The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The change is in making the duties payable on the first instead of the sixth of the month. All articles produced by manufacture are required to be either warehoused or entered for duty at the close of each month. Any article produced during the month, if not placed in warehouse, was allowed to be held by the manufacturer until the sixth of the following month before the duty was collectable. At the present time very little goods are so held over, and in order that the accounts of the different divisions might be closed at an earlier date, the payment of duty is fixed the first day following the close of each month.

On section 3,

Mr. MONK. Why is there a proviso that this subsection shall apply to all transactions subsequent to the 1st of July, 1902? Are there any questions in abeyance in connection with that ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The change is owing to the fact that it has been determined that the quantity of fusel oil or other refuse removed from spirits produced from molasses is greater than that found in spirits produced from grain. Grain spirit is left at 3 per cent, and molasses spirit fixed at 4 per cent. The provision is made retroactive so as to cover the operations of the current fiscal year, and thus enable the manufacturers to take advantage of this law.

On section 4,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The only change is providing for the payment of the duty on the first instead of the sixth of the month, and is rendered necessary by the change in section 1.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The only change is to make it clear that packages of cut tobacco weighing one pound do not require to have the gross, tare and net weight marked thereon, and to permit the removal of cut tobacco from one manufactory to another as raw material for the purpose of blending or further treatment before being packed and placed on the market. In fact, the only change is with regard to cut tobacco.

I wish to move the following as an additional clause :

That subsection three of section 241 of this Act as enacted by section 11 of 52 Vic., chapter 15, be repealed and the following substituted in lieu thereof :—

3. When it is ascertained by the quarterly stock-taking that the standard of production established by or under this Act has not been reached by any bonded manufacturer, the duty on the quantity of spirits equivalent to the deficiency so determined shall become due and payable within one day of the close of each quarter, except that in cases where a deficiency has been found, and where the Minister of Inland Revenue, after a proper inquiry, is satisfied that such failure to reach the established standard was not due to any fraudulent dealings by the manufacturer, the quarter in which the deficiency arose and the one immediately following may, for the purpose of computing the standard of production, be merged and dealt with as one period. The provisions of this section shall apply to all transactions subsequent to the first day of July, 1902.

The reasons for this addition are the following: In many bonded vinegar manufactories, the standard of production (100 proof gallons of vinegar from each twenty-five proof gallons of spirits used) is not reached owing to the generators becoming defective and incapable of properly converting the alcohol into vinegar. In consequence manufacturers, at times when it was impossible for them to produce the required standard of production, have been compelled to pay an assessment to bring the production up to the standard fixed by the department. It is felt that, in cases where the cause for such deficiency in production is found to be beyond the control of the manufacturer, and not due to any fraudulent practices, the privilege should be granted of merging two quarterly periods into one. In the past the department merged one quarter with another, extending over three or four quarters: but a year ago we were advised that we had no authority to do this, though it had been the practice for many years, perhaps twenty years or over, and this provision is to limit the time to six months.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT.

Bill (No. 188) to amend the Weights and Measures Act, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). This section is new and exempts postal scales of a limited capacity from the provisions of the Act respecting inspection. Those small scales are used only to determine approximately the amount of postage payable upon letters or other articles sent through the mail. The true amount of postage is determined by the post office authorities. These scales are in many cases exceedingly small and of frail construction, and their inspection, which is now required by law, is not essential in the public interest, as the legal determination of the weight upon which postage has to be based is ascertained by the officials of the Post Office Department.

Mr. McCREARY. I would ask the hon. minister to defer action until some members from the west are present who are aware of the particulars. I think that the hon. members for Marquette and Macdonald wish to make a few remarks and have some suggestions to offer. I am not thoroughly acquainted with the practical working of the Bill myself. I notice that the hon. member for Lisgar is absent as well. I think it would be well to allow this Bill to stand over until another day. I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

CUSTOMS ACT—SURTAX.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 174) to amend the Customs Act.—The Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson). This is a Bill to define what is meant by the surtax, which is a new expression. It is not a Bill imposing the surtax, but a definition of what the surtax means.

On section 3, subsections 1 and 2,

The subsection added to section 4 of the Customs Act by section 2 of chapter 22 of the statutes of 1895, is repealed and the following are substituted therefor:—

There shall be a Board of Customs, which shall consist of the commissioner of customs, or any officer for the time being acting as such, who shall be the chairman of the board, and such duly qualified officers of customs as the Governor in Council from time to time appoints; and the said board shall have such powers and perform such duties as are assigned to it by any Act of the parliament of Canada or by the Governor in Council; and three members of the board shall form a quorum and be competent to transact the business of the board at any meeting thereof, whether regular or special, called by the chairman, of which quorum one member shall be either the commissioner of customs or the officer for the time being acting as commissioner of customs.

Mr. MONK. Would the minister please explain the additional expense that this organization will throw upon the country?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So far as the alteration of the Board of Customs is concerned, it will entail no extra expense—perhaps lessen it. At present the Board of Customs is composed of an officer in Victoria, an officer in Halifax and officers in other outlying ports. The repeal of the existing section and the provision that there shall be a board, the members of which shall be nominated by the Governor in Council, the number of whom can be added to if the necessity arises, will enable us to summon meetings of the board more rapidly and at less expense. With reference to the subsection as to the assistant commissioner, that will add $2,800 to the expense.

On section 3, subsection 3,

There shall be an assistant commissioner of customs, appointed by the Governor in Council, who shall hold office during pleasure, and shall have such powers and perform such duties as are assigned to him by the Governor in Council, or by the Minister of Customs.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. minister selected the assistant commissioner?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, Mr. John Bain.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did the hon. minister give the reasons for the appointment of an additional member of the staff at the time when the resolutions were passed in committee ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) may recollect that the subject was debated when the vote for the salary of the assistant commissioner came up as one of the items in the estimates for my department. After discussion, the committee passed the vote. The appointment is made necessary by the growing work of the department. For many years there was an assistant commissioner, but, when Mr. Watters left the service, no successor to him in the office was appointed.

Mr. TAYLOR. When did Mr. Bain come into the service ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In 1896.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is he a first class clerk ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. He is secretary to the minister, is he not ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. This will necessitate the appointment of a private secretary to take Mr. Bain's place ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not, so far as I remember, taking a vote for any additional help.

Mr. INGRAM. Will Mr. Bain fill both positions of deputy commissioner and private secretary ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He may not be able to give the time to the duties of private secretary, as he will be under the direction of the commissioner, and will be pretty fully occupied with his duties as assistant commissioner. Much of the business for which I have to avail myself of a private secretary is of a public nature. So, I think, there will be no difficulty in getting on without increasing the staff.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it likely that Mr. Bain, considering the time that he has been in the service, will be as efficient an officer for this position as some member of the staff who has been longer engaged in the work ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Bain has been a very efficient officer. I have no doubt that he will worthily discharge the duties of assistant commissioner.

Mr. SPROULE. He has only been in the office a few years, and I presume he came in a new man. Then, again, does this not involve an injustice to others who have been in the department for a longer time and who, from length of faithful service, are entitled to promotion, as well as likely to be more efficient than Mr. Bain could have become in the time he has been in the office ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think there is no difficulty of that kind. There is no one in the department who has any feeling about that—none that I am aware of.

On section 4,

The Customs Act is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 4:—

The Minister of Customs may, from time to time, authorize the employment of such temporary or acting officers of customs in the second or outside division of the Customs Department as are required to carry on the work of the department ; but no such officer so employed shall receive a higher salary than he would be allowed if appointed permanently to the same rank or class ; nor shall any such salary be paid until voted by parliament.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not think that section really necessary. It has been the practice of the department since before I came into it to employ men in this way—the department could not be worked otherwise. An officer dies suddenly and his place must be filled. A temporary appointment like this is made. But, when Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice was looking over the Act, he thought that possibly it would be well to provide definitely in this way so that there could be no possibility of doubt.

Mr. CLANCY. What is meant by saying that 'no such officer so employed shall receive a higher salary than he would be allowed if appointed permanently to the same rank and class ; nor shall any such salary be paid until voted by parliament ?' As I understand it, there are no classes in the outside service. This, then, compares the position of a temporary appointee with a position that does not exist ? Perhaps the hon. minister will explain.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are ranks in the outside service—appraisers, chief clerks, clerks, landing waiters, tide waiters, &c.

Mr. CLANCY. How would their positions compare with the classes in the inside service ? For instance, does a chief clerk outside rank the same as a chief clerk in the inside service ? Surely not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. CLANCY. How does the hon. minister reconcile that ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does not need reconciling. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) will look at the Civil Service Act he will find the ranks or grades of the outside service of the Customs enumerated and a minimum and maximum salary fixed. The exact salary is not fixed, nor do these officers come within the class of those for whom the $50 annual advance is given—the inside service. So, if we appointed a landing waiter temporarily, he could not be paid a higher salary than if he were appointed landing waiter by Order in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the minister already power under the law to make these appointments ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We think so, it has been done for years.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, what is the meaning of the clause in the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I explained that. There is a revision of the statutes taking place at the present time, and, in looking through the Customs Act the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Newcombe, thought it would be as well that we should have the power stated here expressly. It is absolutely necessary for the working of the department.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose this will be the finishing touch to the Civil Service Act ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. This will give it the coup de grace ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it will not affect it.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister, under this, can appoint temporary officers and keep them there as temporary officers at his own pleasure, without it being necessary for them to pass any examination. Will that be the effect of this clause ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, what will become of the Civil Service Act ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes ; but they are appointed temporarily. We impress upon them the necessity of qualifying so as to be placed on the permanent staff. They are anxious to get on the permanent staff as soon as they can. For instance, where a collector dies it may be necessary to fill the vacancy at once at that port by some one who has not passed the civil service examination. We have to appoint a collector immediately, and there may be no meeting of the treasury board perhaps for weeks. In these cases we appoint them acting collectors, and as soon as we can we get their medical certificates, and at the first meeting of the treasury board they are made permanent.

Mr. CLARKE. Then these people need not pass the civil service examination, they may be appointed under the provision of this law ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. And they can remain in the service at the pleasure of the minister without passing the civil service examination ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If their services are required.

Mr. CLARKE. Then practically the Act is done away with.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No more than in the past.

Mr. MONK. Would it not be better to leave the custom that has prevailed heretofore ? Because if we pass this clause we will admit the principle that temporary officers may be employed contrary to the present law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I would not say that.

Mr. MONK. Does not the minister interpret that clause as meaning that he may employ temporarily parties who have not submitted to the test of the civil service examination ? I know that has been done, it is being done now; but it would be a mistake to give it the sanction of the law. The minister himself said it was scarcely necessary to pass this law. But if he does pass it, he sanctions a complete departure from the existing law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I would not say that. The Deputy Minister of Justice thinks it would be as well to have the practice put in this express language. It has been the practice of the department from the beginning, and it has been absolutely necessary to follow this practice to carry on the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Customs said there were a number of so-called temporary officers in the service, some of whom might have been employed as long as twenty years continuously, and the reason they were not put upon the permanent staff of the department is that the time had passed by when they could very well take the civil service examination. There may be some force in his observations with regard to that, but does not this Act put that custom on a permanent basis ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will it not have that effect ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me it will. Let us assume that we must continue these men who have been for a long time in the service, and who are not on the temporary staff, although to all intents and purposes they are permanent officers. Now, if the minister, in this clause, simply proposes to take power to appoint temporary officers of the department whose employment as such shall continue only for a limited period, it would be a different proposition. from that which is before us. But this provision is wide enough in effect to repeal the whole Civil Service Act so far as the hon. gentleman's department is concerned; because all he has to do is to appoint a man as a temporary officer, and he remains in the department receiving the salary, it may be up to the limit, as if he were a permanent officer. It puts upon a permanent basis that which is now only a custom, and is continued for the reasons of expediency and necessity which the hon. gentleman mentions. If the provision were limited to the appointment for six months, or for such a period as would be reasonable, I could understand it; but I cannot understand the necessity of a provision having so wide a scope as that which is presented to the House now.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are cases where we have to appoint them temporarily for the summer, when there may be a press of work. But there will not be the same danger that the hon. gentleman apprehends. Under the present law we can appoint any one in the place of a preventive officer and make him permanent at once; and the minimum and maximum figures that are fixed for the salaries would allow a very wide range. So there is no more danger than before, the department is getting at once more power than it has already, because we could appoint them permanently at once as preventive officers. But we do not wish to do that. We have to appoint them temporary at first, and then we urge upon them to pass the examination. But as I said, there is no more danger of wiping out the Civil Service Act in doing this than under the present law, because all we would have to do would be to appoint them under that clause regarding the appointment of preventive officers and assign them to any duties we liked.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). After over fourteen years' experience as collector of customs in the port of Halifax, I may say that I do not know of a single instance where an officer in the outside service was required to pass the civil service examination. The outside service generally consists of landing waiters, tide waiters, lockers, &c., and they are appointed just because they are smart, active people. I do not think the service will be improved by compelling these people to pass the civil service examination. I know that all the time I was in the custom house the outside service were not required to pass the examination. There was no such a thing as a chief clerk, or a clerk at all, wanted for the outside service duties, because they brought their returns into the custom house, and records were kept in the custom house by the officers who were required to keep those records themselves. I think you will find that this is the practice in all the large ports.

Mr. INGRAM. The other evening we brought this same question before the hon. gentleman. I am rather surprised that he does not propose in this Bill to make the temporary officers permanent, clean up the sheet entirely, and see if this grievance cannot be remedied once for all. I mentioned the city of Windsor the other evening, where I find there have been ten preventive officers appointed since the hon. gentleman took hold of the department. There had been men appointed there as preventive officers years before that, and they are still on the temporary list, and I suppose all the new appointments are made permanent. That is what we complain of on this side of the House, that political influence is brought to bear, and men are put on the permanent list who are not entitled to be put on over men who have already been long in the service. If the hon. gentleman put these men on irrespective of their party politics, then perhaps there would not be so much cause for complaint.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I shall be glad to have them all pass the examination, and in some cases they have passed, while in others they have not. But the hon. gentleman must not think that I am guided by political influence in making these appointments. There have been at least as many Conservatives put on the permanent list of preventive officers as there were under the old government. There were as many Conservatives put on the permanent list as there were others, or at least, as many as had been appointed by the old government.

Mr. INGRAM. There are some Conservatives left.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So that it would not be right to make recriminations in that way.

Mr. INGRAM. I know of cases of men there who are not on the permanent list and they are as good officers as ever were stationed at Windsor. There are no complaints against them. This is growing to be a very serious complaint, and it will take up the time of the House session after session unless the grievance is remedied. I could see no injustice if there was something in the shape of an Act giving the hon. Minister of Customs power to put these men on the permanent list. Here is an opportunity now, and we could insert an amendment providing for that in the Bill now before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT. May I suggest to the hon. minister that if it is the intention of the minister, in making these temporary appointments, simply to place these persons in a training school to prepare them for making an attempt to pass the civil service examination, he might do this by saying that such appointments made after this date shall only hold good for a limited length of time, say six months, and if they are not then able to pass the civil service examination their services will be dispensed with.

Mr. MONK. I think that is a very wise suggestion of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). There is no doubt that under this clause the hon. minister can employ an officer who is not qualified and keep him employed. That is the intention. It is bad enough that the custom has prevailed in the past. I do not think we should give the sanction of law to it, and the way to guard against that is to carry out the suggestion that has been made and which I have incorporated in the amendment which I am now about to read: 'Provided such temporary employment be not continued for a period of more than six months.' This would permit employees to qualify under the Civil Service Act, and would prevent such abuses as those which we know are occurring. I move to add to the section the provision that temporary employment should only last for six months.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The objection to that amendment would be that if you employed a person temporarily during the busy season of the year and you required to do the same perhaps next year, the person who had had so many months' training would be the very person the collector would want to put his hand on to continue the service for another year.

Mr. MONK. Could he not qualify in the meantime?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). My experience has been that in the outside service the qualification required in the inside service is not necessary, and it has not been the practice to ask for the examination of a man in the outside service. These men are in a good many ways more like labouring men with a good education than clerks who would suit in the inside service.

Mr. MONK. In that case I think it would be better to amend the Civil Service Act directly, and not do it in this way.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. I think that would be a better way than by pressing this amendment if it is considered desirable. In regard to what the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) says, I do not think we could make such an amendment to this Bill. The proposed amendment is one that could be introduced any year, but there would have to be a consultation, and the government would have to be agreed upon it. It is a subject that is on my mind, but I cannot deal with it this year. The suggestion as to six months employment, of course, will not work, because there is only a qualifying examination once a year. There might be an officer appointed very shortly after the examination that takes place this fall, and it would be a year before the board met again, so that six months would not do. If any time at all were fixed, it would have to be a year.

Mr. MONK. Make it a year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would it be fair to make a provision of that kind now? I think there would be something like a moral obligation to put all officers on the same plane, and we would have to put away all the temporary officers we now have who have been employed for fifteen or twenty years, and who know their business just as well as any officers in the inside service. It would not accomplish anything if there was any fear that the department would be worked in an improper or unfair way. If there was any danger that political influence might be brought to bear on the minister and he might not hold the scales evenly, you do not obviate it by that, because, as long as there is that provision, I could appoint a temporary clerk and if he could not pass the examination at the end of six months, if I wanted to retain him, I could simply appoint him permanently as a preventive officer.

Mr. CLARKE. The department has power to do wrong, any way.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It has the power. I do not think the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) will find that there has been any consistent course pursued of ignoring men because of the difference in their position, and I am sure there has not been in the cases he has mentioned. I could give scores of cases where men appointed long before I came into office have been put upon the permanent list.

Mr. INGRAM. I think I can fairly complain in these cases I have quoted, because I know some of these men very well, passing up and down there very frequently, as I do. Of course, this side may change to the other, as I am confident it is going to soon, and the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite would be in the same position then as our friends are now. It is hard to explain why men who have been in the service ten or twelve years at least are overlooked, while those who have only been in a few years are made permanent.

Mr. MONK. I think there is no doubt that the hon. minister is right when he says that he could evade the law, any way; but I do not think that is an argument for us to change the law, because that is what we are doing in this section. In the amendment which I presented I intended to provide for the future only. I have no objection to stating that any amendment with that new disposition will apply to the future, but I think it does that without any such expression. I am quite willing to change the period of six months to a period of one year, but I think it is very desirable that we should not by this subsection change the general trend of the law in regard to qualification for the civil service. What the hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross), said may be quite true also. It may be true that in the outside service examination and qualification are not necessary, but it is in the law, and I think we should leave it there.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) would inquire at the port of Montreal, or Toronto, or St. John, or Halifax, he would not find a single instance where a preventive officer has passed the examination, or was required to do so. The education of these men might be more practical perhaps than that of a good many whose education is designed to enable them to pass the civil service examination. The men in the outside service are more like workingmen. A locker receives casks into his warehouse, and he sees they are properly placed and delivered on warrant from the custom-house. These men do not require to pass an examination, and the chances are they would not be as good as they are if they did.

Mr. CLARKE. I believe the hon. gentleman is quite right in a good deal of what he says, but is it not the proper course to amend the Civil Service Act so that these gentlemen might be properly appointed.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). That is just what I want. I want to get them the increase of salary and promotion they would be entitled to if they did pass the examination.

Mr. CLARKE. This amendment does not accomplish that, and under it the minister can appoint any number of temporary clerks to remain there during his pleasure.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the position of surveyor of customs should become vacant, under this Act the minister could appoint an acting surveyor who had not passed the examination, and he could draw his salary and fill the position during the pleasure of the minister. Would not that make him virtually a permanent employee ? Suppose in the town of Prescott the position of chief clerk were to be vacant, and no doubt there would be a great number of applicants for it, perhaps the government might wish to appoint some one who did not pass the examination and they would appoint him as acting chief clerk. If he filled that position for a number of years he would virtually hold it permanently, although he was not appointed by Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Until an officer has been appointed on the recommendation of the treasury board and sanctioned by the Governor in Council he does not become a permanent employee. He might be acting landing waiter and be paid, but he could not be appointed permanently to that rank until he had passed his examination, and he would lose his time if he were ill and would not be entitled to holidays and so on.

Mr. REID (Grenville). We have a vacancy in the town of Prescott in the Inland Revenue Department which has existed for some time, and if the Minister of Inland Revenue were to introduce such a Bill as this he could appoint a person who had not passed the civil service examination, and the Minister of Inland Revenue knows that there is pressure brought upon him to do that now. Suppose he should appoint a man as acting inland revenue collector and he remained in office for some years, he would be recognized by the public at least as a permanent officer, and in the case of a change of government or a change of minister even, it would be unfair to dismiss an officer of that kind. I think myself that a person should be appointed to such a position only until such time as he would have an opportunity of passing the civil service examination, and if he failed at first he might be credited with his percentage or something of that kind, but at all events there should be some limit. The public now believe that it is impossible for a minister to appoint a person to a vacancy until he has passed the examination and for that reason the minister is saved a great deal of trouble. If you pass such legislation as this there is no doubt that your staff will deteriorate in time.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In reply to the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr Monk) I wish to say that this is no evasion of the law at all. The law at present provides that inspectors, collectors and preventive officers in the Customs Department may be appointed without examination and without reference to the rules for promotion prescribed. All that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) would accomplish by his motion would be that if a person were appointed, and at the end of the year he would not be able to pass the civil service examination, he would be dismissed. The civil service examination is largely clerical and I venture to say it would trouble the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) and myself to pass it now. I dare say we could pass it when we left school, and although I do not want to say anything against laws that are in vogue, yet when you come to a practical department like customs, the qualifying examination, in my judgment, is of very little avail. You want general knowledge, you want good judgment and in some cases you want a knowledge of the methods of trade. If a man proves himself to be a good officer, but could not pass the examination, we could then appoint him a preventive officer under the law. But wherever we can get them to pass the examination instead of appointing them preventive officers and saying : You discharge the duties of landing waiter, if he does pass the examination his title would be landing waiter or tide waiter or clerk or whatever he is. This makes the practice a little more regular, but there is no change.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not that exemption in the civil service law wide enough now ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This does not make it any wider, but this permits the appointment of an officer temporarily. In some cases these appointments must be done in an emergency and sometimes you cannot summon a meeting of the Treasury Board and get His Excellency's assent in a day or two. There are times when, after a long session of parliament perhaps, some ministers are taking a well-deserved rest for a day or two, and you might not be able to get a meeting of the Treasury Board or of Council ; or His Excellency might be away ; and a month might elapse without anything being done. You must have persons to attend to these duties, and so you appoint them temporarily. The object of the Bill is not to discharge men from the service or get more men into the service without reference to the Civil Service Act. It is simply the result of a suggestion from the Department of Justice that it would be better to have this additional provision that when a person is temporarily appointed to a certain office he shall not receive a larger salary than is paid to a permanent officer of the same rank or class.

Mr. CLARKE. Has that been the practice ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No. In the case of preventive officers there is no limit at all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister knows that it is not customary to appoint a temporary officer to one of the high positions in the service, such as surveyor of customs ; and he would not appoint a man as a preventive officer, and then assign to him the duties of a surveyor. If he has done so, I think he has not rightly understood the law. Under the proposed provision, the minister could appoint any person to the position of acting surveyor, and virtually make him permanent. I understand the minister to take the position that he could appoint any person as a preventive officer, and then allow him to fill the position of chief clerk or surveyor of customs in the city of Toronto.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, he could, but the appointee could not be styled chief clerk ; he would be acting clerk. A great many men who have been appointed preventive officers are taking entries, and are as efficient officers as we have. I think that I have shown that this is a proper provision, and it would be better for the hon. gentleman to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MONK. I do not understand how the hon. minister can say that this Bill which he asks us to pass makes no change. He stated, when we first took up this section, that it was almost unnecessary to pass it ; and yet the fact is, if I am not mistaken, that the question having been referred to the Department of Justice, Mr. Newcombe, of that department, stated that the system at present was irregular, that the law was not being observed, and that it would be necessary to pass this amendment in order to regularize the position of these employees. I do not think there is any doubt that under this provision, if we pass it, the Minister of Customs may name a temporary officer, and employ him from year to year temporarily, without subjecting him to what the law requires—the qualifying test of a civil service examination. We had under discussion a day or two ago the estimates of the hon. Minister of Customs, which we now pass en bloc. The evening before last we voted $129,000 for five or six branches of the Customs Department, and having had the money voted in that general way, the minister can keep a temporary employee continuously in his service without our knowing anything about it. We shall not even go through the form of voting his salary every year notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act. I do not say that the deputy minister of Justice was not right in making that suggestion to regularize the position of those employees ; but the object we ought to have in view is to improve our civil service, not to spoil it, as we have been doing for many years past by this custom. The hon. gentleman knows how in 1896 a very large number of civil servants were dismissed without any opportunity of being heard. I will not go back upon that ; it was fully ventilated at the time ; but in my own county the number of civil servants who were dismissed without notice and without any opportunity of defending themselves was very great, and much hardship was incurred. Here we are at present still further mutilating our civil service organization. We are doing the exact opposite of what they have been doing in years past in the United States, where they had a deplorable civil service. Under the Cleveland administration a set of men undertook to improve conditions, and at the present moment for over five thousand employees of the government of the United States, there is no more trouble with the spoils system, and they cannot be dismissed. The United States are improving their civil service. England has a much better system of patronage and civil service than we have in Canada, and here we are opening the door to abuse. It has been said on this side of the House, and I think it is worthy of the consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite, that they are preparing trouble for themselves. We know how members belonging to the ministerial party are bothered with demands for employment. Under this section, if we pass it, there would be far greater demands, and members will not have the defence of saying that those who solicit employment will have to pass an examination, because under this proposed section they may be employed temporarily, so to speak, for ever. Under these circumstances, I think we ought not to give the sanction of the law to the unfortunate custom which has prevailed in all the departments in the past, and I think the amendment that has been suggested would be a protection not only to the public, but for hon. gentlemen opposite themselves, and particularly for those in charge of the government departments. We might modify it in the direction suggested by the hon. member for Grenville, so as to provide that temporary employment will not last beyond the period fixed for the next civil service examination, and that this section will not apply except in the future, if that is necessary. I think all our efforts ought to tend to the improvement of our civil service, and not to its deterioration, and I think the hon. minister, on reflection, will himself acknowledge that we are readily helping him by this suggested amendment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think the suggested amendment in any way adds to the appeal of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I think, on the contrary, that the amendment has for its object to cause some of the abuses that have existed for the last twenty years to disappear. My hon. friend is aware that under the Civil Service Act, provision is made for the appointment of officials to the civil service, first, after examination, and, second, on a special report of the deputy head of the department to the effect that the person has special qualifications. In addition to these two modes of appointment, we have, in subsection 2 of section 37, a provision that Customs inspectors, collectors and preventive officers may be appointed without examination and without any reference to the rules of promotion That is to say, you can appoint preventive officers without any reference whatever either to examination or to promotion. But there is no provision in the law defining the duties of a preventive officer, and the practice has grown up in the last twenty years of assigning preventive officers to the performance of special duties. The authority to do this is to be found in section 5 of the Act, which provides that the Customs Department shall have the control and management of the collection of customs duties and matters incident thereto. The result has been that preventive officers have been assigned to the discharge of duties, such as those mentioned in schedule B, for which the regularly appointed officials are paid a different salary. Take, for instance, the case of a clerk. Under the Act he would be only entitled to receive $400 per year, but the duties of clerk may be assigned to a preventive officer who will receive a much larger salary. This anomaly has suggested the amendment which authorizes the appointment of a temporary or acting clerk to perform the duties of a regular clerk, which are now assigned to a preventive officer. We wish to do away with the anomaly that exists at present, and if a temporary clerk is appointed, under this amendment he will not receive any larger salary than the regular official would who is appointed under section 56 of the Civil Service Act. It is for the House to say whether or not it is wise to amend the law which has been in existence all these years, giving authority to the Customs Department to appoint these officials without examination. If the law should be amended, if all these appointments made in the past should be declared irregular, what will become of the service ? The proper thing is to get the sanction of this parliament to do what has been done in the past.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any provision now in the Civil Service Act obliging these men who are appointed temporarily, to pass an examination in a certain period ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not preventive officers unless they want to come into the permanent service.

Mr. CLARKE. They would remain on permanently although only temporarily appointed ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Then is not the suggestion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier right that the trend of this legislation is to deteriorate the public service ? The hon. gentleman admits that one-quarter of the outside employees have never passed the examination.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The principle of the clauses is this. Inspectors and collectors were not required to pass a qualifying examination, just the same as post office inspectors and postmasters, and for this reason, in order to be able to give such appointments to parties whose long political service was entitled to some recognition. Any person may be appointed to a department with special qualifications. Suppose the head of the department wants a chemist for analytical purposes, it would be absurd to require such a man to pass the civil service examination. Take a landing waiter, there is no necessity for his passing the civil service examination. But the Act never contemplated that such an officer could be transferred to the position of a clerk without passing the examination. It may be said that that has been done, but it has been done with the understanding that these parties would pass the civil service examination within the year or go back to their old positions. This amendment will justify these appointments in voidance of the Civil Service Act. There is no necessity at all for it. There are thousands of young men in the country, with all the qualifications necessary for any of these appointments, and who have passed the qualifying examinations, but because a person happens to be appointed a landing waiter, he is open, under this clause, to receive any appointment at all in the service.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understand the hon. Minister of Justice, he can, under the law, appoint anybody as preventive officer and then promote him to any other position without his passing the examination.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Under the Civil Service Act a man may be appointed without examination, a preventive officer. The law makes no provision for the duties to be performed by a preventive officer, so that the Minister of Customs can assign that preventive officer to any duties he thinks proper, and the practice has been in the past to assign them to certain duties.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What are they?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Some clerks, some lockers and all manner of duties. A great number of them are in the department, and this is to prevent that practice in the future, by providing that if a preventive officer is assigned to perform the duties of clerk he shall not receive a larger salary than would be paid a clerk regularly appointed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). My point is this: According to law, a person to be appointed a surveyor of customs must have a certain qualification. If you are going to appoint him permanently he must have passed the civil service examination. According to the law, section ten of the Civil Service Act:—

All appointments to the Civil Service shall be during pleasure, and no officer shall be appointed or promoted to any place below that of deputy head unless he has passed the requisite examination and served the probationary term heretofore mentioned.

If you have a preventive officer appointed temporarily you cannot legally transfer him to perform the duties of a surveyor until he has passed the examination. If the law will not allow you to put on an acting surveyor because he has not qualifications, how will it justify you in putting in another officer who has not the qualifications?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is possible that the law may have been violated ever since 1886. But, if it has, we desire to remedy that and prevent it occurring in the future.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) was not in the House the night before last, when I submitted a question to the Minister of Customs which affects one of the constituents of the hon. member for Grenville. Perhaps the hon. minister would explain more fully now. We have at Prescott a preventive officer, an able and efficient man. Now, one of the pledges the hon. minister made was that the superannuation law should be abolished. This preventive officer, Mr. Gerald, was placed on the superannuation list, as the hon. minister informed me, at $300 a year. I am satisfied Mr. Gerald is as competent to perform the duties of the office as is the gentleman who was appointed as his successor, perhaps at the same salary as Mr. Gerald received. I asked the reason for the superannuation but did not get the information. My hon. friend from Grenville is more conversant with the facts than I am. I know that Mr. Gerald is superannuated at $300, which is an abuse of the law, carried out simply to find a place for a gentleman whom the minister thought was entitled to some patronage, and whom they appointed as preventive officer as they could not appoint him to the service because he has not passed the civil service examination.

Mr. REID (Grenville). With reference to the case mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) I may say that Mr. Gerald was superannuated and another gentleman appointed in his place who had not passed the examination. He was appointed a preventive officer. He had to take that minor position. The Minister of Customs knows that the gentleman appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the superannuation of Mr. Gerald had been looking for a much higher position for several years, but not having passed the examination, could not be appointed. According to this law, he could have been appointed to one of the higher positions, say as acting surveyor. Now, suppose that were done. If a change of government should take place, I do not hesitate to say I would do all I could to have all appointees under this administration retain their positions, if they had been appointed honourably—that is that they had not been appointed through the unfair dismissal of a supporter of the Conservative party, which, I must say, has not been done so far, and I am not finding fault in that way. If this gentleman were appointed chief clerk or acting surveyor, I would feel in duty bound to recognize the appointment as a permanent appointment. So, what I feel is that the minister is only going to give more trouble to himself and also make a great deal of feeling should a change of government take place.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The surveyor ranks next to the collector in authority in every customs house, because he has control of the outside service, though he is not regarded as a deputy according to the Civil Service Act, I think you will not find a case in any port of Canada where the surveyor has been compelled to pass the civil service examination.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. To whom does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) allude when he speaks of the surveyor?

Mr. REID (Grenville). There always has been a surveyor until a short time ago. When the position of surveyor became vacant, the hon. gentleman established a chief clerkship instead. The hon. minister knows the gentleman who got the position is qualified. But there may be others who have not the necessary qualifications and could not receive the appointment, but who are recommended by the Liberal committee. Of course, not having passed the civil service examination, they could not be appointed under the law as it is. The person appointed is a first-class man—could not be better fitted for the position. But he had passed the civil service examination. The hon. minister knows that if this law had not been in force he would not have made the appointment he did, for influence would have been brought to bear upon him to appoint one of the applicants. But, I think that this clause will be unfair to those who have passed the civil service examination. A man can be appointed acting clerk, and so there will be no use in his passing the examination.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The effect of this section has been stated better than I could state it by the Minister of Justice. This amendment to the law will limit and circumscribe the powers that the department now has under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was limited before.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A preventive officer can be assigned to the duty of a clerk, the maximum salary of whose position would be $1,000 or $1,200 a year, and he could be paid $1,500 or $1,800 if the department thought fit. We do not do that, but it could be done under the law. If this section passes, that will be contrary to the law. Therefore, I say, the power of the department is circumscribed by this section. Now the argument of the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) was that it was not intended that preventive officers should be appointed and thus escape the necessity of passing the examination—they should pass it within a year, for, he says, if they do not pass it within a year, that is evidence that they are unfit for their positions. If the hon. gentleman will say that all temporary officers must pass the examination within a year or leave their positions, then, he will put out some three or four hundred men, some of whom have been in the service for ten, twelve, or fifteen years. They will all have to go. There would be no fairness in drawing the line if, because a man who is appointed now cannot pass the civil service examination at the end of the year, that is proof that he is unfit to discharge the duty; that reason must equally apply to the men who have been there ten or fifteen years. You cannot draw the distinction. If the purpose be to secure efficiency it must apply to all that are in that position. I do not know that we need to be careful about this clause. If you strike it out you are leaving more power in the hands of the department than it has at present.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think the hon. gentleman is very logical in his conclusions. It has been suggested by my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) that after the temporary officer has occupied the position for a certain time, if he has not then passed the examination, he should cease to hold the position. That seems to be reasonable, and I think it is feasible. Perhaps it might be for a longer time than was suggested; instead of six months the period might be made a year, when certainly it would be time for him to pass his examination. I think the minister could meet the difficulty by providing that a temporary officer should not occupy the position longer than six months, or at all events until the next examination. Now, with reference to the other part, which I think is really of more importance, it is argued that it would be unfair to those who have been in the position for several years as temporary officials. I do not think we should be guilty of any unfairness on this account. We have in this country recognized that vested rights must be respected, and it would be a serious injustice, one of which the opposition would never be guilty at all events, and of which I hope the government would never be the perpetrators. It would be unjust to say that after a man had been in that position for ten or fifteen years, he should now by reason of a new law, be subjected to an examination. We can prescribe that the period during which a temporary employee should occupy that position shall not exceed a certain number of months from the next examination, and that the rights of those gentlemen who have served well and faithfully, and grown old in the service, shall be protected.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman says 'have served well and faithfully.' But to accept an amendment of this kind is to say that one who does not pass an examination cannot serve well and faithfully.

Mr. CLARKE. It would be a hardship for the men who have been in the service fifteen or twenty years and who are not competent to pass an examination, to make it apply to them. But the case would be different with applicants for employment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This clause is for the purpose of restricting the scope of the Act as it has been construed in the past, because it is alleged to have operated to the detriment of the service. It would only be fair, if this amendment should pass, to make it apply to all those who are in the service as well as to those who are to be appointed. Why draw a line of demarcation between those who came in under an improper construction of the Civil Service Act and those who are brought in now? Is there not a reason for the rule that has existed for the last twenty years? I do not say the rule has been improperly established, on the contrary, I think it was properly established, and it has worked out well in results. I will show how it works out well. Take, for instance, a man appointed as an appraiser in the customs. That man requires to have had some actual experience of business, and if he has been in the business for ten, fifteen or twenty years, he has some value as an appraiser. But how many of these men who have been in the business during all these years are competent to pass an examination ? How many of them could pass ? How many of them would be disqualified simply because they could not pass Men perform the duties of an appraiser better if they come in after those years of service than if they had simply got that book knowledge which is required to pass the examination. It seems to me the rule that has been established by my hon. friend is a rule that operates usefully. But it is better to make the rule clear, to make is absolutely apparent to parliament what we are doing. I think it is better to restrict the Act and prevent what has been done in the past from being done in the future.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Justice complains of abuses under the late administration. He will have an opportunity of making a comparison of the defects which existed at the beginning of the hon. gentleman's career and those which exist at the present time. The Minister of Customs has promised to bring down a statement of the number of the employees of the customs in Toronto, which will include a list of those who have been temporarily appointed during the last five or six years, and he will be shocked to learn what numbers of men have been appointed there temporarily, and have been there for years, without passing the examination at all. They are there in utter disregard of the requirements as regards qualifications and age. We heard the statement made the other night that one-fourth of the total number of the officers have never passed an examination at all. We say that if this Bill is passed it will open the door and there will be a larger percentage twelve months from now who have not passed the civil service examination than there is to-day.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the hon. minister to approve of the practice which has been in existence for twenty years of violating the Civil Service Act and that we should continue it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is not a technical violation of the Act. The Act provides for the appointment of preventive officers without regard to the civil service examination. You can take any man whom you choose and appoint him a preventive officer in the outside service. There is no Act in existence that I am aware of which defines the duty of a preventive officer. The practice in the department has been, as I am informed—of course I speak subject to correction—when a preventive officer has been appointed to assign him to the performance of these duties under schedule (b). The result has been that at times a man has been appointed as a preventive officer with a fixed salary and he has been appointed to the performance of the duty of a clerk and while in the performance of this duty without being regularly appointed under the Civil Service Act, he has been appointed at a salary larger as a preventive officer than it would be possible to give him if he were regularly appointed under the Civil Service Act. My object in suggesting the amendment is to do with parliamentary authority what has been done in the past, to make it possible for the Minister of Customs to give temporary employment to a man instead of appointing him a preventive officer, assigning his duties at the time he is appointed, and thus provide that a temporary clerk shall not be in receipt of a sum in excess of the sum to which he would be entitled if he were appointed permanently. I think the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) misunderstood me. What I meant to say was that if these are abuses the abuses originated before 1896, and they have been carried on to the present day. We are all responsible for them. I do not mean to apportion the responsibility. I mean to say that if these abuses are in existence we inherited them and we want to see how far we can restrict them.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no improvement up to the present time on the old order of things.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Perhaps only in the character of the individuals appointed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are many men in the service temporarily who are good officers and the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) thinks that they should be put on the permanent list. I agree with him and I might put them on as preventive officers. While the law gives me that power I try not to do that because I have invariably asked them to pass the civil service examination. If they do not pass it, in cases where I have felt that they were good officers, then, I have availed myself of that power. He suggested that there ought to be an Act passed whereby all in the service in that position should be placed on the permanent list. I do not hesitate to say that my own personal view is—I do not commit the government—that it would be a desirable thing to do, but the hon. gentleman will see that if I were to become a party to that, then, I would become a party to making a declaration that my firm belief was that His Majesty's service in the customs could be well and faithfully performed by men who had not passed the civil service examination. I would be recreant to my duty if I came down and proposed that we continue to take into the service of His Majesty men unfitted for it. But, according to the rule laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite, the very fact that these men have not passed the civil service examination is a declaration that they are unfitted for the service. I do not accept that. If I believed that I could not express my own individual view in favour of doing this by a specific Act and placing them all upon the permanent list. It is to be applied to men who cannot pass and if the fact that they cannot pass the examination is proof that they are unfit to hold positions in the service of His Majesty is it proof that the men who have been employed ten or fifteen years are unfit to serve His Majesty ? I do not believe it. It might be suggested that I am arguing against the Civil Service Act. Well, I am not careful to say that I am a great admirer of the Act in so far as practical benefits are concerned in the working of the outside service of the customs. I do not think it is an advantage. We cannot work the outside service without temporary officers. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not say that I should not avail myself of the services of such officers, but they say that they must pass the examination within a year. I would like to get them to pass it if they are equal in other respects. I would like them to pass before I appoint them at all, but my experience as a business man extending over a good many years, is that you may find a person who would have the literary attainments perhaps, or the knowledge, to pass this examination which is a literary one in relation to matters of geography and history of this country and other countries, that you might find a young man who has passed that, but when it came down to the discharge of the duties of an appraiser, or a clerk, or a landing waiter, where judgment has to be exercised, he might not be the best officer by any manner of means. If you want to continue your Civil Service Act and apply it to your inside service where your work is largely clerical, all right. I am speaking of the outside department of the customs, and I do not believe that you are going to secure a better class of men if they do pass the civil service examination. So long as this is the law I endeavour to get all I can to pass it, but where I find men——

Mr. CLARKE. How have you been succeeding in Toronto in getting men to pass the examination who have been employed during the last five years ? Have you made very much progress in getting these men to pass the examination ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I think so.

Mr. CLARKE. How many have passed during the last twelve months ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will find out. I do not think many of the old appointments have passed, but I think some who have been appointed since I have had charge of the department myself have passed.

Mr. CLARKE. You are still urging them to pass ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are urging them to pass. The men themselves are very anxious to be put on the permanent list for the reason that if they are on the temporary list and they lose a day through sickness, they lose their pay and they do not get their holiday. More than that, where a man is on the temporary list his services can be dispensed with by a letter from the minister. If he is on the permanent list an Order in Council must be passed to dismiss him. They feel that they are safer in their tenure of office upon being appointed on the permanent list, that a mere whim on the part of the minister, or an unworthy feeling, if the minister were capable of entertaining an unworthy feeling, could be exercised in an arbitrary way and they could be dismissed without any real cause. For that reason they want to get on, and they apply, and when they do, I say I will be happy to put you on and it will give me pleasure to do so, if you pass the examination. I say that to men who were years in the service before I was minister, men not in sympathy with me politically ; I treat them all alike. But there are some men who hesitate to try, and they tell me it is so long since they were at school that they could not pass the examination, but they would like to be on the permanent list. The only way we can do that is by appointing them preventive officers, and after they are appointed as such they are assigned to the duties they have been doing for years and have been doing it well. This circumscribes the power of the minister instead of enlarging it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) The fact seems to have been overlooked that no person over thirty-five years of age can present himself to pass the civil service examination.

Mr. MONK. But they can be appointed preventive officers.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) And they are better qualified preventive officers than a great many who have passed the civil service examination.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister says that he approves of putting old and tried officers on the permanent list, but in the next breath he told us that if he did that there might as well be no examination at all. He has put a large number on the permanent list, but he has not put others who are perhaps more entitled to it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said that if I entertained the views of gentlemen on the other side, I would not be in favour of putting these men on the permanent list who have been ten or twelve years in office, but I do not share the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite that it is a disqualification for a man because he does not pass the civil service examination.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The point I am making is that this Bill will enable the minister to appoint a person to a higher grade than that of a preventive officer. It is not the desire of any one on this side of the House to interfere with the appointment of temporary officers, but it is my opinion at least that those positions which now require the examination should be protected. If the minister passes this law he will have to take the nominations made by the political committees which is now done in many cases. Probably, as the minister says none of us could pass the examination off-hand, but I am satisfied that the minister or any of us could do so if we gave it a few months study. Suppose the minister should appoint an acting officer, then although that officer might not be as good an officer as one who could pass the civil service examination, yet if there was a change of government, I for one, would certainly be opposed to removing him from an office which he had occupied for years.

Mr. CLARKE. Does not this amendment leave the door wide open to the minister to appoint a person to any position in the service without an examination ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Under the present law we could appoint any person we chose as a preventive officer and continue him in the service temporarily and assign him to such duties as we may think proper.

Mr. CLARKE. And if this becomes law it will not be necessary to appoint a person a preventive officer, but he may be appointed to any position ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You could appoint an acting landing waiter, but not a landing waiter.

Mr. CLARKE. We have the explanation of the Minister of Justice that the law now gives permission to the minister to appoint preventive officers without examination and assign them to various duties. If this clause becomes law the minister need not appoint a person as a preventive officer, but he can appoint him to discharge temporarily the duties of any position in the outside service of the Customs ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Then that leaves the door wide open and the minister should have the courage of his convictions and abolish the civil service examination altogether. I never myself could see why gentlemen should have to pass a qualifying examination to discharge the duties of landing waiters but, be that as it may, if the minister is logical the proper thing for him to do is to abolish the examination altogether.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are landing waiters, tide waiters, clerks, &c. We appoint a man acting landing waiter or acting tide waiter, or acting appraiser, and give him that title ; but if he wants to become a permanent officer, and have the title of the office, he must pass the examination. If he cannot pass the examination, we may appoint him a preventive officer permanently, and give him the position of acting land waiter, or whatever it may be.

Mr. MONK. I have no intention of doing what I think would be an injustice, that is, touching those who, by virtue of this abuse have been in the civil service for a number of years. There is no doubt that this amendment does not touch them ; but in case it should be so interpreted by the Minister of Customs, I will not insist upon it. But let me point this out to the hon. Minister of Justice, that I think he is mistaken in regard to the abuse which he contends that this section cures. Will he look at this section and tell me if, after it is passed, it will not be still possible for the Minister of Customs to name a preventive officer, and then assign to him the duties of a clerk, for instance, in a division where such a clerk would be only regularly paid $400, while the preventive officer would be drawing a much larger salary. The Minister of Justice, I am sure, has no doubt about that, because there is no doubt. It will be open to the Minister of Customs to begin by naming a man a preventive officer, and then assign to him any duties or any position he chooses, except that of deputy minister, because, as the Minister of Justice pointed out, the law does not define the duties of preventive officers. The only thing that would happen is that the Minister of Customs, without reference to the character or qualifications of the preventive officer, would name him an acting officer in one of the classes refered to. I think there is no doubt about that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is right.

Mr. MONK. But he would continue to name him preventive officer, and give him any salary he chose, and assign to him any functions he deemed suitable. I do not wish to continue the discussion on this point. We are breaking into the Civil Service Act by this provision. The abuse has existed in the past, and we are legalizing it. It is sufficient to refer to the Civil Service Act, sections 47a, b, c, and d, to see with what care the legislature in the past, rightly or wrongly, has surrounded entrance into the civil service, providing that if a temporary officer is employed continuously, his salary must be specially voted by parliament. All this is done away with by this clause, and I do not think it will effect any good.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Questions sometimes arise as to whether goods come under a certain designation and bear a certain rate of duty, and they are determined by the board of customs. They meet and give a decision, which, if approved by the minister, has the force of statute law, subject to an appeal of the Governor in Council, which, however, is very seldom taken. A decision by the board might be contrary to what had been the practice in some ports for some time previously, and it might be that we had been collecting in some cases a higher rate of duty than that fixed by the board of customs, or in other cases a lower rate. In the former case there would be a refund, while in the latter case the importer would be asked to make another entry. This is to provide that such a decision shall prevail in future, but it shall not apply to previous transactions.

On section 6,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The present Act requires that the invoice shall be made out in the currency of the country in which the goods are actually purchased. This permits the invoice to be made out in other currency. Then there is a provision to help us better to guard against frauds.

Mr. KEMP. In what cases are goods not invoiced in the currency in which they are purchased ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The commissioner tells me that there are many cases in which the invoices of goods from the continent are made out in sterling instead of in the currency of the country. He tells me that at times invoices are made out in Chinese or Mexican dollars.

On section 7,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I explained when the resolutions were going through what that meant. This is to provide that when an article is composed of different materials, that that component part which is of the greatest value shall determine the rate of duty.

On section 10,

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Why should damaged goods be destroyed when they cannot be sold for sufficient to pay the duty ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If a person abandons goods and will not pay the duty, we destroy them if we cannot sell them for sufficient to pay the duty. The reason is that if we destroy them other goods will come in to replace them, on which we will get the whole duty.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). You are at liberty to sell them if you get enough to pay the duty, not unless you do ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The duty is supposed to take precedence of everything else.

Mr. LENNOX. It is alright perhaps that the duty should take precedence. But if you can collect one-half of the duty by selling the goods, why not sell them ? The hon. minister says that they are destroyed in order to induce the importation of other goods to take their place. That is not a good principle. Why should goods be voluntarily destroyed when their sale would realize a portion of the duties for the mere purpose of inducing other goods to be brought into the country.

Mr. CLARKE. I presume that the clause is all right, but I find it difficult to understand where three-fourths of the duty could be realized, the government should not sell the goods. Suppose the goods are worth $1,000 and the duty amounts to $250, according to this clause if the goods did not bring more than $225 or $200 they would have to be destroyed. I do not see why the country should lose in this way.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That has been the law for years.

Mr. CLARKE. Evidently the hon. gentleman has money to burn.

Mr. HENDERSON. In my opinion, the hon. Minister of Customs is right. It would be unfair to sell the goods for a portion of the duty. Suppose the goods are valued at $1,000 and the duty amounts to $200. If you were to sell those goods and they realized only one-half the duty, they would go into the country in opposition to other goods which paid the full duty. We want to protect the public.

Mr. SMITH. I cannot see any great difference to the public in selling the goods for $200 or $199. If you can get $200 then you can sell them, but if you can only get $199 then you must destroy them, because otherwise you will injure the public by throwing them on the market. The fact that this has been on the statutes for years, does not make any difference.

On section 14,

Section 65 of the Customs Act, as amended by section 15 of chapter 14 of the statutes of 1888, is amended by adding the following subsection thereto :—

3. All material imported to form medicinal or toilet preparations alone or with other articles or compounds, to be put up, labelled or sold under any proprietary or special name or trade mark, shall be valued for duty under the provisions of subsection two of this section. The Minister of Customs may, however, refer to the appraising officers for valuation such of the materials as have a fair market value in the ordinary course of trade.

Mr. KEMP. Is this section general or only applicable to specific articles ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That and the next section are embodied in the Tariff Act.

Mr. KEMP. Does it refer to undervaluation generally—the original clause which it is supposed to amend ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, not generally.

Mr. KEMP. The reason I wanted to understand about this clause more particularly was that when the matter was up a few days ago, I referred the hon. minister to the law of the United States in relation to undervaluation. I had not, at that time, the clause of the American tariff under my hand, but I have it now, and with the permission of the committee I will read it. This is the Act of June 10, 1890, section 29, article 400 :

If any owner, importer, consigner, agent or other person shall make or attempt to make any entry of imported merchandise, by means of a fraudulent or false invoice, affidavit, letter, paper, or by means of any false statement, written or verbal, or by means of any false or fraudulent practice or appliance whatsoever, or shall be guilty of any wilful act or omission by means whereof the United States shall be deprived of the lawful duties or any portion thereof accruing upon the merchandise or any portion thereof, embraced or referred to in such invoice, affidavit, letter, paper or statement, or affected by such act or omission, such merchandise or the value thereof, to be recovered from the person making the entry, shall be forfeited, which forfeiture shall only apply to the whole of the merchandise of the value thereof in the case or package containing the particular article or articles of merchandise to which such fraud or false paper or statement relates, and such person shall upon conviction be fined for each offence a sum not exceeding $5,000 or be imprisoned for a time not exceeding two years, or both in the discretion of the court.

That is the section to which I referred in discussing this matter, and I would press upon the minister some amendment to our Customs Act of a severer character than that which exists at the present time. And I would like to know if the department intend to recommend any amendment along the lines of what I have just read ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Act now in force in Canada. It hardly goes so far as that read by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp), but I think it goes as far as the department would be inclined to recommend. It provides that, in case of smuggling or attempt to pass any fraudulent invorce or any attempt to defraud the revenue, the goods may be seized. The person fined the value of the goods, and also subjected to a penalty not more than $200 or less than $50, or imprisonment for not more than one year or less than one month, or both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. KEMP. Does not the hon. minister think the government might approach nearer the United States law—perhaps not to the extent of a fine of $5.000, but something more than the fine already imposed, which is only $200, I believe ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have had cases under this law in which the judge recommended that we should not claim the full penalty of the law, saying that he had not the power under the Act to mitigate it—you get the value of the goods and $200 for every separate entry—but the accused, he thought, should not be subject to such a penalty. I think our law is sufficiently strong. If we are weak, it is in there being fraudulent importations we have not been able to detect.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to draw the minister's attention to the large number of scales being imported into this country from Dayton, Ohio. I am informed on creditable authority that these scales have been sold to the consumer for $60 or $70 each, and yet have been imported into this country at a valuation of $6 or $7 each. I would ask the hon. minister if this has been brought to his attention, and if so what action has been taken ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The matter of scales has been before us several times, and the Commissioner of Customs tells me that he is having inquiries instituted. The hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Lavell) mentioned it the other day, and I asked him to give us any names or other information that would help us to find at what port these goods had been entered. Of course, it would be outrageous to allow scales to be brought in at $6 or $7 that were sold in the regular way at $60 or $70.

Mr. BLAIN. Have the scale manufacturers of Canada brought this before the department ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I find that there have been no letters with regard to the class of scales referred to by the hon. member (Mr. Blain). The manufacturers have two or three times in the last year reported to us that scales coming from the large manufacturers—large scales—were not properly valued, and we had a special valuations made. But there has been no complaint made recently, and no complaint at all of what the hon. gentleman has referred to. It was quite new to me when it was mentioned the other night. As I say, if hon. gentlemen, or any one conversant with the facts will tell us at what port the entry was made or will give us any clue I shall be glad to have the matter looked up.

Mr. MACLEAN. Before the Bill is reported, I would like to ask the minister, as the word surtax appears in this Bill, if there is any information in the possession of the government that they can give to the House and country with regard to the attitude of Germany to Canada in connection with the surtax.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). We have nothing official. Of course we have seen the statements in the public press which the hon. gentleman has seen, but we have nothing official.

On section 17, subsection u,

For reducing the duty on any or all articles, whether natural products or products of manufactures, used as materials in Canadian manufactures ; and any such materials specified in such Order in Council shall be subject to such reduced duty of customs and no other for the time and under the conditions therein provided.

Mr. CLANCY. The government, as you will see, Mr. Chairman, is taking very extraordinary powers by this subsection. This matter came up when the resolutions were being discussed at a former stage. Now I want to point out to the Minister of Customs that he is seeking here a very extraordinary authority. It is no answer to say that the present law provides that you may take the duty off altogether. That is a very wide power, I admit, but it is not near so wide as the power to say what shall be the duty, or that there shall be no duty at all. When the hon. gentleman proposes to take power to revise the whole list of articles coming within the meaning of that section, he is asking for a most extraordinary power. Why, the hon. gentleman can revise the whole tariff so far as these articles are concerned, he can fix such a scale of duties as he may think proper. I protest against such legislation, I think it is wholly unwarranted. If a deputation comes to the hon. gentleman for some additional protection because of unfair competition by a foreign country, he may say, I cannot take off all the duties, because I must have a revenue ; but I will take off some of the duties, and I will give you relief in that way. I say it is a power no government ought to have, it may be improperly exercised.

Mr. KEMP. What particular class of manufactures is this proposed to affect ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is confined to manufactures. We have power now in the Act to deal absolutely, but it does not give the lesser power.

Mr. KEMP. I want to know what class of manufactures the hon. gentleman had in his mind that this would affect.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not any particular class. Some Orders in Council have been passed, but I have not any particular class in my mind. But cases might arise.

Mr. CLARKE. Could the hon. gentleman bring us down those Orders in Council, allowing this Bill to stand in the meantime ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will stand for the third reading.

Mr. CLANCY. Why insert this section if no cases have arisen ? Why this urgency ? Why is the hon. gentleman reaching out his hand for more power in that direction, when he tells the committee that no cases have come under his notice that demand such authority ?

Mr. CLARKE. I think it fortunate that our attention has been drawn to this clause, which gives the minister such extraordinary power. He says there have been Orders in Council, we should have a memorandum of them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There have been fifteen or seventeen.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had a very full discussion of this question at an earlier stage of the debate, when the resolutions were in committee. The whole question was thoroughly threshed out. But before the third reading is taken my hon. friend can have these Orders in Council which have been published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Bill reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before that motion is adopted I desire to say that I gave notice on Monday last of the motion which I proposed to move at the earliest opportunity when the House should be moved into Committee of Supply. It was moved into Committee of Supply the next evening, but I had arranged in the meantime to proceed with the conference as to the Redistribution Bill, which was held that evening, and therefore I could not proceed on that occasion. I am ready to proceed with the motion now as far as I am concerned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) desires to proceed with the motion now, we quite recognize his right to do so, but I suspect hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and this side as well, have found that we have rival attractions to-night. I think the circus has proved to be a greater attraction than the hon. gentleman's motion, or my proposals. I hardly suppose he would like to go on with the present thin House, and we would certainly prefer to have all matters in connection with the tariff taken up in their proper order rather than on a motion in amendment to supply. However, if the hon. gentleman is content to postpone it and bring it up at his own convenience at a later day, we would gladly concur in the suggestion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as I am concerned, I am quite ready to proceed with the motion now, but I am ready to meet the convenience of the government. If the hon. Minister of Finance thinks it more convenient to postpone it to a later day, I am content to allow it to stand until as late as Monday. Further than that I cannot say at present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All right.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to government steamers, $250,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Prefontaine). Mr. Chairman, there is an increase of $25,000 in this item, and I suppose that is the reason why an explanation is required. It is easily explained by the fact that, although there was only $225,000 voted last year, there was spent this year $240,560. The increase is explained in the following manner: The following amounts were spent for repairs to vessels: 'Newfoundland,' $1,193; 'Contest,' $1,690; 'Aberdeen,' $14,784; 'Lansdowne,' $4,680; 'Quadra,' $1,896; 'Stanley,' $8,827; 'Minto,' $5,521; making a total of $38,522. The increased expenditure is also due to the increase in the price of coal. As regards the 'Stanley' and 'Minto,' it is easily understood how it is impossible to say beforehand how much the expenditure connected with the repairs will amount to. It depends entirely on the use they have had during the season.

Mr. MONK. There are several items contained in this vote, such as investigation into wrecks, removal of obstructions on navigable rivers and the winter mail service, and I may perhaps shorten the work of the committee by asking the minister to state what is the policy of the government in respect to facilitating the approach of steamers to Montreal, such as lighting the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec so that it may be navigable at night. The minister has been connected with municipal affairs and with the harbour board of Montreal, and he knows the interest taken in that question. What policy does the hon. gentleman intend to follow in that respect? Then there is the important question as to the equipment of the port of Montreal itself as to which we expect an announcement of policy. The minister will remember that last fall he took an active interest in matters concerning the port of Montreal and he wrote to the harbour commissioners inquiring what works were necessary in order that the new wharfs might be fully equipped for the handling of freight. Does the hon. gentleman intend seeing that these improvements are carried out promptly at the national expense. May we expect from the policy of the hon. gentleman that we shall make of the port of Montreal a national port. We would like to hear his opinion on that before we pass this important item. There is an item for the removal of obstructions to navigation and investigation into wrecks. The minister can do a great deal to place the port of Montreal on a better footing as regards underwriting. He is aware that the port of Montreal is now discriminated against in the matter of marine insurance. What steps does the hon. gentleman intend to take in order to place the insurance rates of the port of Montreal on a parity with the rates in American ocean ports. Then there is the question of winter navigation between Quebec and the sea. The hon. gentleman is aware that two or three winters ago an enterprising newspaper in the city of Montreal expended quite a large sum of money in experimenting with regard to this matter. It has been urged by experts that if we employed these large ice-breaking steamers which are used by the Russian government, the season of navigation would be extended for perhaps two months longer than at present. Has the minister any policy upon that question. These are matters which it is right and proper that the minister should enlighten the committee on before we pass this item.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The item under consideration does not cover the vast field which the hon. gentleman has exploited. We are considering an item for ocean and river service now, but the hon. gentleman has spoken of the lighting of the St. Lawrence, the question of winter navigation from Quebec to the sea, and the equipment of the port of Montreal, a matter which is not dealt with in the items of the Department of Marine and Fisheries as they are before the House at the present time. However, I have no objection to answer the hon. gentleman in a general way as regards the different questions he has put. The port of Montreal is now being equipped and I hope that within this season and next season it will be capable of handling the trade of the country. As regards winter navigation, that question has been before the people for the last twenty-five or thirty years. The hon. the Senate of Canada took the matter up as far back as thirty years ago, and there are voluminous reports on the question. It was also taken up by the harbour board of Montreal to my knowledge, and a further study made of it. I think the most pressing question at the present time, not only for the port of Montreal, but for the whole country is to have the harbours of the St. Lawrence equipped in such a way that they may be able to cope with the trade that is coming to them. It is admitted on all hands that the port of Montreal (and the port of Quebec as well, for that matter) is not properly equipped. Works are going on there now as fast as possible in consideration of the means and resources of the country. I will not undertake to speak of the port of Quebec because I know a good deal less about it than I know about the port of Montreal, but as regards the port of Montreal, I know that since 1898 the harbour board, assisted by the present government, have been going on with the works there as speedily as possible. I know that the harbour commissioners of Montreal decided in 1898 to have two shifts of men, so that the work should go on day and night; and since then, with the approval of the present government, the work has been pushed ahead in that way much more rapidly than it could have been done under the old system. It has been published that to complete the equipment of the harbour of Montreal would require an expenditure of about $3,000,000, besides something more than $1,000,000 which the harbour commissioners have still available under the law passed in 1899 and 1900. They have come to the government and have asked for authority to borrow this $3,000,000 in order that the work may be proceeded with as rapidly as possible. The policy of the government will be announced in a few days, I hope, when hon. members will be in a position to discuss it. The government are alive to the situation, and I know that it is their desire to have the necessary works for the equipment of the port of Montreal completed as soon as possible, that is to say, during this season and the next season. As regards the lighting, although I should not anticipate the next item, which is lighthouse and coast service, I may say that the intention of the department——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think probably it is just as well for me to make a remark here, as nearly all these items are becoming subjects of discussion. In order that the committee may make progress, I think it would be well for hon. members to confine the discussion as nearly as possible to the item under consideration. It is quite within the right of any member to discuss almost any question under the general item of ocean and river service. Sometimes the committee agree to discuss the whole item, and then take it up item by item; but I think hon. members should confine themselves to the item.

Mr. CLANCY. This is a very large vote, involving a very large sum of money—$308,600. Did I understand the Chairman to say that we must confine the discussion to each item composing the general item ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No. The rule is that the committee may decide whether they will take up each item in succession and discuss and dispose of that, or have a general discussion upon the whole vote. The hon. member can remark upon any item in this vote, and after the general discussion is over, then the committee may take up each item.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Chairman, the vote is before you in the shape of one resolution, and I have a right to put any question concerning any part of this resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is what I say. You can put a question or discuss any of the items under this resolution.

Mr. MONK. That is what I do. I furthermore stated that I had done this in order to shorten the time—not to have to get up on all the different parts of the resolution. But there is no doubt that I can discuss any of the questions which I have discussed, under the resolution before the Chair.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would submit that some of the questions which my hon. friend has discussed are not in the resolution at all I agree with him that he can discuss any item under the resolution; but what I want to call the attention of the committee to is this, that we must take the resolution either item by item or as one vote. Our practice has been to take it up item by item. I submit that if we do that we should confine the discussion to the one item before us. If we take the resolution up as one vote, and roam over all the items, we cannot after that take it up item by item.

Mr. MONK. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. Take the first item—maintenance and repairs to government steamers, $250,000. Does the hon. leader of the government contend that upon this item I cannot ask all the question which I have asked ? Surely I can ask what is going to be done about lighting the St. Lawrence, about improving the port of Montreal, about underwriting. Before we vote any money, we can bring up any question or grievance, and these are distinct grievances. If the hon. leader of the government wishes to fragmentize the discussion, it will take a longer time. Under any circumstances, it is all the one resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will read the rule, so that it may be understood. I think that a general discussion may take place on the resolution, and after the discussion each item may be taken up and dealt with. Here is the rule :

> Sometimes there are a number of items in a vote or resolution, and each of these may be generally discussed as forming a part of a single question. Each item may then, if the committee think proper, be taken up as a distinct question, and so discussed and amended.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The point I make, Mr. Chairman—and I do it only in the spirit that we may not wander too far—is that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has been discussing some questions which are not embraced in any of these items, and I hope that we shall all be confined to the subject which is immediately before us in the estimates.

Mr. CLARKE. In this connection, I would like to say that I have in my room copies of the Weekly London 'Times,' issued during the fall and winter, in which reference is made repeatedly to the unsatisfactory condition of things in the St. Lawrence; and I certainly anticipated, when my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier asked the question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that the answer of the minister would be as to the condition of the St. Lawrence, and what was to be done to improve the very serious condition of affairs that now exists.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is quite proper.

Mr. MONK. What I want the hon. minister to do is to indicate the policy of his department and of the government on these matters relating to navigation, and then we can take up each item, having obtained that information on the discussion of the resolution itself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman desires that there should be a general discussion as to the policy of the government on matters not touched in this resolution. For example, he wants the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to declare what is the policy of the government relating to the public works in the harbour at Montreal and the equipment of that port and so forth. But not one of these matters is within the scope of this resolution. Anything touching the navigation of the St. Lawrence pertains to this item, but there is nothing in this resolution which calls for a general discussion of the policy of the government with regard to the port of Montreal.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman is very severe in limiting discussion on a question raised in supply. I called the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that while occupying his present position, he inquired by letter from the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal what improvements they considered necessary to complete the equipment of that port. Will the hon. gentleman pretend that, when we are called on to vote the sums asked by the department, I am not entitled to ask the hon. Minister of Marine what is the policy of the government on that particular subject ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As not one of the items in this resolution has any relation to the improvements of the port of Montreal, I think I may contend that the hon. gentleman cannot properly bring up that subject on this motion. All I ask is that the Chairman should see that we discuss, in a broad and liberal spirit, questions within the scope of the resolutions. Questions outside that scope, important as they may be, will come up in their proper order.

Mr. MONK. I am quite ready to accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and I will point out to you that I asked the hon. Minister of Marine if, at the time he made that inquiry of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, he was really carrying out the policy of the government, and if at the present moment he is prepared to inform us what is the policy of the government as regards the improvements at the port of Montreal. If you, Sir, at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance, rule that I am out of order, I shall bow to your decision.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not asked for any ruling against my hon. friend. But, speaking generally, expressed the hope that we would confine ourselves to the scope of the resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As the policy of the government with regard to the equipment of the port of Montreal is not embraced in any of the items of the resolution before us, my ruling is that hon. members cannot discuss that policy until we come to some item relating to it.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the port of Montreal on the St. Lawrence ? And is not the equipment of that port part and parcel of the whole system of expenditure on the St. Lawrence ? And surely we are quite in order if we ask what is the government's policy, in the equipment of the St. Lawrence, with regard to the improvement of the port of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That will come up on the next item. The present resolution deals only with the ocean and river service. It does not touch at all the port of Montreal. I have no objection to answer any of the questions put, but I think we would shorten discussion if we would confine ourselves to the subject matter of the resolution before us.

Mr. SPROULE. This resolution includes a number of matters which are a part of the equipment of the St. Lawrence, and as long as we are asking for information regarding any one of these, we are quite within our rights.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am quite ready to answer any of those questions which refer to these items.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. minister inform us under what system the repairs to the government steamers are made, where they are made, by whom, and are they made by day labour or contract ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The repairs are done sometimes by day labour and sometimes by contract. It depends entirely on their importance. Sometimes they are done in the government shipyards at Sorel. We had some repairs made to the 'Stanley' at the Sorel shipyards during last winter. When the department thinks it is in the public interest to call for tenders, we do so.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is the hon. minister in a position to tell us how much he expects to spend this year on those repairs on our steamers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know what repairs may be necessary in the course of next year. We provide for a certain amount, taking into consideration what was spent in the previous year. We can never tell in advance the extent of the repairs that may be required on the fifteen or twenty steamers belonging to the department. The different repairs made last year were

The 'Newfoundland'..	$ 1,193
The 'Countess'..	1,690
The 'Aberdeen'	14,754
The 'Landsdowne'..	4,608
The 'Quadra'..	1,896
The 'Standard'..	8,827
The 'Minto'..	5,521
Total..	$38,522

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How many steamers has the Department of Marine and Fisheries under its charge, and where are they located ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are twelve—that is for the marine service. There are some other steamers under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but they will come under another vote.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask if the steamer 'Scout' which was in charge of the Department of Railways and Canals on the St. Lawrence river has been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, she was taken over by my department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was the transfer made for any special reason ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We took over their lights.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We are discussing the item of maintenance and repair of government steamers for which the hon. gentleman is asking $250,000. I did not understand the hon. minister's explanation, and I would like to know what steamers this applies to ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The estimates for the ocean and river service for 1903-4 is as follows : The 'Quadra,' expenses, $31,000 ; the 'Lady Laurier,' $3,500—she is a new boat—the 'Aberdeen,' $45,000 ; the 'Lansdowne,' $30,000 ; the 'Stanley', $35,000 ; the 'Minto', $44,000 ; miscellaneous, $7,000.

Mr. REID Grenville). Where does the 'Scout' come in ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the lighthouse and coast service.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What is the number of men, as a rule, employed on these steamers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They differ in that respect. For instance, the wages on the 'Quadra' amounted to $13,680, fuel, $4,500, provisions, $5,300, ship chandlery, $1,800, &c. The wages on the 'Lady Laurier' amounted to $13,000, fuel, $8,000, provisions, $5,000, &c. The average crew is between twenty and thirty.

Mr. MONK. I suppose that in this vote of $250,000 the expense of supplies is included. Are supplies purchased by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Are the tenders called for publicly, or is a note written to two or three parties asking them to tender for furnishing the supplies ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think there is a call in the public press. That would entail more expenditure than it would be worth while to undertake. But those in the trade know that these supplies are needed every year, and that every one is free to tender. Of course, circulars are sent around calling for tenders.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) is like other ministers,—no better and no worse than the rest. It amounts to this, the department writes a note to some friends of the government, and the contract for the supplies for the steamer is given——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To the lowest.

Mr. MONK. No, there is no such system. I have followed the vote in every department whose estimates have been under discussion so far, and there is no such thing as a system of tender publicly called for.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. MONK. No, I have asked the question with regard to every department, and I find we have no public calls for tender. I do not mean to blame the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He is no greater sinner than his colleagues are. I still cling to what I asked the hon. gentleman when we began this discussion. I do not pretend to say that the hon. gentleman has yet become familiar with all the details of his department. Still, it seems to me that the questions I raised were of such a general character, that the hon. gentleman, who has been a long time in public life and long a member of this House, ought to have a policy to declare to us on these subjects, which interest us in the district of Montreal particularly. But, at the suggestion of the Minister of Finance, I am debarred by your ruling, unfortunately—and, I respectfully claim, not quite justly—from obtaining from the minister whose estimates are under discussion a fair and categorical statement of his policy in regard to the port of Montreal. We are debarred from getting a declaration of policy on that most important point from the minister who represents our own district and who is now asking us to vote about a million of money for these purposes. It may be that the technicality is well founded, but it is not a broad interpretation of the rights of members of this House in Committee of Supply. But, in regard to the lighting, there is no doubt that my question is relative. What is the policy of the department with regard to that point, a most important one in connection with the navigation between Quebec and Montreal. There is an item here for the removal of rock. Surely, it is relevant for me to ask the minister what steps he intends to take to equalize the rates of insurance between Montreal and Quebec with those existing in American ports ? Why are our Canadian ports discriminated against ? The hon. gentleman ought to have a policy on that question, and it is not a question of detail but a question of the utmost importance. The question of winter navigation I think, had already engaged the attention of the minister long before he took a seat on the treasury benches. It is not an answer to tell us that the question has been under discussion for thirty years. The hon. minister is now in a position where he can solve, at any rate in part, that question. What, then, is his policy on the subject ? Has he thought it out ? Is he prepared to make experiments ? I do not wish to retard the hon. gentleman in obtaining these his first estimates, but surely these are questions on which we may expect a declaration of policy when we are called upon to vote these large sums of money.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. minister be good enough to explain the work that these steamers have to do, and in what part of the country they are located ? The 'Quadra,' we all know about, but I would like some explanation with regard to the other steamers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 'Quadra,' as every one knows is on the Pacific Ocean. She is engaged in the service connected with the buoys, lightships, &c., and in aiding in the marine service. The 'Lady Laurier', the new steamer is situated at Halifax. The 'Aberdeen' is in Quebec in charge of the district below Quebec and the lighthouses in the gulf. The 'Druid' does the river service at Portneuf and further down. The 'Lansdowne' is in New Brunswick. The 'Stanley' and the 'Minto' are doing the winter service at Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Then the steamers on the St. Lawrence are attending to the lighthouses and so on ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and the fishery protection at the same time. They have 600 miles to look after.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The 'Stanley' and the 'Minto' are engaged in some other occupation than the winter service, are they not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Does the 'Stanley' attend to supplying the lighthouses ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They help during the summer, as soon as the repairs are done.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Would the minister say what amount of this sum of $250,000 he proposes to put on the steamer 'Stanley' in repairs the coming season ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot inform the hon. gentleman until the report has been received. We have had the steamer examined by Mr. Stephens, and we expect the report in a day or two.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understand, in answer to a question I had on the paper today, that the minister did not intend to send this steamer across to the old country to have repairs made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has it not been found necessary to send her to some shipyard in order to make repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to inform you that last year and the year before, reports were sent into the government that this steamer did need to be sent across to a proper shipyard to be repaired, both as to her machinery and as to her plates and hull ; and this was not done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I am informed there was no official report to that effect.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am informed there was a report made by engineer MacMillan, saying the ship did need certain repairs, but they were not done. At any rate, whether a report was sent in or not, I know, and people competent to judge whether a ship is fit to be on the winter service to cope with the ice, know that the 'Stanley' was certainly in an unfit condition to cope with the ice between Prince Edward Island and the mainland last winter, and partly by reason of the neglect of the government to have her put in shape the season before, was due the disaster which resulted to shippers in Prince Edward Island last year. Now, while the 'Stanley' was off Summeside harbour in the ice jam, I myself, with the port warden of the town and several others, went over to examine her, and the captain himself reported that it was almost impossible to operate that steamer in the ice, because, when she went into it head on her sides were so corrugated by impact with the ice—she is now fifteen yeas old—that she could not back up, and the steamer, on account of these defects, could work stern foremost better than she could forward in heavy ice. That is one of the causes why such a bungle was made of the winter service last year. Now, I understand the minister does not intend to send this steamer across to be fitted up this year. I would like to know where we have a ship yard on this side where these repairs can be made. The heavy plates on the side of the 'Stanley' will have to come off and be straightened, and I am sure she will not be able to take up the winter service successfully until these repairs are done. The 'Stanley' should now be on her way across to the builders to be put in shape for next season. I asked some time ago about the loss to the shippers of perishable goods of fish and meats that were sent down to Georgetown for shipment, and on account of the defects in these boats and their not continuing the service, these fish were spoiled and had to be thrown into the field. I asked if the government had received a petition regarding a refund to the shippers for part of their losses, and the answer was that they had, and they were considering the matter. Attached to these questions there was the following memorandum and letter which I shall read to this House :

A letter has been received from the Secretary of State Department inclosing a petition from residents of Prince Edward Island who were engaged in shipping smelts and eels, asking the government to consider their claims, amounting in all to $3,180.17, for fish alleged to have been spoiled during the winter season owing to the fact that the 'Minto' became disabled. It is stated that the 'Minto' was taken off the route without any notice and sent to the assistance of the 'Stanley,' and that the 'Minto' was ice bound and helpless between the 21st of February and the 17th of March, 1903.

It is alleged that it was impossible to dispose of the goods, and consequently all the smelts and eels held at Georgetown for shipment were totally spoiled, entailing a serious loss to the shippers.

The report of agent Lord on the subject of sending the 'Minto' to the assistance of the 'Stanley' is as follows :

I acknowledge that the result turned out very disastrous, but when this action was thought best, in the conference held in my office at which Mr. Farquharson, M.P., Captain Finlayson, Postmaster Brecken, and others with myself were present, the steamer 'Stanley' was and had been for over twenty days on two meals a day, and by no other means could provisions be placed on board.

And here I want to say that the 'Stanley,' before she was carried away in the drift ice from Summerside, had been ten days in the ice with ample time to provision the vessel, but the captain never sent ashore for help, for fuel or for provisions for the vessel. She was carried off down the ice in the condition that this whole House is aware of, and the steamer 'Minto' had to be sent to her assistance, and thus the loss occurred to shippers of these perishable goods.

Her coal supply was very low, and should she be left to her fate and drift out around Cape North into the open between Cape Breton and Newfoundland the consequences might have been serious for the department, and especially this agency. Captain Finlayson's prompt assertion that it was no use for him to try Pictou as the whole waters from Pictou light down to the east end of Pictou Island and over to the mainland on a line with Arisaig, was completely blocked with heavy ice which no steamer could break through, it was considered the only right thing to do to save the lives of the crew of the 'Stanley,' and perhaps the ship.

This last statement, I would like to remark, does not correspond with the remarks of the minister when this matter was up once before, for he left this House to understand that the failure of the service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland was because the steamer 'Stanley' was on the Summerside route. That is certainly not a fair statement when we have the captain of the 'Minto' saying that he could not get into Pictou as the whole water from Pictou light down to the east end of Pictou Island was completely blocked with heavy ice, and that was so for a long period of time. To go on with this report of Captain Finlayson :

After consulting with Mr. Lord at the agency office and with Mr. Farquharson, M.P., we decided that the 'Minto' should go and try to relieve the 'Stanley,' and it was not possible to get to Pictou at that time on account of the heavy drift ice jammed in between Pictou Island and Pictou, which no steamer could break through ; so we filled the 'Minto's' bunkers and took on board about 120 tons of coal and some stores for the 'Stanley.' On the morning of the 28th of February we left for the 'Stanley.'

We got to the 'Stanley' about ten a.m. Before we reached the 'Stanley' Captain Brown marked the best place to begin to break. After butting at the ice for some time, we broke in about two lengths of the 'Minto,' when the three blades of the propeller broke off all at once close to the hub.

Under these circumstances it is quite clear that both the agent and Captain Finlayson considered it imperative to go to the relief of the 'Stanley' and the statement of the petitioners that the 'Minto' could have taken perishable goods on the 21st of February and would have had no difficulty in getting into Pictou, is not substantiated, but on the contrary Captain Finlayson was of the opinion that Pictou could not be reached. That the port of Pictou would become clear of ice in a few days afterwards, could not be foreseen. As a matter of fact the 'Minto' had been detained in Pictou harbour from the 3rd to the 10th of February. A barrier of ice had formed across the harbour entrance and the 'Minto' could not penetrate this barrier.

As a matter of fact part of the fish was shipped to Georgetown when it was known that the 'Minto' could not reach that port

The department last January issued a public notice which was posted in many places in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, notifying the public that perishable goods would be at the risk of the shippers. While this was intended to refer to taking goods on board the steamers yet it was sufficient notice to the public that the department would in no way consider itself liable for perishable articles and that all goods intended for shipment on board the winter steamers would be entirely at the risk of the owners.

It is generally recognized principle that when a vessel is in danger, another vessel whether a carrier of goods or not will go to the assistance of that vessel, where lives and property are in danger, in fact if the 'Minto' had not gone with coal and provisions to the 'Stanley' it is probable that the 'Stanley' would not have been released for some time after she was released and the consequences might have been serious.

(Sgd.) F. GOURDEAU.

I would just like to read the reply to that letter of Mr. Gourdeau from the gentleman who is the deputy port warden of Summerside, and who is more experienced in seafaring than the hon. minister or some of his advisers. The reply is as follows :—

Summerside, P.E.I., May 27, 1903.

Jas. A. Morrison, Esq.,
Summerside.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your favour covering Mr. Gourdeau's memorandum in re the case of the fish shippers claim against the Department of Marine and Fisheries about the steamship 'Minto,' for loss of fresh fish, I have to advise you, that the claim set up by the Department of Marine, is not well taken.

The 'Stanley' was in no danger that the 'Minto' helped her out of, as is proven by the fact that the 'Stanley' saved the 'Minto,' the latter vessel had already supplied the 'Stanley' with coal ; food could at any time have been supplied to the 'Stanley' and there is absolutely no question about the fact, that due diligence was not used to take the perishable goods.

The notice 'at shippers risk' cannot be pleaded, as an excuse unless due diligence is exercised by the common carrier. There is no question in my mind, but had the 'Minto' been a private vessel instead of a government ship, a suit in court would go in favour of the shippers.

Captain Finlayson's 'prompt assertion,' that it was no use for him to try Pictou, could, in the nature of things, only apply to the then present moment, as there were ever changing conditions and there is no doubt in the mind of any person who has the capacity to judge, that the 'Minto' could have taken the perishable effects over long before they spoiled and long before the 'Stanley' and 'Minto' were relieved, if she had not gone to the rescue of the 'Stanley.'

In going to the rescue of the 'Stanley,' who was deserting the shippers perishable goods to have saved the other government property, therefore, on the principle of a general average claim, the thing sacrificed, has to be paid for by the thing protected, in short, the crew nor the ship 'Stanley' were at any time in danger that other means than the 'Minto' could not have relieved her from, it was neglect to have her short of coal or provisions at any time, for she lay off Summerside for eight days where coal contracted for by the government, was in abundance and could have been put on board ; and as for provisions, and two meals per day, that was silly nonsense, I have good reason to believe that the two meals per day was a matter of convenience to the cook and to the men, who by reason of their idleness, must have suffered by eating three square meals.

The propeller of the 'Minto' was not, I am informed, broken by the ice pan in which the 'Stanley' was imprisoned, but by backing against a clumpet detached from it.

The evidence of the men sent to use dynamite to relieve the 'Stanley' goes to show that they were of no value, but, that they had to get out of the steamers way when they let her work at full speed.

I have talked with Mr. Dunn the master of the 'Jubilee,' one of the three men sent, and he declares that the ice pan could easily have been broken by the 'Stanley' if they had tried her, for in no place was the ice two feet thick.

The last paragraph of Mr. Gourdeau's letter is misleading, as in the case of the 'Minto' and the 'Stanley,' both vessels belonging to the same owners, the recognized principle of vessels going to the assistance of others, to the loss of a third party, does not apply ; in the one case the salvors are actuated by motives the very opposite of the other, the department undertook to save their own property to the detriment of their patrons.

Captain Brown was advised by the 'Port Warden' of Summerside, in the presence of A. A. Lefurgey, Esq., M.P., that where his vessel was, off Sea Cow Head, that ice would likely break off inside of her and she would go adrift, therefore, she should have been coaled up and provisioned so as to be in readiness for any emergency, when there would have been no necessity for the 'Minto' going to her assistance.

The 'Stanley's' drift would have been identically the same, if the 'Minto' had never went to her.

The 'Stanley' had as much coal on board when she got to Pictou as the 'Minto' had given her.

I remain,
Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) JOSEPH READ,
Deputy Port Warden, M.L.A., &c.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that the loss to these shippers was occasioned by the 'Minto' in returning to Georgetown after the first trip she had made to the Stanley,' and taking her provisions and coal instead of taking the perishable goods, as the shippers had requested the agent of the department to do, to Pictou. The 'Minto' made this second trip to the 'Stanley' when there was no need of it, when neither the lives of the crew nor the safety of the vessel was in danger. As a consequence, the 'Minto' was disabled, and it was not until the 'Stanley' took her into Pictou that the 'Stanley' could go back and get these goods. By that time they were absolutely spoiled. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. minister, as also his colleagues, will see that the people who suffered in this regard are certainly entitled to some recompense for the loss. The amount they are asking does not cover any more than the bare cost of the goods, and is in no way compensating them for the increased value they would have had if they had been able to market them at New York or Boston, where these fish were being sent. I would further say, before sitting down, that I consider that the action of this department in not sending the steamer 'Stanley' to the old country to have the necessary repairs to her hull made will result next year in very much the same difficulties that we have had this year. Unless the department intend putting in their estimates an amount for the building of a new winter steamer, the result to the people of Prince Edward Island will be found to be still more disastrous. We not only want the 'Stanley' repaired; it is not only necessary that we shall have the 'Minto' and 'Stanley' to carry on the winter trade of Prince Edward Island, but it is absolutely necessary that we should have a third steamer. The business has increased to a very great extent within the last fifteen years, and we have an increasing quantity of goods for shipment each winter. When we got the 'Stanley' she could not cope with the trade and we had to get the 'Minto,' and now these two steamers cannot handle it. I would like to hear from the hon. minister what policy the government has in regard to fulfilling the terms of union between the island and the mainland during the coming winter.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think it would be almost unreasonable to send the steamer 'Stanley' home to Scotland, or England, to be repaired.

Mr. POPE. Send her to Sorel.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) We have a dry dock at Halifax that is so large that the American government had to send the largest of its steamers there to be repaired. We have all the materials for strengthening and repairing the largest vessels sailing from Quebec to Montreal, and we have the men to remove the plates and repair the steamers as they are doing in several instances. If the 'Stanley' requires to have her plates removed or to be strengthened it can be done in Halifax just as well as in England.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Although I am new to the department yet the general rules of business should I suppose apply all over. I am informed that we have two capable officials, Mr. Stevens and Mr. Hill. I do not know them personally, but I believe no one will contest Mr. Stevens' ability as an engineer competent to deal with machinery, and Mr. Hill is reported as a competent authority on hulls. These two gentlemen have been instructed to examine the 'Stanley' and the department will have to be guided by their report. We will not take newspaper gossip or the statements of a certain Captain Reid—I do not know whether he is a 'captain' or not.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am told he has never commanded anything, but if the hon. gentleman says he has I will stand corrected.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Yes, and he is a very capable man too.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This gentleman undertakes to give a lesson to Mr. Lord, the agent of the department at Charlottetown. I do not know, Mr. Lord, but he appears to have been appointed under the late government. He was considered until now to be a good official, but we will inquire into the matter and if the facts alleged against him to-night are proved, of course there will be nothing else to be done than to dismiss him. Captain Finlayson of the 'Stanley' is an old employee, and he is reported as one of the most efficient officers of the department. The department relied on the advice of Mr. Lord and Captain Finlayson and Captain Brown, and if it is found that they are incompetent, of course we will have to consider what shall be done, but surely we will take the advice of some one more competent than Mr. Reid before we condemn Mr. Lord or Captain Finlayson or Captain Brown. We have all the facilities in Canada necessary to repair the 'Stanley.' There is a dry dock in Halifax and another one in Quebec.

Mr. MONK. And there is going to be one in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The dry dock in Montreal is not ready yet, but I hope it will be some of these days. I am informed that the 'Stanley' will not even have to go into dry dock, and there is no use in making matters worse than they are. The trouble about this winter navigation seems to be due to the fact that for the last two years two steamers were put on two different routes, and if only one line had been maintained probably this accident would not have happened last winter. As it is well to profit by experience I can promise the hon. gentleman that next winter there will be only one route.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What route will that be.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will decide later on.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We are entitled to know it now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be probably Pictou and Charlottetown, and Georgetown.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. These steamers are all built in England, and if any new one is to be built I would invite the minister not to forget our own country. I was a minister at the time, and I am to some extent responsible for the last two ships, but I have found out since that the specifications were so drawn that English articles were indicated and that our Canadian builders had no show whatever, although they were perfectly competent to do the work.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am sorry that the minister has come to such a hasty decision on the route for winter navigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES I am open to conviction.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am satisfied that when the minister is better acquainted with the circumstances which led to the disaster this last winter, he will change his opinion. If he consults his predecessor he will be told, I think, that the Summerside-Tormentine route was most successful, as the Hon. Mr. Sutherland himself stated in the House. If the minister will take the trouble to read the speech I made some time ago he will find that it is quite certain that the miscarriage of the winter service between Summerside and Tormentine was due to the fault of the department. It is all very well to blame Mr. Lord or Mr. Finlayson or Mr. Brown, but the responsibility is on the department. Last winter was not the only winter in which the department was neglectful, but last year has been the worst under all circumstances since confederation. The breakdown of the winter service was the fault of the department and not of the route between Summerside and Tormentine. If the minister studies the facts he will not decide that Georgetown—Pictou is the only route. He will find that Captain Finlayson states in his report that for, I think, a fortnight it was impossible for any steamer to get into Pictou.

Now, the conditions which prevail to close up Pictou harbour leave Summerside and Cape Tormentine open; and, as I have pointed out to this House numerous times, the formation of the tides there, meeting and parting several times a day, leaves the ice always in a loose condition, and the only difficulty is in entering Summerside harbour. Suppose Summerside harbour is absolutely closed for two or three months of the year, we have asked the department to build a pier at Carleton Point; and if they do that, during the two months in the worst season, February and March, when Summerside cannot be reached, the steamer can run to Carleton Point. The distance between Summerside and Cape Tormentine is only sixteen miles, and the distance between Cape Tormentine and Carleton Point is only eight and a half miles, where the vessel can make several trips a day. So that the minister must see that the advantage is with the western route as against the Georgetown-Pictou route, where the distance is fourty miles, and where the steamer can only make one trip over returning the following day, except in extremely fine wether. I trust that the minister will look into this matter this year, and that the petition for a pier at Carleton Point will not be left over from year to year, as has been done in the past, but that the necessary amount will be brought down in the supplementary estimates for the construction of this pier. I would like to ask the minister what has been the report from the soundings taken there by the engineers just before the close of navigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say in answer to the hon. gentleman that if he has come to the conclusion that I have decided the policy of the government or the department for next winter, he is mistaken. I have expressed the opinion that, in view of the facts, it would probably be necessary to consider whether it would not be more advantageous next winter to have two steamers on the line between Georgetown and Pictou. The reason I mention this line is that it has been represented to me as the best of all the lines that have been mentioned, by one of the ex-Ministers of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies. That is also the opinion of Captain Finlayson and Captain Brown. Under these circumstances, I am unable to pronounce in favour of the western line. Before deciding anything, I will certainly go into the facts and circumstances, and will moveover take the opportunity of visiting Prince Edward Island and judging for myself from the information that I gather from competent and well-informed men.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Might I ask how many trips the two steamers have made between Cape Tormentine and Summerside, that we may judge whether the trial has been fair or not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am sorry I cannot give the information to the hon. gentleman; but I will obtain it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is very important, I think, that we should have such a communication, because the question is whether that line or the other line is the best. If a fair trial has not been made, perhaps it should be made, so that we may know exactly how the matter stands.

Mr. LEMIEUX. While we are speaking about the steamer 'Stanley,' I may repeat the request which I made some years ago, and which I have made nearly every session since, for a trip at the end of December between the mainland and the Magdalen islands. I think Prince Edward Island is too selfish. It ought to give a chance to the Magdalen islands, which are shut out from communication with the mainland during five or six months of the year. I have been promised years ago that the trip I request would be made. It appears that Captain Finlayson is opposed to it. I am informed by the best captains of boats, and by some reports which I have read in the Marine and Fisheries Department, that the trip can be made. During the month of December not only is navigation between the Magdalen islands and the mainland possible, but it actually exists between Newfoundland and Cape Breton all the year round. During the month of March also the sealers from Newfoundland are seen near the Magdalen islands. I would ask the hon. minister not to forget that there is a population of 6,000 souls on the Magdalen islands, and that they deserve the consideration of the department.

Mr. HACKETT. The questions involved in the item before the committee are of such great importance to the people of Prince Edward Island that I cannot allow the item to be carried without making a few remarks. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) has said that the people of Prince Edward Island are too selfish, and that they should be generous with regard to their fellow countrymen on the Magdalen islands. I want to say, Sir, that they are not selfish. We do not care if the hon. gentleman can secure a steamer for keeping up navigation with the Magdalen islands all winter. What we ask is that the terms guaranteed in the contract entered into between the province of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada shall be carried out, and that steam communication, winter and summer, shall be carried on continuously between the island and the mainland. While we do not insist on the pound of flesh, we do say that justice should be done to us, in accordance with the terms of union. With regard to the expense, we desire as much as the people of any other part of Canada to economize and save the public moneys of this country; but this communication is not altogether for the benefit of the people of Prince Edward Island. It has been the means of developing the trade between Prince Edward Island and all other parts of Canada.

At the time when the 'Stanley' and 'Minto' were fast in the ice, there were a hundred cars of freight at Pictou waiting to be carried across to the province of Prince Edward Island. This freight came from Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John, and at Georgetown there were some 80 or 90 cars of freight awaiting transhipment to the mainland. This shows the immense trade development in consequence of winter navigation having been instituted between the island and the mainland. I regret that the hon. gentleman is not disposed to send the 'Stanley' to be placed in the shipyard where she was constructed and there thoroughly repaired and refitted. It has been said that an official of the department reported in favour of sending the 'Stanley' across the ocean for repairs. I am reminded by my hon. friend (Mr. Ross) of the facilities at Halifax for repairing ships. I may add that when crossing from Cape Tormentine to Summerside I had a conversation with engineer McMillan, who has been engineer of the 'Stanley' the last fifteen years and who understands the condition of the steamer and the repairs required. He said that she required to go into the yard where she was constructed and where they had the proper facilities and understood what repairs were necessary. She required to have her hull examined and to be thoroughly overhauled, and to have additional braces added to her frame and new plates, as the old plates were bent through contact with the ice. If these repairs were made, she would be in as good a condition as when first launched. The government are practising false economy. Last year they spent nearly $9,000 on the repairs of the boat and she was still unfit for service. They will spend $25,000 perhaps this year on repairs again and eventually they will have to send her across to have her properly repaired in the yard where she was built. There are no facilities in Charlottetown for making the repairs. They may have them in Halifax and in Pictou and I believe that the best facilities are at Sorel. But according to Mr. McMillan, she should be sent to the yard where she was constructed and be thoroughly repaired. The hon. minister said off-hand that he believed communication will be maintained between Georgetown and Pictou next winter. That is contrary to the statement he made the other day. He said that he intended taking a trip to Prince Edward Island to view the situation for himself and then decide as to where the boats shall run. If he does that, he must arrive at the conclusion that one of the boats should be placed on the western route and the other on the eastern route. If he does that and if his captains used proper diligence and care, he will maintain a good service between the island and the mainland. Something has been said with regard to Captain Brown. It is well known that he made no efforts to extricate his ship from the position she was placed in off Sea Cow's Head. The people of Summerside walked out to the boat and asked the captain, after the boat had been only one day in the ice, what he was going to do. He said that he was not going to hire one man or pay one dollar to relieve the ship, but was going to stay there until March. This can be proved by dozens of people who boarded the vessel. Of course the ice accumulated around the boat and she was carried away with it and the service of the ship was lost to the people of the province. What is the result? Claims are being made against the government for damages in connection with the frozen fish and fresh meat business. Large quantities of those products were awaiting shipment and claims have been made on the government for about $6,000 damages on the ground, as can be proved, that the loss sustained by those shippers were largely due to the fact that proper diligence and energy were not shown in connection with the government ships. While the amount of $6,000 may be a small sum for the government to pay as damages, to the poor men who lost their time and spent their money providing those products for market it is a considerable amount, and I trust that the government will see their way to reimbursing these men for their losses. Reference was made to Captain Reid, the port warden at Summerside, and the hon. minister rather sneered at him and would make it appear that he was a kind of a long shore sailor. Let me tell the hon. minister that Captain Joseph Reid has sailed ships on almost every ocean, that he is a deep sea captain, that his experience and knowledge of navigation cannot be excelled by any captain either in Canada, the United States or Great Britain, that he has the highest recommendations from the British Board of Trade, and stands first as a ship master in this country. In addition he has the confidence of at least the Liberals of the province of Prince Edward Island because they elected him to the local legislature to support the Liberal government in that province, yet the hon. minister would endeavour to cast a slur on Captain Reid and the report made by him. This question is one of such importance to the people of Prince Edward Island that every effort should be made by the government to maintain winter communications. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for East Prince, the construction of a pier at Carleton Point only eight and a half miles from Cape Tormentine in New Brunswick, would obviate the necessity for another route, because it would be simply a ferry between those points, and winter and summer this communication could be maintained between Cape Tormentine and Carleton Point. There is, I understand, a measure before this parliament asking for the incorporation of a company to establish a ferry there, and pending what might be done by that company, the government should undertake to place immediately a sufficient sum in the estimates to construct a pier at Carleton Point. The engineer has been making surveys there during the first part of the winter and no doubt his report is in the department. I know that a petition from all parts of the province has been signed asking for the construction of that pier, and I trust that we will not have occasion again to discuss this matter here. I make no apology, however, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, because the question is one which not only affects the province of Prince Edward Island but the whole Dominion.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that this item was $200,000 two years ago and last year it was increased to $225,000. This year the hon. minister is asking for $250,000. I notice that the revenue two years ago was $19,000 and that last year it had fallen off to $11,000, being a decrease of $8,000. Will the hon. minister be good enough to explain this decrease when everything was so very prosperous ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The winter before last, the revenue from the 'Minto' and 'Stanley' was $11,308.55. Last winter, when the service was so very bad according to some hon. gentlemen opposite, the revenue was, from the 'Minto,' $11,111.57 ; the 'Stanley,' $4,178.40; total, $15,289.57. This is an increase of nearly $6,000 during last winter, though the service was impaired through the steamers being caught in ice. I am informed that the reason the revenue in the previous year, that is three years ago, was only $8,000, was that the service began a great deal later in the season. Last year it began early, though it was interrupted, the revenue was more than the year previous and nearly double what it was three years ago. As to the increase of expenditure, I have explained that. This year we have an additional boat, the 'Lady Laurier,' which has had to be equipped.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that in the discussion last year the minister said that he had purchased, or was about to purchase, two new boats, one to cost $184,000, and the other $207,000. In that discussion, it was suggested that these boats would require considerable repairs when they came over for service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These must have been the lightships.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand not. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries last year said that they were purchased from Fleming & Ferguson, of Paisley, Scotland.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 'Lady Laurier' is one and the 'Druid' the other. The 'Druid' was in commission last year, and the 'Lady Laurier' came in this winter.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask if there was any large expenditure on either of these two boats after the full amount of contract was paid ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Only in fitting them up.

Mr. LEFURGEY. In answer to the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) the hon. minister said that he had come to the conclusion to put the boats on the Charlottetown, or Georgetown route, having consulted the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) Captain Brown and Mr. Lord, I would advise the hon. minister to find out these things for himself and not depend on any statements of Sir Louis Davies, for there are other people on Prince Edward Island more competent to judge, and the trials proved that the hon. ex-minister was long enough in office to know the situation better and has been long enough out to realize his mistakes and prejudices and the work does not justify the position he has taken or that of the present minister and we trust he will not fall heir to the local prejudices that coloured the judgment of his hon. adviser. It is also known and believed by the people of Prince Edward Island that Captain Brown came up there with the understanding that he was to give that route a black eye ; and the actions of Captain Brown during last winter and the previous winter show conclusively that he was not using his best efforts to give that route a fair trial. We have also, the opinion of the hon. member for West Queen's (Mr. Farquharson) whose opinion should be taken equally with that of Sir Louis Davies, and his opinion is that the route between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse is the natural route. That hon. gentleman advocated that route last year and has advocated it this year in this House. Moreover, the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Tarte) has asked here to-night what was the result of the trial of the 'Stanley' at Summerside during last winter. Now, I took occasion to give the facts with regard to that steamer on May 11th last, and, to refresh the memory of the minister, and in case he has not the report from his department, I may read it. The steamship 'Northumberland' made the last trip on December 10th, 1902. The steamer 'Stanley' should have begun plying, but not until the eighteenth did the 'Stanley' arrive from Pictou. This is the record :

The ss. 'Northumberland' made last trip from this port December 10, 1902.

December 18, 1902. The ss. 'Stanley' arrived about 10 a.m., from Pictou. At 1 p.m., left for Tormentine in a snowstorm laid outside Summerside light all night. Next morning, 19th, proceeded to Tormentine (without returning to Summerside to take passengers that arrived on evening train, who had to stay in Summerside till the 20th), returning about 4.20 p.m.

" 22. Made round trip, returned about 1.15 p.m. No mail coming.

" 23. Made round trip, returned about 1.15 p.m. No mail coming.

" 24. Made round trip, returned about 3.15 p.m. No mail coming.

" 25. Made round trip, returned about 3.15 p.m. Mail both ways.

" 26. Did not cross. Went outside harbour and returned.

" 27. Made round trip, returned about 4 p.m., with mails.

" 28. Sunday at wharf.

" 29. Made round trip, returned about 5 p.m., with mails.

" 30. Made round trip, returned about 3 p.m., with mails.

" 31. Made round trip, returned about 4.30 p.m., with mails.

January 1, 1903. Made round trip (change of time), leaving, returned 4.30 p.m. Mails.

" 2. Made round trip (change of time), leaving, returned 3 p.m. Mails.

" 3. Made round trip (change of time), leaving, returned 3 p.m. Mails.

" 4. Sunday at wharf.

" 5. Made round trip, returned about 2.25 p.m. Mails.

" 6. Made round trip, returned about 3.30. Mails.

" 7. Did not cross.

" 8. Snowstorm, went outside harbour and returned at 11 a.m.

" 9. Left at 9.30 a.m., returned to Tormentine over night. Returned on the 10th about 11.15.

" 11. Sunday at wharf.

" 12. Left about 7 a.m., in a gale of wind from west and very cold. Should have laid at wharf.

The circumstances that day were not such as to warrant the steamship leaving the wharf. The captain was advised by both his pilot and mate to stay in harbour. The glass showed that we were going to have one of the biggest storms of the year. Now, we have here the report of the working of the steamer that will show at no time since the Pictou-Georgetown route was established, have they had more successful crossings than those of the period when the steamer was running between Summerside and Cape Tormentine. As I pointed out before, and if the minister will take the trouble to read this speech of May 11——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman must know that all this is in the department.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It may be, but while we are discussing this subject it is well that the House should know the situation of affairs. I want to say that up to the 12th, the time when that vessel was caught in the ice off Summerside harbour, the crossings at Summerside were the most successful in the history of the island since confederation; and had the captain used the due diligence that any private ship-owner would have used to get his vessel out of that ice, the service between Summerside and Cape Tormentine would have been kept up all winter. We have also the advice and testimony of competent persons who have removed vessels from Summerside harbour that were in as bad a predicament as the 'Stanley,' that had proper means been used when that vessel was in the ice she could have been freed in two or three days. I cannot understand why the minister should say that it is the policy of the department to have Georgetown and Pictou as the terminal of the winter route between the island and the mainland. I was glad to hear the minister afterwards retract those words, and state that he was going down to look into the matter himself. The people of Prince Edward Island will welcome the minister, and we trust he will look into this matter in an unbiased way, leaving out of consideration the reports of Sir Louis Davies and of Captain Finlayson, and will take the evidence we have of the tests between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and weigh the matter carefully for himself.

Mr. POPE. I am surprised that the minister should question the advice tendered him by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lefurgey) in regard to possessing knowledge in reference to this question. The minister is paid to know these things. What else do we pay him for ? He is drawing now a stated salary to know something about his department in this service. We have applauded his appointment to the position he now occupies, not that we expected he possessed extraordinary knowledge in regard to marine and fisheries, but because we expected that if we paid him a stated indemnity of seven thousand dollars a year, he would acquire special knowledge with regard to these various steamers and their running from the island to the mainland. Sir, I fancy that the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) is entitled to have his request granted. It is not extravagant that a gentleman representing a coast so extravagantly large as the county of Gaspé should request that only once in twelve months communication should be had between some islands there and the mainland. I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, that since he says he has often made this request for the last two years, and has not been able to get even a single service during the year, he should still remain so faithful a supporter of this government when they are so mean and stingy as to begrudge him that service. Sir, I trust that this appeal of the member for Gaspé will bear some fruit, and that before the next meeting of this parliament the hon. minister will have acquired the knowledge that will to some extent entitle him to draw the special salary which this country is paying him. Now, Sir, the minister has said that he does not know captain so and so, that he does not know captain this and captain that. Again, Mr. Chairman, I say we pay him for knowing these people, the hon. gentleman should know these people. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I think these items would advance much more rapidly if the rules of this House permitted some gentlemen who are sitting near him to speak instead of the minister himself. In fact, I do not think he is a good telephone, I do not think he has taken a lesson from that history I gave in this House a little time ago about the parrot, I do not think he repeats well. He has close to him a gentleman who possesses all the knowledge in the department, the minister can whisper in the ear of his deputy and get the information that we want. Surely he ought to be able to tell us something about captain this and captain that and captain the other. But instead of that, Mr. Chairman, here we are at a loss, we landlubbers. I acknowledge I am not possessed of a knowledge of marine matters; but, as a farmer coming from the interior of this great country, I expect to get information from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Now, Sir, I am going to ask him a question to find out whether he knows anything about his department. I would like to know from the minister how much supplies he buys for these steamers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The allowance is mentioned in the item of $220,000. That comprises maintenance and repairs.

Mr. POPE. Not at all, Mr. Chairman. That item of $220,000 is a bulk amount for the salaries and everything else, as I take it, for the maintenance of these steamers. What I want to know is the amount for supplies, provisions, corkscrews.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I read a moment ago the amount that is allotted to each steamer ; I will read it over again if the hon. gentleman insists.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If I have been able to catch the figures which have been given, I think that for coal and provisions the hon. gentleman will spend over $60,000. Is that about right ? I could not catch the figures very well but I think that is about it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For provisions about $35,000.

Mr. POPE. What about coal ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will require 14,000 tons of coal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is the coal bought by circulars or by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By tender. Sometimes a steamer is at a wharf and in want of coal and they buy a small quantity.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has the department a store into which these provisions are put ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Each agency has a store.

Mr. POPE. What do you call an agency?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a station at Halifax, one at Pictou, one at Sydney, one at St. John, one at Quebec and one at Charlottetown.

Mr. POPE. Who is at the head of these agencies ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are under the officers of the department.

Mr. POPE. Are these provisions that amounted to $35,000 purchased by public tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I could not say they are purchased by tender——

Mr. POPE. I want you to say.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If you will allow me——

Mr. POPE. Yes, I will allow you.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Do not be too fresh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot say they are procured by public tender. In different agencies circulars are sent out in order to know the market prices at which these provisions can be bought.

Mr. POPE. To whom are these circulars sent ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To the trade generally, I suppose.

Mr. POPE. Exactly so. We have arrived up against the same point that we have in regard to all the purchases of this government. The system is absolutely rotten. There is no longer any public tender demanded.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is not the case.

Mr. POPE. Not the case ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No it is not.

Mr. POPE. Well, the hon. Minister of Justice will have a chance to prove whether it is the case or not.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, I will and I will do it too.

Mr. POPE. You are not on trial.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. You are making statements which are not true.

Mr. POPE. The Minister of Justice should not become passionate. The Minister of Justice ought to be able to balance the scales most accurately, while we see him exhibiting such passion, what justice can we expect from him as Minister of Justice ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. POPE. The laughter and the cheer come. It is a cheap cheer. You can buy it from them. We have heard it in this House for years. It does not scare anybody nor does the hon. Minister of Justice frighten anybody.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He does not try to frighten anybody and he cannot be frightened either.

Mr. POPE. Pale as he may be under anger at this moment I am still not frightened. Now, perhaps, I may be permitted to address my remarks to the hon. minister in charge of these items. The question has been raised here, not alone by myself, but, by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House from year to year, in regard to the purchase of supplies by hon. gentlemen on the other side representing various departments of the government. They are buying supplies under a system of absolute fraud, a system that is permeated from beginning to end with fraud. In the first place, we find that when tenders are called the specifications are loaded with conditions saying that supplies to be furnished under these tenders shall be of a certain manufacture, or bear a certain brand, or be manufactured under a patent which is under the control of friends of their own. It is well known in Montreal, Toronto, Halifax ; in fact, there is not a centre of commerce in Canada where this fact is not positively well known. The friends of these hon. gentlemen are the selling agents of certain patents, certain brands of goods bearing certain marks that are useful in public works and in other directions and the tender goes forth that the tenderer shall supply goods bearing these particular marks. The minister does not know how the circulars are sent out or whether they are sent out to the trade generally or to friends of the government particularly, but he 'supposes.' He is paid to know the facts and not to 'suppose' and he may recline in his chair if he likes, but he will have to give us the information. We did not ask him to bring his estimates before the House to-night, and there is plenty of time now for the minister between this and the early frosts of September to learn something about his department. We will give him three months study and then he can come back and submit his estimates when he knows something. Why should he make an exhibition of himself. A new minister should try to make a favourable impression and if he likes he has his deputy there and a number of clerks to learn from them The time is passed when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any other minister can ask the representatives of the people to vote hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money to be spent without public tender. If there was a particle of principle among the Liberals in this House they would be the first to denounce the letting of contracts without tenders, because they preached against it for years when in opposition. I feel to-night that there is in this House, notwithstanding the dumbness of the hirelings who sit behind this government——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Chairman. I call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) refers to members of this House as hirelings.

Mr. POPE. Do we not get $1,500 a year ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have had enough of this sort of thing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is unparliamentary to say that an hon. member is a hireling.

Mr. POPE. It is unparliamentary.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You will be kind enough to withdraw it.

Mr. POPE. I am very glad you decided that it is unparliamentary, and I shall bow to your decision and withdraw the word 'hireling,' and I trust that the hon. gentlemen who so faithfully support this government and who applaud them when they violate all their principles will see the error of their ways. I trust the time will come when they will realize the full effect of applauding the men who sit in front of them for the violation of all their principles. I think we had better let this item stand. The minister does not know anything about it, and we want some information. I understand that I have offended the Minister of Justice and I have even dived into the heart of the Minister of Finance, but I regret that because it always pains me when I offend great statesmen. No matter how humble a member on this side of the House may be, he must be pained when he finds he has occasioned passion in the mind of the Minister of Justice. Perhaps the Minister of Justice did not intend to exhibit that passion, and I suppose he will apologize when I sit down. You, Mr. Chairman, can remember better than I can when the Liberals in this House were loud in support of the rights of the people and loud in denouncing the very thing that they now applaud. When we find this government who say to the people of Canada : Observe us as to righteousness and purity, when we find them doing such things we have the right to object. We have here the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who has had his education in Montreal, an education that is well known throughout the length and breadth of this country, a man who denominated the public works of Montreal, a man who has put a stamp upon Montreal and left a reputation there that you can tumble into on the sidewalks of Montreal far and wide. When they call a man of that character to the Cabinet, we expect from him justice; such justice as he tendered to the city of Montreal, such justice as he is offering to the people of Canada in his department. The minister says he assumes, but we do not want any assuming ; we want facts. We want to know whether these circulars were sent to the trade generally or whether they were sent to special friends of the government.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. minister has just stated that included in this item are ten or twelve boats, For these boats he must of course have supplies. If his department is not equipped in the way I am going to explain, with a store at each place, would it not be well to ask for tenders, as the Department of Public Works has done ? When the Yukon line was under way, and we wanted supplies, we called for public tenders. We got them, we opened a couple of stores, and from those stores the employees drew what they required, just as is done in the way of business everywhere else. I do not know whether the same rule is applied in the hon. gentleman's department or not; but when supplies to the amount of $40,000 and 14,000 tons of coal are to be bought, I think it would be a good rule to follow. Then each boat would draw from the stores what it required, as is done in any well organized business. I think that suggestion is worth looking into. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to tell us whether such a rule has been applied ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that the rule has not been applied at all, for the simple reason that the supplies are bought at the different places as they are wanted at the lowest market price, and the provisions are ordered through the agent. Most of the coal required in the maritime provinces is bought at the mines.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I speak in a general way. The hon. gentleman, I have no doubt, would be in a position to ask his officers how much butter, how much pork, how much beans, how much flour, would be required for such and such boats. The captain of each boat would give the information. When these reports are in hand, would it not be well to ask for public tenders for so much beef, so much flour, and so on ? I think it would be a very good rule to follow if it has not been followed in the past. The goods for Halifax would be delivered there and the goods for Quebec would be delivered at Quebec. That was what the Department of Public Works did in the Yukon. We asked for public tenders, the goods to be delivered at Vancouver, at White Horse, and so on. I am just asking the hon. gentleman to follow a system which I followed myself. If it is not applied in his department, I think it should be applied there. These are pretty large amounts of money to spend for supplies, although I quite grant that if the coal is bought at the mines, he could not perhaps do better. But, all the same, when 14,000 or 15,000 tons are required, I think public tenders should be asked.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think my hon. friend is right in assuming that there is any difference in the method of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries Department and that of the Public Works Department. When he speaks of public tenders, does he mean tenders by public advertisement ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We did that for the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that to a certain extent my hon. friend is mistaken, for in some instances, for the supplies for the Yukon tenders were invited by circulars.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, what took place was this. We asked for public tenders first. Prices were sent in, and goods were obtained for one year. Last year the contract was renewed at the same prices.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend is mistaken if he implies that that was done by public advertisement in all cases. I am quite satisfied that his tenders for supplies were obtained by circulars.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, for small amounts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been no change in the method of ordering supplies in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The method is the same as that which prevailed in former years. The only question is whether the supplies have been obtained at fair and reasonable prices. That is a proper question for inquiry in the Public Accounts Committee. I am quite satisfied that every article has been ordered in good faith and under the fullest supervision, and we challenge the most thorough investigation in the Public Accounts Committee as to whether the prices paid are fair and reasonable. As to issuing public advertisements for tenders for the supply of coal, what would be the use of putting advertisements in the newspapers ? There are only half a dozen mines in Nova Scotia, and when coal is to be supplied at Pictou, you would hardly bring it from Sydney or Cumberland. You would necessarily get it from the mines in the locality where it was wanted, and I am satisfied the prices are obtained from the various mines in that locality. So in every other case the effort is made to get the goods required at fair and reasonable prices.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that he sends out circulars for everything required at the opening of navigation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And that a price is then made ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And that price is the same all the year round ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, all the year round.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If circulars are sent out in large numbers, the system is not as bad as it might be. Will the hon. Minister of Finance permit me to say that I am not far from the mark in stating that if public tenders were asked when large amounts of provisions are wanted, twenty-five or thirty per cent would be saved. In the Yukon we had the very same experience. We started buying, just in the way pointed out now. Later on we invited tenders, and prices went down. I was criticised in the Public Accounts Committee, as it was the right of the opposition to criticise me. I am not far from the mark in stating that if public tenders were asked, say for meat, tea, coffee, and a group of merchandise, to be delivered at Halifax, Quebec or elsewhere, the department would save trouble and criticism for itself, and save money for the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can neither admit nor deny my hon. friend's statement with reference to the Yukon, because I admit that he has a better knowledge of that than I have; but, as respects these supplies, if he thinks he could save twenty-five or thirty per cent, I am bound to say I differ from him. I do not think my hon. friend will say that when he ordered goods in the Department of Public Works by circular, we thereby lost from twenty-five and thirty-five per cent. No doubt he believed that by that method he obtained fair and reasonable prices, and if that were possible in the Public Works Department it is equally possible in the Marine and Fisheries Department. I know as a matter of fact that in some of the ports where these supplies are furnished, they are obtained at very moderate terms—so much so that people hardly care to compete for the furnishing of them. Take the case of Halifax, of which I have personal knowledge, the agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department there is a gentleman who has been in the service many years, and who has certified that every item in the account is charged at a fair and reasonable price. I am sure that he would not certify to items that were charged at from twenty-five to thirty-five per cent over what is fair and reasonable.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would it not be worth trying ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why more to-day than when my hon. friend was minister ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friends opposite say hear, hear, but two blacks do not make a white, or two whites a black. It is a question of business, and business men will, I believe, share in the views I have just expressed. So far as the Yukon telegraph is concerned, there was a large amount involved, and if I remember aright, some of my colleagues were of the opinion that public tenders should be asked, and I asked for public tenders. I remember very well that in the Department of Public Works at Ottawa, when small amounts were in question, we asked for prices by circular, but these were very small amounts indeed. However, I have called the attention of the minister to this point, and do not want to insist on it. Now that I am on my feet, might I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has made any inquiry as to the reasons why the 'Stanley' could not maintain the winter service between Summerside and the mainland—whether there is any official report on that question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The papers were all laid on the Table two months ago.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will the hon. gentleman give, in a few words, the reasons why the efforts were unsuccessful ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is well known that the failure was due to the weather. The question came before the House and all the facts were explained. The 'Stanley' was caught in such heavy ice—as thick as four and a half feet—that it was impossible for her to move either one way or the other. That is why the 'Minto' was called to her assistance, but unfortunately, she broke three blades of her propeller and was disabled. It was only after two or three weeks that the 'Stanley' succeeded in extricating herself from the ice and she towed the 'Minto' to the port of Pictou. It was an accident quite uncontrollable.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Statements have been made in the House that no efforts were made to work the boats. I was very much surprised, because to my knowledge the steamers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries are very well manned as a rule, and good discipline is maintained on board. I have visited them often and am glad to say that no steamers could be better kept. What I wanted to know was whether any inquiry has been held regarding the statements that the captain made no efforts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He made every effort, and it is quite clear to the department that the accident was unavoidable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to suggest, in answer to what has been said by the hon. Minister of Finance, that it does not seem much of an argument against the advertising of the supplies that the ex-Minister of Public Works did not always do it. There does not seem to be much cogency in that argument. There would, however, seem to be more force in the statement of the ex-Minister of Public Works that having tried both systems, he thinks there will be very considerable saving if the system of advertising in the newspapers be adopted. If the supplies can be obtained in that way, what is the objection ? I have heard something in Nova Scotia about the way these circulars are sent out, and the information that has come to me is that they are given a very restricted circulation, much more limited than was the case under the late administration ; and as far as my hon. friend's observation with regard to the Committee of Public Accounts is concerned, he knows that if the committee sat every day, instead of once or twice a month, as it has been doing, it would not be able to make any such investigation of these items as would justify the removal of any public safeguard. Under the circumstances, I cannot see any force in the observations of my hon. friend or any possible objection to putting advertisements in the newspapers with regard to supplies required by the departments.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe that we have experienced no difficulty in the past in having investigations before the Committee of Public Accounts. During last session a very considerable portion of the time of that committee was taken up in answering the criticisms of hon. gentlemen opposite on expenditures in the Department of Public Works, which were held to be rash and extravagant, just as the expenditures now being criticised are considered to-day. But upon full investigation, these charges were found absolutely unjustified, and I believe that an investigation to-day with respect to the Department of Marine would have precisely the same result. It is easy, in this House, to make general statements that purchases are extravagant, but these have not borne investigation successfully in the past and will not in the future, I am satisfied. As regards the method followed in former years, the government in former years purchased these supplies from their friends, and I presume the present government does so. Why should we not be frank on that subject? There is no change in the system and the only question is whether the prices are fair and reasonable. If purchasing from friends of the government leads to excessive prices, that is an abuse which no practice in the past can justify, but unless the hon. gentleman can show that the prices are excessive and that these certificates given by men like Mr. Lord, of Charlottetown; Mr. Parsons, of Halifax; Mr. Harding, of St. John, and others, are false, it is not fair to assume that there is any extravagance in the prices.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I hope my hon. friend will not put in my mouth words that I had no intention of using. I never charged the Department of Marine with extravagance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Others have.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was speaking for myself. I have that right—the only one that may be left me. I did not want to make any change of the kind, but was speaking in a general way, and I spoke, I think, the language of a sound business man. The hon. gentleman says truly that the government have a right to favour their friends. But there are certain limits to that right. Governments should not go beyond these limits. For instance, it would be very pleasant to be able to give contracts for wharfs and lighthouses without tenders, but they do not do it. We ask for public tenders.

Mr. MONK. Why?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Because the law is there. The spirit of the law is that when a large expenditure is to be incurred, as a rule tenders are publicly called for. I was simply speaking in that direction. Here is an expenditure of $40,000 or $50,000, and I suggested that perhaps the country would save money by publicly asking for tenders. But if the hon. minister is satisfied that there is no money to be saved he is responsible for his statement. I am responsible for mine.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt but that the Minister of Finance is absolutely mistaken, and so is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. When the Minister of Finance says that an investigation is necessary to show that we could save 25 or 30 per cent on these purchases he is mistaken. That investigation has been made, and we find the results in the Auditor General's Report for last year. If hon. members will take the trouble to consult that report as to the purchases of supplies for government steamers, they will be persuaded, not that we could have saved 30 per cent only, but that we could have saved 40 or 50 per cent at least upon provisions had we called for tenders publicly. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that circulars were issued, and that a comparison shows that fair market prices are secured. I shall not take the trouble to read the Auditor General's Report, but if hon. members will take the trouble to read it, they will find that the saving would be as great as I have said.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are not all bought in the same place.

Mr. MONK. Because the hon. minister will not carry out the rule the adoption of which we are advocating. Take the case of groceries, for instance. Surely it would be possible for the minister to call for tenders for groceries to be furnished during the summer season to the government steamers. Here in the Auditor General's Report, beginning at page P—9, the hon. minister will find instances where groceries have been bought by the thousand pounds at as high prices as we pay at retail in Montreal. In the city of Montreal we have, as other cities have, large wholesale houses that would be glad to tender for these supplies, and—I am speaking of groceries only—would be able to supply the country at a saving of 40 per cent on the prices that have been paid. How, then, can the Minister of Finance say we must make an investigation before the Public Accounts Committee to establish what is here proven? The same thing applies to the furnishing of green groceries, and the same thing to hardware. I am not as conversant with hardware, but I venture to say that if tenders were publicly called for we would gain over 30 per cent. Why not let it be done? It is no answer for the minister to say it has not been done in the past. The public expenditure is increasing and we are here to call attention to the existence of wise rules. There can be no doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that in articles that are required in large quantities—when it is a question of a few dollars' worth——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We could not do it.

Mr. MONK. We could not do it—but, in an expenditure of $40,000, we could save $15,000. I think that the hon. minister, now that he is just taking hold of his department, should apply this rule in purchasing supplies for the steamers. This is reasonable. Then why not do it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is this difference between the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and myself: When he says that 30 or 40 per cent could be saved on these purchases, he assumes that his mere saying it proves it; on the other hand, I confess I cannot accept that reasoning at all.

Mr. MONK. I can give instances.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) cannot give instances, because he has no knowledge of the circumstances under which these purchases take place. What I do know is that in all these cases—I am speaking generally—reputable officers, many of them appointed under former governments, certify, with respect to these items, that the prices are fair and reasonable. This is the evidence of a man on the spot, a man whose duty it is to know the facts. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says that we must dismiss that and take his own statement to the contrary. I do not think that is fair.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can cite one instance that came under my notice since I became a minister. Circulars were sent out in the city of Quebec for the purchase of provisions for two or three steamers there. We received about twenty tenders, and the articles which were lowest were chosen from the different tenders. Our agent there reported as to every article that he recommended to be bought from the different tenderers that the prices were reasonable according to the current market prices. Our officer has been there for thirty years, and is in a position to know the facts. Of course, there are articles for which tenders cannot be had, for instance, the articles the supplies of which are bought daily. In that case, our agent is directly responsible, because he must certify that the prices paid are not higher than the market prices. Two years ago, a great fuss was made about some bread furnished in Quebec for the steamers, which appeared in the Auditor General's Report as being double the price of bread bought in Halifax. After investigation, it was discovered that the loaves of bread in Halifax were a certain number of pounds, while the loaves in Quebec were double that weight, explaining at once the difference in price. Another point was made that brick had been bought at $40 a thousand when ordinary brick was selling at $7 or $8 a thousand. It was discovered that a few fire brick had been imported to repair a furnace, and they had been paid for at the regular price in the market. As regards coal, as I have explained, it is bought in different places. In the maritime provinces, it is usually bought at the mines, and the prices are the lowest at which coal can be bought. In Quebec and other places where we are not near the mines, circulars are sent out calling for tenders. The prices are compared by the agent with market prices, and he takes the responsibility of certifying that they are fair and reasonable.

Mr. BELL. Why does the hon. minister say that coal is bought at the mine ? Is it not delivered at the steamer's side ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Delivered at the steamer. But bought from the producer. Take Pictou, for instance. The coal bought at Pictou was all got by tender at the mines for $3.75 f o b on the wharf. At Sydney we paid $3.

Mr. BELL. How many steamers are coaled at Pictou ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It depends entirely on when they pass there. Sometimes they would coal two or three times in the summer. One may coal three or four times and another only once.

Mr. BELL. Is the contract invited for the whole season ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). When the minister says bought at the mine, does he mean purchased from the mining company, or purchased at the mine through some agent ? In other words, is there any commission on this $3.75 for coal at Pictou ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was purchased from the Intercolonial mine by tender. At Halifax it was purchased for $4.75, there is no mention from whom it was bought. At Sydney it was bought from the Dominion Coal Company at $3.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know whether the minister is aware of it, but I have understood that sometimes in these public contracts the full weight of coal does not always materialize. What steps has the minister taken to see that the coal is delivered in proper weight ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not heard there is any deficiency in the weight.

Mr. MONK. The Minister of Finance has made an argument that seems to me so puerile that it is not worth while answering. He says that when he has a certificate from an officer of the government that the goods have been delivered and that the prices charged are reasonable, that ought to be sufficient, tender or no tender. Let me tell the Minister of Finance that if he will take the last report of the Auditor General, at page P—9, he will find a purchase amounting to $580.57, made at Quebec for groceries, at prices for every article that far exceed the prices we pay in Montreal in retail stores, even the largest stores. Is the minister going to pretend that if he calls for tenders for large supplies of those articles giving every man in the Dominion who is in business a chance to tender, he would not get them cheaper ? I venture to say that that item of $588 would be reduced to less than $350. I can find numberless instances. For instance, here is coffee, 40 cents at one place, 35 at another, more or less at another; when we can get it for 30 cents, of the very best quality, in Montreal from wholesale grocers if they were allowed to tender. There is no question about the principle. The question is that the minister is asking us for $250,000, and he will not pledge himself that the citizens of this Dominion will have a chance to tender as the law requires.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say there is no such law, that is my first point. In the second place, the hon. gentleman quoting coffee at 40 cents a pound, does not prove anything at all. There is coffee and coffee, everything depends on the quality and on circumstances. No doubt many a man in this House pays more than 40 cents a pound for coffee, and does not consider that he is being robbed. Everything depends on the circumstances under which the goods are supplied, the quality of the goods, the condition of the market, and many other things of which my hon. friend cannot possibly have any knowledge. But if on any of these goods we have information that the prices are excessive, I am sure that on inquiry we will be glad to have his assistance in showing it. But we should not assume that the prices are excessive upon any such information as he has yet given us.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Can the Minister of Marine and Fisheries tell us whether he has asked tenders from wholesale men ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the hon. gentleman asked for tenders by circulars from wholesale grocers such as Martin & Co., or Chaput & Co., there would not be great objection. But let me assure him that if he looks carefully into the report of the Auditor General he will find that on many occasions, not only in his department, but in others, things are bought at retail prices. That should not be done. Last year I was placed in that same position. I will mention one fact which the Minister of Finance will remember. We had asked for tenders by circular in British Columbia for the Yukon telegraph. Prices came down here that we regarded too high. I applied to some wholesale grocers in Montreal, Martin & Co. and Chaput & Co., three or four wholesale grocers, and I found it advantageous to buy in Montreal and to ship the goods to Vancouver. The Department of Public Works has a record of that. Now the Minister of Finance should not lose sight of these facts. These are hard facts that no argument can gainsay; and my hon. friend is wrong when he lays down as a principle that when the certificate of a local man, of the engineer or the foreman, is on the paper, it should be taken for granted that the prices are right. I am speaking after an experience of nearly six years and a half as Minister of Public Works, and I state boldly that if the chief officials of the department here did not control the certificates of their local men, there would be abuses that the Minister of Finance has no idea of. He has no conception of the abuses that would prevail if the chief officers of the department did not control the certificates of the local men. I have been caught myself unwillingly, my officers have been caught unwillingly on several occasions. This is not a rule that should be followed, and I do not think the Minister of Finance means that it should be absolutely followed. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will follow my suggestion he will save money for the public treasury. Let him ask for prices from wholesale firms in several places. Every business man would ask for tenders from wholesale houses in several towns and cities, knowing that he would then get fair prices. My hon. friend said a moment ago that the price of coffee in Montreal is 30 cents. I am buying my coffee at this moment for 30 cents a pound, the best coffee in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not like that coffee.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I can assure him that I know what good coffee is. For 30 cents a pound you can get the best coffee in the Montreal market.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With regard to these certificates that prices are fair and reasonable, the hon. gentleman seems to assume that his officers in the Public Works Department kept their eyes on these certificates, and that there were no officers in the Marine and Fisheries Department who do likewise.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, I did not mean that at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has officers to supervise these accounts, and if there seems to be anything excessive, either in the Public Works Department or in the Marine and Fisheries Department, undoubtedly it would be the duty of the higher officers to call attention to it. All I claim is that when you have that certificate from a reputable officer, it is prima facie evidence that the prices are fair and reasonable until somebody shows to the contrary.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not accuse the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries more than any one else, nothing of the kind. I am only laying down a principle that I believe is sound. I believe that the officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department are just as good as any other officers; to my knowledge they are honest men, and I have nothing to say against them, far from it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I know something about wholesale groceries in the city of Halifax, and I would say that in no instance can it be found that there is 5 per cent or 10 per cent overcharge. If the hon. gentleman will look at the prices in the city of Halifax he will find that the government has been supplied at as reasonable prices as would be charged any other buyer, because these purchases are made by men of the highest reputation. I know, that, in the case of hardware, some Halifax merchants stated to me that they would sooner not have supplied these goods that they would have done better by filling their own orders all over the country, because the prices have been reduced so low that there was no inducement for them to supply these goods to the government vessels. If you go minutely through the list of supplies that have been furnished at the port of Halifax you will find that in no instance has there been an overcharge. I know that coal is supplied by the mines of Cape Breton and shipped on board vessels to be carried here and there at the very lowest price. This year a case came under my own personal knowledge in which coal was supplied as low as three years ago.

Mr. HACKETT. My hon. friend from Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross) says that hardware was bought at a very low rate in Halifax. I have under my hand the accounts for a quantity of goods known as software that was purchased for the 'Minto' in the port of Halifax, and I would like to read it for the benefit of the committee:

James Scott & Co., Halifax: Soda water, ginger beer, apollinaris and lemonade, fourteen dozen, $14.10.

I would like to know if this is a fair price for soft goods in Halifax. As the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is in the habit of issuing a circular inviting tenders he no doubt issues a schedule of quality stating the kind of goods required. I notice in the Auditor General's Report at page P—26 the following charge:

Sanderson & Co., Charlottetown, Turkish cigarettes, two tins, $4.75 per tin.

I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he received a tender for Turkish cigarettes, and if he would consider that was a fair price or not and I would like to ask him in what way Turkish cigarettes are used in the navigation of steamships? I think he at least must have added $2 a tin to the ordinary price of Turkish cigarettes on that occasion. I would like to know how many tenders he received for the supply of these cigarettes and if the offer of Sanderson & Co., of Charlottetown, was the only one received, and if this government vessel could not have proceeded on its voyage just as well without these cigarettes.

Mr. POPE. The hon. Minister of Finance said that we would find a variation in prices in the different localities in which supplies were purchased. Of course, we may be critical in regard to these matters, but it is the duty of an opposition to ascertain the facts in connection with public expenditure. I would not say that for every expenditure of $500 the rule of advertising for tenders must be observed, but where it means an expenditure of a considerable amount of money the government must allow that it is open to criticism and at least to suspicion if tenders are not invited. It is not necessary for us to go through all these items that are contained in the Auditor General's Report. It is impossible for the members of this committee as a whole to attend the Public Accounts Committee. It is impossible for us to investigate. If we did attend the Public Accounts Committee, the expenditure of this government in all its departments, as it is represented in the report of the Auditor General, and if we were to follow the rule laid down by the hon. Minister of Finance, we would be confronted at once by the statement that we had got all these particulars in the Public Accounts Committee. I am sure the hon. Minister of Finance will not lay it down as a principle that we should not criticise any detail of the expenditure in any department unless we had investigated it in the Public Accounts Committee, because that would be a principle impossible to carry out. The Public Accounts Committee would have to sit year after year and this House never would rise if we were to follow out that principle. Taking up the question of a single item, I will give the committee a comparison of the prices charged for the article of potatoes. I find that at Rimouski there was a charge of 40 cents a bushel, at St. Andrews, a charge of $2 a bushel, at Shelbourne, 50 cents a bushel, at Souris, 33 cents a bushel, at another place 60 cents a bushel, at another place $2 a bushel.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Would that not be $2 a barrel?

Mr. POPE. Two dollars is a little high, Mr. Ross, even under your administration. At another place 60 cents a bushel, at another place 78 cents a bushel, and so on all through you find this variation in connection with that article. Even if I had the long long years of training of my hon. and venerable friend from Victoria, N.S., I do not think that I could accept a variation between 33 cents and $2 a bushel without making an inquiry of the hon. minister. I would not be expected to go to the Public Accounts Committee to warrant me in rising in my seat and criticising such items as these. Now, Sir, all this criticism and all this suspicion can be avoided if the better system were followed of calling for public tenders. I am sure that we would accept it from the hon. minister as being more or less satisfactory if he would say to-night that in future, he will adopt the system of asking for public tenders in connection with the general supplies required by this department. It is quite easy after the years of experience we have had in operating these steamers and it would be very businesslike also for the department to make an estimate based upon the expenditure of years gone by of what the requirements would be in the year to come in the various articles such as groceries, coal, &c. That is only business. It is done by every business firm in Canada or in the world, so far as that goes, and it is very easy for the hon. minister to make a reasonable estimate of the supplies that would be required and ask for a public tender for the quantity needed during the year. Let him advertise for these tenders and when he receives these tenders let him act upon them without any undue influence, which I am sure would not be exercised by the hon. minister and if he did this the duty of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House would be simple. It would be much easier and more satisfactory for all of us. When we look through these items and find the wonderful variation in price which no distance warrants we are certainly justified in protesting against such a system as this. There is no distance in all of Canada that warrants a difference between 33 cents and $2 a bushel.

Mr. MACKINNON. Is it $2 a barrel or $2 a bushel ?

Mr. POPE. It is $2 a bushel.

Mr. MACKINNON. It is six barrels at $2 a barrel.

Mr. POPE. They may have been seed potatoes, but there is entered here one bushel at $2. If the hon. gentleman thinks he scored a bull's-eye, let him take his prize. The gentlemen on this side of the House would be absolutely derelict of their duty if they did not absolutely protest against the method of purchasing these articles and the prices paid for them. The minister is starting in a larger sphere as a responsible minister of the Crown, and it would be to his credit if he would get up now and state that in future these supplies will be obtained by public tenders. Is he going on with the old system of buying these supplies in future as in the past, or will he invite tenders ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. POPE. No, it is not carried. I have asked a fair question, and I want an answer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not my intention to change the system.

Mr. TAYLOR. We paid F. X. Drolet, of Quebec, $6,663.51, and I want to know whether we bought from him by tender or if the prices he charged were what he thought fit to charge ? We have an item here for rope specially made for steering gear, 130 feet at 50 cents per foot. That is an outrageous price for a foot of rope.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that this party is a machinist, and that it is an account for the work and material he has furnished for the steamer in the regular way.

Mr. TAYLOR. This work was not done by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There could be no tender for such repairs as that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Who are the wholesale grocers in Quebec from whom he asked tenders ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are mostly all asked, but I know the firm of Turner.

Mr. CASGRAIN. A very good firm it is. You say that tenders were asked from Whitehead & Turner ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and they got part of the contract.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Who were the other firms ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were twenty. As far as I can remember, there were amongst others Coleman, and Dion, and Thibaudeau.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Dion is not a wholesale grocer, and Coleman is not a wholesale grocer, either.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, he is.

Mr. INGRAM. Do these boats carry passengers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Those which do the winter service to Prince Edward Island carry passengers.

Mr. INGRAM. There are many charges of luxuries of a very expensive character, and if they did not carry passengers and supply meals, these items would be very extraordinary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Prince Edward Island steamers supply meals.

Mr. INGRAM. The expenditure on these boats is $452,526; now what is the revenue from these boats ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The revenue, as I have already given, from the 'Minto' and 'Stanley' was for 1901-2 $11,308, and this year from the 'Minto' $11,111.57, and from the 'Stanley' $4,178.40, making $15,289.

Mr. INGRAM. So that while the total expenditure of the department on these boats is $450,000, we have a revenue from them of about $15,000. The hon. Minister of Finance approves of the principle of purchasing supplies laid down for years by both parties ; but I beg to differ from him with regard to that principle. I contend that a government party have a perfect right, when they ask for tenders, all things being equal, to give the contract to their friends ; but it is no answer to say that they have purchased supplies from their friends and paid a reasonable price for them. The only true principle is, first, to call for tenders, and then, all things being equal, to give the contract to your political friends. When the government go outside of that principle, they are not doing what I believe to be in the best interests of the people of this country. When you look over these items, notwithstanding the statement by the hon. member for Victoria that men are to be found who are so patriotic in spirit towards the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that they furnish things for less than cost——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I made no such statement. I repeat the statement I made. I confined myself to the port of Halifax, because I do business there, and know something of the character of the gentlemen who supply these articles.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page P—26 of the Auditor General's Report, he will find a large number of items there for which excessive prices were paid.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). By whom supplied ?

Mr. INGRAM. By Sanderson & Company, of Charlottetown ; and by James Scott & Company, of Halifax.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Give the prices.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not wish to take up the time of the House unnecessarily ; but I will give a few : Bananas, 2 bushels, $5.75 ; fancy biscuits, 15 pounds at 20 cents ; pilot biscuits, 384 pounds at 7 cents ; breakfast and dinner biscuits, 13¾ pounds at 50 cents ; sugar and opera wafers, 1 dozen, $5.50 ; Turkish cigarettes, 2 tins, $4.75 ; crystallized fruits, 20 pounds at 60 cents ; figs in cordial, Indian relish, stuffed olives, truffles. I could quote many other things.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentlemen want me to take up a few hours here I will do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, go on.

Mr. INGRAM. Do the hon. gentlemen wish to listen to me for a few hours ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, certainly.

Mr. INGRAM. I shall be very glad to entertain them if they wish. I did not rise for that purpose this evening. I would rather assist the Minister of Finance in getting through the estimates ; but on some other occasion I will be glad to entertain them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has mentioned the name of a reputable Halifax firm, and has conveyed the impression that that firm charged extravagant prices. I know the members of that firm, and I am satisfied that they would not charge a price that was not fair and reasonable, and if the circumstances are investigated, I am sure this will be established. It is not fair for hon. gentlemen to convey the impression that a reputable firm had charged extravagant prices unless they are prepared to establish it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does the hon. Minister of Finance think the people of Canada should pay for these luxuries to be furnished to the men employed to run these boats ? Why are we called on to furnish them with cigarettes ? I do not think this is a laughable matter at all. The question is why the ratepayers of Canada should pay for these luxuries; and when the price paid for coffee is pointed out, what answer do we get from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ? A very jocular and laughing answer, that he did not drink thirty cents coffee. Well, I am willing that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any one else should drink as expensive coffee as he pleases if he pays for it himself ; but I do not believe the ratepayers of Canada are required to buy the best things in the market——

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, it is not carried ; and the gentlemen might as well keep their mouths shut. I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that I represent a constituency, and I am not going to be bull-dozed by any of their horse laughs at anything I am saying. What I was saying is, why should we be called upon as ratepayers of the Dominion of Canada to furnish luxuries for the men working the boats on the St. Lawrence or the Atlantic ? I do not think we are called on to furnish cigarettes, these delicate waters, and all this other stuff to men in every-day life. I do not blame the hon. Minister of Finance so much, because he was not in this House, but he is advocating quite a different principle to-night from that which his party advocated when in opposition. If the principle was not a good one when we were in power, can he say, in any fairness, that it is a good one now ? The hon. gentleman's friends strongly denounced this practice in the past, but those gentlemen are doing the very same thing now which they condemned then. They are doubly guilty—more than that, they are hypocrites. There is the Postmaster General, he remembers when he was in opposition.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Tell us what I said.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would not use the language you did in parliament. We never descended on this side to criticising items such as the washing of napkins and that sort of thing at Government House. We never criticised on this side of the House the Prime Minister's livery bill. Our criticisms are on a higher plane. I would not descend to criticise the washing of napkins at Government House when I was invited to dine there and helped to soil them. We are called on to furnish luxuries for gentlemen managing these boats. We are spending thousands and thousands of dollars in buying these luxuries, which the ordinary ratepayer of Canada is not able to purchase for his own table. As a representative of a rural constituency, I protest against this expenditure on luxuries, which the great bulk of my electors are not in a position to purchase for their own families. We had better call a halt on this line. Does it follow that because we made mistakes in the past and did not call for tenders, this business administration, which has been heralded all over the country as a business administration, should do the same thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have had the assurance several times during the debate that these prices must be all right because the officials of the government have certified to that effect, and we have been challenged over and over again to point out particular items of over charge. Let me call attention to a few items which will be found on page 22—P of the Auditor General's Report. On the very first line, I find, among supplies furnished to the steamer 'Minto,' 985 pounds of beef at 10 cents; six pairs of chickens at one dollar; 799 pounds of mutton at 12 cents. Hon. gentlemen from Summerside can say whether these are fair prices or not. Beef 10 cents per pound; eggs, 25 cents per dozen; Royal Baking powder at 55 cents, an article which is put up at 25 to 30 cents; sardines, two dozen at $4.90 per dozen; salmon, two cases at $7.75; vinegar, 75 cents per gallon. It is well known that the very best domestic vinegar can be bought at 40 cents per gallon, and give a handsome profit to the retailer. All through you have the evidence that these gentleman who certified to these prices are just figure heads and would certify to anything.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a very grave accusation. Very much depends on the circumstances under which these goods are ordered. It is not possible from the mere reading of the figures from the Auditor General's Report, to form any conclusion, without a knowledge of the circumstances. With regard to the luxuries, I know the circumstances under which the cigarettes were purchased and they cost $2 or $3, but the other articles are only such as would appear on the table of the commonest railway restaurant in the Dominion. You will find India relishes and things of that kind on the table of any restaurant and they are not luxuries in a ship which carries passengers.

Mr. COCHRANE. They do not carry passengers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, they do. They are not luxuries in the sense in which the hon. gentleman says they are.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was quoting the prices of necessaries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend who spoke before the hon. gentleman spoke of luxuries.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Here is a charge for beef, 985 pounds at 10 cents. I am informed that it is an article which can be bought at 6 or 7 cents. Mutton at 12 cents is surely an exorbitant price.

Mr. INGRAM. Will any one pretend that we could not buy sugar in large quantities at less than five cents per pound. Here is one firm which charges five cents per pound. Everybody knows that that is an excessive price. Tea, coffee and sugar are staple supplies which you could buy in large quantities, and distribute to these vessels as required. I could understand your paying excessive prices at certain points for perishable articles such as bananas, but the staple articles you should purchase in large quantities and under contract. I do not care what the past system has been, the present system should be changed. The system of the past was a wrong system and there is no reason why it should be continued. If the government change the system there will be no reason for such complaints as have been made to-night. But, in relation to such a system as we now have, the criticism is perfectly proper. It is clearly in the interest of the country that the system should be changed.

Mr. HENDERSON. There may be much in what the Minister of Finance said with regard to the condition under which the articles are purchased. But, when I find that in the city of Quebec a purchase of 984 pounds of sugar was made at five cents per pound, another purchase of 349 at five and one half cents and, from another grocer, 296 pounds at five cents per pound, it seems quite evident that there is something wrong. The conditions at Quebec are much more favourable for the purchase of sugar than the conditions in western Ontario. Now, I speak of something of which I have practical knowledge when I say that in western Ontario thirty-five miles west of Toronto, after paying water freight and inland freight by rail, sugar one year ago—the time when these accounts were made up—was sold to the farmers of that section at a profit at four cents per pound. This was standard granulated No. 1, and I have no doubt that the sugar here referred to was not one whit better, for it is a standard article. It is evident, that, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier said, in that item alone the price is from twenty-five to thirty per cent above actual value. With many other articles there may be differences. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Richardson) referred to baking powder. That is sold at varying prices. He also referred to vinegar, the price of which is well known. I think the hon. gentleman is within the mark in saying that for such an article as would be required on board a steamer 30 cents or 40 cents would be a fair price, and it is astonishing to find an entry here of ten gallons of vinegar at 75 cents or five gallons at 60 cents. Now, take another article the value of which we all know—fresh water. In Charlottetown the government paid 50 cents per thousand gallons, while at Gaspé they paid 50 cents per hundred gallons. Surely there cannot be such a difference in the conditions as to justify a price in one place ten times as high as the other. I believe they can secure fresh water at Gaspé just as cheaply as they can at Charlottetown.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At Charlottetown they have a system of water works, while at Gaspé, I should suppose, they have not. That would make all the difference in the world.

Mr. HENDERSON. And at another place the government are charged for 700 gallons at the rate of 50 cents per hundred gallons. Again, I find where it is sold by the ton. In one case ten tons at $1.12 a ton, and in another 65 tons at 56 cents per ton—one price exactly double the other, though there seems to be no difference in the conditions. It is manifest that there is something wrong with the system. I do not want to charge any one with giving an erroneous certificate. But there is so much in the Auditor General's Report that is not susceptible of explanation by the ordinary reader that I think the matter is worthy the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ; and, as he is starting out fresh in the business, I hope that he will make such changes that when we discuss the matter of supplies again, we shall not have to criticise his department in the way which it has been criticised to-night.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the hon. minister of Marine and Fisheries, in spite of what has been said, to announce that he intends to continue the present system. When this government came into office, it was loudly proclaimed as a business government, one that would carry on public affairs on business principles. Is the hon. gentleman acquainted with the Ontario and Richelieu Navigation Company ? I am sure he is, for the head-quarters of that company are in the city to which he belongs. They have a fleet of steamers, just as the hon. minister is entrusted with the fleet of steamers for the people of Canada. Will he copy the business methods of that company ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If they are good.

Mr. TAYLOR. That company furnish passenger steamers altogether, and they know the average price of every staple article supplied to those steamers.

Do they go to retail merchants in the various cities for their supplies ? No ; they receive tenders from wholesale houses and they buy the supplies wholesale and distribute them among their steamers. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has eight or ten steamers requiring large quantities of staple supplies. Yet, he buys from the retail man at exorbitant retail prices. One hon. gentleman referred to Scott, of Halifax. He said that was a reputable firm and would not overcharge. Let me give him a few articles. Rice, 25 pounds at seven cents per pound.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where is that ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Auditor General's Report. Page P—19.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) That is the ordinary price in Halifax.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax, N.S.) That is the ordinary price for the best quality.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then we have a charge of 25 pounds of currants at 12 cents. And everybody knows that you can buy three pounds at retail for 25 cents. Then I find at page P—17, Charles F. Francis & Co., St. John, charging for beans at $1.95 per per bushel and peas at $1.95 per bushel. Every farmer in the country knows that $1.95 for peas and beans is an outrageous price. If the government were buying these in a large quantity and delivering them to their several steamers, they could get much lower prices, and the same with all staple articles, such as sugar, rice, flour and so on.

Mr. TOBIN. I suppose that the hon. gentleman is aware that last year——

Mr. TAYLOR. When I get through, my hon. friend (Mr. Tobin) can answer me or can ask all the questions he likes. Or, if he wishes to ask me a question now, I have no objection.

Mr. TOBIN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the wholesale price for beans last year was from $1.80 to $2 according to the quality ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The quantity of peas and the quantity of beans bought in this case was one bushel each.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the price was $1.95. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin) cannot find that these articles were sold at such prices as he states in any market.

Mr. TOBIN. I bought them in my own line of business.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the hon. gentleman ask the hon. member for Essex who sits near him, and he knows the prices.

Mr. STEPHENS. Beans were shipped from the county of Kent last season at about $1.75 per bushel. The farmers received from $1.50 to $1.60 per bushel.

Mr. TAYLOR. Whether the system is right or wrong, I ask the government to do business on business principles, as they promised to do. I ask them to adopt the system followed by the Richelieu Navigation Company, and every other company in Canada having big steamers to supply, and who buy their staple supplies from wholesale firms by tender, or from some friends at wholesale prices. But do not go about the country to these little two penny ha'penny stores and buy at prices two or three times higher than they could buy at home in every part of Canada. There is not one hon. gentleman on the treasury benches who is paying the prices for goods in his own home that are charged here for the supply of these steamers. Every man on the other side of the House must know that some of the prices that are certified to are exorbitant and extravagant prices, that they would not pay for goods of the same kind to be used in their own homes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would ask the Minister of Finance one question. Shortly after the government came into power they adopted the system along the St. Lawrence river of calling for tenders for the supply of goods. That system was carried on for a couple of years, when they ceased doing that, and the last five or six years the supplies have been purchased from retail merchants along the line, and certified to, as I understand, by the officer in charge at the place where they are bought with the words 'prices fair and just.' But the minister knows that that officer gets his instructions from the department that employs him, he has purchased his goods from a certain retail merchant in that town, and that officer knows well that if he did not certify to the prices as fair and just his head would be cut off within twenty-four hours, because that retail merchant would have him dismissed, there is no doubt about that. The head of the department would not stand that officer criticising the prices. Now why did the Minister of Finance change that system of calling for tenders and go back to the system that is now being complained of?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not aware that such change has taken place as the hon. gentleman alleges. Of course, that is a matter for the Department of Marine and Fisheries to attend to, but I do not think any such change has taken place.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I never said it took place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He says it has taken place in certain contracts, but my impression is that he is mistaken. As to the other point about the local officials, his statement is a very remarkable one ; I hope it would not have been true under the late government, I know it is not true under the present government. He stated that an official is obliged to certify to fraudulent accounts otherwise he would be dismissed. My hon. friend treats that as a light matter. He speaks as if he would have considered that the regular method under the old government. I trust that it was not done under the late government, I do not believe it was ; I know it is not done under the present government. I am sure that any officer who would report to the head of the department that the prices were too high and ought to be reduced, would be commended, as he ought to be, for the performance of his duty. But the suggestion that an official of this department, or of any other department, is obliged to certify to accounts which are not fair and just, is a very unfair one, and I am sure the hon. gentleman, on reflection, will not justify it. I know it is not justified with regard to these officials to whom I have referred, and who were appointed by the late government. I have only to say that if they were asked to give such certificates of prices being fair and reasonable when they knew they were not, they are manly enough to throw up their places at once rather than hold them on such a condition.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to say to the Minister of Finance that under the late government that system was not required by the Auditor General until shortly before we ceased holding office, and it was on account of prices at different points being higher than he supposed they ought to be that he insisted on those words being put on the invoices. Now I know for a fact that officials who are in charge of certain works do and have certified to accounts such as I have mentioned, and I know well enough that if they did not certify to the accounts that were handed in, their heads would be cut off, and the ministers at the heads of the departments know it too. Their officials are told to purchase from certain parties, and I know well that these same officials can purchase goods cheaper from the same parties for their own use. I am not finding fault with the officials, it is their bread and butter to hold their positions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do find fault with those officials. An official who will certify that a price is fair and reasonable when he knows that the certificate is false, has no right to be in the public service.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How is the official to know? Does the Minister of Finance mean to say that if he has complaints made to him against this official for objecting to the accounts he would not be hauled over the coals and dismissed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He would be dismissed if he did not object.

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. gentleman asks how the official is to know. He stated just now that the official bought goods for himself cheaper than he bought for the government, and that he certified to an account for goods bought at a higher price for the government.

Mr. BIRKETT. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated in the fore part of the evening that certain lots of hardware had been purchased, and that all the way from 20, 25 and 30 to 40 per cent had been paid over and above the market value. I thought that was rather an extravagant statement, and my curiosity induced me to refer to the Auditor General's Report, and I find that the statement made by my hon. friend is well within the mark. On page P—9, I find there are 8,780 pounds of ordinary iron charged at three cents a pound. Now that iron at the time it was supplied to the government could be sold in those quantities by any wholesale hardware man for $1.95, or by any extensive retailer for about $2.10 or $2.25. That was sold at Quebec, and the prices I am giving you are the prices at which you can buy it at Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the name of the Quebec dealer?

Mr. BIRKETT. F. X. Drolet. I also find an item for 994 pounds of zinc, equal to about two casks, and that zinc is charged at the rate of 15 cents a pound. When this was purchased, zinc by casks, was selling at 6½ cents. I am speaking of something about which I know. To-day, zinc is higher than it has been for the last three years, and it is selling at 7 cents. If you buy it from a Tory you can get it for 7 cents. Iron is dearer than it has been for the last three years, but you could buy iron for $2.25 per hundred pounds in any retail store in Ottawa. I will sell you all you want for $2 per hundred. I find that the government paid 3 cents a pound. Another item is 93 pounds of Magnolia metal at 40 cents a pound. There is only one quality of Magnolia metal made and you can get any quantity you want of it for 22½ cents a pound. Another item is machine steel of which 761 pounds were purchased at 6 cents a pound. That is retail. I cannot give the size because the size is not given here, but the standard size which is ¾ inch is selling in any retail store for $3 per hundred. I could go through the list and point out many similar charges. I think I have shown sufficient to convince this committee that when the government are spending public money, supplies ought to be furnished by public competition. I do not go so far as some hon. members here who say that probably the heads of departments when certifying to these accounts as being fair and just do it without the information. Probably they may have done it without the information, but we have to bear in mind that their information is limited to the extent of these circulars. I suppose the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will tell me that it is a machinist company which supplied these goods. I admit it is a machinist company that supplied these goods, but these are the prices that it has charged for the goods themselves. There has been no work put upon these goods because 2,369 hours of work is charged for at the rate of 35 cents an hour. The prices which I have quoted are the actual prices paid for these goods, and I have also given the prices which these goods ought to have cost if they had been purchased in any store in Canada.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Mr. Chairman, I knew that I was not far from the mark when I stated at the beginning of this debate that if some system of tendering were adopted—I am not accusing any one department more than another—we could save at least from 25 to 30 per cent. I passed through the mill. I changed the system in the Department of Public Works. We were buying in that department right and left, just as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is buying now. We opened a store in Ottawa and we have saved between 30 and 40 per cent since that store has been opened. It is true it is not perfect, but since we have had that system we have, I repeat, saved between 30 and 40 per cent The hon. minister is just taking hold of his department, and I would suggest to him to adopt the same system. Let him open stores. Let him ask for tenders, even if he does not ask for tenders in the public press, but simply asks for tenders from wholesale merchants as big companies do. I am not inclined to go so far as some hon. gentlemen here who say that every time the government must ask for public tenders. If we follow the rule of asking for tenders from wholesale merchants we will save from 25 to 30 per cent every time. But, I insist specially on this point, and I give this suggestion in no unfriendly spirit, that the hon. gentleman should open stores and let the officers from the different ships draw from those stores. If he does he will control the expenditure which is not controlled now. Before taking my seat let me say that I do not share the views of those hon. gentlemen who say that officers in the public service must not have some little luxuries. I went into that question when I was Minister of Public Works. Take the case of the commander and officers of the ships of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. They spend seven or eight months of the year on the water. They must have some little luxuries. When a case came before me I went to the Canadian Pacific Railway, president and managers, and asked them what their rule was. They told me that their rule was to give their officers mineral waters, Apollinaris and so on. Cigarettes, of course, is going a little too far. Mineral waters and things of that kind, I think, should be allowed to public officers in cases such as we have been discussing. This country has no necessity to be mean. We are a very big country and we are growing bigger every day. Let us treat our officers as we deal with ourselves. They are gentlemen. Let us not allow them to make useless expenditures, but let us not go too far the other way. If the hon. minister takes the suggestions which have been made in the proper spirit, I think he will derive some benefit from what has been said. There is no doubt whatever that from 25 to 30 per cent can be saved from the adoption of the plan which I have suggested. That system was adopted by my own department a year or two ago, and I found it not only very economical but more comfortable.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. minister submitted to the committee, or has he under his hand, a statement showing the cost per man per day on each of the government steamers for rations and pay? There should be such a statement prepared regularly and it should be submitted to the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It cost 33 cents and a fraction per man per day.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to say to the hon. Minister of Finance again in connection with the system of calling for tenders that shortly after the Liberal government came into power they advertised for tenders for supplies for the St. Lawrence canals. They did not say how much of each article they required but they gave a list of supplies that would be required.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are discussing Marine and Fisheries now.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That may be, but I am pointing out that the system has been changed in connection with the St. Lawrence canals.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The system of the Marine and Fisheries Department is the one we are talking about now.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Before that they purchased their supplies the same way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are not under discussion at all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It is the same principle. The hon. minister states that there is no officer of the government who would certify to prices unless he thought they were fair and just. Take an instance of that kind. I want to refer to it although it is not in the Marine Department. On the St. Lawrence canals, tenderers were advertised for, and the officer had that tender to guide him that the price was fair and just, but that system has been abolished by this government. You will find now that at Cardinal, Mr. Stewart, the superintendent will pay 21 cents for coal oil, and five miles east he will pay 18 cents while if he bought it at Iroquois for 18 cents he could take it down to Cardinal at no cost whatever. The officer is told to purchase from certain parties in each town, and if the officer does not certify to the accounts he would not hold his position for forty-eight hours.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend's conception of Liberal government is entirely erroneous.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The facts prove I am right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The facts do not prove it. The hon. gentleman says that if that officer did not certify to what is practically a fraudulent account he would lose his office. He has no warrant for that. If he could show any instance where an officer has lost his head because of that he would have good ground to go on. I suppose the hon. gentleman did not intend it as such, but it is a reflection upon every officer in Canada who certifies to these accounts, and it implies that these officers are forced by this government to certify fraudulent accounts. The hon. gentleman would not go so far as that, but that is a fair deduction from what he says.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not say they certified to fraudulent accounts, but they certainly have to accept the accounts of the parties who furnish them and the officer takes the word of the seller for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If an officer certifies to an account as fair and reasonable the certificate is true or it is not true.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). The Minister of Finance must be quite well aware that the member for the constituency who is supporting the government tells the officer where he is to purchase these supplies. It is not a matter of choice with the officer, and he goes to the store where he is told and certifies to the accounts when they are rendered.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Regardless of whether they are fair or not ?

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). How does he know ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is his business to know.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). The officer has no choice in the matter. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) who is a hardware merchant tells us that fifteen cents a pound is twice too much for zinc, and if you go through all these estimates, you will find that the government is paying from 100 to 150 per cent more for these supplies than they could be purchased for in the ordinary retail way, and these accounts are certified to by the officer who is forced to go there by the Liberal member who represents that constituency. The member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) will be able to tell us that my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) is quite correct in what he says.

Mr. STEPHENS. The hon. member from Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) quoted the price of iron and he says this iron was supplied by a machinist. To my mind part of the work done on this machine steel and iron was done in the factory and charged with the price of the iron, which is the common way of doing it in machine shops. The smaller the iron the more it counts, and the price he has quoted may have been for a smaller size of iron.

Mr. BIRKETT. Are the prices I gave on standard goods correct ?

Mr. STEPHENS. We do not know whether this iron is common iron or whether it is Swede or Norway iron.

Mr. BIRKETT. We cannot buy Swede at any such price, and we know that the Quebec merchants are not in the habit of selling goods at much less than cost.

Mr. STEPHENS. We do not know whether it is angle iron or round.

Mr. BIRKETT. That would not make any difference.

Mr. STEPHENS. As a rule angle iron is more expensive than square or round.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). There is 761 pounds of machine steel at six cents a pound, and is not that 100 per cent too much ?

Mr. STEPHENS. There may have been workmanship on it and it may not have been too much.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). The workmanship is charged extra in every case.

Mr. STEPHENS. You cannot tell from the statement in the Auditor General's Report whether it is or not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. These accounts are for articles purchased two years ago, some of them, and I do not suppose that we can carry in our heads what the prices were then. The Auditor General's Report is so condensed that you cannot get a proper understanding of such matters from it. I do not remember as much about hardware as when I was a boy serving in a hardware store, but the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett) is familiar with the trade, and he knows that Swede iron is very much more valuable than common iron. Now the Auditor General's Report is very much condensed, and it may be possible that part of this is Swede iron and part of it common iron. When these accounts were examined two years ago there was a mystery about one of them, and we found it was another article altogether that was charged for it. The hon. member for Leeds the other night in going through the accounts of my department stated that certain prices were outrageous and I promised him that I would inquire into it. There is an officer in the department who has been in the employment for years, and I asked him next morning for an explanation, calling his attention to the remarks that were made. I must say that Mr. Bleakney, the officer in question, gave me a very satisfactory explanation. I asked him how he came to go to that place, as I had not told him to go to any particular place. He said that he had a letter from the private secretary stating that another house was entitled to a share of the patronage ; but he said he had bought very little there, because he could buy the goods cheaper elsewhere. I asked him if he scrutinized every account so carefully. He said most certainly he did. I suppose the other officers do the same. We cannot judge from the condensed report given by the Auditor General. It looks to me, from the price of sugar, as I know it, as if some of these prices might be a little high. I cannot carry my mind back to say how the sugar market was two years ago. Sugar fluctuates, and I know that iron and steel have varied very much within a few years.

Mr. BIRKETT. How many years ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know, but I know that we had to raise the invoices tremendously.

Mr. BIRKETT. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, in iron and steel in some cases 50 per cent. So it does not do to make sweeping reductions. I am sure that under the officers of my department the prices will be found to be right.

Mr. BIRKETT. I have no desire to misquote or misrepresent anything I find in the Auditor General's Report. I have given one item of which there is only one quality made, that is, magnolia metal; and for that 17½ cents a pound more is charged than you could buy it at any time in the last three years. There has been no change in that. With regard to iron, two years ago I sold it at $1.95. There has not been any great change in the price of iron or steel.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BIRKETT. I beg pardon. I am dealing in it every day. I know that sometimes the government will insist on an amended entry, on information which they get from the 'Iron Age,' which is their only authority. You might as well take the ordinary daily report in our newspapers. You can go to the manufacturers and buy iron at a price, but all you get in the 'Iron Age' is the current retail price; but the Customs Department, not only here, but in every other city, swears by that as by the Bible. There is where they make a mistake. So far as iron and steel are concerned, I am perfectly correct in the quotations I have given. The hon. member for Kent says nothing about zinc, which is worth from ½c. to ¾c. a pound more to-day than it was last year, and it was still lower the year before. Here the government is charged for it 15 cents a pound, or 100 per cent more than it is selling at to-day, the highest price the market has reached in the last four years. With regard to iron, I gave the base price. Three-quarter inch is the base; each one-sixteenth-inch less is 5 cents per hundred weight more until you reach three-sixteenth inch, so that even if it was the smallest iron that was produced, the price is extravagant. The hon. member for Kent said that probably this was Swede iron. These people in Quebec are not such fools as to send invoices for 5,800 pounds of iron, and not mention that it was Swedish iron if it was so. The accounts are prepared in such a way as to make the best show, and if it were put at a price basis to correspond with that of common iron, it would cost five or six cents a pound. The price charged for steel is also 100 per cent more than it could be bought at if it was standard size. When I first mentioned the matter, I told you what size the iron or steel was; but presuming that it was base size, the price of the iron is $1.05 more than should be charged for it, and for base steel 3 cents per pound, or 100 per cent more than ought to be charged for it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have given attention to the hon. gentleman's statement, because I know that he is engaged in the iron trade; but what he has said has shaken my confidence.

Hon. Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. BIRKETT. I cannot help that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When he says that there has been no variation in the price of iron and steel for five or six years, I cannot agree with him. I know that within a much less period than that we have raised the invoices from 25 per cent to 50 per cent, and I am not sure but 100 per cent. The hon. gentleman must know how steel and iron went up in price.

Mr. BIRKETT. The hon. gentleman is completely in error. Three years ago iron was cheaper than it is to-day.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is bringing it down to three years now. I was perfectly sure in what I said, going back, as he said, six or eight years. I thought the rise would perhaps be within three years; but I will make a point of looking it up and ascertaining when we had to call for these amended entries. There were many contracts given for future delivery, eight or ten months afterwards, and during that time the price went up 50 per cent, and in some cases more.

Mr. BIRKETT. I said that if the hon. gentleman would go back three years he would find that iron was cheaper three years ago than it is to-day. Iron is a thing that fluctuates. But when hon. gentlemen talk of twenty, fifty and in some cases one hundred per cent increase, no such change has taken place since the big change took place when fifty cents per hundred pounds was put on in 1878. Iron then went up very rapidly because it was nearly all imported, but I am quite positive that three years ago we sold iron at $1.85 and two years ago at $1.92½, and last year at $1.95. I am quite within the mark when I say three years. The hon. Minister of Customs says that there is a price quoted in 'Iron Age.' If the customs officer says that black is white, the burden is on the importer, of proving that it is not. The customs officer says, we cannot accept that, and the importer has to prove why it should be accepted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. Minister of Customs has said that he is not well versed in the price of iron as he is in some other matters. He ought to be fairly well versed in the price of sugar, and if he will go back two years, that will not make the matter any better with regard to the quotation given by the hon. member for Halton. Two years ago standard granulated sugar was lower than during the past year. Take another item in which the hon. minister should be well versed—the item of biscuits—the pilot or water biscuits are charged at different prices, from six to eight cents a pound. The hon. gentleman should have some idea whether that is a fair price. Mixed biscuits are charged at seventeen to eighteen cents per pound. It must be a pretty fine article at that price. I did not look over the Auditor General's Report until this evening, and I find that there are columns of items at from twenty-five to thirty per cent higher than they could be got for by tender. We have been assured by the Minister of Finance that because these accounts were certified to by officials as reasonable and fair we should accept them, but evidently what would be reasonable and fair in any other business transaction does not apply to government supply. It is quite evident that these men know what they are certifying to, and that this debate has brought out the assurance that the contract would be given to friends of the government. I do not know whether this will be satisfactory to the country, but I am inclined to think that it will not.

