinized as well as at another, those doing business at a port with a more efficient administration would be at a disadvantgae as against those who were importing their goods through the other port. I quite recognize that, but all invoices are scrutinized by the check department in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BLAIN. Suppose an invoice is presented to a customs-house officer at a small point, is he the absolute judge as to the classification under which these goods shall pass the custom-house ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, he takes the entry and passes it to the best of his knowledge. All these entries at the large ports as well as the small ports come to the headquarters here, and they are scrutinized by the check department, but in the first instance, the collector has of necessity to make the entry, and he has to do it to the best of his judgment as to his duty under the circumstances.

Mr. BLAIN. There is very considerable dissatisfaction in the commercial world with regard to the value for duty placed on certain articles. I am informed by one of the leading scale manufacturers in Toronto, that in the case of certain registering scales imported from the United States which are sold retail in Canada for $60 or $70 each, they are valued for duty at only $6 or $7 each. The American manufacturer seeing that there is a market in Canada for a new article which is not made in Canada, invoices it from himself in the United States to himself in Canada at a low rate, and as in the case of the scales I have mentioned the difference between the value for duty and the price at which they are sold to the public is out of all proportion. Has this matter been brought to the attention of the Minister of Customs ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The question as to the proper value for scales has been before the department several times, but I do not know that the particular scale to which the hon. gentleman has referred has been under consideration. We have officers in the United States whose duty it is to ascertain the value of articles in that country. We have not such officers in Great Britain or on the continent. The officers in the United States go to headquarters and ascertain the value from an actual inspection of the books, and the manufacturers in their own interests, wishing to have no trouble with the customs-house when they send goods to Canada, are anxious to afford our officers all proper information in that connection. Our officers satisfy themselves as to the price at which that article is sold in the United States, and when it comes into Canada in like quantity and in like condition, no matter what the invoice may say, the duty is levied upon the value of the article as sold in the United States.

Mr. LAVALL. Are there any means by which the public can know the rate for duty that is fixed on an article ? I may state to the minister that during last winter, in the business with which I am connected, we had on two different occasions two different sets of invoices sent to us. It is, I suppose, needless to say that that was not done at our request. However, what is supposed to be a reputable business house in the United States sent us one invoice, being the price we were to pay, and another invoice being the price on which we were supposed to pay duty. We sent back the lower invoice which was the only invoice which had the certificate on it. This incident would go to show that such a practice is quite common. I may say also that the agent of a large manufacturing concern in Canton, Ohio, called on me and desired me to import a large quantity of goods, and in giving me his estimate of price he calculated the duty at just one-half of what we were supposed to pay f.o.b. at Canton. I asked him if that was his way of doing business and he said that it was. If that be so, and if other firms are doing the same thing, it would appear to be conducted on a fairly large scale. If the public knew the rate at which these articles were valued by the customs, I believe that the publicity would tend to prevent such things occurring.

Mr. WRIGHT. I may say that we bring in carbons from the United States which are made in Cleveland, and when these carbons come to us the officer collects from us the duty on the price which these carbons are wholesaled for in the United States, no matter what the invoice may say.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The matter alluded to by the hon. member (Mr. Lavell) would be a case of fraud, and if that came to our knowledge we would deal severely with any house which practiced it. The forwarding of the two invoices would be a fraud upon the revenue, and it would be a serious matter for that house if they were detected.

Mr. LAVELL. The point I wish to make is, that it appears to be a common practice. We declined to have any business dealings with the house whose agent suggested the lower rate for customs duty to us, and we have not sent any further orders to the man who sent us the duplicate invoices. It would appear from their representations to us, that it is a very common thing for them to do. I am sorry I did not send the duplicate invoices to the minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are very pleased whenever any one gives us information that will enable us to detect frauds of that kind, and of course we do not divulge the names of those giving us the information. Whenever a matter of that kind comes to our knowledge you may depend upon it that it is followed up, and penalties imposed that would effectually prevent its recurrence so far as that house was concerned. If a man sold a bill of goods to this country and sent a fraudulent invoice, I question if he could collect the amount at all in Canada.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am afraid I did not make myself clear with reference to the duty on carbons to which I have referred. We buy these carbons in the United States for $8 a thousand, but as they are sold to dealers in the United States for $9 a thousand, we have to pay duty on them at the rate of $9, although we only pay $8.

Mr. BLAIN. If these articles were presented at an outport of customs and the officer was not familiar with the value, the invoice for $8 per thousand would be the price on which the duty would be assessed. If it was afterwards shown that these goods were sold in the United States at $9, it is possible the department would take some action, but in the meantime the goods would have found their way into Canada on the valuation of $8 per thousand.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If I understand the hon. gentleman from Renfrew (Mr. Wright) he rather complains that while he only pays $8 per thousand, we make him pay duty on $9 per thousand. Sometimes we receive complaints of that kind. Parliament determines what the duty should be, and we carry it out. It is our duty under the law to collect the revenue that properly accrues. If an entry of the kind referred to by hon. friend for Peel were made at one of the smaller ports, the only check we have is that a copy of the entry has to come to Ottawa, where it is examined by our checking department. I do not say that we detect everything, but if an entry of a certain class of goods came in at a different price from that prevailing at other and larger ports, the officer would immediately call for an amended entry.

Mr. LAVELL. When I first mentioned this matter I asked if there was any way in which the public could find out the value fixed by the department upon certain standard goods. If this information could be obtained, it would be easy to head off many of these frauds.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When decisions are given by the department on certain questions that may not be plain, circulars are sent out to the different collectors, conveying the information. In the great majority of cases the collectors themselves will know what valuation to place upon regular articles of merchandise which have a known market value. There may be special cases in which they would not know. In these cases we avail ourselves of the safe-guard provided by our checking department; and if an entry comes in which has been undervalued and an amended entry is called for, that would be a guide for the collector in the future. In addition to that, there are trade journals which are made use of, such as the 'Iron Age,' as guides for ascertaining correct valuations.

Mr. LAVELL. Is there any way in which one business man can find out the figure at which goods are being imported by others? Take, for example, a certain class of carriage, which is well known in the trade. It is purchased at a certain price, but is invoiced at $4 below that price. One dealer might accept that invoice and another might refuse it. Is there any way in which a person importing these goods or the general public can get information as to their valuation from the Customs Department?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course, the Customs Department is not at liberty to reveal to the general public any invoices or values; but the officers themselves are supposed to know the values, and to be able to tell the importer, when he comes to make his entry, what the proper value for duty should be. Further than that I do not know that we can go.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to ask the minister if within recent months any specific charges have been placed before him in relation to the improper or fraudulent importation of German goods under the British preference. The reason I ask this is that during the famous tour of the leader of the opposition and his party of friends through the west last fall, members of his party made charges throughout the country—one member in particular, I think it was the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain)—at various public meetings, which charges by inference or implication meant that certain citizens of the North-west Territories had been guilty of fraud in bringing into Canada German goods under the British preference.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that the hon. member for West Assiniboia is quite correct when he says that the party travelling in the west last year with the hon. leader of the oposition made the charges against the government that German goods were brought into this country under the British preference. That would not be news to this House, for the hon. member for West Toronto, when discussing the matter at the last session, showed this House, and his statement went uncontradicted, that a large quantity of German goods were imported from time to time into the country. The hon. member for West Assiniboia has made a statement that is very wide in its character, to the effect that some members of the party made this charge at every place in western Canada. That is not true. I may say that I made reference to it at one point in the west, though it could have been truthfully made at every meeting, because it was well understood. The charge has been made by the Liberal-Conservative party in this House, that German goods were brought into this country under the guise of the British preference. The government, endorsed by the hon. member for West Assiniboia, said that was not correct; but what is the condition of things to-day? The government at this session of parliament give notice to the world that they would abolish the preference. Why are we discussing this item now? For the reason that we are going to place in the customs tariff of this country a surtax specially directed against German goods. That is surely a proof that some irregularity is going on—the goods manufactured in Germany were brought into this country and under that so-called British preference, which has proven to the people of this country and to the government itself to be not a British preference, but in the interest of Germany and other foreign countries.

Mr. SCOTT. It seemed to me, at the time I was reading the reports of the statements and charges which the hon. gentleman says he made at only one point, but which were reported in the newspapers of Manitoba and the Territories as having been made at several points, either by himself or some of his friends, that if these gentlemen believed the statements they were making, they should have taken immediate steps to place their facts before the Minister of Customs or the Customs Department. Since coming here this session, I have been waiting day after day, at all events during the budget debate, to hear those charges repeated, on the floor of this House, publicly and before the Minister of Customs, so that the officers of the department might proceed to take steps to do justice in the circumstances. It seems to me too, that if there was a temptation to people to bring in German goods under the British preference while it amounted to 33⅓ per cent, there is twice as much now, since the surtax has been imposed and the preference on British goods as against German goods is made 66⅔ per cent. Considerable doubt raised with respect to certain statements alleged to have been made by my hon. friends while in the west, has been raised and it is perhaps fortunate, therefore, that I took steps to get well authenticated reports of the particular statements to which I refer. Some of them have given my hon. friends considerable trouble. Statements were made by one of these gentlemen, Mr. Powell, of New Brunswick, at some points in British Columbia respecting the officials of the Intercolonial Railway, which, I noticed by the newspapers, gave him considerable trouble later on. There were other statements made by the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. Fowler), who, I regret, is not here now, and who, according to the press reports, had considerable trouble in explaining away or denying what he was alleged to have said respecting certain sections of the people of this Dominion.

Mr. BROCK. Has this any connection with the customs matter we are now discussing?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I shall endeavour to come a little nearer to the customs matter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We might as well have the others, what are the facts?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have allowed a good deal of latitude because I understand that so much has to be said about various matters in this connection that we may as well have them discussed now, and then we will pass over the other items more rapidly. It is pretty hard, in a discussion of this kind, to keep hon. members down to the particular clause before the committee, and probably we may as well now have a general discussion of the whole resolution and then pass the remaining clauses more rapidly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to endorse the objection taken by the hon. member for Toronto. I do not think that we should go outside the particular resolution before that committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think so too, but I would not care to have these statements go unchecked, and I do not think that statements of this kind should be allowed to be made from hon. gentlemen opposite and then have a ruling from the Chair which would prevent our replying. If necessary we will move that the committee rise for the purpose of dealing with those matters which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has, with so much good taste, brought before the House, when my hon. friend from King's is not here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that there will be ample opportunity on other votes to discuss all these matters, and I hope that the committee will confine itself to the particular subject before it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am willing to accede to the request of my hon. friend, but if he wants to avoid the discussion of irrelevant matters of this kind, I hope he will put a little better check on some of his injudicious followers, such as the hon. member for Assiniboia, or otherwise we shall have a very long discussion on somewhat irrelevant matters, which would not be pleasing to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that there is quite as much fault on the side of my hon. friends opposite in departing from the strict letter of the various resolutions.

Mr. MACLEAN. Not to-night.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have discussed in Committee of Supply all sorts of questions, and no objection was taken, although I think objection should have been taken on both sides.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not quite finished the statement I intended making, but I will endeavour, after the very severe reproof made me by the hon. leader of the opposition—

Mr. BORDEN. And the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. SCOTT. And, if my hon. friend wishes, indirectly by the hon. Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Directly.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to gratify the hon. gentleman and accept the reproof in good part, and I will endeavour to confine myself to the matter before us as closely as possible. I hope that my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, did not understand me as making any charge against the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I refer to certain alleged remarks quoted in the absence of the hon. member for King's, as having been made by him, which that hon. gentleman has previously contradicted. This, I said, was not in good taste, and I see no reason for changing my opinion.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope that my hon. friend did not understand me as having attributed to the hon. member for King's any statement which that hon. gentleman denied. I endeavoured to convey to the committee the fact that the hon. member for King's had contradicted, and, as a matter of fact, had been compelled to contradict, certain statements he was alleged to have made in the west. Since the opening of the session my hon. friend himself has deemed it necessary to contradict certain statements alleged, in his own organ in Winnipeg, to have been made by him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I did nothing of the kind. I said that the report was not a full report of what I had said, that I had said something further on that occasion, and the newspapers admitted that I had.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope that the members of the committee will confine themselves to the resolution before us, and not refer to anything which has taken place in any other section of the country.

Mr. SCOTT. Before I am through, I have here a statement to present which is in the form of a statutory declaration, regarding what was said by my hon. friend from Peel. I may say that my hon. friend, when in the town of Regina, where I live, went into a mercantile establishment and purchased an article of German ware in the form of a teapot, and if that teapot were not exhibited more than once, and if my hon. friend did not repeat his remarks in several places during his tour, then I am very much misinformed. In fact that teapot, became a feature of the tour and was spoken about at every meeting, and referred to in every newspaper. I have been very much surprised not to have seen it during this session on the desk of the hon. gentleman, or to have heard from him remarks concerning it similar to those he made in the west. If the statements were proper ones to make in the west, they should also be made here. With regard to his statement that he only spoke concerning this teapot at one point, let me read this statutory declaration, made by Mr. William Trant, whom, my hon. friends who were on that trip, will remember very well, because he accompanied them during a part of it :

CANADA.

North-west Territories.

I, William Trant, of Regina, in the said Territories, solemnly declare :

1. That I am a reporter for the newspaper press ;

2. That from the 25th day of September to the 3rd day of October, in the year 1902, I attended public meetings as follows, that is to say, a meeting at Moose Jaw on the said 25th day of September ; a meeting at Regina on the 26th day of September ; on the 27th day of September a meeting at Qu'Appelle ; on the 29th day of September a meeting at Wolseley, and in the evening of the same day one at Grenfell ; on the 30th September a meeting at Whitewood, and on the evening of the same day one at Wapella ; on the 1st day of October a meeting at Moosomin ; on the 2nd day of October a meeting at Virden, in the province of Manitoba, and on the 3rd day of October a meeting at Brandon, all in the year 1902, and that I attended said meetings in my said capacity as reporter.

3. That at the said meeting held at Moose Jaw on the said 25th day of September, at the meeting held on the 27th day of September at Qu'Appelle, and at the meeting aforesaid held on the evening of the 30th day of September at Wapella, I heard and I noticed a speech at each of the three said meetings delivered by a person who told me his name was Richard Blain, and that he was a member of the House of Commons, representing the constituency of Peel.

4. That at each and every of the three meetings mentioned in the paragraph next immediately preceding, the said Mr. Blain said that the British preference then existing was used by manufacturers in Germany to send their goods to Canada as British goods and so defraud the revenue of the Dominion of Canada ; and further, he, the said Richard Blain, explained that the said object was attained by the said manufacturers in Germany, first having the said goods shipped to England and thence reshipped to Canada as British goods entitled to the preference given such goods by the law of Canada.

5. And I declare particularly that at the aforesaid meeting held at Qu'Appelle on the said 27th day of September A.D., 1902, the said Richard Blain produced a razor which he said he had bought at Regina, in the said Territories, the day before and which he said was a razor of German manufacture and had been imported into Canada under the British preference in the manner described in the paragraph next immediately preceding.

6. And I further say particularly that at the aforesaid meeting held in the evening of the 30th day of September, in the year 1902, at Wapella, the said Richard Blain said he had bought a teapot in Regina that had been made in Germany, and that the merchant who had sold him, the said Blain, the said teapot, or the assistant to the merchant had, at the request of the said Richard Blain, shown him the invoice of the goods, of which the said teapot formed a part, and that the said invoice was as if for goods that were shipped from England and had received the benefit of the British preference.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.'

(Sgd.) WM. TRANT.

Declared before me at Regina, in the said Territories, 13th day of February, A.D. 1903.

(Sgd.) JAS. BALFOUR,
A notary public in and for the North-west Territories.

This is, to a certain extent a generalized statement, but I would ask you to take note of the fact that Mr. Trant makes the statement that the hon. gentleman made the statement on the subject at the meeting at Wapella.

Some hon. MEMBER. More.

Mr. SCOTT. I will tell the hon. gentleman what he said at another point according to a statement of another gentleman.

DOMINION OF CANADA.

Province of Manitoba.

To wit :

In the matter of a speech delivered by Mr. Blain, M.P., in Victoria Hall, Morden, on October 8, 1902.

I, Robert George McCuish, editor of the Morden 'Chronicle' of village of Morden, in the province of Manitoba, do solemnly declare that the following quotation from Mr. Blain's speech, which appeared in an editorial headed 'Mr. Blain's teapot' in the Morden 'Chronicle' on October 16th, is correct :—

Then follows the report of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) remarks which appeared in the Morden 'Chronicle' and the editor makes a statutory statement to the truth and accuracy of the report, I shall not weary the House by reading that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well :

The preference is not a preference on British goods. I have here a teapot bought in Regina (holding it up) made in Germany and it came in under the preferential tariff. The merchant who brought it in told me he got the benefit of the preference on it. The Liberal-Conservative party say the preferential tariff is not in the interests of Canada as these things should be made in Canada. This teapot is stamped 'made in Germany' it was purchased there and there was no British labour put on it or British material in it but it got the preference of 33⅓ per cent. Exporters get the same preference on German goods shipped from London as on British made goods and we are opposed to the preference in so far as it lets in German goods. If a traveller comes along and takes an order for $100 worth of German goods, he takes them from Berlin to London and invoices them at $125 under the British preference and so a preference is given on German goods. We tell the Liberals that the preference is working a benefit to Germany and an injury to Canada.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'The Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) R. G. McCUISH.

Declared before me at village of Morden, in the province of Manitoba, this 21st day of January, A.D. 1903.

(Sgd.) STEWART M. BATHAM,
A commissioner, &c.

What is recited in the declaration is exactly what I have read as the report of my hon. friend's speech. And the committee will notice that the hon. gentleman stated at Morden that he bought this tea pot in Regina and that the merchant informed him that the teapot had come in under the preference. So, the merchant was indirectly accused of fraud by my hon. friend. The merchant—at my request I may say— furnished me with a statement respecting the matter. He writes to me :

Regina, N.W.T., December 23, 1902.

Walter Scott, Esq., M.P.,
Regina, N.W.T.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication pointing out that at certain public meetings in the eastern part of the Territories and in Manitoba, Mr. Richard Blain, M.P., one of the party of gentlemen who accompanied Mr. R. L. Borden, M.P., on his western tour, spoke as follows :—

I have already read to the Committee the report of the speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read, read.

Mr. SCOTT—(reading) :

The preference is not a preference on British goods. I have here a teapot, bought in Regina, made in Germany and it came in under the preferential tariff. The merchant who brought it in told me he got the benefit of the preference on it. The Liberal-Conservative party say the preferential tariff is not in the interests of Canada as these things should be made in Canada. This teapot is stamped 'Made in Germany.'

Mr. BLAIN. What meeting was that ?

Mr. SCOTT. At Morden. And Mr. McCuish makes this statutory declaration.

Mr. BLAIN. That is the same meeting ?

Mr. SCOTT. No, there was the meeting at Wapella. Mr. Trant makes the statement with regard to that.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott). I was asking for information.

Mr. SCOTT—(reading) :

It was purchased there and there was no British labour put on it, or British material in it, but it got the preference of 33⅓ per cent. Exporters get the same preference on German goods shipped from England as on British-made goods and we are opposed to the preference in so far as it lets in German goods. If a traveller comes along and takes an order for $100 worth of German goods he takes them from Berlin to London and invoices them at $125 under the British preference and so a preference is given on German goods.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, I come to the merchant's own statement, and I wil read this loud enough for hon. gentlemen to hear.

I note also that as you pointed out a portion of the press makes the charge that the Regina firm from whom Mr. Blain bought the teapot has been guilty of defrauding the customs in as much as the benefit of the preference could not have been obtained upon such an importation without the making of a false declaration. I believe that the Smith & Ferguson Company, Limited, is the firm against which the charge is directed, because when in Regina, Mr. Blain did buy a teapot marked 'made in Germany' over our counter. And in justice to the firm I beg respectfully to say that the charge is wholly untrue.

There can be no question, because this is the only firm in Regina that carries this particular line of German ware.

As I have stated, Mr. Blain when in Regina, paid a visit to our store and purchased a German teapot from Mr. T. W. Peart, one of our salesmen. He made particular inquiries about his purchase, asking where the article was manufactured, how it was shipped to Regina, &c.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) prepare that or did his friends ?

Mr. SCOTT. I place it before the House for what it is worth.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. gentleman might well answer my question.

Mr. SCOTT. It may have been the merchant's assistant who sold the tea-pot.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did the hon. gentleman say that his friend prepared it ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is free to give the information or withhold it, as he pleases.

Mr. SCOTT—(reading) :

He also volunteered to Mr. Peart the information that the consignment of goods of which this teapot was a part had come into Canada under the British preferential tariff, which information Mr. Peart was not in a positon either to confirm or deny.

So, it was my hon. friend who was giving the information and not the merchant.

The fact is, however, that if the fraud were committed it was not committed by our firm as the duty upon the consignment of which the teapot was a part was not paid by us at Regina but was paid by the brokers from whom we purchase the consignment at Montreal.

One of the newspaper statements which you place before me credits Mr. Blain with saying that the teapot was part of a consignment worth $100. The consignment actually was invoiced to us at $346.68. The goods are known as Stransky steel ware.

And will the hon. gentleman note this—

The invoice is dated at New York, where is the head office of the company in America. We ordered the goods through the broker in Montreal and the duty was paid at Montreal. The goods were shipped from Montreal to Regina via Canadian Pacific Railway and came through in the original large wooden boxes in which they left Germany, each of which is bound with iron. On each box, printed in large letters is the word 'German.'

Great evidence of fraud in this.

On the side of the boxes, also printed in large letters are the words 'Stransky steel ware lasts for years.' On each piece of ware in the consignment which included teapots, basins, pitchers, pans, &c., there is pasted a label bearing the number of that piece and in bold black-faced type the word 'Germany.' I have to say emphatically that when Mr. Blain sought to convey the impression that we informed him that these goods come in under the British preference he was either labouring under a misapprehension or was guilty of deception. We had nothing to do with the payment of duty. We do not know what duty was paid and could not give Mr. Blain information which we do not possess.

(Sgd.) J. W. SMITH,
President of The Smith & Ferguson Co., Ltd.

I may state that Mr. Smith was at that time and is at present mayor of the city of Regina.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to read the last paragraph again, or to send the document over to me ?

Mr. SCOTT—(reading) :

I have to say emphatically that when Mr. Blain sought to convey the impression that we informed him that these goods come in under the British preference he was either labouring under a misapprehension or was guilty of deception. We had nothing to do with the payment of duty.

Mr. BLAIN. That is the point.

Mr. SCOTT.—(reading.)

We do not know what duty was paid, and could not give Mr. Blain information which we do not possess.

But the fact appears, as the committee has already learned, that these goods came via New York in a large wooden box in which they were put by the firm in Germany, with 'Germany' stamped on the box. There are ninety-nine chances to one against any fraud having been committed with regard to these goods. If my hon. friend still thinks there is any doubt about the matter, I can furnish further information with regard to the invoices, and we will have an inquiry made and find out at Montreal whether my hon. friend's charges were true or untrue.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would just give us the balance of that letter, or send it over to me. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, you would allow the document to be laid on the Table ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is obligatory on him to do so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have no control over the hon. member for Assiniboia. He is free to lay the document on the Table or not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When an hon. gentleman reads any document in the House he is obliged to lay it upon the Table of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A minister is obliged to do so when he quotes from a public document.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). We should have both the document and teapot laid on the Table.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When a minister cites from a public document and bases an argument thereon, he is bound to place it on the Table. But a private member can cite from a public document without this necessity.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would like to know the difference between a minister and a private member in this House. There is no difference whatever.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no difference in person, but there is a difference in the functions.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Any one who quotes from a public document has to place it before the House, and a minister has no privileges in this House that a back-bench member has not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A minister should have a control of a public document which a private member does not possess, and if a minister uses that document for the purposes of argument then he is bound to put the House in possession of it. But this is not a public document, it is a matter entirely for the hon. gentlemen to settle among themselves. This is not a state document, it is not under the control of any minister. The hon. member may read it or not ; he is not obliged to read it except as a matter of good taste.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Chairman has given the ruling that a minister has a privilege in this House that a private member has not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Only as respects a public document.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that if a minister reads a public document from which he cites and bases thereon an argument, he is in duty bound to place that before the House. But a private member can cite from even a public document, and he is not required to place it upon the Table.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But here is a gentleman who makes a charge against another gentleman in the House, charging that my hon. friend on a particular occasion made a statement that is false. He reads an affidavit in the House in relation thereto, and do you rule that when that affidavit is read in the House the member reading it is not obliged to lay it upon the Table ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is the rule, I will read it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is a most monstrous thing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On page 409 of Bourinot I find :

> It has been laid down by the highest authorities that 'when a minister of the Crown quotes a public document in the House, and founds upon it an argument or assertion, that document, if called for, ought to be produced.' But it is allowable to repeat to the House information which is contained in a private communication. When such private papers are quoted in the House there is no rule requiring them to be laid on the Table.

Mr. BENNETT. Except decency.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to retract your ruling about a minister having a privilege which is denied to a private member. I must request the Chairman to retract that ruling, because there is no such a thing in this House as a minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is such a thing in this House as a minister. Ministers are held to account for many things for which private members are not. The ruling of the Chairman was that when a minister is quoting from a public document he is obliged to lay it on the Table if called for. The essence of the matter is that the document is a public one.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.—(reading.)

> It does not appear that the English Commons has ever applied this rule to the case of private members citing public documents not in the possession of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There have been occasions now and then, I believe, in this House when letters from persons outside the House, or statutory declarations such as that read by the hon. member for Assiniboia, have been read in the House for the purpose of contradicting or discrediting one of its members. I have always thought that the practice was absolutely wrong, and I see in 'Bourinot,' at page 408, immediately before the page from which you, Sir, have just quoted, that the rule is laid down in this way :

> Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

I think that is a very good rule to be followed, one which I think the dignity of the House would require and one that we should observe in the future, particularly in a case of this kind. My hon. friend from Assiniboia has not, as I understand, seen fit to observe a rule, not contained, it is true, in any written regulation of the House, but a rule depending on that courtesy which is usually observed among gentlemen, that is, to give to any gentleman whom it is proposed to attack notice that the atack will be made. I have not in my recollection at the present time any occasion when that rule, founded upon the usual courtesy observed between gentlemen in this House, has been departed from. The hon. member for West Assiniboia has seen fit to depart from that for reasons which are best known to himself. I would only like to say to my hon. friends on this side of the House that whatever provocation of that character may be given to them by my hon. friend from West Assiniboia, or any other hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, I trust that not one of them, on any provocation whatever, will ever see fit to follow so bad an example.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that your ruling should have gone a little further. Your ruling should have commenced further back. When this document was first proposed to be read by the hon. member for West Assiniboia reflecting upon the character and veracity of an hon. gentleman in this House, it was your duty to have interposed and to have said, according to the authority which is laid down in Bourinot, that that is not a practice which the rules of the House would permit, and that it is not a practice which tends to promote the dignity of the proceedings of this House. It may be that the hon. member for West Assiniboia may think that it comports to his position as a member of this House to make, in the first place, this attack without notice, and then, in the next place, to withhold his documents which he has seen fit to read. I do not think, if he sees fit to pursue that course—

Mr. SCOTT. Would the hon. gentleman allow me ? I have not at all refused to let the hon. gentleman have these documents or to lay them on the Table.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I apologize at once. I have misunderstood the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to lay the documents on the Table of the House or to hand them to the hon. gentleman if he desires them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I apologize to the hon. member for West Assiniboia. I regret that I was so obtuse as to suppose, that, his sitting there and holding the document in his hands for a period of five minutes and awaiting the ruling of the chair, was equivalent to a refusal on his part. I most humbly apologize for the misunderstanding in which all the other members of the House shared in regard to these papers. I am very glad there has been a misunderstanding in regard to the matter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman--

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, would you allow me to make an observation before you give your ruling ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I wish to put myself right in regard to the accusations made against me by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax).

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You can do it afterwards.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, order. According to rule twelve—

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman--

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the Chairman the right to give a decision before hearing the point of order discussed ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. According to rule twelve—

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon being heard before you make your ruling.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Haggart, please resume your seat and hear the Chairman.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Let me hear the rule under which he prevents me being heard before he makes his ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. 'A member called to order shall sit down.' That is rule twelve. It is this :

> A member called to order shall sit down, but may afterwards explain.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). So may the Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. What I wanted to explain was the reference made by the hon. leader of the opposition to my ruling in not calling the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) to order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Please do not understand me as levelling any accusation against you.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think you just conceived the meaning of this clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the hon. leader of the opposition to say that documents could not be read in the House which made any reflection upon hon. members in the House. What the rule says is this :

> Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether papers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

These were not proceedings within the House to which the letters referred but proceedings in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). 'Anything said by a member.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes, 'anything said by a member' within the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does not say so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. These proceedings in Manitoba and the North-west Territories were not within the House and therefore the hon. member for West Assiniboia was perfectly in order in reading these papers. Had these papers referred to the conduct of any hon. gentleman within the House, or anything that he had said within the House, then, I would have at once ruled him out of order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will read the quotation again.

> Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on the proceedings within the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. These were not within the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does not say 'by a member within the House' and the object of the rule would be entirely nullified if any such construction were put upon it, because, if any hon. member is at liberty to come within this House and make an attack in the words of a communication written by some person outside of the House upon an hon. gentleman in this House, you at once see what a condition of affairs would result. The result would be that any hon. member on either one side or the other of this House might have a most insulting communication addressed to him in regard to another member of the House, not, it is true in regard to any action of any member within the House, but in regard to some public or private action outside of the House; and then he comes into the House, reads the communication, and the Chairman says that he is perfectly in order in doing so. What was the object of the rule laid down by Bourinot ? Was it not to prevent any action of that kind ? Certainly, and it seems to me that that interpretation of the rule would better comport with the dignity of the proceedings of this House, and it seems to me to be the reasonable construction.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Upon what order or rule Mr. Chairman, did you prevent me from making any remarks before you gave your ruling ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I called the hon. gentleman to order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How was I out of order ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When the Chairman gets up to decide a question—

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There was no question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We were deciding whether the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) was in order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely you allow the discussion of a question of order before giving your ruling.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I stood up for the purpose of deciding whether the hon. member from West Assiniboia had the right to read these documents, and then the hon. leader of the opposition arose and quoted a passage that I did not quote, saying that my ruling was wrong in not calling him to order. I rose to put myself right and when I did so the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) rose in his place and I called him to order, and when an hon. member is called to order, according to rule twelve, he has to sit down whether he is in order or not until the matter has been decided, and then he has the privilege of rising and explaining. Now, it is very well understood that the Speaker, or Chairman, has not to sit down when an hon. member gets up whether the Speaker, or Chairman, is in order or not. The rule is that an hon. member must sit down until the point of order is decided. That is the rule and that is the procedure of parliament.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I must object to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. Every member of this House has a right to discuss a question of order before the Chair decides it, and we have an appeal from the chairman, thank goodness, to the Speaker of the House. We can at any time ask you, Mr. Chairman, to vacate the chair and ask the Speaker to come in and decide a question of order. I intend to speak to the question of order. The hon. Minister of Finance is perfectly right when he states that any member is required when he quotes from a public document to put it on the Table of the House. No member of the House has the right to quote even an affidavit, or a writing, or an article from a newspaper, when a question is discussed in the House, attacking the integrity of an hon. member of the House when the hon. member denies it. The point was decided some years ago. Sir Charles Tupper made a statement in this House and an hon. member produced an affidavit to deny it. The Speaker ruled that no affidavit or statement made by any man outside of the House could be read in the House for that purpose. Now, the chairman of this committee seeks to override that well established rule of the House. He has drawn a distinction between statements made outside of the House and statements made inside the House. There is no such distinction. A member has a perfect right to make a statement outside the House, and there is no right on the part of any member to bring in an affidavit or written document or newspaper quotation, to show that a statement made by an hon. member inside the House or outside the House is false.

Mr. BROCK. One of the most important things in connection with our customs system is that there should be uniformity of valuation, and the minister has taken steps to attain that as nearly as possible by getting the customs appraisers to meet from time to time and make uniform rulings. I must say that in the province of Ontario, and I think in Canada generally, we have very little fault to find with the administration of our custom affairs at the present time. Under the management of the present minister (Hon. Mr. Paterson) we have had very little fault to find indeed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. I am afraid, however, that the principal difficulties of the Minister of Customs, come from his own friends who try to turn everything they can to political account.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. Apropos of this, I notice that a Bill has been introduced by a gentleman who has made himself very conspicuous this evening. It is an Act to Regulate the Sales and Provide for the Inspection of Textile Fabrics. I have not seen the Bill, but I am told that it requires that all textile goods shall have stamped on them what they are made of. After an experience of fifty years in the textile fabrics business, I may say that I do not believe it is possible to get persons sufficiently well posted to enable them with any degree of certainty to put such a stamp on the goods manufactured in this country alone. This Bill is introduced by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). Now, Sir, if there is any one thing we should expect from our great west, it is that the members who represent that country in the House should be somewhat commensurate in their ideas with the broadness of the magnificent country from which they come. If there is any place from which we could expect largeness and broadness, it is from the North-west, and to have such a matter introduced to this House as was introduced this evening by a gentleman coming from the west, is rather disappointing. I think his constituents should take charge of him when he goes home, and keep him there because his conduct here is not provocative of the best feeling. He has succeeded in creating a very serious difficulty for our worthy chairman whose decisions, as a rule, we are very anxious to support in every way. When we come to consider this Bill introduced by the hon. member, I hope the Minister of Customs will be a little careful about it, because he will find that if he allows it to pass he will require to double the number of the employees who are at present dealing with textile fabrics, and I do not think that is desirable. I make these remarks having noticed that this gentleman from the North-west has introduced this very unpleasant matter this evening, although it is much more unpleasant for himself than for any member on this side of the House. I contend that he having introduced a matter of this kind, and brought into this House such discord and unpleasantness, we will have to review this Bill with a great deal of care, because I have not the least doubt that he may find himself confronted some day with some very serious affidavits from his country, whereby he could probably find a hole in the armour of even the Minister of Customs.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On the question of Order, I wish to have it decided by the Speaker of the House. I rose for the purpose of discussing a question of Order and you, Mr. Chairman, rose and you said that when Order was called I had no right to make any observation on the subject. Further than that you made a ruling which I think is contrary to the rights and privileges of members of this House. I ask that you vacate the Chair and ask the Speaker to come in for the purpose of deciding the point of Order which I intend to discuss before Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I wish to state what is the rule of the House. The Chairman decides all questions and from his decision an appeal can be made to the committee, but no appeal can be made to the Speaker of the House to decide that question of order. But if a question of order should arise, and it is required to censure a particular member for violation of order, that censure cannot be given by the Chairman, but must be referred to the Speaker. That is the difference between the powers of the Speaker and the powers of the Chairman. This committee cannot refer my ruling to the Speaker. The Speaker has no more power to rule on anything that may arise in the committee than I have, when he is in the Chair, to rule on a matter that may arise in the House. Let me read rule 76 :

Questions of order arising in Committee of the Whole House shall be decided by the Chairman, subject to an appeal to the House ; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Might I suggest to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) that we have really passed from that question to other matters. The point of difference between the hon. member and the Chairman was that the hon. member continued to stand on his feet while the Chairman was on his feet. Clearly the hon. member should have resumed his seat. That is the only point of difference. We have passed from that now, however, and no appeal was taken at the time, and I rather think we had better let the matter drop, especially as the documents have been sent to my hon. friend from Peel.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has hardly grasped the point. The point made by my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is this : A question of order was raised which required to be decided by the Chair. My hon. friend from Lanark rose to discuss the question. The Chairman rose to give what practically amounted to a decision upon it. The contention of my hon. friend from Lanark, which I think is well founded, is this, that the Chairman has no right to prevent any member from discussing a question of order. He cannot stop discussion on a question of order. Every member of the House has the right to express his opinion on that question, and after every one who desires to speak upon it has spoken, then and not till then is the Chairman to decide the question. Perhaps the Chairman did not understand the situation. If he did, I would not be inclined to agree with his ruling, because I do not know of any rule of this House which prevents any member of the committee from fully discussing the question of order before the Chairman gives his decision. This is the whole question, and perhaps, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance suggests, my hon. friend from Lanark has no objection now to let the matter rest. However, I will not interfere.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Chairman of the committee has read the rule of the House in which there is no appeal from the Chairman but to the committee. I do not think that appeal would avail much; but I have very strong opinions on the subject. I have seen this question very often decided in this House. I have again and again seen appeals from the Chairman of the committee to the Speaker of the House, and I have again and again seen the Speaker called in for the purpose of deciding the question. I have often heard the rule laid down in this House that where an hon. gentleman contradicts a statement made by a member, no matter what the opinion of the House may be, no matter what affidavits or quotations from the public press he has in support of that contradiction; he has been refused the right to read those quotations or affidavits.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not propose to occupy very much of the time of the House on this small question which has been introduced by a small representative from the west. There is another small representative who is interrupting me who has a record. He had better take care of those things that crawl on him. I may say that I do not propose to make any personal references in this House; that is not my mission here; but I will not allow insinuations to come from the other side of the House without giving an answer to those who interrupt me. The only question of difference seems to be as to whether goods from Germany have been brought into this country under the British preference. Before I proceed to say something on the question, I wish to state that during the western trip I had the honour of being present at one meeting, and one meeting only, in the town of Morden, at which I exhibited the teapot which my hon. friend said was carried up and down all through western Canada. I make that statement on the floor of the House, knowing my responsibility; and when the hon. member for West Assiniboia comes down with letters written by himself, trying to get information from gentlemen in the west to prove anything to the contrary——

Mr. SCOTT. I beg to call the hon. gentleman to order. On what basis does he say that this letter was prepared by me ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You said yourself that you prepared it.

Mr. SCOTT. I said no such thing.

Mr. BLAIN. I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman, but I certainly understood him to say that he had perhaps written it himself.

Mr. SCOTT. I made no such statement. I stated that the letter was given to me at my suggestion, as the reading of it certainly shows.

Mr. BLAIN. You wrote to him and got the letter back. I said the hon. gentleman was seeking to get information from the west in respect to statements I made during the western trip in respect to the German teapot which I exhibited at Morden. Let us read the letter and see if this is correct or not:

Walter Scott, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication.

How did this letter come into the hon. gentleman's hands at all? Was it offered to the hon. gentleman in order to give him information about some statements that I had made? Not at all; the hon. gentleman sought it by writing a letter to this gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. It must be perfectly plain to the House that there is a very great difference between a letter being sent to me at my suggestion and my preparing a letter.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a telegram among these documents. Did the hon. gentleman take it out before sending the documents over?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought you did; just like what the hon. gentleman would do, of course the House would not expect anything else.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Chairman, these are not questions of order.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman asked me respecting a telegram. It was either a copy of a telegram sent by me to the gentleman at Morden or one sent by him to me.

Mr. BLAIN. We need not thank the hon. gentleman for placing the documents on the Table. He absolutely refused to do so.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg your pardon; I did not.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not beg any pardon about it. I know what I am stating. Why was the question of placing the documents on the Table raised at all, if you did not refuse to place them on the Table?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The order in discussion is this, that the hon. member who has the floor need not permit, against his will, any obstruction or any question during the time he has the floor, except a question of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it open to me to raise a point of order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Of course, a point of order can be raised; but if it is against the will of the hon. gentleman who has the floor, no interruption can take place except on a question of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. SCOTT. I raise the point of order, that the hon. gentleman is misrepresenting me. I said before, and I say now, that I did not refuse to place the documents on the Table.

Mr. BLAIN. I ask the hon. gentleman to state his point of order, and it will be answered. He is not going to keep the floor all night. I was just going to remark that the committee does not thank the hon. gentleman for laying these documents on the Table, because he refused to lay them on the Table, and refused to send them across for my inspection. I have to thank the hon. Minister of Customs, who, turning around, said to the hon. gentleman: 'Lay them on the Table.'

Mr. SCOTT. You are mistaken.

Mr. BLAIN. I will leave it to the hon. Minister of Customs if he did not say that. I heard it, and I call upon him to say whether that is correct or not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that if a statement is said to have been made by an hon. member, and he rises and says that he did not make that statement, his denial must be accepted there and then.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I rise to discuss that ruling.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, will you allow me? In this case the statement was not attributed to the hon. member for West Assiniboia, and although he denies it, he had no authority to deny it. It was attributed to the hon. Minister of Customs, and the hon. member for Assiniboia had no right whatever to deny it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) to have said that the hon. member for Assiniboia had made a certain statement and that that hon. gentleman had denied having made it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, it was the hon. Minister of Customs who made it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understand the rule to be that when an hon. member in this House makes a statement concerning another hon. member but does not make that statement of his own personal knowledge, then he must accept the denial of the hon. member, and withdraw it. But when he makes a statement of his own knowledge concerning another hon. member, there is no rule to make him retract that statement.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for Assiniboia was asked to lay on the Table the documents he had read, and he refused to do so. The point of order was raised, and the Chairman of the committee read the rule from the book. But I repeat that the hon. Minister of Customs turned in his place and said to the hon. gentleman: 'Lay them on the Table.' I leave to the hon. Minister of Customs to say whether that is correct or not.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). This is the biggest tempest in a teapot I have ever witnessed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A discussion having arisen as to whether the hon. member was compelled to lay the papers upon the Table, it was pointed out that if a minister had quoted from a public document, he could be required to lay it upon the Table, but that this rule did not apply to a private member. I then turned around in my seat, and the hon. member for Assiniboia said to me: 'I have no objection to give them the papers,' and then I said to him: 'Lay them on the Table.'

Mr. BLAIN. In view of this statement will the hon. gentleman now apologize to the committee and to myself for having denied the statement I made that the Minister of Customs had turned to him and told him to lay the documents on the Table? The hon. member for Assiniboia denied this, and said that the hon. Minister of Customs had done nothing of the kind. In the face of this contradiction by the Minister of Customs of the statement made by the hon. member for Assiniboia, how can we believe anything which that hon. gentleman may say? This document looks as if it had been mutilated, for here is the corner of a telegram which the hon. gentleman acknowledged having torn off. He made a charge against me in his place, and when called on by the Chairman to lay the documents on the Table, instead of complying with that order, as he should have done, he tears off a part of the document and now acknowledges having done so. However, I do not propose taking up any more of the time of the committee on this point. But the contention between the hon. gentleman and myself is this: He says that I travelled up and down the country producing a certain teapot and making certain statements at every meeting I attended in the west. I repeat that at no meeting, out of the forty-five held by the hon. leader of the opposition, was that teapot presented except at one, and I challenge the hon. gentleman, or any of his friends to gainsay that statement. The meeting I refer to was held at Morden, and it does look as if the hon. gentleman were a little worried about the German goods and the tariff. During the last few years he has been pointing out in his newspaper to the western people that this government should be supported because it introduced the preferential tariff, and the consumers in the west were getting great advantages from it. Now he applauds the government because it has given notice that it will abolish that preference, and the consumer in the west will no longer have the benefit of it in the case of these goods. To show how much the merchant knew whether these goods came in under the preferential tariff at a low or a high valuation, let me refer to what he said himself over his own signature. It was in Regina, I think, that I purchased the teapot in question. I went into a store there and asked the clerk if he sold German goods. He said, yes, we have some, a package up stairs that are not yet opened. I asked him: will you be good enough to sell me an article from one of these packages, and he replied that of course he would. I went upstairs with him, and he opened one of the packages. The first article he took from the box was this teapot. I said: 'That will do, come down stairs and I will pay you.' I went with him to the office and he produced the original invoice. I never made the statement that the invoice was for $100, and the hon. gentleman has no right to say that I did. What I did was simply to give as an illustration the $100 item I mentioned, and not the amount of the invoice at all. I think the invoice was for more than $300. To show how little these people know about how these goods come into this country, let us see what they say in their letter to the hon. gentleman, by which the hon. gentleman was going to prove that these goods did not come in under the preferential tariff at all. They say: 'We have nothing to do with the payment of duties whatever. We did not know what duty was to be paid.' The hon. gentleman has produced a declaration from a gentleman with whom we had a good deal of trouble in the west, and perhaps he will be good enough to communicate this to that gentleman, either when he goes home or in his newspaper, or by letter, or send him the telegram which he tore off this lot of papers, or a copy of it. Will he be good enough to inform this Mr. Trant—a government official forsooth, as well—that when private citizens are travelling through the west, he should not crowd himself into their private car and beat his way through as a newspaper reporter? He is a newspaper man like the hon. gentleman himself, so he will know how this goes. Perhaps he was a writer for the hon. gentleman's own newspaper. Will the hon. gentleman say whether he wrote the report for his own newspaper?

