The progress of Canada, the expansion of its trade and industries, its treaties with foreign nations, the influx within its borders, of immigrants and foreign capital, all the conditions of a rapidly developing country, make it necessary that some efficient means of protection be provided forthwith in behalf of those (whatever their origin), who by engrossing its trade, contribute in such a large measure to the wealth and greatness of its people.

Such a measure of protection as will give a new impetus to commerce by restoring confidence among dealers, shielding worthy though unsuccessful merchants and setting right business transactions, can be secured only be means of an Act applicable to the whole country and making uniform the system of distribution of the assets of the parties who failed.

While this Chamber recognizes that special needs, worthy no doubt of consideration, may have heretofore prevented the various governments anxious to enact some such law, from taking any such action, nevertheless, reasons of a superior order make it more imperative than ever that trade should not be subjected to unnecessary risks, and that the good name of the country should be kept above suspicion.

Therefore, confiding in the wisdom of our rulers and of the members of parliament, this Chamber, having on all occasions urged the adoption of a new Insolvency Act, and having last year given its approval to the Fortin Bill, hopes that, all difficulties having now been removed, the said Bill will be allowed to become law in the course of this session, after due consideration has been given to certain suggestions submitted by this Chamber and various public bodies.

The whole respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) H. A. A. BRAULT,
Chairman, Committee on Legislation.

(True Copy.)
The Secretary,
(Sgd.) JOS. HAYNES.

There is also a report of some length from the same committee concerning the passing of this Bill. Under the circumstances, I do not think I would be justified in abandoning the Bill at this stage.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I did not intend to say anything on this Bill, and would not have done so but for the fact that the right hon. the premier has intimated his disposition not to allow it to go any further at the present time. It has been my opinion for a good many years that an insolvent law for Canada was very much needed, and that fact has been impressed on the attention of parliament from various sources times almost without number, whenever an insolvent law was proposed. Letters have been sent to members of this House urging that some kind of insolvent law be adopted. But of late years the commercial element of the country seems to have despaired of the prospect of parliament passing an insolvent law; and for that reason perhaps more than any other, there has not been of late so much interest taken in the subject. The premier says that each province has its own law for the distribution of estates, which seems to give fair satisfaction. It may give fair satisfaction so far as the creditor is concerned; but the unfortunate insolvent is left out of the question entirely, and no matter how honest or how unfortunate he may have been, he is debarred from ever starting business again.

I have known of many instances of intelligent and well-meaning business men who failed in business through influences and circumstances over which they had little or no control. They were valuable citizens and would have been valuable additions to the commercial class provided they could have started again, but owing to the fact that there was no insolvent law and they could get no relief to enable them to start again, they had to choose between going into service and eking out whatever kind of existence that might give, or leave the country and begin life again in a foreign land. The latter has been the usual course adopted. I know from personal knowledge of many worthy men who have thus left our country during the past ten or fifteen years, who otherwise would have remained in Canada and been to-day doing a profitable business in their own country. Surely we ought to provide some law for the relief of those people who have failed through no fault of their own. Surely the country ought to provide some means for enabling these people to provide for themselves and their families without being compelled to try their fortunes in any other land. While the distribution of assets may be fair to-day to the creditors in Canada, it is altogether unfair to other creditors. Many of our merchants import largely from the old country, and over and over again I have read letters, especially from the commercial element in England, complaining that we had no insolvency law and that there was therefore no protection to them when they sold goods to Canadians, because, in the event of failure, the Canadian creditors gobbled up the estate and there was practically nothing left for anybody else. This makes it difficult for merchants in the old country to do business at all in Canada. A good many years ago I was opposed to an insolvency law and spoke against it on several occasions, but the experience of time and observation has convinced me that I was wrong and that an insolvency law would be in the interests of Canada. True, many of the evils which developed under the old law created a prejudice against an insolvency law, but surely we are equal to the task of eliminating these evils and providing a law that would not be open to the objections raised against the last one. I have not looked over the Bill now before us except in a very cursory manner, but it seems to have many valuable features not to be found in some of the Bills introduced some years ago. The government ought to take up this question themselves, but, as far as I am concerned, I am in favour of this Bill being proceeded with, and I am confident that we are equal to the task of making it such a measure as will work in the interests of the commercial community as a whole and do justice both to Canadian and foreign creditors.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington). I am heartily in favour of the principle of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, but I agree with my right hon. friend the First Minister that a measure so important to the citizens in Canada in general should be referred to the Department of Justice before being submitted to the consideration of this House. In my opinion, an insolvency law is one of these things which we must provide in the very near future for the commercial classes of Canada. In the passage of such a law our national credit is, to a certain extent, involved. The only question which presents itself to my mind is this : Is the Bill broad enough in its application ? There was a Bill introduced some years ago by the late Sir John Abbott, which was broad in its application, but the application of which was not sufficiently clearly defined, and looking at clause three of the measure before us, I think that the same objection may be taken to it. If we are to have an insolvency law which is to be general in its application, clause three of this Bill should be more definite. In my opinion, farmers should be included with commercial traders. There are some other minor points in the Bill which will require very serious consideration, and therefore I think it will be well to refer it to the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not allow the Bill to be read the second time and thus affirm the principle, even if it goes no further this session ?