Mr. LAW. Having had some thirty years experience in the business of tea and coffee, perhaps my silence would be taken as endorsing the criticism of the opposition. It seems to me most unfair that hon. gentlemen should attempt to criticise the purchases of these supplies by taking items out of the Auditor General's Report without knowing the quality of the goods. Take the item of tea. We have in our store at present, tea which we sell at ten cents, and also tea which we sell at fifty cents, and it is most unfair to criticise the price of tea without knowing the quality. The hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said that the very best quality of coffee can be bought in Montreal at thirty cents a pound. I do not wish to contradict my hon. friend, but if his statement is correct, you can buy coffee cheaper at retail in Montreal than at wholesale. We have a coffee which we purchase at Montreal and which costs us thirty-two cents per pound at wholesale. I am positive that they do not retail that coffee at thirty cents.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The next time I come up I will send a pound to my hon. friend.

Mr. LAW. I do not wish to be understood as not believing what my hon. friend has said, but if he pays thirty cents he does not buy the very best coffee.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is the very best quality and I know what coffee is.

Mr. LAW. There is the matter of baking powder, which can be bought at $2 to $6 per dozen. How can hon. gentlemen opposite look at the price of that and judge as to the quality. As regards sugar, that is now in the hands of a combine, and whenever there is a change in price, a telegram is sent and the change must take place immediately. When a telegram is sent from the refinery every wholesale merchant must raise and lower his prices at once. The price of beans, $1.60 and $1.95 has been referred to. As a wholesale merchant I know that beans at $1.60 and $1.95 or even $2, any time within a year and a half, is a very low price lower than they have been sold at in the western part of the maritime provinces at retail. With reference to currants at twelve cents per pound, there is a difference between ordinary currants and those put up in one pound packages. Personally I have had some little experience in supplying goods to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Unfortunately I never had a chance of supplying very many goods, but when I did supply any, I never met sharper men than the shipmasters of the government, and it would be almost impossible for anybody to overcharge them. The hon. member for Northumberland thought that the captain and the crews of those boats were too well treated. If he had had the experience with captains that I have had, he would find that the best quality of goods is none too good for people that go to sea, and I do not blame them for getting the very best. Under all the circumstances, I do not see anything in the grocery list that shows any over charge.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I would like to make a few remarks with regard to this account of F. X. Drolet. The hon. member for Kent, in his defence of the charges in this account, particularly in connection with the charge for steel and iron, stated that he could not give an answer to the question put to him because there might have been a certain amount of work put on this steel. Turning to page P—9 of the Auditor General's Report I find that that account reads 'repairing steam engine, making shaft, screw condenser keel and steam connections to boiler, $250.' Going further down you will find time charged up by these parties: 387½ hours at 50 cents; 1,336½ hours at 40 cents; 2,369 hours at 35 cents; 4,909 hours at 30 cents; 1,717½ hours at 25 cents; 2,757 hours at 20 cents; 160 hours at 15 cents. Now, I think there was sufficient time charged to make all repairs necessary, and there is no doubt that this six cents was charged for steel. No amount of sophistry by the hon. Minister of Customs will get over that. Machinery steel, two years ago was not more than $2.75 retail. That would buy the best quality of hard machinery steel. Here we are buying almost half a ton at $6 per 100 pounds. Then zinc, which can be purchased in casks at from five to six cents is charged at fifteen cents. There are large quanties of zinc charged elsewhere at the same money. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) knows that the magnolia is a standard article and retails everywhere at 22½ cents, yet 40 cents is charged. Talk of ten, fifteen and twenty per cent advances, they are not in it with this. There is anywhere from 100 to 150 per cent overcharge here in hardware. I believe it would be in the interest of the department and the country if the minister would call for tenders for these articles rather than continue buying by this system.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But, if a job is sent to a mechanic's shop, can you first get tenders for the materials, buy them at competitive prices and send them to the mechanic and oblige him to use them? If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Thomson, Grey) sends for the plumber to do work in his house; will that plumber charge the hon. gentleman for materials at wholesale prices? Surely, the charge will include a profit. So, when you send work to a mechanic's establishment you must expect him to charge for material with a profit. It should be a fair and reasonable profit of course.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I submit that the answer of the Minister of Finance is not satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hardly expected the hon. member (Mr. Thompson) to be satisfied.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). It will not be satisfactory to the country. Here we find an article that when bought in small quantities sells at six cents, charged at fifteen cents per pound, though about half a ton was bought. At page P—32 of the Auditor General's Report, I find 225 pounds of zinc charged at 15 cents per pound, though it can be bought in quantities at five cents per pound and retail at six cents per pound. Now, these are facts, and it is for hon. members of the committee to take note of them and judge whether a system which leads to such charges is a good system or not.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is no doubt in my mind that the explanation of these charges is that work was done on material furnished for repairs. As to magnolia, the hon. gentleman says that only one quality of magnolia is made. I believe that, as a rule, that is the case. But the hon. gentleman knows that they could make magnolia worth a good deal more money and it is likely that a special order was given for magnolia for this purpose. Hon. gentlemen talk about coal oil, which is bought at one place for 21 cents and another place for 19 cents. Hon. gentlemen know that coal oil fluctuates from one season to the other. American coal oil would probably cost 25 cents, while Canadian oil would be cheap at 20 cents. Then, take the case of iron pipe. I have no doubt that this is cut into lengths The iron bolts would be cut into lengths and turned in the lathes. The pipe, no doubt, was cut into lengths and threaded for the purpose of making railings and so on. This would explain the cost.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). We find 16 feet of one inch pipe charged. Does the hon. gentleman say that that is cut in lengths and the charge made in this way?

Mr. STEPHENS. It might be.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). What reasons has the hon. gentleman to believe that?

Mr. STEPHENS. Because, in building a boat they would not use one length of pipe 16 feet. It is used in short lengths for railings, and so on. It would probably be cut into lengths, threaded and coupled up.

Mr. WILSON. What is there in the item to lead the hon. gentleman to suppose that these charges include work? When hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side they took a different view of the Auditor General's Report. The Minister of Customs did not take the same view that he takes to-night.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You had it put then so that you could understand it.

Mr. WILSON. The item shows plainly that too much has been charged.

Mr. BIRKETT. The illustration of the plumber given by the Minister of Finance is a fair one. But it does not apply altogether to this case. If you employ a plumber, he is supposed to buy his material at first hand, he charges you the retail price. If that was all in this case, we should be quite satisfied. The hon. gentleman knows that the plumbers bill always comes in—so many pounds of pipe, so many pounds of solder, and so many pounds of everything else—even putty—and then so many hours of time. I am perfectly satisfied that the Minister of Finance in drawing his comparison with the plumbers' bill was perfectly honest. And it is quite fair to say that these contractors are entitled to retail prices for these goods. But, they are away in excess in their charges for iron and steel.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice an item here of 28 pounds of solder at 40 cents a pound. The regular price of solder is 25 cents, as almost any gentleman in the House is aware. Here are two hammocks bought from W. C. Blakiston, Quebec, at $5 a piece. Page P—21 of the Auditor General's Report. I find varnish, 17½ gallons at $6 per gallon; 2 wheelbarrows at $7 a piece. There are several items here that I am perfectly convinced are at least 50 per cent and in some cases $100 per cent higher than they could be supplied to the government under contract. Now there is an important principle involved. The Liberal-Conservative party say that these goods should be supplied to the government by tender, the government say, no, these goods shall not be supplied by tender, and the minister now says that notwithstanding the criticisms that has been offered he will continue in that policy, and will refuse to ask for tenders for goods to be supplied to the government. I wish to remind the hon. gentleman that in the province of Ontario, from which I come, every municipal council gets its supplies by tender. If they want the minutes of council printed, though the expense is only $50 or $60, if they want to make a purchase of nails or supplies for the corporation, they ask for tenders. There is hardly any corporation who is purchasing supplies, no matter how small a quantity, but ask for tenders. When the Liberal-Conservative party were in power the hon. gentlemen opposite criticised the former government for not buying everything by tender. I do not say it is possible for the government in every case to buy every dollar's worth of goods by tender. But here is a line of steamers which are supplied with goods of the same class every year; they require so many pounds of sugar, so much varnish, so much iron—the same class of goods every year, the boats plying between the same places year after year. The minister knows very well that he will require the same goods every year, and I think it is only fair to the people of this country, when he is asking us for $250,000, on which only $15,000 revenue is returned, that he should ask for tenders for the supply of these vessels. If there are some goods that cannot be bought by tender, I am willing he should buy them from his friends. That is fair play and the Liberal-Conservative party well understand it. For myself, I object to this large expenditure and the very high prices, extortionate prices in some cases, that have been charged during the last year. I say it is fair to the people and it is fair to this committee that the minister should now stand up and say that in future these large supplies shall be bought by public tender.

Mr. MACKINNON. I think a good many of the criticisms made by hon. gentlemen opposite about the Marine Department are made under a misconception. So far as I understand it, the Marine Department, in all the leading articles it requires, has been in the habit of asking for tenders every year. But the debate has been going on under a different impression entirely. It is asserted that no tenders have been called for, and the kind advice is given to the new minister to call for tenders. If he has been doing that in the past and is doing it now, that advice is gratuitous. What if a few small potatoes for the crew, and a few scraps of iron for the use of the steamer are purchased without tender ? The officers must purchase these small things in the ports where they stop.

Mr. THOMSON. There was one item of over $6,000.

Mr. MACKINNON. For a number of articles included in that item, I think you will find probably that the minister called for tenders, he takes an offer from the person who is doing the repairs. I think that has been the practice of the department in the past. Now this debate has taken a wide range, and I wish to reply to some of the reflections that have been made on some of the dealers in Prince Edward Island. Some hon. members have referred to them as charging unduly high prices. I think you will find in Charlottetown as fair dealing men as you will find anywhere else in Canada. They have mentioned bananas, and pease and beans, which I am sorry to say we have to bring down from Ontario. Articles like these may be charged a little higher price because they have to pay freight on them. For bananas and fruit, of course, the price is higher there because they have to be imported in small quantities. Reflections are made upon the Marine Department and upon the minister for paying too high prices. The agent of the Department of Marine in Prince Edward Island, Mr. Lord, has been there for a great many years. He has been employed under the Conservative administration, and is a most careful man. I do not think he would certify to any prices as fair and reasonable unless he really believed they were so. Many of the prices charged in Prince Edward Island are very moderate, they are not nearly equal to the prices charged in other places in Canada. A reflection has also been made on the officials in charge of the steamers because it is alleged some of them use cigarettes, or some of them did not do their duty in managing the steamers during the winter. I have not taken the trouble to speak on this subject, because if there is one thing more than another I dislike it is airing grievances, when those grievances are of a very flimsy character. Captain Brown has been specially named, the captain of the 'Stanley.' I know that there is no more capable, no more honourable and conscientious captain sailing across the Atlantic ocean to-day. There is not a man of any standing in Prince Edward Island who would reflect upon his character. Captain Finlayson of the 'Minto' has been for twenty or thirty years conducting the service across the straits, as captain of that boat. He is a capable, economical and faithful officer. Both of these men are exceedingly capable and prudent. I am sorry to hear reflections cast upon them and especially by hon. members from our own province, because these reflections that are cast upon these men should be directed towards those who are circulating stories and rumours against these officers. I must admit that there was a lot of trouble during last winter but it was caused by the fact that there was more ice in the straits of Northumberland separating the island from the mainland than there had been for twenty or twenty-five years past. We should not undertake to abuse these officers simply because nature was against us last winter. We were unfortunate in our effort to conduct this service simply because of the ice. There were three miles of ice around the 'Stanley' and she was kept there month after month. It is a matter that we are all seeking to remedy, but there is no remedy in abusing the officers who are connected with the Department of Marine and Fisheries. We have capable men in the service and I think it is wrong to reflect upon them.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Are the quotations right that we have been giving you ?

Mr. MACKINNON. I do not hear the hon. gentleman. I think we can remedy the difficulties down there and we have some plans by which we hope to provide a remedy. I am sorry to hear hon. gentlemen casting reflections upon our province. Its relation to Canada is the same as the relation of the eye to the body. If you injure the eye you injure the body. Prince Edward Island is a small part of Canada, and if you reflect upon Prince Edward Island and the business men of Prince Edward Island, you reflect upon Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. Who did it ?

Mr. MACKINNON. I would not have made these remarks at all but for the attacks made upon the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, who are good men, some of them Conservatives, and all men who have had a long experience.

Mr. AVERY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackinnon) who has just taken his seat, seems to find fault with this side of the House because we are criticising the extravagance of this government. I claim that this government has been extravagant in many ways and particularly because they have not adopted the practice of inviting tenders for supplies. There is no use in finding fault with us because we condemn such extravagance. We are here to represent the wishes of the people, and if the people are not satisfied with being robbed in this way it is our duty to protest against the system. I find, for instance, that beans have been purchased at from $2 to $2.25 a bushel, when we all know that beans have never been worth that. If they are to be purchased at that price, why not give the people throughout the country a chance to put in tenders for such supplies as these. It has always been customary to do that when furnishing supplies to county councils, cities and towns, and why should not the government carry out the same system ? The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) says that iron and machinery have been bought and work added to them. That is not the case, because I have been purchasing iron and machinery in machine shops, and the rule is that they charge so much for the iron and they charge for the number of hours work that they put upon them.

Mr. STEPHENS. Would the hon. member (Mr. Avery) say that iron is never partly worked up and not charged for ?

Mr. AVERY. No, it is not customary for any machine shop to put work upon iron without charging for it.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the hon. gentleman say it is never done ?

Mr. MacKINNON.

Mr. AVERY. It has never been done in my case. They charge for the number of pounds of iron purchased and they charge for the number of hours labour they put upon it, either round iron, or square iron as well as the metal they run. The hon. gentleman is only making a statement that he thinks to be so, but he has no proof. I have proof that they charge for the iron in its raw state and they charge for the work afterwards. I think it would help the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries considerably if he would adopt the plan of asking for tenders. It would relieve him of a lot of trouble.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is under an entire misapprehension. I said that tenders were asked for standard goods when a certain quantity was required at a certain point, but that there were articles for which we could not ask for tenders.

Mr. AVERY. Would the hon. minister say that he would ask for tenders from this out for whatever staple goods he required ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have always done it. It has been the custom of the department for years. I found the custom of the department to be that, and I proceeded in the same way this season when the time came to put the steamers into commission. I did that in Quebec. I had twenty tenders for groceries alone.

Mr. AVERY. Did the hon. minister advertise or send out circulars ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I sent out circulars.

Mr. AVERY. Would it not be better to advertise and give the merchants of the country a chance to tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is a question of calculation. In a place where you wanted $200 worth of goods would you pay a newspaper $100, or $150, or $200 for advertising ? If you think that is good policy I do not think it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the hon. minister inform the committee if he asked for tenders for zinc ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) is not serious when he asks that ? Zinc and magnolia belong to a class of articles that are entirely different from staple goods. You could never ask for tenders for them. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell me how tenders could be asked for them ? Could you say in advance that this vessal will require $500, or that vessel will require $300, or another vessel will require $100 worth of repairs to be made, and ask for tenders for these repairs?

It is impossible. No business man would do it in that way.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). There is no business man who would pay fifteen cents a pound for zinc.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are we to understand from the hon. minister that he has advertised for all the staple supplies he requires for all the steamers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not advertised. I have sent circulars to the trade.

Mr. TAYLOR. All the supplies for these government steamers, the flour, the sugar, and the coffee, ought to be purchased in bulk and divided between the different steamers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, that is what I did for the standard articles that we are in need of at every moment.

Mr. TAYLOR. What ports ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Montreal, Victoria.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister bring down the tenders he has asked for and the replies ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister says he has adopted this rule of advertising for tenders for all the standard staples, and he will bring down the tenders he received.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the different ports ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The statement I made last night with reference to the customs accounts rendered by Charleson was that nail pullers were bought at $1.50 each and locks at $125 a gross, and I said that I bought as good a nail puller as could be bought for our factory for $1. He says these locks are sent out to the ports, but he can get one of them back, and let him produce it and lay it on the Table, and I will venture the statement that any hardware man will declare that it is an outrageous price for it.

Mr. PARMELEE. Bring it up in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will

Mr. BLAIN. How much was expended on supplies for these boats last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $35,000 for provisions.

Mr. BLAIN. Out of that $35,000 how much was supplied by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Everything.

Mr. BLAIN. Everything ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Except a few items, may be. If a boat put into port and wanted fresh butter or potatoes, we would not ask for tenders and wait eight days to get the tenders in.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister takes issue with this side of the House, and answers our criticisms by saying that he has already adopted that policy.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course.

Mr. BLAIN. Now, what amount of this $35,000 was supplied under tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nobody could carry all the details of these small items in his head, but I will get them. I will lay the statement on the Table of the House with the schedules.

Mr. BLAIN. Would not this be a good time to have them ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the minister says he will bring it down, it is all right.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was there a tender for sugar at the port of Halifax last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by the deputy that there was.

Mr. TAYLOR. The lowest tender would be accepted for the supply of all the sugar at that port ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Did the minister receive a tender from Charles A. Parent, of Quebec ? At page P—12 of the Auditor General's Report I find the following charges made by him : 31 pounds of flax packing at 90 cents a pound, which should have cost about 35 cents ; 14 gallons of gasolene at 75 cents a gallon, which every hardware man knows retails at 35 cents ; 5 gallons of lavender paint at $2.50 a gallon, which costs from $1 to $1.10 a gallon. Probably the member for Kent (Mr. Stephens) can tell us whether this is perfumed or not.

Mr. STEPHENS. That paint costs $1.40.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). There is a charge for 15 gallons of terra cotta paint at $2.50 a gallon, which should cost the same as the light lavender, namely, from $1 to $1.10 a gallon. I find in this account also 891 pounds of zinc at 15 cents a pound.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That seems to be the current price.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). Yes, they seem to have a fixed price for this department. But I may inform the hon. minister that that gentleman had a profit of about $80 on that one item. If that is the case, you should have a different purchasing agent from the one you had last year. I could give you almost any item in connection with the purchase of supplies in the hardware line for that department, and show that it stands in about the same proportion. Prices are in most cases 100 per cent above the retail price. I think it would be well to have some change made in the system of purchasing these supplies. I would like to ask the hon. minister if tenders were asked?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, tenders were asked, and the accounts in Quebec are examined and passed by the agent there, Mr. Gregory, an employee of the department for the last forty years. If you put his honesty and capacity in doubt, it is a matter that will have to be looked into in the regular way, in the Public Accounts Committee. I would not take the accounts of the Auditor General. They are not the true accounts as rendered by the department. They are grouped in such a manner that they do not show the real price of the goods.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I have an account of another department, and the reason I refer to it is that the hon. minister says the Auditor General's Report is not correct.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not say it is not correct. I say it is not properly compiled.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). In this account of another department the prices charged are very much the same as those we have been referring to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not undertake to say that the Auditor General's accounts are not correct; but we say that the method of grouping a number of accounts together does not enable hon. gentlemen to form a fair opinion of the prices without knowing the quality of the article and the circumstances under which the goods are supplied. We had just such general charges made a year ago, as we had made to-night, and in every case when the matter was looked into, it was found that there was a satisfactory explanation, and I have no doubt it will be so in this case.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must say that I do not think the way in which the Minister of Finance has put the matter just now is quite fair to the criticism that has been offered from this side of the House. I can instance the case of sugar, in which there was no possible contention that the price was fair and reasonable, or that there were any conditions which should cause an increased price to be paid. Granulated sugar ought to be cheaper in the city of Quebec than in western Ontario; yet I know of my own knowledge that twelve months ago standard granulated sugar was sold in western Ontario, inland, where railway as well as water freight had to be paid, at four cents a pound, when the government was charged five cents and five and a half cents a pound at Quebec. The conditions were altogether in favour of the government purchasing as compared with others; and yet they were charged from 25 to 30 per cent more than a single barrel of sugar was sold for to the farmers in the country. I think the suggestion that has come from this side of the House ought to be adopted, that all these supplies ought to be purchased by public tender—not by circular but by public notice, so that every one would have an opportunity of tendering; and if in any instance two tenders were the same, let the government certainly give the patronage to their own friends.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the Minister of Finance, who desired to hear of any items, in respect to which criticism might be made, ought to be pretty well satisfied with some of those mentioned to-night, about which there seems to be no question on the one side or the other, on the part of gentlemen familiar with the prices. For instance, I have not heard any one claim that 15 cents is a fair price for zinc, and it cannot be said that that is a material on which any work was done. If there are any special conditions which affect the price of these articles, then in justice to the vendors themselves, the information ought to be brought down by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and furnished to the House at a later date. As to some of these items, we cannot have the slightest doubt that the price is very high. I do not know that you can attach much blame to these men, if the government are willing to pay the prices; they will put them pretty high if they can pass the officers. I do not say, in the absence of proof, that there is any wrong doing; but there is certainly material calling for some explanation. I do not ask that the item should stand; but I ask that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries shall bring down an explanation of these prices, if there is any.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am unable to agree with my hon. friend. The mere quoting of these prices from the Auditor General's Report, without any reference to the circumstances under which the goods were supplied, does not give us an intelligent view of the situation. I state that because that has been our experience in the past. Similar cases were brought before the House last year, they were looked into, the explanation was given, and the prices were found to be fair and reasonable; and I have no doubt, speaking generally, that if these prices were inquired into, they would be found to be in the main fair and reasonable. I would suggest to my hon. friend to take two or three of these items and let us investigate them before the Committee of Public Accounts, and if it can be shown that the prices are excessive we have the same interest as my hon. friend in seeing that we are not imposed upon, and will join them very cordially in putting an end to any fraudulent practices.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the hon. gentleman make standard granulated sugar one of the items.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Even in the case of sugar, I would prefer to know the circumstances under which the goods were ordered. I can imagine that if an order were given down in one of those ports to supply a certain quantity of goods and deliver them on board the ship, it might make a difference. I decline to form a judgment without the information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where you find a standard price of between five or six cents per pound, and the article charged at from twelve to sixteen cents per pound. I think that before we go to the Committee on Public Accounts, we should get an explanation from the department of the special conditions which warranted our paying such a price. Why cannot the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries see his officers and give an explanation to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt that in any case to which the attention of my hon. colleague is drawn, he will do his best to see that he is not imposed upon. I should think that my hon. friend's would desire to have an investigation, and if it be shown that any of these officials have certified that prices were fair and reasonable when they were not, it is high time that we made some change.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood from the hon. gentleman from Yarmouth that it was the captains of the vesels who made the purchases ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In some cases.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was rather surprised, but so understood him, and he spoke of the particular shrewdness of these men in making the purchases. As regards any one of these officials certifying to the fairness of the prices of all these supplies, it would be utterly impossible for one man to certify to the value of everything required on board a ship. He might be a good judge of groceries and know nothing about hardware. I would not accuse a man of making a false statement even if he did make a mistake, as it would be utterly impossible for him to be an expert in every article. No doubt he acted in good faith, but perhaps was misled.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I might add with regard to the observations of my hon. friend from Yarmouth, that we can quite understand what he means. If goods are ordered at Quebec, they are ordered by the purchasing agent of the government who is there, but if ordered at Yarmouth, where there is no purchasing agent, the captain will buy what he requires and be the judge of the prices.

Mr. THOMSON. (North Grey). Some of the purchases we complain of were made at Quebec.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is what we want to investigate.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey). I did not say that the captain is to blame nor the agent of the department, but it is the system that is wrong. A recommendation is made by the representative where these supplies are to be purchased, and the captain is compelled to purchase them at the price recommended, and at whatever price the merchant sees fit to charge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must take exception to the last part of the hon. gentleman's statement. It may be quite correct that the captain is directed to buy his supplies at a certain place, but it does not follow that he must pay whatever price is asked. He is only bound to buy at a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I understand that the supplies are asked for by means of circulars, but do all the merchants in certain towns get these, or are these circulars sent to only one or two ? In that case, it would be easy for the two merchants to combine and each charge his own price and divide up the order between them.

Tidal service, including the salary of an assistant clerk beyond $400 notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $22,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why this increase of $15,000. ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is to provide for the maintenance of the steamer 'Gulnare' which we require for the tidal service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is it necessary to have a steamer ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The work was not done satisfactorily. Representations were made by the shipping interest and there are reports by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper and Sir Louis Davies on the subject. I found that the British Admiralty had a boat doing tidal service, which was somewhat too small for ocean work. It was all fitted up for this particular work and could be bought very reasonably—something like $30,000. The inspector at Halifax reported that the work could not be satisfactorily done without a steamer, and the work was an urgent necessity to the shipping interest.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman say a few words about what the steamer does ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. She is in charge of Mr. Dawson and staff, and takes the current and the soundings in different parts, the facts being made the basis for a chart which is reported to the admiralty office and furnished to those interested in shipping. The work has been heartily endorsed by those interested.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This does not mean that the service will be increased annually by $15,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. There is no additional cost except the maintenance of the steamer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is that $15,000 a year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How does the minister explain an increase of $15,000 for the maintenance ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have the steamer and we must maintain it. Other steamers cost about $30,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. minister give some details ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are the wages of the crew, provisions, fuel, and the rest.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the crew ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The salaries will be $2,400, and so on.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is not enough. What are the other items ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Say fuel, about $3,000, provisions about $2,000—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is, if you buy them by circular ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know how else they could be bought. Then you have ship-chandlery, docking, miscellaneous, making up about $15,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is a pretty big 'miscellaneous.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Well, you have ship-chandlery say $1,000; docking say, $500; coal oil say, $20; miscellaneous say, $1,400. And then there are repairs.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That makes about $10,000 altogether. The hon. minister is only about $5,000 out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This seems a pretty large sum for the maintenance of a thirty thousand dollar steamer. But this is an important work in which Mr. Dawson is engaged, and any reasonable expenditure would be generally approved. But this seems a very considerable amount considering the size of the steamer and the amount for which she was purchased.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was not present when the item was called. May I ask if this will be a permanent service ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We cannot promise. It will be maintained as long as the department thinks it useful.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is to be gained by this service ? What is really the purport of it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The best way to explain it is to read what Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper said on the subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. I heard that years ago.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have nothing more. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) had better read it and refresh his memory.

Salaries and expenses of cattle inspection, $3,300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase here of $500.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is for an inspector at St. John, New Brunswick.

Unforeseen expenses generally, $5,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I was not here for a time, and would like to ask as to the investigation into wrecks. For instance, would the expense of an investigation into such a case as that of the 'Campana' grounding, come out of this item ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has any investigation taken place in reference to the grounding of the 'Campana ?'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that she was got off without damage and no investigation was asked.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But if the hon. minister would allow me, I think this is a case of pretty large importance. Here is a boat drawing eighteen feet that grounds although the channel has a depth of between thirty-two and thirty-three feet. Evidently there is something wrong.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Harbour Commissioners in Montreal are perfectly satisfied with the explanation of the pilot. He mistook the light of a barge that was standing at a certain point for the light of the channel and so he went aground. He was out of the channel at the time. The Harbour Commissioners thought it unnecessary to spend money to investigate a fact that was admitted particularly when there was no damage.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think that this is a case that deserves attention, and I will tell the hon. minister why. There was a steamer anchored in the middle of the channel as the 'Campana' was coming up. The pilot mistook the light on that steamer for a light on shore, as the hon. minister has said. That is the best evidence that the light on shore is not what it should be. Instead of it being a fixed light it should be a revolving light, that no mistake may be possible. I believe that a small private yacht grounded near the same place for the same reason. So, I believe there is ground for an investigation and for a change in regard to these lights.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have arranged to provide the lights suggested by the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte). They have not been installed—have not arrived yet. But they will be here within the next thirty days.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Very well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is now two o'clock, and I suppose we shall not take up another item at this hour.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is willing to reserve any item that any hon. gentleman may wish to have reserved. I hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will agree that we have not made much progress and we might make a little more advance before we retire.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have been discussing matters of a good deal of importance, and going over the Auditor General's Report. I think we have done enough for to-night.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are two or three items on which there will be no discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think the hon. gentleman will gain anything by going on. It is now 2 o'clock. Of course, we have just as much endurance as our hon. friends have.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should think my hon. friend ought to have, because he has not given us the pleasure of company for much of the evening.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, I will now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We might skip the item 175, and pass the other items.

Magnetic Observatory, $2,700 ; meteorological service, $82,803 ; hydrographic surveys, $35,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Where are those stations ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The magnetic observatory is at a village near Toronto.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Where have the hydrographic surveys been made this year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On Lake Winnipeg and Lake Superior, for the present.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who has charge of those surveys ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stewart. The captain is Mr. Zealand, a new appointment, who comes from St. Catharines.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the cause of this increase of $850 in the meteorological service ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is caused by increases of salaries to different officers on the survey.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Have you had any maps made of the surveys ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Hon. Mr TARTE. I have not seen any maps of the lakes prepared by the Ottawa government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. While I was in the department, the surveys made under the direction of Mr. Stewart were sent to the Admiralty in England, they were approved of and the letters returning them highly commended the work of the Canadian officers. The maps are printed and distributed, and include the work done by Mr. Stewart up to last fall.

Mr. TAYLOR. By whom are they distributed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are sold. They are distributed by the British Admiralty.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am asking the question because I know that on the lakes nearly all the maps employed are American maps. I have not seen any Canadian maps of the lakes. These maps do not seem to be procurable anywhere. For the trip I took last year I was obliged to buy American maps.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is to remedy this state of affairs that this department is being organized thoroughly.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am just informed that there are Canadian maps, but I have not seen them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will distribute some to the members of the House.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The American maps are very fine. They are among the best in the world, but if we can do as good work as they do we will not have much to complain of. We have no survey of the harbours and ports on the lakes. In past years the Department of Public Works and the Department of Marine and Fisheries were each of them doing their own work. If the Department of Marine and Fisheries takes over this work there is no objection, I suppose, but I call the hon. minister's attention to this deficiency.

Mr. HENDERSON. My recollection is that last year we were having a survey made of Lake Erie. I would like to ask the hon. minister if that is completed, and if it has been filed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that there is no survey of Lake Erie, but that the survey of Lake Huron has been completed.

Steamboat inspection, $30,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase of $1,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is for increases of salaries.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who has charge of the service now ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Adams is chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspection.

Mr. POPE. Have there been any new duties imposed upon these officers to warrant these increases ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The salaries were very low.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business may we expect to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) is not present, but I understand that he proposes to proceed with his Bill in regard to the railway commission, and if there is time we will take up one or two other Bills on the Order paper, as to which some progress may be made, if not supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.15 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 5, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Prime Minister when the terms of the Treadgold Commission will be laid on the Table. I rather gathered the right hon. gentleman's assent to the view that the terms of the commission might be brought down pending the appointment of some commissioner or some commissioners.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think they will be brought down probably during the present sitting.

THE TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). When will the terms of the Transportation Commission be brought down ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). The Order in Council appointing the Transportation Commission was laid on the Table a week ago, and it contains all the information that is at present to be had.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not aware of that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Laid on the Table in blank ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No; a complete copy.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Trade and Commerce said he would have an announcement to make to the House to-day with regard to the fast Atlantic service.

The PRIME MINISTER. Two tenders have been received, and they will be laid on the Table of the House during the present sitting.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and Consolidate the Laws respecting Railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 122,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I think we can improve this section by striking out the word 'lots' on line 41 and substituting the words 'portion of land proposed to be taken on each lot,' and by substituting the word 'board' for the word 'minister.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I have no objection to that, but I call the attention of the minister to this: Section 123 of the present law provides that the company shall make this plan in sections if it so desires. It works out this way: A railway going through several counties makes its plans in sections and goes on with the work in one county even before they may have their lots registered in the counties further on. If the plan is not made in sections this could not be done, and disputes might arise. Does the minister think that the law at present would allow them to proceed with the whole plan or with only one part of it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would, and that is one of the things we want to remedy. They could lay their plan on a particular section and we approve of it, whereas if we saw the whole plan we might not allow it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand the section to mean that prima facie the company are to make a plan or profile of the whole railway, and that the minister intends that they shall not proceed with any part of the railway until the whole plan is before the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They may be required to make the plans in section.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On subsection 2 of section 130,

Nothing in this section shall be taken to authorize any extension of the railway beyond the termini mentioned in the special Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to amend this subsection by commencing with the following words:

The board may, either by general regulation or in any particular case, exempt the company from submitting a plan, profile and book of reference as in this section provided, where such deviation, change or alteration is made or to be made for the purpose of lessening a curve, reducing a gradient, or otherwise benefiting the railway, or for any other purpose of public advantage as may seem to the board expedient, provided such deviation, change or alteration shall not exceed three hundred feet from the centre line of the railway located or constructed in accordance with the plans, profiles and books of reference deposited with the board under this Act.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand this to be a proposal that in case the company desire to reduce a curve or lessen a gradient all the procedure that is ordinarily applied shall not apply. I can see that there may be good reason for that proposal. But at the same time there may be a very good reason for opposing it. It is not advisable, of course, to hamper railway companies too much, but it appears to me that the right of the adjoining owners might be very seriously jeopardized by that line of procedure. I do not know whether I am right in assuming that under the ordinary procedure the owner of the adjoining land would be notified. At all events, I presume, if not notified in the ordinary sense, yet there will be registration which will be notice to him, and in this case I presume the whole matter might be carried through without the land owner having any means of raising an objection before the board. I will submit to the hon. minister that this is probably a dangerous change to make in the law. I can understand very well what the hon. minister has in view, which is very commendable in the broad sense, but yet I am inclined to think that it is likely to introduce a greater evil than will be compensated by any advantage that will result from the alteration of the law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subject, I am free to admit, occasioned a good deal of consideration before I finally came to a conclusion, but I thought it would be as well that this change should be made. I was strengthened in coming to that conclusion by having my attention called to the English Act. It has been for some time on the statute-book in Great Britain and provides for a possible deviation under these conditions of a hundred yards. One can understand that while you are engaged in the actual construction of a railway thousands of miles away, as in this country, the necessity of having your whole plan recast and of making an application for sanction for a deviaton of a trifling distance, perhaps two or three feet, would be a very serious inconvenience and we could scarcely imagine that there could be any disadvantage which would justify us in refusing to allow such a deviation to be made. The adjoining owner whose lands may be encroached upon or taken for this deviation has precisely the same rights and the same proceedings would be required to be taken as in the expropriation in the first instance, so that, he would not be subjected to any disadvantage at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am inclined to think that the hon. gentleman for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is correct in his objection. The hon. minister does well enough to state that these things may be required to be done for the reasons which he has given when looking at it from the railway point of view, but I have not heard the hon. minister say yet whether the convenience of the public should not be considered a little more in this matter. If the law remains as it is without this amendment I understand the difference would be that the owners of property where land was going to be taken, by going to the registry office, would ascertain exactly where the lands were that were going to be taken. Let me put a case like this to the hon. minister: Knowing where the lands were which were going to be taken by the railway by the plan filed and by making a little inquiry about it a man who was undertaking to improve his property would put buildings and other structures in one place that he otherwise would put in another place, probably some 300 yards away from where the railway was to go according to the plans filed. It will be said that if this deviation is made he will be compensated in damages by the arbitrators for the lands taken and the damage done to his buildings, but no damages in money that a man gets fully compensates him in many cases. The arbitrators have to do their best to see that he does not get too much or too little as far as money can compensate him, but if a man puts his property in shape for permanent living and he has to take the market value in money for damages done to it, such money damages do not compensate it. It is not well that such a state of affairs should be brought about, because, if he has to give up his property, he must necessarily be obliged to take money for the damage done it. The mischief I see is that a man does not know where the railway is going. He has no notice of this deviation. This subsection would take away the necessity of this deviation being registered, as I understand it. I understand it gives the board power to allow any deviation without all these preliminaries being gone through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only formality that is not required to be gone through is that the whole location is not required to be shown on plans and profiles as is required to be done in the case of the original location. The law as it stands now gives the Railway Committee of the Privy Council power to allow a deviation to be made.

Mr. LANCASTER. But only to the extent of 300 feet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is unlimited.

Mr. LANCASTER. But there must be a refiling of the plans.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they have to refile their plans. They could not go upon another man's land and take land from him without going through the same formality that is necessary in order to expropriate as far as registration is concerned.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the refiling of the plans is what they get away from.

Mr. LENNOX. I would ask the hon. minister if what is aimed at by the proposed amendment is to prevent the railway company from having to apply to the board for permission to make an alteration in the plans ? In other respects they will have to go through the ordinary formalities of the Act. They will have to register the deviation in the registry office the same as in any other case. Am I right in understanding it in that way ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is right.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 131,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does that amend the old Act in any particular ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We simply embody in this one section what previously had been contained in two, without making any alteration in the principle.

On section 132,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to amend that section by striking out the words 'or build' and substituting the words 'the line of,' and to insert after the word 'thereof' the words 'nor construct the same nor any portion thereof.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 132, subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that clause retroactive in any respect with regard to lands already owned by railways ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see how it could affect anything that has been done.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It might affect lands that were granted, but for which patents have not been issued.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It could not affect any one's right prior to the passing of this Act.

On section 133,

1. No owner, lessee or occupier of any such mines or minerals lying under the railway or any of the works connected therewith, or within forty yards therefrom, shall work the same until leave therefor has been first obtained from the board.

2. Upon any application to the board for leave to work any such mine or minerals, the applicant shall submit a plan and profile of the portion of the railway to be affected thereby, and of the mining works or plant proposed to be constructed or operated, affecting the railway, giving all reasonable and necessary information and details as to the extent and character of the same.

3 The board may grant such applications upon such terms and conditions, as to protection and safety of the public, as to the board seem expedient, and may order that such other works be executed, or measures taken, as under the circumstances appear to the board best adapted to remove or diminish the danger arising, or likely to arise, from such mining operations.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely this must mean within forty yards of the track. If not, miners would be prevented from working their mines within forty yards of any railway station or railway line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is as well to keep on the safe side.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this provision in any other railway Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is taken from the English Act.

Mr. LENNOX. I think this section is liable not to work very satisfactorily. I think that to provide that a mine must not be operated within forty yards of a railway property, is limiting the rights of the mine-owner too much. There must, of course, be reasonable regard paid to the safety of the travelling public and the safety of the railway property; but it does not appear to me that in any case forty yards from a railway property as distinct from a railway track is required for that purpose. I understand the minister to say that this is a new section. It is new, at all events, as far as Canada is concerned. It is true that the rights of the mine-owner are protected to some extent by providing that he may make an application to the board ; but that is a matter of delay and expense, and will not always, I suppose, work satisfactorily. I think that this section, if passed at all, ought to be narrowed down to some extent. I think there is a greater measure of protection afforded to the railway company here than is necessary.

Section agreed to.

On section 134,

No company shall take possession of, use or occupy any lands vested in His Majesty, without the consent of the Governor in Council ; but with such consent, any such company may, upon such terms as the Governor in Council prescribes, take and appropriate, for the use of its railway and works, but not alienate, so much of the lands of the Crown lying on the route of the railway as have not been granted or sold, and as is necessary for such railway, as also so much of the public beach, or of land so vested covered with the waters of any lake, river or stream, or of their respective beds, as is necessary for making and completing and using its said railway and works ; and whenever any such lands are vested in His Majesty for any special purpose, or subject to any trust, the compensation money which the company pays therefor shall be held or applied by the Governor in Council for the like purpose or trust. 51 V., c. 29, s. 99. Am.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You have changed some portions of this section. What is the object of inserting the words 'so vested' ? Then, you have struck out the word 'canal,' so that a railway cannot go over a canal now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It refers to lands vested in His Majesty.

Mr. LENNOX. This, I presume, is very much in line with the old Act, and probably it has been carefully considered by the minister ; but it is dealing with an exceptionally important subject, that of rivers and streams cut off, perhaps, by a railway running along their edge. That, I presume, would be considered by the board when the application came before them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Governor in Council controls the whole thing.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood that the question of location was to be laid before the board ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is right.

Mr. LENNOX. That is one of the points to be considered, if the public interest is to determine the location.

Mr. LANCASTER. This would allow a railway to cross a canal. The old Act would not.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is the same thing, only it is put the other way.

Mr. LANCASTER. I see that this clause provides that with the authority of the Governor in Council a company may appropriate, for the use of its railway and works, but not alienate, so much of the lands of the Crown lying on the route of the railway as have not been granted or sold, and as is necessary for such railway, as also so much of the public beach or lands so vested, covered with the waters of any lake, river or stream——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Formerly 'canal' was included. We struck that out.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How are you to cross a canal if the Governor in Council has not been given power to consent ?

Mr. LANCASTER. That is what I was about to point out. If we cannot cross a canal, should we not amend this so that we may do so on some terms or other. In my locality, the Grand Trunk Railway intends building across the new Welland canal an overhead bridge, where the locks are very close. Where is the authority to come from to do that ? There ought to be some provision to allow railways to cross canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not interpret this clause as preventing the Governor in Council from giving a railway company permission to cross a canal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is not that implied ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so. When parliament gives a charter to a railway to pass between the two points, that gives it the right to pass over everything between those points, and section 181 provides how a railway may pass over a canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As the canals are specially struck out from this clause there is evidently need of a further clause to empower a railway to cross a canal. If a railway company came to a canal, and the department or the government have not the power to allow it to build across the canal, the only possible way that power could be got would be by Act of parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Parliament gives a charter for the construction of a railway between two different points, and there is a canal between those two points, parliament has conferred on the company the right to cross the canal, and section 181 provides for the regulation by the board of such crossing.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When parliament gives power to construct a railway between two points, it does not give power to pass over a single particle of Crown lands of any description. Provision is made in this Bill by which the Governor in Council may give the company permission to pass over these Crown lands and navigable streams, but there is none giving power to cross a canal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Take the case of a road which runs alongside a canal and has to build a spur across a canal, will you have to get a special Act to allow it to cross the canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. Under its charter, it may build between certain points and then build six mile branches wherever the Governor in Council may approve.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the company have power without a special Act to cross a canal under those circumstances ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would have the power to cross without a special Act as they have to cross with a special Act, because the General Act is sufficiently comprehensive.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the position is peculiar. No doubt the hon. minister grasps it, but I want to make sure. Until to-day they have had the power under the General Railway Act. But now we are passing an Act which repeals that. It does not affect the works already constructed, but it repeals their rights for the future.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This section is intended merely to give the Governor in Council power to vest certain lands and property in the company. Among other things, the Governor in Council had the right under the old law to vest a canal in the company. If a company were chartered to build a road from point A to point B, they might get the right to pass over all the lands intervening and, if they came to a highway or canal, the Act of parliament which is their charter might give them the right to pass over it. This clause, as I understand it, is merely for the purpose of regulating the mode of user of the rights conferred by the charter. These rights are always subject to the limitations of this Act. So, the effect of the amendment is merely to take from the Governor in Council the right to vest in a railway company any portion of a canal. That is all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should hardly have supposed that the Minister of Justice would go as far as he has gone. If you give a company the right to build a railway from point A to point B, they cannot build except upon their own land. They must have the power to expropriate.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The same consideration applies to any argument with regard to this. You may say that a railway has power to build between two points. But if there is a canal or a highway intervening, they must get power to cross it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They get that power under another section.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not examined the section, but I thought the Minister of Justice went further than I would be prepared to go. It appears that we have the same ideas with regard to the matter. The power to expropriate private lands must be given by the statute if it is given at all, and the same with regard to the power to cross a highway or canal. Do we find it in the statute ? I did not quite observe whether the hon. minister thought it was to be found in this section.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This section confers upon the Governor in Council the right to do a certain thing. Under the old statute, section 99, the right was vested in the Governor in Council to make a conveyance of land in a canal to the company. This takes away from the Governor in Council that power. But when we come to deal with the question of crossing a canal, section 181 provides the method.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How can they get over without owning the land ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They do not.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not intended that they should.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But they cannot construct a bridge, or pier or perhaps an abutment in the stream without owing the property.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But they do not own the bed of the canal.

Mr. INGRAM. I have been trying to bring a possible case before my mind. Take, for instance, a harbour. A railway company has the right to build a line of railway down to the harbour and alongside the piers for its own purposes, and has built the road. But an afterthought strikes them, and they want to cross a river or canal running into the harbour. Would the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) say that this would give the company the right to do that—to build on both sides of the harbour and monopolize it to the detriment of other railway companies that wished to go there? And would the government be justified in spending large sums of money to improve the harbour and then give a railway company a monopoly of that harbour? Surely that is not it. Would they have the power to do that? Where would they get the power to do that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would have to get it from parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no question about that? They would have to come to parliament to get that charter or authority. They could not get it under this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. I would like to call the attention of the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) to the Railway Act, section 99. It provides as follows:

No company shall take possession of, use or occupy any lands vested in Her Majesty, without the consent of the Governor in Council; but with such consent, any such company may, upon such terms as the Governor in Council prescribes, take and appropriate for the use of its railway and works, but not alienate, so much of the lands of the Crown lying on the route of the railway as have not been granted or sold, and as is necessary for such railway, as also much of the public beach, or of the land covered with the waters of the lake, river, stream or canal, or of their respective beds, as is necessary.

And so on. It might be claimed under that section that the Governor in Council could actually give a title to land over which the waters of a canal were flowing—the bed of the canal. Now, that is not a power, it appears to me, that can properly be given. Therefore, it seems desirable that we should strike out the word 'canal,' and, in doing so, we are only, as I interpret the Act, divesting the Governor in Council of power to give a title to the bed of a canal. Taking the different sections, you confer the right to a railway to cross a canal through the air on a bridge, but you do not confer upon them the slightest title in the bed or waters of the canal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think I understand the case of the Minister of Railways and Canals in so far as his discussion of the policy is concerned. He thinks it inexpedient that the government should have power to alienate the bed of a canal for the purposes of a railway company. As a statement of policy I would be disposed to agree. But, under sections 134 and those following, you have provision made for the right of way. The first thing you deal with in the section before the committee is the right of way of property of the Crown. In section 137 you deal with the right of way over lands of other companies. Then, you deal with the power to take the lands of private owners. Is not that the scheme?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, except that—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The only point in controversy between the Minister of Railways and Canals, the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster), so far as I can see is this: Whether or not, in striking out the word 'canal' and thereby taking away from the company, even with the consent of the Governor in Council, the power to invest itself with the bed of a canal, you have not gone too far and taken from the company the power to get across the canal at all. That is the only question, and it is a question largely for the hon. minister. We have pointed out the difficulty, and it could be remedied by a few words.

On section 137, subsection 2.

Such approval may be given upon application and notice, and after hearing, the board may make such order, give such directions, and impose such conditions or duties upon either party, as to it may appear just or desirable in the public interest; and in case the parties fail to agree as to compensation, the board may, by order, fix the amount of compensation to be paid in respect of the powers and priviledges so granted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to strike out the words 'in the public interest' and to substitute 'having due regard for all proper interests.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest to say instead 'having due regard for the public and all proper interests.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect? Just as it may appear desirable in the public interest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To make such orders as may be considered in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If there are other interests to consider than those of the two railway companies, then the board steps in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly. I wish to go back to the interpretation clause and to amend sub-clause f, by inserting after the words 'Superior Court' the words 'or county court.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 141—power to take or use lands for ballast pits, water, and materials, and for right of way to same.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the minister why he takes away the precaution of having a certificated land surveyor make the plan and description. We have always found that desirable in order to secure accuracy of description. It is very difficult to know where lines go without a perfect description. It sometimes depends on where a line runs, within a foot or two, whether a man accepts an offer or not. I think it would be well to have in the Bill the words that were in the old Act, providing that the plan and the description shall be made by a licensed provincial or Dominion land surveyor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to incorporate that in the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER moved to amend the section by inserting after the word 'thereof' in the thirty-fourth line, the words 'cause a land surveyor duly licensed to act as such in the province or an engineer to,' and after the word 'respectively' in the thirty-eighth line, the words 'and duly certified by such surveyor or engineer.'

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 144—authority to certain persons to sell and convey lands to the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This section has the expression 'femes-covert.' That should be amended, Mr. Chairman, by doubling the 'm' making it 'femmes-covert.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that as it is in the Bill is the proper way of expelling the old legal word.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it not be better to use the word 'married women,' for that is what the expression means.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It means a woman under the authority of her husband.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With us, 'femecovert' means a woman during the period of her marriage. In the old law French, I think there is only one 'm,' though there are two in the modern French word.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is evidently not modern French, for then it would be 'couvert,' not 'covert.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is the old Norman-French expression.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Better leave it as it is.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 112) to incorporate the Canada Industrials Corporation, Limited. — Mr. Thompson.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 189) to incorporate the Canadian Telephone and Telegraph Company.—Mr. Birkett.

Bill (No. 191, from the Senate) to incorporate the Home Bank of Canada.—Mr. Russell.

Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboine river water power.—Mr. Puttee.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

On the Order being called for—— House in Committee on Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has given notice of an amendment to this Bill, and he is not in his place to-night. There are very few members in the House, and as this is a very important Bill I think this should be allowed to stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I notice that the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is not present, and as nobody is authorized to take it up, I think it ought to stand.

Mr. BELL moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Marine Department—salaries and allowances to light keepers, $238,000.

Mr. BELL. There is an increase here, and no doubt the minister will explain it. I think the hon. minister should give some explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have to provide for salaries of light keepers for lights now under construction, including Pelee and Belle Isle. Those two will cost something over $2,000. There are others for which salaries will have to be provided.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where are the other lights being constructed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Here is a statement of the new lights and increased expense of old lights, owing to improved machinery, for 1903-4 :

Above Montreal—

Middle Ground, Cape Croker, Little Gros Cap, Otter Head, Port Colborne, Point Edward. 'Scout' (including twenty-six gas buoys, new). Saugeen, Slate Island, Point Aux Pins, Collingwood Harbour, False Ducks.

Quebec—

Isle la Aigle, Belle Isle, Father Point, Isle Marie, Fame Point, Varennes, Port Daniel, Contrecour, St. Antoine, Barachois, Point Echourie, Matane, Anticosti Lightships, Vercheres.

New Brunswick—

Buctouche, Caraquet Range, Cape Split.

Nova Scotia—

Port Felix, Duffus River, Wolfville, Canning River, Louisburg, Port Hood, Low Point, Bourgeois Inlet, Cape de la Ronde, North Sydney Bar, Port Beckerton, Digby Pier Light.

British Columbia—

Portier Pass, Dock Island, Mouth Fraser River, two lights, Coffin Island, Danger Reef.

Prince Edward Island—

Wood Islands.

Mr. CLARKE. It is to be regretted that the hon. minister did not take the opportunity last night of making a fuller statement of his policy with respect to the improvement of the St. Lawrence. Last year the navigation of that river was very unsatisfactory. When the first item was being considered last night, I took the liberty of drawing attention to the unfavourable comments in the London 'Times' on the condition of the St. Lawrence. I understand that the hon. gentleman's predecessor in office appointed Captain Spain to investigate into and report upon the causes of the accidents on that river. In a matter of so much importance, we might have expected that the hon. gentleman would have laid Captain Spain's report on the Table and give some information as to the findings of the commissioner and the recommendations made by him. I notice in the London 'Times' of November 28, a particular reference, under the heading of 'The Lloyd's and Marine Insurance Companies,' to the conditions of navigation in the St. Lawrence. In another issue of that paper, the statement is made that the insurance rates on vessels navigating the St. Lawrence are double those of vessels sailing to New York, Boston and Portland. This is a condition of things eminently unsatisfactory, and I am sure that the committee will support the hon. minister by voting any reasonable sum necessary to remedy it. In the 'Times' of November 28 last, this statement appeared :

The latter part of the St. Lawrence season has hitherto been regarded as the best for navigation so long as the water was free from ice, but this year has been exceptionally unfortunate. The steamers, 'Loango,' 'Bengore Head,' and now the Allan liner 'Sicilian' have been aground this month; and the important strandings during the season amount to eleven. This number is considerably in excess of the average for recent years. One good feature, however, has been the absence this year of total losses. The 'Sicilian' has put back to Quebec, and will be repaired with all speed in order to get away before the navigation ceases. The number of recent casualties has caused the dock and repairing resources of the St. Lawrence ports to be severely strained. The 'Iberian,' which went ashore last month, the 'Bengore Head,' and the 'Sicilian,' all boats in the regular trade, are being repaired against time, and apart from the risk they run of being detained all the winter by ice; the cause of repairs executed in such an urgent manner must be a much greater burden upon underwriters than would be the case if more time was available. The Allan Line, as the oldest company in the St. Lawrence trade, has been granted specially favourable terms by underwriters; but the line has not of late been blessed by good fortune, and doubts are expressed as to the adequacy of the rates which have been charged.

These rates are alleged to have been during last season of navigation double those charged to vessels sailing to New York and Boston :

The 'Sicilian,' which is of 6,125 gross tonnage and was built in 1899, is valued at £68,000, of which the owners hold a considerable line themselves. The light at Bellechasse, where the 'Sicilian' grounded, is being made occulting under the Canadian government's scheme for improving the St. Lawrence.

We ought to be able to get this information from the responsible head of our own department, and not have to obtain it from papers printed on the other side of the Atlantic. There is also in the 'Times'' issue of December 12, a further reference to this matter, under the heading of 'The Canadian Shipping Question' :

The St. Lawrence season which has just closed has been an unfavourable one as regards the number of casualties to large steamers, but, thanks to the improvement in salvage appliances, the season has passed without a total loss. The number of strandings recorded is eleven, against five in 1901, when also there were no total losses. In 1900, on the other hand, out of five casualties four were total losses; in 1899, one casualty was total out of four, and in 1898, three total losses occurred among five strandings. The feature of the past season was the four casualties during the last six weeks of open water, and the race to get out on the part of the damaged vessels. 'Bengore Head' and 'Sicilian' succeeded in being patched up in time to get away, but the 'Iberian' will have to remain at Quebec all the winter. The new Canadian Minister of Marine has been inspecting the St. Lawrence himself recently, and is reported to have expressed the intention to have the river so lighted and buoyed as to make navigation as safe by night as by day. Much can, no doubt, be done in this direction, and it is better business for Canadian ministers to face the dangers of their great river and endeavour to lessen them than simply to abuse underwriters for charging high insurance premiums.

In my opinion the advice is sound, and the head of the Department of Marine and Fisheries ought to follow it. He ought to take the committee into his confidence and let us know what he proposes doing so as to make the St. Lawrence navigable by night as well as by day. Appended to this article is a list of the vessels damaged by running ashore during the season of navigation, from June 1 to December 8, 1902. It is a very unsatisfactory record. The ships damaged were :

'Sahara,' 'Indiana,' 'Monteagle,' 'Kildona,' 'Manchester Importer,' 'Numidian,' 'Manchester Engineer,' 'Iberian,' 'Loango,' 'Bengore Head,' 'Sicilian.'

That is rather a ghastly showing of vessels which have come to grief in the river. The first vessel entering the gulf this season also came to grief.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The second.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the prejudice which seems to exist in certain quarters, in view of the discrimination in insurances, the committee are entitled to much fuller information than we have yet received as to what the intentions of the government are. There is a condition of things existing which ought not to be allowed to continue any longer. I could implement the citations I have given by many more statements of a similar character, which have appeared during the last six months on the condition of the St. Lawrence in the English newspapers. I hope that the hon. minister will give us more information as to what work he proposes carrying out to improve navigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall have much pleasure in furnishing all the necessary information to the committee. But it must be borne in mind that early in the session there was laid on the Table the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries of last year. This voluminous report goes into all the details connected with the improvements suggested in the way of aids to navigation That report can be consulted by hon. members.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that contain the finding of that commissioner appointed by the hon. gentleman's predecessor ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. CLARKE. I mean the report of Captain Spain, who was appointed to inquire into the causes of the accidents last year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was coming to that. I was a member of a delegation from the board of trade, the Harbour Commissioners, the Corn Exchange and the shipping interests, which waited on the government and made very strong representations to the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies. A very long discussion then took place, at which the representatives of the underwriters were present. We went over the whole ground, and it was decided to proceed as rapidly as possible with the improvements of the St. Lawrence route, both above and below Quebec, and from Montreal to the great lakes.

Mr. CLARKE. What do you contemplate doing during the coming season ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have just read the list of the lights that are under construction in 1903. The fact that these aids were installed during 1902 and are being added to this year has already had the effect of inspiring more confidence in the underwriters. Hon. members know that the Canadian Pacific Railway have been enabled to secure insurance of their fleet at a very considerable reduction on former rates. It is argued, of course, that the Canadian Pacific administration enjoy so much the confidence of the underwriters that, even if the improvements to navigation were not what they should be, they would receive the reduction. As a matter of fact, it is well established now that these improvements having been made, they have made the St. Lawrence route a great deal safer than it was before.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. minister know whether the Canadian Pacific Railway are going to have their steamers brought in and out of the St. Lawrence by the same system of pilotage that exists at the present time ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The law provides that certain regulations shall be followed, and I think they cannot do otherwise. But the fact is that the six wrecks that took place early in 1902 were fully investigated, and we have in the department a full report—a very voluminous report—on each and every one, made by Captain Spain, aided by experts. That report is to the effect that not one of these accidents was due to want of aid or improvement in the channel.

Mr. CLARKE. To what were they attributed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To fault of the pilots or carelessness of the captains.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not that document of sufficient importance to justify the hon. minister in having it printed and distributed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was my intention to have that document printed and distributed. It is of great importance.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a pity it was not distributed before the estimates were considered. The hon. gentleman made some improvements in Belle Isle light. But I see, in the 'Times,' from which I have taken some extracts, certain extraordinary statements with regard to the location of that light and the difficulty navigators have in picking it up. I can send the hon. gentleman the statement. We should have Captain Spain's report before us, that we may have the benefit of his conclusions. It would be better that one of these items stand, then have that document printed and circulated so that we may discuss the items intelligently. Notwithstanding these improvements that the hon. gentleman and his predecessors have made in the navigation of the St. Lawrence, I find in the Montreal 'Herald' of to-day the following :

Quebec, June 5.—The Norwegian steamer Trohector, 3,400 tons register, went on the rocks yesterday at the mouth of the Saguenay, and lies firm in her position, with two fore compartments full of water.

Navigation has been opened for only about six weeks, yet in that short time we have had two accidents. I think the importance of the subject and the necessity of our knowing—if we are to discuss these estimates intelligently—where we stand, justify us in asking for all the information necessary on this subject. The hon. gentleman has not yet given us all the information we have a right to expect with regard to his plan, and it seems to me dereliction that Captain Spain's report has not been presented to the House before now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) does not think that I should bring here all the documents in the department concerning this question. There are volumes of these papers. If there is any particular information the hon. gentleman requires, I am ready to furnish it, and furnish it in the shortest possible time. But it surely is not fair to ask me to be ready with all these documents particularly when I am ready to give all the information and have promised that the documents that he refers to shall be printed and distributed to the members of the House.

Mr. CLARKE. I drew the attention of the committee to the fact that the hon. minister's predecessor was so impressed—as I presume—with the importance of obtaining information with regard to the unusual number of disasters last year that he appointed Captain Spain to inquire into the subject and report. I think we cannot intelligently discuss items for the improvement of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, we cannot intelligently vote sums of money to be spent on improvements during the next twelve months, unless we have that report before us. We do not know what the recommendations are, what the causes of danger are, how these accidents might have been avoided or what steps the minister intends to take to avoid such accidents in the future. As the hon. minister has not seen fit to print and distribute that document among the members of the House, we have a right to expect a pretty full digest, in the form of a speech, of the contents of that report. Of course, we do not expect the hon. gentleman to have these reports all piled up about him, but we do expect that, when he asks votes for such a large expenditure, he will give us full information as to how and where the money is to be expended and what he hopes to accomplish by the expenditure of it. These requests are reasonable and we cannot discuss these matters intelligently without that information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The information in the department is what I have already stated to the hon. gentleman—that not one of these wrecks that took place last year was due to the faults of the route. That is the effect of Captain Spain's report. I have told him also that I am ready to have this report printed and distributed. But it seems to me that that should be perfectly satisfactory. Now, as regards what has been recommended by the committee of Lloyds there is a large correspondence in the department, beginning in the month of September. There are suggestions made by Captains Wm. Owen, Stewart, Webster, Williams, Murray and Sheldrake for the improvement of the navigation of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these the recommendations of Lloyd's agents ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are the recommendations made by a certain number of captains who were chosen specially to submit recommendations ; but they coincided entirely with what the agents of Lloyd's recommended.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it the department that asked these captains to make recommendations ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, they volunteered, at the request of the shipping interest to make suggestions. The department was very glad to receive these suggestions as a means of assisting in our work for the improvement of the St. Lawrence channel.

Mr. CLARKE. Were the recommendations of Lloyd's agents and the captains——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were perfectly in harmony.

Mr. CLARKE. Did the officers of the department consult with them on what they recommended ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will read the report :

Lloyd's, September 24, 1902.

To the Honourable James Sutherland,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Canada.

Sir,—I am directed by the committee of Lloyd's to inform you that the committee and several underwriters at Lloyd's interested in the trade with Canada received, with much pleasure, the visit of the Hon. Sir W. Mulock, Postmaster General of Canada, and the Hon. W. S. Fielding, Canadian Minister of Finance, and heard with great interest the remarks those gentlemen addressed to the meeting which was held here on the 31st July. For your information, I beg to forward herewith a copy of the report of that meeting.

It was clearly pointed out at this meeting that the committee of Lloyd's in their official capacity have no control over the rates of insurance charged by underwriters and that these rates are governed by the ordinary laws of competition. This competition is constant, and effectually prevents any premium permanently rising above the point required for the risks incident to the business.

I am, however, instructed to beg that you will be so good as to inform the government of Canada that the committee of Lloyd's are anxious to do everything in their power to assist them in their efforts to improve the navigation of the St. Lawrence. With this end in view my committee have taken the opinions of a number of steamship owners and others interested in the trade.

The general opinion seems to be that the navigation of the St. Lawrence will always be difficult on account of climatic conditions. The gulf has to be approached along the coast of Newfoundland, where fogs are frequent, ice not uncommon and where the change of variation is very rapid. A ship's position is often very doubtful as the thick weather not only prevents astronomical observations being obtained, but also renders it more difficult to correct compass errors, a matter of the first importance always, but particularly so in waters where there is a rapid change of variation. It is stated that the variation is as much as seven degrees in the short distance from Belle Isle to Anticosti Island.

It has been suggested :—

1. That a complete survey of those portions of the gulf and River St. Lawrence (not yet thoroughly surveyed and chartered) should be made.

That is being done.

2. That the standard of efficiency of the pilots should be of the highest, constantly and rigidly maintained, and that compulsory pilotage might with advantage be extended to a point beyond Anticosti.

This question is under consideration by the department. I hope, before the end of the session, to submit amendments of the Pilotage Act that will satisfy, as much as possible, the shipping interest in this matter.

3. That the lights in the St. Lawrence, which, with few exceptions, have an average range of fourteen or fifteen miles, should be improved and that the lights and fog horns should have a more distinctive character.

4. That lightships with good fog signals should be established at turning points on the coast so that a navigator could ascertain his position without going too close to the land in thick weather, such points, for instance, as :— the east point of Anticosti, Rich Point, west coast of Newfoundland, the Bird Rocks, Cape Ray and Miquelon Island.

That is being done.

5. It has also been suggested that better graving dock accommodation should be provided.

Hon. Mr. PREFONTAINE.

The graving dock question is being studied.

Mr. CLARKE. Graving docks are not a pressing necessity.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand that. I am reading what this committee have recommended.

The committee trust that the suggestions made above may be of assistance to the Canadian government in their endeavours to improve the navigation of the St. Lawrence, success, in which, would doubtless have an important effect upon the maritime trade of Canada.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sgd.) JOHN B. WATSON,
For the Secretary.

The following are the suggestions made by Captains Wm. Owen, Stewart, Webster, J. Williams, Murray and Sheldrake for improving the facilities for navigation of the St. Lawrence :

Rich Point. Should have a fog signal and the light improved.

Flower Ledges. Should have a powerful fog horn.

Heath Point. Interval at present fifteen minutes should not be greater than every two minutes. (Fog signal).

South Point. Fog signal at present a whistle. Should be something more powerful.

Fame Point. Should have a powerful fog signal.

Father Point. Fog signal requires improving.

Cock Point. Should have a gas and bell buoy.

Cape Norman. Fog signal at present not nearly powerful enough.

Bird Rock. Fog signal at present every fifteen minutes, should be less.

Sambro Fog Signal. Should be improved and the interval between the sounding of it should be lessened.

Cape Ray. Whistle not nearly powerful enough.

Halifax harbour buoys. Not nearly large enough, want considerably improving.

Cape Whittee. Should have a light.

St. Peter's Bay. Should have a light and fog horn.

Little Mecattina. Should have a light and fog horn.

Matane. Should have fog signal.

Little Metis. Should have a fog signal.

All the captains urge there should be a chart of the Belle Isle straits taking in sixty miles round Belle Isle. At present when in the vicinity of Belle Isle they have to consult three charts all of a different scale.

On the 13th November, 1902, the chief engineer of the department made the following report :

Ottawa, November 13, 1902.

To the Honourable James Sutherland,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir,—As directed, I beg to submit the following report on suggestions for improvements in aids to navigation in Canadian waters, submitted by Sir Alfred L. Jones, of Elder Dempster & Co., London, England.

In consequence of my almost continuous absence from Ottawa since Sir Alfred Jones' letter was received, and in consequence of immense pressure of work whenever I was here, in connection with the radical improvements we are making in aids to navigation this year, it has been physically impossible for me sooner to give to the letter and its inclosures the attention it deserved. I have now gone carefully through it and examined the charts submitted with the recommendations, and am impressed with the knowledge of the needs of the St. Lawrence route displayed in the correspondence and pleased to know that in very many cases the conclusions reached by the department have anticipated the suggestions made by the officials of the Elder Dempster Line.

It is always an advantage for government officers to obtain the views of practical seamen in considering proposed changes in aids to navigation, though seamen cannot always be posted on the practical difficulties in the way of carrying out some of their ideas.

Taking up in order the suggestions made by six of the Elder Dempster captains for improvements in the St. Lawrence, I beg to submit the following notes :

Fog alarm at Rich Point—

The difficulty in maintaining a fog alarm here is that there are reefs lying outside the point, across which, sound will not penetrate. Many years ago a steam fog alarm was established at this station, but the acoustic conditions were found to be so unfavourable that it was removed and utilized at another point. I fear that for this reason the re-establishment of a fog alarm here would be more likely to lead a vessel into danger than to help her.

Fog alarm at Flower Ledge—

This light station is immediately opposite to Greenly Island and Point Amour stations, on the other side of the Strait of Belle Isle, at each of which a fog alarm is already in operation.

The question of providing a fog alarm at this station has been considered many times, but there are quite as many masters, of opinion that, three fog alarms in operation within sound of each other would be more likely to confuse than to help ships, as there are in favour of an additional alarm. The 'Labrador' side of the strait, on which the existing alarms are maintained, is certainly the more foggy of the two. It is for this reason that the department has not already established a fog alarm on Flower Ledge.

Heath Point—

It would be very difficult, if not dangerous to the operator, to fire an explosive fog signal as often as every two minutes. The interval of fifteen minutes at this station has been reduced to ten and to five minutes whenever a vessel is heard off the station. However, it has for a long time been known that no fog alarm on the Island of Anticosti could be effective, in consequence of the wide extent of shoal water extending off the south shore ; this so disturbs the homogeniety of the air that all our fog alarms on Anticosti have been utter failures, and the fault is one inherent in the locality, which no increase in the power of the alarm would in any way remove. Recognizing this difficulty, the department has decided to establish a lightship in deep water off East Point, altogether outside of the Anticosti shore, and a contract has been let for the construction of a suitable ship, at a cost exceeding $100,000, and we hope that the vessel will be on her station in good time next season. She will be provided with the strongest modern fog alarm machinery, and will greatly lessen the danger at the dreaded east end of Anticosti.

South Point—

The fog signal here is already a ten-inch whistle of the most powerful type, a signal that gives good satisfaction at many other stations. The fault here is exactly the same as explained above, and is common to all stations on the Island of Anticosti. There is absolutely no remedy for this failure in sound signals due to local atmospheric conditions.

Fame Point—

A fog signal has just been established at this station, and it is proposed to greatly increase the power of the light here.

Father Point—

A seven inch Scotch siren is now being installed at this station, and the power of the light has just been increased at least ten-fold.

Cock Point—

To maintain a gas buoy effectively it is necessary that it should be watched constantly, and that a tender equipped with gas compressors should be able to visit the buoy frequently. A gas buoy liable to be left without this constant supervision would be often out, and thus more dangerous than no gas buoy at all.

In consequence of the remoteness of Cock Point from any headquarters of a gas buoy tender, it would be impossible for us to maintain an efficient service under present conditions. However, the representations made, with regard to this matter will receive further attention, and if anything can be done to improve the present buoy, it will be done next season.

Cock Point should not be a danger to a carefully navigated vessel, as vessels ought to give the shore here a good berth outside of Cock Point.

Cape Norman—

The trouble with the fog signal at this station arises from the fact that there are reefs between the fog signal and the channel, which break up the sound. That the trouble is not with the instrument may be inferred from the fact that the signal is quite as powerful as that at Cape Bauld, only a few miles distant, which has always given great satisfaction. It is proposed to differentiate between the Cape Norman signal and that at Cape Bauld.

Bird Rocks—

In consequence of the difficulty of landing supplies on this island, where there is no shelter, and all goods landed must be hoisted out of small boats up a perpendicular cliff, it is practically impossible to establish a steam fog alarm here, and it is very difficult to fire explosive bombs very much oftener than they are now fired, namely, every five minutes, when vessels are heard in the vicinity of the island. The danger here is not great, because the island is steep too on all sides, and no vessel can be in its vicinity without being aware of the fact. It is intended to greatly increase the strength of the light at this station next season, and to render it more distinctive.

Sambro fog signal—

This is another of those unfortunate stations where the trouble is with the acoustics in its vicinity, sound being absolutely unable to penetrate the non-homogeneous air that always covers the reefs lying all around the island. When we had a steam whistle at this point it was utterly condemned as inefficient; yet the same machine, when removed to Chebucto Head, where it is now in operation, has proved an eminently satisfactory fog signal. The only safeguard for mariners in fog is to give Sambro a very wide berth. It matters not whether signals are given every fifteen minutes or every fifteen seconds, they would be ineffective, and any vessel relying on hearing fog signals at Sambro Island and shaping a course to hear them, would be more likely to be wrecked than to be guided by them.

Cape Ray—

I am afraid that the trouble with the fog alarm at this station is also the acoustic defects of the locality, but as this has not been proved, and as we are anxious to do everything possible to improve aids to navigation, the most powerful fog signal practicable will be tried here before the effort to make the warning a serviceable one is abandoned.

Halifax Harbour—

The whole question of improving the aids to navigation in Halifax Harbour is now under the consideration of myself and of our local officials in Halifax. Some improvements in the buoys have already been made. Considerable improvements in the lights and any further improvements necessary in the buoys will be carried out.

I may state that these improvements have been carried out at Halifax, and that the gentlemen representing shipping interests of Halifax have passed a resolution complimenting the department on what has been done.

My impression is that the buoys used in Halifax are the largest now in service in the Dominion, and that their apparent want of size is due to the great distance at which they are observed rather than to their real smallness. However, this suggestion will have further consideration.

Cape Whittle, St. Peters Bay, Little Meccatina—

These three points are on the Labrador shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, a coast bristling with hidden dangers, and the department has heretofore made a special point of refusing to place aids to navigation on this shore, because it is desirable to discourage vessels from attempting to coast it. At none of the places named can a station be established that would not have reefs lying three or four miles outside of it. The consequence is that a vessel trying to make any of these aids would be in danger of wreck on some of these hidden rocks. I am strongly of opinion that it is much safer to force mariners to run from the east end of Anticosti directly to Point Rich or Greenly Island, than to attempt to coast the north shore. This is the more desirable, because fog is more prevalent on the north shore of the gulf than on the Newfoundland shore.

Matane—

A first rate fog siren will be established here next year. The machinery for this alarm is already constructed.

Little Metis—

I very much fear that, in consequence of the long line of reefs existing outside the shore at this station, it will be impossible to make the sound of a fog alarm penetrate to the channel. This acoustic difficulty I have reported several times, and feel as well satisfied as a man can be, without actually experimenting, that a fog alarm here would be a failure, and therefore a snare to a sailor rather than a help.

The chart of the Strait of Belle Isle is a matter in the hands of the Hydrographer of the Admiralty, and not of the Canadian government. I have no doubt that representations from the shipping interests of Great Britain made to the Lords of the Admiralty would result in the production of a chart such as desired by the Elder Dempster Company's captains. I know that what they state with regard to this matter is perfectly true, and I suggest that this department join in representing to the Admiralty the desirability of having a large scale chart of the approach of Belle Isle from the outside.

As the Admiralty is now engaged in a resurvey of Newfoundland, I am sure they would the more readily grant such a request.

Mr. CLARKE. Whose report is that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the report of the chief engineer, Mr. Anderson.

Mr. CLARKE. Sent in reply to the letter with some inclosures of Sir Alfred Jones?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not Sir Alfred Jones' letter there?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not the letter of Sir Alfred Jones, but as I remarked, the engineer goes over every point that has been suggested by Sir Alfred Jones and the captains who were delegated to make suggestions.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick.) I would like if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries could tell me where the 'Sahara' was wrecked, at what season of the year she was wrecked, and whether or not there was a pilot on board?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She had no pilot on board, and she simply went out of her course.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I can scarcely understand why it is that so much complaint is made about the condition of the St. Lawrence route when my hon. friend bears in mind that this ship came up with a valuable cargo of rice in April or May, and instead of staying at pilotage ground, as she ought to have done, proceeded without a pilot. When she reached Sydney, the captain notified the agent in Quebec that the vessel was coming up and asked him to have a pilot ready, but instead of waiting at the pilotage ground the vessel came on up towards Rimouski and ran right on a rock. My information is to the effect that the captain had never been on the St. Lawrence before. He came up in the early spring and did not take the trouble to get a pilot on board and the vessel ran on the rocks. There is another case of a ship, the name of which I do not recollect at this moment, that ran on the west point of Anticosti Island, a ship that was going down the St. Lawrence and supposed to be going to sea, but the first thing we heard that the ship was aground on the west point of Anticosti. Investigations were held into the cause of these accidents, and I think it would be important not only for the information of the House, but for the information of the public, and especially for the information of the underwriters in London, that the results of these inquiries should be published so as to show whether or not these accidents have been caused exclusively by the conditions existing on the St. Lawrence route, or by defective equipment of the ships, or whether they have been caused by any defect or neglect on the part of the captains. I remember that last summer I attended an inquiry at Quebec, where it was shown that the captain, while going through the Traverse, one of the most dangerous points on the St. Lawrence, thought it proper to go down and go to bed and leave his ship under the control of the pilot and one of the subordinate officers. If, under these circumstances, accidents happen the underwriters must not be surprised, and it seems to me that it would be important to know all the facts and circumstances connected with each one of these wrecks so that we may know whether the fault is attributable to any defect in the condition of the St. Lawrence route or to the unskilful mariner who is in charge of the vessel, or to the fact of negligence on the part of the mariner. I think it will be shown in most cases that the accident is more the result of the imperfect equipment of the ship, or of negligence on the part of the captain, than as a result of the conditions of the St. Lawrence route. Let me illustrate what I mean. Last summer the 'Ariadne,' Admiral Douglas' vessel, came up from Halifax to Quebec. The sailing captain started from Halifax and brought his ship to Quebec on his own chart—a vessel drawing thirty feet of water—without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not a fact that admirals in the imperial service are obliged to do that?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In the imperial service they have proper officers and properly equipped vessels, and when they came to the St. Lawrence they navigated the river without difficulty. The only accident that happened on the St. Lawrence route to an imperial vessel was in the case of a ship going from Quebec to Montreal and the accident happened when there was a pilot in charge. She had just left the harbour of Quebec when she ran aground. I agree with all that the hon. gentleman said in respect to the improvement of the aids to navigation in the lower St. Lawrence. It is important to do all that we can do to improve the condition of the St. Lawrence route, so that that great waterway may be from the great lakes to the ocean as perfectly equipped as any great waterway can be. Nature has given us the greatest waterway on the continent and it only remains for us to so equip and improve that waterway that we may be able to avail ourselves of the great advantages that may come to it. We must not only spend our money in the way of dredging, but it is also important that we shall provide those aids to navigation which will enable the mariners to take advantage of the work we are doing. I venture to make the suggestion that we ought to take advantage of the information afforded by the officers in our department. These officers are competent men and we should also at the same time, if necessary—and I offer this suggestion because of the interest I have in that part of the country—consult the Lloyds people and say that we would be willing to pay the expenses of any competent man they would suggest to come out and visit the work we are doing and make such suggestions as they thought necessary in order that we might meet all reasonable demands of the underwriters. I would also suggest that when an accident occurs we should thoroughly probe the cause of the accident, so that we may know whether or not it was caused through any defect in the St. Lawrence route, or whether through the defective equipment of the vessel or defective seamanship. It is important in cases of accidents to know exactly what has been the cause of the accident, and I think that when we have done that we will show that the St. Lawrence has been very much maligned in the past and that a great many accidents that have occurred have not been due to any defect in the St. Lawrence route, but that they have been due to defects in the equipment of vessels and to the imperfect knowledge of the seamen passing through that route.

Mr. CLARKE. I may say that the hon. Minister of Justice is to be congratulated upon coming to our assistance on this side of the House in demanding that the information which we have been trying to obtain from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries shall be forthcoming as soon as possible.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is no politics in this question.

Mr. CLARKE. Certainly not, and we could not have approached it on this side of the House with any desire to make political capital, because, in the few remarks I have made, I declared that we were quite willing to vote any reasonable sum to equip that route and to make it the best route on this side of the Atlantic. I think the hon. minister can appreciate the difficulties which landlubbers like myself labour under in intelligently voting the appropriation that is now asked for by the department when the fullest possible information is not vouchsafed to us as to what these expenditures are for and why they are being asked for. The hon. minister has drawn attention to the fact that the injury which happened the steamship 'Sahara' was due to the circumstance that she had not a pilot on board and that the captain was practically in ignorance of the route.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This report will be printed and distributed. I am able to state from the information of the officers of the department that a separate document will be printed and distributed because the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries contains Captain Spain's report, dated 23rd of September.

Mr. CLARKE. I must confess that I was not aware of that fact and I am very glad to know it. I have read from two editions of the London 'Times' unfavourable references to the St. Lawrence route. I did so for the purpose of drawing the attention of the committee and of the hon. minister to the fact that the route is being misrepresented and that unreasonable insurance charges are being made upon vessels navigating it. It is of the highest importance, as the Minister of Justice has pointed out, that when an accident occurs the causes should be inquired into forthwith and the blame placed on the responsible shoulders. If wide publicity were given to the findings of the commissioners, the black eyes that the St. Lawrence route receives from time to time would be less frequent. Our desire is not to make political capital, but to have at our disposal all the data in possession of the department so that we may vote these items intelligently. Can we have that letter from Sir Alfred Jones.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, it will be laid on the Table.

Mr. CLARKE. I draw attention to the fact that although navigation has only been opened a few weeks, whatever may be the cause, there have been two accidents, and not to large ships but to moderate sized vessels. I hope the minister will have an immediate investigation into both. It is sometimes said that the pilotage system is defective.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Very.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Justice holds that sometimes those in charge of the navigation of the ship are to blame, and that state of things can certainly be remedied.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will look at the plans that have been prepared within the last year or two in reference to the lower St. Lawrence, he will see that a comprehensive scheme is ready for endeavouring to supply those aids to navigation which are so necessary. Last year over $200,000 was expended in the carrying out of this scheme, and if we proceed on these lines in the future we will soon equip the St. Lawrence as it ought to have been equipped years ago. But that is not all. The pilots are an essential factor in the navigation of the St. Lawrence and it seems to me that the sooner we take effective control over the pilots the better it is going to be. It would be absolutely useless for us to expend our money on aids to navigation if we have a defective pilotage system.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The sooner that is realized the better for all concerned. I make the statement, subject to correction, that the pilots are not examined with respect to coloured blindness except only once a year. There is nothing more important than that the vision of the pilot should be perfect; not only that it should be perfect with respect to distance, but also with respect to colour so much depends upon the colour of the light, not only the port and starboard lights of the ship, but the lights on the shore. It is well known that railway locomotive engineers are examined every two or three months to test their sight as to colour. It is as essential, if not more essential, that the vision of the pilot should be perfect than the vision of the railway engineer. If my hon. friend looks at the rules that exist on the Mersey he will notice the great caution that is exercised there with respect to the pilotage system. On the St. Lawrence where we have equal opportunities to afford a safe way for navigation as they have on the Mersey and the English channel generally, it seems to me we ought be able to do for the St. Lawrence what the English authorities have been able to do for the navigation of the English channel and the Mersey. I trust that we may be able to follow their example as closely as we can.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) refers to the report of the Marine Department, 1902, pages 27 to 40, he will find the reports on the accidents that have occurred in the St. Lawrence.

Mr. CLARKE. When was Captain Spain appointed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He has been an officer of the department for many years.

Mr. CLARKE. I am aware, but I am advised he was appointed commissioner to inquire into these accidents last fall.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and his report is in the blue-book. This report of Captain Spain was sent to Lloyds and to the Admiralty for which we received thanks, and the result was that the captain of the 'Sahara' was put on trial in England and found guilty, and lost his certificate.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there any communication from the Elder Dempster Company concerning Belle Isle ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and we are putting an additional light and fog alarm at the north of the island to meet that complaint.

Mr. CLARKE. I saw a statement from the commodore of the Elder Dempster line published 'in the 'Times' last fall, complaining of the Belle Isle light. Was that complaint sent to the department ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was a special complaint and we are trying to meet it. It is contained in the communication I will lay on the Table.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Before leaving this part of the discussion I wish to express my regret that the department did not print in its annual report the results of the investigations held in Great Britain in connection with the accidents on the St. Lawrence. In almost every case where an investigation was held by the British Board of Trade it was found that the accidents were due to negligence or want of knowledge on the part of the steamships' officers. That is a thing that should be known not only on this side of the water, but on the other side as well. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries printed these investigations in his report it would have the effect of removing to a great extent the misrepresentations with regard to the St. Lawrence route. As I say, these English investigations show that in almost every case for the past two years, the accident was the result of incompetency or neglect on the part of the steamships' officers. I do not say that at all to imply that the aids to navigation should not be continued in the direction we have commenced, or that in every case where the system is found to be defective, a better system should not be adopted. At the same time it should be known here and throughout the world that the route is not at all to be blamed to anything like the extent which it is understood to be, both in this country and the old country.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. How much was spent last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Three hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. member for Toronto to the report of the inquiry into eleven casualties in the St. Lawrence river. He will find that the result of this investigation is that five casualties were caused by the inexperience or carelessness of some one or more of the officers or pilots on board the ships, but in not one case was the accident caused by inefficiency or deficiency in the aids to navigation.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries regrets that the English report has not been published or circulated ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the department intended to have published the results of the investigation in Great Britain, which was furnished to us in a return from the Board of Trade, under whose auspices these investigations are held. I think it would be a good investment and a proper thing for the House to order that that report should be printed as a return and distributed both here and in Great Britain.

Mr. INGRAM. We have the findings of Mr. Spain, the commissioner, but we have not the evidence before us. In the report there is a very remarkable statement made, which I cannot altogether fathom. It is as follows :

> There appears to be, I regret to say, a certain amount of indifference in regard to these inquiries on the part of some shipowners when the conduct of their own officers is involved.

It seems curious to me that the owners are so careless about the officers they have managing their vessels, when, by reason of these accidents occurring on the St. Lawrence river, their insurance rates are higher than they ought to be. I would like to see the evidence that bears out that statement. Then, I find in the report the following statement :

I cannot understand how the owners can be so careless as to have these incompetent captains. It is very important that we should have the evidence before us, so that we could see whether it bears out such extraordinary statements. The hon. Minister of Justice has stated that the accident to the 'Sahara' was caused by having no pilot on board. The vessel called at the point where the pilot was supposed to be, and the charge made against the captain was that he did not wait a sufficient length of time to get the pilot. We have nothing to show what detained the pilot on the arrival of the boat. Why was he not there, if that was the place where he should be, for the captain to pick him up ? It is shown in this case that the captain used precautions. It was very foggy, and his boat was going at a slow rate of speed. I see another statement to the effect that the captain was not conversant with the waters he was navigating.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give the hon. gentleman an example of that. There were two accidents a short time ago in the channel of Lake St. Peter, between Quebec and Montreal. The first accident was of no consequence. The vessel simply touched and went on. The pilot, although required by the rules to report, never reported.

Mr. CLARKE. What happened to the pilot?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He is going to be proceeded against. We discovered that from the report handed to the department a few days ago. Another vessel 'The Carrigan Head,' went ashore near the same point. It was found that she was out of her course, because the buoys had been displaced. It was probable that they had been dragged by the first vessel when she had grounded. It is also probable that the second accident had happened partly through the fault of the light-keeper in not reporting to the department on seeing that the buoys were not in place. The result was that the light-keeper was dismissed, and replaced by a competent man. It is proposed by the department, in order to avoid any such accidents in future, to have a small boat to patrol the channel, especially between Quebec and Montreal, as is done between Montreal and Kingston, to ascertain every twenty-four or forty-eight hours the state of the buoys, and to see that they have not been dragged or displaced. That has been suggested to the department, as a result of these two last accidents, so that the department is perfectly alive to the situation. With regard to the aids to navigation, we know the sentiment of the House. There is no politics in this matter. Everybody agrees that, in the interest of trade and commerce and of navigation, the route of the St. Lawrence should be made perfectly safe. I may state that it is the intention of the department this season to have the channel between Montreal and Sorel, a length of forty-five miles, perfectly lighted, so that in that stretch the navigation of the river will be as safe during night as during day. It will probably be impossible for two or three years to have all the necessary aids to navigation between Sorel and Quebec, on account of the channel at certain points especially at Cap a La Roche, not having the proper width; and not offering security to steamers to navigate that channel during the night. But between Sorel and Montreal, by the 1st of July, or at the latest by the 1st of August, the channel will be perfectly lighted on both sides.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. INGRAM. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that there should be no politics in this matter at all; and, so far as I am concerned, there is no politics. It is a very serious question, and one that has been discussed for years, and I do not think we should do anything to discourage trade from going over the St. Lawrence route. When a statement of this character is made, I would like to know, whether the owners of the vessels are ever present at these investigations and in what manner they show their indifference ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have pointed out the fact that the owners were informed that the vessels had touched at that point, but rather than be troubled by an investigation or detained, they preferred not to mention it, and the vessel went back without any investigation being held.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. With respect to the indifference of the owners, my hon. friend will bear in mind that the great majority of the owners reside on the other side of the water and also that a great number of the steamers are owned by many people. A ship is divided into sixty-four shares, and in many cases there are as many as sixty-four owners to one ship. The agent at Quebec or at Montreal represents the owners. When an accident occurs, in nine cases out of ten, the vessel is abandoned to the underwriters and the owners pay no more attention to the matter. They simply wash their hands of the whole affair and leave it on the shoulders of the unfortunate underwriters. Last year I am informed, and my information can be verified by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock), that a vessel of the value of $500,000 came to the St. Lawrence and was penalized to this extent, that the owner paid for insurance, $5,000, over and above the ordinary rates to American ports, and as the vessel made five trips, he paid $25,000 additional insurance. That meant $25,000 out of the pockets of the consumers and the producers of this country.

Mr. CLARKE. The worst feature is the damage done to the reputation of the route.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In addition, my hon. friend will bear this in mind, that investigation can only be held by the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the purpose of finding out what takes place in the St. Lawrence. The department has no control over the captain's certificate. That must be dealt with by the board of trade in England. To show how careful these investigations held by Commander Spain were, let me point out that the results of his investigations have been confirmed in almost every instance by the board of trade in England. Ship masters have had their certificates taken from them or been suspended or reprimanded in conformity with Commander Spain's report. I may add that I have had some experience of his investigations and have always found him most competent for the purpose. There is a line of steamships which has been coming to the St. Lawrence for the last twelve years—the Holme Line, of which Kennedy and McLean are the agents. These men exercise particular care in the choice of their captains, and the result has followed that there has not been a single accident to one of their steamers during all that period. My hon. friend should bear in mind also that the vessels which come to the St. Lawrence, with the exception of a few regular liners, are tramp steamers. They are under the control of masters who are not competent. Two thirds of them have not the requisite experience and capacity to guard against the difficulties attendant on river navigation. You have in the St. Lawrence, not only the difficulties connected with the shoals, rocks and reefs, but with the currents, which is one of the most serious difficulties you can meet in a river. In addition you have these other difficulties, resulting from the immense mass of iron deposits on both sides of the St. Lawrence, and in consequence of which you never can tell whether your compass is true or not, so that you have to exercise the greatest precaution because of the effect on the compass of these iron deposits. Therefore you require competent men, but all these difficulties can be overcome by the exercise of care and skill. The St. Lawrence can be made as safe a route as exists anywhere in the world. You have no difficulties there on that route that you have not got on the English channel and the river Mersey.

Mr. CLARKE. I was not aware that the report of captain Spain was printed in the report of the Marine and Fisheries Department. I note what the hon. Minister of Justice said with regard to the findings of Commander Spain and also the very high character which he gives him which, no doubt is well merited. Let me draw the hon. minister's attention to what is said in that report :

1. These five casualties were not caused by any inefficiencies or deficiencies in 'Aids to Navigation' on board any of the steamships.

2. These five casualties were not caused—not a complaint being heard or reported of any one light, fog signal or buoy—by any inefficiencies or deficiencies in the 'Aids to Navigation' on the route of the river and Gulf of St. Lawrence.

3. These five casualties were caused by the inexperience or carelessness of some one or more of the captains, or officers, or pilots.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The pilots were punished in every case.

Mr. CLARKE (reading.)

We recommend that owners only employ careful, experienced captains and officers ; and also that the pilotage system of the St. Lawrence be put under government control.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Hear, hear. I agree.

Mr. CLARKE. I find that in the more extended report, regarding the 'Indiana' investigation that the commissioner found directly against the captain of the ship. There is a similar report in the case of the inquiry into the 'Rustington.' Captain Spain finds against the captain of the ship, but with respect to the 'Manchester Importer,' he says :—

We are informed that the pilot has been suspended for six months, but as the greater part of that time there is no navigation in the river St. Lawrence, and the monetary loss is partly replaced by his confrères subscribing a sum of money for his benefit, it is tantamount to giving him a holiday.

And he gives his finding :—

3. The casualty was caused by an error of judgment on the part of the pilot and the inexperience of the master in the navigation of the St. Lawrence.

In the case of the 'Loango,' captain Spain says :—

As the vessel, at the time of the accident, was entirely under the guidance of Pilot Alfred Frenette, who has had his certificate suspended, I consider that a formal inquiry is not necessary.

In the case of the 'Iberian,' he says :—

I consider this casualty attributable to the pilot mistaking Red Island lighthouse for White Island lightship, and also to his leaving the bridge and going below, where he was at the time of the disaster. His certificate has been suspended for eighteen (18) months. I have also to point out that the master was down below when the vessel struck.

I consider a formal inquiry necessary in this case.

Now, the Minister of Justice, discussing this item, has pointed out that many of these accidents are due to the inexperience or inefficiency of the officers navigating these ships. There seems to be no doubt about that from the report of Captain Spain, and that report has been confirmed, I understand, by the formal courts held on the other side of the Atlantic. The Minister of Justice pointed out that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has nothing to do with the suspension of certificates of the officers navigating these vessels. But the department has to do with the pilotage board. The hon. minister is responsible for the efficient pilotage of this river.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We can amend the law.

Mr. CLARKE. If hon. gentlemen have the power to amend the law, and do not do it, then, in view of the report Captain Spain has made, and in view of the recommendation, more than once repeated, of the necessity of dealing with the pilotage system, if action is not taken by the government this session, it will be our duty to hold the government responsible for dereliction of duty.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are doing it.

Mr. CLARKE. Doing what ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Considering the necessary amendments.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope the session will not be allowed to close without the amendments being brought down for the consideration of the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Notice was given yesterday.

Mr. CLARKE. Three or four years ago an attempt was made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of that time to deal with the question of pilotage. As near as I can learn—I am not an authority on these subjects—the sooner the system of pilotage is improved the better it will be for all concerned.

Mr. BROCK. Before this item is passed, I would like to make a few remarks, more in a general way than in the way of fault-finding with the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec, especially on the St. Lawrence, must agree that enormous interests are involved in the St. Lawrence route, and the question of insurance is one of the great questions in connection with that. I think it has been pointed out by the Minister of Justice that vessels are sent out to this country on which there is very serious moral hazard, and the insurance people of England, having enormous business all over the world, do not regard the insurance on the St. Lawrence route as they do that on the route, say to New York harbour. They will insure vessels going by the St. Lawrence route that they would not insure going by the New York harbour. As the minister has said, they are called, in many cases, tramp steamers. Through this abuse, the greatest possible injustice is done to the St. Lawrence route. I wish you to understand that the extra cost of $5,000 which, as has been pointed out, is put upon a vessel going out by the St. Lawrence route, is a discrimination of the exports of this country. We have been talking very learnedly about the transportation problem, but it has been left out of account that an enormous quantity of our breadstuffs, cattle and so on, exported from this country are diverted from the St. Lawrence route, largely because it has been made unpopular through the enormous loss made in connection with incoming vessels. The insurance companies are themselves to blame, for they are taking a moral hazard that an ordinary fire insurance company would not think of taking. Another matter that has been mentioned here is that of pilotage. Hon. members may think that in speaking of this, I am a crank on the union system. I understand that these pilots have been a most tyrannical union on the St. Lawrence, that they have controlled elections, and that we ordinary politicians hardly dare to speak a word against their interest. I am glad that the hon. Minister of Justice has the courage to say that this is a matter that should have been taken hold of by the government, and that should be taken hold of at once, for I do not see why any number of pilots, no matter how respectable, should demand consideration that interferes with the rights and interests of all the people of Canada. They should not be allowed to make the route unpopular which should be the great route, not only for Canada, but for the western states—as it would be if it were properly managed and made as popular as it might be made. I may say that I am very strongly in favour of unions; I am in favour of workingmen uniting to maintain their own interests, but not for the purpose of opposing the interests of others. Therefore, no union of pilots on the St. Lawrence should be allowed that is opposed to the interests of all the people of Canada. The matter mentioned by the Minister of Justice is the key-note of the system. A vessel coming into the St. Lawrence is owned by fifty or sixty people, each having a very small interest. It reminds one of the adventurers of old times—each one of these owners takes an adventure. They send a vessel out well insured. If she makes a successful voyage, they make money ; and if the voyage is unsuccessful, the St. Lawrence route gets a black eye, and the insurers put their hands in their pockets and pay the loss. That is not a proper system of business—it is not business at all—it is brigandage. Therefore, there should be a united effort in every direction to discourage that kind of thing and every inducement given to encourage legitimate business. These magnificent steamers that come to our ports should be given every inducement to come. Just as we hold out inducements to internal navigation by making our inland waters free, so we should make the St. Lawrence route as free as possible, and particularly free from the exorbitant rates of insurance which hamper those who, like myself, endeavour to bring into this country every dollar's worth of goods we can by Canadian routes and over Canadian railways. When exports are forced to go by American routes, the effect is to make our imports by Canadian routes cost us more than we ought to pay, for the return cargo is the great matter, if you hope to make the St. Lawrence route successful. We must face the problems of how to make the St. Lawrence route all that both sides of the House desire it to be, to make it as safe as it can be made, to keep it free from political influences and political appointments, and to see to it that the public in England interested in shipping are kept as well posted as possible as to the real cause of the accidents that have tended to make our route unpopular.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It may be interesting, since I have referred to the letter of Sir Alfred Jones, that I should read it to the committee. It coincides entirely with the suggestions that have been made. Sir Alfred Jones is quite au fait with what has taken place and, as will be seen, he is quite of the opinion that the accidents are not due to the conditions of the channel. The following is the letter :—

4 St. Mary Axe,
London, August 29, 1902.

My Dear Sir,—While your colleagues are across here we thought it was a good opportunity to take up a question as to the possibility of improvements in the St. Lawrence with a view to the benefit of the public and ourselves as we are large underwriters on our ships and cargo. We have seen Sir William Mulock and he informs us we had better put all the documents before you, therefore we beg to hand you copies of letters from our lighthouse department in Liverpool together with charts and suggestions. We think ourselves the suggestions made are all in the right direction, but if you will wire to our Montreal office they will send you a couple of our most experienced captains to confer with you as to the possibility of improvements all round. We feel sure that all the ministers are as equally anxious as ourselves to make the St. Lawrence route as popular as any other to the mainland. At present we are handicapped. The underwriters say we are in more risky navigation than northern ports of the United States, but it is nevertheless a fact that we have completed during the last three years about eighty voyages from Canada without a mishap. Therefore we are indignant that our ships should be charged eight per cent as against New York three per cent, and it depends upon ourselves to convince the underwriters they are wrong. It will do no harm in trying to accomplish this to recognize in any way any deficiency we may have had such as fog signals and buoys. Then can you make the draught of water a bit deeper and the turnings a little less difficult ? Anything we can do on this side—we are so deeply interested—we beg of you to command any assistance we can render.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) ALFRED JONES.

Hon. James Sutherland,
Minister of Marine,
Ottawa.

This letter was duly acknowledged by my predecessor, and because of it the department asked the different captains whose names I have given to submit suggestions, which suggestions were made and some carried out, while others are being carried out.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the date of that letter ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. 29th of August, 1902. Now, the Minister of Justice has drawn attention to the fact that the examination of the pilots as regards their eyesight is only made once a year. To show the members of the committee how slow these improvements go, I may mention that it was only in 1898 that the harbour commissioners of Montreal began to force the pilots to submit to an examination as to their eyesight. Formerly they were only examined when they were admitted, or after they had attained the age of sixty-five. When I was a member of the Board of Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, I succeeded in having the by-laws amended and this new rule imposed on the pilots. I have been informed since that it is not sufficient to have the pilots examined as to their eyesight only once a year; I have also been informed by a competent oculist that the kind of examination is not what it ought to be. I have been informed that some oculists—I will not mention names or places—are ready to give a certificate that the person is quite competent to be a pilot and that his eyesight is perfect, while another oculist, better aware of his duties, will refuse. The question is under consideration, and I intend to consult some specialist, and to have this rule amended so as to make the examination as accurate and as reliable as possible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How does the hon. gentleman propose to have the pilots examined as to the quality of their eyesight ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not in a position to state now, but I will be guided in that question by professional men. I should think that if the examination is properly made, once a year would be often enough, made at the opening of navigation. But the information I have is that once a year is not enough. In former years when there was an examination only upon the admission of the pilot, they were allowed to remain in the service for forty or fifty years without being examined again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that some assistance might be obtained by ascertaining how often railway engineers are examined as to their eyesight, and what precautions are taken.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have written for information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have been informed that railway engineers are examined at least every three months.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I understand that in England very strict rules are enforced for the navigation of the English channel, and I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could not do better than to see how far he can adopt the system of controlling pilots, and the special system which exists with respect to the examination of their eyesight. They have a very effective system there, and also on the French coast.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state what it is.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would not like to undertake to do that, because I am speaking only from the imperfect information which one gets from having practiced in the admiralty court, and that is the only knowledge I have. But I know there is such a system, for I have had occasion to look into the rules that exist on the other side. My hon. friend will find in the department a letter that was written after the meeting of the British Medical Association some years ago. A young Canadian doctor was over there, and he wrote me a letter pointing out the difficulties that existed in this country with respect to the examination of pilots, and the difficulties that would result from the imperfect examination that was held. I passed the letter on to Sir Louis Davies, and I think he will find that there is in the department a letter from Dr. Cooke, of Quebec, pointing out all these things, and suggesting plans for following out the rules existing on the other side, and indicating what those rules are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are seeking for information from the other side now. What induced me to ask for information was a letter I received from a competent oculist of Montreal a few weeks ago.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the cases that have occurred of which there was some record in the report of the department—to which I have not been able to give the attention no doubt it deserves—in the report of the wrecks that have taken place, is there any statement as to the number of cases in which the defective eyesight of the pilots has contributed to the accident?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Up to the present we have not received such information. There are no cases where the accident was attributed to defective eyesight.

Mr. BELL. I observe that one point is insisted on with a good deal of force in the report of Commander Spain, that is that the pilots should be taken under control of the Dominion government. At present, as I understand, they are under the control of the harbour commissioners of Quebec and Montreal. Those that practice their calling in the lower St. Lawrence, I suppose, are under the control of the harbour commissioner of Quebec. Now, has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made any arrangements to take these pilots from under the control of the harbour commissioners of Quebec and place them under the control of his department?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the intention of the department to add one of our officials to the board of examiners, especially in Montreal.

Mr. BELL. Has the hon. gentleman authority to do that now?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, we will ask for the authority this session.

Mr. BELL. Because any regulations that might be established would probably be ineffective unless the department had authority to enforce their views upon the harbour commission of Quebec. I find in looking over the report made by the commander that there is a reference to the large number of losses that occur upon the St. Lawrence river. Commander Spain commences on page 27 to speak of these matters, and his reference to these losses is found on pages 28 and 29, losses that have occurred in various years, beginning with 1898, but not including the wrecks that occurred during the past season. I find that although these losses are attributed to the defects of the St. Lawrence route, and I suppose have contributed a great deal to make the route as expensive from an insurance point of view as it is, in every one of these cases mentioned on pages 28 and 29 the losses have always occurred upon the coast of Newfoundland, and mostly upon the eastern coast. Now, if this represents anything like the proportion of losses which occur on the St. Lawrence route, by far the greater proportion of them are really losses that occur on the coast of Newfoundland. But the whole discussion to-night has had reference more particularly to the river St. Lawrence, and the gulf of St. Lawrence, upon this side of Newfoundland. We have been speaking about different points in the river, the lower part of the gulf of St. Lawrence and Anticosti, but a very large portion, I may say, in fact, every one of the cases cited on these two pages refers to wrecks not in the gulf of St. Lawrence, but upon the Newfoundland coast.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) is aware that we have no control over that.

Mr. BELL. I was going to say that no matter what efforts are made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries of Canada to make the St. Lawrence a safe and cheap route from the insurance point of view they would apparently be ineffective unless the government of Canada should endeavour to make this coast of Newfoundland a much safer one to approach than it is at present. I know from information I have gathered in the past that the neighbourhood of Cape Race on the south-east coast of Newfoundland is, if I am not mistaken, the most dangerous point in the whole of the navigation, and that it has contributed most largely to give the Gulf of St. Lawrence the very bad reputation that it unfortunately seems to have in the opinion of the underwriters. The fact that it is not inside our own geographical limits does not preclude the department from doing some work there. At different points, on the Straits of Belle Isle, on Belle Isle Island and elsewhere, there are lighthouses and fog alarms maintained by the Dominion government of Canada. It would seem to me that perhaps the most important work that could engage the attention of the hon. minister and his department now would be, in case the government of Newfoundland cannot afford, or is indisposed to make this navigation secure, to take the necessary steps and incur the necessary expenditure to eliminate as much as possible the dangerous features from the navigation in the neighbourhood of Cape Race. I would like to know if the hon. minister has given this subject any attention, and if his estimates for the coming year include any expenditure to be made in that neighbourhood, or if he has made arrangements or is about to make arrangements to get a credit from parliament to enable him to reduce the dangers of the south-east coast of Newfoundland ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This matter has been considered and is being considered by the department, and all that can be done to remedy whatever evils may exist and to provide whatever improvements will be necessary will be done by the officers of the department.

Mr. BELL. That is a very indefinite reply. This subject would not appear to have given such thought to the department as, to my mind it is really necessary that it should have given. If the hon. minister will take the trouble to look at the chart indicating where the wrecks have occurred on the St. Lawrence route he will find that the coast near Cape Race is really studded with wrecks and it is hopeless to undertake to make the St Lawrence route a safe one until he can improve the navigation of these waters.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This point is shown on the chart which is on the Table now. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look at the chart he will see that it is referred to there, and the improvement of the navigation there, is being considered by the department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I went to look at the chart in view of what my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) was saying, and I do not think it discloses very much about the east coast of Newfoundland.

Mr. BELL. It shows the coast, that is all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It shows Cape Race.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The chart does not really show very much in the way of precautions in the neighbourhood of Cape Race, and I would like to endorse what my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) has said as to the urgent necessity of special attention being given to that part of the coast. However, the hon. minister says that his officers have that in mind. Look at the chart and you will see that Cape Race has a siren and a flash light and that at Cape Pine a siren is recommended.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All this was explained fully when the hon. gentleman was not here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it has been explained I do not want the hon. gentleman to go over it again, because I will read it all in 'Hansard.' Before that discussion on this item closes, I would like to ask the hon. minister what view the officers of his department are now taking in regard to the establishment of a lightship off the coast of Halifax harbour? I had occasion to bring that matter to the attention of Sir Louis Davies when he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, at considerable length two years ago, and since that time it has engaged public attention a good deal in the city of Halifax. There is a very strong feeling among people familiar with the approaches to the harbour, and especially among captains of steamers which make regular trips to the port, and generally among those capable of forming a judgment, that a lightship should be provided as soon as possible. Some demur has been made to that for the reason that, I think, fifteen or twenty years ago a lightship was put in place and did not prove a success. I was more familiar with the facts in regard to that two years ago than I am at present, but I understand that it is contended by those who are advocating the establishment of a lightship there, that modern methods as applied to the establishment and securing of lightships would make it perfectly easy to have a lightship at a place outside of the outer harbour at Halifax, where it is very urgently needed indeed. I explained the matter very fully, from the standpoint of those who are familiar with it, in some remarks which I made to the House two sessions ago. I have just sent to the library for 'Hansard,' but it has not arrived yet. However, I can give the hon. minister the reference to it. It would be just as easy for him to make that reference as if I should repeat my remarks now. I could not get from Sir Louis Davies at that time any reply which could be regarded as very satisfactory. He repeated the statement then and afterwards that in the opinion of his department a lightship would not be practical or something of that knd, as far as I remember. Still, that does not seem to be in consonance with the view which is entertained by people of very great experience in the city, and I think that this subject might well be taken up by the hon. minister, because there is no doubt whatever that wrecks have occurred off the mouth of the harbour, or off the approach to the outer harbour, which would have been prevented if a proper lightship had been in position there. I would ask my hon. friend to give that matter his consideration, and at a later stage in the session, either upon his estimates or his supplementary estimates, I will take the opportunity of mentioning the matter to him again and of asking him to make a fuller statement in regard to it than he is able to do at present, though I would like to hear from him now whether the question has been considered by his officers, and whether he has any opinion that he would care to give in regard to it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As regards the lightship in the port of Halifax, the matter has been gone into fully by the officers of the department. We have all the information necessary with regard to it, and we have a resumé of all representations that have been made on the question. It is estimated that the cost of the lightship would be $120,000 and its maintenance about $10,000. The question was fully considered with the representatives of the Halifax Board of Trade, and in view of the extra aids to navigation which we placed there last fall and this spring, they said: We are of opinion that a lightship is necessary, but in view of what you have done it is not urgent, and we would rather wait for another season and see what the result would be. We have put in a steam fog alarm and three steam whistling buoys. These gentlemen came back to Ottawa and they presented me their hearty thanks for what the department had done in the way of improvements. These facts can be established by the documents if the hon. gentleman wishes me to bring them down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As a matter of convenience, perhaps the hon. gentleman would let me look over them, but I do not want to delay the House now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will send the documents to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am very glad that the minister has had the matter so fully under consideration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The St. Lawrence route has had a very bad reputation in the past, but I am glad to say that public opinion is changing in that regard, and as an instance of that I will quote from the 'Shipping and Mercantile Gazette,' of London, England, an article which was published on the receipt of the report of the department. The article is long, but it is perhaps as well that the committee should know the present state of public opinion as to our St. Lawrence and coast lights.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The 'Weekly Shipping and Mercantile Gazette,' of London, England, says:

Canadian Coast Lighting.

In this country the lighthouse authorities never condescend to furnish the nation with an annual account of their proceedings. Happily, however, the colonies do not encourage what we may call the cult of obscurantism. Our fellow subjects across the seas have the habit, pleasant or otherwise, of wanting to know exactly what is done with the money which they provide for lighthouse purposes, and, odd as it may seem to us, the lighthouse authorities have not the slightest objection to presenting once a year a full account of their stewardship. We have before us a Bluebook, issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in Canada, which contains particulars of the light service of the Dominion in complete detail. This particular department, following our insular examples, might easily lay claim to a double dose of prescience and perspicacity, and profess that its secrets were so profound and the result of so much study that to unbosom them would be equivalent to casting pearls before swine. Oddly enough, however, the Canadian government sees no reason why its lighthouse organization should be surrounded with mystery of the Egyptian hall type, and it is fearlessly frank in taking the Canadian public into its confidence. We suspect that it loses nothing by this practice. Rather, we imagine, is it the gainer by courting criticism. We look through this book in vain to discover any sign of a desire to hide the department's light under a bushel. It is rather the other way about, for, while the volume has statistics galore, it also includes a couple of dozen pages of illustrations of lighthouses, buoys, steamers and life-saving stations. Here is a hint which our own lighthouse authorities might well take to heart. It may be—we know not—that there are insuperable reasons why they should not rush into cold print with an elaborate account of their exertions in behalf of the mariner. But could not the thing be compromised somehow? If typography is banned, might not the shipowners of the country have the services of the camera? This would at least enable them to form some idea of the way in which the lighthouse boards of the three kingdoms are disposing of the money of which they are trustees. The notion, we acknowledge, is a little irregular, since trustees are not usually called upon to furnish accounts by the aid of photography. But the Canadian example must be the excuse for a suggestion which, if adopted, would at all events open up the prospect of a quite delightful series of picture postcards. Lest it be suspected that Canada's lighthouse service is of the toy-shop order we had better give a few particulars. There are, according to the latest returns, no fewer than 713 light stations, lightships, and fog-alarm stations in the Dominion, and these between them show 899 lights. In addition there are 91 steam whistles, fog-horns, bells and guns. The number of light-keepers and engineers of fog-alarms, together with masters of lightships, is 719. The expenditure for maintenance of lights and coast service for the last fiscal year was $537,300, and there was disbursed on construction $158,700, making a total of $696,000. This latter sum is in excess of the outlay of the previous year by $117,000, which scarcely suggests a cheese-paring policy. Now if Canada can light and buoy her extensive and dangerous coasts for £140,000 a year, the problem which at once arises is why British shipowners should be taxed to the tune of £500,000 a year for a similar purpose. We are quite aware that it is risky to make comparisons. When some one had the temerity to hint that the English lighthouse service is dear as compared with that of France, the explanation was at once forthcoming that the French are content with lath and plaster construction, whereas the British and Irish lighthouses are built for all time. No doubt the same ingenuity in apologetics could be relied upon in the present instance. We should be told, perhaps, that the Marine Department of Canada is comprised of mere 'prentice hands, who do not understand the responsibility of their task, and who never will until they have the power of spending other people's money unchecked. Yet, as far as we can see, it has a pretty fair conception of what is demanded of it. Indeed, it is impossible to glance at this report without observing that the exceptional dangers of the Canadian coasts are recognized to the utmost, and that the department is straining every nerve to facilitate safe navigation in Canadian waters. Withal, there is no effort at concealment. There is a report from the chief engineer which occupies scores of pages of print, and is thoroughly comprehensive. We learn from it, for instance, that the department has made experiments with a view to the use of acetylene as a lighthouse illuminant, and that it is carrying out a series of tests with the diaphone, an instrument which is to have a chance of showing what it can do against the Scotch type of siren approved at the Trinity House experiments. Further we get full particulars, not only of new works, but of repairs as well, and there is the most complete information as to the work accomplished by the department's steamships during the year. One naturally asks why in the case of our own lighthouse authorities it is not possible for detailed statements to be prepared under these and similar headings. If publicity has, as Canada finds, a wholesome influence when the lighthouse service is conducted by a government department at the national expense, can a single plea be advanced for shirking it when unlimited and unchecked control is given to non-representative and practically irresponsible bodies, entrusted with the proceeds of a tax levied upon a particular class of the community ? The matter is really beyond discussion ; so much so that, in presence of a vast amount of adverse criticism, the lighthouse authorities of this country find it quite impossible to take up a pen in defence of the indefensible.

I could quote in the same sense from the 'Marine Review' and 'Marine Record,' of Cleveland, Ohio, which is an authority on the question, and which gives the same praise to the department as regards the lighting of the coast.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to bring to the notice of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries a matter that will entail a less expenditure than a lightship at the mouth of the Halifax harbour. It is the need of a buoy for the eastern point shoal or reef off Lunenburg harbour which has been solicited from the government on several occasions, two years ago and last year. I scarcely meet a fisherman or a mariner from that locality, and the surrounding country without being asked, when is that buoy for eastern point going to be placed ? I have been told by the government that the officer in charge of that branch of the department considered that it was not necessary. Well, I beg to differ most decidedly with that officer. There are no persons possessed of a better knowledge of the necessity for a life-saving signal than the mariner and fisherman. They have to enter that harbour at all seasons of the year, and the fishermen at all times, night and day. All I ask is a bell buoy ; and, as a proof of the necessity for it, I mentioned the loss of two steamers, which were driven on shore and totally lost in consequence of there not being a bell buoy at that point. I may be told that when entering the harbour, boats might take the western entrance and be guided by the automatic buoy, off Ovens, or Rose Head. That may be all very well at certain seasons ; but a fisherman, when out in his boat, and seeing night coming on, and perhaps a storm approaching, regards the eastern entrance as the only way by which he can reach his harbour of destination and safety, living, as he does, in close proximity to Eastern point. I would ask the hon. minister to seriously take this matter into his consideration, and view the situation as shown on the map, and he will see clearly that no more reasonable request could possibly be made than that which I am making on behalf of these people. I do not ask for an automatic buoy, because there is one at the western entrance. What I ask for is a bell buoy, which will cost very little ; and the fishermen and mariners will never be satisfied until they see it placed in position off Eastern point. I will ask the minister to give this matter his careful consideration. It is a life-saving service, and I am sure he would not refuse so reasonable a request when it is made by every one belonging to that port. I want the hon. minister to understand that the port of Lunenburg is a very important one, next to Halifax, I therefore, ask the minister to consider the matter, in such a favourable light that may, in the near future, see a bell buoy placed in the position asked for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed that this matter has been under consideration in the department for quite a while. I do not know the particulars of the case ; but it is one of those cases that I shall have to investigate personally when I visit the maritime provinces, as I intend to do during next summer.

Mr. KAULBACH. If the minister will kindly give me a call when he comes there, I shall be pleased to see him and take him to the place.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister has been making tests of certain lights. Would he give us an explanation of that, and state the cost of the lights ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As regards the light, the test has been successful, but I have not the technical information to give to the House at present. It will probably be annexed to the report.

Mr. INGRAM. My object was to get at the cost of the lights as they are now—the cost per light.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are 770 lights.

Mr. INGRAM. About how much per light do they cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The total cost of maintenance is given in the report. If there is any particular light which the hon. gentleman wishes to inquire about, I will procure the information from the department and furnish it to him.

Mr. INGRAM. I have no technical knowledge of these things myself ; but I was trying to find out about what these lights would cost. I believe you are experimenting on acetylene.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The engineer is not in a position to give information. The reason why experiments were made to ascertain the value of ascetelyne lights is because it is easier to manage than other lights and it gives clearer light.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has it any greater penetrating power in a fog ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not decided yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There have been a good many experiments in the last few years as regards the transmission of sound through fog, and some very curious results have been shown. A fog whistle has not been heard at a distance of three or four miles, and yet it has been heard at the further distance of eight or nine miles. Is the department making any experiments in this line ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My engineer informs me that he is.

Mr. BELL. Is anything being done by the department to acquire knowledge as to the currents on the Newfoundland coast, to which a very large number of wrecks are attributed, where vessels are lost upon that coast ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is an officer at present making such investigation with the 'Gulnare.'

Mr. BELL. I see that a lighthouse in Pictou has been burned recently. What steps have been taken to replace that light ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be replaced at once.

Maintainence and repairs to lighthouses, including salary of Mr. U. P. Boucher, engineer in charge of buoys between Montreal and Platon, $330,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The explanation of the increase here is the maintenance of new lights and the expenses connected therewith.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is following the same system of purchasing supplies that he did in connection with the items we discussed last night. I find on page P—260 of the Auditor General's Report that J. B. Coté, of Quebec, gets $2,989 for a quantity of supplies. Then I find that Mr. Drolet, of Quebec, got $6,701. He charges for labour 292½ hours at 50 cents. That amounts to $5 per day. Also 1553 hours at 40 cents, or $4 per day. There might be an immense profit on mechanics when they are charged for at $4 and $5 per day. He also charges for 3,943 hours at 35 cents. Why could not the government have this work done by contract ? In every province we find goods purchased from retail merchants. I could just refer to one on page 62—Mr. Lewis, of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is he a retail merchant ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, he is a wholesale merchant. He supplied the department with 925 pounds of putty at $2.10 per 100 lbs. Why does not the government buy all they require from him at that price, instead of paying 3, 4, and 5 cents per pound to retail merchants. Why not buy all your supplies from wholesale merchants at wholesale prices. On page 61, I find J. U. Gregory was paid $1,440. Who is he ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He is the agent of the dement at Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. In his bill there is an item of $8 for spruce bushes for decorating on St. Patrick's day. I am willing to have these decorations on St. Patrick's day, but will the hon. minister put the same amount in the estimates to decorate on the twelfth of July ? The hon. minister has not explained why he does not buy these goods at wholesale prices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This matter was threshed out four hours last night. Surely we are not going to begin it again to-night.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. minister is asking for a quarter of a million of money.

Mr. BIRKETT. Just as I entered the Chamber I heard my name mentioned—I do not know why. During last night—in the course of the four hours used in threshing out these items—I had a little friendly talk with the Minister of Customs. I would much rather refer to the matter when the hon. minister is present, but I would like to correct what he said, as I have the invoices and other documents here. He stated that some five or six years ago there had been an increase in the price of bar iron of from twenty-five to fifty per cent, and in some cases even to one hundred per cent. My reply was that I thought he was entirely in error. For his information, let me give a few figures of what iron has been sold for since 1897. Bar iron was sold by the manufacturers in Montreal as follows :

1898	1 30
1899	1 25 to $1 50
1900	1 40
1901	1 40 to 1 60
1902	1 70 to 1 80
1903	1 80

This corroborates the statement I made that in the last three years iron has been dearer than it has been in the preceding three years.

Mr. HARTY. That depends on the quality.

Mr. BIRKETT. What quality does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Harty) want ?

Mr. HARTY. What quality is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Birkett) giving us ? I suppose he is dealing with one grade of iron all the way through ?

Mr. BIRKETT. What grade does the hon. gentleman want and I will give him the price ?

Mr. HARTY. I am not asking for any grade.

Mr. BIRKETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand what information the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. HARTY. I was asking if these prices were for one grade of iron.

Mr. BIRKETT. What grade do you want ?

Mr. HARTY. The price should be quoted all through for one grade, X, XX, or XXX.

Mr. BIRKETT. There are no grades of X, XX, and XXX in iron. The grades are ordinary rolled bar, forged bar, refined bar and Swedes bar. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Harty) knows more about steel for locomotives than about bar iron.

Mr. HARTY. I was merely trying to get some information from the hon. gentleman and asking a question in a courteous way.

Mr. BIRKETT. We will give the hon. gentleman all the information he wants. And I hope, if the information is satisfactory and the prices are equally satisfactory, he will give us an order. Now, to confirm the prices I have given, I have the invoices here, and I will show them to any hon. gentleman who cares to see them. In further confirmation, I may say that we sold iron in the city of Ottawa which costs the same to deliver here as in Quebec, at the following prices :

1898	1 55
1899	1 65
1901	1 70
1902	1 85
1903	1 95 to $2 00

And, though we have been selling iron even this year at $2, the government paid this firm of Drolet, in Quebec, $3 per hundred pounds.

Mr. HARTY. For what grade of iron ?

Mr. BIRKETT. I asked the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that last night and he could not tell me. The only information we could get was from the Auditor General's Report. It seems to me that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) is talking about something he knows nothing at all about. If he wishes to ask me any question, let him stand up that we may see who he is, and let him tell us what he wants. I notice, in going through a few more of these accounts, that Drolet, of Quebec, is still charging this enormous price of $3 per hundred for bar iron. I also notice that he has raised the price of his zinc. He has supplied twenty-three pounds, for which he charges twenty-five cents. Perhaps the hon. member for Kingston knows something of the value of zinc. Here is an item of spelter and solder. Now, spelter is not used for solder, it is used for brazing. Any mechanic knows that it is not used for solder. There is a charge for twenty-six pounds of it at fifty cents per pound, which is five times more than spelter ever was sold for. Why, antimony is not worth anything like that, to say nothing of spelter. I notice also that Drolet has charged as high for labour as fifty cents per hour. I refer hon. members to page P—60 of the Auditor General's Report. I wonder what sort of mechanics or labourers were paid for at fifty cents per hour. He has 202½ hours charged at this rate, also 1,503 hours at forty cents; 3,943 hours at thirty-five cents—in fact, he has over 10,000 hours, or three years time of one man, and all this labour spent on 4,802 pounds of iron. There is no use saying one thing and thinking another; there must be something wrong in this. No man or company of men could put in three years work on four thousand pounds of iron. And the prices charged are something enormous. These prices are higher than retail prices, and far beyond what would be charged by any wholesale man in Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, or elsewhere. As I said last evening, the government are simply the trustees of the people and should not pay such prices. And if they would publicly call for tenders they could get the supplies they require at fair market prices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I repeat what has been said during the discussion. If the hon. gentleman wishes to ascertain whether the accounts which he mentions and which he finds are scandalous, are extravagant, he can do so before the Public Accounts Committee. There he will discover an entirely different story. It is easy to take the Auditor General's Report and pick out certain items charged there, and which are not explained in any way, and to say that the prices are enormous. But it is necessary to know the circumstances connected with each account. It may be that they are half French and half English, and the French has to be translated into English, and people who don't know anything about it will make entries that cannot be understood, even people who may know the prices of merchandise but who do not know the prices charged by a competent engineer in making difficult repairs of boilers and high class machinery. Mr. Drolet, I am informed, has about 100 men in his employ. He is not an ordinary blacksmith, but he has the best shop in Quebec, and it is probably the only place in Quebec where work of this kind could be done. Instead of sending the boats to Montreal or Halifax, we thought proper to get him to do the repairs. The accounts are certified in the regular manner by competent officers. If these engineers have certified accounts which ought not to be certified, they should be censured. The department has no control directly or indirectly over these things. A piece of machinery gets broken or damaged, and a competent man is asked to do the work, and who is better able to judge of the quality and the value of the work than the engineers themselves? If the hon. gentleman can suggest any other manner of doing it, I would be glad to accept his suggestion. But it is not fair to brand Mr. Drolet as a man who would overcharge the department. I have telegraphed for an item about which a good deal was said last night, that is about the metal called magnolia. It appears there is another metal called munse.

Mr. BIRKETT. What is the difference between munse and magnolia? The hon. gentleman says it is sometimes called magnolia and sometimes called munse. I would like him to tell us what is the difference. He says that I have been finding fault with Mr. Drolet. I did nothing of the sort, I did not refer to Mr. Drolet at all. When the minister says that there is no other man who can do the work, I am not prepared to accept that. I do not believe Mr. Drolet is the only machinist in Quebec who could make these repairs. They could have been done in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It would not be convenient to have the work done at Montreal. It is better to have these repairs done in Quebec where there are dock yards. Besides, it is necessary that the repairs should be done at the earliest possible moment so that the ships can get out on the opening of navigation and they can get out ten days earlier from Quebec than from Montreal. I know Mr. Drolet personally very well, though I know he is a very reputable man in his line of business, and as a mechanical engineer, he is far and away the best man and has the best equipped shop in Quebec.

Mr. BIRKETT. It is not absolutely necessary that the repairs should be done in Quebec.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These repairs can only be done in the winter time. The vessels come in at the very end of the season, and it would be almost impossible to get them to Montreal. Navigation between Montreal and Quebec closes earlier than it does below Quebec.

Mr. BIRKETT. The explanation of the Minister of Justice is more reasonable.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I want to explain about the charge for time. I know it to be a fact that Mr. Drolet is the only man who does work of that sort in Quebec. There is another firm at Lévis, George T. Davie and Son, who have a dockyard at Lévis. When the repairs are not done in a properly equipped shipyard it is necessary to carry the tools from the shipyard to the place where the work is being done, and the charge of so much an hour for labour includes so much an hour for the tools employed and other apparatus necessary in doing work of this sort.

Mr. BIRKETT. I would like both the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Justice to understand that I have not found any fault with the price charged per hour for labour. When they charge fifty cents an hour for labour they are also charging for the wear and tear of their tools. The difference between fifty cents and what they pay the mechanic, is what they charge the government for the wear and tear, rent, running expenses and so forth. But I want it to be understood that I am not finding any fault with the price charged for this work or the way the work was done. I am simply finding fault with the price charged for raw material, for what is called raw material. The Minister of Justice said that this work was done in the winter.

Mr. INGRAM. We have not found out whether it was done in the winter or summer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The repairs are made in the winter.

Mr. INGRAM. What means have you of knowing ? Have you got the account there ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The repairs were made during the winter previous to putting the vessels in commission, in the months of February and March.

Mr. BIRKETT. No, that will not do.

Mr. INGRAM. We know perfectly well that it is a common thing throughout the country that parties selling goods to the government invariably expect to get more from the government than from a private individual.

Mr. BUREAU. Not in our part of the country.

Mr. INGRAM. I have been too long here and I know. What we find fault with is excessive prices paid in many instances and we believe we are justified in finding fault.

Wages of crew and maintenance of Lurcher's shoal lightship (revote), $10,000. Wages of crew and maintenance of lightship, East Point, Anticosti, $10,000.

Mr. COPP. I would like to ask the hon. minister when these lightships will be finished ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One lightship will be delivered on the 15th July and the other on the 15th October.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, $322,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the item that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) wants reserved and there is no objection to the balance of the items going through. He has a telegram from one of his friends saying that he desires to say something in regard to this item and that he would like it reserved.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The really awkward thing about reserving that particular sub-item is that we reserve the whole group of items. However, as I understand that the remaining items will be regarded as unobjectionable, we will reserve this item if my hon. friend wishes it.

Item allowed to stand.

To provide for the expenses of the Montreal Pilot Commissioners' Court, $2,000.

Mr. BELL. Perhaps we might get a little information about the pilotage commissioners' court. This is a new court that was established some time ago to deal with pilotage matters.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was established two years ago in Montreal.

Mr. BELL. This about covers the cost of the commissioners and assessors ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Are there many cases dealt with by the court ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were four cases last year.

Repairs to wharfs, $3,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this item is closed up, I want to inquire if Mr. Gregory had the minister's authority to spend $8 for spruce bushes for decorating on St. Patrick's day. I understand he is going to give instructions to spend a similar amount on the 12th July.

Building and maintenance of fish breeding estimates and lobster hatcheries, $95,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $3,000 here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is for new hatcheries.

Mr. TAYLOR. All right.

Fisheries protective service, including maintenance of new vessels in British Columbia, $130,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $10,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The increase is due to the development of the fishing industry in British Columbia, the North-west Territories and Manitoba.

Building fish-ways and clearing rivers, $3,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is an increase of $2,000 because the department has been found neglectful in not providing fish-ways in many places and the demands upon the department have increased very much. We intend, for the protection of fish, to give more attention to this question.

Mr. BELL. On what river is it intended to make this new expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No river in particular. We have been asked in many cases to attend to this question. The individual expenditures are very small, varying from $50 to $100.

Mr. BELL. Such an amount as that would not provide a fish-way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, they are small works.

Canadian fishery exhibit, $4,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are making a new installation on account of the old exhibits having been left at Paris and destroyed at other exhibitions.

Mr. BELL. Before the whole item passes may I ask the hon. minister to give us a little more information in reference to the building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments. I see there is an increase of $3,000. How many new fish-breeding establishments are the government providing and in what localities ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are three new lobster hatcheries to be provided, two in New Brunswick and one in Prince Edward Island. There is also under consideration the establishment of a fish hatchery in the Northwest Territories and one on the great lakes.

Mr. BELL. Would $3,000 provide for the building and maintenance of these three and possibly five fish hatcheries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by the officers of the department that it will. They are not very expensive.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 8, 1903.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PENNY BANKS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) introduced Bill (No. 198) respecting Penny Banks. He said: The object of this Bill, as its name implies, is the cultivation of thrift in small matters, the encouragement of small savings of a class not reached by the government savings bank. A year ago we had application from some public-spirited gentlemen of Toronto, who wished to obtain a special charter for the establishment of a bank of this character. We thought it better, however, if such banks were to be established, that it should be done under some general law which would apply to all established under similar circumstances. The gentlemen in Toronto very readily assented to that view, and we have prepared a Bill of a general character which will meet their case, and also, if they should arise, cases of a like character elsewhere. The design is that these institutions may be established by letters patent issued by the Governor in Council, and shall all come under the general rules laid down. It is intended that they shall not be money-making or money-lending institutions, but that they shall be entirely money-saving institutions. Indeed, it would not be too much to describe them as practically collecting agencies for the government savings bank. It is proposed that a small proportion of the funds they receive, 5 per cent, shall be held by the penny banks to meet the daily demands; but the balance shall be deposited with the government savings bank, and shall only be withdrawn when required by the depositors. The penny bank shall not require to have a capital; but the persons organizing it shall be required to have $10,000 as a guarantee of good faith. It is to be understood, not as a commercial undertaking, but rather as a benevolent institution, which will be established by churches and benevolent societies. For the money deposited in the government savings bank we propose to allow ½ per cent above the ordinary rate of interest, though the institution itself will not pay a larger rate of interest than the government savings bank. But to meet the expense of management, we propose to encourage the very worthy object of these gentlemen by paying to the bank ½ per cent higher interest than we pay to the ordinary depositor. If it should be found that ½ per cent would more than pay the cost of management, it will be reduced; but I do not anticipate that that will be the case. What I anticipate is that gentlemen establishing institutions of this character will do it for benevolent purposes, and will have to put their hands into their pockets and help to pay the expenses. They will be allowed to invest their own guarantee fund in reasonably good securities, but the money of the depositors must be deposited in the government savings bank. These in brief are the main provisions of the Bill. We shall be very glad, when it reaches a later stage, to have any suggestions that may be offered to improve it. It has been prepared at the suggestion of the gentlemen in Toronto to whom I have referred; but we have thought it well to devise a system whereby, if similar savings banks should be started in other parts of the country, they would be brought under the operation of this Act.

Mr. KAULBACH. Is there any maximum amount that can be deposited ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it must not exceed $300.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I would like to ask the hon. minister if we have any coin in Canada equal to a penny, or what he means by a penny ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will consult the dictionary he will find that, although in England a penny is described as a copper coin of a certain weight and character, it also means a small coin of any kind. In the United States a small coin is called a penny, and the term is pretty well understood in that sense. In our decimal currency we have not anything which is technically called a penny ; but our Toronto friends who originated this proposal wished that the term should be adopted, and we have gratified their wish.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman know of any place outside of Toronto where there are such banks ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bill is general, and such a bank may be established anywhere; but the movement is led by these gentlemen in Toronto, who are anxious to establish such a bank.

Mr. INGRAM. I think there are banks of this kind at other places which have been established longer than they have been in Toronto.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But they have no charter. If they wished to have the stamp of authority, they would have to come under the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that such banks would not reach anything that could not be reached by the savings bank. There is no limit in the deposits of the savings banks ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, a dollar deposited at one time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose these organizations might reach places which would not be reached by the government savings bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be possible, but hardly likely. They will most likely be established in connection with some benevolent organizations in the large cities and towns.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that there is a description of penny bank or small savings bank which has come into vogue to some extent on the continent of Europe, and also in the United Kingdom, and which not only receives money on deposit, but lends money in small amounts to its own shareholders; and I am informed that there is a bank of that character established at the present time at Lévis. This proposed enactment, I gather from what the hon. gentleman has said, does not at all relate to institutions of that kind ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the question suggested itself to the government as to whether or not banks of that kind should be given any legal status in this country ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes ; several members of parliament, in conjunction with a gentleman who is officially connected with this House, recently called upon me and described to me the bank which is now in operation at Lévis, based on a similar principle to banks which exist in some European countries. I have promised that I will look into the matter, though I do not anticipate that we shall take any action upon it during the present session. But the banks to be established under this Bill will in no way conflict with such an institution, because these are not to be money-lending banks at all. The banks the hon. gentleman refers to, do lend money in a limited sphere.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Only to their own shareholders.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Only to their own shareholders; and I understand that there is the very wholesome rule that the directors shall not lend to themselves. But this will in no way conflict with such institutions if later on we should decide to make provision for them.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD REFORMATORY.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 199) respecting the Good Shepherd Reformatory, in the city of St. John, N.B.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman kindly state the purport of the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This Bill is on the lines of the provisions respecting the Andrew Mercer Reformatory, the Ontario reformatory for women, contained in chapter 183 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. The suggestion for the legislation which I now introduce originated with the recorder, or chief magistrate, of the city of St. John, and is approved of by the Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick. The Bill is limited to the Roman Catholic reformatory in St. John, and will be applicable only to women and girls of the Roman Catholic faith. Its intention is to allow the magistrates of St. John to commit young girls and women of the Roman Catholic faith to this reformatory, which is a religious institution under the control of the Catholic Church, instead of being obliged to send them to jail as at present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have the same thing at Halifax.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FISHING WITHIN THE THREE-MILE LIMIT.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a matter concerning which I have received information from Nova Scotia. It is reported to me that on the 3rd of June, at seven o'clock in the morning, twenty-nine American fishermen and seiners were fishing within the three-mile limit off Guysborough. At the same time the cutter 'Osprey' was at anchor in Canso and the 'Kingfisher' in Arichat. It is known that the waters of Guysborough bay at that particular time were alive with mackerel, and these American fishermen were in pursuit of them. Still it is reported that no action was taken by the cruisers to prevent these Americans from fishing within the three-mile limit, and they continued to fish, and, in some cases destroyed the nets set by the local fishermen. It is not a matter of sufficient importance to move the adjournment of the House, but I would like to know what information the government has received.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no information in the department that any violation of the law has taken place, but a telegram dated the 3rd of June has been received reporting a large fleet at Arichat accompanied by our cruisers, and that they are kept outside the three mile limits by our two cutters.

Mr. BELL. Is that an official report from the fishery officers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

QUESTIONS.

PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. BROCK—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Have the government, during the past year, printed on any of its reports, documents, or publications, issued from the Printing Bureau, the label, or imprint, of any labour organizations?

2. If so, what are the names of the organizations, and upon what reports, documents, or publications, did such label, or imprint, appear ?

3. What is the object in using such label, or imprint, on such reports, documents, or publications ?

4. If such labels, or imprints, are used by the government, are the organizations which they represent, Canadian organizations, or are they controlled from the United States, or allied with United States organizations ?

5. Are the funds collected from the members of such organizations, invested temporarily or permanently in Canada ; or are they invested in the United States ?

6. Where is the chief office of such organizations ?

7. In what country does the majority of the membership of such organizations reside ?

8. Does the government employ Canadians who do not belong to such organizations to work on such reports, documents or publications, upon which such label, or imprint, appears ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

The 'Labour Gazette' was issued with what is called the Union Label which was intended to indicate that the work was done by union labour.

As to the relations between labour organizations in Canada and the United States, the government have no information that is not in the possession of the public.

The government, in employing people in the Printing Bureau, make no condition as to membership in any organization.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON asked :

1. Referring to page B—7 of the Auditor General's Report for the year 1902, in which is given a very long list of amounts due to the Printing Bureau by members of parliament, ex-members and others, for printing, advertising, &c., why are so many arrearages allowed to stand from year to year ?

2. Have proper efforts been made to collect the above accounts ?

3. Whose duty is it to look after and collect these accounts ?

4. Why are all such bills not paid promptly on the delivery of the work, or within a specified short time after ?

5. Who is responsible for such non-payment?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). On September 22, 1897, the Treasury Board ordered as follows :

The board, after a careful consideration of the matter, direct that the Queen's Printer be instructed hereafter to give no further supplies to persons who are in arrears for supplies previously furnished.

This order is enforced.

GOVERNMENT BINDER TWINE FACTORY.

Mr. LEONARD asked :

1. Has the following circular been distributed ?

GOVERNMENT BINDER TWINE FACTORY.

(Circular.)

Kingston, May 1, 1903.

Sir,—The factory at Kingston penitentiary will be able to supply about 300 tons (600,000 pounds) of first-class twine for use this season. Of this quantity about 40 tons (80,000 pounds) is of the brand sold last year under the name of 'Kingston Special,' 500 feet to the pound, as to which we have received many recommendations.

The rest of the season's output will be pure Manilla twine, well twisted, carefully balled and warranted to measure as per ticket attached.

The factory having been thoroughly overhauled and more perfect supervision of the work provided for, there is no reason to fear competition as to quality from any source ; while as to prices, the favourable comparisons of former years will be maintained.

To make sure of the advantages offered by the government factory, please send in your orders at once, stating quantity and grade. Your orders will be booked and invoices sent to you at once. When you desire the twine to be forwarded, send the money by registered letter, express order, P.O. order or bank draft, together with shipping directions, and the twine will be shipped forthwith. If you remit by bank cheque, please see that it is marked 'good' and made payable at par at Kingston.

Where it is at all convenient, it is advisable that farmers join and send club orders for ton-lots or car-load lots, through one of themselves, through the head of a farmer's society or union, or through any agent they may choose, provided they accompany the club order with a certified list of farmers who comprise the club, and show the quantity and grade of twine required by each. In this way they will secure the advantage of lower freight and save expense in registration, postage, commission, &c., in addition to the reduction in price of $5 per ton. 'Club Order' blanks will be forwarded upon request.

The quantity of twine manufactured at the government factory is but a small fraction of the amount annually consumed by the farmers of Canada, and the entire season's output will, doubtless, be ordered during the next few weeks. If you intend to order, do so at once. Should the following authorized schedule of prices be reduced before your twine is shipped, you shall have the benefit of any such reduction.

Schedule of prices (to farmers only).	Cents.
Pure manilla (650 feet to lb.)	11½
Pure manilla (600 feet to lb.)	10¾
Kingston special (500 feet to lb.) .. .	9½

¼ cent per lb. less on ton lots.

Terms:—Cash with order. All f.o.b., Kingston.

Address all communications and remittances to the warden of the penitentiary, Kingston, Ont.

J. M. PLATT,
Warden.

(650 ft. twine all sold a few days after this circular was issued.)

2. If so, in what places ?

3. Has it been translated into French ?

4. Has it been sent, thus translated, into the parishes of the province of Quebec ?

5. In which parishes has it been so distributed ?

6. Has the department, in any way, made the farmers of the province of Quebec aware of the advantages of purchasing this binder twine at Kingston ?

7. If so, in what ways ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) :

1. Yes.

2. To all farmers in Canada who have in the past purchased binder twine from the penitentiary, or inquired regarding binder twine, and to the secretaries of all farmers' clubs and agricultural societies whose address could be ascertained by the warden.

3. Yes.

4. Not yet, but it will be the moment it is received from the printers.

6. Yes.

7. By sending a copy of the circular referred to above to all farmers who have in the past purchased binder twine from the penitentiary, or inquired regarding twine, and to the secretaries of all farmers' clubs and agricultural societies whose address could be ascertained by the warden.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Is the Government Printing Bureau in this city an 'open' office, or is it a union office ?

2. Are men who do not belong to the Typographical Union permitted to work as compositors in the composing room ; and if so, how many such men are now employed there ?

3. Were the demands recently made by the compositors in the bureau for an increase of wages submitted to the fair-wage officer of the Labour Bureau to report upon ; and if so, did he report favourably or unfavourably upon the demand ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1 and 2. There never has been any obligation on the part of the government to employ union men only. It is now an open office.

3. The Typographical Union of Ottawa, composed of about eighty per cent of Bureau employees, adopted a new increased scale of wages, to come into operation on the 1st of June, without previous demand or conference. The scale was declared to be binding on all compositors. The government declined to adopt the new scale.

GOVERNMENT BINDER TWINE FACTORY.

Mr. LEONARD asked :

1. What are the residences and the post office addresses of the purchasers of binder twine from the Kingston penitentiary whose names are the following ?

2. Did these persons give their orders before May 1, 1903 ?

3. Did the warden of the Kingston penitentiary employ any other means of making known to the public the quantity of binder twine on sale at his establishment, than the circular of May 1, 1903 ?

4. If so, what means did he employ ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I think that the hon. gentleman would be well advised not to press for an answer to this question. Those in charge of the industry tell me that it will not be to our interest to give at present the addresses of our customers dealing with the institution at Kingston. The following information will probably supply what the hon. gentleman requires up to the present, as to the quantity sold during May :

CHIEF JUSTICE BOYD—HIS RELATIVES AND GOVERNMENT EMPLOY.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell)—by Mr. Morin—asked :

How many sons or relatives of Chief Justice Boyd, if any, are in the employ of the government ? What is the date of their appointment, and the salary paid to each ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Speaking under correction, there are no sons or relatives of Chief Justice Boyd in the employ of the government—at least, it is not known that there are any.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY—GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole tomorrow, to consider the following resolution :—

1. Resolved, that the government may aid the extension of the line of the Canadian Northern Railway Company from Grandview, the point where what is known as the Gilbert Plains branch of the said railway ends, to a point at or near Edmonton, a distance of about 620 miles, and also of the Prince Albert branch of the said railway from a point 100 miles east of Prince Albert to Prince Albert, a distance of about 100 miles, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the first mortgage bonds, debentures or other securities of the company to the extent of $13,000 per mile of the line, interest on the said bonds to be at the rate of three per cent per annum payable half-yearly, and the principal to be payable in 50 years.

2. Resolved, that the said bonds, debentures or other securities shall be secured by mortgage forming a first charge upon the lines of railway so aided, and all property and franchises in connection therewith, and all revenues derived therefrom by the company ; provided that with respect to that portion of the said line from the end of the Gilbert Plains branch to the westerly boundary of Manitoba, a distance not exceeding sixty-five miles, the said mortgage shall be a first charge to the extent of only $10,000 per mile, but shall also rank on the said portion next after the charges heretofore created ; provided also that the said mortgage shall be a charge next after a first charge of $13,000 per mile (to be created by the company) on that part of said Prince Albert branch.

3. Resolved, that the said mortgage shall also form a charge next after the charges existing thereon upon all the lines and branch lines of railway of the company now in operation, and all property and franchises connected therewith, and all revenues derived therefrom by the company.

4. Resolved, that the kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid, and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the mortgage securing them, and the form and manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of.

5. Resolved, that upon the said guarantee being signed on behalf of the government, the government shall become liable for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities guaranteed, and the said payment shall be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

6. Resolved, that the rates and tolls to be charged for the transfer and carriage of freight and passengers upon the lines of railway so aided and upon the lines owned by the Canadian Northern Railway shall be under the control of the Governor in Council or of such authority, commission or tribunal as is designated or constituted under any Act of the parliament of Canada for the regulation or control of the business of railways.

7. Resolved, that the Governor in Council or any authority created by parliament for the purpose may also grant running powers over any portion of the lines hereby aided to any other line of railway upon terms considered equitable.

8. Resolved, that it shall be unlawful for the Canadian Northern Railway to lease or sell any of its lines or any portion thereof to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or to amalgamate with the said company or enter into any agreement with the said company whereby rates upon freight or passengers shall be pooled; but this provision shall not extend to traffic or running arrangements made with the assent of the Governor in Council.

9. Resolved, that any money paid by the government of Canada under the guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government, but not in discharge of the liability of the mortgage securing them ; and the money so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and mortgage, and the government shall be subrogated in all the rights of the holders of the securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall in respect of all the moneys so paid be in all respects in the position of security holders in respect of whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

He said : I may say, Mr. Speaker, that his Excellency the Governor General having been apprised of the purpose of this motion, assents thereto and recommends it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT—SURTAX.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 174) to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there not some information the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Paterson) was to give on the third reading of this Bill ? The third reading stood over for some special reason which I do not recollect at the moment.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There was some discussion, but with relation to matters that appertain more particularly to the estimates. There were several points on which information was to be given, and I am having that information prepared so as to be ready when the estimates come up again. But I do not remember that there was any information to be given particularly relating to this Bill. One subject discussed was the advisability of granting power for the employment of temporary clerks. But this was fully discussed and was agreed to. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) prefers that the Bill should stand, we will allow it to stand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it would not be any inconvenience to the hon. gentleman I would prefer it. I think the hon. gentleman who asked for some information, or for some reason, asked that the Bill be allowed to stand over, is not present.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 188) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.—The Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. BOYD. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart) wished to be here when this Bill was under discussion. I do not see him in his place at the moment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Bill has already been postponed because of the absence of hon. members.

On section 1,

Section 29 of the Weights and Measures Act, chapter 104 of the revised statutes, is amended by adding the following subsection thereto :—

'Postal scales, when engraved and stamped as such, and of a capacity not exceeding four pounds, and not used for trade purposes, may be sold without inspection under such regulations as the Department of Inland Revenue prescribes ; but any person using such scales for other than postal purposes shall be liable to the penalties prescribed by subsection one of this section.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). That section was passed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It does not appear so by the Bill I have here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How are you to have any real supervision over the user or non-user of these scales ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I explained the other day. These scales are for letter use.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that. I remember the hon. minister's position. He says that these scales are to be used solely to weigh letters or other mail matter, and there is no reason to inspect them because the weights will be corrected by the post office department. That seems a very good reason, but what I am pointing out is something further : You issue these post office scales to men who are conducting an ordinary business. What provision have you to make sure that he does not use them for the purpose of his business ? How can you possibly supervise a thing of that kind ? Should not you limit in some way, the persons who use the scales or the places where they are to be used ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The department will have to pass a regulation regarding the sale and use of these scales. To a certain extent, they will be subject to the supervision of the office. If parties are found using these scales for other purposes than the weighing of mail matter, they will be liable to punishment. But I do not think they will be used for any other purpose than the weighing of letters. Although the present Act prohibits the use of any kind of scale without inspection, still, for the benefit of many people, we think it better to allow the use of these scales.

Mr. COCHRANE. A great many of the postmasters in the small places in Ontario are also merchants. I have in my mind's eye several in my own riding who are in that position. Why should not these scales, then, be inspected as well as any other, so that there could not be any possibility of merchants in post offices using fraudulent weights in dealing with the public ? As I understand it, if the postmaster has these scales, they are exempt from inspection except by some official of the Post Office Department.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The scales for the post office are supplied by the Post Office Department, and the rates of postage determined by private individuals by means of these scales are subsequently fixed by the post office authorities I now lay on the Table for the inspection of hon. members, one of the scales in question, which weighs from one-half ounce to one pound.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether this is the only description of scales that is suggested by the section ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is a sample of some of those scales, but there are many kinds.

On section 2 :

Notwithstanding anything in the said Act, the charge for the threshing of grain may, until a suitable scale or measuring apparatus therefor that may be verified, is provided and has been approved by an order of the Governor in Council, be determined by any device which records, automatically or otherwise, the number of discharges made.

The quantity threshed and upon which the charge for threshing is to be based shall be determined by check-weights on a properly verified scale, such number of times per day as is agreed upon between the operator of the threshing machine and the owner of the grain threshed ; and the aggregate quantity thus established shall be that for which threshing charges shall be payable ; and such charges may be recovered in any court of law or equity.

This section may be repealed by order of the Governor in Council whenever it is established to his satisfaction that an apparatus complying with the provisions of this Act is available.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can the minister state what is the exact change made by this Bill ? Is it proposed to substitute this section for some section that already exists, or is it an entirely new provision ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is an entirely new provision.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the inconvenience in the present condition, and what is intended to be effected by this ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Last year we had a discussion with regard to scales to be adapted to threshing machines used in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. At the time I declared that I was almost sure that the weighing machine then in use did not meet the provisions of the Act which required that those scales should be inspected. Unfortunately that scale was not made according to law. Since then the owner of that scale, or somebody in his interest, has been working on it in order to perfect it, and I am informed that as now manufactured it would be considered sufficient, but it is not yet in our possession. In the meantime, to prevent other difficulties which have been experienced I understand for several years past, we introduce this clause, which may be repealed by Order in Council as soon as a scale is found suitable to answer the purposes of the law, and gives satisfaction to the public. As the clause reads, in order to avoid any difficulty between the owners of threshing machines and the farmers, we have asked that an inspected scale be used so that when any difficulty arises between the owner of the grain and the owner of the threshing machine in regard to the weight of the grain, the difficulty may be settled by check tests.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I observe that the provisions of this enactment seem to be dependent upon some check established by the second subsection : There are to be check weights on a properly verified scale. It seems to me legislation of that kind may be found unworkable, in some instances at least. You are making the operation of the Act dependent upon an agreement between the two persons interested. What operations will the section have then ? Of course if the man who owns the threshing machine and the owner of the grain come to an agreement, we really do not want any legislation. But if they do not come to an agreement, I do not see how you can make much progress under this section, because the whole of the section is dependent apparently upon the check established by section 2, and that check is based upon an agreement between the two parties. Well, is not that rather unworkable in the only case in which you might find much occasion to apply it ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have already explained the difficulty that arises when the farmer and the owner of the threshing machine do not agree. But even when they do agree, after the grain is threshed the farmer may begin to complain because there was no weighing machine attached to the threshing machine, and I am told that judgments have been rendered by the courts sustaining the farmer in refusing to pay. In order to remedy that difficulty we adopt a machine as a temporary measure, and until we have a machine that will give satisfaction to both parties we have thought it best to introduce this legislation. But in order to give satisfaction both to the farmer and the owner of the machine, we have made provision that if at any time, at any hour of the day, either one of the parties is not satisfied that the scale is working properly, they may weigh by another scale, and the inspected scale is used to ascertain whether the weighing machine is working properly or not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the statute meant what the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) seems to think it does I would be inclined to agree with him, but I do not think it does. If the second clause said that either party would have the right to have the weights verified not less than four times, or six times, per day and at intervals of not less than an hour, or half an hour, you could work it out, but where you make it dependent upon the agreement of both parties I cannot see how you are going to work it out except where both parties actually agree to that. The object of the statute is to effect a remedy in cases where the parties do not agree, where they are at arm's length. It does not seem that the statute carries out what the hon. minister has in his mind.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. As I have already explained, this is only a temporary measure. If these people cannot agree, even when they make a bargain between themselves, I do not see how any law can oblige them to be satisfied, unless we can make provision that they shall have an opportunity to try or test the weights any time in the day. If they are willing they can test them twenty times in the day. Both parties will be interested in having correct weights, first, the farmer who has to pay and the owner of the threshing machine who has to receive the money. I have inquired what we can do in that direction and I have come to the conclusion that we had better not fix the number of times in a day that a test may be made.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any particular benefit in that portion of the Bill. I think if the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue made the Act to read that it did not apply to grain coming from the threshing machine, it would answer the purpose he has in view in introducing this Bill. This matter which I brought to the attention of the House last year is one of very great importance to the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I pointed out then to the hon. minister and to the government, the opportunities there were preventing, a man from collecting his bills and it was shown by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart) that the amount of such threshing exceeded $5,000,000 last year, not one dollar of which could be collected by law. Last year I gave the hon. minister some instances of the trouble that had taken place in court, but, try as best I could and with the assistance of other hon. members, I could not convince the hon. minister of the importance of dealing with this question. The correspondence which I have in my hand was moved for and was laid on the Table of the House. The very thing that the minister is doing now, he, or his deputy minister, says here they cannot possibly do. Yet, they find now that they can do it. In the correspondence laid on the Table of the House last year there is a letter from Mr. Thompson, of Wolseley, complaining of the matter in regard to which we are complaining, on the floor of this House and, pointing out the disability under which they labour. In reply to that gentleman this letter from the deputy minister says :

> The department fully realizes these difficulties but they are such as cannot be overcome by legislation, but are of a character that can be removed by threshers requiring manufacturers of threshing machines to provide a properly constructed scale that will pass the government inspection. That this can be done I have not the slightest doubt, and the efforts of threshers should be exerted in that direction.

The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue was aware of this, although this letter was signed by his deputy, on the 15th April, 1902, but now, it seems that he can do something, or is trying to do something that he then said he could not do. He also had brought to his attention at that time a machine that it was believed would meet the requirements. I think portions of this correspondence cast a decided reflection upon the hon. minister himself. No doubt it was thought that the letter of the deputy minister would have an entirely different bearing and that it would be a reflection upon the members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The chief inspector, whom I designed as part blacksmith and part inspector, and I have seen no reason to revise that statement, winds up his report as follows :

> The members who are fighting the battle for the 'Grain Threshing Scale' makers, do not seem to see that they are unknowingly occupying a false position, opposed to their own interests and to the interests of those they represent. They have within reach an article that will meet the requirements of the law, which can be made by any manufacturer, without royalty, and yet they are trying to force upon the farmers of the North-west an inferior machine that is patented and exclusive property of one manufacturer.

It was the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue who brought that matter to the attention of hon. members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Here is the speech of the hon. gentleman last session in regard to it. I will refresh his memory :

> Some years ago one of our inspectors was instructed to inspect one of these weighing machines, and it was found to be so imperfect that he would not certify to its results ; but recently I have received information that within a short time a proper scale will be perfected, for attachment to weighing machines, and will be ready for use next season. Some weeks ago a manufacturer of these weighing machines was in the department, and from the way he spoke, and from information which we have received from our own officers in Winnipeg, we are in a position to state that within a few months, or before next session opens, that difficulty will be remedied.

It was the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue himself who asked hon. members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories to go to his department and see that machine working, and if there is any reflection cast upon any person by the report of this inspector, it is upon the hon. minister. I consider it a piece of gross impertinence on the part of any employee of this government to use any such language about hon. members representing their constituents ; yet, this gentleman is endorsed by the hon. minister and the deputy minister in doing that. While he was doing that he was reflecting upon the hon. minister, although he did not know it, because, it was the hon. minister who invited the members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories to go over to his department and see the machine there on exhibition at work. We said: We will be satisfied with anything that will give these people relief. I said then that the department was derelict in its duty and I say so now.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this section be adopted ?

Mr. BOYD. No, I want to hear what the hon. minister has to say about this business.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The movement was not started until the department had received complaints from people from the North-west Territories. As soon as these complaints reached the department we took measures to provide some remedy. One of our officers at Winnipeg, the inspector of weights and measures, informed the department that he was working on a machine which would be perfected in a short time. In order to ascertain if he was right or wrong, because he had occupied the dual position of inventor and inspector of his own machine, that gentleman came to Ottawa, and in presence of gentlemen from Manitoba and the North-west Territories his machine was put into motion. As the inspector was the inventor of the machine he could not very well pass judgment on his own invention, and we submitted it to Mr. Fyfe, who is well known throughout the Dominion for his ability in this business. Mr. Fyfe was then a scale manufacturer in Montreal, and he is now our chief inspector of weights and measures. Mr. Fyfe stated in presence of the inventor that the machine was not perfect, as it could not be verified, and, if I remember aright, Mr. Magness admitted it. When I stated last year that I expected a machine would be ready for this season, it was on the representation of Mr. Magness, who told me that the machine would give satisfaction to everybody. When the machine had turned out not to be perfect, correspondence took place whether between Mr. Magness or the Globe Manufacturing Company, and the department. Mr. Fyfe contended that even if changes were made the scale could not be admitted to inspection and verification, and in order to show that the department had left nothing undone to give satisfaction to the people of the North-west, I may read the following letter, which the deputy minister wrote on November 11th last to a firm of lawyers in Winnipeg, with whom he had correspondence :

As to the machine submitted being capable of weighing correctly when operated at the proper speed, the chief inspector to whom this matter was referred states that he has no recollection of the necessity for the machine being run at any specified rate of speed being marked thereon, and that even had such been done he could not recommend the verification of any weighing machine that required to be operated at an indicated speed as an essential feature of its weighing correctly. The department has been most anxious that a suitable scale, for use with grain threshers, should be constructed and is prepared to go aside from many less important features provided the essential provisions of the law and regulation be observed and that the scale is of a character to remove the difficulties complained of in grain-producing districts. I may even go further and state that the services of the chief inspector will willingly be placed at the disposal of any person undertaking the production of such a scale. I hoped that the scale submitted would be of such a character, and my disappointment is certainly as great as that of the gentleman who placed it before the department for approval.

If the scale originally submitted has been changed as respects the objectionable features pointed out in my first letter, the department will be glad to have another scale passed upon by the chief inspector.

I may admit that the law is perhaps not perfect, but it will be beneficial to have it on the statute-book until such time as a new scale will be invented, in order to prevent the difficulties which have arisen in the past.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to point out to the minister, the importance of this matter to the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west. The owners of these threshing machines are farmers, and they do the threshing for their neighbours as well as for themselves. Instead of doing all this work by hand, as was formerly the system, the apparatus has developed, until now there is a machine to do all the work of loading into bags and keeping count of every bushel measured. This is now done automatically, and time and labour and expense are saved. If you remove this device from the threshing machines in the west, it will mean an increased cost on the present amount of crop of at least $1,000,000 more to the farmers of the west. I assert that without this machine they would have to pay at least $1,000,000 more to handle their crop. I have here a lengthy reply to the criticisms of Mr. Fyfe, and I will read one or two paragraphs of it which refer to this machine. I am well aware, as the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) stated, that we were invited to see the machine tested in the minister's office. I was present myself, when the weigher made and used on the J. I. Case threshing machine, was in the office. Their agent was here, and their machine was criticised, and they, the officials of the department, explained all they had to do to manufacture it, showing how the bearings should be hardened in order that it might pass the inspection. Let me say here that there appears to be some misunderstanding about this matter. The minister states that Mr. Magness is the inventor of the machine, but I understand from the machine men in Winnipeg that two young men, Messrs. Leitch and Drummond, of the Globe works, are the inventors of this machine. I know that they are the men who are making it and are working on it. I quote the following from the inspector's report of March 19th, page 42 :

Referring to the inspector's report of March 19th, on page 42, it is admitted that the machine does not balance either with or without the load. As previously explained, about seven pounds of the load is required to be in the bucket before the machine is brought into equilibrium, but this in no way interferes with the accuracy in weighing of the machine. The principle of balancing is not at all applicable to this machine, as in actual work, it operates so rapidly that there would not be time for any one to inspect the weights after the predetermined weight of grain has been deposited in the bucket. In threshing with ordinary grain the bucket would fill and empty grain twenty or thirty times per minute, so that there would be no interval of time after the bucket has filled, for a farmer or any person else to inspect it for the purpose of ascertaining whether it correctly balanced with the load or without the load, but if any farmer, whose grain has been threshed, has doubts about the accuracy of the weighing, he can always test by weighing one or more discharges of the bucket on this platform scale.

The makers of this weigher considered the small sketch prepared by the inspector, which you kindly forwarded to them and, which, he states, 'would convey to them the groundwork of success in developing and perfecting of their grain weigher'; but, after carefully considering this sketch and with every desire to improve their machine by the utilization of Mr. Fyfe's idea, they are forced to the conclusion that the adoption of his ideas would not only not improve their machine, but would render it absolutely useless as a grain weigher. In this sketch Mr. Fyfe employs four more knife edge bearings that are in use in the Standard Grain Weigher, and he expresses the opinion that, if this sketch is adopted, it will weigh accurately and meet all the requirements of the Weights and Measures Act, but, in his subsequent report of April 1st, on page 52 of the report, he contradicts this by the statement, 'In my opinion, the use of a knife scale for the purpose intended is impracticable, as it is impossible to weigh correctly on account of the vibration of the machine in threshing.' In penning this last quoted sentence, he has evidently forgotten that, in his report of March 27th, on page 50 of the report, he states 'The nucleus of a good serviceable scale is embodied in the machine presented for admission.' In his report of April 1st, page 21, he speaks of his long experience as a scale manufacturer and of his employment by capitalists to investigate and report on patent weighing machines, and follows up with the gratuitous statement that 'the makers of the machine in question have designed it from a purely mechanical standpoint, without regard, not only to the Weights and Measures requirements, but without regard to the demands of science in the application of leverage and gravity.' The inventors of the Standard Grain Weigher are practical men, who, we venture to say, know quite as much of the demands of science in the application of leverage and gravity as Mr. Fyfe does. Not only this, but the machine in question has been submitted to the inspection of one of the largest scale manufacturers in the United States, who has given it his unqualified approval after careful examination, not of fifteen minutes, but an examination and test extending over several days. The makers of this device have given special study to the principles involved in the building of weighing machines, with a full knowledge of all the surrounding circumstances and the conditions under which it has to be operated, advantages which Mr. Fyfe has not enjoyed.

If this machine or any other weighs accurately, why should it not be admitted as a special weighing machine in this business? There is nothing that it weighs but grain, and when the threshing machine is worn out, it is thrown on the scrap heap.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I may say to my hon. friend that I would not have brought the name of Mr. Magness into the discussion if it had not been for the fact that the department was made aware that he was the inventor of the machine. On the 3rd of June, last year, he wrote the following letter:

I wrote Mr. C. Higman on May 27th, that it was important to me that he should make his report on the Standard Grain Weigher presented by me to the department, so that I could get a letter saying it was accepted or otherwise. I know it is necessary that I should forward a full sized machine for the standard room, also photo cut for circular. I intend to send one of the first batch made, but it takes some time to get the parts in quantities.

A party here is anxious to buy the Canadian right to build them, but I have no proof it has been accepted.

An early reply will greatly oblige.

Later on Mr. Magness, who was given every means to perfect his machine, was asked by the department to come down here with it, and was informed that he could not be both the inventor and the inspector of the machine. On the 17th of June, a letter was written to him, from which I take the following extract:

I have serious doubts as to the advisability of your being connected in any way, with the manufacture and sale of this thresher scale. I am not aware of the exact position in which you will stand at the time this scale will be placed upon the market. While it will be a great boon to the people of the west to have a properly inspected scale for use with the threshers, and while the matter is one in which the department is much interested, I am of the opinion that it would be most objectionable for you, as an inspector of weights and measures to be connected with its manufacture or sale.

We had no correspondence with any other gentleman in reference to that scale than Mr. Magness himself. After he received our letter of the 17th of June, he wrote to Mr. Gerald, the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, on the 10th of the same month, as follows:

In reply to your letter of the 7th ult., I beg leave to say that I hold a third interest in the Globe Machine Company, who own the Standard Grain Weigher; after my return from Ottawa our solicitor, T. J. Mathers, who is also solicitor for the Department of Justice, advised me to transfer my interest to him to hold in trust for me, which I have done, therefore, my name will not appear in any form when the company's Act of incorporation appears in the Manitoba 'Gazette.'

I intend to sell my interest in Canada at the first opportunity for anything like a fair price, which I cannot get now until the machine has proved itself in the field, which we will do this fall ; then I know there will be parties ready to buy.

On the 7th of October last, Mr. Magness again wrote to the deputy minister, as follows :

Replying to your letter of the 7th of June, 1902, asking me to define my position re 'Standard Grain Weigher,' and my private letter replying thereto, I wish now to supplement or rather replace that letter :

I, therefore, beg to notify you that I have disposed of all my Canadian interest in that grain weigher, and am neither directly nor indirectly connected with its sale or in the profits arising therefrom.

I trust this may relieve the department of all the anxiety and annoyance my former connection in this matter may have engendered.

After we had this correspondence we wrote to the Globe Manufacturing Company, which I presume has supplied my hon. friend with a report and with the exchange of correspondence between Mr. Fyfe and the gentleman connected with that firm. The following message was sent to the Globe Manufacturing Company, Winnipeg, Manitoba :

Ottawa, May 29, 1903.

Please send department exact diagram or drawings of thresher scales as submitted to department.

W. J. GERALD.

The following answer came from the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company : —Give some address Globe Manufacturing Company. The following reply was sent to the Canadian Pacific Railway :

Address can be ascertained from R. Magness, inspector of weights and measures.

W. J. GERALD.

We received in reply from the Canadian Pacific Railway the following message :— 'Yours of the twenty-ninth to the Globe Manufacturing Company delivered.'

So that we were always under the impression in the department that Mr. Magness had something to do with the manufacturing of the scales, or rather that he was the inventor. But this is not the most important point. I may say, in passing, that we have never troubled Mr. Magness on account of his being the inventor, as we thought he was, but every hon. member will agree that it was preferable he should not inspect his own scales and that he should either stick to his invention or resign his position as inspector. But we never pressed him in that direction. The only correspondence that took place was for the purpose of informing him that if he was really the inventor and manufacturer and still retained some interest in the scale, it was not proper that he should inspect his own machine. With regard to the differences of opinion which might exist between our inspector and the gentleman who represented the interest of Mr. Magness, I have not much to say. I am not a practical man, and do not want to interfere between the two, but we have a report from Mr. Fyfe, who is considered not only a good practical man, but a man whose services as an expert have been utilized by large corporations such as the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not suppose that my hon. friend would care to have to use a machine which could not be inspected according to the laws of the department, but we gave every facility to the Globe Manufacturing Company or anybody else to perfect a machine which would give satisfaction to everybody. This having failed, we thought that the best and surest way was to introduce legislation which, for a time at least, will remedy the evil of which the farmers of the west have complained. If we have not succeeded in placing on the statute-book a perfect law, we have done the best we could under the circumstances.