Mr. SCOTT. He did not.

An hon. MEMBER. He was too boozy.

Mr. BLAIN. That is right—a very proper statement; but I am not making it. Now, this is a long letter, but there is nothing in it, and I regret that the time of the committee is taken up with the matter at all. What I say is that the Liberal-Conservative party contended in this House and in the country that the British preference, so-called, was not a British preference in fact, that it allowed German goods to come into Great Britain and, after a small amount of labour had been put upon them, very often in the shape of labels and boxes, they were then shipped to Canada under the guise of British goods and allowed to come in under the preference of 33⅓ per cent. The hon. leader of the Liberal-Conservative party, in addressing the House, made the statement that that traffic was actually going on. And I heard the Finance Minister in his place in this House say that this was a matter that should be investigated. Neither the Minister of Finance nor the Minister of Customs was ready to stand up in his place in the House and deny the statement made by the hon. leader of the opposition. And that statement so made was not denied, I repeated in the west, and I repeat it here—that, so far as the British preference allowed German goods to come into this country, we were opposed to it. That is all that the Liberal-Conservative party said. The government declared that the preference was all right. But this year the Finance Minister stated in his place, and gave notice to the Canadian people, that German goods would be retaliated against, that this country could not allow these goods to come in except on the payment of twenty-five per cent higher duty than the general tariff. I do not think it is worth while to say anything further on the teapot question. I bought a razor out there. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) stated that, and it was so.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAIN. Did not the hon. gentleman say so ?

Mr. SCOTT. I read it.

Mr. BLAIN. And is not the hon. gentleman responsible for what he reads ?

An hon. MEMBER. Address the Chair.

Mr. BLAIN. 'Address the Chair,' says the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). Perhaps he will be good enough to address the Chair when he is interrupting me. What I say is that I purchased the razor referred to. It was made in Germany. Did the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) make the statement that they were not German goods? They were German goods ; the label was upon the article itself, both upon the teapot and upon the razor. This kind of goods brought in under the so-called British preference to compete with the Canadian goods. I have this to say—and it is more than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) can say with reference to the tariff—that the Liberal-Conservative party has taken one stand upon the tariff question, and that we should have one policy, a national policy for the maintenance of Canadian interest, not to allow German goods to come in to compete with Canadian goods. We have taken that stand under our honoured leader in this House. And what we say inside this House we say outside of it. And, as a humble supporter of the Conservative party, I make the same statement everywhere, and advocate the national policy everywhere. I am very glad to know that in the discussion that has taken place within the last few years the government has been converted, and that under its recent action these German goods will not have the opportunity of coming in except upon the payment of much higher than the ordinary duty.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before this tempest in a teapot is over I would like to say a few words on this subject of German goods. I have been an importer for twenty-five years, importing goods both from Germany and from Great Britain, and I think I can tell the House something about the procedure in the importation of these German goods. A traveller comes and takes our order for whatever German goods we want. He guarantees us prices delivered in Montreal, duty paid. The goods are packed in Germany and brought out in the original packages to Montreal. The invoice is made out and the goods are shipped to us. The duty is paid in Montreal—we have nothing to do with paying the duty. Let it be clearly understood that these goods are sent in the original packages and some direct from a German port, the packages being marked on the outside 'Made in Germany,' each package also bearing the name of the place of shipment. How, then, can they go over to England and there be repacked and be brought in here under the preference. It is utterly impossible for anything of that kind to be done. Besides, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) says these articles are all stamped with the maker's name, or with a ticket placed upon them 'Made in Germany.' Take, for instance, a razor. Suppose it to be one of Bokers' razors—the name of the maker is stamped on the blade near the shank. How can that go over to England and have anything done to make it appear as a British product ?

Mr. BLAIN. I will tell the hon. gentle man, as he does not know.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can tell the committee how it is not done. It is utterly impossible for the goods to go to England and then have anything done to them, and to be shipped here as British goods, because, as I say, not only are they stamped 'Made in Germany' but they come here in the original packages and the name of the maker is stamped on every article—whether it be a razor, a pair of skates or practically anything else. The teapot to which the hon. gentleman referred, he tells us had a ticket on it with the words 'Made in Germany.' How is anybody to contend that goods thus stamped can be put forward as British goods ? This point came up last year, and some of these hon. gentlemen undertook to tell us in dollars and cents the amount of German goods that went into England, and were afterwards shipped here under the preference. The hon. member for East

Toronto (Mr. Kemp) gave the exact amount. But I brought him to task by asking him how he knew. Let me quote from 'Hansard' just what took place :

Mr. WRIGHT. How does the hon. gentleman ascertain the amount of goods imported from England that have been partially made in Germany ?

Mr. KEMP. I am making an estimate.

Now, all this talk that goes on is estimate or is based on estimate. Why, any boy ten years old can make estimates, and I think that almost any boy could estimate a good deal better than the hon. member for East Toronto. It is utterly impossible that these goods shipped to us in the original German packages can come in as British goods.

Mr. BLAIN. Let me explain just that one point. I asked the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wright) to be good enough to give us an explanation, but he has not done it. I would point out to the committee how this is done. First, the razor has a bone or ivory handle, chiefly a bone handle. Then is added to it a small quantity of steel; that bone and steel are both furnished in Germany. Then the article is made and shaped in Germany, and what my hon. friend refers to is put on in Germany. After that is done, it represents three-fourths of the value of the article. The article is then shipped over into Sheffield and polished and boxed up, and sent into this country under the British preference. Is not that a German preference ? The bone, the handle, the steel, the shaping is all done in a foreign country, and then they come over and receive a little finishing in Great Britain, and after that is done, they are invoiced under this so-called British preference, and are permitted to come to this country under the guise of the preference as British goods, when there are three-fourths of them German-made.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would ask how the hon. gentleman knows that that razor was ever in England at all ? It is impossible for him or any other man to tell that.

Mr. SCOTT. The point made by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright) must be clear to every person, that is, that goods marked 'made in Germany' brought to New York, from New York to the port of Montreal, and then taken up to the North-west Territories, certainly came under the general tariff. Now, where is the possibility or likelihood of fraud ? Does not the whole evidence trend the other way ? It is at least as good as proved that there was no fraud attempted, and that these German goods, a sample of which my hon. friend bought from the merchant at Regina marked 'made in Germany,' which came into the country in a large box, that box stamped in large letters 'made in Germany,' or 'German'—I say it is as good as proved, at all events, that no fraud was attempted and that the proper rate of duty was paid.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell us what rate of duty was paid upon this invoice of three hundred odd dollars' worth of goods that were brought into a hardware store in his own town. Because he is attempting to enlighten the committee upon this question, perhaps he would be good enough to tell us what rate of duty was paid upon them, and whether they went to Great Britain or not ?

Mr. SCOTT. I am not able to tell that.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought not.

Mr. SCOTT. The merchant was not able to tell me, and the editor of the Morden 'Chronicle' swears to the accuracy of his report, stating that my hon. friend said the Regina merchant told him what the merchant says he did not know and did not tell.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if that letter does not say distinctly that these goods came to Regina in the original package, and that the words 'from Germany' were on the outside of the package ?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then it would be impossible for any collector of customs to pass these goods.

Mr. SCOTT. Practically impossible. Therefore the argument of the hon. member for Peel had no point. Notwithstanding the various reports that appeared in the North-west newspapers, notwithstanding the statements made by my hon. friend as appears by this statutory declaration, it is plain that the goods came in under the general rate of duty. I do not know the rate of duty, but I would like to know it, and I will give the information to the Minister of Customs, which may enable him to know. The goods came in seven cases, numbered from 4364 to 4370. They were received at Regina on September 2. The Minister of Customs should take a note of this. The invoice was made out by Stransky & Company, New York. The goods were sold to Smith & Ferguson, Limited, Regina, on August 8, 1902. Perhaps before the end of the session the Minister of Customs will get us the information, and we will have the question definitely settled. Now I want to make a reference to my conduct with regard to this affidavit. My hon. friend repeated several times, in face of my specific statement to the contrary, that I refused to give the documents to the House.

Mr. BLAIN. So you did.

Mr. SCOTT. I say here again that I did not refuse to give the documents to the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I leave it to the judgment of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend stated that the Minister of Customs turned to me, or directed me, to pass these documents over to my hon. friend, and I said he was mistaken. Now, I will repeat exactly what did occur. When I sat down, after reading the documents, an hon. gentleman on the other side got up and commenced making a statement. After he had said a few words he called attention to the fact that these documents ought to be given to the House. The question of order arose as to whether I should be compelled to give them to the House, and certainly I did sit back for a little while wondering what would happen. I am a new member of the House, and am not well acquainted with the rules. But I understood the Minister of Customs to say to me, in turning towards me, either 'you do not need to' or 'you had better not,' or something to that effect.

Mr. BLAIN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You claimed the protection of the Chair when he was interrupting you, now let the member for Assiniboia go on.

Mr. BLAIN. Then I suppose we will have the same rule applied to both sides of the House ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. State your point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the Minister of Customs to advise me not to give the document to the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I rise to a point of order. When I understood the Minister of Customs to call upon the hon. gentleman to lay the documents on the Table, was that correct ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not a point of order, that is a question of fact.

Mr. SCOTT. As I was saying, the Minister of Customs turned round and said something to me, advising me, as I understood, not to give the documents to the House. The point of order was discussed for several minutes, and after awhile I arrived at the conclusion myself that, no matter how the point of order was determined, I would give my hon. friends the privilege of reading the documents. I then called across to the Minister of Customs and said 'I have no objection,' or something to that effect, meaning that I would prefer to give them to the House. I say now that I did not refuse to give these documents to the House. My hon. friend says I ought to apologize for this, he says I had insinuated or had contradicted the Minister of Customs. Certainly I did no such thing, and there is no call for me to make an apology in that regard. But I do think that after my hon. friend has slept over this matter himself he will arrive at the conclusion that an apology is due from him to the people of the North-west Territories, at least to the people at Morden, where he addressed that meeting and told the people that a Regina merchant had informed him so and so with respect to this dutiable article, when it has now been proved that the Regina merchant told him no such thing.

Mr. BELL. We now see the consequence of allowing a mode of controverting a statement made by a member of this House by introducing outside evidence, which, we are informed, it is your duty to prevent.

Mr. SCOTT. I was interrupted by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell).

Mr. BELL. I would like to have the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The ruling from the Chair is this : When a charge is made against any hon. member of having said anything, if he gets up in his place and says that he did not make such a statement the hon. member who makes the charge is bound to accept that, and to allow the matter to drop without argument. That is the rule.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I will wait until the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) takes this course.

Mr. BLAIN. Takes what course ? I do not understand what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that——

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SCOTT. I am certainly willing to follow the course which has been indicated as being the proper one to follow, but the hon. member for Peel has not denied the statement made in this House that he stated to the people of Morden that a Regina merchant told him so and so. He has not made any denial that he made such a statement.

Mr. BELL. That is precisely what the hon. member for Peel has said, and now the hon. member for West Assiniboia is going on for the second time to introduce into this House evidence derived from parties outside of this House to controvert what the hon. member for Peel has said. He is entirely out of order, and he has been ruled out of order on two occasions.

Mr. SCOTT. I have not understood it so.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Let me state it again. If an hon. gentleman charges another hon. member with having said this, that, or the other thing, on a certain occasion, and if the hon. member says that he did not say that which is charged, then, the hon. gentleman making the statement must accept that from the hon. gentleman who denies it, and the debate then and there ceases on the subject.

Mr. SCOTT. I quite understand that. What I was pointing out was that the hon. member for Peel had not denied it, and therefore, I was not called upon to say anything further on that phase of the subject. Just a word about the question of preferential duties. Many hon. gentlemen —whether the hon. member for Peel did so or not—have gone up and down the country and throughout the length and breadth of the North-west Territories condemning the British preference largely because a merchant in Regina had told the hon. member for Peel that he had brought in certain German goods that had got the advantage of the British preference. I have proved to-night, and I think the proof has been submitted to this committee that the hon. member for Peel was mistaken in regard to that. I believe that all my hon. friends on the other side of the House are just as much mistaken in a great many of the assertions and very much of the condemnation they make on the subject of the British preference.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Mr. Chairman, I am about to pour some oil on the troubled waters. I ask you, Sir, to bring this committee back to the question under discussion. We have not had the question before the chair discussed within the last hour. That is my opinion ; of course, I may not be right, but I think I am right. It is your duty, Sir, to see that personalities are not discussed in this House. I regret to say that we have had nothing but personalities since the committee resumed after recess, and that the debate has taken this form not only to-day, but yesterday as well. It appears to me that this House is getting to be a beer garden, or is getting as near to it as it seems possible for it to get ; in fact it has been a tempest about a teapot. It is about time that we discussed the questions that come before the House in a proper manner. Yesterday we washed all the dirty linen from Montreal and Quebec, and today we have to wash the dirty linen that comes from the North-west Territories and Manitoba.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is costing $28 a minute.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). We have had the razor question discussed, and some hon. gentlemen who are participating in this discussion look as though they never saw a razor. They might have been right on that matter, but whether they are right or not, I am sure they are not right in introducing personalities in this House. Therefore, I call upon you as chairman of this committee, to confine the debate to the question before the Chair, and not to permit personalities to be indulged in. I hope that the time of the House will not be further wasted in the way in which it has been wasted during the last two days.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish, of course, to allude to what has passed, further than to state that there has been a misapprehension, and I simply allude to it because I do not think any hon. gentleman desires to put any other hon. gentleman in a wrong position. As far as I understand the matter, the hon. member for Peel states that he heard me saying to the hon. member for West Assiniboia to lay the papers on the Table. He heard me saying that, he said, and he judged from that that there had been a reluctance on the part of my hon. friend to do that.

Mr. BLAIN. No, no.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will explain how that happened. Prior to that, when the discussion was going on as to what was incumbent upon a private member, I had said to my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) : You are not compelled to hand the papers to the hon. gentleman. Then, there was a little rest, and my hon. friend, speaking to me, said : I have no objection to giving the papers out. Then I said : You can lay them on the Table. That is why the hon. member for Peel, hearing that from me alone, and not hearing what my hon. friend had said to me, thought that it was through some instructions to him and not through any willingness on his part that he did it. I simply mention that.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to tell the hon. minister that that was not my understanding of it at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In view of the fact that it was through no unwillingness on his part, I thought it was only right that I should say that it was in view of his statement to me : 'I have no objection,' or words to that effect, to give them the papers, that I said : Then you can lay them on the Table.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure the hon. minister would not wish to misquote me.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Will you allow me to say this ? I called to the Chair and said : Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) lay the papers on the Table, or send them across the floor of the House to me—and he refused to do it.

Mr. SCOTT. No, no.

Mr. BLAIN. Well there was a chorus of 'don't do it' from the other side of the House.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). That does not prove that he refused to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) wished to make it appear that he was always willing to lay the papers on the Table of the House. It was because he was unwilling that the question came up for discussion at all. I made the statement that we were to thank the hon. Minister of Customs for the papers being laid on the Table, because he turned around and said to the hon. member for Assiniboia : 'Lay them on the Table.' When the hon. member for West Assiniboia got up he said that the hon. Minister of Customs did not make any such statement to him at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is just where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) is mistaken in what passed between us. But we come now to the question which is an important question, as to the introduction of goods under the preferential tariff. The committee will understand, and business men especially will understand, that it is a very difficult matter under the preferential arrangement to prevent frauds being perpetrated in the bringing in of goods. But I think the House will agree that there is a great deal said in reference to this, that, when it is traced out, as we have had to trace it out in many cases, is found to be without substantial foundation. Without any offence to the hon. member for Peel, let me point out just in this case ; I have no doubt that he thought that the German article which he exhibited came in under the preferential tariff, and that it had been manufactured in Germany.

Mr. BLAIN. I made no such statement. What I said was that it was a sample of German goods such as were coming into this country under the guise of the British preference.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understood that it had been made as an illustration of an article that had come in under the British preference.

Mr. BLAIN. I never made such a statement.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I thought the reason that it was exhibited was that it was an illustration that that article had come in under the preferential tariff. I do not say that no articles come in, but this article could not have come in, in such a way. If the statement of the merchant is true that it came from New York in an iron bound case to the port of Montreal where we have our sharp appraisers, then it could not come in except under the general tariff. I will examine into it, but I feel positive that that article could have come in in no other way than under the general tariff. I cannot conceive it possible that in a port like Montreal these goods could have come in an iron bound case with 'Germany' stamped on it, and the goods themselves being stamped 'German,' and passed our appraisers there. I am not arguing that there are no goods that so come in. We require the exporter to declare that he is a member of the firm or one who is cognizant of the facts to which he subscribes, and we have not been able to find many houses that would be so careless of their reputation as to make a false declaration.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister found any goods coming in in the manner in which he has described that it was possible for them to come in ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think that there have been cases before the department where the question arose as to whether there was the amount of British labour upon the goods that entitled them to the preference, but I have not in mind now any case where such goods came in. I can say that there were no goods solely of German manufacture that came in under the preference.

Mr. BLAIN. I never said that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Nor any that were below the limit. There may have been differences of opinion as to certain goods, but there have been exceedingly few cases. If they were below the limit and we knew it we would put on the full duty. Now the German surtax does not affect the preference at all. It only does this : that now, if German goods have 50 per cent of the value created in Germany they not only pay the general tariff but they pay the surtax on top of the general tariff. If there are any members of the committee who are able to give me the benefit of their experience as to any further precautions that can be taken in the regulations under the preferential tariff I will be only too glad to hear them.

Mr. KEMP. These declarations are not what we understand in this country as declarations having the effect of an oath.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No; they are not affidavits. At the commencement of the preferential tariff we required that affidavits should be made, but there were a great many complaints. In England they cannot go to a justice of the peace and make an affidavit free of charge as we do here ; they have to go to certain parties who charge them three shillings for each affidavit. That seemed to be a tax upon them, and the department came to the conclusion that if a firm would make a false written declaration over their own hand, they would not hesitate to make a false affidavit and therefore we facilitated business by accepting these declarations.

Mr. CLARKE. I wish to say a few words in connection with the discussion which has been sprung upon the committee without any notice having been given to my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain). I can assure the hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) that I shall avoid indulging in personalities, for I hold that personalities should never be heard in this House ; but I certainly think that my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has reason to complain that when affidavits were to be introduced attacking his truthfulness no notice was given to him by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). When the hon. member for Assiniboia knew he was going to raise such a question in the committee, it was due to the hon. member for Peel that he should have been notified. It would also be conducive to the better conduct of debates, if when documents are presented to the House all the documents in connection with the matter under discussion should be laid before us. My hon. friend from Peel has declared that there was a telegram connected with these papers which was torn off before they were sent across the floor of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. No.

Mr. CLARKE. If I am wrong in that I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. SCOTT. The telegram was certainly torn off before the papers were sent across the floor of this House, but it was really torn off three or four weeks ago. It was either a copy of a telegram from me to Mr. McCuish, of Morden or from Mr. McCuish to myself, and it had no bearing on the matter.

Mr. CLARKE. I have no hesitation in accepting the statement of the hon. gentleman, but I must say that these documents bear indubitable evidence in themselves that they are not complete. If an hon. gentleman reads letters in this House in reply to letters sent by him, and if he expects them to receive the credence of honourable men, it is only reasonable to ask that the letters to which these are replies should be included in the correspondence. After all, what statements are contained in these affidavits that cast the slightest discredit upon the accuracy of the assertions made by the hon. member for Peel ? I will not refer to Mr. Trant because the member for Peel has dealt with him, but let us see what are his declarations. The first three paragraphs refer to his attending certain meetings, which are not important to the issue, and then he goes on to declare :

4. That at each and every of the three meetings mentioned in the paragraph next immediately preceding, the said Mr. Blain said that the British preference then existing was used by manufacturers in Germany to send their goods to Canada as British goods and so defraud the revenue of the Dominion of Canada, and further, he, the said Richard Blain, explained that the said object was attained by the said manufacturers in Germany first having the said goods shipped to England and thence re-shipped to Canada as British goods entitled to the preference given such goods by the law of Canada.

5. And I believe particularly that at the aforesaid meeting held at Qu'Appelle on the said 27th day of September, A.D. 1902, the said Richard Blain produced a razor which he said he had bought at Regina in the said Territories the day before, and which he said was a razor of German manufacture and had been imported into Canada under the British preference in the manner described in the paragraph next immediately preceding.

6. And I further say particularly that at the aforesaid meeting held in the evening of the 30th day of September, in the year 1902 at Wapella, the said Richard Blain said he had bought a teapot in Regina that had been made in Germany and that the merchant who had sold him, the said Blain, the said teapot, or the assistant to the said merchant, had at the request of the said Richard Blain shown him the invoice of the goods of which the said teapot formed a part and that the said invoice was as if for goods that were shipped from England and had received the benefit of the British preference.

What does my hon. friend hope to make by reading an affidavit of that kind to the committee ? How does it asperse the character of my hon. friend from Peel for truthfulness, or affect the statements made by him or by others on this side of the House respecting the British preference, and its operation in the past in securing a preference for German goods ? The statement made in this affidavit is quite consistent with what has been said on this side of the House, and reflects accurately what the hon. member for Peel has said here and elsewhere, and what he has stated to-night. The statement is a fact that can be corroborated.

Mr. BLAIN. It is not denied by the minister.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the hon. gentleman take now the answer to his question ?

Mr. CLARKE. Well, what is it ?

Mr. SCOTT. The reason I read this affidavit was that the hon. member for Peel said, in answer to a statement which I had already made, that he had only brought up this subject at one point.

Mr. BLAIN. I never made such a statement.

Mr. SCOTT. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman to say.

Mr. BLAIN. What I said was this, that I exhibited a teapot at one meeting only, and that was at Morden.

Mr. SCOTT. That was a second statement.

Mr. CLARKE. I may be particularly obtuse, but I certainly cannot appreciate what point has been made by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia by reading this affidavit.

Mr. SCOTT. The affidavit showed that the subject was discussed at more than one meeting.

Mr. CLARKE. That is not denied. I had occasion to discuss the British preference on many occasions during my trip in the west.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did you have a teapot ?

Mr. CLARKE. I left the teapot with the hon. member for West Assiniboia and the hon. member for Peel. The hon. gentleman brings into the discussion this affidavit, which does not amount in value, so far as the matter of the teapot is concerned, to the worth of the paper on which it is written, and this other affidavit made by Mr. McCuish, which I have not been able to read. Then, attached to these documents is a letter from the Smith & Ferguson Company, Limited, hardware merchants, of Regina, signed by J. W. Smith, the president of the company. On the second page of the letter is this statement, to which I draw the attention of the committee :

I note also that, as you pointed out, a portion of the press makes the charge that the Regina firm from whom Mr. Blain bought the teapot has been guilty of defrauding the customs, inasmuch as the benefit of the preference could not have been obtained upon such an importation without the making of a false declaration.

I appeal to my hon. friend if it accords with the measure of fair play which he would expect to have dealt out to himself to suggest to this gentleman that a portion of the press had made allegations reflecting upon my hon. friend, without giving the statements made by other portions of the press ? Why should he make suggestions to the gentleman who wrote the letter ?

Mr. SCOTT. They were true suggestions.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend from Peel has denied them again and again, and surely my hon. friend from West Assiniboia will not repeat them after that denial ? I heard the statements made by my hon. friend from Peel, and there is not a particle of truth in the suggestion that he charged the firm at Regina with fraud.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I do not think anything in that letter indicates that the hon. member for Peel charged the firm with fraud. What the letter indicates is that there were certain charges made in a portion of the press against the firm, based on the statement made by the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend bases the whole of his argument on the letter which he got from the Messrs. Smith & Ferguson, of Regina, referring to statements made in certain portions of the press and for which he wants to hold the hon. member for Peel responsible. I am sure that in his calm moments he will not regard that as a very strong argument to press against my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman, if he wanted to make this file complete, should have included in it a copy of the letter to which this is a reply. I am sure that if he had written to the members of the firm for the letter, they would willingly have sent it back. In their letter they say :

The fact is, however, that if the fraud were committed, it was not committed by our firm, as the duty upon the consignment of which the teapot was a part was not paid by us at Regina, but was paid by the brokers from whom we purchased this consignment at Montreal.

Now, I do not know that there is much more for me to say about this matter. I am sorry I cannot read the affidavit of Mr. McCuish; but I have no doubt the hon. member for Assiniboia read it correctly. Now, the hon. Minister of Customs made a statement with regard to this matter which I think will bear investigation. He said that goods manufactured in Germany could not come in under the British preference, unless they were enhanced in value to the extent of 25 per cent by British labour. He also said it was impossible for these goods to come direct to the port of Montreal and get the advantage of the British preference if they were shipped in the original packages. Where does the hon. minister get his authority for these statements ? Let me read a paragraph from the circular issued by his department defining and interpreting this regulation, to the customs collectors at Regina, at Winnipeg, at Toronto, and everywhere else throughout the Dominion :

In estimating the labour of the United Kingdom entering into the production of articles manufactured therein partly from imported material, the extent of such labour may be reckoned by the value of the manufactured article ready for shipment at the place of production after deducting therefrom the value on entering within the limits of the United Kingdom, represented by the component parts of such articles which are the produce of countries not entitled to the benefits of the preferential tariff.

What does that mean ? It means exactly the interpretation put upon it by the hon. member for Peel and by others on this side of the House, that the profits of the importer can be added to the value of the goods brought in from Germany, and these profits are to be accounted and reckoned as British labour. There is no reason why these packages to which the hon. member referred, if imported into England and valued at $800 should not have been exported thence to Canada at a value of $1,000, and come in under the British preference ; and if that be the case, my hon. friend is vindicated in every statement he made. I took the liberty last year of drawing the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs to a statement made by one of the most influential papers published in the United Kingdom, describing the way Canada was being robbed under this preferential clause, and I shall again quote that statement for the information of the hon. member for West Assiniboia :

How Foreigners Rob Canada.

Since Canada granted a preference tariff to Britain, tons upon tons of German and foreign textiles have been brought over to England and reshipped to Canada after the so called process of 'finishing.'

My hon. friend from Peel has explained how this is done.

In order that they may be classed as goods partly of British manufacture. In some cases this 'finishing' in England consists simply in taking off the German and French or Austrian labels, doing the goods up again and then giving them a British name or label. There is not a branch of trade in which this style of smuggling is carried on to the extent that it is in the textile trade.

Has any hon. gentleman any doubt as to what that means ? Will any one hesitate putting faith in that statement which I have taken from one of the most influential papers published in the United Kingdom, the Belfast 'News' ? If the hon. member for Assiniboia has any doubts, he can look up the files of that newspaper and see for himself whether I have not quoted exactly what it said. That statement may be further proven by the circular letter which the hon. Minister of Customs issued to his officers throughout all the customs districts, instructing them how they are to interpret this preference. That being the case, can there be any doubt entertained by hon. gentlemen opposite as to the effect of this preference, and is not my hon. friend from Peel amply sustained in every statement he made with reference to its operation, at every meeting which he had the pleasure and the privilege of addressing in Manitoba and the North-west? My hon. friend from Assiniboia has been always a great stickler for this British preference and has continually appealed to the people of the west to support the government because it had reduced the cost of the goods which they consumed which were imported under this clause of our tariff. Yet, as my hon. friend from Peel pointed out in the course of a recent debate, the hon. member for Assiniboia had not a word to say when the government introduced the surtax, which cannot fail to destroy the effect of this preference on the large importations of goods brought into England from Germany and thence exported into Canada. As the hon. gentleman and the Minister of Finance well know, that is what the surtax will do. What are the provisions of this surtax :

Articles which are the growth, produce or manufacture of any foreign country which treats imports from Canada less favourably than those from other countries may be subject to a surtax over and above the duties of schedule A, such surtax in every case to be one-third of the duty as fixed by such schedule A.

Such surtax shall apply to any article, the chief value of which was produced in such foreign country, although it may have been improved or advanced in value by the labour of another country, notwithstanding the provisions of the British preferential tariff and regulations thereunder.

What is the effect of this enactment ? I will let the hon. Minister of Finance answer that question. Two years ago, I asked the government its intention in regard to barring out goods partly manufactured in Germany, or manufactured from raw materials grown or produced in Germany, from the advantage of the British preference clause, and the Minister of Finance replied :

In answer to the question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) I beg to say : No. Such provision would practically destroy the British preference inasmuch as British manufactures are largely produced from foreign raw materials.

I do not intend to take up the time of the committee at greater length. I congratulate the hon. member for Assiniboia on any political capital or advantage he has gained from this discussion, and the hon. gentleman who is leading the House (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and the hon. Minister of Customs on this additional evidence of their desire to transact, as expeditiously as possible, the business before parliament.

Mr. CLANCY. As the hon. member for West Assiniboia has spoken to-night with regard to the preferential tariff and how it works, I wish now to call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs to the fact that the customs regulations make it possible for goods to be imported in Canada under the preference, which were finished in England, without any regard as to what value had been added to these goods by the finishing process. I would call the attention of the minister to his own regulations and to the manner in which they have been carried out. Here is the affidavit to be made both by the importer and the exporter.

That the said goods are properly described in the said invoice ; that there is included as specified in the said invoice the true value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes and coverings of any kind and all charges and expenses incident to placing said goods in condition packed ready for shipment to Canada.

What does that mean ? It means that the values of all cases, coverings, crates, &c., on which there is not duty at all, may be included in the value. It means that the labelling of the goods and everything else, whether meaningless or not, whether it adds to the value or not, may be included in order to give the appearance of twenty-five per cent of British work having been added, and thus entitle the goods to come in under the preference. The ingenuity of the trade will always take advantage of that, and I have no hesitation in saying that these regulations are open to the greatest possibilities of fraud on the revenue. I do not propose at this stage to continue the discussion and would not have said anything if the hon. Minister of Customs had not made some references himself to this point.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As there has been oil poured on the troubled waters, I propose now to move that the committee do rise, in order that I may discuss the ruling which you, Mr. Chairman, made a short time ago with reference to my right of appeal from your ruling to the Speaker. I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General, who is a lawyer and an old member of this House, and also—and especially—the attention of the Finance Minister, to this point. I said that in all cases there was an appeal from the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, to the House. I was ruled out of order by you, Sir, and you quoted in support of your ruling clause 76 of the Orders of the House :

Questions of order arising in the Committee of the Whole House shall be decided by the Chairman, subject to an appeal to the House.

I, unfortunately, said that the appeal was to the Speaker. I had seen it a dozen times in this House, yea, twenty times, when the Chairman's ruling was objected to, the Chairman, perhaps, as on the present occasion, may have been at dinner, but he was called instantly from dinner and brought into the House for the purpose of deciding the question. I was overruled by you in the Chair, and you decided that there was no appeal to the Speaker in the Chair. I would like to know what the meaning of the rule is 'subject to the appeal of the House ?' Does not the House mean the House sitting with the Speaker in the Chair ? In confirmation of my interpretation of the point, let me draw to your attention the authority whom you quoted to prove that my contention was entirely wrong, and you will see that the quotation I make applies exactly to the question now under debate :

Questions of order arising in Committee of the Whole House shall be decided by the Chairman subject to appeal to the House, but disorder in the committee can only be censured by the House on receiving a report thereof.

Now, writing in reference to that rule, Bourinot says :

The first case of appeal to the House under this rule occurred in the session of 1885, but it has its grave inconveniences, since the House is called upon suddenly and without debate to decide a question of order which many of its members may not have heard discussed in committee and the result is, in the majority of cases, a political vote. Under all the circumstances the committee should hesitate before resorting to such an extreme measure. In such a case, it is for the Chairman of the committee to report in writing the point of order which he has decided, and the Speaker must then submit the matter to the House in the language reported to him, and put the question, 'That the decision of the Chairman be confirmed.'

And he goes on :

If it be found expedient in either House to refer a point of order to the Speaker, a member will move that the Chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again that day. When the Speaker has resumed, the Chairman will report that the committee wishes to be instructed as to the point in question. The House will then proceed to take the matter into consideration, and the Speaker having been requested to give his opinion will decide the matter in dispute ; then unless there is an appeal to the House against the Speaker's decision, the committee will resume its proceedings.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART.

Now, I wish to draw your attention, again Mr. Chairman, to my interpretation of the rules of the House, supported by Bourinot's remarks upon the procedure ; and I have no doubt that, upon further consideration of the question, and, after consultation with the Speaker, if you will be kind enough to ask his opinion, there will be no occasion for an hon. member again to be overruled in this committee on this point, for I think that the authority I have given clearly confirms my view and establishes it as the correct one in the premises. As this is a question of privilege, and a grave one, I would like to hear the government's opinion upon it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought my hon. friend from South Lanark had accepted the suggestion that, as we had passed from the point then in discussion and taken up other matters, this question should be left in abeyance. He is aware that it is too late to make a formal appeal, because unless it is taken at the moment that the question arises, we are likely to be confused as to the precise point. I confess that, at the moment, with other matters that have been discussed, I have some difficulty in appreciating exactly what was the point which arose. At all events, he could not now take appeal against the decision. I think his own suggestion is a good one, that you, Mr. Chairman, might look into the matter and consider the point more at your leisure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This, I understand, is not brought forward for the purpose of making a formal appeal. But, as I understand you, Mr. Chairman, your decision was that in such a case as arose, the appeal was to the committee. Of course, we do not expect any chairman to be infallible in giving decisions, as he is called upon to give them, at short notice. But I think it is perfectly proper and highly judicious for the hon. member for South Lanark to call the attention of the Chairman to the rule and its interpretation showing that the appeal in such a case is, apparently, not to the committee, as I understood you to say, but to the House, the Speaker being called for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As I understood the point under discussion with the hon. member for South Lanark, it was as to whether the Speaker was bound to give an opinion. It would appear that, under the rule, the Speaker would decide nothing himself but would submit the case to the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I beg the hon. minister's pardon, the Speaker decides the point, and then if necessary, there is an appeal to the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My view of the rule is just as I put it and that is my view of the rule still—that the Speaker does not decide the question, but that the appeal is to the House.

Mr. BELL. How can the Chairman hold that opinion in view of the rule that the hon. member for South Lanark has just read? It is an appeal to the House, but the House is not constituted until the Speaker is in the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule says:

Questions of order arising in Committee of the Whole House shall be decided by the Chairman, subject to an appeal to the House.

I would understand that to be an appeal not to the Speaker, but to the House, the Speaker putting the question to the House as it has been conveyed to him. I think my interpretation is perfectly correct.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I trust, Mr. Chairman, you will take the matter into consideration and will consult the Speaker. And, perhaps, at a later day, you may revise your opinion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not of opinion that my interpretation is wrong.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, well, you are altogether wrong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood, Mr. Chairman, that the rule you laid down, perhaps inadvertently, was that the appeal was to the committee. It seems quite apparent, from the rule and the interpretation by Bourinot, that the appeal is to the House constituted by the Speaker taking the Chair.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We can get a decision again. I am perfectly satisfied, on looking into it that my decision is in accordance with the rule.

Shall this item be adopted?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What item, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Now, I want the committee to rule just here. When the committee decided to consider this matter item by item, did they intend that I was to keep the speakers to the consideration of the question in each item? The committee fails to support me when I try to keep the discussion within the proper limits. Now, I want to know just here if it is the will of the committee to discuss each of these items separately? If that be so, then the speeches must relate to each one separately. If it is understood by the committee that there is to be a general discussion upon the whole Bill, then I will know what to expect.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The opinion of the committee should not govern you at all, Mr. Chairman. The rules of the House and the proceedings laid down in such cases should be your guide. Never mind what the opinion of the committee is, because it would be impossible to know what it was at every moment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must differ with my hon. friend there, because the rules say that when a resolution consists of a number of items, it is for the committee to decide whether the resolution shall be discussed as a whole or item by item. But if the committee decide to discuss the resolution item by item, then they are to be restrained from going outside the particular item under discussion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The direction is positive that whether the resolution is discussed item by item or in the whole, the Chairman must be guided by the rules of the House of Commons, independent of the feeling of the committee of the moment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We had better keep the discussion to each item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are on item No. 2, about the composition of the board.

Mr. BELL. I presume a Bill will be found upon this resolution?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Unless the government are prepared to communicate their intention, to say what they mean by making a change in the composition of the board of customs, which is a difficult thing for them to do in the absence of a Bill, I do not see that we could discuss this section at the present time.

Mr. CLANCY. Before we assent to the resolution, we should understand what they mean. I think the Minister of Customs should now explain why he is seeking this change.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The intention is that the board of customs shall comprise in the future the commissioner of customs as chairman, and such other officers in the service as shall be designated or appointed by Order in Council. At present the board has upon it members from Vancouver to Halifax, and it is not convenient to summon them at all times when it may be desirable to have a meeting. It is really to get over that difficulty as much as anything else, that we propose this change. The powers of the board will be the same as before. Many members of the present board will, no doubt, continue to act in that capacity.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who are the members of the board in Montreal?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Brossard is one, the hardware appraiser, Mr. Douglas, is one, and Mr. Andrews. Mr. Thompson, of Hamilton, is on it, the hardware appraiser in Toronto is on it. These gentlemen generally attend here. I do not know that we would call the appraisers from Vancouver or Halifax. In addition to those I have mentioned, are Mr. McMichael, the chief inspector, Mr. Breadner, of the inside department, and Mr. Woods, another gentleman in the department.

Mr. BELL. What are the duties of the assistant commissioner of customs to be ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is stated in the Bill that he shall perform such duties as the Governor in Council and the minister may assign to him. Of course he will take the position of chairman, if the commissioner of customs is absent.

Mr. BELL. Is it the intention of the department to divide up the duties of the commissioner and to allot a portion of them to the assistant commissioner, or is he rather to be regarded as deputy of the commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He will only be an assistant. The commissioner will be the deputy head of the department. The assistant commissioner will only be an assistant to the commissioner.

Mr. MONK. What salary will he have ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am asking the House for $2,800. The commissioner gets $3,600.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Three or four days ago I got a letter complaining of the way in which duties are collected on salt. I was given to understand that the amendments are not followed in Hamilton as they are in Montreal. If I remember right, I was told that in some ports they charge a duty on the bags and not in other ports. Would that matter fall under the control of the board ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That would be a matter for the department to arrange, we should attend to that ourselves. There are complaints once in a while, and they are always looked into and rectified. We have to have a uniform rule. If it is stated at any port that they do not understand a rule in the same way as at other ports, a ruling goes out from the department to make the custom uniform. If a new article of commerce comes in which is not specifically mentioned in the tariff, and there is a question under what head it comes, then the board gives a decision. As I said before, when they arrive at a decision it is submitted to the minister, and when the minister signs it it has the force of law, except that there is an appeal to the Governor in Council.

Mr. KAULBACH. Is not the minister mistaken in regard to the salary of the commissioner of customs ? I understood it was only $2,800.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It was $2,800, then he got $800 as chairman of the board of customs. In the east this year I did not think it desirable to have it divided and I think the committee have already endorsed the recommendation that it be fixed at $3,600, the same as it has been in the past only it was put under two different heads. I saw no reason for that. I thought it looked better and that the commissioner was worthy of having his salary stated at $3,600. I am free to confess he is a cheap man at that money.

Mr. CLANCY. When the item in regard to the assistant commissioner was run through the committee I think the hon. minister then stated that in many instances he would take the place of the commissioner. In such a case does the assistant commissioner receive anything above the salary voted to him as chairman of the board of customs when he acts as such ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it would be an exceptional circumstance that we should call a meeting of the board of customs during the absence of the commissioner. I do not recall anything that would occur to lead us to call a meeting of the board of customs when the commissioner of customs was away. I should want the commissioner to be there because it is important, and if he did preside he would not get any extra salary.

Mr. MONK. In answer to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) I understood the hon. Minister of Customs to say that the work of the assistant commissioner would be confined to performing the duties of the commissioner in his absence and of assisting him generally. If that is his duty it seems to me that the salary of $2,800 is rather a heavy salary to pay such an officer as that. It seems to me that for a much smaller amount you could get a man whose duties are simply those of a deputy.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That amount was determined upon because when, a few years ago, we had an assistant commissioner, that was the salary that was paid. When you remember that at some of our ports the collectors get $4,000, that the commissioner who is over the whole Dominion gets only $3,600, and that the assistant commissioner, who, in his absence will have to do his work, gets only $2,800, it will be seen that their salaries are not excessive.

Mr. MONK. A collector has large financial responsibility.

Mr. KAULBACH. The collector for the port of Lunenburg does not get the salary mentioned by the hon. minister. He is doing more work than any collector in the province of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, he does not get $4,000.

Mr. KAULBACH. The salary is so small that the man can hardly manage to live, and he is doing more work than any two, or three other collectors in the province.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Perhaps it should be increased.

Mr. KAULBACH. We are asking the hon. minister if he will not increase this collector's salary.

On section 3,

Mr. BROCK. In employing temporary officers in the customs do they pass a civil service examination ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not necessarily. If they become permanent officers they would have to pass the civil service examination save and except in one position; that is that of preventive officer, which is not required under the law.

Mr. BROCK. If, in view of the enormous business which is being done in the customs' houses all over the country, it is necessary at all to employ a man or men I think it would be necessary to employ them permanently. I think these temporary officers are expensive and inefficient, and that by the time they become efficient they get other employment, whereas, if you required them to pass a civil service examination and put them on the permanent list you would be much more likely to get good men.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock). We have what are called temporary officers who have been eight, twelve or fifteen years in the employment of the department and I would like to have them all on the permanent list if they could pass the qualifying examination. But, they are men who are up in years, who were appointed many years ago, and who could not pass the civil service examination. They could have passed it when they first left school. I have no doubt but they would hesitate to undertake it now and for that reason they are retained as temporary officers. In some cases we have appointed them to the only position we could without their passing the civil service examination, and that is to the position of preventive officer—but we like them to pass the examination in every case when they can.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). There is one point I want to explain and it is that no officer over thirty-five years of age can apply for examination under the Act. He must be thirty-five years of age.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is in the inside service.

Mr. CLANCY. How many temporary officers has the hon. gentleman ? He seems to be asking for authority to appoint temporary officers. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has in the service what may be termed temporary officers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is in the outside service.

Mr. CLANCY. I quite understand that. In the outside service no examination is passed by persons who may be collectors or preventive officers. The hon. gentleman does not exact of those whom he makes collectors of customs that they shall pass an examination. I am not finding fault with the character of those who have been appointed, I believe they are efficient officers, but there are men of advanced years who could not pass the examination. In fact I believe it has not been the rule.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Collectors of customs have not under the law to pass the civil service examination.

Mr. CLANCY. Nor preventive officers ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Nor preventive officers. Appraisers pass a technical examination. You can understand that a man who has to value goods must undergo a technical examination, which takes place under forms set by the commissioner of customs. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman how many temporary officers we have, but we have a very large number in different places and some of them have been ten or twelve years or more in the service.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman wants authority to make them permanent officers in the outside service. Is that the power the hon. gentleman is asking for here ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No. We have been appointing temporary officers, as all governments have been doing. You could not work the department unless there was power to appoint temporary officers at times, because the need arises very suddenly. A man is placed on the temporary list to do the work that is required of him. We thought that the Act would be made clearer in reference to the appointment of them if the power to appoint these temporary officers was specifically placed in the Act. It has been done ever since confederation, it has been recognized as an absolute necessity and we are now just simply making it clear that the law gives its sanction to such appointments.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. gentleman propose to increase the number of temporary officers or do I understand that he simply wants to put himself right by taking power to do what he is at present doing but without authority or law ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Speaking of those temporary officers, while I know they cannot be made permanent under the Civil Service Act, yet at the same time steps should be taken with a view of placing them on a permanent footing in the service. There are a number of excellent officers in the customs service, and although many of them were appointed years and years ago and have continued in the employment of the government until they are passed doing anything else in life, yet they still remain in a temporary position. I do not mean to say that they should be given the annual increase in salary, but there should be some understanding that they are permanent officials. For instance, the present government have made a number of these appointments, and should a change of government take place these officials always feel uncertain as to their position. I believe that civil servants who have faithfully discharged their duties should not be subject to such a contingency. I believe they should be free from the whims of any political party and the government should consider some means of protecting that class of employees.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) says, but the Civil Service Act stands in the way.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there no way of getting over it; surely the Act could be amended.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any fixed scale of salary for the temporary officers in the employ of the government ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no fixed scale, but there will be a provision in the Bill that we shall not appoint temporary officers at higher salaries than permanent employees receive in the rank to which they are appointed. The statutory increase does not apply to the outside service. Applications for increases of salary come in, and we have to give our best consideration to them. Under existing circumstances I think myself that we have officers in our employ who are not receiving ample compensation, and that is one of the reasons why I will ask the House for a larger vote for next year.