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). I did not quite catch what the right hon. gentleman the First Minister said, but I have no doubt that the trend of his remarks was in the line indicated by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. There is a feeling in the country, and a well-founded feeling, that it is time Canada had an insolvent law applicable to all parts of the Dominion. In my opinion, the present administration is blamable for not having introduced this measure themselves, but I cannot overlook the fact that the party I am supporting had also opportunities of remedying the difficulties we are labouring under, but failed to provide any redress. But whilst it was no doubt the duty of the late government of Canada to introduce a measure of this kind, yet we realize that with the vast expansion of trade and general industry which obtains in Canada, and is likely to increase in the future, there is a much greater necessity for an insolvency law than there was when the late administration had office. I would have been very glad indeed had the government seen fit to introduce a measure this session which would have had the prospect of becoming law that usually attaches to government measures, but since the government has failed to do so, I can see no good reason why we should not go on with the Bill before us and bring to its consideration the best and most experienced minds on both sides of the House. I am not, perhaps, able to appreciate fully the difficulties suggested as reasons for referring this matter to the Justice Department, and for not referring it to a committee, as we ordinarily do; but, for the present, it appears to me there are so many matters of general experience and discussion with reference to these subjects, matters that come within the knowledge of the members of this House, that there are good and cogent reasons why this Bill should be referred to a committee in the ordinary way, there to be discussed with such amendments as may appear, upon the whole, advisable to the members of the committee. Some hon. members will say that we have had a great deal of discussion with reference to insolvency law. That may be the case, but I doubt if this House, having regard to the importance of the subject, has given as much attention to this as to other matters that have come before the House. We had an insolvency law in 1869, the result of the appointment of a Select Committee of the House of Commons, and it applied to four provinces. Although it was found to contain some defects, I believe that, as a matter of experience, it worked reasonably well. The Act of 1875 was probably an improvement, and although it was made the subject of complaint and amendment, it proved fairly useful in practice. Probably that Act was not of sufficiently wide application. It applied to companies and trading co-partnerships, but it did not apply to incorporated banks, insurance, railway or telegraph companies. We have reached an era now when railways, insurance and telegraph companies occupy a very important position in reference to all our great commercial enterprises, and it would be a matter for consideration whether or not it would be advisable now to have the provisions of the law enlarged in this regard. The House will remember that, since 1880, we have had no Insolvent Act, and no very great effort has been made since, I believe, the repeal of the Insolvent Act in 1880, except, perhaps, the introduction of a Bill, substantially the same as that now before us, in 1898 or 1900. One of the serious difficulties that have been suggested with reference to this matter is the class of persons to whom it shall apply—whether it shall apply to traders only or to non-traders as well. I submit that when we get into committee on a Bill of this kind, we can devise a clause that will meet the case—probably it might be something between the two. I have been thinking over this question of insolvency, and put some questions upon the Order Paper in the early part of the session to learn whether the government proposed to introduce an insolvency law or not. It appears to me that, having regard to the extent of farming operations at the present time, particularly the large farming operations that now exist and that are looming up in the North-west, we must cease to regard the farmers in the same light as heretofore, and must regard them as engaged in commerce to a degree, and in a way that was not characteristic of them some years ago. Therefore, I would be very much in favour of wording this Bill in such a way that farmers engaged in the large and various transactions that some of them engage in should have the advantage of coming in under the Act if they thought fit, or, perhaps, whether they thought fit or not. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that, under the name of farmers we have men engaged in large commercial concerns, some of the largest in the country. Now, as a suggestion, it occurred to me, Mr. Speaker, that something of this kind be done—that we might have a registration class, that is, to say that a person about to engage in large operations of any kind, although he may not be prima facie subject to the insolvency law, could register himself as a trader, and so it could be known to the community who dealt with this man that they were dealing with a person who was subject to the provisions of the insolvency law, and might ultimately get the benefits of that law. It is sometimes said—or was said—that if you allow hitherto classes of men not regarded as traders to get the benefit of a discharge it would be a hardship to the community. But that is not what would result. There would be a middle class who, by registration, would announce themselves as engaged in transactions commercial in their nature, and who would be subject to the restrictions and entitled to the benefits arising under the insolvency law.

There is also the question of preference. That has been the subject of a good deal of discussion and it is one of the reasons why prejudice exists with reference to this law. For my part, I feel that the less preference we have the better, that the more we exclude the system of giving to certain creditors a preference over others, by making the whole assets of the insolvent liable for debts, on a basis of equal distribution so far as may be, the better for the country, and the more likely is it to be productive of satisfaction to the people generally. That, however, is a mater of detail.

Another formidable objection, or at least one tht has been formidably put forward is the question of the discharge of the debtor. A certain class of persons urge that the question of discharge should be a matter for the consideration of the judge alone, while others think that it should be entirely in the hands of the creditors. But after all, this is a matter of detail, a question of jurisdiction only. Perhaps the truth lies between the two extremes and is to be found in the method announced in this Bill, subject to some modifications. We could have the discharge of the unfortunate debtor where he has paid a certain percentage of the liabilities provided for—say the fifty cents on the dollar mentioned in the Bill—and we could have this controlled to a certain extent by the creditors or by a committee appointed by the creditors. A certain proportion in value and number of creditors should be necessary to obtain a discharge, and in addition, the sanction of the judge should be obtained. After all, does it not come down to this—will the judge grant the discharge to an insolvent if he has not, within the wording of this Act, or within the wording of the English Act, become entitled to it; has not so conducted himself that, if he is not blameless, he is, at all events to be excused? This is a matter of detail that can easily be worked out; and in connection with it I cannot perhaps do better than endeavour to emphasize what was said by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in reference to tying the hands of those who have been unfortunate rather than fraudulent. There is in this country, there is in every country where men are active, energetic, progressive and hopeful, a tendency to launch out and to go beyond what the best judgment would dictate. In such cases it is unfortunate for the man who has failed and unfortunate for the country—just as unfortunate for the country as it is for the individual—that the subsequent efforts of that man should be paralyzed because through misfortune or too large a measure of hope, he has failed and thus be unable to retrieve himself. Let us in every case endeavour to obtain such an Insolvency Act as, whilst it will not allow any man to succeed who has fraudulently entered into any scheme to do injustice to his creditors, yet will secure justice to every honest but unfortunate debtor who has surrendered the whole of his estate by providing for a discharge at the discretion of his creditors, or a portion of them, with the consent of the judge.

Now in reference to the provincial Acts which were referred to by the First Minister, whilst I recognize that in several provinces, at all events, perhaps in all, there is legislation to secure a distribution of the moneys of the debtor to his creditors, yet there not being uniform legislation, and it being well known in Britain, the country with which we wish to do the largest measure of trade, that there is no uniform law and that the outside creditor, whether of Britain or of any other country, has to become acquainted with several different systems of legislation in order to know what remedy he has, is seriously hampering, and has hampered our commerce and our business relations in the past. As I said before, having regard to the fact that we are rapidly expanding, having regard to the fact that by the energy, and industry, and hope, and ambition of the people of Canada, we are likely, whether there comes a wave of depression or not, to reach out still further in the future, and this at a rapid rate, I think it is the bounden duty of every member of parliament to bring his experience and his wisdom to bear upon this matter; and it being especially one of the subjects relegated to this House by the British North America Act, to exercise our functions in this regard, and not relegate to the provinces, to work at random and with uncertainty, a matter upon which we should work for the whole Dominion.

It has been said that there are some prejudice by farmers against an Insolvency Act. I do not know whether that is so or not, I have not found that it is so. I have already referred to the fact, that the farming community and the industrial classes generally who launch out into large enterprises, should have the benefit of the provisions of an Insolvency Act. I have not found any prejudice among farmers against the passage of such an Act. Representing a distinctly rural constituency, I am prepared to take the responsibility as such representative, and say that I will at all events take all the onus that can be cast upon me by advocating what I believe to be in the interest, not especially of the commercial classes, not especially in the interest of the rural classes, but in the broad general interest of the Dominion. Believing that to be the effect, I am prepared to give this measure my support, and to work to bring it into the best possible form in the general interests of the whole of Canada.

Mr. MONK. I would ask the Prime Minister if the government would not take this Bill out of my hands completely and adopt it as a government measure, so that it might become law this session. I would be quite willing to give up the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, but I am not prepared at this moment to accept the gift proffered by my hon. friend. It is a matter that requires some consideration. The government is not prepared to say that it would be advisable to introduce such legislation. All I can say at this moment is that the question is engaging our consideration.

House divided on motion (Mr. Monk).

Mr. LENNOX.

FRUIT MARKS ACT, 1901, AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Smith (Wentworth), for the second reading of Bill (No. 86) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) if he would kindly not press his Bill this evening. The hon. minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has just returned to the city to-day, and I will take the opportunity to see that this Bill is taken into consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

Order allowed to stand.