Mr. McCREARY. Was Mr. Higman in the employ of the department as chief inpector, and for what length of time, and what is his occupation now ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When we had no chief inspector, Mr. Higman used at times to inspect some of those scales, but he was never chief inspector of weights and measures. He was only chief electrician.

Mr. McCREARY. This matter is somewhat mixed up. In the correspondence I have before me, which took place between the solicitors of this weighing machine company and the department, I find a letter of June the 17th, 1902, written to Mr. Robert Magness, inspector of weights and measures, Winnipeg :

Ottawa, June 17, 1902.

I have the honour to inform you that the Standard Grain Weigher, manufactured by the Globe Manufacturing Company of Winnipeg, has been examined and tested by the department, and the same has been admitted to verification in Canada.

I have the honour to be,

O. HIGMAN,

There you have official information from the department, with the knowledge of the hon. minister, that the officer, who had for many years been the only chief inspector of weights and measures in Canada, notified these gentlemen who were interested in this machine that it had been admitted to verification. Subsequently that machine was brought down here to be inspected by the Manitoba and territorial members, and was found to be correct. But at a later date some new light apparently came on the department, a new light had arisen in Israel in the person of Mr. Fyfe, who went back on the statement of Mr. Higman, and gave a lot of technical reasons to show why the machine was not correct. He subsequently, in a communication which I have not before me, reflects on the members from Manitoba and the North-west, who advocated this machine. Could they have done otherwise when they had the report of the highest official of the department that it was perfect ? Why does not Mr. Fyfe reflect on that official ? We have not heard the hon. minister say why that official was discharged or what he is doing now. But we have a verification of this machine—not by either one of these technically instructed men, men who were accustomed to see threshing done by the flail and weighed by the steelyard, and who know nothing about threshing as it is done on a large scale—but by farmers who have used it. I have letters from many of them, showing that this machine has done perfect work, and I would put their evidence every day against the evidence of men who have only technical knowledge. Another objection is that Mr. Magness was interested in the patent and should not be inspector. Well, if that were the case, it was the duty of the minister to dismiss him. As a matter of fact, I know that Mr. Magness had nothing to do with the patent. It is true that he acquired an interest in it, and if that was contrary to the rules of the department, the minister should have at once discharged him. I submit that this Bill should stand over, and if necessary we should have some farmers brought down here to give evidence under oath who have tested this machine. Ten or fifteen can be brought, and I think that any hon. gentleman will take their opinion, based on a practical test, in preference to that of Inspector Fyfe, with all his great ability.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have said already that Mr. Higman has never been chief inspector. I do not see why so much objection should be raised to this provision of the law, because it is only intended to allow the use of some machine. We are bound to do something, and, in order to enable Mr. Magness, or the Globe Manufacturing Company, or anybody else, to have the machine under their control or any other machine brought into use, we are introducing legislation in order that we may permit the use of any of these machines. Otherwise, they could not be legally used, unless we changed the whole law. This is a law of exceptions, it is a temporary law. I think that my hon. friend may be led into error in saying that Mr. Fyfe was discourteous to the hon. members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I do not so interpret his letter. The members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories were anxious that this machine should be supplied in order to be ready for last fall. What would be the result, even if farmers from Manitoba and the North-west were brought here to show that the machine was working well ? I do not say that it is not working well. But what I say is that, as the law is now it cannot be inspected ; and, in order to remedy that, and not to destroy the law entirely, I am now introducing a Bill by which that machine or any other may be used under certain conditions without inspection.

Mr. BOYD. Are there any special weighing machines at the present time in existence under license from the government?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have some. But a weighing machine is needed in the North-west Territories.

Mr. BOYD. I think that the evidence brought before the committee by the discussion that has taken place shows one thing very clearly—that through a spat, or misunderstanding, or whatever you call it, amongst the officers of the department over which the hon. gentleman presides, the farmers may suffer, or, rather, not the farmers, but those who have done five million dollars worth of work not a dollar of which they can legally collect for. And the correspondence brought down contains a letter from the chief inspector which was a gross piece of impertinence to the members of this House from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The responsibility for that, if the truth were known, rested upon the minister himself and his officers, for the desire of the members from Manitoba and the North-west was not that any particular machine should be adopted—not at all. It was the minister and his officers that brought this machine to the attention of the members from Manitoba and the North-west. In order to relieve the situation, the members from Manitoba and the North-west were prepared to accept it. And then to have these imputations cast upon them by an employee, a man who we are paying, decidedly too much. But while he thought he was reflecting upon the members from Manitoba and the North-west, he was reflecting upon his own minister and his predecessor. As has been shown by the correspondence, Mr. Higman verified this machine. The minister, in his speech a little while ago said that Mr. Higman had done this without authority. But I have here the correspondence. Under date of June 3rd, Mr. Magness writes to the deputy minister :

> I wrote Mr. O. Higman on May 27, that it was important to me that he should make his report on the standard grain weigher presented by me to the department.

And, in the reply of the deputy minister, you will find this paragraph :

> I will bring the matter of thresher scale to Mr. Higman's attention as soon as he returns to Ottawa, and the stereo should be sent in as soon as possible.

Does the minister wish the committee to believe that Mr. Higman made the report without any suggestion from any other officer ? Was it not more likely that the matter was brought to his attention as the deputy minister said, and that, in pursuance of instructions given him, he inspected the machine and made the report read by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary).

And then, this man was brought in from Montreal and pitchforked over the heads of men who, I believe, and I am sure the majority of the officers of the department believe, were his superiors in their qualifications for dealing with this matter. And this man, when he comes in, says: I am going to do this thing myself; I am going to have a measuring machine that will measure which weighs about five hundred pounds and will hang on the top of the thresher twenty feet high. His action was enough to show that, as the hon. member for Selkirk said, while he could deal with matters involving flails and reaping hooks, he was utterly incompetent to comprehend the conditions under which the work must be done to-day. And the members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories whose constituents are suffering through this delay and this quarrel in the department, are supposed to stand by and wait.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) says that a reflection was cast upon the members from Manitoba and the North-west by this report. Let me read the portion of the report referred to, and I will leave it to the judgment of the House if there is in it any bad feeling or any manifestation of a desire to reflect on any hon. members of this House:

> The members who are fighting the battle for the 'Grain threshing scale' makers, do not seem to see that they are unknowingly occupying a false position, opposed to their own interests and to the interests of those they represent.

Mr. BOYD. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) and I may differ as to the capacity of this man, but I have stated, and I repeat, that he was not brought here because he came from Montreal, but he was brought here because he was recognized as the best man who could be found throughout the whole Dominion for this work. And if my hon. friend doubts that, if he will come to my office at any time I shall be glad to show him letters from the scale manufacturers and merchants, throughout the Dominion, men of both political parties, strongly recommending that Mr. Fyfe should be selected for this work. The letter goes on, still speaking of the members from Manitoba and the North-west:

> They have within reach an article that will meet the requirements of law, which can be made by any manufacturer without royalty, and yet they are trying to force upon the farmers of the North-west an inferior machine that is patented and exclusive property of one manufacturer.

So, Mr. Fyfe cautions the hon. members from Manitoba and the North-west against the danger of having only one machine, and tells them there is a machine all ready to their hands. And he says they should not compel the people to use or the department to inspect and verify a scale which is not complete according to the requirements of the law.

Mr. BOYD. Who introduced that machine to the attention of members of the House?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Magness.

Mr. BOYD. Not at all, it was the Minister of Inland Revenue.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, we must not be mistaken. I have the whole correspondence here. Mr. Magness informed me that he was perfecting a machine which he thought might be inspected, and after he had submitted it to me, Mr. Higman, who I repeat has never been a chief inspector of weights and measures, asked Mr. Magness to come down with this machine in order to have it tested by a man of experience. Before that test was made, I presume the members of the North-west had examined it and found it satisfactory; still when we decided to inspect the machine, we called in the services of a man of experience. The objection is not against the machine itself. The real difficulty is to devise some means by which the farmers and the owners of the threshing machines may settle their difficulties without the intervention of a court. What would be the use of having a scale inspected which mighe be set aside by a court of justice, and thus multiply the expenses? We have done the best we could, and now we have come to the conclusion that, pending the time when we get a machine that will meet the requirements of the law, we had better introduce this legislation, which I hope will give relief to a certain extent.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, so long as we arrive at the desired end, I do not know that we need care just by what particular road the end is reached. I think the Bill will meet the object which we all have in view. It indirectly legalizes this machine which we are discussing, or any other machine on which the threshers and farmers may agree. I trust, therefore, that the Bill may pass. But I wish to endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) in regard to the attitude and action of this officer of the Inland Revenue Department. I am disposed to agree entirely with the minister, that Mr. Fyfe is an exceedingly clever gentleman; my own opinion is that he is too clever by half. I have read with some care the report that he has made regarding this automatic weighing device, and also the document that is at present in the possession of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart) answering the objections made by Mr. Fyfe. In one paragraph of this report which has already been read to the House, he suggests that he has recommended one machine, and I would point out to the minister that in that machine which Mr. Fyfe himself suggests, there are some of the same defects that he contends exist in the other machine which he condemns. The paragraph of Mr. Fyfe's report which is complained of is the following :—

The members who are fighting the battle for the 'Grain Threshing Scale' makers, do not seem to see that they are unknowingly occupying a false position, opposed to their own interests and to the interests of those they represent. They have within reach an article that will meet the requirements of the law, which can be made by any manufacturer, without royalty, and yet they are trying to force upon the farmers of the North-west an inferior machine that is patented and exclusive property of one manufacturer.

The members from Manitoba and the North-west may perhaps be super-sensitive, but I am bound to say that I entirely agree with what has been said by my hon. friend from Macdonald with regard to this paragraph. Of course, we all know that there are men who think they can run other peoples' businesses better than those people themselves. I suppose it has always been the case that there are certain members of the civil service at Ottawa who think that they can govern this Dominion a great deal better than parliament, and that it would be a great deal better if parliament were abolished and the government were left in their own hands. That may be perfectly true, but so long as the people, under the constitution, elect representatives to frame legislation, I think it would be well for every minister of the Crown to see that the officers under him do not cast such reflections upon members of this House as are cast by this paragraph. So long as we are sent here as representatives of the people, I beg to say that we are under no obligation or necessity to put up with the insolence of language which this officer introduces in his report.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

Bill (No. 182) to amend chapter 27 of the revised statutes respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery (the Minister of Justice) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick). The amendment is in the twentieth line in which the words 'not exceeding customary and fair commercial rates for similar work or supplies in similar quantities' are substituted for these words in the Act of 1893 'not exceeding that which would be charged for such printing' at the Printing Bureau. Under the Statute of 1893 authority was given to the government to have the printing which was required for the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway done elsewhere than at the Printing Bureau, and a provision was made in the Statute of 1893 that the cost of such printing should not exceed the cost at the Printing Bureau in Ottawa. That was found to be impracticable and as a result the work was always done at the printing offices in the maritime provinces at a cost exceeding the cost at which the work could be done at the Printing Bureau, and the King's Printer, Dr. Dawson, invariably certified the accounts as fair and reasonable. This went on from 1893 until November, 1902, when the Auditor General discovered that the certificates were not according to law, and as a result you will find a very protracted correspondence that was exchanged between the Printing Bureau and the Auditor General at page W—377 of the Auditor General's Report. The very minute the Auditor General objected to this certificate given by the King's Printer, the matter was referred to the Department of Justice, and we were obliged to report that the certificate was not sufficient under the statute, and that, while the custom had become almost equivalent to law, as objection had been taken by the Auditor General, there was nothing to do but to conform to the strict enforcement of the statute. As a result it has been found necessary to give statutory effect to the custom which has prevailed for years, and to substitute for the words in the old statute that at a cost not exceeding that which would be charged for such printing at the Printing Bureau ; these words 'at customary and fair commercial rates for similar work or supplies in similar quantities.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. Minister of Justice tell us what the average difference in cost is and what proportion of the stationery of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway is done in offices other than the Printing Bureau ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) the difference in cost, but I can give the rates that are paid. In an Order in Council passed in December, 1893, the rates for this printing were established and I have the figures here. The Order in Council has attached to it a schedule of the prices allowed for printing, &c., done outside of the Printing Bureau for the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railways. These rates are as follows :—

Schedule of Prices allowed for printing, &c., done outside the Bureau for the Intercolonial Railway.

	Cents.
Composition, tabular..	70
Composition, plain..	35
Alterations from copy per hour.. ..	25

	Cents.
Press work, per token	25
Ruling per hour	40 & 50
Folding per 100	7 & 8
Gathering and stitching per 100	8
Pasting covers per 100	40
Perforating per 1,000	25
Padding, per pad of 100 (Av.)	2
Number, per 100	3
Paging, per 100	3

I cannot give the difference in cost between the two, but the superintendent drew my attention to the fact that a large portion of his work is the printing of tickets used on the railway and he says that to equip a department such as would be requred to have this work done would cost about $50,000, and that it would be necessary to have a room in which the officials would be kept apart and treated in the same way as the officials of the Bank Note Company are treated, because these tickets are equivalent to cash and they would be dealt with in that way. In addition to that my attention has been drawn, referring to the correspondence that was exchanged at the time this Order in Council was passed in 1893, to the fact that the Printing Bureau never have charged anything for capital, insurance, wear and tear and various other items that form a very considerable ingredient in the estimate of cost of work done in an ordinary commercial establishment. You have also to bear in mind that there are no customs duties to be paid in connection with work done at the Printing Bureau which would have to be charged in connection with the work done on an ordinary commercial basis. I am not able to give the difference in cost between the rates for work done in an ordinary printing office and in the Printing Bureau, because they have not done such work at the Printing Bureau and they do not know what it would cost. These are the difficulties which were pointed out when this course was adopted in 1893, and this course has since then proved perfectly fair and reasonable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think the amount to be paid should be in accordance with fair commercial rates, but if these fair commercial rates are somewhat higher than the rates charged at the Printing Bureau it would seem to be reasonable that this printing should be done at the Printing Bureau as far as possible. I can appreciate what the hon. minister says in regard to the tickets, but I should think that a large portion of the matter required by these railways could be printed at the Printing Bureau. The printing of forms and other printing of that character, I should think, could be done there because you know some time in advance how much you will require and there seems to be no reason why that should not be done in the Printing Bureau. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) could tell us what portion of the work is done in the Printing Bureau and what portion is done elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I could not tell that very well at present. We are continuing the practice about on the same basis in that regard as it has been continued for a long period of years. The arrangement which my hon. friend the Hon. Minister of Justice says was made in 1893 was a well considered arrangement. It was reported upon and the views of the King's Printer were had on the subject. He argued the question, presented the reasons pro and con, the Auditor General agreed and it was submitted to the Governor in Council and approved of, and from that time down till November of last year the scale was continued uniformly and on the same basis and the printing was done at the various points along the route of the railway. The present action results from the view which the Auditor General took. I have not, in my mind, at the present moment, an accurate idea as to what portion of the printing is done in the Bureau and what portion outside. I would not like to state my view because I might fall short or exceed the fact, but I have no accurate idea of what portion of the printing is done in the Bureau or as to the difference between the charges, but the charges are based upon the rate which was adopted in 1893, and which has been uniformly continued for nine or ten years. I do know but that it is quite impossible to do a considerable portion of the work here. The distance is so great, and the necessity of sending the work back and forth for correction and so on, makes it impossible to do the work here with despatch. There are at present enough delays without needlessly increasing them. No public interest suffers by this. I would think that the clause which was decided upon after being well considered by the responsible and independent officers of the government in 1893, might very well be passed, as it is in this Bill.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I wish to read from a letter written by the Controller of Stationery and Queen's Printer in 1893, when this legislation was first considered :

> In the case of items (as railway tickets and coupons) which have never been done at the Bureau the rates paid by other railways were ascertained and similar rates were allowed. This method was continued for the three months from January 1, 1893, to April 1. On that day a statute was passed providing that such railway printing as it might suit the convenience of the railway to have done elsewhere might be so done but that the price should not exceed that which would be charged for such printing at the Bureau.
> While the prices in the schedule above referred to are such as would be charged under the ordinary conditions of the trade, the charges made to the department of government by the Bureau do not include rent, interest on capital, taxes, customs duty, general management, light, fuel. It therefore followed that, under one construction, the statute practically prohibited any work from being done outside the Bureau ; while the apparent intention of the Act was to do the very reverse ; for it seems to be contemplated by the Act that there is a class of printing which it suits the best interests of the railway to have performed upon the spot.

As respects the work done on tickets, he says :

As I have pointed out in my annual reports the Bureau is overcrowded with work during the session of parliament and there is not room enough in the building for the hands required. If a revision of the voters lists happens to coincide with a session of parliament the pressure is very much intensified. During the recess the work falls off and men are discharged, but the business of the Bureau is exceedingly uneven. The railway work, however, if done at the Bureau, would have to take precedence of all other work ; whether there be a session of the House or a revision of the lists going on ; for railway work is of such a nature that the utmost despatch is imperatively required. It would no doubt be easy to arrange that by extending the eastern wing of the Bureau ; and an estimate was made some time ago to do that when it was found that the cost would be about $50,000.

If my hon. friend will look at page W—339 of the Auditor General he will find that the cost of printing and lithographing for the Prince Edward Island Railway was $4,-698.19. I have not the returns for the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. PUTTEE. Where are the printing supplies obtained now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. As I understand it most of the tickets in use on railways in Canada are printed in Buffalo.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was under the impression they were printed by the Perrault Printing Company of Montreal, which it is said is well equipped for that business. I have not had occasion personally to have anything to do with it, so that I am not certain as to that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have been informed that nearly all the railway companies get their printing done in Buffalo because it cannot be done in Canada.

Mr. PUTTEE. As I understand it, the present law says that the Intercolonial Railway shall not pay higher rates for printing than the Government Printing Bureau at Ottawa could do the work for, and that this was not found to be practicable. The amendment is brought in so that the King's Printer may allow such just and reasonable rates as he thinks proper. That is the reason for the amendment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Partly.

Mr. PUTTEE. Does this refer to accounts which have already been incurred or to future work ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. To both.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a number of printing bills unpaid since last November. They will not take the money that has been offered to them and at present if they do not do so they will get nothing.

On section 3,

Mr. PUTTEE. I suggest to the minister the striking out of the words 'with the approval of the minister,' so as to leave the Bureau under the control of a practical superintendent, who would carry it on the same as in an ordinary concern. I believe that involves the whole question of patronage in the Bureau, and that if these words be stricken out, political interference will be done away with and the Bureau operated with more profit and satisfaction to the country. Has the minister considered the striking out of these words ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, I have considered that. So long as we can have a King's Printer of the calibre of the gentleman at present occupying the office, I would feel perfectly safe, but no one can foretell what the future holds in store for us. I may safely say that there is no department connected with the government which is freer from political interference than the Department of Printing, but there must be some one responsible to this House, and that responsibility should rest on the shoulders of the minister. If you were to strike out these words it might mean that the House would hold the superintendent responsible. I think it is better that the responsibility should rest upon the minister.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Even with those words in I should think that the responsibility would be upon the minister.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I presume so, but a doubt might be occasioned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would depend upon whether the general provision of the statute declared that this department was under the control of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I assumed that the general statute did that. It would not be the case if there was not a general statute to that effect.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is it not a fact that the Superintendent of Printing has practically no discretion at all in the employment or discharge of the employees in the Bureau, but that the minister alone, subject to all the pressure that is brought to bear upon him, puts in or takes out any that he pleases ? Is it not a fact that people who go to work in that Bureau can absolutely defy the officers of the Bureau ; that there is no officer there who has any power to discharge a man ; that if a man does not do the work at all, or whether he is competent or not, or even if he appears there regularly under the influence of liquor, no one in the Bureau can discharge him ? This I think, is involved in that question of having the approval of the minister ; everything is involved in that. I do not wish the minister to understand me in any way to criticise the present Superintendent of Printing. I quite agree with him that if we could be sure of having such a Superintendent there in the future, it would be wise to give him full control ; but I do not think that even the present King's Printer is the only one, and that he can never have a successor. When the time comes, I think the minister will be able to choose just as competent and worthy a Superintendent of Printing as we have at the present time. I make this suggestion, because I believe it would do away with a good deal of the trouble which the government has had to shoulder lately in connection with the Printing Bureau.

On the schedule,

Order in Council.

On a report, dated 27th November, 1893, from the Secretary of State, stating that, with a view to prevent any unreasonable increase to the cost of work by gradual accretions to the rates of wages paid at the Printing Bureau, it is expedient to lay down the principle that the rates of wages paid to the operatives employed should be based upon the current rates for similar work throughout the Dominion, and that, for more special guidance to the officers of the department, it is advisable to order that the rates of wages in the cities of Montreal and Toronto shall, for the future, be taken as a standard not to be exceeded.

Mr. PUTTEE. May I ask the minister, has this been observed in the past ? Is that what is governing there now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I understand that the rule laid down by the Order in Council has been strictly observed up to the present time.

Mr. PUTTEE. Of course, the minister knows that there has been a good deal of difference of opinion as to what are the rates of wages in the cities of Montreal and Toronto. There is no agreement on that subject at all, and I would like to know whether he has any plan of ascertaining what are the rates of wages in those two cities ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Surely it ought to be possible for a practical printer to ascertain what are the rates prevailing in a printing establishment in Montreal or Toronto.

Mr. PUTTEE. It is, as a matter of fact, a very hard question to determine, because there is a difference between the two cities in that respect. Toronto has a higher wage scale, so far as printing is concerned, than Montreal. But I think the point to be determined here is, what is to be taken as the rate of wages ? Is it the average rate ? If so, how is that average rate to be ascertained ? I would suggest that the city of Ottawa be included, or else that only one city be taken. As a matter of fact, you cannot get the average of three cities, because there would be no fair basis. If there is to be any real attempt to carry out the idea of this clause, it should be amended by adding that this rate shall be ascertained by the fair wage officer once every year or once every two years ; otherwise there is no way of being sure what is the current rate. Now, I am aware what this question involves, because it has been discussed lately. It is claimed that the men in the Bureau are getting higher wages than those which prevail in Montreal, in Toronto, or in Ottawa. It is claimed, without any proof being brought forward, that they are getting more than the union rate of wages in those cities. Most people who know very little about trades organizations maintain that a union fixes a rate of wages which every body must get—a maximum rate. In the printing business this is altogether wrong. The union only sets a minimum rate. I believe the minimum rate in Montreal is $12 a week. The current rate for competent men is far above that. There are plenty of men in the city of Montreal to-day getting twice what the union calls for. In the city of Toronto, I believe the minimum rate is $12.50. The current average rate would be about $15. Whether the minister recognizes the fact or not, the ascertaining of the rates in either of these cities is a very complicated question. In the Bureau at the present time there is a flat rate for every man, whether he is competent or not. The government have put in force that very principle which we object to in trades organizations, that a flat rate should be enforced, that ability should not be worth more than non-ability. At the present time the rate is higher than the minimum rate in either Montreal or Toronto. At the same time, if this provision is to go into effect, it should be understood whether it is the current average rate or the current minimum rate that is to be fixed, and some machinery should be provided for ascertaining the rate. The rates of wages in Montreal and Toronto have been gradually rising. In Toronto they are lower to-day than they should be, because two years ago the employers and employees signed a scale covering three years, and, although they are loyally standing by that agreement, yet, as a matter of fact there are very few men getting as low a rate as the agreement calls for. Therefore, I am sure that the minister will see that it is by no means definitely settled what the rates are in those two cities. Then there is this other fact, that the two cities differ materially. They have never had the same basis. Toronto has been never so low down as the city of Montreal. Again the institution to which this will apply is not like any in either of those cities, and whether higher or lower, the rate should be fixed on the average actually prevailing.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The way we fix prices in Montreal is this: The employers and the printers talk the matter over. The employers discuss the prices with the leaders of the union, and these prices are fixed for the year. The agreement binds both parties, and either party has a right to put an end to it by giving so many months notice. I believe that that is a very fair way of settling things. We have no trouble whatever with our men. The men employed in the office with which I am connected are all union men. Their wages are fixed in the way I have pointed out, and I do not see why the same process should not be followed here. The King's Printer occupies the position of employer in any office where union men are employed. I believe that the way I have pointed out is a very fair way and that my hon. friend is taking a wrong standpoint. Let the men and the employers come together as closely as they can. One reason why there is no trouble between employers and printers is because we have daily relations together. I suppose that I see the men employed in my office ten times a day, I am glad to see them and they are not sorry to see me. We have one man who has been with us for twenty-five years, and who is counted as one of ourselves. My hon. friend is taking a wrong stand in asking for an outside party. Although I recognize the ability of some of the men in the Labour Bureau, I think that the best and most rational way is to have the employers and employees settle wages and their business relations together. That is what is done in Montreal. If my hon. friend will do us the pleasure to come and see us, he will find harmony and amity and good will between employers and employees. Again, I ask why the same process, which is successfully carried out in Montreal, should not be carried out here? My hon. friend takes a standpoint which is not right.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is the hon. gentleman referring to me or the minister?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am referring to my hon. friend just opposite. Let the King's Printer discuss prices with the recognized leaders of the men. If union men have to be employed in the Bureau, as they are in all the offices in Montreal, I do not see any reason why the King's Printer and the men should not live in peace and harmony.

Mr. PUTTEE. My hon. friend is mistaken in referring to me as wishing to go out to a third party. I object to this Bill because it goes out to a third party. It goes out to find the rates of wages in other cities. If that is to be followed there should be a rule laid down as to how it is to be carried out and what rate you are to find out whether a minimum or current rate. I think the hon. member for St. Mary's is mixing me up with the minister.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, I think if things were pushed to a right conclusion, there would be no necessity for a scale of wages at all, because it seems to me that the employees of the Printing Bureau should be placed on the very same basis as ourselves. There is no reason why they should be better treated and have less working hours, and there is no reason why they should be put on a better footing than printers elsewhere. Elsewhere we do not call upon anybody to discuss wages with our men, and we and our men are working in great harmony, indeed.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is there any difference in the scale of wages? I understood by the Ottawa papers that the strike in the Bureau was uncalled for, because the printers got more wages than the same class of men on the city papers. Is that the case or is it not?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot tell what is paid by the city papers. But I may say that the wages paid at the Bureau are higher than those paid at the city offices. There are also advantages connected with employment at the Printing Bureau that outside men do not enjoy. The minimum rate of wages paid at the Printing Bureau per week is $13.50 for forty-eight hours' work.

Mr. INGRAM. What class of men is that?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I apprehend that the best men are paid higher wages than the minimum rates, and in addition they have the following holidays, for which they are paid: New Year's Day, Good Friday, Queen's Birthday, Dominion Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day. In addition they are frequently granted holidays, such as a half a day during exhibition week or on other special occasions.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the maximum rate?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know. I asked about the rate, and I received from the King's Printer a rather interesting reply. He said that if any person not familiar with the practical work of a printer will allow himself to be drawn into a discussion on such a highly technical matter as rates of wages and of classes of work, he would be as helpless as an ordinary layman would be in discussing points of law in the company of lawyers.

Mr. COCHRANE. He does not know as much about lawyers as we do in this House.

Mr. INGRAM. It would be interesting if we had the rates of wages paid all the men.

I think we would find some paid at $1.50 per week.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that there are some boys from twelve to thirteen years old employed to carry paper from one room to another at a dollar and a half a week.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there not girls employed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is not in my department ?

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE DESJARDINS CANAL.

Bill (No. 183) respecting the Desjardins canal (the Minister of Justice) read the second time and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This Bill is fully explained by the recitals and by the statement of the hon. minister with regard to it on its first reading.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). It was explained more fully by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). It is an involved complicated question and he understands it better than I do.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 184) to amend the Patent Act (the Minister of Agriculture) read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. The deputy commissioner of patents may do any act or thing, whether judicial or ministerial, which the commissioner of patents is authorized or empowered to do by any provision of the Patent Act (hereinafter referred to as the said Act) or by any Act in amendment thereof; and, in the absence of the deputy commissioner and person performing the duties of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture pursuant to section 14 of the Civil Service Act may, as acting deputy commissioner, do any such act or thing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the provision of the Civil Service Act here referred to ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). It is that council may appoint a chief clerk to act for and do the work of the deputy commissioner, and consequently it applies to the portion of this clause which refers to the acting commissioner.

On section 2,

The section substituted for section 8 of the said Act, by section 1 of chapter 24 of the statutes of 1892, is amended by striking out all the words after the word 'inventor' in the thirteenth line thereof.

Notwithstanding anything contained in said section 8, or in the said substituted section, no Canadian patent heretofore issued shall be deemed to have expired before the end of the term for which it was granted merely because of the expiry of a foreign patent for the same invention.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the effect of this ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This affects one of the most important provisions of the present law. If the hon. member will refer to the present Act he will find :

Under any circumstances the existence of the Canadian patent shall expire at the earliest date on which the foreign patent of the same invention expires.

This has been the law in Canada for many years, and it was for some years the law in both England and the United States. Both those countries have repealed that provision of their law, and in consequence many cases of hardship have arisen to our own inventors. It is intended to make the life of a Canadian patent entirely independent of the life of the same patent in a foreign country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the object of inserting these words in the first instance ? I understand that this provision which is being struck out of this section does not now exist in Great Britain and the United States.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In England it was repealed in 1893 and in the United States in 1897. In a general way the patent office of the United States has quite approved of this, and has found its operation more satisfactory. The patent solicitors of Canada are all in favour of it, as well as the patentees. I may say also that last year an eminent authority on patent law in Great Britain, Mr. Lloyd Wise, stated that the working out of this change in the British law was eminently satisfactory, and strongly recommended us to do the same.

On subsection 2 of section 2,

Nothwithstanding anything contained in the said section 8, or in the said substituted section no Canadian patent heretofore issued shall be deemed to have expired before the end of the term for which it was granted merely because of the expiry of a foreign patent for the same invention.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will there be any difficulty in connection with patents that are supposed to have expired, and which have therefore been used generally in this country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have later on in this Act a section which preserves all rights acquired. In section 14 it is provided that any acquired rights under such expiry as the hon. gentleman alludes to shall be protected.

On section 4,

Every patent granted under the said Act shall, unless otherwise ordered by the commissioner as hereinafter provided, be subject and expressed to be subject to the following conditions :—

(a.) Such patent and all the rights and privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine, and the patent shall be null and void at the end of two years from the date thereof, unless the patentee or his legal representatives, within that period or an authorized extension thereof, commence, and after such commencement continuously carry on in Canada, the construction or manufacture of the invention patented, in such a manner that any person desiring to use it may obtain it, or cause it to be made for him at a reasonable price, at some manufactory or establishment for making or constructing it in Canada ;

(b.) If, after the expiration of twelve months from the granting of a patent, or an authorized extension of such period, the patentee or patentees, or any of them, or his or their or any of their legal representatives, for the whole or a part of his or their or any of their interest in the patent, imports or import or causes or cause to be imported into Canada, the invention for which the patent is granted, such patent shall be void as to the interest of the person or persons so importing or causing to be imported.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are one or two verbal changes only, but they do not in any way change the sense. The first strikes out the words 'or his assignee' in subsection A of section 4, these words being superfluous. The word 'any' is changed to 'an' because it is clear under the judgment of the Supreme Court that only one exception can be granted. The same changes are made in paragraph B, but the sense is not changed.

On section 7,

On the application of the applicant for a patent, previous to the issue thereof, or on the application within six months after the issue thereof, or on the application within six months after the issue of the patent of the patentee or his legal representatives, or on the application within six months hereafter of the owner of any patent heretofore issued and now in force or by this Act revived, the commissioner, having regard to the nature of the invention, may order that such patent, instead of being subject to the condition set forth in paragraph (a) of section four of this Act, shall be subject to the following conditions, that is to say :—

(a.) Any person, at any time while the patent continues in force, may apply to the commissioner by petition for a license to make, construct, use and sell the patented invention, and the commissioner shall, subject to general rules to be made for carrying out this section, hear the person applying and the owner of the patent, and if he is satisfied that the reasonable requirements of the public in reference to the invention have not been satisfied by reason of the neglect or refusal of the patentee or his legal representatives to make, construct, use or sell the invention, or to grant licenses to others on reasonable terms to make, construct, use or sell the same, may make an order under his hand and the seal of the patent office requiring the owner of the patent to grant a license to the person applying therefor, in such form, and upon such terms as to the duration of the license, the amount of the royalties, security for payment, and otherwise, as the commissioner, having regard to the nature of the invention and the circumstances of the case, deems just ;

(b.) The commissioner may, if he thinks fit, and shall on the request of either of the parties to the proceedings, call in the aid of an assessor, specially qualified, and hear the case wholly or partially with his assistance ;

(c.) The existence of one or more licenses shall not be a bar to an order by the commissioner for, or to the granting of, a license on any application, under this section ; and

(d.) The patent and all rights and privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine, and the patent shall be null and void, if the commissioner makes an order requiring the owner of the patent to grant any license, and the owner of the patent refuses or neglects to comply with such order within three calendar months next after a copy of it is addressed to him or to his duly authorized agent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this legislation founded upon legislation in any other country, or is it entirely new ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is practically identical with legislation which has been adopted in England recently. Mr. Lloyd Wise has worked out the problem, has submitted his conclusions to the parliament of Great Britain and has recommended them to us. I may say that the reason why this legislation seems to be necessary at the present time is that the Supreme Court decided that a patentee, being prepared to supply the goods in Canada on demand was not sufficient justification for the life of a patent. Until that decision of the Supreme Court, the patent officer had always held and the courts had also held that if a patentee was ready to supply the goods but did not manufacture them his patent remained valid. After the decision of the Supreme Court in December last in the case of Powell vs. Griffin, I think it was, it is evident that the practice of the department and these rulings of the courts were not sustained, and today, if the patentee does not actually manufacture or produce the article in Canada within a certain time his patentee becomes null and void. There are classes of patents under which it is practically impossible for the patentee to produce or manufacture the article in Canada. One of these classes refers to an article of great construction, a class of articles or things of which practically only one or two would be constructed in the country. For instance there is a graving dock or a lift lock, such as has recently been constructed on the canal, or an elevator, things that are patentable but the use of which is very rare, and to require that a patent shall expire if it has not been made use of and the thing has not been constructed in the country is certainly an injustice and is destroying the object and aim of the patent law of encouraging inventors to invent these things and get them patented. This Bill provides machinery by which, when the patentee has such a patent as that, he can apply to the commissioner and protect himself without actually constructing the thing or getting it constructed because he makes provision by which, if it is required in the country, it can be constructed, and this section puts into the hands of the commissioner of patents the entire control of the terms and conditions under which construction shall be carried out under a reasonable and fair basis to both the patentee and the person who wishes to use the patent. There is another class of patents which would come under this provision and that is the class called patents of processes, for instance, a patent for using a chemical process in manufacture. This is a class of patents which cannot be used unless the industry in which these processes are supposed to be useful is carried on in the country. If it is carried on and if the people who are carrying it on desire to use a patent such as this, then and then only, would the patentee be in a position to put the process into operation or sell his patent. Now, this thing is entirely out of the control of the patentee and it seems to me that it would be unreasonable that this patent should lapse and become void under such circumstances. That patent would also come under the provisions of this section; and enable the patentee to apply to come in under that clause and this enables the commissioner to control the arrangement under which he would retain his patent and provide proper facilities in the country for its use.

Mr. INGRAM. The commissioner has the right to extend the time beyond the two years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The extension of time is the same under this clause as it is under the clauses of the other Act.

Mr. INGRAM. If the patent is not called into use within a reasonable time the commissioner would have power to extend the time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The commissioner does not require to extend the time under this clause. The extensions of time to which the hon. gentleman refers could only apply to patents which did not come under the provisions of this clause and there is no change with regard to that.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 7,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood from the minister that subsection (a) of this Act was intended to give relief to the patentee with respect to certain articles that could only be manufactured from time to time for a special purpose. On looking at the section I cannot quite see that it has that effect. Suppose that no one makes this application to the commissioner in what way is the patentee relieved. It cannot be a relief to the patentee unless some one applies, and the statute surely does not presume that he shall appoint some one to collusively apply.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the patentee has made that application and it has been sanctioned by the commissioner, then the patent shall not be void from neglect to manufacture, sell or construct the article patented. The first part of the clause is really the important one and the remaining portions simply provide for the machinery. If the patentee was allowed to come in under this clause and then was allowed to make his own bargain with the licensee he could practically nullify the public interest in the patent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is perfectly clear.

On section 19, validity of certain extensions heretofore granted,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This clause is for the purpose of making valid certain patents which, in the judgment of the Supreme Court, have been practically declared to be null and void. The reason for this proposal to make them valid is that their becoming invalid was due to the wrong construction of the law by the department and by previous judgments, which wrong construction was in no sense the fault of the patentees. They fulfilled the law as it was read by the department and by the courts until the judgment of the Supreme Court was delivered last December. We therefore propose to render such patents valid.

On section 10, condition of validity of certain patents heretofore granted,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this provision new ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to render valid certain patents the owners of which followed the judgment of the department delivered in the case of Barter vs. Smith in 1877, and it has always been the ruling of the department that patentees were not obliged actually to construct or furnish the invention, but that they should always hold themselves ready to do so. That reading was held to be within the necessities of the law, the department had decided a case in that sense in 1877, and it had always been acted upon since. Consequently, the department was, so to speak, particeps criminis if on that account a patent became invalid. This section will reinstate those patents which have become technically invalid by reason of this new interpretation of the law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the order referred to in subsection (b) to be granted upon a hearing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This applies to existing patents which have had no opportunity up to the present to come under this licensing clause. We now give them six months to come under the licensing clause, just as in the case of new patents under section 7.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are there any words which require judicial determination ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. According to section 7, when the applicant makes application to have his patent put under the licensing clause instead of under the ordinary terms of the Act, the commissioner has to determine whether it is such a patent as ought to come under the licensing clause. After it has been so adjudged by the commissioner, he will issue an order for a license. In this case, under section 10, the same rule of procedure is followed, and existing patents which are allowed six months within which to come under the licensing clause, will have to be dealt with by the commissioner in exactly the same way as new applications for patents to be placed under the licensing clause. Under section 52 of the general Act the commissioner may make, subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council, the rules and regulations necessary for the purposes of this Act.

On section 11,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to remove a difficulty in connection with section 39 of the general Act. It is contended by some parties that the $4 is not an additional over and above the usual fee for renewing the patent, and we want to make it clear that it is.

On section 12,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to provide that applications for patents shall not be open to public inspection, and thus be exempted from the general provision that all papers connected with patents are opened to public inspection. The whole value of a patent may depend on the application being kept secret.

On section 13,

Notwithstanding anything in the said Act contained, in the case of any application to the commissioner made within the time prescribed by the said Act or by this Act, and pending on the 9th day of April, one thousand nine hundred and three, or of any such application thereafter made within such time, for an extension of time to construct or manufacture a patented invention or to import it into Canada, the commissioner may, until the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and four, grant such extension after the time so prescribed, and any extension so granted shall have the same effect as if granted within the time so prescribed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This requires some explanation. A case came before the department not long ago of an application made for an extension of the time within which to manufacture in the country. It has been usual in the department, where there was no opposition filed, to grant such extensions of time on the mere statement of the applicant. In this case there was an opposition, the case was discussed and the opposing views were represented before the commissioner. Eventually the case was referred to the Department of Justice, and that department gave a written opinion that no extension of time should be granted unless valid arguments were given in the application, and unless it was shown that it was absolutely proper to grant the extension, and the patentee was prevented by circumstances beyond his control from manufacturing within the specified time. This was an entirely new practice, but, with the written opinion of the Department of Justice to that effect, it is understood we must change our practice, and, for the future, only grant extensions of time when such cause is shown. It has been the practice for people to come asking for extension of time within a week or two of the date of expiry of their term. In many cases, where the patentee lives at a distance, it would be physically impossible for him to have his application returned with an explanation of what was required, and come back within the time required for proper consideration. We, therefore, ask that the commissioner be allowed until the 1st of January next to concede such application, even if the concession is granted a little while after the time specifically allowed. We believe that by the 1st of January the new practice in the department will be well known and all such applicants will have an opportunity of making their application well within that period. This is a mere concession in consequence of the change of the practice in the department.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. minister if he has received any complaint with regard to any of these clauses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed by my deputy that there has been none. I may say for the information of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that this has been fully discussed with the patent solicitors of the country, the Department of Justice, and a number of the patentees who are interested in large patents, and it is quite in accord with their desires. At the same time, we have tried to safeguard the public interest and prevent any unjust discrimination.

On section 14,

In the case of any patent which has heretofore become void or the validity of which might heretofore have been impeached, and which is revived or protected from impeachment by any provision of this Act, any person who has, between the time when such patent became void or when the ground for such impeachment arose, and the time of the passing of this Act, commenced to manufacture, use or sell in Canada the invention covered by such patent, may continue to manufacture, use or sell in as full and ample a measure as if this Act had not been passed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is a saving clause to protect acquired rights. I may say to my hon. friend from West Toronto that my deputy informs me that there was one protest which came in lately against the provisions of this particular clause. This is the only protest of any kind we have had against any provision of the Act. This Act makes valid and legal some patents which have become void. In this clause we seek to provide that any rights which have been acquired during the invalidity of these patents shall be maintained and conserved.

Mr. CLARKE. Does this mean acquired rights by reason of patentees' neglect ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not that ; but patentees have been at fault in complying with the law. By the decision of the Supreme Court in December last it was found that patentees had not complied with the law and that their patents are null and void. Under this Act we make those patents valid, re-enacting them. During the period when they were invalid certain rights may have been acquired——

Mr. CLARKE. By other parties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. We do not know that they have been, but they may have been. Under this section we protect any such rights.

Mr. CASGRAIN. May I ask that this Bill be allowed to stand in committee on section 7 until to-morrow or the day after ?

Progress reported.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 193) to amend the Public Works Act (the Minister of Public Works) was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Section 13 of the Public Works Act, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :—

The minister shall invite tenders, by public advertisement, for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in cases in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department, or in cases where the estimated cost of the work is less than $5,000, and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What change would this effect in the law ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). After the word 'Department' in the twelfth line, we have added :

Or in cases where the estimated cost of the work is less than $5,000 it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

I have not the Order in Council under which the department has been acting for many years, but I understand from the Deputy minister that it is a copy of the Order in Council which, in some cases, that were referred to by the Auditor General, it was decided was ultra vires, and we have not power under the Act to pass such an order. It would be impossible almost to manage the affairs of the department without such a provision as this. I have adopted the provision, because it was the manner in which the department had been working for so long. Those words are added to the present clause, and I thought it was better to re-enact the whole clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then the Order in Council which has been held to be beyond the powers of the Governor in Council contained provisions such as are proposed to be enacted in the remaining words of this section ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of it ? In the first place, you have power in cases where delays would be dangerous to the public interest. In the second place, you have power where the nature of the work is such that it can be more expeditiously and economically executed; then you are taking power in the third place, where the estimated cost is less than $5,000, and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders. What would be the scope of that in actual practice ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The first applies more particularly to cases of injury by floods, or fire, or unforeseen circumstances; the second and particularly third cases, apply almost altogether to cases where the amounts would be small, and in cases where it would be impossible for the officers of the department to prepare specifications.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did not the minister have that power where it is under $5,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. And this will cover a case where accidents might happen on a canal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the intention.

Mr. COCHRANE. The old Act covered a case like that, no matter what the expense was. Where unforeseen accidents happened you had the power to repair them at once ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is perfectly right. The Act does not provide for this, but it was thought it did, and an Order in Council was based upon it. I do not know why the amount was fixed at $5,000. It is like all other privileges that are given the department, it might be abused. But the intention is to allow the department latitude in dealing with these small matters. The minister will have to be responsible for any abuse of this power. I have talked the matter over with the deputy minister, and no other suggestion was made that would answer the purpose any better.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suppose a case where a public work would probably cost $20,000, and an appropriation of $5,000 is first asked for by the minister and expended, then next year the work is continued, and a further appropriation is obtained and that has been expended, then another appropriation of $5,000 is obtained, and so on until the work is completed. Now, does the minister consider that under this Bill he would have power to do all this work without asking for public tenders, or, it being a work that would cost the country $20,000, he would not feel under an obligation to call for public tenders ? If the Minister of Public Works could divide up the undertaking and continue it over year after year, there would be no difficulty in expending a very large sum of money without public tenders. I would like to know what the minister's views are on that question ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Speaking for myself, I should say that for a minister to proceed with a work as the hon. gentleman has put it, would be a straight violation of the spirit of the Act. I would not think of facing the House after having acted as he puts the case. The intention is that the minister shall have the power I have explained, and no more. If he undertook a work that would cost a large amount of money, and let it in small pieces year after year, I would look upon that as a subterfuge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There does not seem to be any special reason why a wharf or public work costing less than $5,000 should not be performed by public tender, just as it would be performed by tender if it cost $20,000. The criticism I would be inclined to make upon this section is that it is rather too general in its terms. It gives to the minister an absolute discretion as to all sums under $5,000, and yet it seems to me that there is just as much reason for spending some of those sums by public tender as larger sums. Of course, I understand that in case of repairs where you cannot tell how much they will cost before beginning the work, perhaps it would be well to give the minister even a little more latitude than he has here ; whereas in cases of a new piece of work where no reason exists why a tender should not be called for, I think perhaps it would be better in the public interest that he did not have this discretion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not for a minute propose, nor do we now take advantage of this provision of $5,000, to defeat the spirit of the Act by not advertising for tenders. I think during the last month we have had several works under $5,000, and in every case they have been advertised for. I have had cases myself of accidents by storms where the amount required in the long run was over $5,000, and I have come to parliament and explained the conditions. So long as the minister keeps within the intention of the Act and advertises for public tenders for all works, there can be no danger.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

ACT RESPECTING INFECTIOUS OR CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AFFECTING ANIMALS.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 194) respecting infectious or contagious diseases affecting animals.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I must call attention to the fact that this Bill, the second reading of which is now moved, and several others which have been inscribed with the Orders of the Day, have not yet been printed into French. I must call the attention of the government to that fact, although we do not wish to delay the work of the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) objects to going on with this Bill. Of course, if there is any objection we cannot go on, but perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow us to proceed in committee and then if it is desirable the Bill can stand for further consideration.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am calling the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that we are reserving our rights.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. Minister of Agriculture intend to carry this Bill through its second reading and also the committee stage to-night ? I think we are proceeding too rapidly in regard to a Bill of this kind. I am quite satisfied that there are people in the country who ought to be consulted and only to-day had I the opportunity of sending a copy of the Bill to men who are interested in the breeding of cattle, with a view of getting information in regard to it. I think an opportunity should be given to allow members to hear from their constituents as to what they think of the Bill. There will be abundance of time even if it lies over for a week. I have no objection to proceeding a certain stage, but do not press the Bill to its conclusion to-night so that an opportunity will be afforded for further discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Bill is not distributed here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, I have a copy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I certainly have no disposition to press the Bill to a conclusion. If hon. gentlemen do not object to going into committee and discussing it, we can leave it in committee until such time as they have an opportunity of making inquiries. Perhaps the discussion upon it might elicit points upon which hon. gentlemen can get further information and be in a better position to discuss the Bill at a later stage.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Now that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has arrived with those papers, I suppose there is no object in objecting to this Bill going on.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The cat is out of the bag.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Why do you not go into Committee of Supply ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are not ready for it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We are ready for it.

Mr. INGRAM. They do not want supply.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In explanation of this section, I may say there are one or two slight amendments. For instance, in subsection (b) the expression 'foreign animals,' means animals not already introduced into Canadian territory outside of quarantine. The intention is that animals in quarantine are to be termed 'foreign animals' until they are released from quarantine. In the original Act they were not termed so.

On section 3,

Every owner of animals and every breeder of or dealer in animals, and every one bringing animals into Canada, shall, on perceiving the appearance of infectious or contagious disease among the animals owned by him or under his special care, give immediate notice to the minister and to the nearest veterinary inspector of the Department of Agriculture, of the facts discovered by him as aforesaid.

2. Any veterinary surgeon practising in Canada shall, immediately on ascertaining that an animal is labouring under an infectious or contagious disease, give similar notice to the minister and to the nearest veterinary inspector.

3. Every person neglecting to give notice as required by this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars.

Mr. McGOWAN. Does this section affect animals in transit through Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, if an animal passing through Canada in transit, or at the time of entry, has a contagious or infectious disease, notice must be immediately given to the Minister of Agriculture and the nearest veterinary inspector of the department, of that fact. The old Act required that notice should be given to the Minister of Agriculture, but not to the nearest veterinary inspector.

Mr. CARGILL. Does it apply to American export cattle going through in bond, and which are shipped by way of Dominion ports ?

Mr. McGOWAN. There are a great many cattle coming and going through Canada. It seems to me that these cattle should be subject to inspection and if there is any disease that the provisions of the Act should be applied.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These cattle will be subject to this provision and if disease is found amongst them the owner must immediately notify the Minister of Agriculture and the nearest veterinary inspector. My hon. friend asks whether it would apply to animals in bond. That is a legal question that I would not like to give an opinion upon, but it likely would. Animals in bond are not in bond as far as contagious diseases are concerned.

Mr. CARGILL. Will the government have an inspector at Toronto for the purpose of examining and reporting upon these cattle, because the parties owning them, if the animals are affected by disease, would not be likely to report ? In that case will some official notify the minister ? The person in charge of these cattle will not be likely to give that notice.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The railways are obliged to give notice to the department.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Is there an inspector at all ports where American cattle come in ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We know that this trade only applies to certain ports and at these ports we have inspectors. The customs collectors are bound to call a veterinarian in any case of suspicion, but since the quarantine arrangement was made between us and the United States we have not inspectors at all ports.

Mr. GILMOUR. Are the cattle which come through in bond and which are fed in Toronto, inspected on the frontier, or only when they come to Toronto, or are they inspected at all ? The present system of feeding this cattle at Toronto is a most dangerous one. We have little opportunity to know whether these American animals are free from disease or not. They are fed and watered in the Toronto yards, and then young cattle are taken into the same pens and purchased there and distributed throughout Ontario. It is in my opinion the most dangerous thing in connection with our cattle trade. It is, I should think, impossible to know when diseased American cattle may come upon the scene.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These United States cattle coming through in bond are all certified at the point of starting by the United States inspectors as being sound for export. They are allowed out in the pens at Toronto just like our own cattle and they are watched by the railway authorities who are obliged to report in case of disease. We must remember that this quarantine arrangement is only in existence so long as the United States is a healthy country, and when disease appeared in the New England states a short time ago we closed our frontier against New England cattle. We would do the same in case there was disease in the Western states. This quarantine arrangement has been in existence for six years and there has not been a single instance where the disease was traced to these cattle.

Mr. GILMOUR. It is a great pity that these American cattle cannot be examined before they cross the frontier. It would be a most unfortunate thing should disease break out in our country, because the result would be that we could not ship our cattle at all, and as we have no dead meat trade our cattle business would be paralyzed. Too much care cannot be taken in this matter. There is no way in which disease can be so easily introduced as by the existing arrangement. I trust that the minister will take every precaution.

Mr. McGOWAN. I wish to emphasize what my hon. friend (Mr. Gilmour) has said in reference to this. It would be most lamentable if disease were introduced into Canada by these cattle passing through in bond. The farmers of Ontario buy their stockers on the Toronto market, and if our animals should catch disease in these pens our whole cattle trade would be destroyed. I would like to impress upon the minister that there should be some inspection of these American cattle at the Toronto yards.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Does the minister know that all these cattle are inspected at the point of embarkation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They have to be certified by the United States authorities.

Mr. GILMOUR. But not by the Canadian authorities.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, We have a mutual arrangement by which we accept United States inspection and they accept ours; we having the same privileges to send cattle in bond to the United States as they have through Canada. No one would be more willing than I to safeguard our cattle.

Mr. GILMOUR. I know that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am perfectly satisfied that there is no danger because there is no disease in these states.

Mr. GILMOUR. When the minister says there is no disease in these states, it must be remembered that it is hard to tell where these cattle come from to Chicago. They may be from Texas, Mexico or a great many other states. I do not know whether these cattle are disembarked at other places than Toronto or Montreal, but it would seem to me that it would be most desirable that they should be fed and watered at some other point than the Toronto stock yards, even if it cost some expense to the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These cattle could not come from Texas or Mexico——

Mr. GILMOUR. I suppose that is so, but at all events they come from a very wide territory surrounding Chicago.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. The hon. gentleman mentioned Texas and Mexico, but these are countries which are infected with disease and we do not allow their cattle to come in at all. The United States authorities themselves do not allow cattle to pass from Mexico through New Mexico and Texas north of a line whch runs somewhere near the boundary of Missouri, and which is known as the Texas fever line.

Mr. GILMOUR. There is danger all the same. Would the minister think it would be useful to have an isolated yard, for the purpose of treating the cattle as they come through ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, and shall be glad to look into the matter and see if any further safeguard can be thrown around that trade. But I would point out that this particular section only emphasizes the point which the hon. gentleman made, that when any animal is known to be diseased, the information with regard to it must be immediately sent to the minister, and to the nearest veterinary inspector.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, I understand that one government has no check on the other with reference to these contagious diseases of cattle ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are constantly communicating, and keeping each other informed. We have no check except the honour of a great country, which has pledged itself to do certain things.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman not think that the United States has an advantage over Canada in that regard ? It is more to their advantage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to say that we cannot depend on the honour of the United States government as well as they can depend on ours. Judging from the experience of the department in the past, I think we can do that.

Mr. POPE. I would like to ask the minister how this Act varies in this particular from previous Acts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This section requires the parties to inform the nearest official of the department in addition to the minister, so that prompt action may be taken. That is the difference between this Act and the old one.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the meaning of the two words 'every person' in subsection 3 ? Do they apply only to the owner, the breeder, the dealer and the veterinary surgeon ? It seems to me to be a very broad expression, one which would include myself as well as the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour), so that we would be liable to the penalty if we failed to report to the nearest veterinary surgeon. I think the wording of the clause, if read carefully, means that and nothing else.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. If the hon. gentleman reads it carefully, he will see that it applies to every person neglecting to give notice as required by this section. It only applies to the people defined by this section.

Mr. HENDERSON. That may be the meaning of the minister, but the language would not strictly convey that idea. I think it would be unfair to make a private individual liable to a penalty of $200, particularly when he would get no compensation for the trouble he was going to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The wording of the section does not mean that at all.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Put in the words 'having knowledge of disease,' and I think they would meet the case.

Mr. INGRAM. That section is certainly altogether too wide. As the hon. minister knows, a good many men who are engaged in veterinary work to-day are not experts, and have no knowledge of what diseases are. Many owners certainly have not that knowledge.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say, in the first place, that if a veterinary surgeon does not know the diseases, he certainly ought not to be practicing as such. But under the clause he is only required to report on ascertaining that the animal is labouring under disease.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose I consult a veterinary about some animals, and he tells me that they are not diseased, and on a later inspection I find that they are ; what then ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the interest of the public we must insist that owners, on perceiving the appearance of infectious disease amongst their animals, shall notify the department. Of course, if they do not recognize that it is an infectious disease, they would not be liable to the penalty. There is no doubt of that under the wording of the Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am quite in accord with the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Ingram) in protecting an innocent veterinary surgeon. Take the case of anthrax. I know that it is a very difficult matter for good medical men to determine a case of anthrax in a human being. It is not at all unusual for them to take the blood or some part of the flesh and have it analyzed by such a man as Professor Ellis, of Toronto, to determine whether it is anthrax or not. It is not easy in many cases to determine whether a disease is infectious or not, and in a case of that kind it is rather hard for a man to be subject to a penalty of $200.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A penalty of that kind would be only imposed by the court upon a person who was found to be guilty. Such a case as the hon. gentleman mentions would afford a just reason for not imposing the penalty. It is not imposed on the arbitrary will of some autocrat ; it is imposed on evidence of the guilt of the party.

Mr. PRINGLE. It seems to me that the language of subsection 3 would be more effective if it were made to read, 'every owner of animals and every breeder of or dealer in animals, and every one bringing animals into Canada shall, on becoming aware of infectious or contagious disease,' &c. I think that would make it a little stronger and better.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I might state to the hon. gentleman that the the words he takes exception to are copied verbatim out of the old Act. We took the old Act and changed it as little as possible. I preferred to abide by the wording of the old Act, which has been in existence seventeen or eighteen years without any difficulty arising.

On section 9,

Every person who, without lawful authority or excuse, digs up or causes or allows to be dug up the buried carcass of an animal which has died or is suspected of having died from infectious or contagious disease, or which has been slaughtered as diseased or as suspected of disease, shall, for every such offence, incur a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why make the penalty only one hundred under this clause when it is two hundred under the previous clause ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is that way in the old Act, and I have no objection to make it two hundred. I move that it be made $200.

Mr. HENDERSON. This clause should go further. It should be made punishable for a man even to bury the carcass of an animal which has died of an infectious disease. Take the case of anthrax. If you bury an animal which has died of anthrax, you plant the disease in the ground, and animals grazing there will be sure to contract it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Under our regulations, which have the force of law, animals which have died of anthrax must be burnt.

Mr. HENDERSON. Many people see the statutes who do not see the regulations.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The regulations are sent broadcast throughout the country, far more generally than are the statutes. Section 29 of this Act empowers the Governor in Council to make the necessary regulations.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will a penalty for breaking the regulation be imposed as for breaking the Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Exactly.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to prevent the offering of infected animals for sale. The wording of the old Act is changed so as to enable an officer to seize and examine an animal suspected of being infected with contagious disease. Therefore, I move that the words 'Governor in Council,' in the third line and in the seventh line on page three, be struck out and the word 'minister' inserted.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Better say 'Minister of Agriculture.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is provided for in the interpretation clause. Wherever the word 'minister' is used it means the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think it is a little dangerous to pass this section just as it is. I do not know whether the minister has considered how this will work out in the actual enforcement of the Act. Of course we are here to make the law as practical as we can, and to make it easy of enforcement. I would suggest to him that it would be better if we should leave this enforcement to the 'mayor or reeve, or to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place,' and not to the officials appointed by the government. The law is apt to be brought into disrepute, if you have an official appointed by the minister called upon not only to give information but to practically try the case he complains about——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. It may not say that in so many words, but the minister will see that it comes down to that. It provides that if any animal infected with infectious or contagious disease or suspected of being so is sold or exposed for sale in the market then 'any clerk or inspector, or other officer of the fair or market or any constable or policeman, or any other person authorized by the mayor or reeve, or by any justice of the peace—it is 'place' in the Bill, but I suppose it means the justice of the 'peace,' and I would suggest that that be corrected—'or any person authorized or appointed by the minister'—as it is proposed to be amended—'may seize the animal and report the seizure to the mayor or reeve or to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place'—I suppose that means the municipality—'and such mayor, reeve, or justice or person authorized or appointed by the minister, may after examination and verification'—cause the animal to be destroyed. Thus, the person appointed by the minister who thinks that an offence has been committed, is practically the informant—properly so, I am not finding fault with that—but it will not help the enforcement of the law if this same officer is to try the case complained of, which his business calls upon him to lay. That will make the law unpopular, and, if it is unpopular it will lose its effect. If the people are not behind a law that law will not be properly enforced. Therefore, I think the minister will help his own case if he would alter the Bill in this respect. Any person arrested or summoned—or it may not be quite that, but called upon and made liable for a penalty as well as to have his property destroyed—would have his friends in the neighbourhood, who, would, perhaps say he was not guilty of any offence. I would suggest that this section be amended. Let it stand as it is that any clerk or inspector, or other officer of the fair or market or any constable or policeman, or any other person authorized by the mayor, reeve, or by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place—I suppose that means any person specially appointed to enforce this particular law—or any person authorized or appointed by the minister may seize the animal and report the seizure to the mayor or reeve, or to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place. But when it comes to 'and such mayor, reeve, or justice'—that is all right; but I think when it goes on 'or person authorized or appointed by the minister,' may try the case, that would mean that this officer may enforce his own information. I think the case should be tried by a third person, some one standing between the inspector or the officer, and the person proceeded against, whether he is appointed by the minister or by the head of the municipality, or whether he is one of the ordinary officials of the place. He is one side of the case, he is the complainant or prosecutor, and I do not think it will make the law more acceptable to the people to put an officer in the position of enforcing his own opinion. He should lay his information before the mayor, reeve or other magistrate, and let that person try the case before the decision is carried out. Then, in the last three lines of this section it provides 'to be forthwith destroyed or otherwise disposed of, in such a manner as he deems proper or as is directed, as provided by this Act.' I do not think that we ought to delegate to the mayor, reeve or other official who is trying the case the power of deciding what we are better able to judge than he. The two hundred and fourteen members of this House are better able to say how this should be done than is the mayor, reeve or other officer. Let him be simply a judicial officer to carry out this Act, but let us say how it is to be carried out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) does not desire that the officer appointed by the minister should have the power that is given to the reeve, the mayor, or justice of the peace. The mayor, reeve, or justice, as well as the officer appointed by the minister, has the authority to proceed under the first part of the section, and also to judge of the case in the second part. I do not see any reason why the others should have the power of judging these cases and the inspector appointed by the minister should not have it.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. minister will allow me, I do not think he is correct there. I do not understand this to say that the mayor, reeve, justice and so on, may proceed in the first place, but that 'any clerk or inspector, or other officer of the fair or market, or any constable or policeman, or any other person authorized by the mayor or reeve, or by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the place,' may proceed. The mayor, reeve, or justice may authorize an officer to proceed, and they may try the cases he brings before them. But the officer appointed by the minister is both complainant and judge.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would point out that all through this Bill the matter of prompt and immediate action is the necessity that is recognized, as it was under the old Act. The inspector should be in a position to act promptly, and, so to speak, off-hand. If these officers were not able to seize an animal and deal with it at once, they would not be able to prevent the spread of the disease. The hon. gentleman will notice that it provides that the officers appointed to deal with these cases 'may after an examination and verification,' cause the animal and so on to be destroyed. The officer may not do this until it is clearly proven to be a case of infectious disease; and when that is proven, it is necessary that he should be able to act at once.

Mr. GILMOUR. What do the words 'examination and verification' mean? Does it mean a scientific examination of the animal or an examination of witnesses in the case? I would like to point out to the minister that a man might be a good judge of beef who would not at all be a judge of whether an animal was diseased or not. I think he should act upon the report of one or two veterinary surgeons, and if that report states that the animal is affected, then he should give an order for its destruction.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One of the principles underlying this whole Act is that the veterinaries appointed by the government may have power to act promptly on their own discretion. I think that is absolutely necessary. Of course if these officers were to act improperly and were to give a decision which was not justified by facts, then the government would be responsible. The provision which is here discussed is one which has been in existence under the old Act. We are not intensifying it in any way, except that we are asking that the minister may appoint these inspectors instead of the Governor in Council.

Mr. GILMOUR. Would the minister appoint these justices, or would he allow any other person than justices to act?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The minister only appoints the inspectors, he does not appoint the justices.

Mr. GILMOUR. I know that, but you give that power to justices of the peace to make this examination. Would you allow any justice to make that examination? Because it would be a dangerous thing to allow any justice to make such an examination as that, and to act on his own discretion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The examination contemplated is not made by a justice. This is an examination of a technical character, and has to be made by a veterinary who is properly qualified.

Mr. PRINGLE. I think that clause ought to be made a little clearer. It reads now:

> And such mayor, reeve or justice, or person authorized or appointed by the Governor in Council may, after examination and verification, cause the animal——

And so on. Now that certainly means that a justice of the peace may, after examination and verification, cause the animal affected to be destroyed. It seems to me that a justice of the peace is not the proper person to cause the destruction of that animal, but he is the proper person to inquire and gather the necessary evidence to see whether that animal should be destroyed. It strikes me it would be much better if that clause were framed in this way :

And such mayor, reeve, or justice of the peace, or person authorized or appointed by the Governor in Council, may, after being satisfied by the evidence of a veterinary that such disease exists, cause the destruction of that animal.

Then the justice of the peace would not act on his own judgment, nor would he act on a simple inspection of the animal, but he would act upon the evidence of a man who was thoroughly competent to decide whether the animal was diseased or not. That clause should be amended so as to make it more effective, and to avoid any possibility of error.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the word 'verification' practically covers that point 'examination and verification.'

Mr. POPE. This Act is to be interpreted by farmers and people who are not perhaps so accustomed to the interpretation of an Act. I think that ought to be made very clear. It seems to me that the language here leaves that matter a little obscure, it may have been so in the old Act. 'Such mayor, reeve or justice, or person authorized may, after examination and verification.' That may mean the justice of the peace, the mayor or the reeve, all those people.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All the persons authorized.

Mr. POPE. So you leave the authority in the hands of the reeve rather than of the government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To meet the point raised I would suggest the words 'after the veterinary's examination and verification.' I would be willing to have that inserted.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman any means of knowing whether the veterinaries are capable men to perform the examination ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All veterinaries in this country are obliged to have a diploma from a veterinary college before they are allowed to practice, and only those who have such diplomas are entitled to be recognized as veterinaries. In addition to that, the appointees of the department are chosen as veterinaries of standing, knowledge and experience. We make ourselves no examination at the present time to test the qualities of the veterinaries.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman knows there are some sections where hog cholera may be prevalent, which is a disease of which some veterinaries have very little knowledge. I have in my hand a report of a veterinary whose name, however, I will not mention, in which he says :

Held post mortem examinations on five hogs slaughtered on January 14th, and in examinations could find no indications of bowel trouble, the intestines appearing in each case to be healthy.

That is the report of the veterinary, and in a few days afterwards the whole herd of hogs he mentions were slaughtered. He evidently was not acquainted with hog cholera. I think something should be done whereby veterinaries residing in certain localities where hog cholera is prevalent should be instructed by others who are better posted as to what constitutes hog cholera.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have tried to do that as much as possible. We have certain veterinaries who have been detailed to attend to hog cholera in sections of the country alluded to by the hon. gentleman, men who have had a great deal of experience, and they have been busily employed for some time back in instructing the local veterinaries. Wherever an outbreak of hog cholera is reported to us we send one of these experienced veterinaries, before accepting the judgment of the local veterinaries, unless we know that the latter are well acquainted with the disease.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I think the clause might be simplified by adding these words, 'after verification and examination,' 'or after the magistrate, having been satisfied through evidence that the animal is diseased.' I think that would cover the whole point in a few simple words.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the suggestion made already will cover that point. The whole essence of this section and of the Bill is to enable prompt action to be taken to prevent the spread of disease. I would not like to see any machinery created which is going to be slow or dragging in its operation.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the hon. minister what he means by prompt action ? Whom does he empower to act promptly in the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The veterinary inspectors have power to do certain things.

Mr. COCHRANE. They have power to destroy the animal ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, why do you name magistrates, or reeves, or anybody else ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because there may be no authorized veterinary inspector present. The magistrate would then call in a local veterinary of standing, get his opinion and verification as to the disease and order the destruction of the animal effected.

Mr. COCHRANE. If a veterinary surgeon was competent to give an opinion would he not be competent to destroy the animal ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but we do not give power to any veterinary in the country to do that. We only give that power to inspectors appointed by the Governor in Council and to reeves and magistrates.

Mr. COCHRANE. Where will the prompt action come in if the veterinary inspector does not happen to be there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We cannot always obtain prompt action if there is no veterinary magistrate or reeve in the neighbourhood. I beg to move :—

That section 10 be amended by striking out the word 'place' in the second line from the top of the page and inserting the word 'peace'; also that the words 'Governor in Council' in the third line be struck out and the word 'minister' be inserted in lieu thereof ; also that in line seven the words 'Governor in Council' be struck out and that the word 'minister' be inserted in lieu thereof ; also that in the seventh line the word 'veterinary' be inserted between the words 'after' and 'examination.'

Mr. POPE. In regard to the disposition of the animal I would like to ask the hon. minister if it is to be under the regulations and under the care of the veterinary.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The law directs how it shall be disposed of.

Mr. POPE. The Bill says that the person authorized may cause the disposition of the animal together with hurdles, troughs, litter, &c., in such manner as he deems proper. We would not like this discretion to be left to the ordinary person.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think any ordinary person would undertake to deal with that matter, having before him the Act and regulations directing how this should be done.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 11,

The minister may, from time to time, cause to be slaughtered, animals suffering from infectious or contagious disease or suspected of being so affected, and animals which are or have been in contact with or close proximity to a diseased animal, or an animal suspected of being affected by infectious or contagious disease.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not a pretty broad section ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is the same as in the former Act except that it substitutes 'minister' for 'Governor in Council.' In an action of this kind it is practically impossible to procure an Order in Council when it is necessary.

On section 12,

1. The Governor in Council may order a compensation to be paid to the owners of animals slaughtered under the provisions of this Act.

2. Whenever the animal slaughtered was affected by infectious or contagious disease, the compensation shall be one-third of the value of the animal before it became so affected, but shall not in any such case exceed twenty dollars ; in every other case the compensation shall be three-fourths of the value of the animal, but shall not in the case of grade animals exceed fifty dollars, and in the case of pure-bred animals two-thirds of the value of the animal, not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars ; and in all such cases the value of the animal shall be determined by the minister or by some person appointed by him.

3. Such compensation may be withheld in whole or in part whenever the owner or the person having charge of the animal has, in the opinion of the minister been guilty, in relation to the animal, of an offence against this Act, or whenever the animal, being a foreign one, was, in his judgment, diseased at the time of entering Canada.

4. If in any case the sum received by the government, on the sale of a carcass of an animal slaughtered, under the provisions of this Act, exceeds the amount paid for compensation to the owner of the animal slaughtered, the excess, after deduction of reasonable expenses, shall be paid to the owner.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Would it not be better, so as to make it correspond with the other, to take out the words 'Governor in Council' and insert the word 'minister' ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think, in the matter of compensation which is a question of general policy, that it ought to be decided by the Governor in Council and not upon the minister's own responsibility.

Mr. POPE. Is this a new section ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. POPE. I have known instances where animals were slaughtered by authority of some one and they were not diseased at all and no compensation was possible. Can it be a fact that this section has been in operation for a series of years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will read subsection 3 of this section he will see that it provides that :

Such compensation may be withheld in whole or in part whenever the owner or the person having charge of the animal, has, in the opinion of the minister been guilty, in relation to the animal, of an offence against this Act.

The whole clause is permissive and not compulsory. The question of compensation is a matter entirely within the control of the Governor in Council and is dealt with in regard to each individual case.

Mr. POPE. I must say that my experience is that the Act might as well not have been printed in so far as the farming community is concerned, because no man is going to complain about the presence of disease in his herds if he is not going to be compensated, and these animals will be disposed of in the future as in the past. There is not a day passing in which there are not diseased animals being disposed of on the market through butchers and by the farmers, and the experience of a man in our community, Mr. Bowen, whom the hon. minister will perhaps know, was not such as to encourage farmers to notify the authorities of the presence of disease because Mr. Bowen's cattle were slaughtered and he got no compensation for them. He lost some animals in which disease could not be traced. He appealed for compensation but did not get it. Under these circumstances no one in the community is going to tell if he has any diseased animals. I found fault with this Act many years ago in regard to this particular. I am sorry that the hon. minister has not seen his way clear to making an amendment to the Act by which compensation would be ensured to those who give information in regard to the presence of disease in their herds. We provide a fine of $200 for a person concealing the presence of disease in animals, but we should go further and provide that when a man having the health of the herds of the country and of human beings in view, volunteers this information, he should not find himself in the position in which men giving such information have found themselves in the past. Since this question was discussed several years ago in the House, the increase of tuberculous cattle throughout Canada has been very great. It could have been wiped out by the expenditure of $100,000 or $200,000 at the time, but to-day it would take much more money than that, and the longer it is postponed the greater will be the cost. The day will come when parliament will have to deal with this matter. The object of this Bill is to make a man suspicious of an animal, but if it costs him $50 to be suspicious it will be very hard to impress that suspicion on his mind. I would impress upon the minister that his policy on this matter should be changed. He has the assistance of an ex-member of this House whom we see sitting there to-night, and who is perhaps a better authority on this question than I am, but at the same time I submit that the practical working out of this Act will not tend to improve the health of animals in this country. I do not believe that a man should be compensated who imports animals and can have them properly inspected before he buys them, but the Canadian farmer who offers his animals for slaughter for the benefit of the community is certainly entitled to compensation. In our section of the country the law has not worked well in the past.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. While I would not like to go as far as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope), I fully appreciate the situation he has depicted. The difficulties are great in securing information about the existence of disease in animals. The idea of compensation to those who report disease among their animals has been discussed upon various occasions in this House. Some years ago, when I asked for a vote to deal with tuberculosis, I had to pledge myself that it would not be used for the purpose of compensation. The hon. gentleman stated that some years ago there was less tuberculosis in Canada than now. I think that statement is too broad. The tuberculin test has been the means of discovering a great many cases where the existence of the disease would not have been suspected prior to the introduction of the test, but on the whole I am well within the mark when I say that Canada is remarkably free from this disease in comparison with other countries. The question of compensation is a difficult one to deal with. No one would like better than I to give compensation to the public spirited man who offered his animals for slaughter. He ought to be compensated, but the difficulty is to distinguish between such a man and others who would demand compensation, and perhaps obtain it where the necessity for slaughter did not exist. Parliament clearly indicated, when the matter was under discussion before, that it would look favourably at the idea of granting compensation. Suppose we spent a large amount of money and stamped out the disease apparently, yet it is of such a nature that the chances are it would reappear constantly, and although we would not have such a large expenditure from year to year as at first, still the expenditure would go on indefinitely. In subsequent sections of the Bill I propose to ask for power to make regulations in regard to certain diseases, and which may help to bring about the state of affairs the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) refers to.

Mr. GILMOUR. If you suspect disease and have animals slaughtered, and if afterwards no disease was found to exist, would the owner be paid in full ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That would depend on whether the animals would have been in contact with disease or not.

Mr. GILMOUR. If they had been in contact, I think you would have the right to pay the three-fourths of their value, but if you merely suspect the herd and you order their slaughter, and it was found afterwards that no disease existed, I almost think the owner would be entitled to full compensation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to have an opportunity of looking into that matter.

Mr. GILMOUR. I do not suggest that the minister should come to any hurried decision on the question. I would advocate killing middling freely when animals are suspected, but if you find you are in error, I think the owner should be fully compensated.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On one or two occasions we have paid compensation when an error was committed by one of our officers.

Mr. GILMOUR. That is what I say you should do.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think provision should be made for that under the law. I think there is provision in some part of the law, but if not I will see that provision is made.

Mr. LANCASTER. With regard to subclause 3, does not the minister think that it would be better to have the matter therein referred to tried in some other way than to leave it to the opinion of the minister? If a man has been guilty of neglect, it is usually enough to prove it in the locality in which he lives, before some justice of the peace. The minister could not very well determine that down here at Ottawa. He is not going to the place where the man lives, and it will be equally difficult for the man to come to Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think the minister could form an opinion on the matter without looking into it very carefully and having the whole evidence before him. Of course, any action of that kind by the minister would be pretty sure to be brought before the House by some one on behalf of the individual if he were discriminated against or hurt. The machinery might be a little awkward in certain cases, but I think it would be safe enough to leave it as it is. It has been in the old Act exactly in this shape.

Mr. LANCASTER. Although the Governor in Council is to determine the compensation, the minister can withhold the payment of the compensation by deciding that it is not a proper case.

Mr. BRODER. The minister would depend on the report of his own officials who investigated the matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not necessarily. The minister would probably have representations from the individual, and he would have to balance these against the report of his officials. The minister does not depend on his officials in every instance.

Mr. BRODER. But the person you would call criminal in the matter would be the person attempting to hide the prevalence of disease among his herd. My experience in localities where these things occur is that, without the incentive of compensation, it is impossible to bring the individual to notify the department of the existence of disease; the experience is all the other way. The tendency is to hide the fact. There have been cases where the herds have been slaughtered, and after the slaughter it has been found that the disease was not so great as the official has supposed it was. My idea is that it would be better to give a more liberal remuneration, and stamp the disease out as far as possible; it seems to me that is the cheaper way of dealing with the matter. Whether or not the different conditions under which animals are now kept, from the old hardy way, have anything to do with the greater prevalence of disease, I do not know. I think a great many cattle are put into close stables, and too many are put together, which is, no doubt, a cause of disease. You are never going to stamp out the disease unless you let the owner of the cattle understand that it is his interest as well as the community's interest to expose the fact. Take the case of a poor man whose all is represented by the few cows he milks on his farm. That man will hide the fact of disease as long as possible, because if he does not his all will be gone. It would be better for the government to pay him 75 per cent if the animals proved diseased, and 100 per cent if they proved to be not diseased. I do not think you can reach the difficulty in any other way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is labouring under a little misconception. We do not order the slaughter of animals in cases of tuberculosis, which the hon. gentleman evidently has in his mind. At the request of interested individuals, animals supposed to be affected with tuberculosis are inspected, and when found to be diseased, they are subject to the quarantine law, which prevents them being sold or moved about; but no inspector has ever demanded that such animals should be slaughtered.

Mr. BRODER. But the regulations amount to that. They have to be isolated. The owner cannot take them out of the premises. His only remedy is to kill them. Then he will have an officer of the government along, who will investigate the meat and see that it is not put on the market if it is diseased. It would be better to order the animals to be slaughtered. You would get at the difficulty sooner than you do now.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The health officers are required to deal with these animals in the interest of the public health. All we try to do is to find out what will benefit the public at large, whether the animal is diseased or not. Then the law steps in and says that if the animal is diseased, it must be treated in such and such a way. That is done in the interest of the public health and for the protection of the community. I do not think we can relax that law in any way.

Mr. BRODER. No, but if you take the right to slaughter and remunerate, you will obviate all the other difficulties.

Mr. CARGILL. I think the hon. member who has just taken his seat has made a very valuable suggestion. There is no doubt such a tendency as he points out on the part of the people who own cattle which are subject to inspection by a government official, to ascertain whether or not they are diseased if the owner of the cattle were to receive good compensation for the animal slaughtered, he would have no object in concealing the disease or in preventing the official from making a thorough investigation. I think that the suggestion is a very valuable one. If people owning cattle were led to believe that they would be paid in full the value of the slaughtered animals, they would court inspection rather than refuse it, and I believe that would be a very effective way of stamping out the disease. While the government may be very vigilant and have the interests of the farmers at heart, still the farmers do not like to suffer loss, and if they realized that they were going to be fully compensated for the cattle slaughtered, they would court inspection and would be willing to give the government official free access to their herds.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am afraid that if we were to pay the full value of every animal slaughtered, a farmer who might happen to have surplus stock might be tempted to try and get the value for his surplus animals in this way, and it would be a very dangerous policy to institute. The most that could be expected would be that a certain portion of the value might be paid. If an animal is diseased, the loss is bound to fall on the farmer, and if he be wise he will get rid of the animal. But of course there are some men who will run every risk rather than resort to slaughtering any portion of the herd. It seems to me that to pay the full value would be impracticable. I appreciate what the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) has said, and can realize that so long as we do not pay some compensation, there will be a great deal of difficulty in working out the Act without paying any compensation and the public educated up to the opinion that it is in their own interests not to evade the Act. If we are to inaugurate a system of general slaughter and compensation, I am afraid that we would have to face a very large expenditure, probably from $200,000 to $500,000 per year for several years.

Mr. COCHRANE. How can that be when the hon. gentleman told us this session that there was no disease in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend is mistaken. I never said that there was no disease in Canada. There is, on the contrary, a considerable amount of tuberculosis in the country. It is a contagious disease which affects animals and men, and I would not venture to say what value would have to be paid if all the animals affected by tuberculosis were to be slaughtered in a few years.

Mr. COCHRANE. How could a farmer who has a surplus stock impose upon the government when his herd is inspected by a proper official ? He could not get any of this stock slaughtered without first having the animals inspected by the government veterinary surgeon.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We would have to add largely to the number of our officials, and my experience indicates that we would have to watch with the utmost vigilance. Even now, in the case of hog cholera, when compensation is paid for the hog slaughtered, we have a great deal of difficulty indeed in order to avoid being imposed upon, and the difficulty would be much more serious with regard to cattle at large.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman can hardly be serious when he makes the charge against the farmers, that when they have surplus stock to dispose of they would take advantage of the law simply for the purpose of making a sale. That is not my estimate of the farmers of Canada. I think that they are a more honourable class of people, and the hon. minister himself, who is a practical farmer, is hardly fair to the farmers of this country when he makes such a wholesale charge.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope that my hon. friend will not misquote me. I did not make any wholesale charge, but he must admit that there are among farmers, as in every other section of the country, men who would take advantage of the government if they could.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister has not answered the point made by my friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) that the animals slaughtered would not be paid for unless an official of the government had ordered their slaughter. You do not pay for the animal unless you order it to be slaughtered. Then the only ground advanced by the hon. minister for not paying full compensation, is that the farmers are so absolutely unreliable that they would endeavour in the absence of a better market, to work off their surplus stock in this way.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Is the hon. minister aware that there is a good deal of tuberculosis in the country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is well known to exist, not only in this but in other countries.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the hon. gentleman said in this country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do the British people know this ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. No wonder they keep up the embargo on our cattle.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is ten times as much tuberculosis over there as here. It has nothing to do with the embargo. The embargo is on account of pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman will find a report in his department by Dr. McEachren, a few years ago, in which he gave the cost of stamping out tuberculosis in this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think he said $200,000 per year for several years.

Mr. POPE. For a very few years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For several years.

Mr. POPE. If it could be accomplished with $200,000 a year for three or four years, it would be money well spent, indeed. I would say again—not that I wish to make a political or a stump speech—that I think the farming community are entitled to an expenditure, even if it reaches a million dollars in a term of years, as much as other portions of the community are entitled to the expenditures we make to assist them in the ways of trade and commerce. In the amount of taxation he bears and in his importance in relation to all other lines of trade, the farmer is the great element of strength in this country, and I believe that the rest of the community would not hesitate to bear their share of any taxation that might be necessary to bring about an improvement so desirable as the stamping out of this contagious disease. As the Minister of Agriculture suggested, this disease is a very stealthy one ; it creeps into a herd of cattle without arousing suspicion, it hangs about the herd for many years without the knowledge of the owner, until a weaker generation of animals come, and then suddenly he finds his whole herd infected with the disease. I would favour compensation for the killing of the animals, for the government has no right to ask that animals be killed, or isolated so that their owners have no use for them, without compensation. A plan should be properly prepared under the direction of medical skill and technical experience, and the House should be asked to vote such money as is necessary in the premises. As this is a government of commissions, it might not be out of place to suggest that we might have a commission with regard to this matter, and then two or three more friends of the government could be given employment for some time. And a scheme might be formed by which as good results could be obtained as from some other commissions that have been appointed and have caused expenditures certainly not directly beneficial to the farming community. It would also be quite in keeping with matters as we sometimes find them, if a lawyer could be engaged to preside over this commission to look after the interests of the farmers. But joking aside, I think that the importance of the cattle trade in the east and in the west of the Dominion and the importance of the dairy trade, is sufficient to warrant the expenditure, whether it is one hundred thousand, two hundred thousand or three hundred thousand dollars a year, and whether that expenditure is for one year or for the next twenty years.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be happy to consider the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Pope) suggestion of a commission.

Mr. SHERRITT. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) or with the hon. minister that tuberculosis is prevalent in this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say that.

Mr. SHERRITT. I think, perhaps, more of the thoroughbred cattle are affected than of the ordinary cattle, but I do not think that there is any justification for such wild charges.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sherritt) is misquoting me. I did not say that tuberculosis is prevalent in this country, on the contrary I said that the herds in Canada were less affected than those of almost any other country. At the same time I said—and it is true—that there is a good deal of tuberculosis among the cattle in Canada.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I agree with the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) that it is desirable to spend even a large sum to stamp out all serious disease affecting our cattle. That is the object of this Bill, but it would appear that the Bill does not go far enough. It is evident from the admission of the minister that there are a great many people who have disease in their herds who do not complain. But the benefit will be small if only a small portion of the diseased cattle are slaughtered, the cattle of farmers who are generous enough to be willing to have them slaughtered and receive only 75 per cent of the value of them if they are not affected, and one-third of the value if they are affected. It is evident to me that if we wish to stamp out the disease, we must take such steps as will ensure the slaughter of all animals that are affected. And I believe, as has already been said, that, unless the farmer is to get the full value of his cattle, there are many cases in which the farmer will not complain. Why not, then, spend a sufficient sum of money to clear the country absolutely of this disease ? The hon. minister knows the experience we had in reference to the San José scale in Ontario. The Act as first passed provided for partial payment for trees diseased—a very small payment for those diseased, and a larger payment for those in the neighbourhood of infected trees, but not themselves infected. The consequence was a little rebellion among the fruit-growers, because they did not get sufficient value and the Act became a dead letter. So, the disease spread and become uncontrollable until stronger remedies were applied. It seems to me that the same must be true of the cattle industry. Unless we face the matter and stand ready to pay a considerable sum if necessary, this disease will continue to spread. I fully concur with those who say we should be willing to spend even large sums to stamp out serious disease affecting our herds and flocks. This is the leading industry of the country and is bound to be so for some time to come. The largest export we have in Canada is the export of the products of our herds and flocks, and appearances indicate that these exports are bound to go on increasing. These are the most profitable products of the farm. It seems to me there is nothing we can do which we ought not to do in order to give these herds and flocks an absolutely clean bill of health.

Mr. BRODER. I think that the minister and the House as well, has not allowed for the effect that a clean bill of health for our cattle would have upon the market for our butter and cheese. If it were known that the herds in Canada were clean and free from disease, there is not the slightest doubt that our products would be more highly appreciated than they can be under any other condition. I think this is something that it is worth while for the country to consider.

Mr. COCHRANE. I take strong exception to the Minister of Agriculture telling us that he is afraid that the farmers would impose upon the government of their country by selling their surplus stock under pretense that the cattle were affected with contagious disease. When the minister thinks that over, I believe he will see that he made a statement that he should not have made. As a farmer, I object to a minister of the Crown telling the public that farmers are so mean and low that if they had a few surplus head of cattle they would take advantage of the minister and the government by disposing of them as diseased. Now, why will the minister say that, when he knows deep down in his heart that the cattle cannot be slaughtered without a certificate from the veterinary surgeon? How could any farmer impose upon the department with diseased cattle in the mean contemptible way he mentions, when he has officials all around the country to inspect the cattle? I am here to repudiate any such thing. That may be the prevalent idea with the farmers the Minister of Agriculture associates with, but I can tell him that is not the character of the farmers of Ontario. If it was their disposition, he has it in his power to prevent them dealing with the government in that way. He talks about a few thousand dollars. Who is paying most of the taxation of this country? Is it not the farming community? Are not the exports produced by the farming community worth more to this country than any other manufacturing industry in Canada? And if so, why should a few hundred thousand dollars be parsimoniously dealt out to defend the herds and stock that are bringing more money into this country than any other industry? You will fritter away two or three hundred thousand dollars in a harbour where there is no harbour, and never will be, and $75,000 to dredge a channel and build a wharf where the post office is not worth $100 a year. That is all right; but when you come to make a clean bill of health for the greatest industry in Canada, you talk about a little expense, and you are afraid the farmers are going to be mean enough to take advantage of the government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The question of money is not the only one involved here. I presume that hon. gentlemen have followed what is done in other countries in fighting cattle disease, and if so, they must be aware that everything cannot be done by money. If the reputation of our dairy products is high in England, it is not because we have no tuberculosis in this country, but because of the high quality of our product. My hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) has alluded to the experience in some counties in Ontario, to something that was attempted and it failed.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Because they did not pay enough.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps not; that shows that great difficulty arose in such an undertaking. I think one reason of not paying enough was the opposition of the farmers having their herds compulsorily destroyed. It is not because I am unwilling to pay a sufficient amount, because I think if we could stamp out tuberculosis entirely in this country, a very considerable expenditure would be justified. But we must be able to show parliament that such an expenditure would be successful. My experience leads me to the conclusion that we might go on spending money year after year without really accomplishing the destruction of the disease.

Mr. SHERRITT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there is less tuberculosis in this country than in England and the United States?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. SHERRITT. Then does not the hon. gentleman think it would be well to enter into some different arrangement with the United States, which would prevent their cattle coming in here and feeding in our yards where our own cattle are put afterwards before putting them back on to the farm ? Does not the hon. gentleman think there is something wrong in the present state of affairs when cattle are allowed to be shipped in here from a country where cattle are not as healthy as our cattle, shipped into our yards, fed in our yards, and our cattle afterwards fed in the same yards ? It seems to me the hon. gentleman has shown a weak point in his argument when he accused the farmers of this country of trying to outwit the officials of the government. It seems to me that the officials of the government ought to be more attentive to their duties, and they should not give certificates at all where there is at least disease.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We do not allow cattle to come in from the United States except for breeding purposes, and they are always tested for tuberculosis. If they are found to be diseased they are not allowed to come in. We do not import stockers and feeding cattle from the United States except to a certain extent into the North-west Territories.

Mr. GILMOUR. What care is taken with regard to cattle coming over from the other side to graze, and then taken back again ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are all inspected.

Mr. BELL. I would like to know if the minister has found the farmers inclined to take advantage of these Acts, and to dispose of animals that are diseased and to get some money return for them ? I do not think, as a rule, he would say that the farmers are apt to take such advantage. There has been a good deal of cattle disease in the county of Pictou, and the hon. gentleman has had something to do with controlling that so-called Pictou cattle disease, and compensating the farmers for animals killed. I do not think he is disposed to argue that generally speaking farmers are dishonest in the matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly not. I never undertook to say that.

Mr. BELL. That construction has been derived from the language of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Very improperly.

Mr. BELL. I think that a comparatively large amount of money might be expended in stamping out the disease altogether. It will be cheaper in the end to do that when you take into account the great benefit that will result from a knowledge of the fact that our herds and flocks are entirely free from disease. In the case of the Pictou cattle disease it has been under the care of the government for something like twenty years. I really believe that the government would have saved a great deal of money in connection with this disease, which is still in existence and for which the hon. gentleman is called upon to make payments every year and which has now spread to a distance of nearly sixty or seventy miles from its original starting point, by adopting the British system used in the case of the Rhinderpest outbreak and really stamping out the disease by destroying every animal that was either diseased or had come in contact with a diseased animal paying a fair compensation to the farmers for the animals so destroyed. The expenditure already made upon that subject in Nova Scotia I think must be in excess of what it would have cost if every diseased animal, or every animal in contact with diseased animals, had been destroyed and even if the buildings in which they had been housed had been destroyed. I believe the government has paid more than it would have expended if it had destroyed all the animals that have come in contact with diseased animals and replaced the buildings. While you leave the seeds of disease there in animals that are passing back and forward from one farm to another and pasturing together, there is a constant development and growth of the disease it must involve a continual expense. Really, I would imagine it might be in the case of tuberculosis perhaps better to pay the full value if by that means we would be free of the disease, but, I understand, that in reference to tuberculosis the hon. minister would not be prepared to recommend the destruction of the animals effected.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have never ordered destruction.

Mr. BELL. I would rather infer from the experiments conducted on the farm of Senator Edwards that it has been determined that by instructing the farmers sufficiently as to the methods of raising calves from diseased animals these animals continue to possess a certain value in the agricultural sense and that it would be a piece of foolishness to destroy them. But, that being the fact, it seems to me that there should be some system by which farmers would be very carefully instructed as to the means of raising healthy calves from diseased cows and sires, and that certain precautions would be taken to see that milk products from infected animals are not used in such a way as to affect the health of the population of the country. In respect to that I understand that there are experiments making now to determine whether or not the disease is actually communicable from animals to human beings. I believe there are some parties who do not admit that there is much danger of infection in that way. As long as there is no really demonstrated great danger and as long as there is no question at all as a result of the experiments made under the direction of the hon. minister that diseased animals are quite capable of rearing healthy progeny, I think the hon. gentleman would not be justified in advising the country to go to the heavy expenditure necessary to stamp out tuberculosis. But I think in the case of the so-called Pictou cattle disease, pleuro pneumonia and Rhinderpest, or any other disease that is infectious, the minister would no doubt be warranted in recommending that the animals affected should be slaughtered and that these diseases should be stamped out. I am very glad to hear that the hon. minister has not got an unfavourable opinion of my constituents in connection with the expenditure he has made in so far as the so-called Pictou cattle disease is concerned.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. Minister of Agriculture made a statement to-night that is rather a strange statement for him to make in respect to tuberculosis. I would like to know from the hon. minister if this disease has increased or decreased.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to say definitely whether it has increased or decreased. My impression is that it is constantly decreasing, because the knowledge of the treatment of the disease is becoming much more widespread amongst the farmers and I know they are dealing with the disease to-day in a way they never thought of doing a few years ago.

Mr. INGRAM. Tuberculosis being a contagious disease, the hon. gentleman has stated that there is a large amount of the disease in Canada, though it is not so prevalent as in the United States or other countries. That being true a statement of that character coming from the hon. minster, I should think would have a tendency to injure our Canadian cattle trade. For the purpose of getting the hon. minister to explain, I will read the statement he made in this House last year in respect to the embargo on Canadian cattle.

I have no hesitation in endorsing that statement——

Referring to the motion made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

The evidence was so completely submitted to the Minister of Agriculture in England, the Hon. Mr. Hanbury, that he first, privately, to myself, when I was interviewing him, acknowledged that there was no disease amongst our animals in Canada against which the provisions of this Act ought to be enforced. When I suggested to him that it would be well to make that statement publicly he shortly afterwards, in an interview, which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has just been alluding to, made that statement publicly, saying in answer to the assembly of the associations in Edinburgh that he believed to-day that in Canada there was no contagious disease such as they feared the introduction of into England. We therefore say that the evidence has been supplied to Great Britain to show that there is no justification for the application of this Act as against Canadian cattle.

Again he said :

I believe that everybody in Canada who has given the slightest attention to this question of the embargo on our cattle is fully convinced, in the first place, that no disease exists in this country, and, in the second place, that it was not necessary for the protection of the herds in Great Britain. I feel that the parliament and government of Canada can approach the imperial authorities on this question with the greatest force and strength.

Tuberculosis is a contagious disease because the interpretation clause says so. We are exporting our cattle to Great Britain. Would it not injure our Canadian cattle trade if it goes abroad that there is a great deal of this contagious disease in Canada, and in view of the statement made by the hon. minister to-night would it not effect the cattle trade in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) has quoted is absolutely and entirely correct. The question of the embargo in England is a question as to an embargo on Canada against the introduction of foot and mouth disease and pleuro pneumonia only.

Mr. INGRAM. Only ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These are diseases referred to and my statement was qualified by words which the hon. gentleman will see that it was only these diseases that I had reference to. It is a well known fact that anybody who has anything to do with cattle knows that there is some tuberculosis in this country as in all countries that we know anything about. I do not know any civilized country in the world that has not tuberculous cattle any more than I know any country in the world that has not tuberculous human beings, and the statement that there is tuberculosis amongst our cattle is no more damaging to our trade than the statement that there are cattle in Canada. People in England know that we have tuberculosis amongst our cattle in Canada and as they have tuberculosis amongst cattle in all countries. It would not be necessary for any one to pretend that there is no tuberculosis amongst our cattle even if we could truthfully so contend.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister has overlooked the fact that the English Act under which this so-called embargo is levied on our cattle is in general terms. It refers to contagious diseases generally and not to pleuro-pneumonia particularly.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say positively, but every one knows it was enacted in connection with pleuro-pneumonia and foot and mouth diseases. There is mange in this country, in the United States and in England, and it is a contagious disease, but the Act does not refer to that.

Mr. POPE. There is nothing to prevent the English Act being enlarged at any time if the English government see fit to do so. They claim they have discovered pleuro-pneumonia in some of our cattle and consequently they simply apply the Act.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They claimed that years ago, but not now.

Mr. POPE. They can embargo our cattle for anything else as well as pleuro-pneumonia under the Act.

Mr. COCHRANE. We are allowing United States cattle in bond to be watered and fed in the Toronto stock yards, where our own cattle are brought in after the American cattle leave, and we make no provision for fumigating the stock yards but simply depend in blind faith on the certificate of a gentleman in the United States. It appears to me that there is great danger of disease being introduced in that way. We are making provision in this clause for the destruction of bedding and so on, but we are allowing the condition of affairs in Toronto to go without taking any precaution. It appears to me that it would be a very judicious expenditure to have separate and distinct sheds for American cattle, so that we may not run the risk of the untold damage that may be done if they communicate disease to our animals.

Mr. POPE. We do not permit cattle to enter Canada for the purpose of remaining here without submitting them to the tuberculin test, and therefore we ourselves consider the matter a very serious one, so therefore we ourselves consider the matter a very serious one so that we cannot blame the English people for thinking likewise.

I again put myself on record as saying that the expenditure of $200,000 to $300,000 a year if necessary for a term of years, would be a wise expenditure if it resulted in making the health of Canadian cattle better than it is to-day. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to assume the responsibility of voting for such an expenditure if it were made under proper regulations as no doubt it would be.

Mr. CARGILL. I am quite sure that it is the desire of the minister to do what he can in the direction of stamping out tuberculosis and all other contagious diseases of cattle. I think from what has been said on this side of the House that it would be worthy of the minister's consideration as to whether it would not be advisable to offer more compensation to the owners of diseased cattle that have been slaughtered. I always commend the economical administration of affairs by the government as well as by business men, but at the same time I believe that the only way the minister can succeed is by allowing a fair value for all animals which it is necessary to destroy. I am in hearty accord with members on this side of the House who have spoken on this subject, and they all seem to be of the opinion that it would be money well spent if we made a thorough investigation of the herds throughout the length and breadth of Canada and slaughtered diseased animals where we found them. All owners of cattle would assist the minister and his department in trying to eradicate the disease if they got fair compensation for the animals which it was found necessary to destroy. Some members on this side of the House have stated that the agricultural industry is the most important in this country, and I think, Sir, that the agricultural community are entitled to a liberal expenditure for the purpose of stamping out this disease. I do not agree with the member for Wellington (Mr. McGowan) who stated that tuberculosis was much more prevalent among the higher grade of cattle than among the ordinary herds. I know in my section of the country where men have pure bred cattle, they have ample provision for stabling them, for ventilating the stables, for taking care of the animals, and they do not allow them to be exposed to severe weather as ordinary herds of cattle are. I believe that to-day tuberculosis exists to a greater extent among the ordinary herds of cattle in the country than it does among the purer-bred cattle. In conclusion, I advise the minister, who I know is very desirous of doing all he can to lessen the prevalence of this disease, to consider the matter fully, and bring down some measure to aid the cattle growers of this country in every way possible to stamp out this disease. I am quite sure they would do all they could in that direction, if they were sure of getting a fair and reasonable compensation.

Section allowed to stand,

On section 14,—Governor in Council may prohibit importation of animals and certain articles,

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the minister if there is any Order in Council in existence at the present time prohibiting the importation of animals, or of flesh, hides, hoofs, horns, or other parts of the animal, or of hay, straw, fodder, &c.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, an Order in Council was passed prohibiting the importation of animals from the neighbouring states in which foot and mouth disease was found to exist, and prohibiting the entry of hides, horns, hoofs, and so on, which were affected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the minister exercise a supervision over the importation of hides, not the product of the United States, but coming from a foreign country, say a South American country, through the United States ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those hides are allowed in, coming through in bond.

On section 16,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This gives the minister power to appoint officers on the spur of the moment, when he thinks it necessary. Under the old Act the Governor in Council had power to appoint, but very often could not appoint until long after the necessity ceased.

On section 17,

Mr. HENDERSON. Are the inspectors appointed under this clause and the preceding clause paid an annual salary, or only for their services when called upon ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That depends on the nature of their engagement. Some inspectors are appointed all the year round on annual salaries ; but this is for the purpose of appointing temporary inspectors for temporary work that arises from time to time, and they are only paid for the work they do.

On section 19—report to Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. LANCASTER. This does not seem to provide for the minister having any other information than what the inspector sends. What evidence would the minister have to show him whether the inspector's report was right or not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The declarations sent in by the inspectors sometimes have to be supplemented by bacteriological investigation ; and if under such circumstances it is found that the disease was not what the inspector thought it was, then the minister would declare that the place was not an affected place. Other cases of that kind might arise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that not a little awkward where you are dealing with portions of the country which are at a very great distance ? For example, suppose you were dealing with a supposedly infected place in a remote portion of British Columbia. It might take a week to communicate with the minister, and the event might show that without any justification it had been regarded as an infected place.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would have to be so under the declaration of the local inspector until that was overriden by the report of the inspector-general or the minister. I was pointing out a few minutes ago that sometimes the disease appears to exist, but when the specimens are sent to the laboratory for bacteriological investigation, it is found that the animal is not infected and the minister would reverse the decision of the local inspector.

On section 21,

The area of an infected place may, in all cases of a declaration by the minister, include any common, field, stable, cowshed, or other premises in which infection or contagious disease has been found to exist, and such an area as to the minister seems requisite ; and the minister may, from time to time, by order, extend or curtail the limits of an infected place beyond the boundaries of the common, field, stable, cowshed, farm or premises where infectious or contagious disease is declared or found to exist.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there to be no chance whatever given to the man who is interested on the other side of the question to be heard ? It seems to me that when we give power to enforce an embargo against a man and practically put him out of the cattle-raising business for the season, without giving any or very little compensation, there should be some opportunity given him to present his view of the case.

Mr. GILMOUR. It is possible that a veterinary might declare a contagious disease, as for instance, cholera, to be in a certain district for the purpose of getting the fees.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The inspector is paid a salary and not by fees.

Mr. GILMOUR. Still it may be in his interest that a district should be declared to be infected. I have an instance in my mind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They are not permanent salaried officers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That lets in the danger to which my hon. friend referred.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If we believed that these men were deliberately creating business for themselves, we would have to take steps to remedy that. But I do not think that is at all likely, and in any case it is necessary for health purposes that prompt action should be taken. We could not wait for the ordinary procedure of law, and the inspector must take responsibility. If we found him doing anything of the kind without justification, we would soon remove him. At present we are having this work done much more by officers paid by the year and have slightly enlarged our permanent staff, so as to be able to employ permanent instead of temporary officers.

On section 24,

Mr. LANCASTER. This provides that an order of the minister relative to an infected place shall supersede any order of a local authority inconsistent with it. Is not that a little dangerous ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been the rule ever since the Act has been in existence.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think it has ever been tested in the courts. It is a serious thing to put it so strongly as that, without any qualifications, because the question of the power of two parliaments might very easily arise.

Section agreed to.

On section 27,

Every company and every person carrying for hire animals to or in Canada, shall thoroughly cleanse and disinfect, in such manner as the Governor in Council, from time to time, directs, all steamships, steamers, vessels, boats, pens, carriages, trucks, horse-boxes and vehicles used by such company or person for the carrying of animals ; and the Governor in Council may cause any such steamship, steamer, vessel, boat, carriage, truck, horse-box or vehicle, to be detained at such place as to him seems meet, until it is so cleansed and disinfected.

Mr. POPE. Has there been any Order in Council passed in connection with this ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. POPE. Does the hon. gentleman remember the district ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not. It is one of the general regulations which require that, any time it is ordered, all railway carriages, trucks and cars for the carrying of stock must be cleansed.

Mr. POPE. Must cars passing from the United States through Canada into the United States again be cleansed before they return to Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. POPE. Is the system of keeping track of these cars such that the department knows that they have been thoroughly cleansed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have a general order with regard to all cars coming in from the United States. Under ordinary circumstances, there is merely a general inspector to keep track of them. The railway companies are responsible for it, and they are liable to be called to account at any time if they do not comply with the rules. The reports are that they do it very carefully and effectively. When the New England States were scheduled as having foot and mouth disease, we put special officers on and watched so that there should be no danger of cars coming in without being disinfected.

Mr. POPE. And how is it with regard to cars coming in from Chicago eastward ? Is the same trouble taken ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. POPE. It would not be possible for cars to go from the New England states to Chicago and then into Canada without being cleansed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The American authorities do not allow the cars to cross into other states from the New England states without being disinfected. They are watching that carefully.

Mr. POPE. Still, the hon. minister is trusting to their doing it, and is not making any regulation affecting the cars from Chicago ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not made any special regulation on that point.

Mr. POPE. In the case of Texas cattle going into Alberta. I saw a number of Texas cattle being unloaded there—any one having seen Texas cattle once would have no difficulty in recognizing them again——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Are they not Mexican ?

Mr. POPE. I would not say they are not, as the two are very much alike.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think they must be Mexicans. There is a law in the United States appointing a line north of which cattle from the south are not allowed to come. Subject to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Pope) knowledge on that subject, which I would not dispute——

Mr. POPE. Does the hon. minister know how far north that line is ? Is it north of the Indian Territory, the pan handle of Texas ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is south of the Indian Territory, I think. I think the pan handle of Texas is not included.

Mr. POPE. Are not cattle coming from Southern Texas to the markets shipped——?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None, by the regulations of the United States. Or, rather, I am informed that I should correct that as to time. There is a certain season of the year when the Texas cattle disease is not dangerous.

Mr. POPE. When I was acquainted with that section of the country, certain territory was marked out in which the cattle were permitted to be driven from southern Texas through the pan handle and shipped from Dodge city to Kansas city, Chicago and other places. I know that, later in the season, they are allowed to go anywhere. But during the period of the year when the Texas fever was infectious, the restriction was imposed. The hon. minister says, as I understand him, that the regulation allowing them to pass through has been done away with.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That route cannot now be used.

Mr. POPE. The hon. minister thinks there is no danger of the importation of cattle disease into Alberta from that district ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe there is none.

Mr. POPE. Have we regulations prohibiting Texas cattle from coming into Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We do permit them, with certain certificates from the United States bureau of animal industry, which corresponds to our veterinary bureau—certificates of health and of individual inspection of the animals—to come into our North-west.

Mr. POPE. Could the hon. gentleman say whether these cattle are allowed to come from Texas to other parts of the United States under similar conditions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not tell.

Mr. POPE. There is danger in dealing with these cattle, and we cannot be too careful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are trying to guard against danger and are watching the matter closely. I think we have been successful in keeping out disease.

Mr. GILMOUR. Will the minister please say which of these sections, from section 17 to section 28 are new ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Section 26 is new, and section 28 also.

On section 28,

All yards, stables, sheds or other premises used by railway or steamship companies or other persons for the accommodation of animals shall be maintained in a clean, comfortable and sanitary condition, and shall be subject at all times to inspection by inspectors acting under the authority of the minister, who, when they deem such action necessary, may order the cleansing and disinfection in a satisfactory manner of the said yards, stables, sheds or other premises.

2. In the event of any railway or steamship company or other corporation refusing or neglecting to carry out the orders of the inspector in regard to such cleansing or disinfection, or in the event of such company or corporation neglecting to maintain its yards, stables, sheds or other premises for the use of animals, in a clean, comfortable and sanitary condition, the inspector may condemn the said premises as unfit for use ; whereupon the said premises shall not be used for the accommodation of animals until such time as the orders of the inspector in regard thereto have been satisfactorily carried out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I move to substitute 'person' for 'corporation' in the second and fourth lines of subsection 2.

Mr. INGRAM. Has any railway or steamship company refused to comply with this rule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They have not refused but they sometimes have not acted, and we wish to have the power to stimulate them.

Mr. GILMOUR. Have you ever asked them to act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh, yes; and not only asked but ordered them to do so.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it not be better to insert after 'corporation,' 'or person' ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am told that legally 'person' includes 'corporation.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Technically, I do not think that a railway or a company is a person.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am willing to make the change, and I move to amend by striking out the word 'corporation' and inserting the word 'person.'

Amendment agreed to, and section agreed to.

On section 46,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will reserve this section in order to give an opportunity for further discussion. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business shall we expect to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE We will take up first the Railway Bill, then later on go into Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A week ago I gave notice to the House that I proposed to move a certain motion, and I consented on Thursday last to let the motion stand until to-day. Although I did not make any stipulation about it, I was under the impression that the House would be moved into Committee of Supply to-day, as I extended my motion at the request of the government. If the House is to be moved into Committee of Supply to-morrow, it is desirable that the motion should be made at such time as would enable any debate that arose on the motion to be proceeded with and concluded.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the absence of the Minister of Finance to-night, I would not like to make any pronouncement. But whenever the House does go into Committee of Supply, we will try to meet my hon. friend's views. I do not understand that he desires particularly that that should occur to-morrow; but if the House goes into Committee of Supply to-morrow, we will try to meet the hon. gentleman's wish.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agreed to permit it to stand. I said that I would allow it to stand until Monday, which is to-day. Of course, there was no understanding about it other than what would be implied by what took place, which was just about in the words I have endeavoured to give my hon. friend just now.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will report the matter to the hon. Finance Minister, who will no doubt try to meet the hon. gentleman's views.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 9, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TORONTO, HAMILTON AND BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland) moved that the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company be permitted to lay before the House their petition for the passing of an Act to authorize them to issue bonds, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for the presenting of petitions for Private Bills.

The PRIME MINISTER. Explain.

Mr. LOGAN. The Bill is to get leave to issue guaranteed bonds for the purpose of liquidating the obligations of the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company. The reason it was not presented before is because the company were not in a position to liquidate with their creditors, many of whom are workingmen and contractors, when the time for presenting petitions in the regular way had expired. They are now in this position. The company are assuming certain liabilities of the contractors for debts due to workingmen and for material furnished, but as the bonding power of the company is exhausted, it is necessary to get permission to issue new bonds.

JUDGES' RETIRING ALLOWANCES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved that the House go into committtee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :—

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Court Acts, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, and to provide as follows :—

1. If any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Superior Court in Canada, resigns his office, His Majesty may, by letters patent, under the great seal, reciting such judge's age and period of service, grant unto him an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his resignation ; to commence immediately after his resignation, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life, provided such judge has (a) attained the age of seventy-five years, and continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts, or as such judge, and as stipendiary magistrate of the North-west Territories, for twenty years or upwards ; or (b) attained the age of seventy years and continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for twenty-five years or upwards ; or (c) continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for thirty years or upwards.

2. Every County Court judge who has attained the age of seventy-five years shall be compulsorily retired ; and His Majesty may, by letters patent, under the great seal, reciting such judge's age and period of service, grant unto him an annuity, if he has continued in office as such judge for twenty-five years or upwards, equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement ; or if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period, equal to two-thirds of such salary ; the said annuity to commence immediately after his retirement, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

The PRIME MINISTER. His Excellency the Governor General has taken cognizance of this resolution and recommends it to our approval.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Thursday next, the 11th instant, on the following resolution, which His Excellency has considered and recommends to the consideration of the House :—

Resolved, that it be expedient to provide as follows :—

1. The Governor in Council may from time to time advance and pay to the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal (hereinafter called 'the corporation'), in addition to the moneys authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by chapter 10 of the statutes of 1896 (first session), and by chapter 47 of the statutes of 1898, and by chapter 9 of the Statutes of 1901, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of three million dollars, as are required to enable the corporation to construct such further terminal facilities as are necessary property to equip the port of Montreal.

2. No such advances shall be made unless the plans, specifications and estimates for the works to be performed by the corporation, and on which the money so to be advanced is to be expended, have first been submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council.

3. The corporation shall, upon any advance being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General debentures of the corporation equal to par value to the advance so made (which debentures the corporation are hereby authorized to issue), and such debentures so issued shall be of such amounts as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General determines, and shall bear date on the day when such advance is made, and shall be repayable within twenty-five years from the date of their issue, and in the meantime shall bear interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, such interest to be payable half yearly on the first day of July and the first day of January in each year.

4. The principal and interest of the sums advanced under the authority of this Act to the corporation shall be paid by the corporation out of its revenue mentioned in section 8 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1896 (first session), and shall be a charge upon the said revenue in the same manner and to the same extent as if the sums so advanced had been borrowed by the corporation under the said chapter 10.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT TARIFF POLICY.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). I would like to inquire from the right hon. the leader of the House when it would be convenient for him that I should take up the motion of which I gave notice some time ago. Of course, I quite understand that the motion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition should take precedence, but after that motion has been disposed of, I would like very much that the right hon. gentleman would inform the House when it would be convenient for him to take up mine.

The PRIME MINISTER. If convenient to my hon. friend, we will be ready to take up his motion on Thursday next.

SUPPLY—IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Some days ago, Mr. Speaker, I gave notice to the House that when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance would again move the House into Committee of Supply I would move an amendment, the terms of which I then stated. As some observations have been made in the public press with regard to the time at which that motion was introduced, I would like to say, in the first place, that it was introduced in pursuance of a policy decided on several weeks ago, and so decided upon, not with respect to a single resolution, but with respect to several resolutions which was proposed on this side to bring to the attention of the House and the country. There is no doubt whatever, I think, that the iron industry is a very important one to any country which possesses the proper resources and material for developing it. Every one of the foremost countries in the civilized world possessing resources for the manufacture of iron and iron products has, either first or last, given that industry such protection as has resulted in its development. It is quite true that, so far as the mother country is concerned, the policy of free trade has prevailed there since 1847 in relation to the iron industry. But we must remember that that industry had obtained a very firm footing in Great Britain under a protective tariff long before the era of free trade in that country.

The iron industry is important because it affords the materials useful and necessary to the development of every country in the world. It is an important industry also on account of the large number of men it employs, and because it lays the foundation for many other industries. For these reasons, therefore, Canada, it seems to me, possessing the resources and the raw material necessary for the development of this industry, ought to give it such protection as will enable us to utilize to the fullest possible extent those raw materials, those resources, with which Providence has blessed us and which it is our duty, as inheritors of this country to utilize. It may not be out of place to remind the House that Canada possesses, not in one place, but in many places, all the materials which are necessary for the manufacture of iron and steel. We possess the means of economically assembling these materials at the seaboard in the province of Nova Scotia, and also we possess the means of so assembling them on the shores of our great inland waters. And, although the iron industry in Canada has not always in times past been the success that we could desire it to have been, it seems to me, that there is no reason why it could not be made a success. And in that view, I think, I am supported by the language, to which I will call attention in a few minutes, of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) both in 1897 and in 1899, when certain legislation was enacted with regard to this industry.

A writer who paid great attention to this question, and who was interested in the iron trade to some considerable extent in days gone by in Canada, has spoken of the resources of this country and of the possibility of building up our great iron industry. I will refer to the work of Mr. J. H. Bartlett, published in 1885, after a pretty thorough investigation by him of the practicability of carrying on the manufacture of iron successfully in this country. He says :—

Again, as respects the second of the Baconian conditions to national prosperity, the possession of 'busy workshops,' Canada, more especially since the development of the national policy, has, in a general sense, made great advances. There is, though, one special branch of industry, wherein she has, to a degree almost painfully surprising, failed to attain any appreciable rank among the nations, and wherein she has indeed long lagged, and still lags, far behind in the march of material progress. We refer, of course, to that great industry, so valued by other nations when endowed by nature with the means of cultivating it, the manufacture of iron. If, under the dispensation of Providence, the successful and profitable manufacture of iron in Canada was an impossibility or even a dangerous or difficult venture, we would be compelled philosophically to accept the position, just as we all of us, with repining, submit to the veto of nature against the cultivation, on our lands, of sago, tea or oranges. Nature, however, most assuredly, has not placed any such veto on the manufacture of iron in our Dominion, but, on the contrary, has, in certain portions of our domain, most bountifully endowed us with all the essentials to the successful operation of this great industry. It is we ourselves who, through our apathy, want of knowledge, or through defective legislation, have so long failed, and are still failing, to duly recognize the immense possibilities which lie within our easy reach, but which, in our blindness, we fail to grasp and develop as we should do.

The relation of the various attempts to make iron in this country presents a sad record of loss and disappointment, of blasted hopes and shattered fortunes. These enterprises appear generally to have been undertaken by men of energy and ability,—but, unable to make headway against the competition of older countries, they had, one after another, to succumb.

Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, in speaking in 1897 upon the changes which were then made in the tariff, used the following language as appears in 'Hansard' of that year, page 1,130 :—

How far it was a wise policy to undertake the development of the iron industry in Canada in the way the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) attempted, in the face of many difficulties, and in the light of our experience how far that was a wise policy may well admit of argument. But, it is not worth our while to argue it to-day. We know that large sums have been invested in this industry. We know that large iron industries exist in the country, and while we may not approve of the policy under which they are established, we have no desire to see them snuffed out now. As in dealing with all other countries, we have shown a very large measure of consideration, so we desire to show fair consideration to the iron industry. Therefore, we say, if it is in the interests of the people of Canada that there shall be a reduction in the duty on iron we are prepared to accept the responsibility of advising that the bounties on iron should be increased for a term of years in order that this industry may have a fair chance for existence. . . . . Now we are willing to pay a bounty on iron manufactured in Canada for consumption in Canada, but we have no idea of paying the manufacturers of pig iron or other iron a bounty to enable them to supply the world with cheap iron. Therefore, we say that the bounty shall be applied to iron produced in Canada for consumption in the Dominion, and if this iron is shipped beyond the Dominion we have the right to impose an export duty upon it equal to the bounty paid by the government of Canada.

I may say in passing, that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance withdrew that portion of his resolution before it was adopted, so that, in the end, it passed this House as a bounty on iron, with no exclusion of iron which should be exported after having received the encouragement of that bounty. Now, as further indicating the importance of the industry in the eyes of the Finance Minister, let me quote the very apt language which he used with regard to it when he introduced the system of bounties in 1899. I lay stress upon this because it indicates that the government as well as the opposition are alive to the necessity of maintaining and continuously developing in Canada an industry possessing so great importance as that to which this motion of mine is directed. Speaking on the 13th June, 1899, the hon. Minister of Finance said, as reported in 'Hansard,' page 4,973 :—

Cape Breton possesses advantages of a very marked character for the iron and steel business. The great things required in this business are large bodies of ore, large bodies of coal, large bodies of limestone and large capital. It is only by having these in combination that you can make a successful iron industry. There is a very large deposit of iron in Cape Breton, but, apart from that, this gentleman has obtained an option upon and is now virtually in control of a very valuable iron property in the sister colony of Newfoundland, the ore from which is found to blend very well with the native ore, while the Nova Scotia coal is admirably adapted for the work of smelting. Consequently, with the iron ore of Cape Breton available and the ore of Newfoundland so near that it can be brought to the coal at a very small cost, with large capital and with limestone in profusion, all the elements required for the successful carrying on of the iron industry are combined in that locality, and I have no doubt that if that gentleman and his associates take hold of the matter, they will carry on the business on a large scale. Nor does it end there ; for we all know that the establishment of a successful iron business means the establishment of other businesses that grow out of it.

And in dealing with that question, my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, after referring to the great shipbuilding industry which years ago was developed in the province of Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces, went on to say :

Not having an iron industry, the business of shipbuilding has passed away from us with the passing of the wooden ship.

Then further on he remarks :

With the improvements that are going on, the deepening of our canals, the opening of the Rainy River railway, and other things that are being done to improve the transportation of the products of Canada, there will be a large development of the iron industry on the great lakes and also upon the coast ; and out of this, I strongly hope we shall see a revival of that shipbuilding industry which was so important in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in by-gone years, the revival of which would have such great effect in promoting the prosperity of our country. This has been happily described in Canada's growing time. Such, I believe, it will prove to be with regard to this industry.

And again :

I believe that the time is more auspicious for the development of an iron and steel industry than for years past, and I hope that with the announcement of this policy—a policy of certainty, because we give certain encouragements for a few years to come—we shall see a large expansion of this important iron and steel industry and that through it much will be done for the advancement of the welfare of the people of Canada.

Such, Mr. Speaker, was the attitude of this government with regard to this industry in the year 1897, and again in 1899. I am quoting from the financial exponent of the government's policy for the purpose of showing that the government, then at least, was alive to the necessity of giving adequate protection to this important industry, and was also fully seized of the fact that Canada, for an industry of this kind, possessed advantages and resources such as are possessed by few other countries in the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us examine for a moment the progress of the iron and steel industry in other countries during the past few years. It is an industry, as I have already said, which was protected in Great Britain for a large number of years, and I want to point out to the House the growth of that industry in Great Britain as compared with its growth in Germany and the United States, both of which latter countries have protected it by a heavy tariff. I want to compare the growth of these three countries during the past twenty years, to show what has been done by those two latter countries under a protective tariff, to develop and increase an industry which is of such vital importance to every country in the world possessing the raw material and resources thereof :

GREAT BRITAIN.

	1883.	1901.
Pig iron, tons..	8,493,287	*7,761,830
Steel, tons	2,158,880	†5,000,000

*Decrease. †Increase over 100 per cent.

GERMANY AND LUXEMBURG.

	1883.	1901.
Pig iron, tons	3,397,588	*7,860,893
Steel, tons..	1,066,920	†6,645,869

*Increase more than 100 per cent.
†Increase more than 500 per cent.

The United States, however, shows the most marvellous development of all. I believe it is stated in text books of acknowledged authority that previously to 1861 the United States imported practically all the iron and steel that was used in that great country :

UNITED STATES.

	1883.	1901.
Pig iron, tons..	4,595,510	*15,878,354
Steel, tons..	1,673,534	†13,473,595

*Increase about 275 per cent.
†Increase over 700 per cent.

That has been done under a protective tariff, and that has been done in face of the iron and steel industry of Great Britain, which in 1883 led the world, and in which the British economists of that day thought Great Britain would still continue to lead the world for all time to come.

Now, I submit these figures, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of showing two things : in the first place, that you cannot find, so far as I am aware, any country in the world where the iron and steel industry has not required protection of some sort in the first instance to give it a firm ground and to show in the next place, by the example of the United States and of Germany, that if you have a country which does possess the raw material and resources which are required for building up an industry of this kind, you can, by giving the proper protection to that industry, develop it to an extent that would hardly be dreamed of unless you had the actual results before you which I have presented to the House.

Now in Canada at the present time, we possess, as I have said, every material in abundance that is required for the purpose of developing this industry. We use in Canada a very considerable amount of iron, and we shall use in Canada for years to come a great deal more, as our system of railways develops, and as our industrial development increases. We know that for the purpose of railways, iron and steel are used very largely, we know that for the purpose of building, for the purpose of manufacture, for the purpose of warehouses in cities, for all the purposes that are necessary in connection with the industrial life of our country, iron and steel are very important factors indeed, and we may well assume that the consumption of iron and steel in this country will increase more rapidly in the future, much more rapidly than our population itself is likely to increase.

Coming back for a moment to the United States of America, and referring to the development of the industry there, let us bear in mind there are to-day employed in the iron and steel industry of that country more men than in any other single industry in the United States of America, that $122,-710,193 was paid out in wages in this industry alone; that the total value of the production in 1900 was $835,759,034; and that over one-third of this production was consumed in the construction of rails, cars, locomotives, bridges, buildings and electrical machinery.

I have prepared a table showing the imports into Canada of iron and steel for the year ending 30th June, 1902, and although I know it is a little wearisome to give these figures to the House, still, I will ask the House to bear with me while I give them, and after I have given them I will state the total result of the figures contained in the official returns. For the year ending the 30th June, 1902, Canada imported in tons of 2,000 pounds, the following:

Canada's imports of iron and steel (direct products of blast furnaces and rolling mills) for year ending 30th June, 1902:

	Tons of 2,000 lbs.	Value in Dollars.
Pig iron	40,014	585,803
Scrap cast	3,048	39,958
Scrap (wrought) billets and blooms	55,761	938,941
Rails	130,602	2,953,230
Wire rods and their products	92,919	3,533,851
Sheets of all kinds, tin plate, &c.	63,390	3,285,208
Bars, round, flat and small sections, &c.	62,441	2,549,669
Plates	30,301	905,183
Plates universal	3,593	101,682
Plates agricultural	2,336	178,704
Pipes, boiler tubes, &c., but not pipe 2½ in. dia., and over for mining	12,071	841,670
Structural shapes, &c.	28,011	789,644
Hoops, &c.	2,080	96,728
Ship's plates, angles, &c.	1,786	70,707
Skelp	16,195	496,130
Totals	544,548	$17,527,108

Note.—Total importation iron and steel and manufactures thereof during the years ending respectively on

June 30, 1902	$33,681,625
Increase	$23,478,573

So that the total importation of these articles into Canada during the year ending 30th June, 1902, was 544,548 tons, valued at $17,527,108, and I believe that the total consumption in Canada of the articles I have mentioned is in the vicinity of 800,000 tons, so that you will see that the total importation by Canada of these articles was during the year ending June 30th, 1902, about two thirds of the total amount consumed. Comparing for a moment the total importation of iron and steel and the manufactures of iron and steel in 1896 and 1902, we find that, whereas, we imported in 1896, $10,-203,052 worth, we imported, in 1902, no less than $33,681,625 worth, or an increase in that period of six years in the importation of these articles of no less a sum than $23,-478,573.

Now, Mr. Speaker, considering that we have the resources in Canada that I have mentioned, considering that we have some measure of protection in Canada and considering that the government provided a system of bounties in 1899, why is it that we find at the present time that the iron and steel industry of Canada is not in a very flourishing condition. I am not going into the history of any individual industry, nor do I propose to make any references thereto beyond this, that, looking around us at the condition of Canada we will all agree that the iron industry is not in that flourishing condition in which hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, having at heart the best interests of this country, would desire to see it. What is the reason for this? Well, the reason I think, in the first place, is the fact that we are side by side with a country like the United States of America, which jealously protects its home markets, which has magnificent resources for the protection of iron and steel and which has utilized these resources to the utmost, which now leads the world in iron and steel production and which controls the price of iron and steel throughout the world, because, I am told on what I regard as very good authority, that the output of iron in Germany to-day is controlled not in Germany, but in the United States of America. Well, under these conditions, what have we been doing for the iron industry of Canada? In the first place, let me make a comparison; let me compare the protection which we accord to the iron industry in Canada with the protection which is accorded to the iron industry in the United States, and in the second place, let me compare the protection which is accorded to the iron industry in Canada to-day with the protection which was accorded to it under the Conservative tariff of 1894. You have the enormous country, the United States, to the south of us with all these resources I have referred to, you have that country with a home market of 75,000,000 or 80,000,000 of people and you have in that country the iron and steel industry protected by customs duties which are absurdly higher, I was going to say, than those with which we seek to protect the iron industry in Canada to-day. Let us have no misunderstanding on this point. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) claims to be a free trader and is glad, having begun his life as a protectionist, that he is now a free trader. I am not finding fault with that. The right hon. gentleman is, of course, at liberty to select his own policy but let us have an understanding upon this point. Are we to have a policy to protect and develop the iron industry or not? Now, that is the question, which presents itself to this government and in proposing the resolution which I shall submit to the House in a moment, I am not going to propose a resolution which the government need necessarily take as a motion of want of confidence. I have carefully abstained from putting in the resolution one single word of censure or reflection upon the government, and in any comparisons I make in regard to duties, I want it to be distinctly understood that my sole object is to get protection for the iron industry of Canada, because I believe that protection is necessary in the interests of the people of Canada as a whole to-day.

In the first place, I want to make a comparison between the duties which are levied in the United States upon iron and steel products coming into that country and the duties which are levied upon similar products coming into this country and see how the comparison stands. Remember that the iron and steel industries of the United States have for their support a home market of 75,000,000 or 80,000,000 of people with greater industrial development than we can hope to have for years to come, and one would suppose if the iron and steel industry is to flourish at all in Canada that we must have protection approaching in some measure at least to that which has been found necessary in the United States for the purpose of building up that industry in that country. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) said years ago that if the iron industry could not succeed with the protection it had, it would be better to give up paying any attention to either iron or coal and devote our time to digging potatoes and other agricultural pursuits, but I do not think my hon. friend is of that opinion to-day. I have done him the credit of quoting his remarks in 1897 and in 1899, which are in somewhat marked contrast, with the utterance to which I have just referred and which was made by him in the year 1887, and I trust that the Finance Minister has not departed from the view which he took in 1899 as well as in 1897 of the importance of the iron industry in Canada. And having that in mind; and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister having that in mind—because the Minister of Finance spoke for the government with regard to this subject—let us see what measure of protection we have in this country as compared with that which has developed to so enormous an extent these great industries in the United States.

The United States' tariff, particularly the iron tariff is very complex, and is a very carefully thought out production, and it has not been easy in all cases to make an exact comparison between the Canadian tariff and the United States' tariff, but in some instances at least that comparison is possible, and I will point out to the House what the difference is between the duties which are thought necessary even to-day in the United States, and those which we grant as a measure of protection to this great Canadian industry.

The House will see from this table, that in almost every item of the United States' tariff, certainly in every important item, the steel industry in the United States of America receives a measure of protection which is much larger than we give to that industry in Canada.

Now, I am aware that this government in the year 1899 brought down certain resolutions for the purpose of giving support to the iron industry and causing it to be developed in this country, and I have already referred to the language of the Minister of Finance on that occasion when he dwelt upon the importance of this industry. Encouragement by way of bounty was given to the production of certain forms of iron in Canada for the reason that the tariff had been materially reduced in 1897, and it was announced upon that occasion by the Minister of Finance that the reason for extending the time for the bounties was that it was desirable to give the iron industry a fair chance in Canada, and it could only receive that fair chance by obtaining some compensation for the reduction in duties which had been made in the tariff of 1897 as compared with that of 1894. But, I do not know whether the House is really impressed with the very great reduction which was made in the tariff of 1897, and therefore I shall take the liberty of reading to the House some items in that tariff which show the serious reduction in the protection of this industry which was then effected.

And I may say in passing, that while the system of bounties may for the time being give support to the iron and steel industry in this country or any other country; I, for my own part, do not believe that the iron and steel industry in Canada can ever be put upon a solid basis, upon a permanent footing, unless we have something more than these bounties can give; unless we have actual protection in Canada such as will secure for our own producers our own market.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know whether that is the view of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance after having undertaken that system of bounties. I observe that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce seems rather to smile at that idea, and I suppose that that is due to the fact that his old free trade ideas of years ago still dominate his mind to some extent. However, that may be, I think we are face to face with two alternatives. We are face to face with increased protection to the iron and steel industry in Canada, or with this fact, that, for a number of years at least, that industry cannot be maintained unless our producers can command our own market and our own market cannot be given to them except by a very much higher measure of protection than they enjoy at the present time. Let us compare the duties levied under the Conservative tariff of 1894 with the duties levied by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the tariff introduced by him in 1897:

	Tariff 1894.	Tariff 1897.	Decrease.
Pig iron	$4. per ton	$2.50 per ton	$1.50
Scrap (cast)	$4 "	$2.50 "	$1.50
Billets and blooms	$5 "	$2 "	$3.00
Scrap (wrought)	$4 "	$1 "	$3.00
Steel bars	$10 "	$7 "	$3.00
Steel fish and tie plates	$10 "	$8 "	$2.00
Steel bands	$10 "	$7 "	$3.00
Plates	$10 "	$7 "	$3.00
Steel shaftings and forgings	35 per cent, or not less than $15 per ton.	30 per cent, = to $10 per ton.	5 per cent, or $5 per ton.
Steel angles less than 35 pounds per yard	35 per cent, or not less than $10 per ton.	$7 per ton	$3.00
Plates not less than ¼-inch thick	12½ per cent.	10 per cent	2½ per cent.
Tubing for boilers	7½ "	5 "	2½ "
Angles, tees, beams, &c., weighing over 35 pounds per lineal yard.	12½ "	10 "	2½ "
Plates, rolled edges	12 "	10 "	2 "
Barbed wire	¾ "	Free	¾ "
Galvanized wire	20 "	Free	20 "

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that these differences are very large, indeed. In some cases three-fourths of the protection has been taken away; in many cases from twenty-five to fifty per cent of the protection has been taken away; and it was apparently expected by the hon. Minister of Finance that the system of bounties he introduced in 1899 would take the place of this protection, and that the iron industry in Canada would have the same opportunity of development which it had previously enjoyed. Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot think that this is the case. I cannot think that the bounties provided by my hon. friend, which will come to an end in the year 1905, have afforded the same measure of encouragement as that which was afforded by the tariff of 1894; and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in announcing, as he did in the county of Yarmouth, N.S., during the past year, that the system of bounties would not be continued after the year 1905, gave to this industry a very severe blow indeed; because the bounties coming to an end in 1905, and the protection to the industry having been decreased by the very large reductions which I have mentioned, and being now very slight as compared with that afforded in the great country to the south of us, it is not much matter of wonder that the iron industry of Canada is not at the present moment in a very flourishing condition. Let us look once more at some of the items which we imported last year free of duty :

	Quantity.	Value.
Wire rods..	55,182 tons.	$1,523,792
Barbed wire	16,469 "	826,846
Galvanized wire...	14,854 "	548,185
Tin plates..	27,207 "	1,528,655
Billets and flat springs.	3,681 "	119,309
Steel for windmills, &c..	3,305 "	153,114

Is there any reason why we should not give in Canada adequate protection to the iron and steel industry ? If we give to it the protection which it should have, having regard to our raw materials, and the resources of our country, will it follow that there will be any permanent increase in prices in this country ? Well, Sir, let us look at the lessons of the past with regard to that. We have taken the duty from binder twine; we have to some extent taken the duty from coal oil; we have taken the duty altogether from barbed wire; and yet, every one of these articles commands a higher price in Canada to-day than it did at the time the Conservative tariff was in force. Let us look at the history of the United States. Thirty years ago in that country steel rails were quoted at $112 a ton ; in 1902 they were quoted at $28 ; No. 1 foundry pig iron was quoted at $48 a ton, now it is quoted at $22.19 ; bar iron, rolled, was $97.63 per ton, now it is $47.79; cut nails have come down in price from $4.92 to $2.29; and so on, through the whole list of products of iron and steel in the United States. Can we not trust, Mr. Speaker, to the competition, the enterprise and the ability of our own business men to keep prices down in Canada ? Let us look around Canada to-day and see the industries which have flourished. Can any hon. gentleman on either side of the House tell me that, in respect of those industries which have had a fair and adequate measure of protection in Canada, any undue price has been exacted from the consumer ? I have paid some attention to this question; I have looked around for evidence upon it, and I do not know of one single instance in Canada in which an industry has been developed by protection and the price to the consumer is not a fair price, brought down to a fair basis by the very competition which exists in the country among our own people. So I say I do not think we have anything to fear in Canada from giving an adequate measure of relief to this industry.

I see no reason therefore why the government should not restore to that iron and steel industry the protection at least which it formerly enjoyed, and I should be inclined to think that in giving that question all the consideration and the attention it deserves, they might well take into consideration whether or not the protection which existed under the Conservative tariff of 1894 should not, so far as some of the articles are concerned, at least, be very materially increased, with every advantage to the true interests of the people of Canada as a whole. In giving the Canadian duties upon certain articles on which the duties are low or which are free, I should have said that the duties I have mentioned are in some cases those imposed upon articles imported into Canada for the purposes of manufacturing. That is the case with regard to two or three of the articles I have mentioned, and I state this in order that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance or my right hon. friend who leads the House may not suppose that I am under any misapprehension with regard to the actual condition of the duties on the articles I have named.

I believe that it is the duty of this government to take this matter into consideration at once, if they have not already done so. I would have been glad, had the government so desired, to let this motion stand over until a later day for that purpose but as no request of that kind was made me, I feel it my duty to proceed with my amendment. It is not made with any idea of staying the hand of the government or hampering the government, but with the profound conviction that it is necessary, in the interests of Canada to-day, in the interests of the iron industry, upon which the homes and fortunes of so many of our people depend, that we should have some greater measure of protection to that industry. I recognize the fact that in dealing with the duties upon iron and steel, the government would be obliged to give consideration to other industries in this country, and probably to revise our tariff in respect of many articles into the manufacture of which iron and steel enter. So far as we on this side are concerned, we are not afraid of that position. We believe that there should be a revision of the tariff generally, and if the government, in deciding to give some measure of increased protection to the iron and steel industry, finds it necessary to make some revision of the tariff in connection with articles into the manufacture of which iron and steel enter, we on this side will be glad to lend them a helping hand and support them in that measure of protection to those industries which we think the true interests of this country demand. So that considering the importance of this industry, even if it should prolong this session to a greater extent than anticipated, even if it should involve a more complete revision of the tariff than might occur to one at first blush, I say that, having a regard to the condition of affairs in this country at present, the parliament of Canada could do no better work than give attention to that revision at once. The homes of ten thousand or fifteen thousand people may depend on the action which the government will take. A very important industry in the province of Nova Scotia may come to a standstill, a very important industry in the west may have to cease operations. I question if hon. gentlemen in this House adequately realize what a blow it would be to the future of Canada, not only to the iron and steel industry, but to Canada as a whole, if these industries, in which so many millions of dollars have been invested in the past few years, should come to a standstill. No one can overestimate what it would mean to this country should that come to pass. No one can exaggerate what effect it might have upon general financial conditions, and I therefore say that if this amendment of mine, calling for increased protection to the iron and steel industry, should involve a somewhat general revision of the tariff, the parliament of Canada could not do better work this summer than devote its attention to that subject. I do not know that there is one hon. gentleman in this House who is not so seriously impressed with the present condition of affairs that he would be unwilling to sacrifice some of his time and comfort for the purpose of remaining here even longer than we anticipated, in order that a measure of protection, adequate to the needs of this industry and to the condition of the country, might be given. Therefore, not to detain the House at greater length, but in the sincere hope that the government may see fit to extend some measure of protection to this industry, and in the sincere hope that the government may be willing to accept this resolution as one urged from this side is in the best interests of the country, I beg to move :

That all the words after the word " That " in the proposed motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor :

This House is of opinion that the tariff of customs duties should give such protection to iron and steel industries as will not only secure to our own producers and manufacturers the Canadian market in articles now produced or manufactured in this country, but will also develop and sustain the manufacture in Canada of other iron and steel products which at present are imported in large quantities from other countries.

And that the present tariff of customs duties should be now readjusted on this principle.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). If I were disposed, Mr. Speaker, to enter into any protracted discussion with my hon. friend on this subject, I should perhaps be obliged to take exception to some of the statements and conclusions which he has advanced. Not, however, to all. There was much in the hon. gentleman's speech to command my respect and admiration, and in that class I would include the excellent quotations he gave us from the speech of the Minister of Finance. There is also another point made by my hon. friend which demands my recognition, my appreciation, and, shall I say, my thanks. When I remember that for seven years hon. gentlemen opposite, in this House and out of this House, have used the argument that the policy of the government to-day is the old national policy, when I remember that they have gone from ocean to ocean to proclaim that no material reductions have been made in this tariff, when I remember that for seven years that has been the declaration and the attitude of the hon. gentlemen, I note it with satisfaction when the hon. gentleman comes down now and, for fifteen minutes reads a long statistical statement to show that, in the great iron business of this country, the foundation of so many other industries, not only have we reduced the tariff, but we have made enormous reductions. I regard that, Sir, as of great importance; I regard that statement from my hon. friend as ample apology—if I may call it so—for the time he has occupied in what was otherwise, in my judgment, an inopportune speech. But in the presence of that speech, that recantation if not apology for seven years of misunderstanding—to use a mild word—I want to thank my hon. friend for having, at last, put the matter right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I challenge the hon. gentleman to point to a single word of mine inconsistent with what I have just said.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is in a better position than any other member of this House to raise a question as to consistency. However, I said that if I were disposed to enter upon a protracted discussion of this subject I should be obliged to take exception to some of the statements, opinions and conclusions of my hon. friend. But I do not propose to enter upon such a discussion, because I think it would be inopportune, and I am persuaded that no good purpose would be served by having that discussion at the present time. The hon. gentleman seems to have expected that we would ask him to withdraw the resolution. We have no desire that he should withdraw it. He has brought it forward and he accepts the responsibility of it. Whether it is timely or untimely is for him to decide. In our judgment it is not timely.

Among the many sins laid at the door of this government, I for the first time now hear the charge that we have been lacking in generosity and liberality to the iron industry. I have heard it said from time to time that we have dealt too liberally with that industry; I have heard comparisons to the effect: You have done thus for the iron industry, but you will not do it for some other. It is a new charge that we have been dealing ungenerously with the iron industry. When the matter came up a few days ago I reminded my hon. friend that the resolution brought forward on the subject of the tariff were still before the House, the final stages not having been taken. I suggested that when these resolutions came up that would be the most opportune time for the discussion of tariff questions. My hon. friend has preferred to take a different course. He has preferred not to bring this question up in the ordinary way of tariff discussion, but to bring it forward as an amendment to Supply. He has preferred to bring it up in that form which is always taken in the moving of a vote of want of confidence. I am satisfied that no one truly interested in the iron industry, or with a sincere desire to promote the interests of the country irrespective of party politics, can support the hon. gentleman in precipitating this discussion to-day. But since the hon. gentleman has taken the responsibility of bringing the matter forward in this way, since he has preferred not to take the usual method and discuss tariff questions at the proper time, I recognize his right—I do not question that—but as he has brought this forward at what we regard as an inopportune time, and has brought it forward in the way in which one must vote either for or against the motion, I have to ask the House to treat this as a vote of want of confidence and reject the motion.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has chosen to treat the motion made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in the manner in which he has treated it. I presume that the hon. gentleman has taken that course which he thinks will be the most convenient and comfortable for the government on this occasion. I should have thought that the hon. gentleman would not be disposed, nor would the government of which he is to-day the spokesman, be disposed, to insist too much on matters of etiquette in the presence of what is a most important question for Canada. However, the hon. gentleman having chosen to treat the matter in that way, the result simply follows that, instead of replying to the exceedingly temperate and well-reasoned address made by the leader of the opposition, he has resorted to the use very commonly made by governments of their majority, he avoids discussion of the question and simply relies upon the numerical strength of the governments' forces to set the question aside for the time-being. I should have imagined that, perhaps, the hon. minister would have taken the opportunity to deal a little more fully with what he chooses to regard as a recantation by the leader of the opposition with reference to the charge, which he says has been made from ocean to ocean, against the present government, that they have really adopted the old protective tariff of the Conservative government. While the hon. minister showed a certain amount of pleasure and satisfaction in making that statement, still, even that was not enough to induce him to take the House and the country into his confidence, but he has resorted to the policy usually resorted to by the right hon. leader of the House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when he meets a difficulty—he has simply effected a retirement within the lines of Torres Vedras. There can be no question about the importance of the question which the leader of the opposition has raised. There can be no question about the opinion held of it on this side of the House. I regret very much that on this occasion the Minister of Finance, speaking for the government, has invited his followers to close their ears to all reasoning addressed to the government, to leave out of sight altogether the considerations affecting the welfare of the iron and every other industry in Canada and simply keep in view the stability and comfort of the government at the present moment. That may be a very important matter to hon. gentlemen opposite, but I do not believe that in the opinion of the people of the Dominion of Canada it is by any means so important a question as the welfare, success, and progress of Canada in those great industries for which it is so well adapted.

I suppose that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has, practically in brief fashion, exhausted the statement of the case proposed to be made from this side of the House, that is, that it is absolutely essential if Canada is ever to have any great iron industry, that the government of the day should change the policy under which it has been living up to this time. The statement made by Conservative speakers either in this House or out of it, that the government of to-day is living practically under the old protective tariff, is not at all replied to by citing the fact that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Fielding)) has chosen to dwell upon with satisfaction, the fact that the leader of the opposition has been able to point out numerous cases in which the amount of protection enjoyed by iron and its associated industries has been reduced by the present administration. The Minister of Finance passed very hurriedly over that subject, and for excellent reasons. He did not deal with the associated argument of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that the government did not actually diminish the protection afforded by Canada to the iron industry, because if they had reduced the protection afforded by the tariff to that industry, they have made it good, and even more than made it good, by the bounties which they have given. Take the tariff as it stood, even under the figuring of the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs, it has always been impossible to show that, generally speaking, taking the tariff as a whole, as great a reduction has been made by the government now in power as was made in the customs duties by the preceding Conservative administration, which always called itself protectionist. There was a small reduction somewhere less than two per cent, in the neighbourhood of one per cent, but not as great as was made by the Minister of Finance of the preceding government, which always avowed itself a protectionist administration. So that the statement, if the leader of the opposition or any other member on this side of the House had really made it, stands uncontradicted and uncontroverted to this moment, in that in so far as the tariff of to-day may be regarded as a whole, it is practically, with some small modifications and readjustments, a national policy, the old national policy, a protective tariff.

Now we have never found fault with the government for that fact. We did point to the fact that there was a certain amount of inconsistency in their position; we did point to the fact that the tariff which they presented to the country in 1897 was not exactly that tariff which the honest free traders who put them into power in 1896 would have expected them to submit to parliament. But we never found fault with them for that. In fact I think the great subject of praise from this side of the House, in dealing with the conduct of the administration, has been the fact that they chose that course and followed it. I believe their highest title to a claim upon the good will and gratitude of the people of Canada rests entirely in the fact that on coming into power they decided to stand by the institutions of the country and not destroy them by a sudden reversion of the Conservatives policy, but practically to stand by that policy. But what is the position to-day? While we give commendation to the government for that course, and while we congratulate the country upon the fact that the government chose that policy, we say now that the world generally and the industries of Canada are in such a position that conditions have changed, and that it is absolutely essential that these gentlemen who are to-day governing Canada under what is virtually a system of protection, should not remain in a stationary position, but should watch the course of trade the world over, should consider any competition which Canadian industries are expected to meet, and should adjust from time to time their tariff so as to make good that protection which I maintain the tariff under which we are living is intended to give to the industries of Canada.

Now, it is a simple matter which any gentleman on the opposite side can verify for himself with half an hour's research, it is an absolutely bald statement of the truth to assert, and it is very easy to prove, that not one of the countries which to-day enjoys a leading position in connection with the great iron industry which is the object of the resolution moved by the leader of the opposition, has ever attained the position which it occupies without the government of the country in which it has grown up, affording it protection. Our friends opposite are constantly pointing to Great Britain as a free trade country, they are citing the example of the mother country. In 1896 they professed to quote it to the people of this country, offering to them a tariff such as was in force in Great Britain; because their policy as expounded by their speakers and their press was a policy of revenue tariff such as they have in England. Now, what is the history of the iron industry in Great Britain? It is to-day, and has been for the last fifty years, living under a free trade system. But is it thriving under a free trade system? There can be no question whatever that the figures quoted here to-day by the leader of the opposition, show that in that country which is the one great example of a country in the world endeavouring to live under free trade system, and at the same time aspiring to occupy a leading position in industrial life, that country is practically stationary to-day, and the greatest statesman in that country is appealing to the people to reconsider the course they have been following, and is pointing them to what he considers a better way, and is inviting them to adopt a tariff which will enable them to keep what they have gained when thrown into competition with the great nations of the world.

It is an easy matter to prove that the position which Great Britain has attained in the iron world has been attained under a system of high protection. Does the hon. gentleman require to be told that the time is not far past when in Great Britain a duty of £20 a ton was imposed upon iron imported from Sweden and other countries of Europe? Does he require to be told that so far back as 1660, under Charles II, the tariff was so complicated that it contained sixty or sixty-five different headings in the iron schedules, including hundreds of articles upon which duties were levied far exceeding 100 per cent? Does he require to be told that in many cases actually the government of Great Britain positively prohibited the importation of any articles of iron, and for a long time refused to permit the export of iron from their own country in order that the manufacturers of iron might have no lack of raw material ? Do our friends opposite not know that the whole object of the government was not only to develop and promote the manufacture of iron, especially in the shape of raw iron or pig iron, but to develop its manufacture into every one of the more highly organized classes and the more profitable divisions into which it enters in almost every feature of our modern industrial life ? There can be no question about the fact that when Great Britain attained a commanding position, having become the leader of the world in iron production, having reached that point when she alone was producing more iron than all the rest of the world combined, when she attained that position, then other countries that saw the abounding prosperity in Great Britain under the operation of that policy, these outside countries, envying the position of that country, set themselves to work to secure for themselves a share of that amazing prosperity which they witnessed in Great Britain. In every case they resorted to the very same system by which Great Britain had achieved her wonderful position, in every case they resorted to protection. They took their own home markets for themselves, they raised their duties to such a point that their home markets were absolutely protected, and to-day Great Britain is shut out of the markets of all her great competitors. Under the operation of that system I believe to-day Germany and Belgium equal her in iron production, or nearly so, and on the other hand, we find the United States far in excess, almost doubling her, in the production of iron.

Now, in the United States we find a case much like our own. We have a country of enormous natural advantages in which is found in the utmost profusion all the sources out of which this great industry has grown. Did that country achieve great success as an iron producing country until they resorted to protection of the most extreme character ? It did not. Up till 1816 or 1817, although during the preceding years, and during the time in which the United States were a portion of the colonial empire of Great Britain, it was the policy of the mother country to foster and develop the production of raw iron in the colonies, her iron was admitted into Great Britain at a duty for a long time of £1 a ton, while £20 was imposed upon iron of the northern European countries, and at one time it was admitted free into the mother country. And in face of that fact did the iron industries of the United States, after the great rebellion, after they had become an independent nation, show any vitality, any growth, any strength, any prospect of ever rivalling the great iron industries of the mother country. They never did. Not until the embargo which came about in 1809, when Great Britain refused to send her goods into that country and suspended commercial intercourse, did that country show any small beginning of an iron industry. Then, under pressure, when they were compelled to undertake the production of their own iron, not being able to procure it elsewhere, they took their first steps, weak and feeble, making no progress whatever, towards the marvellous strides that they are making to-day. But from 1816 and thereabouts, it became the policy of the United States to encourage the manufacture of iron by a system of protection which is far in excess of any that has yet been undertaken by any government in Canada.

And the result was that from 1816 to 1840, or thereabouts, constant changes and advances and increases were made in the tariff upon iron and iron products until the manufacturers of the United States were in the enjoyment of protection ranging from 40 to 100 per cent, but still, their first steps were weak and slow and it was not until over half a century was consumed in encouragement of the character that I have just described, that the industry became fairly established upon its feet and in a position to compete with the mother country, Germany and other countries in which the iron industry was largely developed. Thus, that country, which, in the first instance and with this measure of protection, seemed to be following this course of manufacture with tottering steps holding out no promise of ever achieving greatness, suddenly, when the time came, when capital was placed at the disposal of the people, when people flooded into the country and a home market was assured, became the rival of the mother country and other iron producing countries, until, as my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) says, it now dominates the iron production of the whole world. It is not too much for us in Canada to hope to see such a state of affairs in this country as exists there. We have every condition in this country with one or two exceptions. We have not the large population in Canada, we have not the magnificent home market, and we have not the great protective tariff which the United States have, but leaving these advantages at one side, we have every one of the conditions to give success to the people who choose to embark in this industry. We have ores, we have coal, we have fluxes in abundance, we have a climate suited to the discharge of the work which is done in connection with the iron industry, and we have a people in Canada in whom, I am sure, the right hon. leader of the government and the other members of the government must have every confidence as possessing all the qualities, the strength of mind and body, the adaptability, the tactile skill and clearness of head to fit them to undertake the development of this great industry. We have every requirement save the population and save the protection which the government are in a position to give that industry. Now, this is a far more important matter than is any matter of etiquette. If it be possible to charge fairly against my hon. friend that his resolution is inopportune, is ill-timed, even in that case I should think, when these vast interests are appealing to the members of the government, they might overlook such niceties, such questions of precedence and such questions of etiquette, and they might, in the face of the opportunity which lies at their hand, not only forgive my hon. friend any laches on his part, but they might welcome with gratitude the opportunity which he has offered them of checking the apparent halt in the progress of the iron industry of Canada and taking a forward step, which, being taken on the part of the government, is bound to ensure to the people of Canada a commanding position in this enormous, this marvellous, this world controlling industry of the production of iron. However, I presume it is hopeless, in view of the attitude of the government, to argue this question. If hon. members supporting the government opposite were prepared to get up and deny or controvert the arguments advanced by my hon. friend and which could be advanced in great profusion by other hon. gentlemen supporting him on this side of the House, we could hope to argue this question out, we could hope to come to a decision as to what the wisest course is, either as a matter to be pursued by the government, or as a matter in the interests of the business men of Canada, which the government ought to take. But, that is not the attitude of the government at all. Their attitude is that they will do nothing, that they will not be disturbed. We are slumbering, we have been slumbering for years ; do not disturb us. It is true we have this urgent demand coming to the government from every manufacturer in Canada, yet, that government refuse deliberately to do anything. They are in an attitude of expectancy, they are waiting for political advantage to come from this point or that point. They refuse to take that bold, patriotic and strong course that the government of Canada ought to take. It is not well that the government, when such matters as this are brought up, because this is not a question of theory, it having been exemplified in every country in the world, to insist upon the observance of a rule of etiquette as to the manner in which such a proposition should be made to the government. It is a time for action and it is the duty of the opposition, having exhausted every effort in the direction of general propositions and of general invitations to this government, to show their hand and to choose their course. It is the duty of this opposition not only upon the iron industry question, but upon every other question and in connection with every great industry in the country to state their views and to stake their political existence as they are doing upon the opinions which they have honestly held. It would be far more convenient for the opposition to follow the course which the government are following, to allow the government to go on their way, to give them all the rope they want, to wait for the moment when they are embarrassed by injudicious friends or by internal dissensions and then to participate themselves upon the government with the view of their downfall. That is not the course which has been followed by this opposition. This opposition are perfectly clear in stating the position which they believe the government ought to adopt to-day. They want the government to adopt that position. They believe that it is essentially necessary, in the interests of the country, that the government should adopt that position, and their attitude in every year in which they have sat in opposition has consistently shown that the action they have taken to-day is one of encouraging the government in supporting our industries, in maintaining the protective system. We have been sincere in our advice which we have tendered to the government not to stand still, satisfied with what they have done in the past, but to go forward, to go onward, to show themselves in front of the people, not to wait for the people to lead them. It is the duty of a strong government to learn from the signs of the times the course which the people ought to follow, and to lead the people in that course. If we are to witness the highest statesmanship in this world we can scarcely look too long to see how danger can lurk in a bold, active, energetic movement. It is their duty to signalize the fact that they are in charge of the affairs of the country, that they have a definite conviction in regard to fiscal matters and that the system based on that conviction is not one in the interests of the government only, but in the interests of the country.

There can be no question at all about the great interest that attaches to this question for myself, not only for the country from which I come, but from the province from which I come. There can be no question at all that while we have not great agricultural resources, although we have agricultural resources in Nova Scotia to a large extent, our hope, our desire, is for a great development in industrial activity in Canada. Our only hope, if we are to be able to hold our own besides those immense and rapidly growing commonwealths of the west, lies in a tremendous development of industrial activity in our own country, and we desire that this great foundation industry of iron shall be encouraged and protected and helped along and assisted during the first steps which it must take in its infancy, until it is placed in such a position that it can stand alone and make its way in competition and in rivalry with the iron industry of the world. I am surprised to see the hon. Minister of Finance so cavalier about this question. He knows how important it is to the people of the maritime provinces. He knows how important it is to the people of the Sydneys. He knows how the hopes of the people of Sydney and Halifax, which, I am sure is very near and dear to him, are built up, not only upon seeing the iron industry of Nova Scotia continue, but on seeing it attain to an enormous development. What are the plans and hopes for the establishment of iron ship building works in the lower provinces ? Where is that vista of development towards which the eyes of our people have been turned for years past with the utmost hope and longing ? And yet the Finance Minister tells the people of the maritime provinces to-day that he deliberately refuses to consider a matter that is of such deep importance to them. And why ? Because—if we are to believe the argument which the hon. gentleman has advanced in the House, and he has advanced only one—because his opponent who leads the opposition has chosen an inopportune time in which to bring this question to the notice of parliament. I do not imagine for a moment that the Minister of Finance will find it easy, by his argument of opportunism, to satisfy the people of the lower provinces who are anxious to see development and anxious to invest their labour and capital in these great enterprises. I do not think the people of the maritime provinces will listen with a great deal of patience to this excellent argument advanced to the House —excellent so far as it is addressed to the supporters of the hon. gentleman, but disappointing to the great majority of the people of Canada. The Finance Minister will find it exceedingly difficult to prove that this amendment is inopportune. The Finance Minister having, in his budget speech, exposed to the country and to the House of Commons the opinion of the government in reference to its policy on that tariff, every moment after that is an opportune time for members on this side of the House to specify wherein the policy of the government is not sound, and to endeavour to change the conclusion of the government on that policy, if they can change it. It is the privilege and the duty of members on this side of the House to endeavour on every occasion to induce the government to depart from a policy which they think is a bad policy for the country, and to enter upon a policy which they consider to be sound. There is little in the argument of the Finance Minister that the time is inopportune. There may be reasons known to the hon. gentleman of a semi-diplomatic or confidential character ; there may be relations between that hon. gentleman and other members of the government which render it inopportune ; there may be negotiations in other directions, but the House of Commons is not made acquainted with these transactions, and it is not to be assumed that the opposition should take cognizance of them and seek some moment for an amendment of this kind which the financial spokesman of the government may deem opportune. Are we to have such a discussion as this cut off simply because it suits the convenience of the Finance Minister or his leader, to state that the consideration of a matter of such supreme importance is inopportune ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL. We on this side of the House hope that there are gentlemen sitting on the government benches who may have some convictions upon which to base their objection to the course that is marked out by the leader of the opposition ; not matters of opportunism, but matters of conviction. There used to be gentlemen in the Liberal ranks who loudly proclaimed that they were free traders, but I never see them fail to vote for this government, which is not a very free trade government. It may be that there are those in the House to-day who are prepared to brush aside as unworthy of notice the facts which the leader of the opposition has cited as to the enormous progress made by Great Britain, by Germany, by Belgium, by the United States, in wrestling one from the other the pride of being the leading nation of the world in iron manufacture. There may be gentlemen willing to brush aside as absolutely irrelevant arguments advanced to show that the United States, instead of throwing open their markets to us, are excluding us, and are pursuing that course of high, adequate, efficient and sufficient protection, which is the only thing that in the past has given commercial supremacy to any of the countries which to-day occupy the front rank in manufactures and commerce.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. A. S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). I congratulate the leader of the opposition on the moderate way in which he has placed this very important matter before the House, but still I consider that his motion is inopportune. I have been in a position to learn what is going on, not for the last few days, but for the last few weeks. I know that this question is of vital importance to the iron industry, and I know that the interests of this business to-day are in such a state that certainly further consideration will be required. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has referred to the building up of the iron industry in the United States from almost nothing to its present gigantic proportions. He told us that it was only when the United States adopted a very high tariff that the iron trade was developed. I admit that, but I also wish him to admit that the iron industries when first established were established by the Atlantic seaboard under unnatural conditions, the high tariff did not save them, and there is nothing left to-day to mark the sites of these establishments but a few spots of rust. It was only when the iron industry of the United States moved west, where iron and coal and limestone were in close proximity, that this industry commenced to prosper, and Pittsburg and Alabama became the great centres of the United States iron industry of which such boast is made. This phase of the subject has not been considered by hon. gentleman in treating of this matter. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Mr. Bell) also told us that it was under protection that the iron industry of Great Britain developed. I must contradict that. Last year when I had the honour to speak in the budget debate I quoted from a number of authorities to show that that business did not develop under protection ; that in fact the direst distress in the history of the British workman existed for several decades under the highest protection, and that it was not until the raw material of her trade, which does not consist alone in iron, lime and coal, but which consists largely of food and other raw materials ; it was not until these were made free and until the shipping of Great Britain was made free, that the great iron trade of that country developed.

Let me deal for a few moments with the iron development in Canada. I think hon. gentlemen, irrespective of politics, will agree with me that the growth of the Canadian iron industry has been slow and unsatisfactory, and has not yielded the results that were anticipated by the protection afforded in former years. Let me point out to hon. gentlemen that so unpopular was the history of the iron industry in Canada that in 1899, when the Minister of Finance brought down his bounty measure, the Hon. George E. Foster, whom we all know, was opposed to that measure, rose from his seat and walked out of the House.

Mr. CLANCY. Does not the hon. gentleman know perfectly well that the Hon. Mr. Foster supported these resolutions in 1897 ?

Mr. KENDALL. If the hon. gentleman is correct, I will retract; but I wish to tell him that it was generally understood, in the House and out of it, that the Hon. Mr. Foster was opposed to that measure, and I myself sat in the gallery when the Finance Minister brought his measure down, and saw Mr. Foster leave his seat and go out of the House, and he did not vote on the resolution.

Mr. CLANCY. He supported the resolution; there was no vote on it.

Mr. KENDALL. Let me point out to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) the condition of the iron business in his own county.

Mr. BELL. Does the hon. gentleman say that there was a division on the resolutions moved by the Finance Minister ?

Mr. KENDALL. I understood that there was ; that is my impression. Now, will the hon. member for Pictou admit that under a high protective tariff in Canada, before the present Finance Minister reduced the duties, the iron business in the county of Pictou was established on a satisfactory basis ? Will he for a moment assert that the condition of that business was satisfactory ? Does he not know that in a report brought down by the managers of that business it was shown that the wages paid to the men engaged in it ranged from 80 cents to $1 a day for the great bulk of the employees ? Does he not know that that industry, I will not say almost ruined a bank, but for a happy accident would have crippled a bank ?

Mr. BELL. What industry does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. KENDALL. The Nova Scotia Steel Company.

Mr. BELL. I think that is a very prosperous industry.

Mr. KENDALL. Was it at that time ?

Mr. BELL. What is it now ?

Mr. KENDALL. I will come to that a little later. For a number of years the company paid no dividend.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For several years before the advent of the present government the iron industry in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bell) town was unable to pay its dividends.

Mr. BELL. Might I ask the hon. Finance Minister if that was his reason for reducing the duties in favour of that industry ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend admits the fact, the hon. members can all draw their own inferences as to the fate of the iron industry under the Liberal policy and the Conservative policy respectively.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to misunderstand me, nor do I wish to cast any reproaches upon the management of that business. The Nova Scotia steel business was taken up by good practical men, who worked first in a small way, and developed their business; and all credit is due to them for the development which has taken place, not only in their own business, but in the business of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. It was their knowledge, acquired under these adverse conditions, which made those men trusted by the investors in the iron business of this country.

Now, I think I have made my point. There are one or two other iron businesses in Canada, one in Quebec and one in Ontario, neither of which was at all prosperous under the high tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite. But my point is this : The development of the iron business in every country where it has been developed has been slow. Every iron business is a matter of slow growth, and you cannot at all times ascribe the fact that an iron business does not succeed to any relationships of tariff to that business. We have seen iron businesses developed under a low tariff; we have seen iron businesses fail under a high tariff. In 1897, the gentlemen who established the Nova Scotia steel business, after having for several years tested in their own furnaces at New Glasgow, the possibility of manufacturing iron from Newfoundland ore and Cape Breton coal and limestone, came to the town of Sydney, and made a proposition to the town to grant them certain concessions. They came to the Nova Scotia legislature in the winter of 1898, and obtained a charter. They came to the Dominion House later in the same year, and asked for the imposition of iron bounties. It was inopportune at that time for the ministry of the day to comply with their request; but in the following year my hon. friend the Minister of Finance brought down his scheme for encouraging the business by a system of bounties.

Now, I want to point out this to the House, that the gentlemen who promoted that industry, and who, we may suppose, looked deeply and broadly into the matter, and also looked ahead, ought to have known, when they asked for those bounties, that they would be effective to place that iron business on a sound footing.

It is one of the misfortunes of the case that evidently the bounties, did not entirely meet the requirements; but I wish also to point out that when in 1897 the present tariff was brought down and the old tariff was revised, provision was made to assist or protect to some extent the established iron business of the country. The Dominion Iron and Steel Company, which is to-day the leading iron industry looking for assistance, was at that time unthought of. Protection was granted to the products of the Nova Scotia Steel Company; but provision was not made for such products as might be made by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. Of course, the Dominion Iron and Steel Company might make the same products as those now made by the Nova Scotia Steel Company; but the market in Canada to-day is only large enough to absorb such lines as the Nova Scotia Steel Company is now producing; and if the Dominion Iron and Steel Company undertook to produce similar articles, there is no doubt that the two industries would be crowding each other, and perhaps pressing each other to the wall. Long before the hon. leader of the opposition spoke, or some days before, representations had been made by my hon. colleague and myself, with several others from Nova Scotia, to the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the hon. Minister of Finance; and let me say that I have such confidence in these hon. gentlemen and in the soundness of the case which we presented, that I believe that at the right time and in the right way the hon. Minister of Finance, who has always done the right thing in Nova Scotia, will do the right thing in this instance.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has been endeavouring to prove that they do not need any protection.

Mr. KENDALL. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. From my point of view, I do not object to the government raising the tariff on manufactured articles of iron—there is a very good reason, perhaps, why I should not; but I wish to point out to the House and the country that if the duty on iron is raised to any extent, for a number of years it will hardly be a protective duty, but largely a revenue duty; that is, if it is put on all around, because, as I have said, the development of the iron industry is always slow, and it will take many years before any industry that we are likely to establish in Canada can be built up to meet the requirements of the many details of the iron trade. I think myself it would be a better policy for the country to deal with this matter, not in a wholesale way, but piecemeal. It is far better, when the country requires iron products, if they cannot be produced in the country, and when our revenue is overflowing, to get them as cheaply as we can; but in the meantime, while we are establishing the industry, if any particular iron business undertakes to manufacture a number of the articles which we use, I for one, would think it good policy on the part of the government to assist them, particularly as some of the manufacturers in the United States have shown a strong disposition to slaughter their products as soon as a young industry in Canada ventures into new fields of manufacture. For those reasons I would not object to see the tariff raised. In fact I would urge on the government, in the case of several items that have been placed before us——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. KENDALL. To raise the duties on certain articles, but not to do so, in a wholesale way, on the goods required by the people throughout the length and breadth of Canada until it can be shown that the manufacturers of Canada are prepared to furnish them. If duties should be put on all around, the effect would be, not that the increase would go into the hands of the manufacturers, but that a larger amount would go into the revenue than at present. I wish to point out to the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Pictou the particular reason why I, representing Cape Breton, can scarcely follow them. Let me remind them that at the time the hon Minister of Finance was laying the foundations of the present prosperity of that country, these hon. gentlemen were united with the Halifax 'Herald' in endeavouring to convince the people of that province in 1894 that the measure introduced by the Minister of Finance was fraught with dire consequences to the interests of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On what does the hon. gentleman base that statement with regard to myself ?