On section 4,

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman seeking by this clause to enlarge the power of the board, or is it to define existing powers that are considered uncertain ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When the Board of Customs makes a ruling, that ruling has the force of law when signed by the minister. Suppose a ruling is given that an article should be only 20 per cent on which 30 per cent had previously been charged at different ports, then the parties could make claims on the department, or if the regulations were vice versa, the department would call upon the parties to make amended entries running back two or three years. This is to define that when a ruling of the Board of Customs is given, it takes effect at once and that there shall be no claim for refunds by the parties who have paid too much, or no claim by the government on the parties who may have paid too little.

Mr. CLANCY. Is not that unfair ? The customs officers through the country have the matter very much in their own hands. and the importers must pay such duties as are exacted. I should think that under the ordinary working of the Customs Act the cases would be rare in which the importer paid too little, because before he could get his goods he has to submit to whatever ruling the departmental officers may make. It seems unfair that in case a mistake was made the importer should have no means of recovering the excessive amount which he paid.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It might have that appearance on the face of it, but we have given this matter a good deal of consideration and I think the hon. gentleman will see that it is not so unfair as he thinks. If we said that we would not let them come upon us for refunds, but that we would call upon them to pay if the rate charged was too low, that would be unfair. But the rule works both ways and there will not be many cases in which the Board of Customs will give rulings contrary to what has been the usual practice ; although exceptional cases may occur. Suppose the Board of Customs should rule that the duty should have been 30 per cent when only 20 per cent was paid, and the department was to ask all the merchants to pay the extra 10 per cent, their reply would be that they only charged for their goods on the basis of a 20 per cent duty and that the department was in effect taking the money out of their pockets. On the other hand, if they have paid too high a rate of duty they would have put that duty on their goods when they were selling them and these goods would have been sold in all probability on the basis of the merchant having paid 30 per cent duty.

Mr. CLANCY. It does not change the nature of the grievance that the extra tax has been paid by the customers of the importer, rather than by the importer himself. The hon. gentleman is now imposing a burden upon persons who are entirely innocent, because they were subject to the rulings of his own department and they had no alternative but to submit to the mistake of the customs officers. Some cases may arise where it is not possible to have a general rule on the matter, but so far as it is possible we should not punish innocent persons for mistakes made by the customs officials. I do not think the hon. gentleman should have such a law. Nobody should be made to suffer for inaccuracies committed in the Customs Department, without having an opportunity for redress.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) The rule is that when a person goes to a customs office to pass his entry, if there is any doubt about the duty to be paid, the article is sent to the appraiser to decide what the duty will be.

Mr. INGRAM. Is he an expert ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Yes, there are expert appraisers on hardware, medicines and everything else. In case the duty paid has been less than it should be, the merchant is asked to amend his entry; but if the duty paid has been more than it should be, an appeal is made to Ottawa and the excess is refunded to him. This has been the practice in Halifax, where I was collector of customs for fourteen years, till the Tories turned me out.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose a man pays too high a percentage of duty, and no reference is made to it at the time, and it is not discovered for a long time afterwards, say six months. There may be many cases of that kind arising in which there is great room for hardship, and I think they should not have effect given them by an Act of parliament.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). In most instances there is too little duty paid rather than too much.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to know from the Minister of Customs what the meaning of the legislation is that he proposes to found on these resolutions.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I thought I had explained it already. What the hon. member for Victoria has said is correct, and covers the greater part of the question. If the rate charged has been too much, the case comes to Ottawa, and a refund is paid to the importer. If, on the other hand, it is discovered in the check branch that he has paid too low a rate, then he is required to make an amended entry and pay the balance. These cover the great bulk of the transactions. What this clause refers to is a case that may come before the board of customs. Such cases, however, will be very few and far between. These are cases in which there has been a certain ruling for a length of time, but when attention is called to it, the board of customs decide that the ruling has not been correct, and they lay down a correct ruling. In such cases no claims should come from parties who have paid too much nor any charge made against parties who have paid too little.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not the class of cases I call attention to. Suppose an importer pays say 30 per cent duty through the mistake of a collector when he should have paid 20 per cent. He makes no complaint or protest at the time, but six months later he discovers that he paid too much. How would the hon. gentleman deal with a case of that kind under the authority he is now asking to close the door ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If it is not a decision rendered by the board of customs his claim would be considered and he would get his refund. Suppose three or four or six months have elapsed. It is true, we may have taken money that we should not have taken, but that has not been a burden on the importer. The extra duty has gone into the price which the consumers have paid for the article, and it would be practically impossible to refund the excess to them. The importer has not lost anything as an individual. In these rare cases we do not propose to pay anything on the one hand or take anything on the other. If the hon. gentleman will think the matter over until the Bill is introduced, and still sees the objection he now refers to, we will discuss it further with him.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to ask one thing more. It seems to be the object of this legislation that the department will not be compelled to exact payment in such cases ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. BROCK. In another case, suppose you have charged too little duty, say 20 per cent when you should have charged 30 per cent, and the goods have been disposed of. It would be a great injustice to the merchant then to demand the additional duty because of a mistake having been made by the collector of customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Quite so, and, if this clause passes, we should not be compelled to ask the man for the extra 10 per cent.

Mr. BROCK. That I think would be very fair.

On section 5,

Mr. CLANCY. Will that not lead to complication ? There are many cases in which some of these officers would not be able to convert the foreign currency into our currency.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They have tables for that. If goods are made say in Belgium, and purchased in Germany, the present law requires that the invoice shall be made out in the German currency. We are going to allow such invoices to be made out in Belgian currency.

Mr. HENDERSON. What does the hon. minister mean by 'further particulars shall be given in the invoices.'

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That will be more definitely explained in the Bill. I think it is to see that packages and other particulars are sufficiently mentioned in the invoice.

Mr. BROCK. I hope the hon. minister will see that there are no more complications than at present.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is to secure uniformity as much as possible in the invoices, and to give us sufficient information to know at once how that each invoice can be dealt with.

On section 6,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Suppose an article is made of different components. Suppose, for instance, it is made partly of iron and partly of brass, and there is a duty on the iron machinery of 25 per cent, and on the brass of 30 per cent. If only a small portion of the article is brass it will come in at the 25 per cent duty, whereas under the present it would have to be charged the higher rate.

Mr. CLANCY. Does this apply to that section of the Customs' Act which imposes a duty on unenumerated articles of 20 per cent. Or is the hon. minister making two classes of unenumerated articles ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The unenumerated articles which are charged 20 per cent, are articles that can come under no other definition, but there are certain articles which are not of this class, but which are composed of different component parts, each of which may be subject to a different duty.

Mr. CLANCY. I would suggest to the hon. minister to find some other name for the latter than that of 'unenumerated articles' or he will be confounding them with the unenumerated articles which are charged a duty of 20 per cent.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Bill itself clearly explains the difference, and I do not think that there will be any confusion. The unenumerated articles referred to in this clause would be manufactured articles composed of two or more materials. For instance, an article might be composed partly of iron and partly of brass. In that case, it would have to come under one or other of these denominations. That having prevailed in the past the article would have to come in under the highest duty applicable to any of the materials of which it was composed—brass, iron or whatever it might be. Under this, it will come in as I said before, under the rate of duty on the article of which it is most largely composed.

Mr. CLANCY. How would the hon. gentleman determine a case of that kind ? It seems to me he is raising a very difficult question. Suppose an article composed of a number of different materials—iron, wood, brass, some silver, some lead—how can this be decided with any degree of accuracy by any collector of customs ? I doubt if even a customs board could do it. I would not offer an opinion, but, no doubt, the matter has been studied in the hon. gentleman's department. I believe it was found well to lay down an arbitrary rule covering articles of that kind, it being found impossible to come to a correct conclusion in each case. I am not opposing the hon. gentleman, but it seems to me he is getting into deeper water rather than reaching firm ground.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose an article were composed of 75 per cent of something that was free and the remainder of some article that had a duty of 25 per cent. In that case, I suppose the whole would come in free.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, no, we are not in the habit of letting anything come in free if it is composed of dutiable material.

Mr. HENDERSON. Of course, the Minister of Customs is proceeding upon the idea of a tariff for revenue. I want to assist him in carrying out his policy.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is not designed to go so far as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) suggested. The article would be dutiable. But, this is a new idea.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would come in under 25 per cent as unenumerated.

Mr. HENDERSON. This supersedes the unenumerated ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it assists it, not supersedes it.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell the committee if he has been actually collecting the duties on the scale he proposes here, or whether he is proposing a new departure from the arbitrary rule of collecting 25 per cent on these articles as coming within the class of unenumerated.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are making a new departure, and we think, establishing a fair rule. Suppose that an article is composed one-tenth of a material which is subject to a duty of 30 per cent, and nine-tenths of a material which is dutiable at 30 per cent, it would be hardly fair to charge the whole 30 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is charging 20 per cent now under the unenumerated class.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, we are charging 30 per cent. These articles do not come in under the unenumerated class. An article is accounted unenumerated only when it cannot be classified under one or other of the headings. Articles composed of iron and brass, for instance, though not specially mentioned, are not counted unenumerated, but would be classed either as manufactures of iron or as manufactures of brass.

On section 7,

To extend the time for the submission for claims for refund, including claims for refund on account of damages.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Claims for refund now are required to be put in within ten days from the date of entry or they are shut out. It is thought that that is too short a time, and we propose to extend it to fourteen days from the date of entry or landing. Sometimes an entry is made even before the goods arrive. In many cases, merchants tell us : When these goods were brought into our warehouse, opened and examined, we found they were damaged, but the ten days had elapsed, and we could not enter a claim for a refund.

On section 8,

That importers may be relieved from the payment of duty on damaged goods abandoned in certain cases.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is new. If a man has a lot of goods coming in and they are so thoroughly damaged that they are not worth to him the amount of the duty, he may abandon them altogether, in which case we shall have the right under the law to take the goods and destroy them, charging the importer no duty.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would it make any difference how this damage was brought about, whether from fire or from careless handling on ship-board ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think this would cover cases of damage from whatever cause. The hon. gentleman will see that the object of the customs duty is to secure revenue on goods that go into consumption. If goods are damaged so much that the importer would rather abandon them than pay the duty, we would destroy them and they would not go into consumption. The question of damage would be a question for settlement between him and the parties who sent the goods.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose the damage was caused by the transportation company from whom the importer could recover. He would abandon the goods, but he would receive the value of them from the transportation company. In that case, some person ought to pay the duty. If the damage arose in such a way that no person was liable, I could understand that the hon. minister's position would be a fair one, but not if the importer could recover the value of the goods. In that case, if the hon. gentleman proposes to relieve the parties from the payment of duties by their merely abandoning of the goods, he goes too far. If a transportation company damages goods, then they ought to be liable. Suppose a man, through carelessness in handling goods, damages them and they became of no value, would that be a reason for relieving him, if they were damaged through his own act ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that the revenues we collect are on goods that go into consumption in Canada. If the goods do not go into consumption in Canada then we do not expect the people of Canada to pay anything. For instance, $1,000 worth of goods come into this country and go into a bonded warehouse and remain a year or two, they pay no duty, and they are exported to another country. Now this is what we propose : Here is a quantity of goods that are so damaged that the owner says, I will throw them out, I do not want them at all, I will give them to you instead of paying the duty on them. We take these goods, but we do not put them on the market, we destroy them. Now, these goods would have gone into consumption if they had not been destroyed, but after destroying them a like quantity of goods must come in to replace them. Look at it from the customs standpoint alone, the question of abandoning the goods is a question that may be considered with the transportation companies or others who may have damaged the goods; but so far as our revenue is concerned we only collect revenue on goods that actually go into consumption.

Mr. CLANCY. I remember a case with which the hon. gentleman is acquainted. I had paid duty upon goods entered for consumption, they were destroyed and never went into consumption. But the hon. gentleman collected a duty. I know of cases in which he has done it. I know of a case in which he came to this House and asked for a refund, he put an item in the estimates to refund to the person who had suffered a loss of that kind.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman has mentioned a case which illustrates this. A quantity of goods were destroyed at Montreal. Duty had been paid upon them, and before they got into the merchant's warehouse they were destroyed. They were in our custody. The present Act prevents us from giving him back his money as a refund. If he had not paid the duty we could not do it. If he had not paid the duty, then he would not be called upon to pay the duty, because the goods were not there. But he had paid the duty, the goods were there, and before he got them into his possession they were burned. We had the duty, but the law did not allow us to refund it. That case was one of so much hardship that I put a special item in the estimates to pay him back the money.

Mr. CLANCY. I am arguing in the hon. gentleman's proposition that no duty was supposed to be collected unless the goods went into consumption. Suppose a case where the man paid the duty, removed the goods to his own warehouse one hour after the duty was paid he took possession of them, and half a million dollars worth of goods were destroyed and never went into consumption, yet the hon. gentleman would not think under such conditions of refunding the duty. But he based his argument that no duty is supposed to be collected on goods that do not go into consumption.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The expression 'entering into consumption' is generally understood to mean taken from the warehouse for that purpose. Once the goods are on the shelves of the merchant, I do not see how you can follow them there. The line has to be drawn somewhere, and the line is drawn between goods in the warehouse which have not yet entered into consumption, and goods taken out of the warehouse.

Mr. BROCK. In many cases where the goods are partly destroyed or injured, the way in which the customs deals with them is very fair, that is, they appraise the value of these goods and give a rebate equal to the damage that has been done.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the case when they are wholly abandoned, we waive the whole duty. We destroy the goods, we do not put them on the market.

Mr. BROCK. That may apply to some kind of goods, say the goods are damaged or wet through, they still may have some value. Do you destroy those goods ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In that case the owner would not abandon them. We would give a proportion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Take a case of fruit coming from a long distance which had become entirely decayed and not fit for use. Would the law apply in that case ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In a case of that kind it would be a fair thing to say to the man, not only must you lose the fruit, but we will make you pay the duty on it, though it may never have entered the customs at all.

9. That the basis of allowance for damage on polished steel and other articles be changed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The present law says that we shall only allow on an amount damaged over 50 per cent. We change that, and allow for a damage of over 25 per cent, the same as we do on other goods.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is the clause that covers what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) alluded to. As the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) has pointed out, after goods have left our possession and gone into the warehouse of the merchant, if they are burned, they are covered by insurance, while, if the goods are burned in our possession he has to pay the duty and we have no power to give it back to him without coming to parliament, because the insurance would not cover the goods on the wharf. If they are in the merchant's warehouse, in his possession, then, he has them insured, but if they are destroyed while in our possession before they have reached him and if he has happened to pay the duty upon them we are powerless to pay him back the duty. We propose to make power, if they are destroyed in our possession, to return the duty.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) would be able to enlighten the committee in this respect. Suppose goods were damaged by water on the ocean voyage to such an extent that the importer was ready to abandon the goods rather than pay the duty, and he had them insured against such damage and collected the insurance—that would be just the other case to which the hon. gentleman referred. In that case the duty ought to be paid.

Mr. MONK. Is it necessary to have an enactment for that purpose ? In case goods are destroyed upon which the duty has been paid in the custody of the customs, is it not a matter of right that the duties are refunded ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, we have not that power. We have to ask for a special vote to cover it, but we are taking that power now.

Mr. BLAIN. Suppose ten packages valued at $10 a piece were in the custody of the customs and the custom house was burned who would be responsible ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are at the owner's risk.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the government not be responsible ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. BROCK. The goods are all insured in transit from the time they leave Liverpool until they reach the warehouse. They are actually insured against all accidents from the time they leave Liverpool both on the voyage and while they are in charge of the customs; in fact until they are in the possession of the merchant.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Would they be insured during transit after they had been landed in Canada ?

Mr. BROCK. Yes, they are insured in store, on the wharf and in the warehouse.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) the goods had been landed in the afternoon and that night before the merchant could transfer them to his warehouse they were destroyed. Therefore, there was no insurance on them

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This will be the section of the Bill that will deal with this matter :

Upon production of satisfactory proof to the Minister of Customs of the actual injury or destruction in whole or in part of any goods by accidental fire, or other casualty, while the same remained in the custody of the officers of the customs in any customs warehouse, or while in transportation in bond from one port of entry to another port of entry in Canada, or, while within the limits of any port of entry and before the same have been landed under the supervision of the officers of the customs, the duties on the whole or the part thereof so proved to be injured or destroyed may be abated or refunded; provided the claim be made within 14 days after the date of the casualty and that due appraisement be made of the goods so alleged to be injured, as soon as they can be examined.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Peel asks a question as to the responsibility for the loss of the goods themselves. They would be at the merchant's own risk.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, the goods themselves. We are dealing with duties only.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does it not seem reasonable, when the government take possession of a man's property and retains it for two or three days until the necessary entries have been made, that they should be entirely responsible for those goods? I think they ought to be liable to the individual for the property which they have in their possession.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The government are not warehousemen. Warehousing is a separate matter.

Mr. BROCK. The goods are insured even when they are in charge of the customs.

Mr. BLAIN. What I mean is this; supposing a poor man imports an article worth $10. That article is sent from New York and put in the customs-house at Ottawa to-night, it is in the possession of the customs and the importer cannot receive it. He could not possibly get possession of it and it is burned up to-night. Is it fair that that poor man should lose that article?

An hon. MEMBER. Get it insured.

Mr. BLAIN. An hon. member says get it insured. Ninety-nine out of every hundred of these small packages are never insured.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) says they are.

Mr. BROCK. I refer to importations of goods from England or elsewhere.

Mr. BLAIN. Here are ten small articles in the customs house, in possession of the government and they are burned up—should not the government be responsible? Is it right that these ten men should lose all their effects? Is it not fair that the government, holding these articles, should be responsible for them until the purchasers of them have an opportunity of getting them into their possession?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If that is true in regard to a small parcel, it would be a matter of principle that would apply equally to large consignments of goods in warehouse. The question is whether the government are to be responsible for the ownership of property simply because it is put in the warehouse, because the principle is the same. I do not see how you could hold the government responsible. The government simply acts as agent in passing these goods through the customs and in collecting the duty.

Mr. BROCK. If goods come in by mail and are lost, I do not think the government is responsible for them.

On section 11,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In this and the next section it will be found that we are simply taking these from the tariff Act. For convenience, as we are getting this up with a view to the Consolidated Revenue Act in the revision of the statutes, we are taking from the Tariff Act this and the next clause without change.

On section 13,

Mr. LANCASTER. What officers does the hon. member propose to vest with that power? I have had occasion to find that some officers—I do not say customs officers particularly—are very lax about the way in which they administer an oath. They seem to think that by the person signing a paper and saying: 'This is all right,' that they have done their duty.

Mr. INGRAM. That is the way the lawyers do.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, the lawyers do not do it in that way with all due deference to my hon. friend. There should be some discretion exercised in regard to the officers who are given power to administer oaths. Some officers, and not inferior officers either, are very lax in administering oaths, and if a charge of perjury were laid, the guilty person might escape because of some technical objection. I impress upon the minister that great care should be taken in the selection of officers to whom be given this authority.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. At present we have to get an Order in Council to appoint an officer for this purpose and we want to change that so that the Customs Department can of its own action appoint such a person. There will be just as much care exercised by the department as if these officers were appointed by an Order in Council.

Mr. HENDERSON. This only gives them power to administer oaths in relation to the Customs Act.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes

On section 14,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. At the present time the railway and steamship companies are charged for the extra service rendered by officers after hours. They have for years protested against that. Their argument is that the officers are there to protect the revenue of Canada and that the revenue of Canada should pay them. Where officers have rendered services outside of the hours between eight o'clock in the morning and six at night, we have charged the railway companies and steamship companies twenty-five cents an hour, and that money has been paid by them to the Receiver General, and it is checked out and paid through the collector of customs to the men who are entitled to it. I have never been able to find a satisfactory answer to the contention of the transportation companies that the government itself should pay its own officers. I might have said to them that you must have your business transacted at certain hours, but it is our duty to facilitate trade and commerce, and it would be unreasonable and out of the question to require them to run their trains between eight in the morning and six at night. They hold that it is our duty to collect our revenue and pay our own servants, and I must say that they appear to have the best of the argument on their side. The hesitancy about undertaking this before, was I suppose, because a minister does not wish to undertake an expenditure which will run into many thousands of dollars, but I have made up my mind to ask the House to sanction an appropriation that will enable us in the future to pay those men who are our servants and who attend to the duties that we require of them. We take power under this resolution, however, in cases where we consider that private interests and not public interests are served, to charge the private interests for the service rendered. For instance, if a railway company should ask that we shall have a man at Boston to examine baggage that is coming into Canada so that it may be bonded through, we would look upon that as being a convenience to the railway company and in such a case the railway company would be required to pay for the services of that officer.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who fixes the salary of an officer at Boston say.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Customs Department fixes the salary.

Mr. INGRAM. I am bound to say that the Customs Department fixes a very small salary for some of these men in view of the arduous duties they have to perform. The government are bound to have officers on the frontier both day and night, but I do not think that the officers on the boundary experience as much hardship as some of those in the interior of the country. For instance, a pasenger is coming from the state of New York into Ontario, and he may arrive at any hour of the night and the custom officer may be obliged to be on duty. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Michigan Central at St. Thomas contribute something like $25 a month towards the pay of these officers, and to my mind that is a very small amount indeed. If the minster is going to remedy that, he will be doing right. Officers who are called out of their beds to perform duties for the country, should be better paid than they are now.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It was announced some time ago in the newspapers, that baggage coming into this country could only be sent in bond to certain points. For instance, persons coming from Chicago to the town of Smith's Falls, and checking their baggage to that point, find it detained at the border instead of being sent on.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the commissioner met the transportation companies a little time ago and discussed this matter with them. They were anxious to have the baggage examined at the frontier as far as possible, but there were certain other points fixed upon to which the goods might be bonded. The trouble arose in this way: Suppose the goods were coming to some place this side of Cobourg, which was not a port of entry; they could not be bonded further than Cobourg, and they would be held there to be examined. The party, having arrived at his destination, would miss his goods. It was thought most convenient to have them examined at the frontier; but in some cases it happened that while the goods should be stopped at Cobourg for examination, the railway company might let them pass on to the other point which is not a customs point at all. That was the reason of the arrangement between the commissioner and the railways under which certain points were selected where the goods might be examined.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I notice that in the list there were very few places to which trunks could be consigned. For instance, the town I come from is not in the list, so that a person coming there would have to have his baggage examined at the border, perhaps at midnight.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman's goods were not on the same train with himself, they would be sent on the next day.

Mr. MONK. Is this going to entail the appointment of a very large number of new officers?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it will not entail any new appointments, but it will entail a large expenditure.

Mr. MONK. Will the service become much more expensive than it was before?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I think we can perhaps rearrange it so that it will not cost so much, but it will cost the country a good deal more, because we shall not have the revenue from it.

Mr. MONK. Has the hon. minister made an estimate of what amount this service will cost us ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think altogether it will cost very nearly $70,000, and I am not sure but that I may have to ask for $100,000 for it.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman propose to fix the compensation in each case for the officers of the department doing these additional duties, or does he propose to come down with a general scale so that the House will know what it is paying in each case ? I am not now complaining of the departure the hon. gentleman has made, because I think what he has stated has been a great hardship, and I see no reason why the change should not be made and the burden shifted to where it belongs, namely, on the companies. But the question is whether the hon. gentleman is taking power to deal with these cases at his own sweet will, or whether he will come down with some fixed scale.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will not be at my own sweet will, though I suppose it will be pretty much as I wish. I should have to submit it to my colleagues, and obtain an Order in Council. Many years ago an Order in Council was passed, fixing the rate paid by the railway companies at twenty-five cents an hour, and in my judgment that is not too much.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that at the boundary line ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, wherever an officer is rendering a service. This extra amount is paid to the officer in addition to his salary. Take the port of Montreal, where we have to have men on the wharfs at night. These men get $500 a year, but they may make an extra $60 or $70 by doing extra service at night. The transportation companies now pay these men at the rate of twenty-five cents an hour, so that if we made a rearrangement, the men would go on doing the work they have been doing, but they would be paid by us instead of by the railway companies. We hope that we may be able to reorganize the department so as to economize a little. I do not think that a man who has to put in a day's work from eight a.m. to six p.m. can do his work efficiently if he also does night work, and I think we can reorganize that system and have men go on for certain hours and then be relieved by others.

Mr. MONK. In the United States, does the state pay for that service ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the United States bear the whole expense of the collection of their revenue by night and by day.

Mr. INGRAM. Where you have a night staff and a day staff, I do not see what necessity there can be for paying men overtime, unless in the exceptional case where a man on either staff happens to be ill and has to be replaced by one taken from the other staff. But the complaint I make has reference to ports of entry, where you have no night men. A man may come from New York state and have his trunk come to this port of entry. What he wants and what the railway company wants is that he should get his trunk immediately on arrival at the station, and have that trunk released by the customs officer. But if a regular man be called out of his bed to perform that service, he should receive extra pay. In the town of my county, that railway company have been paying at the rate of $25 per month for that service, and if the hon. gentleman will rearrange that kind of service and pay the men more money, he will be doing the proper thing.

Mr. CLANCY. Section fourteen of this resolution is very far-reaching. It gives the Governor in Council power to reduce the customs duties. At present he has power to remit the duties but not to reduce them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. colleague the Minister of Finance pointed out in his budget speech that while the Governor General in Council had the power of taking off the duty altogether, he cannot reduce it. There are many cases in which the government might be disposed to reduce the duty in order to help the manufacturers of certain kinds of goods, but would not feel justified in remitting them altogether.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no hesitation in saying that this is a most unreasonable proposition. The government have now the power of remitting the duties, but only under certain conditions. They may place certain articles on the free list for certain purposes clearly specified, but without any safeguard of that kind the hon. gentleman proposes to take the power of reducing these duties and of practically fixing the duties, which this House ought to have the right to do.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not taking the power myself.

Mr. CLANCY. It amounts to the same thing. All the hon. gentleman has to do is to get an Order in Council, which his colleagues would certainly give on his representation, and the Governor General would not refuse to sanction such an Order in Council. I cannot conceive anything more dangerous than handing over to the Minister of Customs the power of fixing the duties at whatever rate he may think proper. I remember when it was proposed to give the government the power to put goods on the free list, which were the composite parts of articles manufactured in this country, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and the hon. gentleman himself protested strongly against the proposition. But his proposition goes a long ways further. It was safeguarded with everything that was possible—certain conditions had to obtain before the minister could act. Now, he opens the gate as widely as he can and asks the right to reduce the duty on any article without asking parliament.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. You will observe that this is a paragraph to be appended to section 245 of the Act, and it will be known as subsection 'U.' We have run down the whole alphabet already to and including 'T.' So, you have given the Governor in Council power—not myself—to make regulations for many things, for instance, for slaughtering cattle and grinding corn in bond.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the Governor General do it of his own will or by the recommendation of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Governor in Council must do it.

Mr. CLANCY. But does the Governor in Council do it upon his own motion or upon the recommendation of the minister ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The recommendation in these cases probably comes from the Minister of Customs. Of course, it must originate somewhere. Under subsection 'L' which is now in existence, the Governor in Council has power to transfer to the free list articles imported to be used as material for Canadian manufacture. It is proposed here, with regard to the same class of articles, to allow the Governor in Council, instead of placing the articles on the free list, to reduce the rate of duty.

Mr. MONK. I do not think it is the same thing at all, I have not seen the section of the Act to which the hon. minister has referred. But I understand that in certain specified cases mentioned in the Act the Governor in Council may transfer articles to the free list, the cases being there specified.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not specified but classified generally—articles for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. MONK. But upon what ground and to what extent would the Governor in Council reduce the duty ? It gives large discretionary power.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not more than to-day.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. MONK. A great deal more, The Governor in Council can now place goods on the free list in certain classified instances determined by parliament.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the same case, except that he reduce the duty instead of making the articles free.

Mr. MONK. Yes, but it is intended to increase the classes in which the duty may be reduced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has spoken of certain well understood limitations which, he says, will not apply in this case. He has taken up this section fourteen and judges from it alone. But this is a mere draft statement of the substance of the Bill to be introduced. In conformity with the rule respecting measures of this character, these resolutions are first presented in committee. But these do not purport to set forth the details which will appear in the Bill. Every restriction which surrounds the placing of goods on the free list will surround the reduction of the duty. Surely, if the Governor in Council may be entrusted as at present, to make a free gift, they may be trusted to do something less than that.

Mr. LANCASTER. With all deference to the Minister of Finance, I would say that, in one case he is simply making certain goods free, but in the other case he is making a whole tariff. Parliament has fixed the tariff, but, under certain restrictions, has authorized the Minister of Customs or the cabinet, to allow goods to enter free to be used as material for manufacturing. That is a vastly different thing from parliament saying that the duty on a certain class of goods shall be for instance thirty per cent, but giving the government power to say to any particular class of manufacturers : Because we like you or for some other reason, we will let you have these goods at fifteen per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Taking my hon. friend's (Mr. Lancaster's) illustration—at present we can say : Because we like you, or for some other reason (quoting my hon. friend's words) we will let you have these goods, not at a reduced duty, but without any duty.

Mr. MONK. No, the cases are specified.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is mistaken, there is no change in the specification. The conditions will be the same in both cases. A manufacturer makes a proposition to us to transfer an article to the free list. We may feel that he is not entitled to have the goods free, for that is a great privilege, but that he makes out a fair case why the duty should be reduced. We simply ask to be allowed to reduce the duty instead of making the goods free. How it can be argued that there is any extension of the power of the Governor in Council in this proposal passes my comprehension. If we have the power given us for the reasons specified to make a free gift, surely it is no extension of the power to say that we may give only part.

Mr. MONK. Suppose you want to increase the duty ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But that is not proposed.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. Minister of Finance will not contend that that is an answer. He proposes that the government shall have power which should rest with parliament alone, that of fixing the rates of duty. Whether goods should be entered at a lower rate of duty or should be free are two entirely different reasons.

An hon. MEMBER. Move it.

Mr. CLANCY. No, it may be moved at a later stage. What would be the effect of this ? The government have represented to the country that they have taken off some of the protective duties they complained of, and what have they given in return ? A lower rate of duty on some raw materials coming into the country. Parliament has thought right and has deemed it safe to give authority to the Governor in Council or to the minister, to come more nearly to the case—under certain conditions to make certain articles free of duty. Now, surely, if they give the minister or the Governor in Council—that makes no difference——

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does.

Mr. CLANCY. None whatever. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) presented an Order in Council and his Excellency refused to give it his assent he would resign. The hon. gentleman knows that his recommendations are passed—the passing of them is a mere formality. But I hope the parliament will not surrender to any party in this country the right to fix rates of duty. They may go a long way without abuse—I am not certain that it is not without abuse, though I think on the whole it has been—but there is no parallel between this special grant of power to make goods free under certain circumstances and a new departure in the form of legislation giving power to the Governor in Council to fix rates of duty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend were attacking the right of the Governor in Council, he would touch this question.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not doing that at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is where he is illogical. If he were attacking the right of the Governor in Council to deal with this matter at all, then I could recognize that at least he was basing his argument upon some principle. Now, it is well understood that the Governor in Council shall not be allowed to increase a tax, and it is not proposed to violate that principle. But suppose a manufacturer opening a new industry comes to us and says, I am using a certain article, and for the encouragement of this industry I would like to have it put on the free list. We say, no, we cannot do that, the duty is a considerable item, we don't want to lose it, and we do not think you have made out a good case. Your industry has already a certain tariff advantage, and if we give you free materials in addition to that, you are getting an undue advantage. But he may say, I cannot carry on my industry on these conditions, can you not give me some concession ? Then the Governor in Council shall have power to say: No, though we will not give you that thing absolutely free, we will give it to you at a lower rate of duty. If parliament is the only body to be entrusted in the one case, it is the only body to be entrusted in the other. Every condition is the same, and if it is wrong to give the Governor in Council power to reduce a duty under these precise conditions, surely it is equally wrong for parliament to give the government power to make the article free. My hon. friend would say to the manufacturer : No, we cannot give you that at all. Now we might get a considerable revenue out of that, but by the course proposed by the hon. gentleman we would be obliged to sacrifice the whole revenue and make it free.

Mr. INGRAM. You are dealing with an article that may enter into manufacture.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose the manufacturer is making a class of goods upon which he has a duty of so much; would the government step in by Order in Council and say : We think the duty is too much, and we are going to pass an Order in Council to reduce it again ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have power to-day to ask to make it free, and under the proposed amendment we will take power to say to him : No, we cannot give you all that advantage, but we will help you by reducing the duty. My hon. friend's objection would oblige us to give him the whole thing.

Mr. INGRAM. No, I say it is too much power to put into the hands of the Governor in Council. In the matter of the tariff, a manufacturer establishes his business on the understanding that he is going to have so much protection. Then I say in justice to that man no power outside of parliament should be allowed to interfere with that duty, and that interference should only take place at the session of parliament. But if, in the manufacture of his goods, he is using a certain class of raw material upon which there is a duty, and that is not interfered with by any other manufacturer, then it might be proper to reduce the duty on the raw material.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not on the raw material, but on the material.

Mr. INGRAM. What I object to is that when we frame a tariff it ought not to be interfered with by Order in Council. The hon. gentleman spoke about the will of the minister. Suppose you dislike the manufacturer, suppose you want to take him by the throat and say: Unless you do so and so we will reduce the duties?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a proposal to reduce the duty on some article, not necessarily raw material, that he is going to use. Now if a man comes and asks us to give him some concession with regard to an article not made in Canada, and where there could be no question as to its affecting any other industry, we will be able to help him, but it might be too much to give him absolute freedom. Instead of that, we reduce the duty, and the hon. gentleman thinks we are enlarging the power of the government. If he will contend that the Governor in Council should not have power to touch the tariff question at all, there is a principle in that. But if a manufacturer desires a certain privilege and we have power to make an article absolutely free, how do we enlarge our power by being able to say to him: No, we won't make it free, but we will lower the duty.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose a manufacturer establishes a business on the idea that he is getting so much protection, and the government, between the sessions of parliament, steps in and passes an Order in Council to reduce the duty on that particular article, which might drive him out of the business. I say that power should only belong to parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have now the power, every government has had it, to put that article on the free list, though it may have the effect of driving the manufacturer out of business. Where is the difference?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, and that is what I hold is wrong, making it absolutely free without the consent of parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a consistent position, but that is not the position of the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. CLANCY. Suppose a manufacturer is making a certain class of goods, and he says that his goods have been driven out of the markets by the hon. gentleman, who is a free trader, not giving him adequate protection. The hon. gentleman says he is aiding that manufacturer less by giving him a reduction of duty than by making the article free. That would seem a very rational argument, but in appearance it is all wrong. The hon. gentleman must justify himself when he puts the article on the free list in the public interest. But according to his own theory, if he reduced the duty partially instead of giving him additional protection, how can he argue that he is doing it in the public interest? This is giving such a power to the hon. minister that we might just as well relieve him of the necessity of coming down to the House and asking the House to fix the duties on any article which may be brought into this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may be obtuse, but I cannot see the force of the hon. gentleman's argument. The procedure in both cases is precisely the same. You can only do this by Order in Council. I do not object to the contention that it means the Minister of Customs, because we pay great respect to his recommendations. It has to be done in the usual way, the minister has to make a report to council, council must pass judgment upon it and the decision must be published in the 'Canada Gazette.' That condition which exists now in respect to placing an article on the free list must continue to exist in respect to reducing the duty.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not the point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not quarrelling with the hon. gentleman as to who does it, or the form in which it is done. Our contention is not in respect to the way in which it is brought about. This is going a long way in the direction of giving the government power to legislate by Order in Council, to take certain articles from a fixed duty and place them on the free list. This additional power is going too far and is placing a weapon in the hands of the government that should never be wielded by any government I care not which party may be in power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not asking additional power; we are asking a lesser power than we have now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the hon. gentleman is asking for a power that he will exercise very much more than he would exercise the present power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I really do not think so.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, the minister at all times requires to have a revenue. He hesitates about placing an article on the free list because he knows he is going to lose the revenue that would accrue from that article. That alone would restrict him very much in the exercise of this extraordinary power which has been placed in the hands of the government for so many years. It is an extraordinary power and perhaps in that we have made a mistake. It may be desirable to go back the other way, to undo something we have done, but in regard to the partial reduction of duties, the minister may say: I want revenue; here is an article on the list which pays 25 per cent. There is very little of that article coming into the country under a 25 per cent duty; I will reduce it to 15 per cent to meet the views of this manufacturer and I will get a good deal more revenue out of a 15 per cent duty than I will out of a 25 per cent duty. Hence, I fear that power, if it were for nothing more than the purpose of getting revenue, may be exercised a great deal more than the present power of putting an article on the free list. The government would have an incentive if they wanted revenue to make these reductions which perhaps would be altogether contrary to the wishes of parliament. There is a strong point in this and I think it is well that it should be thoroughly considered before we embody it in the law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree that the subject is important and before the Bill to be introduced reaches its final stage, there is no reason why it should not be reconsidered. There is no disposition on the part of the government to exercise that power frequently and although the hon. gentleman describes this power as an extraordinary one I think he will find that not only by this government but by all governments it has been used very sparingly, and I am sure it will continue to be used very sparingly and only for good reasons.

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly, at this hour of the morning I have no intention of inviting further discussion on the preference tariff subject, but I do wish to make an appeal to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) regarding one of the gentlemen who was referred to, the author of one of the declarations that was presented to the House tonight. Mr. W. Trant, of Regina, is a reputable gentleman and has like all of us a reputation to uphold. The reference that was made by the hon. member for Peel to Mr. Trant was, to say the least a very disagreeable reference——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid I will be compelled to prevent this discussion from being reopened.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg to move that this committee——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The committee have agreed to abide by each resolution and to discuss the question there submitted. I am bound to carry out their behest.

Mr. BLAIN. I have no disposition to modify. All I can say is that I would desire with a great deal of pleasure to have an opportunity of repeating this statement again.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 174) to amend the Customs Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, is it open to me to make a statement on this motion?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, it is not regular on a motion to adjourn to make any statement. A discussion can be brought up on a motion to adjourn when it is proposed by a private member during a sitting of the House, but when we come to the adjournment the only question which is open for discussion is as to whether the House shall adjourn or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) can find other opportunities to revive the discussion if it is thought necessary, but I think it is not expedient on this motion.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. Minister of Finance give us the order of business for to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will proceed in Supply with the remaining items of the estimates of the Department of Public Works, excepting one, which, by arrangement with the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), will be held over, and after that with those of the hon. Minister of Justice or of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence as may be found the more convenient—with those of the hon. Minister of Justice if he is able to be present, but if he is absent, with those of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the hon. Minister of Finance, that, when he moves the House into Committee of Supply to-morrow, it is my intention to introduce a resolution dealing with the participation of Dominion Civil Servants in elections about to take place in Manitoba.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.15 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 175) respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Morrison.

Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company.—Mr. German.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That on Monday next, Public Bills and Orders, if not reached earlier, be called as the first order at 8 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT FOR HOLIDAYS.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the 20th instant, it stands adjourned until Tuesday, the 26th instant.

He said : The reason for this motion is no doubt familiar to the House. There will be a holiday on May 21st—Ascension Day, and another holiday on May 25th—Victoria Day. As there would be only the one business day, namely, the Friday, intervening, it has been suggested to me that under the circumstances it would be preferable that the House should not sit on Friday, and that the adjournment should be for the time mentioned in the motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. The Ottawa 'Citizen' of this morning contains the following :

In the talk which followed Mr. Talbot, of Bellechasse, was indiscret enough to interject a gratuitous sneer at Mr. Blain who by the way of retort made indirect reference to a story which Mr. Talbot resents allusion to as an insult of the most exasperating kind.

A little further down I read :

'It is no smaller than you are,' Mr. Onésiphore Ernest Talbot called out.

'That's another small member,' Mr. Blain retorted hotly ; 'Let him look after certain small things that crawl upon him.'

Some members tittered ; others looked aghast ; but nobody said anything, though doubtless many were reminded of the scene of a few sessions ago in which the heated disputants over a somewhat similar remark were the same Mr. Talbot and the late N. Clarke Wallace.

I may add, Mr. Speaker, that this morning I had an interview with the reporter of the 'Citizen,' Mr. MacLeod, who was in the gallery last evening, and Mr. MacLeod has promised me that he will rectify this article. Now, I appeal to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), and I ask him, as I do not see these words in 'Hansard,' if it is true that he uttered them ?

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I would just say, in reply, that I took part in the debate before the committee last evening, that the hon. gentleman was present in the Chamber throughout the whole debate, that whatever statement I made then I stand by, that I have nothing to retract, and that I am not responsible for the items that appear in the Ottawa paper nor in any other paper, and in taking that position I have good authority in the references that have been made this session by some of the cabinet ministers.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I must in justice to myself say that the words which have been placed in my mouth by this paper were never uttered by me, and I have no means of knowing whether or not the hon. gentleman used the words attributed to him by the paper. But if he did use these words I think it devolves upon him as a gentleman to take them back. He is the last man in the world to whom I would have directed a word of rebuke or anything of an insulting nature. I have always had the greatest respect for the hon. member for Peel, and I cannot understand how I could have drawn upon myself expressions of this kind from him; and I think it devolves upon him now to withdraw these words. If he does not wish to withdraw them, of course he is not obliged to do so; and if he does not, I wish him to say now what he means by them.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is not desirable to enter into a discussion of this matter. The hon. gentleman, so the newspaper tells us, if he wants to be quoted by the newspaper, sneered across the House at the member for Peel.

Mr. TALBOT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. What I said was not any sneer at all. I said : 'What a storm in a teapot.' These are the very words I used.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman wanted to attach the story of the teapot to myself, and I retorted by a reference to a story which is well known throughout the country in regard to the hon. gentleman. If he says it is not correct, he knows more about it than I do.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame, shame.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentlemen need not worry about it. If they want to give a better explanation of the story than I can, they can have the floor. I have nothing to add to what I have said. I have no disposition to cast any reflection upon any hon. member of this House. Those who have sat in the House during the three sessions that I have been here, know that it is not my mission here, as I said last night, to cast any reflection on any member of the House, and I have not done so. But if the hon. gentleman commences a discussion in the committee and makes statements which seem to me to be incorrect, whether they are or not, I cannot tell—then he will have to suffer the consequences if I correct them.

CELEBRATION IN THE COUNTY OF ELGIN.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to thank the Prime Minister for allowing us to adjourn during the latter part of next week; because in the county which I have the honour to represent along with my hon. friend Mr. Ingram, we are to have a grand celebration at the city of St. Thomas from the 21st to the 25th, and we expect the members of the House to come up to the county of Elgin and assist us. On the 21st of this month it will be a hundred years since the first tree was chopped down in my constituency by Col. Talbot, and I wish the members of this House to come up and assist us to celebrate that event, and see the fair women and stalwart men that we have in the county of Elgin.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. T. EARLE (Victoria, B.C.). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries about the correspondence in reference to the lease said to have been given for the Vancouver False Creek.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The lease has never been granted.

Mr. EARLE. There was an Order of the House passed asking for the correspondence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was not aware. The correspondence will be brought down.