INCORPORATED COMPANIES.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 94) respecting incorporated companies. He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is intended to stop, if possible, men running to this House and the other House to get charters for the purpose of selling them. I have stated in the Bill that charters shall be void if not taken advantage of in two years. Some hon. members have thought this too short a time. I have no objection to changing the time. There are one or two amendments that have come from the Montreal board of trade, and if the House will agree to them I will suggest that they be put into the Bill. One proposes to amend clause 1, by inserting after the word 'commence' or the words 'or causes to be commenced,' that is to say while a company may not operate under its charter it may sell its charter to some other company and this other company may operate under it.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Would that amendment cover the case of the Dominion Telegraph Company? I may say that I have had a communication respecting the effect of this Bill if passed in its present shape on the Dominion Telegraph Company and Montreal Telegraph Company, whose lines have been for many years operated by the Great North-western Telegraph Company.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That will not affect them if they are going on under another name or under another company.

Mr. CLARKE. Their lines are being operated by another company.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Quite so.

Mr. CLARKE. You are perfectly clear on that point?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If they are being operated the Bill does not affect them. We might pass the second reading and submit it to the Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am somewhat embarrassed about giving my consent that this Bill should go to committee because I do not understand its provisions. If I understood the Bill I could give my reasons for objecting to it, but I really cannot understand what my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) means by this Bill. In answer to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) the introducer said it would not affect the Dominion Telegraph Company. I have a letter from one of the officials connected with the Montreal Telegraph Company in which he says that the Montreal Telegraph Company, leased, after many years' working, to the Great North-western Telegraph Company and now worked by it, would be wiped out if this Bill goes through. The Dominion Coal Company, leased to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, and worked by the latter, would also be affected by this Bill. This letter is received from a gentleman in Montreal connected with the Montreal Telegraph Company, and if it be a fact, as he says, that that would be the result of his Bill, I cannot help objecting to it. I cannot understand what my hon. friend is driving at, what purpose he has in view, what his object is in this legislation, and not knowing what the object of the Bill is, I am sorry that I cannot agree to the House going into committee upon it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I think that this Bill will affect a great many other companies in addition to the Dominion Telegraph Company, and I think we should pause before passing such sweeping legislation as that. There are many companies in Quebec that still exist for some purpose, but which are not at present exercising their corporate powers. I think this legislation is very sweeping, the public has had no notice of it. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) had better drop the Bill this session.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). Mr. Speaker, I want to point out, too, that it will be utterly impossible to adopt clause 1 which I gather from what the hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike) has said, contains the principal feature of the Bill. It says :

If any company incorporated by the parliament of Canada, or under an Act of that parliament, fails to commence active operations within two years after incorporation, or fails to use any of its corporate powers during two consecutive years, such unused powers, except so far as is necessary for winding up the company, shall be forfeited.

It is well known that many companies are incorporated with several powers to be exercised by them. A company might be incorporated and might comply with the terms of its incorporation if it put into operation one or more of its powers while some other power contained in the Bill might, for some good reason, not be put into operation for some time. The result would be that though certain powers were used the unused powers, the operation of which for some good reason might be deferred to a later date, would be destroyed. I do not see how we could possibly adopt the principle involved in section 1. It seems to me that that objection is an insuperable one.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. As it is quite evident that the leaders on both sides of the House are opposed to my Bill I ask to be permitted to withdraw it.

Motion withdrawn.

CONCILIATION ACT, 1900.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Puttee, for the second reading of Bill (No. 95) to amend the Conciliation Act, 1900.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, when this Bill was before the House on a former occasion, I explained it pretty thoroughly, and I do not think it is necessary to go into it again at this stage.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). There are same provisions of this Bill that the government can accept and there are some that they cannot. I have no objection to the Bill going into committee with the understanding that the adoption of the second reading does not commit the House to the provisions of the Bill. The second paragraph purports to authorize the appointment of a board of arbitrators without the consent of the parties. That is contrary to the principles of the Conciliation Act. However desirable such a provision may be, I hardly think that the public are educated to that standard yet, and therefore it would be in advance of public opinion. It is true that principle is incorporated in the Bill before the House respecting railways in extreme cases, but we cannot consent to that principle in regard to ordinary industrial troubles. Sections 3 and 6 of the Bill with certain modifications might be passed so far as the government is concerned. My hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) desires to have the Bill referred to the committee so that it may be dealt with in detail, there will be no objection.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Conciliation Act provides that a board of conciliation may be appointed on the application of the employers or the employees interested. This section provides that the board may be appointed without the application of either party. That is a material difference. Under the amendment the board may be appointed without either party applying, whereas under the present law application must be made by one or other party to the dispute.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot see the effect of introducing this amendment to the present Act.

Mr. PUTTEE. Does the minister accept this amendment ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PUTTEE. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will find there is a great difference between the amendment and the provision in the present Act. The amendment makes it the duty of the Labour Department to appoint a conciliator without application at all. Suppose the parties are now willing to conciliate, then when this officer is appointed he will be an investigator and will ascertain all the facts and report. It is very much the same principle that was put in the Railway Disputes Bill, and it will insure that there shall be an impartial investigation into any dispute even although the parties are not willing at that time to ask for conciliation or investigation. I believe that this amendment will have a great deal to do with putting the Act into force more frequently than formerly. I am afraid that in the future the number of strikes will increase, and some strengthening provision like this in the Conciliation Act is very desirable.

Section agreed to.

On section 2,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That paragraph cannot be accepted. It proposes to appoint arbitrators without the consent of both parties. The first clause which was assented to, appoints a conciliator who would take evidence and make an award, but this second paragraph would force arbitration on unwilling parties, and I move that it be stricken out.

Clause struck out.

On section 3,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I move to amend this section by striking out the words 'arbitrator to take evidence under oath regarding the matter in dispute; also to strike out the figure '5' in the first line and substitute therefor the figure '7,' so as to make it amend section 7 of the Conciliation Act instead of section 5. It will amend section 7, which deals with conciliation and provides for the conciliators making their report and the publication of the report.

Mr. MONK. Would it not be better to require a statement of that kind to be published in the 'Official Gazette'? I have no doubt that it would also be published in the 'Labour Gazette'; but everybody does not take the 'Labour Gazette,' and I think the statement should be published in the general official publication of the country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the 'Labour Gazette' would reach a good many more people than the 'Official Gazette.' Its circulation is considerable now, and it may be treated as the official gazette of the government in labour matters.

Mr. MONK. This is the first time we have made this kind of enactment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is also referred to in the Bill which I have before the House respecting labour disputes on railways.