Mr. KENDALL. It is an assumption on my part, because I am not aware that the hon. gentleman took any active part on the hustings, but I take it for granted that in the election of 1894 he was in accord with the gentlemen in Halifax city who were then running their election mainly on a campaign against the Finance Minister, who, by his coal legislation and iron and steel legislation had done so much for the province.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not remember that that matter was at issue in the election of 1894.

Mr. KENDALL. In at least one county it was the only issue, and the Halifax 'Herald' and the hon. leader of the opposition succeeded so well that down in that county, where the measure was of the greatest importance locally, the candidates of my hon. friend who, a few years before had been returned by a large majority, were defeated by a large majority. Having said what I have said and knowing what I know, it would be scarcely wise on my part to follow the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Pictou. I would rather follow the hon. gentleman of whose policy I have had some experience, who has done something for the province from which I come, who has made every man in that province better off, than follow the leader of the opposition whose party, no doubt with his approval, followed that suicidal course in 1894. Knowing what I know and with the experience I have, I think that I will be justified in voting against the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition and in following the lead of my hon. friend the Finance Minister, who has done everything for the province of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, rather than that of the leader of the opposition who will scarcely venture to assert that up to this time he has done very much, being assured, as I am, that when the right time comes the hon. Finance Minister will do again the right thing for the country which is proud to acknowledge its obligations to his genius.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). We are afforded to-day, Mr. Speaker, the pitiable spectacle of a weak man, or a stubborn man —for both are in certain circumstances very much alike—when brought face to face with a position which he desires to avoid. Both act, in such a case, very much alike. How they squirm, how they hedge this way and the other, how they take a zig-zag course, like a dog beating through a field, and then how they resort to every shift in order to postpone the evil moment when they will have to face the inevitable and do what they have always declined to perform. We have that spectacle to-day of the weak and the stubborn man, who knows in his own mind that the moment is fast approaching when he can no longer refrain from doing that against which he has protested for years. We are to-day face to face with a great question : Is our policy to be free trade or protection ? For my part I have no hesitation in saying on which side I am ranged, and which side I believe the country favours and on which its prosperity is to be found. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was summarily dismissed from the cabinet because he advocated protection ; but if the cable despatches of to-day are correct, the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) has just declared at a public meeting in England that the policy of Canada is moderate protection. Well, the last occasion, on which I heard the hon. Minister of the Interior express his views, he was an out and out absolute free trader ; and to my mind, the skip from absolute free trade to moderate protection is greater than the skip from moderate protection to adequate protection. If, therefore, the same measure of justice is to be dealt to the Minister of the Interior as was meted out to the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), he should be summarily dismissed from the present cabinet. The hon. Minister of Finance says that this resolution is inopportune. But surely when this House opened, surely when the hon. gentleman delivered his budget speech, he should have declared what material alterations, if any, he proposed to make in the tariff customs of this country. He failed to do so, but apparently since then new light has dawned upon his mind ; and if we are to judge by the statements of the hon. minister and those of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Kendall), there is a very strong possibility that the tariff on iron will be changed. If that be the case, then how is this amendment inopportune ? On this side we have for years contended that adequate protection was absolutely required for the successful carrying out of the industries of this country. In that policy we have been opposed by the government, and it is only now, when disaster is apparently threatening some of the industries in the native province of the hon. Minister of Finance, that he finds himself compelled to give way to the irresistible logic of facts. Early in this year or at all events shortly after this House met, a wild speculation took place in the security of certain companies down in Nova Scotia. That speculation was based upon what the young men who went into it believed was absolutely reliable authority, that the members of the government had promised the directors of those companies that they would largely increase the protection to the steel and iron industry.

I know not the truth of that; but I say that the members of the government ought not to be so uncertain as to their policy that they would allow speculators to bank upon the change of their policy. And, if that is their position, I say they are not looking after the interests of this country. Now, the fad of free trade is practically being thrown to one side. We hear very little about it. We hear it said even by free traders in England that the faddish free trade that is presented and upheld by the free trade school in England would not be acknowledged by Cobden and Bright if they were here to-day. It is the uncertainty of the government policy that is threatening us here with serious difficulties. My own belief is—strengthened by what I gather from the utterances of the hon. Finance Minister and the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall)—that the government are still disputing and squabbling as to what their policy is to be. I do not believe that the government or the members of the government are united. I do not believe that they have made up their minds as to their policy. Had they done so, it would be their duty to announce it at once, not to lose a day or an hour. If they are going to alter the duties on iron and steel it is their duty to announce that policy at once. The alteration and re-adjustment of the duties on steel and iron, will, of necessity, mean the re-adjustment of the duties upon many, if not most, of the manufactured articles. And I was astonished beyond measure to hear the hon. gentleman who has just sat down proposing the theory that the tariff should be taken up and industries treated piecemeal. Could you imagine a more vicious state of affairs than the government taking one industry after another and saying: If you will support us at the polls we will deal with your industry and yours alone. No more vicious plan could be adopted. It would be absolutely impossible to have honest government if the fiscal policy of the government were carried on in that way, and I am astonished that any hon. member of this House should propose that any government should have power to deal with the tariff piecemeal.

Mr. KENDALL. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) a question?

Mr. OSLER. Certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. Will he say that his party, when in power, did not revise the tariff again and again piecemeal?

Mr. OSLER. Now, I think I have made it plain often enough in this House that I am not going to father the sins of the old Conservative party. They were many. But, as I said before, they stand up white against the sins of the present government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is ghost-like.

Mr. OSLER.

Mr. OSLER. If the sins of the present government were ghosts, we could stand them. They are not ghosts, but living realities. The government must face the question, and face it very shortly, whether they are going to swallow their whole policy. I would advise them to swallow it at once, because if they do not, they will bring disaster upon themselves—(I would not regret that so much)—and upon the whole country. Now, to show that we are getting into a condition that should make us a little anxious, let me refer to some articles in the 'New York Evening Post,' which I think, has the reputation of being one of the fairest papers in the United States. I have read it for many years, and I think that reputation is well deserved. In last Saturday's edition are to be found articles on the iron trade. One leading iron man, in reviewing the situation expresses very great uncertainty as to the reason why there should be a steady and continued fall in iron. This is what he says:—

> The iron market is strong statistically and weak sentimentally. Statistics show that consumption is at a high point, and yet demand from buyers is very light. Prices have declined because buyers thought they would get lower prices—and they have. Whether prices will go still lower or not is a question difficult to answer. They have at least reached a point where foreign importation is shut out, a factor which should tend materially to lessen supplies.

And another article, closes with this quotation—

> On the other hand, the possibilities of the steel and iron export trade, in case of a further restriction in home demand or fall in prices, is the most interesting problem of our industrial future. In the ten months ending April 30, our export of such manufactures was $19,393,000 less than in a similar period ending with April, 1901. An iron manufacturer was asked not long ago how he could afford to export any of his goods with home demand what it was——

Now, here is the key of the whole situation——

> We are clinging on to the foreign market like grim death; it is the spar which will float us when the boom collapses.

The foreign trade which he refers to is the export of iron into Canada to an enormous extent. That iron manufacture represents the iron manufactures of the United States, and he does not at all attempt to deny that they are looking to holding our market as one of the things that is going to save the iron industry of the United States from disaster. I believe it is quite possible that the Finance Minister is either wrestling with his colleagues or is being wrestled with, and the result may be at any time that we shall have an increase in our iron duties. It will come with very ill grace and, I believe it will come very unwillingly from the Finance Minister, because I believe he has some sort of idea that there was a principle in free trade which he thinks he ought to stick to. I think he does not regard it as good business, but, I believe he is a stubborn man and insists upon going a round about way to swallow himself or his principles. I would make this suggestion—that if he makes too long a circle to arrive at the point, he may arrive at it too late. I do not think there is any doubt about it that we have passed the supreme point in the period of our prosperity. It is so in the United States; it is so here, except for that one great outlet we have, the Northwest. If we have good crops there, it will carry the country through another year or two of prosperity despite the substantial blunders of the present ministers. But, if by any chance, we should have a failure of crops there we are face to face with a disaster in Canada that will appall most of us; for the manufacturing industries of the United States have attained such proportion that, with a fall of prices in iron of ten, twenty, or it might under certain conditions, of even twenty-five per cent in three months, we shall have, before we can remedy it, a flood of manufactured articles thrown into Canada that will practically ruin every Canadian manufacturer who is not, backed by large reserves of capital. Our manufacturers, during the last three or four years of great prosperity, have, I think, been very conservative, but they have still to expand, and the profits they have made have in most instances had to go into extended premises and new and modern machinery. If they should have a set back, they will not have, in most instances, the accumulated profits of the last few years to go on with; instead of that, they will have on their hands enlarged buildings, and they will have no use for the increased machinery, which will lie idle.

Now, I was greatly impressed when on my holidays during the winter time, to find what a change had come over Italy. That country, that we look upon as old and effete, is now one of the most thriving and industrious on the face of the earth. In Rome they are manufacturing in the most extensive manner. Ten or twelve years ago when the Grand Hotel was built in Rome, all its furniture, carpets and so forth were imported; to-day Rome is manufacturing its furniture for Canada, and you can buy it at Kay's, Toronto. The same with silks, the result altogether of very high protection, not imposed by the government, but imposed by individual cities to protect their own manufactures. That is an object lesson that we should take strongly to heart. I believe sincerely that unless the government face this question at once, during this session of parliament, we are going to have disaster in Canada that it will take ten years or more to get over.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It was not my intention to say a word in this debate, and I would not have risen but for some observations that have just fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler). He desires to know what is the policy of the government upon this question and upon the tariff generally. I have to say to my hon. friend that his question is one which, at this time of day, it is rather late to ask, because the policy of the government was announced by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance a few weeks ago, when he declared that our policy was the tariff of 1897. That tariff is a moderate tariff, which carries with it a good deal of incidental protection. That it is a tariff made for all time, nobody ever imagined. The conditions of the country change and vary. What may have been suited to our conditions in 1897, may not be suited to our conditions in 1904. I will not particularize, I will take only the question which has been brought up this afternoon, brought up, as I repeat with my hon. friend, at a very inopportune moment. The history of the iron and steel industry in this country has been a very checkered one. The hon, gentleman opened his remarks by quoting an article written as far back as 1885, to the effect that Canada is admirably situated to have and to develop an iron and steel industry. Everybody agrees with that. I remember that this same article was quoted, if not verbatim, it was quoted in substance, by Sir Charles Tupper when he introduced the iron duties in 1886 or in 1888. Everybody who was in the House at that time will remember a certain celebrated and famous speech which Sir Charles Tupper delivered when he introduced a new tariff policy with regard to the iron and steel duties. His policy provided for still greater protection than had been supposed possible up to that moment. He built great expectations upon it, expectations which unfortunately have not been realized. He expected that under the tariff which he was then promulgating we would develop a very large industry in iron and steel. But everybody is aware that the expectations of Sir Charles Tupper fell to the ground, that though the consumers of iron in Canada were saddled with heavy duties, the industry which he expected did not rise from the ground, as he led us to suppose. The gentlemen engaged in this industry struggled on, the tariff was amended from time to time, until at last it was taken up by my hon. friend in 1897. Then he reduced it considerably, and adopted a more moderate tariff. Now, I call upon the hon. gentleman who has introduced this resolution, I call upon the hon. member for Pictou (Mr Bell) also, to admit that the iron business never prospered, never developed and increased so rapidly as it has under the present tariff. The building industries using iron and steel, at no previous period in the history of Canada, have advanced so rapidly as since the year 1897. It is true that at this moment one of the great companies is in trouble. But while that is so, everybody must admit on the other hand that most every other industry in Canada is to-day doing a satisfactory business. We do not hear any complaints from them, we do not hear any complaints except from that one industry. I appeal to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to admit that not only in the province of Nova Scotia but throughout Quebec and Ontario, all the industries using iron and steel are to-day more prosperous than they have ever been before. I do not think my statement can be successfully challenged.

But, Sir, let us come at once to the question before the House. There has been a good deal of excitement about it during the last few days. A great company which had been started with a great flourish, and which was supposed to be doing a good business, has, I am sorry to say, been the object of a good deal of stock speculation, and that great company has practically admitted that it was not in good financial condition. And if the whole truth must be told—and this is the secret of the speech of my hon. friend from Cape Breton, a secret however which is well known—that company has come to us recently asking for an increase in the tariff. Well, Sir, whilst for my part I have never hesitated to say that I am a free trader by conviction, and whilst at the same time I have favoured a tariff policy such as we have at the present time, that is to say a tariff for revenue purposes, carrying with it a good deal of incidental protection, at the same time I am not dogmatic, I am not a doctrinaire, and the government is not a government of doctrinaires. We are always ready to listen to complaints when they are made to us. When an industry, no matter what it may be, comes to us to make representations, we are bound to listen to them; we are bound to hear their complaints, we are bound to give a sympathetic ear to all who come to us with grievances, if grievances they are. But when a company comes to us in this way we have a right to expect that it will show a statement of its affairs, and not only so, but to show wherein the conditions under which they are working are unfavourable, to show why it is that they have come to grief, and why the expectations they entertained have not been realized.

When this industry was before parliament in 1899, and when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) introduced the bounty system which was accepted on both sides of the House unanimously as far as voting went, and with very little exception as far as speaking went, it was expected that that industry would be able to produce iron at $6 a ton. Instead of producing iron at $6 a ton they produced it at a very much increased figure. We have a right to know from them how it is that their expectations have not been fulfilled, and how it is that the prospects which they gave out to the public came not to be realized. We have the right to know also how their position can be remedied by a change in the tariff. We have a right to know whether or not the cause of their disasters, the cause which has brought them to the position in which they are now is really the tariff or some other cause. Therefore, under such circumstances, is it not the part of statesmanship, is it not the part which the government should take before we accept any other policy to see where we are and whether we can improve this condition of things or not or whether it can be remedied at all? Within four days we have had these representations made to us, and if I do not betray any secrets I would not surprise any body by saying that we asked the gentleman who came to us to give us a statement in black and white which we could look into and study before we made up our minds whether or not we are to make any changes in our fiscal policy or allow it to remain as it is. That is the condition in which we are at the present time; yet, we are asked by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to rush into a change in the tariff and come down with a different policy. I say that before we can come to any such conclusion we must look into the question. It is a time not for action, as stated by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), but for consideration, reflection and study. That is the position we take. That is the duty which is imposed upon us, and it is the duty to which at the present time we are devoting ourselves. That is the reason why my hon. friend the Minister of Finance a moment ago said this motion comes at an inopportune time. You had better wait. It shall be the duty of the government by and by to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and when we go into Committee of Ways and Means it will be for us to state the position which we take before parliament and the country. In the meantime, as hon. gentlemen pretend not to be actuated by any desire to make political capital out of the question, it seems to me that the best thing they can do is to withdraw the motion so that we can look into the matter and come to a conclusion.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the right hon. leader of the government has relieved the tension to some extent in his finally deciding to take the country into his confidence and tell the reasons why this delay is taking place. The right hon. gentleman usually pays great attention to the speeches that are delivered in this House, and especially to those coming from his supporters. He has forgotten that just a moment ago the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) told the House that this was not a question of to-day, but that it had been urged for months, yet, the right hon. gentleman now tells the House that they do not want to precipitate matters, but that they want to inquire into the statement. The right hon. gentleman has had months to inquire into that statement. That statement was not brought down this week or last week. It was brought down before the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) brought down his tariff, two months ago. It was considered then. Why was that statement not asked for before the tariff was brought down? Was not that statement inquired into by the government before the hon. Minister of Finance came down and declared that with the exception of binder twine and steel rails, the latter contingent on the manufacturers being able to supply the home market, there would be absolutely no changes in the tariff this year. Now, we have the right hon. gentleman telling the House that the iron industry has prospered more under the present tariff than it ever did in the history of Canada, and he called upon the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to assent to what he stated. Well now, if that be true, if the right hon. gentleman is convinced of that, he will surely not assent to any tariff changes. He believes that is the best that can be done. If the right hon. gentleman is like the hon. gentleman beside him, and is willing to follow the hon. Minister of Finance, right or wrong, rather than follow the hon. leader of the opposition, he will no doubt agree with the statement of that hon. gentleman, that a protective tariff has never up to this period had anything to do in affecting the iron industry one way or the other in Canada. I can scarcely refer to a speech made by the right hon. gentleman during his tour through Canada in 1895, in which he did not call public attention to the iron duties in Canada and in which he did not state that these duties should be lowered if iron were not made altogether free. The right hon. gentleman pointed out that iron entered into nearly every industry in Canada, and he estimated that the burden placed on nearly every other industry was about 60 per cent. When these hon. gentlemen came in, to satisfy the false sentiment which they had been teaching throughout the country, they made a reduction in the iron duties. What has followed? I shall not repeat the unanswerable statement made to the House this afternoon by the hon. leader of the opposition. He pointed out in the clearest possible terms, not in a general sense, but in the most specialized sense, the injury that has been done to the iron industry and the vast increase that has taken place in the importation of iron goods that might be manufactured in Canada in consequence of the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the government and the hon. Minister of Finance if, after careful consideration when that statement is brought down, the government will be prepared to say that they made a blunder in 1897, and that they will reverse their whole policy in making a reduction in the iron duties. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they are prepared to be convinced by any statement that will be submitted by the iron industry that they made a mistake in 1897? I think this whole country is thoroughly convinced that it was a mistake. It is only a question now whether hon. gentlemen are agreed that they should retrace their steps and admit that they did make a very great mistake. Let us take the position of the right hon. gentleman's followers in this House. Let us take the time when these iron duties were reduced, and when the hon. Minister of Finance introduced his budget. Where do you hear the thunders of applause and the speeches that were made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House on that occasion? I do not want to be offensive, but I say that hon. gentlemen were absolutely insolent in what they believed to be their strength at that time. They pounded upon their desks at every sentence that was uttered by the hon. Minister of Finance in connection with the reduction of duties at that time and now these hon. gentlemen are pleading for time. Never in the history of the House of Commons of Canada was there witnessed such a spectacle as to-day. The leader of the opposition, with great strength, with great courtesy, with great patriotism, with that clearness and effectiveness which belongs to him more than to any other member in this House, stated his case and gave ample evidence that his was not a motion of want of confidence, and the hon. Minister of Finance got up in a peevish mood and declared that the rules of courtesy had not been observed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not. I did not charge any discourtesy on the leader of the opposition.

Mr. CLANCY. Then I retract any words that might misrepresent the attitude of the Finance Minister, but he said it was an inopportune motion and he sat down not telling the House why it was inopportune. If the Finance Minister had acknowledged frankly that the government had the matter under consideration, and that they intended to make such changes as the interests of the country demanded, that would be a reasonable excuse to give. But no such thing was done. The Finance Minister was not taken by surprise. He has had notice for many days. He has no reason to complain. If he was big enough as Finance Minister of Canada to acknowledge that he had made a mistake and that he would rectify it, that would be a reason for not pressing the motion, but he simply took refuge in making a general statement without giving any valid reason to the House. Has the Finance Minister forgotten that he has emphatically declared that the tariff was fixed, and that the government had made up their mind that they would not make any changes. Why is this motion ill-timed ?

Mr. OSLER. Because it is embarrassing.

Mr. CLANCY. And is the country to remain in suspense because the government is embarrassed ? Are the speculators to be allowed to take advantage of the Finance Minister's reticence ? Will he refuse hope to the struggling industries and give encouragement to those who are seeking for their own profit, to bring about the down fall of these industries ? Did the Finance Minister think that this matter was to be waived aside, I was going to say by a subterfuge, but I will not. Surely the business interests of the country demand an emphatic declaration from the Finance Minister, either that he sticks to his avowed declaration that any tariff that was not based on a revenue footing was a bad tariff, or, that he will acknowledge that he has made a mistake and save these industries from disaster by protecting them. In 1897, the Finance Minister read the Liberal platform of 1893, and he said that was the basis upon which the tariff would be revised. Will he adhere to that platform now ? The Prime Minister told us in 1897 that he was not a doctrinaire and that he was willing to be convinced and to change with the times. Let me ask him if there is one feature in the iron industry that has changed since 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. What is it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I gave it to my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell). I told him that the industry which under the Conservative policy was not paying any dividends has been prospering ever since.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. Then we have the answer of the Finance Minister, that these industries could not pay dividends under the Conservative tariff of 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In some years.

Mr. CLANCY. Then if the iron industry is prospering under the present tariff the government does not need to change its policy, but if the iron industry is not prospering the government will be forced to change its policy. The leader of the opposition quoted to the House a long list of iron manufactures and he showed that under the Conservative government in 1896, they were imported into Canada to the extent of $1,174,000, while in 1902, the imports of these articles amounted to $4,458,000, or over 400 per cent more. Perhaps that will explain the serious condition of the iron industry to-day. We are living alongside a country that is hostile to us commercially and the overflow of whose market would be sufficient to supply us and to wipe out our own manufactures. There is no changed condition in the iron trade between 1896 and 1903. We were at the mercy of the United States then, and we are at the mercy of the United States now, but we protected ourselves then. That is the difference. I venture to submit, Sir, that the Liberal government will recede one by one from the mistakes they made in their tariff of 1897. I defy them to point to any Canadian industry of any magnitude with reference to which they made a change that has not been injured by their mistakes. The iron industry, the barb wire industry, the binder twine industry, the coal oil industry, they lessened or removed the protection on each of these industries, and in each case they made a mistake. I state without fear of successful contradiction that they did not make one change of any importance in the tariff in 1897, that has not proven to be a grievous blunder.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was pointing out that the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite on the revision of the tariff has resulted in a succession of blunders. The first thing the Finance Minister thought it his duty to do was to shift the burden of taxation from foreigners to our own people. The iron industry, from its very inception in Canada, was protected by customs duties —duties which were very high from the year 1878, and which were never lowered until the hon. gentlemen took power. Up to 1897 the bounty on pig iron and on steel manufactured from pig iron was $2 a ton, and in that year it was increased to $3 a ton ; but, as was pointed out by the hon. leader of the opposition this afternoon, the Minister of Finance, in tones of considerable apology, and the Minister of Customs on the same occasion, declared to the House that the iron and steel bounties were given to compensate the manufacturers for the loss of the protection which had been taken away.

Both sides of the House in 1897 were committed to giving the increased bounties. The Conservative party of Canada had offered what was thought to be a fair measure of protection. They recognized then, as they recognize now, that if that great industry is to be put on its feet in Canada, it must undergo the same process, encounter the same difficulties and have the same assistance, that it has had in all other countries where it has been put on a sound footing. For that reason the Conservative party did assent to the additional bounties given on that occasion. But, speaking for myself, I entirely dissent from the proposition to decrease the import duties on iron and correspondingly pay bounties out of the pockets of the people. As an illustration of the effect of this policy, I may state that during the six years, from 1891 to 1896, when the Conservative party were in power, $436,876 were paid out in bounties, whereas during the six years from 1897 to 1902, we have paid out in bounties $1,800,000.

Now, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance what he thinks is to become of the iron industry in Canada after the bounties cease in 1905 ? The hon. gentleman was very distinct in his declaration that the bounties given in 1897, and continued for five years longer on the sliding scale adopted in 1898, were for the purpose of repairing the losses the manufacturers would sustain by reason of the reduction of the duties. I ask him now, not in an offensive sense, how does he expect the iron industry to live after these iron bounties have ceased, and it has no longer the protection which the hon. gentleman took away in 1897 ? His only answer will be to restore the bounties again, as he prefers to adopt a policy under which these bounties will be paid out of the pockets of the people, instead of one under which the foreign manufacturer would pay the import duties in order to get into the markets of Canada. There can be absolutely no doubt as to who pays the bounties ; there can be no doubt that the cost of iron to the people of Canada has been increased to the extent of the bounties. But the weight of opinion is entirely on the side of the position that the foreign manufacturer, in order to get into Canada to compete with the Canadian manufacturer, must pay the duties. The hon. gentleman told us, in his very able speech on the budget a few weeks ago, that when we imposed additional duties we increased, if not proportionately, to a large extent, the cost of the goods to the Canadian consumers. That is his doctrine ; but the hon. leader of the opposition this afternoon challenged the hon. gentleman to point out one single case of any magnitude or importance in which the protective policy had been the means of permanently, or to a notable extent, increasing the price of an article to the consumer. The hon. gentleman was content to sit down, after that long speech of his of two or three minutes, declaring to the House and the country that this was an inopportune time to introduce a resolution of this kind, and without attempting in the slightest degree to gainsay what had been stated by the hon. leader of the opposition on so important a question. We will take for granted that the hon. gentleman has changed his mind, and now finds himself face to face, not only with the public sentiment of the country, but with a policy that is threatening one of the greatest industries we have in Canada.

Now, the House must have been much amused at what the hon. gentleman's friends had to say. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall), who was put up to defend an industry in his own province, said that the success of the iron industry was not in any degree due to protection, and that he himself did not consider protection necessary for it ; but, after all, he concluded his speech by declaring that he wanted protection for iron, but intimated that there should not be protection for anything else. He thought there should be a sort of piecemeal protection, as he called it, given to iron ; it should be given to one section and not to another, and he urged the government to adopt that policy. Well, I do not know whether the country will take it that the hon. member for Cape Breton speaks for the government, or whether the government is too weak to speak for itself. The country certainly expected some declaration from the Finance Minister to-day as to what the government intended to do ; but he sat down without giving the House any information whatever. The right hon. First Minister declared that they were going to inquire ; that they were waiting until they had statements from those who were asking for increased protection ; but he also sat down without declaring his policy. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance, since he has had his dinner, what the policy of the government now is on that question ? I would like to ask him, in the event of the government being satisfied that their policy of 1897, of making a slashing reduction in the duties on iron goods, has been the means of affecting the iron industry of Canada, if it is the policy of the government to remedy the wrong they then did ? I am not asking that in an offensive sense ; but the hon. gentleman will see that it is a reasonable question to ask.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will answer the hon. gentleman, if that is any comfort to him. I will tell him that some of those who have approached us with reference to the particular company whose affairs are now engaging attention, have stated to us that they do not complain that the result is in any way due to the policy of the government.

Mr. CLANCY. You will observe that the hon. gentleman was very cautious, and said that 'some of those who have approached us declared that the policy of the Liberal party had not injured them.' Let me ask him if they all said so ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know. There are thousands interested in the steel industry. But I can say that those high in authority, in approaching the government on this question, have stated that they do not complain of the attitude of the government. They have said that certain things have arisen recently to which they invite our attention, but they do not complain of the attitude of the government.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that no tariff revision was asked. I understand that no demand is made on the government for a revision of the tariff.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. CLANCY. How is the hon. gentleman going to reconcile the two positions? He declares that those who have approached the government have no complaint against the tariff of 1897?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that. I said that with regard to the representations made to us recently as to a particular company, and it is only one company whose affairs are in controversy——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is debateable, and I do not want to enter upon that now. I want to say that the particular grievance which has recently been brought to the notice of the government has been put before us in terms which do not reflect upon the policy of the government at all. Certain changes are sought and we are asked to do certain things because of conditions which have very recently been created and for which they do not blame the government at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In other words, they have not gone for you with a club.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, deputations have not the habit of going for us in that way. They used to do that with our predecessors.

Mr. CLANCY. The intelligent newspaper readers will have some difficulty in finding out just what the hon. gentleman means. He has told the House that parties who waited on the government had no fault to find with its policy. If that be the case the policy of the government must remain as it was in 1897. What are the business men of this country going to understand by the hon. gentleman's admission that the government have been approached for certain changes. What are these changes? They must be changes in the tariff. If so, these changes must be asked because the tariff of 1897 was a faulty tariff, for I defy that hon. gentleman to point out one condition now that did not exist in 1897. What was the condition in 1897? It was that we were largely at the mercy of foreign manufacturers. That is the condition to-day. Yet the hon. gentleman repeats again and again that those who are asking for tariff changes say that they have no fault to find with the tariff policy of the government. This is surely trifling with the intelligence of the people. It is time that the country should be relieved from suspense. The country is entitled to know what tariff changes are asked and what are contemplated, and what are the conditions which, according to the Finance Minister, induced those parties to approach the government. This is not a private matter which should be kept secret. It is a matter affecting public interest and concerning which the public should be given the fullest information. We were told by the Rt. Hon. First Minister that these parties who came to the government for changes in the tariff were the sole cause of their own difficulties, and that the government would require from them a reliable statement in order to verify whether the complaints they had made had any foundation or fact before the government would take any action. Well, Mr. Speaker, what we on this side contend—and we care not what the men who went to the Finance Minister for relief may have said regarding the policy of the government—is that the policy of the government is bad. We say that it is a mistaken policy, and we have that fact demonstrated to-day. Take the position of the two parties on this question. Do hon. gentlemen opposite believe that the iron industry has any future in this country? If they do, they must change their policy. Is the hon. Minister of Finance going to come down with a proposition to give bounties instead of protection. If he is, I am afraid that the people will not at all agree with him. Are the facilities wanting to make the iron industry a success in Canada? I do not think they are. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition pointed out clearly that we have every facility for producing iron in competition with the most enlightened methods in the world. All we require is the chance. All we require is a tariff which will give us our home market. If the government want to have the iron industry succeed, as we believe it will, if properly fostered, they must not face this question with a faint heart. The whole question must be grappled with. Contrast the positions of the two parties. The one party is shuffling in uncertainty, its leaders are afraid to proclaim its policy, although they have a majority of some fifty at their back. They declare that their policy of 1897 and their tariff of 1897 are sound, yet we have them to-day in the humiliating position of being afraid to proclaim that policy to the country. Compare the attitude of the hon. Finance Minister and the right hon. the First Minister with that taken by the hon. the leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition boldly declares his policy and takes the consequences. He does not wait to follow public opinion but takes the lead and creates a healthy, sound public opinion. A comprehensive, broad and courageous policy has been enunciated this afternoon by the leader of the opposition. He is not afraid to take the responsibility of his doctrines in this House and before this country. But the Minister of Finance this afternoon proclaimed the cabinet to be a collection of weaklings and its supporters a lot of mutes. There never was a more humiliating spectacle in the House of Commons in all its history than we witnessed this afternoon on the government benches. This iron industry is too important, there is too much money involved in it, there is too much of the future of Canada dependent on it, for it to be treated in this shuffling, uncertain, faint-hearted manner. We must have a defensive policy in Canada. Who would put his money into the iron industry with its present prospects ? with the tariff reduced nearly one-half, and in some cases three-fourths what it formerly was, and with this uncertain and unsound policy of giving bounties. Bounties can only be justified when high protection ceases to give the encouragement to manufacturing industries to which they are entitled. What does the hon. gentleman offer the country if our iron industries are embarrassed in any sense ? Has he invited men of capital to come to the country and put their money into it ? They will never put a dollar into the industry until the hon. gentleman changes his policy. No payments of bounty, paid out in dribbles and drabbles, and taken out of the pockets of the people, will give a home market to our farmers. Our people have to compete with foreign goods—I do not say in prices, for we are always able to compete in prices. But what the manufacturers and the farmers and all classes of producers in this country desire is that we shall have the home market which is the best market. What they want is the field, not the prices. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that we live in an age when a business must depend upon the amount of trade done rather than upon the margin of profit on each transaction. Now, I do not wish to detain the House any longer. I have only to say that, of all the resolutions proposed in this House in the short time during which I have had the honour of a seat here, I know of none more far-reaching, more comprehensive or clearer in its statement of the case than this. Not only does it state the case with clearness, but it shows that the Conservative party are prepared to face the people with a policy that grapples with this whole question from the raising of the ore from the mines to the manufacture of the smallest article required by the people. That is what it means, and I know of no resolution proposed in this House that I support with greater pleasure or greater confidence than I do the one now in our hands.

Mr. ROBERT A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). Mr. Speaker, this is a great question, a question affecting great Canadian industries, and I hope in the few remarks I shall make, to speak upon broad Canadian principles. The hon. Minister of Finance, in opening his remarks, referred to the resolution brought down by the leader of the opposition, and said that this was a most inopportune time to bring down such a resolution. But has not the hon. gentleman had ample opportunity to consider the advisability of protecting this and other great Canadian industries ? We find that, on the 10th of March, the government met a committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for the purpose of discussing with them the advisability of a general revision of the tariff. We find, Sir, that that committee reported to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and that, subsequently, on the 19th of March, they presented a tariff memorial. I am sure the House will pardon me if I refer to some of the things contained in this memorial. They say :

> In pursuance of the interview granted on the 10th instant to a special committee appointed by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, when they had the honour to consult with you relating to a general revision of the Canadian tariff, we beg to place before you a brief review of the circumstances from the standpoint of our association.

And they go on :

> For some time past we have urged that, in the interests of Canada, her tariff question should be removed entirely from politics, and be viewed as a national business problem. As time passes and the tariff wars of nations multiply, we are more than ever convinced that in this we are correct; and we believe it to be the duty of the government of the day, irrespective of any party watchwords or traditions, to immediately adopt that policy which will best defend the interests of our citizens and not only secure for Canada the development of her vast resources, but reserve and foster within our borders those great industries which provide industrial opportunities for her people. In recommending immediate and general revision of the tariff this is our sole purpose, and we believe we need no other.

Then, in this memorial, they go on to point out the great increase in the importation of the manufactured goods from the United States of America and the great increase in importation under the British preference. They also show the reasons why it was necessary for the government to take into immediate consideration the general revision of the tariff. They say :

> Many of our industries have been comparatively prosperous during recent years. This has been due largely to the abnormal prosperity which the world at large has enjoyed, the partial protection afforded by the present tariff, the growing excellence of the products of Canadian factories, and specially to the fact that the demands of the United States market, where industries are encouraged have taxed the output of the United States manufacturers to its fullest capacity. This home demand has been so great that recognizing the importance of their own market they have sacrificed their export trade, and speaking generally, have confined their attention largely to their own country. But even in spite of this, it is quite clear that any ground gained by the manufacturers of Canada has been only by persistent struggle and in face of the keenest competition with the United States, Great Britain, Germany and other countries. If such has been our experience during a period of prosperity, what may we expect when depression comes and our manufacturers are forced to compete against those gigantic aggregations of capital which control the specialized industries of the United States, and which, as our imports prove, have already changed the trend of business in many lines of manufacture.

And they wind up that memorial by saying :

We then humbly pray that your honourable government will give us your worthy assurance that this most important question will receive your valued attention.

Now, Sir, that memorial was presented on the 17th of March. The government evidently considered very carefully and very fully the request made by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Then, on the 16th of April, we had the budget speech of the Minister of Finance. We were entitled then to know just what consideration the government had given to that memorial and just what changes they were prepared to make. But this is what the Minister of Finance said :

I have two clauses to propose which will affect the tariff in certain directions and I shall ask for some amendments to the terms. Of these I shall speak presently. With these exceptions—and they are important exceptions as respects the clause referred to—we do not propose any change in the schedule rates of dutiable goods. We are not unmindful of the fact that there has been some agitation for a general revision of the tariff, but we think there is nothing in the present circumstances of the country which calls for this, and there are some strong reasons why any extensive changes in the tariff schedules would be inopportune. . . . . The country is prosperous, our manufacturing industries have, on the whole, enjoyed, and are enjoying, great prosperity.

Further on he says :

Indeed sir, the manufacturers themselves who have communicated with us have rather based their claim for changes, not so much upon the present condition of affairs, as upon the probability, as they think, that we shall soon have less prosperous times. I think, sir, that most of the manufacturers to-day are suffering, not from want of orders, but for lack of sufficient hands and factory space to enable them to supply the demands.

Now, Sir, what I say is this, that having this tariff memorial before them, having come down with a budget speech, having stated in that speech that there were only two changes of any importance to be made in the tariff, the leader of the opposition would have been recreant to his duty if he had not, knowing that a great industry of this country was imperilled, brought up the motion which is before us on this occasion. We, Sir, have always recognized that the Minister of Finance has been hostile to the great iron industries of this country. If we look back at the speeches of the Minister of Finance we will find that he has always taken that stand. Let me refer you to a speech he made in the Nova Scotia legislature on the 14th day of April, 1887. Referring to the iron industry, he spoke as follows :

The iron industry of this country has certainly had a liberal share of stimulus. If it cannot stand with the aid it has received it should come down. It has a heavy duty to keep out the foreign article, and a heavy duty to encourage production at home, and if, with all this, it cannot stand, I thing we might as well let it fall ; let us cease our efforts to produce iron and devote our energies to catching fish and digging potatoes.

Those are the utterances of the Minister of Finance on the 14th day of April, 1887. Now the opposition are not content, if by any means we can prevent it, to let the great iron industries of this country fall, notwithstanding the opinion of the Minister of Finance. Now, Sir, we had last year an election in the lower provinces, on which occasion we had utterances from the Minister of Finance and the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). In that contest, which took place in October, we had the hon. the Minister of Finance pronouncing an end to the iron bounty, saying that the Liberal party were heading for a lower tariff. During the same campaign the hon. member for Guysborough, who was campaigning with the Minister of Finance, said that :

The iron bounties would cease, and that Mr. Tarte had left the cabinet because the government was against higher duties.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

He did not think the government were able to do anything to promote the iron industry in Canada.

The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said :

That he objected to the iron duties on the ground that, as in the United States, they gave an undue stimulus to the iron business of that country.

Now, Sir, I take the position that we in this country, having the destinies of a great country in our hands, should do all that is possible to foster our great industries, and to foster especially that industry which is, I may say, the most important industry, if it is successful, that could be established in any country, the iron industry. Now the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) has referred to the industry in the United States. I do not think it is necessary for me to go over the history of the iron industry in the United States of America. I think that the history of that industry is very familiar to this House. We all know that the iron industry of the United States never prospered until they got a strong measure of protection. I do not like to weary the House, but I would ask permission to read a few extracts from a very able writer on the question of the iron industry in the United States of America.

Sir Lothian Bell, president of the Iron Trade Association of Great Britain, speaking before the Royal Commission, said among other things :

The monopoly of the British iron masters is broken. The monopoly of the iron trade held by English masters at this time enabled them to take advantage of conditions, fix prices to suit themselves and reap enormous profits. To be sure an unusual demand arose at this time from extensive railroad building and other causes, yet no increase in the cost of production occurred excepting a slight advance in wages, yet the profits were very large.

Then he goes on to say :

As competition arose, prices declined. Had other countries neglected to build up their industries under protection, England would have continued to 'suck in gold, gold, gold.' Notwithstanding the constant harping about protection raising prices, though rival industries would have been reared under its influence, the consumers of the world are undoubtedly getting cheaper iron than they could have ever hoped for under free trade monopoly.

Then the editor of this work says :

The iron industry of the United Kingdom has not only received a set-back in the development of the industry in other countries by the loss of foreign trade, but by maintaining open ports the consumers of England are making large purchases abroad. The increase of imports for home consumption of some of the leading metal manufacturers from 1860 to 1890, were as follows :—

Arms and ammunition in 1860, $423,565 ; in 1890, $1,372,375 ; in iron and steel, wrought or manufactured, in 1860, $220,335 ; in 1890, $13,843,200.

While the imports have been increasing as disclosed by the foregoing figures since 1874, the exports of domestic productions have declined. In 1872-73-74, the total exports of iron and steel manufactures were $143,520,242. During the following twenty years of marvellous development in other countries, as competition increased the exports declined to $118,908,362 ; in 1880-1-2, a decrease of 17:1 per cent. It has already been pointed out that from the beginning of railroad building in 1850 to 1874, the British iron masters supplied the world with the larger portion of the materials for their construction. The export of railroad iron of all sorts from the United Kingdom in 1872, 1873, 1874, was $50,470,966 ; by 1890-91-92, it had declined to $20,136,125. It will be remembered that the first steel rails were made in the United States about 1867, when protective duties were first imposed for the purpose of giving employment to American labour in making them for American railways.

Now, I quote this to show that Great Britain's production of iron has been decreasing as the production of iron in the United States has been increasing under a protective tariff. Then he goes on to say :—

The advantage of iron and coal, without protective tariffs, would not have enabled us to develop the vast iron and steel industry which has now become one of the great sources of our industrial prosperity.

Now let me quote from the evidence of Mr. James Willis Dixon, President of the Chamber of Commerce of Sheffield, who was examined in regard to the depression which was then existing in England in the iron industry, and see to what he attributes the cause. After giving a number of causes he says :

Then, there are the American duties. I had a fine trade with America about twenty-five years ago, a magnificent trade. I had an agent there who was paid £400 a year to keep stock there, and he did a big business. It is all gone and I do not send 6d. worth to the United States to-day.

Now, I would like to quote from a recent publication, being the Statistics of the American and Foreign Iron Trades for 1900. There is a review of the iron and steel trade of the nineteenth century by a man who is supposed to be one of the best authorities in the work on that industry, that is James M. Swank. In this article he states :

While great progress has been made in the last quarter of the nineteenth century in the development of the world's iron and steel industries, the most notable progress has been made in the United States. This country to-day leads all other countries in the production of iron and steel. This prominence in the manufacture of these articles is only in part due to the bounty of nature in providing liberal supplies of the raw materials needed ; it is largely the result of friendly legislation by the general government, first, in more firmly establishing in 1861 the protective tariff policy, which has since been effectively maintained with but brief interruptions, and, second, in adopting at about the same time the policy of liberal grants of land to railroad companies. Through the operation of the protective policy the home market has been preserved for the home producers of iron and steel and of all articles made from them, and through the operation of the land-grant system, supplemented by the homestead policy, thousands of miles of railroad have been built in the western states and territories that would not otherwise have been constructed.

Then he goes on to say :

But many of these railways could not have been built if our protective tariff policy had not built up our iron-rail industry in the third quarter of the century and our steel-rail industry in the fourth quarter. Until we began to make our own iron rails and afterwards our own steel rails, foreign manufacturers charged us excessive prices for such rails as we could afford to import. Both the industries mentioned had at the first to struggle for their very existence against foreign competition, the early duties on foreign iron rails and afterwards on foreign steel rails not being sufficiently protective, but in the end the control of the home market was gained, the production of rails increased enormously, and the prices were steadily reduced.

That is just the position that we want to bring about in this country. We want to give that measure of protection which will give to our people the home market and I believe the same result will follow in this country that has followed in the United States, that we will control the market, and that the price of the product will be steadily reduced. Now, he says further :

The courage of our iron and steel manufacturers in entering upon new enterprises of the greatest magnitude and the skill displayed by our engineers and mechanics in attaining important and valuable metallurgical results must be a constant marvel to every student of our industrial history.

The people who have gone into this great enterprise in this country have had a good deal of pluck. They have had a good deal of nerve to invest their money in such a large and important industry, and I say that having done this it is the duty of this government to assist them in every legitimate way to bring that industry to a success. I would like to refer for a moment to the great progress that has been made in other countries in this industry under a protective tariff. I do not intend to take up much time in that respect, but I would like to refer to Russia. We all know the experience that Russia has had under a low tariff, and we know the prosperity she is now enjoying under a protective tariff.

In Russia, in 1861, pig iron was imported free of duty and the free import of all kinds of machinery and implements was granted, which, of course, operated against the Russian machinery building industry. It was not until 1880, however, that the privileges of free importation was abolished. In that year duties were levied upon all machines and tools made of wrought and cast iron and steel. In 1882 the duty was made still higher. Under this influence machine construction and the manufacture of rails developed rapidly. The railways now in operation began to bring ore and coal nearer to the mills, and, when the Ekaterininsk railway in the south of Russia was finished, it opened up mines with inexhaustible veins of fuel. In 1884 the government raised the duty on cast iron and still protected coal mining. Almost yearly since that time to the tariff of 1891 duties have been levied to meet particular needs of the iron and steel industries.

The position we should take in this country should be identically the same as that which has been taken by Germany, France, Russia and the United States, and that is that duty should be levied to meet the particular needs of the iron and steel industry just as well as to meet the particular needs of all the other great industries of this country. When we consider the enormous importance of an industry of that kind to this country I say that it should receive every consideration. We know that in the manufacture of pig iron there is about ninety per cent of the cost which is labour. Is there anything better for us than that the labour of this country should be employed in the manufacture of iron and steel ? I do not think that I am stating it at all excessively when I say that the labour cost of one ton of iron is somewhere about ninety per cent. Some experts put it a little higher. The authority that I have referred to says that the cost of a ton of 2,240 pounds of pig iron, based upon a certain cost of material, is 90·8 per cent. In the same way it can be shown that over ninety per cent of the cost of a ton of steel rails, or any product of iron and steel, is labour. I have also the opinion of good authority, the Hon. Abraham S. Hewitt, based upon his experience as a miner and manufacturer of iron. He said :

The value of every manufacture is made up entirely of the wages paid to produce it. Coal and iron in the mines cost nothing. They are the free gifts of God. But they are excavated by the pick and shovel of the workmen ; by him they are wheeled, carted, boarded to market ; by the workmen they are caried to mill ; by the workmen the furnace is heated and charged ; by him the iron is puddled, rolled, put up for the market, carried thither and sold. It is labour, labour, labour that constitutes every addition to the value of the article, and it is the man who bestows that labour who should enjoy the fruits thereof.

I say, Sir, that the policy of this government ought to be to protect the labour of this country which so largely enters into the manufacture of iron and steel.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PRINGLE. Let me point out that prior to a very high protective tariff being brought into force in the United States they had nothing but failures in that country. Men invested their capital and made brave attempts to develop the industry, but time and again they were crushed out by foreign manufactures. Up to the time they got very high protection, there was a constant series of failures amongst the very large iron industries. Mr. B. F. French in his history of the iron industry of the United States accounts for it in this way :

It is an established fact that in many departments of English industry, those who are interested will carry them on at a loss for years, to aid in retaining markets from which they are in danger of being excluded by commercial restrictions or industrial competition; and scarcely a branch of industry has sprung up in the United States which has not, at first, had to encounter a severe struggle in consequence of the foreign article being reduced in price below that with which it had been expected to compete.

But in spite of this handicap, the iron and steel industry in the United States has made remarkable progress since 1860. In every branch, as soon as an adequate duty was levied, the manufacture began and increased greatly while imports and prices decreased in an almost constant ratio. I have a list here of the failures prior to 1860, but it is sufficient for me to say that during that period there were a large number of failures in the United States. After they got an adequate protective tariff we heard of few failures of any moment. It was not until 1870, that the iron industry of the United States received adequate protection and really began to show what it could do. The production of iron in the United States in 1867 amounted to 2,277 gross tons and in 1894 it amounted to 1,017,096 tons which as you will see is an enormous increase. But I need refer more particularly to the increase from 1870, for the reason that in 1870 a very high protective tariff was placed on the iron industry of the United States. In 1870 the gross tons produced were 30,357, but in 1880 under a heavy protective tariff that production had increased to 864,353 and from that time down to the present day there has been a constant increase, except during the short period that the United States adopted a lower tariff when their productions diminished and when they were not as prosperous as when they re-adopted the high protective tariff. Let us see what protection did for the steel rail industry of the United States. In 1867 the importation of rails of all kinds into the United States amounted to 145,580 tons, and in 1878 it dropped down to nine tons.

An hon. MEMBER. What is that?

Mr. PRINGLE. Nine tons was the total importation of rails in 1878 into the United States. I will admit that some years subsequently the importation increased because there was an era of marvellous railroad construction, and the industry in the United States was not able to cope with the demand, so that in 1882, for instance, the importation ran up to 200,113 tons. But just so soon as railway construction slackened the importation of rails slackened also and in 1885 it only amounted to 2,189 tons, while in 1892 there were only imported into the United States 347 tons. The United States have been able to manufacture steel rails cheaper than any other country under the sun. They cut down the cost of steel rails some few years ago to $22 a ton, and they were able to underbid the manufacturers of Great Britain and Europe in that industry. That result was obtained under their system of high protection. We are familiar with the tariff history of the United States and we know that the Republican party in 1861 after a long period of low tariffs, inaugurated a high protective tariff and there has been an unbroken line of prosperity in that country ever since with the exception of the years between 1894 and 1897 when a low tariff was in force. Since 1860 the population of the United States has grown from 31,443,321 to 76,303,387 in 1890, an increase of 143 per cent. That was an enormous increase in a country which, if the argument of gentlemen opposite were true, should have retrograded under a system of high protection. In 1860, the national wealth of the United States was $16,159,616,000, or $514 for each individual, and in 1890, it was $94,300,000,000, or $1,235 for each individual. It is no wonder, Sir, that Gladstone made the remark that the United States of America, under her protective tariff, was passing Great Britain, with her free trade policy, in a canter.

In the great manufacturing industries, the activity of the manufacturer and the earnings of the workmen show equally striking improvement. The cotton manufacturers have increased their consumption of domestic cotton from two and a half million bales in 1896, to over three and a half million bales in 1901; the number of iron furnaces in blast has increased from 159 in 1896, to 266 in 1901; and the manufacture of tin plates has grown from less than 40,000,000 pounds in 1894, to 678,000,000 in 1901. While I am on that subject, let me say a word in regard to that tin plate industry. We are all familiar with the attitude that was taken by the late President McKinley in regard to protecting the tin plate industry. The duties on tin plates and turned plates provided by the tariff of 1890 went into effect on July 1st, 1891. From that date until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the statistics of tin plates and turned plates were regularly collected for the Treasury Department. Let us see the increase under the protective tariff in that country. In 1892 the gross tons produced were 18,803; in 1901 the gross tons were 399,201, showing that under the protective tariff there was an enormous impetus to that industry.

Let us see what was done in the great industry of building locomotives in the United States. We know that it was not many years ago when it was impossible for the United States to construct an American locomotive in competition with a foreign manufacturer. The foreign manufacturer chose to put his price down to the point where he could prevent the American manufacturer from making locomotives at a profit. But under that system of protection we find that American locomotives are running on American rails in every part of the world. You find them to-day passing the pyramids of Egypt; you will find that the railroad now being built in the Orient, the Manchurian Railway, is being supplied entirely with American rails and American locomotives; and, strangest of all, you find in free trade Great Britain that there is not an important railway on which there are not American locomotives used. That shows the progress which the United States has made in that industry.

But, Sir, I do not wish to be understood as saying that the only industries that prosper under a protective tariff are the great manufacturing industries. I recognize just as well as any one that the great agricultural interest is the important interest of this country; and I could show by evidence that the great agricultural interests of the United States have prospered under protection just to the same extent that the great manufacturing industries have done. The Agriculture Department reports an increase of more than $350,000,000 in farm values, and an enormous increase in all the products of the agriculturists of that country.

I have quoted from some of the speeches made by the hon. Minister of Finance. That hon. gentleman, like others on that side of the House, always leaves an open door. In a speech of his, made at a banquet in Halifax on December 12, 1902, the hon. gentleman was evidently looking forward to leaving an open door for some changes in the tariff. This is taken from the Toronto 'Globe's' report:

> If there is an inequality which needs to be remedied, we are prepared to consider it and remedy it. If there is a new condition created by the establishment of some new industry; if there are conditions abroad which are interfering with our trade; in short, if anything has happened, we do not propose to shut our eyes to established facts, but we do say that where the country has prospered under this tariff there is no reason for getting up an excitement for purposes of having us return to high duties.

Now, Sir, I say that something has happened. The manufacturers of this country, on the 10th of March and on the 19th of March, and persistently from that day to this, have informed the hon. gentleman that something was happening, and that the industries of this country desired that there should be a revision of the tariff. If the hon. the Minister of Finance meant what he said in the speech delivered on the 14th of December, 1902, he should, when he brought down the budget, have taken into consideration the revision of the tariff. I am not going into the figures of the importations of iron products into this country. These have been brought out very fully and ably by the speakers who preceded me on this side. Suffice it to say that, according to the figures given here to-day, there are over $33,000,000 worth of iron products brought into this country, some of which are free, some subject to a very small duty, but the larger portion dutiable. Our aim should be not to encourage the foreigner, not to bring in foreign products, but to encourage our own people and our own manufacturers. No industry, such as our iron industry, with free imports or a very low protective tariff, can stand up against the huge corporation now doing business in the United States, and known as the United States Steel Corporation. That company is bound to control this market and will control it, to the ruin of our iron industry, unless the government comes down with an adequate measure of protection. We have had enough in this country of this 'let alone' policy. We want a government which will act and act in the interests of the Canadian people. The policy which hon. gentlemen opposite advocate is not the policy of the great statesmen of the neighbouring republic. It is not the policy of our late chieftain of the Conservative party, Sir John Macdonald, it is not the policy of the present opposition in this House. This is a matter which we should consider on broad Canadian lines. Are we to be told, as our manufacturers were told prior to 1878, that under no circumstances or conditions would the government raise a finger to protect or encourage the industries of this country, that if anybody went into any manufacturing enterprise, he did it at his peril and must take the consequences, and that it was not the intention of the government to interfere in any way to protect industry, under any circumstance. We have had the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton), when speaking of the woollen industry, stating that if that industry could not survive under the tariff then in existence, it had better go down. I perhaps speak a little feelingly when I refer to the woollen industry, because I have the honour to represent a constituency in which there is a manufacturing town. In that town we had a prosperous, thriving, woollen industry, giving employment to from 150 to 200 men, but its doors had to close, and these men, who had no desire to leave Canada, had to go to the United States to find employment in the woollen industry there. But if the government had acted as it should, that industry, instead of being in crippled, would be to-day in a prosperous condition. We say that it is within the power and it is the duty of the government to give proper protection to the energies of the country, and to encourage and relieve distressed industries. That it can do by making such changes in the fiscal policy as may be necessary. Situated as we are, owners of the best half of the North American continent, possessing a territory stretching from ocean to ocean, with varied resources and capabilities, it is our mission to do everything that is necessary to make the Canadian people a great and powerful nation, and we should neglect no opportunity to lay the foundations broad and deep of future greatness. It is possible to do much by legislation. We are likely to have another great transcontinental line. I do not know whether it will be the policy of this government to subsidize that line or not, but if it should be the policy of this government to vote millions of dollars of the people's money toward the construction of that line, then it should be the policy of the government to see that these millions of dollars are expended in this country in so far as possible. As I said a moment ago, in my opinion the right hon. the Prime Minister should have gone further than he did. There are great interests to-day waiting the decision of the government. I think he should have announced to the people whether the government deemed it necessary to assist along proper lines the enterprise which is appealing to it for assistance to-day. I have no doubt that there are other industries which will make a similar appeal before the session is over. I would like to see these hon. gentlemen in favour of their own country. I would like to see them frame their policy for the benefit of our own farmers, our own mechanics, our own miners, our own labouring men. Let them protect our own people. It is within their power to do so, but their policy seems to be to favour the foreigner and not the Canadian. I know that it is very hard for us, on questions of this kind, to separate ourselves from politics, but it seems to me that on a great Canadian question such as this we should be able to do so and consider it free from party prejudice. It seems to me that we should be able to come to its consideration in a true Canadian spirit, it is a question that soars far above and beyond party interest and consideration, and we should discuss it on broad Canadian principles. I have probably taken up a little more time than I had intended in speaking on the question of protecting this great Canadian industry. Ninety per cent of the cost of all iron products consists of labour, and there is no capital so important in this country as labour. I say that productive labour is the greatest thing we have in Canada. Its importance is incalculable. Just suppose that we have in this country 500,000 working men, whose wages averaged $400 a year. That is equal to the interest of $8,000 at five per cent, so that each labourer's capital is equal to $8,000 at interest. Multiply this by 500,000, the number of labourers, and it gives you capital to the enormous sum of $4,000,000,000, producing, at five per cent, $200,000,000 a year. That is the interest that we ought to protect in this country—the labour interest. This labour capital the Conservative party have always striven to uphold and maintain. It is, after all, the great national interest of the country, and it is this that we wish to defend against the ruinous effect of unrestricted competition. We on this side of the House have always been for cherishing Canadian labour, for giving it high wages, for surrounding it with substantial comforts of life; and I say it should be the object of the legislatures of this country to protect in every way the labour interest of Canada. I know that my hon. friends on the government benches have many difficulties to contend with. They have these very clever and brainy gentlemen from the west who have settled upon a free trade policy in so far as they can. Let me say to these hon. gentlemen that they should take no narrow view of a matter of this kind, but that they should approach it upon broad national grounds. Let me say to them that if they take protection from the old provinces of the Dominion, they rob us of that which not enriches them and leaves us poor indeed. Destroy protection in this country and you destroy the older provinces of the Dominion, and with the older provinces of the Dominion the great west would also suffer.

Sir, I hope the present let-alone policy of hon. gentlemen opposite will be abandoned and upon its ruin will arise a Canadian policy protecting and cherishing Canadian industries, a policy which alone, I believe, will save this country. If hon. gentlemen will adopt that policy, I am satisfied that there will be no question about the prosperity and progress of the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. J. ISRAEL TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, I am aware that a motion in amendment to the motion to go into Supply is usually considered as a motion of want of confidence. Under ordinary circumstances, the government are justified in calling upon their followers to reject and vote down such a motion. Has the government been justified, or are they justified in resorting to that procedure in this debate ? The leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has very clearly and distinctly stated that he did not present his motion as a motion of want of confidence. It was rather, if I rightly interpret his words, an invitation to the government to relieve the present situation by making declarations proper to restore public confidence. My hon. friends on the treasury benches cannot ignore, cannot possibly ignore the fact that we are passing through an industrial crisis—it is out of the question. I do not believe that I am exaggerating the figures in stating that, during the last three or four months, there have been $100,000,000 of Canadian money lost. That is indeed a very large amount of money. I do not mean to convey the idea that the policy of the government is responsible for all that loss. All the same, the losses are there. And the last phase of the losses and of the crisis have come from the very industry that is under discussion to-day. For a time, the iron and steel industry was a very popular one. In my hearing, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said, a year or two ago, that he expected, before he was very much older, to see the Sydney iron industries rival the Pittsburg industries. My hon. friend must know to-day that he was then very far from the mark. The doors of the Sydney works are closed to-night, and my right hon. friend knows it better than I do, because he has information that is not available to ordinary members of parliament. Yet, I happen to know that I am not exaggerating, that I am not going beyond the mark, when I say that the doors of the Sydney works are more than half closed. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) whose good intentions I do not question, whose honesty of purpose I do not question in any way whatever, has said that he has one consolation after all, and that is that the opposition gave him the credit that the duties on iron have been lowered since 1896. That is indeed a poor consolation. What the opposition may think, what any of us may have said or thought years ago, is a poor consolation in place of the loss by the disasters which face us to-day. And why are these losses so heavy? Let me tell my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that it is because we have reduced the duties on iron. I am responsible for that reduction as much as my hon. friend is; politically I am responsible, although I am free to say that I have never had much confidence in the bounty system. My former colleagues will do me the justice to say that I have never had much faith in that system. The bounty system is not a policy, it is an expedient; and expedients have never led to any good results in the world. Capital cannot possibly have any confidence in a bounty system. If this country had gone firmly, energetically, into a protective policy on iron and other things, I make bold to say, we should not have had the crisis that we have had during the last month. And so much is this the case that to-day the men who are at the head of these large industries, are applying to the government to remedy the evil. If there was no remedy, they would not be here now. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has told us, in his very short speech, that this amendment is inopportune. Why is it inopportune? We have not been told. I would like to know what my hon. friends on the treasury benches have in their minds when they say the amendment is inopportune. Is it so because they believe that the opposition and men in politics who hold protectionist views have no right to place their views before the country in the way we are doing now. I know that governments do not like to see their hands forced; we must admit that governments are in office to rule. But governments are in office to listen also; and when my hon. friend the leader of the opposition said distinctly, that he meant simply to offer to the government the help of hon. gentlemen on his side of the House, it seems to me there is nothing inopportune in the motion.

Now, Sir, the words of the Minister of Finance have been re-echoed by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. He has told us that this is a time for reflection, for consideration, for study. My hon. friend has had a lot of time for reflection, for consideration and for study. For the last two or three years this question has been brought to his notice, the difficulties of the industrial situation have been made known to him as they have been made known to us. He knows that representations after representations have been made to the government. He knows that the iron men have come to us over and over again. He knows that his strongest political friends have warned him. Let me quote only a few words from the Hon. Mr. Cox, who is a friend of the government. I am sure he will not be accused of being a traitor because he shares the views that other men hold, other men who are no more traitors than he is. In his speech at the annual meeting of the Bank of Commerce, in November, 1902, the Hon. Mr. Cox spoke these words:

> Apparently thus far we are able to view with some satisfaction our position. But the tendency is clearly towards a condition demanding caution.

I shall not weary the House by reading the whole utterance of the Hon. Mr. Cox, who was then warning the country that we were in a difficult position. Mr. Cox knew then, what has been made very clear since. He is a financier who is at the head of several great banking and financial institutions, and he saw signs of trouble, he saw the signs of the times that we are face to face with now.

My hon. friends have been warned. During the last session of parliament, the Minister of Finance made a statement which is much like the one we have heard during this session. He inviited the country to wait. Not this session, said he, not now. The country waited, the manufacturing interest waited, the big institutions waited one year. That year passed away. At the opening of parliament this year the hon. the Minister of Finance invited us once more to wait. Last year the London conference was to be held. It was a reasonable pretext. This year we were informed that the high commission might perhaps meet again. That was also, to a certain extent, a reasonable pretext, but after all these are only pretexts. These arguments cannot inspire capital with confidence, they do not save us from the great crisis that hon. gentlemen have to take now into their consideration. We have waited two years, and we are invited to wait again. I know that it is rather late. The hundred millions that are lost may not be reimbursed, may not be made up again, they are lost. Why should we wait any longer? Sir, I do not wish to be a prophet of evil, but let my hon. friends on the Treasury benches permit me to say to them that unless they pause, unless they reflect a little more rapidly than they have done in the past, before we are much older we will have greater losses than the losses we are lamenting to-day. I make this statement to the right hon. gentleman and to his colleagues. They should know just what we know ourselves. They should know that great banking institutions are afraid of the present situation. I happen to live in a city where there are large institutions, I happen to meet business men, and I know what they think of the situation, and I know that my hon. friends on the Treasury benches have been made aware of the danger of the situation. Let me say that party politics should not interfere at a moment of crisis to vast interests. It should be no humiliation for the Minister of Finance and for his colleagues to come before parliament and to say: Circumstances have changed. The ministers are not infallible. If they would come before the House and say : Circumstances have changed, we are passing through a great crisis, let us change the tariff—they would be supported, not only by their own friends, but by their opponents. I know that there are in the rank and file of the Liberal party, not only in this House but outside of it, thousands of men who think as I am speaking to-night. I know they would cheer my hon. friends on the Treasury benches, they would be glad if they would come before the House, before this session is over and say : Well, let us save the industries that are most in danger. I know it is late, the session is advanced. But my hon. friends, as I said before, have had time to reflect. I would not blame them one moment for what they have not done, if they would do to-day what they should do.

Now, Sir, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said, and I believe there is a great deal of truth in it, that perhaps the management of the Sydney mines has not been what it should have been. Let that be so, that does not change the situation by any means. The fact that there may have been mismanagement does not prove that the policy of the government is right. My hon. friends know it, and they know it so well that at the beginning of the session they tried to improve it a little by announcing that they would put up the duty on rails. What is true about rails is still more true about dozens and dozens of articles of iron. I say it again, if there has been some mismanagement in the Sydney mines, that is no evidence that the policy of the government is right. Getting a statement from the gentlemen who are interested in the Sydney mines will not improve matters in any way. The proposal is an evidence of the unwilling spirit with which the government is grappling with the situation—let me say it without meaning to give any offence.

The government should make up their minds that new conditions have arisen, that even in England, free trade England to which we are referred so often, there is a political revolution going on to-day. England was the only country in the world which professed free trade, and now the greatest English statesmen have made up their minds that long enough they have allowed other countries to slaughter their market, and they are right. Let me say it openly, I recognize the broad and statesmanlike spirit of the Hon. Mr. Chamberlain. We may not always agree with him in everything that he has done, but he has at least a pride in the great empire of which he is one of the servants. He knows, not only as a statesman but as a practical business man, that the industries of England are being destroyed. He knows that the agriculture of England is being injured, and as a business man as well as a statesman he is not ashamed to say : Let bygones be by-gones. I have been a free trader, I have made free trade speeches ; now I want to protect and defend the industries of England against the unfair competition of foreign countries. That is a statesmanlike position. Why should my hon. friends be more proud than the hon. gentleman who is one of the first statesmen of the empire to-day ? We may all have made mistakes. I am very much afraid we have all made mistakes, but I would not call it a mistake to have said ten or fifteen years ago that it was better to have a low tariff. I do not say that those who spoke in that way then are obliged to admit that they have made a mistake, but they must admit that circumstances have changed.

Sir, the iron industry needs no defence. It is one of the most important industries that the country can see grow and prosper. That industry is intimately bound up with the shipbuilding industry. If the government allows, by false shame, that industry to go to the wall, it will be many years before it could recover. I would not hesitate one single minute if I were in the position in which the right hon. gentleman is, to take up that iron question and solve it. It would be solved very easily indeed. I do not mean to say that we could impose duties on every detail of the iron industry. There is a way of doing it. We know what we can manufacture. In 1897 we had scarcely any iron manufacturing industries. We were then only beginning. Our industry has been developing since, not very much, but it has been developing. We have erected great buildings for the manufacture of iron. We have plants to do that. Let us examine carefully and ascertain what these plants can make. Let us protect immediately all that these plants can manufacture. I would suggest to my hon. friends on the treasury benches, if they are good enough to accept a suggestion at my hands in the spirit in which I am offering it, to raise the duties on a certain schedule of iron articles against all foreign nations, giving a preference to England. We would then import from England articles that we are not prepared to produce here. It would be a national policy, it would be a sound policy, and it would lead to a trade between this great colony and the mother country, and largely encourage our merchant marine while at the same time protecting our own industry. There is no difficulty in adopting this policy. The shares of the iron industires are very low to-day. Would my hon. friends permit me to say that if they would adopt the policy I am suggesting this evening the shares would go up immediately. Confidence would be restored. I see smiling faces. I am not surprised, because I know a good many of my hon. friends in this parliament have lost a lot. But, outside of this Chamber men in perfect good faith have also lost money by leaps and bounds. Let us not forget, as I said at the beginning of these remarks, that about one hundred millions of money have been lost.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) if that one hundred millions went into the industry ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, I do not mean anything of that kind, but a very large amount of money has been lost as my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) knows, in the iron industry as a result of the slump which has taken place in the iron industry as in many other stocks. Disaster invites disaster, and unless my hon. friends on the treasury benches make up their minds that they must grapple with the present situation, they will have to face more disasters than we have had to face yet. The great trouble to-day is lack of confidence. There is no confidence in banking institutions or in the industrial world, and I may very frankly tell my hon. friends on the treasury benches why this is so. Telling the country and telling parliament to wait until next year, to wait and see is not a policy. It is the lack of a policy. It is the absence of a policy. Capital cannot have confidence in such a state of affairs, and let me assure my hon. friends on the treasury benches that in what I say now I do not mean to impute any undue blame or give any offence to them. I mean to convey to them with all the earnestness that I can put into my words the conviction that I am speaking the truth, that I am making out the position as I know it is to be, that we are face to face with grave dangers and that in their own political interest they had better take up the question now than later on.

References have been made to the progress of the iron industry in the United States. The industry in that country encountered a great deal of trouble before it could take root. Why was it ? It was because England was then a strongly protectionist country. Our English friends went very far. Parliament went so far as to pass an Act to prevent the emigration of mechanics or skilled workers to the United States. There was an Act of parliament passed in 1785 to prevent the emigration of mechanics or skilled workers in iron or steel or the exportation of any tool, engine or machine beyond the sea. Lord Brougham, in the House of Commons in England denounced the efforts that the young American nation was making to build up its industries. He suggested to the iron masters of England to undersell the infant American industries. In his speech, Lord Brougham said :

> It was even worth while to incur loss upon the first exportation in order by the glut to stifle in the cradle these rising manufactures in the United States.

The PRIME MINISTER. What year was that in ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Act of parliament I referred to, was passed in 1785. Of course, it was going far. As my hon. friend (Mr. Pringle) who has just spoken, said, the iron industry took a foothold only after it was protected as highly as it has been for years and years. Now, it is easy to give more figures. Last year the United States produced 16,250,000 tons of iron, and over 11,000,000 tons of steel. Germany had also an immense production ; England is no longer in it. Mr. Chamberlain wants England to be in it, and it is for that reason he wants to protect England. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not much more to say.

An hon. MEMBER. Thanks.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. An hon. friend behind me says 'thanks.' It is the gentleman from the North-west that we hear so often speaking in such dignified language. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) has urged the government to come to the rescue of the Sydney works. But he is a free trader. He has informed us that he is very sorry to have to come to that conclusion, but he came to it. Let me tell him that the Sydney works are not the only ones involved. The whole iron industry of Canada is involved, and all the iron men have asked the government for relief. We had a pretty big disaster at Sault Ste. Marie a few months ago. The crisis began there, it travelled down by the sea, and it is everywhere now. I believe that if my hon. friend (Mr. Kendall) and others who have influence with the government would combine with the independent members and with the opposition, we would carry the day. If we assure the government that it is the wish of parliament that those industries should be relieved, the government would come out all right. Let us tell the government that we do not mean to imply any want of confidence, and that is my intention in the speech I am making now. One last word. The Prime Minister has asked : Why is it that the Sydney works have not produced iron as cheaply as the promoters of the industry thought they would That is a very pertinent question, and I think I can answer it. My humble opinion is that unless you give to an industry enough to produce, it is out of the question to expect cheap production. Quantity is essential in the cost of production. That is an elementary law. How can we expect that our infant industry at Sydney and elsewhere can compete successfully with the giants on the other side of the line, the giants of Germany, of England, and of France ? Let us start by doing the right thing. As the Minister of Finance said, the granting of bounties was a liberal thing to do. Yes; but it was not the right thing to do. A good many of us thought that bounties would help but that they would not be sufficient, because bounties will not secure the home market. A bounty means taking the money out of the pockets of the people and paying it to the manufacturers, while protection, adequate duties, mean cheap production; it means the securing of the home market and it is because that cheap production has not been secured by sufficient duties and that enough protection has not been assured, that the cheapness that the Prime Minister expected has not been achieved.

In conclusion, let me say, that in my opinion the government would not only be justified but would be doing its duty towards this country by raising the duty on iron. I know very well that other industries will apply, but it seems to be that fifteen days of consideration to a revision of the tariff could make it right. The government have a lot of material in their hands. When I left office they had it, and I have a very large amount of it myself. They have time still to consider it, and to come before this House with, if not a complete policy, at least a policy sufficient to relieve the present situation.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I feel quite at ease in expressing my opinion on this question, because I am not a convert to the idea of protection. Even when the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was a member of the cabinet, and before he had decided to take his free course upon this question, I expressed clearly my opinion in this House that I was in favour of a bold policy of protection to the industries of Canada against undue competition from the United States. But because I am a protectionist, and for the very reason that I am a protectionist, I would not like to see this government or any government use what I have always considered to be the true national policy of Canada, as a means for helping stock gambling. Not that I say that stock gambling is the only question involved here, but I do say that it is deeply involved, and unfortunately it has not been treated of so far in this debate. Considering first the protection needed by the iron industry so far as it is covered by the motion, I wish to give the reason why I approve entirely of the position that has been taken this afternoon by the Prime Minister, when he said that it was impossible that the government could accept immediately the motion of the leader of the opposition. It is not my habit to attribute base motives to any member of this House, whether he sits on this side or on that. I am convinced that the motives of the leader of the opposition are sincere and are patriotic, but we must consider the consequences of such a course as he invites us to take. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has properly said that the policy of bounties was a policy of expediency, that it had not the permanency of a policy of protection. And just because a policy of protection is of a permanent character, it would be foolish on the part of this government or this parliament to accede right away to the demands of the iron producers without considering what would be the effect of such protection on many other industries that are entitled to the care of this parliament just as much as is the industry at Sydney. Before the government grants any further protection to the iron and steel manufacturers, it is its duty to ascertain what would be the result of such protection to the farm implement manufacturer, to the manufacturer of carpenters' tools, to the nail and screw manufacturers, and in fact to every other industry in this country whose raw material is the product of the industry which we are asked to protect. If protection is to be given to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company—and I do not say that it should not be given—the government should be prepared at the same time to give an equally fair measure of protection to all those industries which have to buy their materials from that company or import them from abroad.

But, Sir, there are other industries than the iron and steel industries, and those which use iron and steel, that are entitled to the same care and attention of parliament; and it would not be proper for this parliament and this government to come out now and say that because there has been a disaster in the stock gambling of this country, and certain industries are affected by stock gambling, other industries which are being conducted on a legitimate basis, and which offer to capital a prospect of a fair and honest profit, are not entitled to the same consideration at the hands of the government.

Therefore, the question that is raised to-night, with reference to only one industry, is in reality the whole question of the tariff. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) gave notice in the debate on the budget that he was going to bring into this House a resolution on the general tariff policy of the government. I could understand the hon. gentleman, on such an occasion, giving out the views he has expressed to-night—and I do not say that I do not partake somewhat of the views of the hon. gentleman; I do not say that I shall not be prepared at some future time to consider the whole question of a tariff revision; but whatever may be our different opinions of what the real interests of this country require, whatever may be the policy of the Liberal party, or the policy of the Conservative party, to-night is not the time, just because a few men who have lost money through stock gambling are coming here to ask for more protection, to raise the whole tariff question by a motion affecting the iron and steel industry alone.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want to tell my hon. friend that this motion was prepared weeks before I ever had the slightest idea that the iron and steel men were coming to the government at all. To my knowledge they never came to see the government except during the latter part of last week. I had given notice of my motion on the previous Monday, and it had been prepared for two weeks before that, and I was waiting for the return of the hon. Finance Minister to afford me an opportunity of moving it. When my hon. friend makes the statement that the difficulties of a certain company which he named have been caused by stock gambling, I think he ought to give some explanation as to how this company has been brought into business difficulties by gambling, or how its financial position could be affected by the fact that people throughout the country have been buying or selling its stock.

Mr. BOURASSA. As far as the first part of the hon. gentleman's statement is concerned, I am quite prepared to accept his explanation. But what I say is that the position put before us in the motion to-night is the position that has been raised by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. It is the position taken by most of the newspapers, including the organ of the hon. member for St. Mary's. I do not blame the hon. member for St. Mary's, nor do I blame the hon. leader of the opposition, for the views these hon. gentlemen entertain. But I say that the government are justified in refusing to adopt such a resolution to-night. I say that they would not be entitled to the confidence of this parliament and this country if they would not withstand such a demand in a moment of excitement, because there are some men who, in good faith, and some who in bad faith, are now in a position to accept a motion which would mean an entire revolution in the fiscal policy of this country.

I will come later on to the question of stock gambling; but when the hon. leader of the opposition interrupted me, I was just going to say that we are told to-night that the only remedy required by this large industry in order to prosper is an increase in the duties. We have been told of the great development of the iron and steel industry in the United States on account of a high tariff; but I would like, before this debate is over, to have an explanation of the statement that was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) that one of the dangers that threaten our industry was the state of depression of the iron and steel industry in the United States —the industry which, according to other members of the opposition has been so greatly flourishing under a high protective policy. Is the tariff in the United States lower to-day than it was five years ago? If the tariff does not protect the iron and steel industry in that country, born and brought up and kept under the most favourable circumstances with which any industry was ever favoured, with a huge monopoly extending not only over the entire territory of the American republic, but invading the neutral markets of this world, going to England and competing there with old iron industries, going to Egypt and supplying the railways there with American rails, going to China and superseding the English products there—I say that if such an industry is not prospering to-day, how can the logical conclusion be drawn from the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition, from the speech of the hon. member for St. Mary's, or from the speeches of the other supporters of this motion, that, by adopting the same policy, we shall avoid the disasters which the iron and steel industry of the United States has suffered? I say that the conclusion is not logical that by adopting that same policy we would revive our industries.

Now, I am not going to enter into any technical details regarding this industry; I am not competent to do so. The hon. member for St. Mary's said that one of the reasons why iron cannot be produced at Sydney cheaply enough in the present situation is because the iron industry cannot expect a large enough market to develop and to prosper. But, Sir, the statement was given out some days ago by some of the directors of that company that it was not the iron part of the business that was suffering, but the steel production, and that if they were given some special protection on some of the articles of steel, the production would be revived. But the fact remains that under the present tariff, knowing exactly where they were, knowing what property they had, knowing what the population of Canada was, knowing the purchasing power of Canada, that company started some four years ago with a huge prospectus asking the people to subscribe millions and promising them large returns and profits, without conveying the slightest hint that the tariff was an impediment. Therefore, I say that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was right when he said that the public of this country were asking for some explanation regarding the management of the Dominion Steel Company. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has asked the government to declare immediately in favour of a high tariff upon most of the productions on iron and steel with a preference in favour of the British producer. I must say that I was astounded at this declaration, and it was mainly this declaration which brought me to my feet. It is well known that when the government decided to increase the preference to the British producer, I spoke of that policy with great caution. While I had supported that policy in 1897, I expressed my fear that we were going too far in that line.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. What I said is this. There are certain articles we could not produce now, and which we are buying from the United States and elsewhere, and I was suggesting that we should give a preference to England on these articles but not on everything.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am glad my hon. friend has given that explanation. I go further on that point, and that is one part of the motion of the hon. gentleman to which I wanted to refer, and I might as well do it now. I was just going to tell the hon. leader of the opposition that there is a part of his motion which needs some explanation. It is when he says that we should give—

Such protection to the iron and steel industry as will not only secure to our own producers and manufacturers the Canadian market in articles now produced or manufactured in this country, but will also develop and sustain the manufacture in Canada of other iron and steel products which at present are imported in large quantities from other countries.

This is a broad statement. Does it mean that he would like the government to now impose a duty on all iron and steel articles that come into this country, even those which are not manufactured and cannot be manufactured here with profit, because the market is not large enough, and thus impose on the other industries which have to use these articles a further amount of taxation without compensating them by other protection? The hon. member for St. Mary's had evidently that position in view, when he spoke of the preference which we might give to British goods. But if we acknowledge that certain goods cannot be produced in this country, by what right should we prevent the manufacturers of Canada, who need those goods, from buying them where they can get them best and cheapest? Why should we compel them to go and buy them in England? In my view, Mr. Speaker, on these articles which we cannot produce, we should have absolute free trade. If by a certain amount of protection and without imposing too heavy a burden on other industries we can force the production of these articles in Canada, I am in favour of our doing so, because I am a protectionist; but since we cannot do that, we have no right to impose on those manufacturers the obligation to buy those goods in England. We should leave them free to buy them where they can get them of best quality or of best producing capacity, if machinery, and at the cheapest price.

I am just now coming to the point that I touched at the beginning of my remarks. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) said this afternoon that the country wants more protection on iron and steel. The hon. member for St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said that $100,000,000 had been lost to this country in the last three months by the policy of the government. The hon. leader of the opposition said that an increase of duty was imperatively necessary to save the parties interested in the manufacture of steel and iron. Well, as regards the loss of $100,000,000 within the last three months, at least nine-tenths of that loss is due to the fact that many people of the country lost their heads. If capital has become difficult, if bankers have become close-fisted, it is not because of the tariff policy, but because capital was forced into improper channels. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the opinion of the bankers. I know, as a matter of fact, that in December last, there was a consultation between the managers and directors of the most important banks of Canada, and what did they decide? They decided, not that the tariff policy was wrong, but that an immense amount of capital was invested in stock gambling—for which they were in a large degree responsible—and they decided there and then to restrict supplies to stock gamblers. Certainly the decision was a wise one in itself, but perhaps it was hardly a wise decision, after they had enabled those people during nine and ten years to get money on a margin of 10 per cent, to close immediately their doors and bring about this slump in the markets.

The hon. member for St. Mary's has said that the bounty system is a policy of expediency in tariff matters. Let me say also on the part of many people who have money invested in the industries of this country, that black-mailing is also, for too many people, a good policy to be used in finance and tariff matters. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says that for three years the government has been made aware of the situation of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. Well, Mr. Speaker, the investing public was not made aware of it. On the contrary, the directors of that institution repeated time and again that the industry could not fail to be most prosperous; and if these directors were going to the government for the last three years and asking for more protection, while at the same time they were enticing money from the people on the pretense that the company had a glowing future, I say that a thorough investigation should be held; and if the people have been robbed by the directors of the Dominion Steel Company, these directors should be held accountable before that industry is given any more protection.

What was the prime occupation of the company? They issued bonds to the amount of nearly $8,000,000, at the rate of $85 for every bond of $100, and every purchase of a bond received in addition a paid up share of $100 common stock. So that the company gave a par value in bonds and shares of $200 for $85. They issued preferred stock to the amount of $5,000,000, they issued common stock to the amount of $20,000,000, they gave shares all over the country, and they made returns of the common shares to the amount of 80 per cent, because it was a tremendous industry and was going to be the best investment the people of Canada could make. And during all this time, I am told by an ex-minister, they were going to the government and begging for more protection because otherwise they could not live. I say, if that is the case, first and before all, what the public of this country will demand is not so much protection for Mr. Cox and Mr. Ross, but that they should be made accountable for the declarations they have made to the people of Canada.

Now, Sir, I quite admit with the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that the mismanagement of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, and the way in which the people of this country have been led to take stock in that concern, is no reason for not having a bold policy on the industry itself. I quite admit that, and I am prepared to say now to the government that, after they have carefully considered the question, after they have taken into consideration the consequences that will arrive as affecting every other industry that is dependent upon this mother industry, if they are prepared to recommend an increase of duty, I do not say I will not support it, but I say——

Mr. POPE. Oh, you will support anything.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, Sir. Before now I have asked the government for more protection than they were willing to give. My views on the tariff question are well known. I ran as a protectionist in 1896 and again in 1900 in a purely rural constituency where there could be no political advantage to me in advocating that policy. But I am convinced that, as the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) has said, the tariff policy of the country should not be made a tool either in the hands of financial speculators or in the hands of political speculators. I am in favour of a solid policy of protection for this country. That should be our national policy. But, because we make it our national policy, every part of it should be wisely considered, and it should not be changed on the spur of the moment because of some financial distress existing which arises from causes entirely foreign to the tariff. Let me add—I cannot give it as a piece of information, but as a rumour which has been current on the streets of Montreal for some weeks—that a high official in the Dominion Iron and Steel Company has thrown lately on the markets over one thousand shares of his own company's securities Perhaps that has had something to do with the fall in value of the shares of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company—perhaps nearly as much as the competition of the American industry. Therefore, I say, and I insist upon it, that, while public opinion in this country, or at least a certain part of it, may require that more protection should be given to that industry, what this country requires and immediately demands is that a thorough examination be made not only of the way the stock of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company was managed and put on the market and used by stock gamblers, but that the whole question of stock gambling should be considered by this parliament. Sir, if we wish to have confidence established for the capital of our country, if we wish to bring in foreign capital to support our industries, if we wish British and American and German capitalists to invest in Canada, we must make it known that no board of directors is allowed to speak one way in secret when they want favours from the government and another way to the public when they want the money of the public. We must make it known that when the public has been allured by false promises to invest in any industry, the government's hand is strong enough to force those who have made those promises to give an account of their deeds. We must make it known to foreign capitalists that when money is placed in an industry in Canada it is placed in safe hands, and will not be subject to stock gambling on any change of opinion on the part of this director or that. We must make it known that no particular director has the right to give three times the value received without knowing that some day he will be obliged to pay back that capital and in the meantime to pay interest on it. I say that the hon. member for St. Mary's may be right when he says there should be a tariff revision. That is a question which should be studied. But I contend that I am right in saying that the time has come when this parliament should deal with the whole question of the stock exchange and the way in which strong industries in this country are placed at the mercy of speculators, of men who have no responsibility, who do not care for the future of the country or even for the general character or permanent stability of their industries, but simply care to raise money for the time being, whatever the consequence to the people of the country.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). In following this debate it has become difficult for me to understand whether the motion was intended to deal with a general principle or to apply to a specific case, whether it is intended for the purpose of bringing about a change in the conditions connected with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company or whether it was intended to deal with the iron industry as affecting the Dominion as a whole. I would like to deal with the question from the standpoint of its effect on the general industries of the Dominion. Canada, situated as it is, and constituted as it is, needs iron as England needs bread. Cheap iron is as necessary to the development of this country as cheap bread is to the support of the industries of England. I believe in protection, but I do not understand the idea which seems to prevail with some of our friends that a mere increase of duty is protection, and that such an increase is a cure for every evil that can possibly affect the nation. We have had, in times past, a policy of protection to the iron industry. It was not a part of the National Policy. It was an addition which proved the unreasonableness of the high tariff policy and actually broke its back; it was the high protective duties in favour of the production of iron which caused our other manufacturing industries throughout Canada to languish in the latter years of the so called National Policy.

There is no part of the present tariff policy of the government which has been so effective in improving the condition of our manufacturing industries and improving the general conditions of this country as the reduction in iron duties which is part of the tariff of 1897. The iron duties were reduced in 1897, and the country benefited thereby. But it would seem as if our friends wished to create the impression that the iron duties were abolished at that time. I find on looking at the Tariff Act of 1897 that there are duties attached to the importation of iron and steel which seem to me to give a very substantial measure of protection, quite as much as any industry is entitled to under a revenue tariff. I find on looking at this list that pig iron has a protective duty of $2.50 a ton; that rolled iron or steel has a duty of $7 a ton; bar iron and steel $7 a ton; rolled iron and steel, in sheets or plates, $7 a ton; iron and steel rails, 30 per cent; fish plates, $8 a ton; cast iron pipes, $8 a ton, and so on through the list. Does any person suppose that the manufacturing and agricultural industries of this country can afford a higher rate of protection to the iron industry than is now accorded ? For my part I do not believe they can. Under any circumstances, and according to the knowledge which has come within my range, I am prepared to vote against any increase in the iron duties, beyond a mere readjustment thereof. I believe that in doing so I am acting in the best interest of the country as a whole. I find that not only is the iron industry protected to the extent I have mentioned, but that it is also bonused to the extent of $3 a ton on iron and steel ingots, puddled bars and pig iron. Now, I say an industry that is protected to this extent, and is further bonused to this extent, has certainly no right to come to this parliament and make a plea that it does not now enjoy a very considerable measure of protection and advantage at the hands of the country at large.

Now, a word in regard to the bonus policy and the difference between a bonus and a tariff. It has been said that the bonus is a policy of mere expediency. No doubt it is a policy of expediency or experiment, and why not ? Why should the country be committed without experiment to a policy the result of which no man can foresee, or if he can foresee, it would be in the light of experience, and that would be that a policy of high tariff in favour of the production of iron would mean disaster to the country. I think it is right and proper that if you desire to encourage iron production in this country—and who does not so desire?—the encouragement should be given by way of a bonus rather than by way of a tariff. Let me point out the difference between the cost to the country in the two cases. Supposing we produce 100,000 tons of iron in a year, we bonus that to the extent of $3 a ton, we pay a specific amount of $300,000. Supposing we put a protective duty of $3 a ton on iron and we import a million tons. It costs the consumers of that iron $3 a ton on a million tons, or $3,000,000 ; whereas the bonus only cost $3 a ton on 100,000 tons, and the iron industry of the country had just the same advantage on every ton actually produced. The policy of bounties is only a policy of expediency or experiment. But as one who desires to see the iron industry encouraged, and does not want to see the country itself or the industries therein wrecked, I have supported the policy of iron bounties, and am prepared to continue to do so to a moderate and reasonable extent in preference to an increase of duties.

In regard to the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that if the iron duties were raised to-night, to-morrow the millions which have been lost, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) said, in stock gambling, would be recovered. I ask this House if that is a proper reason to present to us. Does this parliament exist for the purpose of rigging the stock market ? Surely we have other duties to perform, other interests to guard than the interests of those who have invested their money under such circumstances. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in the construction of railways necessary for the development of this country, in the expenditures on manufacturing industries necessary to keep pace with our agricultural development, we require cheap iron more than we do anything else. If Canada can produce that iron, and if any legislation can be brought forward or any assistance be given that will really induce the production of that iron by Canada as cheaply as it can otherwise be procured, then I am in favour of such legislation. But legislation which shall cause iron to be dear throughout the country, which shall cause an increase of its price one-third, or one-half, or possibly double—I say such a policy is not a policy of national protection, it is a policy of industrial and commercial suicide.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). I had not the pleasure of hearing what has been said on this question, yet it is of sufficient importance to excuse me for occupying a small portion of time. With the spirit of the resolution I am in hearty sympathy. I believe it is in the interest of this country to protect the development of all its natural products. But the question arises whether the resolution itself, at this stage, is not of an academic nature, incapable of doing any good, or of being made applicable in the slightest degree. If the resolution was propounded at the proper time, I would be glad to give it my sympathy and support. I believe in cultivating the iron and steel industry of this country, because I believe they are indigenous to it. I do not think that if this resolution was carried to-night the government are in a position to make it effective. It would involve a readjustment of the tariff from top to bottom. It would require an investigation into the manufacturing conditions of every industrial concern in this country that uses iron. It is a task that, at this late stage of the session, it would be impossible for the government to overtake, and it is not in the present instance an absolute necessity. Therefore, while I sympathize with the resolution, I do not sympathize with it under the present circumstances, because it is incapable of doing any good.

Now, it has been urged that a bounty differs from a duty. So it does to a certain extent, but in so far as any manufacturer is concerned it is exactly the same thing. It does not matter whether he is protected against the foreign producer by $6 a ton duty or whether he receives a present from the government of $6 a ton. It does not matter if he is able to put his wares upon the market at $6 a ton less than the people who are competing against him. I take exception to some of the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who sits in front of me (Hon. Mr. Tarte) when he undertook to asperse the government and to hold it responsible for the loss of a large sum of money. The government is not to blame in the slightest degree, because of the disaster which has overtaken some of the industries that may be affected by it. These people knew when they went into this business exactly what the tariff was. They thought they would be able to bring about a successful condition of affairs but they have not been able to bring about that condition. This disaster has not been brought about by the neglect of the government because it has taken no new attitude since the present tariff was inaugurated. My hon. friend who sits in front of me, says that over a hundred million of dollars have been lost by the people of this country. I think he is incorrect in that. I think the ownership of that hundred million of dollars has shifted. The people who had that hundred million of dollars a short time ago have not got it to-day, but somebody else has and in so far as the country is concerned, I do not think that any very serious loss has taken place. If we were to compare, as has been done here, the value of the stocks to-day with what it was in 1896, we would see that there has been an actual increase of several hundreds of millions, not of a hundred million, in value. The crisis that has been brought about and which has precipitated this discussion in the House is the result of an attempt to float upon an unsuspecting public manufacturing estimates that are not truthfully represented. Take the very industry whose condition has precipitated this discussion. We know that at the time it was floated the promises that were made. We know that the vice-president and manager made a speech in Toronto before the board of trade and we know what he said. I will read from his speech :

> As to the Cape Breton district, situated on the seaboard, the whole wide world is her market, all of it, and in our modesty we do not ask for more.

At this point we must again revert to our cost comparison. Then he goes on to say in his speech that they can produce iron and steel at Sydney at $6 per ton at tide water cheaper than they can at Pittsburg.

> I will be pardoned for a few more words on the great promise of the Cape Breton district. So great is this promise that it has ceased to be local. It has ceased to be sectional. It has become international in its influence. To-day, Sydney is a familiar name to every steelmaker in England, and before another year rolls around the leaders in this industry will have been with us to see for themselves the new centre. At this moment Sydney is debated with doubt and misgiving by the large German syndicates, and in the United States the strength of her position is conceded by every expert. Canada alone at this moment does not realize how splendid an opportunity is within her control.

That speech was made only two years ago before the Board of Trade of Toronto by the vice-president and manager of this very institution and yet we are told that the government is responsible for this loss. These men have induced an unsuspecting public to pay three times as much for the stock as it was worth, they floated for about $28,000,000 a concern that never had more than one-third of that money invested in it. What can you expect ? There is not one manufacturing establishment to-day in Canada from one end of the country to the other, except, perhaps, those that are affected by the preferential tariff, for instance, the woollen mills, which are not successful and whose stock is not above par. I am willing to admit that the preferential tariff has affected some of our industries, but I believe the surtax will do them good. I believe that in not more than a year from now better conditions amongst the woollen and cotton mills will prevail. The iron industry was started a few years ago knowing the conditions which existed. The same conditions exist to-day as those which existed in 1897 and 1900. The government has done nothing to precipitate the disaster which has overtaken this concern, and these establishments that have been over capitalized, and then floated upon an unsuspecting public must come to disaster. You cannot float a company and declare dividends on a capital of $30,000,000 when there is only $10,000,000 in the concern. You cannot declare dividends on water and keep it up for ever. To hold the government responsible for what has taken place is to make a foundationless charge. I sympathise with the resolution. I believe higher duties should be put upon iron and steel, but before passing a resolution like that to-night we must consider what it involves. It is simply an academic expression of opinion that it would be a good thing, but would it restore confidence ? Not at all. It would demoralize all subsidiary trades and other great industrial institutions. If the industries which are engaged in buying iron were told that there would be an increase in the value of iron and there was a feeling of insecurity and uncertainty created in every large establishment that uses iron unless the government promised that it would make a corresponding increase in the duties which these establishments now enjoy. That would involve a re-arrangement of the tariff from beginning to end, months of labour and a great deal of study. We know that when the old government existed and when the new government took office nearly a year was consumed in ascertaining exactly the conditions as they existed. It is as necessary to-day as it was seven years ago to make careful inquiry and when this revision of the tariff takes place it must be the result of careful investigation and consideration and after the opinion of experts has been had in every department of trade. But, because disaster has overtaken men who have engaged in stock speculation, and men who have floated fictitious enterprises on the public it is no reason why the government should go to the rescue and disarrange the financial and industrial affairs of the country.

Mr. RUFUS POPE (Compton). Mr. Speaker, this discussion was brought about by the introduction of a resolution by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) asking that further consideration in the way of increased duties be given to the steel industries of Canada. It was met, first, by the reply from the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) that it was not an opportune moment at which to bring forward this resolution intimating that it was unfair that my hon. friend should have brought this resolution forward at this particular time. He did not give us any reason for making this statement, but thought that this House should be satisfied with the fact that he simply made the bald assertion that it was untimely. At the beginning of this session, or nearly at the beginning of this session, when the budget speech was delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance, a resolution was proposed by my hon. friend in which he declared, and in which those supporting him declared, that the hour for the revision of the tariff had arrived in this country. It was voted down and there has never been any moment since that time when we were going into Committee of Supply that it was not the legitimate right of the hon. leader of the opposition, or of any hon. gentleman on this side of the House, to move such a resolution as that which was moved to-day. So, Sir, I say that it does not become the hon. Minister of Finance to put forth that as the basis of his argument against the introduction of his resolution. It indicates fear, it indicates cowardice on the part of the hon. gentleman when he attempts to ward off the pressure that is brought to bear on him from all sorts of financial institutions throughout Canada ; it ill becomes him to say in a whining manner to the leader of the opposition that this motion is inopportune. But we have a franker statement from the Prime Minister who told us that it could not be expected that the government would revise the iron tariff without first having a statement from the Sydney Company. Well, to a protectionist like myself, a protectionist in season and out of season, who believes in the application of principles rather than dodging between two theories, it does seem peculiar that the leader of the government should have to wait to apply his sound principles until he inspects the private books of a company. The right hon. gentleman told us that the growth of this industry had been brought about by the tariff inaugurated by his government, which is lower than the tariff of the Conservative government. If that is true, then for heaven's sake do not let the hon. gentleman return to a higher tariff and ruin the industry. But the Prime Minister, in the next breath, told us that he was going to look over the books of that concern, and that if he finds good reason for returning to higher protection he will do so. That is the kind of shifting policy we have had for six years of Liberal rule in Canada, and it is a sort of policy that has never built up industrial life in any country. The Liberals have been lucky. Since they came to power they have had the benefit of prosperous times and wonderful crops, but, notwithstanding that, they are now beginning to learn that they made a mistake when they did not revise the tariff this year. It is quite true that if they once open the door they will have many other industries knocking ; they will find the silver lead men of British Columbia and others demanding protection, and I can well understand how they are in fear and trembling. But, Sir, no government, whether free trade or revenue tariff, or protectionist, can sit supinely there and permit such a great industry as that at Sydney to go to the wall. If the prayers of the men interested in that industry have any foundation, the government will be bound to increase the iron duties and to declare to all Canada within thirty days that the leader of the opposition is really the leader of the House. They may dislike to do so. They may get their supporters to bob up here and there, one after another to declare that they are in sympathy with the motion, but will vote against it, but all their hedging won't do. The only man who is in sympathy with the motion is the man who has the moral courage to vote for the motion when it embodies the principle he believes in. And now as to stock gambling. We are not concerned about that on this side of the House. Perhaps we do not deal in stocks as extensively as hon. gentlemen opposite do. I noticed that when the hon. member for Labelle suggested an investigation, many gentlemen opposite applauded, and I thought at once that these gentlemen had dropped their money, and even though an investigation could not find out where it went to, it would give them some consolation. They want consolation instead of cash, and if the iron industry is not protected that is all the people of Canada will get. I have listened to the Finance Minister, I have listened to the Prime Minister, I have listened to the Minister of Customs, the thunderer of the administration, quoting stock prices in this country and in this House as an evidence of prosperity. Why are they ashamed to quote those stock lists to-night? For several years we have heard the Liberals glory that they established the works at Sydney. Where is their glorification to-night? I do not care whether the management of these works has been extravagant or not. I never knew of a new industry of such an extensive nature that did not commit mistakes. It is not enough to have markets for their products and to have their raw material, but you must have practiced and experienced men to mould the iron from its raw state into its perfect manufactured condition. That man has to grow up in the institution, and that is one of the great reasons why protection must be had in a new country with infant industries. Now, Sir, what sympathy are hon. gentlemen opposite showing to these men who are said to be in difficulty—saying that there should be a committee to investigate the heads of the company—Mr. Cox, Mr. Ross and others who but a year ago they were lauding to the skies? As Liberals, they were at that time gloating over the fact that they were establishing a great industry down by the sea. To-day they are characterizing these men as great stock gamblers who should not receive any protection. Great is the change that has come over hon. gentlemen opposite and over this great industry down by the sea.

Mr. Speaker, the difficulties with which the Prime Minister finds himself surrounded in this particular instance are only going to be magnified as time rolls along. I was reading a year ago of the period of the Liberal administration from 1873 to 1878. I was reading about the promises made year after year to the people as their only consolation. The administration at that time said, wait until next year, wait until a future time; next year we will deal with this, and we will deal with that; until the hour came when it was too late. Hon. gentlemen sitting on the treasury benches to-day are following the same policy. One year we had to wait for the jubilee, last year we had to wait for the colonial conference. That was supposed to be a reason for Canada standing still. Mr. Speaker, I admit of no reason for Canada standing still. I admit of no reason why the government of the day, every hour of the day and every hour of the night, should not have an adequate policy of protection for the development of the industries of this country. Sir, as a protectionist, believing in the development of the great industries of Canada, I know of no application of the principle that should give greater satisfaction to any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who has the slightest idea of protection, as so many of these hon. gentlemen profess, than its application as proposed in the present instance. We have not only the application of the principle of protection to the iron, steel, silver, copper, lead and other great mineral resources of this country, but we have the splendid results of manufacture. It is an opportunity to exemplify to the world the greatest possible advantages to be obtained under a protective policy. We give protection to many industries whose raw materials are brought from foreign countries to be manufactured here. In this instance we lend our protection to the development of the raw materials within the bounds of Canada, and to the conversion of those raw materials into the manufactured goods to be utilized in Canada and to be exported abroad. With such an application of the principles of protection, no hon. gentleman on the other side of the House needs to haggle and apologize and say that he stands behind the mere shams and screens of protection.

It has been stated by some hon. gentlemen, I think the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall), that the early growth of the iron industry in all countries has been slow. Consequently the right hon. Prime Minister must not blame us too severely if during the hard times that preceded the year 1896 the growth of the iron industry of this country was not very rapid; because he has sitting behind him gentlemen who are versed in this matter, who have lived in the midst of that development down by the sea, and who have given him his lesson in this very debate, by saying that the early stages of that development are always slow. I admit that the early stages of heavy mining are bound to be slow; a tremendous amount of capital has to be got together. I want to put it on a business basis to any man in this House, and ask him : if you go to England to-morrow to obtain capital to develop the mining resources of this country or to establish any industry, and you state in your prospectus the quantity of goods likely to be consumed in Canada, and the quality of the raw materials from which the goods are to be manufactured, would that be a perfect prospectus ? Could you get a dollar on it ? You could not get a dollar until you showed the people of England and the world that you had the right to your own market under the stamp of protection. That is the strongest argument you can put in any prospectus in floating any scheme in England; and if it is good for the flotation of business projects or the acquirement of money on our property in England, it is a good, sound principle for us to follow at home. What is the result of manufacturing a ton of iron in Canada ? Suppose it should cost us $40. We manufacture it in Cape Breton; we buy it with Canadian money. What have we got as the result of that trade inside of Canada ? We have the $40 and we have the ton of iron. But suppose we bought that ton of iron in a foreign country for $30. We would practically lose the $30 and have only the ton of iron. That is the application of the principle of protection all through. If we buy a mowing machine in the United States for $100, we have only the machine, and the American has the money to feed the American people, build American cities, and help to maintain that wonderful population of the United States which has grown up from home consumption. You may confine the policy to a small centre or extend it as broadly as you like. The nation which has the courage to stand by its own iron and steel industry will accomplish more in the way of nation-building than the nation which has not the courage to stand by its own people and its own markets.

This is a mighty period in the world's history in which we are living. We are witnessing great events as indicated by the speeches made by the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain. We are seeing the opening of a new era of agitation throughout the length and breadth of this empire, and the government of this country should not hesitate to build up Canada as rapidly as the legislation of this parliament can do it. Let us go forward in that development of all our natural resources and industrial life, let us accomplish all we can in the space of time left to us before we are asked to consider the new order of things, so that when we enter into that greater and more magnificent federation of all the empires and colonies, nations and states over which the British flag floats, we shall enter it with our industries established and our minds developed, and take a position in that glorious imperial federation that will be worthy of the gentlemen who have charge of the legislation of this country.

House divided on amendment of Mr. R. L. Borden.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). We will take up the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to draw the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to the fact that the statements we get as to the business that we may expect to be called upon to deal with are not very accurate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In what respect ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For example, we are told that certain business will come up next day, and when next day comes, the order is entirely reversed or the nature of the business is changed. We were told that to-day the Railway Commission Bill would come up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understood that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) had expressed a desire that the motion for Supply should be made in order that he might move the amendment of which he had given notice. We thought we were accommodating him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Quite so, but the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), who made the announcement, was not able to give me any satisfaction on the subject. He said, as I understood him, that he would consult the Minister of Finance, and I never heard a word afterwards until I came into the House. The motion was made to go into Supply at the very first stage, very much to my astonishment. I was not prepared at the moment not even having my papers at hand. I had not the courtesy of a line from my hon. friend to state that the arrangement had been changed. I am only drawing this matter to the attention of my hon. friend with the idea to suggest that he might be a little more particular in these matters. I would not mention it if this were the first time it has occurred, but it is more than the sixth or seventh time. On other occasions when attention has been called to it, I am bound to say, hon. gentlemen opposite have been courteous enough to say that they would not presume to go into matters concerning which we had no notice. I am only suggesting that with a little care we might have a better idea as to the work we are to be called upon to take up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I am very much surprised at the attitude of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) with regard to this matter. I happened to be the senior minister here last evening when the House was about to adjourn. In answer to the question of the leader of the opposition, I stated that the intention was to take up the Railway Bill and after that to go into Supply. The leader of the opposition requested me to present to the leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the fact that he had a motion to present on going into Supply, which he had not had an opportunity to present yesterday, and that he hoped that if the motion for Supply was to be made, it would be made early so as to enable him to reach a conclusion on the motion if he moved it. I laid the matter before the Prime Minister and he said that certainly he would take up Supply early so as to give the leader of the opposition every opportunity to reach a conclusion upon his motion. Practically the whole day has been required to reach a conclusion. It is fair to infer that had we not done what we did this afternoon and presented the motion for Supply early, a conclusion could not have been reached. The course followed was entirely for the purpose of meeting the views of the leader of the opposition, which I informed him we would try to do.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not finding fault with the course pursued to-day, but suggesting that it would be more convenient if the course to be followed were more accurately made known to us. In this case, I was not made acquainted with the fact that the government were willing to meet my request. When the hon. Minister of Agriculture told me that the Railway Commission Bill would come on and later Supply, I made the suggestion I did, and he said he would report the matter to the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And said that no doubt we could meet your views.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I complain of—and I think I have the right to complain of—is that I have not had the courtesy of a note or telephone message or any intimation from the government, so that I could know what they intended to do. It is no very serious matter, but I would say to my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the Minister of Finance or any other minister charged with informing us of the course of next day's business, that, if any change is made it might be intimated to us in the course of the morning what the business of the day will be. My right hon. friend will understand that it makes the business of the House much easier to carry on. I am only asking that the same principle should be followed that is followed on this side in giving notice of any matter which we intend to bring up and which is likely to disturb the course of business set out for the day.

The PRIME MINISTER. The request of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is not unreasonable, on the contrary, I agree with him wholly. If, in this case, there is any blame, I must take it all upon myself. The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) notified me early this morning of the request that had been made by the leader of the opposition, and I said that to meet the hon. gentleman's views we would present the motion of Supply the first thing. Now that my attention is brought to the matter, I admit that I should have sent the hon. gentleman a note. But, as I knew he was anxious to move the resolution and thought that he had had his speech prepared for some time, I assumed that he would be ready. I hope that the relations will continue always courteous between the hon. gentleman and myself, and that in this case he will acquit me of any intention to incommode him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Absolutely. In matters of this kind as in others, the right hon. gentleman has shown me the most perfect courtesy.

Department of Agriculture—salaries, $66,152.50; contingencies, including payment up to $800 each per annum to three assistant patent examiners, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $17,750, $83,902.50.

Mr. INGRAM. We want to know who these chief clerks are ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. George Johnston, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Jarvis, Mr. Lynch. There is a vacancy caused by the death of the late Mr. Brymner. No appointment has yet been made, but probably there will be one within a short time.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the hon. gentleman give us his name ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the hon. gentleman tell us how many clerks each one of these chief clerks has under his charge ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Johnston has four, Mr. Jackson three, Mr. Jarvis has a technical department, with no particular clerk under him ; Mr. Lynch has practically all the clerks in the patent branch, some twenty-two or twenty-three. Mr. Johnston's salary is $2,400, Mr. Jackson's $2,400, Mr. Jarvis' $2,312, and Mr. Lynch's $2,200. These are the figures for the ensuing year.

Mr. INGRAM. I see the salaries of these gentlemen bear no relation to the number of clerks they have under their charge. Are we to understand that those who have charge of the largest number of clerks perform more important services, or have more responsible duties to discharge ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that would be a fair measure of the duties or of the work of the chief clerks. For instance, Mr. Lynch is the chief clerk in charge of the patent branch, and has a large number of employees under him. Mr. George Johnson is the chief clerk and statistician, and also has charge of the statistical year-book and other work of that kind. These salaries are regulated by the seniority or status of the clerks in the civil service, that is to say, they grow by years of service and by statutory increases. The actual figures are not decided by the amount of work they do.

Mr. INGRAM. Speaking of the patent branch, I am bound to say that having had some business to do with it I was impressed with the courtesy and with the expert skill which I observed in there on the part of the employees. It is highly important they should be treated well. I think that branch needs a little more assistance. I noticed that some parties applying for patents had some time to wait, owing, I fancy, to the large amount of work in that branch. The hon. gentleman might well engage a few more experts to deal with these matters.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The minister will remember that last session I drew his attention to this branch of his department, and he promised that certain appointments should be made to facilitate the examining of claims and applications.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have added two.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). With reference to the statistical branch, has the Minister any record of the freight rates between Canada and the old country, or between the interior cities of Canada and the seaboard? The collection of these rates would be a very useful function for the statistical department to undertake. I think the United States Department of Agriculture issues a statement showing the freight rates from every important centre of the United States to the chief seaboard cities. It also shows the freight rates over every important line of steamships from every American port to European ports, English, French and German. This is most interesting information. If we had this in Canada, I am satisfied that the people in the interior points would have just ground for interference with the railway rates, and would strengthen the appointment of a railway commission. The minister is well aware that the rates between many inland cities of Canada are higher than through rates to the seaboard. I trust the minister will give this his attention, and that next year we will have all this information furnished to us month by month.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the minister give the reason for this increase of $3,540 in salaries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are all statutory increases, there is no increase contrary to the Civil Service Act. There is an increase for two second-class clerks and one junior second-class clerk. The junior is a new appointment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have before me the estimates of 1895-96 and 1896-97, brought down by the late Conservative government, and I see that the amount asked for the Department of Agriculture, which was as important then as it is now, was $49,782. Now the hon. gentleman is asking for $83,902, an increase of $34,120. How can he possibly justify so large an increase in the last six or seven years, while the work of the department is practically the same?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the first place the work of the department is not at all the same. The increase in the patent work is responsible for practically all this increase of salaries in the civil government estimates. The increase in the patent work has been something like 30 per cent. The increase in the patent work is very considerable, an increase of something like 30 odd per cent in the number of patents that have to be examined and issued each year. The staff of examiners has been increased to the extent of three times the number formerly employed and the system of examination is much more complete than it was, and therefore calls for more time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why, the patent branch was just as efficient in 1895-6 as it is today.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Totally different.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yet, there has been $34,000 of an increase in the expenditure since 1895-6 according to the main estimates brought down.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot see where the increased expenditure that the hon. gentleman speaks of comes in. There is no such increase as that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have the estimates here.

Mr. INGRAM. As to the expenditure that the hon. gentleman is pointing to, they are students from our colleges?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They must be university graduates in science.

Mr. INGRAM. Their appointments are not of a political character?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, they have been appointed solely on account of their expert knowledge. I have the estimates here for 1895-6 for the Department of Agriculture and I find they amount to $49,782. This year they are $66,000 which is a difference of $16,000 instead of $34,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the minister has a lot of contingencies to add which were not in the main estimates before.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are no contingencies here, which were not in before.

Mr. TAYLOR. Point them out in the main estimates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that contingencies are not a separate item. They were in the estimates then and they are still.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In regard to contingencies, I may say that it was the practice in former years to have separate votes. We found that we were discussing the estimates of the same department at different times, and it was found to be more convenient to put the two items together and to have salaries and contingencies under review at the same time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Civil government and contingencies in 1895-6 amounted to $14,500 and this year the estimate is $17,750.

Mr. TAYLOR. Which leaves an increased expenditure on the two items of $20,000 since the hon. gentleman took charge of the office and the work is practically the same.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The work is not the same.

Mr. BARKER. In the Auditor General's Report for 1901-2 the contingencies under this heading were $9,711.22, which appears in the first volume at D—11, while last year and this year contingencies are put down in the estimates at $17,750. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The item covers clerical and other assistance the vote for which is $10,000 and in addition to that the hon. gentleman will find two other items, printing and stationery and sundries. They are not included in the $9,711.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I want to ask the hon. minister whether or not he has taken into consideration the matter I brought before him last year in reference to the dismissal of Captain D. C. Stuart, of Halifax, as well as the refusal of the department to pay back to that gentleman a considerable sum of money which he had paid into the superannuation fund. He was dismissed without any investigation and without any opportunity to make his defence, although, I think, some explanation was received from him in writing. I promised my hon. friend last year that I would disclose to him conduct on the part of at least one official in Nova Scotia which was infinitely worse that anything that had been charged against Captain Stuart. That, however, was by the way. I did insist with a good deal of earnestness that these moneys which had been taken from him should not be detained from him any longer, and that the same rule which had been applied in similar cases before should be applied to him and that the money should be paid back with four per cent interest. I think the hon. Minister of Finance raised the point that the terms of the statute which was passed did not technically include this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not exactly the statute but our explanation of the objects of the statute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is no technical difficulty it is so much the better. The alleged misconduct, although I do not think there was any real misconduct, for which he was dismissed was of the most trifling character. The hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross), under whom Captain Stuart acted for many years, stated very freely in this House that he had not the slightest doubt that the only reason why Captain Stuart was dismissed was on account of the feeling that existed between him and one of his superior officers. Under these circumstances I do not think there is any reason why the government of Canada should take from Captain Stuart the money which he has paid into the superannuation fund, and at the same time dismiss him without any proper investigation into his alleged misconduct. I hope the hon. minister to whose attention I drew this matter somewhat late in the session of last year will look into it because I have not the slightest doubt that if he becomes really seized of the facts as they are and as I believe they are supposed to be by the public in Halifax to-day, he will have no hesitation in paying back this money.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I confess the matter has escaped my attention, but I shall be glad to see if there is any justification in my mind and the minds of my colleagues for action such as the hon. gentleman speaks of.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The general question of repayment of superannuation contributions is not a matter we can saddle on the Minister of Agriculture. The statute does not expressly forbid it, but it was expressly declared in this House when the statute was passed, that its object was to make provision for the return of superannuation money to men who were dismissed for political offences. The ground we took was that while these men have been punished by losing their office, they should not be further penalized by the loss of their superannuation money. Once we depart from that there are numerous cases many of which appeal to our sympathies, and so far we have adhered to the purpose for which that Act was passed as stated in parliament. I do not want that the Minister of Agriculture should bear the responsibility for the non-payment of the superannuation money. That is a matter of general policy, and the Treasury Board and the government are responsible for it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Any policy that withholds this money from Captain Stuart is a policy the government of this country should not indulge in. The charge against him was a slight dereliction of duty which did not amount to anything, and because of which the public interest did not suffer. The usual practice is that ordinary corporations pay back money received into the pension fund where officers are dismissed for reasons ten times as serious as that for which Captain Stuart was dismissed. I do not think that the government is justified in retaining from Captain Stuart the sum of $200 or thereabouts which was received from him first and last for the superannuation fund, and which ought to be paid back to him with interest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wish to discuss Captain Stuart's case, because I do not recall the circumstances. If private corporations pay back money under such conditions it is likely one of the conditions attached to their superannuation fund, but that has not been so in the Dominion service and under all governments men have passed out of the public service after contributing to the fund for years, and have not received a penny. A man who has been a quarter of a century in the service dies and under the old system his family would not get a penny of his contributions to the fund back; but such cases of hardship have arisen for many years under the Superannuation Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Exactly the same thing occurs with regard to the pension funds of private corporations. An officer dies and he does not get the benefit of his contribution to the fund, but I know of my own knowledge that where corporations have had the most absolute power to retain the money they did not think it was fair to do so. I do not see why the government of this country should adopt a smaller policy than that adopted by private corporations. I will leave the matter with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance, but I will bring it up again when they will have had time to consider it. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will consider this matter impartially, and I have no doubt that he will come to the conclusion that it is not just to retain this money from Captain Stuart.

Mr. BARKER. I notice from the Auditor General's Report that $1,115.16 is charged for postage stamps. I thought the minister was able to frank his mail matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The great bulk of that postage is in regard to the correspondence about patents with foreign countries and the post office charges for that.

Mr. BARKER. I thought the minister's frank would be honoured in all countries in the postal union.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the post office arranges that, but it charges us.

Mr. BARKER. I notice that the minister purchased a book called the 'Nemesis of mis-Government.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He must have been studying the history of the late government.

Mr. BARKER. Oh, no, this was many years after the late government went out of power.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not read the book, but it must have been required by some branch of the department.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not had the pleasure of meeting the deputy Minister of Agriculture, but I notice that the gentleman sitting in the Chamber to-night is not the same gentleman who met us on former occasions. I would like to ask the minister who the gentleman is, what his former occupation was and what are the special qualifications he has to fill the duties of deputy Minister of Agriculture. I think it is a proper thing that the new deputy should be introduced.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) of course must be constitutionally blind to the appearance of anybody having a seat on the floor who is not a member of this House. I can tell the hon. member that the deputy Minister of Agriculture now is Mr. George F. O'Halloran, and that he was appointed within the last year to succeed the late deputy, Mr. W. B. Scarth. Mr. O'Halloran is a lawyer by profession and has been practicing for many years, first of all in the eastern townships where he was born and brought up, and afterwards in the city of Montreal. He is a lawyer of repute and standing, and is specially competent, I believe, and my colleagues believe with me to deal with these matters connected with the Department of Agriculture which are not entirely agricultural in their nature. There are not only the agricultural branches but a number of other branches such as patents, trade marks, designs, copyrights, statistics and various other things. The mainly agricultural matters in the department are chiefly in the hands of experts. Dr. Saunders, the director of the Experimental Farm, Prof. Robertson, in the dairying and agricultural branch, Dr. Rutherford, in the veterinary branch and Dr. Montizambert, in the quarantine branch, deal with the matters affecting these branches. The deputy minister has the supervision as deputy minister of these branches, but has nothing to do with what I might call the technical or expert carrying on of the branches. The other branches I have alluded to do require the superintendance of the deputy minister directly and personally, and therefore this gentleman was chosen particularly to look after these branches.

Mr. HENDERSON. The explanation seems to be very satisfactory to the hon. gentleman hon. (Mr. Fisher). I must confess that when the minister takes long trips to Japan and the old country and is absent from his office a large portion of the year, I think that the chief executive in the department should at least have some practical knowledge of agriculture. We think it an extraordinary proceeding to choose the head of the executive Department of Agriculture from the legal profession. I do not think that is what the country expects or what the country was promised. It has been the boast of the right hon. Prime Minister in going through the country that he selected an hon. gentleman to place at the head of the Department of Agriculture who was a practical farmer. It was only a year or two ago that we found the very important position of chief inspector of fruit was given to a lawyer. The minister seems to have the idea that only men learned in the law are able to administer the Department of Agriculture. Now, I think the farmers of this country have a little claim upon the government; and surely, amongst the intelligent agriculturists of this country men could be found qualified to discharge the duties of Deputy Minister of Agriculture. If the minister wants legal assistance, he has at his command at all times his friend the Minister of Justice, who I am sure is well qualified to advise him on legal questions. I do think it is a slight upon the great agricultural community of this country that the Department of Agriculture here at Ottawa should be filled up with professional men who know nothing about practical agriculture. I know nothing of the gentleman who occupies the position in question. It may be that he is reading the book which the hon. member for Hamilton referred to for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of agriculture. If so, I think it is a slow way of qualifying a man to discharge that duty, especially as I understand the deputy is really the man who administers the department. The minister himself is travelling all over the country taking his pleasure, and relying almost entirely on the deputy minister to administer the affairs of the department. I think that in future either the minister should give some reasonable attention to his department or he should select a practical farmer to administer it.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that the Minister of Agriculture has cast a sad reflection upon the Department of Justice, because this is the first time that an intimation has been given to the House by the hon. minister that he needed a lawyer for his deputy. It is the first department, so far as I know, that has lost confidence in the Department of Justice. It does not often fall to the lot of the opposition to defend members of the government against each other; but I must say that it is a sad reflection on the Justice Department for the hon. Minister of Agriculture gravely to tell the House that there are questions of a technical character in the Department of Agriculture which make it desirable that he should have a lawyer, and he adds what he calls a good lawyer to his department. Now, there was a pamphlet, written I believe by the Minister of Agriculture himself, in which he pronounced a eulogium upon himself.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is it printed ?

Mr. CLANCY. I do not know whether it was printed by union labour or not; it has not the union label on it. The Minister of Labour is not in his place, and if my hon. friend will defer that question until he comes back, though it may be some time, he will no doubt get an answer. On page five of the pamphlet of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, written I believe both for by-elections and for general elections——

Mr. INGRAM. Before or after ?

Mr. CLANCY. Well, this is to be taken both before and after, but this is how it looks after. On page five it says :

> The Laurier government and agriculture. What Hon. Mr. Fisher has acomplished for the improvement of the agricultural class. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his party promised the electors during the election of 1896 that he would work for the improvement of the condition of the agricultural class. The first act of the Prime Minister, on assuming the administration of the country, was to call to the Department of Agriculture a practical farmer. Under the last administration, there were at the head of the Department of Agriculture lawyers, doctors, brewers or other persons having neither technical nor practical knowledge of agriculture. * *

The hon. gentleman has told the House that he selected a lawyer to have technical knowledge, and yet in this pamphlet he named the lawyers and the doctors and others as being unfit to take that department. I ask him now if he is willing to retract that. Will he be able to reconcile his statement now with his pamphlet, circulating in the province of Quebec and elsewhere, declaring it a crime on the part of the Conservative party to select such men ? I will await the hon. gentleman's explanation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Very simple.

Mr. CLANCY. If it is very simple, it will not take the hon. gentleman long to explain it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not long.

Mr. BARKER. The explanation possibly is that the minister was anxious that he should know a little more about agriculture than his deputy, and therefore he appointed a lawyer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend from Bothwell may take that explanation.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman accepts the explanation of the hon. member from Hamilton, I need not complain, but it would be well perhaps for me to go a little further :—

> Mr. Laurier,——
> That was before the right hon. gentleman received his knighthood——
> —deemed that under his administration it should be otherwise, and called to the Department of Agriculture, Hon. Sydney Fisher, a farmer of more than twenty years experience, and one knowing full well the needs of those who, like himself, were engaged in the development of the soil of Canada. The results of this wise policy——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who wrote that?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman who declares this to be a wise policy wrote it, I believe.

The result of this wise policy——

What was it ? To select the hon. gentleman who presides over the department now? These hon. gentlemen do not usually have a policy, but there was a policy involved in selecting the hon. gentleman who so ably presides over that department.

Mr. CLARKE. They must have a policy, for they never give it away.

Mr. CLANCY (reading) :

The results of this wise policy are being felt that throughout the whole country, Mr. Fisher, while practicing in the internal administration of his department at Ottawa the strictest economy, while reducing the number of employees of his department and the total amount paid to them in salaries, has succeeded in rendering the administrative work more effective and more useful to the agricultural class.

The hon. gentleman is now asking for additional assistance. He has more clerks now than he had then. He has constantly told us in the past, with regard to the Patent Department, that he took in young men of ability and training to do precisely the work which he now declares he must employ a lawyer to do. These were the reasons he urged in the past for overriding the Civil Service Act and paying high salaries to certain men employed to do technical work. If he employed those men to do technical work, why does he select a lawyer as deputy minister of Agriculture for the same purpose ? Is there any question affecting patents of any seriousness that would not be referred to the Department of Justice ? There is not one. What particular reason can be given why a lawyer should be selected as deputy minister of Agriculture, which might not be urged in every other department ? I quite agree with the hon. member for Halton that public confidence is not apt to be increased by the appointment of a lawyer as deputy minister of Agriculture, notwithstanding his legal ability. If he has succeeded in becoming a good lawyer, he has done about as much as any one man can succeed in doing. If a man can make a success in one line, that is about all he can, on an average, accomplish in this world, and Mr. O'Halloran has succeeded in becoming a good lawyer he could not have had much time to devote to agriculture. If the hon. minister had selected the deputy minister of Agriculture purely for his knowledge of law, it is well the country should understand it. The committee is entitled to some explanation of this item, and particularly to some explanation why the hon. minister selected a lawyer to be his deputy ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know that I can add much to the explanation I have already given. I do not think that I said that I chose Mr. O'Halloran because he was a lawyer. I selected him because I considered him to be eminently fitted for the position and also because as deputy minister of Agriculture he is commissioner of patents as well, in which position his legal training would be of great advantage. The agricultural portion of the work does not come specially under his particular supervision, but is under the supervision of the well known agricultural experts who have always given such satisfaction, even before I came to the department.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask the hon. minister what the business for to-morrow will be ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Railway Bill will be taken up in the afternoon, and supply later.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 10, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

COMMERCIAL AGENCIES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. THOMSON (North Grey)—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What is the commercial agency of the government of Canada ?
2. When and how was it inaugurated ?
3. Who are its officers ?
4. What are their duties ; and what remuneration do they receive ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). The phraseology may be open to question—'What is the commercial agency of the government of Canada ?' Assuming, however, that I understand what the hon. gentleman means, the answer to his questions are as follows :

1. Commercial agencies were established by Order in Council of the 21st November, 1891.

2. The Order in Council of the 16th March, 1892. Various appointments throughout the West Indies were made at that time to date from the 1st April, 1892. Since then others have been appointed.

3. The present officers are :

J. S. Larke, Sydney, Australia.
D. H. Ross, Melbourne, Australia.

J. G. Jardine, Cape Town, South Africa.
Peter B. Ball, Birmingham, England.
A. E. Poindron, Paris, France.
G. E. Burke, Kingston, Jamaica.
R. Bryson, St. John, Antigua.
S. L. Horsford, St. Kitts, British West Indies.
Edgar Tripp, Port of Spain, Trinidad.
C. E. Sontum, Christiania, Norway.

4. Their duties are to promote trade between Canada and the countries in which they are located. Their remuneration depends upon the duties performed, and runs from $250 to $3,000 per annum. The minor officers are paid at the rate of $250; those in Australia and South Africa, who devote their whole time, at the rate of $3,000 per annum.

STATION AGENTS, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. HACKETT asked:

What are the names of the agents, or caretakers, at the following small stations on the Prince Edward Island Railway, viz.: St. Louis, Elmsdale, Coleman, and Conway? And the amount of wages, or salary, per month, or year, paid each respectively?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The names and amount paid the caretakers of the following small stations on the Prince Edward Island Railway are:

Stations.	Names of Caretakers.	Amount paid each. per month.
St. Louis.. ..	John Perry..	$10 50
Elmsdale.. ..	James Forsythe.. .. .	8 33
Coleman.. ..	.N. McKay..	12 50
Conway.. .. .	A. M. Palmer..	8 33

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—CARS AND LOCOMOTIVES PURCHASED.

Mr. BARKER asked:

1. How many cars of the various classes, which had been contracted for, or purchased for the Intercolonial Railway previous to the 1st July, 1902, have been received into stock since that date?

2. How many cars of the various classes, contracted for, or purchased for the Intercolonial Railway on or after 1st July, 1902, have been received into stock since that date?

3. How many additional locomotives have been received into stock for the Intercolonial Railway since 1st July, 1902, inclusive, and what is the total number now in service?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. No cars have been received on capital account since July 1st, 1902.

2. Two hundred platform cars, twenty-one stock cars and two snowploughs have been received since July 1st, 1902, on revenue account.

3. Eight locomotives have been received since July 1st, 1902, on capital account, and two locomotives on revenue account, making the total number now in service 287.

VENTILATION OF THE CHAMBER.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to what I consider a poor arrangement with reference to this Chamber. I think we are suffering more here this year than ever before, when we had the windows on both sides and at the west end open. I understand that the engineer says that if the windows are open it will interfere with the fans now running, which fans make such a noise that hon. members on the back benches can hardly hear themselves speak when they address the Chair. These fans may be good for ventilation, but it would be better to have them running when the House was not sitting. I see by the thermometer that the temperature here is 74. It was about the same yesterday, though I venture to say it was nothing like that outside in the shade. It appears to me that we are in a sweat box here.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The other side are.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think members on both sides are. In other years when the windows at the sides and end of the Chamber were open, we had a better atmosphere than we have this session, and I would recommend the Minister of Public Works to have that plan tried. It would be no trouble to open the windows; we could try it for a day and stop the fans while the House is sitting.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). At least, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) cannot complain, as many others are doing, that he is being frozen out. I have noticed the noise of the fans, and have given instructions that they should be stopped during the sittings of the House. As to opening the windows, I spoke to the architect about it, and he says that if this were done, the fresh air would escape through the windows instead of circulating through the building. I will try to have the difficulty remedied. It is a difficulty that has existed, apparently ever since the Chamber was built. A great deal of money has been spent to remedy it, but, I am sorry to say, without as good an effect as we could desire.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON PULP WOOD.

Mr. R. H. POPE (Compton). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to bring to the attention of the government the recent imposition of a duty by the United States on pulp wood imported from Canada into the United States. The regulations of the duty have been changed, and we find now imposed upon peeled wood, that is, wood that has been peeled either by hand or by machinery, a duty amounting to something like $1.25 to $1.50 per cord. I would like to know if the government have been notified about that, and what action the government propose to take in the matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that this matter has been brought officially to the notice of the government, but I will make inquiry and let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I would like to draw the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior to a return that I moved for on May 4th, in reference to the acquisition by the Saskatchewan Land Company of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Company's land grant. The hon. the acting minister said it would only take a few days to prepare this return. I also moved for another return on March 30th, in reference to the disposal of the school lands. I would like to have the acting minister bring these returns down very soon.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY—GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES.

House went in committee on the following proposed resolutions :

1. Resolved, that the government may aid the extension of the line of the Canadian Northern Railway Company from Grandview, the point where what is known as the Gilbert Plains branch of the said railway ends, to a point at or near Edmonton, a distance of about 620 miles, and also of the Prince Albert branch of the said railway from a point 100 miles east of Prince Albert to Prince Albert, a distance of about 100 miles, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the first mortgage bonds, debentures or other securities of the company to the extent of $13,000 per mile of the line, interest on the said bonds to be at the rate of three per cent per annum payable half-yearly, and the principal to be payable in 50 years.

2. Resolved, that the said bonds, debentures or other securities shall be secured by mortgage forming a first charge upon the lines of railway so aided, and all property and franchises in connection therewith, and all revenues derived therefrom by the company ; provided that with respect to that portion of the said line from the end of the Gilbert Plains branch to the westerly boundary of Manitoba, a distance not exceeding sixty-five miles, the said mortgage shall be a first charge to the extent of only $10,000 per mile, but shall also rank on the said portion next after the charges heretofore created ; provided also that the said mortgage shall be a charge next after a first charge of $13,000 per mile (to be created by the company) on that part of said Prince Albert branch.

3. Resolved, that the said mortgage shall also form a charge next after the charges existing thereon upon all the lines and branch lines of railway of the company now in operation, and all property and franchises connected therewith, and all revenues derived therefrom by the company.

4. Resolved, that the kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid, and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the mortgage securing them, and the form and manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of.

5. Resolved, that upon the said guarantee being signed on behalf of the government, the government shall become liable for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities guaranteed, and the said payment shall be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

6. Resolved, that the rates and tolls to be charged for the transfer and carriage of freight and passengers upon the lines of railway so aided and upon the lines owned by the Canadian Northern Railway shall be under the control of the Governor in Council or of such authority, commission or tribunal as is designated or constituted under any Act of the parliament of Canada for the regulation or control of the business of railways.

7. Resolved, that the Governor in Council or any authority created by parliament for the purpose may also grant running powers over any portion of the lines hereby aided to any other line of railway upon terms considered equitable.

8. Resolved, that it shall be unlawful for the Canadian Northern Railway to lease or sell any of its lines or any portion thereof to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or to amalgamate with the said company or enter into any agreement with the said company whereby rates upon freight or passengers shall be pooled ; but this provision shall not extend to traffic or running arrangements made with the assent of the Governor in Council.

9. Resolved, that any money paid by the government of Canada under the guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government, but not in discharge of the liability of the mortgage securing them ; and the money so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and mortgage, and the government shall be subrogated in all the rights of the holders of the securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall in respect of all the moneys so paid be in all respects in the position of security holders in respect of whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.—(The Minister of Railways).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). These resolutions, it will be observed, contain the proposals of the government in the way of granting aid towards the construction of certain portions of the line of the Canadian Northern Railway. I apprehend that there is no railway which could be projected in Canada to-day which would have stronger claims upon the favourable consideration of the government and of parliament for assistance to any necessary extent than the line of railway which is mentioned in these resolutions. The main portion of the line of this road, that is to say, that portion extending from Grandview, in the province of Manitoba, to Edmonton, has not only been located, but its location has been approved as required by law. Therefore, we know whereof we speak when we say that the country through which this railway passes is one of exceptional fertility, and one which will, without any reasonable doubt, afford, in a very short time, not only a substantial amount of traffic, but a paying traffic, to the railway. It will be noted that the mileage for which aid is to be authorized in these resolutions aggregates about 720 miles.

One portion of the line has not yet been finally located, or at all events, the location has not been approved of. That is the portion east of Prince Albert not exceeding 100 miles. The main line, as I may describe it, because it will be the main line of the Canadian Northern which extends from Grandview to Edmonton, passing through Battleford, will not exceed 620 miles. As to the quality of land in this district, we are informed by the officers of the Interior Department, that the railway is tributary to a fertile soil and a country 80 per cent of which is capable of yielding the best quality of wheat the North-west Territories can produce.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You are speaking of the 100 miles ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am speaking of the 620 miles from Grandview to Edmonton. The same may be said in refrence to the other section as well, as I am advised. Perhaps, not quite the same percentage, but very nearly so, and the section of the country through which the 100 mile branch of the railway passes east of Prince Albert, is pretty well filled up by settlers. People have been settled there for very many years, they have flocked in within the last few years in increasing numbers and they have been expecting that a railway would be constructed through the district for many years past, until, as I am advised, they have become almost hopeless in regard to it and the disposition is believed to exist in many of them to throw up their hands and abandon the country altogether if railway construction does not take place at an early day. Taking into account the class of country through which the 620 mile section from Grandview to Edmonton, runs, it will be fair to assume that no reasonable amount of obligation, no reasonable amount in the way of bonded indebtedness which may be placed upon that undertaking in order to ensure its construction will not in the course of time be fully paid, not only the interest paid, but the principal amount returned. There is, I think, no doubt in the mind of any person who has made himself acquainted with the result of the operation of the lines of the Canadian Northern Railway in portions of the province of Manitoba and the west, that the business which will be created upon that line of railway will not only suffice to pay the working expenses almost at the outset, but will suffice to pay at a very early day the interest charges upon its bonded indebtedness as well. No one, I think, will question but that in view of the magnificent country through which that railway passes, and in view of the rapidity with which people from other lands as well as from some portions of our own country are flocking into the North-west Territories and settling in the district, that the obligation rests upon the government to see to it that no time is lost in ensuring the early construction of a railway through that territory. I think there is no more imperative obligation resting upon the parliament of this country than to bring railway conveniences and railway accommodation at the earliest possible moment to the settlers who have gone in there with the expectation of making their homes there and in the further expectation of finding these facilities afforded them. If that be a fact, and I think it will not be disputed by this committee, the question which rested upon the government was this : Was it reasonable to suppose that the company which has been chartered to construct this line would be able to as speedily as the necessities of the country required lay out and construct and put that line into operation of its own means and relying upon its own financial strength and relying in addition to that only upon the character of the credit which would attach to the undertaking among financiers abroad ? I think it would be a disappointment to the country, I think it would be expecting too much of the company, and that we would be likely to retard and injuriously affect the interests of the people who have settled in that territory if we were to wait until conditions exist which would enable the company to carry that work through itself without assistance. Time would be lost and it appears to me and to the government time is the very essence of the whole question in connection with the construction of this railway. Well, having decided in our minds that the obligation rests upon the government to give all the assistance to this company that was possible, and that we could not afford to wait until the company of its own means and with the resources which it had in its own hands should be able to build the railway, and having come to the conclusion that the duty rests upon the government to assist this company in carrying out its undertaking, the question then arose as to what form assistance would take. It is well known to this committee that for years past there has been a general and uniform policy on the part of both the present and preceding governments to make grants by way of bonus to such companies as the government felt were entitled to be assisted, giving out of the public exchequer for ever very substantial sums of money for the purpose of enabling these enterprises to be carried through. But, it appeared to us that in a work of this magnitude, in an undertaking which would involve such a very large amount of money if we were to pursue the policy which has hitherto obtained and having regard to the fact that we could make the necessary advances, or afford the necessary assistance without any question or doubt in such a manner as would not involve in the carrying out of the scheme one dollar of charge ultimately upon the treasury of the country, we felt that it was a venture, that the proper policy to pursue was to give assistance seasonably necessary to carry the enterprise through without any loss to the Exchequer of the country. We have come to the conclusion, upon negotiation with the gentlemen who are promoting the carrying out of the Canadian Northern schemes that this sum of $13,000 per mile, which is named in the resolutions, would be ample for the purpose, not an excessive sum by any means, but that it would be reasonably ample for the purpose. And we come to the further conclusion, that it would be a wise course for us to take and less burdensome upon the country; a course which would ensure the return of every dollar that might be directly or indirectly secured by the government assistance; relieve the government ultimately of all obligation in respect to it; if we were to incumber it to the amount of $13,000 per mile. It will be of course for the committee to say whether or not our conclusions in this regard have been wisely arrived at, or whether any more favourabe plan could have been devised by which the aim which I think we all desire to attain should be attained, and attained within the shortest possible period. We propose therefore to ask parliament by these resolutions to authorize us to endorse as it were, the obligations of this company to the extent of $13,000 per mile. We guarantee the interest upon these bonds at the rate of 3 per centum per annum. The company are able to make their loan upon these securities at a low rate of interest. They avail themselves of the credit of the government; they profit by the fact that with our endorsation—particularly as the credit of Canada stands to-day in the great financial centres—they will be able at a very much less annual charge than could possibly be achieved in any other way to secure the money which is required from government to complete the undertaking at the smallest possible cost and to afford every possible reasonable guarantee that the results would be the best which it would be possible to obtain. In my remarks I propose to pass over the minor details of the resolution——

Mr. BELL. Is it expected that the company will be able to sell their three per cent bonds at par, with the government endorsation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are very hopeful about it.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

The committee will observe that the resolutions provide for a first charge of the $13,000 per mile bond issue upon all the lines which we are here aiding, with a single exception. I will state what that exception is. There are about sixty-three miles between Grandview in Manitoba and the western boundary of that province which are not subject to a first lien to the extent of the $13,000 per mile. With the exception of that sixty-three miles about, the balance of all the mileage bears from the outset a mortgage to secure these bonds, a first charge upon the railway for the $13,000 per mile. As to the sixty-three miles the committee will observe that the mortgages will only get a mortgage endorsed by the government as a second charge upon these sixty-three miles, because in the arrangements which were made by the Canadian Northern Railway with the government of Manitoba there was a clause under which they were entitled to encumber all their railways within the limits of the province of Manitoba to the extent of a first charge of $10,000 per mile. And there were some miles of their railway in that province, among others this sixty-three miles, upon which that charge had not been executed.

Mr. CLARKE. Did they not get the aid of the province of Manitoba to build that sixty-three miles ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that they did; I think not. They gave the province of Manitoba a general mortgage, the particulars of which I will briefly state to the committee, so that they will see just what the character of our securities are. The first lien for the $13,000 per mile, with the exception of the whole of the line built under these arrangements, in the province of Manitoba and in the province of Ontario, and throughout the whole system of the Canadian Northern Railway we take and obtain a mortgage of a second charge on top of the existing mortgage which has been given to the Manitoba government, or if not given to them, given under the arrangement they have made.

Mr. LENNOX. Are we right in understanding that on the whole of the Canadian Northern system including Ontario we will have a second mortgage ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We have a blanket mortgage over their whole enterprise from Port Arthur through to the west.

Mr. BARKER. Then I misread the second clause. I understand you that on sixty-three miles we have a second mortgage for $10,000 a mile, but as I read this you have a first mortgage of $10,000 per mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A first mortgage.

Mr. BARKER. You said a second mortgage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I failed to make myself clear to the hon. gentleman. We get a $13,000 per mile mortgage upon all except the mileage between Grandview and the Manitoba western boundary. On that we only get a $10,000 mortgage. The clause that I refer to in the contract with the Manitoba government reserved to the company the right to encumber any of their lines in that province which they had not previously encumbered, to the extent of $10,000 per mile before the mortgage to the Manitoba government could take effect and become a charge.

Mr. BELL. In that case, how can this government secure a first mortgage to the extent of $10,000 a mile upon that section ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because this company have never issued the mortgage.

Mr. BELL. They have not used it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not used their power to encumber it and they are using it now. We fall short there to the extent of $3,000 per mile in getting a security by a first mortgage in respect to this sixty odd miles.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Does the security include rolling stock and equipment ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The mortgage will be given upon the property of the Canadian Northern Railway, will cover its whole line, its branches, its undertaking, and property of every kind and description without exception of any kind or nature whatsoever.

The position of the encumbrances now existing on the Canadian Northern Railway line, is, as I am advised, as follows : On the main line from Port Arthur to the Rainy river there is a first charge of $20,000 per mile.

Mr. MACLEAN. Who owns that mortgage—the public ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume the public; yes. On all lines in Manitoba there is a first charge of $10,000 per mile. This first charge of $10,000 consists of two charges, one of $8,000 and one of $2,000, aggregating $10,000. That is the position as between Port Arthur and the Rainy river, and all the lines in Manitoba. The $20,000 per mile from Port Arthur to Rainy river is collaterally secured by a charge on the lines in Manitoba next after the $10,000 per mile above mentioned. So that in point of fact, our position as guarantor of these bonds, so far as the lines from Port Arthur to Rainy river and the lines in the Manitoba district as well are concerned, would be this : We would have before us encumbrances to the extent of $20,000, which we would have to retire or answer for, with the single exception of the $10,000 mortgage on the sixty odd miles between Grandview and the western boundary of Manitoba.

Mr. BELL. There is a first mortgage for $10,000, and a second collateral for $20,000. Would it not be correct to say that there is $30,000 of prior charges ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Undoubtedly the $20,000 which was given in respect to the Ontario lines and collaterally charged on the Manitoba lines would add $20,000 to the existing $10,000 charges; but, stating the matter broadly, there would not be obligations for $30,000 over the whole line.

Mr. BELL. Oh, no; just on the Manitoba lines.

Mr. MACLEAN. Might I ask the hon. minister what is the obligation of the road to the government of Manitoba on the Manitoba section at the present time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The obligations of the company, whether to the government or the bondholders, are all included. I am not speaking with absolute confidence when I say that I think the bonds they have issued are held by the public and have the government guarantee.

Mr. MACLEAN. To what extent per mile ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $10,000 per mile. The first was for $8,000 and the next for $2,000, both guaranteed by the government. So that they stood subject to $10,000 per mile before this other arrangement was made.

Mr. MACLEAN. Could the minister tell us the total amount approximately guaranteed by the government of Manitoba on that road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not furnished to me here; but I take it that it is very easily ascertained, because if you add up the present obligations, the mortgage of $20,000 in the Ontario district and the $10,000 in the other district, you will have the total.

Mr. CLARKE. What information has the government obtained as to the cost of construction of this road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our information is that the road will cost to build and equip more than the $13,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. A standard railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, a first class standard railway.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had varying estimates from $16,000 to $17,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. minister lay on the Table the information he has obtained from competent persons as to the cost, so that we shall have an opportunity of examining it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will send and get the information, and will bring it down at one of the later stages.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the government were willing to guarantee the bonds to that extent after having received information as to the cost of construction. The hon. gentleman has not given us as full information as we would like to have in regard to the cost of construction and equipment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I procured through my chief engineer a statement of the estimated cost of construction, and equipment. Then we had estimates from the company's engineers showing what they were basing their calculations upon.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not be reasonable to lay all the information on the Table?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there would be no difficulty in doing that.

Mr. MACLEAN. In the district through which this railway passes, west of the Manitoba boundary, how much of the country on each side of the railway, say forty miles wide, is still owned by the Dominion? Have we a large interest in the land?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We must have a considerable interest; but to what extent I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS. I may inform the hon. gentleman that we have an interest in nearly all the homestead lands. The odd numbered sections mostly belong to different railway corporations; but all the even numbered sections which have not been taken up are the property of the government.

Mr. MACLEAN. The other sections belong to railway corporations?

Mr. DAVIS. Some of them belong to the government, I fancy, but a good many of them to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With a good deal of what the hon. minister says in regard to this matter I am sure we all agree. There is no doubt about the urgent need of railway extension in the western part of Canada, and particularly in the vicinity of Edmonton, which I am sure merits all the encomiums which the hon. minister has bestowed upon it. In visiting that part of the country during the past year, I was particularly struck with the possibilities of the town of Edmonton and the country around it, and I am sure there is not a man in this House who would be disposed to hamper in any way the development of railways in that country. At the same time, this is a project which involves on the part of this government a guarantee to the extent of $9,360,000, which, during a period of fifty years after the date of the subsidy, will be considered, I suppose, for certain financial purposes at least, as part of the public debt of this country, because we shall be under obligation for that amount in certain contingencies. Therefore it seems to me that we ought to consider in the first place, whether or not this project is part of any comprehensive scheme which the government have in hand for the development of transportation facilities in this country. It seems to me that we ought to know from the government whether or not it is part of a scheme for railway extension to the Pacific coast; whether or not it is part of a scheme which looks to the development and the utilization of our great national ports and harbours and the development of our ports on the great lakes; and generally part of a scheme for transporting the products of the west, not only to the Atlantic coast, but to the markets of Europe. This matter was brought to the attention of the House last year, and the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, in the closing days of the session, stated that the conclusion of the government with regard to aid to a line in the west, would be arrived at very shortly. Apparently the decision of the government was somewhat delayed, and putting aside other considerations for the moment, I regret that delay, because I think that the development of railway communication in the west would probably have been advanced much more rapidly if the government had come sooner to a conclusion. We have had in the western part of this country a very inconvenient state of affairs with regard to a large colony from the mother country and we have had the people from this district complaining, not only during years past, as the hon. gentleman has mentioned, but during the past year of the lack of railway communication.

On previous occasions in this House, I have pressed the view that there should be some definite scheme decided on by the government with regard to transportation. I do not believe that any government is justified, at this stage of the history of transportation in Canada, in dealing with that question from the standpoint of 300 400 or 500 miles of railway, but that it should map out some definite scheme and include in it the navigation of our great lakes and the equipment, as national ports, of those ports in Canada which the government may think best deserving of consideration. I do not believe that any other scheme of aid to transportation will produce as good results as a comprehensive and carefully thought out scheme, such as I have suggested. I do not know whether or not the government have considered the question in that light. We know that the gentlemen who are at the back of this undertaking are very enterprising and have done much for railway communication in Canada up to the present, and we believe that any legitimate efforts on their part to aid transportation should receive reasonable assistance. But what does this scheme look to in the end? Does it look to a transcontinental railway? Does it look to any line from the great lakes to the seaboard, by means of which the company operating this railway as far as Edmonton, or it may be in the future to the Pacific coast, will have a through line of communication to the Atlantic coast, and thus give the people of this country advantages in the way of transportation which they would not perhaps otherwise enjoy? Has the government any of these matters under consideration? It has had all the time necessary for reflection and consideration and study, which my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister asked for last night in respect of another matter. This matter has been before the government for more than a year, and it seems to me that the House might reasonably have expected that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, in announcing this scheme to-day, would have been able to give the House some definite policy, which would cover, not only the 600 miles west to Edmonton, but from Edmonton to the eastern seaboard and possibly to the Pacific coast. I do not know whether the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is to be regarded as a renunciation by him of the scheme which he propounded in the west some few months ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had only a dream.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It has been suggested that it might be called a nightmare. I do not think that my hon. friend put it to the western people as a dream.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I used the language any way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That it was a dream?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that my hon. friend, in his persuasive manner, might have used the expression 'dream' and yet made the people of the west regard it as a possible reality in the near future, if the hon. gentleman had the power to carry out that policy which he thought best in the interest of the country. That is what I have to say with regard to the general features of this scheme. With regard to what might be called the details, hon. gentlemen have asked my hon. friend for information as to the cost of the line, and I think that that is a very pertinent inquiry. I think that he ought to furnish the House all the information with regard to the cost of the line, because we are embarking on a pretty large undertaking; and while we are disposed to do everything necessary and reasonable for the purpose of furnishing railway facilities to that part of the country, still in the public interest we must be careful that we do not do anything more than is reasonable and necessary in that behalf. I am under the impression that lines have been built in the province of Manitoba—indeed I think that the hon. gentleman has so announced—I am under the impression that enterprises of a somewhat similar character have been successfully floated, upon which the guaranteed bonds amounted, in the first instance, to no more than $8,000 per mile. The hon. minister informed me of what I knew, but what had escaped my memory at the moment, that there was a subsequent guarantee given by the Manitoba government of a further sum of $2,000 per mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some of those lines got assistance from the provincial government and municipalities. This line gets no more assistance than we are giving it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman should place before the House all the information of that kind in order that the House may form the conclusion whether or not the sum of $13,000 is no more than a reasonable sum for the purpose of furnishing these railway facilities to which people of the west are no doubt entitled. There is another subject on which we should have a little information and possibly some discussion, and that is the question of capitalization. I do not know what the capitalization of this company in respect of this line will amount to, but I think the majority of members will agree that we cannot be too careful in seeing that it is not put at so high an amount that it may be used afterwards as an argument against the control of rates by the government, which is so essential and especially so important to the people of the west. I think therefore that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals should give us a little more information. I have already adverted to the comparison between the subsidy to this line and other similar lines in Manitoba. The hon. minister forestalled another question which I was about to ask by stating that this is the only assistance which this company is receiving from any government or municipality. I think that I am correct in this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a further question I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. gentleman before going into the details of the measure, and that is whether or not the government are to have any supervision over the construction of this railway, not only as regards the mode but the cost as well? Is that provided for in this resolution? If not, does not my hon. friend think that there should be at least such government supervision over the construction of that line, as is usually to be found in the subsidy agreements entered into by the government during the past fifteen or twenty years. I do not know that any further suggestions occur to me at this moment, except that I would like to say to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that while we may go on and, with profit, discuss this afternoon some of the details of this matter, I would like the final discussion of it to be postponed until we get a little more information on the questions involved, and also until the return of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart), who is out of town to-day. I presume there will be no objection to the delay of a day for this latter reason. The announcement made at the close of the sitting last evening did not include, so far as 'Hansard' shows, the announcement that this matter would be brought up to-day. Otherwise I am sure my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) would have allowed his other engagement to stand and would have remained for the purpose of dealing with this subject to-day. As it is, he has gone away without any knowledge that this matter would be brought up. I do not know that he has anything to remark upon it, but still, as he is very conversant with matters concerning transportation, I should like to have him present before the matter is finally passed in committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) has no intention of conveying a wrong impression, but I think that the rather urgent and pressing way in which he spoke of the production of these papers after what I had said to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) would tend to convey the impresison that there was some hesitation on my part in acceding——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not at all. I beg my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) to acquit me at once of any suggestion of the kind. I assure him that I had not that in mind, because I knew that he has accepted the suggestion at once. I merely mentioned it by way of reiteration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be very glad indeed to produce the information the hon. gentleman desires, and will do so, if possible, on the next occasion when the resolutions are taken up. And I see no objection at all to the final passing of these resolutions being deferred until these papers are forthcoming. The hon. member has passed some criticism, not upon the resolutions themselves, but upon what he considers the unsatisfactory attitude of the government with respect to the general question of transportation. And the hon. gentleman seems to be under the impression that it would have been very proper for the government, on the occasion of introducing these resolutions, to have stated to the House just what the general idea of the government was as to the proper methods of thoroughly and adequately dealing with the question of transportation as a whole. While I can understand my hon. friend's impatience and anxiety to know at what conclusions the government have arrived, or may arrive, upon this question, still, I cannot for myself, perceive that it was at all necessary that we should make the introduction of these resolutions the occasion for any such declaration of general policy. This railway enterprise stands by itself. We know that it has been in the public mind for some time and that the railway has been progressing by degrees, adding to its general plan, reaching out and extending year by year. As it has made progress under the charters it has received, it has been asking for further charter power. I do not know whether, when the Canadian Northern was started in the Rainy River District, it was in the minds of the promoters of that undertaking to continue westward until they reached the Pacific coast. But, if it was not in their minds, their ideas became enlarged, for they have obtained from parliament power to construct all the way to the Pacific. We are not now offering any proposals to parliament beyond Edmonton; we do not ask that asistance be rendered to this railway beyond that point. And we are perfectly safe in asking parliament to assist the undertaking to that point, because, unquestionably, whatever is done in any other direction will not conflict in the remotest degree with this undertaking. If this undertaking stood alone, it would justify the asistance which we are asking parliament to give it, and it is not such a project as might be altered, changed or varied in its character in any degree by any general scheme which the government might find itself able, later on, to suggest to parliament. The government has not yet matured its views with regard to the question of railway policy concerning a transcontinental line. We may be able, before the close of the present session, to give parliament some knowledge on that point, or we may not. But, what I wish to impress upon the committee is that, whether we do or not, it would not affect in the slightest degree the measure which we are now submitting to parliament for assistance to the Canadian Northern between these points mentioned in the resolution. I note what the hon. gentleman has said on the subject of capitalization of this railway and——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not speaking of this railway in particular, but of all railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, what applies to all railways, would, of course, apply to this. I am speaking within the knowledge of many of the members of the committee when I say that my views on this subject have been expressed upon previous occasions, and generally they are quite in accord with what the hon. member has stated. I think we ought to keep a very watchful eye on the question of capitalization ; and I think that in the Railway Committee, where these powers are conferred, we do the best we can. When, before this project of the Canadian Northern had fully assumed its present shape, but when it was apparent that they were going to extend their lines over a very considerable portion of our northwestern territory, I called the attention of the Railway Committee, which was very largely constituted at the time—many hon. members now in my eye must have been present on that occasion—to the capitalization, and said : This railway is asking for powers to capitalize at a very large sum, and I think it would be proper for us to have in our minds the absolute certainty that, in some form or other, this company is likely to be aided, directly or indirectly, from the treasury of the country. A result of what took place was that the amount of total capitalization which the company asked authority to issue was very much reduced.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was about cut in two.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend reminds me it was about cut in two. I think it was in the neighbourhood of $46,000,000 or $50,000,000. Speaking from memory, we cut it down to $24,000,000 ; so we made a very substantial reduction, and entirely in view of the thought which the hon. member has expressed to-day. Now, as to supervision during the construction of this work, I may say to my hon. friend that many provisions will be found in the contract when it is entered into which it would not be necessary to include in the resolutions now before the committee. The government will feel it to be its duty to see that it is abundantly satisfied as to the character of the road which is to be constructed, as to the quality of the work done, as to the standard, as to the expenditure, so that the bonds which are issued may be well within, certainly not in excess of, the amount which they would be earning during the progress of the work. I omitted to say that the road will be a first class road in its character generally, its alignment, its grades, its curves, &c. It is possible to lay down a railway along the route—we have seen the plans and profiles, it has nearly all been surveyed instrumentally—and we know that a road from Edmonton to Port Arthur will not exceed at any point a higher grade than one-half of one per cent, or twenty-six feet to the mile. Imagine such a length of railway as this constructed through that country, and only showing a grade of one-half of one per cent per mile. Certainly this is an element of immense value, because they will be able to earn a dollar where another road, with one and a half or two per cent grades to combat, could not earn half a dollar.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that that is the grade on the Rainy River section ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Twenty-six feet to the mile.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Going east ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not stated so by these gentlemen to me. The statement is a general one, as it was handed to me. I suppose, perhaps, it was an oversight. The quality of the line, we will see, is very superior. In connection with the question of cost, I may make this remark : This railway will bridge across the Saskatchewan river twice.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Four times—once across the South Saskatchewan and three times across the North Saskatchewan.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, then, the cost of bridge construction will be larger than I imagined.

Mr. CLARKE. That shows the necessity of having the fullest possible information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Speaking of the estimate of $13,000, I think it will occur to anybody who has had any experience in railroad construction that $13,000 is a very low estimate indeed for a first class railway properly equipped.

Mr. OSLER. What amount of equipment is covered by the government guarantee ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We stipulate for an ordinary equipment when the line is first built, to be included in the first cost. It would not be reasonable to require such an amount of rolling stock as they would require when the business grew and became very heavy. We treat them upon the same basis as we treat all other railways in their initial stages.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this mortgage cover simply the roadbed or the roadbed and equipment ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It covers all, the terminals and all the property of the railway company. When it was suggested a moment ago that in the province of Manitoba the company was able to construct its line with a smaller subsidy, with guaranteed bonds of $8,000 per mile at first, and then increased to $10,000, it must be borne in mind that that was very far from covering all the assistance which the railway company received. In the first place, over a good many miles of their system they had 6,400 acres per mile; then from Port Arthur through to the Rainy River district and a portion of the Rainy River district, covering 120 miles, they had from this parliament double the usual subsidy, viz. 6,400 dollars per mile. So the amount of assistance which was given by the Manitoba government was largely supplemented in these various ways.

Mr. MACLEAN. I must take issue with the proposition as laid down by the Minister of Railways to-day. He says this is for a local branch, for a small portion of the road, that it is not a part of any general plan. I say we should have a statement here to-day giving us a general plan, showing how the government propose to deal with the transcontinental railway proposition. He has opened wide the door for assistance, and every railroad running through a new country where there are settlers desiring railroad facilities, is bound to be assisted by the government. His statement went that far. He said: Here is a new country, available for settlement, there are settlers in it, and the government feel bound to assist this road. Well, if they say that in this case, they must say it in all cases; and they should have been prepared to say to-day whether this proposition to aid a transcontinental road is to be followed next week by another proposition to aid the Grand Trunk Pacific road. We have no statement whatever in that respect. Now, when the government came down to the House with this proposition, they were bound to come prepared to state their general policy on the transcontinental railway question. They have not done it. I cannot vote for a proposition of this kind. For what has happened? This railway running from Port Arthur to Winnipeg in the west heretofore has been very largely bonused by the people of this country. When the first portion of this railway was considered in this House, I took the position then that if public money was to be put into a road, it should be a government owned railway, for the only way to solve the railway problem is for the government to own a road from one ocean to the other, a road controlled by the people, and its rates regulated by the people in such a way that every other road will have to live up to that standard. They should have done that long ago, they should have done that with the Rainy River road, and the minister said he had some idea of it in his mind, but he said at the time: This is only a small section, let this go through. Now comes along another section, and he says: We must take this as part of a proposition, let it go through. The country expects something very different from the government. They expect that the government should outline its policy in regard to transcontinetal railways. The only thing to do if they are putting in public money is to build a government road. Hon. gentlemen have heard a good deal in this House about a government owned railway, and they have heard a great deal from their supporters. Some years ago only a few of us took that view, but now there is a growing demand in the country for a government owned railway. This is one of the signs of the times. There are hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who said that free trade was bound to live for ever, and that the protectionist proposition was not a policy which would last. To-day——

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am only mentioning the point in illustration—England is in a ferment over the trade question, and the bulk of the leading English statesmen in England are beginning to see that the time has come for revision of their policy and are becoming protectionists.

Mr. COWAN. You have not read this morning's papers.

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I have. The same thing is happening in connection with the railway question. The people are coming rapidly to the opinion that if the national credit is to be given towards the building of a trans-continental railway the government should build a road which should be owned and controlled by the people. Instead of that, we are giving our money for a railway controlled by private parties. This is not good policy, and it is not in line with what the people expect. What follows? It follows as sure as night follows day that next week or the week after, another proposition will be introduced into the House providing for an immense bonus, probably a land grant, or an immense guarantee to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Where is all this to end? The door is open wide and the policy has been set forth as the policy of the government that if there is a new country with settlers in it and a railway is desired the country must build that railway. I cannot vote for a proposition based upon that principle. The hon. minister says: We are committing ourselves to nothing. We are committing ourselves to a great deal. In the first place we are guaranteeing over $9,000,000 of money. It is a commitment which will affect the credit of the country more or less, and if there is to be a commitment to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway of the same kind that will affect the credit of the country also. We are rapidly dissipating the credit of the country in building railways for private corporations. I do not think the feeling of this country to-day is in favour of any such policy. The feeling of the country to-day, and hon. gentlemen will find it out when the voice of the people is heard, is against this system of bonusing railways owned by private individuals. I have not the slightest objection to that country having a railway. I believe the men who are seeking aid under this proposition are enterprising men and that they are opening up the country, but they are opening up the country for their own benefit rather than for the benefit of the country. The hon. minister says that we are practically giving nothing away. Do you know what backing this note of the Canadian Northern Railway Company is worth ? We are told that it will enable them to borrow money for 3 per cent. If they had to go upon the open market and borrow it they would probably have to pay 6 per cent, so that it is worth $30,000 a year on each million, or $270,000 a year. It is practically a perpetual bonus to this enterprise. We are giving this road a quarter of a million annually and there is no prospect of getting anything in return. The hon. minister says that we are going to control the rates. How far have we controlled rates up to the present time ? It is true something has been secured by the bargain which the province of Manitoba made with this railway company. They have reduced the rates in a measure, but not in such a way as they should have been reduced. For one thing there should have been a maximum freight rate provided for in this agreement, and most of all a maximum passenger rate should have been put in. That is where you get control of railways. We have to deal with the Canadian Pacific Railway, we may have to deal with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and other roads may grow up. The Canadian Northern is one of them. Every one of these roads could be absolutely controlled by the competition of a government railway or by stipulating with these roads the passenger and freight rates which should be charged upon them. Is anything of that kind proposed in these resolutions ? Nothing of the kind. We have had no great results from what was promised in the past in the way of taking control of these railways and their rates. We have had no satisfactory results from the amount of money we have expended and we are going on and spending millions and millions on our terminals, on improving lake and river navigation, on improving the seaports, because they say the nation must do this work. What is the good of spending all that money on lake navigation, on the canals, and on ocean terminals if we have no control over railways ? The only way to have complete control is by having at least one government owned railway. We are spending enough money on all of these different propositions to build a government road from one ocean to the other. Why should we not have it ? Why should not the Intercolonial Railway be extended to the Pacific ocean ? Why should not all this money that the people are putting up be put into a proposition in support of a railway owned and controlled by the people ? The money is being frittered away. The problem is not being solved, but it is being complicated by such a proposition as the one which we have before us now. It makes it harder to control these railways and eventually to settle the transportation problem. I stand in my place in this House and I tell the government that the people of this country are opposed to this system of bonusing railways. This bonusing proposition which is presented here to-day is very much milder than similar propositions in the past, as there is no land grant, there is no grant of money, and there is some regulation in regard to freight rates, but I submit that though the proposition is presented in a modified form to-day, the sentiment of the people is against the bonusing of private owned railways in this country and hon. gentlemen will find it out. I am willing to take my risk, whatever it may be, in standing by that policy and of saying that any money that we put into a trans-continental line ought to be put into a railway owned and controlled by the government and made the complement of the lake and river navigation system that we are supposed to be building up. What is the use of paying immense sums in improving our seaports, in lighting the St. Lawrence, in the canals, in improving river navigation and lake navigation and in providing terminals on the lakes, if we cannot substantially control the railways that feed these ports ? I will allow the hon. members from the North-west Territories to deal with that question. They have their constituents to face, and the wish of the people of the North-west Territories agrees altogether with what the people of eastern Canada think, that the time has come to stop the bonusing of railways and to put all this money into a government railway. I do not wish to go into the details of this measure. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) pointed out, here, to-day, that the greatest care ought to be taken as to the standard of the road and as to the way in which it is built. The road can be overcapitalized. It might be constructed in a way that would interfere with its working afterwards. These minor details and everything of that character should be closely looked into, but I shall not speak of that now so much as in regard to the fact that the government are building a railway which they are not going to control, and they are doing it in such a way that they are not working out a trans-continental system, in such a way that it does not justify the national expenditure on lake terminals, sea terminals and lake and river navigation, and they are doing it in spite of the well expressed opinion of the people that the day has come to end this subsidizing of private owned railways.

Mr. BOURASSA. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to enter into a general discussion of this measure, but I wish to say that when the final discussion takes place on the Bill I hope that the government will be prepared to make a clear explanation as to their policy in regard to a trans-continental line. There is no doubt that public opinion, in the province of Quebec at least, and indeed in the whole of Canada—until the moment that notice of these resolutions was given—lay in the direction, that if the money of the people of Canada was required to aid any large railway enterprise in the west, it was to include a through transcontinental railway which would not only develop the grain traffic of the west, but would connect the east and the west and develop the general traffic of Canada. I fear that the passage of these resolutions and the Bill which will be based upon them, will tend to prevent the adoption of a general scheme for a transcontinental line.

Mr. MACLEAN. A government line.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not say a government line. I fear, though I hope it will not, that it will render more difficult the early construction of any transcontinental line such as the Grand Trunk Pacific or any other scheme that may be favoured by parliament. The moment this line is being operated it will cover the more profitable trade of the country for the present, because there is no doubt that the transportation of grain from the North-west to Lake Superior is the most profitable part of the business now, and therefore when a new line comes and finds itself deprived of a good share of that traffic it will be less disposed to build a line from Lake Superior to Quebec and the maritime provinces. I trust that the government have studied the situation in this light, and that when this Bill is brought before the House they will make a declaration of their policy and assure us of the eastern provinces, that the building of the road from Winnipeg to Quebec and the maritime provinces through the northern portions of Ontario and Quebec will not be jeopardized by this scheme.