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders are called, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the following passage in the speech from the Throne at the commencement of this session :

> The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy much attention, and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

As nearly nine weeks have passed since the commencement of the session, and as there have been rumours from time to time of the appointment of that commission, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether any commission has yet been appointed, and if not at how early a date we may expect the appointment ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The principle of the commission has been assented to, and it has been referred to the Department of Justice to be drafted, and I expect it in a short time.

SUPPLY—'RAGGING' IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief reference to a despatch from London of the 12th of May, which deals with a question which I apprehend will be one of great interest to Canadians, and refers to an abuse which I think ought to receive some notice from this House. The despatch is as follows :

> A court-martial is in progress at Dublin against certain officers of the 21st Lancers. They are accused of 'ragging' a brother officer, Lieutenant Willows. Lord Roberts is in Dublin to-day and is especially interesting himself in the trial. Williams is a colonial ranker who gained his commission through heroism displayed in the South African war. He takes his profession seriously. His brother officers ragged him first because he had risen from the ranks, and secondly because he is a colonial. This kind of a scandal is common in many regiments where commissions are held by colonial rankers. The ordinary English officer considers the army a social preserve and not a public service.

With regard to this matter, we have from time to time accounts in the press of affairs of this nature. We have the fact revealed that among the aristocratic officers in the British army, there is not only prejudice against men risen from the ranks, but a double prejudice against men who have risen from the ranks and are colonials. This prejudice develops into violent action towards these officers. There are cases where they have been subjected to the most shameful indignities and violent treatment, and where such treatment has been visited upon them, not because they are not military officers worthy of the positions they hold, but because they do not belong to a certain grade of the aristocracy, because they are not patricians. We find that Britishers seem to have bowed to the circumstances and resigned themselves to this kind of usage without making much fuss about it, but I apprehend that colonials will hardly take this treatment with as much complacency. I do not think it is out of place to call attention in the House to this matter, and I desire to put on record my protest, as an individual member of parliament and a Canadian citizen, against the treatment meeted out to our fellow colonials in the imperial service. The best blood of the country, the most successful business men, the ablest public men, professional and military, have come from the middle classes. These classes have always outstripped those above and those below them, and surely no policy should be tolerated that discriminates against men who owe their promotion not to social influence, but to merit and bravery. I can conceive of no greater outrage to an officer like Lieutenant Willows, who owes his commission, not to social influences but to distinguished bravery in the British service in South Africa, than the 'ragging' to which he was subjected by the patricians of the 21st lancers. All history gives us information and experience as to the value of the class of men who rise from the ranks The great marshals of Napoleon, the great soldiers, the men whose fame spread over the world, were men who came from the ranks because of their intrinsic qualities, because of their superior capacity, demonstrated in the field of practical experience, and that is the place to demonstrate whether a man possesses the qualities that will make him famous or not. These qualities are not due to the fact that he happens to belong to the aristocracy, that he happens to be the son of a duke, of an earl, or of a lord, but are brought out in the crucial test of active military duties. In the civil war, which made the United States a great military nation, the most famous names in that struggle, with the exception of a few West Pointers, were those of men who had risen from the ranks. And even these graduates of West Point were boys, selected from the middle class, recommended by their respective members of congress, and sent to that military academy, from which they graduated and entered the army. There is no other military service in the world, I venture to say, where the conditions in the respect I have mentioned, are such as exist in the British army. There is no other military service in which a man who receives a commission because of merit and bravery will not be accepted as a proper companion for those whose social standing is a little better than his own. The British army, in my opinion, should be made a fighting machine and not a social preserve. It should not be a place intended to afford positions to patricians, where they may lord it over those below them, but should be made a fighting machine composed of the best material obtainable, and if it were, the British army would be the best in the world. If anything would detract from this and render it less efficient, it is the kind of thing described in this despatch which I have just read. A few weeks ago, the death occurred of a 'ranker,' one of the bravest of the brave, a man who had acquired as enviable a military reputation as any man who ever belonged to the British army. I refer to the late General Sir Hector Macdonald. True there were charges made against him, but the charges were never tried and the law supposes him to be innocent until proved guilty. He had a brilliant military record, yet he was treated in a manner a little better than shameful, so far as the authorities were concerned. His treatment was due largely to the prejudices of the British aristocratic classes against men who have come from the ranks and who belonged to the middle classes and not to the patrician order. When we talk of imperial unity and hear arguments in favour of imperial defence, when we are asked to tax ourselves for that purpose, I would like to ask what influence will be exerted in favour of such a line of policy by the treatment given to Lieutenant Willows and, in numerous other instances, to colonials who have risen from the ranks? If the British people expect Canada to fall in with their views on imperial unity and to aid in the defence of the British empire, they will have to see that in the army fair play be made the rule, that merit be recognized as it should be, and that colonists should have their sons, who have gained promotion in that army through their merits, placed on the same social grade, as the best men in the British army, so far as blood is concerned. Our people will resent this outrage perpetrated on an independent colonial citizen by imperial officers because forsooth he is not a patrician. I have a right to protest as an individual, and I do so in the hope that my protest may be heeded, because a perpetuation of this kind of treatment to which I have referred, will have an effect most lamentable, so far as the relations of the colonials and the motherland are concerned.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). I did not know that my hon. friend intended bringing this matter up, or I perhaps would have been a little better prepared to say something with reference to the particular case to which he has referred. But I cannot help taking the view at the outset that my hon. friend has departed somewhat from the sound doctrine which he laid down in this House, not very long ago, namely, that we had perhaps enough to do in attending to our own business without interfering with that of the imperial parliament. It seems to me, if the exception which he took on that occasion was good, it would be very much stronger in the case which he has brought up to-day, which is purely a case of discipline within the British army itself, with which we can possibly have nothing to do. However, I may refer briefly to what my hon. friend has said. There is no doubt that in certain aristocratic regiments of the British army, there is a strong prejudice against what are called rankers, or men who rise from the ranks. I do not think, however, that that is at all general throughout the British army, nor do I believe that the prejudice is any stronger against the colonial ranker than any other. The hon. gentleman has intimated that Canadians have not received fair play in the British army. I do not think that that is a fair statement. Let us look at men in the British army, distinguished Canadians like Girouard who, in South Africa was placed in one of the most responsible positions in the army, being the right-hand man of the commander-in-chief for a long time during the concluding months of the war. I might mention many other Canadians, not only graduates of the Royal Military College, but men who have gone from the active militia of this country, and have been treated fairly in the British army, and from whom no complaint whatever has been heard. So, I think it is hardly fair to charge that there is a determination, a preconcerted determination, on the part of British officers or the British authorities to place Canadians who become officers of the British army at a disadvantage as compared with officers born in the British islands. I do not think that is the intention of the British authorities, and it seems to me only fair that I should make that statement here.

SUFFERERS FROM FIRES IN THE OTTAWA VALLEY.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). (Translation.) I wish to call the attention of the government to the destruction caused by fires in the valley of the Ottawa, and more particularly in the county of Labelle. The poor settlers who have been burnt out are now deprived of all the necessaries of life for themselves and their families. All has been destroyed, their dwellings, their barns, their agricultural implements. I do not mention the minor losses sustained by several other people, through the destruction of hedges or of live stock in the pastures.

I think I am not mistaken in saying that the government granted relief to the sufferers of Russell county, a few years ago, when great fires devastated that region. It is also to my knowledge that we voted large sums for the relief of the sufferers in the great Hull and Ottawa fire. I hope the government will deem it as reasonable, in the present instance, to grant assistance to the sufferers from the fires in the valley of the Ottawa.

These unfortunate settlers are in a most lamentable position. They have lost all their property at the very time when they were the least capable of facing such a contingency. Most of them settled on these new lands not more than four or five years ago, at the cost of great sacrifices. They opened up roads, cleared their lands, built houses for themselves ; but as yet they have not reaped any benefit. As a matter of fact their position is almost a desperate one. If the public do not extend relief, many of them will have to abandon their farms. It is stated (and truly, I think), that a contented settler is the best colonization agent that could be found. It is, to my mind, equally true to say that a disheartened settler is the worst enemy of colonization. The public are, therefore, interested in relieving at once the really grievous condition in which these settlers are, not only with a view to helping these poor people out of the calamity which has befallen them, but also with a view to preventing the exit of settlers which is threatening this region. To my mind it is the only means whereby settlers in these parts, after having sustained such great losses, may be induced to remain on their farms.

We are making constant sacrifices to promote and develop the settlement of the North-west Territories. I do not object to that ; but it seems to me it should not make us lose sight of the condition of the settlers in the older provinces. We are going to great expenditures with the object of attracting to our country immigrants from various European countries ; we are helping on foreign immigration. With still more reason should we endeavour to prevent our own people, those who have made sacrifices to open up new lands, from leaving the country, as this contingency would soon have its counterpart in another, just as sad, by discouraging those who would otherwise have been disposed to settle on, and clear, our new lands.

I trust, therefore, that the government will tender some assistance to the relief committees organized for the purpose of helping the sufferers from the fires in the Ottawa valley.

The PRIME MINISTER (The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier(. (Translation.) The question brought up by my hon. friend is surely one not only worthy of the consideration of this House, but appealing very strongly to its sympathy. However, I cannot give rise to expectations which circumstances would not permit the government to fulfil. I for one would most happily comply with such request ; but on the other hand, I do not wish to entertain hopes which it would be impossible for the government to satisfy. No doubt, these poor settlers, so grievously stricken, are worthy of help and protection. However, so many applications of a similar character would be forthcoming, were we to accept this one, that I fear we will find it extremely difficult to comply with the very legitimate wish expressed by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

'RAGGING' IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Would the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) be good enough to express his views on the subject brought up by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That has been amply answered by the Minister of Militia (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). The subject brought forward by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has no reference to this other matter.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understand that.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am satisfied with the answer given by my hon. friend the Minister of Militia.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I must say, for my own part, that I think we should not pass over the matter introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in such a way as to leave the impression outside of this House, and perhaps with the mother country, if the incident be noticed there at all, that this House, or the members of this House, or the Canadian people, look upon the system generally described as 'ragging' with anything like favour. I think it is quite proper that the Minister of Militia (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) should have made the remarks he did, so as to guard this House, and, I presume the members of the House generally, from any imputation of charging misconduct generally against the officers of the British service, or any class in the British islands. As I understand it 'ragging' is not a matter of regular discipline, but rather a system of punishment established by the mess or by the association in connection with the mess of a regiment, a sort of club constituted of the officers of the regiment, which undertakes to impose punishments for infraction of the arbitrary rules which it undertakes to enforce. And these punishments take an insulting and belittling form, as I have learned. Generally speaking, the great interest in this matter for us is the fact that there is a large—and likely to be larger—number of young and educated Canadians, very largely educated and trained at the expense of the Canadian people, who are passing into the British army, and taking their places there as commissioned officers. There is a provision, as I understand it, under which His Majesty gives a certain number of commissions regularly to the graduates of the college we maintain. So, I think, Canadians are interested in seeing to it that the men whom we send there, who, so far as mental ability, courage and professional qualifications are concerned, are we believe, at least the equals of the officers born in the British islands—we should see to it that these gentlemen are treated as gentlemen when they go into the British service; and, if they are not so treated, we should give the impression to the people of the British islands that we have no sympathy with the system of absurdities and nonsense that interferes with proper military discipline. Therefore, I think it would be unfortunate to allow this matter to pass as though the people of Canada had any sympathy with such absurdities. From what I have seen in the press and heard in conversation with soldiers from South Africa, where our sons fought side to side with the British regulars and under British officers, I have gained the impression that, though our men have come back with a highly developed respect for 'Tommy Atkins,' on the other hand, many of them have formed the opinion that the British officer is not the man he ought to be, if the British army is to continue to be what it has been. The British private has courage, and all the qualities that have given us our extraordinary military record. But, as I gather from the reports in the newspapers and from what I have been told by returned soldiers, too much is the officer given up to sport, too much is he attracted by social considerations, and too much is he influenced by the official rank. As citizens of Canada, and of what is unquestionably, next to the mother country, the greatest partner in the imperial federation which we hope to see accomplished, which we hope to see go on from one stage of accomplishment to another, we have a direct interest in the efficiency of the British army; and I think it is not out of place that we should, in a case of this kind, where a brother, a friend, a fellow countryman is affected, state that, so far as we are concerned, we look with great disfavour upon the system which is called 'ragging,' and are inclined to regard with a great deal of displeasure any instance in which its indignities are inflicted upon a Canadian.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is not my intention to take up much of the time of the House in dealing with this subject. I had expected an utterance from the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) upon this subject. He gave us a lecture the other day which, I think, has not very much pleased either himself or the general public. I must say I heartily endorse the views expressed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell). Now, 'ragging' in the service, as I understand it, is as it has been defined by the hon. member for Pictou. But there is more than that, there is this social ostracism, there is forcing the men to follow certain lines and ways. I want to tell this House that this is not by any means a colonial complaint, it is a complaint on the part of the best men in the British service, sons of the highest noblemen who have entered the service with a desire of becoming proficient in their profession, so that in case they should ever be called upon to do duty for their country they would be as well posted and as efficient as possible. But the social etiquette—I think that term will include the entire cause of complaint—is such that it prevents a man from devoting his attention to the service; and as a consequence, men who have gone into the service with the highest ambition to be a credit to their country have left the army broken hearted. Their high spirit would not stand the humiliating mode of social life that these officers have unfortunately to lead. Of course we know that these officers as a rule have very little to do. The best men are either lost to the service entirely, or they have to fall in with the current custom which is in vogue in the army.

The Minister of Militia has referred to the Canadians who have risen in the service. I am glad, Sir, that Canadians have risen in the service, but it is chiefly in the engineers. I want to point out that the custom of ragging cannot prevail in the engineers department because there is no regimental etiquette or mess among these. Those faults we find belong chiefly to the cavalry regiments. But we do not find in the engineers' corps anything like the mess service or the regimental esprit de corps which you find in others. I shall not enter into a detailed discussion of that matter to-day, but I want to point out that the complaint does not come from colonials alone, but from the best men in the British service.

There is another matter of much importance to us colonials. We send our officers over there for training. I do not know whether we always pick our best men; I presume it is rather difficult to get a good man to settle down into a military life in a country like Canada. But whether we pick the best men or not, it is unfortunate that Canadian officers—and I wish the Minister of Militia to make a note of that and examine into it, I do not want him to take my word for it—but I say it is unfortunate that Canadian officers who have gone into training in the imperial service, or who are in our permanent corps, seem as a rule to adapt themselves to the objectionable features of the regular service, and do not become sufficiently posted on important matters of their duty. I want to say that the customs of the British service undoubtedly reflect upon ours. These improper customs are not peculiar to the British service. We find the tyranny of the German service infinitely greater than that of the British. Why, only the other day, the press of the coun try was filled with a story where a young German officer meeting a non-commissioned officer and not considering himself properly saluted, shot the non-commissioned officer, and he has been upheld by the German Emperor himself, I understand. Why, Sir, any such condition of affairs in the British dominions would bring on a revolution inside of an hour, and rightly so. If the King of England even endorsed any such attitude on the part of the officers, there would be a republic proclaimed throughout the British dominions before twenty-four hours were over.

Mr. FRASER. Not as long as you and I were here.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am afraid I would not be able to cover my hon. friend. My proportions are not sufficiently broad a shelter to my hon. friend, either in advance or in retreat. Reference has been made to South Africa. It is a well-known fact—and I have shown, and I trust will show again. that I appreciate the British army as highly as any man should appreciate an army—but I want to point out this fact, that when Canadians went to South Africa, when colonials of all sorts went to South Africa, while Canadians did splendid service there, and while the Canadian soldier, I think, was the best man in Africa, still I must say that the Australian and the New Zealander, officer and man, was considered ahead of him, taking them altogether. I had a very good opportunity of knowing that the New Zealand officer and the Australian officer was better individually than the Canadian officer, taking them man for man. But the point I wish to make is this, that when the colonials went to South Africa it was never the intention that they should see fighting—we might as well understand that. It was a very short time before the colonials were raised and sent to South Africa, that the highest officers in the British service in the colonies, informed the Prime Minister of Canada and informed the British government that colonials in the imperial service would be a 'menace' to their armies in South Africa, that is the word, would be a 'menace' to British arms in South Africa. When the colonials reached South Africa they were regarded with considerable curiosity, looked at through various eye-glasses, and regarded as rather fit subjects to guard lines of communication, to be posted along wayside stations and that sort of business. The idea was utterly abhorrent to the imperial officers that these men could possibly take their places in the field in the line of battle alongside the British troops. I want to point out that it was not until after the memorable engagements of Stormberg, Magersfontein and Colenso, that colonial troops began to be recognized. It was not until after the strategy and tactics of the British officers had been proven to be absolutely at fault, when the whole British army in South Africa stood face to face with the most deplorable position that it has ever been in, it was only then and not till then that one solitary Canadian, one solitary Australian or New Zealander, was ever put into the fighting line.

However, I do not know that this is pertinent to the subject of ragging. I have very little respect for the colonial who would waste his time, a man who has arrived at mature years, who would waste his time, being a regular officer under existing conditions. I may say, and I say it frankly, that I have a son whom, in former days, it was my highest ambition to see in the field wearing the uniform of a British officer. But after my experience—I do not think I would be justified in saying that I would prefer to follow my son to the grave—but I will say that I would as soon see him in any other position as following the profession of a British officer. I am glad to say that he refused a position in the imperial army, one of the highest positions given to Canadians, the Royal Engineers in India; he refused the commision of his own accord. Had he asked my advice in the matter, I would have told him frankly to refuse it. As to the matter of preventing ragging, it is a matter of turning the whole life of the British officer inside out, it is a matter of giving to the middle class in Britain, men who have only their own honour and the honour of their country to uphold, giving them an opportunity to come to the front. To-day it is an open boast in Britain that since the days of commission-purchasing, other systems have arisen which make it just as impossible for a man coming from the middle classes in Britain to rise from the ranks to get a commission in the army or to obtain prominence in it, as it was before. They openly boast that the aristocracy of England will control the officers. With that I have no fault to find, but this condition must be established that the officer shall be trained as highly, shall be a gentleman in his demeanour and as proficient a soldier as it is possible for him to be. It will not do for him to be a Piccadilly dude ; he must make himself efficient, and if ever a colonial or man from the middle ranks in England should be granted a commission, such a person must be accorded the same rights as he himself enjoys. Otherwise, as far as the views of the great majority of people in Britain, as well as those of the colonies are concerned, the whole system of officers' promotion and training will have to be changed and a purely promotion system will have to be instituted. I may tell the House that I know that already magnificent reforms have been made in the army system by the people of Britain. A few already have been introduced into the cavalry corps which has been referred to by the hon. member for North Norfolk, since the close of the war, and I know that it is the determination of the British people and government, notwithstanding the Gibraltar of opposition, to rid the army entirely of the barnacles that have so long prevented its progress towards the perfection to which the British army officer should attain. I want to say here that there are thousands of the best officers in the service who will welcome with open arms the change such as has been outlined by the hon. member for North Norfolk, any change that will give them an opportunity of standing on their merits, of being able to make themselves proficient and letting them win their positions by merit and not by society influence. There is no class that I can call to mind at the present moment that will welcome a change like that more cordially than the great majority of British officers in the service to-day. I know this to be a fact. These officers have pointed out again and again the futility of their attempting to make themselves proficient under the present system. If the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence introduces his Bill into this House in relation to the service, I trust he will take note of the fact that there shall be no star-chamber reports by one officer concerning another, that no reports shall ever be made by a superior officer concerning another officer, but which the officer concerned will first see and will show that he has seen it by endorsing his name thereon. That is one of the great drawbacks in the imperial service to-day. More than that we should insist that the system of training shall be such that merit will count on every occasion. However, these matters are coming up at a later period of the session, and I shall not detain the House further on the present occasion.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

Mr. J. R. LAVELL (Leeds and Grenville). Mr. Speaker, before this matter, which has been introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), is entirely dropped, I would like to say a few words in regard to the position taken by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) and more especially as it has been fully endorsed by the right hon. leader of the House. In his opening remarks he seemed to chide the hon. member for North Norfolk for apparently busying himself with matters over which the imperial parliament had jurisdiction. I could not help thinking, in view of some of the votes given in this House, that this was a somewhat remarkable revolution in the opinions of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence. I presume the revolution has taken place in the minds of the right hon. leader of the government as well. Most certainly this House has by a previous example shown that it is quite willing on imperial questions, not at all so closely connected with Canada as this one, to express its opinion. In this matter I submit it is not a question of purely local concern to the British empire. We in Canada have chosen for some reason best known to ourselves, and I hope it will be shortly remedied, to very closely connect ourselves with the British empire and it is very needful for us to know something of the standards of honour and decency that prevail in the British army, and something of the influences through which the men have to pass who come to take charge of our own military affairs. We know that under our law, as well as under our rule, our commander in chief is one who has passed through the various stages of the British army and that in the Royal Military College, which we maintain at Kingston at considerable expense, English military officers have great prominence and that we offer as prizes to our best young men who graduate from that institution, commissions in the British army—where these disgraceful events have occurred. I think it is a good thing that the hon. member for North Norfolk brought this matter up, and it is of far greater importance that we should express our opinion on matters of this kind with which we are so closely connected, than that we should express our opinion on matters which come under the jurisdiction entirely of the British parliament. I hope that this matter will not be allowed to drop, but that it will come up again when the Militia Bill, which is apparently foreshadowed, is introduced.

INTERFERENCE OF CIVIL SERVANTS IN ELECTIONS.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the House, and particularly to the attention of the government, a matter that is creating a great deal of adverse criticism in the press of the province of Manitoba at the present time, and which is, in fact, becoming a public scandal owing to the extent to which it has taken place. I refer to the participation of Dominion civil servants in the elections about to take place in the province of Manitoba. I do not desire to go particularly into the question of dismissals, which has been very thoroughly threshed out in preceding sessions, but I merely desire to bring to the attention of the government the law that was laid down in 1896 when these discussions were up, by which the government intended to guide their future actions in reference to officials participating in active political warfare, and I will give some specific instances where that law has been grossly violated, which, I think, demand the immediate attention and action of the government. It has been laid down as a cardinal principle by the members of the cabinet, particularly in their speeches of 1896, that a person cannot be at the same time a civil servant and a political partisan, that he must do either one of two things—he must either cease to be an active partisan or cease to be a civil servant. Dismissals innumerable have taken place since this government have come into power, of officials whose political proclivities were Conservative, on the ground that they were active participants in political warfare, that they had served as active members of political committees, that they had been seen on political platforms, that they had participated in election discussions, that they had canvassed from house to house and that in other respects they were actively engaged in political warfare in the interest of the candidates of the party to which they belonged. Many of these dismissals have taken place without any investigation having been held, without allowing them any chance to defend themselves. Many of them have taken place upon the mere request of the Liberal representative in parliament, or of the defeated Liberal candidate, or of some political committee to whom had been entrusted the duty of demanding the head of the accused person. Now, Sir, with this established as a precedent on the part of the government, and particularly when we review the speeches of the hon. gentlemen during the session of 1896, and when we have no attempt to justify this action on their part, I think that with the instances I will lay before the government to-day, we may fairly claim that the government should be called upon to immediately put into execution this principle to which they gave their adherence and at once dismiss these officials who have violated the law as laid down by themselves. In the first place, I desire to refer to some remarks of the right hon. leader of the government when this question of dismissals was up during the session of 1896, and an expression by the right hon. gentleman should have far more importance attached to it because of the position which he occupies, than of any other hon. member of the House, or than of any other member of the cabinet. I may say that I largely agree with the views laid down by the Prime Minister when he discussed this question some years ago, and I trust that I am not asking too much when I ask him to put these words into action, with regard to the officials whose conduct it is my intention to bring before the House. The right hon. gentleman then said :

> Now, when we find an officer in the civil service, however good a servant he may have been, however faithfully he may have discharged his duties, but has been an active politician, who has taken part in the election offensively and actively, and before the eyes of the whole community, that official has become a scandal in the eyes of the community and I have no hesitation in saying that he cannot be trusted to render faithful service to this government. Where there is a government officer he may hold his opinions, I do not care what they are; they may be Liberal, or Conservative, I do not care ; he may go and vote, and I will not inquire how he voted—but when he is seen on the public platform, when he takes part in party processions and is actively and offensively prominent, that as regards party candidates, that man has taken his life in his hands, and no one can have a word to say if he is dismissed from the service.

These were the remarks of the right hon. gentleman on that occasion, so that if I can produce evidence to satisfy him of the partisanship of officials who are in the employ of his own government to-day, and who have even gone beyond the extent laid down in these declarations of the Prime Minister, I think that we may fairly claim that it is the bounden duty of the government to at once dismiss these officials because of offensive partsanship. The remarks which I have read contain the broad principle laid down by the Prime Minister upon which he intended to guide his future actions. That principle is; that an official of this government may hold whatever opinions he may desire, and the Prime Minister would not question that; he may exercise his franchise in a quiet manner and the Prime Minister will not interfere with him, but that official shall not go one step beyond that—in no manner, shape or form shall he actively engage in the public party warfare, or if he does he places his official position in jeopardy. I do not at all suppose that when the right hon. gentleman gave voice to that declaration, he meant it to apply to Conservative officials alone. I will not believe that the Prime Minister would be so unfair as to discriminate in such a manner. I will not believe that he would apply one rule to his political friends and a directly contrary one to his political opponents. It is true that Mr. J. D. Cameron, ex-Attorney General of the province of Manitoba, when he was a member of Mr. Greenway's administration and when evidence of offensive partisanship was brought to his attention in the House as to a person who, while being a provincial civil servant also occupied a seat in this House representing a Dominion constituency and who was actively engaged in both provincial and Dominion politics—Attorney General Cameron's reply was : Oh, but he is not offensive to us. That is Mr. Cameron's opinion of what constitutes statesmanship, and I leave it to the members of this House to form their own conclusions as to the political righteousness of a gentleman who would lay down such a most pernicious doctrine. I trust, Sir, that in the wider domain of Dominion politics there will not be found a member of the Dominion Cabinet so lost to all sense of fairness and political honesty, as to discriminate in such a manner and to treat his political opponents in a different way from his political friends. But, the right hon. the Prime Minister was not alone in his declarations in this particular direction. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) in the same debate voiced the following declaration :

> With members of the civil service eating the bread of both parties and deliberately interfering with the elections for the purpose of aiding one political party, if they so act they must be considered as taking their political lives in their hands and they must accept the consequence of their own acts, and the good sense of the people of the country and their natural sense of equal justice will not merely justify but demand at the hands of the government that they should make an example of them.

Therefore, the Minister of Trade and Commerce declares that if we have allowed an official who is found actively engaged in politics to occupy his position, that would not be following out the duty that the country would expect from the government. He tells us that the country demands the instant dismissal of such officials who are in his own words 'eating the bread of both political parties.'

I desire to bring to the attention of the government a few of these cases, but before doing so I might say that it may be argued by some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that such statements refer more particularly to those officials who are opposed to the government of the day, and that these officials run the risk of losing their position upon a change of government; meaning that these gentlemen would allow such conduct to take place on the part of their own friends while they were in power, but that these officials took the risk of losing their situations in the event of a change of government. There was not a single member of this Cabinet who on that occasion expressed himself so that any such interpretation could be put upon the words he used. To prove this it is only necessary to quote from the speech of Sir Louis Davies, then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who declared :

> But what I believe by common consent to be the understanding of both political parties is that a civil servant has an unquestionable right to vote for whom he likes without being called to account by anybody, or asked for whom he voted, and that in doing so he does not put in peril his position or right to promotion ; but when a civil servant goes beyond that, becomes one of a political committee to promote the political success of one political party, takes an active part in the canvass or otherwise acts offensively to his opponents in the political campaign by becoming a heeler or actively assisting in the election of members, in my humble opinion by doing so he takes his official life in his hands and renders himself liable to be dismissed. I do not think he could complain or anybody else could complain. That was the position laid down by Lord Dufferin in the celebrated speech made by him on civil service reform some years ago. That is the position I understood to have been taken by both parties in this House. That is the position I propose for one to adopt in the discharge of the duties with which I have been entrusted; and I would go one step further and say this : That if in conducting my campaign I find men holding Her Majesty's commission standing on the platform alongside of me and abusing myself and abusing my leader, and abusing the party to which I belong, calling us all kinds of names, calling upon the people to support them and denounce us ; when the power comes to me their commission will be revoked and the official life shall cease.

Sir Louis Davies continued still further to show that he did not mean the rule to apply to the members of one political party alone. He declared ('Hansard' 1896, page 1091) :

> I wish it to be clearly and distinctly understood what is my personal view of the matter. I do not think it is the right of an officer employed by the government to take an offensive part against the opposition of the day, any more than against the government of the day. I decline to acknowledge that it is the right of any public officer to canvass against either the government or opposition. I frankly and fully acknowledge the right of any public servant to hold what views he pleases and to vote for whom he pleases, and when he pleases, without being called to account. I decline to go one step further.

This shows that a member of the Cabinet of that time was firmly of the opinion that the rule which was laid down by the government in 1896 should be applied not alone to Conservative officials, but to Liberal officials as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the year 1899, there was a provincial election in the province of Manitoba. There was a gentleman named Mr. Martin Jerome, who then occupied the position of Homestead Inspector under this government. Mr. Jerome was nominated by the Liberals for the constituency of Carillon. I asked the Minister of the Interior at that time, if Mr. Jerome was an employee of the Interior Department; was the minister aware that he was nominated for the constituency of Carillon, and if so were Mr. Jerome's services going to be retained by this government. The Minister of the Interior replied as follows :

1. Mr. Martin Jerome is an employee of the Interior Department in the province of Manitoba as forest ranger.

2. Inquiry has elicted the fact that Mr. Jerome has been tendered but has not accepted a nomination for the legislature.

3. Should Mr. Jerome accept the nomination, his employment in his present capacity will cease.

Well, now what occurred ? Mr. Jerome took some holidays during the campaign. He dropped out of the service or did not perform his duties as forest ranger, while the campaign was on. The election took place, Mr. Jerome was elected and he has sat for the last four years as a member of the Manitoba legislature. But very shortly after the election, Mr. Jerome was reinstated in his position. If he was dismissed, his position was kept open for him. At any rate, he has been acting in a dual capacity during the past four years, discharging the duties of a member of the legislature, while at the same time acting as an official of this government, and drawing a salary of $100 a month and expenses. Can any hon. member of this House state that the hon. Minister of the Interior, in dealing in this manner with Mr. Jerome, has kept faith with the people of Canada, or has kept the promises he made to the representatives of the people in this parliament ? No hon. gentleman I think will defend the action of the Minister of the Interior in allowing Mr. Jerome to drop out of sight during the campaign, so far as his services as an official of the government were concerned, and immediately after the election reinstating him in his position. Has not that gentleman been quite as great a partisan during the four years he has sat in the legislature, making his violent tirades in the House and on the public platform, and acting in the most offensive manner towards his opponents, as he was during the campaign ; and yet, notwithstanding that promise made by the Minister of the Interior, he has been acting in the two capacities during the past four years. Having in view the action of the Minister of the Interior in that case, and also the fact that another forest ranger and homestead inspector, and some postmasters as well, have accepted nominations from the Liberal party for the ensuing election, I asked the acting Minister of the Interior, the hon. Postmaster General, on the 8th of April, 1903, the following questions :

1. Is Mr. S. Jonasson an employee of the Department of the Interior, in the province of Manitoba, as forest ranger, or homestead inspector ?

2. If so, is the government aware that he is the Liberal candidate for the constituency of Gimli, in the ensuing provincial elections ?

3. Will his services be continued by this government while he is engaged in party politics ?

To these the hon. Postmaster General replied as follows :

1. Yes.

2. The government has no information that Mr. Johnson is a candidate for Gimli.

3. If he is a candidate, he will not be continued as a salaried official of the department.

I must admit that when I received that answer, I was not satisfied ; it is rather indefinite in its character. If he is a candidate, he will not be continued as a salaried official of the department ; but how long ? As long as Mr. Jerome was ? Merely during the campaign, to be reinstated after he is defeated ? Or does it mean that as a salaried official of the department he will just drop out of sight, as Mr. Jerome did, or that his salary will cease during the campaign, and be continued again after the election is over ? We are suspicious of an answer like that, having in view the manner in which the hon. Minister of the Interior acted with reference to Mr. Jerome, who occupied a similar position. Here is Mr. Jonasson, a candidate for the legislature for Gimli, and at the same time a civil servant of this government, drawing a salary of $100 a month. Is this an infraction of the law as laid down by the Prime Minister in this House in 1896, when he declared that any man who was found on a political platform or taking part in a political discussion should cease to be an employee of this government ? I think there can be no doubt that Mr. Jonasson comes within the category of official partisans referred to by the Prime Minister.

Another gentleman who is a homestead inspector is Thomas Young, who is to-day the Liberal candidate for the constituency of Gilbert Plains. He did not attend the convention in person ; he had some sense of propriety in not going to the convention, occupying the position he did ; and I will do him the justice of saying that at first he refused to accept the nomination on the ground of being an employee of this government. But since then, pressure has been brought to bear upon him by his Liberal friends, with the result that he writes the following letter :

Grandview, April 22, 1903.

To Dr. Geo. D. Shortreed, President Liberal Asociation.

Dear sir,—After duly considering the nomination unanimously tendered me by the Liberals of the electoral division of Gilbert Plains, I am pleased to consider the wishes of my friends by accepting the same and standing for election. Since I hold an official position under the Dominion government which compels me for the present to refrain from active campaigning I look to my friends and the opponents of the present government to do active service in my behalf. In due time when my resignation has been handed in, I will then earnestly co-operate with you for the overthrow of the present administration. I trust that since you have shown such confidence in me you will leave nothing undone to ensure my election as your representative.

Yours sincerly,
THOS YOUNG.

So that if the acting Minister of the Interior desired any evidence of the fact that these gentlemen were candidates, all he had to do was to pick up the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' the organ of the Liberal party in the province of Manitoba, and he would have seen there for the last six weeks a list of the candidates of the party, and figuring conspicuously among them Mr. Young and Mr. Jonasson. It may be that Mr. Young will resign his position during the campaign ; but if so, no doubt the position will be kept open for him until after the election, just as in the case of Mr. Jerome. But fancy Mr. Young attending to his duties during the election, while abstaining from canvassing. This letter was the outcome of the pressure brought to bear upon him by his political friends. He tries to convey the impression that he is not going to engage in canvassing while he holds his office. He hopes to draw his salary until nomination day, and to have the place kept open for him until after the election, in case he should be defeated. No reply that we shall have to-day from the acting Minister of the Interior will be satisfactory to this House, even if we are told that these gentlemen will be notified that they cannot be candidates while they are officers of the government, unless we have the further promise that the public service will not be allowed to suffer by these offices not being filled during the campaign, and that the positions will not be kept open until after the election in order to allow these same gentlemen to drop back into them in return for the sacrifices they are making for their party. I do not think the answer will be satisfactory to the House unless we are told that these gentlemen have to cease at once discharging their duties as officials of this government, or else refuse the nominations of these conventions. This letter was written on April 22nd ; three weeks have elapsed, and still Mr. Young has not been notified to quit his position as an official of this government. When these facts are brought to the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior, he cannot plead ignorance of them. I charge that these gentlemen have been availing themselves of all the prestige conferred upon them by occupying these positions, and have used that fact as a lever to secure votes for themselves and the party to which they belong. The premier of Manitoba, in a public speech delivered in Winnipeg a couple of weeks ago, used the following language in reference to this question :

I want to draw your attention too, to another hypocritical plank of their platform. They say in clause 10, that they declare in favour of the establishment and maintenance of an efficient and non-partisan civil service. Gentlemen, I agree with that expression of principle. I concur in it and endorse that sentiment, but how do their acts contrast with their professions ? Why in this very day's 'Free Press' you will find published a list of Liberal candidates who are civil servants, who are paid officials of the Dominion government, and who are using their positions and their power to coerce and influence electors against the Roblin government. Only to-day I received information of a homestead inspector, a Dominion government official who is using his official position, whose time is paid for with your money and mine, whose travelling expenses even are paid by the Dominion government, and who is canvassing against the Roblin government amongst farmers who have not taken out their patents, endeavouring by the abuse of his official position to coerce and induce them to vote for the Liberal candidates. Sir, I say that a more scandalous and outrageous abuse of the civil service has never been heard of and cannot exist and cannot be conceived, and I go further and I call upon the independent members of the Dominion parliament, whose servants these men are, to refuse to pass the estimates for the Department of the Interior, to refuse to allow one dollar of public money to be voted for that department, until such men as Jonasson and Jerome and Young and others whom I might name who are receiving large salaries from the federal government, either resign their positions as officials of the Dominion government, or resign as candidates in the Liberal interests in this province.

Here is a strong expression from the premier of the province that the officials of this government are abusing their positions in the interests of the Liberal party. No more glaring instances of partisanship could be brought forward. There have been upwards of 150 dismissals by this government, largely in the Interior and Post Office Departments in Manitoba and Northwest Territories alone. All of these were published in the Conservative organ, in the province of Manitoba, a couple of years ago. And many of these dismissals were made without any charges of partisanship or charges of any kind having been preferred. And in nine out of ten of these cases in which charges of partisanship were made, there was no investigation, and no chance of defence. In my constituency a postmaster was dismissed because he had acted as returning officer in the election of 1896. Yet here we have a postmaster, Mr. Ira Stratton, in the town of Stonewall, who is at the same time the editor of a Liberal newspaper and secretary of the Liberal Association. If an official, who acted as returning officer in 1896, had to be dismissed on the ground of active partisanship, surely, this man, Mr. Ira Stratton is far more deserving of like treatment. But Mr. Stratton is not the only gentleman who, if the government were consistent, would lose his position. I am not one to take exception to every country postmaster, who draws a few dollars a year, being debarred from activity in political matters, although many such postmasters have been dismissed on this charge since this government came into power. But let me give the case of a gentleman who holds a rather important postion and is nevertheless an active partisan. In the city of Brandon, where the former postmaster was dismissed on the ground of active partisanship, his successor was present at the convention recently held which selected a Liberal candidate for that constituency. But he can rest perfectly secure because he happens to be a Liberal. Another postmaster named Lawrie, in the town of Morris, acted as presiding officer at the Liberal convention which selected an opponent to the attorney-general of Manitoba. Mr. J. W. Yeo, who is the Dominion lands sub-agent, was also a delegate to a Liberal convention in the province of Manitoba for the selection of a candidate. There are a dozen other postmasters who have been delegates to Liberal conventions. Mr. Charles Tomlin, immigration official, was also a delegate to a Liberal convention. I do not think that the hon. Postmaster General, who is the acting Minister of the Interior, should hesitate about dealing out severe treatment to these officials, if he proposes to stand by the platform of the Liberal party as formulated in Winnipeg. There was a most curious condition of affairs in that city three or four weeks ago. We had the executive committee, or what is called the 'inner circle' of Liberals, in that province in convention. A certain number of representatives were appointed to formulate a platform on which the Liberal party would appeal to the country, and what do you think was one of the most important planks in that platform ? It was plank ten :

> We declare in favour of the establishment and maintenance of an efficient and non-partisan civil service.

And in that inner circle to which I have referred, there were upwards of a dozen civil servants of this government. Could you conceive anything more hypocritical ? Could you imagine a greater travesty on politcal honesty ? Just imagine these officials of the Dominion government formulating a political platform and declaring themselves in favour of a non-partisan civil service. Further, we had a speech at Brandon by Mr. Greenway, the leader of the Liberal party. In the course of his speech, he was asked this question : 'Are you in favour of a non-partisan civil service ?' He replied : 'Any man who occupies a position in the service of the government, which gives him a livelihood, ought not to meddle in politics at all.' Surely, in view of these declarations of policy, the hon. minister need not hesitate about dismissing these gentlemen or giving them the option either to resign their positions in the service or vacate their positions as nominees of those conventions. I do not know whether the acting Minister of the Interior wants to assume the responsibility or not of doing this. He may possibly think that in so doing he would be trespassing on the preserves of his absent colleague (Hon. Mr. Sifton). But it seems to me that that absent colleague ought to be here attending to the business of parliament. Session after session we find him absenting himself and allowing his place in this House to be taken by somebody else. He has been dubbed by his political admirers 'The Young Napoleon,' but I fail to see any exhibition of Napoleonic capacity or courage when he acts in this manner.

I also wish to point out that there are other officials of this government actively engaged in political warfare. Take Mr. Alfred Martin, who is employed selecting the swamp lands which are to be handed over to the province of Manitoba. Yet, although he is in the employ of this government and paid at the rate of $10 per day, he goes about attending Liberal conventions, proposing Liberal candidates and making partisan speeches. Then there is Mr. Cockburn, who was candidate for North Winnipeg, and who is reported in the press as being the postmaster for the north branch Main street post office in North Winnipeg. I would draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to this case.

I have laid these cases, before the Postmaster General, and am not going to enter upon the broad question of dismissals. I have merely specified a few of the more flagrant cases—in Manitoba, concerning which, there is at present, a great deal of adverse criticism, and which demand immediate action on the part of the government. I hardly think that the hon. minister will take the ground that because these men took part in local elections, they have not laid themselves open to action on the part of this government. A partisan is a partisan, and it makes no difference whether he be a partisan in Dominion or in provincial politics. And a man who takes the platform and is offensive to his political opponents, I care not whether he is engaged in Dominion or provincial politics, and is at the same time a civil servant, should be forced to vacate one position or the other. And, in saying this, I desire to state also that I shall not be satisfied with a mere promise on the part of the government which will allow these gentlemen to drop out of their positions and have those positions kept open for them to be taken by them after the elections are over. This is what happened in the constituency of Marquette, in the Dominion elections of 1900. Mr. John W. Thompson was homestead inspector. The Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) attended the convention that selected this official of his department as the candidate of his party to oppose myself. It is true that Mr. Thompson resigned his position, but that position was kept open for him, and when he had been buried under an avalanche of votes—I think the majority against him was 420—he was reinstated, and for over two years has been discharging the duties of that position. That is exactly what we expect will be the case with the officials whose cases are brought forward to-day; and I do not think there is any hon. gentleman in the House who will defend such an action on the part of the government. Therefore, I desire to move the following amendment :

That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :—

The Prime Minister speaking in this House on the 1st day of September, A.D. 1896, with respect to political partisanship by officers of the government expressed himself as follows :

'Now, when we find an officer in the civil service, however good a servant he may have been, however faithfully he may have discharged his duties, but who has been an active politician, who has taken part in the election offensively and actively, and before the eyes of the whole community, that official has become a scandal in the eyes of the community, and I have no hesitation in saying that he cannot be trusted to render faithful service to this government. Where there is a government officer he may hold his opinions, I do not care what they are ; they may be Liberal or Conservative, I do not care ; he may go and vote, and I will not inquire how he voted—but when he is seen on the public platform, when he takes part in party processions and is actively and offensively prominent as regards party candidates, that man has taken his life in his hands, and no one can have a word to say if he is dismissed from the service.'

The Minister of Trade and Commerce on the same day used the following language in speaking on the same subject :—

'With members of the civil service eating the bread of both parties and deliberately interfering with the elections for the purpose of aiding one political party, if they so act they must be considered as taking their political lives in their hands and they must accept the consequences of their own acts, and the good sense of the people of the country and their natural sense of equal justice will not merely justify but demand at the hands of the government that they should make an example of them.'

That other members of the government during that session and in subsequent sessions expressed the same views.

That the government acting upon the principles and rules so laid down has since dismissed a very large number of officers on the ground of alleged political partisanship.

That an application of the principles and rules so laid down for the guidance of public officials would result in the dismissal of those officers of the government who have become 'a scandal in the eyes of the community' by taking an active offensive and partisan part in the election campaign now being carried on in the province of Manitoba, and who while 'eating the bread of both parties' are 'deliberately interfering in elections for the purpose of aiding one political party.'

This House regrets that the government has not seen fit to deal with such officials in accordance with the declarations of principle so made and so often acted upon.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette).