Mr. PUTTEE. It is also referred to in section ten of the original Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. I scarcely see the importance of this amendment. What effect will it have? Is it along the line of compulsory arbitration? It does not seem to me that it is. If we are going to legislate any further on these questions, I think we had better go to the bottom of the whole matter at once and deal with it in such a way that we can bring about a settlement of labour disputes. To my mind this is only trifling with the matter. It does not touch the kernel at all. It is proposed from the standpoint of some trades and labour council who simply keep this matter alive before the workingmen of the country with the pretense that they are doing something for the workingmen, while as a matter of fact accomplishing nothing. I think it is about time that we were doing something, and if labour disputes are to be brought to a termination within a reasonable time without sacrificing the interests of the working men, or the interests of the employers, I think the time has come when we should take into consideration legislation which will compel both parties to agree to any reasonable settlement that may be suggested by those who are constituted for the purpose of bringing about a settlement. That is my opinion on the whole matter. I do not think this legislation is going to amount to anything.

Mr. BROCK. If this Bill were simply dealing with a local organization, I would be very well inclined to agree with it; but why should this country be so much concerned about protecting the interests of an international organization, which is not under the laws of this country, which does not recognize anything we do in this parliament except in so far as it will suit its own interests? I contend that the labour organizations of this country should be manly enough to stand on their own feet and submit to the laws of Canada, and not be dictated to by organizations on the other side of the line. If they are not dictated to by these organizations, as some gentlemen in this House have said, then why is this word 'international' introduced in this Bill? Why should we allow ourselves to be dictated to by antagonistic organizations on the other side of the line? I contend that this House should throw out any legislation of an international kind that comes before it. It is only an attempt to hold up the manufacturing and other industrial interests of this country. We have had the farmers of this country antagonised, and their freight held up at the dictation of international organizations. I contend that this country will not put up with this sort of thing, and therefore I urge the government to throw out anything that purports to legislate for any country but Canada. I notice that this Bill provides:

> In no case shall a conciliator or arbitrator stipulate, nor shall it be stipulated in any agreement promoted or recommended by a conciliator, or arbitrator, that any employee shall relinquish his membership in any local, national or international trades union or labour association.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not the section we are at.

Mr. BROCK. This whole Act is moving in a certain direction, and it culminates by stipulating that anything we do here should have no effect.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell me what Bill he is reading?

Mr. BROCK. Bill ninety-five. If the chairman reads it over, he will find that my remarks are perfectly in order. I do not care which clause of this Bill you take, it is not one that should be considered by this House, because we are attempting to legislate beyond our powers for an international arrangement which we cannot control. If the chairman says I am out of order, and have no right to speak, I will resume my seat.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not say the hon. gentleman is not in order, but the Bill I have does not appear to be the same as the one the hon. gentleman is reading.

Mr. BROCK. That is the difficulty in connection with this whole matter. There is an attempt to make people believe that we are passing Canadian legislation whereas we are legislating in connection with a foreign organization.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. Surely he must know that this Bill can only affect Canadian unions and Canadian employers. There is no intention to go outside the jurisdiction of this parliament and we could not. It would be absurd to introduce a Bill to affect any international organization not under our control. This Bill is not intended to affect trade unions but to try and arbitrate disputes that will arise between Canadian employers and workmen. Whether the attempt be successful or not, it is worth our consideration, and we should approach the matter without prejudice or bias one way or the other. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and deplore equally with him the fact that there is not more force in the Act. I believe that if my amendment were accepted, making arbitration possible on the application of one party, that would extend the principle as far as it can go without encroaching on compulsory arbitration. Although I am not opposed to compulsory arbitration, the majority of members here are. I am afraid that disputes will not be adjusted until we have some reasonable method of dealing with them by compulsory arbitration, and the section thrown out of the Bill, although it provided for arbitration on the request of one of the parties, did not make the award binding on either. It simply left it to the force of public opinion, on an investigation being made and an award declared by a disinterested party.

Mr. CLARKE. Suppose you had compulsory arbitration, how could you enforce it ? Would you put these people in jail ?

Mr. PUTTEE. I am afraid it would not be of any use our entering into a discussion on the features of compulsory arbitration at present. In New Zealand they are getting awards observed and enforced under compulsory arbitration. In the Australian commonwealth, they are doing the same thing. The only objection to it in Canada is that the people are not ready for it. But I protest against this introduction of the question of internationalism and foreign agitators and all the rest, being brought into the subject before us. The Bill and amendment are purely along the lines of conciliation, in order to do away as much as possible with disputes of a minor character that often grow into larger ones. I believe that a conciliation Act can smoothe out some of the troubles of a minor character, but so far it has not affected any of the larger evils.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask hon. gentlemen to confine themselves to the discussion of clause three. On clause four, we will come to what the hon. gentleman is now discussing.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the government allowed section three to go ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MONK. What is there to be done by section three which is not already provided for in the Conciliation Act ? Section three provides that a conciliator shall look into the facts and suggest a settlement. Is not that already in the Conciliation Act ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it is, but there seems to exist a doubt in the mind of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee), and I have no objection to remove it. Besides this provides that the basis of settlement shall be published in the 'Labour Gazette.' That is not to be found in the Conciliation Act.

Mr. PUTTEE. The word used in the amendment is 'arbitrator' instead of 'conciliator.'

Mr. CLARKE. He is no longer a conciliator but an arbitrator.

On section 4,

4. The said Act is further amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 6 :—

6a. In no case shall a conciliator or arbitrator stipulate, nor shall it be stipulated in any agreement promoted or recommended by a conciliator or arbitrator, that any employee shall relinquish his membership in any local, national or international trades union or labour association ; nor shall an agreement subject any employee to a penalty on account of such membership.

Mr. PUTTEE. It has been suggested that this should be made an amendment to section eight instead of section six, to which I have no objection. I would move that 'six' be struck out and 'eight' be substituted.

The intent of this amendment is to commend this principle of conciliation to the employees. At present the employees keep away as much as possible from conciliation or arbitration because there has been rather a mischievous principle introduced into the awards of some arbitrators or conciliators, believing that they had power to take the by-laws or constitutions of an organization into their judgment and alter them as they saw fit. As a matter of fact, the policy is laid down by almost all associations that they will not put their constitution and by-laws to arbitration, and they are perfectly right. A clause of this kind will do a good deal to commend the principle of this Bill to the parties interested.

Mr. CLARKE. Have the words 'local, national or international' any force whatever ?

Mr. PUTTEE. No, it seems to me that the words 'any trade union,' would be sufficient.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me that the clause would be just as strong if we left the words 'local, national or international' out and made it read 'any trade union or local association.'

Mr. PUTTEE. I was about to suggest the same thing. These words might just as well be left out, if there is any objection to them.

Mr. BROCK. As the labour representatives in this House are beginning to see the thing very much in the way I see it, I withdraw any objection I have to anything else, if they will withdraw the word 'international.' I therefore move that the words 'or international' be struck out.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why not leave it 'any trades union'?