On the general question of our railway policy, although I do not go so far as my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) there is no doubt there is a growing feeling in Canada that it is time to put an end to our railway policy of the past. No country in the world is so greatly in need of railways as Canada. There is no country in the world where railways mean so much for the future of the country both from a commercial and from a political point of view, and at the same time there is no country in the world where railways have been built with so little care as to their future consequences to the people. We have spent more money on our railways, in proportion to our population, than the people of any other nation, and there is less probability that we shall have a return from them, than is the case with any other nation. I had hoped from the declaration made by the Minister of Finance last session, when I brought the subject before the House in the debate on the address, that the government would be able to advise us this session, and give us some hope that there would be a change in our railway policy. I admit that in these resolutions there is a change, and a change for the better. This way of dealing with the Canadian Northern Railway is far better than the system of the past under which we simply squandered the money of the people without any expectation of a return from it. But at the same time this change is not sufficient. We should go more fully into the matter and we should study the railway policy of other nations which have better solved the problem than we have, or that the people in England and the United States have. In continental Europe they are greatly in advance of England and the United States and Canada so far as their railway policy is concerned. With the exception of Germany they do not go so far as ownership and operation by the government, and I think that is wise because where they have tried it they have found it a failure. But they have adopted a mixed system by which the state retains the ownership of the railway, the right of property in the railway, but gives the operation of it for a certain number of years to private companies under the control of the state. The title which is given to the company is only a lease of power for the operation of the road under the supervision of the government, and the aid given to the railway is only a guarantee of interest.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With what result has that been worked out ?

Mr. BOURASSA. With splendid results so far as France, Belgium and Holland are concerned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My information is quite the other way.

Mr. BOURASSA. In France and Holland especially they have tried different systems, and if the minister studies the question he will find that the mixed system which they have adopted of late has largely succeeded.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) must have observed that the French government had a very large deficit last year, and that the greater part of that was due to the loss on the operation of their railways under the system that he refers to.

Mr. BOURASSA. The hon. Minister of Railways is strengthening my contention because the deficit was on the state owned and state operated railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the system the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. BOURASSA. I may tell the minister that there are two systems; in fact there are three systems going on together in France. At first they gave charters to companies with permanent powers such as we are doing, and there are only a few small lines which remain under that system. Under the second system they went to the other extreme as they generally do there, and they had state owned and state controlled railways, and a certain number of railways remain in that condition at the present day.

Mr. CLARKE. You mean state operated.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes. Then they constituted the six great companies with which they entered into an agreement in 1857. Of course political events in France had some effect on the railway policy and created some disturbance. For example, after the revolution of 1848 some of the smaller companies having failed, the government extended their state operated system. They took the Charente and Vendée systems and after that, during the empire, they more or less balanced the three systems together. After the war of 1870, there was, of course, a great disturbance in the operation of their railways, primarily because of the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine, which deprived some of the railway companies of a part of their system. After more or less disturbance, in 1879, the French government under Mr. de Freycinet, tried to extend the state operated system and they changed their agreements with the six great companies. They took over a part of their system and it is upon that state owned and operated system that the deficits have occurred every year. But upon the system belonging to the six great companies which are operated under the dual system there has been no deficit.

Mr. RUSSELL. May it not be, that the reason the state operated railways do not pay is that the best railways were taken by the companies, and the worst left to the state ? It has been stated by some writers on the subject in the magazines, that where there is a mixed system of state owned and company owned railways, the state always get the heavy end of the plank.

Mr. BOURASSA. In theory that is right, but the state owned system of France was born before the agreement with the six companies Under the arrangement of 1879, made by Mr. De Freycinet, part of the system of these great companies was annexed to the state system, but that went on for only four years, and in the general revision of 1883, the state deprived itself of these lines which it had annexed in 1879, and concluded an arrangement with the six great companies by which they handed back these parts that they had taken in 1879.

Now, I am ready to admit with the Minister of Railways and Canals that over some parts of the railway system of France the arrangement has not worked so well as over other parts. But if you go into a careful analysis of the system you will find: That wherever there is a large deficit it is due to the fact that the government forced the companies to build certain lines that were entirely unprofitable. That was done through political pressure, and the deficit is due to causes entirely apart from the system itself. They also adopted a very peculiar policy—and it is not a policy I would recommend—but at that time they had reason to do it. They classified the railways into two systems, the old system and the new system. They guaranteed the interest on the new system, and, in order to make it up, they forced a part of the profits of the old system to be applied on the new system. This caused some disturbance, and they have now done away with that part of the system, because it is no more needed. If the hon. minister would go into a study of the French state operated railways, he would find that everywhere there is a deficit upon them. That system is not a success, and the people of France know that it is not, though they probably continue it for the same reason that we continue the Intercolonial Railway. But leaving aside the state-operated railways, which consist of only about 2,500 kilometers, while the systems of the great companies consist of 26,000 kilometres, the hon. gentleman will find that the general system, as it was adopted in 1857, and renewed by the last agreement of 1883, is not only successful, but is the one feature of French politics which is the most hopeful, so far as finance is concerned. The prospects of the railways, after an experience of forty-three years, are such that when the leases expire in 1956, instead of being a burden on the French people and increasing their debt, they will probably be the means of reducing the debt of the French people by an immense figure. In fact, independent of the state operated railways, and independent of those parts of the lines which have been built and operated under special circumstances, the amount of interest paid by the French government on what we may call the ideal system is diminishing every year ; and, after ninety-nine years, that is in 1956, the whole system will go back to the French government. But their intention is not to operate the railways at the end of the leases, but to lease them over again on such conditions as they will be able to impose, which at that time will probably be more favourable than the present conditions, because of the increase of population and trade and the better management of the system.

There is no general railway law in France. The railways are operated under a kind of agreement, a model schedule, which is modified according to special circumstances. There are dispositions of the schedule giving the same powers of control to the government as we have here, and power to revise the rates at different periods. There are other powers also. For example, the government would have the right to take possession of the railways at any time during the lease, and put an end to the lease.

On the state-owned and state-operated railways of Germany, there were at first decreases of the rates, and that is one of the dangers of state operated railways. These decreases were too great. At first they were pleasing to the people, but the government came to the conclusion that they were going to bankrupt the system, and they had to impose higher rates, which, of course, caused a great deal of discussion. Holland formerly operated its own railways, but finally adopted the French system, and now has state owned railways operated by chartered companies under special agreement. Germany has kept state owned and state operated railways to a large extent, in spite of the inconvenience of the system, for purely military reasons, which do not exist here. I did not intend to go so fully into this question ; but I have given these explanations because I think the time has come when we should study seriously our railway policy. We shall not effect any improvement by putting off the question from year to year. Every charter and every aid we grant to a railway company to-day is so much of the national wealth of the country being given away to private individuals without any hope of return ; and the time has certainly come when we should have a more intelligent and conservative policy for the people of Canada in railway matters.

Mr. SCOTT. On the general question of providing for an extension of railway accommodation in the particular parts of the country through which these proposed lines are to run, I think there can be, and there is actually and practically, no contrary opinion. Upon that general question I do not intend at the present time to add anything to what I have said to this House on previous occasions. I think, too, with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that the present proposition is very far in advance of any other railway proposition ever presented to this House, and upon this fact I sincerely congratulate the hon. gentlemen who occupy the treasury benches. I do not know, however, whether these resolutions are as good as they possibly might be made. I think this parliament is in duty bound at the present time to make for the people the very best possible bargain with these railway promoters and contractors, the Canadian Northern Railway Company. A number of very good suggestions have been made to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals by the hon. leader of the opposition and other members of the House this afternoon. There is one, however, which has not been made, and which I am going to make. Personally I favour the principle so consistently and enthusiastically championed by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean)—the principle of government ownership and operation of railways. Still, I do not feel that at present I can go with him the full length of demanding that the government shall at once commence to apply that principle in this country. I know, and I think he knows and recognizes, that to-day there is not in this House a majority of members in favour of the immediate application of that principle ; and I very much question whether there will be found throughout the country a majority of the people in favour of its immediate application. At the same time, I agree with him that the feeling in favour of the principle is growing, and growing with considerable rapidity, and I think it would be well to have in the proposed contract a clause which would enable the government at some future time, when the majority of the people of the country believe in the application of that principle, and when they will elect to this House a majority of members in favour of its immediate application, to take over on fair and reasonable terms the lines which we are at present proposing to aid and have constructed. There was another suggestion, which I consider a very good and very essential one, made by the hon. member for East York ; that is, that there should be put in this contract a provision for maximum rates, so that the people along the lines to be constructed shall know definitely and distinctly what advantage they are to receive in return for what the public is doing for this company. For these reasons, to allow of time to frame some further provisions, and to further perfect the bargain which has been already agreed upon to some extent between the government and the railway company, I would concur in the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition, that the question should not be pressed to a conclusion at the present time, but that further time be given for consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. I understand that it is not the intention of the hon. minister to conclude the discussion on this subject to-day, but that in probably a week or ten days the matter will be again before the House. I think that the hon. minister should then bring down at least a rough draught of the actual contract to be entered into with this company and also a copy of the mortgage to be given by it to the government. In the transaction which took place between this company and the Manitoba government, I think that the mortgage was actually brought before the House and discussed. However, these are matters which can be discussed later on as well as the rates of freight and the question of government ownership. I may say, however, that the majority of the people of the west are rather sorry that the dream of the hon. minister did not come true, and that when he woke up, he did not go on and carry that beautiful dream into practical effect.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think he is awake yet.

Mr. McCREARY. But the giving of assistance to this road need not prevent the government from constructing at any time a road of its own. I do not believe that there is one mile of the road aided by this Bill which will not pay from the start. From Lake Superior to Edmonton, it will be a paying road every day it runs. But there are some things we ought to carefully see to, judging by our experience in the past. In my opinion the government should employ an engineer and some assistants, whose duty it would be to keep continually going over the road and look after the manner of construction. The Canadian Pacific Railway, although it has been built over twenty years, was so imperfectly constructed that this year, as is pointed out in the Winnipeg papers, in addition to the ordinary section men employed by the company, Messrs. Foley-Larson Company have three thousand men actually at work putting that line into shape between Winnipeg and Port Arthur. It is a well-known fact also that the Crow's Nest road, which was assisted by this government, will practically have to be rebuilt from Lethbridge into the Mountains. The cuts through the mud hills are in such a shape that it will cost as much to build a new road as to repair the old one. Therefore, I would urge on the government and the hon. minister that competent men should be employed to supervise the construction of the road and see that the grading and bridges and terminals are properly constructed. This company say that they will only have 5 per cent of a grade, but how they can cross the Saskatchewan river five times, how they can lay five bridges across the Saskatchewan and go up and down the hills leading to and from those bridges, without a steeper gradient than .5 per cent, is an engineering problem I would not like to have to solve. There is another phase of the question to which I would call attention. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was built—its main line as well as its branches—and when the Crow's Nest road was built, the treatment of the men was such as to bring disgrace on the Dominion. Every one must recollect that when in 1897 the Crow's Nest road was under construction, telegrams were sent abroad of such a nature as forced the right hon. the First Minister to take action. Government officers should be put on the road to see that the men are paid proper wages and fairly treated. Of course if there should be such a crop in Manitoba and the west as we had last year, there will be no difficulty on the point of wages paid, except this: In the case of the Crow's Nest road, the men were not given proper food, the camps were not properly constructed, the bedding was not what it should be, there was not sufficient accommodation for the men, but worse than that, the men who were hired at Winnipeg to go to the work, were charged a high rate of transport to get there and another high rate to get back, and were charged besides other excessive charges, so that all a man could earn was about $13 per month net. I sent out myself on this very road a large number of Doukhobors, Galicians and others, who had worked full time, and the poor men, when they had paid the charges for transport, and the fees of a doctor, whom they never saw, at the rate of $1 per month, and $3 per sack for flour, had their pay reduced down to the minimum. Thirteen dollars or thirteen fifty per month was about all they could make.

The construction of this road should be made the means of colonizing the prairie. By the construction of the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern railways, the states of Minnesota and Dakota were settled, but unfortunately the manner in which the Canadian Pacific Railway was built and its branches, the Manitoba and South-western and the Deloraine, so disgusted the men employed that they left the country. It is the duty of the government to see that the men employed are properly fed and housed, and not overcharged for their supplies or transport; and if that were done, I believe that we would get many good, hardy settlers in there to earn a few dollars, who would afterwards settle along the prairie. But the company should not be allowed to go to Minneapolis, Duluth and Chicago and hire a lot of Italians under the Padrone system, at perhaps ninety cents per day, for this would do the country harm instead of good. Now is the time, when we are putting the company under certain obligations, to insist on fixing the conditions.

With regard to the equipment of the road, the hon. minister should state exactly what equipment it shall have per mile—what box cars, passenger and flat cars and engines, and the style of engines. It is well known that notwithstanding the fact that there are less engines per mile on the American roads to-day, they haul more than was hauled five or six years ago, because the engines are larger. We should have a statement as to what the equipment will be at the end of two, three or five years. The hon. minister says that it is not customary to have a road up to proper equipment during construction, but from the time the first hundred miles on this road are built and in operation, there will be enough freight to yield a handsome profit. You cannot compare it to a new road constructed over new territory, because the country will be settled just as quickly as the road is constructed. In fact, there are settlers in there now.

Another question is whether or not this is to be a great national highway. I do not think that it is necessary to decide that question just now. If the government should undertake to construct a great national highway, this road will not stand in the way, and they may use this road or not as they choose. They are given running power over it in one of the clauses. Any road may have running powers over it, but unfortunately I do not think that the terms on which running powers may be given to other roads are sufficiently well stated. The clause says they shall be given running powers on an equitable basis, but I believe that basis should be defined. If the Grand Trunk Railway or any other road wants to run over this road, the terms should be stated. I will not discuss that Manitoba bargain, nor another question which I think the minister probably overlooked, and that is the condition of that part of the Canadian Northern system which is merely leased, as I may say, from the Northern Pacific Railway. Three hundred and fifty-seven miles in the province of Manitoba were taken over from the Northern Pacific Railway Company at $7,000,000, which calls for $210,000 to be paid annually. I do not know whether the minister had a copy of that deed before him in framing this mortgage. It is as well that he should have. They have not the fee of the road; it is merely a leasehold, and it can be closed out in sixty days or ninety days, I am not sure which. I got the exact particulars from the president of the road. I think that this is a matter which should be looked into. As I said, I shall defer any further discussion of the matter until the contract itself is brought before the House.

Mr. OLIVER. As this seems to be an occasion for giving advice to the government, I propose to offer such suggestions as occur to my mind. I would ask for some indulgence from the House in the matter, as I happen to represent a part of the country served by the railway proposed to be constructed. I would like to rather emphasize the importance of the proposition now before the House. There seems to me a tendency to belittle it as not being of the importance of a great transcontinental scheme. It is true, this is not as important as if it were part of a transcontinental scheme; but allow me to say that it is of stupendous importance, not merely to the handful of people who are now in the country proposed to be served, nor merely to the thousands or hundreds of thousands who are shortly to occupy that country, but to the whole Dominion of Canada. The road is for the development of the Saskatchewan valley, and the Saskatchewan valley is the coming grainary of Canada, of North America and, possibly, of the world.

Mr. McCREARY. What about the Red River valley?

Mr. OLIVER. The Red River valley is part of the great country of which the Saskatchewan valley is very much the larger part. The part of that great wheat growing area of the North-west which, long ago, was called the fertile belt, and which includes the valleys of the Red River and the Saskatchewan, is the part of the country to which Canada must look for its future development in wealth and population. There, and there only, have we the area of fertility suitable for the growth of population and the production of wealth that will ever constitute this Canada a great country. So, I say, it is of the very highest importance, looked at from a national standpoint, first that such a road as this should be constructed, and, second that it should be constructed under proper conditions. I shall say nothing with regard to the amount of aid to be given, the manner in which that aid is to be given nor the security to be taken. I do not think we need quarrel about any or all of these three particulars. It does not matter so much to this country whether we guarantee the bonds to the amount of $10,000 a mile or $13,000 a mile; it does not matter so much even if we have to pay the interest on these bonds. What does matter to us is the amount we shall have to pay for the service we get from the road. I have troubled the House and some of the committees on some other occasions on this subject, and I propose to trespass again and to emphasize the point that the rates to be charged on this railway for the service of the country through which it runs, and, even more, for the service of the whole country, is the important question in this connection. There seems to be an idea that the transportation question of Canada begins at Fort William and extends to Quebec. Allow me to say that Canada has no serious transportation question over that distance. Nature and what we have done in the past has, in very large measure, solved the transportation question over that distance, so that when grain comes east, once it reaches Fort William, there is then no question as to the transportation or the rates from that point to its ultimate market. Neither is there any serious question as to the transportation of manufactured articles going westward until Fort William is reached. The lake navigation and the railroads fulfil in great part the requirements. I do not say that improvement cannot still be made; of course we admit that it can. We do not say that it is not desirable ; of course it is. But what I say is that it is not of the stupendous importance of the transportation question over the distance from Fort William westward. I do not think I need dwell on the importance to the wheat producers of the west of the lowest possible rate for the hauling of their grain to the ultimate market which, as I said before, means the lowest possible rate for their grain from the wheat fields to Fort William—Beyond that point we need not concern ourselves very seriously. But, from the wheat fields to Fort William is where the toll is taken that keeps the Northwest settler poor and keeps this country back, and, in the legislation which this parliament passes and in the aid it chooses to give, that is the point we need to emphasize and keep in mind. Just let me say, for the purpose of emphasis that a difference of a cent a bushel on the grain rate from the wheat fields to Fort William makes a difference of half a million dollars on every 50,000,000 bushels of wheat exported.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you expect to have many crops of fifty millions of bushels for export?

Mr. OLIVER. We do, certainly. I am thankful to have my attention called to that point. We expect many times fifty million bushels, and we need, and we expect, a number of reductions in freight rates to the amount of one cent per bushel each. The fifty millions of bushels which we speak of as the export product last year was produced very largely—in fact it was altogether produced—in what we still call the Red-River-Valley-Section of the North-west, that is the drainage area of the Red, Assiniboine and Q'Appelle rivers. That is the area which produce the 50,000,000 bushels. When you consider the sparse settlement throughout the greater part of that area, and take the total area from Grandview to Edmonton and beyond, I think you will agree that our present production is not a quarter, is not a fifth of the production that necessarily will occur when the country is settled all the way to Edmonton and beyond through the Saskatchewan valley.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The export quantity——

Mr. BOYD. I wish to protest against the manner in which questions are being asked by members on the other side of the House. Questions have been asked by the Minister of Railways and Canals and by other members, but not a man on this side of the House knows what is being said. I think a little respect should be shown to the gentlemen on this side of the House, and when a question is asked it should be asked in such a manner that we can hear it and know what the answer is.

Mr. OLIVER. I was speaking——

Mr. BOYD. Tell us what the minister asked you, and what your answer is.

Mr. OLIVER. I was speaking of the prospective increase in exports, and suggested that, taking the comparative areas and the prospects, our exports would certainly be increased five fold when the Saskatchewan valley was settled up as the Red river valley is now. The minister suggested that our exports would not increase proportionately. I would be very glad to believe that the population of Canada would increase to such an extent that our exports would not increase proportionately. But I for one do not see that there is anything in our present prospects to indicate that our exports will not be in proportion to our production. At any rate the question of transportation from the wheat fields to Fort William would remain the same, because our great increase of consuming population, aside from our producing population, would be naturally in eastern Canada. So the question of rates on grain would be just the same then as now, except that we would be paying out at both ends, that is, the eastern consumer would be paying as well as the western producer; whereas now it is the western producer and the consumer in the old country. But I do not want to dwell on that point, everybody understands that feature of the case.

The point I want to emphasize is that this is not a question which concerns alone the producers of wheat in the North-west, but that the eastern manufacturer, the eastern commercial man, is just as deeply interested in a low freight rate to the wheat fields of the west as the producer of wheat in the west is interested in a low freight rate to reach the markets of the world. The ultimate market for the manufacturers and commerce of eastern Canada is necessarily these wheat fields. It is there or it is nowhere. Either you are going to have increased manufactures because of your increased market there, or you are not going to have increased manufactures. Now, it is of just as much importance to you that you should have the lowest possible rate to place your manufactures in these wheat fields as it is that the western farmer should get his grain out at a low rate. The difference between a high rate and a low rate to the western farmer means a difference in his profits; but if you cannot get a rate that will enable you to get your manufactures into the west, you cannot manufacture at all, your throat is cut, you cannot do business.

Now, let me point out just how and where your throat is cut. It is a matter of notoriety that in western Canada the importations of United States machinery for agricultural purposes has increased in recent years far beyond the increase of our population. Your manufacturers of eastern Canada are not keeping pace with the increased population of the west in their sales. Now, why is this ? There is no difference in the protective duty, and there is no difference in the freight rate over our eastern lines. The difference is because the manufacturing centres of the United States which supply those articles are situated so close to the Canadian boundary enjoy the lowest possible freight rates from the Atlantic coast ; they are therefore able to put their products into our wheat fields at a rate that you in this end of the country cannot compete with under present circumstances. Not only is that so in heavy manufactures, but it is also so in heavy groceries. I have visited the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and it must be borne in upon any Canadian who visits those cities that the trade of the Canadian North-west is one of the principal reasons for the great prosperity of those cities. This is recognized by the people there, they look upon the North-west of Canada as their meat. They are growing with its growth, they are prospering with its prosperity, and they expect to continue to do so. And unless you can improve the freight rates which at present keep you out of the North-west market, they are going to continue to prosper and grow, and you are going to continue to stand still, as you have done to a very large extent in the past.

What is true of St. Paul and Minneapolis in regard to our North-west is just as true in regard to Spokane in connection with the Kootenay mining district in British Columbia. Spokane papers are published with that in view, the commercial houses are run with that end in view, for the reason that Spokane gets a low freight rate by reason of railway competition. It is close to the Canadian border, and the Canadian Pacific Railway charges a high freight rate from the east. No matter how high you put your duty it is calculated into the freight rates, and you get no benefit from it. I say the cities of Spokane and St. Paul have grown within the past few years as no cities in Canada have done, and their growth has been principally, within very recent years, because of the growth and development of the adjoining North-west of Canada. The reason of that is because they have had the benefit of freight rates which our eastern manufacturers have not got, and when this parliament and this government propose to do anything in the way of increasing railway facilities in that country, it is their first duty to meet that case and see that railroad rates are cut, and cut to the bone. And why not ? If we are guaranteeing the bonds of a railroad company to the amount that will be required to build and equip that railroad, as I understand we are doing on this occasion—and very properly I believe—then there is every reason why we should take into consideration the necessities of our trade in the development of our country, and place the rates on such a basis as will ensure our own markets for our own people.

It has been suggested, when I have mentioned this matter before, that provision is made in these resolutions for a control of rates over this proposed railway. I read :

6. Resolved, That the rates and tolls to be charged for the transfer and carriage of freight and passengers upon the lines of railway so aided and upon the lines owned by the Canadian Northern Railway shall be under the control of the Governor in Council or of such authority, commission or tribunal as is designated or constituted under any Act of the parliament of Canada for the regulation or control of the business of railways.

We are referred to the Railway Commission Bill which is now before the House as the authority which shall control the rates over the Canadian Northern Railway. I have every confidence that it would be possible to provide a Bill that would control these rates, but I have looked at the provision contained in section 260 which, I presume, is the provision relating to the control of tariffs, and I do not find that, in my estimation, it meets the case or that it is intended to meet the case. If I understand the general purposes of the Railway Commission Bill it is that it shall prevent discrimination in rates, that it shall tend to the equalization of rates, that it shall provide against the conditions which prevail throughout Canada where one town is discriminated against in favour of another, or where certain differences are made by one railway from another. It is not the equalization of rates that we want. It is not equalization that we need. As I said a few moments ago, we need that the rates shall be cut to the bone, that we shall get the lowest rate which it is possible to get in order to transact our trade. The Railway Commission Bill does not contemplate any such action and under its provisions as they stand, it would be impossible to take such action because it would be distinctly contrary to the spirit, and even to the letter of the Bill. Therefore, I say the Railway Commission Bill does not meet the case as we understand it. Our claim is that in consideration of special aid given, a special arrangement should be made in regard to rates. Such a condition is not contemplated in the railway commission. The position which I take is that at the time we are making this bargain with this company is the time when we shall agree upon the maximum rates which that company shall charge upon freight going out and coming in. That is the time to make the bargain and it is the only time to make it. We are giving them a definite amount of assistance for a definite purpose. It appears that we can hedge them around with conditions in regard to this, that and the other thing of minor importance, and now is the time to impose the conditions which are of the importance of life and death to the country served and to this whole country. It is not enough to say that the government even would control the rates. The government has control of rates over many railways in Canada, but I have never heard yet that the government exercised that control with regard to the amount of aid which was given to the railway in order to ensure its construction. I do not know that it would be justified in doing so under the conditions under which aid was given. The only effective reduction of rates which we have had in the North-west Territories has been the reduction that was brought about by the Crow's Nest bargain when, in consideration of a sum of money paid, a specific reduction of rates was given. That was a plain business proposition, and it was satisfactory as far as it went. I believe, still, that the railway company got a good deal the best of the bargain, but this country got something that it never would have got otherwise, and that is the only thing it has ever got out of the aid that it has given to railways. I do not wish to be unpleasant, but I will just draw the attention of the committee to a little incident in connection with the Crow's Nest Railway which would indicate why some of us have not the fullest confidence in the mere general control of rates by the government. Under the Crow's Nest bargain the government has the right to regulate the rates from point to point upon that piece of railway. After that road was put in operation a schedule of rates was put in force which was most unsatisfactory to the towns and villages along the railway. The people complained against that schedule. The complaint was voiced here in this House. I am looking at the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) now, and he will remember that he told us that he had examined that schedule of rates and was satisfied that it was a fair schedule of rates. Not very many months after that the railway company reduced the rates so as to make them fairly satisfactory to the points served? We looked to the government on that occasion to compel the railway company to reduce its rates and we were put in the position of having agreed to a bargain which as far as the public could see meant nothing as to the control of rates on an occasion when that control should most certainly have been exercised. The fact that the company afterwards did reduce the rates shows that the rates were unreasonable. I do not wish to press the matter further at the present time, but as the representative of a part of the North-west Territories, and as the representative of a part of the country to be served by this proposed railway, I must say to the government and to this House that as far as the people there are concerned they will look with very great dissatisfaction upon the fact of large government assistance being given even to this railway unless satisfactory conditions are made as to definite maximum rates along its line, so that it shall be apparent to the country at large that value in rates is being secured at the time the aid is being given.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to say anything in reference to this Bill at present, but the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has made a statement with which I do not coincide in saying that Spokane was built up at the expense of British Columbia on account of high freight rates. I am going to ask him the distance between Spokane and the Kootenay, and the coast cities and the Kootenay. I may say that Spokane is fifty miles from the Kootenay country whereas the coast cities are 425 miles from it. Hon. gentlemen can easily see that it could not be on account of the difference in freight rates that Spokane has been built up at the expense of our country for the simple reason that there is no comparison to be made in that regard. It is rather because the people on the American side were more progressive and took possession of the land.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson) if he admits that Spokane has been built up largely by the trade of the Kootenay?

Mr. MACPHERSON. No, I do not admit that at all. I say that Spokane has been built up largely on account of the gold and copper mines of the Kootenay. The people from the American side came over possessed themselves of the land which was there and built up Spokane from the profits of the mines. It was entirely because of the gold they took out of the country.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to say in regard to freight rates that Spokane is not an originator of traffic. It is not a manufacturing city nor a city built on commerce. Its supplies have to be brought by rail from ocean ports and from manufacturing centres. It is within, I believe, 150 miles of Nelson, which is the commercial centre of the Kootenay country. Nelson is just as close to the manufacturing centres from which Spokane draws its supplies as Spokane is, and if Spokane draws the trade rather than Nelson, it is because Spokane has better freight rates than Nelson, and we are here to see that Nelson gets as good freight rates as Spokane when the opportunity arises.

On the second resolution,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the scheme of the second clause of the resolution? Is it intended that there shall be a mortgage to a trustee which shall be security to the debenture holders as well as the guarantee of the government, or is it intended that there shall be a mortgage to the government, securing the government against any loss consequent upon its guarantee of the bonds ? The resolution is rather indefinite as to that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The proposal was that bonds should issue with a mortgage to a trustee, the bonds being endorsed by the government. Also there should be an additional mortgage upon the other portion of the company's system which are already encumbered to some extent, that would be a separate and independent instrument.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are two distinct things. One is a series of bonds guaranteed by the Crown. In passing, I may say that there should be some definition of the word 'government' which is not a word known to the law, and in the Manitoba Act the word 'government,' although used in the statute, was defined in the first instance as meaning the Crown represented by the executive government in Manitoba, and I suppose that course will be pursued in this case. Now, you may have bonds guaranteed by the government and also secured by a mortgage to the trustee. That is one proposition. I would not suppose that very much additional value would be given to the bonds by mortgage over the line of railway, provided they are secured by a guarantee of the government, because in that way the credit of the whole country, including the railway and everything else, is pledged to the holders of the bonds for the time being. If we are to give the guarantee of the government, one would suppose the best course would be a mortgage to the government securing the government against any loss consequent upon the guarantee which it had given for the purpose of securing these bonds. There are two distinct methods of procedure, and I cannot quite understand from the second clause of the resolution which of those modes is proposed, though I would supppose, looking on it from a practical standpoint, that the latter one would be preferred by the government. What is really intended by the second clause ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated that what was in the mind of the drafter of the resolution was that bonds should issue in the ordinary way, bearing the government guarantee, and that a mortgage should issue to the trustee or trustees, which should cover all the assets and property of the railway company as mentioned to secure these bonds.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I realize that a mortgage of that kind could be drawn in such a way as to be a security to the Crown, but it would require to contain provisions very different from those which are usually contained in a mortgage given to a trustee for the purpose of securing bonds on a railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course it would.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It must not only be for the benefit of the bondholders, but there must be elaborate provisions in it for the purpose of enabling the government to take advantage of any provisions of the mortgage upon default being made by the company, and upon the government paying any sums the company would otherwise be obliged to pay. May I ask the minister, whether or not the mortgage proposed to be taken has been drafted ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would have, perhaps, been more satisfactory to us if that had been before the House, so that we might understand the remedies which the government would have in such a case. The result of a default might be that the government might acquire the right to enter into possession of this railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what we would contemplate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, the ordinary form of mortgage would not at all cover that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me it might make some difference in the consideration of this proposition if the House knew exactly what the terms of the proposal were in that regard. The mortgage is one of the all important features in this connection. For example, to what extent must the company be in default in the payment of interest before the government can enter and take possession and operate the road as its own ? What remedies will the government have in that regard ? What right would the company have in such a case to come in and redeem its property from the possession of the government. There are a great many interesting questions which would arise upon the consideration of the terms of the proposed mortgage, and if the Minister does not present to the House a draft of the mortgage, he ought to be in a position to give us some outline of the provisions in that respect which the mortgage will contain when this transaction is carried through to a conclusion. Suppose the company should be in default of its interest for a number of years, during which the government is paying interest upon these bonds, when would the time come at which the government could take some proceedings for the purpose of enforcing against the railway repayment of the money which it has been obliged to advance on behalf of the company ; when do you reach the stage at which the government shall have the power to enter into possession of the road and to operate it in such a way as to relieve itself from any such burden in the future ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All these are matters of detail and they will have, of course, to be covered by any documents that are executed between the parties. We have fully in our minds that all these points and others must necessarily arise, when we are proceeding to draft the security which is to be given and held by the government, and which it would be perhaps unnecessary to anticipate at this stage. The resolutions are clear, we are providing that aid shall be given in such a way, and shall be carried out by such instruments as will fully secure the government. At the same time, if the government should make any advances in respect of the interest defaulted by the company, or make any payment on account of the principal, we would necessarily step into the position of the original creditors or bondholders for the full amount we had paid. All these things have to be thought out very carefully, and I think it would not be wise for us hastily to draft the document in order to lay them before parliament. There need be no great hurry in framing the instrument. We will take all the time necessary in order that the public interests shall be fully safeguarded. I can quite understand that my hon. friend would wish it to be very carefully prepared ; but in order to this careful preparation, it is not essential that it should be done now. In fact, it would be difficult to have it prepared now with the care and deliberation with which a transaction of this kind ought to be managed. It must rest on the responsibility of the government entirely to see that the conditions under which parliament has granted the aid shall be observed. I think this a reasonable view to present to the committee, and I certainly would be very loath to think that the committee or the House would desire to have all these minute details laid on the Table, and action with respect to the matter precipitated.

Mr. SCHELL. The hon. minister made some interesting remarks when viewed in connection with the remarks of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who said that no doubt this $13,000 a mile would cover the entire cost of this road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not expressed that opinion.

Mr. SCHELL. The hon. member for Alberta did so. The minister said that the government must take precautions to have a thorough security. I do not know that a security on your own property would be a good security ; I do not know that any money-lender would consider that good security for the money he was lending. This clause reads :

> The said mortgage shall also form a charge next after the charges existing thereon.

You take a mortgage for part of the money only, and a second mortgage at that. We do not know how many preferred bonds may be on the property under the $10,000 agreement. Before we go any further, I think the contract and the map should be in the hands of the members of this House, if a proper contract is to be made. One reason for the strong feeling which is abroad in the country to-day against subsidies being given to railroads is that for a number of years past the subsidies given, with the small amount of bonded indebtedness added, have been sufficient to build all the roads that have been built, and the railway promoters have put in little or nothing. It is very easy for people to become millionaires if the money is put into their hands. I hope the minister will take the House into his confidence and let us have this contract before the matter is further gone into.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that his supposition that we were without knowledge of either the character or the amount of the prior securities on the other portion of the Northern system, is not well founded. Perhaps the hon. member was not present when I stated to the committee the facts in regard to that. If not, he will see them in 'Hansard' to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister says that these are matters of detail. They are in one sense ; but they are matters of detail that depend on principle. For example, all that this clause provides is that the government shall have a first charge. The method of enforcing that charge, the time at which it shall be enforced, the consequences of enforcing it, are not dealt with. The provisions in that regard are not as definite as they were in the case of the Drummond Counties Railway, where the document itself was brought down, or in the case of the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We were purchasing a property, and we had come to an agreement, and we submitted to this House the agreement which had been arrived at.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the case of the Grand Trunk you were acquiring terminals, and were providing for some aid for the Victoria bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did not provide the aid in that document, but by a separate vote, as a separate proposition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there not an agreement submitted to the House in regard to that as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that was not part of the agreement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that it was not part of the agreement as to the terminals; but was it not in an agreement by itself?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty is that one seems hardly to be able fully to grasp the proposition when the clause is couched in such general terms as this. How is the House to judge accurately as to the future relations between the government and the company? You have a clause which simply provides that there shall be a first charge, and the committee have nothing before it to show the conditions under which that charge can be enforced, or under which the government might be obliged at some future time to operate the railway. If the minister cannot place the mortgage before the House, can he not give us an outline of the policy or the scope of the proposed mortgage? If any clause of the agreement is to stand, I would suggest that it should be this one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to that if the hon. gentleman desires it; but I do not accede to the suggestion with any intention of conveying the impression to the mind of my hon. friend that I think it would be desirable that precise statements should be made in respect to the matters he alludes to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am speaking of an outline.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I attempted to give an outline, it would be necessary for me to indicate with some definiteness what the proposals are to be. We think parliament ought to be willing to leave the working out of these proposals in our hands, on our responsibility. Of course, the question of responsibility arises anyway. We bring the proposals here on our responsibility, and the responsibility remains. Parliament has said, you may do so and so, you may make such and such arrangements with this company, safeguarding the public interests. After parliament has settled on this, we shall proceed to examine the question in all its bearings. It then becomes a matter of negotiation and discussion as to how and with what particular restrictions and regulations this arrangement is to be worked out. Take the question, which I have not been able to think about very much yet, as to when the government would be justified in exercising its power of retaking this property on default in the payment of interest, it is a very proper thing to consider in all its bearings as to whether a reasonable time might not be allowed to elapse before taking over the road, and it would not be wise to say that such time shall be one, two or three years or more. Conditions might arise that would make it contrary to public interest to enforce this power and take possession. It must be for the government, with a knowledge of all the facts, to say, when a default takes place, whether it should enforce its power or not—whether it should or not allow the interest to accumulate and the company to operate the road. All these things are matters concerning which it would not be wise to make any definite statement because our future course must be guided by the circumstances.

SUPPLY—CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House, and particularly of the government, to a matter of long standing, which seems to me has been now put off long enough, and should be settled for the sake of the good name of Canada. With the indulgence of the House, I shall speak for a few moments upon a matter which I can only class as a debt of honour. I can quite understand that the matter of the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway has become rather hackneyed in the last ten or fifteen years. But, while it may be hackneyed, so long as it is not settled, it remains a stain upon the honour of this country and an impediment in the way of those who desire to secure the investment of capital, particularly of British capital in this Dominion. The promoters of the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway have abandoned the construction of that railway. Therefore, I am not here to-night urging upon the government that they should vote a subsidy to this company, or that they should allow this company to proceed and complete the works, but I am here to appeal to the government to settle with these people and so—to repeat the expression I have already used—wipe off a debt of honour of the Dominion of Canada. I do not propose to take up more time than is absolutely necessary in explaining this matter. In the first place, I wish to contend that the connecting of the waters of the Bay of Fundy and Northumberland straits was a matter decided not by one government alone, but by two governments at least. Away back as early as 1825—to trace the history of this matter for a few moments—a survey of the Baie Verte canal to connect the waters of the St. Lawrence at Baie Verte with the Bay of Fundy by cutting across the isthmus uniting Nova Scotia with New Brunswick was made by Mr. F. Hall. At a later date, about 1840, Mr. Thomas Telford, a civil engineer, revised the report of Mr. Hall upon the subject, and afterwards another report upon the same project was prepared by a royal engineer, Captain Crawley. I will not go into all the surveys and reports made upon this subject, but will come to the year 1870, when an Order in Council was passed by the government of that day, the government of Sir John Macdonald, appointing certain eminent engineers and others as a committee to investigate and report upon the proposed transportation facilities of the Dominion of Canada. That commission consisted of Mr. C. S. Gzowski, of Toronto; Mr. D. D. Calvin, of Kingston; Mr. George Laidlaw, of Toronto; Sir Hugh Allan, of Montreal; Mr. Pierre Garneau, of Quebec; Hon. William Stairs, of Halifax, and Mr. Alexander Jardine, of St. John. In the Order in Council, they were instructed to institute a thorough inquiry into the whole subject with all its bearings both in a commercial and engineering point of view, with the object of obtaining such reliable information as might furnish the necessary data on which to base a plan for the improvement of the canal system of the Dominion of a comprehensive character, and such as would enable Canada to compete with success for the transit trade of the great west; and further to inquire with regard to a number of works and improvements, and among those works enumerated was the construction of the Baie Verte canal across the isthmus dividing the Bay of Fundy from the gulf of St. Lawrence. And the commissioners were further instructed by this Order in Council to report as to the works and improvements which ought to, in their judgment, be constructed. On the 24th February, 1871, the commission submitted their report, which stated the following with reference to the Baie Verte canal:

> Inseparably connected with the growth of the intercolonial trade is the construction of the Bay Verte canal, across the isthmus connecting the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The advantages that must accrue, not merely to the Dominion as a whole, but to the commerce of the maritime provinces, are so clearly pointed out by the Boards of Trade of all the leading cities of Canada and by men interested in the development of our commercial interests, not simply the merchants of St. John and other places in the locality of the proposed canal, but merchants of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and Quebec, that it is superfluous for the commissioners to do more than briefly refer to a few salient features of the scheme.
> A steamer laden with flour for St. John, N.B., now goes down the gulf as far as Shediac where the cargo is transported by rail to its destination. The total distance by water from Shediac through the gut of Canso and around the coast of Nova Scotia to the Bay of Fundy as far as the commercial capital of New Brunswick is about 600 miles, and the consequence is that there is little or no direct communication between the Bay of Fundy ports and those of the River St. Lawrence. By a canal through the isthmus the distance from Shediac to St. John will not be much more than 100 miles.
> This fact will show the insuperable obstacle that now exists to anything like extensive commerce between Montreal and the Bay of Fundy ports of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the great impulse which must be necessarily given to trade by the opening up of a route which will shorten distance so considerably, furnish an inland navigation from the lakes to Boston, and consequently lessen freight between these points at least 25 per cent.

The report then goes on to show all the interests of the maritime provinces that would be benefited, particularly in the matter of the coal trade. The freight to Boston, they say, would be reduced at least $1 per ton. The lumber and fishery interests of the gulf of St. Lawrence, both of Prince Edward Island and what is generally known as the north shore of New Brunswick, will also be benefited equally with the coal trade of Pictou, by their being afforded a safer and shorter route, not only to the ports of the Bay of Fundy, but also to those of the north-western coast of the United States.

These distinguished men discussed the benefits of the construction of the Bay of Fundy canal. They referred to the great importance it would be, not only to the provinces down by the sea, but to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. They then conclude by referring to the great impulse it will give to the ship-building and carrying trade of the Dominion generally. In their report they classify the relative importance of the several public works which are under their eye, and the proposed improvements to which their attention has been directed, and they recommended these works in the order in which they should be proceeded with. In this plan they divided the works into four separate classes, and in the first class they placed the construction of the Bay Verte canal. In the report on the engineering aspects, I find the following:

> The evidence submitted points out with remarkable force and unanimity the necessity of opening a highway for commerce between the gulf of the St. Lawrence and the head waters of the Bay of Fundy through the Isthmus of Chignecto, dividing them.

And submitting a report of Mr. Keefer, C. E., endorsed by Mr. Gzowski, they said :

We think this will remove all doubt as to the practicability of the proposed undertaking.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after that report had been submitted, the then government of the day voted certain sums of money for the construction of this work, as they classed it, of first class importance. The Mackenzie government coming into power, took this up and voted in one year the sum of $1,000,000 to connect the waters of Northumberland Straits with the Bay of Fundy. They had an engineer make more exhaustive reports. Mr. Mackenzie stated in the House that if that canal could be built for $5,000,000 he was quite willing to expend that amount of money, and towards that purpose he voted $1,000,000. It was found afterwards by a more careful examination by engineers that the work would cost, not $5,000,000, but probably between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000, and that amount rather staggered the project. They said they could not afford to spend so large a sum of money even upon so important a work.

Now I want to point out that the government of Canada at that time was quite willing to expend $5,000,000 to connect the waters of the Northumberland Straits and those of the Bay of Fundy. The matter then lay quiescent until a Canadian engineer named Ketchum, eminent in his profession, came forward and said to the government of Canada : You want to connect these waters, you are willing to pay $5,000,000, you say, but you cannot afford to pay $10,000,000. I will build a ship railway across this Isthmus connecting these two waters, and it will cost you very much less than to construct a canal. Mr. Ketchum's scheme was submitted to the government, it was endorsed and approved by the chief engineer of Railways and Canals in his report dated February 4, 1882. A company of Canadians was incorporated; and I am going to try to show that this scheme was concocted by Canadians, that Canadians went to London with the charter granted by the parliament of Canada, and secured the money which was spent upon this undertaking, and that money was lost by the British investors through what I consider the fault of the government and parliament of Canada. This company of Canadians, then, was incorporated. They did not have any money to spend upon the ship railway, and it was never supposed they would spend money upon a ship railway, they were simply a legal entity. They approached the parliament of Canada for certain legislation. Now, Sir, in 1882 the parliament of Canada passed two Acts, one incorporating this Canadian company and another granting a subsidy of $150,000 per year for twenty-five years. I want to call your attention to the words in the subsidy Act :

In consideration of the great advantages which would accrue to the maritime provinces and the intercolonial trade of Canada generally from the construction of a ship railway across the Isthmus of Chignecto——

Etc. In the Act incorporating the company it is stated that this was done because the construction of the railway would be especially conducive to the development of the commercial interests and the coasting trade of the maritime provinces. The next year, 1883, the Canadian parliament passed another Act fixing the capital of the company at £400,000 in shares, and £700,000 in debenture bonds on the estimated cost of the railway. Meanwhile the representatives of the company named in the Incorporation Act went to London and consulted leading engineers, at the same time endeavouring to arrange for capital. But they found this could not be obtained on the terms offered by the government, and they returned to Canada and made a report. In 1886, the Canadian parliament therefor passed another Act, changing the subsidy from $150,000 per annum for twenty-five years, to the actuarial equivalent, namely, $170,602 for twenty years, as a further inducement to enable them to secure British capital. At the time a report was made upon the project by Sir Benjamin Baker, probably the leading canal engineer of the world, who reported favourably. In obtaining this Act this Canadian company made a contract with the government to construct a railway. Mark you, the government was to pay them $170,602 per year for twenty years, but had not however to pay a cent until the railway was completed. Had they been an ordinary railway company they would have been paid on progress estimates. But in this case they were not to receive one cent until the road had been constructed and in operation. On the above terms the capital was promised in London provided that the engineers' surveys, plans and specification were approved by the Canadian government. This was done on May 23, 1888. It was then obviously impossible to finish the work on July 1, 1889, which was the date named. As the object was to obtain capital in London, the Canadian parliament were prevailed upon to pass another Act making the date for completing the railway July 1, 1892. That then was the date upon which the railway was to be completed. I desire to call attention to this fact, because the Canadian government has said that this extension of time to complete the railway was granted to the investors. But it could not be said that it was a grant to the British investors except in a technical sense, as the railway had not then been commenced, and the British investors had no connection with it until 1889 when they were induced to find the capital and to undertake the work. I wish to refer at this point to some remarks made in the Canadian parliament in reference to the effect of the legislation which was then going through. The Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the then leader of the Liberal opposition, said :

He (Mr. Ketchum) will no doubt obtain the money in the English market with the guarantee of the Canadian government.

The same language was held from the passing of the first Act in 1882 to the passing of the last Act in 1888, on which occasion Sir Charles Tupper, who was then Finance Minister, said :

The government is not asked to pay any money but simply to enable English capitalists to furnish all the money required to give us the work at half the cost we could obtain these advantages in any other way.

Therefore, between 1882 and 1888 the Canadian parliament passed two original Acts and amended them by subsequent Acts passed in 1882, 1886 and 1889. The proforma Canadian Company was composed of twenty-one incorporators with the sole object of making the enterprise sufficiently attractive to investors to induce them to find the capital. The prospectus was ready in the beginning of 1889, when it was found that in the meantime parliament had amended the General Railway Act of the country. Section 93 of the Railway Act which deals with the issue of bonds had the following subsection added thereto :

No bonds or debentures shall be issued until 20 per cent of the cost has been actually expended on the work.

The company, therefore, could not issue their debentures and could only offer the £300,000 of preference shares. These were issued on March 20th, and were subscribed for. I desire to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that had it not been for this amendment to the Railway Act, had it not been for this subsection, the company which at that time stood in a first-class financial position in London could have raised every dollar to complete the work by the sale of their debentures if they had been allowed an opportunity to issue them, but they were not by the addition of this subsection. The work commenced. The construction proceeded and £220,000, or over $1,000,000 was expended upon it, before, according to that subsection, the company could legally issue any debentures. This amount was expended, as rapidly as they could expend it by the advice of their engineers, until November, 1889. In the meantime, after they had spent this amount, a financial crash came. There was trouble in the Argentine republic, Baring Bros. suspended payment in London, and the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company found themselves in such a position that only £250,000 of the £700,000 of debentures authorized, could be sold, and the financial troubles of the company have continued from that day down to the present. In 1892 this very subsection which had created the trouble, and which had been passed by the Dominion parliament, was repealed as it was found that it was not wise Canadian legislation. Let me recapitulate these statements. First, the law was changed in 1888——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the subsection ?

Mr. LOGAN. The original section of the Railway Act which deals with the issue of bonds and debentures was amended by the addition of the following subsection :

No bonds or debentures shall be issued until 20 per cent of the cost has been actually expended on the work.

Second, for this reason the company could not legally issue any bonds until £220,000 had been expended on the railway. But for this the company could have got all the money they required. Thirdly, as soon as the company got into a position to issue bonds, in November, 1889, the financial panic was on, and fourthly, this subsection was repealed in 1892. The financial depression became a little less severe afterwards, and the directors of the company succeeded in making a provisional contract to complete the railway with Messrs. Pearson & Sons, of London, and also in obtaining the necessary capital. In 1892 the company applied to the government of the day for an extension of time, and the government issued an Order in Council, dated July 9, 1892, promising, that provided the works were actually in progress and the capital secured to complete the railway by July 1, 1894, the government would recommend to parliament an extension of the time for the charter. Mr. Provand, one of the directors of the company and a member of the Imperial House of Commons, cabled to the Rt. Hon. Sir John Thompson, the Prime Minister at that time, as follows :

To the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson, Prime Minister,
Ottawa.

We have now secured the capital to complete the Chignecto railway, and have settled with first-class firm of contractors to commence the work immediately that we receive an extension of time sufficient to complete them, say two years, for which I now apply on behalf of company.

(Signed) A. D. PROVAND.

Sir John Thompson replied by cable that it was then too late in the session to consider the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What year was that in ?

Mr. LOGAN. That was in 1894. In October, 1894, Mr. George E. Foster went to London. A deputation of the Chignecto people waited on him and he made the following statement to them :

The government, however, in this matter is bound to take in other considerations than those of strict and absolute legality, and I can assure you—and that is as far as I can go in an assurance as a responsible member of the government—that the government will take this matter up as was promised Mr. Provand, and we will give it our best consideration on the grounds of what might be called moral obligations—of how it may affect credit, and also as we are primarily bound to do, in respect to the best interests of our own people, for whom we are trustees, and for whom we are bound to act with great care and prudence.

I think you are perfectly right in asking that you should have a decision upon this question as soon as possible. It has been impossible, and I may say it is impossible, to have a question of this gravity considered without what we call a full meeting of Council, and circumstances during the holidays have rendered it impossible for the government to be assembled in force. As you know, Sir John Thompson is coming to London for a few weeks, and as soon as he returns I have no doubt at all that the government will take the matter up and dispose of it so that you may, I think, confidently look for an answer to this question some where about the middle of December.

That was in 1894, nine years ago. Shortly after that Sir John Thompson died at Windsor. In May, 1895, Mr. Provand was summoned to Ottawa by cable from one of the ministers. He received a letter from Mr. Foster, then Minister of Finance at Ottawa, as follows :

Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Canada,
May 29, 1895.

Dear Mr. Provand,—In pursuance of your conversation this morning in reference to the application made by you for an extension of time for the completion of the Chignecto Marine Railway, I beg to write you as follows :—The government has listened carefully to the presentation of the case of the company made by you, and, while disposed to attach all responsible weight to the reasons adduced for an extension of time, find it difficult under the present circumstances when every effort is being made to strengthen the financial position of Canada by cutting off appropriations and refusing to enter into further obligations, to give a conclusive answer at present. The government will, however, take up your case for final disposition next year, and you may consider that the consequent delay does not in any way imply an unfavourable view of the company's claims, and is entirely without prejudice to their further consideration.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) GEORGE E. FOSTER.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What year was that in ?

Mr. LOGAN. That was in 1895. Early in 1896 the government of the day agreed, as I understand it, to pass an Act during the approaching session revoting the subsidy. A private Bill was introduced into this House in 1896 to extend the time of the charter. This private Bill was defeated by a snap vote, so-called by one majority, but it was replaced on the order paper by a majority of seventeen. On account of the celebrated debate upon the school question that session, that parliament closed without the question again being taken up, and since that time, Mr. Speaker, to make a long story short, the company have been knocking at the doors of the parliament of Canada asking for some redress for the condition of affairs in which they have found themselves. They claim that they were led into it to a very large extent by the Dominion government, by the high commissioner of Canada in England, and by the cabinet ministers of the day. I contend that the Canadian government were largely responsible for the promotion of this railway. It was first decided that it was necessary to connect the waters ; secondly, it was decided that it was too expensive to build a canal ; thirdly, Mr. Ketchum came forward with his Canadian company and asked the government of Canada to give them a charter. That charter was given to them and they went to England, and British investors put their capital into this scheme. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the people of this country know that there has been sunk in that railway, British capital to the extent of over $4,000,000. Sir Richard Cartwright now the Minister of Trade and Commerce, made the following statement in parliament :

The fact of parliament granting a subsdy of $170,000 a year for twenty years to this railway will imply to the minds of English capitalists, from whose pockets I take it that this money is expected, that the Canadian government have looked into the work, that they believe it to be a valuable work, and that it may fairly be implied that the government believe it to be reasonably profitable to those people whose money we are practically securing in consequence of our having granted a subsidy.

Sir Charles Tupper, Bart, then High Commissioner, when a deputation waited on him in London said :

In the light of all that has occurred, in the light of my thorough knowledge and familiarity with the sections of the country through which this railway is to run, and with my knowledge of the commercial business and shipping trade of Canada, I have no hesitation in saying I believe to-day that all that is required is the capital to be forthcoming to complete this undertaking to make it not only a thorough engineering but an equally great financial success, and that the return the parties supplying the capital may confidently look forward to is placed as much, in my judgment, beyond doubt, in connection with the subsidy which is provided by the government of Canada, as any financial undertaking or business enterprise that was ever presented to the public.

That is what the High Commissioner for Canada, speaking to these investors said; and after they had put $4,000,000 of their money into this enterprise, these people approaching him as the representative of Canada, were told that it was as good an investment as any financial undertaking or business enterprise that was ever presented to the public. And upon the statements formerly made by the High Commissioner of Canada, representing Canada as he did, the English investors poured their money into this enterprise, and yet, Sir, when they afterwards were caught by the amendment to the Railway Act; when they were not able to issue their debentures at a time when the money market was in good condition; when they found themselves caught by financial depression and the suspension of Baring Bros.; then, when they came to the government of Canada and asked them to extend the time, simply to extend the time for the completion of this work, the government of Canada put them off and told them to wait until next year. And, Sir, they have waited until next year; they have waited from 1893 to 1903, a period of ten long years. Why should these people have been treated in that way? Why should they not have that extension of time? You may say that it was a wild-cat scheme if you like; you may say that it was condemned by every shipping man in Canada; you may say that every captain that sails the seas says it was a waste of money; but that makes it all the worse, because if it is a wild-cat scheme, then what becomes of the splendid future for the company that was held out to the investors by the government of Canada through its representative in England, and what becomes of the responsibility of Canada on account of such representations. Do you imagine for a moment, Sir, that if Canadian investors had sunk $4,000,000 in a concern and had asked for an extension of time that they would not have been able to pull enough strings to get that extension of time? Are we to treat the British investor who sunk his money in a Canadian enterprise in a different manner from that in which we would treat a Canadian investor? Take the case of the Interprovincial Bridge Company which is within a stones throw of this House of Commons. A charter was granted in 1882, the time was extended in 1890, the time was extended again in 1892; the time was extended again in 1896; the time was extended again in 1898. I might give other instances of a similar character, but I do not want to take up unnecessarily the time of the House. Let me quote again from Sir Charles Tupper:

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to give me the year that Sir Richard Cartwright made that speech which has been quoted?

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot give the exact date, but I quoted it from 'Hansard.' These investors in the ship railway had another interview with Sir Charles Tupper and replying to them on the 20th of March, 1893, he said:

> There is no doubt whatever that the parties who have invested their money in this enterprise are in a position to claim from the government of Canada, in my opinion, the fullest and fairest consideration. They have entered upon this measure upon no imperfect calculations. Every means that were possible that could be taken to warrant the enterprise being presented to capitalists as a sound enterprise were taken.

And as to the extension of time to complete the railway he said:

Now, it is not necessary to dwell more upon that unfortunate and untoward event that has brought this work to a standstill; but I am afraid you cannot expect the government of Canada to do more than they have set forth in the Order in Council—that is to say, that when, as you have rightly said, it is not usual for governments or anybody else to expect contractors—especially in connection with very great undertakings—to complete them at the time—and I know of no instance in which any government or any respectable concern of any kind have ever taken advantage of the stoppage of the work, from circumstances altogether beyond the control of the parties, for the purpose of relieving themselves of any responsibility. I do not believe the government of Canada will do so. I do not believe it. I believe not only their sense of right and of justice to the promoters and capitalists connected with the great enterprise, but their regard for the financial standing and character of the country itself, will ensure to you that, if at an early period you are in a position to comply with the terms of the Order in Council, you will find a fair and reasonable extension of the time necessary to complete the work. I have great pleasure in saying that to you, because I feel you are entitled to that consideration, and I am sure it will not be withheld by the government of Canada.

I could quote at considerable length, Mr. Speaker, the opinions of Canadian newspapers on this Chignecto Marine Transport Railway matter, but I shall select only a few. Take the following from the Toronto 'Globe,' which said:

> The question more immediately concerning the Canadian people is to what extent the Dominion government is liable. It is true that the promise of a twenty years' subsidy was conditional on the completion of the work, but it is equally obvious that the action of parliament was the bait which caught the British investor, who would not have bitten at a naked hook. The original subsidy promised in 1882 was for $150,000 a year for twenty-five years, but in 1886 this was changed to a subsidy of $170,000 a year for twenty years. If we repudiate all responsibility, as technically we should be warranted in doing, the credit of the Dominion would suffer, for there can be no doubt that we have incurred a considerable degree of moral responsibility in connection with the undertaking.

The following is from the Ottawa Daily 'Free Press,' which says:

> But there is an aspect of the case which is almost painful, as it practically amounts to a national disgrace. On the strength of the endorsation given it by governmental and parliamentary procedure, many people in Britain have been induced to sink money in the project which must now be regarded as lost.

Mr. Provand addressed a meeting of senators in Ottawa, and the proceedings were reported in the Ottawa 'Evening Journal' of the following day, from which I quote. When he had finished his address, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who was Prime Minister in the last administration, said:

> Mr. Provand did not claim he had any legal right, but put his claim on moral and equitable grounds, and on the ground that all other subsidized enterprises, except this one, had been given renewals when they failed to carry out their work in the first instance. He knew of no other company than the Ship Railway Company but had been treated otherwise. Mr. Provand's position was 'treat us as you have treated others, otherwise give us compensation.' He claimed the investors had looked at the Acts of parliament, and seeing that they were ensured so much, had therefore put their money into the project.

I will quote what was said by the Hon. Sir John Abbott, then Prime Minister, in the debate which took place on the application for the renewal of this charter :

It seems to me that we are to a great degree bound in good faith to give these contractors the opportunity of completing this work. I do not see very well how we could refuse them. I think a refusal to allow men who have spent three millions of dollars to spend $1,500,000 more would work very unfortunately on our enterprises, when we apply to England to borrow money to finish them with, and I think it would be an extremely hard measure to mete out to these contractors to say that, not having completed their work within the precise time mentioned in the contract, they should be mulct of so large a sum as they have invested in it.

I will not quote any more from newspapers or from the speeches of public men of Canada. The company are asking, as they have been for the last ten years, for compensation. They claim that they are not being fairly treated. They claim that other companies have been given instructions to build certain works in Canada in a semi-partnership with the Dominion government, and that these companies have been compensated when they had not an opportunity of completing their contract. This company claim that they were partners of the Dominion government in connecting the waters of the Bay of Fundy with those of the Northumberland straits, and thus carrying out the project of the commission which I had quoted in the first part of my remarks. They come and ask that, as they were led into this undertaking by the action of parliament and its agent, they be compensated to some extent for the loss they have sustained.

Apart from that phase of the subject altogether, the Chignecto Ship Railway bonds and other securities are to-day spread among the whole investing public of Great Britain. I have a list here of about thirty banking institutions which hold Chignecto Ship Railway bonds and shares, including the London and Westminster Bank; Balli and Sons (Greek bankers); Capital and Counties Bank; Martins Bank, Limited; Prescotts Bank; Union Bank; Union Bank of Scotland; Cocks, Biddulph and Company; Manchester and County Bank; Coutts and Company; Lacond, Youall and Company; National Bank, Limited; and so on. Nearly every great financial institution in London hold the bonds and shares of this unfortunate company. Do you not think, Sir, that it is against the best interests of Canada that this matter should remain unsettled ? If the government of Canada can see its way clear to come to a reasonable settlement with these people, it will certainly do us good in the financial markets of Great Britain. Those who have visited London know that you meet this matter whenever you talk to financial men over there. They refer to the bad treatment that was meted out to the Chignecto Ship Railway people; and when you place before them a Canadian proposition for the investment of their money, they point you to the history of that company, and say : That is the way you treated one British company; you got our money by representations, and then you refused to extend the time, and afterwards refused to compensate us for the money we expended. Apart from other phases of the subject, do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that it would pay the Dominion of Canada in the long run to settle this matter once and for all, and remove it as a stain from the financial credit of the country ?

The company have spent, as I said, about $4,000,000. They do not ask for the return of all that money, by any means. I am told by the representative of the company that they have paid in freights and in customs duties into the treasury of Canada about $500,000. Are we going to keep that money which these people have given us to bring in the machinery for the construction of their railway ? They ask first for reasonable compensation for the large expenditure they have made. They did not default in the payment of their men. The work happens to be in the county of Cumberland, which I represent. It does not make any difference to me politically what is done with this company; but I am here to plead with the government to treat these people in such a way as will remove the difficulties which exist between the company and the government and in the financial markets of England.

There is one other consideration in this matter. In settling with this company, the government will also be settling a debt of honour to the county of Cumberland. That county, of course, anxious to secure the operation of this railway within its borders, granted the company a free right of way, for which the people bought the land and borrowed the money, taxing themselves to do so. They ask that if any settlement is made between the government and the company, it be arranged that this right of way, which was given for a specific purpose that has not been carried out, and which is not of any value to the railway people, they having abandoned the project, shall be returned to the county of Cumberland. Let me repeat that the company are not asking for any extension of time, as they have abandoned the project altogether; but they are throwing themselves on the mercy of Canada, and are asking the government of Canada to wipe out what we must all regard as a national debt of honour.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Some years ago, when I was in London I was asked to meet two gentlemen. I did so, and I found that they were trustees for the Chignecto Ship Railway bondholders. I knew very little about that project further than what I had seen occasionally in the newspapers; but they explained the position of affairs to me, gave me the history of the company, told me how they had been induced to invest money in it, and asked me if I did not think they had a just and fair claim on the government for a return of their money or for substantial compensation. The case as they put it before me interested me, and on my return to Canada, and after I became a member of this House, a year afterwards, I looked into the origin of this scheme, and I found that, as far as I could judge, there was a practically unanimous approval of the scheme by the parliament of Canada, not only when the Conservatives were in power, but when the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie was at the head of the government. There was a curious unanimity in favour of the scheme by eminent engineers, and it was endorsed apparently by the business men of the country. At all events it was endorsed very strongly by the business men of the lower provinces, who ought to have known what its value was commercially. The result was that a company was formed, and parties went to England from this side and pressed on English investors the soundness of the scheme and the substantial aid which the Dominion government were giving to it; and a large amount of capital was raised. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has gone into the details very fully, giving the dates, and stating the various stages through which the company passed, so that I need not refer to these.

The company spent altogether about $4,000,000. Through a notorious misadventure on their part, they overlooked a clause in the Government Act which provided that they should spend 25 per cent of the capital subscribed before borrowing on the market. This prevented their raising the money. The money, however, required to complete the scheme was practically raised, and but for the financial crash of the Barings and those associated with that large firm, this scheme would have been completed and this government would have been bound to pay $170,000 per year for twenty or twenty-five years. I told the trustees that in my judgment the scheme was a wild and visionary one, and that I would not advise the government, in any shape or way, to grant a furtherance of that subsidy on their completing the work, but it is clear that the government and these gentlemen who put their money into this scheme were practically in partnership, because these gentlemen were to obtain no return until the work was completed, and the government were under no obligation until the work was done. Therefore, it was a question of mutual good faith. These men went on in good faith, but because of a financial panic they were unable to complete their scheme when practically three-fourths of the work was done. Had the government extended their charter —and I suppose that no extension is ever refused where substantial work is done— they would have been entitled to the subsidy, and I think that it is clearly a breech of faith on the part of the country to refuse to recognize the obligation the country is under to pay back, to some extent, at all events, to these men the money they have put into this enterprise. Looking at it as business men, we all wonder how it was possible such a scheme could have been inaugurated and backed up by our leading engineers, politicians and business men, still they apparently thought it would be a paying transaction and a substantial advantage to that particular section of the country. The scheme, I believe, would have been a failure, had it been completed.

At this point the electric lights went out, and the hon. member was unable, for a few minutes, to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. OSLER. Mr. Speaker, if I were personally interested in this matter, and of a superstitious nature, I might take the sudden going out of these lights as rather an ill-augury of the cause which I am now arguing. But I rather take it as an indication that this House, recognizing that the transaction all round has been a bad job for the government and for the people of Canada, and for the men who put their money into it, will return to these bondholders a fair proportion of the money they have spent, will close out the transaction and have no more to do with it, and will try to avoid such transactions in the future. I do really appeal earnestly to the government to consider this matter. I believe the country is morally bound to meet these bondholders, and, at all events, return them some proportion of the money that they have, in good faith, put into this scheme. This scheme was presented to the British public asking for their money with the practical endorsation of the Dominion of Canada, the endorsation of the engineers of the government, with the endorsation of leading men on both sides of the House, with the assurance of business men that the transaction would be a profitable and paying one. I do not know of any scheme that has been so thoroughly backed up in this manner and has been so thoroughly forced upon the English people as a scheme in which they could invest their money safely. And, I think this government will only be doing their duty and I believe the country will approve too of their action if they deal liberally with these bondholders and give them some compensation for the money they have lost.

Hon. J. ISRAEL TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). I happen to have had the opportunity to study the question now before us when I had the honour of being a member of the government. Mr. Provand has come to Ottawa every year, I think, for the last five or six years. I was a member of the sub-committee to which the question was referred. The facts of the case are very simple. A company was organized to build the Chignecto Marine Railway. They were business men, and they undertook to carry out the work for a subsidy, agreeing that the subsidy should be payable when the work was completed. That is the basis of the whole agreement. I do not know whether my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has given attention to that part of the question.

Mr. OSLER. I have ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The company entered upon the work, but they were not very successful. They applied for an extension of time. Extensions were given to them twice. The last time when the government took up the matter was in 1896. I was then a member of the House. Sir Charles Tupper, who was Prime Minister, was favourable to the undertaking. A private Bill was introduced. However, he did not make it a government measure. I do not remember exactly by whom the Bill was introduced into the House, but Sir Charles Tupper approved of it. However, there was such a strong opposition on the government benches that the Bill had to be given up and the charter was not renewed. Although no subsidy was then asked the opposition I say again, was so strong, that the charter, which was asked to be renewed on a private Bill was not then renewed. When we came into office the question was presented to us as to what should be done. Well, nothing was done, and the matter stands as it stood when Sir Charles Tupper left office. My hon. friend (Mr. Osler) said that these gentlemen from London were entitled to compensation. If the government make up their minds that it is in the interest of the country to pay these bondholders a sum of money, the government, of course, will be held responsible for the position they take. There is no legal ground for the claim. My hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has quoted from the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I feel sure that if my hon. friend had read a little further down or a little further up in the speech, he would have found that his quotation does not at all render or do justice to the views of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. There was a strong debate in the House in 1896. There were several debates before that. I remember them very well, because I was then a member of the press. On every occasion, the Liberal party, which was then in opposition opposed and denounced the scheme. As to that, there can be no doubt; 'Hansard' is there to be appealed to. There was not a member of the Liberal party in the House that stood for the renewal of the charter. And, in 1896, the opposition on the government benches was so strong that the charter was not renewed. Why was it not renewed ? Because the scheme that, for a time, had been looked upon as a feasible scheme, was in those years looked upon as a fake, an impossible thing. The position in 1896 was exactly what I stated. The government considered that the scheme was not feasible, and that it would be a dangerous thing to renew the charter, as it would encourage men in the attempt to carrying out of a hopeless undertaking. These gentlemen failed in their undertaking. I am very sorry for them. But they were business men. It seems to me that the extension of their charter on two occasions was quite a sufficient measure at the hands of parliament to justify us, at any rate, to have some doubts as to the morality of their claims. They have failed as many other business men have failed in their undertaking. Now, if my hon. friend the Minister of Finance believes it necessary for Canadian credit to compensate these men, why, he is the Minister of Finance and it is for them to decide. But, on the ground of right, I do not think these gentlemen have any claim upon us. Whether the credit of this country can be impaired by our refusal to satisfy the claims presented to us, is another question.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I have listened very carefully to the remarks made on both sides on this question. I know none of the parties, have never heard the names even of the bondholders in this matter. Two years ago I had the papers relating to it placed in my hands and I read them very carefully to form an opinion for myself of what was due from this country, if anything, to the people who had invested money in this unfortunate undertaking. The facts, as I understand them are briefly these :—About thirty years ago many prominent gentlemen in this Dominion conceived the idea that a canal or a ship railway at Chignecto would be a most valuable improvement, of the utmost importance to the provinces down by the sea. It was not a question of one political party or the other taking up that venture. Prominent men on both sides of politics, gentlemen who are in the ministry to-day and gentlemen who were in the ministry that preceded it, all seemed to take a most favourable view of the propriety and necessity of proceeding with this work. For some reason or other, for several years nothing was done. It appeared that there were doubts about the estimates of the cost of the work. But, ultimately, a charter was obtained and the work was undertaken. The Dominion parliament subsidized that work, agreeing to grant a very substantial aid to the undertaking. The work proceeded; the directors of the company, assisted by expressions of opinion from the highest men in the land, both in parliament and out of parliament, succeeded in obtaining a large amount of capital in England. There had been delay, the bonds that the company expected to issue were rendered impossible of issue owing to what I think everybody subsequently agreed was a stupid provision put into a clause of the Railway Act with regard to the issuing of bonds. This impeded the financial end of the undertaking for some time but ultimately the money was raised in England, a large sum of several million dollars.

Now there is one material feature in this matter I would like to call attention to. These bonds were not placed in England in the ordinary way, at a discount. I believe that every bond was placed there at par or above par. It was looked upon as a thoroughly legitimate undertaking, fostered and endorsed by the highest men of this Dominion and by parliament. Well, after that the work went on, and as we all know now, the undertaking proved a failure, a most disastrous one for every body connected with it. It was a huge blunder from beginning to end. The people in England who placed several millions of money in it were led to do so by assurances from people on this side, and every dollar that they expended in that way, might as well, and perhaps better have been thrown into the sea. Now as to the subsidy. After we agreed to give aid it was found that this undertaking was going to be a failure, that it would be better for all concerned if it had never been begun, and it was no use to expend another dollar upon it. The people connected with it wished to get an opportunity to go on with the work. The parliament of Canada, very rightly, I think, determined they would not extend the time for its completion. The result of that was that this Dominion saved the whole of the subsidy that we had agreed to give to these people. I do not mean to say that the parliament of Canada in those days refused to extend the time in order to get rid of paying that subsidy. But even if it had, I do not know that it would have been improper. I have only to say it was a reasonable thing for parliament to do. There was no use throwing away all this money. The undertaking had become absolutely hopeless, and, therefore, this Dominion was quite justified in refusing to give the company an extension of time to earn their subsidy.

But there arises another question. By refusing to extend the time for the construction of this work, we happily were able to save a very large sum of money that we otherwise would have lost, while these unfortunate people who had put up their money lost every dollar of it. Now we were all partners together, as I look upon it. They had been induced to spend their money, and we had agreed to spend ours. By a fortunate bit of luck, the facts became known in time for us to save our money, though too late for them to save theirs. That is the whole position. We are all in a sense partners together, and what is decent for us to do in these conditions ? As I look upon this question as a representative of the people, I would vote to do here to-day that which I, as an honourable man, would think I ought to do under similar circumstances in a personal transaction. I think it would be discreditable for us to take advantage of the people who were practically our partners in this undertaking. We led them into it. It was not an ordinary undertaking. Public men, ministers of the Crown, gave certificates, gave statements in this House and elsewhere, leading these people to put up their money. They put it up and they lost every dollar of it, not only the principal, but every dollar of interest, and we have not paid out a cent. Now I say under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of legal right, it is a question of what is honourable and decent for this Dominion to do. I say the Dominion should do just what any hon. man in this House would do with a fellow man he was dealing with under like conditions. I do not know how much these gentlemen spent, some $4,000,000 are said to have been spent. I do not know whether that is the amount they expended or not, but the government can easily ascertain. I say that in my humble judgment it would be a right and proper thing for the government of Canada to give some relief, to look at all these facts, all the circumstances, and to do what is right, to do what is generous, and to do what is even liberal, without extravagance. For my part, I should be very glad to endorse such a course on the part of a Liberal ministry.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). I think all the circumstances connected with this unfortunate transaction have been fully explained, so that the members of the House who were not members at the time this transaction was going through, are fully informed of the circumstances. I heartily endorse the proposition that some arrangement should be made with these gentlemen who have put their money into this undertaking and lost it. All those who were in the House and heard these matters discussed on the different occasions when they came up, will remember that it was not only one government, but two governments, the government of Mr. Mackenzie and the succeeding Conservative government, who endorsed this proposition. More than that. the government engineers at these different times also expressed, in writing, and reports to the government, very strong representations that this would certainly be a successful and strong financial enterprise. I attach more importance to the reports of our own officials than to any other representations that were made. All parties in this House agreed in what was done. I attribute the failure of the undertaking more to the evolution in railways, and their improvement in capacity and in cheapness of rates, than to any other reason. It is evident that the engineers and business and public men of those days were mistaken in their expectations. I go strongly with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), who has so well expressed the views I entertain. It was not because we did not wish to extend the time in the usual way, but because the House was so well satisfied that it was useless, that it would be a waste of money. If any hon. gentleman here will turn up the debates on that occasion when the extension of time was refused, he will find the speeches from the members of the lower provinces generally who were better informed, and better capable of judging than those of us from Ontario and Quebec.

The members, especially from the lower provinces generally, who were better informed and better capable of judging than those of us from Ontario and the west, satisfied me, at all events, that it was useless. While I felt that, still, I voted on the principle of the thing to extend it according to the ordinary usage. I did that for the purpose of keeping faith, while perfectly agreeing with the arguments that had been presented that it would be entirely useless. The members of this House were satisfied that it would be useless to put more money into that unfortunate scheme because the evolution of circumstances and of development satisfied the good sense of the House that what had been done was a mistake. Fortunately for those who were in favour of the government doing something for this company, both political parties were committed to that judgment as to the futility of the work and I think that ought to have a very strong influence in regard to the settlement of this affair. Even the promoters of the scheme themselves who put up their money are not appealing to us here to say that it would have been well for the country or for themselves if they had been given an opportunity of fully expending the subsidy. They would be better satisfied to make some fair arrangement now than if we had expended more money than we did in assisting them and obliging them to complete the work, and it would be more satisfactory to the country than if the government were obliged to ask parliament for this large subsidy which the people of this country have to pay. It is not a question of breach of faith on either side, but, under the circumstances, I think it is better, both for the people of this country and for the people who were so unfortunate as to invest their money in the enterprise and who had good reason to believe from the representations of the government and of the engineers of the government, that it would be a perfectly satisfactory security, that they were not permitted to complete the work and that the government was not called upon to pay the subsidy. I think the government could probably satisfy the claims of these people for less money than it would have cost if we had extended the time and been called upon to pay the subsidy. That being the case I think the government would do well to arrange with them. I can add my testimony to that of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) as to the impression that this transaction has created in England in connection with some matters that some friends of mine and myself have been endeavouring to negotiate in the old country. We commenced eight or ten years ago and the first influence we had to encounter was this Chignecto claim. I did not wonder at it when I heard of the list of banks that were interested in this unfortunate transaction. I am, therefore, as one of the representatives of the people of this country, prepared to take my share of the responsibility of asking the government to make some fair and satisfactory arrangement with these people in respect of the matter and get it out of the way.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I have just a few words to say in reference to this matter. I was in the House when the Bill was introduced for the building of this Chignecto Railway, and we must all remember that this undertaking had the imprimatur of the parliament of Canada, of the engineers connected with the Railway Department as to the feasibility of it, and of the Minister of Railways and Canals responsible to the people who was looked upon as speaking authoritatively and with knowledge by the financial men in England when, speaking as to the financial position of the undertaking, he stated in the best of good faith that there was every probability of the company being recouped for the money expended on it. We were first to give $150,000 a year, but the subsidy was afterwards increased to $170,000. By an oversight in amending the Railway Act, a provision was introduced which affected this Chignecto Railway when parliament had no intention of applying the amendment to that particular undertaking at all, which rendered it impossible for the parties who were interested in this scheme to raise the money for the purpose of building the work. This amendment required the expenditure of 20 per cent of the capital before the company could float their bonds. However, afterwards, when that was remedied by parliament, and when they were in a position to put bonds upon the market, the unfortunate financial crisis occurred which caused the failure of Baring Bros. and rendered it impossible for any scheme, no matter how good it was, to obtain money on the English market. Now, are we to take advantage of the unfortunate position of the parties who invested their money in this undertaking in good faith ? It has been said that we have no legal obligation. We do not keep ourselves strictly in this House to legal obligation. Time and again we have eliminated the legal responsibility in submitting questions for damages to the court and we have left the court virtually to judge as to the moral obligations of the people of this country. I contend, first, that we have a moral obligation to these people who invested their money in the undertaking. They did it on the faith of parliament, on the statement of leading men of this country, they did it on the statement of the engineers attached to the Department of Railways and Canals, and in addition they submitted the question to the first engineers in Great Britain. The gentleman who was the architect of the bridge across the Frith of Forth, the foremost engineer in Great Britain, reported favourably as to the feasibility of the scheme. It is true we changed our minds afterwards. It is true, as stated by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that the opposition at that time were to a man opposed to the scheme. They opposed the proposal to renew the charter in 1896. Sir Charles Tupper, if he had remained in the government of this country, would have brought down a measure for the purpose, to a certain extent, of indemnifying these people for the money they had put into the undertaking. Whether they are entitled to the whole of it or whether they are entitled to only a share of it I will not say, but the penalty we attach to them is far in excess of their default. Why should they, because they were unable to raise the money, forfeit the whole amount of the money which they expended on the undertaking. We have all agreed now that there is no necessity for the building of this work. We have all agreed on both sides of the House that the undertaking shall not be built.

Mr. CLANCY. When did we make that discovery ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The feeling in the country, as I judge from public opinion, is that an undertaking of that kind would not be a financial success and that the government would not be justified in the payment of the money necessary to carry it to a conclusion. What I am contending for is the moral obligation of the people to do something for the people who have invested their money on the imprimatur of this parliament, on the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals, on the statement of the department which was responsible for the introduction of the measure providing for an undertaking which they believed would be a financial success. Admitting that they have no legal claim, yet they come before the parliament of Canada in the same position as dozens of others who have been recouped for expenditures they made on the good faith of the support of the people of this country. I believe that the Minister of Finance would have almost the unanimous support of the people of Canada if he did something to compensate these people for the large sum of money they have expended on this undertaking. I believe that money so expended to show our good faith, would be worth more to us than the cash itself in establishing our good name before the world.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I have listened to my hon friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) who gave a detailed history of this unfortunate enterprise. I have also listened to my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) who diagnosed the matter very clearly, and I believe that we, as an honourable body, should look upon this matter as a party to the contract with the English investors who undertook the work. We wisely carried out our part of the contract and it was no fault of ours that the project failed, except that perhaps some may say that we deprived the company of the opportunity of continuing the work owing to a clause in the Railway Act passed subsequently. I hardly like to venture an opinion as to whether this was a proper enterprise or not, but I may say that I have visited the scene of the proposed ship-railway and I could not for the life of me understand how any engineer could ever have recommended such an undertaking. If I had a ship in the Northumberland Straits destined for Boston or New York, I would much prefer to have sent her by sea route rather than to take her over this ship-railway had it been built, even if I could have done so free of tolls. The tortuous waters of the Bay of Fundy would have been the greatest risk in the voyage, to say nothing of the dangers of the railway itself in putting a ship on a contrivance of that kind. However, that may be, it was an unfortunate enterprise, and under all the circumstances I feel satisfied that this parliament should in honour recoup those people for their losses, at least a part, more particularly as quite a number of the English investors were put to great sacrifices by the failure of the party to carry out this scheme. We may not be legally bound to recoup these people, but I certainly think we are morally bound. Even if we put it on the ground of it being a charitable act, but I want it to go to investors who put their money in it, not to stockbrokers, solicitors and adventurers. I, for one, would be prepared to advocate it. If the government does not consider that they should repay the whole of the money expended by them, then I would be in favour of letting them exercise their own discretion as to what they consider would be fair, or equitable, under the circumstances. This is not a party question for both parties are involved. As I understand it, both the Mackenzie government and the Conservative government endorsed the project. When the company applied to have the charter extended, I felt as a member of this House, that it would be a charitable act to refuse the extension so that they might not be subject to further loss of money by this scheme. I felt that there was no use wasting more money in the continuation of that work. I fully endorse the position taken by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) and others, and I trust that the government will consider the matter and do what is honourable and just in the premises.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I am afraid that I cannot go so far as some hon. gentlemen have in supporting the claims of this company, nor do I think they are quite correct in all the statements that have been made as to the circumstances under which this scheme was promoted. I may be wrong, but I think my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is mistaken when he says that some members of the present administration supported the scheme. I do not remember whether there was a division on it in parliament.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There was in 1891.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I recollect that one member of the present administration took very strong ground against it, and Mr. Mackenzie also spoke in terms of hostility.

Mr. BARKER. I have a distinct recollection of reading something signed by Sir Richard Cartwright in the very strongest terms referring to this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In favour of the scheme ?

Mr. BARKER. I think so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no ; my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) is entirely mistaken. Sir Richard Cartwright condemned the scheme in the very strongest terms.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) is not correct when he says that the scheme was supported by the Mackenzie government generally.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I think they endorsed it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is mistaken. This particular scheme was not projected during the reign of the Mackenzie government.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Perhaps not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a project for the construction of a canal, and when it was found that the cost of this canal was likely to be very large the project was abandoned. However, I do not attach very much importance to that point. The government of Canada is a continuing body, and if any obligation in the name of Canada is incurred by one government the succeeding government is bound to carry out that obligation. I cannot think that there has been anything here to justify the charge of breach of faith. It is not contended that there is any legal obligation; if there were these gentlemen would have availed of the courts long since. Nor can I admit with the member for Cumberland that it is a debt of honour. If anything can be done for these unfortunate stock holders it must be done, not because they have a legal claim, not because they have even a moral claim, but as an act of grace and favour of this parliament irrespective of everything else.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been some negotiations of late—I suppose it would be right to say there has never been a moment for some years that there have not been negotiations on the subject. It is now some twenty years since this scheme was first promoted, and it is some ten or eleven years since the scheme practically failed. According to the statement of my hon. friend from Cumberland, in 1892 application was made to the government of that day to restore the company to its former position. The government of the day did not do so; and although that Conservative government remained in power down to 1896, they never asked parliament to restore the company to its former position, for the reason stated by the hon. member for South Norfolk, that they and others had made up their minds that the scheme was not a wise one, and that it would not be well to continue it. That was the position when the present government came into power in 1896. This government took the ground that whatever might be said in favour of the scheme in earlier days—and I do not wish to go into that—it was now pretty well admitted by business men that the scheme was not a sound one, and therefore we felt that we should not give it a new lease of existence in order that other people might be induced to put money into it, and throw good money after bad. That left the question of compensation, and from that day to this that question has been pressed on the attention of the government; but up to a recent date the sums mentioned by the promoters of what they considered proper compensation were so very large that they did not seem to come within reasonable limits, and we did not feel like presenting the matter to parliament. I suppose this session would not be a constitutional one, if we had not here our energetic friend who represents the company to press its claims. I do not know that I can say more at present than that the matter is engaging the consideration of the government. Representations are being made to us by the agent of the English bondholders, and, in the light of the discussion that has taken place to-night, we will give the matter further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Archives, $9,000.

Mr. MONK. What is the reason of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This increase is largely in connection with the copying of French documents in Paris.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the nature of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is going on constantly in Paris an investigation into documents connected with early Canadian history. That work has been prosecuted very actively. This year a very large number of documents have been copied, and next year we expect that there will be more. A very long list of documents which have to be copied has been prepared for that purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the increase owing entirely to that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Almost entirely.

Mr. MONK. Who is in charge of the work in Paris ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Edouard Richard.

Mr. MONK. What do we pay him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $1,600 a year, including expenses.

Collection and compilation of criminal statistics, $1,800.

Mr. MONK. Who is the officer in charge of this work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. George Johnson.

Statistical Year-book, $5,000.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the nature of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The amount asked for is $1,000 more than last year, to provide for the printing of a larger number of copies, which have been asked for.

General statistics, $3,200.

Mr. BELL. What is that expenditure for this year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Some of the officers under Mr. Johnson are paid out of this vote. It is sometimes used and sometimes not used, according to the exigencies of the work. The officers are sometimes engaged to work up particular statistics which are used in the compilation of the Year-book.

Mr. BELL. Is all this used in connection with the Year-book ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not always. I do not know of anything last year except in connection with the Year-book.

Mr. BELL. Has there been any special investigation ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None during this current year.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if any part of this sum has been paid for an examination of land values ? The hon. gentleman has had a Mr. Washington engaged for some time in connection with what are called general statistics, what has become of Mr. Washington's work ? Has the country the benefit of that long and painful examination he made of land values in the provinces, or has it been cast to one side ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The report is laid on the Table. There is no other publication.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman consider Mr. Washington's report of any value ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. What does the hon. gentleman intend doing with it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It may be utilized when convenient.

Mr. CLANCY. It was shrewdly suspected that the hon. gentleman intended it for campaign literature, but after examination by himself and some other members of this House he became somewhat faint-hearted and doubted whether it would serve his purpose. Does he expect to be able to resurrect it in the future and turn it to account ? And what was the expenditure in connection with that report ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The expenditure on the work was closed before the commencement of the current year, and there is no intention of renewing it in the ensuing year. I have not the details of that expenditure of two or three years ago available.

Mr. CLANCY. I presume that Mr. Washington is being provided for in some other way. Is that the case ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister was not aware of his having been employed on a former occasion. He seemed to be taken by surprise when Mr. Washington made the statement before one of the committees last year that the minister had employed him. Mr. Washington was able to remind the hon. gentleman of some circumstances where there had been a conversation, in consequence of which Mr. Washington went down to the maritime provinces. However, the House has the assurance that his report may be brought into effect some time or other, and that the country is not to experiment in the meantime any more.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think it is treating the committee or the country fairly for an hon. member of the government to give the reply in reference to a report which was given a while ago. That report is either of some value or it is not. The hon. Minister of Agriculture ought to know, and he ought also to know whether it is the intention of the government to have it printed or not. If that be the intention, the committee have a right to know it in answer to the questions of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). If it is not the intention of the department to have the report printed, the hon. minister should say so. For my part, I protest against this flippant manner of dealing with public questions just as if none but members of the government had any right to say anything in this House. There is too much of this flippancy and jocularity at the expense of the dignity of the ministers and the pockets of the people.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that in the Auditor General's Report for 1902, Mr. Hector Washington is entered for special statistical work from January 1st to April 7th, 1902, eighty-three days at $3 per day, amounting to $259. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he was in error when he said that Mr. Washington has closed his services before the financial year with which we are dealing. We had paid the sum of $700 or $800 for the fiscal year of 1901, and it will now be in order for the Minister of Agriculture to explain what these payments were for, in view of his statement that Mr. Washington's work had ceased before the present financial year had begun.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The statement I made was absolutely correct. The financial year we are dealing with commenced the 1st of July, 1902, and the payment which the hon. gentleman has just read was previous to the 1st of July, 1902. That payment was made in the fiscal year of 1901-2, and it completed payment for the work Mr. Washington had been doing.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that that is not an answer. He knows that in dealing with accounts of that kind it is the duty of ministers to explain the expenditure for the preceding year. He does not suppose that this House is dealing with accounts for the money which we are voting for this year. He told us very plainly that no work had been done by Mr. Washington in the financial year with which we are dealing. I am referring to the Auditor General's Report, and not to the estimates we are voting.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said that Mr. Washington had done no work in the present financial year, and that there is no arrangement for his doing any work in the coming financial year.

Mr. MONK. Is he at present in the employ of the government ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is not in my department, and I do not know that he is any where else.

Aid to agricultural societies, $7,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is paid to the Agricultural Societies of the North-west Territories, and it is paid through the local government. This amount has been in the estimates during many years. It is paid to the individual societies who make a return of their membership, and each society gets an amount based on its membership. The work of making that apportionment is left to the officers of the local government in the territories. The reason for this vote is that, in the provinces, the provincial governments deal with agricultural societies, but in view of the work to be done, this concession was made by the Dominion parliament.

Mr. CLANCY. I had occasion last year and on previous occasions to call attention to the very small sum expended for this purpose. The hon. gentleman states, that vote has been stationary for many years. Either agricultural societies must be unfairly dealt with or there is very little interest in matters of this kind in that country. In view of the large expenditure of the government, it seems to me that some explanation is due to the House as to why it is that, with such progress and development going on there, there is no greater increasing expenditure under this head.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Agricultural societies in the North-west Territories have not been increasing in number. The policy of the department there has been rather to centralize and amalgamate these societies. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) seems to think that enough money is not spent in the encouragement of agriculture in the North-west Territories. But when this vote was first introduced, this was the only agricultural work done in the Territories by the government. Since that time considerable other work has been undertaken, work in connection with the establishment of creameries, work in connection with live stock associations and the sending of speakers to farmers' institute meetings all over the Territories. In the opinion of the people there it was better to spend money in that kind of work rather than in agricultural societies. There has been no demand for the increase of this vote.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are speakers sent from here to the North-west Territories to lecture to farmers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speakers are arranged for to lecture before the institutes of the North-west Territories. Some are sent from here and some are arranged for in the territories.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who are the parties sent from here ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not a list of them at hand. That comes under another vote, and when that vote comes up, if the hon. gentleman wishes it, I will give the list. It will come up under vote for the branch commissioner of agriculture, &c., and also under experimental farms.

Classifying all Canadian patents and preparing drawings for same for classification, to be paid, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,500.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the meaning of the phrase here : 'Notwithstanding anythink in the Civil Service Act ?'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This has been characteristic of this vote ever since it was taken. We have to employ some people not under civil service rules, so that this provision is necessary. In explanation of the decrease, the vote this year being $2,500 against $7,000 last year, I may say that this work has been going on for some years and, as a large number of the patents in existence have been classified, it is felt that $2,500 will complete it during the next fiscal year, and also carry on the current work for the year.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the committee to understand that there are a number of persons engaged in the hon. gentleman's department, as there seems to be in other departments, who are not permanent clerks ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Partly from the reason the hon. gentleman speaks of and partly from another reason, that there is one payment out of the vote that is made as an extra payment to the patent examiner who had charge of the work and who was specially qualified and who was given charge of it when it commenced. He has a regular salary as a first class clerk in the department, but during this work he was given an extra payment which had to be given him contrary to the regulation of the Civil Service Act. That covers the point as well as the fact that some employees are not members of the civil service and not under civil service rules.

Fumigating stations, $3,500.

Mr. CLANCY. The country will look for some explanation as to the progress that is being made in that work and whether the hon. minister proposes to enlarge the operations.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been a slight enlargement of the operations. It was found that the station in British Columbia had to be kept open practically all winter, which involved extra expense. There was a larger number of passengers going through, and we have had to employ extra hands to do the work. Then, again, I found that this year we were not able to pay all the bills out of the vote of this year. There may be something like $150 in the vote asked for to cover the arrearage, and make the ensuing year's expenditure all right.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain to the committee what progress is being made for the purpose of arresting the ravages of the San José scale, and to prevent infected plants from coming into Canada, which I understand now undergo a process of fumigation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My department has not undertaken in any way to try to stamp out the scale in this country, except that my officers, at the various horticultural and agricultural meetings, have explained the best methods of treating it. In the province of Ontario the local government have taken steps to try to stamp out the pest where it is in existence. The purpose of our government has been to prevent the importation of the pest into the country ; and I venture to say positively that in no case has an instance been found in Canada, since the passage of the Act under which this vote is administered, of the introduction of the San José scale from foreign countries. I think, therefore, we may congratulate ourselves that the action of parliament in passing that Act and in arranging for fumigation at certain ports, has been successful. The work has been carried out in such a way as to accomplish the object parliament had in passing the Act.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. From what countries does fumigated stock come in ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From the United States chiefly. The United States, Australia, Japan and the Hawaiian Islands are the places mentioned in the regulations and the Order in Council from which plants are prohibited without fumigation. Those are the countries which at present are known to be infested by this scale.

Mr. SMITH. Is not the stock taken out of the boxes at the fumigating stations ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, it is unpacked from the boxes, put into a tight chamber and fumigated, and then repacked and sent on.

Mr. SMITH. At what ports is it fumigated ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The ports are Vancouver, Winnipeg, Windsor, Niagara Falls, St. John's, Quebec and St. John, New Brunswick.

Mr. SMITH. Then stock coming into Nova Scotia has to come through St. John to be fumigated ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. There is only one port in the maritime provinces where they are fumigated. As a matter of fact our records show that nearly all the stock that comes into Nova Scotia comes from the United States. It has been suggested that a port should be established also in Nova Scotia, but on investigation into the actual facts of the trade, it did not seem to me that it would be justified by the amount of stock imported, which comes just as cheaply through the port of St. John.

For renewing and improving the Canadian exhibit at Imperial Institute, London, $3,000.

Mr. MONK. What is going to be done in the way of improving these exhibits ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Imperial Institute, I confess, at the present moment, is in rather an uncertain condition. Hon. gentlemen are no doubt aware that the Imperial Institute was organized at the time of Her Majesty's jubilee, under the leadership and patronage of the then Prince of Wales. The Imperial Institute of London is established for the purpose of affording an opportunity of exhibiting colonial products. At that time the Dominion of Canada was invited to subscribe towards establishing an exhibit. This was before the incumbency of the present government. At that time the government declined to take it up, and relegated the matter to the provincial governments. Most, if not all, the provincial governments in Canada have taken part in arrangements for the Imperial Institute. They have not, however, maintained their exhibits in that high state of efficiency which seems to be necessary. Over and over again Canadian visitors at London have complained of the condition of Canadian exhibits in that institute. The high commisisoner, Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, who is one of the board of directors of that institute, and who was the representative on that board from Canada, has over and over again referred to the condition and the character of the Canadian exhibit as being not at all in consonance with the dignity and importance of this country, and with its material resources. When in England a few years ago I came to the same conclusion, and discussed the matter with Lord Strathcona. I took upon myself to recommend to my colleagues that this parliament should be asked to vote a sum to aid in the establishment of that institute. But just about the time that was done, and soon after the first vote was taken here, the Imperial Institute passed into what I might almost term a condition of crisis. It dragged along for a couple of years. We did, however, subscribe a certain amount, and we spent a sum of money in establishing some further exhibits there, and rehabilitating a good many that were already there and making them more attractive. The institute has now passed under the control of the board of trade of the imperial government. Quite recently I received an official intimation from Lord Strathcona of this fact, and was made acquainted with the methods and management of the institute to be adopted in the future. I have not yet had an opportunity of going into the new conditions and the new arrangements, but I understand that they will tend greatly to increase the usefulness of the Imperial Institute from a commercial and trade point of view. I think therefore that it is well that we should continue to try and make the Canadian exhibit a creditable one, and in consonance with the importance of this colony and the importance of representing our products in the centre of the empire. I cannot now give any details as to how this money will be spent.

Mr. CLANCY. I think that on two or three other occasions we have had promises from the hon. gentleman that looked quite as rosy as the one he has just made us. He has stated that for years our exhibit there has been anything but creditable to Canada and to those who are connected with it. I understand that the provinces generally have abandoned their support of the imperial institute. I understand that the building is in an out of the way place that its whole surroundings are of a forbidding character and the Canadians would not find it a matter of interest to go there at all. Now, after so long a time, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman ought to abandon this. When I say abandon it, I am not speaking of any grant of money that we are making because it is a very small sum, but I say abandon it because it is a perfectly useless institution. Will the hon. gentleman tell the committee how that $3,000 has been spent each year; under whose control and for what purpose it has been spent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite agree that it has been a long time under consideration and under discussion, but this is due entirely to the fact that the transference of the institute from the old board of management to the Board of Trade in England has been dragging along. Until new arrangements are accomplished and we can know what arrangements are to be made, we cannot formulate any plans as to what we shall do in reference to an exhibit. One of the things I adhered to when I was in England was the establishment of an office in the city. The institute itself is in South Kensington; removed from the city and partly at my instance and after discussion with Lord Strathcona the authorities of the institute undertook to rent part of the building in east Cheap St. right down in the city where exhibits should be made from time to time of special lines with somebody in charge to explain to those engaged in those particular lines the value of them and to give information in regard to them. I pledged myself on behalf of Canada to contribute £100 to the rent of the office, and we have paid that for a couple of years.

Mr. CLANCY. Out of this vote ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why not do this in connection with immigration work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has nothing to do with immigration work. The object of the Imperial Institute has been for furthering commercial projects.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. minister removed the exhibit from the Imperial Institute ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is at the Imperial Institute ? I understand that all the Canadian exhibits have been taken away from the Imperial Institute. Nobody ever goes there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is a little mistaken in that. There has been no removal of Canadian exhibits from the Imperial Institute that I am aware of.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Then what does the hon. minister say has been done ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Provision has been made in the city to make exhibits of a temporary character. For instance, for a couple of weeks, or three weeks, an exhibit of canned goods will be made and the canned goods trade will be invited to come That will be taken away and then there will be an exhibit of dressed poultry, then an exhibit of Canadian butter and cheese, then an exhibit of Canadian hams and bacon, or whatever there might happen to be available which could be effectively exhibited for the purpose of attracting attention to our Canadian products. That has never been done in the Imperial Institute at all. It would be ineffective and the institute would not be suitable for an exhibition of that kind. But, I am satisfied if arrangements can be made in the city such as we are talking of, that effective work of that kind can be done. In consequence of the transference of the Imperial Institute from the old board of management to the board of trade, delay has taken place. The discussion lasted for two years until recently when I received a communication from Lord Strathcona that the official transference had been made, but I do not know as yet what the new arrangements are which have been put in force. Until we know what they are we cannot formulate any plan in regard to making an exhibit.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman any report from Lord Strathcona of the plans adopted by the institute ? The hon. gentleman will see the perfect uselessness of voting money, not because we are indisposed to vote that money, but it does seem a waste of money and a waste of time to drag a matter of that kind along for the time during which it has been dragging. I would like the hon. gentleman to say what contributions have been made to the Imperial Institute, and from what quarter support has been given. We are paying now the small sum of $3,000. The sum, I may say again, is not worth discussing in that light, but it is important if we are to have an institute of that kind, that it shall perform good work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We paid last year £100 sterling towards the rent of the office in the city. We are pledged, I think, to the same contribution this current year. In addition to that, after the Glasgow and Wolverhampton exhibitions, a large number of the exhibits which had been utilized there were turned over for the purpose of the Imperial Institute. They were cleaned up and worked over, and put into such a state as to be presentable and suitable for establishment in the Imperial Institute.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the nature of the articles of Canadian produce or manufacture ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The exhibits are chiefly in minerals and forestry. The agricultural exhibits were not in sufficiently good condition at the end of these exhibitions to be available, and we propose to prepare and send over specially during this season a number of agricultural exhibits for erection and establishment in the Imperial Institute. But, I do not feel that I can make any definite plans in regard to our exhibit there until I know what the arrangements are which the new management intend to carry out. I have received information from Lord Strathcona of the official transference and with that information he gives me an outline of the management and organization under the board of trade, but no definite information as to any plans that may have been worked out in regard to the exhibits themselves. I will have to communicate with him and get information in regard to that before I can formulate any definite plans.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman say what contributions have been made other than those made by Canada towards the support of that institution ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The other colonies, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and some of the smaller dependencies have exhibits in the Imperial Institute and they contribute towards its support. Our own provinces have been contributing regularly every year out of which the maintenance of their exhibits is paid for and also the payment of the salary of the Canadian curator, Mr. Harrison Watson with a small contribution additionally which I made last year to his salary.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not what I asked the hon. gentleman. I was aware, of course, that the colonies have each undertaken that. It has been stated that there has been a gradual falling off in these contributions. We have been contributing a small sum for many years. Can the minister state what sums are being contributed from all the other sources ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The contribution from Canada has been rather smaller than from other colonies in proportion to our wealth and importance. Speaking from memory, the contribution of the provinces amounts to something like $2,500 a year.

Mr. MONK. Have we to pay this sum each year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are only pledged for this year, and that pledge is a conditional one.

Tracadie Lazaretto, $5,500.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this institution doing a useful work which warrants this vote every year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is a work of absolute necessity. It was established before confederation, and was taken over by the Dominion government from the province of New Brunswick. The patients are not confined to the province of New Brunswick, and there are at present twenty patients. It is a curious fact that the number has varied very little for many years.

Mr. CLANCY. It has been stated in the press that a great number of them were Chinamen.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that there is a single Chinaman there, or that there has been. There are some in the Lazaretto in British Columbia, but that is not under my department. Most of the patients from Tracadie come from the lower provinces, but on one or two occasions lepers have been sent from the west.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it not the duty of the province to look after these lepers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think there is any obligation on the Dominion to take charge of lepers except those in the maritime provinces. I will not speak positively as to the legal aspect of the question.

Public works—Health Act, $4,000.

Mr. CLANCY. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Some years ago this parliament passed an Act for the purpose of protecting the health of employees on public works, by seeing that the employers provided proper sanitary arrangements for their employees, and especially in cases where there was no municipal organization. An inspector was appointed to see that the provisions of the Act were carried out, and his report appears in the annual report of my department.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that apply only to where there is no municipal or provincial organization ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speaking from memory, I think that the Act would cover places where there is a municipal organization, but where the employees are not living in the ordinary way, but are camping on the works.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say how much was voted last year, how much was expended, and how it was expended ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that $2,150 was expended last year. During the current year, up to the 1st of June, $2,233 was expended.

Mr. CLANCY. For what purpose ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The expenditure was entirely the salary and travelling expenses of the inspector, Mr. Charles Fisher, of Montreal. He makes Montreal his headquarters.

Mr. CLANCY. Has he made a report ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is in the annual report of the Department of Agriculture, which has been laid on the Table.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, June 11, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. C. S. HYMAN (London) moved that the Order for the House in Committee on Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway be discharged, and that the report be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for further consideration. He said: The reason of my making this motion is that the committee, when the Bill was before it, adopted the following amendment:—

Provided always that before the construction of the prairie section is commenced, the location thereof shall be approved by the Governor in Council, and no part of such location shall be nearer than thirty miles to any constructed or located main line of any railway unless for special reasons to be named by the Order in Council, unless the Governor in Council may otherwise order.

While that was carried by the committee, the wording of it and the principle were left to be settled by the Minister of Railways and myself. As we find ourselves unable to bring the contending parties together and to get them to agree upon it, we think it is only fair, under the circumstances, that the Bill should be sent back to the committee for the purpose of discussing that clause.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The motion will stand till to-morrow.

Motion withdrawn.

REVISION OF RULES.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville) moved: That a select committee be appointed to confer with a similar committee to be appointed by the Senate for the purpose of revising rule 51 of the House of Commons and rule 49 of the Senate, and making them agree, with power to report from time to time; the committee to be composed of the following members: Johnston (Cape Breton), Lancaster, Turgeon, Wilson and the mover.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the rules, and what is the difference which is proposed to be adjusted?

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) In answer to the hon. leader of the opposition, I may say that the regulations governing the notices required by parliament in connection with private Bills are no longer what they should be. The Committee on Standing Orders, on examining the notices given in the newspapers regarding private Bills, came to the conclusion that the rule in this regard should be amended. For instance, the committee are of opinion that it is unnecessary to have these notices given for such a long period of time. Moreover, they found out that a difficulty arose in the case of a railway or any company whose business extended over more than one district. In accordance with the regulation now in force, notices should appear in every county in each district, while the committee think it would be sufficient to issue such notices in one only. This same difficulty arose formerly, and a similar committee was appointed. It is for the purpose of definitely settling this matter that it is proposed to appoint the committee referred to in the motion.

INSPECTION AND SALE OF SEEDS.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 200) respecting inspection and sale of seeds.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fisher) be good enough to state briefly the purport of the Bill?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Bill is for the purpose of trying to remedy some defects, and I might almost say grievances, in connection with the sale of agricultural seeds. In consequence of complaints and facts that came to the knowledge of the department some two years ago the department has been carrying on a good deal of investigation into the business of the sale of agricultural seeds, especially in this country. A condition of affairs was found which showed that there is a great deal of seed sold which is not full value for what is paid for it, and the people who purchase it in many instances are—I will not say imposed upon, perhaps, because I do not think for a moment that there is any intention or desire to commit fraud—but from ignorance and carelessness are not getting what they think they are getting. I believe that the evil has reached a magnitude in this country that requires a certain amount of regulation, and it is the purpose of this Bill to provide for such regulation. When the Bill is printed and before hon. members, it will be, perhaps, more suitable and convenient for me to go into the details more fully than at the present time.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—STATION AT CHARLOTTETOWN.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Hackett—asked:

1. Have any communications, or recommendations, been received by the government with regard to the building of a new railway station at Charlottetown, P.E.I., and for the extending of the railway along the water front, to afford more facilities for shipping ?

2. What are the names of the parties sending such communications, or making recommendations ?

3. Has the government decided on a site for the new station ? And if so, where will it be situated ?

4. Is it the intention of the government to extend the railway along the water front ?

5. Has the government stipulated that the city of Charlottetown shall provide the right of way for said extension ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes.

2. Board of Trade, Charlottetown, Horace Haszard, D. A. MacKinnon. Petition signed by the Mayor, merchants and other residents of Charlottetown.

3. No.

4. The matter is under consideration.

5. It is thought that the railway should be provided with the right of way for the track extension along the water front free of charge.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—SEMAPHORE LIGHTS.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Has the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway forbidden the use of semaphore lights where heretofore used on said railway ?

2. If so, will not the discontinuance of the lights lead to the possibility of accidents occurring at crossings, &c.?

3. What is the practice with regard to such lights on the other government railways ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. At certain stations along the line of the Prince Edward Island Railway instructions have been given not to light the semaphore lights.

2. It is considered that accidents are not likely to arise by the non-use of semaphore lights at these stations.

3. Wherever it is considered necessary lights are maintained at stations on the government railways where the traffic seems to demand them.

OFFICERS OF PERMANENT CORPS.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth) asked :

Will those officers who qualified for appointment under general order 86, 1896, and for promotion under general order 75, 1899, and whose brevet rank of captain was withheld until they had passed the latter, be required to pass again, for substantive rank of captain, under general order 30, 1903 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). The following answer has been placed in my hands by the Adjutant General : All subaltern officers of the permanent corps who qualified under G. O. 86, of 1896, must pass for the substantive rank of captain under G. O. 30, 1903. Had any qualified under G. O. 75, of 1899, they would not be required to pass again, but none have done so.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Are compositors, or typesetting machine operators, who do not belong to the typographical union, permitted to work in the composing room of the Government Printing Bureau ; and if so, how many such men are now employed there ?

2. Were the demands recently made by the compositors in the Government Printing Bureau for an increase of wages submitted to the fair-wage officer of the Labour Bureau to report upon ? And if so, did he report favourably or unfavourably upon the demand ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1. All the compositors and typesetting machine operators in the Bureau belong to the Typographical Union.

2. No ; the Typographical Union adopted a scale without any conference with the government and announced that it would be in operation on and after the first day of June. The government declined, under the circumstances, to recognize the scale and the subject matter was not referred to the fair-wage officer of the Department of Labour.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—HILLSBOROUGH BRIDGE.

Mr. HACKETT asked :

1. Was the contract or agreement between the government of Canada and province of Prince Edward Island, with regard to the Hillsborough Bridge, prepared by the Department of Railways and Canals ?

2. Was the whole cost of preparing the said agreement paid by the province of Prince Edward Island ?

3. Is the province made liable for damages in cases of accidents at the approach to said bridge ?

4. Are vehicles allowed to cross the bridge when trains are crossing the same ?

5. If not, what time is allowed between crossing of trains and permitting vehicles on bridge?

6. Is the provincial government to provide and maintain the approaches to said bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. No, but in consultation with the law clerk of this department.

2. Cannot say. The Dominion government, however, paid nothing.

3. No.

4. No.

6. No.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—EARNINGS, WORKING EXPENSES AND CAPITAL EXPENDITURE.

Mr. BARKER asked :

1. What is the latest date up to which the Minister of Railways and Canals has received interim reports of the gross earnings and working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway since July, 1902 ?

2. What, according to such reports, have been the approximate gross earnings and working expenses of the railway from 1st July, 1902, to the date of such latest reports ?

3. What sum has been expended upon the Intercolonial Railway on capital account from 1st July, 1902, to the date of the latest interim report ; and what is the date of such report ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. April 30th, 1903.

2. Gross earnings for ten months ended April 30th, 1903, $5,292,639.69. Working expenses for ten months ended April 30th, 1903, $5,288,763.56.

3. Amount expended on capital account from 1st July, 1902, to the 30th April, 1903 is $910,576.99.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he has anything to announce to the House as to the action of the government in regard to the tenders which have been received for the Fast Atlantic service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Not to-day.

MONTREAL HARBOUR—ADVANCES TO THE HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

House went in committee on the following proposed resolution.

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide as follows :—

1. The Governor in Council may from time to time advance and pay to the corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal (hereinafter called 'the corporation'), in addition to the moneys authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by chapter 10 of the statutes of 1896 (first session), and by chapter 47 of the statutes of 1898, and by chapter 9 of the statutes of 1901, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of three million dollars, as are required to enable the corporation to construct such further terminal facilities as are necessary properly to equip the port of Montreal.

2. No such advances shall be made unless the plans, specifications and estimates for the works to be performed by the corporation, and on which the money so to be advanced is to be expended, have first been submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council.

3. The corporation shall, upon any advance being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General debentures of the corporation equal to par value to the advance so made (which debentures the corporation are hereby authorized to issue), and such debentures so issued shall be of such amounts as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General determines, and shall bear date on the day when such advance is made, and shall be repayable within twenty-five years from the date of their issue, and in the meantime shall bear interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, such interest to be payable half yearly on the first day of July and the first day of January in each year.

4. The principal and interest of the sums advanced under the authority of this Act to the corporation shall be paid by the corporation out of its revenue mentioned in section 8 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1896 (first session), and shall be a charge upon the said revenue in the same manner and to the same extent as if the sums so advanced had been borrowed by the corporation under the said chapter 10.—The Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). With the increasing and very rapid growth of the trade of the country, there has arisen necessity for better means of transportation and better terminal facilities at our ports, especially at the port of Montreal, which handles such a very large proportion of the total trade of the country. We have been aiding the port of Montreal during recent years by granting loans to the Harbour Commissioners to enable them to provide the necessary facilities. Going back as far as the year 1896, provision was made for a loan of $2,000,000 which was intended not only to deal with works which were then in hand but also to pay off some existing indebtedness. In 1898 provision was made for a further advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal of $2,000,000, and in the year 1901, a further advance of $1,000,000. So that by these three separate Acts of 1896, 1898 and 1901 authority was taken for the advance from time to time of sums aggregating $5,000,000. A portion of this was advanced at three and a half per cent, but the latter portion at three per cent. The advances made by the government under the authority of these Acts, up to a recent date, amount to $3,450,000—$2,000,000 of this was advanced under the earlier Acts at three and a half per cent and $1,450,000 under the later Acts at three per cent. Therefore there would be a balance available to the commissioners at present out of existing authorized loans of $1,550,000. Against that, however, the commissioners have entered into certain contracts and have works in contemplation which it is understood will absorb nearly all that sum, leaving about $294,000 which they have not applied to any work already authorized. Under the legislation now proposed, the commissioners will have available this sum of $294,000 out of the past advances, over and above their present contracts, and $3,000,000 under the proposed resolution now before the committee. The purposes to which it is contemplated to apply this money as stated by the commissioners is as follows :

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Estimates of amounts required to carry out improvements.

Two-storey steel wharf sheds, including elevated roadways and ramps leading thereto, and conveyors complete on the Alexandria, King Edward and Jacques Cartier piers and shore wharfs at sections 12, 13 and 17, covering an area of 642,195 square feet and giving a floor space on the two storeys of 1,284,390 square feet...		$2,363,000 00
Paving wharfs—
Alexandria, King Edward and Jacques Cartier piers..	$ 97,125
Shore wharfs between the entrance to the Lachine canal and Victoria pier.	246,925
Shore wharf between Victoria pier and the lower end of section 27..	242,835
		586,885 00
Raising the wharf on the south-west side of Windmill Point basin to high level, as per plans, specifications and estimate approved by the Hon. the Minister of Public Works..		130,000 00
Additional railway tracks on the wharfs between the entrance to the Lachine canal and the lower end of section 27..		79,000 00
Floating crane..		50,000 00
New steel tug		25,000 00
		$3,298,885 00
Less—
Balance of advance of $1,000,000 authorized by Act 1 Edward VII., chap. 9, 1901, available after providing for the payment of the amount of contracts for grain elevator, &c., &c., entered into $705,543.50..		294,456 50
Estimated amount required..		$3,004,428 50

These sums aggregate $3,298,885, against which they will have $3,000,000 applied for by the present legislation and the balance of nearly $300,000 under past authority. There will, I am sure, be no question on the part of the House as to the readiness of the government and parliament to afford all reasonable assistance to provide these facilities at the great port of Montreal. Perhaps, I should say, although it is hardly necessary, that the interest of these loans in the past has in all cases been promptly met by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners. They have from time to time met their obligations and they represent to us now that with the growing business of the port they will be able to meet the larger obligations which this resolution creates. As I have pointed out, two-thirds of this proposed loan, over $2,000,000, is to be applied to the construction of steel sheds, and they estimate that these sheds will yield a rental which will amply compensate them and enable them to provide the interest. They also represent that as respects the balance of the indebtedness the increasing business of Montreal will enable them to provide for it as they have done so promptly in the past. The trade which passes over the wharfs in Montreal is of course not the trade of Montreal itself but the trade of the whole Dominion, and the charges that are levied upon it have in the past enabled the commissioners to obtain a liberal revenue and to meet all their obligations. They are satisfied that with the increased business of the country they will continue to meet these obligations. The government, feeling satisfied that these representations are well founded, and that the object is one in which the House will readily concur, have brought forward this resolution asking that a further sum of $3,000,000 may be advanced to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal for the purposes stated and on the same terms and conditions as the grants of former years.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). There is no doubt that we cannot stand still in providing facilities for the port of Montreal, but that we must continue the improvements begun there, and these improvements, before they are finished, will cost a very considerable amount. I doubt very much, in spite of the details which the hon. minister has given us, whether it will be possible, with the sum of $3,000,000, to carry out these improvements to the very end.

But what I wish to call the attention of the government and of the committee to is the fact that we have adopted with respect to the port of Montreal a very singular policy. We are accumulating upon that unfortunate port an immense indebtedness; and the harbour commissioners, as the hon. minister has stated, have always been ready to meet their obligations when they have become due. I calculate that when this sum of $3,000,000 has been raised for the port of Montreal, that port will be indebted in the sum of $10,222,000, upon which it is impossible to conceive, if we are to make a success of that port, that the harbour commissioners shall be able to pay the interest, without reference to the considerable sum required every year for maintenance. If we are to meet that indebtedness and to maintain the port after we have finished it, we shall have to place charges against the port which will render it anything but a free port, and place it on a footing of inferiority to all the other ports on the continent of North America. The interest on that sum of $10,222,000, when we shall have spent it—and we must move for the spending of the $3,000,000 now being loaned without delay—will amount to $351,000 a year.

Let us look at the position of that port in the last three or four years. In 1901 the indebtedness of the port of Montreal for improvements, partly from loans advanced by the government, and partly from advances obtained otherwise, amounted to $4,372,000, bearing, I think, about 3⅞ per cent. The annual interest charge was $176,032, and we paid for maintenance and repairs, $128,375; making a total expenditure in that year of $305,207; and our revenue was only $270,411. So that in the year 1901, even with this comparatively small indebtedness, we had a deficit of over $34,000. To-day the indebtedness of the port of Montreal amounts to $5,672,000, and we still have power to borrow, if I am not mistaken, $1,550,000. That is to say, at the present moment the borrowing power of the harbour commissioners amounts to $7,222,000. I have stated that I do not think, from my limited experience, though from close observation, that it is possible, even with this $3,000,000 referred to by the minister, and with the balance mentioned, for the port of Montreal to be fully equipped, as it was intended to be equipped, with all modern conveniences. I fix upon $12,000,000 rather than $10,222,000 as the amount which the port will have to incur in the way of debt before it can be equipped with modern improvements; and this would represent an annual interest charge on the port of $400,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is possible for the port of Montreal to meet that charge. It would cease absolutely to be a free port. Revenue would have to be gathered everywhere, in every imaginable way, and even then, unless the charges were absolutely exorbitant, we could not possibly raise that sum of $400,000 a year to pay interest on this indebtedness.

What I wish to call the government's attention to is this, that it seems to me we are proceeding otherwise with Montreal than we ought to do, and otherwise than we are proceeding with everything else connected with the transportation system. We have given a large amount of money to railways in the west. We have equipped or we are equipping ports on the great lakes at considerable expense. It has been admitted in the House that that equipment is necessary, and that we must be prepared to compete with our American neighbours in that respect. We have spent millions in improving the St. Lawrence route, so as to enable the commerce of the west to find an exit through that route; and recently we have taken off the canal tolls. Our object ought to be, with the advantages which nature has given us, to make transportation as easy and as cheap as possible, and to provide ports for ocean going vessels. It has been said, and I think with a great deal of truth, that we are not in a position to handle in the port of Montreal the freight from the west which nature intended we should receive, even if we had that freight. It has been said time and again that if we had a great inflow of grain into the port of Montreal, that port would be choked in a short space of time. So that it seems to me that the disposition of the government, however generous it may be, to lend money to the harbour commissioners for the equipment of that port, is contrary to sound policy. I cannot repeat it too often, that we ought, starting from the west, to have a policy of transportation clearly expressed by the government. We voted yesterday a very large amount of money for a railway in the west, and hon. members will notice that we had no declaration from the government, although it was insistently called for by the leader of the opposition, as to what link in the chain or scheme of transportation that railway was going to supply; and I have never heard, since I have had the advantage of sitting in this House, any clear declaration of policy in regard to transportation from this government. The reason is that it is impossible for the government to arrive at a clear, economic conclusion with regard to this great question, which interests us so much, without incurring the displeasure or disfavour of certain localities in this country. And yet, if there is a question perhaps more important than the question of protection, which has been so much discussed lately in this House, it is this question of transportation; and, strange to say, whereas everywhere else expense is incurred by the government with the object no doubt, of furthering in some way the attainment of that great national aim, when you come to the port of Montreal, you proceed upon a method which must inevitably it seems to me, lead to difficulty.

Unless at a future day the government is prepared to abandon its claim on the harbour commissioners, it seems to me that the bankruptcy of that port will be inevitable or the commissioners will have to impose charges on the shipping and thus take away from that port its national and free character. It is not merely the port of Montreal that is concerned. Our transportation system begins in the extreme west and ends on the continent of Europe. It has several stages. The stage represented by an ocean port is not confined to the port of Montreal. There is the important port of Quebec lower down, and if we are to have a winter port, then we must find that port on the coast and be prepared to equip it as we now find it necessary to equip the port of Montreal. It is therefore no sectional question I am raising, but the question of transportation in one of its phases and I venture to say that if we are to be saddled with this additional indebtedness, we will never be able to meet the interest and will have to go into bankruptcy. It seems to me therefore that it would be better for this government to make up its mind now as to the character to be given the port of Montreal, and if it should cost us $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, or even, as the equipment of many ports elsewhere have cost, $20,000,000 or $25,000,000, we should be prepared to incur that expense in order that the important obligations we are about to undertake with respect to railways for the purpose of bringing freight from the west may prove fruitful and give to this country all the benefits we are entitled to expect from the investment. It seems to me that the government is lacking in frankness. It seems to me that it would be better for the government, instead of spending vast sums on wharfs in divers sections of the country, to concentrate its efforts on one, two or three ports, and place them in such a position as to be able, without making any charge to handle the very considerable amount of freight which must come from the west unless our expectations should be sadly disappointed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I am afraid that the suggestion of my hon. friend that we should abandon expenditure on wharfs elsewhere and concentrate all our expenditure in that connection on the port of Montreal is not one which would meet with general favour in this House. The alarm of my hon. friend regarding the bankruptcy of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners is not at all shared by the commissioners themselves. His suggestion is that these sums, which we are providing by way of a loan, should be presented as a free gift, and that the services which, under this scheme, will receive some compensation by way of a tax on the trade, shall be performed free. Let us see what these services are. About $1,000,000 of the loan will go into an elevator. Now elevator services are not free elsewhere: why should they be free in Montreal? Elsewhere elevators charge a reasonable compensation when service is rendered.

Mr. MONK. Are they not free in St. John and Halifax, or so low that there is not much revenue?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think that elevator services are given anywhere free. There are cases where a railway has an elevator on its line, and the elevator charge is included in the freight, but in all cases elevators are recognized as public utilities which may reasonably charge some compensation for the services they render. I do not think it would be wrong to say that a reasonable tax should be paid on grain for elevator service in Montreal. $2,000,000 out of the $3,000,000 are to be expended in building warehouses in Montreal, which is a very proper and necessary service in the handling of traffic. But we do not generally find warehouses supplied free elsewhere. Why should they be supplied free in Montreal?

Mr. MONK. Because they are simply sheds.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A shed that costs $2,000,000 is a very respectable kind of warehouse. The harbour commissioners do not share my hon. friend's alarm. They recognize that if they own a two million dollar warehouse, it is not unreasonable to ask the people who use it to pay a small charge, and they are satisfied that out of this small charge they will be able to pay the interest on the cost. They are satisfied that if these sheds, which are to cost over $2,000,000, be rented on terms which would not impose any undue burden on the trade, they will yield a sufficient return to enable the commissioners to pay the interest on their cost. If those who use warehouses elsewhere have to pay rent, why should they not have to pay rent when they use warehouses in Montreal? My hon. friend will find on reflection that, in his praiseworthy desire to advance the interests of the great city in which he lives, he is a bit unreasonable. The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, who have given this matter their careful attention, are satisfied that, with the increasing trade of the country, they will be able to meet the interest. The government, in advancing the money at the low rate of 3 per cent, is certainly doing something which, I am sure, will be appreciated, but unless it can be shown that charges, such as rentals for the use of these warehouses and of elevators, are excessive, my hon. friend has not much of a case. I do not think that the people of Montreal will be so unreasonable as to expect to be provided with free warehouses and elevators. In advancing this money at a low rate of interest this government and parliament are following out the policy which originated with our predecessors, and in my opinion the people of Montreal will be less alarmed than my hon. friend and more willing to recognize the liberal manner in which we are dealing with that great port.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). The question raised by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has a wider scope than the hon. Minister of Finance seems to imagine. It is not a Montreal question. I have no doubt that my hon. friend knows that last year the trade in the port of Montreal, export and import, reached the very large amount of $191,000,000—nearly half the trade of the whole country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not nearly half, but thirty-five per cent.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, let us say thirty-five per cent. But that in itself is a pretty large amount of money. My hon. friend, if he allows me to say so in all deference, takes a narrow view of the situation. He tells us that we must not expect that Montreal shall have free harbour accommodation. It is not Montreal that is asking that, but the trade of the country. Why did my hon. friend a few weeks ago, consent to have free canals this year? For the very excellent reason that he wished to help in developing trade through Canadian channels. The government holds the Canadian system of canals on which we have spent about $70,000,000. We are further equipping the entrance to the canals at federal expense; we are equipping, at federal expense our harbours on the lakes. We have not done enough. Let us do more. But why, I ask, does the Minister of Finance wish to put a stop to the trade at Montreal?—for that is what it means. Raising a loan means paying the interest on that loan. I am sure that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) did not intend to convey the idea that the harbour commissioners of Montreal were going into bankruptcy. There is no fear of that; but there is fear, and well-founded fear, that if we go on piling up debts upon the port of Montreal the trade will go elsewhere. I believe that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is perfectly right when he says that Montreal is treated as no other port in the country is treated. The port of Quebec started borrowing money; the trade did not materialize; the interest is not being paid, and the port of Quebec cannot pay it. I do not blame them for not paying the interest—the trade does not afford the means of paying the interest. I would be perfectly ready to spend more money in Quebec, if it were necessary. But I say that it is a narrow policy—and I say it in no offensive manner—to raise a wall against the trade of Montreal both import and export. But that is just what the Minister of Finance is doing now. He has mentioned the harbour board. I happen to have had long and frequent intercourse with that body; and I know that, this year, the harbour commissioners were anxious not to borrow any more. But they have been informed, officially or unofficially, that they could not succeed in getting money. I have been told by several of them that that is the reason they have been obliged to accept a loan. I believe they are making a mistake. I have said it elsewhere, and I say here, that they should not have made a loan—they should not have consented to do so. Had they taken this position the government would have been responsible for the refusal to equip the port at federal expense as it ought to do, not in the interest of Montreal, but in the interest of the country at large. Now, there is no use in making long speeches; it is a very clear question. Are we going to have Canadian trade through Canadian channels? If that is what we want, let us take the means to bring it about, and one of the means necessary is to make our ports as free as possible. I agree with the Minister of Finance that we must not expect to have free elevators, to have free wharfage. But my hon. friend must not lose sight of one thing, and that is that, besides the interest on debts incurred, there is a very large expenditure of money for maintenance. It will always be necessary to raise money for that purpose. In my humble opinion, the government should assume the port of Montreal and deal with it as a great national problem, just as we deal with our great system of canals. Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax should be national harbours. In point of fact we have dealt with several of them—with all of them—partially in that way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not all.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, I said partially—that is the word I used.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But what the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said was that we had dealt with all of them partially as national harbours. I take exception to that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) say what exception he takes?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I take exception to that as applied to the port of St. John. All that the government has done at the port of St. John is to furnish railway accommodation. In the way of constructing piers and wharfs, it has done nothing whatever.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Unless my eyes have greatly deceived me, I have seen at the port of St. John wharfs——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For railway purposes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Oh, well, my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) is drawing a red herring across the trail. And a very poor herring it is. Why my hon. friend himself has spent over $2,000,000 in St. John on wharf accommodation, shed accommodation and elevator accommodation. And he has done more than that, he has spent in Halifax a large amount of money in providing accommodation for which there is no trade. The elevator of Halifax costs this country a large amount of money every year. There is no trade for it. When it was built, we knew very well that there would not be much trade for it. I consented to the erection of that building, because I was of opinion then, as I am now, that the duty of a government is to go ahead of the trade, not to allow itself to lag behind it. I knew that the trade of Halifax would not come immediately. But that elevator in Halifax is an invitation to the trade. My hon. friend's elevator in St. John, I believe, is not doing very much either. But I do not care for that—the accommodation is there, and I have always supported him faithfully on the ground I have stated, that I believe in the complete and speedy equipment of our national harbours. Speaking from that standpoint, I do not hesitate to say that the policy of the government to-day is a mistaken policy. Why? We have spent, as I have said, $70,000,000 on our system of canals. We are going to spend millions upon millions to secure further railway accommodation. Where do we wish the trade to go? Through the St. Lawrence route. Mr. Hays, speaking elsewhere a few days ago said what is perfectly true, that we are providing accommodation in the west, but we do not do anything for 'the spout' in the east. The port of Montreal, as it is equipped to-day cannot handle the trade that is coming to it. If my hon. friend would do us the pleasure of visiting our harbour now, he would find that there is not enough accommodation. A few days ago there were fifty large steamers in the port of Montreal. We are developing, deepening, widening the St. Lawrence river; we are lighting it in a first-class manner; we are going to spend even more money than we have spent in the past in completing all our other equipment. Yet, at the very most important strategic point we put up a wall against the trade. There is no sense in such policy. The government of which I was lately a member understood the position better in the past than it does to-day, because they agreed to a proposition of mine which is now being carried out, to complete, at federal expense, the harbour accommodation in the eastern portion of the port of Montreal. And what has been the result of that wise policy that my hon. friends followed with me in the past? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have located in the eastern part of Montreal their large works, works that will employ about eight thousand people. The Grand Trunk Railway Company, in view of the improvements going on in Montreal, have agreed to erect an elevator and warehouses. Is not this the best evidence that when we move in the path of progress we are rewarded immediately?

I am very much surprised at the statement made by the Minister of Finance a few minutes ago. He said: You cannot expect to have freight sheds. What he calls sheds are a necessary equipment of the harbour, that you find in every port in the world. Go to any well equipped harbour, and you will find that a bare wharf is not an equipment; you must have warehouses, you must have trade, you must have all the modern appliances that have made such nations as Germany, France, England and the United States so successful in the trade of the world. To the south of us we have neighbours who have magnificently equipped harbours. Why should we not have the same? Trade has been diverted from us, a great deal of our own trade is finding its way through American channels. When trade has once been diverted it is a difficult thing to get it back. The only thing we have to do is to give better rates, better accommodation, just as good rates and accommodation as other nations are giving. Unless we make up our minds to give as low rates as possible, to give as good equipment as money can make, we cannot expect to be rewarded to any large extent for the expenditure we are incurring now. Parliament was asked yesterday to guarantee for thirty years a loan for $9,000,000 for a railway in the west. That railway company will not send their trade to the St. Lawrence route unless you give them good rates. That railway company goes through Minnesota, Duluth is very near by, the United States routes are available; and I say again that unless you make the St. Lawrence route cheap, commodious and safe, you cannot expect trade.

Now, I think that on reflection the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches will admit that the views that I am stating—not now for the first time, I have stated them when I was their colleague, privately and on the floor of parliament—are correct views. When I was Minister of Public Works I tried to carry out those views, and with the help and co-operation of the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues I succeeded in beginning improvements and the equipment of our harbours in nearly all parts of the country. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is not doing justice to the government when he says, when he seems to imply, that we have not done anything. It is not fair to speak in that way. Large things cannot be done in a day, but the beginning is there, and a good beginning it is. There has been great improvement in the port of Montreal. I obtained from this parliament the sanction of a vote of $1,000,000 for the port of Quebec. Three Rivers is being equipped. I went to the port of St. John last year, on an electoral occasion, when the Minister of Railways, speaking of my visit, said that I was a very pleasant little man, and had gone down to the sea to offer public works. I went down at the request of the citizens. of the board of trade, of the merchants, to look into the accommodation which is necessary. I have no hesitation in stating here that the government should equip at their own expense the port of St. John better than it has been equipped in the past. There is not enough accommodation there. They are doing it to some extent in granting, as we did some time ago, a three per cent guarantee to a private company for a dry-dock. But that is not doing what I would like to see done. The government should equip these harbours themselves. The Minister of Public Works should take hold of these national harbours. When I was a minister I was often accused of monopolizing things. I cannot be accused of such a desire now. There is no fear that I shall be minister again very soon, so I am speaking independently when I say that this is a genuine national policy that should be followed by this government. Whoever may be Minister of Public Works, as a rule, he understands his business and his duty. I would trust these large national undertakings to any Minister of Public Works, whoever he may be. Therefore, I earnestly beg the government to think twice over the position they are taking to-day. I quite understand that it is too late to recede from the position they have assumed in reference to the port of Montreal, although they are going back on what they have said in the past. Because the fact that we had agreed to build at national expense part of the equipment that is now being carried out in the port of Montreal, was a sanction of the principle that in future the port of Montreal would be treated as Port Colborne is treated, as Parry Sound is treated, as Fort William is treated, as Quebec is treated. I do not complain of the treatment afforded to these towns, I am glad to see it; I only want to remind the House and the country of the fact that Montreal is the most important port. It is really the largest port, and therefore should require our earnest aid. With these few remarks, Mr. Chairman, and reserving the privilege of dealing with the question again, I resume my seat.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I listened carefully to gather from the speeches of my hon. friends from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) exactly what position they were taking with regard to the resolution now before the committee. If I could come to any conclusion it was that they were not offering any particular opposition, but they were of the opinion that the port of Montreal was in some way being discriminated against, and was not being treated, if I heard their language correctly, as well as other ports throughout the country. I do not think the facts will bear that out. I believe this parliament has recently done a great deal towards developing the port of Montreal. The port of Montreal is not situated on the ocean, and in order to make it one of the great national ports of the Dominion it could not be treated in the same way as other places. Nor do I think the impression should be allowed to go abroad that the citizens of Montreal have done more towards the development of their harbour and shipping facilities than the citizens of any other port, large or small, throughout the country. I think if my hon. friend will make comparisons he will find that in many of the smaller ports on the lakes and on the ocean, the municipalities themselves have come forward and have contributed more to create the necessary facilities for shipping than the great city of Montreal has done. I mention that only because the point seems to have been raised and the impression given that this port is being discriminated against, and not treated as well as other places. In regard to the statement of my hon. friend that the harbour commissioners will be bankrupt if they are called upon to pay interest upon the advances that have been made in the past and that which it is now proposed to make, I do not think there is any danger whatever. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has answered that when he said that it was not the opinion of the harbour commissioners, because they have applied for this loan and they have shown from the resources of the past and from the resources which they will have in the future it will be quite easy for them to pay the interest upon the amount that has already been advanced and upon this $3,000,000, and retain something like $100,000 for the maintenance of the works under their charge. As to the treatment which has been accorded the harbour of Montreal in the past, I find, according to the books of the department, that over $13,000,000 has been expended on the port of Montreal. Out of that amount the parliament of Canada has contributed something over $8,000,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Upon loan.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, not upon loan. On the development of the ship channel and improvements to the harbour something over $8,000,000 have been spent. Does my hon. friend say that it is not necessary to make improvements to the ship channel ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I say that it is not any more necessary to the development of the trade of the country than the building of the canals is. Why do you not charge the canals also to the port of Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Trade might have gone to other ports. One would suppose to hear those who are speaking about Montreal that the citizens of Montreal were taxed to pay the charges and the interest upon this loan.

Mr. MONK. They pay a good deal of it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not take that view at all. I do not think any of them pay these charges, excepting those citizens who contribute to the trade of the country. The importers and exporters pay the fees that go to make up the interest that is paid upon these loans. I consider, so far as this large expenditure is concerned, that it is correctly chargeable to the port of Montreal. It may be said that this is a national port, that its development is necessary in the interest of the country, but the same thing can be said, in a comparative degree, regarding the development of any other port or channel throughout the country which is in the interest of the general trade of the country. Now, I am pointing this out because it appeared to me that there was a desire to give a wrong impression to the House and the country as to the actual state of affairs in regard to the improvements which have been made and which are being made at the port of Montreal. I think, whatever may be the future policy of the country in regard to this port, we are not prepared to say that every port in the country, both great and small, shall be declared to be free. As has been pointed out by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, the question as to what action may be taken towards decreasing the fees collected upon merchandise received and delivered at these ports may be one for consideration, but so far as the general benefit derived by the parties using the elevators, warehouses, sheds and other works that are provided by public contribution is concerned, I think it is only right that those directly using them should contribute something for the advantage which they derive from their use. In the meantime, at any rate, that will be continued as the policy of the government. The port of Montreal, as my hon. friend says, may not be fully equipped for all the trade that will come to it, but the advances which have been made in the past and the liberal advance now being made, I think, if properly expended, will put the port of Montreal in better shape than it is to-day for doing business. We all hope the development of the trade of the country will be such at the port of Montreal, that greater facilities and greater improvements will be required, and I have no doubt that when the time comes this House will be ready to support any proper suggestion that may be brought down for the continuance of the improvements. The completion of the improvements now suggested and for which this money will make provision, I think, will do a great deal towards making the port of Montreal just what my hon. friend said it should be—a great national port. The general question of transportation comes into speeches made on an occasion of this kind. I am always listening attentively to hear what practical suggestions may be made. It is all very well to get up in this House, or on the platform, and talk about the importance of the transportation question, but what we want are practical suggestions as to what would be the best policy to adopt. So far as I am concerned, my greatest desire at the present time is to gain information of a practical character, and that instead of discussing the question in an academic manner on the platform and in the House, we may have the advantage of listening to some practical, business-like suggestions that can be carried out to the advantage of the country.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). Mr. Chairman, I may state that I agree very largely with what the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) have said on the question of making the port of Montreal a national port and a free port. But we are met at the present time with the fact that we have to continue the improvements that we started some years ago. There is no other way to do it than by borrowing this $3,000,000, and there is no way we can get it without paying interest for it. I would have been very pleased if the government had seen their way clear to giving that money without charging any interest, but that is not the policy of the government at present, nor do I think that it was the policy of the preceding government. I must say that I think the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), in charging the cost of the St. Peter channel to Montreal, is hardly fair to us. I do not think it is any fairer that the Lake St. Peter channel should be chargeable to the city of Montreal than that the Welland canal should be chargeable to the city of Toronto. They are all canals. I have a very good authority on that question, the late lamented statesman that we all thought so much of, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. He said that the canals of this country should not be chargeable to any particular part of the country, but to the whole country, as the whole country is benefited by them. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, says that the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) takes a narrow view of matters pertaining to the city of Montreal. I will not quarrel with him in that statement, but I am rather surprised that the hon. gentleman, when he was Minister of Public Works, did not soften the hon. Minister of Finance towards the city of Montreal. That would have been the time for the hon. gentleman to have used his influence. Not only was he Minister of Public Works, but, if report says correctly, he was also the master of the administration, and as such surely that was the time for the hon. gentleman to have insisted upon the government doing their duty towards Montreal. I believe they have not done so. I believe no government has done so. It is a fact that up to the present day not one dollar of public money has been spent upon the harbour of Montreal for which interest has not been paid. It is true that the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works did start, and that the government are now continuing, the building of a portion of the harbour of Montreal at the public expense. It is not really in the city of Montreal, as the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, knows well. It is a good work that the government are carrying on, and we take no exception to it. It is not the intention of the harbour commissioners to raise the tolls. No man knows better than the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, that within the last two or three years the tolls have been reduced by from 20 to 25 per cent.

Mr. MONK. It would be impossible to raise them.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The hon. member for St. Mary's was consulted in the matter at that time. He thought the reduction was not enough and we cut down the tolls until there was a 40 per cent reduction. It would be impossible to reduce them further. The intention is to charge the steamship companies and they willingly agree to pay it if you give them first class double-decked steel sheds in which they can do their business at much less expense than they are doing it at now. We all know that the harbour of Montreal is very much congested and that goods are lying all over the wharfs. We will supply splendid storage facilities under this scheme and these men are willing to pay for that to the extent of the interest on the loan. Therefore if we spend $2,000,000 on sheds, these sheds will really pay for themselves. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in his statement that the port of Montreal is bankrupt at the present time. The port of Montreal has always paid every dollar of the interest on the advances made to it, and, Sir, I believe that if there was any danger of the port of Montreal becoming bankrupt the citizens of Montreal are loyal enough to their port to not allow it to become bankrupt. I believe the day is coming when not only the port of Montreal but all the ports of the Dominion, and especially those on the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic coast, will be made free to commerce. We must have free ports in Canada if we are going to compete successfully with the United States. There is no question about that, and I believe that this government will come to that conclusion. I think they see it now, but they are probably not just ready to do it, as no doubt there are a great many things they would like to do but cannot do at the present moment. But, Sir, I hope that next year the government will take over the port of Montreal and assume the debt. I hope they will do the same thing with Three Rivers, Sorel and Quebec. The only way in which we can keep the ports of Canada on a par with the ports in the United States is by making them free ports, and making the commerce of the country as free from tolls as possible. As to the elevator, I expect that it will pay its way when it gets running. We will then have a debt of between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000, but I must frankly say that it will not be sufficient to finish the work there. On the most conservative estimate I can make, it will take $12,000,000 to put the port of Montreal in good shape. If the government cannot see their way clear now to make Montreal a free port they might reduce the interest and if the debt were $12,000,000 and the interest were 2½ per cent there would be very little difficulty about raising the funds. Another thing the government might do is this: They might at least pay to the city of Montreal and the harbour commissioners the money they owe them. It is well known to the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that the government owes to the harbour at Montreal nearly $2,000,000, which was left over from the old Lake St. Peter debt, and which was charged up to the harbour commissioners. I trust that at an early date the government will pay this just debt which they owe to the port of Montreal.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) at the beginning of his speech said that when I was in office I should have commenced by getting public money for the port of Monteral, but knowing the facts as he does, he was obliged to correct that statement and to add that there are works at Montreal which have been carried out at the public expense, although he said these works were not in the port of Montreal proper. Well, the port of Montreal is the one thing.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I said they were not in the city of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman used the very words I attributed to him.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I did not mean it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I will take the hon. gentleman's correction. My hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) who is a harbour commissioner knows that to-day there is a very large trade which is being developed in the eastern portion of the harbour. When I was a minister I had the honour of bringing my colleagues to the principle that the port of Montreal as a national port should be equipped in future at the public expense. That work has been begun and my hon friend has expressed the hope that next year the government will give full recognition to that principle. I hope so. The hon. gentleman thought fit to allude to the fact that I was supposed to be the master of the administration. Well, the facts do not prove that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is of course quite true that every Prime Minister does not take the same severe view of his colleagues' speeches as the Prime Minister of Canada took of mine.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have on my desk a very important speech delivered yesterday in the Imperial House of Commons in which Mr. Balfour says very distinctly that he had no desire to discipline his colleagues in the way some people expected he would discipline them. I was not the master of the administration, but I tried to be the master of my own mind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My mind was that we should endeavour to develop to the best of our ability the trade of this country on Canadian and national lines. I tried to bring about that result. However, if next year the government comes down with a policy which will better suit our views, I will be the first man to applaud and cheer them. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence knows very well that this $3,000,000 will not equip the port of Montreal, and that it will be necessary to spend a very much larger amount of money. There is no use hiding the facts. What is $10,000,000 to a great national harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is it proposed that dues and fees shall be collected upon the works which are being constructed in that portion of the harbour which is not in the city of Montreal ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes. I stated to the House after having discussed the matter with my colleagues, that those works when completed would be treated just in the same way as other works.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was the understanding.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much better off is the harbour then ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The harbour commissioners are not paying interest on that money, and it is the beginning of lowering the tolls.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But you are continuing to charge tolls ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend is not serious. If the public treasury gives $2,000,000, the harbour commissioners have not to pay the interest on it, and there is so much less to be charged on the port of Montreal. Surely the hon. minister has not thought twice. I will try to make myself clear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will have some difficulty in doing so.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The difference is just this. That when money is not borrowed we have no interest to pay on it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the hon. gentleman says : 'We have no interest to pay on it ;' who are the 'we' ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The country pays it one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am speaking as a Canadian member of parliament having at heart the development of Canadian trade through Canadian channels. Why have we spent about $20,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the question.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is the question. It is on the same lines, because we expect to have more trade. Why are our hon. friends asking us to guarantee millions upon millions for railway companies if not to have more trade ? The harbour of Montreal should be treated on the same lines as the railways, for the same reason. It seems to me that the position I am taking is the right one. We have this year made the canals free. In saying we, I speak as a member of parliament, for on that question parliament was unanimous.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. May I ask my hon. friend a question ? I fail to understand him so far. Will he kindly point out what is the distinction from which the port of Montreal benefits, between paying dues and fees on works which are not under the control of the harbour commissioners, and paying the same measure of dues and fees on works which are under the control of the harbour commissioners ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It seems to me that the answer is very easy. The policy which I was endeavouring to impress on my colleagues, and which I thought I succeeded in impressing upon them, was that the port of Montreal should be made as free a port as it was possible to make it. Then, by our constructing, at the public expense, some of the works of improvement which are now going on, and the harbour commissioners having no money to borrow, they would have no interest to pay. The country would supply the money, and there would be so much less interest to pay.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who would pay it ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is another small herring my hon. friend is drawing across the trail.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that is very much like a whale, instead of a small herring.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I may be slow, but I do not see the wit of the word. Seriously speaking, what I was aiming at when I had the honour of being a colleague of my hon. friend, was to impress on the government and the country the necessity of having as cheap transportation as it was possible to make it. That is the reason why I have always been happy to help my friends in the maritime provinces to get accommodation for that part of the country. It is the reason why I have been preaching this gospel of transportation from one end of the country to the other ; and I thought I had succeeded in impressing upon the government the necessity of not saddling the port of Montreal with any more debt. Suppose we take the position that the port of Montreal shall pay for past debts, but that for the future it should be equipped at the national expense. That is in two words what I was aiming at then, and what I am aiming at now. I quite admit that it would be difficult to make the port altogether free, because there will always be the cost of maintenance ; but I do not know that the time will not come when public opinion will be so strong that even this government, which seems to be very steep at times on matters of national importance, will be obliged to realize that the sentiment of the nation is above party expediency. I say without any hesitation that the policy followed to-day is one of party expediency, because my hon. friends may be afraid to be reproached elsewhere for giving money to the port of Montreal. Well, we must recognize that geography cannot be changed. The port of Montreal has been placed where it is by the hand of Providence. It is the first port at the end of the lakes, at the head of navigation. I heard one of my colleagues say the trade could go elsewhere. Where could it go? It could not stop farther up without going to American ports, such as Portland, New York, Philadelphia, and other ports. Quebec will undoubtedly have its trade, but Quebec has always been where it is. To-day the port of Montreal is there, with its magnificent natural facilities; and, in spite of the fact that we have no great accommodation at Montreal, the trade is coming to that port, because trade is always inclined to go as far as possible into the land—this my hon. friends know as well as I do, if not better. It seems to me, then, that the policy that this country should follow is to make the port of Montreal and other ports of national importance as free as it is possible to make them. St. John, Halifax, Quebec, Three Rivers, should be made commodious and cheap ports, such as Canadian energy and Canadian enterprise and Canadian money can make them. This is not a sectional question with me. I recognize all the ports that are of national importance as forming part of the same system, and, unless we so recognize them, we shall be left behind. By improving the waterways you give competition and cheap rates to the farmers and the industrial interests, and you serve a great national object.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Mr. Chairman, no one can deny that my hon. friend invariably makes every subject he discusses in this House interesting, if not in itself, at least to those who listen to him. He has just now spoken of Montreal as having been placed where it is by the hand of Providence. I do not think there can be any doubt that Montreal is at the point where the rapids in the St. Lawrence begin and where the river navigation, properly so-called ends, as the act of Providence; but I think Providence had very little to do with the digging of the channel between Quebec and Montreal. I think we have to give some credit to man for the part he has taken in connection with the works of construction that have been carried on in order to enable Montreal to occupy the position it now occupies. My hon. friend talks of making Montreal a national port. There is some vagueness and uncertainty as to what he means by a national port. Do I understand that he means a port equipped with wharfs, sheds, and elevators at the national expense, to be used by all-comers for nothing? If that is what he means by a national port, in order to put Montreal on an equal footing with the other harbours of this Dominion, shall we not do the same thing for the other harbours?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Why distinguish? If we do that, it means that we must expend upon them a certain amount of money which comes out of the public exchequer, and on that money somebody must pay the interest. The people of Canada at large must pay the interest on that. Where is the difference in principle between paying the interest on money that would be expended in that way, and getting the interest back as we now do, out of the pockets of those who use the goods that go to the port of Montreal and get the benefit of these improvements? Is that not the more intelligent way, if I might use the word, of disposing of this matter—that those who use these improvements created by Canada shall pay for the use they make of them? My hon. friend says that we ought to equip our ports in a way to fit them to compete with the American ports. I can speak of New York. there is not an inch of wharf in the city of New York that is not paid for by the city. There is not an inch of wharf nor a foot of shed in New York which is not paid for. All those improvements made in the harbour of New York are paid for by those who use them. Why should we depart from the principle here? Why should a different policy be followed in our Canadian ports? It seems to be almost unavoidable that my hon. friend and myself should occasionally indulge in a little controversy with reference to the port of Quebec. I have no desire to enter into any discussion for the purpose of making parochial politics, and I am quite willing to admit that both my hon. friend and I are animated by the same spirit and desire to do all we can to advance the interests of our Canadian ports. My hon. friend knows that about three million dollars were spent on the port of Quebec. He knows too how that money was spent and to what extent we benefited by it. The result of the expenditure, as my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) told us the other night, is that we have in the Louise basin a berth for one ship. My hon. friend from St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte) talks of the expenditure in Quebec made by the government and for which no return was made to this government, but what occurred? No sooner was the expenditure begun than immediately, for the purpose of drawing away the trade which the expenditure was intended to benefit, seven million dollars were expended on the channel between Quebec and Montreal. I am not questioning the right of the people of Montreal to use all their energies for the purpose of getting this expenditure of public money on the improvement of the waterway, but I am simply pointing out that, as a matter of fact, it absolutely neutralized the expenditure on the part of Quebec. The expenditure was made absolutely useless because, in the first place, the money was expended at an improper place, and then, in the second instance, the government of the day immediately proceeded to expend millions on the lake St. Peter channel, in order to divert the shipping from Quebec to Montreal. I am not finding any fault with the government of that day for improving the channel, for we are going on the same lines, but I am simply pointing out how the port of Quebec was affected by that policy. My hon. friend must not forget that not only did we spend $7,000,000 in deepening that channel but that we are also spending at the rate of some $600,000 per annum on the maintenance of the channel, we are expending in the vicinity of from $800,000 to $900,000 on capital account for the construction of two dredges to be used in improving that channel. When we come to build elevators, there is no reason why we should make any distinction between Montreal and Quebec. We have two elevators in Quebec, built by private corporations. If the Montreal Harbour Board thinks it proper to build one in that port, I have no desire to interfere, but, the least the general public can ask is that those who use the elevator should be made to pay for it. We are asked to build sheds in addition to the elevators. Is there any good reason why those who use the sheds should not pay for that use ? We have built sheds in Quebec but without any government aid. I do not wish to detain the House, but it seems to me that if we adopt the principle of equipping Montreal as a national port at the public expense, in all fairness we should do the same for all the other ports in the Dominion. Quebec has greater natural advantages than Montreal, and if Montreal had not been so generously aided by the hand of man, the trade which is done there would be centred in Quebec. I go further and say, that until the government interfered for the purpose of building this channel between Quebec and Montreal, and so long as Quebec was left with its natural advantages, it was in advance of Montreal. I can remember when we had ten ships in that port for one in Montreal ; and although things have been changed since, that change is due to the result of government expenditure. In saying this, I am not casting any reflection on that policy. I am quite free to admit that whatever is to the advantage of Montreal, profits every other part of Canada. But, I would urge that all the ports in the Dominion be put on the same footing and each be given a fair field and no favour.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend and myself will agree no doubt as to facts of public notoriety. The port of Quebec was equipped in the same convenient way as the port of Montreal is being equipped now, namely, by a loan. If there is any one who knows how that money was spent, I am the one. My hon. friend knows a good deal, but perhaps I know more than he does, I know a good deal about it, but let by-gones be by-gones. We ventilated that question some years ago, and I hope that we will see nothing more of the kind in the future. There are some facts which my hon. friend seems to have forgotten. He says that in Quebec we are building sheds and not asking anybody for money to build them ? Well, I give my hon. friend the credit for the interest he has displayed in the port of Quebec by inducing the government to forfeit the rights guaranteed to it by the bonds in the hands of the hon. Finance Minister. The government gave up the precedence attaching to those bonds in order to enable the people of Quebec to borrow money.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let my hon. friend state the facts fully. In so far as that precedence is concerned, it had reference to the piece of wharf built immediately opposite the custom house. The money was spent on the construction of that wharf and had absolutely no connection with the sheds.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The sheds were built because the government gave up its precedence, and I am very glad it did so. The harbour commissioners at Quebec owe about $6,000,000 with the interest. I fully recognize that they cannot pay either the capital or the interest. I fully admit that a large volume of that money has been badly spent, but all the same the government advanced the money and has never been paid the interest. I am not complaining of this, but I say that the port of Montreal has not been treated in a like manner. That port pays the interest on every dollar borrowed from the government. It is not the people of Montreal who pay, but the trade of the country ; and if the trade of the country is obliged to pay rates that are too high, it will go through other channels. That cannot be denied. The port of Quebec has natural advantages. My hon. friend has said that the dredging of the St. Lawrence has diverted the trade from Quebec, but he forgets that the work of dredging the St. Lawrence began nearly fifty years ago—long before the Louise Basin was started.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But the diversion did not take place until about fifteen years ago. Before that we had more ships in Quebec than in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I shall not discuss that point. The trade is taking good care of itself. My hon. friend knows that most of the important harbours of the world are inland harbours. He knows that Hamburg and Manchester are both inland harbours.

Why the German nation have spent $75,000,000 on the Elbe and Hamburg works.

Mr. WADE. They have no ocean harbours.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, there is no use discussing such a question before such an audience. The port of Quebec is available; why, then, does the trade seek the port of Montreal? Because the port of Montreal is the natural centre of exchange between the west and the east. Why should a barge loaded with grain pass by Montreal, when there are sea-going ships waiting for her cargo? The city of Montreal with its suburbs and surroundings has a population of nearly half a million. Why should they displace themselves and send their trade elsewhere? That cannot possibly be done. Why did we build the canals? To take the trade through the St. Lawrence route. It seems to me that it is not necessary to adduce much argument to establish the position I take. My hon. friend has spoken of the port of New York. That port is fairly well equipped; but, on account of the high charges exacted there, it is losing ground every day.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). How is it in Boston?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How is it equipped?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. How are the charges?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have not the figures under my hand——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. How is it about the ownership of the wharfs, and the ownership of the sheds?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In the United States, there are several systems. In certain cities, the state governments contribute, and in others the federal government contributes. Take Buffalo, for instance, that port has been equipped partly by the state government of New York, and party by the federal government. But we have to face the simple question: Are we making up our minds that we will give the trade cheap rates? If so, we must take the means to do it. And the main reason why I object to the policy of my hon. friends on the treasury benches is that they are not taking the means to accomplish this great national object. However, we have made our position pretty clear. I hope that in the future my hon. friends will change their minds. If they do not change their minds we will try to induce the people outside to impress upon them the great importance of doing so.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) said that $1,000,000 was voted last year for the harbour of Quebec. I have looked over the estimates and I find that only $100,000 was voted.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) is a very clever man. But he is doing now just what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) tried to do—he is drawing a red herring across the trail. And let me explain to the committee how he is doing it. When I had the honour of being Minister of Public Works, I was approached, and the right hon. the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was approached at the same time by the representatives of the trade of Quebec. They represented that it was necessary that there should be further equipment for the port. My right hon. friend helped me, and it was understood and agreed that certain works should be carried out. I placed the plans of those works on the Table of the House last session, works the carrying out of which would have involved the expenditure of about $1,000,000. My hon. friend has only to read 'Hansard' to see that that is the case. I placed these plans on the Table with the consent of my colleagues, especially of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government. These plans were approved by the House. I asked for a vote of $100,000, of course, because we could not spend more during the present year; but at the time, I stated distinctly that these works would cost $1,000,000. These are the facts of the case. Now, my hon. friends have thought fit to change the plan. That is there business. What they are doing to-day is a good work—I do not complain that it is not a good work. But what I make bold to say to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is this—that if the government are going to provide this country with a fast Atlantic service, the accommodation being provided in Quebec is not sufficient. And if my hon. friend comes next year with an appropriation of the balance of the million dollars that I succeeded in getting, I shall be very glad to vote for it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). As my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has referred to me perhaps it will not be out of place for me to give a word of explanation as to the statement he has just made. My hon. friend laid before the House last year plans as to which there was a good deal of exception taken, and as to which, on the other hand, there was a good deal of approbation. These plans provided for the extension of the wharf at La Pointe à Carcy, towards the middle of the river and works towards the back. I agreed that he should take an appropriation of $100,000 for the extension of the wharfs extending up to the wharf at La Pointe à Carcy. As to the plans provided with regard to the extending of the works behind the Louise Basin, since I came back from Europe, it has been represented that there might be some danger to the existing works in carrying out the operations proposed. I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to have that matter decided before the work was gone on with. I agree with my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that the harbour has to be equipped; and, if we are to have, as we must have, a fast Atlantic service, considerable improvements must be added to give the accommodation necessary for that service. But whether we should go on with the plans that my hon. friend has provided for the extension of the work behind the Louise Basin is now under consideration. The plans are being considered by proper engineers, to see whether the plans proposed are correct or whether they should be amended.

As I am on my feet I may say a few words on the general topic under discussion. I take issue with my hon. friend in the view he has taken that the harbour of Montreal is being discriminated against. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) started that view. I took note of the statement he made, which, I think he himself will agree, requires some explanation. He said that we were dealing in a different way with the harbour of Montreal from the way in which we were dealing with the North-west. He said that we voted several millions yesterday for the North-west. That is true; but what we did for the North-west yesterday is precisely what we propose now to do for the harbour of Montreal—in one case, as in the other we are simply loaning the credit of the Dominion. Yesterday it was to a big railway company to build a railway, and to-day it is to the Montreal Harbour Trust to carry on their work. I think there is no necessity of pushing the comparison further—we have only to state the case to show that there is no essential difference. But there is a matter of difference which I wish to point out. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has started the idea that the harbour of Montreal should be treated like every other harbour in the Dominion, that no more charges should be put upon it than upon any other harbour I agree with him. But my hon. friend should remember that we are to-day proceeding, with regard to the harbour of Montreal in a manner which, he will permit me to say, received his approbation when I had the honour of having him for my colleague. There is no difference between what is being done to-day and what was done three or four years ago. At that time we gave authority to the harbour commissioners of Montreal to borrow a certain amount to equip the harbour. At the same time we gave authority to my hon. friend, then Minister of Public Works, to carry out certain works in the harbour. He says that it was intended that these works should be made national works. So it was. I will not enter upon the discussion at this moment whether or not the works done by the government were to pay dues or not. That is not of material concern, for I cannot see that there is any difference, if dues are to be paid upon the wharfs, whether those wharfs are built by the government or by the harbour commissioners. In either case the tolls are to come out of the shipping, which seems to be a very sound principle. But at the same time that my hon. friend was obtaining authority from parliament to build these wharfs which are now in course of construction, which certainly are of great utility and will be of still greater utility in the future, the harbour commissioners were empowered to borrow money on the credit of the country to carry on their own works. I understand my hon. friend to say now that the harbour commissioners instead of spending the money themselves upon sheds and elevators, should not be allowed to do so, but that the money should be paid by the Minister of Public Works. That is practically his criticism. I have only to observe that there is no necessity and no opportunity at this moment, to change the policy which he inaugurated a few years ago.

My hon. friend remembers very well that when these works in the harbour of Montreal were contemplated he was Minister of Public Works. He gave a great deal of time to the plans which were prepared, and he knows very well that the equipment of these wharfs which it was then intended to build by the harbour commissioners was to be supplemented by elevators and by sheds. Therefore the hon. gentleman ought not to forget that at this moment we are simply carrying out the plans which had his sanction, and which were provided for three or four years ago to keep this harbour in the best possible condition for trade. It was not sufficient simply to have wharfs, it was not sufficient simply to have the necessary appliances for ships to load and unload their cargoes, but further works had to be done to provide an elevator and sheds for warehouses. Now is it not better, under such circumstances, that the authority which had begun these works should carry them to completion ? If in future we have other works to complete in the harbour of Montreal, as we shall have, then the views presented by my hon. friend may be presented with better purpose, and we shall have to decide then whether they should be built by the harbour commissioners or by the Minister of Public Works. All that will come in due time. In the meantime, I take notice of the objection made by my hon. friend that the harbour of Montreal ought not to be burdened more than any other harbour. Sir, if the harbour of Montreal has been more burdened than any other harbour—I do not say that it is so—whose fault is it ? It is certainly not the fault of this government. My hon. friend was for a sufficiently long time a member of this government to defend himself and to defend the government of which he was a member at the time. We found the situation when we came in, we found the harbour commission of Montreal in possession of certain works. They applied to us to continue what they had been doing, and I give credit to my hon. friend for this, that he contributed a great deal, I think, to improve the work done by the harbour commissioners and to continue it. But if the harbour commissioners have spent too much money, if the harbour of Montreal has been unduly burdened, I think it is a case that the board of trade and the citizens of Montreal may be trusted to come and represent to the government. I received a notice a few days ago from the harbour board that they wanted to interview the government on this question and I granted the interview at once. Then they sent me word that they would come at a later period. When they come we will hear their views, and they will say whether the harbour of Montreal has been saddled with a greater burden than Toronto or St. John. But at this moment the hon. gentleman ought to agree that he can find no fault with us for doing what we are doing now, that is to say, for continuing the policy which he approved himself when Minister of Public Works, of enabling the harbour commissioners to carry on and complete the work which they had undertaken under his own regime.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, will do me the justice to admit that when I had the privilege of being his colleague I always struggled, especially during the last couple of years, to have our national harbours equipped as fully as possible. He has in his hand a memorandum that I left two or three months before quitting office, in which my views are set forth very fully. I acknowledge that I have been a party to lending money to the port of Montreal, as I have also been a party to maintaining the tariff which is to-day in existence. There is always room for improvement in the world. It does not follow that because the port of Montreal has been treated in the past in the way we know, we must always proceed in the same direction. I was glad to hear my hon. friend say that perhaps in the near future the direction in which we are proceeding now might be changed. I paid a good deal of attention to his words, and if I understood them correctly, it is good news for us, because the policy which is being followed now is not the right policy. We are at present only putting up a gate that we should instead be lowering. Only one word as to the work in Quebec. My right hon. friend has said that representations have been made to him that the plans I submitted to the House last year might perhaps imperil the existing works. I am sure that no engineer made such representations to him, because no engineer who knows anything about the works could say anything of the kind. I will explain to my right hon. friend. He is not an engineer in public works, though he is a good engineer in some other directions. The works which were begun had no foundation; we cannot dredge in the Louise Basin because the works have been laid without a foundation. The plan I submitted provided for a deeper foundation, about fifteen feet deeper, and at the same time to make it more solid. That makes a vast difference. My hon. friend I am sure did not mean to misrepresent me on that occasion.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not say it was a fact, I said that representations had been made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There are representations that may be made with some motive. I know the cost of the Quebec harbour works. I have studied them carefully, but not in the direction that has been pointed out by my right hon. friend. There were some other interests, however, that I do not mean to allude to now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The harbour commissioners of Montreal have treated this question in a businesslike way, and the government, I think, is treating the question in the same manner. There is no difficulty about the harbour commissioners being in a position to meet the interest on the loan which they have asked the Dominion government to make to them. The resolution which I hold in my hand, dated May 5th, 1903, explains the position very well, there can be no misunderstanding about it:

> Resolved, that should the loan of $3,000,000 asked for from the government be obtained, that about $2,000,000 would be required for building two storey steel sheds on the Alexandra, King Edward and Jacques Cartier piers, and the shore wharfs at sections 12, 13 and 17, which it is proposed to rent to the steamship lines, the rental to be charged therefor not to exceed six cents per square foot of space which, for 1,284,390 square feet which would be provided in the sheds, would yield $74,903.40 per annum, of which $60,000 would be for the interest, and the balance of $14,903.40 for maintenance and insurance. The interest on the balance of the loan of $1,000,000, which is $30,000, would be provided for out of the ordinary revenue obtained from wharfage dues, as it is proposed to expend out of the aforesaid sum $586,885 on permanent paving, thus reducing the cost of annual repairs which in the past has been considerable for maintenance of roadways, and leave the expense which would be required for maintenance to be available for the payment of interest.