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, before this question is decided, I desire, as one of the members from Manitoba to say a few words in reference to it. In any reply I may make to the remarks of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), I shall not condone the offence of a civil servant taking an active part in politics. But when the hon. gentleman commences to lecture this House, and to declare the action of civil servants in Manitoba a public scandal, he is the last man who should speak in this way, and he comes from the province which is the last province from which charges against this government should come. For, if there is one province in confederation where the civil servants have been open partisans, where they have been active election agents, it is the province of Manitoba. Before proceeding to deal with the question generally, I may deal with the case of the officials he specifically mentioned. The first is the case of Mr. Martin Jerome, a homestead inspector and an efficient officer. It is true, he has been a member of the local House for the last four years. But it is not fair to speak of Mr. Jerome as being in active politics. He is not to-day a likely candidate for the local House in that province, but is entirely out of politics so far as that is concerned. Before I go further, I may say that there is precedent for Mr. Jerome's action. It is a well known fact that many members of the local legislatures of Canada have been men receiving salaries from the Dominion government. During the time when Sir Adolphe Caron was Postmaster General, it is a well known fact, many of the postmasters were members of the local legislatures of their respective provinces. But we do not need to go to other provinces for precedent in this matter. Take the present provincial secretary and Minister of Public Works of the province of Manitoba, Hon. D. H. McFadden. We find that he, while a member of the local House, for many years was employed by the Dominion government as veterinary inspector at Emerson, from 1884 to 1897. During that time he successfully contested provincial seats in 1892 and 1896. This was during the term of office in the Dominion of hon. gentlemen opposite. There is also the case of Mr. Baldwinson, who for the last four years has been representative of the constituency of Gimli in the local House. That gentleman was employed by the late government as Icelandic immigration commissioner at Winnipeg, from 1883 to 1889. On March 25th, 1889, his salary was increased from $730 to $830, showing that they actually rewarded him by an increase of salary for having become a member of the local house. Now it is not necessary for me to go further. I could mention half a dozen gentlemen who were earning salaries from this government while they were still members of the local house during the Conservative regime. Wm. Wagner and Wm. Crawford, for eight or ten years swamp-land commissioner under this government were members of the local house and received good salaries. Not only that, but they had not even the decency to resign their positions as land commissioners while parliament was in session. Take Hugh John Macdonald's case. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite will say that he should be a man above reproach, that he should not violate the civil service rule, yet we find that that gentleman was premier and railway commissioner for many months, from January 11, 1899, up to October, in 1900. When he was nominated as Conservative candidate in Brandon he did not resign his portfolio, he did not give up the emoluments of office under the local government, he continued until almost within twenty-four hours of the time he was officially nominated for the Dominion House. My hon. friend alludes to Mr. Jonasson and Mr. Young. Their resignations will be in the hands of the Dominion government before they will dare to accept officially any nomination at the hands of the Liberal party. I am in a position to know that one of the gentlemen he mentions as a local government candidate, although his name did come up before the nominating convention some time ago. I happen to know that he does not intend to run. Surely it would be unfair to ask that man to refrain from attending public meetings or taking an active part in politics until the day of nomination.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Who is that gentleman he refers to ?

Mr. McCREARY. I do not know that I have any right to give away secrets of that kind. The hon. gentleman threw out the wrong hook. Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to postmasters taking an active part in politics, I think the contention of the hon. gentleman is ridiculous. He did not go so far to-day as his brief in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' allowed him to go. They say that postmasters who draw $12 a year should not take an active part in politics, that census enumerators who two years ago received $7 or $8 for service rendered should be prevented from taking an active part in politics. I submit that their contention is ridiculous. I presume that when a man is in the civil service on the permanent list and is in receipt of a large salary he should not take an active part in politics. I have been a civil servant myself for three years and a half and I faithfully observed that rule, and no charge was ever made against me. I submit that that rule should be carried out to-day; but when you ask that a man who is receiving a small salary of $7 or $8 or $12 a year as postmaster to refrain from taking an active part in provincial politics, why the idea is ridiculous. The hon. gentleman mentioned such names as Stratton, of Stonewall; Cockburn, of North Winnipeg; Laurie, of Morris, and others, men who receive actually no emolument whatever from the Dominion government. It is true their names stand there as holders of offices, but they pay out in expenses more than the Post Office Department allows them, because they have stores in these places and they are the most convenient places for the public to go to get their mail.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I were disposed to enter into an argument on this matter, I think I could furnish some interesting reading to the members of the House, because if there is any province in which the civil service law has been abused it is the province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman has said that there were about 150 dismissals in Manitoba and the North-west Territories by this government since they came into power. But would you believe it, Sir, that the Conservative government of the province of Manitoba, since coming into power on the 11th day of January, 1900, have made 700 dismissals in that province ? I have before me a list of them, it is two years old, two years since I obtained it, but if I were to read that list it would afford interesting information to this House. On the 11th of January, Hugh John Macdonald was sworn in as minister, and on the 22nd of January the mill commenced to grind on the poor Grits. On that day we find the guillotine was applied to Mr. Howrie, game warden, and Mr. A. Taylor was appointed in his place. There was a lull in the proceedings for a few days and on the 7th of February we find the mill began to grind again, and on that day there were some ten or twelve dismissals of men against whom there was no cause of complaint. I have here some of them. Mr. W. E. Perdue, 'guardian ad litem,' was dismissed. He was a gentleman of considerable influence, a prominent barrister of Winnipeg, and he was dismissed. D. W. McKercher, another prominent barrister, was dismissed as official administrator, also S. R. Wright, D. W. McKercher and R. M. Matheson, official administrators, all dismissed without any cause ; Mr. G. Thorsteinsson, police magistrate of Gimli, was dismissed on that day; the bailiff of the county court, A. M. Livingstone, was dismissed. D. Philip, chief clerk of the provincial secretary and Queen's printer, was dismissed on that day. J. W. Sifton, father of the Minister of the Interior, was dismissed from the Public Works Department and on the same day J. A. McDonnell was dismissed from the position of engineer. I have column after column of names of gentlemen who were dismissed within a few months after the advent of the Conservative government. There was Mr. James Thompson, clerk of the timber office, Winnipeg. There was Mr. S. A. D. Bertrand, who was official assignee for the province, dismissed by that government on February 7, and F. J. Nixon, a strong partisan, was appointed in his place. So indignant were the public over that dismissal and appointment that the wholesale men and the board of trade called a meeting of both sides of politics and threw the appointment back into the face of the premier and said they would give no estates to be handled by any such assignee as that. When the hon. gentleman talks about the civil service of Manitoba he talks to one who knows something about it. Now, coming down to the town of Nepawa, we find on the same day, February 7, less than thirty days after they took power, that Mr. James Thompson was dismissed and R. C. Ennis was put in his place. We find that T. A. Cuddy was dismissed as clerk of the county court of Minnedosa and J. F. Boyd was put in his place. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows about that.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I deny it.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. J. M. Robinson, burser of the Brandon asylum, was dismissed and E. Hughes put in his place. E. C. Conklin, clerk of the legislative assembly, was dismissed and A. H. Corelli was put in his place. Mr. Charles Smith was dismissed as shorthand reporter. Mr. N. Todd was dismissed as bailiff of the county court of St. Francios Xavier, and J. Bourke was put in his place. In fact from the 7th of February to six months afterwards I find that there were dismissed some ninety or one hundred civil servants in the province of Manitoba, some four hundred and forty-one justices of the peace, and over one hundred game guardians. In that one little province alone, six or seven hundred officers were dismissed during six months. The axe was ground up and it was put to work. They have a very peculiar way of dismissing civil servants up there. I do not blame Mr. Hugh John Macdonald so much. Any one who knows the inside reasons for his resigning from the position of prime minister of Manitoba, knows why he got out. There is what we call the Maple Leaf Conservative Club. It is an institution composed of nearly 3,000 members, and I know something of its methods, because I am able to keep pretty closely in touch with it. It has ramifications all through the province and it has an inner circle of nine in Winnipeg, which is a kind of Clan-na-Gael society. This inner circle meets in secret conclave and decides what heads shall be cut off the following day. It makes a list, sends that list up to the premier, and if the premier does not promptly cut off these heads and appoint other men in their places, he gets notice that the secret conclave is going to go back on him. I happen to know that that occurred in at least two cases which came upder my notice. One case is that of Dr. Patterson. Dr. Patterson was a most capable official under the former Manitoba government. He was a great personal friend of Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, being his next door neighbour for many years, and I happen to know that the day before Dr. Patterson was dismissed he was told by Mr. Macdonald himself that he was all right, that he had taken no active part in politics except to cast his vote and that his position would not be disturbed. That night, when the secret conclave met, that position was required for another partisan of the Maple Leaf Clan-na-Gael society, and down went the axe. I can mention another case, that of Arni Freeman, a poor Icelandic boy who came out to this country about twenty-five years ago, and who, although a cripple, was able to earn sufficient money to educate himself. He was employed in the license department and although he was taking no active part in politics and had been assured that he would not be disturbed in his position, he was dismissed. At four o'clock, before he quitted his office on a certain day, he got a letter from Mr. Macdonald in answer to one that he had written, stating that he would not be disturbed in his position, but that night the Clan-na-Gael met in secret conclave, Freeman's head was required and next morning at eleven o'clock he received a letter from Mr. Macdonald saying that he was dismissed. All that correspondence can be brought to the attention of the House if necessary. It ill becomes the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) to stand up and talk about civil servants in the province of Manitoba. The right hon. leader of the government knows very well that I personally went to him to tell him of the position of affairs that existed in Manitoba, and how men were being deposed from their positions to make room for needy partisans of the present government of Manitoba. Men who had come into Manitoba in 1870 with Wolseley and who held small positions bringing them $200 or $300 a year with which to maintain themselves in their old age, were dismissed from their places. These men were dismissed without cause. I only trust that this government will take the matter up and deal with these officials as they should deal with them, if they looked at it from a purely party spirit. I want to pay this measure of credit to the right hon. leader of the government, that I went to his private office and complained bitterly of the treatment that some of these men had received at the hands of the present government of Manitoba. His answer was: They are making a mistake, they are violating the principles of constitutional government, but, because they do wrong, would you ask me to do likewise ? I said : No, sir. Probably if I had gone a little farther there might have been a difference, but I did not choose to do so. I claim that the Roblin government have, during the short time which they have been in office, done more to disorganize the civil service of Manitoba than any government in any province since confederation. I do not intend to deal very fully with this matter because there may be some other western members who know a good deal about the civil service of the west. I can remember the time in Manitoba and the North-west Territories when a man's life was not safe if he dared to say a word against the Conservative party. I can remember that during the election of 1887 the number of civil servants imported into the city of Winnipeg to vote was far more than the majority that the member elected got at that time, and there are cases in the Territories much worse than that. The hon. gentleman has also mentioned certain civil servants and for his edification I will just call his attention to a few officers under Mr. Roblin's administration who are taking an active part in provincial elections. Take the case of R. G. O'Malley, who formerly was a member of the local house. He is what is called the noxious weed inspector. During the election of 1900, when I had the honour of being a candidate in the constituency of Selkirk, Mr. O'Malley was the official organizer against me in that constituency. He followed me all over. There was a little snow and ice on the ground. I met him in the parish of St. Laurent. When I reached there O'Malley was there and the first man that I had to speak against at the meeting was R. G. O'Malley, provincial noxious weed inspector. I said: Mr. O'Malley are you finding any noxious weeds here or noxious Grits, while going around here on skates or snowshoes? With the aid of a priest in the parish they thought they were going to defeat me, but I was able for the first time in the history of the parish to get a Liberal majority of eighteen. We also had this gentleman just a very few days ago, Mr. Speaker, getting up in a public meeting in Assiniboia and making a strong political speech; in fact, from the time of the man's appointment down to the present he has been doing nothing but acting as the organizer of the local government. That is his business. But, there are others. There is Mr. Joseph Burke, if you please, a so-called immigration agent of the Manitoba government. Mr. Burke, accidentally, so they put it, slipped up to the parish of St. Claude ostensibly to look after some immigrants to be transferred to another portion of the province, and we have him on political platforms making strong political speeches, in fact the speech of the day. There is Mr. Patenaude, another gentleman who has been appointed an immigration agent, is actually the organizer in Assiniboia for Mr. Caron. Then there is J. J. Golden, another gentleman appointed as an immigrant agent, and who was sent to Kansas for a short time, but who was brought back and is now an active politician in Winnipeg. There is not a single immigration official that they have appointed, and they have appointed probably twenty-five or thirty, who is not appointed absolutely for the purpose of doing canvassing work in Manitoba during the elections. We have another case, that of the police magistrate of Winnipeg—Mr. Dawson. Mr. Dawson was a most capable official. He has been a lawyer of high standing and he held a high place in the estimation of every barrister of Winnipeg. He is a man who had never taken an active part in politics, but this inner circle of nine wanted his place for a member of the association, Mr. Baker. Off went Mr. Dawson's head, and Mr. Baker was appointed to take his place on the bench. But, matters became a little too hot for Mr. Roblin. A petition, signed by the citizens of Winnipeg, was sent to Mr. Roblin and things have become so hot that he would be glad to get Mr. Baker out of it, were it not for the pressure of the Clan-na-Gael that I speak of.

This Clan-na-Gael; this inner circle of the Maple Leaf Conservatives of Winnipeg, is rather peculiarly constituted. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will wonder how I got possession of this information, but I did. A man goes in there and he is given a ticket, with his number on it; nothing else but the number. He is asked to subscribe to a declaration extending over two sheets of typewritten foolscap, and he promises that he will, during the time he belongs to that institution, do all in his power to oust any Liberal from any job, whether it is in the employ of the municipality or the government. He declares that he will do all in his power, if employed as subordinate, to oust the foreman, if the foreman is a Liberal; and that he will do all in his power to bring party politics into municipal, provincial or Dominion affairs or anything else. That is the state of thing we have to fight against in the city of Winnipeg. That is the institution which has Mr. Roblin by the neck, and forces him to make some of these dismissals and some of these appointments I have spoken of. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) say that this state of affairs is a public scandal in the province of Manitoba? What does he think now of the officials in the employment of his own government and not of the Dominion government?

Mr. DAVIS. High binders.

Mr. McCREARY. High binders of the worst kind. I could, Mr. Speaker, at considerable length give the names of Liberal officials who have been dismissed by the Manitoba Conservative government, but I think the House is in possession of sufficient facts to warrant it in saying that if there is a mistake made by one of the officials in this government—and I believe that some officials have gone too far in the province of Manitoba—still it ill-becomes the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche), who comes from the province of Manitoba, to bring these matters up here, when such a condition of affairs exists within the home of his own political party in his own province.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I have listened attentively to the joint speech of the members for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and Saskatchewan (Mr.

Davis), and they have said nothing particularly which prevents me from expecting that they will both vote for this amendment. Everything they have said shows that there is a great grievance in this country, and more particularly in Manitoba than any other part of the Dominion, which requires the remedy proposed by this motion. Should the government decide to reject the amendment moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Roche), it will be another instance of their breaking one of the pledges they gave to this country. And, Sir, they will break that pledge apparently without any expectation on the part of their followers that it would not be broken. These two gentlemen, whose joint speech we have listened to from the other side, gave us no opinion as to whether they would vote for or against the motion. The member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) simply confined himself to giving instances of the dismissal of public servants for offensive partisanship by the present government of Manitoba, but let me point out that my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) does not say that it is right for a Conservative administration to dismiss Liberal officials, or that a Liberal administration should dismiss Conservative officials. What the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Roche) has said, and what he puts in his motion is, that the interference of civil service appointees in political issues is a scandal upon the country. My hon. friend (Mr. Roche) quoted the language of the Prime Minister and the language of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in support of his motion, and in condemnation of the very thing that he condemns. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has taken good care to say that these two ministers were right in stating that such a thing is a scandal, but he intimates nevertheless that this scandal will be allowed to continue in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not say that at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is the inference we must draw from his argument.

Mr. McCREARY. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. The argument that was made by the member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) showed clearly that this government, in 1896, laid down a platform upon this question, containing the rule of conduct for officials therein described, and that this platform has been deliberately broken by the government for three years past. We are here to-day asking that this government should enforce the rule laid down in 1896, or at least explain to the House why they do not enforce it. The right hon. the Prime Minister told us in 1896 :

> When we find an officer in the civil service, however good a servant he may have been, however faithfully he may have discharged his duties, but who has been an active politician, who has taken part in the election offensively and actively, and before the eyes of the whole community that official has become a scandal in the eyes of the community.

Now, the country supposes that the Prime Minister meant what he then said, and we are calling attention to the fact that the rule which he announced has not been carried out, and we ask that a remedy shall be applied. It is charged here, and the member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), who knows more about the details than I do, does not deny the facts in regard to these three gentlemen who are named in the motion. Let us see what their conduct has been individually. Mr. Martin Jerome was employed by the Department of the Interior, and the Minister of the Interior told us in this House that if he accepted the Liberal nomination his employment under this government would cease. Well, Mr. Jerome did accept the nomination and he remained for three years a member of the local legislature, and his employment under the federal government did not cease. If a member of parliament or of the legislature is not an active politician, I do not know who is. I do not know that we can find fault with any one saying that the members elected to this House are active politicians, and so with the members of the legislatures, and if the Prime Minister did not intend his description of active politicians to apply to members supporting a political party in parliament, I presume that he would have said so. I think we are entitled to consider a member of the legislature as being an active politician. This Mr. Jerome remained an active politician and a member of the legislature for three years, and also an employee of this government. Is it possible that the government did not know it, or is it that the government simply trusted to luck that no one would draw their attention to it, or find fault with them for ignoring the policy laid down by the Premier on the 1st of September, 1896. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) says that this cannot be called a scandal because Mr. Jerome is now going out, and is about ceasing to be an active politician. Well, what about the scandal during the three years he was a member of the legislature ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) has told us that he has made representations to the government with regard to some other men, but I wonder why he did not have a conversation with the Prime Minister in regard to Mr. Jerome, in which he would tell him that Mr. Jerome was a flagrant example of the disregard of the policy which the government promised to pursue in this matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) says that the Premier told him when he complained of the conduct of the Manitoba government : If they are doing so they are doing wrong; they are false to the principle of constitutional government, and you would not ask me to do the same thing. Why did not the member for Selkirk say to the Premier : What about the constitutional question, when you have laid down a policy in this connection which you are violating deliberately ?

It strikes me that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) who, we know, is not a forgetful man, who is in no sense an unwise man, who is well able to defend anything he has in mind, and who is, I hope, an honourable man; should at once have taken the position that the honour of the province of Manitoba was at stake, and should have said to the Prime Minister: It is not enough to say that the Conservative government did what was wrong; that is no reason why a Liberal government should do this thing; we have had this public official in the legislature for three years, and what are you going to do about that ? The hon. member does not say that he even mentioned this matter to the Premier. Therefore we must think that he did not consider it a violation of principle on the part of the government to lay down the platform they did in 1896, immediately on coming to power, and to allow abuses of this kind to go on contrary to that principle. I wish now for a moment to answer the reference made by the hon. member for Selkirk to the much respected Hugh John Macdonald. The hon. member said that the name of Hugh John Macdonald was above reproach. I want to ask him the reason for that. It is because when Hugh John Macdonald made pledges he kept them ; when he laid down a policy, he carried it out. We have an evidence of that in dealing with the prohibition question in Manitoba. If I know anything of human nature, if there is one reason more than another why the people of Manitoba on both sides of politics hold the name of Hugh John Macdonald above reproach, it is because when he made a pledge, he carried out that pledge on attaining power. I do not think that backhanded compliment to this government ought to have come from one of their own supporters. I would have thought it would have been left for one of us on this side of the House. It is true, we on this side of the House have dealt with matters of this kind so many times that the hon. member for Selkirk may have thought that our power had been used up in pointing out so many broken pledges and that we would not again bring up this question of the government breaking their pledges, the good province of Manitoba may have thought it well to have one of the Liberal members take it up. They need not be afraid, however, because the members of the opposition, in their duty to the country, will endeavour to have some of these evils remedied. Now, we have had quoted to us the language of the right hon. the Premier, on this question; we have also had quoted the language of his left hand partner, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who spoke as follows in regard to members of the civil service taking part in elections :

> With those examples before us, yea, with members of the civil service eating the bread of both parties, and deliberately interfering in elections for the purpose of aiding one political party, if they so act they must be considered as taking their political lives in their hands, and they must accept the consequences of their own acts, and the good sense of the people of the country and their natural sense of equal justice will not merely justify, but demand at the hands of the government that they should make an example of them.

We have also had the language of Sir Louis Davies, then a member of the cabinet, quoted by the hon. member for Marquette in the same sense. The hon. gentleman then a member of this government went the length of saying that the principle should be applied to men who interfere against the opposition as well as to men who interfere against the government—that it should be applied to all officials who interfered in any way in political matters. I do not think there can be any question that the principle should be applied to men of both political parties; and I do not expect that the government will take the strong hint given to them by the hon. member for Selkirk, and assert that a Conservative official who interferes in elections does wrong, while the Liberal official who interferes does not do wrong. I want to draw the attention of the government, in the interest of the country, to what is going to be the result if they treat this matter as a huge joke, or pass it over lightly, under the impression that no one is going to pay much attention to it. I ask them to consider if they are not doing much greater harm to the rising generation of this country by laying down these principles and pledges and then refusing to notice any violations of them than they would do by raising a duty higher than they think they should, or putting a duty lower than they think they should. It is not only tariffs or readjusting constituencies, or whether a railway commission should be appointed or not, or how much money should be spent on public works, that this House has to concern itself with. But here is a government just fresh from the country laying down the principles that ought to govern in these matters; and here is an hon. gentleman, the member for Marquette, who knows what he is talking about, who has never been known to misjudge anything stated in this House, who is noted for carefulness in his statements, giving three specific instances of absolute violations of these principles which were thus laid down by this government. Now, we have not yet heard from the government on the subject. I would have thought that immediately on the hon. member for Marquette resuming his seat, some member of the government would have paid, not the hon. member for Marquette but the country whom they serve, the courtesy of stating what they thought about it. They seem to think their followers from Manitoba should answer the hon. member for Marquette; but I wish to tell them that this matter is not confined to the province of Manitoba. I ask them to pay the province of Ontario the courtesy of explaining what this platform meant, of saying wherein we have misconstrued it, of showing wherein the three cases mentioned by the hon. member for Marquette are not applicable to the platform as laid down by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The government are not obliged to do so; but I warn them that if they think the province of Ontario is not interested in this matter, because it only happened in Manitoba, or is going to treat it lightly, they are greatly mistaken, and they ought to put themselves right before the province and before the whole Dominion. There are words in this resolution which do not appear to me to be capable of any two meanings; but I know that this government has often been able to show that things did not mean what the country thought they did. I appeal to the government to let us know distinctly and clearly what those words do mean, and wherein the cases cited by the hon. member for Marquette are not applicable. If they are applicable, let the government not be satisfied with saying that some Conservative government did worse at some other time; because that is not the question. I am not admitting or denying that they did. We are dealing with the present administration. Although the hon. member for Selkirk said that Conservative governments in the past had done the same thing or allowed it to be done. I want to point out this great moral and national difference between the two governments in that respect; that the Conservative government never made a pledge on the subject and broke it, while this government did. It does not matter, for the purpose of this argument, or his motion, whether the Conservative government did wrong or not, but it does matter whether the government of this country keeps its pledges on not. The difference between the two parties is this: No Conservative government has ever been shown to have laid down within the four walls, of this House any speech or policy or pledge like this one made by this government. No Conservative government has ever been known to break its pledges, and then, when called to task, try to laugh the charges away, regardless to what the people may think. But just the contrary is the course followed by this Liberal government. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that it does not lie in the mouths of Conservative members to raise this question, but that answer will not go down to the people. It lies in the mouths of Conservative members to do their duty. It matters not whether the Conservative party did wrong eight or ten years ago—and I am not admitting that they did—that is not the question at issue now. We are dealing with matters of the present. We are dealing with the present administration and calling it to account for its failure to carry out its pledges. These pledges and principles are well laid down in the speeches of the right hon. the First Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Sir Louis Davies, and the cases cited of Thompson, Young, Jonassen and Jerome, prove conclusively what little respect this government has for the pledges on which it secured public support, and until it can be shown that these cases are not in direct violation of the platform thus laid down by the Liberal party, I shall support the amendment of my hon. friend from Marquette.

Mr. W. SCOTT (West Assiniboia). The position taken by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is a most convenient one for his party. He has laid down the doctrine that the Conservative party is perfectly free to do wrong, because it never pledged itself to do right.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend has pronounced an eulogium very well deserved on the whole, of Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, of Manitoba, and then proceeded to say that the Conservative party had never made a pledge which it did not keep. This will be news to this House. Why, before the last local election in Manitoba there was given to the people on the authority of Mr. Hugh John Macdonald a platform consisting of nineteen planks, and one of those planks bound the Conservative party to keep politics out of the administration of justice. Yet Mr. Hugh John Macdonald had only been in power a few weeks when he cut the official heads off 450 justices of the peace, and replaced them by 450 Tories. On this side we have no objection to make to the advertisement of Mr. Macdonald as a gentleman who always keeps his word, but whenever that picture is held out to us, it brings to our minds those celebrated nineteen planks in the Conservative platform of December, 1899, and the fact that not one of these planks was ever adhered to. My hon. friend referred to the question of prohibition, which reminds us that although Mr. Hugh John Macdonald promised that if elected he would give the province a prohibitory law, that promise remains still unfulfilled. He also promised that the number of cabinet ministers would be reduced from five to three, yet still we have five. He further pledged himself and his party to reduce the indemnity of the members of the legislature from $500 to $300, yet the very next session they were paid an indemnity of $600. I happen to have the misfortune of living in a part of the country which is not yet a province, but only a territory, and possibly I do not quite understand the force of the argument made by hon. gentlemen opposite regarding civil servants. I have not been favoured either with a copy of the amendment which has been put into your hands, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. member for Marquette, but if I understand his complaint, it is this, that the three gentlemen whom he named, and who are Dominion government officials, have been candidates for the Manitoba legislature. I would ask my hon. friend if that is correct ?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I think that there were more than three, but I mentioned three, Young, Jonasson and Watson, postmaster of South Brandon, though I am not sure whether I mentioned Mr. Watson or not. But I did not mention one-third of those I could have.

Mr. SCOTT. It may be because I live in a territory and not in a province that I fail to see the reason of the complaint. In the North-west we have not yet introduced federal politics into local affairs. As I understand it, the pledge given by leaders of the Liberal party had reference to the interference of government officials in federal politics and had nothing to do with local politics. At all events, that is my understanding of it, and so far as I have heard no attempt has been made to prove interference in federal politics against these gentlemen. I am disposed to question whether it is proper for this House to lay down the principle that Dominion officials have not the right to exercise their franchise, and even take the platform in provincial elections, provided that it does not interfere with their duties as officers of this government.

I would not be disposed to take the position that these servants of the Dominion government have not a perfect right to take part in provincial elections. I know very well—and I think the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) will bear me out—that some of the postmasters of the North-west Territories are actually members of the local legislature. I can cite one instance—the member of the local legislature for the constituency of Whitewood, who was the postmaster at that point, and, I think, is yet, and, at the present time, is deputy speaker of the local legislature of the North-west Territories. However, I would not care to go very far in laying down a position on this subject. I merely wish to say, in support of what has been so very well and forcibly said by my hon. friend from Selkirk, that the Conservatives in the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories are the very last people in the world who have any call or any right to make complaints in this matter. Anybody who knows the conditions which prevailed in the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories for the years from the opening of that country up to 1896, knows very well the tyranny practiced by the government through its officials in that country. Until 1896, it was never possible for a Liberal to be elected in that country, except on one occasion. And one fact referred to by the hon. member for Marquette, the fact that his opponent in the last election had been a Dominion official, Mr. Thompson, a homestead inspector, proved, as well as anything could prove, the difference in the conditions which prevail now from those which prevailed prior to that time. For, up to 1896, while the Conservative government was in power in the Dominion, if an official had taken a nomination on behalf of the Conservative party there is no human power that could have been used by the Liberal party that would have resulted in the defeat of that Conservative candidate. My hon. friend from Marquette also complained of the difference between the treatment that is meted out by this government to officials who happen to be Liberals and that meted out to officials who happen to be Conservatives. Well, I have some knowledge, so far as the territories are concerned at all events, of the conduct of government affairs, and, so far as I have been able to see, there is no difference in the treatment meted out by the various ministers to the officials, whether those officials are Conservatives or Liberals. But I may say that, prior to the Liberal government coming into power in 1896, the lists of civil servants in Manitoba and the North-west Territories might have been searched from top to bottom without discovering a sign of a single Liberal in that service. My hon. friend referred to a long list of officials who, he alleged, had been dismissed by this government since 1896. I suppose he had the old Winnipeg 'Telegram' list as a basis for his statement. I recollect very well that some time ago the Winnipeg 'Telegram' gave what purported to be a full list of the officials dismissed by this government in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Probably the hon. gentleman was correct when he placed the number at one hundred and fifty. But I recollect also, very distinctly that when I went over the list, I found the names of men who had died while in office, as well as the names of others who had left the service of their own volition, either to go into other lines of business or, perhaps, to leave the part of the country where they had been residing. When I analysed the list, to find the basis for these charges of wholesale dismissal of officials, I found that there was only about 25 per cent of the 'Telegram's' list who had actually been dismissed, and in all of those cases concerning which I had personal information, there was very good reason for dismissal. In most cases there had been charges formally or informally made and an investigation held, which, revealed facts fully justifying the dismissal. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) who last spoke, laid down a doctrine which, if the proposal which my hon. friend from Marquette asks the House to accept, were accepted, would be most convenient for the Conservative party in Manitoba. The result would be that this government would immediately put chains on every Liberal official in the country, preventing them from taking any part in politics, from exerting any influence or, probably, even from casting their votes, while at the same time, every local Conservative official appointed by the Roblin government would be free to go up and down the country, as my hon. friend from Selkirk says they have been doing, exercising all possible influence in the elections soon to be held.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have one other matter which is not distinctly germane to this matter which I wish to mention. It relates to the discussion which took place here last night. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), in referring to a gentleman who made one of the statutory declarations which I read before the House, Mr. Trant, of Regina, stated that that gentleman was a civil servant, this being stated to give special weight to charges against him. I may say that Mr. Trant is not a civil servant in the ordinary sense of the term. A most disagreeable reference was made by my hon. friend from Peel to Mr. Trant, and I wish to occupy two minutes in making a statement in reference to that gentleman, as I intended to do last night, but was prevented. Mr. Trant has a reputation, and, like the rest of us, no doubt, is anxious to uphold that reputation. Mr. Trant spends part of his time in performing the duties of secretary to the Lieutenant Governor in Regina. When the party of the hon. leader of the opposition visited Regina, Mr. Trant, who represents the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg—

Mr. INGRAM. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) state the point of order ?

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) has no right to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) is referring to a discussion which took place last night, and which is finished, and it is contrary to the rule of the House to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. SCOTT. I accept the correction, Mr. Speaker, and I will make no further reference to yesterday's discussion. As I understand it, I have a right to discuss any other subject at this time. As I was saying, Mr. Trant is the representative of the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg, and was detailed by the 'Free Press' to accompany the party of the leader of the opposition, as reporter on a part of their tour. He is a journalist with a reputation. For years he was editor of leading papers in India.

Mr. INGRAM. Order. The hon. gentleman is referring to a debate that took place last night, he is referring to a trip of certain gentlemen of this House to the North-west.

Mr. McCREARY. He is referring to the newspaper man in his capacity as a civil servant.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is speaking about a certain reporter, a Mr. Trant, who enjoyed the privileges of that party which went west.

Mr. SCOTT. I am referring to the representative in Regina of the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' and who last fall accompanied the party of the leader of the opposition. He reported their meetings for the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' and accepted the hospitality of these gentlemen, and was invited into their private car.

Mr. POPE. No, not invited—put himself. I deny that he was invited.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. William Trant was in their private car, and afterwards an hon. gentleman has had the lack of decency to get up in this House and charge that gentleman, who had partaken of their hospitality, with foisting himself upon them. It will do them no political good in the North-west Territories, where the people have proper views as to what is honourable and decent conduct towards a guest. I say it is a disgrace. The hon. member for Peel last night was asked to modify his statement and he refused. Other members of the party who are now sitting in this House——

Mr. INGRAM. I rise to a point of order. Does the hon. gentleman really want this whole matter to be threshed out again ?

Mr. BLAIN. I shall expect an opportunity to reply to this hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman for Assiniboia is referring to a previous debate. I call his attention to the rule that it is never permitted to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. SCOTT. I may explain to you that in discussing this question regarding the civil service—

Mr. SPEAKER. But the hon. gentleman was referring to something which happened last night. That is irregular. He may discuss the question before the Chair, but he must not refer to the debate which took place last night.

Mr. SCOTT. I was really referring to something that occurred last fall in connection with the visit to the west of the party led by the leader of the opposition and Mr. William Trant—I think possibly, with these various interruptions, I have stated about all that I intended to say with regard to Mr. Trant. He is an English gentleman, a journalist with a reputation, who was for several years editor of newspapers in India, and had been connected for several years with some of the best papers in England. In this country he is representative at Regina of the 'Winnipeg Free Press.' I may say too that he is an author of sufficient reputation to be quoted in the Encyclopedia Britannica upon the subject of trades unions. I think, under all the circumstances—

Mr. POPE. The less said the better.

Mr. SCOTT. Probably I have said sufficient. I was going to say that under all the circumstances, any reflections which have been cast upon that gentleman who is not in this House, who has made no offensive statement against any person in this House—I think these reflections might well be withdrawn or modified. I appeal to my hon. friends who were on that trip not to put themselves in the position of casting reflections upon a gentleman who partook of their hospitality.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I may have an opportunity of making a remark in reply to the hon. gentleman. First, let me say to the hon. member for West Assiniboia that the Mr. Trant referred to did not accept, on invitation, any hospitality at the hands of the leader of the opposition on their trip in the west.

Mr. SPEAKER. Before the hon. gentleman goes any further, I would like to know how this matter is germane to the motion which is now before the Chair. I want to know what the case of Mr. Trant has to do with the question before the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I will comply with any rule of the House, but I think it is only fair to myself to say that the hon. gentleman, when the Deputy Speaker was in the Chair, made a statement reflecting upon my character in this House, which I think I should have an opportunity to refute. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you cannot deny me that privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it would be regular now to discuss that question. I have just called the hon. member for Assiniboia to order because I thought he was referring to a previous debate, the same debate to which the hon. gentleman wishes to allude to now. I must ask him not to refer to that at all.

Mr. BLAIN. What I wish to say is entirely with reference to something that was said on the floor of the House to-day, I make no reference to any former debate. I wish to say that the member for Assiniboia has stated that a person by the name of Trant, a newspaper representative from the west, an employee of the government, accepted the hospitality of the leader of the opposition and his party when they were on their western tour last fall. I say in reply to the hon. gentleman that that statement is incorrect. Mr. Trant never received an invitation to accept the hospitality of the leader of the opposition or of any member of his party, but Mr. Trant crowded himself in upon the car, and from one station to another he came in and occupied a prominent seat in the car, and after several days of this intrusion, some member of the party was compelled to invite him to get out of the car. That is the kind of hospitality the hon. gentleman referred to. Permit me to say one word further; that if I wanted to get some instructions in decency and good behaviour I am sure I would not apply to the hon. member for West Assiniboia, for at no time in the history of this parliament—and I appeal to hon. gentlemen who have occupied seats in this House for many years—has an hon. gentleman been permitted to produce affidavits against the character of another hon. gentleman, without first giving notice——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is still referring to a previous debate.

Mr. BLAIN. I have not mentioned it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand this matter was brought up last night, and there is no occasion for discussing it just now. I would invite the hon. member to confine himself to the question before the Chair.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

IMPERIAL AGENCY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 71) to incorporate the Imperial Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). It has been suggested to change the name to the Imperial Trust Company.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I think some of the clauses will require to be amended if the name is changed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the Bill be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. The question of the title received very considerable attention there. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) desires that the name be changed I think it should go back to the committee.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have agreed to a change being made in the title of the Bill. We made a change in the committee, and before the Bill was through there was only about a quarter of it left.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was informed that the title is to be changed to the Imperial Trust Company.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have no objection.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But I have an objection, because I am informed that there is another company of the same name.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. This question was ventilated before the Committee on Banking and Commerce the other day, and strong exception was taken to the title 'Imperial' being assumed by this company by a representative of the Imperial Bank here, acting under instructions from the general manager at Toronto. The name was changed by the committee from the Imperial Company to the Imperial Agency. The objection is still greater to this latter change because it is said that in small towns where there is an agency of the Imperial Bank the agency is often referred to as the Imperial Agency and there would be a conflict. It would, perhaps, be better to accept the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and refer the Bill back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and in the meantime we will see that the bank does not raise any further objection. I understand that the Canadian Bankers' Association is entering a strong protest against the use of the proposed name. That is the information I have from Toronto.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I made my suggestion under a misapprehension. When I entered the House I was informed that it was proposed to call this the Imperial Trust Company, whereupon I said that if a proposal of that kind were made, the Bill should be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence, informs me that that is a mistake, that the proposal is the one which the committee has already approved of; that is to call it the Imperial Agency. I do not wish to go back on any understanding come to in the committee. If it were proposed to call it the Imperial Trust Company that would be a new proposal and I would ask it to go back to the committee, but the objection to the title 'Imperial Agency' was considered in the committee and the committee have dealt with it. I do not know whether the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) was present or not, but a gentleman appeared on behalf of the Imperial Bank and objected, but the view adopted by the committee was that the word 'Imperial' was rather a broad name that any company might properly take unless there were such words associated with it as would go to create a similarity of title. The objections of the Imperial Bank were considered, and the committee took the view that by changing the name to the Imperial Agency the objections were removed.

Mr. INGRAM. A representative of the Imperial Bank was before the committee the other day and stated his objection, and the committee by a large majority ruled otherwise. I have no doubt the committee will rule the same way again.

Bill reported.

Mr. BICKERDIKE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I think it is better to leave the Bill over for its third reading until another sitting.

Motion (Mr. Bickerdike) agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

Mr. BICKERDIKE moved :

That the Bill be passed and that the title of the Bill be changed to the Imperial Agency.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 165) to incorporate the Algonquin Lumber and Power Company.—Mr. Gould.

Bill (No. 168) to incorporate the Chicoutimi and North Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

SUPPLY—INTERFERENCE OF CIVIL SERVANTS IN ELECTIONS.

House resumed consideration of the motion of (Hon. Mr. Fielding) that the House again go into Committee of Supply and the motion of Mr. Roche (Marquette) in amendment thereto.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker, the question that has engaged a portion of the time of the House this afternoon has been so fully, and I think, so fairly laid before the House that my mission here is a somewhat light one, and if I am to reply to the criticisms of my hon. friends from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) my task will not be a difficult one in that respect either. I think the House will agree with me that they have not dealt with the question and that the matters which they have brought to the attention of the House will not make the position of the Liberal party any easier or place it in any better position before the country than it was before they addressed the House. Now, the question is this : The Liberal party has laid down, as has been shown by the quotations which have been read from the speeches of the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his lieutenants, the platform that we supposed was to be for the guidance of the party and of all government officials in the country in future. Yet, here we have, in the face of that, no less than, I understand, seven gentlemen, employees of the Dominion government, who have accepted nominations as Liberal candidates in the approaching elections in the province of Manitoba.

The only excuse made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) is the old excuse which we hear from the other side of the House repeatedly; that tu quoque argument which is now so well known: Well, when your party was in power you did as bad or worse than we are doing. That is the answer from the Liberal benches to the majority of the charges against this government that we bring to the attention of the country. We do not forget what the Liberals promised before they got into power; we know the pledges they made to the public; we know the criticisms they levelled against the Conservative government, and we know how they pledged themselves that when they got into power they would redress the alleged grievances against which they protested. But is it not a strange thing to see those gentlemen to-day, now that they have attained power, perpetuating in an intensified form that which they protested against when in opposition. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) as well as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) told us that Mr. Jerome had not been a partisan. In order to show that these gentlemen are entirely mistaken about Mr. Jerome's character in that regard, I refer them to a letter which he wrote to the 'Free Press' on the 30th September last. I shall not weary the House by reading that letter, but suffice it to say that Mr. Jerome takes up a column of the 'Free Press' in criticising severely the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) who was then a minister of the Liberal government, but who was reported at the time to be not in accord with his colleagues. This would show that Mr. Jerome is so intensely partisan that he is not satisfied with attacking the Conservatives, but that he is prepared to have a fling at even a Liberal minister whose Liberalism is not up to Mr. Jerome's standard. Permit me, Sir, to give a few instances which will explain to hon. gentlemen who do not, perhaps, understand the workings of things in the west, how these officials can exercise considerable power over the voters at the time of an election. These three gentlemen: Mr. Young, Mr. Jonasson and Mr. Jerome, in the discharge of their duties, visit those who have homesteads or who get permission from the government to cut timber. They are in a position to hold forth the possibility of what they can do and what they may do in their official capacity if those people do not vote in the interest of the party they desire them to. An official in that position may, for a year or more, prevent a man from getting his homestead to which he is entitled, by saying that the settler had not quite complied with all the conditions of the Dominion Lands Act. The timber agent might, if he were so disposed, wield a great influence over the electorate, because he might say to a settler: you have cut a few poles more than you are entitled to, and under the power I possess I can punish you for so doing. I have a letter here from the premier of Manitoba, who says that an Icelandic settler came to him making a complaint that he had attended a public meeting which was addressed by Mr. Jonasson, and that the whole trend of that timber agent's speech was to the effect, that in the position he occupied he had the power to confer benefits on those of the electors who did his bidding. At that meeting it is alleged that Mr. Jonasson refused to permit any person to reply on behalf of the Conservative government of Manitoba. These few instances go to show the influence that such officials may use on the electors in that country. In addition to that, these men can go around campaigning and using the government money which is allowed them for expenses in doing so. The hon. gentleman from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and from the West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) have adduced as a sort of rebuttal evidence, the allegation that when the Conservatives were in power they did as bad or worse than the Liberals are now doing, and if the government is going to rely on such an argument as that, here and now is the place for them to say so. But what took place from 1896, when the Conservative party went out of power in the Dominion, until 1900, when the Manitoba Conservative government was returned. I have here a list of 150 Conservative employees who were dismissed by the present government of the Dominion during the period I have referred to, and before the Manitoba Conservative government came into power. And, Sir, if the Manitoba Conservatives, as has been alleged by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary), did retaliate, it was, what to some extent might have been expected in view of the dismissal of these 150 Conservative officials, the majority of whom were able and efficient officers, against whom not the slightest charge could be made. I am sure that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) will not say that Mr. H. H. Smith, who was Land Commissioner for many years was not well qualified to hold his office, and was a man against whom no just charge could be made.

Mr. McCREARY. He was not dismissed.

Mr. BOYD. What happened to him?

Mr. McCREARY. His office was abolished and he was superannuated.

Mr. BOYD. Yes, that was perhaps an easy way of doing it, but at all events Mr. Smith was put out of office, and the civil service list shows that Mr. Turriff occupies Mr. Smith's place, and is Land Commissioner to-day. Then there was Mr. Daniel Smith, who was a most efficient officer. He had charge of the public works in the west, and he was an active and energetic man, but he was removed from his position in the prime of life.

Mr. PUTTEE. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) does not pretend that that man was discharged without cause.

Mr. BOYD. What was the cause ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The cause was exposed in the police court.