Mr. BROCK. I am in favour of trades unions in this country, subject to the laws of this country; but this Bill would bring in international unions that are not subject to the laws of this country. Why need the word 'international' be used? Why do we send to Philadelphia, New York, Boston, or any other large American city for international interviewers, and organizers to come to this country? We should do everything to make it thoroughly understood that the Canadian parliament is able and willing to legislate for this country and will insist upon its rights to do so. I do not care what bylaws and rules the local organizations may have, they have a perfect right to have them; but when these local laws have to be referred to agitators from the other side of the line, that is something that we should fight against. These Canadian organizations, I am in favour of, and am anxious to support in every possible way, notwithstanding what may have been said. But I do not wish to support, nor do I think this country will support, agitations and organizations, the mainspring of which is on the other side of the line. Therefore, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) is willing that the word 'international' be struck out, I am willing to let it pass.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) asks why organizations send across the line for men. I do not know why his organizations do so, but I know as a matter of fact they do. The Toronto Manufacturers' Association sent across the line to bring in American agitators from Dayton, Ohio, and the Metal Working Manufacturers' Association did the same thing. I do not pretend to know why these organizations did these things. I know why an ordinary trade union sends across the line, but I do not see why it is necessary to discuss this at the present time. I notice that when we have railway Bills before the House, these hon. gentlemen do not ask why the capital comes from other countries, or why the promoters are men who owe no allegiance to Canada; and when a friendly society is to be incorporated they do not ask why it is that the headquarters of that society are in another land. They know perfectly well that we are dealing with our own subjects and that, even if the societies to which they belong are affiliated with outside organizations, that does not affect this provision, for it can control the citizens of Canada only. I am perfectly willing that all the words, 'local, national or international,' should be struck out.

Mr. INGRAM. It is not necessary to strike out 'local' or 'national,' I take it that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) has no objection to Canadians belonging to local organizations.

Mr. BROCK. Certainly not.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman does not want to be misrepresented on that point. I understand that the hon. gentleman is willing that all these organizations should enjoy all the rights they have in Canada, and does not desire to deprive them of any of those rights. If the section is amended as the hon. gentleman suggests, it will meet his views and will help to remove the ground for the contention of some hon. gentlemen that labour organizations are controlled by men on the other side of the line. Personally, I understand that many organizations in Canada are affiliated with the international associations, and that the strength they thus gain is a benefit to the organization. I have no objection to the amendment the hon. gentleman suggests, seeing that it will meet what seems to me the paltry objection that he raised.

Mr. HOLMES. I agree with the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) and the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) that, in so far as this phrase is concerned, it is a term that the House should guard against. But, if you strike out the words 'local, national, or international' you make it, in effect the same as now. I think the word 'international' should be struck out, and that would meet the object the House has in view. There is a feeling, undoubtedly, that a good many of the strikes carried on by the trades unions are due to the work of the agitators from the other side of the line. If that feeling could be removed it would strengthen the labour element with public opinion on this side of the line.

Mr. MONK. This is another clause, it seems to me, which my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) might have left out. I do not think the arbitrator or conciliator—for it is only the conciliator we are dealing with here—ought to be told by legislation that he shuts out any class in any suggested arrangement, or prevents any employee from belonging to a trades union. I am not aware that any conciliator or any body else has made such a suggestion. Why should we legislate in this sense ? What the conciliator is supposed to do is to suggest a basis of arrangement between the parties, and I think it unwise for my hon. friend to raise the question by this useless piece of legislation. I cannot bring myself to agree completely with my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). There are a great many trades unions in the city of Montreal that find it useful—for what reason I cannot exactly say—to be affiliated with American organizations or organizations of other countries. I cannot say here without having examined the question more fully that they are in the wrong. With regard to international unions being an irritating cause of strikes, I am not prepared to admit that either. What strikes and labour difficulties we have had in the city of Montreal have not been suggested by agitators from the other side. That I say from my own knowledge. I am not absolutely acquainted with the by-laws of our trades unions ; but I think it is especially provided that, before having recourse to a strike, the matter must have been fully considered by the local trades union and decided by them without any outside interference whatever. After the strike has been decided upon, then, and then only, is the question of the wisdom of striking submitted to the central council wherever that may be ; the central council—international or whatever may be its character—intervenes, as I understand it, expressly for the purpose of preventing a strike. That is what I have found out, at any rate among the working men of Montreal. These men, very far from being urged to strike, find that the central council acts the part of a conciliator. And, if after all these efforts have failed and a strike takes place, then the man whom my hon. friend from Centre Toronto regards as an agitator comes in. But, as I understand it, he is rather a man having experience in labour matters, who comes independent of all parties for the purpose of smoothing over the difficulty if possible. Under these circumstances, and upon general principles, if a workman belonging to a labour union finds it useful and for the benefit of his own association to have that association linked with one with similar aims in another country, having great power and resources, I do not see why he should not have that power. I know that in Montreal these trades unions feel that they gain power, that they can work better if they are united with similar trade unions in other countries. As some hon. gentleman has remarked, we admit foreign capital, we allow foreign capital to make combinations with our own capital. I cannot, for my part, see why we should not allow labourers to coalesce, provided they do it properly, and not in violation of any law. I really think this section is useless. My hon. friend must see that it has brought up a discussion on a matter of very grave import which is not, strictly speaking, in question here, and he has offered to withdraw the word 'international.' But, for my part, I would like to consider the matter further before saying that I disapprove of such combinations.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has given us a piece of refreshing coolness in the remarks he has just made to the House with regard to disinterested and philanthropic efforts of the labour agitators on the other side, whose sole and only object in coming over here is to avert strikes and settle labour disputes amicably. Perhaps the hon. gentleman believes that is the case ; if he does, I certainly do not. I believe that the operations of these emissaries, in nine cases out of ten, are in the line of promoting and fomenting difficulties. I agree with the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) in his demand that this word 'international' should be expunged from this section. I know myself of cases where agitators, labour emissaries from the United States, have come in here and have promoted strikes, have been the cause of strikes.

An hon. MEMBER. Where ?

Mr. CHARLTON. At Smith's Falls, for instance. The operation of a large manufacturer there was suspended and the men went out on strike. A labour union was formed, the men were coerced into joining that union, were compelled to do so. Two-thirds of the men who joined that union did so reluctantly and against their wishes. But the terrorism, and the influences that these men know so well how to use, were brought into play there, and the result was that the men went out on strike and the business of that concern was suspended. Three-fourths of their orders fortunately were filled, and the firm said : Very well, gentlemen, if you do not wish to work, if you decide to dictate to us how we shall carry on our business, we will simply suspend operations. They did suspend operations, and after the strike had continued a month the men came back to work, and three-fourths of the men that came back, I am told, were opposed to having gone out on a strike. It seems to me we are largely engaged here in performing the operation of a tail to the kite of the labour unions, we are playing second fiddle to John Mitchell in the legislation which we are adopting in this House. We are dealing with this labour question in the interest of the unions ; we do not take into consideration the interests of the great mass of labourers who do not desire to join the unions, the men who want to sell their labour, who want to be at liberty to make a bargain for their labour without being told by officers of the labour union whether they shall have the privileges of a citizen in making such a contract or not. The weapon of the greater portion of the strikes in the United States has been the terrorism that has been exercised by the trade unions in preventing men from working who desired to work, who were satisfied to work, who were satisfied with the wages that they were receiving, and who desired to go on earning those wages. But they have been prevented from doing so, have been compelled to cease labour at the dictation of a tyrannical organization, an organization which, if it has the power, will exercise a tyranny greater than has ever been exercised in this country.