Now what are the facts? The interest on the sums which we have authorized them to borrow, in all $10,222,000, will make, with the maintenance, a sum to be levied every year of $450,880. Now, if you deduct from that sum of $450,880, $30,000 of revenue from the elevator and $60,000, the rental on the sheds, you will have remaining a balance of $360,880 to provide for. The revenue last year was over $322,000, so that there should be no fear whatever that the harbour commissioners will have sufficient to meet the interest on the different sums that they have borrowed and those that they will borrow. Of course, it must be borne in mind that it will be only within the next few years that the whole amount can be borrowed because we can easily understand that the whole expenditure of this $3,000,000 cannot be made in one season. It would take two seasons at least in which this expenditure can be made. As regards the principle of advancing money to the harbour commissioners, I may say, as it has been said and repeated here, this is the same principle which has been in force since 1896 under this government. It is the same principle which has been applied by former governments. Well, if you look at the facts, in what position are you ? In 1896 the former government were able to reduce the harbour dues in Montreal by from 25 to 30 per cent. Under the present government the harbour commissioners have been able, although they have reduced their interest, and although they have spent every year large sums of money for maintenance which they will not be called upon to expend in future years, when the wharfs will all have been paid for—they have been able, as I am perfectly well aware, and as has been stated by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), to reduce the dues by 40 per cent and notwithstanding this their revenue has been increasing. Fault has been found with this procedure by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). I can only repeat what has been stated already that this principle was concurred in in 1898 and 1899 when the harbour commissioners came before the government and asked for advances, so that, if this is the time to find fault with the principle and to say that it is wrong it must have been equally wrong in 1898 and 1899. I want to go further. I say the principle is not wrong at the present time. There may come a time when all the harbours and piers will be perfectly free, but all this does not come in a day. It takes years before this can be accomplished. Take, for instance, the abolition of the tolls on the canals. For years and years the navigation companies had been asking that the tolls on the canals the customs dues and the inspection fees should be abolished. It is only this year that they have succeeded in obtaining justice, but this is a beginning and I think the present government cannot be accused of not doing anything to aid transportation and navigation when it is easy to calculate that the amount of which the navigation companies have been relieved is nearly $400,000 annually. Now, the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works says that the principle is wrong and he states that he began himself the expenditure of public money to improve the port of Montreal. I have to differ from him on that point, because, what he says as to the expenditure of public money to improve the port of Montreal means simply this that instead of the interest on that amount advanced for the construction of the pier in Hochelaga bay being paid indirectly to the government by the harbour commissioners it will be collected directly by the government in harbour dues at this pier, because nobody will deny that it was perfectly well understood when the money was voted to build this pier and when the consent of the harbour commissioners was asked that this pier, which is being built by Messrs. Poupore & Malone, would not be free but that dues would be charged at the same rate and under the same conditions as they are collected on the rest of the piers in the harbour of Montreal. Everybody understands perfectly well that in the case of the pier being built now under the control of the hon. Minister of Public Works, dues will be collected by the government instead of being collected by the commissioners and paid over to the government as interest.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who will pay the interest on that $1,000,000 which will be spent at Hochelaga ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be paid out of the dues. The government will pay the interest, but they will collect the amount in dues on the pier. Blanc Bonnet et bonnet blanc. It means exactly the same thing, except, of course, that the debt of the harbour commissioners of Montreal will be increased by $600,000 or thereabouts, or by whatever may be the cost of the pier. As regards the position of the shipping interests and the trade of Montreal they will be in exactly the same position whether vessels land their goods and merchandise on the pier built by the government or whether they land their goods and merchandise on the piers built under the system adopted by the harbour commissioners. Now, a good deal has been said about the expenditure on the port of Montreal and on the channel. The facts as regards the expenditure of money on the channel are fresh in the mind of every member in this House. The money spent on the channel of the St. Lawrence river between Montreal and Quebec was levied by the harbour commissioners of Montreal on the trade of Canada generally and on the shipping interest doing business in the city of Montreal. Great credit is due to the men of enterprise who, in 1840 or 1850, organized the harbour commissioners of Montreal and took in hand the work of improving the channel of the St. Lawrence which was then eleven or twelve feet deep on the flats of Lake St. Peter and who made it what it was in 1887 or 1888, when the government took hold of it. It was only fair and reasonable that the government, having taken charge of that channel, should assume the debt which had been contracted, although I think the government did not do entire justice to the harbour commissioners and citizens of Montreal, because, instead of reimbursing the whole amount that had been expended on the works of the channel they reimbursed only the capital expenditure without taking into consideration the interest. I know something about the matter, having been a member of the harbour commission for four years, and there is an account standing now awaiting settlement for interest paid on the sums advanced by the commissioners of nearly $2,000,000. Instead of pressing for the settlement of that claim against the government, the commission which is composed of men of business representing the vast corporations of Montreal, such as the Board of Trade, the Corn Exchange, the Shipping Interests, the Chambre de Commerce, besides six members appointed by the government representing the best business men of Montreal, after having studied this question since 1898 have come to the unanimous opinion that it is a businesslike course to proceed in the way proposed. The general plans for the the improvement of the harbour of Montreal had been approved in 1898 by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte). These plans did not provide then for such works as permanent sheds, a complete railway track system, a steam crane and others which are included in the $3,000,000 loan. It is a well known fact that the harbour commissioners of Montreal are now in a better condition to execute these works properly and cheaply than any other body, because they have the whole organization at their disposal. They are in a position to undertake themselves works of this kind, except probably the steel structure which they will have to let by contract. The other works will be done under the supervision of their own engineer and staff which up to the present time has proven itself to be perfectly competent. There is no fear of the Montreal harbour commissioners becoming bankrupt, or that the trade will be charged more for tolls than in the past. On the contrary, if you take the trade this year since the opening of navigation which is only a comparatively short period, you will find that there were more head of cattle shipped up to the present time than during the whole season last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have twelve steamers more in the port of Montreal this season than up to the corresponding date last season. I am informed by those who take a deep interest in our commerce that there have been shipped through the port of Montreal up to the present, 2,000,000 bushels more of grain than during the corresponding period last year. That is probably due in part to the fact that tolls have been abolished on the canals, and that customs dues and inspection fees are no longer charged. As representing the largest division of the city of Montreal, I am entirely in accord with the proposition made by the harbour commissioners. It is the only reasonable proposition under the circumstances, and it is the best means calculated to equip the harbour of Montreal within a reasonable time. If the government were to take hold of these extensive works they would not have the necessary means and plant at their disposal, and it would take them a long time to get prepared for the work, while it is the hope of every good citizen of Montreal that these works will be finished next season, and then the works can be proceeded with in the east end of Montreal which have been already started.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish to add a word of correction and explanation. Touching the discrimination against Montreal, I am afraid my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) failed to catch the point of the question which I ventured to put him about the word 'we.' My only object was to emphasize the point which has been made during the debate as to who pays the interest on the loan. My hon. friend said: 'We pay the interest,' which was likely to convey the impression that the people of Montreal pay the interest.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not mean that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) admitted afterwards that this interest was paid by the trade of the country which passes through Montreal. As a matter of fact the citizens of the city of Winnipeg pay the interest as much as the citizens of Montreal. There are cities in Canada where the people are paying hard money in taxes for harbour facilities, but Montreal is not one of them. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) and I differed as to the extent of the trade of Montreal. He said that in Montreal the total trade was nearly one-half the total trade of the country and I said I thought it was not more than 35 per cent. I see by the figures that last year it was actually 29·25 per cent. I do not mention that for the purpose of undervaluing it, because that is a very great proportion of the trade of the country. As the figures we use in debate are often quoted elsewhere it is just as well that the correction should be made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have the figures in my hand and I will read them. They are as follows:

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Statement of revenue and tonnage from the opening of navigation to 30th September, in 1901 and 1902.

	1901.	1902.
From imports..	$ 93,500 00	$122,500 00
From exports..	47,000 00	52,500 00
From local traffic..	18,765 92	16,328 90
Total..	$159,265 92	$191,328 90

Increase in 1902 over 1901, $32,062 98.

	1901.	1902.
Tonnage of sea-going vessels..	1,144,004	1,163,778
Increase in 1902 over 1901..		19,774
Tonnage of inland vessels..	1,278,144	1,427,100
Increase in 1902 over 1901..		148,956

Total increase of tonnage in 1902 over 1901, 168,730.

I did not mean to say that the interest is paid by Montreal or elsewhere, but what I did try to urge was that unless you make the ports of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax, cheap ports, the trade will not come to us at all. It is only from that standpoint that I am discussing the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been following this discussion with a good deal of interest, because I represent a constituency in which is situated one of the two principal Canadian seaports which are open all the year round. My constituents take a very deep personal interest in the question which is now to some extent under discussion. I have been desirous of hearing from my hon. friends who are criticising the present proposal, some very cogent reasons why this vote ought not to be passed, because I felt convinced that if they made out a case strong enough to show that a great deal of argument was capable of being advanced against the approval of this motion, then a very very strong case would be made in favour of the general adoption of the principle which the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) declares himself so strongly in favour of. There is no doubt that there is a difference between the manner in which some of the Canadian seaports are treated by this government and by all governments, and the manner in which other Canadian ports are treated. The Minister of Finance has correctly pointed out that the citizens of Montreal have not been called upon to pay any interest burden in connection with the expenditure upon their port.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The city of Montreal is contributing $1,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Now ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not aware of that fact, and the hon. gentleman permitted the statement of the Minister of Finance to pass unchallenged. If they have that in contemplation now, it is nevertheless the fact that up to the present moment the city of Montreal has not put its hand into its pockets municipally speaking, and borne any portion of any charge incident to the betterment of their harbour. That cannot be said, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has remarked, with regard to some other ports. It certainly cannot be said with regard to the seaport of St. John. When the business coming from the western country was being carried to St. John for ocean transport, which was bound to flow into that city, the people of St. John hoped that the government of the day would come to their assistance and enable them to handle that produce with advantage to the shippers and to the country. They could, I am free to confess, have secured assistance if they had been willing to place their harbour under the control of a trust, like one or two other harbours in the country. They did not agree to that, and therefore they received no direct assistance from the exchequer of Canada failing to get any assistance from the government of Canada, they set to work to provide the piers, sheds and other facilities, which were necessarily required if any business was to be done, by municipal taxation ; and a sum which exceeds three-quarters of a million and very nearly approaches a million dollars was actually paid by the people of that city in order to provide its harbour with these necessary requirements. The people of St. John are paying the tax on that expenditure. The business of the port does not bear it. There are no dues or fees collected in respect of the wharfs, because they had to be handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in order that that company would interest itself in making St. John a port of ocean shipment. The city has undoubtedly had some advantage from that expenditure. The business has increased and is increasing year by year. I cannot at this moment state exactly the gross amount of tonnage shipped last winter as compared with previous years ; but it has quadrupled since these works were established. So that the committee can see that there was every warrant for the people of St. John, from the point of view of the interests of business, to embark in this expenditure and provide the port with what it needed. But it appeared to me at that time, and it appears to me now, that we ought to appeal confidently for the support of the government ; because if it is a fact that all these transportation and shipping facilities that have been provided by the government are of national importance and are justified from the national point of view, the national interest does not cease to be involved when the shipment goes during the winter season from one of the Atlantic seaports. It is a national interest there if it is a national interest anywhere. My hope with regard to this—and it bears on the suggestion which the hon. member has made, that the government ought to make these ports free ports, and is a complete answer to any criticism that may be passed upon us for making this vote—is that at the present moment the government, with the full knowledge of parliament, has constituted a commission, the object of which is to study the whole question as it bears upon the providing of proper facilities at the different Canadian seaports. Their business will be to look into the situation as respects them all, and to advise the government as to what, in their opinion, would be the proper method to pursue in order that those ports should be equipped in the manner which the national interests will require, and enable the business of the country to be transacted under the most favourable conditions. I cannot conceive of anything that ought to engage the more careful attention or consideration of this commission. I say, therefore, that it would be entirely premature, in view of the arrangements which have been made hitherto for the harbour of Montreal, to make any change at this moment in the matter under discussion.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it would not be wise to hold over even this vote until that commission has made its report ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No ; if you did that, you would practically delay the improvements in the harbour of Montreal. These works, which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says were planned over ten years ago, have been partially performed. They were taken hold of four or five years ago by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works, and pushed on by the harbour trust with a considerable amount of energy. The plans contemplated the providing of sheds and other equipment.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The plans of the sheds are ready now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The plans of the sheds, I am told, are ready now, and it is a very serious matter to delay works of this kind. The harbour of Montreal has undoubtedly been suffering in the fact that it has not been able to furnish the required accommodation to the ships which came there last year. I have heard a number of shipping men say that they would have been willing to have their traffic carried through the port of Montreal if they had been confident that when it reached there, it would have got early shipping accommodation. I am very glad that the Harbour Trust of Montreal are prepared to go on with the work and push it rapidly to completion. One more word. My hon. friend, I think, ought to acknowledge that his criticism on this proposal of the government is not timely or justifiable. My hon. friend's language was that the government ought not to have refused to give money, and ought not to have insisted on the Harbour Trust of Montreal taking this money by way of a loan, as these resolutions provide. I do not think my hon. friend, as an ex-minister, and as one having so much to do with this question as a minister, was justified under all the circumstances, in getting up in his place and, without proper reflection and consideration, condemning the government for carrying out the very arrangements he warmly advocated when he was a member of the government.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Am I not advocating now what I did in the government for two or three years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We must not tell.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Outside of it, then ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman for advocating what he advocates ; but advocacy is one thing, and criticism and condemnation of his late colleagues is another thing, for doing what he favoured and justified and arranged, and what they must do if his arrangements are to be carried out. What I complain of is that he says that the government should not have refused to give the harbour commissioners this money, and should not force them to take it as a loan. I say that criticism is unfounded, and I am surprised that my hon. friend should be so unmindful of the views and opinions he has held heretofore as to make that criticism on the present proposal.

Mr. MONK. I would like just to offer an observation or two, and I must begin by saying to my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that he surprised me a little in proposing, in an off-hand way, that the prosecution of these important works and the voting of this money should be postponed. My hon. friend, like many of his colleagues from the west, is always ready to urge the needs of the west in connection with this very question of transportation ; but I have often noticed that once they get to this end of Lake Superior, my hon. friend and some of his colleagues do not realize the importance of this end of the question. I cannot understand what my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) means when he says that, with respect to the wharf which we built below Montreal, we are in the same position as we are with respect to these projected works. The country in that case gave the money and there is no interest to pay, but in this case the government loans the money and there is interest to pay, so that I fail to understand how both cases are the same. Of course, as the hon. gentleman says, we collect harbour dues, but not as interest on the money.

I regret that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance should have seen in what I said a desire to defend parochially the rights of Montreal. It was not in any local spirit that I approached this question. I view it as the general question of transportation. I have no interest in the harbour myself. My constituency lies outside the city, and I brought this matter before the House because I consider that in some parts of the country we are dealing with the transportation system in a different manner than we are dealing with it in other parts. In 1901 we collected $270,000; and if we are to accept the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, last year we collected a little more. But we cannot, without sacrificing, not only the port of Montreal but any other port that we may wish to nationalize, collect such a sum as $400,000, and that would be the least we would have to collect. The hon. Minister of Finance talks of the warehouses that are going to be built out of the $2,000,000. He is mistaken. It is sheds that we are building.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A rose by another name will smell as sweet.

Mr. MONK. There is a greater difference than my hon. friend will admit. When he talks of a warehouse he is talking of something that will produce large revenue, but we cannot have very much revenue out of those sheds. The charges now are too heavy and should be reduced, but we will never be able to reduce them under this system. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has fallen into the old system of complaining about Montreal taking away the trade of Quebec. That is absurd. The deepening of the St. Lawrence was not made with the object of ruining Quebec but of meeting the demands of trade. We have no grudge against Quebec. We are glad that considerable business is being done there, but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that vessels all the world over will go as far inland as possible. My hon. friend must not forget that at present the port of New York is in a state of more or less decadence on account of its charges, and ships are going elsewhere. They go to Baltimore, Boston, Portland and other ports.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are harbour dues at all these ports.

Mr. MONK. There are and must be everywhere, but we must reduce them. If we want to compete with the American ports successfully, we must reduce our charges.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. There are no harbour dues in New York.

Mr. MONK. It comes to the same thing. There are charges and very heavy charges to be paid in New York. They take the shape of rentals, but it does not make much difference. I do not know what my right hon. friend meant when he said that it was Montreal's own fault if it is liable for this large amount on which we cannot pay interest. It is not our fault, but is due to the situation of the harbour. These plans, which were made long ago, must be carried out, and for that the citizens of Montreal are not to blame.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The majority of the harbour commissioners are government appointees.

Mr. MONK. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) was not exactly of the same opinion some months ago. He believed then that the harbour commissioners should be thrust aside and that the improvements to the harbour were so important that they should be carried out by himself. That point, however, I shall not discuss now. I would like to say to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that we have given money in Montreal for the improvement of the harbour and have made great improvements in the approaches to the harbour and spent considerable sums of money. I might inform him also that in St. John the harbour charges collected go into the civic revenue. If that be the case, it makes a considerable difference. So that on the whole, I was right in saying that the government are to blame.

The ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) told us a few moments ago that this nationalization of our ports—he did not speak of Montreal alone—was approved of by this government at the time he was one of the ministers, and I really so understood by words which fell from several of the ministers at the time. What I find fault with is that these hon. gentlemen are to-day going back on that policy. Unless we adopt that system for the port of Montreal and the other important ports of the Dominion, then the millions we have spent and the millions we pledged to spend on railways will be to a large extent useless.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Public Works has asked for practical suggestions, and I shall venture to offer him one. The hon. Minister of Finance said that it was the intention of the harbour commissioners of Montreal to spend $1,000,000 on an elevator and $2,000,000 in building a shed or warehouse, and that the revenue from the elevator would pay the interest on the $1,000,000 and the revenue from the shed or warehouse would pay the interest on the $2,000,000. But who is going to pay that? If we put a million dollars into an elevator, who are going to use it but the farmers? Who will pay the tolls but the farmers and not the people generally. Who will pay the rent of the shed? The steamship companies, in the first place, but from whom will they collect it? From the agriculturists of this country.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The charges are raised on the goods themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the steamship company that raises them.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, the harbour commissioners themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. And it comes straight out of the pockets of the farmers. If I buy a million bushels of wheat in the North-west, the water rate from Port Arthur to Montreal is four or five cents a bushel, and to Europe another four or five cents per bushel. But if this elevator, which my hon. friend is going to erect at the port of Montreal, is going to charge a quarter or a half of a cent for transhipping from the barges to the ocean going steamers, I will have to buy from the farmer at half a cent a bushel less than if the elevator were free. Let the government, in place of loaning these $3,000,000, hand the cash over as a gift to the harbour commissioners of Montreal, so that they may make these improvements without increasing the tolls. Let us have no tolls charged the farmers on this expenditure, for they are the parties who will have to pay and not the general public. Let the government make this a national port, let them give this $3,000,000 out and out, and I am sure that the people of Ontario and the Dominion generally will be pleased to see Montreal made a national free port. We cannot compete successfully unless we have lower rates. If I have a million bushels of grain at Port Arthur to be shipped to Europe, and I get a ten cent rate by Boston and also a ten cent rate by the Canadian route together with these elevator charges, the grain will have to be shipped by Boston. One sixteenth of a cent will transfer the traffic from the Canadian to the American route, and this elevator charge at Montreal may have the effect of sending all the grain by the United States, and so we shall get no revenue whatever. There should be no elevator charges upon grain shipped from Port Arthur by the St. Lawrence route to a foreign market. Any charge that is made comes out of the pockets of the farmers of the North-west, or Ontario, or wherever the grain is grown. It comes out of the pockets of the farmers, and not out of the pockets of the people generally.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I spoke of the people of Canada generally, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is giving a meaning to the words that I did not intend. What I meant was that the charges had to be paid by those concerned in the traffic. I am as much a friend of the farmer as anybody. But I believe that if the farmer put his grain in a warehouse, he should pay for the privilege; if he puts it in his own barn he pays for the barn. I believe the farmer is ready to pay for any service that is rendered to him. Of course, we might easily give free warehouse accommodation, or—yes, as an hon. friend beside me suggests, we might pay the freight from Winnipeg; we might throw in chromo; we might offer many advantages; but these are not business. We believe the farmer should be treated like a man. As touching the question of these trifling sheds, —to cost about $2,000,000—to which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has referred, and from which he says nothing will be received, I may say that I have been informed that the steamship companies have made arrangements to occupy these sheds instead of putting up sheds of their own, and the harbour commissioners are satisfied that they will get a revenue of $74,000 a year from that source.

Mr. MONK. They will never get it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They say they will, and I believe they will.

Resolutions reported, and read the first and second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 201) to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—THE TREADGOLD CONCESSIONS.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I have no doubt the House and the country generally felt a sense of relief when the government promised an investigation into the matter of the concession of the Treadgold grant in the Yukon and other similar hydraulic concessions. But if the House and the public felt any sense of relief at the time that announcement was made by the government, I venture to say that this feeling of relief and satisfaction was superseded by disappointment and even by a shock, when the public and the House read the instructions which were given to the commission which is to be appointed to investigate that matter. I purpose reading extracts from the instructions which were laid upon the Table of the House last Monday, so that I may bring to the minds of the members the utter farce which the government is trying to perpetrate upon the House and the country:

On a report dated 1903, from the Minister of Justice, submitting that for several years placer gold mining has been successfully carried on in the Yukon Territory, particularly in the district traversed by the Klondike river, and rivers, streams, and creeks tributary thereto.

That only such claims as enjoyed water facilities have heretofore been profitably worked; that gold is supposed to be distributed in the benches, banks and other elevated grounds along such rivers, streams and creeks.

That owing to the expense and difficulty involved in securing the necessary supply of water the successful prosecution of the industry throughout these last named localities has been seriously retarded and in many cases made impossible; that it has been represented to the government that great expense is required to be incurred to collect, store and distribute the waters of the said benches, banks and elevated grounds.

That it has also been represented to the government that the extent and value of the deposits of gold in the said benches, creeks and elevated grounds is at present unknown, and must remain so until a sufficient supply of water is available for the construction of hydraulic works, and that parties advancing the moneys for the construction of said works must necessarily take great risks with respect to their investment.

That while it is fitting that reasonable and proper privileges and advantages should be offered which will induce parties to construct such hydraulic works, yet it is essential:

(a.) that no grants or concessions should be made that would interfere with the right to water which any free miner is entitled to under the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory;

(b.) that the water so to be held and controlled by the hydraulic companies should be available on equal terms to all free miners whose claims can be profitably worked thereby, and subject to such reasonable rates and conditions to be fixed by the Governor in Council as shall secure the greatest possible advantage to the district in which the works are established.

That to obtain such hydraulic work and a supply of water for the benches, banks and elevated grounds above mentioned, certain powers, rights and privileges were granted by the Governor General in Council on the 21st of April, 1902, to Malcolm H. Orr-Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold and Walter Barwick; that it has been alleged the said grant and concession constitutes a monopoly, which, while depriving the treasury of enormous revenues, is most detrimental to the mining industry of the Yukon.

Now I desire to lay stress upon this paragraph of instructions, because it is the most important of the whole document. It is the part in which the jurisdiction of the commissioners who are to be appointed is limited, and it is limited simply to the obtaining of information showing to what extent the said concession is likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interests of the said Yukon territory.

That it is very desirable that the commissioners making the inquiry should investigate generally all facts and circumstances which may afford information to the government and to parliament respecting the hydraulic or other means which it is desirable should be adopted to successfully develop the benches, banks and other elevated grounds which could only be worked at great disadvantage under natural conditions, or are not able to be profitably worked at all without an artificial supply of water.

The minister therefore recommends that under the provisions of chapter 114 of the revised statutes of Canada, being an Act entitled an Act respecting inquiries concerning public matters, it be referred—as commissioners to conduct such public inquiry for that purpose, holding the same in Dawson City and elsewhere in the Yukon as they shall determine, the said commissioners to have all the powers of summoning and enforcing the attendance of witnesses, &c.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that the only power which is given to these commissioners who are to be appointed is to investigate the scientific problem as to whether or not the hydraulic system is to be introduced into the Yukon Territory for the better carrying out of placer mining in that territory. That is the whole scope of the inquiry. It extends to the Treadgold concession and to other similar concessions, but no further, and also to the obtaining of information 'respecting the hydraulic or other means which it is desirable should be adopted to successfully develop the benches, banks and other elevated grounds which could only be worked at great disadvantage under natural conditions.' It will also be observed by the terms of these instructions that the commissioners are to sit in the Yukon Territory only, that is, at Dawson City, or any other part of the Yukon Territory in which they see fit to sit.

Sir, since this matter was brought before the House some time ago, there is no doubt, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will not controvert this statement, that there has been a general demand for an inquiry, not only from this side of the House, not only from people who are generally adverse to the present administration politically, but there has been a general demand from all those who have the true interests of the country at heart, that a thorough and complete investigation into all the circumstances surrounding the grant of the Treadgold concession and other hydraulic concessions in the Yukon Territory, should be made. The independent press has been unanimous upon this point, and has asked the government, has demanded from the government, that this investigation should be held. But, Sir, what kind of an investigation? Not merely an investigation of the scientific questions which are dealt with in the instructions given to the commissioners who are to be appointed, not simply to know whether these hydraulic concessions are to the benefit or the injury of the free miners of the Yukon, but an investigation into all the circumstances surrounding the granting of the Treadgold concession and of other concessions of a similar nature. In a word, I take it that when the question came up before the House the public conscience of this country was shocked at the revelations which were made and brought to the notice of parliament by the reading of the documents of which myself and those who followed me in the debate on this side of the House, gave cognizance to this House.

Sir, it was only following up what had taken place in the Yukon itself ; because as I stated, without wishing at all to refer to a prior debate, I brought to the notice of the House the fact that a petition had been presented to this House by the Dawson Board of Trade and by hundreds, yes, by thousands, of the citizens of the Yukon Territory, in which these concessions were denounced in unmeasured terms. I hold in my hand now the petition which was presented to this House on the 16th of April, 1903, by the member of the Yukon. As the House will see, it is a bulky petition, there are many signatures attached to this petition. It was signed by the most prominent citizens of the Yukon, belonging to all shades of political opinion, not only by the adversaries of the government but by those citizens in the Yukon Territory who have at heart the true interests of the Dominion and the pure administration of the affairs of this country. What does this petition say amongst other things ?

> That the benefits conferred upon the grantees are of incalculable value and involve an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this territory for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.

The House will understand what that means. It bore evidence on the face of it to the citizens of the Yukon Territory themselves that this was a grant which was made to certain favourites of the government and that it was an enormous exploitation of the public resources of the Territory to the detriment of the citizens of the Yukon and of the miners. This petition is a most important one because it comes from a public body of the Yukon which has no political leanings and it is signed by thousands of men who must know the condition of affairs in the Yukon and who come to this parliament and ask that an investigation be held into the charges which they make, not only against the concessionaires, but impliedly, also against those who gave these concessions to Treadgold and others.

I also hold in my hand another petition which was presented to the House of Commons from another public body in the Yukon. This is the petition of the corporation of the city of Dawson which is now before the House. It was also presented to this House by the hon. member who represents the Yukon on the 16th of April, 1903, and it contains exactly the same allegation as the petition I have just read; that is the petition of the Dawson Board of Trade. I take it that the condition created by these concessions must be grave indeed when all these citizens come to the House of Commons, call the attention of the House of Commons to these facts and take, as I believe, the unprecedented step of presenting these petitions to the House and of making these grave charges in the face of the whole country. But, that is not all. If these petitions from the Dawson Board of Trade and from the corporation of the city of Dawson could have been instigated by any political feeling, surely the Liberal Association of Dawson could not have had in its mind any unwarrantable attack upon the administration which it supports. I hold in my hand here the Yukon 'Sun' which is the organ of the Liberal party of the Yukon Territory, and not only that, but, if I turn to page 2 of the issue which I hold in my hand, I find that the Yukon 'Official Gazette' is the Saturday issue of the 'Sun' so that it is the official newspaper of the Yukon Territory. According to this paper on the 1st of April last :

> At a well attended meeting of the Liberal Club held last night at Pioneer Hall, steps were taken toward strengthening the hand of Mr. Ross, at Ottawa, on several matters of importance to the territory.

Further, a petition is resolved upon and adopted by the Liberal Club of Dawson, friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, their supporters in the Yukon Territory, and what do we find in this petition ? We find amongst other things this :

> Resolved, that an inquiry may be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

That was only following up what happened a few months ago in the Yukon Territory, because, as we all know, an election had taken place at which the hon. member who represents the Yukon Territory (Mr. Ross) was elected, and at that time he was asked very pointedly, in a question which was published in the papers, whether he would take steps to bring to punishment the officials at Ottawa and at Dawson who have given these large concessions to the favourites of the government. He was asked if he would not take the necessary steps to bring these people to punishment for the fraud which they had perpetrated upon the government or which these officials at Ottawa had perpetrated upon the government. We were told to bring specific charges—bring charges against any one, bring charges against any officials, or charges against any minister, bring charges of malfeasance against anybody in authority, make specific charges, say that you will give up your seat if these charges are not proved and we will grant an immediate inquiry. That is what was thrown out to this side of the House by hon. gentlemen opposite. We have brought to the notice of the House and of the government the charges which are made by these public bodies to which I alluded a minute ago—the Dawson Board of Trade and the corporation of the city of Dawson. We have brought to the notice of hon. gentlemen opposite the charges made by their own friends in the Yukon, we have laid them before the House and we say now that the government is on its defence and that it should take up these charges. If they are not true it will be good for hon. gentlemen opposite to have an investigation so as to prove that these charges are false and that there is absolutely nothing in them. First of all we were promised an investigation, not an investigation of a scientific character, to ascertain whether or not the government have made a provident bargain by giving these concessions to wash the gold in the Yukon Territory, but we were promised a complete investigation into the charges which had been laid at the door of the government. We were promised this and it was said: We have not had time yet to investigate these charges or to appoint commissioners or a committee of this House to investigate them. We are waiting until the hon. member for the Yukon arrives. The navigation is not quite open in the Territory, but wait until navigation is open. Wait until the hon. gentleman takes his seat. I am sorry he is not here. I understand on very good authority that he will not be here again this session. Wait, and everything that you have said in this House will be investigated by the commissioner:

> When the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) returns to Ottawa,—he is at present in British Columbia, I understand—and we can have the benefit of his advice, it is our intention to fully carry out the representations made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that hon. gentlemen may be good enough to mention or entertain in regard to any matters connected with the Yukon administration. I give that public notice to my hon. friend, so that, in addition to the advantage he has had of ventilating his views on the floor of this House, he will have an opportunity to make good, if he can, any of his charges or suspicions before a tribunal where newspaper extracts and letters will not be the only evidence, but where gentlemen will have the privilege of pledging their oaths to the truth of all they say.

This was the pledge that was given to this House by the hon. gentleman who spoke for the government when this matter was brought up. The hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) in reply to the speech which I had the honour to make to the House on the 12th of May last, made a solemn promise to the House and the country that a full and complete investigation would be held into all the charges made at that time against the government, against officials, grantees and concessionaires. I cannot see why the government has changed its mind. We were notified the other day, it is true that the government had come to another conclusion, before these instructions were laid on the Table of the House. We were surprised that it should be given out in the House that the government had recanted, that the government had come to another conclusion, that it was not going to grant this full and complete investigation into the charges of fraud which had been laid at its door, but that it was simply going to grant the investigation which is foreshadowed in the instructions to the commissioners which I read a moment ago. At that time the surprise was great. We felt there must be some misapprehension in the mind of the hon. gentleman who was then addressing the House. We could not for a moment believe after that the solemn pledge which had been given to the House in the name of the government by the hon. Postmaster General, that the government would in such a short time change its mind and come to the House, with, as I said before, this farce of an investigation which is going to be confided to Mr. Justice Britton and others. What is the reason of that change of opinion on the part of the hon. ministers who are responsible for the giving of these concessions in the Yukon? Why do they not now say that they are going to grant a full and complete inquiry into the charges which these people from the Yukon make against the government and the officials who are in charge of this department?

What has come across the spirit of their dreams? The natural conclusion and the only conclusion to which this House and the country can come is, that there are guilty parties whom the government is interested in protecting. Here was a minister speaking for the government in this debate and he said on the floor of parliament: you should have known that it has been decided long ago by the government to give a full and complete inquiry into these charges; we are going to give it as soon as we can and this investigation is going to be so complete that you will have an opportunity of proving all the charges you have made. But when the instructions were brought down we found that the inquiry was limited to the one point as to whether it was provident or improvident on the part of the government to give these concessions in the Yukon Territory. I repeat, and the country will endorse me when I say, that every independent man in this country will come to the conclusion that the only reason why the government is limiting this investigation is because the charges that were made on the 12th of May in this House, the charges which were made by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) the other day, are absolutely true, and the government dare not go before a commission even of its own appointment to have these charges investigated, because they are so true that some one on the government benches probably would find these charges so true that he would have to retire from public life.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is noticeable also a change in the manner of the right hon.

the Prime Minister. Compare his conduct now with his conduct in reference to the Drummond County matter. Here are his remarks delivered on February 15th, 1898—I quote from 'Hansard':

The reasons which compel the government to make this motion will be understood by every one in this House, and I presume also appreciated by everybody. Last year the government undertook to extend the Intercolonial Railway from the present terminus at Chaudière to Montreal. I am under the impression that this scheme had been engaging the attention of previous governments for some years past. The government selected a route which had the advantage of being, by twenty miles, shorter than the route existing between Lévis and Montreal over the Grand Trunk Railway and which had the further merit and advantage of avoiding the chain of mountains which are adjacent to the St. Francis river near Richmond.

I call the attention of the House to this part of my right hon. friend's remarks:

But, suspicious as to the dealings of the government with the company in question—the Drummond Country Railway Company—having been thrown out to the public, the government deem it their duty to court every inquiry and to see that all charges may be properly ventilated.

Here the Prime Minister states that the only reason why the government granted the Drummond County inquiry was because suspicions had been thrown out to the public with regard to the government dealings in the purchase of that railway. There were no specific charges made in this House. We were not defied to make these specific charges, but as the right hon. gentleman says, it was only because suspicions had been thrown out that it was the duty of the government to ask for a full and complete inquiry, and the Prime Minister moved:

That a special committee of the House be appointed to inquire into the expenditure of the subsidies granted by the parliament of Canada in aid of the construction of the Drummond County Railway and into all negotiations and transactions between the government of Canada and any member or officer thereof, or any person in its behalf, and the Drummond County Railway Company, or any director, officer or person in the company's behalf, relating to the acquiring of the said railway by the government; with power to send for papers, persons and records, and to report the evidence to this House, together with the opinion of the said committee thereupon.

How is it that the government has changed its mind now. Why is it that when charges are made by responsible persons in the Yukon, by the Dawson Board of Trade, by the municipal corporation of the city of Dawson, yes, and by even the friends and supporters of the government; why is it that these charges and these accusations are not to be investigated, while mere suspicions in connection with the Drummond County railway purchase were to be the subject of a full and complete investigation. There is one other reason why the inquiry is limited to discovering whether Treadgold should have the power to construct hydraulic works in the Yukon, and that one other reason is, that the commission is worded in this way in order to throw sand into the eyes of the public. Public opinion demanded a full and complete investigation into everything connected with the transaction, and this kind of investigation is granted so that the government may be able to say: oh, well, we granted an inquiry any way. We well remember how in the first years of this government they used to say to us: We will investigate every charge and every accusation you can bring against the government, and not only that, but we will investigate even every suspicion of wrong doing so that the people may know that the men who now sit on the treasury benches compose the purest government that ever held power in Canada. Alas; how they have changed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Probably the government is growing old and probably a little more wicked than it was in its earlier days, and now we see charges which have shocked the public conscience relegated to one side and not investigated. We object to the proposed investigation; first: because it is too limited in its scope, and second because it is an investigation by a royal commission. What the country demands is a full and complete investigation by a committee of parliament. Parliament is in session now and we can have an investigation before a committee of this House. We gave the reason some time ago, why we objected to the appointment of Mr. Justice Britton, and I shall not refer to that again further than to say that the independent press of this country unite in beseeching him not to accept the position which the government has offered to him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The Toronto 'News' is not a journal favouring this side of the House, and it can I believe be called an independent exponent of public opinion. On the 9th instant the Toronto 'News' wrote:

A Case for Diffidence.

There is no attack, so far as we are aware, upon Mr. Justice Britton as a judge. Not a word has been said in derogation of his impartiality. But it is a thoroughly recognized principle that the best and most impartial judge on the bench should not sit upon a case in which he has had, at any time, a private interest. British practice assumes that in such a case there is a possibility of the most upright men being swayed by an unconscious bias. British scrupulousness has impelled many judges to decline the embarrassment of cases in which their interest was more remote than Judge Britton's in the Yukon case.

Mr. Britton, as M.P., for Kingston, was the government's spokesman in the Yukon scandals debate of 1900. There is a clear historic connection between those scandals and the Treadgold concession charges of to-day. The administration which Mr. Britton defended in 1900 is the same administration which he is to judge to-day. By declining to act, he will admit nothing save that he has the same diffidence and the same objection to anomalous positions as has distinguished the highest members of the British bench.

It seems to me that every word of that article is absolutely true. But let us pass over it; let us not say anything more about Mr. Justice Britton, although I may add that it is rumoured, and it seems to be true, that Mr. Justice Britton is closely allied with the partner of one of the Treadgold concessionaires. Under these circumstances, it is indecent for the government to appoint him, and it is still more indecent for Mr. Justice Britton to accept the trust which the government proposes to impose upon him.

The past experience of this country is not favourable to the appointment of members of the bench to investigate charges made in the political arena. I am free to admit, after some years of experience, that both parties have committed the mistake of entrusting to judges the very onerous and disagreeable task of inquiring into charges made by political men, either in the House or in the public press. These commissions do not satisfy public opinion, and, more than that, what is to be sincerely deplored by every lover of his country, they expose the bench to a loss of the confidence, the prestige, and the respect which the bench should enjoy.

As I said a moment ago, the House is in session, and there is no reason why a committee should not be appointed to investigate the charges which have been brought to the door of the government, not only in regard to the Treadgold matter, but in regard to the other hydraulic concessions mentioned in the instructions. It will probably be said that such an investigation would cost a great deal of money; but, Sir, in a case like this money is no object. If the government of this country are under a cloud, no question of money should come between them and the proof of the innocence of every minister who sits on the treasury benches. Nobody on this side of the House or in the country would grudge a cent of the money spent on such a laudable object. It may be said that it is too late in the session to hold such an inquiry. If it is too late in the session it is the fault of the government. These matters were brought to the attention of the government as far back as the 16th of April last, and also on the 12th of May last; and if the government were innocent of the charges brought against them, I say again, they should have been the first to rise in their seats, as they did in the beginning of their regime, and say, we court the fullest investigation, we want it, and we will go before a committee of parliament and show that all these accusations are false and that we are perfectly innocent.

The question of the relative value of an investigation by a royal commission or by judges and an inquiry by a parliamentary committee, is not new. I now proceed to quote some of the opinions which were given in years gone by, by eminent members of this House, some of whom sit in this House yet. Let me quote what the present Speaker of the House said on this question:

We have been able to find out what measure of light such inquiries can bring to bear upon the matters to be investigated. I remember that, in 1882, an extremely grave accusation was formulated by a member of the Quebec legislature, an accusation which involved a large number of members, and endangered their seats in the assembly. Instead of referring the matter to a serious tribunal, instead of referring it to a committee of the assembly, the government appointed a royal commissioner, Hon. Judge Routhier, to inquire into it. I have nothing to say against the character of this distinguished magistrate, but as he alone had the carrying out of the inquiry, without the help of a counsel for the accusing party, and as he naturally did not know where the guilt rested, nor what witnesses could enlighten him, he simply called a few witnesses designated by public rumour, and there was the end of it. We see by that the uselessness of having such inquiries made by royal commissioners, beyond the control of parliament, and before whom witnesses can not be heard who should be heard.

Further on he said:

The reason is that those inquiries, controlled by the House, have brought about monstrous revelations, as black as could be brought to light, and now it is the intention that the truth as to similar accusations must be kept from the public gaze.

One would think the hon. the Speaker was speaking from my place in the House, and was saying what I should say:

Such is the only reason, Mr. Speaker, why an effort is now made to refer these charges not to a committee controlled by the House, not to a responsible committee, but to a single person who will deal with the matter as he will think fit, who will hear the witnesses he will choose to, and from whom the House or the country cannot expect justice full and complete.

The present Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Carroll) also spoke on that occasion, and what did he say?

I am opposed to parliament depriving itself of a right which belongs to it absolutely. The members themselves are the natural judges where questions affecting the honour of the House are concerned. Moreover, as has unhappily been shown, judges acting in such places, depart from their functions, and by meddling with our political disputes, lose the prestige of impartiality which is necessary to them. Besides, judges appointed by the executive are under the control of the executive and should not be called upon to judge the acts of those who compose the executive. Their functions are defined—let us not make them depart from these functions. The authority which appoints judges is that which grants or refuses the advancement, which is the aim of the functionaries of the judiciary as well as of the administration. This is sufficient for a judge, unless he be proof against all suggestions which individual interest may inspire, to feel that he is not completely independent, and to allow himself sometimes to render services, when judgments inspired by justice alone should be rendered.

Mr. Davies, now Mr. Justice Davies, of the Supreme Court, speaking on the same question, went so far as to say that to his mind the appointment of royal commissions in these matters was not constitutional. He said :

Is it constitutional ? If we are to take the authority of Todd we find it is unconstitutional to refer to a royal commission subjects connected with the ordinary duties of the executive government and with its relations to parliament ; that it is unconstitutional to refer to a royal commission an inquiry as to the acts of misconduct which may have been committed by a judge or by a minister of state. That is the law as laid down by Todd, to whose authority there has been no exception taken heretofore. Yet, hon gentlemen are asking their followers to adopt the course which is distinctly laid down as an unconstitutional course, in order that they may evade, and, if possible, postpone, to a future day, an exposure which if allowed to go to a committee, they feel is inevitable.

At that time the late Mr. Justice Mills, who always went into these subjects very fully, and who was one of the best exponents of constitutional history and law on the side of the House on which he sat, speaking on the same subject, said :

Sir, I have been taunted with saying that the rule which we asked to have observed in the trial of these charges is a rule which dates from the days of Edward III., and I think that is so. I have taken the trouble to copy that rule, and it is part of the law of parliament from that day down to the present. The rule is as follows :

'That it is the undoubted right of the Commons to inquire into public abuses, and to impeach the councillors of the Crown for acts of corruption.

That is the law as to the authority of parliament. Are the charges which have been made by the hon. member for West Ontario, charges which involve public abuses ? Remember, Mr. Speaker, that charges of this sort do not relate simply to members of parliament ; they relate to ministers of the Crown in their official capacity, and they relate also to any other officers of the state having important functions to discharge. Sir, parliament has never delegated to any other body this inquisitorial power ; it has never delegated to any other body the right to inquire into existing abuses, or into acts of corruption charged against members of the administration. It has stated at an earlier period than this that the House had nothing to do with inquiring into charges against members unless those charges related to acts performed by them in their capacity as members of the House. I do not understand that to be the law. It is the business of parliament to inquire into the conduct of the ministers. Ministers are entrusted with great power ; they have devolving upon them important public duties, and in the discharge of those duties they are responsible to this House.

Further on in the debate he said :

Sir, I might refer to the case of Mr. Butt. Serious imputations were made against that member and other members of the House. They were charged with corruption, and on that occasion they were charged by the 'Times' newspaper.

I would call the attention of the government to this fact. No charge was made in the House against Mr. Butt, no specific charge was laid at his door. The only charges against him were those made by the 'Times' newspaper.

They were not charged in parliament, and when a motion was made for the investigation of those charges a committee was at once granted. Lord John Russell declared that the charges having been made, it was the right of the member to have a committee to investigate those charges in order that he might vindicate himself and purge himself from those accusations. If that be so with respect to charges made outside of parliament, it is a fortiori, the right of every hon. member who chooses to make such charges or the member against whom they are made, to have them investigated by a committee of the House. It is the most expeditious manner of conducting these inquiries. It is the method which the law of parliament has provided, and it has been well said by one of the highest authorities in England, Hallam, that it is the most appropriate tribunal, considering the serious character of the accusations and the importance of the proceedings, for investigating into the facts and for vindicating the law.

I have shown this House that these charges have been made by public bodies in the Yukon Territory, by thousands of disinterested citizens in that territory, by the very friends and supporters of the government. I have also shown that at the beginning of the present regime, those hon. gentlemen, not only when accusations were made, but even when suspicions were thrown out to the public, immediately resorted to the proper tribunal, a committee of this house to investigate those charges, and clear their skirts. I have shown by the authorities that I have quoted, the Speaker of the House, the Solicitor General, the Hon. Mr. Justice Davies and that great authority, the late Mr. Justice Mills, that the proper tribunal before which accusations should be ventilated, is a committee of this House.

Under the circumstances the government has wholly failed to carry out the duty it owes to the country and to itself, and in consequence I propose in amendment :

That all the words after 'that' in the proposed motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor :—

For some time the grants by the government of Canada to certain parties and among others to one A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates of hydraulic concessions in the Yukon Territory have been publicly denounced as fraudulent ;

That at a convention held in the city of Dawson on or about the 1st of October, 1902, for the purpose of selecting a Liberal candidate to represent the Yukon Territory in this parliament of Canada it was among other things resolved that many of the concessions above mentioned were obtained by fraud and imposition.

That James Hamilton Ross, Esquire, now a member of this House for the Yukon Territory in accepting the nomination offered to him by the said convention promised publicly through the press to advocate a thorough investigation of the charges of fraud aforesaid :

That the Board of Trade of the city of Dawson and others on the 16th of April, 1903, presented to this House a petition in which it is alleged that the said concessions to A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates 'involved an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this territory for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.'

That on or about the 23rd March, 1903, the corporation of the city of Dawson addressed to this House a petition similar in terms to the foregoing petition of the Dawson Board of Trade ;

That the Liberal Association of the city of Dawson at a meeting held on the first of April, 1903, publicly denounced the said concessions as having been obtained by fraud and misrepresentations and petitioned the Government to institute an inquiry 'to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions (to wit the above named concessions) were obtained in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.' That on the 12th of May last the government by the honourable the Postmaster General, during the debate on the Treadgold concession, promised to this House to fully carry out the representations which had been made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that could be mentioned or entertained in regard to any matter connected with the Yukon administration.

This House regrets that by the instructions given to the commissioners to be appointed to investigate this subject and which were laid on the Table of the House on the 8th of June instant, the proposed investigation is limited to the question as to whether the grant or concession to A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates of the 21st April, 1902, and other similar concessions are likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interests of the Yukon Territory.

And this House is of the opinion that a special committee of this House should be appointed with all necessary powers to make a full and complete investigation not only into the providence or improvidence of the terms and conditions of the several hereinbefore mentioned concessions but also into all the circumstances relating to or connected with the granting or procurement of the same and of all alterations therein, all negotiations and transactions between the government or any member or officer thereof and the said concessionaires or any person on their behalf with respect thereto or with respect to any alteration therein, the names of the persons directly or indirectly interested from time to time in the said concessions, the nature of their respective interests and the circumstances under which such interests were acquired.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock). I wish, Mr. Speaker, that I could congratulate the hon. gentleman on having shown at least some measure of parliamentary courage in the way he has presented his case to the House. He has taken shelter behind his position as a member and, though challenged four weeks ago, has not up to this moment been able to summon sufficient courage to pledge his own faith to the charges he would fain have ventilated. He has told us that public opinion demands a full inquiry. But let us see what the hon. gentleman did ask by the motion he presented to parliament on the 12th of May last. The motion was as follows :

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out, and the following added instead thereof :—'this House regrets that by an Order in Council of date the 21st day of April, 1902, the government, for the ostensible purpose of establishing hydraulic works to supply water for the efficient working of auriferous deposits, have granted to one A. N. C. Treadgold, of London, England, and his associates, vast powers, franchises and concessions in and upon the bends, banks, valleys, slopes and hills of the Klondike river, Bonanza, Bear and Hunker creeks, and in and upon the waters of Rock creek, in the Yukon Teritory, with the right to establish for the benefit and advantage of the concessionaires, in and through the region and district through which these rivers and creeks run, hydraulic, electrical and other systems, and to enter and to take up and operate mining and other lands.

This House is of opinion that the said powers, franchises and concessions constitute in favour of the said Treadgold and his associates a gigantic monopoly which, while depriving the treasury of enormous revenues, is most detrimental to the mining industry of the Yukon.

And that in so making the said grants and concessions by Order in Council the government have exceeded their authority and have committed a gross breach of the duty entrusted to them under the constitution.

That simply referred to the Treadgold concession. It simply charged that great advantages had been given to the concessionaires and that the government had acted ultra vires. There is nothing in that motion making reference to other concessions or charging bad faith of fraud or concealment or misrepresentation. There is in it nothing whatever except that a grant had been made, which, in its financial aspects, appeared to have been against the public interest. That was the extent of the grievance which the hon. gentleman set up in his motion on the 12th of May. That represented the gravamen of his charge. That was the full extent to which he could go in seeking to make any insinuation or charge against the government. How did we meet that motion ? We made an order; we directed an inquiry. This order is far more comprehensive even than my hon. friend suggested on that occasion. It not only directed an inquiry into the Treadgold concession, but directed an inquiry with regard to all hydraulic concessions and also as to the best means of development of the placer mining interests of the Yukon —a far more comprehensive inquiry than

My hon. friend, with a great flourish, produces a petition from certain persons. He reads from that petition and suggests that the commission that has been appointed does not cover the case made in this petition. The petition does not deal with the matters to which my hon. friend refers, provided he read the whole of the petition. This petition, which the hon. gentleman has been kind enough to send me says :

The benefits conferred upon the grantees are of incalculable value, and involve an enormous sacrifice of the resources of this territory for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.

I have not read all the petition, but on that point at least, it will hardly be said that it is not covered by the Royal Commission. The Royal Commission, after reciting the Treadgold concession, proceeds to say :

That it is important in the public interest that inquiry be made for the purpose of obtaining information showing to what extent the said grant and concession is likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interests of the Yukon Territory.

What is the meaning of that part of the order of reference ? My hon. friend says that the charge is that the concessionaires have obtained great advantage at the expense of the public. The order of reference is to ascertain whether the grant is likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interests of the Yukon Territory. Will any hon. gentleman say that, under that order the charge made in this petition is not fully capable of being inquired into ? The order of reference goes on :

That it is also desirable that at the same time the inquiry should not be limited to the said grant and concession, but should extend to all similar concessions granted in the Yukon Territory ;

That it is further desirable that the commissioners making the inquiry should investigate generally all facts and circumstances which may afford information to the government and to parliament respecting the hydraulic or other means which it is desirable should be adopted to successfully develop the benches, banks, and other elevated grounds which can only be worked at great disadvantage under natural conditions or are not able to be worked at all without an artificial supply of water.

So, the point made in this petition is amply covered by the order of reference. But my hon. friend says that an article was read some weeks ago in this House emanating from the Yukon 'Sun,' containing certain charges, and that these are not made a subject of inquiry. I would like to know what would become of parliamentary practice if the charges made in newspapers were to be made the foundation of parliamentary inquiry. My hon. friend cites the case of Mr. Butt, in which, he says, a member of parliament was able to obtain a parliamentary inquiry to meet a charge made against him in an article in the London 'Times.' But where is the charge made against any named person in any newspaper or by any hon. member of this House ? The hon. gentleman has not dared to name a man. He has made insinuations. If it were parliamentry, I would say that he has assumed a most unworthy part; if I were permitted by the rules to say so I would say that he had adopted a cowardly course in making insinuations against members of this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I say, Sir, that if it were parliamentary I would charge him with having followed a most cowardly procedure in not having named some hon. member instead of insinuating. Let him rise in his place and make a charge against any man and we shall know how to deal with it. But, until he does so, let him not seek a parallel in Mr. Butt's case. In that case, the editor had the manliness to name the member, and the member availed himself of his position to ask for the benefit of an inquiry. Will the hon. gentleman say who is named in this case ? Has he ever named any one ? Does he now name any one ? I will give place to him, if he will rise and name some one in the government or out of the government against who he dare to level a charge. Let him, if he dare, put his honour in the balance with the honour of the man he assails, and we shall see which way the balance will go. But, until he does that, he has not made a case similar to that of Mr. Butt, but has rather put himself in a position which enables him to shelter himself behind the privileges of the House to utter words that will be spread broadcast throughout the country in the hopes that they will spread their poison in fertile ground. Mr. Chairman, the questions resolve themselves into two. The first point is whether there have been improvident grants—whether these concessions have been granted against the public interest. My hon. friend will not say that that branch of the question is not fully covered by the order of reference. Why be so indignant against the appointment of Judge Britton if he is not called upon to deal with the class of charge that my hon. friend shrinks from making but only insinuates ? If it is merely an inquiry into the business phase of the question, the personality of the commissioner is not of such special importance. If, however, the charge were of a different character then, perhaps, my hon. friend would have some force in his contention that, according to the form of the charge the inquiry might be before a different tribunal—perhaps, before a committee of the House. But, up to this moment, the hon. gentleman has not ventured to suggest anything that would commit him to the truthfulness or belief in the truthfulness or otherwise of any accusation. He simply alludes to the business phase of the question, shirking carefully any personal responsibility as to the accusations he has made. Now, I ask, Mr. Chairman, is it fair for the hon. gentleman to act in that way? Is it fair toward the country for him to make use of his position as a member of this House to make insinuation, and yet, at the same time, to shrink from the responsibility of making charges? Other members of this House in days gone by have, at different times, had the courage of their suspicions. But not so on this occasion. And yet my hon. friend seeks to add to his motion of the 12th of May, by pretending that it asked for more than it did, and endeavours to make out that the House is bound to do more than he asked for on that occasion, because, at a subsequent date, I made a statement, which, he says, would carry the inquiry beyond the limit to which it is at present confined. What were the circumstances under which I made the statement? My hon. friend was well aware that Mr. Ross, the hon. member for the Yukon is more or less familiar with the conditions of the Yukon, and more or less familiar with the state of public opinion in that district. He is aware that this question became a political question during the election in the Yukon, and the people there naturally look to Mr. Ross, as their representative, to take a more or less active part in dealing with matters that interest them. Therefore, when this question came before the House, at the time it did, it seemed to me inopportune that we should finally dispose of the case in the absence of the hon. member for the Yukon. At that time the member for the Yukon was not in his place in parliament. Every one knows that he has sustained a great bereavement and that his health broke down under the sad affliction, and although he hoped to be able to attend the session, yet his health has obliged him to absent himself. When this matter came before the House the government had no opportunity of consulting with him, we did not know his precise whereabouts, he was in the west moving about for his health. I think at the moment he was in British Columbia, and it was some time before I found out his whereabouts. But I stated in the House that when Mr. Ross came to Ottawa and we had an opportunity of consulting with him with regard to all the matters of the Yukon, we would issue a commission of inquiry of the character to which I referred. I have not yet seen Mr. Ross, he has not yet been to Ottawa, I trust his health will enable him to come here; but up to this moment we have not had an opportunity of seeing him, and therefore the inquiry which was proposed to be undertaken must be deferred until his arrival.

I would add that in connection with the same statement I made, I then suggested that the inquiry would be as extensive as the hon. gentleman's charges, and if it were limited to his charges at this moment, certainly it would not be a very extensive inquiry. Nevertheless, no matter at what stage of the session it be brought up, I tell the hon. gentleman now that whenever he is prepared to make charges against the honour of any minister, or against the conduct of any officer of the Crown, his charge will be dealt with in a parliamentary way. But it has not been the practice in the past, and I question if it would be a sound practice to inaugurate to-day, for an hon. member of this House to say that certain charges having been made broadcast over the country, therefore on such an unsound foundation, parliament should undertake a solemn investigation. Why, Sir, I would ask the hon. gentleman what is the nature of the inquiry that is to be made? He is a member of the bar. What would be thought of him if he were to appear in court in support of a plaintiff's claim, and there was nothing on record to show the nature of that claim? The most simple opportunity of pleading a case requires that some particulars of the complaint should be required. It is not sufficient to issue a writ and to bring the defendant into court on a writ. The defendant is entitled to more than that. In the first place, he is entitled to the particulars. In this case the hon. gentleman wants to bring unknown parties into court, giving no names of the parties accused, nor the offence of which he thinks they ought to be accused. What sort of a position is that? Yet that is the position into which he asks parliament to put itself.

I think at the last debate—if we may refer to that—the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and other gentlemen of fertile imagination spoke about rumours in London, rumours in New York, rumours in the Yukon. Fancy a committee sitting down to inquire into rumours in London, rumours in New York, rumours in the Yukon, rumours in the heart of members of the opposition. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the hon. member for Montmorency making such a speech; I am not surprised at his endeavouring by his quotations and allegations, made on hearsay, to escape from the position in which he put himself by the absurd argument he presented to parliament a few weeks ago. We have granted him the inquiry he asked for then.

But he says the independent press is in his favour. The only journal of the independent press which he ventured to quote from was the Toronto 'News,' and if I recollect aright the Toronto 'News' said that if Mr. Casgrain believed in the correctness of his charges it was due to parliament that he should take the responsibility of formulating them. I have got a file of the 'News' here, and I find a piece in the editorial column of a certain date absent. I do not know whether it is the date in question or not. But my impression is that the Toronto 'News' says that if he desired an inquiry he should have assumed the responsibility of making that charge.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You had better read the article.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot find the article containing that. But whether the independent press says that or not, I remember very well the practice of parliament, and until the practice of parliament changes, I presume this House will not, on this occasion, inaugurate such an absurd practice, as to refer to a parliamentary inquiry, rumours that have been heard on the streets of London, on the streets of New York, and the streets of Dawson, and are being circulated and added to, very frequently, by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MONK. That is what the hon. gentleman does not like, I think.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not mind fair play, Mr. Speaker, but I do object to unmanly conduct, even on the floors of parliament.

Mr. MONK. I would not go to the hon gentleman to learn fair play.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I wish the hon. gentleman would. If the hon. gentleman would appeal to me for a precedent he would find one. But, Mr. Speaker, we may turn this question over and over as we like, it all comes back to the same point. I put it now, and will put it as often as this occasion is presented, or other occasions are presented: Name some person, name your charge, and if it is worthy of investigation the government will order the investigation. But the investigation is probably the last thing the hon. gentleman wants. He will not put himself into the position of moving this House to make an investigation. Why won't he? Because, doubtless, he knows the investigation would fail. Knowing it would fail, he would cover his retreat by a pretense of desiring an investigation which he probably is the last one to hope will be granted. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the order of reference completely meets the motion of the 12th of May, goes far beyond that motion; and if the hon. gentleman desires any further order, he has only to put himself in parliamentary order and he will get the further inquiry desired.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I do not know whether the public will appreciate the conduct of my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) in the same way it has been appreciated by the Postmaster General to-night. But between the conduct of my hon. friend from Montmorency and the backdown of the Postmaster General, I think there will be many people in this Dominion, many intelligent people, to see the difference. Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Montmorency brought to the knowledge of this House, not faint rumour, but facts. Does the Postmaster General pretend that the application of the Dawson Board of Trade, made, if I mistake not, to this House——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is fully covered by the order.

Mr. MONK. Does he pretend that it is not worthy of some notice?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is fully covered by the order.

Mr. MONK. It is not covered by the order.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Read it.

Mr. MONK. Nor is any other document covered to which my hon. friend refers. Is the clear, unmistakable manifesto of the Liberal Club of Dawson City, alleging that these concessions have been obtained by unlawful and corrupt means, and cannot have been obtained otherwise, is that fully covered by the order? Why, my hon. friend knows, himself, that when this matter was first brought to his notice, before the public press had given evidence, Mr. Speaker, of knowing a little more than my hon. friend dreamed was known among the public, my hon. friend was the first to get up in this House, and, speaking for the government, what language did he hold? I will read it again to my hon. friend and to hon. members of this House, so that they can see the difference between the language held on that occasion by the hon. Postmaster General and his vain effort to-night to try and crawl out by the back door and refuse that investigation, which is the only one that can possibly lay the real facts of this sinister affair before the public of this country. What did the hon. gentleman say?

I would also say to my hon. friend——

He was speaking to my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain).

—who tells us that he is so desirous of investigation that I am sure he must well know that it has been long the fixed intention of the government to hold such an investigation. The hon. gentleman must remember that, when the election was held, promises——

Because of the demands that were made, were given to the people of the Yukon that there would be a commission to inquire into the whole administration of that territory. There has been no opportunity since that date until the present to send in commissioners. I doubt if navigation is more than open, even if it is yet open. When the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) returns to Ottawa,—he is at present in British Columbia, I understand —and we can have the benefit of his advice, it is our intention to fully carry out the representations made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that hon. gentlemen may be good enough to mention or entertain in regard to any matters connected with the Yukon administration.

And so on. There was at that time given to this House by the hon. Postmaster General, speaking for the government, the assurance that a full and thorough investigation would be made into all these suspicious circumstances which three or four responsible bodies of that important territory, which the population in its entirety have been exacting from the government; at all events, ever since there was an election held in the district. Under these circumstances it seems a monstrous injustice that the hon. Postmaster General, changing and shifting his position entirely to-night, should come before the House and endeavour to vindicate and defend an investigation so limited in its scope as to be absolutely useless. Names! My hon. friend wants names. He wants my hon. friend from Montmorency and he wants me, whose knowledge of the facts is limited to what I have stated here to-night and what I will state again, to name the men, to name the ministers connected with this nefarious transaction. We will not do it. But, Mr. Speaker, which is the department which must have engineered this grant? It is the Department of the Interior, and I say boldly here to-night that it is a strange thing during the whole of this long session, when these things have been noised among the people before the opening of the session, when we knew of them, that the hon. Minister of the Interior the (Hon. Mr. Sifton) should be absent. I say this boldly. I do not think it is necessary for the hon. Minister of the Interior to be away from his department during the whole of this important session and that whatever may have been his business on the other side of the Atlantic he could have transacted that business and instructed those called upon to defend the Alaskan boundary so that he could have been here in order to give us these explanations which in his absence we lack absolutely. This is not a political question. The absence of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) is not an obstacle to a full and entire investigation. My hon. friend from Montmorency having quoted here the utterances of the board of trade of Dawson city, having given us, in addition, the utterances of the city council and given us, in addition, published in the Yukon official 'Gazette,' the statement of an important association, one which could not have been prejudiced against this government, that these concessions not only were erroneous, not only were destructive of the public good and of the prosperity of the miners, but that they cannot have been obtained otherwise than by corrupt and irregular methods. My hon. friend, having made us acquainted the other day with the pledges given by Mr. Ross, whose absence is regretted, upon the occasion of his election that he would ask for the revocation of these concessions and that he would, moreover, insist with this government upon a full investigation, it is vain under all these circumstances for hon. gentlemen opposite to endeavour to escape from the promise of the hon. Postmaster General upon the plea that we are not prepared here—members of this House to come down and incriminate in their absence other members of this House. I shall not take such a responsibility. It is not necessary for us to do so, but what we have to do is to announce to the government the utterances of these important bodies asking for an investigation which will go fully into the transactions previous to the obtaining of these concessions. Do the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches imagine that an investigation of the nature of that which they desire to hold is an investigation that would satisfy the people? I have referred to the rumours which exist throughout the country, which any man who takes the trouble to investigate will find to be absolutely logical rumours. Will these rumours be quieted by such an investigation as the hon. Postmaster General proposes to have? I would ask the right hon. gentleman who leads this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) fearlessly to-night if it is not the case that matters were brought to the notice of His Excellency the Governor General and by the Governor General brought to the notice of the right hon. gentleman himself.

The PRIME MINISTER. I deny that in the most positive and absolute terms.

Mr. MONK. We are obliged to accept the right hon. gentleman's denial, but the right hon. gentleman surely has heard these rumours himself or else none of the noises of this world that reach the country are heard by him. The matter has been repeated again and again not to people who are seeking scandal, not to people, who, in the delicate language of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) the other day were described as being people occupied in collecting garbage and spuming it out before this House—whatever may be the sense of that phrase. The thing has been repeated time and again from different parts of this Dominion and elsewhere and under these circumstances what my hon. friend the member for Montmorency has said is more than true. It behooves the right hon. gentleman and it behooves the hon. Postmaster General, if they believe in the vanity of all these sayings, if they believe that the utterances of these men who live far from here and who have denounced this transaction in the strongest possible terms that have ever been used to my knowledge in this House, to fix the guilt if guilt there is, upon somebody. It may be some inferior official, it may be men who by fraudulent means have been the instruments of those who obtained these concessions it may be higher up because such things have been seen before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. Under all these circumstances, the Postmaster General has adopted a most unjust manner of getting out of this serious affair, in having this investigation held by a judge who is not acceptable to both parties for the excellent reasons already stated to this House. An investigation into the hydraulic necessities of the Yukon and the value of these concessions from an hydraulic point of view will not satisfy the people of this country. I believe, Sir, that it is constitutional and logical for us to take the stand which I have taken previously on this subject, and which is now taken by my hon. friend from Montmorency. It is neither constitutional nor fair, nor is it according to parliamentary law in Canada or England, that when the utterances of these responsible bodies living in a remote part of the country are brought to the notice of this House, that we should be told that the hon. member who brings them to the attention of the House must be prepared to stake his reputation as a member of this parliament and to make a specific charge against the guilty parties whose names are not yet known, before an investigation will be granted.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the question is put, I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General to one or two circumstances connected with this matter. We know that the election of Mr. Ross for the Yukon was heralded throughout the length and breadth of Canada as a victory for the Liberal party. We saw it paraded in every Liberal newspaper in Canada as a vindication of the splendidly pure administration given by this government to the Yukon Territory. Now, I would like to point out to the Postmaster General and to the Prime Minister what Mr. Ross's platform was on that occasion. I will leave out—no I will not leave out; I will read the whole of the sentence which contains the language to which I refer.

> I shall advocate the reduction of fees, which, I think, may now be safely done without impairing the revenue; the adoption of regulations compelling the actual working of claims; the establishment of an assay office in Dawson, where miners may obtain full value for their gold, such office to be operated in conjunction with the quartz mill, where ore may be tested free of charge; the thorough investigation of the charges of fraud made in respect to the manner in which certain concessions are alleged to have been obtained, and if such fraud is established, the immediate commencement of such proceedings as may be required to vacate the grants, and the enforcement of strict compliance with the conditions embodied in all Crown grants in the Yukon.

In passing I may say that this is the platform of Mr. Ross as contained in the official organ of this government, 'The Yukon Sun,' which received from the government last year no less a sum than nearly $2,400 for advertising and printing done by the individuals who happen to be the fortunate possessors of that paper. Then the advertised platform of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) is surmounted with a very good portrait of him indeed and the planks of his platform are laid down:

> 1. Reduced fee for miners' licenses and recording.
> 2. Government aid for a smelter.
> 3. Free quartz test mill and assay office at Dawson.
> 4. National ownership of large water rights.
> 5. Cancellation of concessions obtained by fraud.

That is the platform on which Mr. Ross comes to this House, and there is this significant feature in connection with it: that this platform is what the Postmaster General had in mind when a few weeks ago he pledged that there should be an investigation not only as to the providence or improvidence of this Threadgold concession, but an invesigation into every circumstance or suspicion that had been raised with regard to it. The language of the platform of the member for the Yukon and the language of the Postmaster General run on identical lines. The platform signed by Mr. J. H. Ross to the Yukon electors was:

> I shall advocate the thorough investigation of the charges of fraud made in respect to the manner in which certain concessions are alleged to have been obtained.

It is not my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) who is making these charges of fraud. It is the member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) who by his promise and pledge to the people of the country said that upon coming to this parliament he would advocate a thorough investigation of those very charges, the investigation of which is demanded by my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And my hon. friend from Montmorency standing in his place here to-night is only adopting the platform of Mr. Ross the member for the Yukon in asking the government to have a full inquiry.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Let the Postmaster General bear that in mind before he attempts to taunt my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) in the weak and unworthy manner in which he has attempted to taunt him to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The member for the Yukon says 'I will advocate a thorough investigation of these frauds,' and a few days ago the Postmaster General speaking perhaps a little hastily as he sometimes does, but speaking candidly said :

I would also state to my hon. friend who tells us that he is very desirous of investigation, that I am sure he must well know that it has long been the fixed intention of the government to hold such an investigation.

How was my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) to know it. He was only to know it from the fact that the member from the Yukon, elected as a supporter of this government had promised his electors that he would obtain for them a thorough investigation into these very charges of fraud which were brought to the attention of the House to-night by the hon. gentleman from Montmorency.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Postmaster General continued :

The hon. gentleman must remember that when the election was held, promises were given to the people of the Yukon that there would be a commission to inquire into the whole administration of that territory.

And in what language was that promise given. Let me read once more.

A thorough investigation of the charges of fraud made in respect to the manner in which certain concessions are alleged to have been obtained, and if such fraud is established the immediate commencement of such proceedings as may be required to vacate the grants.

That beyond doubt is the language to which the Postmaster General was alluding, and the platform of the hon. member for the Yukon is the only source from which the hon. member for Montmorency could have obtained the knowledge which was attributed to him by the Postmaster General. But the Postmaster General taunts the hon. member for Montmorency and he says : Name your names and give us something more than mere rumours. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, and the hon. Postmaster General, to show me the names that were given in the resolution moved by the right hon. gentleman with regard to the Drummond County Railway. I pause to ask either one of these hon. gentlemen to show me one single line in that resolution giving the name of any individual. And yet the right hon. gentleman, on that occasion, adopting a course very different from that which he asks the hon. Postmaster General to defend to-night, said :

The reasons which compel the government to make this motion will be understood by every one in this House. Suspicions as to the dealings of the government with the company in question, the Drummond County Railway Company, having been thrown out to the public, the government deem it their duty to court every inquiry, and to see that all charges may be properly ventilated.

Well, why do the government not deem it their duty now, when the platform of their own candidate in the Yukon demanded that these charges should be investigated, why do they not deem it their duty to court every inquiry, and why does my hon. friend the Postmaster General stand up in this House and say : Name me some names, and I will give you the inquiry ? What is the difference ? Having regard to the platform of their own candidate, having regard to the charges of the Liberal clubs, having regard to the charges put forward by the board of trade and the corporation of the city of Dawson, there is tenfold more reason why the government should on this occasion court inquiry than there was on the occasion on which my right hon. friend stood up in this House and, amid the applause of his followers, said : The government deem it their duty to court every inquiry, suspicions having been thrown out to the public ; and the same hon. gentlemen who hailed that announcement with applause sit in their seats to-night and hail with applause the announcement of the hon. Postmaster General that the government not only do not court any inquiry, but will not grant any inquiry unless names are named. I leave the hon. gentlemen to their own position in that respect ; but the public of Canada will not, I think, be slow to appreciate the difference in the attitude of the government on that occasion, when the right hon. gentleman thought it his duty to court inquiry, and on this occasion, when the hon. Postmaster General, having spoken for the Crown and having promised a thorough investigation of every subject, stands up and says that he has fulfilled every obligation to the people of this country by granting a mere investigation as to whether or not the concession granted to Mr. Treadgold and his associates was a provident or improvident concession. Take the resolution of my hon. friend from Montmorency, read that resolution from beginning to end, and point out if you can one single word in it that is not justified by the facts. My hon. friend the Postmaster General did not attempt to do that. He contented himself with standing up in this House and throwing a few weak taunts at my hon. friend from Montmorency ; and then, notwithstanding the platform on which his candidate was elected, notwithstanding his own direct reference to that platform a few weeks ago, notwithstanding his deliberate promise to this House, speaking, as he did, for the government, he has the audacity now to say that this government have fulfilled every pledge and every duty to the House and the country by granting this ineffectual commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be possible for the government, with the aid of their followers, to vote down this motion ; but all I have to say is that in doing so they are departing from their own direct pledge, conveyed to the House and the country through the hon. Postmaster General, and they are departing from the promise made by their own candidate to the electorate of the Yukon, upon which he obtained his election to this House, and upon which his election was hailed as a Liberal victory. If my right hon. friend and his colleagues are satisfied with the contrast their conduct on this occasion presents to the attitude of my right hon. friend when he moved for the inquiry with regard to the Drummond County Railway, we shall leave them to their satisfaction ; but when the country comes to pass judgment on this matter, I do not think that it will be so easily satisfied as are the members of the government and those who support them in this House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I think that any deliberate or calm-minded individual who may be present and hear this discussion, will feel rather compelled to the conclusion that our hon. friends opposite are endeavouring, by the violence of their language and the apparent intensity of their feelings, to make up for an exceedingly weak case—for a dearth of material and a lack of facts to fit the accusations which they are making against the government. My hon. friend starts out with intimating that in the proposal which the government has made for an inquiry into this Yukon matter, we are simply showing what an utter farce the thing has developed into, because we have limited the scope of the inquiry to the questions of hydraulic mining and the character of the country from the hydraulic mining point of view. If this is such an iniquitous farce as the hon. gentleman chooses to characterize it, then all the more readily is it capable of being proved that it is a farce, that we are not covering the ground which the public interests require us to cover, and that we are not going the length we ought to go in the investigation which we are to make. I take my hon. friend's resolution, and I am prepared to follow the various clauses and statements contained in it ; and I take it that my hon. friend has put forward the very best case he can ; that he has alleged the strongest possible facts ; that he has summoned to his assistance all that his ingenuity would suggest in the framing of the resolution, to lead up to the conclusion which he asks the House to draw, and which he has himself drawn, namely, that the proposal of the government is nothing but an iniquitous farce. My hon. friend says in this resolution :

> For some time the grants by the government of Canada to certain parties, and, among others, to A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates, of hydraulic concessions in the Yukon Territory, have been publicly denounced as fraudulent :
> That at a convention held in the city of Dawson, on or about the 1st of October, 1902, for the purpose of selecting a Liberal candidate to represent the Yukon Territory in this parliament of Canada, it was, among other things, resolved, that many of the concessions above mentioned were obtained by fraud and imposition.

Now, I ask my hon. friends calmly, if they can summon enough calmness for the purpose, to consider what this language means. Does not the hon. gentleman who moves this resolution feel in his own mind and conscience—if he does not, he ought to feel it—that what these people were complaining of was not fraud perpetrated by the government or to which the government was a party, but some fraudulent representations and impositions that had been practiced on the officers of the department and that had induced them to grant this Treadgold concession. Is there any warrant or justification for drawing from the language which the hon. gentleman has used in his resolution, and which is a counterpart of what is found in newspaper statements and in various other forms made by the Yukon people, the inference that there is any personal or political implication or accusation involved in it against the government or any member of the administration ? Is it not all that can be fairly implied from the language which the hon. gentleman puts forward, that there have been persons who, in procuring these concessions, practiced fraud and imposition upon the government or the officials acting for the government ? A fair reading of the clauses which the hon. gentleman has embodied in his own motion can bring one's mind to no other conclusion. If I am right in this, what foundation is there for the hon. gentleman to say that there is the slightest warrant in anything contained in these two clauses for saying that there is such a prima facie case established as would justify this government in treating these statements as reflecting upon the government or any member of it ? We know how easy it is in a country such as the Yukon, filled with all sorts of people, adventurers from all countries of the world, to create excitement of any kind. These people, so far removed from the control of government, and hoping to achieve great things in their thirst for the precious metals, feel as though they own the country, and had the right to distribute it among themselves. Such a class of people would not stop to consider what was best in the general interest or whether or not this policy or the other would not be more advantageous in the future. But would only look to their own immediate selfish interests. They would not be disposed to listen to reason, but would want to lay their hands on everything in sight, regardless of whether or not the results would be disastrous to the future welfare and interests of the country. In that frame of mind, when the government had decided, after due consideration, that it was in the best interest of the country to establish a system of hydraulic mining upon a large scale and conducted on the most modern mechanical methods, they did not pause to consider whether or not the means which the government adopted would not in the long run be better for them, but determined to see in it only an obstacle in their way, and started this wild excitement. Under the influence of that excitement, therefore, they gave vent to these exaggerated statements and jumped to the conclusion that, because a concession had been granted, there must necessarily have been fraud and misrepresentation practiced on the government. I think that if a jury of non-partisans were summoned to consider the effect of the language used by these people, and if the jury brought its mind to bear on the conditions existing in the Yukon and the class of men gathered there and who created this excitement, they would be driven to the conclusion that the language used did not in any sense involve any reflection or imputation on the integrity of that government or any of its members.

The amendment goes on to deal with the representative of the Yukon :

> That James Hamilton Ross, Esquire, now a member for this House for the Yukon Territory in accepting the nomination offered to him by the said convention promised publicly through the press to advocate a thorough investigation of the charges of fraud aforesaid.

That I do not dispute. I dare say that Mr. Ross himself, although I do not know it as a matter of fact, may have been carried off his feet by that furious craze which had seized the people amongst whom this hydraulic system was going to be established. I could understand that my hon. friends opposite, cool-headed as they usually are when they see no political advantage to be gained, might, if they had been out in the Yukon, have been affected by the same wave of excitement. Everybody was at the moment carried away by it. They would not have paused to consider more than anybody else, but it devolves on this parliament to consider whether it is consistent with its dignity to appoint a commission in order that somebody may be subjected to inquiry to find out what that somebody did. If there had been practiced, as these people imagine—and as I am willing to admit, in this excited state of mind, they believed fraud and misrepresentation on the government, by means of which these privileges were granted, there will still be no necessity to grant a parliamentary commission. The law furnishes adequate means of getting at the facts. If anybody believed that fraud and misrepresentation had been practiced, he could appeal to the courts or to the department. All he has to do is to appeal to the department to have an inquiry, and he would be afforded every opportunity by the department of making his charges good. The law also affords a remedy. If the department refused to grant an investigation, he could take out a writ of scire facias, be given every opportunity to establish before the courts whether such fraud or misrepresentation had been practiced as would invalidate the grant. The court would have discretion to set aside the grant, and the person who claimed that he ought to get it and was unjustly deprived of the privilege of getting it, would have the course open to him to secure it. It is a case essentially to be dealt with by the court and not by a parliamentary committee. You do not want to take a sledge-hammer to break an egg. All you need do is to appeal to the proper quarter in the proper way, stating a sufficient case to enable the minister to judge whether, in his discretion, he should recommend that the expenditure be incurred, and you have all the remedy you could possibly ask.

Now, we come to the next clause of my hon. friend's indictment, or statement of the facts on which he relies :

> That the Board of Trade of the city of Dawson and others on the 16th of April, 1903, presented to this House a petition in which it is alleged that the said concessions to A. N. C. Treadgold and his associates 'involved an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this territory, for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.

Now, what does that mean ? Is not that simply an expression of the dissatisfaction of the board of trade, they being impressed, as the other people there are, with the idea that the system that the government has adopted would do injury to the country ? I am prepared to admit that they were so impressed. But, that being the case, is this anything more than an expression of discontent with the adoption of this policy ? 'Involving an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this country'—is that anything more than to say that the policy of the government is most disastrous to the interests of that section of the Dominion ? Where is the imputation there that would reflect on the integrity of a minister of the Crown ? Where is the warrant there, or in any statement the hon. gentleman has made, that would justify the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in rising in his place, having the responsibility of a member of parliament, and saying that he declines to take the responsibility of incriminating a member of parliament or a minister of the Crown who is not able, at present, to be in his seat in this House ? What is there in this amendment, from the beginning to the end of it, that would warrant any member of this House who has the slightest sense of the responsibility attaching to his position in making such an imputation as that ? I have no doubt—I repeat it—on the contrary I freely confess, that the people in the Yukon, whether you take the board of trade, the common council or any other organization or portion of the inhabitants, are deeply impressed with the idea that if you have these Treadgold concessionaires or any others operating this hydraulic system according to the only way in which it can be worked, you are going to deprive the people of advantages and privileges that they would otherwise individually enjoy, and so do injury to the country. But, that is a mere question of opinion. Would anybody be willing to allow the people in one portion of Canada, particularly a section filled with valuable minerals from which we expect to be able by adopting wise, modern, up-to-date methods to extract great values—would he allow those people to compel the working of these mineral deposits by the individual methods pursued in other times? Would anybody say that the people directly interested and concerned are the proper people to form a judgment as to the best methods by which these important questions in that country should be dealt with? Would anybody be warranted in saying that? We are not taking this step unadvisedly or without precedent. We are not adopting a system which has not been adopted elsewhere and used with success. We could point to dozens of places in the hill countries of the United States where these hydraulic methods had been adopted. And you cannot put two companies one alongside the other, to work the same territory. As I said the other day, when speaking of this matter, the method must be monopolistic or you cannot work it at all. These people complain because this is a monopoly. But how can you erect dams, accumulate water, and arrange for letting this water down to the lower levels to be used in connection with the work of mining, unless you have one organization and one management to control the whole matter—subject, of course, to proper government supervision? There is no alternative, except to leave things as they are. If there was any fault to be found with the terms under which this concession was granted, then, the government must submit to criticism as to those terms. But this is a question of policy. Can any man say that this government would be worthy of the place it occupies, would it be fit to manage the affairs of this country if, after having studied the question and considered the experience in other places, they were puerilely to do nothing and refuse to adopt the policy which is the only one from which the best results could be obtained? We would be open to the strongest condemnation if we declined to do what we did—always provided, of course, that the work is carried out by proper methods. If you read these clamorous complaints from beginning to end, you find little in them but an attack on the government policy. Therefore, I say, you are obliged, if you wish to be fair, not to take as conclusive the judgment of the people who have every interest, as they feel—I think mistakenly—that if they had their own way it would bring to them the best results. Dismiss from these clamorous complaints the idea that the monopoly itself is an evil, that it is an exploitation of individual rights, and you have absolutely nothing with which to deal. We are told that the board of trade made the complaint to which I have alluded. Granted. We are told that on or about the 23rd March, the corporation of the city of Dawson addressed to the House a petition similar in terms to the petition of the board of trade. Granted. The observations which I have made, as to the petition of the board of trade, if those observations at all commend themselves to the House, apply with the same force to the petition of the corporation of the city of Dawson. Then, in the next clause we are told that the Liberal Association of Dawson publicly denounced the said concession as having been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. What does that mean? Does that not mean exactly what the second clause of the amendment means as I have explained it? It means that persons outside, interested in obtaining these concessions, used fraud and misrepresentation, and by these means secured the issue of these grants. I claim the right to conclude from this clause, as from the other, that there is nothing to warrant any suspicion that the integrity of a minister of the Crown is in the slightest degree impeached by the statements made. My hon. friend's motion goes on:

> That on the 12th day of May last the government by the honourable, the Postmaster General, during the debate on the Treadgold Concession, promised to this House to fully carry out the representations which had been made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that could be mentioned or entertained in regard to any matters connected with the Yukon administration.

I have, therefore, passed in review, perhaps, somewhat at length, all the clauses of this amendment which the hon. gentleman has placed one on top of the other, endeavouring to construct a superstructure which would prove that there had been charges made against the government, or involving the character and integrity of a minister of the Crown, I claim to have shown that the hon. gentleman has failed in his purpose, for that is manifestly the purpose which he had in view. He has correctly enough quoted what has been said in these speeches and newspapers and other documents. But, taking all these, and assuming, for the sake of argument, the the construction which is put upon them by the hon. gentlemen opposite, what do they lead to? In substance, as they interpret them, they are a statement that charges of fraud have been made against the government in granting this concession. Now we are invited, upon that assumption, that unwarrantable assumption, to name a parliamentary committee. To do what? The hon. gentleman says, to investigate the charges. I will tell you what you are inviting the government to appoint a parliamentary committee to do. It is to sit down and find out what it is that is charged against the government. You have not told us what the government is charged with. You are simply saying that there was fraud in the granting of this concession, and that therefore a committee should be appointed. Now, could any committee which this House might appoint sit down to discharge its functions without trying, in the first place, to discover what it is of which this fraud consisted? The most rudimentary ideas of parliamentary government would compel hon. gentlemen opposite to tell the House and the country what are the facts which they think constitute a fraud in the transaction of which the government is guilty. Is it not reasonable that such a demand as that should be made upon hon. gentlemen opposite before they ask this House to vote a parliamentary committee? We have only a wild, indefinite, vague statement that there was fraud in granting the concession, a statement made by somebody, a statement of which no member of parliament will assume the responsibility of vouching for, or of saying he believes it. I say, Mr. Speaker, as I have said once before in speaking upon this subject, that the parliament of Canada would be placing itself in a very ridiculous position if it took any such course.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier stated, and the hon. member for Montmorency has stated, that we are taking to-day, in reference to this matter, a very different attitude from what we have taken hitherto; and he says that in the early life of this government, when vague and general statements were made, based on mere suspicions entertained by hon. gentlemen opposite, this government hastened to meet those statements and declared that they were ready, nay, anxious to have them inquired into. Well, Sir, I do not remember that any circumstance occurred in connection with the Drummond County Railway matter of a vague and non-specific character such as the hon. gentleman says exist in the present instance. I happen to remember something about that case, and I know that in the Drummond County Railway matter there was more than a sweeping charge of wrongdoing by the government. That is not said here, but it was said in that case. Now, I am prepared to accept the challenge which the hon. leader of the opposition made to this side of the House a short time ago when he asked us to name a single specific statement. I have not had time to look through the 'Hansard' for the purpose of giving all the statements that were made by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to the Drummond Railway transaction, I am unable to do that in the time at my disposal. I remember very well that one member of this House then, now dead, made the very nastiest kind of imputations in respect to the Drummond County transaction; I remember that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals relieved himself on two or three different occasions of reflections upon the conduct of the present minister in that transaction. But after the committee had reported, and after the investigation had resulted in total and absolute failure, then they hastened to say that they had never made any imputation against the government or any member of it which would involve their integrity, but they had simply impeached the prudence of the arrangement, and the business character of the arrangement. They told us that after the thing was over, and their efforts had proved futile. Now I have here the speech which was made by the hon. member for Montmorency upon one occasion, and how often he made it, I have not been able to ascertain. But any one reading this will agree that there was matter of a specific character to justify any minister in claiming an inquiry and investigation, and that it was not of such a nature, emanating from the quarter it did, that it should be disregarded. The language I am going to quote will be found in the 'Hansard' of 1898, volume 1, page 514.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That was after the premier had announced that this committee would be appointed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it was on the 15th of February, I think it was before the commission was actually appointed, but after the statement was made that it would be appointed. You will see what the hon. gentleman then said, and I think the inference may fairly be drawn that if the hon. member, after he had got his committee, would make a statement of this kind, he would be not unlikely to make even stronger statements, statements that would secure the appointment of a committee which he might think, upon investigation, would disclose something of which he had no evidence, but which was matter of suspicion with him. He said:

> But what, above all, was it that made this investigation necessary? It was the extraordinary speech made in this House last session by the Minister of Public Works. Why, Sir, charged, as he was, in the public press with being interested in the deal he rose in this House and said that 'La Patrie' newspaper, in which he writes every day, which is his organ, which, if report is true—I do not know whether it is true or not, and I do not state it as a fact—virtually belongs to him, was bought for his sons with a cheque for $30,000 furnished by the president of the Drummond County Railway.

Now, the hon. gentleman could not put that statement upon the 'Hansard' and circulate it through the country except for the purpose of creating the impression in the public mind that there was a bargain arising out of this Drummond County business, under which $30,000 passed from the president of the Drummond County Railway into the hands of the Minister of Public Works as a consideration for the transaction. He would not make the statement with any other design in view than to asperse and besmirch the character of the minister to whom he referred. If he did it then—and he did it—how was it possible for the Minister of Public Works otherwise than to say: You have made statements, and members of the House of Commons have made statements of that kind, and therefore I hail with pleasure an investigation into the matter in order that all the facts shall be brought out. But now, has there been a word said, except by insinuation, by the hon. gentleman indicating what the character or nature of the conduct was which he said was attributed by public rumour to a minister of the Crown? Not a syllable. There is nothing to take hold of, and there is nothing which any self-respecting parliament could regard as emanating from a responsible quarter involving such a reflection upon a minister of the Crown as would even leave that minister of the Crown, innocent as he might be and innocent as he is in the present case, the victim of the rumours which are always freely circulated by—I will not say members of parliament—but freely circulated by partisans of one side or the other to the disparagement of their opponents. Under such circumstances, in the face of such a lack of specific material, in the absence of any statement of fact which would show that there had been fraud or malfeasance in office committed by any minister of the Crown or by the government, I cannot see how it would be possible for this government to maintain a position of self-respect if we were to allow hon. gentlemen opposite to obtain a committee of this House to hold an investigation. The government has not changed its mind. I am not conscious that there is present on the treasury benches any member of the administration who would wish to treat questions, reflections, accusations, imputations or insinuations of that kind any differently to-day from the way in which he would wish to treat them two, or three, or four, or five, or six, or seven years ago. There is only one thing that I can imagine would influence the mind of a minister to-day. If the government had treated seriously some of the scandalous rumours which had been aired by hon. gentlemen opposite reflecting upon the government, if we had held investigations, and if our experience of such charges was that there was not a particle of foundation for them, we might very well hesitate when the same sort of procedure was again committed. But we have once, twice or three times allowed ourselves to assume that what has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite was entitled to be treated seriously and entitled to be treated with consideration. We have found, having acted under that impression, that we were deceived as to the knowledge that these hon. gentlemen possessed, or as to the foundation upon which they based these imputations, and having had the experience which we have had of the methods of procedure adopted by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, we will no longer continue to follow that course, but will ask and demand and require of these hon. gentlemen that they shall take the responsibility, if they want to reflect unfavourably upon the character of a minister of the Crown, of expressing the opinion that there is reason for the imputations which they have made, and we will demand that they shall take this responsibility manfully and honourably before the House. It is infinitely more to the credit of a member of parliament, who, believing these charges which have been talked about and rumoured in the country in regard to malfeasance or misconduct of the members of the government, should find out afterwards that he was mistaken in his belief, than that he should insinuate and impute misconduct, or that he should avail himself of the position which the people have placed him in to disseminate broadcast over the Dominion reflections upon the character of men who are filling ministerial positions. I do not care what party is in or who are members of the administration; for the time being the people have entrusted them with the responsibility of carrying on their affairs. For the time being they hold the distinguished and honourable positions of ministers, they possess the confidence of the people, and, representing the people, I think it is at least the duty of those who oppose their policy to recognize that they are in the positions which they fill by the voice of the people of Canada, and as such they are entitled to be treated with that respect which the choice of the people of Canada merits. I therefore claim that there is nothing alleged in the amendment which the hon. gentleman has moved, that there is nothing which has been stated in support of that amendment to justify this House in departing from the usual practice which obtains under all parliamentary governments through the various portions of the empire, and that there is no course remaining for us but to give a decided negative to the amendment which the hon. gentleman has proposed.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, I crave your indulgence for a very short statement that I feel it is my duty to offer. I was a member of the government when this Treadgold concession was granted. It came up in the ordinary way of business. The matter lay within the Department of the Interior. All those who have been ministers know that the minister who has charge of a department brings before his colleagues matters that are under his control. That matter, as a matter of course, was presented to the government by the minister then in charge of the Department of the Interior. The matter was discussed with all the care and attention that we were able to give to it then. We looked into the question to the best of our ability. It was referred to a sub-committee. One of the members of this sub-committee is no more a member of this parliament. The concession was granted after, as I said, we had given our best attention to the question. It was a difficult question, as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has said, when we were called upon to decide whether it was better to leave things as they were, to leave the miners to supply themselves with water, or whether it would be better to grant certain rights to parties who were undertaking to supply water under certain conditions. The first conditions that we imposed upon them were not carried out. They came to us later on and reported that they could not go on with their undertaking unless these conditions were changed. I think there were three changes. However, this has no great bearing on the case. So far as my own standpoint is concerned, all I can say is that I do not know that there is any one of my colleagues in the House to-night who was my colleague then, who I am sure has been guilty of an impropriety. As far as I can see, there is no member of this government within the precincts of this hall——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, I do not want my words to be misinterpreted. I am just going to explain what I mean. I do not want that my words be interpreted in a wider direction than I want to give them. I generally endeavour to speak my mind very clearly. Then I understand the hot words that my hon. friend the Postmaster General has used. He is not guilty I am sure of any impropriety; he has resented the accusation that has been made against the government and I cannot blame him for that. Speaking for myself I know that as far as I have been able to judge the matter has come before us in the ordinary way of business. Eight or ten months afterwards or perhaps a little less, a deputaion came to us to Ottawa. It was headed by Mr. Ross, who represents the Yukon in this parliament. Complaints were made that the concessions were too wide; that the concessions in point of fact should be cancelled or at any rate amended in such a way that they would not be the same thing at all. The matter was taken into consideration and the changes were made. Now, this is all I have got to say so far as the members of the government present to-day are concerned. Let me express my regret that the hon. Minister of the Interior and Mr. Ross are not here. I trust that if the Minister of the Interior were here, after the words that have been uttered by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) he would take the position that I have taken myself in that famous celebrated and notorious inquiry of the Drummond County Railway. In 1897, there were vague accusations in that Drummond County matter. No direct accusations were made, but having read and heard these vague rumours, I got up in my place and I challenged any direct accusation against me. These accusations did not materialize. Let me tell my hon. friends on the other side of the House, now that they are looking to the wrong pew.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What did take place during the recess between 1897 and 1898 ? The hon. Mr. Foster, the ex-Minister of Finance, went to Toronto and addressed a large meeting in which my name and the names of my sons were mentioned. When parliament was convened in 1898 I made it a duty to ask the Prime Minister and my colleagues, to themselves ask for an investigation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would not allow the government of which I was a member to lie under the accusation that had been made against me outside of the chamber, but by a gentleman who had been a minister of the Crown. I thought that that accusation had been enough for me to go to the Prime Minister and to say that if I was guilty of having received directly or indirectly $30,000 in that Drummond County deal I was not worthy to be a member of the government any longer. That is the position I took. No direct accusation has been made against the Minister of the Interior to-day. Rumours have been circulated this evening. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has quoted these rumours without naming the minister but naming his department. I have no doubt—I hope at any rate that if the hon. gentleman who is the Minister of the Interior were here he would take the position that I now take. I shall not vote on this motion and I will tell you why, Sir. In view of the vagueness of the accusation I think that the government would have been justified in declining an inquiry. When there are questions of fraud directly or indirectly mentioned it is necessary; it is proper at any rate to be direct as the rules of parliament require. But the government has granted an inquiry. I was not able to be here when the first motion was discussed, but had I been here I would have spoken just as I speak now. The government have granted an inquiry. In my humble opinion they have not acted as they might have acted had they paused a little more. An inquiry by a judge is always a doubtful thing. Some years ago I condemned in the press as a newspaper man, inquiries conducted by judges. It is a dangerous thing to involve the judiciary in such an inquiry as a rule. I do not say that there are not exceptions, but as a rule, parliament should keep the control of its own affairs. It is the safest rule. My hon. friends on the treasury benches have not followed that rule and they have thought proper to appoint a judge. I cannot approve of their action on that account. On the other hand in view of the fact that I have been a member of the government, that I have participated in the granting of the concession that the government is defending to-night, I cannot possibly condemn myself in voting for the motion which implies the condemnation of a transaction to which I have been a party. So far as I know it officially, as it came before us officially, I do not know of anything upon which I could base my judgment to condemn now what I have approved and participated in then. But not approving the procedure that my hon. friends on the treasury benches have adopted, I cannot vote with them.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, I was so impressed by the eloquence and convinced by the logic of the Minister of Railways and Canals, that I have no hesitation in saying that if any hon. gentleman on this side of the House—no, I will withdraw that and apologize for it—if any benighted Tory between the Atlantic and the Pacific should be so bereft of his faculties as to suggest the case that the Minister of Railways and Canals so successfully controverted to-night, I would be ready to join with him in taking the proper means to have this irresponsible lunatic at once put under restraint. May I be pardoned before discussing the question, if I refer to the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals. He read the motion at present before the House; he read it carefully, clause by clause, so far as the clause charges were concerned, and he found that the sum total of these charges was that the people of the Yukon, irrespective of party, of politics, of creed or anything else; the board of trade, the citizens in public meeting, the Liberal association, everybody in fact had agreed that the government had been imposed upon, and that these concessions had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; but the Minister of Railways and Canals nailed his flag at the mast and said: We deny there is any charge there of dishonesty on the part of the government. Who said there was? But are the hon. gentlemen occupying the treasury benches more than demigods; have they eaten the fruit of the tree of knowledge; is it not possible that they may have been deceived? And if these charges be true—and all that is asked on this side of the House is that they be investigated to see whether or not they are true—if it be the fact that the hon. gentlemen opposite, despite all their ability and honesty and integrity—and nobody is accusing them on any of those points—have been deceived, and that these concessions have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; can anybody say that we, sitting here as representatives of the people, are doing other than our duty in asking for an investigation, in order to see if the government has been deceived, and if they have been induced by fraud and misrepresentation to make concessions which everybody in the Yukon says are ruinous to that part of the country? The question seems a simple question, and one would imagine that it would not require any great amount of oratory or discussion to decide it. I think my hon. friend the Postmaster General put the matter in a nutshell when he said that there had been a cowardly course taken and honour was in the balance. I am inclined to agree with him, and the question before us this evening is, who has taken the cowardly course, and whose honour is in the balance?

A reference to the undisputed facts of the case would furnish, I submit, a complete answer to these questions. It will be admitted that a few years ago the people of this country were possessed of a valuable domain in the Yukon. It will be admitted that by Order in Council, which is wholly invalid—because the hon. Postmaster General himself admitted it the other night—those lands were made over, without one single dollar being paid for them, to a few concessionaires. It is true, as I said, that the hon. gentleman says the Order in Council is invalid; but this House and the unfortunate people of this country have had experience before this of another invalid Order in Council. It was but a few years ago when we learned to our sorrow that a minister of the Crown—and the same minister who is in charge of the Interior Department which controls the Yukon—some seven or eight days before parliament met, rushed through an Order in Council authorizing a railway to be constructed into this very country. It is perfectly true, the order was hopelessly and helplessly invalid; and it is equally true that this unfortunate country paid over $300,000 on the strength of that helplessly invalid Order in Council. And so, Sir, it is perhaps not surprising that the people of the Yukon, excitable as the hon. Minister of Railways says they were, living on the spot, and finding all their hopes of that country blasted, declared in resolution after resolution that the concessions which were granted would mean that in a few years there would be in that country one Treadgold and several hundred people working for him. It is no wonder that they asked this parliament to investigate the grounds on which these extraordinary concessions were given. It is all very well for the hon. Minister of Railways to say that they are an excitable people. Who are those people? The Board of Trade of Dawson; a public meeting convened in Dawson; aye, Sir, the Liberal Association of Dawson; aye, Sir, the representative of the people sent from Dawson. And so we find that the people of that country, whom we represent, and the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, the Postmaster General sitting beside him, and the Minister of Railways represent these people as much as they represent the people of their own constituencies—these people are to be called an excitable people because, feeling that everything worth anything in their country has been given away, they protested and charged the government, not with fraud, but with being imposed upon, and therefore asked their trustees, who are sent here to transact their business, simply to look into the matter and see if they had not been imposed upon, and if so, to cancel these iniquitous concessions. If we are taunted that we cannot find precedents in English history to meet a case like this, the answer is not far afield. No one can read of cases in which members of the British parliament have resigned their seats without appreciating the fact that the sense of honour is so sensitive there that even if these charges were made, as they have been, by public meetings, by resolutions, by newspapers in the Yukon, there would be not only an investigation, but a vacant seat behind the right hon. leader of the government long before this. But admitting, that the country owned certain lands in the Yukon, and that those lands were given away, though by an Order in Council which is invalid on its face; admitting that the people in the part of the country protested against this; we find that an election was held in that country; and we have been taunted by the hon. Postmaster General that it is idle for us to ask for any investigation into the affairs of the Yukon because the people of that country, in sending to this House a supporter of the government, had shown their confidence in the government which had passed these extraordinary concessions. If the right hon. leader of the government would read the platform of the Liberal Association of the Yukon, which I will not occupy the time of the House in reading, as it has been read already, he would find that it condemned these concessions as strongly as any Conservative member of this House could; and if he would look at the questions which were asked of the candidate, and answered, not by that gentleman, because he was absent from the country, but by a gentleman high in his confidence, who conducted the election for him—a gentleman in whom the right hon. leader of the government had implicit confidence, or he would not have named Mr. Congdon as Governor of the Yukon—he would find the following:

2. Will you agree to advocate for and insist upon the cancellation of the Treadgold concession?

3. Will you pledge yourself to advocate for and insist upon the punishment and exposure of officials, both in Dawson and Ottawa, by whose frauds or culpable negligence or inefficiency those concessions were granted in the first instance or are now continued in force after the same by their terms should be cancelled?

The answer given by Mr. Congdon to these questions is that Mr. Ross is out of the country, but 'I have no doubt he will advocate the course of action you suggest in your questions.' We find that this was the state of affairs in the Yukon. Then this parliament meets. A representative is sent here from the Yukon; pledged to the lips to secure the cancellation of these infamous concessions and to have an investigation as to the fraud or culpable negligence or inefficiency of the officials either at Ottawa or Dawson, through whose fraud or negligence or inefficiency these concessions were granted. The House met, and shortly afterwards a motion was brought up by my hon. friend from Montmorency on this very subject; and the government, speaking by the mouth of the hon. Postmaster General, gave no uncertain sound. Those who were here when the hon. gentleman spoke, will remember well how broadly he promised an investigation into these matters. The government was committed, if it is possible to commit a government by the solemn statements of one of its prominent members standing on the floor of parliament—and it is hard to conceive of any way in which a government can be committed if not in that way—to what? To the following:

I would also say to my hon. friend who tells us that he is so desirous of investigation that I am sure he must well know that it has been long the fixed intention of the government to hold such an investigation.

We are told by the hon. Postmaster General that promises were made to the people of the Yukon that an investigation would be held into the whole administration of that territory, and now we can see why a representative was sent from the Yukon to support the government. The hon. Postmaster General said further:

I doubt if navigation is more than open, even if it is yet open. When the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) returns to Ottawa,—he is at present in British Columbia, I understand—and we can have the benefit of his advice, it is our intention to fully carry out the representations made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that hon. gentlemen may be good enough to mention or entertain in regard to any matters connected with the Yukon administration. I give that public notice to my hon. friend, so that, in addition to the advantage he has had of ventilating his views on the floor of this House, he will have an opportunity to make good, if he can, any of his charges or suspicions before a tribunal where newspaper extracts and letters will not be the only evidence.

I do not think that any language could more clearly express the promise that we would be given a full investigation, not into the hydraulic needs of the Yukon, but into the charges and suspicions of fraud and corruption. Yet, to-night we have the sad spectacle of that same minister of the Crown, who made that pledge, standing up before this House—not denying that he used the language I have just quoted—but professing that the pledge then given is being carried out by the appointment of the Crown made the other day. Mr. Speaker, we may well pause to consider whose was the cowardly course, and whose honour is standing in the balance. With the words of the Postmaster General fresh in our recollection, let us consider what the authority of this commission really is, what ground it covers. There is a number of recitals:

That it has also been represented to the government that the extent and value of the deposits of gold in the benches, creeks and elevated ground is at present unknown and must remain so until a sufficient supply of water is available by the construction of hydraulic works, and that parties advancing moneys for the construction of said works must necessarily take great risks with respect to their investments.

That is practical. That certainly relates to hydraulic operation.

That while it is fitting that such reasonable and proper privileges and advantages should be offered as will induce parties to construct such hydraulic works, yet it is essential that no grants or concessions should be made which will interfere with the right of water which any free miner is entitled to under the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory.

That the water so to be held and controlled by the hydraulic companies should be available on equal terms to all free miners whose claims can be profitably worked thereby.

That to obtain such hydraulic works and a supply of water for the benches, banks and elevated grounds above mentioned, certain powers, rights and privileges were granted by the Governor General in Council on the 21st of April, 1902 to Malcolm E. Orr-Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold and Walter Barwick; that it has been alleged——

Alleged what? Now we are coming to the sting of the whole inquiry.

That it has been alleged that the said grant and concession constitutes a monopoly, which, while depriving the treasury of an enormous revenue, is most detrimental to the mining industry of the Yukon.

It is perfectly true that that has been alleged. No one on this side will deny it. But will any one pretend to say that that is all that has been alleged?

That it is important in the public interest that inquiry be made——

We all agree with that, and we felt, with the words of the Postmaster General ringing in our ears, that at last justice was to be done, and that not only the charges but the mere suspicions were to be investigated.

for the purpose of obtaining information, showing to what extent the said grant and concession is likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interest of the said Yukon Territory.

That it is also desirable at the same time that the inquiry should not be limited to the said grant and concession——

There we thought we were going to have something. We were going to get something at last. The hon. gentleman had repented, and even at the last moment they were going to give us what the Postmaster General promised solemnly, on the faith and honour of the government, we should have.

Showing to what extent the said grant is likely to be beneficial or injurious to the mining interests of the said Yukon Territory.

Then we read on. Another gleam of hope flashes across our mind, when we see that something more is to be investigated.

That it is further desirable that the commissioners making the inquiry shall investigate generally all the facts and circumstances——

Here we felt certain we had it.

—which would afford information to parliament, to the government and to parliament——

But our hearts sink within us as we go on to read:

—respecting the hydraulic or other means which it is desirable should be adopted.

Is this what the House wants investigated, or what the people of the Yukon desire to have investigated? It is not the hydraulic or other means but the means whereby the government were deceived and misled that this House and the country want to see investigated. But when we are given this commission and are coolly told by the hon. Postmaster General that everything asked by the hon. member for Montmorency has been given, I ask again whose course is it that is cowardly, whose honour is at stake? And I turn to the motion of my hon. friend from Montmorency for an answer. What do I find in that motion? Among many clauses, I find this one:

That all hydraulic concessions whose owners have not observed the conditions of their leases and the provisions of the mining regulations may be rescinded.

That an inquiry may be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General in the premises.

With that on the records of this House, moved by my hon. friend from Montmorency, the hon. the Postmaster General dared to stand up and say that this Order in Council gives all—and he went beyond that, he out-heroded Herod, gives all and more than the hon. member for Montmorency asked.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that he is reading from the motion of the hon. member for Montmorency ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Yes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, you are reading from his speech.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am not going to be diverted from the point by the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is a question of fact. Is it the motion or the speech you are reading from ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is a paragraph of a resolution of the Liberal Club at Dawson. It is your own friends who said that.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I see that the hon. Minister of Justice is quite correct. In reading hurriedly a number of quotations marked here, I inadvertently read from the petition of the Liberal Club. The clause I read is in the petition of the Liberal Club of Dawson.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentleman said it was in the motion.

Mr. NORTHRUP. My hon. friend from Montmorency used that petition of the Liberal Club along with other material that came from Dawson, to show that charges had been made into which he desired an investigation. When the governments' own friends make these charges, when one of their own supporters was sent to this House to have them investigated, and the ministers of the Crown promised that they should be investigated, we on this side expected more than was given. When we asked for bread, we did not expect such a stone as that. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very fond of taunting hon. members on this side with their obligation to make charges on their own responsibility, as members. It is very easy to make such a taunt, but it would be interesting to find how many members there are, either to your right or your left, Mr. Speaker, who know what the responsibility is that is incurred by a member so acting. I venture to say that outside the right hon. the first minister, there is not a member of this House who would declare that he knows what that responsibility is. I find on page 1040, of the 'Hansard' of 1892, a speech made by the late Sir John Thompson, at the time when the famous Parent charges were made. He expressed himself to this effect, and there is no one in this House who will not admit that few brighter, abler and more prudent jurists ever sat in this House. And Sir John Thompson said :

I am aware that there is a popular impression that a gentleman in this House who makes accusations of misconduct, impropriety, dishonesty, or other charges of that character against another member of this House incurs a serious responsibility, and may, if the charge is proven and unsustained be expelled from this Chamber. In view of the ground which I shall ask the House to take with regard to this resolution. I beg to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact, that that is an entire misapprehension. A member making a charge against another in this House may, of course, subject himself, as he does in pursuing any line of conduct on any piece of business before the House, to the censure of the House ; but, so far as his own seat is concerned he may make false charges against other members of the House with perfect impunity.

It is perfectly true that, in the same debate, the present Premier (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a few pages later, expressed himself to the contrary effect. He said :

The House expects from a member who makes a charge against a fellow member that he must have some good and strong reason for making that charge, and it is unquestionable that the common sense of the country would expect that, if any member should be guilty of making such foul charge against another member, without having strong reasons for making it and good evidence to support it, he would not be fit to associate with gentlemen and he ought to be expelled from this House.

So, on this point which has been so often referred to by hon. gentlemen opposite, surely, the ordinary member of this House may feel justified in being in some doubt when he finds that on so important a question as the Caron charges the Minister of Justice of that day and the leader of the present government, both gentlemen competent to speak, either of whose opinions, I am sure, any member of the House will bow to with the readiest deference, if they did not conflict—they are in such helpless conflict. But is that a fair taunt to throw at an hon. member on this side, when hon. members opposite are supposed to be equally interested with us in protecting the public property ? We find the charge made that the ministry has been imposed upon—and I wish to accentuate that, because it seems to be assumed that the charge is in effect that Mr. This or Mr. That fraudulently and feloniously betrayed his trust. If such a charge were made it might fairly be said : There must be some responsibility behind it and if you were going to make a charge which would involve the political ruin of a member of this House, you must take some risk yourself. The charges made in the Yukon we wish to have investigated and the charges made in the Yukon are that that country has been robbed and ruined and an imposition practiced on the government. The whole question for this House to decide is whether we shall assume as a matter of fact and law that the government is so immaculate that it cannot be imposed upon, and therefore there should be no investigation. If we cannot come to that conclusion, I say with all respect and regret, there is only one other conclusion possible, and that is that the hon. gentleman who glibly promised this investigation a few nights ago, as the people of this country will infallibly say, must have received further information since, which compels him now to retract what he said the other night, and not only, if I might use the expression, eat his own words, but insult the intelligence of this House by saying that this present Order in Council gives a wider investigation than we on this side either asked for or desire. Now, I do not intend to occupy the time of the House longer, for it seems to me as I said in the beginning, that the whole question can be boiled down into a very small compass. If we, sitting in this House are not to be at liberty to investigate charges of fraud on the government, charges made by the practically unanimous voice of the people of a large and important part of this country, men may well say under what condition may we ask to investigate such charges. And when we find in this debate, one minister promising full investigation and another saying that only the hydraulic powers and rights are to be investigated, and when we find ministers coming down, and, amid the clamour of their supporters, who evidently have not read the resolution, saying to this House in triumph, that they had given more than we had asked for, are we not justified in coming to the conclusion that hon. gentlemen opposite are inclined to use the pious editor's words and say :

In short, I firmly du believe
In humbug generally,
Fer it's a thing thet I perceive
To hev a solid vally ;
This heth my faithful shepherd ben,
In pastures sweet heth led me,
An' this'll keep the people green
To feed ez they hev fed me.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The difference between tweedledum and tweedledee is illustrated by the speakers here to-night. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) supported by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), charged that fraud has been practiced by the government. My hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) changed the charge and now rings the changes on the suggestion that fraud has been practiced on the government. Which of the two are we to deal with ? I do not know that I should have been called upon to interfere in this debate were it not that I think it to be my duty to defend my hon. friend from Montmorency to some extent against a charge that was not made but was possibly suggested by the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The Postmaster General suggested, not that the hon. member for Montmorency was guilty of cowardice, but that, under the circumstances it looked like cowardice, to take the position he did. I have known my hon. friend from Montmorency for many years. I knew him under circumstances where men soon learn to understand one another's characters especially with regard to matters of cowardice and bravery—I knew him at college. No man who ever had any knowledge of my hon. friend would charge him with being a coward, either a moral or a physical coward. He is neither one nor the other. But he is something else—he is a pastmaster in the art of obscuring an issue. We have had experience of one another for many years in the college and in the forum, and if any man knows well how to make much ado about nothing, my hon. friend does. Now, let us see what has taken place. Let me justify my charge that my hon. friend has proven, in connection with this debate, that he is a pastmaster in the art of obscuring an issue. He came here the other day and made a speech. I need not say that it was an eloquent speech, for he scarcely ever speaks otherwise than eloquently. But after having gone through the speech, after having delivered himself of this oration and quoted copiously from resolutions passed by miners' conventions in the Yukon and so on, he finally offered a motion for the consideration of the House. I do not wish to weary the House with quotations, but I venture to make the statement that the pith of the whole motion is in these words :

This House is of opinion that the said powers, franchises and concessions constitute in favour of the said Treadgold and his associates a gigantic monopoly, which, while depriving the treasury of enormous revenues, is most detrimental to the mining industry of the Yukon.

That is the charge—that this concession constituted a monopoly and that the monopoly so constituted was most detrimental to the mining interests of the Yukon. What was there, then, to investigate ? That this was a monopoly went without saying—everybody admitted it. The thing was in its nature a monopoly, and we never pretended anything to the contrary. But what remained to be investigated was whether it was detrimental to the mining industry in the Yukon. What did we do ? Immediately when that motion was introduced a pledge was given that the charge made by my hon. friend would be investigated. What was the charge ? That this concession was detrimental to the interest of the Yukon. What do we find in the report to council upon which the commission issued ? The very words used by my hon. friend. This commission is appointed for the purpose of investigating that which he says was the result of the grant of this concession, that is to say, it was a concession detrimental to the interest of the Yukon. We use his own words in the order authorizing the investigation. Now, what does he complain of? Evidently my hon. friend knows when he produces an effect, because ordinarily he does produce an effect—but in another sphere when he is in court. He discovered that in this instance he failed entirely to produce any effect, either in this House or on public opinion, and he was forced to go to the newspapers immediately after and write a long and interesting letter, which had some effect, because it was in some respects interesting. But he was not satisfied with that, he found it necessary to do more. Finding the letter was not sufficient, he had to come here and make this motion to-night. Now, what do we find in his motion at the present time? It is to the effect that the board of trade of the Yukon passed a resolution in which they said that this concession 'involved an enormous exploitation of the public resources of this territory for the benefit of a few favoured concessionaires.' Then he said:

That the Liberal Association of the city of Dawson, at a meeting held on the 1st of April, 1903, publicly denounced the said concessions as having been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, and petitioned the government to institute an inquiry to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

Then he goes on to say:

And this House is of the opinion that a special committee of this House should be appointed with all necessary powers to make a full and complete investigation, not only into the providence or improvidence of the terms and conditions of the several hereinbefore mentioned concessions, but also into all the circumstances relating to or connected with the granting or procurement of the same and all alterations therein, all negotiations and transactions between the government or any member or officer thereof and the said concessionaires or any person on their behalf with respect thereto or with respect to any alteration therein, the names of the persons directly or indirectly interested from time to time in the said concessions, the nature of their respective interests and the circumstances under which such interests were acquired.

What has that got to do with any charge against the government? What has that got to do with any suggestion of fraud by the government? Is there a suggestion that there was fraud by the government? Is there anything in this motion which would give the House to understand that my hon. friend is of opinion that fraud was practiced by the government, or by any member of the government, in connection with the granting of this concession? No, he is a too honourable a man to make a statement which he knows is not true. But what does my hon. friend say? He says the board of trade of the Yukon states that fraud was practiced on the government; he says that the Liberal Association of the Yukon echoes that charge. I have read the petition sent here by the board of trade, and I cannot find anything to support my friend's assertion in it, that fraud was practiced on the government. But I will say this to my hon. friend, and here I know I will not appeal to him in vain. This concession was granted under the terms of the Dominion Lands Act, all these concessions were granted under the terms of that Act. Now there is no man in this House who knows better than my hon. friend that there is a door wide open, not only to the board of trade of the Yukon, not only to the members of the Liberal club, but to any man in the Yukon Territory or out of it, who honestly believes that fraud was practiced on the government in connection with the granting of these concessions. The door is wide open; Section 57 of the Dominion Lands Act, 49 Victoria, chapter 54 says:

Whenever patents, leases or other instruments, respecting lands have issued through fraud——

That is the charge.

—or in error or improvidence, any court having competent jurisdiction in cases respecting real property in the province or territory where such lands are situate, may, upon action, bill or plaint respecting such lands, and upon hearing the parties interested, or upon default of the said parties after such notice of proceeding as the said court orders, decree or adjudge such patent, lease or other instrument to be void.

If fraud is practiced on the government there is a remedy, and ordinary fair play requires that that remedy should be applied, because every man who takes a patent from the Crown under the terms of the Dominion Lands Act takes it subject to all the conditions contained in that Act, and furthermore, takes it with the knowledge that the guarantees provided by that Act will surround the concession. He knows that if he has practiced fraud on the government he is exposed to have his interests brought before the Attorney General, and the Attorney General may issue a fiat for the purpose of testing the facts to ascertain whether fraud was practiced.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Must it not be an individual who is interested in the fraud? Can any person that is not interested bring a case?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Any person having an interest, however remote, in the district affected, can act as a relator in applying to the Attorney General for his fiat for scire facias. I say that with all deference to the legal opinion of my hon. friend. Now, I say the courts are wide open to these gentlemen in the Yukon, and therein lies the secret of the motion that has been made here by my hon. friend. He knows full well that this remedy is afforded to these gentlemen; he knows full well that if these men believe the charges they are making are well founded, there is a remedy open to them; and knowing that, knowing that they did not take advantage of the remedy that was open to them, he would not take the responsibility of adopting their charges and make them his own in this House ; he would not do it, because he knew full well that if they were honest in their charges, if they could substantiate their charges, they might have done it elsewhere, and as they did not do it elsewhere, he would not take the responsibility of doing it for them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have something in support of that. In the motion itself of my hon. friend we find that the Liberal Association of the city of Dawson, at their meeting held on the 1st of April last, were careful to indicate what they wanted to have done. They asked that an inquiry should be held to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained in order that action might be taken by the Attorney General in the premises. Why did they not apply for a scire facias ? Why did they not adopt the remedy which the law gives them ? They were on the ground, they were cognizant of the facts. They had all the material at their disposal ; why did they not petition the Attorney General for a fiat ? I make the statement here and now, in the hearing of the Prime Minister, and with the authority of the government, that if an application of that sort is made it won't take five minutes to grant it, and an opportunity will be given to these gentlemen to make good their charges. More than that. In these instructions to the commission, what do we find ? We find they have gone very far in the direction of meeting this request of the gentlemen connected with the Liberal club of the Yukon. They say an inquiry should be made for the purpose of ascertaining the circumstances under which the hydraulic concessions were obtained in order that action may be taken by the government. The commissioner is required to investigate, not only the circumstances connected with the concession to Treadgold, but the instruction provides also :

That it is also desirable at the same time that the inquiry should not be limited to the said grants and concession but should extend to all similar hydraulic concessions granted in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. CASGRAIN. For what purpose ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The inquiry is to be general. The inquiry is to be held into all the circumstances connected with these different concessions.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No, no.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Will my hon. friend pardon me ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is not correct.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I accept the correction of my hon. friend. The inquiry is to be held for the purpose of ascertaining the facts and circumstances connected with all these concessions. The facts and circumstances will necessarily imply an investigation into the circumstances of these concessions which were granted. If it appears that fraud was practiced, the information will be in the possession of the government, but in the meantime it is open for any one to proceed as provided in the Dominion Lands Act. Let any responsible man come forward and make such charges as will justify the issue of a fiat and he will not have long to wait for it. I shall be content with recapitulating what has taken place. My hon. friend made his charge on the 12th May in regard to the Treadgold matter. He said it ought to be investigated. We granted an investigation. He is not satisfied with that investigation, but he says that we ought to inquire into all the facts and circumstances connected with that matter for the purpose of ascertaining whether a fraud was practiced on the government or on the public. The remedy is open to him under the Dominion Lands Act. I was not here when he began his speech, but I understand that my hon. friend found fault with the government for having chosen a judge to act in this matter. Hon. gentlemen opposite have reiterated the statement during the course of this debate that this was not a political matter, that all that was desired by them was to have an honest investigation into all the facts and circumstances connected with this concession, so that we might know whether or not it was providently or improvidently issued or whether this concession was tainted with fraud. They say it is not proper to assign a judge to perform the duties which are to be imposed upon Mr. Justice Britton and the commissioners to be appointed hereafter. My hon. friend did me the honour of quoting me in connection with the use of the judicial office for such inquiries. Would he allow me to reciprocate ? My hon. friend was attorney general in the province of Quebec and occupied in respect to that province the position which I occupy in respect to the Dominion of Canada. In 1902 charges were made involving political dishonesty on the part of political men—very serious charges of the grossest political dishonesty. My hon. friend did not hesitate to appoint a judge to make the investigation. He appointed three of them. He appointed one of them who was fresh from the fray, having been only recently appointed to the bench. I do not say that he acted improperly at that time. Far be it from me to contend anything of the sort.

Mr. CASGRAIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman who that was ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It was Mr. Justice Baby.

Mr. CASGRAIN. He was not fresh from the fray. He had been on the bench for fifteen or twenty years.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He had been sitting in this House a year or two before he was appointed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. No, ten years before.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At all events a short time before.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was ten years before.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I say two years before, and my hon. friend says ten years before. The Prime Minister suggests that we are both wrong and fixes the time at five years. I believe it is five. In medio stat veritas.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman must know that I had nothing to do with appointing Mr. Justice Baby, because I was not attorney general at the time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that is correct. My hon. friend was not attorney general at the very moment, but he became attorney general a short time after, and, I presume, assumed responsibility for that act. Does my hon. friend remember another commission appointed in Montreal, I think, by him ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That one was a judge.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. And appointed by my hon. friend.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And that is one of the reasons why I believe after past experience that these appointments to royal commissions are not a success.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend will pardon me then he will have to leave it to me to say in future what my past experience has been. I contend that it would be desirable that our judges should be as far removed from politics as possible. I have had twenty years' experience at the bar and I have been engaged in a very great number of cases, sometimes for the Tories and sometimes for the Liberals. I have have been a little bit on both sides—not politically—but at the bar, and in all my experience I have never felt that I could appeal to the past and say that any judge had acted improperly from a political standpoint in any case I had before him. The experience which I have had has been such as to justify me in the belief that the judges of our country have been far removed from politics and that they are always prepared to do their duty.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Tory judges.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Rosamond) should not try to distinguish because there are those who think you should not judge others by the knowledge you have of your own. Under the circumstances, what has been done ?

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. Justice Britton has been selected. This after all is an inquiry into an hydraulic concession, into what is after all nothing more nor less than ditches on a large scale. That is the explanation of the Treadgold matter. It is nothing more nor less than an inquiry into the conditions and circumstances under which water is distributed in the Yukon Territory. Mr. Justice Britton had a large experience in connection with matters of this sort in the province of Ontario as drainage commissioner. In addition to that there is an hydraulic engineer whose name has been mentioned in connection with the commission. Whether or not we can secure the services of this gentleman, I do not know, but to show the intention of the government an hydraulic engineer of continental reputation, against whose character not one breath of suspicion can be cast, was selected merely because of the professional position which he occupied. We have taken all the precautions to give my hon. friend what he wanted when he first moved in this matter, but it appears that he is satisfied, not that he did not go far enough in the first instance with the material he had, because no fresh material has been produced before the House, but that he did not go far enough to satisfy those who are desirous of lending a willing ear to street gossip and rumours, and to those who appear anxious to slander their neighbours to death, but have not got courage to come out as a man should, if a reflection has been put on any man, to charge that man and say he is guilty of wrongdoing, feeling satisfied that there is enough independence in this House to say whether he be guilty or not.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will that commission sit in Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This commission will naturally sit in the Yukon Territory to inquire into the facts submitted to it and especially for the purpose of inquiring into the fact as to whether these concessions were necessary and as to whether under the circumstances existing there, this hydraulic concession was a provident or an improvident one. But after having caused an inquiry on the ground, their duty would be to come here and hold any investigation that would be necessary under the circumstances. I think that having said that, I have shown the good faith of the government—of course they are not limited as to time, place and circumstance—and the desire of the government to have a thorough and honest investigation to establish two things. First, was the concession issued improvidently; was it contrary to the interest of the Yukon that such a concession should be granted; and second, was such fraud practiced on the government as would justify the government in coming to the conclusion—not to repeal the concession; there is no authority to repeal a concession for fraud; there is no authority to repeal a concession for misrepresentation—but there is authority to take proceedings before the court for the purpose of having the concession set aside.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before this debate comes to a conclusion I deem it my duty to refer to an incident which has taken place in connection with it, and which I think ought not to pass unnoticed. Twice within a few days my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has made the insinuation on the floor of this House, that I had been approached by some one who had made charges to me that there had been wrong-doing in this concession. Some few days ago my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) stated that while I was in London last summer some one had made similar charges to me. I denied the statement at the time. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) repeated it to-day in a more aggravated form and with greater emphasis. I gave it the denial which I should give it, and now for the third time I have to say to my hon. friend that there is not the slightest foundation for the insinuation he has made.

Mr. MONK. Does the right hon. gentleman say that I made an insinuation ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, Sir.

Mr. MONK. I asked if there was any truth in what had been said, and I made no insinuation at all myself.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend put the question to me the other day and I denied it, and when on a subsequent occasion he reasserts it I take that to be an insinuation.

Mr. MONK. I made no assertion. I deny that, Mr. Speaker. I asked if there was any truth in these remarks. I will not allow even the right hon. gentleman to put words in my mouth which I did not utter.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am speaking within the knowledege of the House—

Mr. MONK. My words are in 'Hansard.'

The PRIME MINISTER. 'Hansard' is my best authority, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) stated the other day that I had been approached by some one in England and that similar circumstances had been brought to my notice. I then denied it. To-day the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) within the hearing of everybody on the floor of the House again put a question to me and after my denial, if that is not an insinuation I do not know what is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. When I stated here as a member of parliament, and I believe as a man of honour; at all events with the responsibilities I hold, that there was no such thing as had been stated the other day, and when the hon. gentleman again repeats it, for my part I take it to be an insinuation. If it is not an insinuation it is certainly not an accusation, and if it is not an insinuation or an accusation then I leave it to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) to say what he thinks of it.

Mr. MONK. Since my right hon. friend asks me; what I stated the other day was this : That these things were being said in the city of Montreal that when my right hon. friend was there the matter had been brought to his notice, and what I stated to-day was that it has been circulated also in the city of Montreal that upon the return of my right hon. friend the matter had been brought to his notice by the chief of the executive. I made no insinuation.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I shall not parry the point any longer. I must however say to my hon. friend that the fact of his having twice asked me on the floor of the House whether or not I had been approached by some body with that charge of wrong-doing about this concession, implies that some one has gone to my hon. friend; that some one has poured something in his ear, that some one has gone to my hon. friend and stated to him; that either that man himself or some one else had come to me with charges of wrong-doing in connection with that concession. Now, the man who went to my hon. friend whoever he is and who stated to him that I had been approached either by himself or by some one else, that man must have a name; he must have a reputation; he must have a character since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) thinks it worth while to put questions to me about it. If he has no name; if he has no character; if he has no reputation, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was very wrong to make this statement of a worthless man the basis of a question to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. But if he had a name, if he had a reputation, if he had a character and if he made the statement, why has not the hon. gentleman the courage to repeat that statement by taking the responsibility for it on the floor of this House. It is his duty. He has information or he has not. The information that he has is worth something or it is worth nothing, and since the hon. gentleman has found it worth his while to put these questions to me in my official position, I assume the hon. gentleman attaches some responsibility to his information whoever his informant may be. If his informant has told him anything, and if his informant is worth anything, why in the name of common sense, why in the name of fair-play, why in the name of honour between man and man, between members of parliament; why does he not come out with the charge that has been made to him. If any one has told him a tale whether it is true or false; if any one has told him a tale which he believes to be true, he knows his duty and his right as a member of parliament. Two or three years ago my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) had a tale poured in his ears in connection with the South African war affecting the honour or supposed to affect the honour of a trusted colleague of mine, the Minister of Militia. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) did not hesitate then to come forward with his charge; he thought he had proof behind him. But to-day neither my hon. friend or anybody else will take the responsibility of stating what are these charges of fraud and misrepresentation. The atmosphere is thick to-day with the words fraud and misrepresentation. The word 'fraud' is very vague; fraud may take a multitude of forms; misrepresentation may be of different characters and I ask my hon. friend, I will ask anybody in this House—I will not even appeal to my own friends—but I will ask anybody on that side of the House in the name of fair-play and justice, what are we to investigate when we do not even know the name of a witness. If fraud has been perpetrated who has committed the fraud; what is the character of the fraud? If misrepresentation has been committed to the minister or to anybody else, what is the character of the misrepresentation? If there is somebody to tell us that this fraud is so and so and such and such, that there has been such an act perpetrated by which the government has been imposed upon, then we would know where to go for evidence and for the facts which are going to be investigated, but shall it be said in an assembly of serious men, in an assembly of men such as we are here: that we shall cause investigation to go simply upon the use of the two words 'fraud and misrepresentation?' Who are to be the witnesses, and if we are to appoint commissioners to investigate these frauds and misrepresentations, surely we would have to give them the names of the witnesses and the facts which would have to be investigated? Sir, I have only to say upon this occasion that if the charges are formulated in the proper manner they shall be investigated. My hon. friend who leads the opposition appealed to me to act as we did in the Drummond County Railway charges. There was a great difference between the Drummond County Railway charges and the charges made upon this occasion. When the Drummond County Railway charges were investigated there had been made by a prominent member of parliament, direct accusations against one of my colleagues. It was important that these should be investigated. Although we granted an investigation at that time, it turned out after all that those charges were absolutely futile. It turned out that when the parties who made the charges were brought face to face with the investigation, they said they had nothing to prefer. Under such circumstances, I do not think that is a precedent to follow; but the precedent to follow is the rule that if a man is accused, he has a right to know who are his accusers, and what is the accusation against him.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman has made some personal references to myself, I will quote from 'Hansard' what I said the other day:

> Everybody knows that, and I demur to the proposition of my right hon. friend that a man is obliged, when he hears these rumours current in the public, when time and place and circumstances are stated—when it is stated, for instance, that my right hon. friend, himself, when he was in England, was made aware of certain circumstances connected with this matter——
> The PRIME MINISTER. I deny that absolutely.
> Mr. MONK. So much the better, Mr. Speaker; but I say that has been stated, and I demur to the proposition that we are here for the purpose of bringing accusations.
>
> The PRIME MINISTER. Do it, then. Do it, then.
> Mr. MONK. We are here for the purpose of conveying to the House the sentiments of the public and what is stated in the public.

I did not go further than that, Mr. Speaker, and when this evening I alluded to the same affair, I said it had been uttered in Montreal and elsewhere that the attention of the Prime Minister had been called to this concession upon his return to this country, by His Excellency the Governor General, and I asked him if that was the case. Now, Sir, in spite of what has fallen from the lips of my right hon. friend, I deny that I can be deprived in this House, as a representative of the people, of the right of stating what is current on the street, and asking for information on these questions from hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches. I have made no charge. I have said this evening that I do not know where the wrong-doing took place; but I claimed that we should have such an investigation as would enable all those who had taken part in that transaction to be heard before a committee of this House.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker, before you put the question, I want to say a few words in regard to my friend the Hon. Mr. Ross, who is absent from the House. I do not think it is right for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to place Mr. Ross in a false position in this matter. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), who I am sorry is not in his seat at present, made the statement that Mr. Ross was pledged to the lips to have the Treadgold concession cancelled. Now, I want to say that Mr. Ross did nothing of the kind. Mr. Ross subscribed to the platform of the Liberal party in the Yukon. In other words, he promised that an investigation would be held, and an investigation is going to be held. The hon. member for East Hastings also made reference to something Mr. Congdon had said. I do not think Mr. Ross is responsible for any statement that Mr. Congdon made in his absence. The government is carrying out any promise that Mr. Ross made to the people of the Yukon at that time. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) insinuated that the hon. Minister of the Interior was in some manner connected with this transaction. He did not go so far as to mention the name of the Minister of the Interior, but he mentioned the department.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I said that it was in that department that these concessions were carried through, and I repeat it.

Mr. DAVIS. What is that but an insinuation ? If these hon. gentlemen have anything to say with reference to the Minister of the Interior, they are well aware that he will be in this House in eight or ten days. They will then have an ample opportunity, if they have any charges to make against him, to make those charges on their responsibility as members of this House. It would be well for them to remember that an hon. gentleman in the last parliament, whom some of them are imitating to-night, spoke for nine hours in reciting charge after charge, which he refused to take the responsibility of making ; and what was the consequence ? The leader of the opposition at that time, Sir Charles Tupper, repeated the charges which had been made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). The leader of the opposition of that day and the hon. member for Pictou, who is absent from the House, had a great deal more courage than some of these hon. gentlemen have to-night. They had the courage to go outside and make on the public platform the charges which they had made in this House; and what was the consequence ? The leader of the opposition made the charge all over the country, that the Minister of the Interior had been connected with his law partner at Brandon in granting some licenses for the sale of liquor in the Yukon ; but when Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper spoke at a meeting in Brandon during the election of 1900 repeating those charges he was met with a letter written by Sir Charles Tupper, sr., in which he had taken everything back. I can read the letter if hon. gentlemen would like to hear it, as it is very interesting reading. This is the letter as it appears in the Winnipeg 'Free Press :'

Dear Sir,—Referring to a speech made by me at Brandon on the 20th of November last, during which you claim I made certain damaging references to you in reference to the importation or alleged importation of liquor into the Yukon Territory, I beg to say that such speech was intended to be directed by me entirely to a discussion of public questions, and my intention was not to reflect in any way upon you personally. If any of those present took a different meaning from what I said I now beg to say that subsequent investigation has shown me that the telegram sent in your name to Mr. Sifton on the 12th of June, 1898, asking that the letter in question should be amended so as to include the importation of liquor into the Yukon, and which telegram was referred to by Mr. Sifton on the floor of the House of Commons as having been received by him from you, was not sent or authorized by you and that you did not directly or indirectly in any way through yourself or any other person take or attempt to take liquor into the Yukon Territory under the authority of the letter given by Mr. Sifton to which I referred in my remarks, and that you were no party directly or indirectly to the attempt made to dispose of the liquor. I further beg to state that I have satisfied myself that there is no ground for believing that yourself or Mr. Sifton were concerned together in taking or attempting to take liquor into the Yukon Territory. I sincerely regret if anything which I said has been construed into a reflection on your character.

That letter is signed by Sir Charles Tupper. It was sent only after a writ was issued. The leader of the opposition went through this country repeating those statements on platform after platform, and when he found that he was going to be dragged into court, he wrote this apology. After repeating this all through the country, we find that he had to take it all back. It is within the memory of every hon. gentleman who had a seat in the last parliament that statements were made in this House charging the hon. Minister of the Interior with I do not know what. I could read you a nine hours speech of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, making all sorts of insinuations, and if the government are to be stampeded every time any hon. gentleman chooses to repeat gossip or make insinuations against them, we would have commissions appointed every day in the week. The hon. Minister of the Interior will be here in ten or twelve days, and if any hon. gentleman opposite has any charges to make, let him do as the ex-Minister of Public Works did some years ago, take the responsibility of making them and no doubt he will get all the investigation he wants.

Experimental Farm, $90,000.

Mr. MONK. What amount was expended on each farm ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The central farm at Ottawa, $50,000; the maritime provinces, $11,000; Manitoba, $10,000; North-west Territories, $10,000; British Columbia, $9,000. The Ottawa farm includes the main staff.

Mr. MONK. Has the hon. minister ever considered the advisability of establishing a model farm in the province of Quebec, which would be more easily acceptable than the experimental farm here ? I have several times brought this matter to his attention.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe that the money which would be required for such a farm could be used more effectively in other ways. When the farm at Ottawa was established, it was considered that it would serve the two provinces of Quebec and Ontario. The climate and conditions in Ottawa are similar to those of a great part of the province of Quebec and also Ontario, and I think that the experiments carried on here are as useful to the farmers of Quebec as they are to the farmers of Ontario.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville.) (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, we should not lose sight of the fact that the province of Quebec is essentially agricultural. The maritime provinces could dispense with an experimental farm more easily than we could. I have ascertained by myself that the Ottawa farm is useful to our farmers. A great number of those who do not live very far from it are pleased to come and visit it every year ; but, as it will be admitted, that farm is of no easy access to the many. Therefore, I hope the government will have this matter under serious consideration, and that the province of Quebec will, before long, get that farm to which, in my opinion, it is rightly entitled.

Mr. MONK. If I remember well, the last time this question was brought up the hon. minister said he would give the question consideration. I do not know whether a register is kept of the farmers from the province of Quebec who visit the experimental farm, but there is no doubt whatever that a model farm, one that would not cost anything as excessive as the institution here, centrally situated in the province of Quebec and easy of access, would be of immense benefit to the young farmers of the province. It seems to me that three or four years ago, when the minister said that the matter was engaging his attention. Has he given it any further thought ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The matter has been brought to my attention several times and I have discussed it in all its bearings. The hon. gentleman speaks of a record of the number of farmers from Quebec that come to the farm. No record is kept in that form. The great bulk of the farmers come here in excursions organized from one locality or another. I feel safe in saying that more farmers come from the province of Quebec to visit the experimental farm than come from the province of Ontario, and I say that with pride, as being a representative of the province of Quebec. It shows an interest in progressive agriculture amongst the farmers of Quebec that is most creditable and satisfactory.

Mr. MONK. What becomes of the butter manufactured in the experimental farm ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is sold in Ottawa.

Mr. MONK. Is a record kept of the disposal that is made of it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. I am informed that the question was asked in the House some time ago and was fully answered.

Mr. MONK. I do not think it was. I would be glad if, when the hon. minister's estimates are next before the committee, he would have his officials bring down the book containing the record of the sales of butter manufactured at the experimental farm. It cannot be a very voluminous document, and I should like to look at it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. WILSON. For some years one portion of the experimental farm, two hundred acres in extent, has been set apart to be conducted as a farmer would conduct his own business. I would like to know the result, allowing a fair estimate of interest on the investment and also the expenses of working. I think this would be the most valuable information the experimental farm could give, because it would show the working of a farm in the ordinary way. We get great reports of the experiments in the small plots and we sometimes think that more attention is placed with the small plots than a regular farmer could give. Therefore, it would be very interesting to get a report upon this two-hundred-acre farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That suggestion was made last session, and it is being carried out. But the year has not yet closed. A day-book is kept on the farm with a record of the work of every labourer. Labour, of course, is changed about from that part of the farm to the experimental farm and the same way with the teams. When the current year is closed, the accounts will be made up.

Mr. WILSON. I moved a resolution last year for a return of this kind. Either I did not make the resolution broad enough or the answers were incomplete. I did not get the information I sought. If the hon. minister would promise to give us, at the end of the year, the report that I have suggested, I think it would be satisfactory to the people.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not remember the exact terms of the resolution, but I remember the terms of the discussion. I think the information called for was in the form in which the book-keeping had been done up to that time—that is, each crop and field was reckoned by itself. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) or some other hon. gentleman suggested the other method and that method is being worked out for the present year.

Mr. WILSON. In the return brought down a team taken from the ordinary experimental part of the farm and used so many hours was only allowed for at a certain rate for the number of hours employed. The same way with labour. But you could not run an ordinary farm that way. If you wanted a team of horses you would have to keep them the year round, and if you wanted a man you could not employ him for a few hours and then let him go.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But when we charge by the hour in that way, we charge more than the actual cost of keeping the horses.

Mr. WILSON. But, the hon. gentleman must admit that the system hardly works out the fair result in comparison with the ordinary farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it gives a result against the farm here at Ottawa. I know enough about the farm book-keeping to know that a team can be kept for the whole year at a moderate cost. The rate charged against the farm here, I believe, is $3 per day for man and team. If that rate were charged against the ordinary farm for the number of days' work done, the amount would more than cover the expense of keeping the man and team for the whole year.

Mr. WILSON. And interest on the investment also ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Interest on the equipment is charged separately.

Mr. WILSON. In the next report, will the minister give us a full account of the total cost of working the 200 acres ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think in the next annual report we will have a full statement of the expense of working that 200 acres as a whole.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). The minister said a few moments ago that the number of visitors to the farm at Quebec was larger than from Ontario. Some persons might draw the inference that the farmers of Ontario were not as anxious for information as the farmers of Quebec. There are some facts to account for that. In the first place, the central farm at Ottawa is quite a long distance from the bulk of the farming population of Ontario, and they would require to be here over night. Probably most hon. gentlemen know that we have an excellent college farm at Guelph, to which pilgrimages are made during the summer by farmers' institutes all over the country. They can go and come back in a day ; therefore, they patronize that farm at Guelph rather than come to Ottawa. I have often thought that it was desirable that farmers' excursions should be arranged from some parts of central Ontario to visit the experimental farm. I know they already get the benefit of the reports that are distributed, but I think they would see something to their advantage if they observed the working of the farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Probably there are more individual farmers coming from Ontario than from Quebec ; but the large excursions which visit the farm come more frequently from Quebec. What my hon. friend says with regard to the farm at Guelph is no doubt quite correct.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not told us what mode he follows of keeping the accounts. I understood him to say last year that at a later date the accounts would be presented at the end of the fiscal year which had been prepared in a different manner from the mode adopted hitherto.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been suggested that we adopt a new system of book-keeping. Under the present system each field is charged with the labour expended upon it, and credited with the returns obtained from it. For instance, we charge that field the number of day's work, either of men or of horses. I understood the request last session was that instead of charging each crop, reckoning up against each crop what we put upon it, we should take the whole 200 acres of land that is worked as a farm, and charge it with all the labour and work put upon it, and give it credit for all it produces. That is what we are trying to work out now, and which will appear in the next year's report. A record is now being kept of each crop or each series of crops. Hitherto we never took the whole of the 200 acres and treated it as an entity. We took each individual crop or field of grain on that 200 acres, each individual cow or herd of cows, and dealt with them, charging everything that is spent upon them and crediting them with everything they produce. But in addition to that, I understood that the hon. gentleman asked last session that we should keep a book for the whole farm collectively, without reference to the individual fields and crops. We will still continue the old system of charging to the individual fields and crops, so that we will be able to work out what the hon. gentleman alludes to in the future as we have been doing in the past. To-day we know the profits of each crop of oats, of wheat, of roots, and of each cow in the dairy, and we will continue that system of accounts, because we think it is absolutely essential to good book-keeping. But in addition to that we are going to keep a separate account of the collective work of the 200 acres.

Mr. CLANCY. Last year some criticism was made of the fact that in the statement furnished to the House by way of a return, $3 a day was charged for a man and a team. But there was no undertaking on the part of the government to account for all the labour that was paid for out of the vote that was given by this House to carry on the farm generally. The hon. gentleman charges $3 a day for a certain service, for a man and a team, but he does not show the cost of the whole outfit. That service might require the use of a roller, or of a drill, or a plough and harrow. We would like to know, not only how much the whole farm has paid, but how much each branch has paid or lost.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is what we propose to try and do.

Mr. CLANCY. What stock has been purchased during the year past ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got a list of all the animals. But we are constantly purchasing pigs, for instance, and selling them. During the last twelve months, I have directed that some French Canadian cattle should be purchased for the farm. Speaking from memory, we have not purchased any other thoroughbred animals except five head of French Canadian cattle, a bull and four cows. I think we purchased one or two grade animals, but we purchase and sell them according to the exigencies of the time, or according to what we require of them. I am speaking without reference to the number of steers that we purchase every fall which we feed and sell again as beef.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). Is it the intention to make this farm pay as a farm, or are the experiments that are there conducted regarded as a part of the revenue ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think that perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Ross, Ontario) may not remember that about three years ago I divided the farm, taking 200 acres of it and setting it apart as a farm with a regular rotation of crops and without any reference to the experimental work. That was put in charge of the agriculturist, Mr. Grisdale. He was informed that he must buy no manure and that he must keep as much stock as he could feed and see whether he could improve the fertility of that 200 acres, and show that it could be done at a profit. The whole farm includes 465 acres, and of this 200 is treated as a farm. The other 265 acres, including the orchard, arboretum, woodland, roads and buildings, as well as the land, are devoted especially to experimental work.

Mr. WILSON. I look upon the 200 acres as the more valuable part of the experimental farm. I think that we ought to get information not only as to the crops that it pays best to raise, but as to the kind of stock that can be kept on a farm of a given number of acres, the number of cattle, pigs and sheep and the kind of implements the farmer requires. We should have all this information, because I think it is the most practical part of the experimental farm, and I think it would be of more interest to the farmers than anything else.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. minister if he is making any special experiments at the farm, or is the same routine work carried on every year ? Perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell us of some line of work that was carried on during last year. There are constant improvements and changes going on in regard to the farming interest and we would naturally expect the experimental farm would be in advance of every other farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not off-hand give the hon. gentleman details of all the experiments that are being tried this year. There are certain classes of experiments which extend over a long term of years. Experiments have been carried on as to the fertilization and treatment of soils. There was an exhaustive series of experiments conducted in regard to the fertilization of land by growing clover crops, and it took eight or ten years to prove the results, although we saw the effect earlier. We required to take that time to be sure that the effect of this treatment will be permanent. There are during every year experiments in the different methods of treating soil and in the growing of grain crops. These experiments are going on every year and we are steadily accumulating an immense mass of information which is from time to time worked up by the officers of the farm into details of the results and these results are published in bulletins and in the annual report. I do not at the moment remember any new thing that has been started this season. I was out at the farm the other day and was shown by the agriculturist an experiment tried for the first time in regard to the width between the rows or drills in sowing grain. Instead of sowing the drills all the same width apart, we have alternated the spaces. In one instance one of the spouts of the seeder is stopped and in another the whole of the spouts are used. Last year we tried very considerable experiments in ridging up part of the field and leaving it ridged up during the winter to show the effect of frost and to ascertain what the result would be in the spring in drying off and preparing the soil for the crop. One piece of land was rigged up and another left in the ordinary way. We are trying things of that kind all the time and they are explained in detail by the officers of the farm who come before the Committee on Agriculture of the House. They also appear in the annual report every year.

Mr. CLANCY. How many teams of working horses, how many other horses and how many cattle have you on the farm ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not off-hand say how many horses or cattle are on the farm. I have just asked the director and he cannot from memory state positively. There are between thirty-five and forty milk cows, about sixteen horses, four or five bulls and about two hundred pigs and about forty sheep. All these details are in the annual report which hon. members have.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman tell the committee how many thoroughbreds there are on the farm and how many grades?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are, I think, about twenty pure bred cows. Then, all the bulls are pure bred.

Mr. CLANCY. How many ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are five pure bred bulls, one Shorthorn, one Ayrshire, two Guernseys and one French Canadian. There are four French Canadian cows, six or seven Guernsey cows, eight or nine Ayrshire cows, and about five Shorthorn milking cows and some that are going to be milking very soon.

Mr. CLANCY. Has there been any pure bred stock bought during the present year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I bought five French Canadian animals.

Mr. CLANCY. Are they considered pure bred ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly. They are registered animals, and the purest blood there is on the continent of America.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that you had some of that breed years ago ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes ; ten or twelve years ago, but none remained.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the result with these French Canadian animals ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The result was to show that the French Canadian cow is a very economical producer of butter, giving a rich milk and costing comparatively little to feed.

Mr. CLANCY. How do they compare with the other breeds ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot speak as to the result of the tests in detail. I cannot say positively whether the French Canadian cows ten years ago on the farm showed up better than the short horns or the Ayrshires.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister must have had some reason to continue the experiment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am pretty familiar with the breed myself in the province of Quebec, and know how excellent they are. The general average of milk in the province of Quebec is extremely rich, and the French Canadian cow has played a very important part in rendering the butter production of that province so high. At the Buffalo exhibition, in a dairy test lasting six months, the French Canadian herd made so fine a showing as to attract attention from one end of the continent to the other, with the result that there are now large sales of French Canadian cattle to the United States, as well as to the other provinces of Canada.

Mr. KAULBACH. Which breed would it be advisable for a farmer to keep for general purposes ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not presume to answer. It depends on the farmer's taste and the markets he has to supply.

Mr. KAULBACH. We find Shorthorns and Ayrshires crossed to be about the best.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Some people do.

Mr. CLANCY. What has been the result of your experiments in regard to the causes of soft pork ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The whole matter was fully published in a special bulletin which was issued two years ago.

Mr. CLANCY. We had the gentleman who prepared that bulletin before the Agricultural Committee, and his evidence was of the most unsatisfactory kind.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Whom do you refer to ?

Mr. CLANCY. I have forgotten his name, but he has been in the department long before the minister.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose it was Mr. Shutt, who, with Mr. Grisdale, conducted the experiments.

Mr. CLANCY. An experiment was being made in one of the packing houses in the city of Ottawa, and Mr. Shutt prepared a report, which was published broadcast from one end of this country to the other, of a most damaging character, if it was true. Mr. Shutt, when he appeared before the committee, was unable to verify the statements he had made in the report, and was compelled to admit that the reasons he had given why the pork was soft were mere conjectures. The bulletin contained the statement that a number of small pigs had been purchased in the corn district, and, without having any evidence as to their having been fed on a single grain of corn—in fact, they were of the age when they could not be fed on grain of that kind—he came to the conclusion that because they had come from what was alleged to be the corn district, that was the reason their pork was soft. It seems to me that a statement of that kind ought not to be made in the country, because it would convey the impression that all the pork brought from the west would be soft. I would like to ask the minister if these experiments have been since continued, or if he considers the case closed on the report of Mr. Shutt ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must say that I am very much surprised at what the hon. gentleman says. The report speaks for itself. The officers who worked out the experiment consider that the report settled the matter, as far as an experiment of that kind could settle it. What the hon. gentleman says as to some of the hogs having been bought in what he calls the corn belt is perfectly true ; but that does not imply that they were fed on corn. The question was whether pigs which had been fed very largely on corn for a generation or two were practically born with a predisposition to make soft pork instead of hard pork ; and to test that question we bought some of the pigs we were experimenting with from the corn belt. Some of these pigs were fed on one thing and some on another, and the results were worked out in the report. I cannot repeat the conclusions exactly, but the hon. gentleman knows them as well as I do.

Mr. CLANCY. I can inform the hon. gentleman that there was no such conclusion drawn from the report as that from the long feeding of pigs on corn in the corn belt they had an inherent tendency to make pork that must necessarily be soft.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say that any such conclusion was drawn. I said that we bought the pigs for the purpose of ascertaining what the results were. The results are shown in the report: I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what those results were.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows what that report contains. The hon. gentleman knows that it is a pure assumption that because these pigs came from the west that must be the reason the pork was soft. There is no evidence to support that assumption. There is nothing to show that on the farm from which they were taken they were not fed on mixed food. It was boldly assumed that by reason of their coming from that locality, the pork would necessarily be soft. Attention was called to this in the committee, and Mr. Shutt was compelled to admit that this was merely a conclusion of his own. I do not think the case should rest there. I think the matter is of such importance in the west, where large quantities of pork are being produced, that it should not be put under the ban of such a shadow of suspicion as that. I do not think it is fair to that part of the country, and I would like to know whether the hon. minister is now prosecuting the matter, or whether he intends to leave it in the shape in which it was, I think unfairly, left in the report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My answer is that the report speaks for itself. I am not going to dispute with the hon. gentleman as to quotations from the report, as I do not remember it sufficiently to quote from it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think that is a proper answer to the hon. member for Bothwell. As he contends that the report was altogether in error and misleading, and against the interests of western Ontario, particularly that part of the country in which corn is grown, he wants to know whether the minister is going to prosecute this inquiry further, to see whether or not his officers are mistaken. If he is not, he can tell the hon. member so; but if he is determined to prosecute the inquiry further, it would be very interesting to members from the west to know that their interests are still being looked after by the Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What I say is that I cannot quote the report, but my memory of it is that it contains no such reflections on the corn-belt pigs as the hon. gentleman supposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. We do not expect the hon. minister to remember the report. He pays so little attention to his department, being sometimes in England, sometimes in France, and sometimes in Japan, with a deputy minister who perhaps does not know the difference between hard pork and soft pork, and with a chemist who perhaps even does not eat bacon, but requires something a little more fanciful, we do not expect that the minister is going to be able to keep in mind these particular things which interest the farmers so much. We want to know, whether the hon. gentleman is going to send broadcast throughout this country reports of a flimsy character, which are misleading and calculated to do a great deal of injury to the agricultural community? We want to know whether he is going to spend some of this money in making further investigations with a view of having the matter entirely before the country?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The report is not a flimsy one but the result of two years investigation by the most competent officers in the department. Professor Shutt is a man whose standing no one would dare dispute, Professor Saunders is the man who organized the whole farm and worked it up from the beginning. It ill-becomes the hon. gentleman to cast unfair reflections on these officers. I am only the political head and do not take credit for this work, but to say that it is a flimsy affair is a statement which, to any one who knows the two gentlemen in question, refutes itself.

Mr. HENDERSON. There can be no doubt that the report is against the interests of the farming community.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is, and the opinion of men just as well posted as the hon. minister is that the report is not a fair one. The investigation should not stop where it is, but further inquiry should be made to determine whether these men were mistaken or not. I am not casting any reflection on the officers of the department, but I do not know that a chemist is the best man to determine that particular thing. A practical farmer could investigate a matter of that kind just as well as a chemist. I do not see where chemical knowledge is required in such a matter. Mr. Shutt may be an excellent chemist, but I am not aware that his chemical knowledge would fit him better for a question of this kind than that of a man who is every day engaged in the feeding of hogs and the work of a farm generally. No doubt these are men well qualified to discharge technical duties, but I cannot see that because this opinion has been given by a chemist, it should have any more weight than if given by a butcher.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I remember very well reading this bulletin and I very well remember Professor Shutt appearing before our committee to illustrate by a bulletin the results of feeding different foods to hogs. I consider it an extremely interesting report, but perhaps I might agree with some of what is said by hon. gentlemen opposite. Possibly the experiment might be carried still further. The bulletin did certainly show that corn was the most excellent feed for hogs. That is the general result of the experiment, as I remember. I suppose that probably the best food for hogs is peas, as shown by the results, and one of the poorest foods is corn. It so happens that the western part of the country grows a great deal of corn and feeds a great deal to hogs, so that nearly all the hogs from that section are practically corn-fed. Of course, I make that statement, not from personal knowledge, but because large quantities of corn are grown in that section, and I presume it is fed to the hogs. The industry is one we cannot afford to lose. It is probably one of the most profitable branches of farming to-day, and if the results are such as were shown, it means to some extent some reflection on the hogs produced in the corn belt. Therefore it might be as well for the department to consider the carrying on of the experiment still further. In the section I come from, our farmers feed largely peas and oats to their hogs, and our hogs are noted as being first class. I have seen in the local papers complaints from the packers that corn-fed hogs were not as good as hogs fed on other food. Experiments were made and the animals were slaughtered and inspected and put through a process of chemical analysis, but that might not be sufficient to prove that corn was not as good feed for hogs, and under the circumstances I think possibly that the request of the hon. member for Bothwell is fair and reasonable and the experiment might be carried still further.

Mr. CLANCY. I was a little surprised at the curt manner in which the hon. Minister of Agriculture dealt with this question. I am not aware that he occupies a position which exempts him from replying to fair inquiries or that it is much to his credit to inform us, as he did, in a supercillious way, that he knows nothing about the reports in his own department. But he asserted very strongly that this report did not contain any such insinuation as I have stated. Well, let me read from the evidence given by Mr. Shutt in relation to the particular case to which I referred a moment ago. On page 124 of the report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, Mr. Shutt was asked by myself, with respect to the hogs that were slaughtered for experiment at the slaughter houses of Mr. Matthews in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Q. Then why did you assume in this case, that the mothers were fed on corn, to put it in your report ?

A. I do not think I made that statement.

Q. You made it.

A. I made a scientific conjecture, nothing more. I say that the unweaned animals, the young animals, may be affected by the milk of their mother, and I see no reason to hesitate to further say that supposing the mother be fed largely on corn, she having been brought up on corn, the fat of her milk would have a tendency to make flesh, or rather the fat of her young, soft.

Q. Have you made a test to show if that is true ?

A. No.

Q. Where did you purchase them ?

A. In Essex and Kent. I cannot give you the names of the parties from whom they were bought.

Q. I do not want that. That being the case, up to that stage they could not have been fed upon corn much, could they ?

A. No.

Q. Did you wish to give the impression that by the mere fact their mothers were fed upon corn that they were soft.

A. I did not state that as a fact, but I said that it was significant that these pigs were the softest two of the four young pigs examined. I think it is probable—it is quite possible, at any rate, that if the mothers were largely corn fed, the milk would at the outset give that character to the flesh of their young. I infer that such would be the case. In the light of our subsequent work I felt justified in saying so.

Q. Quite so ; have you any evidence that all the pigs in Western Canada are fed on corn ?

A. Oh, no. I have never said they were.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to read further to show that this gentleman came here and stated that this was a mere scientific conjecture, and from that, a report is sent out broadcast throughout this country as the hon. gentleman has stated, that contains on every page a condemnation which has no better ground than the statement of Professor Shutt on that occasion. That was an examination of which the hon. minister should have some knowledge. I am surprised that he does not know what is going on in his own department, that he does not read the report of the committee respecting the department over which he presides and knows nothing of the evidence given before it, but must come here with the confession that he has not read the report and knows nothing of what is in it, knows nothing of the effect in the country of the evidence which his officers are sending out. And, yet, he lies back and, in an injured tone, refuses to answer questions. Now, may I be permitted to ask, with great humility, if he is disposed to let that libel stand uncontradicted without further evidence ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the first place, I do not know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has quoted me quite correctly. I did not say that I knew nothing of what occurred in the committee.

I said that I could not remember the particular question that he referred to. I think I know something of what is going on in the committee and of the evidence given by my officers, but I confess that I do not carry all the details in my mind so as to be able to refer off-hand to any point which the hon. gentleman may happen to mention. He asks me if this evidence ought to be allowed to remain without further investigation. I confess that, up to the present, I have believed—and I have not yet seen reason to change my mind—that the conclusions of that report were fair and just on the whole. I did not draw from the conclusions as I remember them the inference which the hon. gentleman seems to have drawn, that those conclusions were an imputation against the pigs of a certain place in Canada; but I did draw from the inference that pigs fed almost entirely upon corn were more likely to be soft in their flesh than pigs fed in another way.

Mr. CLANCY. What led the hon. gentleman to that conclusion ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE The facts in the report.

Mr. CLANCY. But, if the hon. gentleman will permit me, his own officer declares that that is a mere 'scientific conjecture.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has quoted one particular phrase used in describing the results of experiments covering several hundred pigs and many different investigations. I confess I do not know just what Professor Shutt meant by the words 'scientific conjecture' but they apply to one particular incident, one of many parts of the evidence, which evidence tended on the whole to the conclusions drawn in that report.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to disturb the hon. gentleman, but the hon. gentleman will remember, perhaps, from reading the report from his own department that these questions were on special incidents given in the report we are discussing. Examples were given of tests made without locating the quarter from which the pigs came. But this incident was selected, and Professor Shutt said he did not know what the mothers were fed upon, that this was a mere scientific conjecture on his own part.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say if that was the case, because I do not remember the surroundings of the incident. But I do know that the conclusions were based upon the whole series of experiments. I think they extended over two years' work. All these pigs were bought as soon as they were weaned and brought here to be fed. That was the principle of the experiment. Some of these young pigs were slaughtered when they were first brought here, to learn the condition of their flesh. Others were experimented on in feeding, and animals were slaughtered at different stages and their flesh subjected to examination. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) said he did not think the chemist the right man to do this kind of work. The chemist did only one part of the work. The animals were fed by the men in charge of them, and were slaughtered by the pork packers of Ottawa, who gave reports from their practical standpoint as to the character of the flesh. The chemist came after and chemically analyzed the flesh of every pig and different parts of the carcass of every pig. One of the points we wished to arrive at was to know in what chemically soft pork consisted. The trade could tell us that such and such a pig was soft or such and such a side was soft. We wished to know the chemical characteristics of soft and hard pork. That is the reason the chemists took part in the experiment. And as he was the officer who took part in the whole thing, he made up the report and worked out the conclusions, based partly on his own work in the laboratory and partly on the reports of the other men engaged in the experiment. I confess that up to this moment I considered that the public at large, including hon. gentlemen opposite, had accepted that report as a final conclusion upon the subject. I want to say that as a result of that report and the information that was given by the series of experiments during the last two years, I think there has been much less salt pork in Canada than there was for the ten years preceding. I hear very few complaints on the part of packers of salt pork. I do not mean to say it is all due to the experiment; but I do believe that the result of that experiment gave information to the feeders of pork in this country which enabled them to a certain extent to have less risk in making salt pork, because it showed the food that seemed to be the best to make hard, and it showed some food which seemed to be objectionable for that purpose. If I find that the public wish further information, we should certainly inaugurate another series of experiments.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman had carefully read the evidence that was given by Mr. Shutt he would find that the chemical experiments have been thoroughly unreliable. I have no hesitation in making that statement in this House. What did we elicit in Mr. Shutt's examination ? For instance, he was asked if, when he made the statement in his report comparing pigs bought in the west and those bought in the east, they were all alike, or was there some cause from which salt pork was found in the same condition in both lots, and he answered that was the case. If that is the case, how can you lay down any rule? It is dangerous for any one to set afloat statements upon mere scientific bubble-blowing. With regard to the chemical experiments, I have pointed out the contradictory sections of that bulletin with regard to the oil test, as it is called, the temperatures and so on, where the temperatures were professedly the same and he got very different results. I make no apology for saying that it is a most unreliable and damaging report. There is no difference in the feeding conditions. People are not so stupid in the west, although they live in a corn belt where pigs are fed entirely upon corn, as not to know the value of feeding mixed grains other than corn. It was unfair to assume that because a lot of pigs were bought in the west, they were fed on corn any more than in the east. The farmers in the west understand as well as those in the east that it is to their interest to feed pigs upon mixed grains.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 1.35 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 12, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to the order passed by this House on the 30th March in reference to some papers concerning the Woodstock post office. I am bringing this matter to the attention of the hon. minister in the absence of my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Hale). Two and a half months have elapsed since the order was passed, and surely the resources of the clerical department of my hon. friend's administration cannot be so severely taxed that these documents cannot be brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I will make another investigation. There is no delay in bringing them down, but I think some mistake must have occurred in regard to the papers. They may be in the Department of the Secretary of State. I made inquiry, and it was reported that they had been brought down, but the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Hale), informs me that the papers which are brought down are papers in regard to some other building in Woodstock. I will inquire about it, and see that these papers are brought down at once.

Mr. CLANCY.

YUKON TERRITORY — INSTRUCTIONS TO GOLD COMMISSIONER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the House whether any recent instructions have been sent to the gold commissioner of the Yukon in regard to the Treadgold concession ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Not to my knowledge. I will ask the acting minister, but I do not know that there have been any.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would be good enough to make inquiry of the acting minister when he comes into the House, and if there have been any instructions, perhaps he would be good enough to let me know at a later hour during the sitting, if convenient.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 155,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I move to strike out the words 'and is not the arbitrator named.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that idea should be abandoned as part of the Act. Do you insert these words elsewhere ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I will explain that when we come to it.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to add the words at the end of that sub-clause 'or is within the limit of deviation allowed under this Act.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you insert these words ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because we have already passed a clause which allows a deviation of 100 yards if the board approves.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This gives two alternatives; one that the land shall be required for the railway and the other that it shall be within the limit of deviation. Would not the expression 'is required for the railway' cover everything ? It is of no importance whatever that it is within the limit of deviation unless it is required for the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the Act the deviation may be allowed by the board without requiring that they should file plans, and if within the limits of deviation more land is required, they could be allowed to take it without going through all the formalities necessary to secure the right of way in the first place.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that we should not use any language which enables a certificate to be given merely because land happens to be within the range of deviation. You cannot take it without some authority given in the Act, and yet you put that language in as an alternative clause to the other.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Although the words are left out in the Bill as submitted, these words are found in section 147 of the existing Act. In conference with the legal gentlemen who represent the various railway companies and who have given me the benefit of their views with regard to many of the clauses, they expressed a strong opinion that we had better restore the language of the old Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. I can understand that legal gentlemen representing the railway companies should want these words in because the railway company gets the whole benefit. It would not be necessary with these words in the Act, that the lands be required for the railway, but only that they should be within the limit of deviation. Although there might be a serious question as to whether the railway really required the land, yet they would contend that as it was within the limits, the onus was taken off them. Although it is presupposed that the board will not allow them to enter on this 300 feet deviation unless they think it necessary, yet they might say that the alternative was given and that they could take the land because it is within the limits of the deviation, just as well as if they needed it for the railway. Unless it is really absolutely necessary for the railway, they should not be allowed to cut into a private owner's property. We must not allow the landowner to hold up the railway company, but, on the other hand, we must not allow the railway company to hold up the landowner. Because the railway company had a right to take one part of a man's land, it might wantonly take another part which it did not require for the purposes of the railway. Sometimes directors of railway companies are interested in other ventures besides railways; and if they could, by virtue of using their rights as a railway company, make the landowner give land which was not needed for the railway, they might work serious injustice to the landowner. I would suggest that the word 'and' be used instead of the word 'or.' That would be my second choice, but my first choice would be to insert the words 'on the terms permitted by this Act.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The section does limit them. It is not the case that the railway company is allowed, on its own free will, and without the sanction or authority of the board, to take anybody's lands in the form of a deviation. The hon. gentleman will remember that the board is vested with jurisdiction for such purposes. This clause does not make provision for the taking of the land, but simply provides what the notice shall contain. I do not think it would help matters to substitute the word 'and' for the word 'or.' This language is in the existing law, and I do not think it has occasioned any difficulty or is likely to leave the way open to any serious outrages.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 156,

Mr. LANCASTER. The other night the hon. minister, in making the arrangements about the judges and the courts, agreed to add the judge of the county court; and I would suggest that it should be the judge of the county court where the lands lie, the same as in the Ontario Act. There is a different county court judge in every county. We do not contemplate that either party would go to a county a long way from where the lands are. That would be worse than compelling a man to go always to the headquarters of the province, whether the superior court is sitting. The language of the Ontario statute, which I would use as a guide, is that the judge will be the judge of the county court where the lands are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the county court judge of one county jurisdiction in another county?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, any county county court judge has jurisdiction over the whole province, but, of course, either party may apply for a change of venue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not do to put that in the interpretation clause.

Mr. LANCASTER. As long as the hon. minister accepts the suggestion, I care not where it is put.

On section 158,

If within ten days after the service of such notice, or within one month after the first publication thereof, the opposite party does not give notice to the company that he accepts the sum offered by it, or does not give notice to it of the name of a person whom he appoints as arbitrator, the judge shall, on the application of the company, appoint a person to be sole arbitrator for determining the compensation to be paid as aforesaid. 51 V., c. 29, s. 150.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that on the sixth line, after the word 'company' the following words be added: 'Six days notice of which shall be given the opposite party.' We have adopted the procedure laid down in the existing law, but I am now proposing to change it somewhat, and I am quite sure that the result will be that there will be much less expense. I also propose that the following words be added after the word 'aforesaid': 'Provided that the judge shall at the request of the third party on such application appoint three arbitrators to determine such compensation, one of whom may be named by each party on such application.'

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Can you insert a clause limiting the expense of the arbitration? This expense often debars farmers from going to court. They find that arbitration often costs a great deal more than the high court. The hon. minister should put in a clause limiting the cost of the arbitration, or leave it to the county judge or some parties who would not charge so much. I have in my mind the case of a neighbour of mine, who, if he had not been a rich man and the case had gone against him, would have been ruined by the large amount of money that the arbitration cost. It is the duty of the government to try and give us cheap arbitration. I know parties to-day who have not settled with the railway companies and who are afraid of going into arbitration owing to the costs.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is very much in what the hon. gentleman says. Very serious instances have come to my own knowledge such as the hon. gentleman has mentioned. I do not see, however, how I can make any improvement, but will be happy to accept any suggestions. If people were content to allow the judge to determine the question of value, that would do away with a good deal of expense. We provide that the judge shall do it unless one of the parties asks the appointment of two additional arbitrators. It would be rather extreme to say that the parties shall not have that right, but it is almost certain to entail additional expense.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before that section is adopted, I would suggest that this is the place where the qualification should be inserted clearing up the question for the judge. The judge should be the judge of the county where the lands lie. We do not contemplate that either party will deliberately seek to make expense, but it is well to reduce the chances for expense as much as possible. I would suggest that after the word 'judge' should be inserted the words 'of the county wherein the lands lie.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am well disposed towards limiting it in that way. But should it be done here; should we examine the whole subject and consider the insertion of a subsection declaring that the county court judge of the district shall be the judge referred to in these clauses?