Mr. BOYD. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) will have an opportunity of stating it to the House. He can get up and do so if he has any charge to make. Was there any charge against Mr. Hargrave, the ex-postmaster, who is still an able and an active man ? Could there be any charge against the postmaster of Brandon, who was dismissed for partisanship, and in whose place was appointed Mr. Campbell, ex-president of the Liberal Association, and one of the most active political workers in the place. Sir, these men were removed from office by this Liberal government notwithstanding the statement of the Prime Minister and his lieutenants on the floor of this House. In view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman declared that men such as these should not be dismissed from the public service, is it not an extraordinary thing that 150 Conservative officials were dismissed from office by this government between 1896 and 1899. When the hon. member for Selkirk speaks of 400 justices of the peace being removed, let me tell him that when the Greenway government came to office the first act of their Attorney General was to pass an Order in Council cancelling all the commissions to all the justices of the peace in Manitoba, so that you could not get a Conservative justice of the peace in the whole province to make a declaration before for election purposes or any other purposes. I do not know what the Conservative party did when they came to power, but that is what the Greenway government did. If this House, to-night, is going to vote down the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Roche), I suppose the country will know what to expect, and for our part, we will know what conduct is to be allowed on the part of government officials in the future. I think, Sir, I have made it perfectly clear that the question that is now before the House is one which is agitating the public mind in Manitoba, and which is the cause of a great deal of public discussion in the press and on the platform. I think, Sir, it would be well for the government to tell us what action they are going to take on this matter before they call upon us to vote the salaries of some of these gentlemen. If the government say these gentlemen may take any part they wish in political affairs, so long as they do not interfere in Dominion issues, it is well for us to know that, because in a short time we shall be called upon to vote the salaries of some of them, and I do not think the minister in charge of the departments in which they are employed will find fault with us if we ask the government to state distinctly what position they propose these men to occupy whether they are to be politicians in the full sense of the word, or servants of the people, who act independently of both parties. That is what we wish to know, Mr. Speaker, and before this debate is ended, I expect that we shall have the position of the government on this question clearly defined.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman made a statement to the effect that there were 150 dismissals by this government between 1896 and 1898. I would like the hon. gentleman to make a list of those dismissals, and place it on the Table of the House.

Mr. BOYD. I have the list here, and I shall be glad to put it on the Table or put it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. DAVIS. Send it over here.

Mr. BOYD. Shall they go in 'Hansard,' or shall I read them ? I do not wish to weary the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is against the rules for anything not said in the House to go in 'Hansard.'

Mr. McCREARY. Would the hon. gentleman not be allowed to let us see the list ?

Mr. BOYD. I will put it in 'Hansard,' and then my hon. friend will see it. I will ask the hon. gentleman to place his 700 in 'Hansard' at the same time. I believe these names were published in the Manitoba 'Telegram' in 1898 or 1899. In going to the library to get a copy of that paper, I found that there was no bound copy of it there. The only Manitoba papers in the library in bound form are the 'Tribune' and the 'Free Press.' For that reason I was obliged to ask the editor of the Manitoba 'Telegram' to tell me where I could find a list, or to send me a list of the names published at that time ; and here is the list : H. H. Smith——

The PRIME MINISTER. What was his position ?

Mr. BOYD. The positions are not given. The next is W. Hargrave——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is that Mr. Hargrave, the late postmaster in Winnipeg ? Does the hon. gentleman say that he was dismissed ?

Mr. BOYD. That is the understanding.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will correct the hon. gentleman then. Mr. Hargrave was superannuated as an old employee and a man advanced in years ; and my impression is, though in this I may be in error, that he was a Liberal appointee. I am responsible for his retirement, and I retired him purely on the merits of the case, because of his advanced years and the necessities of the service, and on a superannuation allowance. I hope the rest of the hon. gentleman's list is more accurate than that.

Mr. BOYD. Might I ask the hon. gentleman, did he request to be superannuated?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, he did not request it. He was superannuated because the public interest demanded it, and because he was a man advanced in years. The hon. gentleman is contending that this man was dismissed for political reasons. Not only could that not have been the case, but he has a son in the service, whom I have had great pleasure in promoting to a very prominent and responsible position in the Post Office Department, and he fills that position now. So I ask the hon. gentleman to drop that case—it is not a case of political partisanship.

Mr. BOYD. I do not think I will drop any of them. The hon. gentleman may explain any of them to the House that he pleases. As regards the ex-postmaster, if the hon. gentleman met him to-day, he might find it difficult to keep up with him, old and decrepid as he says he is. But that is a nice, easy way of getting rid of a man—abolishing one office in Winnipeg and creating another one with a better salary at Ottawa.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was between 70 and 80 years of age.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Hargrave was not a Conservative; he was a Liberal.

Mr. BOYD (reading)—Daniel Smith, K. Grayburn, J. M. Sutherland, Miss F. Sutherland, Jos. Turenne, Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Livingstone, W. F. Jones, M. O. R. Jarvis, H. Carstens, C. P. Cloutier, R. Dolbear, Miss Turnock, Miss Duff, W. R. Rowan, Jas. Reid, J. F. Tennant, Thos. Shannon, J. J. Arsenault, A. J. Baker, W. S. Cottingham, W. H. Hearn, Robt. Gunn, A. Hetherington, D. Hogg, A. M. Burgess, R. L. Alexander, P. M. Barker, G. J. Cox, J. McD. Gordon, V. H. Hesson, H. S. MacDonnell, Major Montgomery, A. T. Abbey, Wm. Laurie, and J. H. Paul, were dismissed from the Regina registery office; and J. T. Stemshorn, John Dobbin, Miss Pope, Mr. Sherwood, and John Rogers, from the Regina land office. J. R. C. Honeyman, James McAra, A. P. VanKoughnet, J. A. Mitchell, William Lambert, and J. Anderson, were dismissed from the Indian Department, Regina district. Dr. Willoughby was dismissed from the Regina industrial school, and Dr. Cotton, as medical officer of the Regina jail. G. W. Almon, from a clerkship in the land office at Edmonton, and E. Brokorski, from a land agency at Battleford. Leo Schaunus, fishery officer, Fort Alexander; D. Devlin, fishery officer, Lake Manitoba; A. McKay, Indian agent, Berens river; R. La. T. Tupper, inspector of fisheries, Selkirk; A. Muckle, Indian agent, St. Peter's reserve; R. Taylor, hatchery, Selkirk; W. Cleland, hatchery, Selkirk; D. Miller, postmaster, East Selkirk; C. H. West, manager dredge, Selkirk; W. Taylor, dredge, Selkirk; T. R. Vardon, postmaster, McGregor; W. Thornton, dredge, Selkirk; W. Tillson, Selkirk, dredge; S. Davis, Selkirk, dredge; J. Cavanagh, postmaster, Brandon; P. Daly, immigration officer; T. Ferguson, land office, Calagry; A. F. Holmes, immigration officer, C. F. Herbert, immigration officer, Calgary; W. L. Orde, land office, Brandon; J. D. Graveline, postmaster, Letellier; P. Parent, postmaster, St. Jean Baptiste; A. LaSalle, postmaster, St. Pierre; G. T. Landry, postmaster, St. Adolphe; J. Craig, postmaster, Strathclair; G. Stone, postmaster, Rapid City; W. J. Bourchier, land office, Calgary; J. McGuire, Indian Department, C, Phipps, land office, Regina; H. Reed, Indian Department, G. Lindsay, postmaster, Griswold; B. Hogg, immigration sheds, Brandon; Dr. Spencer, jail surgeon, Brandon; W. H. Todd, Indian industrial school; W. H. Hiam, Dominion lands, Brandon; Mr. Daniels, postmaster, Moosomin; C. W. Peterson, mines office, Calgary; H. S. Sherwood, land department, Westaskiwin; J. R. Thompson, homestead inspector, Calgary; S. A. Stewart, park superintendent, Banff; H. C. Ridley, land department, Kamloops; H. Green, commissioner office, A. Cates, postmaster, Napinka; A. J. Baker, lands office, Brandon; G. A. Barnham, assistant post office inspector, M. Fee, lands office, Winnipeg; James Bruce, postmaster, Carman; S. Shaw, postmaster, J. J. Miller, postmaster, Parkin; J. Burke, postmaster, Brookside; J. Carnduff, postmaster, Carnduff; J. B. Mercier, postmaster, Battleford; P. G. Williams, Indian agent, Battleford; J. Carney, agent's assistant, Onion Lake; J. K. Dremain, meteorological officer, Medicine Hat; I. E. Parker, farm instructor, Fort Qu'Appelle; J. Wilson, farming instructor, Battleford; J. C. DeGear, farming instructor, Battleford; F. A. D. Bourke, farming instructor, Battleford; J. Carney, warehouse man, J. Looby, fishery inspector, Edmonton; Dr. Orton, Indian medical superintendent, J. R. Hall, Interior Department, Mrs. Guilmette, lands office, Winnipeg; J. Forcier, quarantine officer, Emerson; J. Secord, Crown prosecutor, A. L. Lunan, governor, Regina jail; S. A. Clark, inspector public works, Mr. Armstrong, tailor, North-west Mounted Police; W. J. Cox, homestead inspector, J. Thompson, homestead inspector, L. W. Herchermer, commissioner, North-west Mounted Police; Mr. Gistorne, Qu'Appelle; J. Ross, Indian agent, Saddle Lake; C. H. Harper, clerk, Saddle Lake; W. D. Beck, Crown prosecutor, W. White, courthouse, Moosejaw; G. S. Davidson, fisheries inspector, Qu'Appelle; J. McKee, Regina jail; N. Campbell, Indian Department, Regina; B. L. Baldwinson, Dominion lands, M. Evoy, jail service, J. Bradner, jail service, R. S. Park, homestead inspector, Whitewood; M. Entemear, postmaster, Kroneau; J. B. Hawkes, postmaster, Balgonie; C. Gass, postmaster, Moosejaw; W. Wayne, farm instructor, Battleford; J. Latka, interpreter, Edmonton; Hon. Francis Ogletree, Indian commissioner, Portage la Prairie; these are the names. In some cases the position they occupied is given, but in others they are not. I had no desire to occupy the attention of the House, but as hon. gentlemen opposite seemed to think they would like to have the names put on 'Hansard,' it is just as well they should appear there that, to a very great extent, gives the reason why the Conservatives in Manitoba, after they came into office, followed the course of action they did. If the hon. gentleman who made the statement that some 700 had been dismissed by the Manitoba Conservative government will also put a list of the names in 'Hansard,' we will have an opportunity of judging the righteousness or otherwise of these dismissals and compare the record of both parties with regard to the matter now before the House.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I would not take up any time of the House, Mr. Speaker, had not the hon. gentleman who has just spoken seen fit to read a list of names of officials who, he claims, were dismissed without cause by this government after it came into power. I do not know where the hon. gentleman got his information, but I think he informed the House that he got it from the Winnipeg 'Telegram.' Well, that may be a very worthy sheet, but I do not think many people would take all the statements that appear in it for gospel truth. Why, it is not so very long ago when the hon. leader of the opposition had to contradict a report which appeared in that paper of a speech delivered by him at Morden. If the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to send me the list he read, I would like to go over the names and make comments on some of them. However, I caught some of the names. There is one party, Miss Duff, but Miss Duff is still in the employ of the government and has not been dismissed. Then there is Captain Cottingham, who is also still in the employ of the government.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I did not say Captain Cottingham, but W. S. Cottingham, of the Brandon land office.

Mr. DAVIS. Would the hon. gentleman kindly send me over the list, as we could not hear the names very well on this side of the House. He also gave the name of John Rogers, homestead inspector. Well, Mr. Speaker, that gentleman was paralyzed. He did not do any work for a year, during which the government kept him on and paid his salary. I caught the names of a few gentlemen dismissed in my riding, but they were dismissed for cause. One was an Indian agent, who was dismissed for giving liquor to the Indians. This was proven before a commission of inquiry. There was another case in which a commission was appointed to look into the affairs of a sheriff, but the sheriff resigned rather than go before the commission. I could show you that the other dismissals were equally all for cause, as the hon. gentleman will find if he will make inquiries. I had some experience with some of the officials of the Manitoba government last winter. When out in the election campaign last winter, I came across several Manitoba officials taking active part, not only in the canvass from house to house, but on the public platform, and using every influence in the interests of the Conservative candidate. One of these was an immigration agent, Mr. Burke, and another an immigration agent, Mr. J. J. Golden. I could give the names of scores. I notice that hon. gentlemen on that side carefully avoided replying to my hon. friend from Selkirk. He went over a list of respectable officials who were slaughtered by the Manitoba government without any cause.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). If the hon. gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity after I have done, and I am treating him with the same amount of courtesy as the hon. member for Macdonald gave me a short time ago. There was a list of names read by the hon. member for Selkirk of respectable men, men up in years, who had given their whole lives to the service, and who were turned out practically to starve without any investigation, without any charge having been made against them, but simply because their places were required for others. There has never been, in the history of any province of this Dominion, anything like the wholesale slaughter of officials without cause as by the Manitoba government. I might allude to the case of Mr. Dawson, the very respectable police magistrate, of Winnipeg, whose place was wanted and whose head consequently dropped into the basket. Hon. gentlemen opposite are the last persons who can talk about the dismissals of officials. If there are officials in the employ of this government whom the people want to represent them in the legislature, that shows that the government have selected respectable and responsible men, who have gained high esteem in the community by the way in which they have carried out their official duties. When the Conservatives were in power there were very few of the officials whom anybody would nominate to go to parliament. I know of a case of partisanship previous to the election of 1896 in the district represented by my hon. friend from East Assiniboia, which is a case in point. An Indian agent of the late government was travelling around the country during election time, with two government horses hitched in tandem and a government official driving the team, and he was sitting back blowing a horn so as to call the farmers out and tell them how they should vote.

That was a Conservative tin-horn partisan.

There is another case to which I wish to draw my hon. friend's attention. In the election of 1887 in my district there was a gentleman who was commissioner for the purpose of settling rebellion claims. He was drawing $15 a day from the government. I could quote the figures from the public documents if any hon. gentleman wished to have them. The campaign opened in December and was kept up until the last of March. This gentleman was sent there from Ottawa, he addressed meetings, canvassed, organized, did everything he could to elect the Conservative candidate, and all the time drawing $15 a day from the treasury of the Dominion. Take another case. There was an inspector of mounted police in my district who was at the same time appointed enumerator. I went to him and wanted to see the list, and I had a perfect right to see it, being the accredited agent of one of the candidates. But he would not let me see it; he said they had no use for Grits and that I could see no list there. And, since this government came into power that officer has been promoted to be superintendent—that is his reward for treating us in that way. I could go on all night giving cases of this kind. Now, the hon. member for Marquette has claimed that public officials have been nominated to the legislature. I do not know anything about them. It is only rumour. I have seen the names of Mr. Young and others in the papers, but I do not know, and I fancy that no person knows, as a matter of fact whether they are officials or not. I am not going to say that it is a proper thing for officials to take any part in elections. But I do say that the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are the last persons who should talk about partisanship of officials or the partisan dismissal of officials. However, if the government looks into the case, and it is found to be in any respect as serious as the hon. gentleman trys to make out, the government, no doubt, will see to it that these gentlemen do not continue to occupy these offices. For my part, I hold that no official has any right to go out and work in an election. But I have seen it done even last winter in Manitoba, and I venture to say if the hon. gentlemen opposite had the opportunity again, their officials, when an election came on, would be running about the country as thick as grasshoppers. But, of course, that does not justify anything of the kind under this government, and I hope they will look into the matter.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). As I was not aware that this question was coming up, I shall not say more than a few words. A discussion such as we have had this afternoon can hardly be said to be of an edifying character; it seems necessarily to consist of each side charging the other with being worse then itself. Possibly, that is inevitable under our present political system. My own opinion is that, even from the standpoint of party advantage, there is nothing to be gained by a government on coming into office discharging the employees appointed by their predecessors. But I feel equally sure that every government is in duty bound to deal with this matter purely from the standpoint of the public interest. I am pretty well acquainted with the facts in some of the cases of complaint in Manitoba that have been brought forward during the last few years. I know, as a matter of fact, there were a number of the employees of the old Greenway government who richly deserved dismissal and they got it. But it does not stop there; the very necessity of dismissing some men seem to be used as an excuse for wholesale dismissals for which there is no justification on the grounds of the public interest. One case particularly has been mentioned, that of the police magistrate for the city of Winnipeg. I am not in the confidence of either party there, but I can state that all parties and all fair-minded men in Winnipeg felt that the city was humiliated and that harm was done to the public service by the removal of police magistrate Dawson. A good man was removed from the public service. It matters not whether his successor was a good man or not, the fact was that a good man who was getting used to his job and able to render good public service was dismissed. I do not know what cause brought this dismissal about, but, so far as I can find out, all the public men in the city, and the citizens generally, condemn that kind of action. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House have quoted full lists of officials who have been replaced. The justifiable dismissals are mixed up indiscriminately with those that are purely partisan, and thus the real issue is confused. I do not regret the discussion of the matter in the House; it seems to me that it should be discussed more than it is, it should be discussed until we are sick of it, and the people of the country are sick of it, and look about for a remedy. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) read a list of dismissals. I noticed some names that had no business to be mentioned in this connection, for the parties were rightly dismissed, and dismissed for the public advantage. One case that the hon. gentleman mentioned was the dismissal of the public works officer under this government. I cannot speak from actual knowledge as to what was the alleged cause of his dismissal, but I know upon what it followed upon. I know that within a few weeks before his dismissal he grievously, and, I believe, unprovokedly, assaulted a minor official in the customs house, a poor, weak old man—brutally assaulted him, as was proven in the police court. Of course, his dismissal ought to, and I believe did, follow as a matter of course. It seems to me absurd that this case should be mixed up with others in which there is legitimate cause of complaint. It must be looked upon as a scandal under the present circumstances that men who are employees of the government, men, who, in most cases, have been appointed to the public service because they have records as active partisans—that is the outcome of the party system—should be candidates in another election while still holding public office. This seems to me to amount to a scandal because the public interest is sure to suffer. We cannot expect that, in the heat of an electoral contest these men, can or will deal fairly with the public whose work they are paid to do. But the cases of a lot of minor officials, men who work for the government only a part of every year or who draw small sums for minor services, should not be discussed in this connection. One case brought up by the member for Marquette was that of a sub-postmaster in Winnipeg who is a candidate in the north district at the present time. I look upon that man as doing a public service in taking a sub-post office in his store. I believe he is serving the country in part at his own expense, as are some other officials. Still, I believe that every official should accept the risk—if he takes a prominent part in politics or accepts nomination, and this action on his part causes irritation or trouble between them and the public whom he has undertaken to serve, the department should immediately insist upon his withdrawing from the position in politics or handing back his commission to the government. That seems to me right and proper, purely from the standpoint of the public service irrespective of party politics. I believe it is a proper principle, even in party warfare, that was laid down in the declaration of the Prime Minister. It appears to me this is an opportune time to bring this question up in the House, because, as a matter of fact, preparations are only now being made for a general election in Manitoba. If the government are prepared to tell us that the position stated in their declaration will be upheld, for my part I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). The question involved in the motion of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), it seems to me, has not been discussed, but hon. gentlemen seem disposed to discuss it from a provincial, rather than a Dominion standpoint. I remember a few years ago when reference was made to provincial civil servants in the various provinces whose governments were favourable to the present government, and when fault was found with them for taking part in politics, we were told it was a purely provincial matter, that this government had no control over matters of that kind; therefore, it was for the provincial legislatures to deal with them. Taking that view, I think we should confine ourselves to the motion before the House. Now, I know that some members of the government entertain peculiar ideas with reference to the rights of civil servants. I may refer to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, I think, is inclined to the belief that civil servants should be disfranchised. I think he stated on a former occasion that if they were disfranchised they would not get into this trouble. But I never heard any complaint from a government supporter if they did take an active part on behalf of the government. In 1887, when a Mr. McColl was a government employee in Winnipeg connected with the Interior Department, a deputation came here from Manitoba and interviewed Sir John A. Macdonald with reference to Mr. McColl's conduct in the elections. I remember the answer given to the deputation, because I was here at the time, and it was, that unless they could find some good and sufficient cause for his dismissal, Mr. McColl would not be removed from office. Sir John A. Macdonald took the ground that an employee had a perfect right to vote, and he had no fault to find with him, whether he voted Liberal or Conservative, and would not exert any influence upon him to induce him to vote Conservative. Now I find that the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies, now judge of the Supreme Court, spoke as follows in 1896:

> I say when a public official not only discharges his duty as a citizen and votes, but takes an active political part in the canvas preceding the election, and makes himself in that sense politically offensive, he takes his life in his hands, and if the party which he so actively supports is unsuccessful, his political head comes off.

I think that is quite right. I think that a civil servant who takes an active part in a political election does so at the risk of his official life, and this remark would apply whether a Liberal or Conservative government were in power. Now, I find that in 1879, when there was a change of government, the 'Globe' of the 26th of February, 1879, laid down this doctrine:

> In the public interests there are but two considerations which can justify the substitution of one official for another, except in cases where the holder of a place has been guilty of misconduct; the new appointee may be better qualified for the situation than the old, or he may be able to save to the country a certain sum every year.

I think if the members of the government had carried out to the present time that principle laid down by the 'Globe' in 1879, both sides of this House would have no reason to complain. So I say that the government should make it distinctly understood that any civil servant who takes the public platform or makes himself offensive to one party or the other, takes his official life in his hand, and would be subject to removal from office. I find this also :

From petty officers whose remuneration is small or nominal, it is idle to expect that subserviency or decorum in regard to political matters that the government could exact in the case of highly paid officials or civil servants proper.

That was the statement made here a few years ago, and I for one think that petty officers like a great many filling positions in the Post Office Department of this country, and whose remuneration is so small, should not be deprived of any of the rights of citizens simply by reason of taking an active part in politics. I think that the Postmaster General frequently finds that it is sometimes difficult to induce a citizen to fill these paid offices on account of the small remuneration attached thereto. Therefore, I do not think that we have a right to include them in the class of persons we are discussing now. What the opposition are contending for is that civil servants who are receiving fair remuneration for their services should have the right to vote if they think proper without any interference on the part of the government, but in my judgment that is as far as a civil servant should have a right to go.

Now, for the purpose of straightening out one reference that was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Selkirk, a note has been placed in my hand :

Mr. McCreary said that T. A. Cuddy, former county court clerk, Minnedosa, was dismissed and J. F. Boyd supplanted him. As a matter of fact, Cuddy was and is a Conservative, was not dismissed but voluntarily resigned, as he was removing to British Columbia. Boyd has since resigned and is now in partnership in British Columbia with Cuddy.

So you see that our hon. friends, in discussing matters of this kind, make some statements that are not in accordance with all the facts of the case, and we do not know how much credence to place on that list of dismissals that was read to us. For that reason I am not in a position to discuss intelligently the causes that have led up to the superannuations, removals, dismissals or resignations that take place in the different provinces. I think that we had better confine ourselves to looking after the civil servants of the Dominion of Canada. If the government will frankly carry out the views that they expressed in 1896, namely, that they will not encourage or allow officials to take part in politics, that is all that hon. gentlemen of this House have a right to expect of them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Perhaps it is to be regretted that the discussion of a very important principle is somewhat confounded with some individual cases. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), who introduced this motion, has rather directed it towards the application of the principle to certain alleged violations than to the endorsement of the principle itself. After reciting in his motion the view of the right hon. Prime Minister, which represented the views of the government then and to-day, he calls, in his resolution, for censure upon the government for not having, as it is alleged, applied this principle to a particular number of cases that the hon. member gave to this House. He named a number of persons in different departments whom he says, are violating this principle. If he had communicated to the government in advance of the motion the names of the officers in question and such information as to the complaints against them as would have enabled us to make an examination, we would, upon this occasion, probably have been in a position to discuss the merits of these cases. But I think it will be conceded that you could scarcely find a more unsuitable body to determine upon questions of fact than a House such as this when the facts are not before us and are only referred to incidentally and with more or less accuracy or inaccuracy by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. For example, the House is asked to pass a vote of censure on the government because it has not applied this principle by dismissing the gentlemen named. In support of that proposition we have the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) telling us that the government had on other occasions dismissed a larger number of officials, he stated it at 150, and he proceeded to read to the House a long list of dismissals. He read the list of, he says, 150 persons who, he says, were dismissed for violating the principle laid down by the right hon. Premier ; that is, that they were dismissed for political partisanship. The second name upon his list was that of Mr. Hargrave. I know all about the circumstances leading to his superannuation, and I have refreshed my memory since I put the question to the hon. gentleman, and it is impossible that Mr. Hargrave could have been dismissed by us for political reasons. He was a Liberal, appointed in the time of the Mackenzie government. He and his people were all Liberals, and he is a Liberal to-day. Nor was he dismissed. He was retired on a superannuation exceeding $2,000 a year. He was a highly worthy man, but Winnipeg has suddenly grown in importance, and it was necessary to place a younger and more active man in charge of that growing office. Solely in the public interest Mr. Hargrave was retired. He himself thought that he was quite fit to carry on the business of his office and he regretted his superannuation. I retired him with regret, but I was convinced that it was necessary to do so in the public interests alone. When he was retired it was not to make a place for any one else, because there was no one in view, and the office was kept vacant for a considerable time until I could find a suitable person. I attached more importance to the appointment of a suitable person than to any political consideration, and in the selection we have made I think we have been successful in finding a very suitable officer to carry on that work. I dwell upon that for a moment to show how unreliable that list must be when the second name on it is one that I know does not fairly represent the class of cases to which this resolution refers. Yet we are asked to-night to dismiss all these officers without a trial and without knowing the facts. If we were to do such a thing I am sure none would be quicker to censure us than our hon. friends on the other side of the House.

Mr. INGRAM. You have done so all the time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, we have not done so all the time. We have reasons for our act. In regard to the general principle, we have never receded from it, but, as to its application, there must be some degree of judgment exercised. For example, when that principle was being announced by the right hon. leader of the government to parliament, it had reference immediately to Dominion cases; to officers in the Dominion service who had taken a more or less active part in Dominion politics. I am not saying that the principle is to be confined to Dominion politics, but when you come to extend it beyond the range of Dominion politics one might naturally ask how far it is to be extended. There are many sorts of contests that go on in the Dominion wherein political partisanship plays a large part, and yet these contests are not Dominion in their character. For instance, we have, as in the present instance, local politics wherein more or less Dominion issues are involved and political partisanship is awakened. We can go into another arena of conflict between the people—municipal politics. It frequently happens that party politics, in the larger sense, are introduced into municipal politics. It is not many months ago since some prominent representatives of the Conservative party in Ontario advocated municipal politics in our province being run on Dominion issues.

Mr. INGRAM. So did your organizer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will admit for the moment, for the purpose of argument only, that a certain contest in a village turns upon Dominion politics. Is it the opinion of this House that this principle referred to shall be applied to municipal politics? If so, there are other forms of contests wherein political questions and political partisanship will more or less play a part. I am not saying where the rule shall apply, nor would it be wise, I think, to circumscribe the rule or to define it, but it must, I think, be limited to a general and useful application. In my opinion, the first consideration on the part of any government in dealing with its officers is to see that they render efficient service to the government which employs them. That is due, not only to the government, but to the people, whose servants they are, and I take the view that a public servant should be persona grata to the community, and that it is unwise for him to take part in any conflicts in regard to the questions that divide the people into more or less hostile parties, making it unpleasant for some patrons of the office which he occupies to have to deal with such an officer. Take the example mentioned by the hon. member from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), who discussed this question temperately and fairly, in regard to postmasters. I only illustrate the point that he sought to make in regard to postmasters enjoying a merely nominal salary. He thought that they should be allowed to enjoy all their civil rights untrammelled by any such rule as this. Let me give the illustration of a case of which I have knowledge, and we will see whether it would be safe in the public interest to tell all postmasters enjoying a merely nominal salary that they might be at liberty to engage in political struggles. I have had a complaint made to me that a certain postmaster enjoying a nominal salary—we will call it $20—a mere trifle, was an active member of a local political organization at these corners. The committee connected with the revision of the voters' lists met at the post office, and the postmaster himself was so deeply interested in the question of party politics that he intercepted a large number of the notices of appeal to the judge, with the result that one party failed to get the evidence before the judge and all the appeals were thrown out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That was misconduct.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course it was. But the fact that this officer took an active part in politics kept alive in him that partisan spirit, and he yielded to the temptation and misused his office, being for the moment more anxious to promote the interest of his party than to discharge his duties towards the public.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not think that a man who would make a capable and competent postmaster would sacrifice his citizenship for the sake of $20 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am merely giving reasons why it is impossible to determine by the degree of salary or the supposed importance of the office, whether or not this rule should apply. I believe that the rule must be, that under no circumstances must a public officer be allowed to place the public interest in a secondary position. No matter how trifling the salary may be, if a man takes a public office, the country is entitled to have him give his first consideration to the public service. Another case comes to my mind where a postmaster under a similar temptation altered the date of a number of letters containing notices for a political meeting with the result that the meeting did not take place. Therefore, you will see that no matter how trifling the position may be, it is not safe to allow a man to take part in political strife.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the Postmaster General make no dismissals except for offences of that kind.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not discussing the abstract question, and if my hon. friend desires to discuss any particular dismissal made by me I shall be pleased to discuss that with him.

Mr. CLANCY. The Postmaster General will have an opportunity later on.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No doubt. But, when we are discussing a question of this kind on which there is no difference between us as to the principle involved, it would be inopportune to cloud the issue by discussing particular cases. I can understand that more or less feeling is injected into this discussion, because we are told by the hon. gentlemen opposite that the question comes up at the instance of the premier of Manitoba, who reports that some Dominion officials are taking part in the expected provincial campaign. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) stated that certain Dominion officials had used their office to bring undue influence to bear upon the electors. He told us that one went to the homesteaders and brought such pressure as an officer could bring because of their being indebted to the Crown, and in another case he referred to influence being brought in connection with timber licenses. All I have to say is that such conduct as that is highly censurable, indefensible and inexcusable, and will not be tolerated by the government. One can hardly conceive of a public officer committing a more gross interference with the liberty of the elector, than to endeavour to intimidate him by informing him of his indebtedness to the Crown, of his obligations to the Crown, and intimating to him that it may be better or worse for him according to the way he may vote. If any officers in the employ of the Dominion government are guilty of any such offence, I am sure that I can say on behalf of the government that the government will not overlook such conduct. My hon. friend has referred to two cases in my department—one of which is the case of Mr. Stratton, who he said was connected with a newspaper. I do not know what would be the proper way of treating a man who is connected with a newspaper; whether he ought to be dismissed or whether he ought be given the opportunity of withdrawing from one or the other, or whether it would be proper under the circumstances to permit him to continue his paper. There are circumstances particular to each case which would have to be considered. You may fill a dock with accused persons but you cannot dispose of them all by the same tribunal and the same trial, unless they are jointly concerned in the same offence. Each case has to be fairly considered and tested and dealt with according to the existing law. The existing law applicable to such cases is set forth in the speech of the Premier, recited in the resolution, and that law will be properly and justly and equitably applied to all cases brought to the attention of the government. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) on reconsideration, will deliberately ask us to-night to decide to dismiss these men. I do not know if he will persist in asking us, to here and now dismiss them or promise to dismiss them without knowing the facts. I am sure that no fair minded man would ask us to prejudge the cases, and to decide now without our knowing the facts what sort of treatment should be extended to these officers. I have only to say in conclusion, that we will deal with them in harmony with the principles laid down in 1897.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I would like to say to the Postmaster General that I brought at least two of these cases to his attention some weeks ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Which two please ?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Watson, postmaster and secretary of the Liberal Association——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In what way ?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). By the way of questions I put to him. I drew his attention to the fact that Mr. Jonasson was a homestead inspector and candidate, and that Mr. Watson was secretary of the Liberal Association, postmaster and candidate for South Brandon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I never until this moment was aware of any of these officers being involved in local politics. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche, Marquette) may have asked me some questions, but it never crossed my mind that these men were trangressing any law. I never heard of their being identified with party politics, and I do not think the hon. gentleman will find that in any of his questions he for one moment suggested that these men were engaged in party politics.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Yes, Sir.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman read the questions ?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I read them in my speech, but I have not got them at hand at the moment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend desired me to look into these cases with the view of announcing to-night what action should be taken it would be fairer if he had pointedly called attention to the matter in advance, so that I might try and inform myself as to the facts. I have only to say that till the hon. gentleman made his speech, I had no knowledge whatever even of the existence of any of the persons named, although I might as a matter of form have answered questions bearing upon the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I remember an instance described by Dickens when Mr. Samuel Weller was advised by his father as to how he should spell his name. 'Spell it with a 'wee,' Samivel, said the old gentleman, and Samuel being asked by the judge whether he could see his father in court immediately looked up into the ventilator and said that he could not. The attitude of the Postmaster General with regard to these men in Manitoba reminds me of that incident. He does not want to see them, although he is sharp sighted indeed about seeing certain individuals who happen to be opposed to the Liberal party, and against whom accusations of this kind are made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that is a fair observation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will show my hon. friend whether it is a fair observation or not. Since 1900, in my own county, a postmaster was dismissed without any opportunity whatever—although he demanded it—to make his defence. He was dismissed on the flimsiest possible declaration of an individual in his neighbourhood that he knew the postmaster had been canvassing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You are discussing the other cases now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am discussing a case which I take the liberty of bringing to the attention of the Postmaster General for the purpose of pointing out to him how much keener his vision is in some cases than it is in others.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am afraid that is a very common complaint.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is my right hon. friend addressing me ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No. I merely remark that it is a general defect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is, particularly on that side of the House. My right hon. friend's vision is most oblique in regard to matters of that kind. I may say that the names of these men have been published for weeks as candidates in the province of Manitoba, not only in Conservative organs, but also in Liberal organs.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never heard of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And yet my hon. friend the Postmaster General has not yet awakened to the fact that there are officials of this government participating in an active way in the present political campaign in Manitoba; and my hon. friend, with the most delightful frankness, suggests that we must not prejudge these men or dismiss them without an investigation ? How many men have been dismissed since 1896 without investigation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. None, without our knowing that there was good cause for dismissal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And our knowledge is very much keener sometimes than it is at other times. Why, the very case I refer to that took place only two years ago, was a case in which one of the most respectable men in the city of Halifax was dismissed without having the slightest opportunity of saying a single word in his own defence, upon the flimsiest kind of declaration, that the declarant knew that he had been canvassing.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to give me his name ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Robert Kaulbach, postmaster of Middle Musquodoboit.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I will give an account of what he did afterwards.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know personally what he did, but I asked the hon. Postmaster General to bring down all the papers on which he acted, and those papers contain nothing more nor less than what I have stated; because I have copies of the papers in my possession, they having been brought down in response to the motion which I made in the House for the purpose of obtaining the documentary evidence on which that man was dismissed. If there was anything further on account of which he was dismissed, all I have to say is that the hon. Postmaster General was recreant to his duty in not bringing it down, when I asked for all the evidence on which Mr. Kaulbach had been dismissed from his position as postmaster. If the hon. gentleman knows anything more, the hon. Postmaster General did not communicate it to me, as it was his duty to do, when I moved for all the information on the subject.

Now, no one is asking the government to promise to dismiss these men. The resolution does not ask that. It simply asks the government to apply to these men in the province of Manitoba exactly the same principles that they announced in 1896, and on which they have acted so many times since. It is only in respect to the non-application of these principles that the resolution casts any censure on this government. I do not deny that matters of this kind are a source of difficulty to any government. I have no doubt whatever that they have been a source of difficulty to this government, and I have no doubt that pressure has been brought on this government to dismiss men who are still in office. But I do say that the government have yielded to pressure of that kind in a great many cases when I think it would have been better if they had held their hand or had allowed the officials the opportunity of being heard in their own defence before being dismissed. But that is not the question we are dealing with to-night. The question we are dealing with to-night is whether the government meant what they said when they laid down certain principles in this House in 1896. This resolution follows the matter up logically from beginning to end, and I will take the liberty of reading it, as it has been referred to by my hon. friend the Postmaster General. The quotations made in the resolution are only a few of many which I have under my hand, some of which have been made since the election of 1900, and in which exactly the same principles have been laid down by the right hon. leader of the government. What did my right hon. friend say in 1896 ? He said :

Now, when we find an officer in the civil service, however good a servant he may have been, however faithfully he may have discharged his duties, but who has been an active politician, who has taken part in the election, offensively and actively, and before the eyes of the whole community, that official has become a scandal in the eyes of the community, and I have no hesitation in saying that he cannot be trusted to render faithful service to this government Where there is a government officer, he may hold his opinions, I do not care what they are ; they may be Liberal or Conservative, I do not care ; he may go and vote, and I will not inquire how he voted, but when he is seen on a public platform, when he takes part in party processions and is actively and offensively prominent as regards party candidates, that man has taken his life in his hands, and no one can have a word to say if he is dismissed from the service.

My right hon. friend either meant that in 1896, or he did not mean it. If it is a good principle to be applied in 1896—and it was applied in that year and the following years—it is an equally good principle to be applied now, and to be applied in the province of Manitoba as well as in other parts of Canada. Then, the first lieutenant of my right hon. friend, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, used language even more emphatic when he said :

With members of the civil service eating the bread of both parties, and deliberately interfering in elections for the purpose of aiding one political party, if they so act they must be considered as taking their political lives in their hands, and they must accept the consequences of their own acts, and the good sense of the people of the country and their natural sense of equal justice will not merely justify, but demand at the hands of the government that they should make an example of them.

The resolution after having quoted these expressions proceeds as follows :

That other members of the government, during that session and subsequent sessions, expressed the same views.

As my right hon. friend's memory of these matters may not be very good, I would like to quote some further remarks made by himself and by his colleagues bearing on the same subject. The right hon. gentleman himself, on the 1st of September, 1896, said this :

I have no hesitation in saying at this time that if an officer in the service chooses to be a politician, he shall be given every opportunity by this government of being a politician. What is the cause of the abominable practice which has been stigmatized in the States, that to the victor belong the spoils ? Why was it that after every Presidential election attended by a change of parties in power, the whole civil service was cleared off, the whole body of servants of the government were forced to resign or be dismissed ? The reason is obvious, the reason is that every officer under the American system was an active politician, and being an active politician it was quite natural that when the opposite party came to power the man who had been an active politician could not be a trusted servant of the government whom he had opposed.

Then, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, dealing with the question of what is offensive partisanship, said :

There is not much difference, there may be a difference as to the definition of ' offensivenes.' I should be disposed to consider, and I think I said so at the time in accordance with the principle which the hon. gentleman lays down here, that a public servant went outside of his duty and was ' offensive,' using the word in a legal sense which might properly enough apply to him, if he became a member of the committee of a candidate, or if he were canvassing actively against a candidate, I think that would be stepping outside the limit which has been laid down by hon. gentleman on both sides of the House.

Then he proceeds to discuss the question, whether civil servants should not be altogether disfranchised, showing that he was not referring to Dominion elections alone, but was dealing with the general question whether civil servants should interfere in political contests at all. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce again said :

It is perfectly well known, because hon. gentlemen opposite are aware that the proposition now laid down has been stated over and over by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, that where a civil servant chooses, besides exercising his undoubted right to cast his vote as he pleases, to interfere actively in elections, he must of necessity take the consequences of his own act.

And my hon. friend as late as the year 1900, when discussing the case of a certain gentleman in connection with the federal election in Gaspé, said :

Both sides of the House will agree that officers of the government should not take part in politics. There is something repugnant to fair-play when we see an officer of the government paid with public money, using his position amongst his friends and neighbours, where his connections may give him influence, for the purpose of favouring one political party.

My right hon. friend can see that there is in Manitoba the spectacle of a number of the officials of this government actively taking part in politics. My hon. friend the Postmaster General says that it is a provincial contest, but he admits that Dominion issues are, to a considerable extent, involved.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say because I did not know, but we may presume that they are.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood him to say that they were, but at all events there is no doubt that in Manitoba there is a contest going on in provincial politics between the two great parties of this country. Surely we are not to have the principle laid down that Dominion officials are to be at liberty to take an active part in provincial politics and that provincial officers are at liberty to become active partisans in Dominion politics. Every one of the cogent reasons advanced by the right hon. gentleman and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce applies equally to the public officers, whether they display their active partisanship in Dominion or in provincial contests, and I do not imagine that any hon. gentleman on the other side will undertake to draw a distinction of that kind. The resolution proposed by the hon. member for Marquette proceeds as follows :

The government, acting upon the principles and rules so laid down, have since dismissed a very large number of officers on the ground of alleged partisanship.

There is no question about that. Every one in this House knows that to be the case, and that it has been justified over and over in this House by hon. gentlemen opposite. Then the resolution proceeds as follows :

That an application of the principles and rules so laid own for the guidance of public officials would result in the dismissal of those officers of the government who have become 'a scandal in the eyes of the community'——

These are the right hon. gentleman's own words :

——by taking an active offensive and partisan part in the election campaign now being carried on in the province of Manitoba, and who, while 'eating the bread of both parties' 'are deliberately interfering in elections for the purpose of aiding one political party.' This House regrets that the government has not seen fit to deal with such officials in accordance with the declarations of principles so made and so often acted upon.

It seems to me that the resolution proposed by my hon. friend from Marquette is one which ought to commend itself to the government. There may be something in the use of the word 'regret' which implies a censure on the government. However, I have no doubt that my hon. friend from Marquette, if the government object to the use of that word and desire to affirm the principles laid down by the Prime Minister in 1896 and again in 1900, would use some other word which would not be offensive to the government, in asking it to declare that these principles still prevail. If we are to have a non-partisan civil service in this country, it will not do for the government to lay down in 1896 principles such as were then laid down by my right hon. friend and to act on those from 1896 to 1903, and then in the year 1903, when the officials of this government by the dozen are in Manitoba taking an active part in the elections, calmly hold its hands and shut its eyes and say that it knows nothing about it. My hon. friend the Postmaster General suggests rather than says that the government does not know anything about those officials.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I made a very positive statement on the subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The government knows about these officials just in the same way that it knew about the acts of the ex-Minister of Public Works. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister thought that statements published in the newspapers of speeches were sufficient to justify him in dismissing a minister of the Crown. Yet the hon. Postmaster General shuts his eyes to what is going on in the public press. He is blind to the fact that in Manitoba the names of these men are paraded from day to day in the public press of that province, on both sides of politics, and tells this House that the government have not had time to consider the question. What was denounced by the right hon. gentleman in 1896 can go on now, and the government seek to shrink responsibility by saying that they are absolutely surprised to learn that any of their officials in Manitoba are actively engaged in the political campaign going on in that province. No such pretense can save the government. The government know what is going on just as well as we do. They and their friends read the newspapers. These things are brought to their attention. They know every fact with regard to these men just as well as hon. gentlemen on this side. These are facts of public notoriety. They are scandals which have been talked about in Manitoba for the last four or five weeks, and during all that time this government, which has ben so zealous since 1896 that its civil service should be free from all partisanship, will not lift its finger to suppress political partisanship on the part of civil servants, but says it knows nothing at all about it. I do not believe that any evasion of that kind will stand the government in good stead. I am bound to assume that they meant something by the declaration they laid down in 1896. I am bound to assume that these declarations were not mere cant, and if not, the government should have taken some action before this and have made some investigation into these matters published to the world in the press for weeks past, and should compel their public officers in Manitoba, who are paid by both parties, who are eating the bread of the people of this country, to refrain from taking a partisan part in the political affairs of this country. I think that the resolution of my hon. friend from Marquette is one it was his duty to make as a representative of the province of Manitoba, and one which should commend itself to every one who believes that the government, in laying down the principles it did in 1896, was sincerely and honestly expressing its convictions and not making a mere excuse for getting rid of its political opponents.