Mr. MONK. Is the hon. gentleman opposed to trades unions ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am not opposed to trades unions when they are operated within legitimate and proper limits, but I am opposed to trades unions that usurp to themselves authority to command the entire labour interests of the country, and to coerce and compel men in every direction to join the unions whether they wish to do so or not, and who, if they do not wish to join the unions, will resort to violence, to murder and to arson, in order to carry out their purposes. Now, Sir, I propose to offer an amendment to this subsection 6, or subsection 8, as it will be. The section reads now as follows :—

In no case shall a conciliator or arbitrator stipulate, nor shall it be stipulated in any agreement promoted or recommended by a conciliator or arbitrator, that any employee shall relinquish his membership in any local, national or international trades union or labour association ; nor shall an agreement subject any employee to a penalty on account of such membership.

I propose to add these words :

Or discriminate against persons who are not members of trades unions or labour associations.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I venture to think that if the Minister of Labour had drawn a clause it would not be worded as this clause 6a. I would have thought it was unnecessary for any member of this House to express himself with regard to trades unions in discussing a measure such as this, which is a simple piece of legislation. But as others have so expressed themselves, in order that by my silence I may not be misunderstood, I desire to say that I sympathize as much as any member in this House with the desire of the labouring classes to promote their interests by forming themselves into labour associations. The question before this House is whether this particular clause, 6a, is, under the circumstances, a reasonable and proper clause, and if adopted by this House, will it be a reasonable piece of legislation. Now, when we consider that the Act which is being amended is not an arbitration Act at all, but a conciliation Act, when we find that the conciliator has no power to bind either the employer or the employee, I venture to say that this is, I was going to say, a monstrous thing.

Mr. PUTTEE. In what way ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. The arbitrator has no power to bind the party. You may call him the conciliator or an arbitrator, but it comes down to the same result, that he has no power to bind the parties. Now, if an arbitrator had power to bind the employer or the employee, and if there were machinery to enforce his decision, then I could understand the propriety of such a clause as this. But when the conciliator or arbitrator has no power to bind the parties, I venture to say that it is a most extraordinary piece of legislation to forbid him even to make a suggestion.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing both parties agreed to abide by his proposition ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. If they left the matter to the arbitrator to decide for them, he could not put this particular clause in, even if it were a proper clause. I am not saying that the case might not arise when it would be proper for the conciliator to insert any such clause as this, but it is conceivable.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing in the longshoremen's strike in Montreal an agreement was entered into by a third party that the workmen should drop their membership in a labour organization, would that agreement be affected by this clause ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Practically it would make a difference, for this reason, if this clause were passed the conciliator or arbitrator would not be allowed to put in such a clause as is forbidden here, but if this clause does not pass, and if the conciliator or arbitrator did insert such a clause without having any machinery to enforce it, nobody would be bound by it. I would like to ask my hon. friend in turn if this is a reasonable clause, and I want to go further ; if it is proper to say that no conciliator or arbitrator shall say that no employee shall relinquish his membership in any association. I would go further and say that no employer should relinquish his membership in any association. If it is fair for one side, why not make it reciprocal, and apply it to the other side as well ?

Mr. INGRAM. I do not suppose they would have any objection to that.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I do not say that they would. But I think that if it is a good thing for one it should be good for all. I am not advocating that principle; I am rather advocating another principle because it seems to me we are doing a wholly unnecessary act in putting a clause on the statute-book which will not result in any good. The clause seems to assume that under no possible circumstances, no matter what the provocation might be, could the friends of the union go so far astray that a conciliator might be justified in saying that a man should leave the union. I do not know that they will go so far astray that an honest impartial conciliator would adopt this principle, but if they have gone so far astray it seems to me rather hard that in any conciliation effort he should be deprived of making that suggestion. Therefore, I think this should be reciprocal; if it is applied to one it should be applied to the other, and secondly, because it would be faulty legislation I would be inclined to oppose the clause.

Mr. INGRAM. Every one who knows anything about labour disputes knows perfectly well that there is no instance he could name where any labour organizations have taken objection to a manufacturer simply because he belongs to the Manufacturers' Association. We all know that perfectly well, and we who have watched these disputes also know that there never has been a labour dispute between organized labour and organized capital in which the question of membership in the labour organization was not the real point of the contention as between the two parties. It is true that the wage difficulty arises very frequently, but oftener the difficulty is by reason of men belonging to labour organizations. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) finds fault with these tyrannical organizations which commit murder and violence. There is not a man who belongs to a labour organization in Canada that I know of who wants to commit murder or exercise tyranny or anything of that kind. These men simply want to associate themselves together for mutual benefit and protection. I hold that any man who asks that privilege is entitled to it.

Mr. CHARLTON. My remark in regard to violence and intimidation on the part of members connected with labour organizations referred to the operations of labour unions in the United States, and not to Canadian organizations at all, and it was made in connection with this matter of international unions.

Mr. INGRAM. Then what was the object in bringing that question into this discussion ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I referred to international affiliations.

Mr. INGRAM. We know perfectly well that in Chicago and other cities in the United States they have gone altogether too far. They have committed tyranny, and they have committed murder in many cases. I do not know a single instance in Canada where they uphold conduct of that kind. I am quite sure they do not.

Mr.. BROCK. Why was it necessary for the authorities in Montreal to call out the troops ?

Mr. MONK. The troops were called out because we had not sufficient police in Montreal.

Mr. BROCK. What for ?

Mr. MONK. There was no conflict; they were literally called out in place of the police.

Mr. BROCK. Called out because a conflict was threatened.

Mr. INGRAM. During all the discussion that took place in this House about longshoremen's strike not a single instance of violence was brought to the notice of the House.

Mr. BROCK. Why, was not the calling out of the troops a most extraordinary evidence of fear on the part of the authorities in Montreal that violence was going to be committed ? Otherwise they were absolutely wrong in calling out the troops.

Mr. INGRAM. I might refer to an instance in the hon. gentleman's own city of Toronto. No one will charge the students of the different colleges with being tyrannical or wishing to commit murder or violence ; yet the troops were called out to take charge of these young men.

Mr. BROCK. Certainly.

Mr. INGRAM. I take it that the circumstances in Montreal and in Toronto were on the same lines. It was not so much the fault of the students as a certain class of people who take advantage of a procession of that kind in order to create violence.

Mr. BROCK. Show me your company and I will tell you what you are.

Mr. INGRAM. If I were to judge all the students by that I am afraid I would have to say that they were in bad company that night. I think if the disturbers who usually accompany these processions had not been there, there would not have been so much done about that Toronto affair as really was done. In respect to this measure I do not see why a man has not the right to belong to a labour organization if he sees fit. Most of these disputes hinge largely on the question of men belonging to a labour organization or retaining membership in an organization. I cannot see why they should be deprived of that privilege. I am not one of those who uphold labour organizations in depriving other men of the privileges of obtaining employment because they are not members of the organization. Possibly some go a little farther than they should. I think that they have a right to be organized and that they are entitled to exercise all the privileges of their organizations. They are entitled to the right to organize just as much as manufacturers are, as legal gentlemen are, as medical gentlemen are, or as any other bodies of men are.