Mr. LANCASTER. Better let the section stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it would be better to prepare a subsection rather than repeat the words in each case.

Mr. LANCASTER. So long as it is not forgotten——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will look into it.

On section 159:

If the opposite party within the time aforesaid, gives notice to the company of the name of his arbitrator, then the two arbitrators shall jointly appoint a third, or if they cannot agree upon a third, the judge shall, on the application of the party, or the company, after notice of at least six clear days having been given to the other party, appoint a third arbitrator.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that this be struck out altogether.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to know if I am right in thinking that the object is to do away with the two arbitrators, meeting to choose a third. The minister proposes not that each party shall appoint one arbitrator, and, if necessary, the two so choosen meet to try to agree upon a third, but that each party shall name one and the judge name the third?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. That will save expense.

Motion agreed to, and clause struck out.

On section 161—compensation for lands and damage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to substitute for section 161 the following:

The arbitrator or arbitrators, in deciding on such value or compensation, shall take into consideration the increased value that will be given to any lands through or over which the railway will pass, by reason of the passage of the railway through or over the same, or by reason of the construction of the railway, and shall set off the increased value that will attach to the said lands or grounds, against the inconvenience, loss or damage that might be suffered or sustained by reason of the company taking possession of or using the said lands as aforesaid.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is the wording in the old Act?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. While that is being discussed, I have an amendment which I intended to propose to the section as it appeared in the Bill, but it will be applicable to this amended section, except that the lining will be different. This is an important matter, and I think I had better mention the amendment I propose and explain the reason for it, in order that the minister may consider it, and, if he agrees with me incorporate it in the Bill. There are two sorts of increases in value that appertain to lands taken for railway purposes. First there is the increase of value common to the whole locality due to the construction of the railway and the opening up of the section of country it traverses. The second is a special increase and is involved also in the existing law, which the minister proposes to re-enact.

But, I am sorry to say that in the province of Ontario the judges do not agree on what the law means. The best opinion—if I may say so ; I mean what seems to me the best opinion—is in accordance with what I attempt to make clear by my amendment ; and that is that no farmer or other owner of property shall be charged, as a set off against the damages to which he is subject, with any increase in the value of his land which increase is common to himself and others by reason of the construction of the railway, but only such increased value as attaches to his land and not to neighbouring land. The late Chief Justice Burton was strongly of opinion that the law is as I have suggested by my amendment to make it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the recognized law.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, I am sorry to say it is not, and that is why I am going to make it safe in this Act, so that people having these cases may not have an appeal from the arbitrators. I have had perhaps as much experience as any lawyer in Ontario of my age with regard to these railway arbitrations. I have lately been an arbitrator, as well as counsel in such cases for fifteen or twenty years, and I have found many a time there was an appeal owing to the disagreement of the arbitrators and coming down from the price it was really thought the man would be entitled to, because they could not otherwise agree upon what they thought the law was as to what was to be set off. The late chief Justice Burton was strongly of the opinion that the law was as it is made by my amendment, that it meant what I am saying now, that the man should not be charged against the damages to which he was clearly entitled any set-off for increased values to his remaining land which value was common also to his neighbours. But other judges have not agreed with him, and I find arbitrators, among whom are county judges and lawyers of good ability, disagreeing on that point. I had the misfortune to sit upon an arbitration myself in Hamilton, where the arbitrators had to disagree; they could not agree whether they should allow as a set-off for damages the benefit the party received for the increased value of the rest of his land when that value was common to his neighbours, because, it was argued, that man could get to market quicker, he can ship fruit easier, and so on. But it was stated on the other hand, well, but that is a benefit common to his neighbours who do not give any land, and there the arbitrators, I am sorry to say, were not able to agree upon how they should put that point. I think we ought to make it clear, and that a man should not be charged with the benefit to his property against the damages which he suffered through the passing of a railway across his land, unless it is a special benefit not common to every one. If the minister does not agree with me, I am prepared to debate the point at considerable length, that a man should not be charged against for any increased value unless it is the value special to him over that which his neighbours receive.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to hear the opinion of the leader of the opposition on this question. I do not know that the proposition will strike the committee favourably. I am under the impression that in my own province the law is generally accepted as stated by the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster). I would be inclined to accept the amendment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not familiar with Ontario decisions on the point. The idea in my mind was, how would you deal in that case along similar lines with the inconvenience, loss and damages to the lands traversed ? I have no particular case in mind, but the general principle is that a man can recover damages where his lands have been taken, or some of his lands. Then he can also recover damages in respect to other lands not taken but being part of the same lot ? That is to say, you may have two lots side by side, one lot owned by A and another lot owned by B. Taking into consideration the detriment which is occasioned to the land of A because a portion of his land has been taken, you take into consideration the circumstances affecting the value of that land as a whole; whereas the land of B immediately adjoining may be affected in the same way, but you cannot grant him any compensation at all because no land is taken. My hon. friend from Lincoln wishes to put the man whose land is taken on the same basis as every one else. in respect of increase to the value of his land. But how are you to deal with the corresponding principle. All the community alongside of you is affected exactly in the same way as you are, so far as detriment is concerned, and if you are to be put on the same plane as every one else with regard to advantage, are you not to be put on the same plane as every one else with regard to detriment? It seems to me if you are to equalize the question of advantage you ought also to equalize the question of damage. The object of my hon. friend's amendment is to say that a man whose land is taken must not suffer any reduction of the price on account of increased advantage if all his neighbours have an exactly similar advantage to that which he receives. If the principle is good to that extent should not the converse be good.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the arbitrators have generally proceeded upon the principle that a man whose lands are not taken by the railway does not, in the case put by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), sustain quite the same damages. It is the severance of a man's farm that creates the trouble. If a man's lands are not taken by the railway they are not severed at all. In the abstract, as put by my hon. friend, it appears to be one and the same question, but it does not work out in that way once in a hundred times as a matter of fact. The man whose lands are not taken is not damaged because they are not severed. The railway does not cut him off from his woods or his pasture field, it does not run between his house and his barn or his house and the highway, and therefore it does not damage the remainder of his land. The man who is not damaged has all the advantage of the railway running there and perhaps a greater advantage than the man whose lands are taken because he is almost as near to the station as the man whose lands are taken, and he does not sustain any damage by the severance. I do not therefore think he is in a position to say that the other man is getting more than is given to him when he gets his damages in respect to the severance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The illustration the hon. minister referred to a moment ago is on the same principle. The Intercolonial Railway was running along Water street in the city of Halifax. The railway went along that street under the terms of a special statute enabling the highway to be used for that purpose and also by permission of the corporation of the city of Halifax. It took up one half of the street from the curb, the result of it being that the land on the other side of the street was reduced in value by at least 50 per cent and some of it by 75 per cent. The people went to the Exchequer Court and they could not recover a dollar. I think that is what the Exchequer Court held, although it may be that their petition was dismissed by that court under the statute of limitations. I think that is what the court would have decided in any case. If the land of one of these proprietors had extended across the street there would have been a different condition of affairs under which the man who owned this land which had been taken would not only have had damages for the land so taken, but damages for the injury to buildings on the other side of the street; whereas, this land did not extend across the street, the land was not taken and the owners had no status in the court at all. I think in all fairness from one standpoint that the amendment which my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara suggests has something commendable in it, but I would like to see whether or not, if you are going to amend the law, you could not adopt some principle which would deal in an equitable manner with the converse condition. I suppose from the standpoint of the public it would be the fairest not to regard the principle which has prevailed in the past, that damages cannot be recovered unless the land is taken, but I suspect that it would be very difficult for the railway company to know just where matters were going to end if a principle of that kind in respect of line through any thickly settled district were adopted. You remember the question which arose in New York when the elevated road was constructed. Damages were recovered on account of vibration and everything of that kind and the litigation extended over many years. I think the amendment of my hon. friend is well worthy of the serious attention of the committee, but we had perhaps better think of it a little before adopting it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be very reluctant to undertake to make any material changes in the principle upon which the courts have been acting heretofore in respect to these valuations. We would not know where we might land ourselves. A very long course of judicial interpretation as well as of legislation throughout the English speaking countries, I think, has pretty well synchronized in a uniform way, and I would not care to take the responsibility just now, when dealing with this Bill, to make what might be thought to be a progressive movement. I would feel like agreeing to my hon. friend's amendment to-day, because it seems to me to be in accord with the doctrine which obtains generally in our courts, if it were not a departure. I should like to have an opportunity to consider it, and I think I would prefer not dealing with it in this form, but defer consideration until some later session when we might deal with the subject separately.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is not intended as a departure. I do not think it has that effect.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it were felt to be desirable to make some provision to meet the case which the hon. leader of the opposition has referred to, we would find it a very large undertaking. These things ramify in such extreme directions that we cannot anticipate where they are going to carry us. We cannot establish uniformity any way. I think, that, having gone as far as we have, we ought to stop. I would agree that the words should be added if the committee approve the amendment which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) proposes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think it is dangerous to alter the wording of the Act as it is. The only advantage which the landowner whose land is taken can have over another neighbour is better access to the station and better drainage for his land on account of the passage of a railway over it. These advantages are allowed at present and changing the wording of the Act would lead to confusion.

Mr. LANCASTER. I quite agree with the member for Lanark that drainage and access to a station are the two things that are generally brought forward. I know where it has worked hardly with the landowners, because in order to get the award of two of the arbitrators there has had to be a compromise which would not have been the case, if it were established what their rights were.

Mr. LENNOX. The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) is within reasonable limits, and I think it would meet the difficulty. No deduction should be made from compensation because of benefits from the passage of a railway that are common to all the lands in the neighbourhood.

Mr. GILMOUR. Would this amendment have the effect of preventing compensation being given to other lands, not taken by the railway which are not damaged.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not affect them at all. I move that section 161 be stricken out and the following substituted :

The arbitrators or arbitrator in deciding on such value or compensation shall take into consideration the increased value which will be given to any lands through or over which the railway will pass by reason of the passage of the railway through or over the same, or by reason of the construction of the railway, and shall set off such increased value that will attach to the said lands or grounds against the inconvenience loss or damage that may be suffered or sustained by reason of the company taking possession of or using the said lands as aforesaid.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I beg to move to amend the section by inserting after the words 'increased value' the following words : 'beyond the increased value common to all lands in the locality.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Section 168, proceedings upon application for disqualification, struck out.

On section 169, subsection 2, appeal from award,

Mr. LANCASTER. I move to add after the number two at the very beginning of the section, the words 'whenever the award exceeds $1,000.' The present law limits these appeals to amounts exceeding $400, but this Bill strikes out the limitation and allows an appeal in any case, no matter how small may be the award. The old Act provides a limit of $400, but in my opinion, we should not allow an appeal except in cases where the award is over $1,000. As my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Robinson) said, the expenses of arbitration are considerable, and by the time the three arbitrators have come to a conclusion they know pretty well all about the case and what the damages really are. I may be a little influenced by the fact that the landowner can stand an appeal less easily than the railway. A railway company, having an award of $500 or $600 against it, might worry the landowner into accepting $200 or $300 rather than have an appeal. The costs of an arbitration, which he cannot collect from the company, are considerable. What he can collect are the witness fees and the arbitrators' and other fees, which are principally disbursements, but he gets a very small portion of what he has to pay his counsel for preparing his case. And if the railway company should take the case to appeal to the court in Toronto, the landowner must have the case argued over again, and the appeal may go against him or the amount be reduced, and in any case he will be considerably out of pocket. Even if the appeal should be dismissed with costs against the railway, the landowner would not be able to get as much as he would have had if there had been no appeal, because there is a large amount of work which the lawyers have to do and for which they cannot charge in the bill of costs against the company. I think, therefore, that if the award do not exceed a thousand dollars, the railway company should not be allowed to bring it into review. I first thought of making the amount twice as large, but on reflection I thought that the amount of $1,000 would be more acceptable to the House. If the award of the arbitrators is not more than $1,000 against the railway company, selected as the arbitrators are by this Act as arranged by the minister—an arrangement with regard to most of which I entirely agree—I think there can be little doubt that that award will be substantially just, and that to allow an appeal would be inadvisable. For, if an appeal from the award is allowed in the case of say $800, the owner may be persuaded that it is better to take $600 or even $700 than to face the expense of an appeal. He is forced to take it, not because the law obliges him to, but because he feels it would be more profitable to him in the end. In some cases property owners are inclined to regard this almost as a species of blackmail. The agent of the railway company says: We can make you pay a great deal out of this award, if you do not accept a reduction. And so, as the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) said, the farmer is compelled to sustain a loss which he ought not to be called upon to sustain. I submit with confidence that the line should be drawn at $1,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The difference that arises is as to the amount. I had intended to suggest that the minimum should be something less than $1,000. I confess that I did not view it as the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) does, entirely as a question of appeal on the part of the railway company. I think we may very well consider that either party or both parties may be dissatisfied with the award and may desire to have the subject reviewed. If we are to view it as the hon. gentleman does, I think I would be prepared to go as far as he proposes. But are we justified in so doing? I have not had great experience with respect to these matters, not nearly so much as the hon. member has had. Therefore, I should be very much disposed to be influenced by his views. If we are to take for granted that in only a very small percentage of cases are these valuations complained of by the landowners, and in the great majority of cases by the railway company, I am prepared to say that the amount should be a good deal larger than I had in mind, and I do not say I would not be willing to make it as high as $1,000. It might be well, perhaps, to consider the point further. Where lands are being taken for railway purposes in country districts, one would hardly find one instance in fifty, I suppose, in which the valuation would run as high as $1,000. The effect of this, therefore, would be to allow no appeal in the great majority of cases. I do not think that would be a serious objection. I am quite sure that the tribunal referred to would be likely to reach a fair result, so far as the farmer is concerned, and I would not be particularly sensitive with regard to the other. Of course, I would not like to see any system which would be manifestly likely to result in gross injustice to the company. They are entitled to fair treatment, and, of course, we depend on the arbitrators, one of whom is to be named by the railway company, to do what is reasonable and just. I think this clause may stand as it is for the present.

On section 169, subsection 3—practice and proceedings on appeal.

Mr. LANCASTER. This subsection provided:

Upon such appeal the practice and proceedings shall be, as nearly as may be, the same as upon an appeal from the decision of an inferior court to the said court, subject to any general rules or orders from time to time made by the said last mentioned court, in respect to such appeals, which orders may amongst other things provide that any such appeal may be heard and determined by a single judge.

I have an amendment to propose, a copy of which I have just submitted to the hon. minister. When I drew this amendment I assumed that the meaning of 'court' there was the Superior Court. Of course, I do not pretend that they should appeal to the county court. This subsection treats the award of the arbitrators as the decision of an inferior court. Now, speaking for the province of Ontario—and I think the same applies in other provinces—you never appeal from any court to a single judge. The present law in that respect says, among other things, that the court may provide that appeals shall be determined by a single judge. That is the principle I am assailing. My contention is that no one judge, I care not who he may be, should set aside, upon law and fact the decision of three arbitrators in which at least two must have agreed. There is no other case within my knowledge of the courts, where one judge can do that. It is a bad principle, and it does not work well—speaking for the province of Ontario—in these arbitrations with railway companies. This appeal in railway arbitration is wider than the ordinary appeal. Speaking as a lawyer, I think the appeal from an inferior court is not to be set aside as easily as an award can be. The award here can be set aside if the court determining that appeal think the judge erred on the question of fact, or on the weight of evidence, or the weight to be attached to either class of witnesses. Now, those liabilities to attack do not exist in the ordinary jurisdiction of an appellate court. The law at present is that one single judge can do more than is the result of an appeal from an inferior court. He is allowed, upon a hearing of an appeal, the same power as in the case of original jurisdiction. That is, the court has a right to read the evidence over without seeing the witnesses in the box, or hearing their manner of giving evidence, which properly guides the lower court. The appellate judge can disregard all that, and determine from the written evidence just as if he was accorded original jurisdiction. Now, on principle, I do not think it is right that one judge should have all these wide powers to set aside a decision on a question of fact as well as on a question of law. There is no other appeal, so far as I know, from a lower court, at least in the province of Ontario, that is heard and determined by a single judge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Exchequer Court judge.

Mr. LANCASTER. His is an inferior court, and a party can appeal from him to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say to the hon. gentleman at once, to save him the trouble of arguing at greater length, that I think I would entertain his suggestion. But instead of providing that the appeal can be dealt with by one judge, I would provide that such appeal should be to a Superior Court judge.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. To which of the courts of appeal would you appeal to ? To the divisional court or the court of appeal ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The Act says that upon such appeal the practice and proceedings shall be as near as may be the same as upon an appeal from an inferior court to the superior court. In Ontario that is to a divisional court. In Ontario the appeal goes to the divisional court of the high court of justice, because the high court of justice is a superior court.

Mr. GERMAN. Under the practice in Ontario and under the rules, an appeal can go either to a divisional court or to a court of appeal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not from a county court.

Mr. GERMAN. Yes, the section provides that the superior court can make and change the rules whereby an appeal from the board of arbitrators, in cases of the appraisement of land taken for railway purposes, can be to a single judge ; but unless the superior court in the province of Ontario, and I apprehend in the other provinces as well, makes an order different from any order that exists at present, there can be no appeal except to a divisional court.

Mr. LANCASTER. We do not appeal to a single judge in these arbitrations. There has been a standing rule of the high court for ten or twelve years, under which all these appeals do now go to a single judge.

Mr. GERMAN. This is a section altogether different from the section in the general Railway Act, which says that upon such an appeal the practice and proceedings shall be as near as may be the same as upon an appeal from the decision of an inferior court. Now, the practice and proceedings at present, on an appeal from an inferior to a superior court, are that the appeal shall be either to the divisional court or to the court of appeal. You appeal from the county court to the divisional court, and from the divisional court to the court of appeal.

Mr. GERMAN. You appeal from the county court to the divisional court and from the divisional court to the court of appeal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not in a county court. You are limited to one appeal.

Mr. GERMAN. I quite admit that. We understand the practice in Ontario as well as the hon. gentleman. Under the provisions of the subsection the practice in an appeal from the board of arbitrators would be exactly similar to the present practice in an appeal from an inferior to a superior court in the province of Ontario, and that is either the divisional court or the court of appeal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid this is going to introduce some complications. It is not going to be easy to arrange for this unless you make special references to the various courts in the different provinces. I understand that in the province of Quebec the superior court is constituted by one judge, and that is a court of appeal from inferior courts.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would not be so simple a matter as it appears at first sight.

Mr. LANCASTER. What I object to are the words in the subsection which provide for an appeal to a single judge. What my amendment provides is that such an appeal shall be heard by at least two judges. If the committee thinks the amendment should not be made, I would propose that we should strike out the words :

> Which orders may amongst other things provide that any such appeal may be heard and determined by a single judge.

Because there is a distinct understanding that such an appeal shall go to a single judge, and it might create mischief.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not an appeal properly so-called. It is a question of supervision or control by the court over the award of the arbitrators, and when that supervision is exercised by a judge of the court in the first instance, then there may be an appeal to the court of appeal afterwards. But, that is to be taken under the ordinary procedure which exists in the different provinces and I do not understand why we should seek to depart from the rule which has existed heretofore under the Railway Act. This section of the Bill is a mere reproduction of the old Railway Act. Why distinguish the word 'court' in the different provinces ? It is a court of original jurisdiction. What necessity is there for changing it.

Mr. LANCASTER. The necessity is that I do not think any one judge should sit in appeal over these arbitrators.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The arbitrators are only enlightening the conscience of the court. When an appeal is taken they are merely expert witnesses.

Mr. LANCASTER. Surely the hon. Minister of Justice does not contend that a man expects to go to a court. Surely it is intended that people will get their rights settled by the arbitration. They do not expect that they will have to go to a superior court.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What is the object of the section ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The object of the section, as I understand it, is that if the arbitrators go wrong upon some principle upon which they have decided there shall be an appeal.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Exactly.

Mr. LANCASTER. If it were limited to a matter of law I would not have so much to say about it, but a single judge could say that the arbitrators had erred on a question of fact as well as on a question of law. I do not think any single judge ought to be able to do that. I know it has been so until now. I know, as I said at the outset, that I am amending the law as it stands to-day, irrespective of the Bill which is before the committee. I do not think the law is good in its present form. I am saying when you are allowing an appeal from three arbitrators, two of whom must agree that it ought to take more than one man to set aside the decision of these two. I think the decision of these two ought not to be set aside on a question of fact without more than one judge to do it. An appeal from the county court goes to at least two judges. I have drawn the amendment in this way so as to make it consistent with the text of the section relating to inferior courts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You could not make it to have universal application because one judge will review the verdict of the twelve men.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not like this parliament to say when we are providing a tribunal for settling these disputes between the railway and the landowner that we will allow the province of Ontario, or New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, or Manitoba to say what tribunal shall sit in appeal over these arbitrators. This section says that you can take this appeal from these arbitrators to a single judge or to more than one judge, because, in all of the provinces there are courts of appeal with more than one judge. This says that no matter what may be the usual practice in an appeal from an inferior court in any province you may make a special rule which is not the general rule to allow an appeal to one judge alone.

Mr. COWAN. That is exactly the procedure that prevails in this province. You can appeal from the arbitrators to one judge in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is exactly what I say. That is what I understood the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) to dispute.

Mr. COWAN. Not at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. I object to this appeal going to a single judge, and if that is the practice now, I think this parliament ought to correct it. The fact that it is so now does not make it right. We are here to make these laws correct. The hon. minister of Railways and Canals would not listen to me if he were to suggest an amendment and I were to offer the objection that he was changing the law as it exists to-day. We would not be making provision for this railway commission if the railway law was all right. We are dealing with the Railway Act and amending it as far as we can to make it proper as far as relates to the railway commission and other matters. The hon. minister is amending this section and he has amended several other sections relative thereto. I am not going to dispute with hon. gentlemen opposite about what is the existing state of affairs because we agree on that point. We agree that in Ontario to-day this appeal goes to a single judge, and I am contending that it ought not go to a single judge.

Mr. COWAN. Then why not amend the provincial procedure ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is where my difficulty is.

Mr. LANCASTER. You can say that there shall be no appeal, and if you say there can be no appeal you can also say that there shall be an appeal, and you can therefore say what kind of an appeal there shall be.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. How would my hon. friend amend this section so as to make it applicable to the conditions existing in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought that in all the provinces no appeal from an inferior court went to less than two judges ? If I am wrong in that, my amendment is not quite right. That is why I made it at least two. I know that in the court of appeal in Ontario there are five judges. That is more than two, and therefore my section would apply. I am not wedded to the words of my amendment, but I think it should be provided in some way that one judge should not sit in review. I do not think we should indicate that it is proper that a single judge should review all the questions of fact and determine from a typewritten copy of what the evidence was in a case of original jurisdiction, better than two or it may be three arbitrators who have seen the witnesses. We expect the arbitrators to do their duty, and I do hope that there will not be many appeals, but if there is an appeal it should be decided before more than one judge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The more the suggestion is studied the more difficulty it presents. We have already declared that the court shall mean a county court as well as superior court, and if we give the county courts jurisdiction you could not make a proviso that there must be two judges. In Quebec, for instance, you could not go to a superior court because one judge constitutes that court, and therefore you would have to go to the highest court in the province. I do not think the jurisdiction of such a court should be invoked in such a case. If the limitation is $600 or $800, there would be few appeals. I should think that a county court judge, experienced in the consideration of evidence and the knowledge of the law, would be competent to decide if necessary that the award of the arbitrators may be set aside.

Mr. LANCASTER. We seem to agree that if possible we should have this decision reviewed by more than one judge. Of course appeals will be limited if you increase the amount, but I am contending for $1,000. The appeals may be few, but every appeal is an important appeal. Even though my amendment be not accepted it would be better to strike out all the words after 'appeals' on the third last line, and then we have the province in each case providing the court of appeal from the inferior court, and we have these appeals from the arbitrators going to whatever court that may be in each province. Is not that safer than to provide that in each case it shall be an appeal to a single judge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would prefer that, to the other suggestion you have made.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the section is amended by merely striking out those words which my motion provides for striking out, the result will be that in my province, whatever the proceeding for an appeal from an inferior court may be, that proceeding will prevail. Perhaps that is safer than specifying the number of judges. In drawing my amendment, I thought I was safe in saying two judges, because I thought that there could be no appeal in any province to less than two judges. I think we ought to fix what in our opinion ought to be the constitution of the court, and if there are appeals in any province to less than two judges strike out the words which indicate that the appeal may go to a single judge.

Mr. WADE. This section would be workable in the province of Nova Scotia if the Bill had not been changed to include the county court. With that change, I do not think it is workable. If we say that in the province of Nova Scotia the appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court, that will meet the difficulty.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that, with the assistance of gentlemen from the different provinces, on both sides of the House, a section might be drawn providing that in the province of Ontario the appeal should be to such-and-such, in the province of Quebec to such-and-such, and so on for the different provinces.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the 2nd subsection would be a great deal better if it said 'a superior court' instead of 'the court.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the word 'the' before the word 'court' in line 44 be struck out, and the words 'a superior' be inserted in lieu thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that in the third subsection the following words be struck out: 'which orders may amongst other things provide that any such appeal may be heard and determined by a single judge.'

Mr. GERMAN. I do not think it is wise to strike out those words. In the province of Ontario at present an appeal must be taken from the arbitrators either to a divisional court or to the court of appeal. Unless the rules of the province are changed, an appeal cannot be taken from an inferior court to a single judge.

Mr. LANCASTER. I argued two appeals last year from arbitrations to a single judge.

Mr. GERMAN. I am not talking about what the hon. gentleman did last year. I am talking about what is allowed to be done under this section if it is passed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman proposing to allow a single judge to hear the appeal?

Mr. GERMAN. No, I am not, but I think that it is perfectly right that a single judge should, under certain circumstances, entertain an appeal. The expenses would be considerably less, and under the practice of the province of Ontario at present, and the provisions of this section, an appeal would only lie to the divisional court or the court of appeal of the province. Then if the courts of the province desire to make a change in the rule and send an appeal of this kind to a single judge, that would be for them to say.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not see any objection to a superior court judge hearing the appeal.

Mr. GERMAN. I may add that in the province of Ontario our courts are getting very considerably congested. Any body going to the court of appeal has to wait months for a decision. Even in the divisional court, you have to wait many months, whereas if you can go to a single judge, you will save this delay. The judges of our Ontario courts consider that it is equitable, that an appeal should be given to a single judge, and they make an order to such an effect. That would work out a larger measure of justice than by going to a court of appeal and having your award held up for a year and perhaps longer. I have a case of appeal now standing a year and a half.

Mr. WADE. I have one which has been standing for six years.

Mr. GERMAN. That is even worse. When a farmer is granted an award, he wants to get his money as speedily as possible, and the appeal should be to a court where speedy justice can be obtained.

Mr. LANCASTER. What I want is sound justice and not speedy decisions which might not be sound justice. I prefer to wait six months and get a sound decision than go before a tribunal which I did not think the one best fitted to give a decision. The congestion mentioned by my hon. friend from Welland is being cured. They are now constituting another court in Toronto, and endeavouring to have two more judges appointed. They are proposing to make four divisions of the high court of justice, so as to relieve that congestion, and that will no doubt be accomplished if the hon. gentleman will bring his eloquence and ability to bear on the government to have more judges appointed. My object is to have the section amended so as to provide what the minister contemplates, namely, that this appeal should be as nearly as possible like an appeal from an inferior court to a superior court. What I contend for is that we should have at least two judges to determine. If this parliament is not going to decide that there must be at least two judges, I think that the amendment of the Minister of Railways is the best remedy we can have, and this to provide that whatever the provision may be in each province for an appeal from an inferior to a superior court, that provision will apply to this appeal from the arbitrators. But, as I have suggested already to the hon. Minister of Justice, I think that we could manage to draw a section designating under little sub-heads to what court the appeal should lie in each province. It does not seem to me that hon. gentlemen are wedded to the one judge idea. In my opinion, the preponderance of evidence is that we should have more than one judge to review the decision of two arbitrators.

Mr. RUSSELL. What is the practice in Ontario ?

Mr. GERMAN.

Mr. LANCASTER. At present the one judge holds the appeal, and that is why I have moved to amend——

Mr. RUSSELL. How does that work as a matter of fact ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I have been trying to explain that it does not work out well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has worked perfectly satisfactorily.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am giving evidence that it does not work out satisfactorily. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say that it does.

Mr. COWAN. In what respect has it not worked satisfactorily ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Because awards are set aside by one judge who views the evidence in a different light, reading it from a typewritten copy, from what the arbitrators did who heard the witnesses.

Mr. COWAN. Is not that the same in every case ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The principle is what I am contending for. Does the hon. gentleman think, as a general principle, that one judge who has not heard nor seen the witnesses is a better judge of the facts than two judges would be ?

Mr. RUSSELL. If you had a half a dozen judges they would be under the same disability as regards the witnesses.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member perhaps has not noticed the particular appeal that is given here. This is not a case of an ordinary appeal. In the case of an ordinary appeal the judges who have not heard the evidence and observed the demeanour of the witnesses, cannot reverse the decision of the lower tribunal on a question of fact. We are providing a special appeal here, the widest appeal that can be known. We are saying in this Bill that you shall not only appeal like an ordinary man from the inferior to a superior court, but you shall be subject to have the decision in your favour reversed upon grounds upon which it cannot be reversed in an ordinary appeal. You are using language here to take away the benefit a man gets in the decision of a tribunal that saw the witnesses and heard their evidence, and more than that, you are proposing that one judge shall do that. I think we can draw a section that will get over that difficulty. If the amendment that such an appeal shall be heard and determined by at least two judges does not work out properly, we can draw a section in the interest of making these appeals satisfactory, so that justice may be done with as little expense as possible, and a speedy decision may be accelerated. I am not in favour of so-called quick justice unless it is sound justice. I am contending that no one judge ought to be allowed to reverse the decision of two arbitrators appointed in the careful way the Minister of Justice has arranged to appoint them by this Act. I would suggest that this section stand until we make it right, and provide that in the province of Ontario the appeal shall be to such and such a court, that in the province of Quebec it shall be to such and such a court, and so on through all the provinces.

Mr. WADE. Don't strike out those words in the latter part of the section but let it stand as originally drafted, then the whole section will be perfectly workable. I think the appeal should be such a court of appeal for hearing these claims, as will be found most advantageous. In our own courts, if we struck out those lines, the appeal will have to be heard by at least four judges, and that might not be necessary in the case of small claims. I think it would be better to leave the control of the constitution of the appeal court in the hands of the superior court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The question I think is not well stated by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). He wants to change the existing conditions for the province of Ontario. I do not apprehend any question will come up in that province. We have had a court operating there which has enabled these appeals to be entertained by a single judge. In all human probability this clause has been very well considered, because it would be necessary there to invoke a court consisting of more than one judge. There being such a clear difference of opinion among the legal gentlemen from Ontario, and the appeals likely to be taken under the Act being very few in number, I think we had better leave this clause as it stands and pass on.

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot withdraw my amendment. I am not talking here idly in what I have been saying. Of course I will have to be bound by the majority of the committee, but I think my amendment is proper.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman thinks so, but there is a difference of opinion.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have not heard any arguments showing that the principle that I am contending for is wrong.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I want to ask the hon. gentleman a question. Is there in the province of Ontario under the Judicature Act they have there, such a system as we have in our province, by which a judge in a given case may appoint three arbitrators for the purpose of determining certain issues that are raised between parties ?

Mr. LANCASTER. No. There is a rule stating distinctly that the courts will not refer cases to arbitration. But it often happens that counsel agree that a case is proper to be referred, and then a reference is made to a judge of a county court. But there is no board of arbitration in civil cases. When a case comes to trial counsel may agree that it may be referred to a county judge, or perhaps to the Master in Chancery. I persist in moving my amendment that subsection 3 of section 169 be amended by striking out all the words after the word 'appeals' in the fifth line, and inserting the following in lieu thereof : 'And such appeals shall be heard and determined by at least two judges.'

Amendment negatived.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. COLIN F. McISAAC (Antigonish). Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines (Mr. Hyman) I move :

That the order of the House for Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company be discharged and the Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines for further consideration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What effect will this have on the notices that have been given of amendments to this Bill in committee on third reading ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). They could stand until the Bill comes back.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We could have an understanding that these notices stand until the Bill comes back.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not necessary that notices that have been given once should be given again.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 145) respecting the Quebec Bridge Company, and to change its name to 'The Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.'—Mr. Power.

On section 3,

The undertaking of the company is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the ground on which the undertaking is declared a work for the general advantage of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). This bridge crosses the St. Lawrence to allow the Intercolonial the Grand Trunk and other railways to enter Quebec. The purpose is to enable the company building the bridge to have terminal facilities, that is, short spurs of railways to connect with the bridge of the Grand, Trunk, the Intercolonial and the Canadian Pacific railways.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

HAMILTON, GALT AND BERLIN RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 149) to incorporate the Hamilton, Galt, and Berlin Railway.—Mr. Cowan.

On section 9,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Twenty-five thousand dollars a mile seems to be a high bonding power for this railway. Has the hon. Minister of Finance considered it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not given very much attention to these Bills in the Railway Committee. I presume my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has given his consent to it, and has seen that the powers given here correspond with those granted to other companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill can tell us whether the amount per mile for which bonds are authorized to be issued, was considered in the Railway Committee ? It seems to me it is a large amount.

Mr. COWAN. It is not a large amount for building a railway through that section of the country. There are several ravines and gullies to be bridged, and it is a populous section where the purchase of the right of way is expensive. The capital stock has been cut down to $500,000 for sixty miles of road. Besides, it runs through several villages and towns.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the estimated cost ?

Mr. COWAN. Between $30,000 and $35,000 per mile, exclusive of rolling stock.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

VANCOUVER AND COAST—KOOTENAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the Vancouver and Coast-Kootenay Railway Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the length of this line ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nobody here who can give the information and I think that the committee will have to rise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly hon. members who have charge of Bills ought to show sufficient interest to be present and give any information required.

Mr. COWAN. The hon. member who has charge of the Bill spoke to me about it. He said that it was impossible for him to be here and he asked me to see that the Bill came up in committee. I, however, am not aware of the details.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) may be able to give the information

Mr. MORRISON. I think that the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance is a good one, and the Bill should stand. I was not in the committee when the Bill was up. This line will traverse another route, for which a charter was granted some years ago, and it might be well that the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill should be present to show that it does not conflict with any existing road.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Unless my hon. friend can give the information required, the Bill will have to stand. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

THE HURON, ERIE AND BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 123) to incorporate the Huron, Erie and Buffalo Railway Company.—Mr. Cowan.

On section 9,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That gives a total bonding power of $35,000 per mile. What is the length of the line ?

Mr. COWAN. About a hundred miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This question of bonding power received a good deal of attention in the committee and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. The intention is to double track the line. It is an extension of the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway, now acquired by the Père Marquette system. The intention is to make it equal to the Trunk line of the Michigan Central.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ST. MARY'S RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 139) respecting the St. Mary's River Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 4,

Section 8 of chapter 79 of the statutes of 1900 is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :—

The company may issue bonds, debentures or other securities to the extent of fifteen thousand dollars per mile of the railway and branches, and such bonds, debentures or other securities may be issued only in proportion to the length of railway constructed or under contract to be constructed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the capitalization of this company ?

Mr. OLIVER. The company was organized some years ago, and the capital fixed at that time. I have not the Act of Incorporation before me, so cannot give the capitalization. This Act merely provides for extensions of the company's already existing line, and provides for a bond issue on the extension, but not for any increase in the capital stock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This section covers the whole line, and authorizes a bond issue of $15,000 per mile. I do not say that this is additional to what was already authorized. I wanted to know the length of line and the capital stock, so that we might have some idea of the total capitalization. I hoped to hold this Bill up as an object lesson to the committee, because I felt that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) would not promote any Bill authorizing a large capitalization, for I know his strong views on that subject. I hope to have an example to point to for the benefit of the hon. members who promote Bills authorizing a capitalization of $35,000 or $40,000 per mile. But the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) does not seem to have made very close inquiry into the matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have here the statutes of 1900, chapter 79, of which relates to this Bill. It authorized a capital stock of $500,000 and has bonding powers of $10,000 per mile. This section changes it to $15,000 per mile.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the length of the line ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not stated here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the hon. member for Alberta might know.

Mr. OLIVER. I believe the length of the line already built is thirty miles. This authorizes extensions, the two main ones being thirty miles each.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is sixty miles with a capital of $500,000 ?

Mr. OLIVER. Ninety miles, including the thirty miles already built. That is, of course, a rough estimate. But I have travelled the country, and I think I am about right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) is satisfied that the capitalization is not excessive or likely to interfere with the proposed control of rates hereafter.

Mr. OLIVER. Inasmuch as this is a narrow-gauge line, and, with its branches, only ninety miles in length, I did not take the rates into as careful consideration as I would have done if it were a trunk line.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). 'Little drops of water, little grains of sand'—you know. If you have a number of small lines brought together, you may find that their total capitalization inflicts a burden upon the people which might have been prevented if we had looked carefully at the capital of each small concern when it was being chartered.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glad indeed to find that the position I have taken meets with such approval from the leader of the opposition. With the support of the opposition for the principle I have always upheld, I should be glad to receive suggestions from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and support any wise amendments to the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am very glad that the opposition for once, has won the commendation of my hon. friend from Alberta.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I would say on behalf of this company that I think they are doing splendid work in the west. They have a large irrigation scheme and have done a great deal of work in that way. The object in asking for these branches is to extend the road from place to place through that territory. A great deal of the land belongs to the company, and it is being settled very fast. I am satisfied that the bonding powers are not too large for the enterprise they have undertaken. They are doing the work practically with their own capital. I think the committee can feel perfectly satisfied that it is justified in granting the powers asked for.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As a matter of fact, the bonding privilege asked for is very much smaller than many of the railways whose Bills have been before us to-night, and I have no reason to think it is excessive. But I have been making a practice throughout the evening of asking what is the total capitalization, and also of making some inquiry as to the cost of the road, that I might judge whether or not it was wise to grant the powers asked for.

The difficulty with most of the charters applied for in parliament is that the bonding powers demanded are usually enough to construct the road without regard to the capital stock. That I am not inclined to regard as a very good principle. I think in that respect my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and myself are pretty well agreed. I was only trying to get a statement of the cost and the capitalization of this road, in order that I might hold it up as an example in contrast with some of the other Bills which have passed, and the capitalization of which seemed to be very ample.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I believe that charters have been granted where the bonding privilege was probably too large. But of companies which actually intended to do the work, to complete it and put the road in good shape, I have hardly ever known a case yet where that company was incorporated and built any amount of the road, that they have not had to come back to parliament for increased powers in this direction. However, I think the principle of keeping down to a reasonable amount the bonding privileges is a very good one. But what I wanted to say in this connection was that this road is, as my hon. friend says, a narrow gauge road; so it is in some pieces, but the powers granted here are with the intention of making it a standard gauge road. That was explained in the committee. I understand that part of the road has already been constructed of the standard gauge, and that it will take fully this amount and more to make it a standard road.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE CARDIFF RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 140) to incorporate the Cardiff Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 3,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the length of the line?

Mr. OLIVER. About eight miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is a pretty large capitalization for eight miles.

Mr. OLIVER. The solicitor who had the Bill in charge asked that the subsequent provision relating to bonding powers should be struck out, so that the company only depends on the stock to build the road.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman would consider that a fair amount.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not prepared to be responsible. The committee seemed to think it a fair amount. In fact, I believe the chairman suggested that the stock should be increased from $200,000 to $250,000, which I believe was also declined by the solicitor.

Mr. HYMAN. It is a peculiar Bill in that the promoters do not require any bonding privileges. It is intended to build the whole road out of their own money, and for that reason the stock was left at this amount.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is so unusual that I do not think we ought to say much about it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure I have the approval of the leader of the opposition on this occasion.

Mr. HYMAN. We ought to adopt that as a model Bill.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA, QUEENSTON & ST. CATHARINES RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 154) to incorporate the Niagara, Queenston and St. Catharine's Railway Company.—Mr. German.

On section 4,

Mr. COWAN. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the capital stock of this company has been cut down from $1,000,000 to $250,000. It is an expensive road to build in so far as it is to be built from St. Catharine's to Niagara, and then along the banks of the Niagara river crossing the ravines as far as Queenston, and then coming back on the third side of the triangle, as it were, to the city of St. Catharine's. The right of way is very expensive; the construction along the banks along the Niagara river is expensive and the promoters of the Bill say that in cutting the capital stock to $250,000 it will not enable them to build a first class road in first class condition. I move that the capital stock be increased to $500,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does the chairman of the Railway Committee say to that? I presume that all these arguments were submitted to the Railway Committee.

Mr. HYMAN. When the Bill was before the Railway Committee the promoters were asked as to the cost of the road and taking into consideration the capital stock at $250,000 and the bonding privileges which were given in the Bill, the Railway Committee considered they were quite sufficient. I think $250,000 capital stock is quite sufficient and I cannot agree with the motion made by Mr. Cowan.

Mr. COWAN. Then, I suppose I might withdraw it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see that it makes any difference whether the capital stock is $250,000 or $500,000, because I do not suppose they intend to put a dollar of stock into the road. I understand from the Minister of Railways that railways are not built that way. I presume they intend to build the railway by the issuing of bonds, and it does not appear to me that it will be an expensive road to build. I asked the promoter of the Bill if they were going to ascend Queenston Heights and he replied, no, that he was going to keep down below in coming back to St. Catharines. In that way the cost of construction will be very much less. I think the judgment of the committee should be sustained.

Motion (Mr. Cowan) negatived: Yeas 9, nays 34.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 85) to incorporate the Berlin, Waterloo, Wellesley and Lake Huron Railway Company.—Mr. Clare.

Bill (No. 125) to incorporate the Guelph and Georgian Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 142) respecting the Elgin and Havelock Railway Company.—Mr. Fowler.

Bill (No. 171) to incorporate the Chatham, Wallaceburg and Lake Erie Railway Company.—Mr. Stephens.

Bill (No. 177) respecting the Klondike Mines Railway Company.—Mr. McIsaac.

Bill (No. 63) respecting the London and Port Stanley Railway Company.—Mr. McGugan.

Bill (No. 144) respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

SUPPLY—THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to bring to the attention of the government a communication I have received from Dawson City, referring to a supposed declaration by the government that the Treadgold concession is not in force, and stating that the gold commissioner is enforcing section 14, which exempts from representation Mr. Treadgold's private holdings. Is that covered by the communication which the acting Minister of the Interior, the hon. Postmaster General, sent to me this afternoon?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I only read it casually, and passed it over to my hon. friend.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is a second communication, it may be, referring to the same thing. It will be covered, I suppose, by the communication which I received from the hon. gentleman?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no knowledge of the matter beyond what I had in the memorandum.

WOODSTOCK, N.B., POST OFFICE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, that I think the hon. minister was mistaken in informing me, as he did when I brought the matter up in the House this afternoon, that the order of the House adopted on the 30th of March has been complied with. An order of the House asking for certain information in respect to the drill shed at Woodstock has been complied with, as is shown on page 385 of the 'Votes and Proceedings.' That is not the order to which I called the attention of the hon. gentleman. The order, which was passed on the 30th of March, is as follows:

Order of the House for copies of all papers, letters, telegrams, contracts, specifications, and correspondence of every description whatever, between the Minister of Public Works, or any other member of the government, and the contractors, sub-contractors, and other parties, in connection with the repairs to the post office, and the building of a new retaining wall, in connection with the post office, in the town of Woodstock, N.B.

Since I brought that matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works, I have received a letter stating that the return was brought down. I find that the hon. Minister of Public Works is mistaken and there is some misapprehension about it, for I can find no trace of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall call his attention to my hon. friend's remarks.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Census, $35,000.

Mr. CLANCY. I notice that in the third volume of the census there are parallel columns showing the number of schedules in 1891 and 1901. Take the first item appearing in those schedules under the heading of 'Living Persons,' in 1891 there are twenty-five questions and in 1901 thirty-four. Will the hon. minister tell us what these questions are?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I would require to have a copy of the schedules here to give that information in detail which the hon. gentleman asks for.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman had better send and get them. It is very important that we should know.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. While we are waiting for the information asked for by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy), I may explain briefly the reason for the reduction in the census vote for the ensuing year. The current year's vote was $120,000, and, from present appearances, that will not all be used, but very nearly. The vote for the ensuing year is $35,000. The reduction is due to the fact that the work of compilation is drawing to a close. The end of the present fiscal year will see it brought to a stage where, so far as can be estimated, very large reductions in the staff will be possible. It is anticipated that the vote for the ensuing year will complete absolutely the whole compilation. It is probable that the work of compilation will be finished by the month of January, although, there will be some slight work in closing up that vote. I am now able to give the information asked for by my hon. friend. I believe he desired to know what questions were asked in the census of 1901 with regard to living persons that were not asked in the census of 1891. I find in the book the hon. gentleman himself quoted a paragraph at the bottom of the first page, showing that four questions which were asked in 1891 were not asked in 1901. There having been nine questions more in 1901 than in 1891, the absence of these four would mean that thirteen questions in all must have been asked that were new in the census of 1901. There was an inquiry to ascertain the country or place of birth of each person, and the year of naturalization, if not a British citizen by birth, and the racial origin and nationality. There were also inquiries to ascertain the trade, occupation or profession, and the time each person was employed in the same, and the amount of his earnings in the year. Then about education and language, in 1901 there were additional questions as to the time at school in the year, and the language spoken, and whether a person spoke both English and French or only one, and his mother tongue. Those, I think, cover the whole list of extra questions.

Mr. CLANCY. The schedule states there were twenty-five questions in 1891. What the hon. gentleman is reading from the introduction does not explain what I was endeavouring to get. There were twenty-five questions asked in 1891 and there are thirty-four asked in 1901. I wanted to know if any of those asked in 1891 were dropped, and if not, what were the additional questions that were put in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were four questions dropped which were asked in 1891; the place of birth, of father and mother, the origin if French Canadian—that question was not asked whether he was a French Canadian—third, whether he was unemployed during the week preceding the census, and fourth, whether he was an employer and the number of hands employed during the year. Now, to balance those four there was a question to ascertain the country or place of birth of each person. That was not asked in 1891.

Mr. CLANCY. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that four questions were dropped, and a substitute for them is to give the place of birth, that is the same question as one of the four.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the place of birth of the father and mother is not the same question as the place of birth of the person himself. The question I am speaking of is the country or place of birth of each person other than the question of the place of birth of the father and mother. Another question asked was the year in which the person came into Canada, if he was born outside of Canada. That was not asked in 1891. The year of naturalization, if foreign born; his racial origin and nationality. Then there were inquiries to ascertain the trade, occupation or profession of the person, and the time he was employed therein, and the amount of earnings in the year. Then, under the head of education and language, there were additional questions as to the time at school in the year, if he was of school age, and the language spoken. Then there was a question whether he spoke both English and French, these being the official languages of this country. I have just had handed to me the whole list of questions in 1891, also the list of questions in 1901.

Mr. CLANCY. I was anxious to get the additional questions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To do that I would have to read over the list of questions in each census and compare them, and work out those which were asked in the one which were not asked in the other. In 1901 the list figures up 34, and in 1891 only twenty-five. The order of questions is not quite the same in the two censuses and I would have to go over every question and compare it to give the hon. gentleman the information he asks. The general statement I gave a few minutes ago from the introduction of the census, shows practically what the hon. gentleman asks.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the hon. minister will recognize the fact that the committee ought to be in possession of the changes that I have asked for. Although it may involve some work, I am sure none will appreciate more than the hon. gentleman himself the importance of giving us that information. I suggest, as we cannot hope to get through the item conveniently to-night, the hon. gentleman should have an opportunity of getting that information. It is Friday night, there is a thin House, and this is a very important question as the hon. gentleman will see. I think it will be well to allow him an opportunity of getting that information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not think of the House adjourning at the present time. This is a good opportunity of discussing this vote and putting it through. The hon. gentleman has had these schedules before him for a long time, and if he had chosen to look at them he could have compared them and made out exactly what he wants. I could work it out myself with fifteen or twenty minutes study, but I do not think my seat in the House of Commons is the place to do that. When I consider that the schedule of 1891 has been published for twelve years and that the other has been published for two years, it does not seem quite reasonable that a work of that kind should be asked for in the House of Commons by the minister who is endeavouring to pass his items. I think it is hardly fair to expect the minister on a vote of this kind, to go over the information which is patent on the face of the returns which have been published for years, and which can be obtained at any moment with a few minutes work if any body chooses to go at it.

Mr. CLANCY. I might be able to agree with the hon. gentleman that the hon. minister would not be expected to work out at his desk in the House of Commons such information, or in fact any other information that is asked in getting a vote like this passed, but the hon. gentleman, I am sure, will assent to the proposition that his deputies should be prepared with the work, and if they are not prepared with it the hon. gentleman has no right to ask for this vote. The hon. gentleman surely cannot ask this committee to pass these estimates involving thousands of dollars of expenditure unless we know what the value of this expenditure was. I agree that it is not the time now for the hon. minister to sit down and work out these tables, but he should be prepared through his deputies to give such information to the committee, and I appeal to the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) if it is a fair thing to ask us to go on at the close of the week with other parts of the estimates and say that we have no business to ask such questions, when there are records that we may appeal to. The hon. Minister of Finance usually gives the information that is required of him. He does not ask us to go and hunt up the information that the minister ought to have. It is the minister's business to know through his deputies and give that information to the House. I think I am not at all unreasonable in asking this. There has been a large increase in the cost. If the money has been well spent, the minister should have credit for it, if not the committee has a right to criticise it and it has a right to the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that we ought to be prepared to give all such information. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me, on the other hand, that it is quite possible in committee for any hon. gentleman to ask questions that a minister cannot be ready to answer offhand, and if he gives the assurance that later on such information will be brought down, the committee should be content with that. If any hon. gentleman wanted to do so, he could ask a series of questions that would embarrass a minister and which he could not possibly answer offhand. The only protection the minister has is to give the member the assurance that the information will be brought down in due course, but I do not think we should delay the proceeding of the House on that account. There will be ample opportunity to get this information later on, and if the hon. minister gives the assurance that it will be brought down, I think that ought to satisfy my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have asked one of my officers to get that information. I think he can get it in half an hour. In the meantime the hon. gentleman can go on with other questions, so that we can proceed with the business of the House. I do not think I am asking anything unreasonable in asking the hon. gentleman to wait for half an hour for the information which he requires and which is being prepared.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister knows very well that it is not this side that is delaying this vote. No minister can complain if questions are asked which the committee are entitled to have answered. I want to say a word to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. I should have to be much more reasonable than the hon. gentleman is, and I think he is a very reasonable man, if I were satisfied with the proposition he has made. The hon. gentleman surely was not hinting that the questions which are being asked this evening have the slightest embarrassing effect upon the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I should rather judge, from the intimation of the hon. gentleman, that embarrassing questions are put. They are not embarrassing unless the minister is unprepared. If the minister is unprepared all such questions are embarrassing. Large sums of money have been expended and I am sure the hon. Minister of Finance will not be so unreasonable as to press the question unless we are prepared to get all the information in detail. The hon. gentleman is a very busy man. I think he can see that members of the opposition cannot be idle men. They have very much to do. The proper stage at which we should have information, as the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, as an old parliamentarian, is when the item is under consideration, and when the subject is fresh in our minds. To bring down that information afterwards, at a time when there is no opportunity to pay attention to it is utterly useless for a fair and intelligent criticism. I do not desire to ask unreasonable questions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has used the word 'embarrassing' in a sense different from what I have used it. These questions are not embarrassing except as questions to be answered at the moment. These questions will be answered within a reasonable time. They are only embarrassing in the sense that my hon. friend insists upon the hon. Minister of Agriculture answering them at a particular moment. If he gets the assurance that the information will be furnished I do not imagine that he would wish the business of the House delayed while we get it.

Mr. CLANCY. It is an unfair thing to ask the opposition not to press for an answer when the vote is under consideration. The hon. minister should be ready with his answers right now, and it is not the fault of the opposition that he is not ready.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have informed my hon. friend that I will have the answer within half an hour, and it may be within a few minutes.

Mr. CLANCY. 'Deaths in public institutions.' Thirteen questions were asked in 1891 and thirty-five were asked in 1901.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has not read it quite correctly. In 1891 'deaths in public institutions' comes second and not first, but in 1901 it comes third. The difference in the figures is the difference between thirteen and fifteen.

Mr. CLANCY. I am very sorry that the minister has chosen this time to bring up this estimate when there is a very thin House. The hon. gentleman is not responsible for that, but he does take responsibility if he presses the matter to a vote unless we have the information. Why should not the minister come down to the House at the next sitting prepared with answers to such questions as may be asked regarding the meaning of the schedules. I am sure the hon. gentleman will save time if he does that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I regret that the hon. gentleman did not move for a return because it will involve an elaborate calculation and take considerable time. If the hon. gentleman thinks for a moment that we wish to burk inquiry or refuse information, I shall be very glad to leave this vote and take other votes in my department, and I ask the hon. gentleman's assistance to pass these votes tonight so that the House will make reasonable progress. We can take the item for exhibitions.

Exhibitions, $150,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The vote for the current year of $195,000 has not been all expended. It was expected that the Louisiana Purchase Exhibition at St. Louis would open in May of this year. It has been postponed until 1904. The vote included also the exhibition at Osaka, Japan, which opened on the 1st of March last and will close on the 1st of August. The Osaka exhibition has been provided for out of the current year's vote except a comparatively small amount which will have to be expended between the 1st of July and the 1st of August. The St. Louis exhibition is to be held in the ensuing year, and I am asking $150,000 to have Canada properly represented there. The exhibition will open on the 1st of May next and will continue until the 1st of December, so that next year I will have to ask for a portion of the expenditure. The vote taken now will prepare the exhibits and the accommodation necessary and enable us to carry on the work until the 1st of July, 1904. It is represented that the St. Louis exhibition will be a magnificent one. There is always a rivalry between Chicago and St. Louis and the St. Louis people are endeavouring to eclipse the great Columbia exhibition at Chicago in 1904. The people of the state, the citizens of St. Louis, the national government, and a number of the states have combined to contribute large sums of money, one circular representing that $30,000,000 would be spent by the people of the United States on the exhibition. Under these circumstances I feel that it is very important indeed that Canada shall make a creditable exhibition there because I believe it will help to make—or rather to sustain, because it is already made—the reputation of our country as a place of glorious production, immense capabilities, and splendid possibilities.

Mr. CLANCY. What will be the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have spent about $6,000 out of the current year's vote on preparations. I hope the $150,000 will carry on the work during the ensuing year, although I cannot be positive of that until next spring when the exhibition opens. If I find it to be necessary I would be disposed to ask for a supplementary vote. We hope now that the $150,000 will carry us to the 1st of July, 1904, with the probability of spending $60,000 in the following fiscal year ; say $225,000 altogether in round figures.

Mr. CLANCY. Are we erecting buildings.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The exhibition provides the buildings. The arrangement is that the exhibits shall be classified according to their character and they refuse to allow any national exhibition in any one building. In explanation of that I may say that at Glasgow, at Wolverhampton, at Cork, and at Osaka, we concentrated the exhibits in one building, and in that way made a more effective display, and one more economically and efficiently managed. I think it is a much more effective way of displaying our resources, and directing attention to our country. But in St. Louis, the plan and scope of the exposition will not admit of that. We have to put our agricultural exhibits in the agricultural building, our horticultural exhibits in the horticultural building and so on through all the classes. But it is proposed to have a Canadian building there, which will contain offices for our commissioner and staff, and which will be a rallying point for Canadian visitors and for persons desiring to obtain information about Canada. That would probably involve the erection of a moderate sized Canadian building.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose the hon. gentleman will be able to give to the committee some idea as to how this sum of money, which he is asking for, is to be spent—how much in buildings, how much in exhibits, and so on.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not yet had plans submitted for the building, but it will probably cost $20,000 or $25,000. The space for our exhibits in the large buildings is given free, and the ground for our own building is also given free by the authorities. As our exhibits will be scattered in a large number of buildings, we shall be obliged to have a large staff to watch over them and keep them in order and explain them to visitors. If we had them all in one building, we would not require more than one-third or perhaps one-fourth of the staff that will be required. There will be considerable expense incurred in collecting the exhibits. We have found it desirable that the government should collect and manage exhibits of natural products—agricultural, horticultural, mineral, and forest exhibits—as we cannot get individual exhibitors in these lines to work up creditable exhibits. That has been our course at all the great expositions. That work requires a considerable amount of preparation and a considerable expenditure of money. One part of that exhibit, in which we have been uniformly very successful, is a cold storage establishment, in which our products are displayed behind glass throughout the whole exhibition. That is an expensive exhibit, but it is a very striking and attractive one, and has always attracted an immense amount of attention. Then there will be the maintenance of the staff, the carriage of the exhibits to the exposition and return, and the incidental expenses. The estimate which is here made has been made upon our experience of other exhibitions.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman give us approximately the cost of the cold storage plant, the salaries of those employed, and the cost of transportation ?

The MINISTER OF AGTICULTURE. When we were fixing the amount of this vote, I discussed with the exhibition commissioner the amount that would probably be required, and he made a set of figures which were quite approximate, as my hon. friend will understand. I have not them at the moment in my mind ; but, speaking from memory, the cold storage plant, including installation, carrying on and management, will probably cost $5,000 or $6,000. Salaries and wages for the whole year, roughly speaking, will come to $20,000 or $25,000, that is for the Canadian staff, in addition to which we always have to employ temporary labour from day to day as we need it. The collection of exhibits in the four classes that I have spoken of would come to at least $50,000 or $60,000, which, I think, is an inside figure for all the work of searching, collecting and preparing them. I have been requested by some of those interested in Canada to make a live stock exhibit at St. Louis. If that should be undertaken, it would involve an expenditure of $250,000.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman propose to make a live stock exhibit at the expense of the country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not answered the request. But even supposing the country would not pay the expenses of the individual exhibitors, if Canada does make a live stock exhibit, the management of that will cost the department probably $50,000. I have not yet decided on that, as there is an objection to a live stock exhibit in St. Louis, owing to the fact that it is extremely hot there in summer and many of our best breeders would not like to send their best animals to St. Louis in that season. If we cannot get their best animals, it would be useless to have an exhibit of live stock there at all.

Mr. CLANCY. In the $60,000 required to defray the expenses of placing an exhibit in St. Louis, is any expenditure on live stock included ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not in that item. That is just the item of the four classes—agricultural, horticultural, forestry and mineral exhibits. These have to be collected from all parts of the country. To-day the farmers are growing grain for us by special arrangement to be sent to the exhibit at St. Louis. We are making every effort to make our display an impressive one. In days gone by we have been very successful at the different exhibitions, and as this exhibition is still more important than those which preceded it, we must do everything possible to give our country a very effective showing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How will the building compare with the one we had at the Pan-American ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It will be much finer. The building at the Pan-American cost us $14,000 or $15,000. We expect to spend on this $25,000, and perhaps more, as the cost of building will be much heavier. The labour people in St. Louis are making arrangements to charge very high rates.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is to be hoped that we will have a much better building than the one we had at the Pan-American. From the expression I have heard from a number of Canadian visitors, that building was totally unworthy of this great country. Even if we should have to spend two or three times the amount we should not hesitate to do it in order to have a proper building. Has the site been selected ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, a very favourable site has been allotted to us, not far from the exhibition office and close to the agricultural exhibition building. Our exhibition commissioner went all over the ground and located the site in conjunction with the president of the exhibition association there.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is an important item. The site of the building at the Pan-American was very detrimental to the appearance of the building itself and it is to be hoped that a better location will be found at St. Louis.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the Pan-American the site was very much injured by a large restaurant being built just opposite, and another inferior building just along side, but that was not understood when we secured our site.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think that there will be any disposition on this side to oppose any reasonable vote that will enable Canada to take at this exhibition the proud place she has taken at other exhibitions. I think it would be a great mistake to count too closely the cost. I join with my hon. friend from South Grey in pointing out that there was a general expression of disappointment on the part of Canadian visitors to the Pan-American, both at the location and the character of our building. As regards the location, the government made the reasonable excuse that they had to take whatever they could get, but I am glad to hear that we are to be better treated at the St. Louis exhibition. While dealing with the question of the Pan-American, perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell the committee what was the winding up of that exhibition, and what disposition was made of the buildings and the large outfit we had there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the furniture. That did not belong to us, but was an exhibit made and loaned by the Canada Furniture Company, a combination, I might call it, of the furniture manufacturers with headquarters in Toronto. They wished to show their furniture, and loaned it to us in the understanding that it was to be used in the Canadian building. So we spent nothing on it, except some $200 at the end of the exhibition to make good some little damage. The building was, I might say, simply got rid of. At the end of the Buffalo exposition we had almost to beg people to take the building off the grounds, as was required of us under the contract we made with the exhibition people. We sold the glass and some other parts of the building for $622.50, and the building itself for about $200 or $250. The contractor had to take it down and remove it. In the case of many of the other buildings, those who had built them were called upon to pay large sums to have them taken away and so fulfil their bargain with the exhibition authorities, which was similar to ours. My hon. friend can understand that, with so many buildings thrown on the market at the end of such an exhibition it would be practically impossible to get anything for them. At the Wolverhampton and Glasgow exhibitions our buildings were put up by contractors under agreement that the contractors should take them back at the close of the exhibition. So we got the buildings for the purpose for which we needed them for a less price. But we could not make such a contract in Buffalo, although, I am satisfied that the system is a good one.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice among the items of expenditure in connection with these exhibitions that many purchases have been made in the country where the exhibitions have taken place. Would it not be better to buy Canadian furniture and fittings throughout, so as to have everything as far as possible of Canadian manufacture ? This would help our producers and would be likely to attract more attention at the exhibition. Would it not be worth while also for the hon. minister to consider if we could not make an arrangement for the designing of a building in Canada and the preparation of the material here ? For instance, the roofing material, whether tin or galvanized iron, could be manufactured in Canada as we have large producers in that line. Of course, the lumber could be Canadian. Then, the carpeting, fittings and furniture could be supplied here. The arrangement of the hon. gentleman made with the Canadian Furniture Company for the supply of furniture at the Pan-American was, I think, a splendid arrangement. It filled every purpose from a Canadian standpoint. I would like information with regard to one particular item of expenditure for the Pan-American. There is an item here—the W. C. Edwards Company, two oak stands for grain exhibits, $745. This seems a very large item for such a purpose. What has become of the stands referred to ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Let me answer the hon. gentleman's last question first. The stands he refers to are at the experimental farm waiting for the St. Louis exhibition. They are large erections, and the two stood in the main hall at Buffalo. They are of hardwood, polished, and elaborate in their construction.

Mr. BLAIN. Were they made under contract ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A bargain was made before they were ordered.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. minister regard that as a good plan for——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I think so. I may explain that I have been very fortunate in having the services of a gentleman who has been most successful in the decorative work of our agricultural exhibitions. I refer to Mr. Hay, who used to be accountant at the experimental farm, but whom I may now call a permanent officer of our exhibition staff. For five years, ever since the Paris exhibition, he has been engaged in decorative work in connection with the agricultural displays we have made at the various exhibitions. He has made a most wonderful success of this work. Our agricultural decorations at these exhibitions attract great attention and win universal admiration, and have been the means of our gaining a great deal of credit. I may say that Mr. Hay designed the Canadian arch in London on the occasion of the King's coronation, and succeeded in making a display of grain and other agricultural products which attracted the favourable attention of the millions present. The stands referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) were designed by Mr. Hay for the express purpose for which they were used. The hon. gentleman spoke of Canadian materials in our buildings. These buildings are made of rough lumber covered with staff or stucco, and must be made on the spot. The wood being entirely covered, there is no particular object to be served in having it taken from Canada, particularly as the expense of taking Canadian material to cities where the exhibitions are held would be very heavy. If we were to follow that course, we should also have considerable difficulty with the contractors. We have found it best to put up these buildings by contract, and the contractors themselves wish to furnish the materials, as they find it most convenient for themselves. Even at Buffalo, so near Canada, we found it impossible to supply the material ourselves. For instance, we have in Canada firms that supply a very fine metallic roofing, which has been widely exhibited. But that concern would not undertake to supply the roofing for our building in Buffalo for anything like what we could get it done for there. I believe their price was something like four or five times what the contractors put the roof on for. The roofing concern wished to exhibit, but they did not want to roof our building, and to have got them to do it would have greatly increased the cost. I grant that the hon. gentleman's idea is a taking one, and it is one which possesed my mind on the occasion of the Buffalo exhibition. But it was not found feasible.

Mr. BLAIN. On the question of the two oak stands supplied by W. C. Edwards & Company for $745, I do not think that the hon. gentleman's explanation will be wholly satisfactory to the committee. The objection I raised is this, that you spend $745 for stands to put grain upon, and you take them around to the different exhibitions, first at the Pan-American and now at St. Louis, and the people who go to these exhibitions see just the same thing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is only a part of the exhibit.

Mr. BLAIN. It is a very important one. Here is an appropriation of $745 for stands to put grain upon. I say that no matter what decorator you have, you send him to the Pan-American exhibition and he puts grain upon these stands, they are decorated in one way. The minister says they are now in Ottawa waiting to be sent to St. Louis. Now, the exhibition in St. Louis must be very similar to the Pan-American. I look upon that expenditure as too large altogether. It would be better to make such changes as advancement would require. The fact is that these stands, no matter how well they are constructed, will be covered up with some decorating material.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman's idea is quite correct. Those stands are made so that they may be adapted to circumstances. They were in one shape at Buffalo ; they are made in sections, and can be so set together as to present a different shape of stand according to the necessities of the building in which they are put. I may say that our designer, Mr. Hay, has worked out designs for an exhibition of agricultural products for several years, and he has never yet had two exhibitions which were at all similar.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice an item here in connection with the Pan-American—'James W. Woods, Ottawa, flags for decorating purposes, $422.' I do not object to the item. But I notice that when the hon. gentleman came to sell these flags, which were only used for a short time, he only got $20 for them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is confusing two items, because we have those flags yet. We have hundreds of flags for decorating purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. If that be correct, then the Auditor General's Report is misleading. I repeat that under the head of the Pan-American exhibition we have the item 'James W. Woods, Ottawa, flags for decorating purposes, Pan-American exhibition, $422.55.' Turning over the page we find 'Less sales of goods, and refund in connection with the Pan-American exhibition.' I see an item of $20 for sale of flags.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those are some that were injured and were old. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that probably ninety-five per cent of the flags that he alludes to as having been bought from Mr. Woods, are here to-day, and will be used for the same purpose.

Mr. BLAIN. I see another item, 'Consolidated Plate Glass Company, London, glass, mirrors, &c., $2,050.' Perhaps the hon. gentleman can give us some explanations about that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That includes all the glass in the windows of the building. We bought that in London and sent it over to Buffalo, instead of buying more at the latter place. We sold it when the exhibition was closed, and I think we got $622. A large reduction, but the hon. gentleman can understand that glass that had been taken out of the frame and carried away from the building, could not be expected to sell very well.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose no duty is paid on goods that are taken over there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No duty was paid until they were sold.

Mr. BLAIN. One other item, page D—17 : 'William Hutchison, commissioner, living allowance, 76 days, $10 a day.' Is that expenditure all right ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think so, quite. The commissioner had to live at Buffalo when the exhibition was going on, as representative of Canada. He had to live in a respectable manner, and I think an allowance of $10 a day was perfectly reasonable.

Mr. BLAIN. That means entertaining, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is what he was paid for his living expenses. He could do what he liked with it.

Mr. CLANCY. Was he supposed to do some entertaining ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no special allowance for entertaining, but knowing Mr. Hutchison's character, I am quite sure he would entertain.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Hutchison was at Buffalo, Mr. Scott was at Glasgow. There was some difficulty about the buildings at Glasgow, was there not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of any.

Mr. CLANCY. I understood that either the city, the British authorities, or some other parties, had borne a certain share in the erection of the buildings.

Mr. BLAIN.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman must be thinking of Paris. There has been nothing of that kind, either in Glasgow or Wolverhampton, since the Paris exhibition. We have done all the work by ourselves, and after our experience we have made up our minds to have nothing to do in conjunction with any other authority.

Mr. CLANCY. How is the building constructed at St. Louis ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We propose to let it by contract.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman will not be subject to the alien labour law ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose we will be subject to whatever laws are in force in St. Louis.

Mr. BOYD. During what months will the exhibition be open at St. Louis ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From the 1st of May to the 1st of December.

Mr. BOYD. In connection with the matter of a live stock exhibit I would like to know what association representing live stock breeders asked the hon. minister for the amount that he says they have asked him for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All live stock associations in Ontario had a joint meeting not long ago at which they passed a resolution, and I am informed that in other provinces they have done the same.

Mr. BOYD. Whence comes the protest that the stock would likely be injured by the heat at St. Louis ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no protest from an association, but a number of breeders themselves told me that while they had no objection to an exhibit being made they did not think they would like to send their best animals to the exhibition at St. Louis during the heated term.

Mr. BOYD. It was only some individual breeders who said that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BOYD. You have no protest from the association that asked for the money ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None.

Mr. BOYD. You are influenced by individuals as against the request of the association.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said that the question was an open one and that I had not decided. I did not say that it had been settled. I simply stated the difficulties there were in connection with the live stock exhibit.

Mr. BOYD. I can see no objection at all in the fact that one or two men do not see fit to send their animals to such an exhibition as the St. Louis exhibition is to be. Because a few men are not disposed to do that why should the whole exhibition be stopped? I think the Breeders' Association which has asked for this grant will require some more lucid explanation than has been given in that respect.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Explanation as to what?

Mr. BOYD. An explanation as to the reason why the minister would not give an answer to this association?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say that that was the reason why I did not give an answer. I said I was discussing and considering the question, and I shall be prepared to give an answer. I pointed out that certain people had said that they did not care to send their best animals to St. Louis during the hot weather and that weighed with me to a certain extent.

Mr. BOYD. May I ask the hon. minister when a decision will be arrived at?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Before long, I hope.

Mr. BOYD. Is there any exhibit that can be taken to St. Louis that will bring greater profit to this country than an exhibit of live stock?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think, if a successful exhibit can be made there, it will be most advantageous to the country.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any strong intimation given by the breeders by way of protest, implied or otherwise, or in the way of suggestion of the difficulties of taking valuable stock there, and if that objection were adhered to by the breeders in Canada it would go so far as to affect the character of the exhibit, or to interfere with our placing the best stock that can be produced in Canada on exhibition. If it had that effect I think it would be a great mistake for Canada not to have the best stock there and that we should either have the best or none.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Quite so.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) has pointed out to-night that it would be a serious thing if our Canadian breeders should draw the line too closely. People would be wanting in loyalty so to speak, in presenting the case of Canada not to assist the hon. minister in every way, even at some slight risk, and an exhibition from Canada devoid of that branch would, I think, be very much impaired. But, on the other hand, if there is a possibility of not making the show that Canada could make there, it would be equally as great a mistake. I must admit the gravity of the question and I hope the hon. minister will succeed, as my hon. friend from Macdonald suggests, in inducing the Canadian breeders to assist him in carrying out what no doubt is the wish of Canadians generally.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister how the selection of live stock was made in connection with other exhibitions, for instance, the Pan-American exhibition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By the Live Stock Association. There was a dairy contest at Buffalo and in connection with that work of selecting and obtaining the cows to go into it it was left in the hands of the live stock commissioner of my department. He worked in co-operation with the Live Stock Association but he did most of the work of selecting the animals.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. minister decides to have a live stock exhibit at St. Louis, will the same policy be pursued?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should say so. It was successful before and I think it ought to be carried out again.

Mr. BOYD. Is the hon. gentleman seeking to procure any information as to the months in which the live stock is to be exhibited?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The authorities of the exhibition have been asked over and over again to give us information in regard to that, but we have not been able to obtain it. I do not think they have yet formulated their own plans. In consequence of the representations that were made to me by the Live Stock Association, I am arranging for a delegation to come down and discuss that question.

Mr. BOYD. I suppose the hon. minister recognizes the importance of such an exhibit in that particular portion of the United States?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. BOYD. I suppose he understands the enormous amount of high grade cattle that have been taken into Missouri, Kansas and Illinois. I cannot understand why the hon. minister should for a moment entertain the proposition of any individual breeders as against the proposition of the association which represents all the high class breeders in the country. I trust the hon. gentleman is seeking information as to the months during which the live stock exhibit will be held, and also as to what the mortality would likely be or has been in that state of Missouri during the months when the fair is likely to be held.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The mortality in the state would be no indication of the work of an exhibition. It is well understood how severe exhibition work is on the animals exhibited, because, during an exhibition, the difficulties in a hot place like St. Louis would be very much accentuated. If these breeders will pledge themselves to send their stock, nobody will be more pleased than myself to make an exhibit that will be creditable to Canada, but, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says, if we find a considerable number of live stock breeders who say that they cannot afford to send their best animals it would be a misfortune to be represented by second rate animals.

Mr. BOYD. Who are the breeders who have made these representations ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot give the names at this moment.

Mr. BOYD. I think we should have that information later on so that the Breeders' Association which has made the request for a grant may know. The least the hon. minister owes to this association is that he should let them know who the men are who are objecting.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not said any men are objecting. I have said that they have represented to me the danger and difficulty of sending stock to St. Louis during the hot weather and I doubt whether they would be willing to send their best animals. I am not setting that against the representations of the association, but merely putting it forward as one of the difficulties in connection with the live stock exhibit which I conceive it my duty to consider.

Mr. BOYD. The minister left the impression on my mind that it was his intention to do it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is entirely a wrong impression, because I stated positively that the matter was under consideration.

Mr. BOYD. The association should know from what source these protests come.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). If the minister is not in a position to tell the House during what particular months the live stock will be exhibited there, I do not see how individual breeders could object when they do not know themselves. I agree with the minister that if it was the general opinion among the breeders not to send their first class animals there, it would be much better that we should have no exhibition at all. If this objection emanated from some gentlemen who are not yet aware as to what particular months they are expected to send their animals there, it can only have come from a few of them at the most. Can the minister tell us what proportion of the breeders have objected ? Every consideration should be given by the minister to the representations of the Breeders' Association both in the east and in the west.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is going to be the commissioner and the secretary at St. Louis?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Hutchison is the commissioner and Mr. Brodie is the acting secretary. Mr. Burns is acting secretary at Osaka.

Mr. BENNETT. At the Glasgow Fair there was more than one commissioner.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been no arrangement made as regards honorary commissioners.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know they were honorary or not at Glasgow, but they drew considerable salaries. The Hon. A. Boyer got $5 a day, and Colonel O'Brien also. Will there be representative gentlemen sent to St. Louis ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been no discussion on that point yet.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Colonel O'Brien connected in any way with this exhibition ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BENNETT. I might put in a word on behalf of Colonel O'Brien. He is a faithful follower of the government, and I think it would be acceptable to him if he were to get employment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is a very good man.

Mr. BENNETT. It would only be fair return for the political services he renders to the government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not the way we do this work.

Mr. BLAIN. I see some very familiar names here. A. N. C. Treadgold got $491 for interest and expenses on gold exhibits at the Glasgow exhibition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Treadgold had a collection of Klondike nuggets and he offered it to us and we undertook to pay the interest on the value and the insurance.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is Mr. Treadgold ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman knows as much about him as I do.

Mr. BLAIN. But I am asking for the information. I thought perhaps he might be some connection of the gentleman in the Treadgold concession.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I imagine he is the same man.

Mr. BLAIN. Has this anything to do with the concession ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing whatever.

Mr. BLAIN. The Bank of Commerce got $1,000 for a similar exhibit at Wolverhampton.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They have a branch in Dawson and we took their nugget and gold-dust exhibit and paid the interest and insurance.

Mr. BLAIN. J. Egan, of Halifax, was paid $600 damages done to his natural history exhibit. What is the explanation. It would appear to be carelessness on the part of the government employees.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In sending these natural history specimens from Paris to Glasgow they were damaged by sea water in such a way that they became practically worthless. We were responsible and we paid the value.

Mr. BLAIN. How were these exhibits selected ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The selection was made on the anthority and advice of Colonel Gourdeau, deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BENNETT. There are other familiar names besides Treadgold here. The Diamond Baker Lumber Company, of London, got $171 for fruit cases. How are these purchases made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are made where the articles can be obtained to the best advantage. Those in the fruit trade consider this to be an eminently good package and they were purchased for sending our fruit exhibits.

Mr. BENNETT. Among other familiar names we have McPherson and Schell of Alexandria, who got paid for cheese boxes. Is that Mr. Schell the member for Glengarry ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell whether he is or not.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps some of the minister's officials could tell him.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say just who the gentleman is. He is Mr. Schell, of Alexandria. Whether he is the member of parliament for Glengarry or not, I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister tell us at the next meeting of the committee ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will try to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. In case he proves to be the member for Glengarry, may I ask whether members of parliament will be preferred in future for supplies ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIN. I see that for decorating and dressing exhibits Cl. Damond was paid $803. Is that the gentleman who the hon. minister said had charge of the decorations in connection with the different exhibitions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, Mr. Hay was the man I mentioned. I should imagine that is for the supply of materials, but I do not know.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the minister able to say what form that gold exhibit took ? Was it in the shape of nuggets ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was almost altogether nuggets, but there was a little dust also.

Mr. EARLE. Did these nuggets come from the Yukon or British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those I refer to came from the Yukon. There were others that came from British Columbia, which were supplied by the provincial authorities.

Mr. EARLE. What other exhibits had you from British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We had a large mineral exhibit, given, I believe, by the provincial Department of Mines. We had also forestry and wood products, grains, foods and fish from British Columbia.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose it is not usual to pay interest on gold-dust and nuggets. The gentleman would scarcely expect to deposit them and get interest on them from the banks.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh, yes, gold-dust may be turned into money at any time. We asked to have the use of them just as we might ask to have the use of so many dollars and pay interest on them.

Mr. CLANCY. Had Mr. Treadgold any interest in that exhibit other than that, as I suppose, he had a concession that he was advertising at the time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of it. Mr. Treadgold owned the nuggets and loaned them to us, and we paid him for the loan of them.

Mr. CLANCY. Had he a concession in the Yukon at that time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know. I had nothing to do with the concessions.

Mr. CLANCY. Was he the same man who had the concession ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe he is. I know him personally, and I always took for granted that he was the man who got the concessions.

Mr. CLANCY. He was at that time, I suppose, attempting to float some scheme ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know the dates of Mr. Treadgold's various investments or schemes. But his name never appeared on those nuggets. Nobody who saw them knew that they came from him, or knew where they came from beyond the fact that they were from the Yukon. All that appears on them were the names of the creeks or mines from which they came.

Mr. CLANCY. Who owned the mines from which they came ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman that. I haven't them in my mind, and I do not know that we have a list of them ; but they were all in the Yukon. I may add that the transaction was arranged through the high commissioner's office in London.

Mr. CLANCY. It does not change Mr. Treadgold's interest in the transaction whether it was arranged in the high commissioner's office or in the hon. gentleman's.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, but the fact that his name did not appear on the exhibits would dispose of the idea that they were used by him for advertising purposes.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. minister can recall what mines were mentioned and who was associated with the mines ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that there was no name of any individual claim or mine. There was simply the name of the creek, such as Bonanza or Eldorado, over the specimens which came from that creek ; but the individual claim or mine or washing from which they came was not put on.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman say that they bore the name of any creeks or localities that are in any way associated with the Treadgold concession ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I confess I do not know just now what those creeks are, and I cannot tell exactly what creek the specimens came from, and consequently I cannot tell whether the names of those particular creeks were over the exhibits or not. But I believe that some of the richest claims were on the creeks whose names were mentioned.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the department or the high commissioner decide to make the exhibit of the gold nuggets, or did this whole matter originate with the High Commissioner in England ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say exactly where it originated. We were discussing our mining exhibit, and the question arose where we could get at reasonable cost some gold exhibits. Speaking entirely from memory, it seems to me that I received a letter from the High Commissioner stating that this exhibit was in London, and that we could get it on reasonable terms, and that I replied asking the High Commissioner to arrange to get it.

Mr. BLAIN. The fact is that Mr. Treadgold had these exhibits in the old country, and was advertising them in the interests of his mining speculations, and I suppose he suggested to somebody representing the Canadian government that it would be a good idea to have those nuggets exhibited at the expense of the government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the arrangement was made this gold was in transit from the Yukon to London, and was not in London. It arrived after the arrangement was made.

Mr. BLAIN. When the nuggets were in transit an arrangement was entered into by the High Commissioner to pay Mr. Treadgold $491 for the use of them as an exhibit. Will the hon. minister regard that as a proper way to make a collection of the gold of the Yukon ? Would it not have been better for him to have made the collection on his own behalf ? Evidently Mr. Treadgold made a selection of the nuggets to advertise his concession, the government paid him $491 for the use of that collection as an exhibit, and Mr. Treadgold got all the advantage of the advertisement without any expenses, and made a profit on it beside.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As a matter of fact, this collection was not made for the purposes of the exhibition. But the government seized the opportunity of getting hold of a good collection of nuggets from the Yukon, and was fortunate in having had the opportunity. The arrangement was made to pay five per cent interest on the value of the gold and the insurance, and it seems to me that the government is to be congratulated for having been able to get a good collection of nuggets at that low price. To have made a similar collection ourselves would have entailed a good deal of expense. There was no advertisement of Mr. Treadgold's nuggets.

Mr. CLANCY. Could the hon. gentleman not have borrowed the money on the credit of Canada at as low a rate ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Then there can be no question of the saving of interest in that case. Does it not occur to the hon. gentleman that the government was made use of by Mr. Treadgold for the purpose of advertising his mining scheme ? The excuse offered by the hon. gentleman, namely, that these nuggets were accepted because Canada would have had to invest a good deal of money and lose the interest on it in making a collection of its own, is the last reason that should be offered in a case of that kind. Has the hon. the Finance Minister brought the treasury into discredit by permitting such a transaction ? He is fond of boasting about his surplus of millions, and yet we have to capture an individual on the road and get him to part with his nuggets for the purposes of exhibition. The government accepted Mr. Treadgold's nuggets and paid him the interest ; that was not done in the interest of Canada, but for the special advantage of Mr. Treadgold and his scheme.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose it is because I am not blessed with such a lively imagination as my hon. friend, that I cannot see the evil in the transactions that he does. I cannot see any criticism he has made on it which would not apply to the obtaining of gold from any other living being. The government does not keep a stock of nuggets on hand. It will be generally admitted that the resources of Canada should be represented at these exhibitions. If we are making an exhibit of minerals, would it not be desirable that we should have an exhibit of gold from the Yukon and British Columbia and Nova Scotia ; and if we are to have such an exhibit, how are you going to get the gold ? The government do not keep it in stock. They must buy it or rent it, and wherever they get the gold they have to take the representation of those who own it as to the part of Canada from which it is taken ; and if on this particular exhibit the name of that portion of Canada from which it came was placed on it, where was the wrong ? The hon. member insisted that the name of Mr. Treadgold was on it.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not, from first to last, say or insist that his name was on it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman said it was used to advertise Mr. Treadgold's concession, but how could that be done if his concession was not mentioned in connection with it ?

Mr. CLANCY. I will tell the hon. gentleman later on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It seems to me utterly impossible. If gold nuggets are accepted and they come from British Columbia, or the Yukon, or from some particular creek in Canada, is there anything wrong in our saying so ? In all our mineral exhibits, the place where each exhibit comes from is always indicated. We have dealt with this as we would have dealt with any other mineral exhibit. We placed it as a specimen of the wealth of Canada, and put on it a label telling what portion of Canada it came from. As to paying the interest, if we bought gold sovereigns we would have to pay the interest. And I think that when the Minister of Agriculture was able to make an arrangement for which he got the gold at simple interest at five per cent, that was a reasonable and fair and honourable arrangement ; and any person, including my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), if he were serious, would congratulate the Minister of Agriculture upon making such an excellent arrangement for exhibiting the gold of Canada.

Mr. CLANCY. I am quite ready to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture upon the simplicity which led to his being imposed upon. I do not attribute anything wrong to the minister. He has stated, what is, no doubt, the fact, that the arrangement was made not through him but through the High Commissioner.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He says it is a good arrangement.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, come to the other part of it. I stated that Mr. Treadgold's concession was advertised through the machinery and at the expense of Canada. His specimens were accepted and he was paid interest on them. When this is objected to, the answer was given that specimens had to be had somewhere. But let us see whether Mr. Treadgold or Canada was advertised. Mr. Treadgold was, naturally, anxious to bring his concessions to the notice of the investing public—these concessions that he had bought—no, I should almost apologize for saying that he bought them—the concessions that were given to him. Mr. Treadgold himself fixed the places where these specimens came from—there was no other way. Of course, every one of them would be announced as coming from some spot within the limits of his concession, and the effect of the arrangement was to advertise the specimens from Mr. Treadgold's concession at the expense of the country. So, I do not retract one word that I said, that Canada paid a sum—not enough to bankrupt the country, being only $400—for the use of specimens which were exhibited at our expense for his benefit. I think it would have been better had he paid Canada some thing to take charge of his exhibit. Of course, Mr. Treadgold did not take specimens to England to advertise other people's claims, but to advertise his own, and every one would be marked as coming from his concessions. I am not sure that no one can see more clearly than the Minister of Finance that Canada not only advertised Mr. Treadgold's concessions, but, in the form of interest on his specimens, paid him for the privilege of doing so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As I view the matter, there is not the slightest foundation for the statements the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is making. Every word he has said against the marking of these specimens with the locality of their origin would apply equally to a piece of stone, a column of coal, or a specimen of silver-lead ore. The origin of these things had to be marked upon them. When I go through the Imperial Institute in London, I see specimens of Canada's mineral wealth, all marked, showing the portion of Canada from which they come. No doubt, Mr. Treadgold's specimens were treated as the other specimens were. Mr. Treadgold was the only person who could tell where they came from. Those who furnished specimens, being responsible people, would be looked to for that information and their statements would be accepted. If these specimens were labelled as coming from Eldorado creek or Bonanza, that would be following precisely the same course as would be followed in the case of a piece of silver-lead ore marked as coming from Rossland. I have no knowledge of the case except what has been stated here to-night, but I understand that these specimens were not labelled with Mr. Treadgold's name or with anything to associate them with his concession.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) prepared to say that these specimens were not associated, in the way of being labelled with the locality of origin, with Mr. Treadgold's concession ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already said that I have no knowledge of the case except what has been furnished by this discussion, and I presume that most members of the committee are in the same position. I say that, according to the information furnished by the Minister of Agriculture, these were not associated with Mr. Treadgold's concession or Mr. Treadgold's business venture, but they were marked with the place of origin, just as any other mineral specimens were. It would be as reasonable to say that because a specimen of ore was marked as coming from Rossland, B.C., you were trying to promote the interest of some speculator in Rossland. The whole thing is utterly absurd.

Mr. CLANCY. It is quite usual for people from the province of Ontario and elsewhere to exhibit as private persons or companies. We found such exhibits at the Pan-American, and they are to be found at every exhibition. It is perfectly right to use such exhibits for the promotion of business interests of the exhibitor. But does anybody suppose that Mr. Treadgold having these concessions, that he was endeavouring to place upon the English market, would give as the place of origin of any of these specimens any claim that was not covered by his own concessions ? My hon. friend may be imposed upon in some other way, but I am sure that he sees how Canada was imposed upon in this case. I wish to point out the difference between specimens of gold and specimens of coal or any other mineral. Though Mr. Treadgold was probably in the way of making his own exhibit, the government received his specimens, marked, no doubt, as coming from claims in Mr. Treadgold's concession, and allowed him interest upon them. The expense involved was a small sum, but to that extent, Canada was used entirely for Mr. Treadgold's purposes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will admit, for the sake of the argument, that every specimen furnished by Mr. Treadgold was marked as coming from some mine in Mr. Treadgold's concession. But that makes no difference whatever. They were treated in exactly the same way as other mineral specimens, so far as that was concerned. The only difference between specimens of gold and specimens of other minerals is that gold is an article of value, and, while you have it, you must pay interest on it, whereas the owners of coal or other less expensive products are ready to offer specimens without charge.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, but the hon. gentleman was advertising Mr. Treadgold's concession as against the concessions of other people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then, if a specimen furnished by some British Columbia mine owner, say Mr. Dunsmuir, or some other, were marked as coming from the place of origin would that be advertising the owner's business at the expense of Canada ? The only difference, as I say, is that gold is a valuable article, and represents so many gold sovereigns, and, you can only get it by paying interest.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has any statement been made as to what has been paid to my fellow townsman (Mr. Egan) for his exhibit ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was not in the House when I explained that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The cases of birds were damaged.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But surely Mr. Egan must have been paid interest, because his specimens were articles of value.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But not valuable articles in the same class as gold.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to claim that the amount paid was not enough ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I dare say that was all right. What was the value of Mr. Egan's exhibit ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was sent to Paris, and, though somewhat damaged there, it was furbished up and sent on to Glasgow, but was so damaged that it was not fit to be used again.

Mr. BENNETT. There is one consolation in this matter, and that is that if Mr. Treadgold's scheme was advertised at the expense of the Dominion, it did not cost as much as another famous exploitation of the Yukon. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that when the famous Mackenzie & Mann exploitation of the Yukon was launched on the British public, it was advertised at the expense of this country, for Mr. Ogilvie went over there and lectured throughout Great Britain while under the pay of Canada in order to capture the public there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Ogilvie was an official of the people of Canada long before this government came into power, and was generally regarded as a most honourable and capable officer, and I do not think he would engage in anything which was inconsistent with his duty. I cannot contradict my hon. friend's statement, because he may have facts which I do not possess, but I do not think Mr. Ogilvie would take such a step at variance with his duties.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This exhibit was not the only gold exhibit, as a matter of fact there were other gold exhibits there, treated in the same way. The Bank of Commeree had a large exhibit at Glasgow and also at Wolverhampton. There were a number of other persons treated in the same way as Mr. Treadgold, and had just the same advertisement. But there was no advertisement in any shape or way. The whole mineral exhibit, whether gold or otherwise, is labelled showing the places from which it comes. We get the best specimens we can collect to show the minerals of Canada, and we label the places from which they come, just as these gold exhibits were labelled. That is the only advertisement there was, and it cannot be called one.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Would this particular exhibit of Mr. Treadgold have been exhibited had it not been taken over by the government ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. It was on its way over to be sold in London, and the moment the exhibition was over it was taken by Mr. Treadgold and melted down and sold.

Mr. BOYD. The most important item the minister is asking for now is to pay for the exhibit that is to be taken to St. Louis. and the most important part of that is the live stock. Therefore I think the minister should be prepared to give the names of these individuals who object to taking live stock, which the minister says has not yet been decided on.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is not the reason it has not yet been decided.

Mr. BOYD. I think until it is decided upon, the committee should rise and this item should not pass. At any rate, I must appeal to the Minister of Finance and protest against the way he is forcing us to go on when so many members of the House are absent. I appeal to him, because he comes from one of the outlying districts whose members are compelled to remain here and do business, while those living nearer go away every Friday night. We find that every Friday night this House is practically without representatives from the province of Quebec, and largely from Ontario. There are only two men from the province of Quebec in this Chamber tonight, and every Friday night from four o'clock onwards there is scarcely a quorum of members here. Indeed there would not be a quorum if it depended on members sitting opposite. Every Friday night these important questions are brought forward, and it is only members from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories and British Columbia who remain here. If we could get away as easily as those other men do, there would not be a quorum in the House. I protested earlier in the session at the late date at which this session was called together. Here we are now well on into June, and I am told we are to be pressed into three sessions a day in the course of another week, that we are to have ten o'clock sessions. The chief business of the session has not yet been taken up. It is well known that the most important issues that were to engage the attention of this House were the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill, the Redistribution and the estimates. The Grand Trunk Pacific Bill and the Redistribution have not yet come before us. The important departments of the Minister of Railways and the Minister of the Interior have not yet been touched. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the Minister of Finance who is leading the House and who comes from one of the outlying districts, to say to his followers : All right gentlemen, if you must go home on Friday evening or Friday morning, we will adjourn at six o'clock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot agree with my hon. friend's conclusions, though I may sympathize with much of his reasoning. I do not think he is in a position to throw any stones at the province of Quebec. The province of Ontario has a larger representation than the province of Quebec, and if you count the members you will find that the province of Ontario, that sends the largest number of gentlemen to either side of the House, is not much better represented in proportion than the province of Quebec. Therefore, the hon. gentleman should not single out Quebec in respect to the absentees. There are always a few faithful Tories and a few good Liberals present to attend to the business. But, I sympathize with what my hon. friend said in regard to members being absent not only on Friday night, but sometimes on other nights. We are not much better off on Mondays than we are on Fridays. But, I cannot agree that that is a reason why we should not do any business on Friday night. There are only three, or perhaps four, days in the week during which we can have a full attendance, and if we are not to do any business except on those days we will be here till October next. In regard to what my hon. friend said about three sessions a day, I have not heard any resolve on the part of the government to have three sessions a day, but I must say that I would rather have three sessions a day than adjourn on Friday. As to the question of government business, there has not been a session within my experience, and I have no doubt within the experience of other hon. gentlemen, when the government business has been more ready for the House than it has been at this session. There has never been a moment when there was not ample business to engage the attention of the House. In regard to the statement of my hon. friend that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) have not asked for anything, the complaint is, on the other hand, that we have been asking too much. When we bring on the estimates we are told we must bring on Bills, and when we bring on Bills we are told that we are afraid to face the opposition by moving supply and that, therefore, we bring on Bills. It is exceedingly hard to please hon. gentlemen opposite. It seems that whatever we do is wrong. I want to appeal to my hon. friend—he and I come from those outlying parts of Canada ; we belong to the faithful few who are here day and night—whether the best way to punish the absentees is not to stay and go on with the work so that they will lose the opportunity of participating in the discussion. Seriously, I am quite sure my hon. friend cannot ask this item to be held over simply because he has misunderstood an observation made by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) has found fault with hon. members representing Quebec for being absent on Friday night and he says he is here because he cannot get away. I do not think he should find fault. It is the members who can get away that are away.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) during the past couple of weeks, has been almost entirely absent from the House. Doing what ? Is it not an awkward situation for him to be in to be lecturing other hon. members for being away when he has been absent for two weeks ?

Mr. BOYD. I have not been absent for two weeks, or one week. The statement I made is correct, and I think I have a right to protest in the manner I have done. Nothing that the hon. Minister of Finance has said has relieved the situation so far as the real business for which we were brought here is concerned. The three important questions that we were brought to this House to consider have not yet been brought to the attention of the House, notwithstanding the late day at which the session was called. I still have to say that if we are to be treated as we have been treated in the face of the absence of so many members we should not be expected to sit until the early hours of the morning.

Mr. COWAN. You are not accustomed to going to bed early.

Mr. BOYD. I understand all that. If we are to be treated in this way we should not be forced to sit on Friday evening and to continue until the early hours of the morning.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is addressing the wrong audience. Instead of scolding those present he should try to get an audience of the absentees and read that lecture to them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) is not making any mistake, because this same thing prevails in church. It is only those who are there that get the lecture.

Mr. COWAN. I hope you are not insinuating that the hon. member for Macdonald belongs to that congregation.

Mr. BLAIN. At page D—26 of the Auditor General's Report I find this item :

Alex. Carder, Winnipeg, mounted heads and birds used for decoration,$1,015.

Would the hon. gentleman give us an explanation as to how these were selected, and by whom ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were selected in the same way as the Egan collection was for the Paris exhibition, and they were sent from Paris to Glasgow. I believe they are now in the High Commissioner's office.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister states that this collection of birds and heads together with the collection which was made at Halifax was sent from one exhibition to the other in the old country. I wish to take exception to that system of exhibiting specimens from Canada. I would like the hon. minister to give us a statement as to what classes of goods were sent from one exhibition to the other in the old country and whether he proposes to follow the same system at the St. Louis exhibition. If he does the people who attend and see the Canadian exhibit, will come to the conclusion that we have just one set of samples, and that we send it around to exhibitions in the same way as the ladies show their quilts at the fall fairs. If the hon. minister wishes to make a creditable display at the St. Louis exhibition, he should not get the exhibit up out of old exhibits, but he should make a new selection even if it costs a little more money. Notwithstanding what the hon. minister has stated, I wish to say that I think that some agreement should be entered into between the government and the manufacturers whereby the government could expend a large amount of money in the preparation of a building so that they might be able to make an exhibition of Canadian goods within the Canadian building. I should like the hon. minister to make a statement that whatever furnishings are purchased in connection with the St. Louis exhibition will be Canadian goods. It would be well to make a Canadian gold exhibit, that if $491 is to be paid out of the Canadian treasury it shall be paid to some Canadian, rather than to Mr. Treadgold, who lives in the old country. In looking at the detailed expenditure in connection with the Paris exhibition, I find that there are thousands of dollars paid to people living in the old country for the furnishings that were put in the Canadian building. There could not be a better opportunity of exhibiting Canadian goods than to take Canadian goods over there even if it cost more money. The building in itself, if it is Canadian, will represent Canadian shingles on the roof, Canadian siding, Canadian furniture, and even printing material. All this will stand for Canada and show the people what we are doing in the way of manufacturing, &c. The minister has stated that he will consult the Live Stock Association as to that exhibit, and he might very well consult with other representative bodies as regards other exhibits. It would save a great deal of expense if he did so and it would result in a much more creditable exhibit on the part of Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A large industrial building will be erected in St. Louis in which all the manufactured goods will have to be exhibited under the rules, so that the Canadian building will not be for exhibition purposes but will be furnished and arranged so as to illustrate Canadian products. For instance, there would be no use taking Canadian nails to use in the erection of the building. If we drove them into the boards on the floor they would make no sort of an exhibit, and if I can get nails in St. Louis at one-third the price of buying them here and sending them there it would be folly not to buy them in St. Louis. I hope of course to have a splendid exhibit of Canadian nails at St. Louis and I merely use that as an illustration of what I mean.

Mr. BLAIN. If the minister has an exhibition of Canadian nails he might use some of them in the construction of the building. In my humble opinion every particle of the material used in the Canadian building at St. Louis should be of Canadian product. If the employees could say that everything in the building was manufactured or grown in Canada it would be in the interest of Canada, and it would be a pride to Canadians and the friends of Canada who visit that exhibition. The minister cannot pretend to say that it has been the practice in the past to use goods of Canadian manufacture, because at the Paris exhibition thousands and thousands of dollars worth of even furniture not of Canadian manufacture was purchased. In one case $1,000 was paid for carpets which were not of Canadian manufacture.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Was any portion of the expense of the Manitoba exhibit at the Pan-American exhibition borne by this government ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All we did with regard to the provincial exhibits was to facilitate their arrangement through our commissioner. The Dominion government did not make a special exhibit at the Pan-American beyond the decorative exhibits of the Canadian building.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the minister made any general remarks on the benefits of these exhibitions to Canada and more particularly the Japan exhibition, which he has had the pleasure of attending, and which prevented his presence here during the early part of the session ? It would be of interest to the House if the minister told us about that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Do you not think it would be too bad for the absent members to miss that lecture ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It might have the effect of punishing them for not being present.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is the first question that has been put to me in regard to this exhibition. I will not at this late hour of the evening detain the House at very great length.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the minister proposes to speak at some length, I would not ask him at this late hour of the night. He might do so on some other occasion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think there would be any other opportunity for it, but I may tresspass on the patience of the House to say a word or two with regard to our opportunities and the hopes for trade with the empire of Japan. I suppose I may say that I am myself personally responsible for the fact that we took part in that exhibition. For many years I have been reading about and studying the orient and the question of trans-Pacific trade. I felt that in the future, I believed in the near future, there would be an enormous expansion of trade between this continent and the continent of Asia. Believing that, I have been looking into the progress of the nations on the other side of the Pacific ; and it seems to me that there was every indication, from the enormous development of Japan during the past sixty years, since the revolution there, of a most magnificent trade between the western coast of this continent, and even the eastern part of this country, and the orient, especially the empire of Japan. Japan is a densely populated country, with over 40,000,000 people, very thickly settled in a country which can hardly feed them, even under the old conditions, when their food was of the simplest character. They are now opening their gates to foreign countries, and they are adopting the methods of an enormous industrial development. Heretofore, their industries have been what are called home industries, the people doing their work in their own homes or in small workshops. They are now establishing enormous factories and works all over the country according to the method of occidental nations, and consequently the people are being taken away from the production of food to these industrial centres. As an illustration, I may mention that the city of Osaka, where the exhibition was held, increased in population in the last four years from 700,000 people to over 1,000,000, the city of Tokio increased in the last ten years from 700,000 or 800,000 to 1,500,000, and the population of Japan has increased in the course of the last ten years by over 5,000,000. The result is that the people of Japan can no longer feed themselves; and, as they ask for better food and more of it, they must go abroad for that food. Up to the present time our American neighbours have had practical control of the market there. It has not been an extremely large market. They have not been asking greatly for foreign food; but now they are doing so, and I believed that it was very important that Canada should make an entry into that market in this early stage of its development and show what we could do in competition with our neighbours. Therefore I urged on my colleagues the importance of making an exhibit in Japan, and I rejoice to say that the result of that exhibit and of my observations there has most amply justified that view. I believed that the best things for us to exhibit in Japan were the class of goods which seemed most likely to find a market there. Flour is one of the chief articles of trade between America and Japan. Heretofore what is called Oregon or Washington flour has held the complete market there. That is very far inferior to our Canadian flour, not only in quality, but in strength to make bread; and I was quite sure that any intelligent people who could see the bread made from Canadian flour, and how much more could be made from a barrel of Canadian flour than from a barrel of Pacific coast American flour, would be glad to get our flour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There were tests made at the exhibition, I suppose?

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We made tests years ago. We have known for years that Canadian flour contained a much greater proportion of gluten than any other flour in the world, especially than the flour made from the soft wheats grown in the United States. Knowing that, I asked Mr. Hutchison, who is himself an old miller of long experience, to have comparative investigations made of the flour sent from the United States, and the flour that we would send. We were so satisfied with the results of that investigation that we felt convinced that a special exhibit of the qualities of Canadian flour at the exhibition would yield good results. We not only arranged to send an exhibit of flour, but appliances for baking, and we had bread baked in the exhibition from Canadian flour. The result was one of the most enormous successes in the whole exhibition. People were simply wild and crazy to get samples of the bread. We had orders from hotels and restaurants throughout Osaka, who agreed to take all the bread that we could give them. We gave it to them on condition that they would state on their bills of fare that it was Canadian bread made from Canadian flour. We were able to supply them with bread of a quality such as they had never seen before. The result of the exhibit is that we have been already besieged with orders for Canadian flour, and I am glad to know that two of the great milling companies have arranged to send special agents to Japan. I may say in this connection that while we have done that, Canada will not reap the benefit of that expenditure and work unless the men engaged in the business in this country will make the necessary sacrifices to push their trade in the face of the energy and activity of their rivals in the United States. As confirmation of what I say, I may state that in American journals there have been letters from Americans in Japan most severly criticising the government of the United States because it allowed Canada to get ahead of it in the way we did at the Osaka exhibition. I have been most gratified at the result of this exhibit. Not only for our western farmers and millers, but even for eastern Canada there is to-day, as a direct result of the exhibition we made there, a market for an enormous trade in flour, in the empire of Japan, in China, and in the whole orient; because visitors from China, Hong Kong, Manilla, the Straits Settlements and Singapore, were at that exhibition, and were all attracted by our Canadian exhibits and the excellence of the arrangement. On the very day that I sailed from Japan, the first of May last, a special messenger was sent from Osaka to Yokohama to present to Mr. Hutchison, who came with me, a medal for the best arranged and most artistically designed exhibit at the exhibition. That was awarded to the Canadian exhibit by the unanimous voice of the jury of awards for the whole exhibition, and it has been brought here and placed in the department as a trophy of our victory. I have spoken of this flour exhibit. It was, however, only one of several. In addition to that, I venture to say that there is also a good chance for developing a large market for lumber and all the products of the forest in Japan. Japan is a forest country, but the demand for lumber is increasing and its forests are becoming exhausted. I was rather disgusted, I must confess, to find first-class Canadian lumber sold as Oregon pine. The people took for granted that it came from the United States, and it was handled by the merchants of Seattle, Takoma and Portland, and not by the merchants of Victoria and Vancouver to any great extent. If our lumbermen from the western provinces will only undertake to push their goods in that market, there is abundant scope there for a large and profitable trade. Among other things we showed was a small furniture exhibit. When we were arranging the exhibit, the Consul General of Japan advised us to rent a furnished house as there was not much accommodation at the hotel for European and American travellers, and in that connection I may say that the Japanese methods of living and the arrangements of their houses are entirely foreign to us and very inconvenient and uncomfortable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Occasionally they are described as picturesque.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but not comfortable. We did not succeed in renting a house, and my commissioner made arrangement with a hotel to take our people on a reasonable basis. This furniture was put on exhibition and attracted a good deal of attention. We could have sold it fifty times over at prices that would have given plenty profit after paying all the charges, duty and commission. To-day that furniture is all sold to people of prominence who were eager to get it and to show it as a trophy of the Canadian exhibit, and it will be an advertisement of Canadian furniture for a long time to come. I have been urging the same organization which sent furniture to the Buffalo exhibition to immediately send an agent to Japan, and if they do they will get a large trade of a most profitable character. We also had another exhibit of pulp and paper which ought to result in a large trade. It may be rather new to many people that the Japanese are extremely fond of newspapers, and that there is an enormous press circulation there. They get all their paper from Europe and I believe that a great deal of it is made from Canadian pulp, which is sent to England and France and then exported to Japan in the shape of paper. In the city of Osaka, there are two newspapers with a circulation each of over a 100,000 daily, besides a large number of newspapers with even greater circulations. We had an exhibit of pulp in its different stages of manufacture as well as the raw wood and the different kinds of paper made from it in Canada. This attracted great attention and many inquiries, and if to-day our paper and pulp manufacturers can meet the demand, they will find a large market in Japan. We had in addition a cold storage exhibit of our fruits, which excited great interest. There is undoubtedly a market in Japan for British Columbia green fruit. In that respect Japan is rather backwards. They grow very little of the fruits we are accustomed to. They have cherry trees without cherries, plum trees without plums, and peach trees without peaches. We hear a great deal of the cherry trees of Japan, but they are grown from blossoms and have no fruit, and the same may be said of their plums and peaches. They have been growing apples in recent years in the northern part of the island, which were introduced from Europe and America, and are doing so most successfully, but they cannot meet the demand of the people for fresh fruit. Our British Columbians can send over there fresh fruit to large extent and find a good market. Canned meats, fruits and vegetables would also find ready sale. In salmon there is already a considerable export from British Columbia and that trade is steadily increasing. Under these circumstances there is evidently a great opening for trade with Japan. The ordinary labouring class there are getting better wages than ever before and they are beginning to understand European and American ways of living; they are asking for the thing used by us. The Americans are active in the propaganda of their own trade, and if we are to reap the advantages to be derived from an exhibition of this kind, our people must wake up and push their work. Trade is not going to fall into our mouths while we lie on our backs. The people who want to take advantage of the Japanese market must wake up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman any suggestion to make as to any particular step we should take?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The first thing is for us to send our agents there. Our furniture organization ought to send our agents, so ought our paper mills. Our smaller industries could combine together and send out agents. They should do so at once, and as the name of Canada gets better known there will be more and more trade to be done and better facilities for doing it. I may say to my hon. friend that until this exhibition took place, there were scarcely any people in Japan who knew of the existence of Canada. Everything that came from the American continent was credited to the United States, even in the case of goods from British Columbia. British Columbia was not known to Japan except as a country which tried to legislate against the Japanese. I may tell my hon. friend that the chief difficulty I had in dealing with the people there was the fact that British Columbia was attempting to legislate against the Japanese. The Japanese are proud and rather sensitive. They are a nation in the sense of coming lately into the comity and family of a nation of the world though their civilization extends back a thousand years. Amongst the people of the western world they are a young nation, and they are proud of the fact that recently they have been accepted as the ally of the British empire and have been received among the civilized nations of the world. They resent extremely the idea of being classed with the barbarian Chinese, and of having any special legislation against them in any country with which they are asked to trade, I say this because it is the only one thing that interfered in any way with the desire on the part of the Japanese to trade and to open up more friendly and more extended relations with us. I may say that, in consequence of the fact that I was a minister of the Crown here—partially at all events, but not altogether perhaps, because the exhibit had been arranged before I reached there and the impression had been largely created—I was received with the greatest cordiality and courtesy by everybody. Every facility was placed at my disposal to present the views and ideas of Canada, and every opportunity to let the people know what we had to sell and how we could open and improve the trade there.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman deliver any addresses in Japan ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was entertained at three or four banquets, and spoke at them, dwelling a little upon these matters. That was not, however, the only or the most important fact. Perhaps it is a little difficult for us in this matter of fact country to understand the point of view of the oriental mind. They are a people of ceremony, a people very largely impressed with titles. And when the Minister of Agriculture from Canada was received by the Minister of Foreign Affairs or entertained by the government of the country or presented personally at a special audience to the Emperor and Empress, that created an impression amongst these people which we here can hardly appreciate or understand, because we do not think so much of these things as the people in the orient do. These facts were circulated all through the country, and people who had never heard of Canada before began to ask where Canada was and what it was. Then, I must say that the authorities at the exhibition and everybody connected with it, were most kind and courteous, and gave us every facility, if I may say so, to advertise our wares and our country. In that way, perhaps, an impression was created greater than could have been created in any other way. I know that Americans and Europeans travelling through the country were immensely impressed with what Canada had done. They were astonished, and not only did they congratulate us, but they went so far as to criticise and condemn their own governments for having let slip an opportunity of which Canada had taken the greatest advantage. I am afraid I have rather wearied the House by speaking so long on the subject. But personally I believe there is a great deal in it, I am satisfied that great benefit will accrue to Canada through the expenditure made in this service, if the people who are engaged in the lines of trade affected will take it up and push it now while the impression that Canada has made is fresh in the Japanese mind, and when they can do the best work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did the hon. gentleman come to any conclusion as to the future of the industrial life and activity started in Japan in its effect as to the export of the manufactures of that country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I watched that very closely and investigated it as far as the time at my disposal would allow. I spoke, a few moments ago of the fact that only recently the industrial production of Japan was what might be called home industry. That system of production results in individuality of product, but not in uniformity. They have now adopted the factory system in textiles and in all matters of iron production. In some other respects, they have refused to adopt that system. As a matter of fact, the government found that the change was so rapid and produced such crucial effects that it was almost shaking the foundations of their society. Therefore, a check has been deliberately put by the authorities upon the change that was taking place in the direction of adopting the factory system. In their factory production we see the effects of the old training. A thousand pieces of cotton turned out by a Japanese factory are not so perfect or so uniform as a thousand pieces turned out by one of our factories. The old inherent quality still remains with the present generation of their people, and I think it will be some time before you can get as uniform and as generally perfect production as those of our old established industries and well-trained operatives. I think it will probably be a generation or two before Japan can reach that point. At the same time she is making great progress in that direction, producing great quantities of goods, which, though not quite as good as can be produced in the United States or England or Canada, still are fairly good. I do not believe that Japan is going to enter into competition with the occidental nations in the market of the world for some time to come. But there are certain lines of goods that we cannot sell them now. Cotton we sent. Silk goods, of course, we cannot pretend to send. They make the best silk goods in the world, and send out large quantities, this being the largest article of their trade. Iron goods we cannot sell to them. They make wonderful tools, with marvellous temper and edge, and in ordinary castings, &c., they have been very successful in adapting themselves to the American and European methods of production. They show wonderful facilities in organizing new industries. I visited several of these and was astonished to find great establishments employing thousands of operatives, without a single European or American among them; organized from top to bottom by Japanese, managed by Japanese, the work-people all Japanese, and turning out—especially in the iron industry—most excellent work. When I say most excellent work, I do not say that it is quite up to the best work in America and Europe, but still very good work. I had the opportunity of visiting a large ship-building yard in the town of Kobe. At the head of it was a man of about thirty-five, a graduate of Cambridge University. He had taken the scientific and engineering courses, and had spent seven years in Europe preparing for his work. Returning to Japan he organized this industry. The concern employs four thousand operatives, and has a most complete organization. He had organized a savings bank for his operatives, established reading rooms and museums, in short, had as complete and modern an organization as any I know of in Europe or America. That concern was completely organized and carried on by a Japanese, for Japanese, with Japanese capital. That is only one instance of many. For that reason, I have not dwelt so much on the general possibilities of trade in ordinary manufactures there. Still I am not prepared to say that there is no opportunity; I think there is in certain lines.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the hon. gentleman sits down, I would like to ask if he was able to make such observations of the social and economic conditions as would justify him in coming to a conclusion with respect to the effect that extensive emigration from Japan might have upon our conditions in Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am satisfied, in the first place, that there will be no such emigration from Japan. The Japanese are a home-loving people, and they have abundant opportunity for progress and industry in their own country. The Japanese government itself forbids the emigration of anybody from the country without a permit, and for several years past, they have refused to issue a permit to any Japanese to come from Japan to Canada who is a labourer or of the ordinary labouring class. Permits are issued only to merchants, students and travellers.

Mr. CLANCY. Did that extend to emigration to any other country than Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The system extends to every country, no Japanese can leave his own country without a permit from his government. The government there, in accordance with negotiations with our government, have issued orders, I think, about two years ago, that for the future no permit should be given to a Japanese, except the classes I have mentioned, to go to Canada, and that has been strictly maintained to the present time. I had the assurance of the government there, personally and in writing, that that policy would be maintained.

My hon. friend spoke about the possibilities of industrial invasion. I consider that there is no prospect of that. The Japanese are a home-loving people, proud of their nation, proud of their empire, and a most devoted patriotism seems to inspire them from top to bottom of every class, men, women and children. The one thing that strikes a visitor is the intense and devoted patriotism of the Japanese for their own country. That means that they do not wish to leave it, they want to stay there. To be sure, some enterprising people go out, but generally speaking the people remain at home. They have now, with their industrial development, an abundant opportunity for labour in their own country, and consequently there is no great inducement for them to go out. Wages are improving, and they are satisfied apparently with their condition.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the hon. gentleman's opinion as to the articles of food now entering into general consumption by the masses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Among the articles of food they are going to take up first, will be bread. They ate rice before, and bread is beginning to take its place. The ordinary labourer uses bread only as a luxury, while the well-to-do people are beginning to eat it as we do. Flour therefore is the first thing. They are beginning to eat more meat, they do not produce much meat in that country. They have very few animals, so few as to be hardly noticeable. They eat a large quantity of fish, very good fish, and they have great fisheries. I believe there will be considerable trade with them in canned meat. I do not believe we can send mutton there, because the Australians are sending in large quantities, and we cannot compete with them. But we ought to be able to send beef there, and hog products. They are beginning to eat pork and bacon, although at first, when Europeans began to go there, they did not seem to care much for them. They have a good deal of poultry there, I do not think we will be able to send much poultry or eggs for some time to come.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They have extensive fisheries of their own, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but still they buy considerable fish from British Columbia, and their purchases are increasing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Have they any native dairy products ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically none. We can send them butter and some cheese. I may say my department has been sending them butter for two or three years. But since I have been there the trade, I think, will decidedly improve. As a rule, however, they do not eat butter. They use a great deal of rape seed oil instead, for cooking. But as they begin to eat bread they will want butter with it.

Mr. BLAIN. What about their tariff regulations ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They have got a low tariff.

Mr. BLAIN. What would be the duty on furniture ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think 10 per cent or 12 per cent; on flour about the same, but I am speaking from memory only. It is a decidedly low tariff, and we stand in the same position with respect to all these articles as everybody else. They have treaties with certain countries giving them the most-favoured-nation advantages which those countries give them on certain articles, but it happens that nearly all those articles are things we do not produce. Now, I wish to say to my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) that I am ready to go back to the census item and to give him the information that he asked for.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is so late now I think we had better stop. I am sure we are all very much indebted to the hon. gentleman for the very interesting account he has given us of the exhibition and the people of Japan.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not want to be unreasonable, but in the early part of the evening the hon. member for Bothwell refused to let me go on with the census item because I had not certain information. I have that information now, and I would like to give it.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not object to the information but there is a great deal more that the committee will want to get.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have asked my officers to stay here and get this information, and I propose to give it to the committee. The hon. gentleman wanted information as to the questions asked in the schedules of the census of 1891 and of 1901. In schedule 3, are questions relating to houses and constructions, houses inhabited and houses uninhabited. These are in schedule 2 of 1901, but were not in the schedules of 1891. Then questions in relating to the French Canadians and place of birth of father and mother, and persons unemployed during the week preceding the census, the employer to state average number of hands employed during the year, were not asked in 1901. The questions relating to colour, to the month and the day of birth, to the year of birth, to the year of immigration to Canada, to the year of naturalization, racial or tribal origin, nationality, living on one's own means, working on one's own account, working at a trade, in a factory or in the home, months employed in trade in a factory, months employed in trade in the home, months employed in other occupations than at a trade in a factory or in the home, earnings from occupation or trade, extra earnings from other than the chief occupation or trade, months at school in the year, whether can speak English or can speak French, which is the mother tongue, if it is spoken—were all in the census of 1901, and not in the census of 1891.

Mr. CLANCY. That relates to schedule 2 in 1901, as compared with schedule 1 in 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As compared with schedule 1.

Mr. BOYD. How long is this going to take to read ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It will take some time.

Mr. BOYD. There is no quorum in the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think there is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are only nineteen members in the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) will find that there is a quorum in the House. There were five questions in 1891 which were not asked in 1901, and there were nineteen questions in 1901 which were not asked in 1891.

Mr. CLANCY. In connection with what schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In connection with the schedule I have just read over.

Mr. CLANCY. That is No. 1 schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, schedule No. 2. There were questions asked in 1901 that were not asked in 1891—place of habitation, name of municipality or township, or parish, range or concession, number of lot, street and house number, or other description. Then there were also the number of families in the house or institution, number who remained in the house or institution, religious denomination and number of communicants, capacity of the edifice or church. Under Sunday schools, there were religious denomination, number of officers and teachers and number of scholars. All these are questions that were asked in 1901 and were not asked in 1891. That is in schedule No. 2.

Mr. CLANCY. Were there any questions in schedule No. 2 of 1891 that were asked in regard to deaths in public institutions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, there were none in schedule No. 2. In schedule No. 3 there was one question in 1901 that was asked in 1891, that is as to whether they were single, married or widowed, and there was also a question in addition as to whether they were divorced.

Mr. CLANCY. How many were dropped in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was one additional. There were none dropped in schedule No. 3. In schedule No. 4——

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister has not finished No. 3. Schedule No. 2 in 1891 corresponds partly with schedule No. 3 in 1901. Schedule No. 3 in 1901 would seem to correspond to some extent with schedule No. 4 in 1891. The hon. gentleman has not given a comparison between No. 3 in 1891 and No. 3 in 1901.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Schedule No. 3 in 1891 included real estate, orchard products, vineyards and market gardens. Schedule No. 4 in 1901 includes farm land, fruits and plantations. That corresponds with schedule No. 3 practically.

Mr. CLANCY. How many were dropped in 1891, and what was the increase in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were none dropped in 1901, but there were several added. In schedule No. 4 there were sixteen questions asked in 1901 that were not asked in 1891.

Mr. CLANCY. None in No. 4 of what census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. During the last census there were sixteen questions that were not in any schedule in 1891. I have them all marked here. I can read them if the hon. gentleman wishes it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman had better read them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All right,—number of fruit-bearing apple trees, number of non-bearing apple trees ; and then there is the same question in regard to peach trees, pear trees, plum trees, cherry trees, grape vines ; and besides that there was a question as to the acreage of trees planted, the plantations of forests and the number of trees planted.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that include Nos. 3 and 4 in the census of 1891 ? The hon. gentleman will see that there is a question as to farm products.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were none of these questions that I have just read out in the schedules of 1891.

Mr. CLANCY. Were any dropped that were asked in 1891 ? If hon. gentlemen are becoming unruly it must be that they are impatient with the Minister of Agriculture. We cannot hear anything. There are fifty-three questions in Nos. 3 and 4. Are they covered by the thirty-seven items in item 4, in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Schedules 3 and 4 in 1901 cover real estate, orchards, nurseries, vineyards, market gardens and farm products, and that included item Nos. 4 and 5 schedules in 1891 in part. There are in these two schedules of 1901, seventy-four questions, while in the corresponding schedules of 1891 there are only fifty-three. In 5 there is question as to the number of acres of buckwheat, beans, forage crop for summer feeding, for winter feeding, for winter fodder, acres of tobacco, acres of hops.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there a column for fallow land ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there a column for fallow land in the census of 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend to press this item through to-night ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not see why we should not.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it involves a good deal of discussion, and I do not think he ought to press it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the early part of the evening the hon. gentleman asked me a question in regard to this vote, and I told him it would take a little time to get the answer. I asked him while I was getting the answer to ask any other question, and I would give him the information. He said he had nothing more to ask.

Mr. CLANCY. I did ask other questions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We sat here for ten minutes, and the hon. gentleman did not ask another question. I got up and made a few explanations, and after I sat down I gave him another opportunity to ask questions, and he did not ask any until the information came down.

Mr. CLANCY. That is the fault of the hon. gentleman himself. I never knew a minister before not to have the information the House is entitled to, and then to rebuke members for not asking questions. If he took time to get the information we desired, it was his fault for not having the information. And now the hon. gentleman attempts at half-past one in the morning to lecture the committee for his own neglect. I do not think he will be acting in the best interests of the country to urge this item when there is so much in it that must be discussed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not lecture the House at all. I am ready to wait a while longer and answer the questions which the hon. gentleman wishes to ask.

Mr. CLANCY. The members of the committee are their own judges as to the questions they ask, and the hon. gentleman should be ready to answer them as they are asked.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is where I take issue with the hon. member. I have looked down from the gallery on Conservative ministers who have not been able to answer questions as they were asked, and promised to bring statements later.

Mr. CLANCY. What ministers in the past have done is no answer. We have not yet touched the fringe of this very important question. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to press it at this hour.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am quite willing to let the hon. gentleman go on and discuss the question, and when the time comes to adjourn, we will adjourn.

Mr. CLANCY. Then the hon. gentleman may go on. Perhaps he will give us No. 5 schedule.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave the hon. gentleman the question in No. 5.

Mr. CLANCY. What was in the corresponding schedule of 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The corresponding schedule of 1891 did not contain these questions.

Mr. CLANCY. There was live stock in both of them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. 5 of 1891 does not correspond with No. 5 of 1901. No. 5 of 1891 is live stock; No. 6 is live stock in 1901.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman give what corresponds in these two columns?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In No. 6, live stock and animal products. The question is the number of pure-bred horses, pure-bred cattle, pure-bred sheep, pure-bred swine, and pure-bred poultry; poultry slaughtered, or sold for slaughter or exported; and the dozens of eggs. These questions were in No. 6 in 1901, and not in the census of 1891 at all. Schedule 5 in 1891 asks for the number of working oxen. That is asked, with a question about other horned cattle, in schedule 6 of 1901. Schedule 5 of 1891 asks for the number of swine over one year and under one year. That is contained in question 8 of schedule 6 of 1901. Schedule 5 in 1891, question 20, asked for the production of home-made cheese. This question was not asked at all in 1901; practically the product of home-made cheese has ceased in this country. In schedule 5 of 1891, question 25 asks for the quantities of home-made fabrics; that is not asked in 1901 at all.

Mr. CLANCY. What about furs ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Furs are included in the forestry schedule No. 9 of 1901, and there are three questions asked in regard to them.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice a great many changes in the different columns, and would like to have a general explanation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the introduction of the census volume No. 1, the hon. gentleman will find each individual change explained.

Mr. BLAIN. Why is it that the fallow land was not taken down ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because there is not much fallow land in Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. There is a great deal in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Compared with the quantity of cultivated land, it is very small.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that there is hardly a farm in western Ontario of a hundred acres in which there is not some fallow land every year. It seems to me rather strange that in the taking of the census you have the number of acres of wheat and oats, but not the number of acres of fallow land.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman's statement is worthy of every consideration. That question was not asked in 1891 nor in any of the former censuses in Canada. I believe that amount to be inconsiderable.

Mr. BLAIN. In western Canada and in Manitoba and the Territories, on every farm there is a considerable amount of fallow land. Did the department give instructions to the enumerators when they began their work and afterwards withdraw those instructions and send out new ones ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that there was one item of instructions sent out in which there was a mistake, and we then sent other instructions in its place.

Mr. BLAIN. This would cause increased expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the printing probably, and in the corrections.

Mr. BLAIN. It was found that the totals would not correspond, and that the instructions were consequently not correct. If that be true, there must have been some change, and it would cost something to send out fresh instructions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It did cost a few dollars.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how fresh instructions were sent out ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Telegrams were sent to the commissioners immediately with the amended instructions.

Mr. BLAIN. Why was the mistake made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was not noticed when the instructions were issued.

Mr. BLAIN. How did the enumerators receive their instructions. As I understand it, there was a commissioner for each county and an enumerator for each polling subdivision ? The enumerators were called together and the commissioner gave his instructions. Is that correct ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. And did the commissioners call the enumerators together a second time to correct the instructions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that the correction was made before the commissioner had given the instructions, so the correct instructions were given to the enumerators at first.

Mr. BLAIN. In every case ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that the correction was made in almost every case.

Mr. BLAIN. That was not the impression given when this matter was discussed last year. The impression given was that the enumerators had to be called together again to receive fresh instructions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was a wrong impression.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not completed the schedule.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I read No. 6 of 1901. What else does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) want now ?

Mr. CLANCY. I want No. 7.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a schedule of agricultural values. All the questions except two are new. Shall I read them ?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, better get them on 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are as follows :

Value of : Land, buildings, rent of land and buildings, field crops, fruits and vegetables, nursery stock sold, horses, cattle, young cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, pure bred stock, bees, live stock sold in the year, cattle sold or slaughtered, sheep sold or slaughtered, swine sold or slaughtered, poultry sold or slaughtered, eggs, honey and wax.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman read the corresponding schedules for 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They did not exist. There were no farm values. That is one of the great blots on the census.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the nature of the questions as to land values ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have just read the list.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not ask for the list, but what is the nature of the questions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The value of the land was asked. I do not know what I can give more than that ?

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman should keep a better temper. Assuming that an enumerator went to a house and found the husband or wife absent, what means did he take for obtaining the information ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He went back again and again until he found somebody who could give it to him.

Mr. CLANCY. Those were the instructions, but is the hon. minister warranted——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am warranted in saying that, because it is the absolute truth. Enumerators went again and again to get the information.

Mr. CLANCY. How does he know they went the second time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because, in hundreds of cases, they complained of the trouble of obtaining the information and said they were not paid enough for their trouble.

Mr. BLAIN. There has been a good deal of discussion over the census item during the last few years. Will the minister please give a full explanation of the reasons of the increased cost of the taking this census as compared with the cost of taking the census of former years ?

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. gentleman want that to-night—or rather this morning ?

Mr. BLAIN. It seems that we are in no particular hurry. We are not responsible for the time when this item comes up. I was surprised, as a new member of the House, when the minister asked the committee to enter upon a discussion of this item at one o'clock.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At nine o'clock.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman commenced his estimates with the census item, but when some questions were asked he could not answer them, but sent for the information. Then, after some consultation with the Finance Minister, he said he would pass over that item.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said I would take up another item until I got the information.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman said it would take——

Some hon. MEMBERS. One at a time.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to set the hon. gentleman right. We have several hours to remain here, and hon. gentlemen opposite had better be good natured. The hon. minister said that the information I required would take a great deal of labour and suggested that I should call for a return. And he intimated to the House that there would be no reasonable probability of the information reaching here to-night.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have got the information here to-night.

Mr. SCOTT. Let the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) move for a return, in place of asking for this lengthy explanation at this hour of the morning.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we had better rise unless we can have better order. So far as information is concerned, the Prime Minister himself suggested to us the other day when he took Mondays and it was pointed out to him that no returns could be moved for, that we could get the information during the course of the estimates. But that is not a reason for sitting here all night, that the minister does not have it until half past one o'clock in the morning. If the minister does not have the information ready at a reasonable hour, he can give it on another day. The only reason for our sitting so late to-night is that some information was asked for which the hon. gentleman said he did not have at the moment ; then the House, on the suggestion of the government, proceeded to take up another item. Then the minister himself entered into somewhat lengthy remarks at my own suggestion, and at the conclusion of those remarks the item under discussion passes, but then he tells us that his information has come and he proposes that we shall sit here for hours afterwards.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend has not put the matter quite fairly. I was quite ready to go on with the census estimate and discuss it, and if it had been discussed in a reasonable manner, we would have gone on and passed it. But the hon. gentleman refused to go on discussing that question until certain information of a special character was obtained. That information I have now got which the hon. gentleman wished to have. I have not got away from that information yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Because the hon. gentleman has the information now at nearly two o'clock in the morning, that is no reason why we should sit here until four o'clock.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would have given it if I had been allowed to.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like the minister to give us a full explanation of the reasons of the increased cost of taking the census. For example, I might say that in the county I have the honour to represent—if hon. gentlemen opposite will not make less noise I can wait for them to quiet down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I move that the committee rise.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is impossible for us to continue unless we have better order. There seems to be some disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to prevent the progress of business, and I do not much wonder at it at this hour. We are sitting here at an unusual hour to gratify a whim of the Minister of Agriculture. Unless the Finance Minister who is leading the House can keep better order, I think we had better rise, unless he can assign us adequate reason for continuing to sit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am as anxious as my hon. friend to get home, but when a considerable portion of the evening is occupied in questions which, in our judgement, are unreasonable, we may be pardoned if we want to sit a little while and overtake some of the business. As to the question of order, I quite agree with my hon. friend that as long as we are to remain here we should have perfect order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is not the case at the present time, we are not being heard. If the Minister of Finance cannot control the House he should move that the committee rise and report progress, and adjourn the House. He does not seem to be able to control the House very well this evening. There has been a great deal of interruption and noise during the latter part of the evening, conversation has been going on in an ordinary voice all over the House. I do not think the Minister of Finance should insist on going on at this hour of the morning.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend saved me the trouble of moving that the committee rise, he has made the motion which is now before the Chair.

Motion that the committee rise, negatived.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman asked for a certain answer and I am ready to give it. I am happy to give all the information I can. But, the hon. member for Peel asked me another question which I will answer.

Mr. BLAIN. I would be very sorry to interfere with the general statement on the schedules which the hon. gentleman is making and the answer to my question may remain over.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was not giving any general statement of these schedules but I was giving details to the hon. member for Bothwell. In general terms the reasons for the increased expenditure are such as have already been explained, the very great number of increased questions asked and the consequently greater time required to be spent and the greater work to be done by the enumerators. The fact that there were large areas in this country in which a great number of the enumerators had to be employed, where in 1891 very few indeed were employed and in some cases none at all added to the expense. I refer to British Columbia and the North-west Territories, Manitoba and the northern parts of Ontario and Quebec. Another reason is the fact that in 1901 the general scale of living and the expense of work were much greater than in 1891. The result was that we had to pay the men more to do similar work and more of it. In addition to the fact that a great many more questions were asked, the enumerators had in consequence of that not only to ask more questions but they had to do more work in working up and preparing their schedules and sending them in. Some of these questions were more complicated and the result was that the enumerators were obliged to go back more frequently and ask questions than in 1891. In consequence of the more extensive nature of the schedules they have required greater attention and a larger number of clerks have been employed in the compilation which has been going on since the census has been taken. These circumstances have contributed to make the census very much more expensive. I frankly admit that it has been much more expensive than I hoped it would be.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. minister could give an explanation in regard to the county of Peel. It is very difficult to understand why it is that the census of 1901 in the county of Peel cost almost double the amount expended on the census of 1891, notwithstanding the fact that there were 1,700 less people in that county in 1901 than in 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cost of living affected the whole rate of pay throughout the country. Everything we required to get was more expensive in 1901 than in 1891. In 1901 the rate of pay for the enumerator of each living person was five cents per head instead of three cents per head in 1891, for each death five cents instead of three, for each farm, twenty-five instead of fifteen, and for each factory, thirty cents instead of twenty cents. This made an increase in the neighbourhood of fifty per cent, so that half of the increase to which the hon. gentleman alludes is accounted for through that alone. We found it necessary to allow horse-hire at the rate of $1.50 a day in the country parts. That cost a very considerable item and added very considerably to the expense.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister regard that as a sufficient explanation when he takes into consideration that there were so many less people in the county of Peel to enumerate in 1901? Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give us the names of the enumerators, the name of the commissioner, and the livery bill which the hon. gentleman has referred to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The census in the county of Peel cost $1,102 in 1891 and $1,961 in 1901.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total horse-hire?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will have it added up.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could give us the population while he is hunting up the other information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. 13,687 in 1901 and 15,466 in 1891. The horse-hire was $457.25.

Mr. BLAIN. Was every enumerator in the county paid horse-hire?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not in the towns.

Mr. BLAIN. Was an enumerator paid if he used his own horse?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We did not inquire.

Mr. BLAIN. Was horse-hire allowed for taking the census in the county of Peel in 1891?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot understand how it cost twice as much to take the census of Peel in 1891 as in 1901 when the population was less.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It did not cost twice as much. It was $1,102 in the one case, and $1,991.81 in the other.

Mr. BLAIN. That is a large increase.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is, but it is not double.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that a considerable number of the staff in Ottawa were dismissed. Can you give us a list of those who are retained ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot. I have not decided on whom I shall retain.

Mr. BLAIN. How many are proposed to be laid off ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say until I find out the exact state of the work. Last fall sixty or seventy were laid off and there are now 117 employed altogether. I have stated that fully 75 per cent of those would be laid off, but I will not bind myself to that proportion. They will be laid off on the 1st of July.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the intention of the minister to keep a permanent census staff ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not given any positive statement of that kind.

Mr. BLAIN. But that matter is under consideration ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is under consideration in a sense. I believe it would be a good thing, and if I could see my way clear to organize it properly, and if I get the assent of my colleagues, I think I shall propose it.

Mr. CLANCY. In the town of Brampton one enumerator was paid $4.50 horse-hire.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That might be to go to meet the inspector to receive instructions. Some divisions were partly in the town and partly in the country.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Peeker an enumerator in the town of Brampton got $4.50 horse-hire.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have these accounts certified by the commissioner of the county and if the commissioner certifies the account as proper, it is paid.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there an enumerator appointed for each subdivision as organized for municipal purposes ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No; for Dominion election purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand the minister to say that horse-hire was allowed to the enumerators in the country districts, and not in the towns and cities.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Generally, that is correct.

Mr. BLAIN. Then I would inform the hon. minister that it is not correct for Peel, because Mr. Peter was an enumerator for one polling subdivision in Brampton, and he was allowed for horse-hire.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was probably allowed to him to go to meet the commissioner to receive instructions.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the hon. minister to state in the early part of the discussion that the enumerators were called together and the commissioner gave them instructions in a general way. They were called together in the town of Brampton, and the commissioner gave the instructions there. Mr. Peter would not drive twelve miles from his residence to receive the instructions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman. I have not the account of Mr. Peter for horse-hire. I will be glad to give the explanation on concurrence.

Mr. CLANCY. Take the town of Bothwell, having a population of about 900. For that there were three enumerators, and I find that one received $1.50 and another $6 for horse-hire. Is the hon. gentleman able to tell what the horse-hire was for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it was probably for going to the commissioner for instructions. The enumerators were allowed travelling expenses for that purpose, and if they drove instead of going by train, they would be allowed for horse-hire.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman know that to be the case ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know this particular instance.

Mr. CLANCY. I will take the town of Wallaceburg. One Isaac Little was paid $60.10. The enumerators for Wallaceburg were paid, one $60, another $54, and the other $49. What was Isaac Little paid that $60 for ? He was not one of the enumerators ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the account. It is in the possession of the Auditor General.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman can get it, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It seems to me that the proper place for the discussion of the details of that account is in the Public Accounts Committee. It is impossible for the minister to have the details of every little account in the Auditor General's Report. I can get an item of that kind and lay it on the Table.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman seems to prefer to have it discussed here. That is a matter that needs explanation—what was Little employed for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know whether Mr. Little was an enumerator at Wallaceburg or in some part outside of Wallaceburg.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman ought to know.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not a list of all the enumerators in the country just now.

Mr. CLANCY. I am only asking about Wallaceburg at this moment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not able to supply the hon. gentleman with the information he requires, but will bring it on concurrence.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman expect that we will have the money voted without this information being given now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not possible to give it. If the hon. gentleman takes up item by item and requires information on every little detail, he cannot expect me to have it all at hand. If I were to allow this vote to stand until another night, we would have all this questioning into the most trifling details gone into over again.

Mr. BLAIN. I have been trying to get from the hon. minister some explanation for the increased expenditure in the county of Peel. He said that it was the policy of the department to allow livery hire in the rural districts, but not in the towns and villages. But taking up the Auditor General's Report, I find that in the town of Brampton three or four enumerators were allowed horse-hire, and coming to the village of Streetsville in the county of Peel, which is not part of any other municipality, the enumerator was allowed horse-hire. Thus, in four cases out of five, horse-hire was allowed in towns and villages against the policy of the hon. gentleman and in contradiction of the statement he has made to-night. If that be the case in one county, what must it be in other counties ? I would also require explanation of another strange item. The commissioner's allowance is $100, and he is allowed besides $136.91 for revising the returns.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The $136.91 is a per capita allowance to the commissioner for his work as census commissioner. He was allowed so much per head of the population. The $100 was to cover extra expenses.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the livery bill ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot give the exact explanation, but the bill of $6 was probably the livery hire for bringing the enumerator from Switzer to Brampton. Considering that the commissioner had to revise these bills and initial them, and that then they had to pass the accountant of my department and the Auditor General, I take it that they were reasonable bills. I cannot explain as to the three enumerators in Brampton, unless some of the people lived out of town and had property in town and the officers in Brampton had to take their trip to the country to get the information. Of course, that is only a conjecture.

Mr. BLAIN. I see that $13 is allowed for expenses for one enumerator and nothing for the others.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That item has a foot note 'instructing enumerators.' This gentleman, I believe, was a sort of superior enumerator, who was doing extra work in assisting the commissioner.

Mr. BLAIN. Does that mean that Mr. Bracken, the commissioner, did not understand the work, or does it mean that the commissioner was overworked and had not time to reach the different enumerators ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only say that this is for work done in assisting the commissioner, I do not think it necessary to infer that the commissioner was incompetent. I have to turn to this gentleman for information. But I suppose he required some assistance.

Mr. BLAIN. Then the hon. gentleman cannot give the details of this item of $13.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing further than the foot note in the Auditor General's Report 'instructing enumerators.'

Mr. BLAIN. Does this item appear in other counties generally ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not find it charged for other counties.

Mr. BLAIN. It seems to be a special case, and I think there should be some special explanation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As I have said, I have not the details of the bill, and cannot give the explanation.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Agriculture stated that the correction of instructions to enumerators involved only a trifling cost to the country, for the reason that the imperfect instructions did not reach the counties until the amended instructions were ready. Can the minister say whether Peel was one of those in which no expense was involved by this mistake ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that there was no delay in the county of Peel.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister can give some explanation with regard to the neighbouring county which is really a part of Peel, Cardwell. Why is there an increased cost in that county with a decreased population ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only give the same explanation as already given with regard to Peel. I think that also applies to Cardwell.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. minister tell whether there was horse-hire paid in Dresden ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, $1.50 a day for each enumerator. I take it for granted, though I do not know positively that this was to meet the commissioner and receive instructions.

Mr. CLANCY. Take the township of Cambden. The hon. gentleman will find that horse-hire is allowed to the enumerators as follows :—Mr. Forshie, $22.50; Mr. Sturges, $12; Mr. Shaw, $31.50; Mr. Fetherson, $22.50; and Mr. Law, $25. I know this part of the country and am acquainted with the enumerators and know where they reside. There is no reason in the nature of the country for the disparities shown here.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) knows the commissioner.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only say that the commissioner endorsed and recommended payment of these amounts, and, as he knows the locality, I take it, there must have been some justification for these charges.

Mr. CLANCY. But the commissioner may have been mistaken. The minister ought to be able to show what the number of days is in each case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The number of days would be : Mr. Forshie, 15 days ; Mr. Sturges, 8 days ; Mr. Shaw, 21 days; Mr. Fetherston, 17 days; and Mr. Law, 16⅔ days.

Mr. CLANCY. Why is one man allowed $31 and another only $12 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot explain that, I am sure. It is not possible to explain every detail of every bill. These bills are sworn to and certified by the commissioner, then they pass under the scrutiny of the accountant of the department; after that they go to the Auditor General and are scrutinized and passed by him.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the nature of the special allowances ?

Mr. BLAIN.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The special allowance here was for receiving instructions. They were allowed a certain time to go to the commissioner and receive instructions, and were allowed pay for those days.

Mr. CLANCY. But there are many cases where the special allowance is not charged at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The law says that the remuneration should not exceed more than $3 a day for approved service of eight hours. When the charge per head of the number of people they recorded came to more than $3 per day, they could not make a charge for receiving instructions, because the whole remuneration was not to exceed $3 per day.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice on page D—251 'claims, 70 days at $3.' What does that mean ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was an unorganized district where we had to deal with the enumerators on a different principle, away in the north part of the county of Pontiac. There we had to allow them so much per day without reference to the number of people that they enumerated, where the population is very scattered.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us a full explanation of the difference between organized and unorganized districts, and the instructions that were given to the different enumerators.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the unorganized districts where it would not be fair to pay them by the head because they often had to travel long distances, we paid them $3 per day and travelling allowances according to the vouchers supplied for their expenses. This man seems to have claimed seventy days, but he was not paid for seventy days because he only received $199.60.

Mr. BLAIN. Who checked the amount and struck off the sum that was deducted ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It may have been the commissioner in the county when he sent up the account, or it may have been the accountant here.

Mr. BLAIN. How were the absentees taken down in the census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The census was taken on the de jure system. When a person was not actually living in the place where he was taken, the question was asked whether he was going to return, and if the answer was that he was only away temporarily, his name was taken down. The limit of temporary absence which justified his being counted, was one year ; that is to say, if he was expected to be away more than one year he was not counted. That is the same as the limit of time in 1891. If his parents or friends answered that he intended to be away less than a year, then he was counted as being a resident.

Mr. BLAIN. If there was a family of four living in Ottawa and the enumerator found that three had been absent for nine months in Chicago working, they would be taken down as residents of Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, if it were stated by the parent or person giving information that they had not been absent more than a year and were considered as residents of Ottawa.

Mr. BLAIN. In that case the census would not be correct ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No de jure census is absolutely correct in that sense. Of course these people would have to say their absence was only temporary.

Mr. CLANCY. I see that in the town of Paris, county of Brant, Mr. Kent charges for horse-hire $10.50. Mr. Wilson charges precisely the same, while Mr. Hoey does not charge anything, but charges $3.50 for expenses. Mr. Shannon charges $10.50 for horse-hire, Mr. McCammon $9 and Mr. A. W. Rousell $10.50. There seems to be a general agreement fixing the charge at $10.50. There is uniformly $9 charged for instructions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They drew $9 each because the commissioner kept them three days giving instructions.

Mr. CLANCY. How does there come to be this uniformity in regard to horse-hire ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose the men had to pay about the same price to go over the same distance with their horses. If they went from Paris to Brantford, I presume the price would be the same for one as for the other.

Mr. CLANCY. We are not asking for the hon. gentleman's supposition. Why not produce the accounts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have explained that so often, I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman ought to give a better reason than that it is not convenient for him to do so. I will take the case here of Mr. Hoey. Mr. Hoey does not get anything for horse-hire. How did the others get it, while he does not get it ? Mr. Hoey gets $3.50 for expenses. What were the expenses in that case ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I explained a little while ago that if the charges amounted to more than $3 a day they could not be allowed. Mr. Hoey's charges may have amounted to more than $3 a day and consequently he could not be paid for horse-hire, or Mr. Hoey may possibly have driven with one of the other enumerators from Paris to Brantford and not have charged for it. I cannot tell the reason myself. The only way would be to ask Mr. Hoey why he did not charge for horse-hire.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman knows that their earnings must appertain to the recording, so that it did not arise in that way. I have just pointed out a case where one enumerator got $23, another $26, another $29, another $27, another $26 and another $38. I am presuming that the populations in that case were not the same in different polling subdivisions and therefore the differences would arise there. But, the other must have been for horse-hire actually used by each of them and the instructions must have been uniform. We have paid the enumerators $3 a day while getting their instructions. What were the instructions on that point ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A special allowance was made for the time spent in receiving instructions of $3 a day. Apparently nearly all of the enumerators in Brant county spent three days receiving instructions. One of them appears to have been absent part of the time and consequently he did not charge for three days.

Mr. CLANCY. What were the instructions given the recorder in regard to how they should be paid as to the days employed taking instructions and the days they were employed enumerating? When they were at the work of enumeration they were not to earn more than $3 a day. What instructions were given to the enumerators as to how they should be paid for their services ? The chief commissioner is sitting there and he could tell the hon. gentleman and the hon. gentleman could probably read the instructions to the committee. Was any alteration made in regard to the allowances made to the enumerators from the first intimation they had.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no alteration made after the first table of allowances.

Mr. CLANCY. There were complaints in the newspapers that the minister had misled them as to the amount of compensation. If a man went to a farmhouse and asked a number of questions it should not cost much more expense than if he asked a dozen questions. Many of these schedules are worthless if they are ever to be used. We have for the first time a record of divorces. That is rather a delicate question. Did the enumerator put that question to the minister himself ? Does he think that such a thing as that should be put on record ? Some of this is the most trashy stuff that ever went to the country. How many volumes will there be in this census and the number of pages ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The first volume has already been issued and the matter for the second volume is almost ready for the printer. If we put only the information in the second volume that was in the second volume of 1891 it would be ready now.

Mr. CLANCY. Will all these tables be published.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. CLANCY. When will the part containing information with regard to the industries be ready ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I expect it will be ready for the printers in a little over a month.

Mr. CLANCY. If I remember rightly, it was out in 1892. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why that has been so long delayed, so much longer than it was in 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is not correct in his statement. The third volume of the census of 1891, which contained the returns of manufactures, was issued on the 20th of February, 1895. I expect that the returns of the industries of Canada will be out in July, 1903, or about twenty months earlier than those of the census of 1891.

Mr. CLANCY. I spoke somewhat subject to correction. I heartily congratulate the hon. gentleman upon being right for once. How did he take the census, say, of the district of Alberta and the other outlying districts of the country—the Indians and so on?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The census of the Indians was generally taken by the officers of the Indian Department.

Mr. CLANCY. How is the population taken in Alaska and in the country around Hudson's Bay ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So far as I know, the population of Alaska was taken by the census commissioners of the United States. With regard to the districts around Hudson's Bay and the other unorganized territories, we sent some of our own commissioners for that purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How does our progress compare with that of the United States and the mother country in the compilation and publication of the census returns ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Our census is taken a year after that of the United States ; but independently of that, I think our census is not quite as far ahead as that of the United States in compilation. We have not so large a staff, even in proportion to the area of the country, as they have.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do they not use some mechanical devices for the purpose of tabulation ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, very largely. We discussed that point, and came to the conclusion, and it was the experience in 1891, that it would take so long to train people to do the work, and the machines are so very expensive, that it would involve more loss than gain to use them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have read descriptions of their work, which seems to be wonderful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is quite true. Some years ago, when I was in Washington, I visited the Census Bureau and saw the working of these machines, and Mr. Blue, the chief census commissioner, went down there to see what was best to be done. These machines have been of great value in expediting the work of the American census, but for a small work such as ours is in comparison with theirs, we made up our minds, for the reasons stated, that it would not be advisable to adopt these machines. I may say, however, that we use six adding machines. As a general rule, the permanent employees do more of the intellectual work in connection with the census than the work of compilation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is purely mechanical ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For a person who is an expert it is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are they very expensive ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. About $1,500 a machine.

Mr. HACKETT. I called the attention of the hon. minister two years ago to the fact that the cost of taking the census had been largely increased in the province of Prince Edward Island. I also called his attention to the fact that one Doyle, who was appointed enumerator, had sold out his job to another man named Broderick for $30, and Broderick was appointed in the place of Doyle. Did that $30 come out of Broderick's pocket, or was it paid by the department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no money paid to Doyle by the department. Broderick was appointed from here in Doyle's place on the recommendation of Sir Louis Davies.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The amount paid Broderick was twice that paid the enumerator in 1891, and one would judge therefore that the payment to Doyle by Broderick came indirectly from the department. It may be that the increases generally in the cost of taking the census was due to matters of that kind. Two years ago I brought the matter before the House, and the hon. minister said he would make an inquiry and give me the information I desired, but none has been forthcoming yet. I have seen both the men since. All that Doyle would say was that he had $30 in his pocket for doing very little work. In all the other districts increases have taken place, despite the fact that the population of the island was 5,000 souls less in 1901 than it was in 1891. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only repeat the explanation I have given already. A great many more questions were asked, and more time had to be spent by the enumerators. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, three questions were asked in 1901 for every question asked in 1891, in round figures. That took more time and the enumerators had to be paid more. Again, the whole scale of wages and of living is higher than in 1891, and people would not work at the same pay. Consequently we were compelled to make allowances for horse-hire and for the time spent in receiving instructions and returning schedules. These taken together make up the difference.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) I presume, has taken a fair census in the province of Prince Edward Island. He will notice that there has been a decrease in population there, and, in consequence, the province is losing one representative in this parliament. I would ask the hon. gentleman if the same system of taking the census was followed in the province of Quebec and in the province of Prince Edward Island. This is a very important question in connection with our representation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Exactly the same system was employed all over Canada.

Mr. HACKETT. Did not the hon. minister refer to the curés for information ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) mean ? I asked the same question of everybody in the province.

Mr. HACKETT. Did not a certain Mr. Coté issue a circular to the priests of the province of Quebec asking for a return with regard to the census taken by the priest in that year, and was not our census largely based on the returns made by the clergymen ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly not. The enumeration taken by the parish priests of the province of Quebec was obtained only after the census returns were made up and complete. It was obtained for the sake of comparison and information, but our schedules were not changed in any consequence of that information.

Mr. HACKETT. That is somewhat different from the statement we had two years ago, when we were told by the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself that this means of taking the census in Quebec had been resorted to because of the timidity of the people of the province with regard to census enumeration. When approached by the enumerator they imagined that it was a matter of additional taxation, and were afraid to answer the questions asked by the enumerators. In consequence of that, Mr. Coté, the assistant commissioner, issued a circular to each of the Roman Catholic priests of the province of Quebec asking them for a return of parties who had left the province in their respective parishes, not only those who had left temporarily but those who had left intending to remain away. So, parties who had left the parish within the year were enumerated as residents of the province. If that was the system adopted in the province of Quebec, it must have had the effect of increasing the unit of representation, and relatively depreciating the enumeration in the province of Prince Edward Island. I have not time at the present, it being a little early in the morning, to refer to 'Hansard,' of 1901, yet, if the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fisher) will take the trouble to read it, he will find that his leader made the statement I have just referred to. The Coté circular was sent not only to the parish priests of the province of Quebec, but it was sent to certain clergymen in Prince Edward Island in the districts where there was known to be a French population. The Rev. Dr. Chasson, of Palmer Road parish, where there is a large Acadian population, received a copy, and so did the Rev. Mr. Gallant, of Bloomfield, another gentleman at Rustico and Father Boudreault, at Egmont Bay. The Rev. Dr. Chasson was the only one to reply to the circular, and, as he said, he did not think it right that the priests should interfere in the census in any respect, but should leave it to the enumerators and the people. Now the taking of the census in Prince Edward Island in 1901 cost a hundred per cent more than the taking of the census in 1891. I find no fault with the census on the ground of correctness; it may have been correct. But it has resulted in showing a falling off of 5,000 people in the province of Prince Edward Island. While the schedules with regard to nationality, race, religion and other matters were strictly applied in the province of Prince Edward Island, yet, it would seem that a different system was applied in the province of Quebec, the pivotal province, upon which rests the representation from all the provinces of Canada. I wish the hon. gentleman to be definite and say whether his leader, the Prime Minister, was incorrect when, in 1901, he made the statement I have repeated to you. But if the Coté circular was distributed as the first minister stated and the enumeration of the people of the province of Quebec was based upon that circular, I say that a gross injustice has been done to the people of Prince Edward Island. The highest privilege of any people is the exercise of the franchise for the election of representatives to parliament, and that sacred right should not be tampered with. I would ask the minister to make it perfectly clear whether this right has been tampered with or whether the same system has applied to Prince Edward Island that was applied to Quebec. I believe that if the system had been the same, there would not have been shown a decrease of 5,000 in Prince Edward Island, with the resultant loss of one member in this House, but a large increase. I ask the hon. gentleman to make a clear statement because the people of Prince Edward Island are very much excited over the loss of one representative in this parliament.

It should be fully stated in this parliament whether the same system of counting the people has been applied to the province of Prince Edward Island as was applied to the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Absolutely the same system, the same regulations in every respect were carried out in every province. The circulars the hon. gentleman refers to, one of them was sent out for the purpose of asking the priests, not only in Quebec but wherever there was a French population, to explain to the people that they must give full and ample information to the enumerators. The other circular was sent out to make certain inquiries in regard to the number of people in each parish who were away to stay away, so that they would not be improperly counted. The people who were not coming back were not to be counted. It was desirable to check the work. But the replies to that circular were never put into the hands of the compilers here, and were only compared with the schedules by the superior officers, and the result was no change in the schedule returns.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if this circular was sent out to the clergymen of any other denomination in Canada at that time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. HACKETT. Then it was simply confined to the province of Quebec, and a few circular letters were sent to the parish priests in the parish of Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it was sent to others besides.

Mr. HACKETT. To which of the other provinces was the circular sent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To all the French districts all over Canada.

Mr. HACKETT. Sent exclusively then to the French districts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. HACKETT. There was some reason then for sending out that circular. He says it was sent out to receive information for the purpose of checking the work done by his sworn officials ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The first circular was sent out for the purpose of asking the parish priests to impress upon their people the necessity of answering freely. It is well known that among the French population of the country there was more or less fear with regard to the answers to the census enumerators, and this expedient was adopted to remove that fear. The second circular was sent out, as I have explained, because it was understood that a large number of French Canadians who had gone away to the United States, and we wished to check the numbers of those who had gone there to settle and not confuse them with those who had gone there temporarily.

Mr. HACKETT. So it was sent especially for the purpose of ascertaining the number of French Canadians who had left Canada in previous years and gone to the United States ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was the purpose.

Mr. HACKETT. Then why should the hon. gentleman endeavour to keep the run of the French Canadian people any more than the English speaking people of Canada ? I cannot see why he should incur this extra expense for the purpose of ascertaining the drift, the current, or the movements of the French people in the province of Quebec, when the same thing had not been done with regard to the English speaking people of the other provinces. I say there must be a deeper reason than that. The hon. gentleman appears not inclined to answer that question. It is a question that affects the sacred rights of the people of Prince Edward Island and their right of representation in this parliament, and I insist that the hon. gentleman answer it. When he adopted such a mode of counting the people of Quebec, the province that fixes the unit of representation in the other provinces, in justice and fair-play to the other provinces, the same means should have been taken to count the English speaking people of Canada.

In consequence of this, I believe that in Quebec, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, ascertaining the current of immigration from Canada to the United States, they counted thousands of people in Quebec who had left during the previous year that were not counted in the other provinces of Canada, and as a result of this unfair system of counting the people of Prince Edward Island are asked to submit to the loss of representatives in this parliament. I would like to have a definite reply from the hon. minister, if he found it necessary in order to have a fair count of the people to issue this circular, why he did not send a similar document to the clergymen of other denominations in order to ensure a fair count of the English speaking people.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The same circular in regard to the French population was sent all over the Dominion. The hon. gentleman has asked another question. There was not a single name added to the list of the population of Quebec as a result of the answers which came in reply to that circular.

Mr. BELL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he authorized the issue of the circular which was sent to the curés of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman asks me if I authorized it. I cannot say I gave any orders to have it issued.

Mr. BELL. When did the hon. minister learn of the purpose for which it was issued ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I knew about it, but did not see the circular before it was issued.

Mr. BELL. I will read what the hon. minister said in the House of Commons in 1901. Mr. Barker was speaking :

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is aware that Mr. Côté has issued another circular, one that is quite as improper, apparently, as the one issued in Ontario, in which he asks that returns be made direct to him as assistant commissioner of matters wholly outside his duty as commissioner ? Does the hon. minister know that Mr. Côté has asked to have returns made to him of French Canadians who do not live in this country at all, but who live in the United States ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will answer the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Barker's) question first. I am not aware of such a circular as the hon. gentleman indicates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend is now referring to the second circular. The answer I gave a few minutes ago was in regard to the first circular.

Mr. BELL. That cannot be possible. It is impossible. The hon. gentleman says that he knew of the circular issued to the curés before it was issued.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Pardon me. What I said a few minutes ago was——

Mr. BELL. What the hon. minister states now is that he knew of the circular before it was issued.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Which circular ?

Mr. BELL. The second circular.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not state so.

Mr. BELL. The hon. minister stated so a few minutes ago. Two years ago his recollection should have been much better when he stated that he did not know of the issue of such a circular. Now, he is in direct contradiction of himself. He says he did know. The first circular did not refer to the French population at all. The first circular that was brought to the attention of the hon. minister was brought to his notice by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). This was the circular brought to his notice in 1901, and it was issued apparently for the purpose of getting political information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have made no reference to that circular to-night.

Mr. BELL. During the discussion of the question of the circular issued to the French curés, the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) asked the question :

I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is aware that Mr. Côté has issued another circular, one that is quite as improper, apparently, as the one issued in Ontario, in which he asks that returns be made direct to him as assistant commissioner of matters wholly outside his duty as commissioner. Does the hon. minister know that Mr. Côté has asked to have returns made to him of French Canadians who do not live in this country at all, but who live in the United States ?

That is the French curés' circular.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What was my answer ?

Mr. BELL. The answer of the hon. minister was :

I will answer the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Barker's) question first. I am not aware of such a circular as the hon. gentleman indicates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Exactly.

Mr. BELL. Just a few moments ago he said that he was aware.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said I was not aware.

Mr. BELL. I understood the hon. minister to say he was aware.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said that in regard to the circular issued to the parish priests of Quebec asking them to impress upon their parishioners that they must give full information to the census enumerators which is another circular altogether. There were two circulars issued to the priests of Quebec, one before the enumeration asking them to get their parishioners to give full and complete returns, and another six months after the enumeration which the hon. gentleman has just referred to and in regard to which I answered Mr. Barker at that time.

Mr. BELL. I understand that there were at least three circulars issued by the Department of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were two circulars issued. I know nothing of any other circular issued by the department or any officer of the department.

Mr. BELL. Two circulars were issued to the French curés ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Has that gentleman a copy of these circulars here ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got them here. They were laid on the Table of this House when the question was up before.

Mr. BELL. It seems to me that the hon. minister should lay on the Table of this House a copy of the circulars, because it is quite clear that there have been circulars issued which are entirely outside of the usual understanding of what is the purpose and the work of the census commissioner.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They have been in possession of the House for more than a year.

Mr. BELL. What did the minister say as to the circular regarding political leanings.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No such circular was ever issued by my department.

Mr. BELL. When was the minister aware that such circular was issued ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I was informed of it later on.

Mr. BELL. What was done with that circular ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know.

Mr. BELL. Did the minister take any action in reference to that circular ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I heard of it I immediately gave instructions that such a circular had not been issued on my authority and that they must not pay attention to it.

Mr. BELL. Did the minister come into possession of copies of the circular?

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was read on the floor of parliament.

Mr. BELL. It was issued by some one in connection with the department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was not.

Mr. BELL. It was acted upon by certain enumerators and it evidently imposed on them. Did the minister take any steps to ascertain who they were who were guilty of what was practically a forgery.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My name was not forged to it.

Mr. BELL. Does the minister feel that he has done his whole duty in the matter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. If the minister holds such opinions I would not wonder if more of such circulars would be issued. How many schedules were issued in the census of 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Fifteen.

Mr. BELL. How many questions were included in the first schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman had been here during the sitting, he would have heard the answers to the questions he is now asking, and I am afraid I shall have to refer him to 'Hansard' if he asks any more questions about matters which have been discussed this afternoon. In the first schedule there were thirty-four questions.

Mr. BELL. I do not think there is any justification for the minister refusing to answer a question of a member because he has been absent from the House for a time. Have all these thirty-four questions been answered ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. How many questions were there in the second schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twenty-five.

Mr. BELL. Have all these been answered ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. How many questions in the third schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Fifteen.

Mr. BELL. What is the total number ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman can add up as correctly as I.

Mr. BELL. How many questions in the fourth schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Seventeen.

Mr. BELL. How many questions in schedule number five.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Thirty-seven.

Mr. BELL. To what do these questions refer to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To field products.

Mr. BELL. What field products ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. the field products usually grown in Canada.

Mr. BELL. I do not wish for a general answer by a detailed list.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have read those questions in detail to the House and will not do it again.

Mr. BELL. I am sorry for the county of Pictou. This is the second time the hon. minister refuses to answer a question. Might I ask the hon. minister at what date these questions will be completed by the officers in his department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The compilation will be completed about the middle of next month.

Mr. BELL. How many schedules in all were asked ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Fifteen.

Mr. BELL. Of these we learn that four have been compiled, and the hon. minister expects to have the compilation of all the schedules completed in the course of the year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said in the month of January next.

Mr. BELL. In seven months the hon. gentleman expects to complete the compilation of eleven schedules and it has taken his department twenty-four months to complete four, or an average of six months each. He now expects to complete the work of compiling eleven schedules in seven months.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman shows that he has not been following the debate for his statements are not in accord with what has been said.

Mr. BELL. I must admit that, to a certain extent, I have not been following the debate, because I was not aware of the rare intellectual treat the chamber was having. I understood from the hon. gentleman that there are fifteen schedules, I understood further that his department has completed four. The census was taken in April, 1901, and we are now at the end of June, 1903. It has, therefore, taken twenty-four months to compile the answers to four questions, and the hon. minister expects to complete that whole work of compiling the census in January, 1904. Now, from June, 1903, to January, 1904, is seven months. So, the hon. minister will find my estimate correct when I say that he expects to compile the answers to the eleven schedules in seven months, whereas it has taken him twenty-four months to compile the answers to four. If he impugns my accuracy, may I ask him on what ground ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman's statement as to four schedules is incorrect.

Mr. BELL. The hon. gentleman informed me that the fifth schedule is not completed. I inferred that four were completed. Perhaps that is not the impression that he intended to convey. Was I mistaken ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is not accurate.

Mr. BELL. We shall have the opportunity of referring to 'Hansard' in a few days to see what the hon. gentleman said.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman asked me a question whether the answers to these four schedules were completed, and now he is asking about a compilation that I know nothing about.

Mr. BELL. Then we may begin over again. Have the answers to the fifth schedule been compiled ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The compilation is not yet finished.

Mr. BELL. Have the answers with reference to the preceding four schedules been compiled ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In some cases they have and in some they have not.

Mr. BELL. Then it appears that I was crediting the minister with too much when I said that the answers to four schedules had been compiled. Will he tell me how many of the six hundred odd questions in the schedules have been completed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Schedule 1, schedule 2 and schedule 3 have been compiled. Schedules 10 and 11 are also finished. In the rest the compilation is under way. Schedules 4, 5, 6 and 7 are verging towards completion, and schedule 8 will be completed before the end of next month.

Mr. BELL. What is the number of the schedule referring to manufactures ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. 8.

Mr. BELL. How many questions were in that schedule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Sixty-seven.

Mr. BELL. There was a limitation with respect to manufacturing establishments in the census of 1901 as compared with that of 1891. Will the hon. minister state what it is ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 every room or shop in which one or two persons were employed was called a manufacturing establishment. In 1901 the rule was followed that five hands must be employed before an establishment could be considered a manufactory.

Mr. BELL. Can the hon. gentleman form any idea of the number of establishments that have been struck off the schedule by adopting the form of question he adopted for the census of 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. An establishment not having five working people in it is not taken as an establishment and could not be struck off. We have not reached any point in the compilation that will indicate a fair estimate of the difference brought about by this different mode of taking establishments.

Mr. BELL. How many questions were asked under schedule No. 6 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twenty-six.

Mr. BELL. The twenty-six classes into which the live stock of Canada is divided must include, I suppose, poultry ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Does it include the eggs of the farmers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Eggs are included in farm products.

Mr. BELL. Has a distinction been made between different breeds in this classification ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a distinction made in the different breeds in pure bred stock but not in grade animals.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. minister expect that this amount will complete the taking of the census and when will the second volume of the census be put before the public ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is expected that this amount will complete the compilation of the census and that the second volume will be issued before the end of next month.