Mr. Wm. ROCHE (Halifax). I shall not venture to discuss the part taken by Dominion officials in the local elections of Manitoba, for that is the subject about which I know nothing. But when hon. gentlemen opposite declare that it is a horrible outrage that officials of this government should take part in the local elections on behalf of Liberal candidates, is it not as great an offence for officials of this government who are Tories to canvass and use every partisan means against the government which is now in power and which is their master ? Now, if that principle prevails in Manitoba it ought to prevail in Nova Scotia and every other province. With regard to the special incident mentioned by my hon. colleague the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) I do him the credit of saying that I do not think he knows anything personally of the circumstances. He speaks on the basis of what has been reported to him. But I think I know something personally on the subject, because I know the person and I have been present in the locality during several elections. In 1896 the Liberal Conservative party was in power. What the gentleman did during the election then I could excuse, because his patrons and friends were in power, and I do not think it is so great an offence for an official to work or use his influence for a government in power as it is for him to canvass against the government. This gentleman was petitioned against to me; the request was sent to me signed by a number of individuals that he should be dismissed. I said I could not recommend the dismissal on such grounds. The fact that an officer was a Tory, that he was opposed to the government, that he had voted against myself, was not a sufficient ground for dismissal. I was furnished with affidavits of three or four reputable people that this man had canvassed against the nominee of the present government, and that his house was headquarters for the Tory party in that district. On that ground I recommended his dismissal; and I take the liberty of saying that if I discover other postmasters of this government who are guilty of the same proceedings, I will recommend the government to dismiss them also. Now, in the county of Halifax—and I think the same is general throughout Nova Scotia—the postmasters and other government officials are largely Tories. So far as I am concerned, while they do their duty they can vote Tory if they please. They ought to support the government in power, but I shall not move hand or foot against them if they exercise their franchise and do not become partisans. But if they go out of their way to canvass voters, to use their influence against this government, when the matter is brought to my notice by responsible and reputable men, I shall probably move for their dismissal. On the same principle hon. gentlemen opposite have called for the reprobation of officials that work against the government in Manitoba.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, you will vote for this resolution ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Oh, of course, you will vote with us too. I would like to say further that, at the time of an election, these postmasters in the county of Halifax are apt to keep literature sent out by the Liberal party for digestion at some future period, while all the Tory literature is very quickly circulated. I think a thing like that should meet with the reprehension of my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden, Halifax). No doubt his voice will be raised against it. But if I find a case of that kind and the facts are made known to me by reputable individuals supported with affidavits, I will take the liberty of moving the government to dismiss him. Every man, so far as I am concerned, shall be free to exercise his franchise according to his own ideas. But when an official of the government goes out of his way to arouse the prejudices of the people against the government and makes the post office the headquarters of the opposition party, I will move for his dismissal.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend (Mr. Roche, Marquette) who has moved this resolution were really in earnest, if this object was to have the principle he affirms put in practice, he will admit, on reflection, that he has selected the very best course that could be selected to prevent the adoption of his idea. He complained that certain officers of the government in Manitoba are interfering in the elections in that province, and the first thing he does to bring the matter to the attention of the government is a motion of censure. My hon. friend shakes his head. Well, what else has been done to bring the matter to the attention of the government ? He gave his answer a moment ago to the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock). He says that a few days ago he put some questions as to whether the Postmaster General had been informed of such and such matters. But if my hon. friend the Postmaster General did not take that as an intimation that the object of the hon. gentleman was to bring it to his attention that these officers were openly violating the rule laid down by the government, the hon. gentleman has only himself to blame. It is impossible to admit the doctrine laid down by the leader of the opposition on this point. He stated that the government should have known, forsooth, that there were certain officers of theirs who were candidates and taking part in the election, as was a matter of public notoriety, and their names appeared in the newspapers. But does the hon. gentleman contend that when I read the 'Telegram' or the 'Free Press,' or any other Manitoba newspaper and see the name, for instance, of Thomas Young in the list of candidates, that I am to know that this Mr. Young is an officer of the government? Is it to be seriously said that, looking at the newspaper and without any other information, we should know that this candidate is one of our officers upon whom we should have our eye and should see to his withdrawal from the candidature. Surely it is only reasonable to expect that, if my hon. friend on the other side has fair reason to complain that certain officers of ours are not acting up to the rules which we have laid down with regard to official conduct, it would be their business to call the attention of the government to the matter in some other way than by a motion of censure. If he had done this we should have looked into the matter. But from the statement he has made to-day I am not prepared to say I would act upon the recommendation he has made. He has selected especially three instances, those of Mr. Martin Jerome, Mr. Jonasson, and Thomas Young. As to the first instance, that of Mr. Martin Jerome, the hon. gentleman ought to know himself, in fact he cannot but know, that Mr. Jerome does not come within the category of those upon whom he wishes to invoke the censure of the government, for he is not a member of the civil service. Mr. Jerome is sometimes employed by the government, but he is not in the regular service and does not receive his cheque every month as the members of the civil service do. He has been employed from time to time by the government as a bush-ranger or in some such capacity. The hon. gentleman knows that, under such circumstances, the government has no control over Mr. Jerome and cannot call upon him to desist from being a candidate; the government has no more power over him than it would have over my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) if he were a candidate, as he will be some time. Therefore, as to this first case, the hon. gentleman will find that it would have served a good purpose if, before bringing his motion in the way he has done, he had called the attention of the government to the alleged dereliction of duty on the part of Mr. Jerome.

Again, take the case of Mr. Jonasson. Mr. Jonasson, I understand, is one of our officers, I do not know in what capacity, but he is in the pay of the government. He ought not to take any part in any politics. I say deliberately that for my part I feel as strongly now, in 1903, as I did in 1896, that when a man has taken a position in the civil service, he should take no part whatever in politics. He becomes an officer of the public, receiving the pay of all parties, he owes his services alone to the position which he occupies. If he wants to vote let him vote, but let him exercise his franchise in a way that will not be offensive to anybody. I say now that whenever one of our officers has been guilty of dereliction of duty, and when his name and the circumstances have been called to our attention, we shall ask him to explain whether the charge is true or not. Some time ago Mr. Roblin, the premier of the province of Manitoba, called attention to this case. I have not heard his speech, only the summary of it given to us this afternoon by the hon. member for Marquette, and he stated that it was the duty of this man either to withdraw from the political field or to withdraw from the service. Well, we cannot dismiss him unless the matter is brought to our attention. As to the case of Mr. Jonasson I understand that he has taken part in politics, as stated by the hon. member for Marquette, and in his case we shall cause inquiry to be made. But I must say that the situation is very peculiar in the province of Manitoba. There is no province in the Dominion where the political axe has been so active as in Manitoba. We have just been told that 150 dismissals have been made in Manitoba between 1896 and 1900 by this government. Sir, I challenge the accuracy of that statement, I deny it in toto. I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman from Macdonald has been misinformed. It is a long list to go through, but we have already seen three or four instances where he was shown to have been led astray, and I am satisfied that if this whole matter were investigated he would be found to be astray in one-half his cases, even more than one-half. But I do not admit a single case where we have been derelict, either in Manitoba or elsewhere, I do not admit there has been a single dismissal except for cause. But in the province of Manitoba, unfortunately, there have been dismissals by wholesale. At this very moment when my hon. friend from Marquette, in a moment of exasperated virtue, asks us to call upon our officers to withdraw, to stay their hand—at this very moment I have information that officials of the local government are openly taking part in elections. It may not be true, I hope it is not true; but I am inclined to believe there is some truth in it, according to a speech which we had this afternoon by the member from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). He gave the whole case away when he stated of his own party : We have made no pledges in that matter, we have no policy and no principle in that matter.

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not say that, that we had no principle in the matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must be candid with my hon. friend, I am glad to hear that he repudiates the doctrine. But though he did not say that in so many words, he did say this : We have made no declaration on this point, but the government have made a declaration on this matter and they must be compelled to live up to it. Then by implication, if the Conservative party have made no declaration, therefore they are at liberty to do as they please. If my hon. friend does not admit that kind of logic, at least it is applicable to the case. But I am glad to accept his disclaimer, not only in words but in spirit also, that they have no principle in the matter. I believe that he wants us in the province of Manitoba to live up to our doctrine, and we shall take good care that his own side also shall live up to that doctrine, which seems to meet with his approval. I have only to say with regard to this motion that it is a vote of censure where no censure whatever has been incurred. With regard to the information which the hon. gentleman says he gave to the Postmaster General, my hon. friend has just given me the question which the hon. member for Marquette asked the minister a few days ago :

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

1. Is Mr. S. Jonasson an employee of the Department of the Interior, in the province of Manitoba, as forest-ranger or homestead inspector ?

2. If so, is the government aware that he is the Liberal candidate for the constituency of Gimli in the ensuing provincial elections ?

3. Will his services be continued by this government while he is engaged in party politics.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. Yes.

2. The government has no information that Mr. Jonasson is a candidate for Gimli.

3. If he is a candidate, he will not be continued as a salaried official of the department.

Mr. R. H. POPE (Compton). The Postmaster General seeks to obscure the evidence of dismissals that have taken place from time to time in various parts of Canada. These chickens will come home to roost, Mr. Speaker, and no doubt the hon. gentlemen will live to regret many times the action they have taken in many individual instances during the years they have been in power. When the statement is made that every dismissal of postmasters and others has been made for good cause, Sir, I take exception to that statement in so far as our district at least is concerned. I am not going to speak for the province of Manitoba, but for the section of country from which I come. There have been dismissals made without cause, without the slightest cause, and which do not redound to the credit of the Postmaster General or of this government. The Postmaster General is perfectly aware of the fact. I brought it to his attention at the time, that when Miss Angus was dismissed no cause whatever was alleged. That young lady kept a country post office, on her salary depended her own livelihood and that of her mother; and the government committed a cruelty in dismissing her which shall never be forgotten in that section of the country, or in this House, so long as I am here as the representative of that constituency. I am perfectly willing that this government or any other should enjoy the legitimate fruits of power. I do not object to that, I expect them to do it. I expect them to reward their friends. I do not object to that so long as they do not interfere with the public interest. But when they do, of course they must expect to be subjected to the criticism to which they are entitled. But, Sir, when they go out of their way to serve miserable, low, sectional, party interests, in some small communities that should be beneath the consideration of any department or any minister, when they descend to that depth, they must expect to be criticised and blamed for it. I would call the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to the fact that he only read one of the answers to those questions. It is peculiar that even in this House, where books are open and where more than one man can read, we should find the right hon. leader of the government forgetting himself and the high dignity of his position to such an extent as a partisan that he has failed in his effort to be fair. We find him reading one question put by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), the answer to which gave an opportunity of applause from the hon. gentlemen who sit behind him. The answer to that question was :

If he is a candidate, he will not be continued as a salaried official of the department.

Applause from hon. gentlemen behind. But, the other question is this :

1. Is the government aware that Mr. John Watson, postmaster at Nesbitt, Manitoba, is the president of the South Brandon Liberal Association ; and the Liberal candidate for that constituency in the ensuing elections in that province ?

2. Will his services be continued by this government while he is engaged in party politics?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The department has no information whatever as to whether Mr. John Watson is the president of the South Brandon Liberal Association or the Liberal candidate for that constituency in the ensuing elections in that province.

That does not say what is going to happen to him. If the right hon. gentleman had read that one would he have received that applause? I do not believe he would have received it. I would like to know from the hon. Postmaster General how much correspondence he has in regard to this man being a candidate. This was on the 8th of April, and it is now the 15th of May. It takes three or four days to communicate with that part of the country and the hon. Postmaster General has had five weeks in which to ascertain the facts. I would like to see the correspondence brought down and placed on the Table showing how much interest the hon. minister had taken in that question during the past five weeks. I will venture to say that he has taken none whatever. I am sure the hon. gentleman has never thought of it and never intended to think of it again if this debate had not been brought up. Now, the right hon. leader of the government says: You are in great haste. You should have prepared your resolution in other terms if you wished to win the object you seem to seek. There was a question asked in regard to Mr. Jerome in 1899, by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) and what was the answer to it? The right hon. gentleman says: We pay him spasmodically. We pay him when it suits our purpose. When we can have some excuse for rewarding this political tool we pay, but when it is inconvenient, when there is an election on hand, when we want to have our hands clean so that we can hold them up to high heaven and say: Look at the grand principles that were laid down by this government two or three years ago. When we want to stand in that sort of atmosphere we do not pay Mr. Jerome. We pass over thirty or sixty days and then we give him his back-pay because that gentleman receives, as bush-ranger, or forest-ranger, the pay which is good enough for any man. He is receiving a great deal more to-day than he would as a legislator of the country and he is under a far greater obligation to the political organization that creates this government than he is to his legislative duties so far as measuring it by dollars and cents is concerned. The hon. Postmaster General claimed great credit for the easy way in which he has disposed of the venerable ex-postmaster of Winnipeg. He seemed to think that he had got rid of that gentleman in most beautiful style, in a way that should have felt comfortable to the poor old man. He removed him because he was getting old. He was as strong and vigorous as he is to-day. Every man who goes to Winnipeg and sees him knows that he is one of the examples that is pointed out, and as we go there we are reminded of the great fight that took place for a whole year between Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Conklin as to who should get the position vacated by the postmaster. That was the question at issue. They would have dismissed the postmaster a year before they did if they could have arranged for his successor. That gentleman enjoyed his salary for a year longer than was intended. He would have been officially executed by the hon. Postmaster General twelve months previously and he would have been relieved of the pain and trouble that worried him so much. They worried him so that he remained in office for over seventeen years and is still alive and in good health. I wish the hon. Postmaster General would prescribe some such worry for me. In 1899 the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) asked:

1. Is Mr. Martin Jerome an employee of the Interior Department in the province of Manitoba as forest-ranger or in any other capacity?
2. If so, is he the same gentleman who is the Liberal candidate for the constituency of Carillon in the ensuing elections in that province?
3. Will his services be continued by the government while he is engaged in party politics?

This is the answer:

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Mr. Martin Jerome is an employee of the Interior in the province of Manitoba as forest-ranger. 2. Inquiry has elicited the fact that Mr. Jerome has been tendered but has not accepted a nomination for the legislature. 3. Should Mr. Jerome accept the nomination his employment in his present capacity will cease.

That was in 1899. Do you not see how they got out of that? It does not say anything about his being elected. If he were elected then he would become intensely useful to hon. gentlemen opposite, and they could not afford to get rid of him. Mr. Jerome was the gentleman who commanded the situation in this case—not the government. The government were bound to keep Mr. Jerome. If he had been defeated and driven from politics they possibly could have afforded to sacrifice him as they did that poor old gentleman who represented the splendid Liberal principles of Alexander Mackenzie's time, but who had to make way for Mr. McIntyre who wanted that office. I shall be pleased to read a letter to the right hon. gentleman which will interest him and I am sure it is one in which he will have some faith. It is addressed to the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd), and it reads as follows:

Premier's Office,
Winnipeg, May 4, 1903.

N. Boyd, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

My dear Boyd,—I have your letter of the 30th April and have noted its contents. Am pleased to see that the party purposes to compel the government to make a declaration as to the propriety of homestead inspectors, particularly in the country canvassing and using their positions as officials of the Dominion government to intimidate electors into voting against convictions and further charging up their expenses in connection with canvassing and organization meetings, as an expense in discharge of official duties. It certainly is the greatest outrage that has ever been perpetrated in this country and

I cannot believe that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who so far as I know him, is an honourable man, will permit this sort of thing to continue. There is no question about the facts, they are absolutely indisputable and therefore you and others can make as strong statements as you like, as to what they are doing. Only on Saturday an Icelander came in 40 miles to report to me a meeting that he attended when out north of St. Laurent at which Captain Jonasson was present and spoke, but would not allow a single representive of the government a moment of time in which to address the meeting and the burden of his cry was his ability to do them favours as homestead inspector. These are the reports that come to me by men that feel the effects of his presence. I have not yet seen Powers or Barrett, but I presume will in the course of a few days.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) R. P. ROBLIN.

Those are facts. Those facts can be ascertained by this government. Why, to say that this government know nothing of what is going on in Manitoba, to say that they have no interest in the election in Manitoba, when the hon. Postmaster General can stand up in this House and say that he is one of the members of the Liberal government that has no knowledge of what is going on in Manitoba, that he does not read the public press the same as other people in this country, is something that it is hard for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to accept. Why, Mr. Speaker, he reads it here half the time in our faces when we are talking to him. I believe the Postmaster General to be a great reader of newspapers. I have seen him spend hours reading them in this House when we wanted his attention. Surely he must read something besides the Toronto 'Globe' and the Toronto 'Star.' I feel positive that the Postmaster General made a mistake, and that if he ever gets an opportunity he will never make that speech of his over again in just the same way. He is a reading man. He knows that there is an election pending in Manitoba; he knows from the questions which were put to him by the hon. member for Marquette, and which he answered, that these gentlemen are candidates and employees of this government. He knows it from the letter which I have read to-night from the hon. Mr. Roblin. He knows that his friends behind him have made no defence to-night. True, they have said that we did the same thing, but two wrongs do not make a right, and that is no argument. He knows that his own supporters do not get up to defend him to-night, and he knows that they know that there is an election in Manitoba and that these men are candidates in that election. The minister must be franker with this House. Perhaps it is that they are sorry for the principle they have laid down. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that every time the Postmaster General attempts to tie himself up to high minded principle he is sorry for it, and the same thing applies to the Prime Minister, and to the other members of the cabinet. During their whole political life they have been trampling under their feet every principle that they had, whether in power or out of power. Sir, there is a sacred principle involved in this resolution, a principle set forth in the very words of the Prime Minister, and we ask him to enforce that principle, and to vindicate his words. I ask him for the sake of himself, for the sake of his government, and for the sake of the country to enforce that principle without hesitation, and not go back on his words again. If there is a word in that resolution that he would like to have struck out let him ask the hon. member (Mr. Roche) to strike it out, and my hon. friend will do so. But, above all, let the Prime Minister enforce his declared principle which is recorded in his own words in the pages of 'Hansard.' Let the right hon. gentleman enforce this principle, I say it again, and let him declare to the people of this country that the first duty of himself and his government is to represent the people of Canada, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives, or Grits or Tories.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. Roche of Marquette).

Amendment negatived, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman propose actually going on with supply at this hour of the night ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The night is quite young.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend's idea about the night are not very creditable to his habits. My ideas of it would lead me to take the very opposite view of the situation. As we have been sitting pretty late several nights this week, I do not think it is advisable to go on with the estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have been having very entertaining discussions, but we have not been doing very much work. I hope my hon. friend will now give us a chance to do some work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know what my hon. friend calls work. We have been discussing matters of great public interest, and I would like to remind him that the fact that last evening was wasted was due entirely——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). To the teapot.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend from Victoria cannot forget that teapot. I think he is really desirous that it should be brought here and placed on the Table in order that hon. gentlemen might enjoy the benefits thereof. If it is placed there, I am sure that it will be placed near my hon. friend from Victoria, and that he will have the first opportunity to test it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think it would be well to place it in the museum.

Mr. BLAIN. Along with the hon. gentleman's certificate of superannuation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have been sitting very late, and I really think the hon. gentleman should not go on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We might take a few items. It is only half-past ten o'clock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The fact that my hon. friend cannot see exactly what time it is, is an indication——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am trusting to the opposition clock, which is perhaps unreliable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The opposition clock happens this time to agree with the government clock, which says it is twenty minutes to eleven.

Mr. FRASER. Go on ; we will have a holiday next week.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is the first time that I have known my hon. friend from Guysborough to be eager for work. I must ask, at any rate, that we should not do what we did last night—go back and do a lot of work over again.

Rivière Chateauguay—dredging, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was asked to let this item stand until I could give information as to what money had been spent on this work previously. The return shows that the work was commenced in 1875-6, and it has been continued almost every year since, the total amount spent up to the present time being $47,142.

Mr. MORIN. Is that river navigable at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that it is.

Mr. MORIN. It may be navigable for Indian canoes, but that is about all. Is it navigable for any steamer or yawl boat or ships of any kind ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend is familiar with the locality, he will know that there is a line of steamers from Lachine to Beauharnois on that river. I judge from the various expenditures made from 1875 that this is a warrantable expenditure. The dredging has to be continued, as the channel is continually filling up.

Mr. MORIN. I may say to the hon. minister that I know nothing about that river, but I know a great deal about the country generally. From the landing to the St. Lawrence the distance is very short, and I cannot see how the river can be navigable except for small boats.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. MORIN. To what extent am I mistaken, will you please tell the House ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My information is that steamers drawing six or seven feet of water are running daily on that route.

Mr. BROWN. The steamers run from Beauharnois to Chateauguay, from there to Lachine, and from there to Montreal, and return by the same route to Beauharnois.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if he has a report of the engineer with regard to this expenditure generally ? If so, what is the nature of the report ? Is it a report for work to be done during the present year, or does it cover the expenditure for several years ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is an estimate of the cost of the work for the coming year. There has been some expenditure almost every year. The information from the engineer is that the soil is sandy and the channel fills up, and so long as there is navigation on the river, the dredging will have to be done almost every season.

Mr. CLANCY. What engineer made the report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer of the department.

Mr. CLANCY. What is his name ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Lafleur.

Mr. CLANCY. There was an expenditure of a considerable sum last year. Was there a separate report for that expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that he has a report every year regarding this work.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that report set out specifically each year the character of the work to be done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All the reports received from the resident engineers must show what work is necessary and where.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says that he has a report of all the work done last year, and another one of the work proposed to be done. Will the hon. gentleman lay those reports on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly, I shall only be too pleased.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this work one which has to be repeated every year ? Does the river fill up every year and have the materials to be removed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There appears to have been done almost every year some dredging on this river.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the sum voted actually used in dredging every year ? A few days ago we were told that money voted for the purpose of dredging had been actually used in the construction of roads.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall be very pleased to have all the particulars concerning any such case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That statement was made on the vote for dredging in the lower St. Lawrence. The ex-Minister of Public Works said he had found out too late that a certain portion of the vote had been expended in the construction of roads.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall inquire into that. The money voted now will be used for the exact purpose for which it is voted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is some increase over what was voted last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $3,000 were voted last year, and I am informed by the chief engineer that this amount is really necessary, as there is a great obstruction there to navigation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This seems a considerable outlay for the purpose of accommodating one small steamer. Are there any other boats on the river and to what extent is the navigation of this river serviceable ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that there are other boats, but this is a regular line which runs daily.

Mr. MORIN. How far up the river do the boats go from the St. Lawrence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About twelve miles.

Mr. MORIN. I thought it was a small river.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the character of the work is such as to require the same expenditure every year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I find that the amounts vary. In 1875-6 the amount was $1,680. In 1883-4 it was $4,290; in 1887-8, $3,214; in 1896, $757; in 1897-8, $5,242; in 1898-9, $4,725; in 1900, $3,700; in 1901-2, $3,530.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is this river utilized for any other purposes than to accommodate a small passenger steamer ? Is there any commerce on it of any kind ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that there is a very large trade done there with Montreal.

Mr. BOYD. The hon. gentleman should be able to give some information about what that trade is when he asks for a vote of this amount. What is the volume of the trade done ? When we are asked to spend $5,000 per year in dredging this river, we ought to know what trade there is to warrant this expenditure. We have rivers in the Northwest we would like to see improved, but we can scarcely get a dollar for that purpose. $4,000 or $5,000 per year is pretty nearly all we get for public works in the Territories. And on this little river, twelve miles long, we are spending $5,000 per year.

Mr. BROWN. During the summer months at Chateauguay and Ste. Philomène, there is so much freight that this boat cannot carry it all. Three years ago the water became so low that the people did not know what they were going to do, and were it not for the dredging every year, it would be impossible for boats to touch at that point. The boat from Beauharnois touches there every morning, and that is the only shipping point in that vicinity by which the people can send provisions to Montreal.

Mr. INGRAM. Who are L. Cohen & Son ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are the proprietors of the dredge doing the work.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the Little Giant ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman tell us the capacity of the 'Little Giant' ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Six hundred yards.

Mr. INGRAM. What price does the government pay for a dredge of that capacity per hour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Eight dollars per hour.

Mr. CLANCY. Is not that a high price for a dredge of that capacity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the price that has been paid for many years.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that include scows ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that includes the whole plant.

Mr. INGRAM. Where do they dump the sand taken out of the river ? As I understand it this must be dredged every year. Does that mean that the material is dumped at a place where it will be likely to get back again ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The sand is deposited in deep water in the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. INGRAM. At what distance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About three miles.

Mr. CLANCY. How long has the dredge been at work there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer is not able to give me that information exactly. It has been there for a good many years.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose this is a case of a gentleman having what is called a soft job. I notice that in 1901 there was a vote of $6,000 taken for that work; in 1902, $3,000, and now in 1903-4, $5,000 is being asked. These are the amounts in the main estimates, probably if I examined the supplementary estimates I should find other votes as well. Certainly the government ought to be able to show that there is very important traffic on that river. The keeping up of an expenditure of this kind year after year becomes a very serious question. Here we find an average of about $5,000 a year spent for three years. There should be very important traffic to warrant such important expenditure. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) has pointed out that in the province of Manitoba, there are very pressing works there for which it does not seem possible to get a dollar, and I know of many urgent cases in Ontario. I am not trying now to raise any sectional issue. But, wherever such work is located, where so much is spent there ought to be urgent public reasons for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) might go back to 1883, 1884, and 1885, if this is an undeserving work. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is an old member of the House, and he might go back ten or fifteen years, during which nearly the same amount of money was spent from time to time on this work. Of course, that is no justification, if the work is not a proper one, but I have heard no intimation that it is not. The chief engineer informs me that the reason we are asking this amount this year is that there is a rocky shoal to be removed, which will lessen the future expenditure necessary. If that is correct, I hope the hon. gentleman will see that it is better to spend a little money and try to do the work properly than go on as we have been doing for the last twenty years, spending money and not doing any good. The chief engineer tells me that if this money is spent, the same expenditure which has gone on, the amounts which have previously been expended will not be required in the future.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the engineer will explain what was done with this $6,000 in 1901, when there is still this rock to be removed and $5,000 is being asked this year? I do not know whether that money was spent, but the vote was asked. Was it to remove part of this rock, or has the engineer discovered all of a sudden that there is this rock requiring an expenditure of $5,000 for its removal? My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is too good a business man, and too logical, when he thinks proper to be logical, to use as a justification for useless expenditures now, the statement that there were useless expenditures under the former government. I do not think we can afford to carry the mistakes of either the Liberal or the Conservative governments. We must judge our expenditures by the advantage they yield to the public. I hope the hon. gentleman will not lay down any contrary principle. Speaking for myself, I am not here to defend a single act, either deliberate or mistaken, with regard to previous expenditures in this country. It is our plain duty to see to it that the public money is expended only upon works necessary in the public interest. Now, if there is any traffic in this river, it would seem to be of a feeble character, for the hon. gentleman has not told us what it is as a justification of this expenditure. Even though the traffic is small, if this expenditure completed the work, it would be a different matter. But, if we are to go on with large expenditures year after year for no better reason than that advanced by the hon. gentleman, I venture the opinion that we have no real reason for the voting of this money at all. We have come to the time in Canada, when, so far as taking the public money for merely political purposes is concerned, we can afford to retrace our steps. If the former government has been guilty of expenditures of that kind, that is no reason why the Liberal party should pursue the same course, or why, pursuing it, they should cite the actions of their predecessors as justification for what they are doing. Our expenditures are becoming more pressing; new districts are opening up and demands are becoming greater than our revenues will meet. We have come to the time when both parties can afford to learn by the mistakes of the past. I am not making charges, but, I fear that neither side can hold themselves guiltless in this respect. I know there is always some difficulty in a government resisting pressure from the outside. I know that there are many cases that are meritorious probably while there are others in regard to which extreme pressure is brought to bear for the purpose of having an expenditure made that governments have to yield to.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said most emphatically that it was no justification for asking a vote to say that it was an improper expenditure in the past. I did not use that as an argument why the amount should be voted, but, the other night, when the subject was under discussion, I was asked by an hon. gentleman opposite how long this dredging had been done on this river, and in answering the question, I said I did not think it should be considered an improper work. I said that parliament had voted an appropriation for such a long time that it must be a justifiable work, not as the hon. member for Bothwell states, for improper or for political purposes. I may mention that the constituency was a Liberal constituency while the late Conservative government made this expenditure.

Mr. COCHRANE. Circumstances may have changed very materially.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) will say that this amount was spent for the purpose of influencing this constituency. The only argument I used was that this work, having been carried on, it was fair to assume that it was a necessary work. There has been no statement made in this House or out of it to indicate that there has been anything improper about it. I was acting on the advice of the chief engineer of the department in regard to it. I dare say that the former ministers must have asked for an appropriation for this work because they thought it was a desirable work.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works will readily conceive that circumstances may have changed. I am not talking about the political complexion of the constituency, because, in discussing these questions, we should take a broader view than that altogether. We can readily believe that in years gone by, that river was a more important means of communication for the people and their produce than it is to-day, from the fact that they may not have had railway facilities in the years gone by. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that you will agree with me that the traffic cannot be very great on a river that only serves seven or eight miles of territory. We are spending $5,000 a year. I will venture, with assurance, to say that $5,000 will carry all the commodities raised on twelve miles of river to market by railway, and I understand there is a railway crossing that river and running to Montreal. This question should be looked into. I do not know but that there was timber floating down that river in former years, for which it was important to have this dredging done. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that it was his business to have criticised the expenditures of the former administration, not ours. I venture the assertion that these expenditures were pretty severely criticised, because former governments were more severely criticised for their expenditures than the hon. gentleman and his department are by the present opposition to-day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the reason I assume the expenditure must have been all right, because, I suppose, it would have been criticised before if it had not been considered a proper expenditure.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I may say that twelve or fourteen years ago there were two steamers, the 'Filgate' and 'Chateauguay' plying between Beauharnois, Chateauguay, Lachine and Montreal. Since the building of the New York Central Railway there is a certain amount of traffic which finds its way to the railway station and goes by railway. Now, there is only one boat plying between Beauharnois, Chateauguay, Lachine and Montreal daily, carrying farmers' produce from Chateauguay and Lachine to Montreal. I may also say that the excursionists who come out to Lake St. Louis find it much more convenient to take the boat in the morning than to wait for the New York Central train which arrives at Montreal at 9.45 a.m. The boat often finds itself unable to take all the trade that is offered, and in fact it would almost pay to put another boat on the route.

Mr. INGRAM. Who owns the boat?

Mr. BROWN. It is owned by a company. I cannot tell you who are the owners. It is called the 'Chateauguay.'

Mr. INGRAM. Can you tell us the tonnage of the boat?

Mr. BROWN. I cannot tell you that.

Mr. INGRAM. Can you tell us the draft of the boat, or anything about it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That information has already been given.

Mr. INGRAM. It draws six feet of water, I am told. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown) has told us that this steamboat is used for the purposes of certain citizens of Montreal in going up and down the river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, that was not the statement I made.

Mr. INGRAM. No, but that was the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Nor did my hon. friend (Mr. Brown) say so. He said that it was used by excursionists.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. member for Chateauguay make himself plain on that point?

Mr. BROWN. The steamboat 'Chateauguay' takes people from Chateauguay and St. Philippe. There is a large amount of produce shipped from these points. The New York Central will not place cars on their train to accommodate the people there, and they send their produce by this boat in the early morning. It is for the accommodation of the farmers, and the boat can hardly carry all the produce which is offered to it in the morning. Sometimes five or six loads of hay and 300 barrels of apples have to remain on the wharf for two or three days.

Mr. CLANCY. What class of produce is being sent from there now that so completely overtaxes the capacity of the boat?

Mr. BROWN. Hay, at this season of the year.

Mr. GEOFFRION. I may say that there are not only boats carrying passengers from these points. There are tow boats taking barges. There is a very great amount of hay shipped to Montreal from that locality. There are fruits, and there is a great amount of other trade taken from points which are not served by the railways. I am not so familiar with the locality as the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Brown), but I know for a fact that tug boats are going there, getting barges and taking them to Montreal loaded with grain and hay. The people of these parishes who are not served by the railways are obliged to bring their hay and load it on these barges. There is a large amount of freight coming out of this twelve miles of territory, not six miles, as some hon. gentleman has stated. There are twelve miles of that river that must be dredged, and if it is not dredged, we will have to close up the river, which would preclude the people of several parishes from sending their freight to the city of Montreal, for instance, fruit. Without a railroad these people could not ship their fruit. I think this is absolutely necessary. I suppose it must have been taken into consideration by the late government, and rightly so. That work must be done every year, or else the river must be closed to navigation, to the great detriment of these people.

Mr. MORIN. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has just said. But I want to repeat what I have always said in this House that the government are neglecting some other places. There is the New York Central Railway running from Montreal through that and other localities, and there is the other road called the Adirondacks, which goes up into that country.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is the same road.

Mr. MORIN. Well, if you don't know I do. Of course it is very handy to have a railroad built through every parish, by every church door and to every farmer's house, I admit that. But why is it that in the county of Dorchester the government has never given one cent to build a railroad, the only road we have there is the Quebec Central. People have subscribed and given money and labour to build a road. I must tell you this much, that we have from fifty to seventy-five miles to go to the city of Quebec and we have to haul our stuff with horses. We have been asking ever since I have been in this parliament—nearly seven years—for help from this government to build not in the county of Dorchester, but in the county of Beauce, nine miles of road. This nine miles of road would serve over 19,000 people in the counties of Beauce, Dorchester and Bellechasse. Yet I have failed to obtain one cent of help from the government to accommodate the people of these three counties. The people of Bellechasse have to haul forty miles, the people of Beauce have to haul thirty or forty miles, and the people of Dorchester, thirty or thirty-five miles in order to get to a railroad. We have never asked the government for any help except to build that nine miles of road. There is not a bridge to be built on the route, it is an easy route to build upon, yet we are refused assistance. I have worked for this road ever since I came to this House. I have tried to get both members from the county of Beauce to work for it. I do not know whether they have or not, but they tell me they have. I say plainly to this House it is a shame for the government to treat one county better than another. We all help to support this government with our money, and we should be treated alike, if not alike, then as nearly so as possible. Now, I would like any one, young or old, rich or poor, to show me where or when this government has ever paid one cent or one dollar towards helping the people in the county of Dorchester. We built a court house, the county built it. A few years ago I asked the ex-Minister of Public Works to give us $200 for a county bridge; not one cent did I get.

Mr. BUREAU. Was it the Minister of Public Works for the Dominion or for the local House that you asked for assistance?

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Israel Tarte, the hon. member for Montreal, was the gentleman.

Mr. GEOFFRION. For a court-house in your county?

Mr. MORIN. No, for a bridge. I see there is an ice pier to be built at Richmond, well we will see about that soon. We have rivers running through my county as big as the St. Francis river at Richmond, logs are floated on that river, on both rivers. Neither one of them is navigable. Here is an item for a pier, but when I ask for $200 to build a county bridge, after four bridges had been washed away and the people got tired of building, I was refused. I suppose if I had been a Liberal I might have got it; but I was not, and I will not be.

Harbours and rivers, Quebec, chargeable to capital.—River St. Lawrence ship canal, $515,800.

Mr. INGRAM. I think, in view of the lateness of the hour, and that some representatives from Quebec who wished to discuss this item are absent, we had better adjourn.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps the proper thing to do would be to accede to the request of the hon. gentleman. At the same time, I think some little consideration should be shown to the minister. This is the fifth or sixth time this vote has been called and asked to stand on account of the absence of one or two members. While I would be willing always to wait for an absent member, I think there ought to be some reasonable consideration shown to the public business. I ask my hon. friend if it is not right, after the item has been postponed several times at the request of hon. gentlemen opposite, that at last we should get down to business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am bound to agree with the hon. the minister to this extent, that I think perhaps there is too much of a habit on both sides of the House to spend only a small portion of Friday in Ottawa. The result of that habit, which is not peculiar to either one side or the other, and which has been in force for many years, is that we practically have only about three days in the week to do our work. I for one would be very glad if some change would be made in that respect, so that we should have five days to do the work.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want to point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, that the delay in getting through with his estimates has been the result of matters requiring to be brought to the attention of the House with the perfectly fair object of having them discussed. For example, the day before yesterday we discussed the Treadgold concession, and although we may differ in opinion about it, no one will say that it was not a proper matter to be discussed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To-day we have been discussing an important matter brought before us by my hon. friend from Marquette. Yesterday the minister would have got into supply and probably substantial progress would have been made, were it not for a cause which was not in any way due to members on this side of the House, and on account of which the time was taken up with matters which were not very profitable to the country or to any of us. While I agree that there is some force in the hon. minister's remarks, still I want him to remember the circumstances which I have brought to his notice. It is a fair proposition that some day should be fixed for the discussion of these items, and that the House would be so notified. If he will communicate to me now, or at any later time, his views with regard to that, he will find us disposed to give him an opportunity to have the items discussed in the committee, and discussed in such a way that he will not be brought here from day to day; although as a matter of fact, I suppose we are entitled to his presence in the House during a considerable portion of the time. In any case, it is always a great pleasure to have the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I agree that it is my duty to be here all the time, and I am perfectly willing to discharge that duty. I think, however, that these gentlemen who asked for three or four adjournments should remain here as well as the rest of us. No doubt there ought to be given a reasonable time to discuss the estimates.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. gentleman who kept us all day yesterday discussing the teapot, has not been in the House to-night.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was the absence of one or two members who asked items to stand, that I spoke of. That is hardly fair to the rest of us. They are absent on their own pleasure or business and they should not prevent us from carrying on the business of the House. If I ask the House to sit a little late some night when these gentlemen are present, I hope no objection will be taken.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11.30 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 18, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 177) respecting the Klondike Mines Railway Company.—Mr. McIsaac.

BRITISH-COLONIAL PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question. In a notable speech made a day or two ago by the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, the following appears, according to a despatch in the Ottawa 'Citizen':

> The colonial secretary proceeded strongly to urge the necessity in order to preserve the great empire that the trade of the colonies should be secured. Canada had offered exceptional advantages, he said, which Great Britain did not dare accept because of the narrow interpretation of the doctrine of free trade, the policy of dictation, and interference by foreign powers, Mr. Chamberlain said he was justified by the belief that Great Britain was so wedded to its fiscal system that it could not defend its colonies. This was a position not intended by the pioneers of free trade who, if they were alive to-day would agree to a treaty of preference and reciprocity with the empire's children. The speaker said he believed that an entirely wrong interpretation had been placed upon the doctrine of free trade but that the country ought not to be bound by this and it should not hesitate to resort to retaliation if necessary wherever the interests between colonies and the home country were threatened.

The Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain refers to two things: first, that Canada had made very exceptional offers to England in regard to a mutual preferential trade; the other is that England desires to defend her colonies in case of their being attacked commercially by foreign countries. I wish to ask the government if they are prepared to lay a memorandum of these offers on the Table of the House or to take the Canadian parliament into their confidence, and give us information as to what these offers were? That I think we are entitled to. I also wish to ask whether any correspondence is being carried on with the imperial government with regard to the threatened action of Germany; and, if so, are the government prepared to give this House any information regarding it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In answer to the first portion of my hon. friend's question, I may say that we have already taken the House into our confidence on the subject, for the offer which was made to the British government of a further preference as between British and foreign manufactures, is published in the Conference Blue-book as an imperial paper, to which access is easily had, and the memo. was fully read by myself in the budget speech. My hon. friend will find in that speech the offer we made the imperial authorities at the colonial conference.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the only offer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. With regard to the second part of my hon. friend's question, we have had no recent correspondence with the imperial government on the action of Germany.

Mr. J. CHARLTON (North Norfolk). I would ask whether the attention of the government has been called to the alleged intention of the German government to unload upon this country a supply of ex-convicts? The action recently taken by the United States with regard to the deportation of criminals followed by this report that the German government intends sending this class of immigrants to Canada, impels me to ask whether the government are giving the subject any attention.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We have received no official information that the German authorities contemplate any such policy. If we found that the German authorities were attempting such a policy, we would take immediate action to repeal it. My impression is that we have sufficient power, under existing laws, to deal with such a question, but if our powers should not be adequate, we shall have no hesitation in asking parliament to supplement them.

PRIVATE BILLS.

NEW CANADIAN COMPANY, LIMITED.

House in committee on Bill (No. 83) to incorporate the New Canadian Company, Limited.—Mr. Lemieux.

On section 1,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the necessity of declaring that this work is for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The company intend establishing a steamship company whose steamers will ply between England and Gaspé.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Although this is said to be a foreign company, I do not see the necessity of our declaring that this work is for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have consulted the officers of the Department of Justice on that point. The Bill had already passed the House and was referred back, at the request of the hon. Minister of Justice, in order that some informalities might be remedied. The officers of the department gave No. 53 Vic., Chap. 104, and 84 Vic., Chap. 186, as precedents for this very clause, in the case of other English companies doing business in this country.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The declaration may be necessary to bring under the jurisdiction of the Dominion a work which would otherwise be purely local or provincial. But I do not think that it is at all necessary that we should assume all the jurisdictions and powers of a local government even to grant a charter to a corporation to do this particular kind of work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). There were two considerations that entered into the matter in connection with this declaration when the Bill was before the Railway Commission. In the first place, the company is given power to carry on an ocean steamship business to foreign ports, and it was thought that possibly a question might be raised as to the power of this parliament to pass such legislation. Therefore this clause was inserted. There is also a clause providing for the construction of tramways and other works, which come within the general definition of railways in the Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are these supplementary to the powers the company has as a corporation in Great Britain? If I understand rightly, this Bill gives them all the powers they have as a corporated company in Great Britain, plus the large powers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it gives them all the powers they have obtained under the English Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As the clause read at first, they had all these powers, but these were restricted by the amendment.

On section 4,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The company seems to have two different entities—one in Great Britain, under which it has powers to issue bonds and debentures, and we are now giving it another set of powers in this Act. Under which entity is it to have existence here? In this Bill we do not do away with the power of the English corporation and give it entirely a new set.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman will read the second clause as it originally was, he will see that they would have special powers and also all the powers they had under their charter in England. But, under these amendments their powers are restricted and they have only the special powers which are enumerated in the Bill. And, of course, they cannot go beyond what they have in this charter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Under this Bill the company is 'declared a body politic and corporate within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada; and that this Act and the Company's Clauses Act shall apply to the company and its undertaking instead of said Company's Acts of Great Britain.' It is an entirely different entity in Great Britain. The law of Great Britain applies to it over there as to the issuing of bonds, debentures, &c. The company in Canada has its powers and the company in Great Britain has its powers. That is what I say.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATED TRUST CORPORATION.

House in committee on Bill (No. 121) to incorporate the Consolidated Trust Corporation.—Mr. McColl.

On section 12,

Mr. MONK. There is something strange about this clause. It enacts that the :

Moneys, properties and securities received or held by the corporations upon trust or as agent shall not be liable for the debts or obligations of the corporation.

Still, it would seem that one of the debts or obligations of the corporation is receiving money on trust. The clause worded in this way seems to be anomalous. We ought to add, at any rate, that the moneys received on trust by the corporation shall be liable for the payment of the trust.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The purpose is, whether it is clearly expressed or not, that these trust funds shall be liable to the trustees and not for the general purposes of the corporation. If they have not expressed that, I have no doubt that is what they intended.

On section 18,

Mr. MONK. Does the minister think that this is a very wise provision ? We provide in section 18 :

The powers and authority hereby granted to the corporation shall not have any force or effect in any province in any respect in which they are inconsistent with the laws of such province.

I am afraid there are a great many provisions in this Bill which are at variance with the ordinary law respecting trusts in our own province, but still, when we have a trustee I do not think we should put that limitation upon the company's powers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it will probably be understood to mean that inasmuch as the management of trusts is a matter coming under the authority of the provincial law this Act can affect only them in so far as the provincial law will permit it. We cannot regulate ordinary trustees. This happens to belong to the class of subjects in which there is both provincial and Dominion authority—provincial authority as to the regulation of the trust, and Dominion authority as to the regulation of the company. A trustee is only permitted under provincial authority to invest his money in certain directions, and this Bill could not change that authority. I think that is what they are particularly aiming at.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF WILLIAM FRANCIS SCHOOLEY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 128) for the relief of William Francis Schooley.—Mr. Boyd.

On the preamble,

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the reporting of this Bill. I notice that according to the allegations of the Bill the former wife of Mr. Schooley abandoned him fourteen years ago, that she obtained a decree of divorce in one of the American states eleven years ago and that she married in the state of Michigan five years ago. These statements, assuming them to be facts, and as such they appear upon the record, would entitle Mr. Schooley to a divorce beyond question, but I rise to point out the imperfection of our law in regard to the granting of decrees of divorce. Mr. Schooley lives in Manitoba. The business of prosecuting this suit in Ottawa is one that would involve very serious expense. If Mr. Schooley was entitled to relief under our laws he has been subjected to a hardship, and to a cost in this matter that would seem to be unjustifiable, and I rise to point out that in cases where the law provides a remedy, in cases where the circumstances warrant the granting of divorce some more speedy and less expensive method should be adopted. If Mr. Schooley had been permitted to appeal in this case to a judge in Manitoba near at hand, if this case had been tried before a divorce judge, and a court could be established without additional cost by merely putting that additional duty upon the judges there, he could have obtained his relief speedily and he could have obtained it at small cost. He has been debarred for five years from making this attempt which he is now making to get justice to which he is entitled. In all of these proceedings we are pursuing a course which is entirely unjustifiable, a course which is expensive and one which in many cases, I have no doubt, prevents people who are entitled to relief from obtaining that relief because of the difficulties attending this course of procedure, because of the expense of coming from a distant province to the capital of the country and of the attendant expense and worry of prosecuting this appeal.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOYD moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate to return to that House the evidence, &c., taken before the Standing Committee of the Senate, to whom was referred the Bill No. 128 (letter B of the Senate), intituled : 'An Act for the relief of William Francis Schooley.'