Mr. PUTTEE. I think it is to be regretted that in the discussion of this Bill hon. gentlemen should have thought it necessary to refer to some of the things that they have referred to; for instance, to injurious labour organizations, red-headed agitators and so on—bogies which have been deliberately planted in the public mind. I think it would have been a great deal better to have discussed this Bill which is intended to be a conciliation Bill. The question that was brought up by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) is a very material point in reference in this subject, it is that after all the one thing that is the pith and heart of the labour dispute is the question that is called recognition. Half the troubles that are on to-day might be settled to-morrow if it were not for the question of recognition. I have often said that I believed in compulsory arbitration. Compulsory arbitration recognizes that a dispute must be between two parties and not between an organization of capital and any individual employees. It will only deal with organizations on both sides. Then, it is possible for you to get men into a frame of mind to see that there are two strong sides which are brought together by the conciliation process. Compulsory arbitration brings labour disputes up to date. It is no good discussing the labour question as if labour organizations will be put to one side. They will not be put to one side. They are growing stronger just as organizations of capital are growing stronger, and any movement that is going to affect arbitration or conciliation has got to recognize that fact. After all, this clause it not so hurriedly or awkwardly drawn as some suppose. It is not a clause that has been got together especially for this Act. It is one that is beginning to appear in the Conciliation Acts of different countries. There is a good principle in it, and I will explain why. When an award is made to settle a dispute, there is this one thing that makes that award of no effect whatever, and that is anything that prevents the affiliation of employees with the union that has been in the dispute. Why, because if they have not got that organization at their back under which they struck, their settlement is no good. The employer accepts the settlement and immediately disregards it, because there is no other side to enforce the settlement. I say that in any proposition that is made by disinterested parties it is wise that they should leave this question where they found it; leave it to be settled between the men themselves, but do not take the dispute away from the organization, and do not fine any man for his affiliation with a union. If you do that, you will immediately destroy all confidence in conciliation. There is not much confidence in conciliation in this country at the present time, and it is because of the actual experience that this has been attempted and some times has been successfully done in perfectly well meant conciliations. In bringing in a disinterested party, you bring in a person who does not understand the organization of labour or the organization of capital, and it appears quite reasonable to such a one that these parties should work together as individuals, as he has the notion they used to do in the past. It is no use attempting to conciliate on the basis of individuals working with an employer—the whole thing now is two strong parties, necessarily antagonists for the time being, perhaps antagonistic all through ; the interest of the country is to bring them together. That is the idea of this Conciliation Act. It seems to me regrettable that in discussing this matter we should in any way appeal to passion or to ideas that are at all events out of date.

Mr. CLARKE. As the Minister of Labour has taken this Bill under his fatherly consideration, we have the right to ask him what is his opinion of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) ? The minister's opinion would no doubt have a beneficial effect in enabling us to reach a wise decision as to whether we should adopt this amendment or not. I am glad we have cleared the atmosphere a good deal by the discussion that has taken place this evening. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) has put himself right. The attempt had been made to show that he is opposed to the organization of Canadian workmen into unions. He has told us that he is not opposed to that. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was charged here with saying that he had referred to labour unions in this country as containing men who would commit murder.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not wish to be misrepresented——

Mr. CLARKE. I am trying to put the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) right as well as my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). I say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) was charged here with saying that Canadian unions contained men, some of whom were prepared to commit murder. The hon. gentleman has repudiated that, and he says he refers to American unions. The only difference of opinion between the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) and some other gentlemen who are in favour of labour organizations is as to what is meant by an international union. The Canadian labour unions are affiliated with these international bodies, because in union there is strength. The Canadian unions do not affiliate for any improper purpose. They are bound to support each other, but they are not united to injure any one. That is the principle on which they amalgamate. They do not lose any of their rights by amalgamating with labour organizations on the other side of the line; they rather strengthen the union organization. I am not satisfied yet, Mr. Chairman, that it has been proven that any person has come from the American side for the purpose of organizing our men into unions so as to compel them to strike to the detriment of their own interests. I am open to argument, and I invite and challenge any hon. member on either side of this committee to-night to make good the allegation that men have come here to organize Canadians into unions and to compel them to strike. I say that statement cannot be made good, and it is not fair that such a statement should be made and that hon. members who do not know anything about union men, should be misled and deceived by such a statement. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) strikes out the words 'local, national or international,' I cannot see what objection can be raised to that amendment. It seems to cover the whole case. We are only legislating here, after all, for our own unions; we cannot legislate for unions on the other side, except to punish them if they come over here to commit a crime.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In answer to my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), I do not think it should be the part of any board of conciliators or arbitrators to interfere with the freedom of any citizen to do whatever it is lawful for him to do, whether he choses to belong to a union or not to belong to a union.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that to do otherwise would be an act of tyranny. You might as well stipulate that a man must not belong to a particular church or to a particular political party. I think that it would be entirely improper for us to interfere with the freedom of our citizens, and therefore I quite approve of a man's rights being preserved, and if necessary that we should do so by legislation. I may say that but for this Bill I would not have thought that any conciliator would have attempted in a proposed basis of settlement, to deprive a party to a labour dispute of his right either to belong or not to belong to a union as he sees fit. In taking that general view, I believe that it is just as proper that we should protect 'non-union' as 'union' labour.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Therefore, I would have no objection to the amendment of my hon. friend from North Norfolk, which is that we should not discriminate against non-union labour. The same principle would apply, I suppose.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not be well for the minister to prepare an amendment that would meet that case ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member (Mr. Clarke) has suggested to strike out these qualifying words.

Mr. PUTTEE. I agree to accept the amendment of the hon. member for North Norfolk. His amendment is a great deal more reasonable than his speech.

Mr. CLARKE.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would like to persuade him (Mr. Charlton) if I can, that there are two reasonable men in the House, if he considers he is one. I move to strike out the words : 'Local, international, or national.'

Mr. BROCK. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) spoke to us of not objecting to foreign capital coming into our country. I think foreign capital means foreign cash. What does international labour mean ? It can do a certain amount of harm, but is it anything that can be attacked ? Foreign capital coming to this country is under Canadian laws, and if it does damage to any individual in this country there is a means of getting justice, and collecting damages. But organized labour such as has been threatened here; what does it bring ? It brings with it of necessity the calling out of the troops of this country to protect, not foreign capital, but Canadian capital from damage and from loss. We have seen in the last few days in the public press where 4,000 labourers—I do not say they are members of labour unions, but it shows you the company that labour unions bring in its train in this country; it shows that all the scruff of this country come out to assist them and to protect them to derail cars, to destroy property, to stone people, who are engaged in their lawful calling. I do not mean to say that this is done by organized labour, but this is the affiliation; this is the company they keep; this is the kind of sympathy they bring out; not the sympathy of people whose opinions are worth having, but the very worst elements of the whole country are brought out to sympathize with and to back up these strikes brought about by organized labour.