Mr. BENNETT. The presence of four Cabinet Ministers in the Chamber this morning is the best proof that the Grand Trunk subsidy has been settled because there will apparently be no meeting of the Cabinet on this 13th day of June. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) who is not present in the Chamber now but who will be here in a few minutes, stated last night that we were going to have three sessions of the House per day soon and although the Minister of Finance contradicted that the Minister of Agriculture seems bound to have an all day and an all night sitting too.

I find by the Public Accounts that the census of 1871 cost about $400,000, the census of 1881 considerably under $500,000, and the census of 1891, not much over the half million mark. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture what the present census has cost up to date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The expenditure up to June 1, 1903, was $1,137,533.37.

Mr. BENNETT. When the people see these figures, and compare them with the cost of previous censuses, they will be rather staggered. What further sum will it take to complete the taking of this census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am asking for a vote of $35,000 for the ensuing year, and I suppose it will take about $8,000 for this month of June. They will make about $43,000 more.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand that when the amount is spent, it will complete the census in its entirety ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. I should think the people will be rather thankful that the census is at an end. I think the minister should explain why this census has cost so much. I am going to give some of the reasons. First and foremost, I think it was due to his bringing Mr. Blue here as an officer of this department. Not that I lay anything to Mr. Blue personally ; but he had been a government officer in the province of Ontario, that land where the grafters thrive, but where, thank God, their day seems to be nearing an end. Mr. Blue was brought down here, and what has been the result ? The published reports of the province of Ontario are printed by a private concern, on the ordinary terms on which business is done by the Ontario government, without tender ; and, of course, the greater number of reports published, the greater the profit to those party friends who publish the reports ; so any one can understand that they print any number of them. In every one of these reports we see the name of Mr. Blue, and when it was known what salary he was to have, one can imagine the feeling of envy that ran through the mind of every Ontario official. Then if the hon. minister will look at the names of those who are engaged as enumerators, more particularly in Ontario, he will find there his old friends, the Ontario government heelers. Take the riding of East Simcoe, where the cost of taking the census is simply enormous, when I look at the names of the grafters who got in their work there, I can congratulate him in getting off so safely. Are there any complaints of non-payment to the enumerators by the officers in charge ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of any.

Mr. BENNETT. I am glad that these sub-enumerators got their money paid to them at last. Politically, these sub-enumerators have done the government no good in East Simcoe because they complained that they could not get paid. In 1891 the cost of taking the census in East Simcoe was $5,473, and in 1901 it was $10,949. I find there were two enumerators appointed there at a total of $614, where in the previous census there was only one and the cost $386. How many ridings in the province of Ontario had government commissioners appointed in order that the government might reward its political heelers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of any who were appointed for any such reason.

Mr. BENNETT. Why was Mr. Duncan McNab allowed $13.50 for horse-hire at $1.50 a day for the town of Orillia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In some cases the enumerators charged horse-hire when they went to get their instructions. If that was not the reason, I cannot give any reason.

Mr. BENNETT. I can give the hon. Minister the real reason. Mr. McNab is a very warm political friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, now engaged in the Public Works Department in connection with a work going on in the riding. I notice that Mr. J. B. Henderson did not get any hore-hire. Yet he is a very important portion of the party machine. It will afford amusement to the people of East Simcoe to find that Mr. Henderson, in his innocence, did not put in a claim for horse-hire, while Mr. McNab sends in his bill for $13.50. What member of the hon. gentleman's staff directed to whom these allowances should be made for horse-hire ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were made on a well defined principle, and the commissioners for each locality had to certify the bills.

Mr. BENNETT. I am glad to have the hon. gentleman's statement. But what instructions were given by the commisssioners to the enumerators on this subject. I would like to have something in my hand by which to go to the electors of East Simcoe when I discuss this question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No instructions except that the commissioners were given latitude, and were to certify the account.

Mr. BENNETT. If you take these accounts all through you will find that wherever the political party hacks were at work they got all the allowances, whereas the man who was merely attending to the work of enumerating got little or nothing. Has the schedule been completed showing the return of crops ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The compilation has not been completed. We hope it will be completed about the middle of next month.

Mr. BENNETT. With regard to the schedule for manufacturers, the effect of the change the hon. minister has made has apparently been disastrous to the flour industry. Ten years ago there were a number of flour mills in practically every riding in Ontario. But it is a large flour mill that employs five men, so many flour mills have been left unenumerated. One comparing this census with that of 1891 would suppose that the number of flour mills in Ontario had greatly decreased. Can the hon. gentleman tell what will be the effect of the method of taking the census upon the showing of the flour mills of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The compilation is not yet completed.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the hon. minister will be able to give us some pertinent information next week when we go on with this item, because such an interesting item we cannot hope to dispose of at this forenoon session. I may say in passing the advantage is going to be taken of hon. gentlemen who are not present because the hon. leader of the House has not given notice that there would be a sitting to-day and consequently hon. gentlemen who are absent will not have an opportunity of taking part in this discussion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the suggestion is calculated to bring us all to serious reflection. There are two large items remaining on this page of the estimates, and I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that we should agree, if the committee are wililng, that we should reserve the remaining discussion of the the census item and take the other items remaining on the page—that is item No. 56. That will clear up that page of the estimates except the census.

Mr. CLANCY. That stands ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would have to stand, of course.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that would be a reasonable suggestion at this hour. Possibly it might have been reasonable at an earlier hour, but we will not say anything about that. The only stipulation I would like to make is that, if we pass the next item, and as there cannot be very much discussion now if we are going to have any breakfast, anything that would be open for discussion under that item shall be open for discussion either under the census item or some other convenient item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Item No. 52 allowed to stand.

For the branch of the Commissioner of Agriculture and dairying, including live stock, dairy, cold storage, extension of markets, poultry, seed and fruit divisions; employees' pay from this sum not to be subject to the Civil Service Act, $220,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Agriculture might just briefly explain the increase of $10,000 if it is convenient.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is due to some enlargement of the work in connection with what I may call the outside markets division in connection with the sale of our goods in the old country. This has been pretty successful but there seems to be an opportunity of increasing the market.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask what business will be taken up on Monday.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will take up the consideration of the Patent Act, The Diseases of Animals Act, perhaps the Criminal Code, the Bill concerning Dry Docks and the Bill Respecting the Good Shepherds. I do not anticipate that on any of these Bills there is likely to be very much debate, and if not we will have time to resume the consideration of the Railway Committee Bill. If we reach Supply we will continue with the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Better not start too late.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6.20 a.m.—Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 15, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the Vancouver and Coast-Kootenay Railway Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Bill (No. 169) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of James Sinclair McDougall.—Mr. Gallery.

Bill (No. 185) respecting the Canadian Steel Company.—Mr. German.

TORONTO AND HAMILTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the Order being called:

House in committee on Bill (No. 147) to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.—Mr. Campbell.

Mr. SPEAKER. This Order stands.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose it is at the request of the government that this Bill stands. Is it the purpose to refer it back to the committee for reconsideration?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). We have had a request from the mayor of Toronto and the mayor of Hamilton and some other gentlemen representing municipalities, and in the absence of the hon. member who has charge of the Bill, we feel it only proper and courteous to allow it to stand until he is aware that the request has been made.

Mr. CLARKE. Under the rules, when will this Bill come up again?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the hour for Private Bills on Wednesday evening after eight o'clock.

Order allowed to stand.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—DEMURRAGE.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. What are the regulations concerning the demurrage on cars loading and unloading at Intercolonial Railway stations?

2. What amount of demurrage has been collected at each station during six months of the present fiscal year, from July 1, 1902, to January 1, 1903?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The answers to these questions will be very voluminous, so that I shall have to ask the hon. member to move for a return.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BUILDINGS, &c., AT SUSSEX, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. Is it the intention of the Railway Department to erect in Sussex a roundhouse in place of the old wooden shed now doing duty in that respect?

2. Is it the intention of the Railway Department to place gates at the railway crossing in Main street, in the town of Sussex, N.B., in order to protect the travelling public from the accidents which are of frequent occurrence there ?

3. Have plans been prepared for a new railway station at Sussex, N.B. ? If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair).

1. No, it is not the intention to erect a roundhouse at Sussex. There is only one engine that stands there over night, and a suitable building to house this engine will be built during this summer.

2. No, it is not the intention to place gates at the railway crossing, Main street, Sussex. An electric alarm bell has been placed at this crossing and kept in good order, and has, it is believed, served its purpose very well. It does not impede the street traffic as gates would, and it gives good warning to the public. The department is not aware of accidents being of frequent occurrence at this crossing.

3. No, plans have not been prepared for a new railway station at Sussex, it not being considered that a new station is a necessity at present.

EMPLOYMENT OF ALBERT S. WHITE.

Mr. FOWLER—(by Mr. Lancaster)—asked:

1. Was Albert S. White, barrister, of Sussex, N.B., employed, at any time during the year 1901, or 1902, by the Railway Department ? If so, for what purpose or purposes ?

2. What duties, if so employed, did the said Albert S. White perform ; and why was it necessary to engage his services ?

3. How many days was he employed ; and at what rate per day ?

4. What were the several amounts paid to the said Albert S. White for services and expenses respectively ?

5. Between what dates was the said Albert S. White so employed as aforesaid ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair).

1. Yes, Hon. A. S. White, ex-Attorney General of New Brunswick, was engaged during a portion of the yeasr 1901 and 1902 drafting the Bill to consolidate the Railway Act and establish a railway commission.

3. Ninety-five days at $25 per diem.

4. Services, $2,375. Expenses, $441.19.

5. September 26th, 1901 to December 19th, 1901, and between January 24th and February 18th, 1902.

GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS AT OTTAWA.

Mr. HOLMES asked :

1. Is the government aware of the condition of affairs indicated by the following extract from the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the Martineau defalcation :—

'Although not strictly within the terms of the commission, the commissioners cannot refrain from bringing to the notice of the government the danger from fire to the records in the upper part of the Eastern Block, owing to the proximity of the steam-pipes to the woodwork in the corridor leading to the Indian Department. They think this calls for immediate attention. The charred condition of the floor touching the pipes shows that a conflagration is imminent, and measures should be taken to avert it. The lack of provision against fire also applies to the attic of the Langevin Block, where the records of the surveys under the control of the Department of the Interior are stored. These records are exceedingly valuable, as they represent the results of very large outlays of public money, and cannot be duplicated.'

2. Is it the intention to guard against such a contingency ?

3. Are the fire appliances in the various public buildings ever tested to see if they are in working order ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. Jas. Sutherland).

1. The steam heating pipes in attic of eastern block run in brick trenches covered by wooden traps which are lined with tin. At the place referred to the tin was stripped off the boards which were discoloured, but there is no danger as there is no authentic instance known of a steam-pipe setting fire to wood. In the attic of the Langevin block the floors are fireproof and the roof of iron—and in the attic and roof there are four hydrants connected with the electric fire pump and two connected with the city pressure.

2. The matter will receive the attention of the department.. The government contemplate the erection of a special building for the storage of records.

3. Yes. The electric pumps are examined and tested every three or four days and the hydrants and chemical fire extinguishers throughout the buildings are in charge of the Dominion police and are kept in order and tested regularly by the force.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 174) to amend the Customs' Act—The Minister of Customs.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 184) to amend the Patent Act.—The Minister of Agriculture.

On section 7, subsection a,

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I do not know whether the point which I brought up in the absence of the minister has been considered. The case is something like this. A gentleman invented a certain apparatus. One of his workmen who had assisted in its manufacture left his employ and made some of the machines, and they were in use while the inventor's application for his patent was before the department. I understand that under the law at present there is nothing to prevent the use of these machines, and the patentee cannot interfere.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This Bill makes no change in that respect, and I do not quite see how it would be possible for us to take the matter up. After the application is put in and until the patent issues, the patent is not valid and there is nothing to prevent the use of the article. If at the time of the application the machine was in use, the application would have to be rejected; but I do not know how we could protect a patentee in a case in which the article was manufactured and used while the application was pending.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I would like the minister to look into the case. I think it was before the department a month or six weeks ago.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The only cases that come before the department is where a workman who has also made a machine applies for the patent as well as the inventor. There is then a conflict between the two which has to be decided by reference to arbitration.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). But how will the department proceed to stop the other man from using the machine ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That would be a question for the law courts.

On section 9,

The validity of any extension heretofore granted or assumed to be granted under section 37 of the said Act, of the period of two years limited by that section, or by that section as heretofore amended, for the commencement of the construction or manufacture of a patented invention, or of the period of twelve months thereby limited for the importation of the patented invention, shall not be open to impeachment, because—

(a.) such extension was so granted or assumed to be granted by the deputy commissioner of patents, or, as acting deputy commissioner of patents, by a person performing the duties of deputy Minister of Agriculture under the provisions of the Civil Service Act in that behalf, instead of by the commissioner of patents ; or because

(b.) in the case of the invention to which such extension relates, there had been granted or assumed to be granted a previous extension or previous extensions of the period of two years or the period of twelve months, as the case may be, so limited.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I move that after the word 'impeachment,' in the thirtieth line, the following be added: 'Nor shall the patent of any invention in respect of which such extension has been granted be deemed to have elapsed or expired.'

Mr. CLARKE. Several of these artificial light patents have expired, will any of them be re-established by this Bill ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This Bill will not reinstate any patent whose term has expired. The only patents to be affected by this are those which had complied with the law, as interpreted by the department, but which interpretation was set aside by the Supreme Court in December last in the case of Power vs. Griffin. That court decided three main points ; first, that being ready to manufacture was not sufficient, as it had been held to be by the department, to fulfil the requirements of the manufacturing clause ; second, that the extension of time by the deputy or acting deputy was not valid and that only the minister could make that extension ; third, that not more than one extension could be given. Under this reading of the law, there is a considerable number of patents which have not fulfilled those requirements, although they had fulfilled the requirements as formerly held by that department. This Bill would reinstate the patents which had thus expired and lapsed. Besides the Bill goes into the point of the existence in Canada being dependent on the existence of the same patent in a foreign country, and relieves the patentees in this country from the necessity of renewing their patents in foreign countries. In consequence of the change in section 9, it will be necessary to make corresponding amendments in sections 10 and 14. I would therefore move that after the words 'be impeached' in section 10, the following words be added : 'Nor shall such patent be deemed to have lapsed or expired.' I also move that in the subsection 2 of section 10, after the word 'section' the following be inserted : 'Or which by reason of the provisions of this subsection is to be deemed not to have lapsed or expired.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These amendments I suppose are simply in line with what has been done in section 9 ? It is a little difficult to follow the effect of amendments made in this way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the insertion of these words is simply to carry out what has been done in section 9. Section 14 should also be amended by the addition of the following words after the word 'Act' : 'Or which, by reason of any such provision is to be deemed not to have lapsed or expired.' Then, there is an omission in the printing which makes it necessary to add, after the word 'sell' the words 'the same.' Then, I wish to add to section 14 :

And in case any person has contracted with the owner of the patent for the right to manufacture, use, or sell such patent in Canada, such contract, which shall be deemed to have remained in full force and effect, notwithstanding that the patent may have become void as aforesaid.

This will have the effect of validating the contracts. As we are reinstating the patents, it seems only fair that we should validate the contracts also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The object of this section is entirely different from this amendment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think not. The object of the section is to protect acquired rights, and the idea of this is that contracts in connection with the patent rights are rights and should remain in force.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the scope of section 14 is to provide that persons who have begun to manufacture while the patents were actually void may continue to manufacture notwithstanding the enactment of the Bill. The proposed amendment deals with rather the converse of that, namely that the revival of the patent shall be accompanied by the continuance of any contract between the owner of the patent and any third person. I understand the purpose, but it seems a little remote from the purpose of section 14. I would suggest that it would be a little more in conformity with the scope of the Act to amend some previous section or add a subsection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I see the point made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and think there is a good deal of force in what he says. In this matter I took the advice of the Department of Justice and they seemed to think that this clause would be sufficient. I would not object to inserting it before clause 14, or we could contrive a clause. Perhaps it would be better to leave it as it is here drawn by the law officers. I would move that this clause be added to section 14.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do the concluding words of section 14 as it stands at present, cover everything the minister intends :

Any person who has, between the time when such patent became void or when the ground for such impeachment arose, and the time of the passing of this Act, commenced to manufacture, use or sell in Canada the invention covered by such patent, may continue to manufacture, use or sell in as full and ample a measure as if this Act had not been passed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The expression 'invention' in the interpretation clause of the Patent Act is defined to mean 'any new and useful art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement in any art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter.' So the word 'invention' is intended to cover anything that is patentable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Have you a provision in this Act that it should be construed as one with the Patent Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is an amendment to the Patent Act, it is not a new Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not remember whether there is any provision in the Interpretation Act that amendments shall be always regarded and construed as one with the general Act. We want to make that definition apply to this Act.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Minister of Justice says that amendments to any Act come under the interpretation clauses of the Act.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like the Bill to stand a day or two for the third reading. Some suggestions have been made to me with regard to amendments which I hardly think are necessary, because I think they are already covered by the terms of the Bill. But I would like to communicate with the gentlemen who have made these suggestions and indicate to them what my own opinion is with regard to it, and ascertain whether they have anything further to suggest.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It might be well to have it reprinted now before reading it the third time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I can arrange that.

DRY DOCKS CONSTRUCTION—GOVERNMENT AID.

Bill (No. 178) respecting the encouragement of the construction of dry-docks, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The general features of this Bill were discussed at an earlier stage. There are a couple of new provisions necessary to carry out the arrangement which is contemplated. We have provided in the general clauses which we discussed in committee, for the increase of the amount of subsidy, and I stated that provision would be made for a tariff of fees in these dry docks, to be submitted to the government. If hon. gentlemen will give their attention to section 2 they will find we have inserted a clause providing that no tolls or rates should be levied except those which have the approval of the government. There is a further clause that the company should be obliged to submit a statement of its affairs, showing the exact amount of money which it has realized from the issue of the various classes of stocks, and all the aids it has received from public bodies. The object is that if we are to be called upon to judge as to the fairness of the rates, we must know what amount of actual cash has been invested in the enterprise, so that we may fix such tolls as may yield a fair return on the cash actually invested in the project. These are the only clauses which have been added to the Bill since the matter was discussed in committee.

On section 1,

Mr. BENNETT. Has the government any policy on the question as to the establishment of dry-docks? I see that there are, in this section, these words:

If any company or body corporate approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work.

Is it understood to be the policy of the government, that, if a body of gentlemen come forward and show that they have the financial ability after another body of gentlemen have been assisted, they shall be equally helped, or is it going to be laid down as the policy of the government that no second dock shall be instituted or helped by the government, because, upon the help it receives will depend the commencement and completion of the work in its entirety, without some fixed rule being laid down as to the number of miles that must intervene between the dock already assisted and the one proposed to be built?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no fixed rule as respects that point. I take it for granted that if a dock had been constructed in any locality and it was shown that it was not able to meet the demands of business, and another dock was proposed to be built, that would be a matter for consideration. As to the number of miles that should intervene, that point has never come before us and I think, as I suggested, that the matter will settle itself pretty well commercially. It is not likely that another body of men will desire to build another dock unless there is room for another dock in a commercial way.

Mr. BENNETT. Then are we to understand that no second dock will be assisted unless it has been shown that the dock that has been assisted has been inadequate for the requirements of business?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already told my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that there is no fixed rule or policy of the government at all. Each case will have to be dealt with on its merits as it arises.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the hon. minister to state that it is a condition precedent that it must first be shown that the government-assisted dock has been entirely unable to cope with the requirements of the trade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The conditions precedent are the conditions laid down in the statute. I cannot by any words of mine lay down conditions.

Mr. BENNETT. But you can lay down the line of policy which the government intend to pursue?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think this is a matter which calls for a more definite decision of policy than has already been laid down. I think the matter will settle itself commercially. I do not think there is any danger of a company establishing another dock where there is one in a locality which is able to do the business.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the hon. minister to say—of course 'Hansard' will show whether he made the statement or not—that the government will not entertain any proposals for the assistance of a new dry-dock until it has been shown that the established dry-dock, in a certain locality and assisted by the government, has been unable to cope with the business. After that it would be quite in order on the eve of a general election to appeal to Midland, Owen Sound and other towns with the promise that a government supporter's return will result in the establishment of a dry-dock, and I am quite confident that I will be able to show that the hon. Minister of Finance made the statement that this would be one of the conditions under which such a proposition would be entertained.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend can get so much comfort out of my remarks as that, I would be sorry to deny them, but I think he will find that they will not bear the interpretation that he puts upon them.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether the government will have any say as to the charges which shall be made for the use of this dry-dock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is proposed that the owners of the dock must charge according to a tariff which has been submitted to the government, because, when they are receiving this large amount of public aid we think they shall establish fair and reasonable rates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the government any report as to the probable cost of this work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not heard anything on the subject since the last discussion took place. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is not in his place and I do not know whether he has anything on the subject or not. However, we will be able to ascertain later.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the meaning of the words 'on the cost of the work?' Surely it does not refer to repairs. The old dock is entering into the construction of this dock at Collingwood. The section says:

The Governor in Council may authorize the payment . . . . of a subsidy not exceeding three per cent per annum on the cost of the work.

Then, there is a qualifying clause at the end which says:

The cost on which it shall be calculated shall not be greater than the value of the work as estimated by the said minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are not new words. These are words which have been in the Act for twenty years. The purpose I have no doubt is that while we may pay interest on the cost, we shall not pay a subsidy on an extravagant cost. They must submit an estimate and they must satisfy the minister that the cost is the bona fide cost, so that we shall only pay a subsidy in return for a bona fide expenditure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). While these words might have a certain interpretation if an absolutely new dock was being constructed the hon. Minister of Finance will, of course, recollect that in the resolution as passed and in this Bill as proposed the words include the completion of a dry-dock now in course of construction. In this dock at Collingwood, for example, a portion of a former dock constitutes an important part of the new dock. If you were building a completely new dock you could say what is to be the actual cost of the work. But, suppose you introduce into the question a portion of an old dock partly completed, such as there is at Collingwood, and which has not been built under the supervision of the Department of Public Works, a difficulty would be introduced, which you would have to consider.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that to say that the dock at Collingwood is an old dock repaired, is hardly to make a fair statement. The information we have is that the dock at Collingwood is practically an entirely new dock. The only excuse for saying anything about the old dock is that there was an old dock in former years. It was a small affair, and I understand all that remains of the old dock is a hole in the ground and that that hole is not big enough for the purposes of the new dock. I understand that there is nothing of the old dock there to-day so that properly speaking it is a new dock that is to be built at Collingwood.

Mr. LANCASTER. Might I suggest that in the 27th line of the section you insert the word 'new' before the word 'work?' If the hon. Minister of Finance means to pay this subsidy only on a new work instead of on a work partly old and partly new this will make it clearer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is certainly the intention, and for the present I see no objection to the proposed amendment. We might reserve the third reading of the Bill lest we find that this amendment contains something that we do not intend, but I see no reason why the hon. gentleman's amendment should not be accepted.

Mr. LANCASTER. A work having been completed might be useless for want of repairs, and it might be said that the work is worth more because of the repairs. It is a question whether you would pay on the total value as it was then or merely on the cost of putting it into shape.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I do not quite follow the hon. gentleman's argument, but I hardly think the word 'new' would properly express it because this paragraph is apparently contemplating new work and it would be a redundancy to put in the word 'new.' I think it would be safer to say that this would only be calculated on the alluding to what you think might be the expenditure on an existing work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Suppose you have a dry-dock that might be valued by the owners at $50,000 and you want to build a dock that will cost when completed $300,000—a new company pays $50,000 for the old dock although they might not get value for more than $15,000. If you insert the word 'new' it would prevent them getting any return on the money they had to pay for the old dock, and which would be an expenditure on their part just as much as if it were for a new work. I think we should pause before inserting that word.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is also the danger that the cost of the land which might be a very considerable item could not be taken into account if you inserted that word. I can assure my hon. friends that there is no intention of subsidizing any old broken down enterprise.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The dry-dock at Collingwood was assisted by the town to the extent of $50,000 and the town got possession of it and made an absolute present of it to this company. In such a case assistance should be given only to the new work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the corporation of a town gave them some aid, that would certainly enter into the valuation for which they would receive a subsidy, but they could not earn a tariff of tolls on it. We have provided that they must make returns on all aids received from corporations and they cannot earn any money on that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This company at Collingwood should have no claim on the government for the site or for any assistance that the town gave.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not like to answer that off-hand.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But they should not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman need not be concerned about Collingwood, because I made a statement at an earlier stage of this debate and I received a letter since from the president of the company, Mr. John Long, in which he says that my reference to conditions at Collingwood were correct. I may repeat what I then said. I stated that it was true that they began with the hope that they would utilize some of the walls of the existing dock, but they found it impossible to make any use whatever of them, and instead of getting any benefit they had to go the extra expense of removing the walls so that all that was left was the hole in the ground. So far as Collingwood is concerned, there was practically no value to the company in the dock which they attempted to enlarge, and ultimately had to abandon.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is not inconsistent with my statement that the company had to pay nothing for it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know anything as to how they acquired it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They are in possession of the work which the town gave them for the benefit of the town and the country in the hope of getting government assistance. This company has expended nothing except to remove the old works as the Postmaster General states.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Expended nothing on what ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On the dock; excepting the removal of a portion of it which could not be utilized.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are expending a much larger amount of money than the subsidy.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I know, but what I wish to guard against is the value of property being calculated before these new works are commenced.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether this three per cent bonus applies as well to a floating dock as to a dry-dock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The wording of the Act deals with dry-docks, and I think we have never had application for the construction of a floating dock. A case of that kind might have to be dealt with by special legislation. If there is a place where a floating dock is more suitable than a dry-dock, that might have to be considered.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is a large company in the city of Vancouver who contemplate the building of a floating dock, and I doubt if they would be likely to go into the enterprise unless they were assured of the three per cent bonus from the Dominion government. As a matter of fact a floating dock is much preferable to a dry-dock.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am inclined to think that a floating dock is a dry-dock, so that it would come under the operation of this dock. A dry-dock means a dock that is made dry so that you can repair a vessel, and I suppose a floating dock would answer the purpose of repairing vessels the same as a dry-dock. There would therefore be no difference in reality between a floating dock and a dock on land. The essence of the thing is that you should have a dock where you may repair ships, and whether afloat or ashore I think it would come under the spirit of the Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is not a dry-dock when you fill it with water so that vessels may be floated into it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Bermuda dry-dock was taken out from England.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand there is an engineer from the Public Works Department superintending the construction of the dock at Collingwood.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has been built under the general direction of the Department of Public Works, but whether they have a resident engineer there or not I would not like to answer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think the Postmaster General said on a previous occasion that the work was being done under the superintendence of an officer of the department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The plans have to be approved by the department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not necessary to have a resident engineer, but for their own satisfaction the department may have sent an engineer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As the minister has assented to the insertion of the word 'new,' I think it covers all objections.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid that the insertion of that word would make it too restrictive. For instance, you could not pay for the land in the case of the St. John dry-dock, and my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) does not mean that. I think the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) can safely accept the assurance of the Postmaster General, who is familiar with Collingwood, that it is a new dock, and that there is no question of repairing an old one.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The insertion of the word 'new' would certainly cover the cost of the land.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not sure that it would.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You might as well take our assurance as to ask us to take the assurance of the Postmaster General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The one is a matter of law and the other is a matter of fact. We are able to form an opinion on a matter of fact, but when it comes to a matter of law we have to refer it to our legal adviser.

Mr. LANCASTER. We are all agreed that there should be some improvement in the clause in the direction intended, and if the insertion of the word 'new,' may not suit, we may perhaps get something else.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Act in that respect is exactly as it has been for twenty years, and, as none of these difficulties have ever arisen, I think hon. gentlemen rather magnify them, especially after all the conversations we have had with reference to the Collingwood dock; and I am afraid that if we amend the Bill to meet that case, we might put an obstruction in the way of the erection of docks elsewhere.

Mr. LANCASTER. I had not in mind the Collingwood dock; but it struck me that as the object of the Act is no doubt to encourage the construction of works which will be useful for the purpose, we are not to pay upon anything except what has been brought into existence by the people who are looking for a subsidy. As the clause reads now, if there was some work of value done before the new work, it could be strongly argued that the whole work, after its completion, would be entitled to a subsidy, although perhaps only 25 per cent of the work might be required to make it a complete work. In such a case, I do not think over 25 per cent of the work ought to get the subsidy. I think there should be a qualifying word of some kind inserted in the section.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The object which my friend has in view is commendable, but I am afraid that the word inserted there might possibly defeat itself. Let us dispose of the Bill in committee, and we will look into it and see if any change is needed later on.

Mr. CLARKE. Did I understand the hon. Postmaster General to say that he had received a communication from the president of the Collingwood Dry-dock Company in which that gentleman said that the old work had no value, or that there was nothing of it there to-day except the hole?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said I had received a letter from Mr. John Long, the president of the Collingwood company, stating that he had read the debate in 'Hansard' and had read my statements in that debate, and that they were correct.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the minister added something else.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, nothing more than what I have said just now. When the matter was before the House on a former occasion, I stated that I had visited Collingwood and had seen the condition of the work, and I described the extent of the new work, which practically made the whole thing a new work.

Mr. CLARKE. Then there was nothing left of the old outfit?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was nothing left but the hole of the smaller dock.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Were the walls wood or concrete?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When I was there, there was only one wall partially built—the east wall of the new structure, and it was of stone. There was excavation going on in other directions.

Mr. CLARKE. The only part of the old dock to be taken into account is the hole?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is my information.

Mr. BENNETT. The dry-dock which formerly existed at Collingwood was not by any means an unimportant work. It was capable of accommodating the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers, which are over 300 feet in length. I myself have seen them in that dock. It was also stated in the debate the other day by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Thomson) that it was a very fine dock. It must be quite clear that when this company took the old dock as a present from the town of Collingwood, it was a dock of considerable value, and if the walls were of stone, this new company have a very valuable asset. I assume that the government do not propose to pay on the material taken from the old dock which enters into the construction of the new dock, and of which this company have been made a present?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Even if they did, it might not be such a monstrous thing as the hon. gentleman seems to suppose, if the dock as originally constructed received no subsidy. However, I do not think that is likely to arise in this case. These docks are sometimes given assistance from various quarters.

Mr. BENNETT. The town gave $50,000 of cash bonus to the company which failed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know that in the case of the Halifax dock the city gave a large sum, and yet the subsidy could be collected on the whole cost of the dock. I do not see anything wrong in that. It is by a combination of these various aids that people get the resources to build the docks. If the land for the Collingwood dock was a free gift from the town, it still formed a fair part of the cost of the dock. I do not think we should object to that.

Mr. BENNETT. The Department of Public Works should be able to supply all the information required by the committee. Although Mr. Coste has been supervising this work, and has visited Collingwood time and again in connection with it, we are without a single bit of information in regard to what has been done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That shows that the Department of Public Works are carefully looking after the work, and I do not think we should apologize for that.

Mr. CLARKE. But they are keeping the information religiously to themselves.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; if the hon. gentleman will specify the information he desires, I will bring it down on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). Was the government consulted before that work was undertaken?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). And has the government had anything to say in regard to the way in which it should be constructed? If so, it should be constructed of cement rather than stone. Cement is used all over the United States, and is very much more economical.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is an engineering question, on which I cannot give an opinion.

Mr. CLARKE. Before the Bill finally passes, we should have the size of the dock, the material to be used, and the reports of the engineers made from time to time with respect to the progress being made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall bring down information on all the points mentioned by my hon. friend from Toronto, (Mr. Clarke) and if any other point is specified, shall be happy to bring down all the information possible.

Mr. WILMOT. Is the site for St. John decided on yet?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am under the impression that there is an arrangement between the city of St. John and the promoters of the company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Have the plans submitted for the Collingwood dock been approved by the Governor General in Council?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The plans were originally prepared on a smaller scale than is now contemplated, but I am not sure whether plans on a large scale have been submitted or not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman surely has the dimensions of the dock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of the dock first proposed, but it will be made larger.

Mr. BENNETT. We should know whether the stone going into the construction of the dock is the same material as was used in the construction of the old dock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Whatever information we may have will be brought down. Under the wording of the Act we make a provision for a financial statement before we pay the first instalment of the subsidy, but as the company may receive other aid, it is desirable to have that statement submitted annually so that we may know how much bona fide investment there is. I propose to add after the word 'Act' on the second line of the new section six the following: and thereafter annually before the first of January.' The clause will then read as follows:

The company before receiving its first payment of subsidy under the authority of this Act and thereafter annually before the 1st of January shall file in the office of the Minister of Public Works a financial statement, verified to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, setting forth in detail the receipts and expenditures of the company, and also all gifts, grants, or aids to the company from any municipal or public body, the amounts received or to be received by the company on account of stocks, bonds, or debentures of the company, and particularly the amount of money derived from the issue of stock or loans to the company and actually expended in the construction of the dry-dock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is no provision as to the use of the docks by United States ships. In the case of Halifax, under the contract with the Imperial government, which gave also some aid, it was provided that Her Majesty's ships should have the first use.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They paid handsomely for it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We are paying somewhat too.

Mr. CLARKE. Our new Canadian navy should have the preference.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt that we will get the preference without putting it in.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is certainly worth considering. The navy have precedence in the Halifax graving dock and they do not pay the same rates as ordinary shipping.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot say positively but my impression is that the only thing they get is priority. It would be hardly fair to give the company a subsidy with the one hand and take it away with the other. If we use the dock, we should pay for it.

Mr. CLARKE. But should we not have priority?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are not likely to be so rushed with business that we need fear any difficulty on that score.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman should provide that the company shall not do as the old company did, utilize the dock for the purpose of constructing vessels in it. A dry-dock is intended for repairing ships but there was so little business done that they built one or more vessels in the dock. That was a detriment to the public, for the public could not get the use of the dock for repairs when it was being used for building ships.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no reason to believe that the Collingwood Dock Company would be influenced in this way. They will find it advantageous to themselves to have the dock ready for shipping. Their own interest, I should think, would protect the government against what the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The clause would do no harm.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The graving dock at Esquimalt is practically in the hands of the Imperial government at all times, that is, it is occupied by His Majesty's ships; but when it is not, of course, the merchant vessels can be attended to. I understand that the tolls charged by the Canadian government are ridiculously small, very much smaller, than those of any other dry-dock or graving-dock on the Pacific coast. It would be advisable for the government to recognize fully local conditions in fixing the tolls of any other dock. I suppose the Esquimalt graving-dock is run at a loss. But if a private company went into the construction of a dock, say at Vancouver, it would be hardly fair that they should be put upon the same scale of rates as the Esquimalt dock, which is not available at all times for the merchant ships.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The government should take power under this clause to take into consideration in the payment of subsidy as well as in the fixing of rates, any grants from municipal or other public bodies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The subsidy is fixed by the Act itself.

Mr. CLARKE. In all seriousness, if there is anything in the statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) recently, that the government intend to establish the nucleus of a Canadian navy, there should be right reserved in the Bill for priority for repairs of government vessels whenever there is necessity.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We already have some vessels for the protection of fisheries.

Mr. CLARKE. As the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) suggests, we already have vessels engaged in the fishery protection service, and we are given to understand that we are to have cruisers on the Atlantic and the Pacific, as well as training ships. This will be a pretty extensive outfit, and the vessels of that outfit should have precedence over merchant vessels when the government desire to have them overhauled or repaired. Moreover, we ought to have an explanation from the minister as to his policy on this particular phase of the government's policy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I fancy that in time of war we should not need an Act of parliament to give us priority in these matters, and, in time of peace, my idea would be to give precedence to the ships of peace rather than to the ships of war.

Mr. CLARKE. But the time to stop a leak is when the leak occurs. This question of the priority of government vessels should be given consideration. And, in the absence of the Minister of Militia and Defence and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I think it would be better to allow the Bill to stand until we can get their opinion as to the merits of the situation.

ACT RESPECTING INFECTIOUS OR CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AFFECTING ANIMALS.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 194) respecting infectious or contagious diseases affecting animals.—The Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). This Bill was passed in committee except section 12, which was reserved for consideration of suggestions made by the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour). The suggestion was that the compensation, where an animal was slaughtered not in accordance with the provisions of the Act should be the full value of the animal. Therefore, I have remodelled this clause, and I propose to substitute the following for subsection 2 of section 12 :

Whenever the animal slaughtered is affected with infectious or contagious disease, the compensation, if any, shall be one-third of the value of the animal before it became so infected, but shall not exceed, in case of a grade animal, twenty dollars, or, in the case of full bred animals, sixty dollars. Whenever the animal is not thus infected but has been in contact with or in dangerous proximity to diseased animals, the compensation, if any, shall be three-quarters of the value of the animal, but shall not exceed, in the case of grade animals, fifty dollars, or in the case of pure bred animals one hundred and fifty dollars. Provided that when it is clearly shown that the animal has been slaughtered on insufficient grounds and that the slaughter was not in accordance with or justifiable under this Act, the owner shall be entitled to compensation in the full value of the animal so slaughtered. In all cases, the value of the animal shall be determined by the minister or by some person appointed by him.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I move to reconsider section 156. I find that it would be as well to indicate especially the superior court and the county court by a subsection having reference to matters of expropriation. I think on further study the effect of the change in the interpretation clause will be such that it will not be advisable to make the changes that we have made, naming the county court in the sub-clauses (f) and (m) of the interpretation section. I will ask in a moment the committee to restore the clauses. At present I move to add as sub-clause 2 of section 156 the following :

In this section and in the following sections of this Act, wherever the same occur down to section 175 inclusive, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'court' shall mean a superior court of the province or district, or a county court of a county where the lands lie, and the expression 'judge' shall mean a judge of such superior court or county court ; and any proceedings commenced in one court having proper jurisdiction shall be contained therein.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose this will have the effect the minister intends, though I am not quite sure, unless I know how the interpretation clause is going to be changed. But instead of saying that 'any proceedings commenced in one court having proper jurisdiction shall be continued therein,' would it not be better to say 'continued to completion ?'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They could not go to any other court. I move :—

That section 2 be reconsidered.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved :

That subsections 'f' and 'm' of section 2 be restored to their original state by striking out the words in each 'or county court.'

Motion agreed to.

On section 160,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved :

To amend section 160 by striking out the words 'but each party shall be held sufficiently notified through the arbitrator appointed by him, or whose appointment he required ;' and also to add the letters 'Am.' to the end of the section.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not know why the hon. minister wants these words left out, because I think there ought to be some sort of provision for notice to be received in these matters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This notice only refers to the meeting of the arbitrators for making up their award after they have heard the parties.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have to rely on those particular words sometimes in order to fix the time for appealing. There will be appeals under this Act. The parties must have notice of the award before the time begins to run during which an appeal can be made. A prudent attorney or solicitor will give notice himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What would you suggest to conserve your rights ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The section says :

That no such award shall be made, nor any official act be done, by such majority, except at a meeting held at a time and place of which the other arbitrator has had at least two clear days notice, or to which some meeting at which the third arbitrator was present had been adjourned ; and no notice to either of the parties shall be necessary.

Sometimes one of the arbitrators, for some reason best known to himself, refuses to agree with the other two as to some detail in the case. The arbitrators might want to view the premises and one of the arbitrators might get stubborn and he will not agree to do anything. These very words that the hon. minister proposes to strike out have always saved the situation. If there is anything done behind the back of one of the parties he will set aside the whole award and the whole of the expense will have been wasted and the trouble gone to for nothing. These words that the hon. minister proposes to strike out have averted that calamity which might otherwise arise.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What about the words :

And no notice to either of the parties shall be necessary ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I think they ought to be inserted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why ?

Mr. LANCASTER. No express notice is necessary, but if your arbitrator has notice it is sufficient; that is the way the lawyers have construed it. If you leave the words that you are striking out, the section will be construed as it has been heretofore done that the arbitrator is the only man who need know. If you leave these words out you will leave it baldly that no notice to either of the parties shall be necessary. I think there ought to be notice, but I agree that the casual notice that the arbitrator receives ought to be sufficient.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess I do not see the difficulty that the hon. gentleman has pointed out. This clause has reference entirely to the action of the arbitrators in making up their award after they have heard the parties. If it does, and the meeting of the arbitrators was held, the section provides that the arbitrators must get notice, and when they get notice then no other notice will be required because each arbitrator will be taken to have notified his principal. There is no arbitrator to which this particular clause would be applicable. I do not see the applicability in any sense in the language which we are proposing to strike out.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the minister argue that it is because each party receives notice from the arbitrator that it is not necessary ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no notice necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. But ought there not be ? The arbitrators ought not to do anything that the parties to the arbitration do not know anything about.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The preliminary business and the taking of evidence has been finished, and the arbitrators are left to dispose of the matter. They may meet but they shall not make any award except at a meeting of which they have had notice. The parties have nothing to do with the making up of the award, and so they have passed the stage at which the parties ought to be present.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is I suppose an old principle of the common law that the parties being principals they are presumed to be invited to the proceedings of the arbitrators. I think that should be preserved.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does this section mean that as a sole arbitrator he could proceed without giving the slightest notice to the parties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only to make up his award. I move that the following words be struck out : 'And no notice to either of the parties shall be necessary, but each party shall be held sufficiently notified through the arbitator appointed by him, or whose appointment he required.'

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 169, subsection 2—appeal from award.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We left a blank for the amount subject to appeal. In the old Act it stood at anything over $400. The hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) proposed that the blank should be filled up by $1,000. I have considered that suggestion, and it seems to me that $1,000 would be a very large sum. I think it would be making a very material and radical departure from the existing law. The proportion of expropriations which exceed in value $500 is very inconsiderable. If we add fifty per cent to the present amount, and make it $600, I think we would be making a very careful and prudent departure from the existing law. In cases where the value exceeded that amount which would be very rare, the property-owner would be just as likely to complain of the award as the company.

Mr. LANCASTER. I still think that $1,000 is not too high. I should think that the appeals should be restricted if possible to questions where some principle is at stake, as for instance whatever a party is entitled or not to a certain kind of damage. That question of principle would be more likely to arise in cases where the amount was large. Where it is but a mere question of estimating the amount of actual damages, it seems to me that the arbitrators, who are on the spot and hear the evidence, are better able to come to a fair decision than would be the one judge who has not examined the locality or heard the witnesses. But there are questions where it is not so much a calculation of the amount of damages suffered as a question whether the damages are of such a character that they should be entertained at all. It is for that reason that I would ask the amount to be fixed at $1,000. It is a principle which is at issue, and the question of principle is more likely to arise where the amount exceeds $1,000 than where it is less.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It seems to me that the question of principle may be raised where the damages are small as where they are large. You are just as likely to have a question of principle at stake where the damages are $400 as where they are double that. I think that we would do well to make the amount $600, and I move that the blank be filled with the sum of $600.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 176, subsection 6,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that this subsection be struck out and the following be substituted:

Upon compliance with this section all provisions except section 123 and 124 of this Act shall be applicable to the compensation for the lands to be taken for such branch line.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose the hon. minister has considered the phraseology of this amendment and is satisfied that it will cover all that is desired. I am a little nervous myself about its covering all the proceedings it is intended to cover.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It makes sections 123 and 124 inapplicable to branch lines.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is all right; but, is the minister sure that the phraseology is sufficient? Would it not be better to say from section so and so to section so and so inclusive?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) in mind?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not say that this does not cover the point, but I am not sure that it does.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The moment a branch line becomes a part of the railway it is subject to the provisions of the Act. We wish to provide for these branch lines, and also to provide for making compensation.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would prefer to say 'and to all the proceedings applicable to, necessary for or arising out of compensation.' I do not say it is necessary, but I think it would be preferable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved to strike out subsection 6 and to insert the following:

On compliance with this section, all the provisions excepting sections 123 and 124 of this Act, shall apply to the company and to the lands to be taken for such branch lines.

Amendment agreed to.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to introduce a new section dealing with a new matter before we take up section 177. I beg to move the following section be inserted:

Where the owner of any industry established, or intended to be established, within six miles of the railway, is desirous of obtaining railway facilities in connection therewith, but cannot agree with the company as to the construction and operation of a spur or branch line from the railway thereto, the board may, on the application of such owner, and upon being satisfied of the necessity for such spur or branch line in the interests of trade, order the company to construct, maintain and operate such branch line or spur, and may direct such owner to deposit in some chartered bank such sum or sums as may by the board be deemed sufficient, or may by it be found to be necessary to defray all expenses of constructing and completing the spur or branch line in good working order, including the cost of the right of way, incidental expenses and damages, and the amount so deposited shall, from time to time, be paid to the company upon the owner of the board, as the work progresses.

(2) The aggregate amount so paid by the owner in the construction and completion of the said spur or branch line shall be repaid or refunded to the owner by the company by way of rebate, to be determined and fixed by the board, out of, or in proportion to the tolls charged by the company in respect of the carriage of traffic for the owner over the said spur or branch line, and until so repaid or refunded, the owner shall have a special lien thereof, upon such branch line, to be reimbursed by rebate as aforesaid.

(3) Upon repayment by the company to such owner of all payments made by the owner upon such construction, the said spur or branch line, right of way, and equipment, shall be and become the absolute property of the company free from any such lien.

(4) The operation and maintenance of the said spur or branch line, by the company, shall be subject to and in accordance with such order as the board may make with respect thereto, having due regard to the requirements of the traffic thereon, and to the safety of the public and of the employees of the company.

(5) All the provisions of this Act respecting the construction of spur or branch lines shall apply to any spur or branch line constructed under this section.

I may say that while not constituting any part of the existing law this is at present the practice and usage amongst railways.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The whole cost of the construction is placed upon the owner of the factory or the person who will benefit by the line?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, he has to put up a deposit.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was not able to quite follow the last subsection, but, as I understand, it provides that the company after obtaining the use of the money shall return it to the owner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If a person wants a spur line built in to his factory and the company are willing to build it they are only willing to build it upon having the owner put up a sufficient deposit to enable them to pay for such construction and to equip and furnish the line. That is the usage at present. Then, after they have built it, they are entitled, not to exact any direct payment of tolls for shunting over it or freights carried over it, but such amount as they are entitled to charge in respect thereto will be repaid to the person or company putting up the deposit until a sufficient amount has been repaid to recoup the person or company for the original outlay. The railway company then will become the complete and absolute owners of the spur line and they continue to operate it as if it had been constructed by them without being subject to any such conditions. It is very necessary to have something of this kind in the Act and these clauses have been very carefully compared. We have dealt with conditions by which a company that have a spur line to a particular factory are unwilling to build a spur line to another factory. We want to have power to compel them to treat all fairly.

Mr. LANCASTER. What number will that be ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will be No. 176, because there are one or two other sections which will have to be struck out.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It will come under the heading of the construction of branch lines ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

On section 177,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved :

That section 177, subsection 2, be amended by adding the following : And may determine the amount of damage or compensation, if any, to be paid for any property or land taken or injuriously affected by reason of the construction of such tracts.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not interfering with the general principle of the Bill as to how compensation is to be ascertained ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are dealing with the case of where one railway wants a portion of the property of another, or where one wants a crossing over another line. This is now determined by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council if the parties do not agree.

On section 184,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amendments proposed in this clause will make it read : The railway may be carried along or across the existing highway upon leave having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter provided; then the remainder of the clause is the same as in the old law.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it proposed to allow a railway to be constructed along or across the public highway of a city or a town without the permission of the municipality ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They must now get the leave of the Railway Committee, and under this Act they will have to get the leave of the board.

Mr. CLARKE. But the municipality has no power ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The municipality will be notified. No order of the board would be valid against any municipality unless it had received notice.

Mr. LANCASTER. It seems to me that some words should be inserted here providing for the consent of the municipality being first obtained. I question very much whether people, relying on this Act, might not get into serious difficulty if a municipality denied the right of the board under all circumstances to allow a railway to run on a highway in a city or town or incorporated village, or in fact any organized municipality. There might be some circumstances in which that would be absolutely necessary. I know the argument that is used, that when you charter a railway to go from one point to another point, and it is necessary to the purposes of the charter that the railway should pass over highways, the Dominion parliament has a prima facie right over the highways to that extent. But that is so only where it is absolutely necessary. There might be a hundred other ways of getting from the one point to the other point. I think we should be passing dangerous and unsafe legislation in providing that if the board saw fit, it could compel the municipality to let a railway be constructed on a highway. If the railway company could carry out the object of its charter by expropriating land beside the highway, no matter at what cost, even if it should be necessary to tear down buildings, to do so, I do not think this parliament can give it power over the public highways, and I do not think we ought to authorize any board of commissioners to do anything that it seems to me we have not the power to do ourselves. The prima facie power over the highways is vested in the local legislature, and through it is given to the municipalities, and under the British North America Act this parliament cannot use a highway wantonly. As we have power to charter a railway, we have power to authorize it to go through everything that is necessary for the purposes of the undertaking, but only when it is absolutely necessary. If it is not necessary, I doubt the power of this parliament to pass that section; I think it would be ultra vires. I do not think we ought to undertake to give this board the power to let a railway run upon or across a public highway without the consent of the municipality. If the board went on and undertook to compel the municipality to let the railway run on its highway, and if the municipality fought against the order of the board, I am of opinion that the clause would be held to be ultra vires, and I do not think we should pass it.

Mr. CLARKE. I presume that all the works which are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada will be works over which the commissioners to be appointed under this Bill will have jurisdiction ? Session after session we are declaring enterprises to be for the general advantage of Canada, which are practically one-horse tramways; and if this section remains as it is, these commissioners will have the power to compel municipalities to admit such lines, whether they desire to do so or not. Surely our great municipalities, like Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton and others, have some rights that ought to be taken into consideration; and if they set their faces against lines coming in which they do not want, we should not give the commissioners power to compel them to give entrance to such lines. In the case of undertakings connecting one province with another, I can understand that no municipality should have the right to prevent their going through; but in the case of purely local enterprises, I think that the municipalities should have the right of compelling such enterprises to first obtain their consent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that those gentlemen who express the decided opinion that this law is ultra vires the Parliament of Canada will find it somewhat difficult to establish their proposition. The law has been on the statute-book ever since the parliament of Canada was organized, and I think, a similar provision was contained in the Railway Act of the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada; and I have not yet heard—and I think it would be difficult to show—that in any single instance it was ever contended before any court that the parliament of Canada has not the power to legislate in these terms. The matter suggested by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is worthy of consideration, but he must bear in mind that there must be some kind of authority to determine whether or not any public highway may be used by a railway. You cannot leave it in the hands of a municipality, to definitely determine that principle. When the parliament of Canada gives a charter to a corporation, under which the corporation has the right to go through a town, you cannot leave it to the municipality to say whether the charter power shall be exercised or not. You must leave it to some independent tribunal. Otherwise the municipal authorities might refuse to allow this power to be exercised, greatly to the public disadvantage. They might hold up a corporation and impose unreasonable exactions, and you would have no authority to pronounce upon the fairness or justice of the municipal demands. It has always been admitted by the parliament of Canada down to the present moment that such a power should reside in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. In all its decisions, the tendency of the Railway Committee has been to yield to the wishes of the municipal corporations. I know of no instance in which a different course has been pursued, and the result has been that, with this power in the hands of an independent tribunal, the municipal authorities have always been reasonable and willing to allow a thing to be done where it was unavoidable and where it would be for the general convenience. It is necessary often for the convenience of the public that railway stations be located in the centre of a city so as to be easily accessible for business and other purposes. There is not likely to be any serious controversy under this Bill any more than under the law as it exists, and therefore I cannot see that it would be well to repeal the law or change it materially. Experience has shown that no danger has arisen and no public injury has been done, or inconvenience suffered, and we may infer that the experience of the last forty years is likely to continue.

Mr. CLARKE. There is a good deal of force in the argument of the hon. minister as regards the experience of municipalities, but a new condition of things has arisen during the past two or three years. Applications are made every session to this parliament for the incorporation of companies declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, but which are purely provincial. The introduction of electricity has made a marked difference in the situation. Enterprises are being promoted to connect city with city, and these enterprises, if sanctioned by the parliament of Canada, and declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, will come under the authority of this commission. They are not, in the strict sense of the term, works for the general advantage of Canada, but simply for the benefit of some small section of one of the provinces. Regulations have been passed by the legislatures of some of the provinces dealing with such matters, and I think that the direction and control of such purely provincial enterprises should be left with the provinces and not be taken by the Dominion. In the case of purely provincial lines, the right of a municipality to prevent any such line coming into it, without its consent, should be respected. The hon. minister has declared what is well known, that the municipalities have been reasonable in the past and have obtained justice from the Privy Council. There is no reason to assume that they will be otherwise in the future or demand unreasonable conditions from any enterprise within municipal bounds. But by the clause as amended——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not different from the present law.

Mr. CLARKE. Now, a different condition of things has arisen——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not due to this amendment.

Mr. CLARKE. No, it is due to the application of electricity to railways and the granting of charters by this parliament to enterprises which it declares to be for the general benefit of Canada, but which are purely local in their character. And this power to give a railway company the right to run along a highway should not be exercised unless the enterprise is inter-provincial in its character.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The argument which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has addressed to the committee is inapplicable to the present Bill, but it would be applicable if the measure before the committee were to incorporate an electric tramway and declare it a work for the general benefit of Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. I asked the hon. minister if works and enterprises declared to be for the general advantage of Canada came under the purview of this commission, and he said they did. I am drawing his attention to the fact that we in this parliament are giving charters almost every day to railway companies that only intend to join one municipality with another, and declaring them to be works for the general advantage of Canada. In view of this and of the new conditions created by the changes in electric traction, I ask the hon. minister if he does not think that the municipalities ought to have their rights reserved to them? The Railway Committee of the Privy Council, as I understand it, has hitherto dealt with steam railways only. But a new order of things is being created because of the legislation sought to be obtained from this parliament. If this clause is permitted to go as the hon. minister has amended it, whatever rights the municipalities enjoy to keep out lines of electric cars that they do not wish to have running along their highways, will be taken away. I think that is a serious matter that I am drawing the hon. minister's attention to, and the attention of the committee at large, to the subject, in the hope that something will be done to afford protection to the municipalities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And I am drawing the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Clarke) attention to the fact that we are not discussing and cannot be supposed to discuss under this Bill, conditions which are special and exceptional such as the hon. gentleman refers to. It is open to the hon. gentleman if he desires, to annex a condition to the granting of every charter of an electric railway, whether it is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada or not—or to ask parliament to annex it—that these rights shall not be exercised through any city or town without the consent of the municipality. They would then be under the necessity of going to the municipality for any such power. But how does the hon. gentleman propose to amend this section? He says, that as I have amended it, it causes a difficulty. He is in error in that respect. If he were a lawyer, he would know that the verbal changes made in this clause from the words of the existing law do not create a new condition such as he says—they do not alter the tenor or spirit of the law at all. The old section says that so and so shall not be done unless so and so, and this says that it may be done if so and so. There is no difference, as a matter of fact, as any lawyer would say if he were to express his opinion on it.

Mr. CLARKE. When this parliament declares a work to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, it gives to the company carrying out that work certain powers. This is the time to make an amendment to the law, because the changes in regard to electricity as a motive power create a new order of things for which the law should provide.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What amendment would the hon. gentleman propose?

Mr. CLARKE. If I had the legal ability of the hon. minister—he has been good enough to remind me that I am not a lawyer—I could draft a clause. And if he will allow this section to stand I will see about a clause being drafted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has started a legal question, which he does not understand, I am sorry to say, and if he cannot propose an amendment——

Mr. CLARKE. I will be glad to submit an amendment if the hon. gentleman will allow the clause to stand.

Mr. WADE. This is a provision of great importance, and I think that any tampering with it might lead to great misfortune.

Mr. CLARKE. It is tampered with now.

Mr. WADE. As has been stated by the hon. minister the clause as now proposed is exactly the same in effect as the old clause. It does seem to me that it should be our object to retain every section of the old Act unless some good reason is advanced for changing it. No good reason could be given for changing this clause. If the amendment were passed which is suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke), I can see how small towns and municipalities might be put in a position where they could tie up great railway enterprises. Suppose a railway runs for five hundred miles, then in the course of the construction it comes to a village or small municipality which says. 'We will not permit you to cross our street.' And that street might be the only place where it could cross. Under the present law, before they can run along a street or cross a street they must get the sanction of the board. It seems to me that this is a sufficient safeguard. We are putting large powers in the hands of that board, necessarily, and we must assume that they will exercise those powers wisely as each case arises. I would therefore urge that there should be no change in this section.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The proposition which my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) puts, as I understand it is this: Suppose a line runs from some town to the suburbs of a city and there connects with the city system of electric tramways, they would then have the right to run over the streets of the city. That, I take to be my hon. friend's contention. But as I understand the law, they could not do anything of the kind until they had received the sanction of the commission and of the civic authorities.

Mr. WADE. There is more than that in it. Under the general provisions of the law, an electric road must have the authority of the municipality to put up its poles.

Mr. LANCASTER. Take the case of one of these roads spoken of by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), it receives a charter and make a bargain with the municipality as to what streets it may run on. I am not talking now about crossing streets. This is even more dangerous; they can run along the street according to the Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have they any different power from what they have had for forty years?

Mr. LANCASTER. The danger is greater because, as my hon. friend has stated, the conditions are changed. When this law was passed there were no electric railways, and railways did not run on one street where they run on a hundred to-day. I have no great regard for a law merely because it has been for many years in force, if it is not a law that applies to the conditions that actually exist. Here, let us say, is a concern with a charter from the Dominion parliament, and with the power under certain conditions, not merely to run across the street but to run along it, to use the highway for its right of way. Now, let me point out to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) that, even though it is arguable that this section as amended means the same thing as the old section, for some strange reason the phraseology is changed and changed in favour of the very view that my hon. friend from West Toronto and I are opposing. Now the section under the old Act starts out:

> The railway shall not be carried along an existing highway, but shall merely cross the same in the line of the railway.

Prima facie it shall not be carried along the highway but it shall cross it. Now how did they draw this section? This section makes no distinction between crossing and going along. The draughtsmen of the old section, when they did not have trouble with numerous electric roads wanting to cross highways, even then I saw a great distinction between a railway running across it. The legislature who passed that Act said:

> Shall not be carried along an existing highway but shall merely cross the same in the line of the railway, unless leave therefor has been obtained from the Railway Committee, and no obstruction of such highway with the works shall be made without turning the highway so as to leave an open and good passage for carriages and on completion of the works, replacing the highway; and every company which violates the provisions of this section shall incur a penalty of not less than $40.

I do not find that penalty carried out in the Bill which is now before us. Now, taking the section before us, the railway may be carried along or across an existing highway. As the minister drew this Bill which is before us, and which until a few minutes ago we supposed was to become law, it was not that way, it was that the railway shall not be carried along or upon. But for some reason, since this Act was printed, we are surprised to-night to find that he is going to amend and puts the presumption the other way, the railway may be carried upon or along upon leave therefor obtained from the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only difference is between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then why did the minister make it tweedledee when he had it tweedledum? Why did he draw this section a second time and surprise the House with a new section, if it is so unimportant? I think the section is different. If there are decisions and judicial rules that have operated before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council under that old section, I can well understand where cases would arise where the same rule would not apply under this section. Prima facie, under the other section the railway could not be carried along or upon the highway. With all due deference to the minister's saying that there is no sense in contending this is ultra vires, I am still of the opinion that it is. The British North America Act has given the fullest power over highways for all general purposes to the municipalities through the provincial legislatures. As I have already said, I admit that in carrying out a work that the Dominion parliament has power to carry out, if it is necessary in order to carry a railway from one place to another to cross a highway, then parliament would have power to force its way through. But can there be a case where the Dominion parliament can say that it is absolutely necessary to run along a highway. There is land each side of a highway. True, it may be expensive. I am satisfied that my suspicions are correct, and that it is because it is going to be cheaper for a railway to go on the highway, if the board can be induced to say that it may go there; the company may pay a little money to the municipality for paving or grading up the street a little, and then obstruct the highway for all time. Any large steam railway could run along the highway here if the board gave permission. Now, suppose the city of Toronto or the city of St. Catharines gives a charter, and have passed a by-law giving power to an electric railway to pass along a highway on certain terms only, and a steam railway wants to connect also on the highway. Suppose one of these lines is within the jurisdiction of this commission, this commission has power to force them to connect by this power it has of allowing a steam railway to run upon that same highway. The roads were not laid out for railway rights of way, they were laid out for highways in the ordinary sense of the word; and I still say that unless it is absolutely necessary to run along that highway this section would be ultra vires, if properly contested. This provision attempts to repeal the British North America Act in so far as it allows them to run along the highway, because I cannot conceive that it is absolutely necessary for any railway to run along the highway. There is land each side of the highway, otherwise there would not be a highway there, and that land can be used for the purposes of the railway and can be expropriated. Of course it will cost the railway some damages, and the object of this section is that when a company finds that it cannot build its road as cheaply as it thought it could be built without using the highway, the railway commission is to have power to allow them to use the streets of the city, town or village. This is an authority that ought not to be delegated to them without the consent of the municipality, and we have not the right to delegate it to them under the British North America Act. That is for the provincial legislature.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there is the slightest foundation for the opinion which the hon. gentleman has expressed. I am sure, from the conversations that took place in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council since I have had the honour of being a member of that board, that if it had been possible to raise a contention of that kind it would have been raised in several instances. The hon. gentleman says that he does not understand why the language of this clause was changed from the affirmative to the negative form. I will tell the hon. gentleman why. It was for the sake of harmonious and consistent legislation. We have passed in section 118 of the new Bill clause (k) 'make or construct in, upon, across, under or over any railway, tramway, river, stream, water-course, canal or highway,' and so on. Now that power is identical with the power we conferred upon the railway company in the existing Act, when it was passed many years ago. You will find it in section 90 of the present railway law, which provides:

> The company may, subject to the provisions of this Act, and of the special Act contained——

Do certain things and among the rest:

> Make, or construct in, upon, across, under, or near any . . . . highway.

And so on. What sense is there in giving to the railway company the power, of course, subject to the condition that the railway commission must approve, and then go on and say that the railway shall not be carried along the highway unless local approval has been obtained? You have already said the company shall have that power. My hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) shakes his head.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not understand the hon. minister to read it in that way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 90 of the present Railway Act says that the company may, subject to the provisions of this Act do the following things, among others:

> Make, or construct in, upon, across, under or near any railway, canal, river, stream or highway.

Mr. CLANCY. May the road be placed along the highway without the consent of the municipality?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the hon. gentleman will see that this is a very serious question. I listened a moment ago when he said that the question had never been raised in all his experience——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said that the contention which was made here to-night that this power was ultra vires of this parliament had never been raised to my knowledge.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that this is an extraordinary power which can be used for the purpose of securing a right of way. I know nothing more serious than a railway constructed along the highway. I was going to say hundreds of accidents, but I will be safe in saying that the number reaches well up towards the hundreds, that I have known to occur as the result of a railway running alongside of a highway. Women and children may be driving alone, the horse becomes uncontrollable and a serious accident occurs. I do not say that in all cases there should be no departure from the rule that a railway should not go along the highway, but if it can possibly be avoided it should be avoided.

Mr. CLARKE. I will accept the suggestion or proposition of the hon. minister, and I will undertake to try to have a clause provided to be added which will meet the case that I am referring to. It is very difficult for a layman to express himself sometimes in order to convey to legal minds his exact idea. I asked the hon. minister if enterprises and undertakings that were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada were to come under the purview of these railway commissioners and his answer was, yes. We are chartering tram car lines to run from one town to another in this province and they are declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. We have these tram car lines surrounding cities and connecting with trunk lines. The conditions that are being created by this Bill are entirely different from those which have existed during the past forty or fifty years or since the Railway Act has been in operation. There is a new condition of things in existence, and I say that it is an intolerable outrage that these tram car railways shall be given permission to go into the city of Hamilton, or Toronto, or Montreal without the consent of the municipality. It is entirely unfair to the municipalities. Take the case of the city of Toronto, for instance: We have as complete a tram car system as can be found in any city in America. That system is operated by one company. The right to operate that surface line belongs to the city. The city has given that franchise for a number of years to a company. If the citizens of Toronto desire a more extended tram car service they are the best judges as to where these tram cars should come in and under what conditions, and they can acquire for them running rights over existing lines running through the streets of Toronto. But why should power be taken away from the municipalities to keep these roads out if they desire to do so? They are the best judges. These tram car lines that are getting incorporation from this parliament are not gift enterprises. They are not being established by philanthropists to put money into people's pockets. Surely the municipalities have some rights in the matter. They ought to have some opportunity of saying when and where these roads should come in and under what conditions. This parliament is surely not in the helpless condition that the hon. minister described it to be in, that it cannot make such an amendment to section 184 as will give the municipalities the right to state conditions under which a tram car line may come in, and not leave the matter entirely under the control of this board of commissioners. I am sure the hon. minister must understand the objection I am trying to present to this permission being given, in view of the new order of things which has been created by the introduction of electricity during the last four or five years.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. WADE. If the hon. gentleman will turn his attention to sections 192 and 193 he will see that the very thing in regard to which he is now objecting is amply provided for. It provides that the company shall not place any lines, wires or poles on the streets until they have first obtained the consent of the board and then until they have obtained the consent of the municipality.

Mr. CLARKE. What board?

Mr. WADE. Subsection 'f' of section 193 says that the work of the company upon the highway shall be subject to the supervision of the municipality.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is not wanting in apprehension, and yet I am surprised to hear him say that when a general law is passed for the management, control and regulation of railways, the proper exercise of these powers is impossible because there are some tramways which are brought within the control of this commission and which are declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. My hon. friend talks about taking power away from the municipalities. Who is taking power away from the municipalities, if it is a proper power for the municipalities to exercise? My hon. friend is taking it away from the municipalities——

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, he is; he is taking it away from the municipalities in the Bills which are passed for the purpose of incorporating these railways, without any conditions saying that they shall not enter upon the streets of any municipality until they obtain the consent of the municipality for that purpose. Instead of destroying or mutilating this Bill, all he has to do is to put that clause in a special Act, and the special Act will govern, and until they have complied with the conditions that are to be found in that special Act they do not come within the general provisions of this Railway Act. That is a complete answer to the difficulty the hon. gentleman presents.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say as a lawyer that is is.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is new doctrine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. New doctrine; is it?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, the government are responsible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Another Daniel come to judgment.

Mr. CLARKE. I may be lacking in legal knowledge, but I think that primarily the responsibility for legislation of this kind rests on the hon. gentleman who occupies the distinguished position of Minister of Railways and Canals. If any injustice is being done to municipalities, the responsibility for that injustice must be shared by the minister with other members of this House when he allows tram car outfits run by electricity to be declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. The hon. gentleman sits in the Railway Committee and he cannot be blind to the attempts that are frequently made with the object of destroying municipal rights. I enter my protest as a member of this House against legislation of this class that is being enacted here from year to year. The minister will see that the end is not yet, and that this question is bound to come before the House sooner or later. I am sure that the minister has sufficient legal knowledge, if he desired to exercise it, to enable him to add a subclause to this section which would meet the cases that we are presenting to him and which would protect the municipalities in the rights which they have enjoyed up to the present time. If the minister will give me permission I will try to get a lawyer to prepare a subclause that will meet the case, if he allows this section to stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let the section stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 185,

Mr. CLARKE. I wish to draw the attention of the minister to the words of this clause which say that the top of the rail may protrude an inch over the level of the surrounding street. Would not that be a serious impediment to traffic.

Mr. LANCASTER. In all the by-laws that I have seen drawn, allowing these tramways or electric roads to run, they have always been compelled to put the top of the rail flush with the street, and the street is usually macadamized or paved up to the rail on both sides. Serious accidents will happen, runaways be caused and vehicles broken, if you allow the rail to obtrude in this way. It is admitted to be a most dangerous thing to allow the rail to rise above the level of the street. This difficulty arises because this House of Commons to-night is undertaking to do the work which should be done by the municipal councils throughout the country.

Mr. CLARKE. It is the experience of gentlemen who live in cities, that there is very great danger to horses and vehicles from allowing the rails to protrude above the level of the street. I have seen the tram car tracks laid down in the leading cities of the old country, and they are so level that you cannot detect any movement of the wheels of your vehicle when you are crossing them. Why should we not make provision here that they should be level with the pavement ? It will not cost any more, and it will save a great deal of trouble. I am not an engineer, but I would suggest to the minister that it would be no hardship if we provided that the rails should be flush with the contiguous surface of the street.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are simply retaining the law as it is now and always has been.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why should that be an argument. That's a regular Tory doctrine and has been exploded long ago. If the law has allowed a dangerous thing in the past the law should be amended. That is all there is to it. The minister knows as well as any farmer that it is very dangerous to allow these rails to protrude above the level of the roadway. If the rail is one inch above the roadway the wheels are likely to sink an inch below, and then you have two inches to get over, which is a serious obstacle. I do not care if the law has been so for generations, it should be rectified if it is not proper legislation. What might be right twenty years ago may be all wrong now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You cannot always have the track just on the dead level with the highway. I am not talking about tramways, I am talking about railways, and we are legislating here for every railway in the Dominion. You make them liable to a penalty of I think $5,000, and if it is impossible to have the rail on a dead level, are you going to fine them, or are you going to wipe out the penalty altogether. That might be all right in reference to the streets of Toronto and some of the wealthy cities whose roadways are in fine condition, but you cannot make a law as stringent as that to apply to every railway crossing in Canada, because it is impossible to do it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Nearly all the by-laws of all the municipalities in Ontario compel the rail to be on the level, and they enforce those by-laws.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They cannot enforce that.

Mr. LANCASTER. The by-law says that if the rail is not placed in that way the work will be done at the expense of the town engineer and the town collects the cost from the railway. If we did not interfere with the rights of the municipalities here the thing could be worked out all right, and that very fact proves that we should not undertake such legislation without the consent of the municipality.

Mr. AVERY. I think it is very important that the roadway should be level with the track, especially in winter time. Our teams, loaded with lumber, have often got stuck on the rails owing to the track being higher than the roadway. That is something that has happened in my observation several times. It is more dangerous to have the rails above than below the level. I think it would be in the interest of the railway company as well as of the public to have the roadway as high as the rails, if not higher.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What locality does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. AVERY. The township of Oso, in the county of Frontenac.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not think a stronger argument could be urged in favour of a modification of this clause than that presented by the hon. member for Addington (Mr. Avery). Why not provide that when the work is completed the top rail shall sink an inch below the highway ? Why allow the rail to obtrude an inch above the highway ? The damage is done by being above, not below.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the rail is below the level, the wheels of wagons will be liable to get twisted.

Mr. CLARKE. It is not unreasonable to expect the company to keep their rails level with the ground on either side. It is not safe to give them two inches of margin, because if they have it, they will take it. I would respectfully suggest to the minister that that clause ought to be modified in some way to make it more acceptable to the municipalities than it is as it stands now.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I may add that I have time and again seen teams stuck at crossings on country roads, and neighbouring teams have had to be got to help to pull them off. I myself got stuck at a railway crossing with a load of sawlogs, and I had to get another team to help to pull it off. As the law allows the rails to be an inch above the level, if a man's sleigh got stuck on it, the company could come along and smash it and he would have no remedy against them. I think in all country places the railway company should be compelled to keep their rails as low as the planks. That would save a great deal of trouble to the farmers and their teams. Then you often see a crossing where the railway does not cross the highway at right angles, but diagonally. Where it crosses at right angles, there is not so much difficulty with wheels, but where it crosses diagonally, a heavily loaded wagon or a sharp-tired buggy is liable to break an axle, by running along the rail. If the rails were below the level, that could not happen.

Mr. AVERY. If the minister has no objection to making this change, it would be a great benefit to the country at large. Last winter I had a dozen teams get stuck on the railway simply because the rails were higher than the roadway. To keep the rails down to the level or below the level of the roadway would not hurt the running of the railway, and it would keep the sleighs off the rails. It is very dangerous at present to cross with a heavy load if you have not an extra team to pull you off. The objection is not so great in summer as in winter, because a wheel will go over where a sleigh will not. I think the change proposed would be for the benefit of the railway company as well as the public.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to have the section stand for further consideration.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 188,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the section be so amended as to read as follows :—

The highway at any overhead railway crossing shall not at any time be narrowed by means of any abutment or structure to the extent of less than twenty feet, nor shall the clear headway from the surface of the highway to the centre be less than fourteen feet, unless otherwise directed or permitted by the board.

Mr. CLARKE. Twenty feet would not be wide enough for two lines of tram car track, but I suppose it will be in the discretion of that board to make the width greater ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have to leave the power somewhere and cannot provide for every case.

Mr. LENNOX. I perhaps did not correctly hear what the minister said. I venture to think that twenty feet is not wide enough. The minister says you cannot make provisions for every case, that subsequent arrangements can be made, and the power must be left somewhere. But I would submit what has been urged upon the minister before, that he should make the prima facie case in favour of the people. The general opening over highways should be wider than twenty feet. People driving have to pass others beneath these railways, and pretty wide loads must pass. Moreover, sometimes, ditches have to be constructed along the abutments to carry water along the highways, and I think the experience in the rural districts is that twenty feet is not sufficient. Then, as to the height, there is a necessity for providing not merely the height at a central point, but from side to side. I know the Minister of Railways, like the rest of us, is endeavouring to protect the public. This Bill is one that probably will not be amended for some time—I venture to say that it will not be amended in favour of the public at any rate. Therefore, I think that it should be made now as favourable to the public as is consistent with justice. A railway company can easily carry a span of more than twenty feet. They can carry a span of thirty feet to-day more easily than they could one of fifteen feet a few years ago.

Mr. CLARKE. How would it do to make the clause read that the opening over a highway should not be less than thirty or thirty-five feet except with the permission of the board of commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that there is practically any difference. The Bill provides that before these structures can be put up plans and profiles must be submitted to the board. If the company proposed to run a double track they would be required to make a wider structure than for the purposes of a single track, and if running a single track twenty feet would be ample. I do not think we could very well change the section. I have had the opinion of our engineers and have gathered all the information that I could upon the subject, and have reached the conclusion that, so far as the width is concerned, the width that we have named here is all right. In the great majority of cases, a span of twenty feet would be covered by girders. But if you had thirty feet or over, you would compel them ordinarily, to arch, and you would be making a width which, I am assured by competent authorities, is quite unnecessary. This is a limitation upon the board; they are not in any case to allow a width of less than twenty feet; but they have power to make the width as great as the circumstances of the case call for. I do not think we can do better than leave the discretion there.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think I have succeeded in making clear to the minister what I have in view. If you make the normal width twenty-five feet, the railway company go on and construct the openings in that way, or else they will make an application to the board. It is a comparatively easy matter for the railway company to appear before the board and they can get an order, perhaps, for all highways along the whole line of a new piece of construction. But it is a serious matter for a municipality to be obliged to initiate these proceedings. Therefore, I think, the minister will see the importance and the justice of making this width ample in the first place, and leaving to the railways, if, in any case it is not necessary to make the opening so wide, to apply for a modification of the rule. In this case it is a railway carrying a road across the public highway. The people, have prima facie, the first right. That right should be guarded, and then let the railway company show from time to time the necessity for modification. I know this view will commend itself to the minister. He has taken a great deal of trouble to perfect this Bill and it will stand as a monument to him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have made inquiries into this matter. If the information I have gained had led me to believe that a greater width than twenty feet should be placed in this Bill, I should be very glad indeed to amend the Bill and make the width greater than I here propose. But I am advised that twenty feet is ample. How many turnpikes have you in the country with a width exceeding twenty feet ? Very few. I notice also that the bridges which the municipalities are building are not twenty feet wide as a rule. Most of them are sixteen to eighteen feet wide. Why then is it necessary to have a greater width for this class of structure than for the turnpikes or the bridges they carry ?

Mr. LENNOX. The minister asks, why have the opening under a railway of a greater width than the floor of the bridge. It seems to me the answer is obvious. You must provide width not merely for the wheels which rest upon the roadway, but for the load which often extends far outside the wheels.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). There may be some difficulties by making it read 'the centre of the bridge.' I can cite one instance that occurred in my township where a railway crosses a public road where there is not room for a load of hay to go through owing to the way the sides of the crossing are constructed. I think we should require that the crossing should be at least twenty feet square from the bottom to the top and fourteen feet at the top. It should be twenty feet from the bottom and not from the centre.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are placing upon this independent tribunal the responsibility of requiring plans to be submitted to them and the obligation of seeing that those plans when carried out, should be such as will ensure the public safety. We cannot frame our sections so as to meet every case that may arise, we can only state the maximum and the minimum and leave the rest to the commissioners. We may depend upon them to see that the structures shall be of such a character as will conform with the conditions which we require, that is to say, will ensure safety and protection to the public.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have not heard yet why the minister changed these words from 'the lowest portion' to 'the centre.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not changed them, that is the old Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the original Bill is better than the old Act. I have not seen any answer why the overhead structure should not be of the same height all the way along, because if it were right to make it thirteen feet high in the middle, it is equally necessary to make it thirteen feet high all through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman really see that he is fighting a mere shadow ? Is it to be supposed that this railway commission are going to sanction a structure which will be like the wigwam of an Indian ? The difficulty is this : The old Act used the expression of 'the centre,' the legislators perhaps not knowing the difficulties of the construction. Now it turns out from the experience of the engineers that that term is entirely inappropriate. No matter how wide they required the structure to be, no matter how large the circle was which constituted the arch, there would have to be that fourteen feet below where the arch commences to spring, and it would be difficult to define what the lowest portion was. I thought it was safer to go back to the original Act and let the board of commissioners determine each plan and say whether or not they approve it.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is not much room for a team of horses and a load of hay to pass through a space twenty feet wide and to have much play, especially if the horses are nervous and are frightened by a passing train. If we are going to pass the section at all we should make it a little more favourable to the people.

Mr. LENNOX. I thought the minister had concluded that he would alter the section so as to make it clear fourteen feet over the highway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Twenty feet wide and fourteen feet high.

Mr. LENNOX. In the majority of country roads they usually use a straight stringer, in some cases there are iron girders, and in some cases wooden. In only two or three instances have I seen stone arches. But what the minister has already said meets the whole difficulty. The board will have control, and except in isolated instances, the board need not require the railway company to carry out the full height of fourteen feet across a span of twenty feet. But the prima facie duty of the railway company and the prima facie right of the people should be a clear uninterrupted headway above the highway of a full width of twenty feet and of a height of fourteen feet. That is all important and I submit that that right should be guarded. It will occur in so few instances that the companies will be building stone or concrete arches that there will be very few occasions when the alteration will have to be made.

On section 191,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to the committee that we shall re-enact the old section with some little change in it. The more I think about it the better I think the old section was. I beg to move :

That the words 'stretching across, or projecting over' in the first line be struck out, and that the word 'at' be substituted in lieu thereof and that on the third, fourth and fifth lines the words 'at such height as to leave sixteen feet from the highway to the lower edge of the sign board' be struck out.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the section as substituted practically the same as the section in the old Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there any legislation as to what height these boards shall be from the ground ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not object to that. Before we leave this section, I would like to say that there was a section in the old Act—section 189—which provided very stringent penalties for delaying works ordered by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. We have the board substituted for the railway committee but we have not the penalties re-enacted. Section 189 of the old Act provides that the company incurs a penalty of $50 for each day's delay.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All these penalties are in the new Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I see that section 191 of the new Bill provides a penalty of $40 for neglect to comply with the requirements of this section, but we have not the penalty of $50 a day which is a good thing to hurry the company up.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 293 of the new Bill provides :

Every company which shall erect, operate or maintain any bridge, approach, tunnel, viaduct, trestle, or any building, erection or structure, in violation of this Act, or of any order or regulation of the board, shall for each offence incur a penalty of fifty dollars.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is another thing. That is where a company violates an order of the board, but that does not say if it does not maintain or construct a work when it is ordered to do so, it will incur this penalty. I knew of this section and that is why I have asked the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Look at section 294 of the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. Section 294 says :

Every company, director or officer doing, causing or permitting to be done, any matter, act or thing contrary to the provisions of this or the special Act, or to the orders or directions of the Governor in Council, or of the board or minister made hereunder, or omitting to do any matter, act or thing required to be done on the part of any such company, director or officer, is liable to any person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained by such Act or omission ; and if no other penalty is, in this or the special Act, provided for any such act or omission, is liable, for each offence, to a penalty of not less than twenty dollars, and not more than five thousand dollars, in the discretion of the court before which the same is recoverable.

This is not the same as the old Act. This does not provide a penalty for each day's delay and it is the delay that makes the trouble. The best way to make them hurry up is to fine them so much a day. The clause says that if there is anything they are required to do, and which they do not do they are liable to a penalty and to pay damages, but in common law they would be liable to pay damages if they did not do their duty even without this provision. If the railway neglects to carry out any order, they ought be under a stringent penalty of so much a day as in the old Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a great many more penalties and more provisions in this new Bill than are in the old Act and there is the advantage of having them altogether here.

On section 192,

Mr. LANCASTER. This section says :

The company shall not erect, place or maintain any lines, wires or poles for telegraphs, telephones, or the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, upon or along any highway, square or other public place, except by leave of the board.

I propose to amend that section by adding at the end, the words :

And the consent of the local municipal authorities.

This is in principle the same question we were discussing in regard to highway crossings, although in practice it is of still greater importance. This is a new section which gives the company power to erect poles on any highway or square for a purpose not necessary for the undertaking of a railway company, and it enables the company to do that without the consent of the municipal authorities. The railway has its own right of way and it can erect poles along its own tracks, and when it comes to a highway crossing they can, under ordinary circumstances, string their wires across without placing a pole on the highway. But in an extreme case where there may be a sharp angle or a high building, surely the municipal authorities would allow them to meet such a case and surely the municipal authorities should have power to do so. This provision allows the railway commission to permit these railway companies to interfere with municipal rights without consulting the municipal authorities at all. I cannot see the necessity for this unless it be that it is intended to hold up the municipalities. A railway company could threaten that unless the municipality gave them rights with reference to the station grounds and other such things, they would go to the railway commission and get permission to do what they liked on the streets of that municipality. This is nothing else than a usurpation of the rights of municipalities. It is a deliberate attempt to deprive the municipalities of the rights they have now. I believe it is ultra vires of this parliament, but the minister does not agree with me, and whether it is ultra vires or not we should not do it. Even if we have the power we should not attempt to exercise it. Who can best look after the highways in a municipality and declare whether wires for the conveyance of light, heat and power should be erected or not ? Surely it is the municipalities who get their rights from the provincial legislatures. What in the world is this clause wanted here for, except it is to benefit the railways. What right has a railway to go into the light, heat, power business in a municipality without the consent of the municipality. What right has a railway to tear up the squares and public places of a municipality without obtaining the consent of the municipality. I wish the member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) were in his seat, because a while ago he was sure this section provided for the consent of the municipality, but as he now can see it does not, and I am sure we on this side of the House would have his support in defending the rights of the municipalities. The hon. gentleman referred to subsection (f) but if that subsection is meant to cause us to dream that this is giving the power to the municipality, I cannot help thinking that the wording of it is very imperfect if that is the meaning of it. Subsection (f) says :

(f) The opening up of any street, square, or other public place for the erection of poles, or for carrying wires under ground, shall be subject to the supervision of such person as the municipal council may appoint, and such street, square or other public place shall, without any unnecessary delay, be restored, as far as possible, to its former condition.

That means that if it is opened up by order of the board of commissioners who have sole power to do it by section 192, the work may be carried out under the supervision of an officer appointed by the municipality. But the municipal council has no power to say whether the work shall be done or not. That has been all ordered by the railway commission before the municipality is allowed to come on the scene and supervise the work. It is merely a direction to the municipality as to carrying out something which it cannot stop, and which the board are the only people who can say shall happen or not happen. I do not construe subsection (f) as giving control to the municipal council ; and that being so, we are here deliberately, by section 192, taking away from the municipality control of its own highways, and handing that control over to a railway commission. Therefore, the amendment I move is the only proper thing to make the section not only intra vires, as I think it is not as drawn, but to make it what it should be, even if it were intra vires, so that this work should not be done without the consent of the local authorities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member will see that I propose an amendment to this section so that his amendment will not be applicable. I propose to substitute for section 192 the following :

No lines or wires for telegraphs, telephones, or the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, shall be erected, placed or maintained across the railway without leave of the board.

I do not say anything about highways there at all. This is a matter relating to railways, and the use of telephone and telegraph lines, and the conducting of electricity in connection with railway undertakings, which are the only things with which we are concerned. Then, I propose the following as subsection 2 of section 192 :

2. Upon any application for such leave, the applicant shall submit to the board a plan and profile of the part of the railway proposed to be affected, showing the proposed location of such lines and wires and the works contemplated in connection therewith ; and the board may grant such application, and may order by whom, how, when, and on what terms and conditions and under what supervision such works shall be executed ; and upon such order being made such lines and works may be erected, placed and maintained across the railway, subject to and in accordance with such order.

Mr. CLARKE. As I understand, then, this actually prohibits the municipalities——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it has nothing to do with municipalities at all. It applies only to a railway line.

Mr. CLARKE. Suppose a railway runs through a city, and the city proposes to erect a telephone system crossing that railway. The city could be prevented completing its system unless it got the approval of this board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unless it got the board's permission to cross the railway.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the municipality is to be prevented from carrying out a telephone system or a system of electric lighting, according to its own scheme, unless it gets the approval of a body constituted by this parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is not that a most extraordinary thing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is a very proper thing.

Mr. CLARKE. That would take away the right of the municipality altogether. If the railway is coming in, it ought to be subsidiary to the right of the municipality.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so. I do not think any electric light or telephone or telegraph company should be allowed to carry its wires across a railway without being subject to the safe and proper running of the railway. There must be some control. That is all that this means, and it could not possibly be permitted to anybody, in the interest of a municipality, which had no concern as to the safe and proper running of trains, to carry a line of electric wires across the railway tracks without permission of the properly constituted authority.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not the duty of this parliament to make the railway provide for public safety in that case ? Why compel the municipalities to do all this ? I would like to record my vote against that clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not understand it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this has no retroactive effect and will only apply to railways to be built after this comes into force.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid it will affect railways already in existence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course it will. If a municipality wants to string wires across a railway track, it will have to do so according to the regulations and conditions imposed by the commission.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In every town and village there are hundreds of wires for telephonic and lighting purposes passing over railways at present.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They will only be allowed subject to conditions imposed by the railway commission just as they are imposed to-day by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before we get through with this Bill, it will be found that there will be nothing left for anybody to do but to bow down to the railways, when these railways have the sanction of the commission. I entirely agree with my hon. friend for West Toronto. We do not want a municipality to prevent a railway from running but neither do we want the municipalities to give way to the railways in every thing. The railway need not go into the municipality, and if it does go into a town or village it goes there to make money and should be made subject to the rights of the municipality.

On section 193,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that section 193 be amended by striking out the first and second subsections and inserting the following :—

When a company is empowered by a special Act of the parliament of Canada to construct, operate and maintain lines of telegraph, telephone or for the convenience of light, heat, power or electricity, the company may, with the consent of the municipal council or other authority having jurisdiction over any highway, square or other public place, enter thereon for the purpose of exercising the said power, and as often as the company think proper may break up or open any highway, square or other public place, subject however to the following provisions :

(a) The company shall not interfere with the public right of travel.

(b) Provided that where the company cannot obtain such consent from such municipal council or other authority, the company may apply to the board for leave to exercise such power ; and upon such application shall submit to the board a plan of such highway, square or other public place, showing the proposed location of such lines, wires and poles ; and the board may grant such application in whole or in part and may change or fix the route of such lines, wires or poles, and may by order impose any terms, conditions or limitations in respect thereof that it may deem expedient, having due regard to all proper interests ; and upon such order being made, the company may exercise such powers in accordance with such order and shall, in the performance and execution thereof or in the repairing, renewing or maintaining of such lines, wires or poles, conform to and be subject to the provisions in subsection one of this section provided, as if consent had been obtained from such municipal council or other authority, except in so far as the same may be so expressly varied by order of the board.

You will observe that they must first apply to the municipal council for consent, then if the council will not consent, they may appeal to the board. It will not be possible for the company to insist or the council absolutely and arbitrarily to refuse. This tribunal decides between the parties, as any independent tribunal would, as to whether or not this power ought to be given and under what condition.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand that this clause is intended to reaffirm practically the Act passed twenty years ago ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This Act as amended was passed in 1899. It is not twenty years old.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand there was some litigation arising out of the Act of 1899—out of some defect in the legislation with respect to the Bell Telephone Company's rights.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have nothing to do with the Bell Telephone Company; we are dealing with railway companies.

Mr. CLARKE. But I am dealing with the rights of municipalities. Do I understand the Minister of Railways to say that it will rest with the board of commissioners to say whether any railway company whose work has been declared a work for the general advantage of Canada may erect poles on the highways and squares of the city to carry on telephone business, lighting, heating or anything else ? Surely that cannot be the position of the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it does not do that.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, what does it do ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The railway company may be authorized, in connection with its own business to have telephones, electric wires for lighting and so on. But this must be sanctioned by the board of commissioners.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that perfectly clear ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It provides that the company may do what they are authorized by its special Act to do. But we restrict that to the exercise of their powers for the purpose of the railway and its undertaking.

Mr. LANCASTER. But that does not help us very much, whether the special Act restricts or does not restrict. We are providing that the railway commissioners can authorize the railway company to carry on telephones, lighting or heating. Suppose that some future parliament, in its good nature, does not impose such a restriction as the minister has suggested, does that make the legislation any more sensible ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it does not apply to that at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is the Act we are passing, and now is the time for us to make restrictions that we think should apply. You say the municipalities should give their consent and the minister evidently thinks they will give their consent. But I do not think that anything can be done in control of the streets without the consent of the municipality. And so this law would be not only inadvisable but ultra vires of this legislature. This parliament has power to give a charter for the carrying out of the undertaking and to do what may be necessary for that purpose. But the danger is that more than this will be done without the authority of the municipalities. The streets and highways are vested in the municipal authorities; that is the power that has control of them, and I do not think that this parliament can assist those powers or take them away. But I do not want to make legislation merely trusting to its being held to be ultra vires. I do not think we should authorize the board to undertake to force the municipalities to do with regard to the streets and public places of a municipality what they do not want to do, unless it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of the undertaking which we charter.

And I say that you have only the right to give the power to do what may be necessary to carry out the undertaking. But that cannot be so in the case the hon. minister put.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) to say that it is only the question of necessity which confers upon this parliament the right to legislate upon the subject ?

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman wants to put it that way, I say that it is ultra vires of this parliament to interfere with a municipality except for the carrying out of a purpose for which this parliament has a right to give a charter, and the only reason why railways can force their way across the highways and so on, is because you cannot make the railway otherwise. But where it is not necessary for the purpose of the undertaking to carry poles or wires, this should not be allowed. The company may carry these things along their own rights of way, but if they wish to extend they should buy another right of way. It is surely not right to say that we can authorize a board of commissioners to give a railway company the right to do other than railway business on the streets of a municipality simply because we have the power to allow the building of a railway along or across the streets, The railway commission does not care about the municipal rights, but is considering the general interest of Canada, and they might think it in the general interests of Canada to allow railways to run here and there wherever they please. They are not the protectors of the highways, but the municipal authorities are. Recognizing that, this power should be conditional upon the consent of the municipal authorities. Surely this is a case in which the municipal authorities ought to have something to say.

Mr. LENNOX. This involves, probably the most serious question we have had to face in connection with this Bill. We are confronted with the proposition of the minister to leave enormous power in the hands of the board. We virtually, as it seems to me, substitute, for what we contemplated before, the right of legislation by this board. The minister shakes his head, meaning, I suppose, that he does not agree with what I have said. We cannot expect the minister always to agree with us; but I can only submit it to his consideration in the hope that he may change his mind. The minister has taunted an hon. member on this side with having failed to protest with regard to some matter, I think connected with electric railways. Therefore I wish to state my position as emphatically as I can at this point though I do not know that it will have any effect so far as the minister is concerned. The hon. minister says that this only confers upon the railway company powers in connection with the undertaking of the railway company itself. I should not have so interpreted it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that this proposed legislation does not give a railway company the right to go into the electric light business, or the power business, or the telephone business for any purpose outside of their own undertaking.

Mr. LENNOX. Although I have no desire to obstruct this Bill, yet I do submit that it is regretable that large amendments are proposed by the minister, often upon the spur of the moment, when we are not able to understand their effect. These amendments are virtually a recasting the section. I submit that in view of the importance of this legislation, and in order that the company may have an opportunity of judging the effect of these amendments, they should be submitted to us a sufficient time in advance to give us an opportunity of studying them. I confess that I am not sure that I grasp the full scope of the proposed amendment. I believe it is trenching seriously upon the rights of municipalities, and it has this additional bad element, that it transfers the matter to a tribunal which should never have the power to legislate for a municipality. If we are to divest ourselves of any power of control over railway companies, let us hand it to the municipalities rather than to this board.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That amendment will give to the company the power of generating electricity or generating power, and that which they do not use for the purpose of the railway, they can dispose of under their special Act. It gives them the power of going on to the streets of a municipality. If the municipality objects to letting them come upon their streets, then they can apply to the board and the board may give them the right of going anywhere. The clause does not restrict the power to the purpose of the railway company, but it gives them the general power to use these streets for the exercise of the powers they have under their special Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, if parliament were to pass an Act giving a railway company the power to run a telegraph business independently and outside the purposes of their undertaking, or an electric light or power business outside of its undertaking, then it would give them an unrestricted power. But parliament is not giving them that power. We have had a great many Acts passed during the present session, and with one exception, I think every railway enterprise going through a section of country where there is a water power upon which they would have to depend for their motive power to generate electricity was allowed to dispose to the general public of any surplus power they might have over and above what they required for their own purpose. But the railways which have power to erect telegraph and telephone lines and works of that kind, have been strictly limited to the purposes of their undertaking.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is for telegraph lines and telephones. But this goes further, and gives a company power to generate electricity for lighting and heating and power purposes, for running factories or anything of that kind. They have that right under their charter, and when I was Minister of Railways and Canals and since then, a good many companies have been given that power, but they have no right to enter upon the streets of any municipality without the consent of the municipality. This gives them the power to go into a municipality and to dispose to the public of a portion of their electricity.

Mr. CLARKE. They could carry telegraph lines upon the streets of Toronto. If it is conceded that they have that right, surely the minister ought to make a provision that they should not go and dispose of the extra and unrequired light, heat and power without the consent of the municipality. Is not this the place to make that provision ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the special Act incorporating the company.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the contention of my hon. friend from Lanark is admitted by the minister to be correct.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I admit that if parliament does give them the power they could use it, but if they do not get the power, they cannot use it. We have incorporated here provisions which restrict the company as fully as we think it is proper for the company to be restricted. We say they shall procure consent if they can; if they cannot, and if they can make out a case to satisfy the board, then the board may override the decision of the municipal council. The municipal council will not have power absolutely to block an undertaking which has been chartered by this parliament. Then we say that the opening up any streets, square or other public place, is to be subject to the supervision of the municipal council.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister will see, of course, that a company might generate ten times as much power as it would require to operate its line of railway. It might generate ten times as much heat and light as it would require. According to our contention it has no right to tear up the streets, squares and public places of a municipality to dispose of the other nine-tenths that it does not require without the consent of the municipality. It has no right to go into such a business as that. I want to be recorded as very strongly against such a proposition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Shall clause 193 as amended be adopted ?

Mr. CLARKE. I object to it.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 194,

Mr. COWAN. Before section 194 is taken up——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think we had better not enter into any question of drainage to-night. It is too late. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. Before this motion is adopted, will the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals give us the order of business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will take up the Railway Bill and supply.

Mr. MONK. What estimates will be taken up ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not yet finished the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has appointed a special commissioner to make an inquiry into the cause of the accident at West Lorne one or two months ago, and that that commissioner has returned to Ottawa after having made an investigation. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the commissioner has submitted his report, and if so, if he will lay it on the Table of the House ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not heard from him for the last two or three days, but when the report is completed I will bring it down.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 16, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 202) to incorporate the Church Missionary Society of Canada.—Mr. Russell.

Bill (No. 203) respecting the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert—by Mr. Campbell.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. Speaker, as requested by the hon. leader of the opposition, I may mention that the government have considered the two tenders for the fast Atlantic service which I laid on the Table the other day, but they do not see their way to accept either of them, although it is quite possible they may be of use as a basis of further negotiations.

THE TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask whether or not the personnel of the transportation commission has yet been settled ? I think the right hon. leader of the government mentioned some two weeks ago that it had been proposed to appoint three gentlemen whom he had named, but he was not quite certain whether all of them would accept. I would like to know whether he has any more definite information on that subject now ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The only change contemplated is that Mr. Fry is to take the place of Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would my right hon. friend say whether or not there are three gentlemen who have agreed to undertake the work and when the commission may be expected to begin its labour ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot give the information to-day, but I will take a note of my hon. friend's request and let him know.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I also inquire whether or not my right hon. friend can announce the names of the gentlemen who are to compose the commission for inquiry into certain matters connected with the Treadgold and other concessions in the Yukon, and whether or not the gentlemen who were named in the House some days ago have accepted, and when that commission may be expected to begin its work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will give my hon. friend the information at the same time as the other.

Mr. LANCASTER. I desire to call attention to an order of the House made about three weeks ago for a return of papers with regard to the Macnee fishing license, which has not yet been brought down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are being prepared.

THE RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill No. 21 to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair).. I allowed a section or two to stand aside at the request of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). Is my hon. friend prepared to submit an amendment ?

Mr. CLARKE. After the House adjourned I met the hon. minister and he asked me about the clause. I said that, as the Bill was not likely to get through to-day or to-morrow and as the solicitor and the mayor of the city of Toronto will be here to-morrow morning, I preferred to await their coming so as to have a clause drafted to meet their approval.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There are rural municipalities which ought to receive some consideration too.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) will possess his soul in patience until he sees the clause I propose to submit. I have not the slightest desire to place the city of Toronto in a better position than the other municipalities.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The interests of the city of Toronto have always been well looked after in Dominion and provincial legislation, but if any special power is to be given Toronto or any other city over rural municipalities, that must be watched very carefully.

Mr. MONK. As I understand my hon. friend from Toronto, he wished to have time to draft a clause which will protect not only the municipality of Toronto but municipalities generally.

On section 194,

Whenever any municipality desires to obtain means of drainage, or the right to lay water pipes, or other pipes, temporarily or permanently, through, along, upon, across or under the railway, or any works or lands of the company, such municipality may make application for leave therefor to the board, and upon such application, shall submit to the board a plan and profile of the portion of the railway to be affected, and the board may grant such application, and may order how, when, and on what terms and conditions such drainage may be effected, or pipes laid, and thereupon such municipality may construct the works necessary to carry out such order under the supervision of such official as the board designates, or, at the option of the company, if communicated to the board upon the hearing, the company may be ordered by the board to construct such works, and carry out such directions, under the like supervision.

Mr. COWAN. Before that clause is adopted, I desire to draw attention to the fact that last year, as well as this year, I introduced Bill No. 19 respecting drainage on and across the property of railway companies. Neither clauses 194 nor 195 meets the requirements which that Bill is intended to meet. Under the law, as it now stands and as proposed by this measure, before you can effectually drain the lands of a municipality or an individual land owner, the parties must go before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or before the Board of Railway Commissioners. I venture to say that there are very few applications, either by a municipality or private land owner, made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for permission to drain across the lands of a railway company. In Essex and the western counties, an enormous amount of money has been invested in drains. I make the statement, and defy a successful contradiction, that in the county of Essex to-day there has been more money invested in private and public drains than in railways, and be it remembered that there is more money invested in railways in that county than in almost any other county in the entire province of Ontario. That county is cut east and west by the three great trunk lines, the Michigan Central, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, as well as by the Lake Erie, which is now a portion of the Père Marquette system. In addition there are two cross roads, one along the western and one along the eastern portion of the county. So that the county is cut by five railways. Yet there has been more money invested in public and private drains than in railway construction. The land in that section is thoroughly flat land. There are but a few acres in any township which are not under assessment for outlet in addition to their own private drains. In fact the county is checkboarded with ditches every twenty or thirty rods, and the assessment raised from seventy-five cents to $3 per acre for the drains to carry the water off to lake St. Clair or some other satisfactory outlet.

In addition to that, on account of the silt and natural accumulations that will get into a drain, these drains must be renewed once in from five to seven years, or ten years at the outside. The result is that the land of this county, at a fair average is under taxation of $1 per acre. If it were not for a most favourable climate and a prolific soil, it would be left an absolutely barren country to-day by reason of the immense amount of money that is levied on the farmers annually to pay the drainage taxes. Now, the fall of the land generally is toward the north and east. The great trunk lines of railway run along the northern border of the county. It may be said that the railways are not entitled to block up a natural watercourse. But you must remember that the railways went through that country many years ago before the land was cleared, and in addition to that, it is a flat country, in which the water-courses are miles and miles apart. You will travel fifteen miles, perhaps, and not find a natural water-course running into lake St. Clair, that is a natural water-course as defined by the courts of this province. The water flows gently over the land in depressions or swales, and when the land commenced to be cleared up and cultivated, these water-courses—what would then be called natural water-courses under the law—were wiped out of existence. Thus, when a municipality or farmer wants to find an outlet to the drain, he must come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I venture to say there are not fifty per cent even of the members of this House, or fifty per cent of the members of the legal profession in this province or any other province in the Dominion, who know the procedure necessary in order to come before that tribunal. I know of but very few applications that have been made from the counties I speak of to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for permission to drain under the lands of the railway companies. And, under section 195, it is only as an outlet for drainage works that application can even be made to that body by a landowner. So, where a man's farm is cut in two by a railway—the land everywhere in that section having a fall of from three to nine feet to the mile—it is absolutely impossible for him to drain under the line of railway without coming before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and no farmer, or, at all events very few, will make that application. The result is as I saw when coming down here a few weeks ago. All along the lines of these railways, almost as far southward as the eye could reach, the land was submerged because of the imperfect drainage under the lines of the railway companies. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee by multiplying examples, but I wish to make the statement that the person whose land is cut in two by a railway corporation stands in an entirely different position from the man who has made a sale of his land to an individual. The railway company expropriates a man's land; the man has no option, but is compelled to sell. And I can name instances in the county of Essex to-day in which, after a railway company had gone through the land of a farmer, and the farmer desired to get drainage under that railway, the amount demanded by the railway company to allow drainage of the upper half of the property was a greater amount than the company paid for the entire portion of the land they took. The result is that these men are taxed thousands and thousands of dollars to carry the water in a lateral direction, east or west, whatever way the water tends to flow, until it strikes a natural water-course, which then passes under the railway. The effect is that, supposing the fall of the land is to the north, at say, six or seven feet to the mile, when you have to take the water in a lateral direction, you find the land almost a dead level, and, in case of a freshet or heavy fall of rain there is not sufficient fall to take the water off the crops before the crops are materially damaged. This is a matter of most vital importance to the western counties. There is no question of tariff, no question of railway bonus, no question of railway construction or government ownership that can commence to affect those parts equally with the question of drainage.

Now, I find, in looking over the laws of the different states of the Union, that their procedure is much more simple than ours. In nearly all these states they have what is called a county drainage commissioner, so that a person does not have to make application to the federal authorities, or the state legislature, or even the state railway commissioners, but the county commissioners generally have jurisdiction over matters of that kind. Now, I find in the laws of the states of Michigan, by Act 254, section 16, as follows :

Whenever it is necessary to run a drain across the right of way or road-bed of any railroad, the same proceeding shall be had throughout in all respects, as in all cases provided in this Act for obtaining private lands for the construction of drains except as hereinafter provided. It shall be the duty of the railroad company when notified by the county drain commissioner so to do, to make and maintain the necessary opening through said road-bed, and to build and maintain a suitable culvert. Notice in writing to make such opening, and to construct such culvert shall be served upon such company by leaving a copy thereof with the ticket or freight agent, or general officer of such railroad company, at least thirty days before such railroad company shall become liable.

And section 17 provides that if the railway company fails to comply with the provisions of section 16, it shall pay a fine of $10 for each day's refusal or neglect to make such opening and construct such culvert, and the prosecuting attorney shall prosecute the complaint. It will thus be seen that drains can be constructed across the land of a railway in the state of Michigan by the same procedure as is followed in making a drain across the land of a private citizen, and that the necessary culverts must be made by the railway companies at their own expense and for all time maintained by the railway company at their own expense. Now, I know of no state in the Union which affords a better comparison with the western counties of Ontario, so far as the lay of the land is concerned and so far as the quality of the land is concerned, than the state of Michigan. It lies contiguous to the western counties, and the very same conditions very largely prevail, at least in the southern portion of the state of Michigan as prevail in the western portion of Ontario.

Then, I find that in the great state of Illinois, the provision is even more drastic. The fifth subsection of the twentieth section of the statute respecting the incorporation of railways says :

Provided that in no case shall any railroad company construct a road-bed without first constructing the necessary culverts or sluices as the natural lay of the land requires for the necessary drainage thereof.

So that, in the state of Illinois in the construction of their road-bed the railroad companies are prohibited from completing the construction without first making the necessary openings or culverts for the proper drainage of the land such as the necessities of the case require.

Then, I find in the state of Minnesota that chapter 34, section 2697, is as follows :

That whenever a railroad is now laid out, opened or fenced through the farm lands of any such owner thereof, leaving a part of such farm lands on both sides of such railroad, such owner is authorized to construct a crossing under, over or across such railroad for the necessary passage of stock therein ; and whenever any owner of lands adjacent to the right of way of any railroad company finds it necessary to drain the same and to continue such drain or drains across the right of way of any railroad company, such owner is hereby authorized to construct such drain through the right of way and under the track or tracks of such company ; but said crossing and drains shall be constructed at said owners' expense, and after so constructed the said crossing or crossings shall be maintained and kept in good repair at the expense of the owners of such railroad. In all cases before constructing such crossing or drain, the owner of the land shall serve upon the railroad company a notice in the manner provided for serving a summons in a civil action, stating in detail the work which the owner desires to perform under the provisions of this Act. Within sixty days from the service of notice the railroad company may do such work at the expense of such owner.

So that in the state of Minnesota the law prevailing is that the culvert must be constructed by the railroad company, but at the owner's expense, within sixty days, and failing that, the owner of the land shall construct it, and the culvert or drain afterwards must be kept in repair by the railway company. The procedure is by serving a notice on the railway company the same as in a civil action. I find in the state of Missouri section 1110 is as follows :

It shall be the duty of every corporation, company or person owning or operating any railroad or branch thereof in this state, and of any corporation, company or person constructing any railroad in this state within three months after the completion of the same through any county in this state, to cause to be constructed and maintained suitable ditches and drains along each side of the roadbed of such railroad to connect with ditches, drains or watercourses, so as to afford sufficient outlet to drain and carry off the water along such railroad whenever the draining of such water has been obstructed or rendered necessary by the construction of such railroad.

And if they fail an action shall be commenced in the court having jurisdiction to compel them. So that every railroad in the state of Missouri must, within three months from its construction, not only drain its own road-bed, but shall construct lateral drains affording sufficient outlet to drain and carry off the water along such railroad whenever the draining of the water has been obstructed or rendered necessary by the construction of such road-bed, and this must be done at the expense of the railroad company. Then I find in the state of Texas, under the heading 'Right of way' article 4436, is as follows :

In no case shall any railroad company construct a roadbed without first constructing the necessary culverts or sluices as the natural lay of the land requires for the necessary drainage thereof.

This is an exact copy, I may say, of the law of the state of Illinois, by which, when the lay of the land is such that the natural drainage is towards the line of the railroad, the company is compelled to construct and maintain all the necessary culverts and sluices to permit the water to pass through, and those culverts and sluices must be of sufficient dimensions and so constructed as properly to drain the lands.

Then, I find in the state of California that while there is no statute law there, the railroad companies exercise the same control and dominion which any other owner of land has a legal right to exercise. This precise question was decided by the Supreme Court of the State of California on the 2nd day of June, 1902, in the case of Sanguinetti vs. Bock, in which the court held that :

The owner of upper lands has an easement for the discharge of surface water caused by rainfall as it is accustomed naturally to flow over the surface of lower adjacent land, and the owner of the lower land has no right to interrupt such flow to the injury of the upper owner.

Thus in the state of California the railroad company, if they construct a roadbed preventing the natural flow of water, is liable to damages, and they are therefore compelled to provide proper drainage at their own expense, or pay damages to the farmer which he has sustained by reason of that construction. I may say in passing that this is what is known generally as the law of dominant and servient tenement. That does not prevail, even in the province of Ontario. The province of Ontario, therefore, is that much worse off than the state of California. In the state of California the owner of the upper lands is entitled to the unimpeded natural flow of the surface water across the land of the adjoining owner lying further down. In the province of Ontario no such law exists, as the hon. member for Hastings well knows, for in a late case decided by the Court of Appeals in 1897, Ostram vs. Sills, it was expressly held that no such law exists in this province. Then I find in the state of Iowa :

When any person who is the owner of any swamp, marsh or wet lands which, on account of its condition, may endanger the public health, or is not for that reason in a proper condition for cultivation, shall desire to construct any open ditch or other underground drain for the purpose of draining such swamp land through the land of another——

Then follows the procedure, which is a local procedure, and practiced by serving a summons as you would in a civil action, which is the cheapest and most effective kind. Then it goes on to state :

Whenever a railroad crosses the land of any person or persons who desire to drain their lands for any of the purposes set forth in this section, the party or parties desiring such drain or drains shall notify the railroad company by leaving a written notice with the nearest station agent, stating in such notice the starting point, route and termination of such drain or drains, and if the railroad company refuse or neglect for a space of thirty days to dig across their right of way a drain of equal depth and size of the one dug by the party who wishes to drain his land, the railroad company shall be liable for the cost of the construction of such drain, to be collected in any court having jurisdiction.

So that in the state of Iowa a railroad company must construct a drain across their lands the same as a private individual, but at their own expense, to connect with the drain on each side of the railroad, to allow for sufficient drainage to properly cultivate the land, even though that land may be marsh or swamp land, and the drain must be as large and as deep as the drain with which it connects. Then I find that in the state of West Virginia, while they have no statute law, the general law is that the railroad company must at all times leave the drainage as free as it was before the construction of the road, and if, by reason of the construction of the road through lands, they obstruct the drainage, they are liable to him who is damaged thereby.

Therefore, practically in the state of Virginia the law of dominant and servient tenement is in force. Then in the state of Colorado, under article 15, section 8, of the constitution, it is provided that no corporation has a right to conduct their business in such a manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals, or the general well-being of the state. As the state commissioner of Colorado, in a letter to me says, the railroads were the pioneers in that country in putting in drainage crossings, and by section 3 of the article of the General Assembly of the state of Colorado, the charter of any railroad company can be revoked by the assembly in the event of their so conducting their business as to result injuriously to the proper development of the state and the proper development of the farming lands.

Now, in all the states a railroad company is prohibited from blocking up the water-courses. In a large number of the states there is special legislation compelling them, not only properly to drain the land under the roadbed, but to construct drains to connect with the drains on either side, and they must do it at their own expense and must subsequently maintain these drains at their own expense. In the United States there are a large number of states in which no drainage legislation is necessary, as in some provinces of Canada. Take, for instance, British Columbia, I venture to say that the drainage question does not affect probably a hundred acres of land in that large province. In the province of Quebec you hear little or nothing of it. There is no drainage in the province of Manitoba, or throughout the North-west Territories except for irrigation purposes. For instance, the states of Idaho, Utah and Montana, and some others, are arid states, and the only drains necessary to construct in those states are drains for the purpose, not of carrying water off, but for the purpose of carrying water on to the lands for the purpose of irrigating it. But, in every state in the American Union, wherever it is necessary to construct drainage works for the proper cultivation and tilling of the soil, the private landowner or the individual, has exactly the same rights as against the railway company which he has against any other landowner who seeks to block the flow of water, and if it is necessary for him to invoke the municipal or any other machinery in order to enforce that right, then, that machinery is of the simplest and most effective kind and he does not have to knock at the door of either the House of representatives or of any of the state legislatures, but he can take the same proceedings to carry drainage across the lands of railway companies as to carry drainage across a farm or other land the property of the private owner. Without taking up the time of the committee, the amendments which I propose are to be found very largely in Bill No. 19. Bill No. 19 is a Bill by which I proposed to amend the Railway Act, but as this general Railway Bill was coming before the House I thought it advisable not to press the matter before the railway commission, because, then, if my Bill did become law before this Bill of the hon. minister became law, it would only be law for a few days. I therefore thought the better course would be to seek to amend the Bill now under consideration. I propose to strike out sections 194 and 195 and to substitute the following sections which will be numbered 194, 195, 196, 197 and 198, as follows :

In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires :—

(a.) The expression 'engineer' includes a civil engineer, provincial land surveyor, and any person authorized by the law of the province to lay out, report upon or prepare plans, specifications or estimates of a drain or drainage work ;

(b.) The expression 'judge' means any judge of a court of record having jurisdiction in the county or district in which the proposed drainage work or any portion thereof is situated ;

(c.) The expression 'drain' or 'drainage work' means and includes every kind of ditch, drain, or sewer, open or covered wholly or in part, and whether in the channel of a natural stream, creek or water-course or not, and also the work and material necessary for bridges and culverts ;

(d.) The expression 'railway company' means a railway company subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

195. Subject to the provisions of section 195 to 198 of this Act, municipalities and landowners shall have the right of drainage on and across the property of any railway company to the same extent and by the same proceedings as they have by the law of the province in which the property is situated on and across the property of any other landholders.

196. Where no provision is made by law for hearing the parties interested——

That does not apply to the province of Ontario, because we have a very clearly defined ditches and water-courses Act and in this province notice is necessary.

Where no provision is made by law for hearing the parties before the laying out of the drainage work, and for an appeal to a judge or other officer, the engineer shall, before making his report or laying out the drain, notify, in writing, the railway company, by serving notice upon the agent of the company nearest to the proposed work, of a time and place convenient to the proposed drainage work to consider the location of the drain on the railway company's lands, the specifications and cost of the work to be done on the railway lands, and the proportion of the cost to be borne by the railway company.

2. Such notice to be given at least ten days before the time appointed for the meeting.

3. If the engineer and the representative of the railway company agree upon the matters aforesaid, they shall sign their agreement, and it shall be incorporated into the engineer's report and shall be given effect to in the construction of the work.

4. Should they fail to agree, they shall refer the matters in question to a judge, who shall, after such notice as he deems reasonable, determine the matters in question ; and the decision of the judge shall be final, and shall be incorporated into the engineer's report, and shall be given effect to in the construction of the work.

5. The costs occasioned by the meeting and by the reference to the judge shall be borne by the drainage work, or shall be apportioned between the drainage work and the railway company, as agreed upon or as decided by the judge.

6. The proportion of the cost of the drain across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

7. In the event of no representative of the railway company attending pursuant to the engineer's notice, his decision shall be final and binding on the railway company.

197. Whenever any drainage work——

I quite recognize in section 197 that every Tom, Dick and Harry should not be permitted to trespass upon the land of a railway company to do work in the manner in which he himself may think fit and proper, but, that the railway company themselves are the persons who ought to do the work upon their own land because they are more familiar with it and the road-bed and the interests of the travelling public will be safer in their hands.

Whenever any drainage work is to be constructed across or upon the lands of a railway company, the railway company shall have the option of constructing the portion of the drain across or upon its own lands at the amount of the estimated cost thereof ; and, in the event of its not exercising this option, the work shall be constructed in the same manner as other portions of the work are provided to be constructed.

Section 198 which I propose, possibly needs explanation, and I may just say here that in the construction of drains in the part of the country from which I come, it is found necessary to use large dredges. These dredges enter by Lake St. Clair and dredge up through the country for miles, but these dredges cannot pass under the track or under the rails of the railway company. True, we are in a natural watercourse, true, the law of the land says that they shall not obstruct the free natural flow of the water through a natural watercourse, but they construct their girders and lay their rails overhead and a dredge cannot pass, and if the dredge wants to pass the railway companies say : You cannot pass under until you settle with us. I made the statement upon the floor of parliament last year, I have made it to the railway companies themselves, and it is not necessary for me to repeat it, but I say to this House and I am prepared to back it up by documentary evidence that a railway company charged a township contractor in the constituency of my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. Sutherland) at the rate of $31 per hour for the men employed in the raising of the girders in order to permit his dredge to pass that it took twelve men four hours, or forty-eight hours of one man's time, to do that work to whom the railway company paid twelve and a half cents an hour and they charged the contractor $1,500 to go through. When we appealed to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, we were met by the answer and the argument—and I am not saying it was not a good argument—that we had entered into a contract to pay that amount. The contractor said : I was there, they would not let me pass until I entered into a contract. I agreed to pay the money and they said it was only a deposit. That is how I understood it, but the railway company said : You entered into a contract to pay $750 to go in to complete your work. When he got his work completed and wanted to come out they said : You pay $750 more before you get out. When the township wanted to do the same thing they were required to pay $31 per hour and they paid it rather than go before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The word Privy Council is generally understood as indicating the highest court in the realm, and the moment you say to the reeve of a township, or to any municipal corporation, or to any farmer, you ought to go to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, then you can drown him out year after year before he will go into what he considers a lawsuit with an immense railway corporation, and which lawsuit is to be tried five or six hundred miles away from where he lives. Therefore I say that in order to provide the proper machinery so that these drains may be constructed in the cheapest and most effective manner, I beg to move as section 198 :

Whenever any drainage work or proposed drainage work passes across the lands of a railway company, in the construction or repair of which work a dredge or dredges or other machinery is used, the railroad company shall be compelled to remove any obstruction to the free passage of said dredge or dredges across their property and which has been erected or placed thereon by the said company ; charging only the actual cost for the removal of same, except in case of a natural water-course, when the entire cost of the removal of said obstruction to the free passsage of the dredge or dredges shall be borne by the railway company.

I do not desire to take up the time of the House longer than to refer to the fact that while they have no right to obstruct the natural water-courses, the swale or depressions in the soil through which the water flowed in the state of nature and which was the natural drainage of that country, within the law as laid down in the province of Ontario—which it is not necessary to quote but which I have in my hand—these are not natural water-courses as defined by the courts of that province. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) the amendments which I have read.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope that the Minister of Railways and Canals will see his way to adopt substantially the amendments proposed by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan). I am well aware that there is very great necessity for a change in the law in this matter. I know it from cases that have come within my own personal knowledge, and I know also that a strong feeling exists in the country in favour of a change in the law. I have had a great many letters urging this both last session and this session, and I do not know what the significance of it is, but the greater number of these letters were from supporters of the present government. I do not know that they are entitled to quite so much weight on this account, but at all events, I replied to these gentlemen that the member for South Essex had brought the matter up ; that I had given his Bill some consideration, and that I believed it would bring about a very necessary change in the law. It is quite true that in the province of Ontario we have what I might call fair drainage laws. We have the ordinary drainage law, adapted to the larger drainage undertakings, and we have the Ditches and Water-courses Act, and, supplementing this, as applied to railways, we have what is called the Railway Ditches and Water-courses Act, which is to be read as part of the ordinary Ditches and Water-courses Act. The difficulty is that we have not been able to apply these Acts to railway companies incorporated by the Dominion parliament.

More than this, and increasing the difficulty, we have this circumstance, that from year to .year we have been declaring that other railway undertakings are 'works for the general advantage of Canada,' and wherever this has been done the provincial drainage laws have ceased to apply. Only a few months ago a municipality in my riding was confronted with a very serious difficulty in connection with the drainage of lands, having brought down its drainage works to the railway, and being prevented, without the permission of the railway company, from finding an outlet. I have no charge to make against the railway company in this instance, or against railway companies generally. They have a right to stand behind the statute laws which we give to them, and as long as they only do this, we have no right to complain ; but we were met with this difficulty, that we had to submit to the terms which the railway company saw fit to impose. Now, we have the proposition of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) that we shall place the government of this matter under the various provincial statutes. That, in the main, is, I think, the remedy required. There may be some need of improvement in provincial legislation ; but it is absolutely necessary, I think, that we should give landowners and municipalities the advantage of the provincial statutes in the various provinces. Instances have been given by the hon. member who introduced the amendment, and a great number of other instances may be given, of the disadvantages people have laboured under in this regard. In all cases where a railway passes through a rural section of the country, it is sure to pass over valleys where there is natural drainage from one part of a man's farm to another, which, by reason of the construction of the railway, becomes blocked. The law as quoted by the hon. member, as being applicable to several states of the American union, seems to be what should have been the law in force from the time we commenced to construct railways. I know, in connection with the pioneer railway of this country, the Northern Railway of Canada, now owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, that instances occurred as far back as 1851, in which the drainage of a man's property was so cut off that he was absolutely unable to cultivate sections of his land adjoining the railway property, and this difficulty in several instances exists to the present day. What is true in reference to that railway is true in reference to a great many others. What I submit is, that the true principle has been read from quotations this afternoon, that is, that the natural flow of the water, the natural drainage, whether this is what we regard as 'the common enemy,' namely, the surface water that falls on land adjoining the railway, or the ordinary streams of the country, should flow unimpeded by any works executed by the railway company. At the time the railway company carries through its works, the farmer has his lands, and the railway company comes in and occupies a certain portion of them. He has the means of drainage without impediment of any kind. When a railway is hereafter constructed, it should be constructed in such a way that it shall cause no impediment to the natural flow of water ; that wherever it is necessary, a culvert or other opening shall be in the first instance constructed by the railway company, and thereafter maintained at its expense ; that as regards a railway now in existence, it shall, as nearly as possible, be put upon the same basis ; that the provincial Act in force and such provincial legislation as may be from time to time enacted shall apply ; and that the railway companies shall be put on the same basis as other landowners in that regard. With reference to the amendment, it seems to me in the main to cover the ground. There is a provision however as to the expense of the work which as the mover pointed out, only applies where there is no provincial legislation. This provision should be, not of limited but of universal application. It is provided in subsection 6 of section 4 :

> The proportion of the cost of the drain across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

I do not understand that the provincial Acts put it on this principle, because, in the main, they are not dealing with railway questions, and this is a phase of the question which I submit the hon. Minister of Railways will require to consider. In the provincial Acts the basis on which the expense is apportioned is mainly on the constructionof the benefit which each party will derive from the construction of the drainage work, and in this case it is perfectly manifest that this would not be a fair principle upon which to assess the cost. The railway company could very justly say, we derive no benefit from the construction of this work beneath our railway or to or from our railway lands, and therefore, as we are only to pay in proportion to the benefit we derive, we have not to pay at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does not subsection 6 of section 4, as proposed by the hon. member for South Essex, cover that ?

Mr. LENNOX. That is the section I have just referred to. If that were of general application, of course it would cover the whole case as suggested by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), but that is a provision which only applies in those cases where there is no provincial statute, and in Ontario, where we have provincial legislation, we have to refer to that legislation in order to ascertain our rights. In the province of Ontario we assess the parties in proportion to the benefit they derive. If you leave the legislation exactly as it is in that province, you will be apt to be met with this difficulty, that however we may view the amendment proposed, we will be in this position, that the railway company, as regards the most expensive part of the work, namely, carrying a drain under the railway property, will escape. Whereas the true principle is that the railway which causes the obstruction should pay a proportion of the cost of the drainage, based on the increased cost of the work caused by the construction and operation of the railway. Again I submit that what we require is not that we shall always have to go to the board of commissioners for redress, but that the principle of decentralization, or the local administration of these matters—the doing of the work at home as much as we possibly can—is the one that should be followed ; and I therefore argue that in adopting the amendment of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan), you not only introduce useful legislation, by incorporating the provincial laws governing railway drainage, but you bring these matters before a tribunal better adapted to deal with them than the one proposed by this Bill. In my opinion, it is not wise or necessary that parties who have grievances in this regard should be compelled to come to Ottawa and submit them to the railway commission. It is true, as the hon. member for South Essex says, that all the objections and all the difficulties which obtained with regard to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council would apply to the railway commission.

Mr. McCARTHY. In the greater part of what my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has said I entirely agree. There is no doubt that demands are being made very strongly by landowners whose properties are adjacent to railway lands for a remedy or a measure by which they can obtain the right to drain under railway lands. The machinery at present is too cumbersome for them to take advantage of it. That is proved by the fact that the rights now given them are so seldom exercised. It entails very serious expense to present a case before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in respect of a drain which might only cost $100 or thereabouts. I do not say that the machinery is any more complicated than it should be, but the expense of coming to Ottawa and presenting the case before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is greater, in many cases, than the remedy sought would justify. In saying that, I wish to acknowledge that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has been very satisfactory as a whole, and the only reason why there is a demand for a railway commission is because the people living in distant parts of the different provinces find it too expensive to come to Ottawa. I understand that this commission will be an itinerary one, and it might be suggested that the commissioners should travel about from place to place and hear the different complaints. I fear, however, that that would not be a satisfactory solution, because the travelling expenses of the commissioners would not often be justified by the amount in dispute, and the landholder would be deprived of a remedy. Therefore, I am heartily in accord with the amendment suggested by my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan), namely, that the reference be made to the local judge of the county. That would be the easiest way of disposing of the matter. Both parties can be represented, and the machinery is simple and inexpensive. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), if his conclusion with regard to the suggested amendment is correct. I have not had sufficient time to consider it, to say positively that it is incorrect, but I go this far with him, that I think section 6 ought to be made to apply to all drainage works on or across railways, and that if a railway company should only be assessed in proportion to the benefit it derived from the work, inasmuch as it would be practically of no benefit to a railway to have that drain underneath its line, the adjacent landowner would have to pay the whole expense. In most of the states of the Union, the railway companies have to bear the cost of such drainage works. The reason is plain. They are the cause of the obstructions which prevent the natural flow of water, and should bear the expense of carrying off the water they have obstructed. If that be admitted, then in the majority of cases the railway company should bear the largest proportion, if not the whole, of the expense. I do not think that I need further take up the time of the House, especially in view of the exhaustive speech made by my hon. friend from South Essex, who has so well represented the cause of the landowner. Suffice it to say that representing my constituency, a certain portion of which is aggrieved by reason of the obstruction caused by railways, I am heartily in agreement with the amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have followed the observations of my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) with a great deal of attention and interest and I recognize that there is a good deal of force in much that he has said in support of the amendments suggested by him to this Bill. The committee, however, I think, would not expect me to be prepared to express any definite opinion as to the advisability of incorporating these amendments either as a whole or in part or in the form or language which the hon. gentleman has chosen. The question is of very great importance indeed, and I think that every one of these sections would need to be thought over a good deal before we should be justified in reaching a conclusion upon them or making them the law of the land. I am sorry to know, from the remarks which have dropped from all the speakers, that there is such an unwillingness to utilize the machinery that has already been created by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to afford relief to the people in these cases. For I am very strongly of opinion that a more effective, simpler, less expensive and prompter means of affording relief cannot be devised. It is true that the people who wish to have drainage facilities under railways have not applied to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in any considerable number. I believe that only in three or four instances have applications been made since we passed the last amending Act in 1900. But, though the applications have been few, the facility with which the people got just what they wanted without coming to Ottawa, without sending lawyers to Ottawa, and the satisfaction which they have had has been expressed to me in very strong terms by the people whose cases have been disposed of. The results have led me to conclude that if the people generally would only avail themselves of the means the existing law affords them, what they wanted done would be done satisfactorily and inexpensively. Now, we have provided —and we have acted upon the proviso— that if anybody communicated with the department stating that they desired to have drainage facilities under a railway, we would send an engineer immediately to the locality to verify the necessity. Then the two engineers get together, ascertain the facts and conditions and find out what can be done by agreement if possible. An agreement has been arrived at in every one of the cases we have had before us under our amendment Bill. The parties were able to settle and settle promptly. It is very simple indeed to send an engineer to investigate such matters. And, in cases of this kind, involving questions of the character of the structure of our great railways, the matter should be entrusted to a railway engineer. The road-bed of the railway must be maintained in all its solidity and strength if life and property are to be protected. My hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) proposes that a land surveyor shall determine what the character of these works shall be. We cannot realize, I think, the gravity of the responsibility we are assuming when we provide that a land surveyor shall be chosen to determine a matter of that kind. In fact, it need not be a land surveyor under my hon. friend's proposal, but any person authorized by the law of the province. So, it would be left to the law of the province to decide who was the proper person to prepare plans for the construction of drains under railways. We must seriously consider that before we make it the law of the land. It seems to me a matter of very great regret that it has become necessary in the opinion of so many people, as expressed by my hon. friend from Essex, that we should incorporate provincial machinery as a means of affording relief, when relief is so easily obtained under the machinery already provided. Suppose my hon. friend had a piece of land that he wished to drain under a railway. All he would have to do would be to write a letter stating the case and asking the attention of the department to it. An engineer would be sent at once. The expense could hardly be less, for it only requires a two cent postage stamp to pay for the letter,—in fact, it does not require even that, for you can write to the department for nothing. Can any one conceive of provincial machinery that will be more efficient or less expensive? When you have an engineer of knowledge and experience he can tell at once what kind of works can be adopted for the drainage of land under a railway without danger of weakening the road-bed.

Mr. COWAN. I would like to say at once to the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) that there is no intention on the part of myself or the people who seek drainage under railways to do anything that would lead to the impairment of the strength of the road-bed of any railway. The people are quite willing that plans and specifications for the construction, even of private drains shall be submitted to the Railway Department. But they want to be able to deal with the initial machinery at home and carry on the inspection and argument there, without being obliged to pay counsel to come four or five hundred miles to Ottawa. I admit that parliament has done all that lay in its power to simplify the machinery, consistent with maintaining the procedure and allowing the argument to take place before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. But, notwithstanding that they have done that, that procedure and these attempts have resulted in absolute failure. And I say that there are thousands of acres of land that are at times inundated and will remain inundated to the end of time, if the owners must use the machinery of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for the simple purpose of securing the construction of a drain that may, perhaps cost fifty dollars. As long as that cumbrous machinery exists the people will lie under this injustice rather than travel here to Ottawa or ask counsel to come here to plead for special drainage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. While I have every desire to give effect to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) says, to understand it and to yield to his argument, I am at a loss to know what he means by talking about 'cumbrous machinery'. If there can be a machinery simple to a fault it is machinery provided by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The only trouble is that the people will not write, will not express a wish, will not even state what they desire. It is not that that any desire they have expressed has not been acted upon. There is no question of counsel being compelled to come to Ottawa.

Mr. COWAN. They know that the railway companies will be represented at Ottawa, and I venture to say that no lawyer will institute proceedings and take his chances before a tribunal where the other side is represented and his client is not represented. He will not start the proceedings unless he can carry them through. Speaking with the experience of some little drainage practice, I say I would not institute proceedings before any tribunal, even in a matter involving $25, and let the railway be represented before the tribunal and my client not be represented. I understand that, as the minister says, he has done all in his power, but, these people who will not take advantage of the door that the minister has sought to open. They will not seek in that way the drainage of their lands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot understand what the hon. gentleman means by the railway being represented. An application made by any person for drainage facilities would be heard in the way such applications have always been heard; the application has been heard in the locality, when the engineer is there, and the persons interested were not asked to come to Ottawa.

Mr. COWAN. There is no provision of that kind in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a general provision, and it will be carried out exactly in the same way, whereby the board is authorized to appoint anybody for any special purpose under the Act to report and decide upon questions, subject to the sanction of the board.

Mr. COWAN. What section is that?

Mr. HEYD. I would like that point to be more clearly defined. Where would the argument take place, in Ottawa or on the spot?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the few instances which have occurred where applications have been made to us for a drain under railways, there was no argument at all, and no contest. We sent one of our engineers to the locality, after notifying these people and the railway company that he would be down at such a date, and notifying all parties to be present. Two engineers met and looked the situation over, and came to a conclusion, and the railway company agreed to put the works through, the parties were satisfied, and we heard nothing more about it.

Mr. HEYD. Supposing they would not come to an agreement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there was a difference of opinion between the engineers, we would get a report from our engineer, and after hearing the report of the company's engineer, as it would be largely an engineering question, it would be decided by the chief engineer, in all probability. The parties would not be called upon to appear and argue upon an engineering question. Sometimes a question arises as to the amount of the charge that ought to be imposed upon the respective parties; that would be a matter of controversy, but it would not be necessary to bring the parties to Ottawa to discuss that question either. An engineer could go down and hear what they had to say, and the Railway Committee would decide.

Mr. HEYD. Where do the lawyers come in in that case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there would be much opportunity for lawyers. They might appear on the ground locally if they wished. The hon. gentleman from Essex asked me to tell him where that section was. It is section 48 of the Bill.

Mr. COWAN. The minister will agree that if you have not got any application you never will get one. It may be right, but if these people do not think it is right, you cannot convince them. We have tried and failed. What we want to do is to try and relieve them from this trouble without doing injustice to any one. Surely we can get down to that point and still permit full supervision of the road-bed by the government engineer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I see my hon. friend proposes in his Bill that a judge shall determine these questions. I do not know what exceptional quality a judge may have to determine questions of engineering.

Mr. COWAN. The question can be easily settled so far as the question of costs is concerned, that were these people fail to agree they shall be borne by the railway company. So far as the plans or the manner in which the work is to be done are concerned, I am quite willing, and these people are willing, that they should be approved by the Railway Committee before the matter is submitted to a judge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That might be the only way of solving the alleged difficulty. But it strikes me that a judge is not endowed with the qualities of adjusting questions of that kind. I see that my hon. friend proposes :

The proportion of the cost of the drain across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

Now in many instances where lands have been expropriated and damages have been awarded, they have been awarded having regard to the question of the cost of drainage, and compensation has been made upon that basis.

Mr. COWAN. So far as the Grand Trunk and the Michigan Central are concerned, they were built through that country when it was largely wild land, the question of drainage was not thought of. I can understand that where a road is going through an old settled country that question might be taken into consideration, and if that had been taken into consideration on the land proposed to be drained that would be considered by the judge.

Mr. BROCK. Where a railroad is built through wild lands of little value, and the building of the railroad made those lands valuable, do you mean to say that the railroad should bear the total expense of the drainage, and that the land should be free from it altogether ?—because this land has been made valuable by those who had the enterprise to build the railroad under these circumstances ?

Mr. COWAN. Not at all.

Mr. BROCK. I thought the whole argument of the hon. gentleman was that this drainage should be paid altogether by the railroad company and maintained by them. I think that would be most unfair when the lands have been made valuable, as the hon. member for Essex says, by the railroad being built through them when they were of little value.

Mr. COWAN. I want to set the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) right. While I did state that the road was constructed through these lands when they were wild lands, I did not state that the railroad had made these lands valuable at all. It is the drainage which has made them valuable.

Hon. Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. BROCK. I did not say that, but I did say that had not the railways been built the land would not have been as valuable as it is.

Mr. COWAN. Prior to the perfecting of the Municipal Act which enabled corporations to drain land, to construct large tap drains, to borrow money and issue debentures extending over years against the land benefiting, these lands were absolutely unfit for cultivation. Prior to that law coming into force no one man could drain his own land, because he had no outlet. He was only dumping the water upon the land below him, and there was no natural water course. But, when they constructed large artificial drains on the same principle as they improve the sewage in a city, they were enabled to drain their lands, and that is what has made these lands valuable—the drainage which the railways obstruct.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think it is quite clear that the drainage laws, having regard to the way in which the railway companies interfere with the property of landowners, are not what they ought to be. I see that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals does not dispute the contention that some remedy is required, but as I understand the hon. minister, he thinks the present machinery is applicable for the purpose if properly applied. I am bound to say, after listening to what has been said, that, in my humble judgment, the amendments proposed by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) provide the best remedy. I think if he will make subsection 6 of section 4 in his original Bill—section 196 as it is proposed to be inserted in the Bill now under consideration—a separate section, it will carry out the effect which is intended better than if it is allowed to remain a subsection of section 4. That subsection, I think, might be held, perhaps, in construing the statute, to have relation to the beginning of section 4, and it might be said to be dependent upon that, which provides that :

Where no provision is made by law for hearing the parties interested.

And so on. There is provision in Ontario, and yet nothwitstanding, it is important that we should have an enactment such as this subsection applying. That is :

The proportion of the cost of the drain across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

I think it is admitted by all parties who know ; at all events, it is my opinion, that as a rule tribunals decide these questions of cost in accordance with the benefits received by the parties, and as far as the railway receives no benefit, the railway can very well indeed say : We should not pay any portion of the cost, because we get no benefit. That argument might prevail in Ontario, because of there being a state of affairs that is not quite within the meaning of section 4, of which subsection 6 is a part. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he make a special section of subsection 6, so that it will apply to all cases, irrespective of whether there is provision in the province for drainage or not. In regard to what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has said, I think the argument of the hon. gentleman shows that the proceedings before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council must be very cumbersome or they would have been used to a greater extent. There is no doubt that a grievance does exist in regard to this matter. When I was in the neighbourhood of the constituency of my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan), in speaking to the farmers in regard to another question of railway law which will come up in a day or two—I refer to the question of cattle-guards—I found that the farmers were greatly interested in it. They buttonholed me on several occasions and urged me to support the hon. member for South Essex in trying to do what he is trying to do here now. They impressed upon me the very views which my hon. friend has impressed upon the committee to-day, and they paid me the compliment of asking that I would do what I could to assist my hon. friend. I promised that I would do everything possible to assist him, and I am trying to carry out my pledge, not to my own constituents, but to my fellow countrymen, who, although they live in a far part of the province of Ontario, are equally as good Canadians. The procedure of which the hon. minister has spoken, must of necessity be so cumbersome that it cannot be used in such a way as to be efficacious, or to accomplish justice. The hon. gentleman admits in his argument that to carry out what he proposes it will be necessary to depute the duty to an engineer, or two or three engineers. These engineers would not live where the property is or near the situation which requires attending to. The county judge, to whom it is proposed to delegate this final power, is to be found in every county, and it is proposed by this amendment that a land surveyor or engineer shall make observations, inquiries, and report as to the question of cost, and if not finally agreed upon between the parties, it shall be left to the county judge. The hon. minister says that if they write a letter to the department it will be attended to. No doubt it will be attended to in some way, but I do not think it will be attended to in such a way as to accomplish justice. It will be impossible for the department, or for the railway commission, which will now take the place of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, to go to every locality and conduct an investigation upon the spot without incurring enormous expense. I do not think that the hon. minister contemplates that they should do that, but I think he contemplates that they should send an engineer. I do not think that is a proper delegation of authority in order to have these matters satisfactorily attended to. If the machinery provided by the hon. member for South Essex is adopted, it seems to me that the proceedings will not only be much cheaper, but the question will be much more satisfactorily and correctly inquired into, and the result will be more sound, just and quickly arrived at. The hon. minister says that the people have not taken advantage of the fact that they can appeal to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I think it is very pertinent to ask why. It must be for some such reason as that suggested by the hon. member for South Essex that they do not think it will pay them to do so. They know that there will be railway lawyers to look after the railway side of the case, and they will feel that it will be hopeless to expect to cope with them unless their side is presented by counsel, and unless they have their evidence there. If the proposal of my hon. friend were adopted—the matter would be decided in the locality. If the railways were not satisfied with the report of the local engineer they would send their own engineer and he could give evidence before the county judge as to what he thinks the cost of the work should be. The county judge could hear the evidence of the railway engineer, and as the county judge is accustomed to dealing with questions of drainage, he could apply the same judicial mind to the question of railway drainage as to other questions of drainage under the Ditches and Watercourses Act, and I think if this procedure were adopted it would be found that the expense would be 25 or 50 per cent less than it would be if the procedure proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals were adopted, and that the judgment given would be many hundred per cent better and more satisfactory. More than that, when the county judge decides one or two of these cases the people will be apt to say: We know what he will do, and there will not be so many cases arising. I think if the hon. member for South Essex had two or three of these cases determined, if the railway engineer were present, and if the case of the railway were presented by counsel, if after reserving judgment for a day or two the county judge gave such a decision as the county judges are in the habit of giving, sound, and equitable, the railway company and the owners of property would be found agreeing much more frequently than they previously have done. The railway company would have their attention drawn to the fact by these two or three cases that they were not able to do as they liked. People do not get them to agree, and cannot force any decision upon them, and the very thing that the hon. minister wants to accomplish is an agreement between the parties, but it is not accomplished now because the railways know that an individual cannot afford to make them come to an agreement. If the procedure proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Cowan) is adopted, the railway will be compelled to do it, and as the county judges will give reasonable and just decisions the railways will submit to them and there will be very little litigation of any kind.

Mr. STEPHENS. A portion of the county which I have the honour to represent is very deeply interested in this matter of drainage across railways. I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan), but I may say that the farmers have still more grievances than he has enumerated. When the Erie and Huron Railway was built in my riding, they put in culverts which were supposed to be large enough to drain the lands, but after the road had been in operation for a few years it was found that these culverts were not sufficient to carry off the water. I went to the railway company myself on one occasion and asked what it would cost to enlarge the culverts, and the answer I got from the manager of the company was, that they would not enlarge them at all unless they were compelled to do so by law, and that they would do just what the law compelled them and nothing more. The farmers in that county have suffered ever since that time, and great loss has been inflicted upon them. In the spring, and sometimes as late as June, when there is a freshet, the water backs through under these culverts into the fields and it will remain there for several days. When the water begins to fall the railway culverts are so small that it takes quite a number of days for it to run off the land, and the sun coming out in the meantime and heating the water, there is great damage done to the crops. There should be some law compelling the railway companies at their own expense to open up drains sufficient to carry away the water. When a farmer has gone to a great deal of labour and expense in cultivating his land, he finds himself subject to great loss and damage because of the water remaining in his fields on account of the railway being between him and the outlet. In days gone by the Grand Trunk Railway was willing to accede to the wishes of the farmers, and they frequently agreed to provide a remedy without a lawsuit, but of late they seem to have got it into their heads that they will give the farmers no relief whatever. The fact of the matter is, that in the counties of Kent and Essex the farmers have got to dread the idea of a railway coming through that part of the country, because they know that their lands will be drowned out for want of drainage, that the cattle-guards are insufficient to protect their cattle, and so they would sooner do without a railway altogether than put up with the nuisance that a railway causes. I think the members of this House should take the matter in hand and provide in this Bill now that some relief should be given to the farmers in this respect. There are not many members in the House who really know the great inconvenience and loss that farmers owning low-lying lands are put to because in the majority of ridings the land is rolling, and the farmers do not suffer to the same extent as we do in Western Ontario. I hope that the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) will be adopted.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). When the minister spoke of the simplicity of an appeal to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, he forgot that the farmers are accustomed to regard this as a matter of property and civil rights, to be dealt with by the provincial legislatures, and that they look to their own municipal and provincial laws to provide the remedy. But when they find that they have to come to Ottawa and embark on a procedure which is not familiar to them, the chances are that they will bear their wrongs rather than go to that trouble and expense. That is the reason why more appeals have not been made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in relation to drainage. I believe that these amendments if adopted would be in the best interest of the people of the country. The trip to Ottawa alone would cost these farmers a comparatively large sum of money, and when you add to that the cost of a lawyer, the procedure is prohibitory.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). The opinion of many hon. gentlemen seems to be that we do not suffer from this grievance in the province of Quebec. It is quite the reverse. Our farmers are constantly complaining of the treatment they receive from the railway companies, and I have been obliged myself on many occasions to ask railway companies to provide drainage for farmers and they have always refused. It has been said that when the lands were expropriated, the farmers were compensated for this damage, but that is not so. If a farmer files a claim at the expropriation for damages by reason of his land being flooded, he will be answered that the law provides for drainage and that the companies are compelled to drain the land. But in order to oblige them to drain the land we must come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and that procedure is absolutely not available for the vast majority of farmers. These amendments should be supported by every member who represents a rural constituency.

Mr. STEPHENS. When they start to acquire the right of way for a railroad, they go up and down the country for miles trying to find a man who will sell his land cheaply. Then they get one after the other, and finally the remainder of the land owners are obliged to sell out at a low price. I know that some men in my county did not get as much per acre for the land taken for railway purposes as they could sell their whole farm for, while they should practically get ten times as much. They have sold land for railway purposes as low as $60 or $70 an acre, when the whole farm has been sold at $80 an acre.

Mr. HEYD. It is singular to hear the Minister of Railways define how exceedingly simple it is for a man to get his grievance against a railway company redressed. He told us that all the farmer had to do was to write to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, when an engineer would be sent out to meet the railway engineer, the two would adjudicate upon the evidence, I suppose, and if they disagreed there would be a report to the chief engineer, who would make his award, and the whole thing is done. If the procedure is so simple it is rather a peculiar thing, that according to the statement of the minister, only three or four people have availed themselves of this simple remedy during the past three years. It strikes me that there must be an immense lot of ignorance throughout Canada, and amongst the farmers particularly, as to this means of redress which is so exceedingly simple. If the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) and the Minister of Railways would clear up this little darkness that rests upon that phase of the question, it would illuminate the minds of a great many of us who are not railway lawyers and who have not had drainage cases in court.

Mr. COWAN. I might just say, for the benefit of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) that no engineer sent by the Department of Railways and Canals has any power to settle the matter, but the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, on an application being made to them, can send an engineer, who can inspect the premises and make a report to the Committee. I have never known the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to decide a question of the right to cross a railroad without giving an opportunity to the parties to be heard; and I venture to say that no Railway Committee of the Privy Council that has ever sat or ever will sit, will ever say to a railway corporation on the one hand or to a farmer on the other, our engineer has been on the ground, and we will take his report and swallow it holus-bolus, and you will not be heard. When that is the case, the railway company will be heard every time; its lawyers will be on hand; but where does the poor farmer come in? As long as I practice at the bar I will never advise any client of mine to submit his case in that way, unless he is prepared to back it up by facing the corporation lawyers. So that while the present procedure is simple, it is just as complicated as any other legal process.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (North Essex). The Bill submitted last session by the hon. member for South Essex, and again this session, meets a crying want of the community, as must be evident from the fact that both last year and this year, in the press, by petition, and by letters to members, we have all been apprised of grievances existing. The minister seems to think that the present mode of procedure is a simple one; but the fact is that, far from considering it simple, the community believe it to be complex, dilatory, and expensive. These are the things they seek to rectify, and I believe the amendment introduced by the hon. member for South Essex will go a long way to rectify them. They desire a remedy which will be simpler, speedier and less expensive, and I believe there has been no amendment introduced during the long discussion which has taken place on this Railway Committee Bill, which will meet with greater approbation particularly on the part of the people of the province of Ontario, and the western section thereof, than the amendments proposed by the hon. member for South Essex. I have heard no valid objections to those amendments on the part of the minister or anybody else, and the whole trend of the argument is entirely in favour of it.

Mr. SCHELL. With reference to the question of easy decisions by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, I will just take time enough to instance a case in my own riding. Any person travelling past the village of Glen Robertson may notice that to the south there is a range of hills, and that the railway embankment makes another obstacle to the north. As it passes the village the road curves to the right into the bank, making an artificial dam, and it is impossible to drain the land, because there is no culvert under the track at the foot of the valley. The result is that there is not a cellar in the lower part of the village, simply because the water is on a level with the top of the land. I have been told—I cannot give this as a fact—that some years ago application was made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council through counsel for a remedy and that an engineer was sent to Glen Robertson to inquire into the matter, but no further action was taken. The people were not able to invoke the provincial drainage Act, because the railway is a work for the general advantage of Canada. The result is that for the last ten or fifteen years, although there are several hundred people living in that village, it has been impossible to have a cellar in the lower part of the village, owing to there being no means of draining the lower end of the valley; and having applied to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and having received no redress, the people do not feel like applying again. I propose to support the proposition of the hon. member for South Essex simply on the ground that the people in this instance tried that very simple process of appealing to Ottawa, and were not successful.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member for South Brant seems to think that the plan which I intimated was so simple and so easy is scarcely consistent with the facts presented by the hon. member for South Essex, who does not understand just what the foundation of my statement is. I am afraid that I cannot make it any clearer than I have to the hon. gentleman. All I will say is that neither of the hon. gentlemen will say that they have heard or known of any instance in which an application has been made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to drain under the road-bed of a railway, and the application has not received attention or been satisfactorily dealt with.

Mr. HEYD. How does the minister account for the fact that notwithstanding this exceeding simplicity and these grievances that we have heard of, there have been only three or four applications for redress to the Privy Council in four years ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not profess to account for it. I say, however, as a fact, that the applications have not been made, and therefore nobody can claim that they are not entertained.

Mr. HEYD. Is it the lawyers they are afraid of, and not the committee ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It must be. It is very evident that the general sense of the House is decidedly in favour of the adoption of some such local plan as has been proposed here, and that the reasons which I have assigned for continuing to vest the jurisdiction in the Railway Committee or in the Railway Commission under this Bill, do not appear to have impressed themselves strongly on the gentlemen who are representing these districts. It will therefore be necessary, I take it, that we should consider and make any proper and necessary alterations in the proposed amendments, to make them workable. I shall give the very best attention I can to the whole subject, and I hope that, not at the next meeting of the committee, but an early meeting, I may be able to suggest some substantive sections, or these sections somewhat improved, to the consideration of the committee. I would like, however, to have the sense of the committee on the proposition contained in the sixth clause. It looks to me at first blush to be a very drastic proposition to say that 'the proportion of the cost of the drain across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.'

It simply means that the railway companies shall pay a very much larger portion, perhaps five-sixths or four-fifths of the cost of the works. The excavation under the road-bed will necessitate an arch or some other solid support for the road-bed above, and that will be certainly a very large portion of the cost of a proper arch under the roadway sufficiently strong to carry the weight of the embankment above. Is the committee of opinion that it would be well for parliament to make a flat-footed declaration that all the extra cost should be borne by the railway. It may be that the ditch could be just as well made in some other direction and that the fact that the railway company have to bear the greater portion of the cost might stimulate unnecessary demands by land-owners to have these drains made under the road-beds when they might just as well be made elsewhere. We are desirous of being just and fair to the farmers, but at the same time we owe a duty to even a railway company, and should see that it is not going to be unduly penalized. We should only exact from railway companies what would be fair. I do not know myself just what to suggest to the committee at present. If you had a tribunal like the railway committee, which would have knowledge of the peculiar facts and conditions and have acquired a good deal of training, as it would be bound to do in a little while, and experience in these matters, it seems to me that you could very safely trust such a tribunal to evolve some principle and act upon it in the settlement of questions of this kind. I am not prepared to make any proposition to the committee now, but I think it is a matter which calls for serious reflection before we declare what principle should guide us in determining the proportion of these costs that should be borne by the railway companies. If the other members of the committee have any suggestions to offer I shall be very glad to receive them.

Mr. COCHRANE. I can tell the hon. minister my opinion as a farmer. Why should not a railway company bear the expense of draining the lands adjoining its line ? In the section of the country from which I come, most valuable land for pasturage is very seriously affected by improper drainage. The clearing away of the woods has had this effect, that there is nothing to control or contain the water in the woods and swamps. The water rushes down in greater volume in the spring and floods these lands adjacent to the railway. I cannot see why a county court judge, who is competent to deal with questions of drainage in the province of Ontario, would not be competent to deal with the same questions under this Bill. The hon. minister, who knows all about it, says that the methods of dealing with these matters in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council are very simple, but they are not so simple to our rural population. These questions get mixed up with politics, and the people in the province I come from do not think that any private individual can get any justice from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council sitting in Ottawa. Whether that opinion be well founded or not, it prevails. Besides the expense is enormous.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had no idea there was such widespread ignorance.

Mr. COCHRANE. Perhaps the people are not so ignorant as the hon. gentleman thinks. The hon. gentleman must see it illustrated in the Railway Committee every day that there is the opinion in the public mind that the minister himself is not free from the influence of railway corporations. Whether it be due to ignorance or not, that opinion prevails. I do not see why a judge, who has to do with such cases all through the province of Ontario, is not competent to deal with similar questions between railway corporations and private individuals. No man is in doubt when a judgment is good. Some cranks may feel aggrieved, but the people of Ontario are well satisfied with the decisions given by their county court judges. Speaking for the county I represent, the people and the municipality are perfectly satisfied with the decisions rendered by the county court judge, and that court is much less expensive than either the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or this board of commissioners. If, as the hon. minister says, people do not go before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, it is because of the expense. A farmer coming to Ottawa must have a lawyer and witnesses and the cost of these are out of proportion to the amount at issue.

Mr. STEPHENS. Since the hon. minister has asked for the sense of the members on this question, I have no hesitation in saying that the railway companies should pay the extra expense of putting drains under their railway lines. These railway companies are given the privilege of building railways, and in many cases, if they took the precaution of making culverts or outlets for drains, when they built the line, sufficient to do for all time, there would be no dispute. It is not the fault of the farmer if the railway is there.

Mr. HEYD. In the settlement of this particular phase of the question, we do not need to be drainage lawyers. An element of justice comes in here which all are equally competent to decide. Should a railway company be called upon to pay for benefits that are conferred upon other people and not upon themselves? I have a particular case in which I am interested to a considerable extent. In the city of Brantford, in which I live, there is a piece of ground crossed by the railway. The railway bought the right of way through a swale forty years ago. They paid the owners of the land compensation and took over the property they required, and I presume that involved all conflict or troubles that thereafter might ensue. Since then that swale has become part of the city of Brantford. The drain that the railway put through that land answered the purposes of that time, and it still answers all the purposes of the railway. But there are hundreds of acres of land that could be used for building sites if the drain were deepened. Upon whom should the cost fall? Upon the property benefited by the improvement or upon the railway company, which has no earthly interest in it? If I understand the proposition of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan), under such circumstances the railway company will pay all the cost, while the other people will reap all the benefit. I think there is an element of injustice there. It seems to me that, under such circumstances, the property that is to be benefited should bear a fair proportion of the cost, to the extent that it is benefited, and the railways should not be called upon to bear all the expense involved in putting a stone drain underneath the railway.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). This question is one that affects other portions of the Dominion besides the province of Ontario. I am very glad that my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers) spoke on the subject, and I also would like to say a few words, for two reasons. In the first place, I do not want the world to think that all the grumblers came from Ontario. And, in the second place, the people of my own county are deeply interested in the subject. In my own county of Huntingdon we have two railways, one crossing the northern part of the county throughout its entire length, about thirty miles, and another angling across. The first railway was built in the year 1880. It runs in a peculiar way and cuts off the drainage of the whole back part of the county from the rivers Chateauguay and Trout river, which afford the natural outlet for the drainage for that part of the country. When the road was built by the Grand Trunk Railway they put in such culverts as were necessary at that time, that is wherever there were ditches or water-courses. And here I might say that I have heard it said by those who have knowledge of such matters, that we in the province of Quebec have the simplest drainage laws of any province of the Dominion. If the committee will allow me, I might state the procedure. In the first place, a petition is presented to the municipal council by those requiring drainage of their land. The municipal council appoint a special superintendent. The superintendent calls a meeting of the parties interested and hears what they have to say, and prepares his proces verbal. The parties are given notice and are invited to come before the council to have it holomogated. Of course, there is a right of appeal from the decision of the council to the Circuit Court. Our trouble is that we cannot get at the railway companies in the same manner. I do not see why a railway company, building a road through a county should not be treated the same as any other owner of land. In other cases notices are posted up in certain places fixed by the council, and the interested parties are invited to appear on a certain date before the superintendent. And the superintendent, by the way, is not necessarily or even usually an engineer. He is very often a farmer who has had a good deal to do with drainage matters. I must say that, so far as the railways are concerned, the question of compensation has never come up with us. Any work requiring to be done that has been done by the railway has been paid for by the railway. Our trouble is to get the railway to do the work. Another difficulty which has arisen in our county is that, as the country is opened up, we find it necessary to deepen the water-courses which cross the railway track. They have built, in the first place, wooden culverts, in which they have what they call mud-sills ; and, when we try to deepen the drain, we find these culverts not deep enough. We do not want to interfere with the work of the railway, yet we have found great difficulty in getting the railway companies to do that work. But when they do it, they pay for it themselves. I think that is fair. I do not see why a company should build a bank across a county to interfere with the drainage ; and when it is necessary in order to drain the land behind them to put a drain across their track. I do not see why it should not do it at its own expense. This interferes with the drainage of Huntingdon very much, because, as I said, our natural drainage for several concessions north of the Grand Trunk Railway has been to the Chateauguay and Trout rivers, these flowing into the St. Lawrence. We find it necessary sometimes, as the country is cleared up, to change the line of the water-course, and then the difficulty arises with the railway company. It becomes necessary to apply to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. We in our county have much the same feeling with regard to that body as has been expressed by hon. members here. The fact that it is so far away, that it is such an important body, and that it has such a big name as 'The Railway Committee of the Privy Council,' have a tendency to make people feel that they do not want to have anything to do with it. And so, through time and patience—waiting, and waiting, and waiting—we have been able, so far as I know, to get our difficulties remedied one by one. It would be a great benefit to the province of Quebec, as well as to the province of Ontario, if some simpler way was provided. And I do think it should be by some person on the ground. In the province of Quebec we must have drainage, we cannot raise crops otherwise. If the drains are stopped the people suffer. We have the valley of the Chateauguay, the valley of the St. Lawrence and the valley of the Richelieu. All these have to be drained, and if the farmers do not drain them they cannot raise crops. We would like to have some simpler process by which we could deal with the railway companies as easily as we can deal with other persons owning land. As to the question of compensation, I am clear in my own mind that whatever obstruction to the drainage of the country has been caused by the railway, when an opening has been made through the railway to provide drains, it should be at the expense of the railway whose works have caused the obstruction.

Mr. BROCK. I think that we all agree that we need only consider in this matter what is fair and just. I do not think that the railway company should be allowed to build a line like that in the county of Huntingdon or any other county against the will of the people. But if the farmers want the road built, give bonuses towards it and do everything they can to secure the construction of it——

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) allow me to ask him a question ? Is it not a fact that the railway can push the line through by expropriation without asking the consent of the landowners ?

Mr. BROCK. Quite true, but if the drainage is required, the time to get it is at the time when the road is built.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) will excuse me. There were areas of land not cleared that did not require to be drained when the railway was built. But as the country is developed these swamps require to be drained.

Mr. BROCK. All that is wanted is what is fair and just. The railway is built through a province or through a country, through waste land that is of little or no value, and the building of it benefits the land and increases its value. As the hon. member has said the land in Huntingdon is no good unless it is drained. But that country has been opened and settled for the last fifty or sixty years. The proper time to apply for drainage is when the road is built. As they neglected to do it, and their lands have been benefited by the building of a railway, the question is : What is a fair compensation ? Who should build the drain ? At whose expense ? I agree with those gentlemen who say that the county judge is, in most cases, the best man to refer cases of that kind to. He would give the greatest satisfaction in most cases. A case might arise of such importance that the judge would prefer to refer it to the Committee of the Privy Council. But we are told that would entail expense. I think a great deal too much has been made of the expense of going to the Privy Council. They are a body appointed to settle matters of this kind, and they are doing it every day, they are very approachable, they are responsible for settling matters of this kind, and should be held responsible. Under these circumstances I think we should take as little out of their hands as we possibly can. This creating courts all through the country for settling these trivial matters, hon. members will find a very expensive piece of business. The government are here, these matters could be brought before them at no expense, or if the government chose to delegate their power to an engineer and send him to examine the line of road, and the circumstances, they can get a report from him and act upon it at very little expense. But certainly I think that land which has been largely improved by the building of the railroad on it, land which was worth nothing before the railroad was built, should bear the expense afterwards of improving its own drainage, particularly when the railroad company has paid for the right of way through that land. Under these circumstances I think it would be a great injustice to penalize a railroad company. It is so easy to get up a feeling against a railroad, that is a popular thing all through the country, particularly when people expect an election. Hon. members can go back and say: See what great things we attempted to do for you. Let us be fair, we can afford to be fair and do what is right. The right thing to decide is who shall bear the expense of these drains. I think that can be done to a large extent by referring the question to the judges in the counties which the railroads run through. I do not think there need be much discussion on this question beyond making it clear that the aim is to do what is fair, and not penalize the railroads more than they deserve.

Mr. COWAN. I feel sure that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) did not refer to me when he spoke about trying to make political capital by waving the red right hand against the railroad companies and rousing up the people. I quite agree with a great deal of what he has said. I quite agree that there is a feeling in the country against railway corporations. I can tell the hon. member for Toronto that if he lived in the county of Essex he would say that his neighbours were the most patient and the most long-suffering people on the face of the earth, and he would be surprised that their animosity against railway corporations is not greater than it is. I admit that certain agitators may try to work up a feeling against railway corporations, but so far as the county of Essex is concerned, no agitator or any one else has been quite as responsible for working up a feeling against railway corporations as the railway corporations themselves. I say here with a knowledge of the county of Essex, and as having been engaged in these drainage questions for ten or twelve years, I never asked a railway company to make an opening underneath their road for the drainage of land, even after they had double-tracked the line and stopped up the ditches the farmers already had, that I did not have to fight it to the last ditch in order to get even meagre justice at the hands of railway corporations. Further than that, I say my own opinion is that the farmer ought to pay for the cost of the construction of a drain across the lands of the railway company, that is the lands in the shape in which the company found them, because if there had been no railway they would still have had to construct that ditch across the lands now covered by the railway. But where a railway company comes upon my farm and says, I will take a portion of your land, peaceably if you like, forcibly if I must, then upon that land which they compel you to sell they erect an embankment, thereby increasing the cost of the drainage of the land lying above the railway and which to properly drain I must cross the railway, then I think in all justice, at least as far as agricultural lands are concerned, the increased cost occasioned by the construction of that roadbed ought to be borne by the railway company that constructed it, under the power which parliament gave them to construct it against my will. That is only fair and just. As I have already stated in my opening remarks on this section, I can point to you farmer after farmer in the county of Essex whose lands the railway has gone through. Supposing they only take an acre or two worth from $40 to $100 an acre. The farmer does not want to go to an arbitration for expropriation, and the result is that damages for obstructing the drainage of the lands is not taken into consideration, it never has been in any case I have known in that country. But the company has power to take his land without his permission. I can name one whose name has appeared in the newspapers, Mr. Thomas Dunmore, of the township of Tilbury. The Michigan Central Railway went through his farm about 1885, and to-day the company want more money from Mr. Dunmore to put an ordinary sewer under the railway than they paid for the land that they took from him. When he goes to a lawyer about it he is told that he must go to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. That settles it. One word in answer to the Minister of Railways and my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Heyd). When a farmer comes to you and you tell him that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council will send on an engineer to make a report, he then wants to know what becomes of the report. You tell him that it goes back to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to be there adjudicated upon, and that the railway lawyers can appear and be heard. He thinks he has got a mighty slim chance with the lawyers of a railway corporation before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council five hundred miles away, and he ploughing in the field.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) has introduced a new element into this question, that is, its bearing politically. Now I am of opinion that railway companies exert a more powerful influence at the time of election than any other corporate body in the Dominion of Canada. I think if we consulted our own interest we would be careful not to say anything contrary to the views of the railway companies. But there are great interests at stake, and the Minister of Railways has asked us to give this question consideration this afternoon. He wants to know what our feeling is with regard to making the railway company liable for all the expense of putting through a ditch, beyond what would have been incurred if there had been no railway there. Now speaking for myself and endeavouring to look upon this matter in a fair way, recognizing the wrongs the farmers have had to so suffer, recognizing too that we must have railways, that they serve a useful purpose, and that their interest must be protected as well as the interest of other people, I think the provision that we have in subsection 6 is such as will give substantial justice in this matter. It may be that a word or two might be introduced to the effect that, subject to any special circumstances affecting the same, the cost occasioned by the railway being there should be borne by the company. If there are any special or peculiar circumstances such as the hon. minister suggests that, for instance, the cheapest line for the ditch has not been selected, but one that will impose a very large amount of expense upon the railway company where a cheaper course could have been selected, it seems to me that this would be a fair element to take into consideration, and that if we frame it in some such way as this :

> Subject to any special circumstances affecting the same the proportion of the cost of the drain across or upon the railway to be borne by the railway company shall be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway——

We will have an equitable provision all around. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) said that this was probably a matter that was taken into consideration at the time the railway was constructed. I venture to say it has not been so in the majority of instances. I venture to say that almost universally the opposite rule prevailed. There may be some instances where this principle was adopted and where the increased compensation was given at the time, and if it can be established that it was given that would be one of the special circumstances to which I have referred. But, if hon. gentlemen will take into consideration the circumstances attending the expropriation and valuation of property at the time they will come to the conclusion very readily that this is not likely to be the case. At the time the land is expropriated the line is merely located and no work has been done on the ground. The farmer has no idea at the time that there is to be an immense embankment built across his property. All he knows is that there is to be a railway run through his property. He has no anticipation that there will probably be a frog pond created, as there have been in several instances to my knowledge in the riding of South Simcoe, to the prejudice of the health of the farmer and his family, and the destruction of his land.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Even the surveys are not made then.

Mr. LENNOX. As my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) says, in instances the surveys are not made at the time the settlement is made for the land. So that, what I submit as to the hon. member from South Brant is that his argument is not a matter that stands in the way of our arriving at a fair conclusion upon this question. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has spoken this afternoon, as it is his duty to speak, in reference to the question of the safety of the public. That is a matter, that, of course, must not be lost sight of. It would not be right that the strength of the railway should be impaired by the reckless putting through of any ditch or culvert or anything of that kind, but, the Ditches and Water-courses Act, and the General Drainage Act of Ontario, and I presume, the drainage Acts of other provinces, provide that the railway companies shall have the first right to construct the drainage work if they think fit.

Mr. COWAN. This amendment makes special provision for that.

Mr. LENNOX. And as my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) states this amendment makes special provision in reference to that. These are matters of final adjustment that we can deal with after settling the broad principle. There will be no objection, I presume, to leaving the matter of the class of structure that would be put under a railway altogether to be determined by the railway engineer. All that the municipality or the individual is interested in is that it shall be sufficiently large to give a free