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Speaker, I think, before that motion is put, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) having made some reference to the subject of divorce, it does seem to me that the law as it now stands is a rich man's law as against the poor man. I think where the case is such as the hon. gentleman has described, and as the evidence bears out a more reasonable method ought to be adopted whereby a man might be placed in a position to secure a divorce at less cost than the applicant now before the House has been subjected to. I think the government ought to be in a position to make some kind of statement in reply to the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk. This is a very important question. I, for one, do not wish to encourage the granting of divorces, but at the same time a circumstance of this kind is one that should be considered and no undue hardship should be placed upon a man who has been so unfortunate as this man has been.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Mr. Speaker, I think this is a case that ought to appeal to the sense of the House. The very fact of a man having to come down to the Senate here all the way from Manitoba is evidence to the House that there should be some better way of dealing with divorces than exists in the Dominion at the present time. This case would be settled in about half a day by a judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. I think that public opinion will in time compel the government to do something so that people will not be put to this expense. If this were a poor man he would have been obliged to exist without any redress all his lifetime, but because he is in good circumstances he is enabled to come down and seek redress through this—I was going to say—inhuman channel of obtaining it. In all cases if any British subject is aggrieved there should be some way of obtaining redress and that as quickly as possible.

Motion agreed to.

SAULT ST. LOUIS LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 113) to incorporate the Sault St. Louis Light and Power Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

On section 7,

Mr. SPROULE. You give them the right to do a great many things, some of which are necessary to carry on their undertaking, but others would be quite independent of the undertaking. You do not make any distinction. We seem to give them rights whether for the purpose of their undertaking or not. It seems to me we should not go so far as that.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. This is simply a copy of the Bill which you have been passing here for years in favour of similar companies. There is no change in the usual phraseology. If you give these powers to other companies, I suppose there is no reason why you should not give them to this company.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

ERIE, ONTARIO POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Erie, Ontario Power Company.—Mr. German.

On section 15.

Mr. SPROULE. We put into another Bill a few minutes ago a clause to protect the rights of municipalities by imposing on the company the conditions laid down by the municipality in the by-law. If that was necessary in the other Bill, it should be here.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I beg to move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again, in order to amend that clause.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CANADIAN NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 143) respecting the Canadian North-west Irrigation Company.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 4,

Mr. CHARLTON. This covers a rather extensive area.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I can see no good reason why the area should not be as extensive as described here for the purposes of irrigation and canals and other useful works. If the work is useful, it will be useful throughout a large area.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is right. I do not think we should stop the Bill on account of the extent of the area unless it gives exclusive rights, which I do not think this does.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not wish to insist upon the point I have raised, asking for information, but it strikes me really that this is a very indefinite definition of the territory covered by this Bill, and of the powers of the company. It clearly covers one degree of latitude a distance of seventy miles, and all west of the one hundred and tenth degree of west longitude. This is an enormous area. They can operate through to the Pacific ocean if they desire to go so far. When we are granting powers of this indefinite and general character, we ought to have information as to the object of the company. I do not wish to obstruct the passage of the Bill, but I do not suppose it would interfere with its progress to have it lie over until we have more definite information.

Mr. McCARTHY. What does the minister say is meant by the expression here 'and other purposes'? It seems to go further than is necessary for an irrigation company.

This might turn out to be a waterworks company.

Mr. COCHRANE. The promoters of the Bill claimed that the object was to use the water for milling and other purposes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There cannot be an objection to allowing the water to be used for any purpose. If you are giving them the powers to make the canals and take the water, why not use it for fire purposes, for milling purposes or any other ?

Mr. COCHRANE. This matter was brought in question in the committee that considered this Bill. The river, in this case, I understand is Milk river. It flows through a section which this company intends to irrigate. But they might utilize the water so as to prevent it flowing on for the benefit of a part of the country which is now irrigated naturally by the river. This is arid so far as the production of cereals is concerned, but I understand that it is good grazing country. I think it is a very serious question whether we should allow one company to control all the water in the river, and, perhaps, so lessen the flow of the river as to deprive the settlers who have taken up the land for ranching purposes, of water for their cattle.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) would be right in his conclusions if his premises were sound.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would ask the hon. minister to tell me in what way they are not sound ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was just going to call attention to that point. In the first place, this Bill does not confer any exclusive right. It is open to parliament to incorporate as many irrigation companies as it pleases for that territory. We have not deprived ourselves of the jurisdiction merely because we give this company the right to construct these canals and irrigate a portion of the territory. Moreover, we do not give to this company the power to divert the waters of the rivers. The only way in which they can take property which they do not buy by private contract, is by availing themselves of the expropriation powers contained in the General Railway Act, and I cannot conceive of their expropriating a river. I know they would not get permission to divert a river or deflect it. That is not a supposable case.

Mr. COCHRANE. We are not supposing anything. But the understanding in the committee was that they had power under the Bill to take the water out of the river for the purposes of the company. If not, what use is the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not the power to divert or deflect the river.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not say they had. But they might so diminish the quantity in the river that it might be useless for a part of the section of the country through which it flows.

Mr. CHARLTON. Under section 7, of the Act, it provides that 'The company may draw from rivers and other waters, the waters necessary for the purposes of the company.' That is rather unlimited power.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not read the whole Bill, and I think it did not come before the Railway Committee.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, it came before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Railway Committee had a Bill of this kind before it a year or two ago, and I think we went into it pretty carefully, and provided what we thought were the necessary safeguards. I cannot answer for this Bill, for I had not seen the Bill until this moment. I can see that some of the clauses, as for instance, clause 6, would need to be materially altered. But I do not see any objection to the conferring of powers given under section 4.

On section 5,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This section has been amended so as to read as follows :

The company may acquire and dispose of lands in the district within which the company is authorized to operate, provided that the total quantity of land to be held by the company at any one time shall not exceed two thousand square miles.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is it a land company as well ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not referring to the quantity of land—I do not know whether two thousand square miles would be deemed an excessive quantity or not—it is to be noted that this company asks to be incorporated for irrigation purposes and not to be created with the powers of a land company. But under this clause they would be authorized to deal in lands. Certainly, the section is defective in that way. It ought to be provided that the company may acquire the lands necessary for the purposes for which the company is authorized, and may dispose of lands which it does not require for those purposes. We always give such power.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would say to the minister that it goes a good deal further than that, as I understand it. The promoters say that there are lands higher than the waters to be taken by the company would enable them to irrigate. They want to get control of all the lands; then, they could irrigate a certain portion of every lot—say fifteen, twenty or thirty acres for each two hundred acre lot—thus providing an area in which cereals and vegetables could be grown, but enabling them to sell the whole lot.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The Bill does not seem to grow less magnificent in conception as it is more carefully looked at. First, this is an irrigation company. Then they come with immense additional powers, asking to be allowed to buy and own any lands they please between two parallels of latitude. Then if you go further on to section 12:

The company may acquire the stock, shares, bonds or other evidences of indebtedness created by other companies and may distribute them amongst its shareholders.

That is, they can own companies, even railways, unless the Railway Act will prevent it. Finally, I think we are entitled to information from the hon. gentleman who has the Bill in charge, but who is not in the House. I have noticed that in the case of nearly all the Bills we had up to-day, the promoters were not present with the exception of two. I think that is all wrong, and contrary to practice. If there is any reason why we should grant anything like these powers, the hon. gentleman who represents the district and who has charge of the Bill should be here to give us some explanation. I move that the commitee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would say to my hon. friend that I think I understand the object of the Bill. It is for the purpose of irrigating a section of land which was granted to a railway company from Lethbridge to the boundary, of which Mr. Gault was the proprietor. A portion of that land was sold to the Mormon settlement near Milk river. They have irrigation works there which are a credit to the North-west Territories and a benefit to the people, and the land there is flourishing now in consequence. This company was formed to take over the rest of the land for the purpose of irrigating it and selling it to the actual settlers. The object of the company seems to be a bona fide one, and a worthy one, namely, the development of that section of the country. I cannot understand what objection there can be to the Bill. It is clear from what I understand, that the object of the Bill is to authorize the taking over of these lands which were granted to this coal company of which Mr. Gault was the president, an English company, for the purpose of irrigating that portion of the land and selling it to actual settlers. The land as it is now is entirely worthless, but when irrigated it will become valuable, and will be sold to settlers. As my hon. friend says, the promoter of the Bill ought to be here to explain it to us. We know nothing about it, and we have a right to explanations.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The promoter of the Bill (Mr. Oliver) is sick in hospital, and has been for some weeks.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In the absence of the promoter of the Bill, I think the committee had better rise.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 88) respecting the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of the city of Montreal, and to change its name to 'The Montreal and Quebec Fire Insurance Company.'—Mr. LaRivière.

Bill (No. 90) respecting the Niagara-Welland Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'The Niagara-Welland Power Company.'—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill No. 91) to incorporate the Dominion Gas Improvement Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 92) respecting the Dominion Burglary Guarantee Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'The Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.'—Mr. Bickerdike.

QUESTIONS.

POST OFFICE AT L'ASSOMPTION.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. What are the dimensions of the site acquired by the government for the new post office at L'Assomption?
2. Who recommended the selection of said site to the government?
3. Were any other sites but the present one suggested to the government?
4. What is the estimated cost of the new building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Hon. James Sutherland):

1. Sixty-seven feet by ninety feet.
2. Correspondence does not show.
3. Yes.
4. Contract price $10,150.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Who is the superintendent of works in connection with the construction of the new post office at L'Assomption, and what is his business?
2. What remuneration does he receive for his services.
3. What is the total amount paid to said superintendent to date?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Hon. James Sutherland):

1. (a) Louis Brouillet. (b) Do not know.
2. Seventy-five dollars per month.
3. One hundred and twelve dollars and fifty cents to 1st May, 1903.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. At what date did the government purchase from Vital Racette a portion of lot No. 165 on the official plan of L'Assomption ?
2. What price was paid for the lot so purchased ?
3. Is the government aware that it has paid for that portion of lot No. 165 the same price that had been paid, some time previously, for the entire lot ?
4. Is the government aware that the person who sold that portion of lot No. 165 secured a profit of $950 by the transaction ?
5. What is the name of the notary who carried out the transaction for the government and before whom the deeds were passed ?
6. To whom was the purchase price paid ?
7. Is there any correspondence in regard to this purchase and to the post office site, between the government and Vital Racette, Phineas Viger, Rodolphe Arbour, C. Laurier, M.P., Mr. Joseph Ed. Duhamel ?
8. Has the government received any petitions protesting against the choice made of a site for the post office ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. December 23rd, 1901.
2. One thousand one hundred and fifty dollars.
3. No.
4. No.
5. Joseph E. Duhamel.
6. The cheque in payment was made in favour of Vital Racette and J. E. Duhamel, the agent of the Department of Justice.
7. Yes, from Vital Racette and Joseph E. Duhamel.
8. Yes, one petition dated 21st March, 1903, recommending change of site.

A contract had, however, been made on the 1st December, 1902, for the construction of the building on site first selected.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT AT WEST LORNE.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the verdict, or is the government aware of the fact, that the coroner's jury empanelled to inquire into the cause of the railway accident which occurred at West Lorne, Ontario, on the 29th day of April, 1903, as a result of which three trainmen were killed, have returned the following verdict :—' That Thomas Luton, John McNeil, and John Elgar, on the 29th day of April, at the unincorporated village of West Lorne, came to their deaths as a result of a rear end collision between two trains on the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway. And we find that the said collision was caused by the culpable neglect of the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company, in not adopting a proper system as to the running of their trains, and of not furnishing and supplying to their trainmen proper rules, so intelligible to their employees that no misunderstanding could arise as to the duties of their trainmen. We further recommend that semaphores be forthwith constructed on the said railway, at proper distances from the station.
2. In view of the foregoing verdict, is it the intention of the government to forthwith institute a full and exhaustive inquiry, on oath, into the causes which culminated in the accident above referred to ? And if it shall appear, after such inquiry, that the verdict of the said coroner's jury was justified by the facts, is it the intention of the government to proceed against, or to cause to be proceeded against, the responsible officials of the said company, who are declared to have been guilty of culpable neglect, as a result of which the three trainmen above named were killed ?
3. Has the government yet been able to find an individual possessing the precise qualifications that would enable him to act for and on behalf of the government, in conducting full and exhaustive inquiries and investigations into the causes of railway accidents which may occur in Canada from time to time ?
4. If no such individual has yet been found, what steps, if any, are the government taking to secure the services of such an individual ?
5. Were the rules under which the trains of the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company are operated in Canada, submitted to and approved by the government ; and if so, on what date were such rules authorized by the government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The attention of the government has not been called to the verdict of the jury in the case mentioned, but if the facts are as stated in the question, it would appear to devolve upon the provincial authorities, as charged with the administration of criminal justice, to take any action which might be proper in the premises.

The government has not yet been able to select a person possessing the precise qualifications for taking charge of investigations in case of railway accidents, but are on the alert to secure just such a person as is required.

In the meantime a temporary appointment has been made, and an investigation held in the case of the Windsor Junction collision on the Intercolonial Railway.

I am informed that no rules were submitted by the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company for the approval of the government.

FRUIT SHIPMENTS IN COLD STORAGE.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth)—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. What value of fruit was shipped to Europe in cold storage in each of the calendar years 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902 ?
2. What value of fruit was shipped in cooled chambers to Europe in seasons 1901 and 1902, respectively ?
3. In what steamers, other than cold storage steamers, were thermographs placed by the agents of the government ; and in what compartments, other than cold storage compartments, if any, during the season of 1902 ?
4. How many thermograph readings have been taken and now in possession of the Department of Agriculture (a) of temperature in cold storage chambers ; (b) temperature in cooled chambers ; (c) temperature in ventilated chambers ; (d) temperature in other parts of vessels unventilated ; (e) temperature on deck of steamers ?
5. In what further steamers were cooling plants placed in the season of 1902, if any ?

6. In what further steamers were mechanical ventilating plants placed in season of 1902, if any ?

7. How much money has the government advanced to date as bonus, or subsidy, to steamship companies, to induce them to put in ventilating apparatus, to enable them to carry in better condition perishable cargo, since 1896 ?

8. How much to induce them to put in cooling plans, since 1896 ?

9. How much to induce them to put in cold storage plants, since 1896 ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It would be impossible to give at this time a satisfactory answer to this question so as to convey the information sought for. I would ask my hon. friend to move for a return.

CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES AND GUARANTEE COMPANIES.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Are the funds deducted from the salaries of civil service employees, for guarantee, accumulating with the government ; or are they paid over to guarante companies ?

2. If the funds are in the hands of the government, what do they now amount to ? And what was the amount in premiums paid in during the last fiscal year ?

3. If the funds are paid to guarantee companies, what are the names of such companies ; and what amount we paid to each such company during the last fiscal year ?

4. Have any claims arisen on the guarantee companies during the past fiscal year ; and if so, what is the amount of such claims ?

5. Are there any disputed claims ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I will give the answer as regards the Post Office Department :

Civil service employees in the Post Office Department are insured by the department direct under the assessment principle. The former guarantee system was bonds from guarantee companies or private citizens, the bonds of three different guarantee companies being accepted. Upon the establishment of the assessment system the department for a time maintained sub-insurance with these three companies, the amount of which, however, has gradually diminished. The total amount paid for such insurance for the last fiscal year was $151.75, the Guarantee Company of North America being the company in question. Nothing was paid to any other company. The total accumulations from assessments of civil service employees amounted on the 14th instant to $7,019. The total amount of such assessments for the last fiscal year was $1,913.30. No claims in respect of civil service employees have arisen against any guarantee company during the past fiscal year and no claims are in dispute.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). In regard to employees in the Custom service :

1. The funds deducted from the salaries of Customs' employees for guarantee, are paid over to guarantee companies half yearly at the end of June and December.

3. The names of the guarantee companies and the amounts paid to each for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1902, are as follows : Dominion of Canada Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company, $1,650.30 ; Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, $906.60 ; London Guarantee and Accident Company, Limited, $890.25 ; Guarantee Company of North America, $899.85.

4. The claims made on the guarantee companies during the past fiscal year (exclusive of any otherwise paid) were $2,264.27.

5. The guarantee companies have not disputed any claims.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). So far as relates to North-West Mounted Police :

1. Paid over to the guarantee companies.

2. Amount paid in premiums last fiscal year, $341.86.

3.

Guarantee Company of North America.. ..	$311 86
Dominion of Canada Guarantee and Accident Company....	30 00
		$341 86

4. No.

5. No.

PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Monk—asked :

1. Does the deed of transfer by the Ursuline Nuns, of Quebec, to the government or to the city of Quebec, of the Plains of Abraham, contain a provision, in virtue of which the said plains may be used for military parades, reviews, manœuvres, &c.?

2. In the negative, has any other contract or agreement been entered into with the city of Quebec, providing for such use ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) :

1. No.

2. Yes.

BREAKWATER, SUMMERSIDE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Has the government stopped the work on the breakwater at Summerside, Prince Edward Island ?

2. Who were the contractors for said work, and what was the contract price ?

3. How much of the work has been completed, and what amount has been expended therefor?

4. Have the plans and specifications for said work proved practical and satisfactory ; and have the contractors found them workable ?

5. Have the stone and other materials in the work now completed complied with the plans and specifications ?

6. Is it the intention of the government to complete this work ; and if not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. No.

2. (a) McDonald and Moffatt (b) $55,900.

3. The amount paid on account of work is to date, $3,110; the work done represents about 250 feet in length, this near shore end.

4. Yes, as far as department is concerned; the contractors have desired to suggest changes, there was nothing in writing, suggestions were verbal.

5. No, the stone has not.

6. The matter is receiving consideration.

LIGHTING OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS, OTTAWA.

Mr. ROSAMOND—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. From whom does the government obtain the supply of electric current for lighting the public buildings in Ottawa?

2. From whom does the government obtain the supply of electric current for running certain elevators in certain of the public buildings in Ottawa?

3. Is there a contract for the supply of light? If so, with whom? What is the price paid? What is the date of the contract? And when does it expire?

4. Is there a contract for the supply of power? If so, with whom? What is the price paid? What is the date of the contract, and when does it expire?

5. Has a contract been entered into for supplying electric power required for the elevator being installed in the post office in Ottawa? If so, what is the price? What is the date of the contract, and when does it expire?

6. Has a contract been given for supply of electric current for Experimental Farm buildings? If so, what is the price paid; the date of contract; and when does it expire?

7. Were tenders invited for supplying power for the Ottawa post office elevator? If so, from whom?

8. Were tenders invited for supply of electric current for Experimental Farm buildings? If so, from whom?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland):

1. Ottawa Electric Company.

2. Ottawa Electric Company.

3. Yes, with the Ottawa Electric Company. The price is $2.25 per lamp per annum, for the first 3,000 lamps and $2 per lamp for the balance, date of contract, 19th January, 1898, made for one year, renewable.

4. No, a fixed rate of $40 per annum per kilo watt, has been agreed upon with the Ottawa Electric Company by the chief architect.

5. Yes, $300 per annum, 24th April, 1903, during pleasure, which is considered by chief architect a low figure. Motor is twenty horse power.

6. Not by this department.

7. A tender was asked from the Ottawa Electric Company.

8. Same as No. six.

BRIGADE CAMP AT SUSSEX, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

Is it the intention of the government to hold a brigade camp at Sussex, N.B., this year? If so, will it be a summer or a fall camp? And what corps will be called out for drill?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). It is the intention of the government to hold a brigade camp at Sussex this fall. The list of corps to be called out will be published in due course.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSIONS.

Copies of the correspondence exchanged between the Dominion government and that of the province of Quebec regarding the following claims produced by the latter:—

1. $1,425,855.00, being the share of the province of Quebec in the indemnity paid by the United States government as a compensation for the advantages accorded to American fishermen.

2. $490,000, indemnity due to the province of Quebec for leases and licenses granted by the federal government to fish in the interior and salt waters within the limits of the said province.—Mr. Lemieux.

Copy of all documents whatsoever relating to the commutation of the sentence of death pronounced against Joseph A. Mathurin; including therein the report of the judge who presided at the trial; the permission of the judge for the production of such report having been obtained.—Mr. Lavergne by Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure).

Copies of all papers, letters, telegrams or other documents, relating to the purchase of land for a drill shed in the town of Woodstock, N.B. And also, copies of all papers, letters, telegrams or other documents, relating to the construction of a drill shed on said land.—Mr. Hale, by Mr. Sproule.

Copy of receipt given for price of acquisition of site of new post office at L'Assomption; copies of all cheques issued in payment of any sums expended in connection with the purchase of site of said new post office, or expenses connected therewith.—Mr. Monk.

Copies of all letters addressed to the government by Rodolphe Arbour, Phineas Viger, Vital Racette, Joseph Ed. Duhamel, Charlemagne Laurier, M.P., and all answers thereto, in respect to a new post office for the town of L'Assomption, in regard to the contract for the acquisition of a post office site. Also a copy of the contract of sale; copies of tenders for building said post office, and of all reports sent in by the architect, in reference to said site and new building.—Mr. Monk.

Statement setting forth:—

1. The quantity of refined sugar imported into Canada from the 1st of January to the 31st December, 1902.

2. The quantity of raw sugar imported during the same period; and giving the name of the country whence such sugar was imported.—Mr. Madore by Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure).

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT, 1900—AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 15) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.—Mr. Clancy.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I wish to substitute the following for section 1 of the Bill:

1. Section 112 of the Dominion Elections Act, chapter 12, of the statutes of 1900, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor :

112. Every one who, directly or indirectly by himself or by any other person on his behalf, makes use of, or threatens to make use of, any force, violence, or restraint, or inflicts, or threatens the infliction by himself, or by or through any other person, of any injury, damage, harm or loss, or in any manner practices intimidation upon or against any person, in order to induce or compel such person to vote for any candidate, or to refrain from voting, or on account of such person having voted for any candidate or refrained from voting, at an election, or who by abduction, duress, or any false or fradulent pretense, device or contrivance, impedes, prevents or otherwise interferes with, the free exercise of the franchise of any voter, or thereby compels, or induces or prevails upon, any voter either to vote for any candidate or to refrain from voting at an election, shall be deemed to have committed the offence of undue influence, and is guilty of an indictable offence, and shall in addition to any penalty thereby incurred, forfeit the sum of $200 to any person who sues therefor, with costs.

2. It shall be deemed a false pretense within the meaning of this section to represent to a voter, directly or indirectly, that the ballot to be used, or the mode of voting at the election is not secret.'

I think that carries out the intention of my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. CLANCY. I think that meets my view.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 39) to make further provision for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—Mr. Brock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I did not happen to be present when this Bill was called the other day, and I understand that the matter was referred to by the Minister of Justice, who, I presume, would be looking at the questions involved purely from a legal standpoint. It appears to me that some of the provisions of the Bill would have a prejudicial bearing in respect to railway traffic. I shall call his attention to one or two considerations which perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) would think it worth considering before proceeding with the Bill further. The hon. gentleman desires that the word 'animal' should have a wider interpretation than it now has in the Criminal Code, and that it shall not only include cattle and other animals, but domestic animals, such as cats and dogs. It would not be practicable to do that. The general law does not contemplate the extension of the meaning of the word animal to such an extent as to embrace cats, dogs and other domestic animals. It would make these provisions of the present Criminal Code comparatively unworkable, and would not fit the case, under the general scope of the Bill after it had been amended as the hon. gentleman proposes. Its bearing on the railways is, first, in this direction. Certain provisions are to be found in the sections which the hon. gentleman proposes by a sub-clause to amend, which appear to go as far in the way of requiring cattle to be looked after while in transit as parliament at the time thought it was expedient to go, so as to ensure their being made as comfortable as possible, watered and fed, and when unladen, provided with fresh hay and straw for bedding. In actual experience it has transpired that there is really more hazard in requiring that the cars should be provided with bedding of this description, by reason of the danger of fire, than there is of advantage to the railways which at present have discretion in the matter, and which do not provide bedding of that character. It is said that hay and straw, for a while after it is put in, until it has become saturated or moistened, is very likely to take fire ; and occasions of this kind have occurred. We have therefore to reflect whether or not we would do well to impose on the railway companies the obligation proposed by these clauses of my hon. friend's Bill, when it would be attended with these possible difficulties and dangers. Then, my hon. friend would have the law so changed as to require certain constructions to be provided in the car whereby animals would be kept separate in a particular way. What actually happens now on most of the railways, is this. The railway companies put up loose boards in such a way as to keep the animals apart at the start, but after the train is on its way these are removed because they say they do more harm than good. But my hon. friend would have these partitions put up as fixtures. That would entail a good deal of work and injure the cars, and could be only of use a very short time. The objection to section one, is that it makes the expression 'animal' include all animals, which is contrary to the general tenor of the Criminal Code. The objection to section two is that it would apply to dogs and cats as well as to sheep and hogs. Another objection is that, no matter how short the distance these animals have to be carried, whenever a stoppage takes place, fresh bedding must be put in. Perhaps it it might only be a few hours before the cars would be unladen again. For instance, when cattle are carried from Montreal to Halifax, after they reach Moncton, they are driven out watered and fed, and it is only a very few hours when they get to Halifax. To impose on the shipper the expense of furnishing fresh bedding in such a case would be subjecting him to an unnecessary additional charge. I quite see the object my hon. friend has in view, and it is one which appeals to our humanity, but we should consider the circumstances. On most of our routes the cattle are not kept very long in the car. Under no circumstances are they kept over thirty hours without being let out and watered and fed and given an opportunity to move around. Even if they had to lie down on the bare floor, that would not hurt them, and the railway companies have found from actual experience that to put in fresh bedding increases the liability to fire, which it is very important to avoid. I do not know what suggestion to offer my hon. friend as I have not reached any conclusion, but he may be able to make some suggestions.

Mr. BROCK. Straw need not necessarily be employed, but some other less inflammable material, such as tan-bark or sawdust or sand. The main object of this Bill is to have the animals kept separate, so that the smaller animals may not be ill-treated by the larger ones. This Bill would not apply to nineteen-twentieths of our cars as not more than that proportion are used for carrying animals of various or assorted classes. The other day my attention was drawn in Toronto to the fact that some cattle shipped from Owen Sound had trampled under foot a number of small animals, such as sheep and in some cases hogs. A kind of stampede took place, the cattle rushed about, and the big animals crushed the smaller ones to death. It would be a very trifling matter for a railway company to put up some scantling divisions, strong enough to prevent the cattle from breaking through. If that were done, it would meet the object of this Bill. I am not speaking of cattle shipped over a short distance, say from Montreal to Moncton, but of those shipped a long way west of Winnipeg and which come through to the sea coast. In such cases, whenever a car is emptied, it should be cleaned out. The condition those cars get into in a day or two is something terrible, and the Bill provides that such cars should be cleaned out. The cost of supplying tan-bark, sawdust or other material not inflammable would be so infinitesimal that the companies or shippers would not object to paying it. The other day I passed a car with two dead cattle in it from the North-west. The car was not very far from Ottawa, and no doubt those animals had been trampled upon by heavier cattle, and the flooring of the cars was so slippery with slush that it was difficult for the cattle to keep their feet. The hon minister objects to railway companies being obliged to put up these heavy partitions in a great many cars, but they will be required in only a very few cars from a very few points. People do not ship lambs and smaller cattle in large quantities from great distances. There is very seldom a whole car load of lambs. They are usually put in with other cattle and they should be partitioned off from the larger animals. The objection raised about cats, dogs, &c., does not apply to this Bill. We do not ask that cats and dogs and canaries should be partitioned off from other animals, but when driven to town in a farmers wagon, they should be under some kind of supervision and not subjected to the extreme cruelty of being packed closely in a crate so that they can scarcely move. I have seen a package of game sent in such a state that no one who saw them would want them on his table. I am promoting this Bill at the instance of the Toronto Humane Society, which gets no public grants and no civic grants, and is supported entirely by the people of Toronto and Ontario. I am glad to see that this society is spreading in the province of Quebec. This society is doing good work without any pecuniary reward, and I submit that the government should endeavour to meet its views as much as possible. But, if they cannot let the Bill pass exactly as it is, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways might get such a Bill framed as they think in fairness they could ask the railways to submit to, and that would be acceptable to the House and the country. We are not demanding every particular in the Bill, but we should like a Bill framed by the Minister of Justice to meet the case as far as possible and to go as far as would be acceptable to the Minister of Railways.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems that part of this Bill is already provided for under the Criminal Code, in subsection 5 of section 514, which provides :

> Where cattle are unladen from cars for the purpose of receiving food, water and rest, the railway company then having charge of the cars in which they have been transported shall, except during a period of frost, clear the floors of such cars, and litter the same properly with clean sawdust or sand before reloading them with live stock.

Thus, there is no provision in the Criminal Code for littering the floors of cars at first, but it is provided that this must be done when the cattle are taken out, before they are again put upon the car.

Mr. LENNOX. I think there may be some difficulty in framing this Bill, but, at the same time, it is probably required, and, with the assistance of the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways, I think we can put it in shape so as to be an improvement on the present law. With reference to the question of danger from fire, also the question of cost and matters of that kind, I think we should be able to get over the difficulties. It appears to me that there would be no great danger from fire in cattle cars, except that fire might be communicated from some external cause for these cars are not likely to be very inflammable. But, at all events, and as the Minister of Railways has said, the difficulty exists only for a short time, and would only exist with regard to certain materials, such as hay and straw. It is a very easy matter, if the railway companies find there is actual danger of fire from this cause, to dampen the hay or straw before it is put in the cars, so as to overcome the danger. We cannot in any way improve the law without giving some apparent ground for an argument on the other side. But we must look to the preponderance of benefit, and it seems clear to me that the advantage would be in the enactment of such a law as this. As to the cost, I understand the minister to say that it would be unfair to the railways if this were required with regard to short distances. The necessity for littering or bedding the cars hardly exists in the case of short distances, and if you take this Bill in the spirit in which the promoter brings it before the committee, feeling at liberty to make alterations where it may be necessary, we can surely modify the Bill so as to provide that this shall apply only where animals are to be carried for a long distance. As to the separation of animals, I think the promoter of the Bill has said all that need to be said, and I think he has shown that this is a very necessary amendment for the safe carriage of animals. I do not think the hon. Minister of Railways followed carefully the wording of the subsection 5A of section 2 of the Bill. It provides that:

No smaller animal shall be confined or carried in the same car, van or vessel with any larger animals of different species, unless a suitable and substantial partition—— —and so on. It does not apply to the difference in size of the animals as such, but to a difference of size and species.

Mr. MONK. In the city of Montreal we see a great deal of the abuses which this Bill of my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) is intended to remove. We have a very large number of cattle arriving there, and I have myself seen instances of cruelty. I understand the difficulty which the Minister of Railways has referred to. But I would point out to the minister that the only change which this Bill makes in the law is that contained in subsection 5A, for, as my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has shown, the amendment to subsection 5 of section 514 is substantially what is contained in the existing law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not compulsory now.

Mr. MONK. I think it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only where the cars are stopped to unload the cattle. The subsection provides:

Where cattle are unladen from cars for the purpose of receiving food, water and rest, the railway company then having charge of the cars in which they have been transported shall, except during a period of frost, clear the floors of such cars, and litter the same properly with clean sawdust or sand before reloading them with live stock.

There is nothing to say that the cars shall be littered prior to the time of their being unloaded for the purpose of feeding, watering or resting the cattle.

Mr. MONK. I think, that in that respect the change is, perhaps, a wise one. The necessity for the change here proposed of prohibiting the crowding of small animals with large animals of a different species is one of which I have seen examples. If it were possible to embody this provision in the law, I think it would be a very great advantage.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble is that the cattlemen send mixed cars of cattle and hogs, or sometimes cattle and sheep, because it reduces the cost of transportation, a larger number being put in the car. I thought there was a provision in the law prohibiting this, but I do not see it. I think this is a provision which should be made. When the cars are crowded in this way it results in the death of many animals, and, even where the animals are not killed they are left in such a condition that, when they are slaughtered, their flesh is not in as good condition for eating as if the animals had been kept separate.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are some sections of this Bill which concern exclusively the transportation companies, and ought to be dealt with by an amendment to the Railway Act. My difficulty commences with the first section, which purports to amend section 3 of the Criminal Code. The difficulty there is very serious, because we are asked to amend section 3 of the Criminal Code by adding thereto the paragraph (ff). We are met with this anomaly, that in subsection d of section 3 of the Code, the word 'cattle' is to be found, and is defined, and it includes a large number of animals that it is intended to describe by subsection (ff). So you would have two different descriptions of the same word in the same section of the Criminal Code. This form of amendment is quite inartistic, to say the least of it. Now we have to deal with the expression 'animal.'

The expression animal includes any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, goat, pig, hog, sow, dog, cat, and every other domestic animal, fowl, or bird, or wild animal, cow, or bird captured, tamed or domesticated.

Just fancy incorporating that clause in the Criminal Code and making the word 'cattle,' where it is found in the Code applicable to such a clause as that. Why, you might even fine a man if he carries a canary bird in a cage that is not properly littered. Section 514 of the Code is to be amended. The whole of that section has reference to cattle, so you see the real word defined is 'animal.' So you have to reconstruct the whole articles of the Criminal Code which have reference to this. One does at first sight see how the economy of the statute may be entirely upset by such a definition as this. So with reference to section 3, for instance. My hon. friend provides that the right of entry provided for in section 515 of the Criminal Code may be exercised in or upon any car, van, truck, vehicle or cockpit. That would, by implication, legalize the keeping of a cockpit. I do not know if there are any gentlemen in this House interested in these things, but if there are, they would be interested to know that, though section 513 makes it illegal to keep a cockpit, here the effect of this section would be to legalize entry into a cockpit. I think there are inconveniences, to say the least of it, in this Bill if it is allowed to go through.

I suggested the other day to my hon. friend that perhaps this Bill might be considered by the draughtsman of the department, who is in the habit of drawing amendments and suggesting amendments to the Criminal Code. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) has not met Mr. Fraser, who I asked to call on him, and he did call, but in all probability they did not come together on account of the absence of my hon. friend. I would suggest that with respect to the first and third clauses, he should allow me to send Mr. Fraser to him for the purpose of seeing whether they cannot agree upon some amendment that would carry out the laudable objects that he has in view. With respect to the second section, I am afraid I must leave him to the tender mercies of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. INGRAM. I would point out with respect to section 2 that bedding of hay and straw is used in certain box cars in which stock is shipped on the railways now. But this would apply to what is known as slat-cars. At the end of the journey there would probably be no stock in the car at all by reason of being set on fire from the sparks of the engine.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understand that my hon. friend in charge of the Bill is not wedded to this particular form, and I quite agree with the Minister of Justice that it would be almost impossible to pass the Bill in its present shape on account of difficulties in the present form of the Criminal Code. But I see no reason why it could not be changed, if it is considered advisable to make some changes. Especially do I think there ought to be a strong attempt to compel railway companies to carry animals of different species separately. We must also keep in view the question of the cost of transportation. The competition in the carriage of animals is very keen. Therefore the producer and the transportation company are the two classes most affected by this Bill. I think it is proper to compel the company to divide their car into compartments for the different species of animals, because it is too bad to see sheep and hogs and big cattle huddled together in the same car, and there ought to be some way to prevent it at the least possible cost. It has been suggested that the animals should be specified by name that are to be thus carried, but, from what the Minister of Justice says, that would be difficult to work out. Then as to the right of search as set forth in the Bill, that also is a matter that would require consideration. It seems to me that the Department of Justice is bound to see that this Bill is properly constructed, and if there are difficulties in the Bill in its present form, the Department of Justice should devise some amendments to overcome those difficulties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will be necessary to drop the first clause altogether because you could not give any such interpretation to the word 'animal' as has been proposed here. As to the second clause, if it is the sense of the committee that it would be a proper thing to require that all cars carrying cattle shall be bedded in this description with straw, hay, sawdust, sand, tan bark, shavings or such other dry material. I think the better plan would be to reinsert the word 'cattle' in place of 'animals.' The word 'cattle' is defined in the Bill and it would be only in reference to cattle that any such provision as this would apply. If you insert the word 'cattle' for the word 'animals' in both parts of this section that would include all such animals as require to be bedded. But, before adopting this Bill, I think we ought to hear what the people have to say who have had the largest experience in regard to the carriage of cattle. Whether we agree with them or not I think it is wise for us to know what their views are upon the subject and see how this legislation is going to affect the cattle shipping business. It would not be desirable under any circumstances to pass even that section as it now stands. Then, I would say in regard to the next subsection that 'cattle' has been defined in the original Act to include sheep, goats and swine. No smaller cattle, such as sheep, goats or swine, shall be confined or carried in the same car unless such and such precautions are taken—that would cover the ground the hon. gentleman desires to see covered. I could not recommend the committee to adopt a clause such as this until we hear more on the subject and perhaps the hon. gentleman would consent to the committee rising and reporting progress.

Mr. BROCK. I am quite well aware that the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) are very anxious to promote this Bill in such a way that it will be of some use and that it will have something good in it. There is no use in the Bill going through in such a way that it will not carry out the object of the society

I represent, and which has in view particularly to stop the practice of animals of various sizes and species being indiscriminately crowded into one car; that is driving in a drove of cattle first of all, and then driving in sheep and hogs and filling up every foot of space under these cattle. We want to put a stop to that. Another object is that where two species of animals are placed in the same car there shall be a partition between them. We had a case the other day, as some hon. gentleman are no doubt aware, where three or four calves were placed in a car with a drove of hogs, there being a very light partition between them. They arrived at the station but the smaller animals were dead. The calves had been eaten up by the hogs in the car. These hogs were afterwards used for human food and I want to avoid any abominable thing of that kind taking place. I do not think we should leave it to the experience of the cattle men.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not either, but I would like to hear what they have to say.

Mr. BROCK. Decidedly, but I think we should be protected against their opinions if they are adverse to the adoption of reasonable and humane methods in carrying on this traffic. I am quite well aware that the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals are as anxious as I am that a Bill that will deal with the cases I speak of should be passed and therefore I am willing to leave it to be amended in such a way as will make it satisfactory to the country generally. I move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

STANDARD MILK CAN.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Campbell for the second reading of Bill (No. 20) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. MONK. I think we would require some explanation of this Bill. It affects a great many interests in the vicinity of the city of Montreal. I am not in a position to say to what extent it affects these interests, but I think it would be desirable that we should know why this new measure is introduced.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I explained the objects of this Bill the other day when it was before the House, but the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was not present, I think. The Bill is intended to apply more particularly to the province of Ontario. It has become the custom in the province of Ontario to sell milk by the can. In the city of Toronto there are about 3,000 cans of milk per day sold. These are purchased from the farmers all around within twenty, thirty or forty miles of the city. When the plan which has been in vogue for a good many years was first adopted, cans were all made to hold eight gallons, but there is nothing on the statute-book to-day, I believe, to say what the can shall be, whether it shall be eight gallons, or ten gallons, or whatever it may be, but there was an unwritten law that eight gallons should constitute a can of milk. However, as time went on, the cans made by the dealers in the city have been constantly enlarged, first to eight and one-quarter gallons and eight and one-half gallons, and on until to-day there are none less than eight and one-half gallons, while a great many hold nine gallons of milk. The farmers are obliged to fill these cans. After carrying the milk eight or ten miles it would not be good for it if the cans were not full. They are obliged to fill the cans and as a consequence they lose half a gallon or more on every can of milk they sell. That amounts to a very large sum in the aggregate and the Bill simply provides that when a person sells a can of milk that means eight gallons and that a half a can is four gallons. By arrangement with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) it was agreed that the second reading of this Bill should take place and that it should then be referred to a special committee. I am prepared to leave it to a special committee if the House sees fit to grant the second reading of the Bill. I am sure that this Bill is a step in the right direction. It affects nobody; it is going to injure nobody.

Mr. COCHRANE. What good is it then?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It prevents the farmer who sells his milk from being obliged to supply half a gallon for every can more than he gets paid for.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) states that the object of this motion is to have the Bill referred to a special committee and for my part I have no objection. I do not think that the custom which the hon. gentleman says exists in Ontario obtains in Quebec and it was in the section about the application of this new measure to the province of Quebec that I saw some difficulty, but if it is going to be referred to a committee I have no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have a letter—I have not it by me at the present moment—from Mr. Ness, President of the Milk Producers' Association in Montreal, highly approving of this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved :

That Bill (No. 20) be referred to a special committee composed of Messrs. Cowan, Holmes, Henderson, Kemp, Maclaren (Perth), Wright and the mover ; with power to send for persons and papers and to report back to the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The complexion of that committee should certainly be changed, because these are all Ontario members, and this law will be applicable to the whole Dominion. There should be representatives from each of the provinces.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) could find a place on that committee for some representatives from the province of Quebec. Mr. Léonard represents a constituency which sends a great deal of milk to the city of Montreal, and he would, I believe, be in a position to render useful service to that committee.

Mr. KEMP. I certainly think that cities like Montreal, Winnipeg, St. John and Halifax should be represented on that committee. I may mention that in Winnipeg the size of milk cans is different from what it is in Ontario.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved :

That the following names do compose the committee :—Mesrs. Cowan, Holmes, Henderson, Kemp, Maclaren (Perth), Wright, Demers (St. John and Iberville), Léonard, Monk, Bickerdike and Campbell.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE moved second reading of Bill (No. 74) to amend the Railway Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This is the same Bill which I had the honour of introducing last session regarding the rights of railroad employees. I explained the Bill on the first reading. Its object is to place railroad employees in the same position as ordinary citizens in regard to accidents occurring on railroads. At the present time some railroads seem to contract themselves out of their common law liability for such accidents.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

On motion of Mr. Guthrie, the Bill was referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines.

INSOLVENCY ACT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Monk : That Bill (No. 53) respecting Insolvency be now read a second time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not in his seat, as he would be prepared to discuss this Bill. I may state that the government do not feel disposed to accept the Bill at the present time. It requires some consideration, and the matter is now undergoing the consideration of the Department of Justice. I will not say that the government will be prepared next session to introduce legislation on this subject ; but since the matter has been brought to the attention of the House, most of the provinces have amended their laws with regard to insolvent estates, and I understand that these are now pretty satisfactory except in one or two provinces. It is to be hoped that the provinces themselves will attend to this kind of legislation, and adopt laws of such a character as to be acceptable. In regard to the hon gentleman's Bill, I understand from the Minister of Justice that the principle of it is perhaps acceptable, though the government are not prepared to accept all of its provisions. Under these circumstances, if my hon. friend persists in his motion, I must ask the House to reject it.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I was induced to bring this measure to the notice of the House because of the general desire which exists through the country, particularly among the commercial classes, that we should have uniform legislation on the subject of insolvency throughout the whole Dominion of Canada. I know for a fact that such is the desire of all the commercial bodies in the Dominion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that having already spoken on the question, he has not the right to speak again.

Mr. MONK. I thought I had the right to sum up the discussion on my motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. No. When a member moves an order of the day, he has the right to speak only once. So, when a Bill stands for a second reading, the member who moves the Bill has a right to speak once when he makes the motion, but he has no right to reply.

Mr. MONK. Well, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, and with the indulgence of the House, I may perhaps be allowed to mention that I have received from the Secretary of the Montreal Board of Trade a letter in which he urges strongly that this Bill should receive the immediate attention of the House. I have also received a letter from the secretary of the Chambre de Commerce, conveying the same information; and I may perhaps read to the House a resolution which was adopted on the first of April, in respect to this law. This is the resolution:

The Chamber of Commerce of the District of Montreal.

Report of the Committee on Legislation, adopted at the meeting of April 1, 1903, Insolvency Act.