Then they defy us to bring forward evidences of these men being invited to come to this country. If this House will give me a committee, I shall have no difficulty in proving not only that they have come here, but that they have been asked to come here. Nobody, under these circumstances, can invest capital in this country with any degree of safety, because they know that they are liable to be held up by what is called organized labour. The labour organizations of this country are not in favour of strikes. Give them a chance to vote by ballot, and they will not vote for strikes. But men do not want to be called scabs on the streets ; they do not want their children coming from school to be hooted at ; they do not want their wives to be insulted on the streets. But ten men in a hundred can bring about a strike, and there is no means of getting at them. These people can shoot from behind a hedge, and then run away, and there is no way of reaching them. This is a kind of thing which men who have respect for themselves despise. If the matter were left to a vote by ballot, I know the way that vote would go. I have been in Toronto in the last few days, and I know the feeling among the labour men there, and they are not in favour of strikes. Only 10 per cent of the workers in Toronto are labour union men. I do not see why this country should be terrorized by them. I am prepared to meet the labouring people anywhere, and to convince any honest, reasonable man that there are two sides to this question. Labour has no right to terrorize over capital. I am prepared to protect organized labour, organized under Canadian law, and responsible for any harm it does to capital, and I am prepared to make capital responsible for any harm it does to labour. I wish to place myself right on this matter. My battle is with international organizations. If we stamp them out in this country we can deal with our own people, who, I believe, are quite reasonable. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). You need only pick up the papers to see how true his statement is, that these people do not stop even at murder. No less than twelve people were murdered yesterday, not by organized labour, but by the scruff of the country which they have in their train.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (Wellington South). Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say a word on this question; but after having listened to the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), I think it is due to myself and due to those whom I represent to say that my views on this labour problem are diametrically the opposite of his. That hon. gentleman has referred to those men who have organized as a labour party as men who will shoot at you from behind a hedge. I deny it; it is not true; and if the hon. member can give an instance of that, it is probable we may be in a position——

Mr. BROCK. The hon. gentleman must be intentionally obtuse——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BROCK. I suggested the possibility of a labour party being such as would do that kind of thing. I did not accuse any labour man of doing it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Then I say that unless the hon. member for Centre Toronto produces some facts upon which this House can form an opinion, he has no right to make that wholesale statement.

Mr. BROCK. I have made it, and I stick to it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I know the hon. member has made it, and that is the objection I take to it—that statements of that kind are made absolutely without foundation. Now, we know that the hon. member is the head of many industrial concerns in this country, including several large manufacturing concerns. He has had strikes; he has had labour difficulties; but will the hon. member rise in his place and say that as a result of a single strike or a single labour difficulty which he has experienced, there has been one single act of violence or one single act of unjust treatment? I say he cannot. The hon. gentleman contends that men have no right to organize under an international union. I submit that they have that right. They have a right to organize just as they see fit, whether the union be national or international. The difficulty in organizing a national union to-day is that workmen can be imported from the United States to take the place of men who think they have been wronged and have gone on strike; and the force of an international union is that men cannot be imported in that way, because they will not come when they are invited. I say that so far the unions in Canada have acted within the law, and have acted in a most reasonable way. Never yet, so far as I know, has there been an unreasonable or criminal act committed by a single union man who has been on strike. I believe that the principle of this Bill should be adopted by this House. Conciliation is what we all aim at. Conciliation is the means that will bring about the best results both to labour and capital; and speeches like that delivered to-night by the hon. member for Centre Toronto only serve to augment any difficulty which may exist between labour and capital. I believe Sir, that the course adopted by the Minister of Labour is the best means for bringing labour and capital together in Canada; and if the hon. minister will continue to pursue the course he has undertaken, he will do more to bring about a better understanding between labour and capital than any arbitrary measure that this House can adopt, while the speech of the hon. member for Centre Toronto only augments the furore.

Mr. BROCK. Before the hon. gentleman sits down, will he kindly name any strike that has occurred in any company with which I have been connected?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes, I will mention the strike which occurred two weeks ago in the Hespeler Woollen Mills, of which the hon. gentleman is president, and which employees 500 hands.

Mr. BROCK. How long did it last?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not know.

Mr. BROCK. You should know. It was settled inside of twelve hours. They did not lose a day's pay. There was no international union connected with it. We dealt with the men directly.

Mr. GUTHRIE. They may not have lost a day's pay, and I congratulate the hon. gentleman on that fact. If the demands of men were considered in that spirit, and their reasonable demands granted, there would be far fewer strikes. I say the principle of the Bill is right, and it ought to be adopted. The principle of this Bill was adopted when this government came into power, and when the Minister of Labour took control of labour troubles in this country. While the name of Sir William Mulock may go down to posterity, it will not only go down as the Postmaster General, but it will also go down as Minister of Labour.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall section 4, as amended by striking out the words 'local, national or international,' be adopted?

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to call the attention of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) to the fact that if this amendment should carry, it implies the recognition of not only local, national or international unions, but of unions which may not even be international. The amendment includes not only local, national and international, but even foreign labour organizations. I am in favour of the amendment, but it does not meet the point raised by the hon. member for Centre Toronto. I do not believe myself that a man should be required to relinquish his membership in any organization. We have discussed this matter to-night widely and brought a good deal into the discussion not to be found within the confines of the Bill, but, as my hon. friend from West Toronto has said, it is as well probably to clear the air. In my opinion it would be better if the labour organizations of this country were purely Canadian. I think that we should endeavour to make everything in this country more Canadian; and when we have foreign presidents and officers of our labour organizations, we are not encouraging that sentiment. But while it would no doubt be better to have Canadian officers for Canadian unions, the very worst way to endeavour to bring that about would be to try to coerce the labouring men into adopting that opinion. The very worst way to bring about a sentiment of that kind is to talk of labour organizations as cowardly organizations and unmanly. So long as we find hon. members holding out the red rag to the bull, so to speak, we are not going to reach the end desired of making these organizations thoroughly Canadian, officered by Canadian men. The other evening, in speaking on this Bill, I said that I thought it would be well to have an inquiry into the labour question of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. While the questions of the tariff, public works and railway transportation are great questions, that which is going to be the most important within the next ten years is the question of labour and capital. Every morning we read in the press of new labour difficulties, of new strikes, declared in various parts of Canada, and if the wave of prosperity should recede at any time, these labour troubles will be accentuated. No doubt the question often occurs to the capitalist, not in this country alone, but in every country to-day, whether he should invest his money in manufacturing enterprises for fear that the demands of labour will destroy the fruits of his industry, and we should seriously consider whether there is not some way of arranging matters between labour and capital on a more satisfactory basis. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), in referring to labour organizations, said that he was willing that men should vote by ballot. Well, there is not a labouring organization in Canada in which the vote is not taken by ballot when a strike is proposed, and before foreigners are called in. We have no right to refer to the leaders of our labouring men as agitators. If our men in Canada are willing to serve under the leadership of Americans in their councils and unions, it is not in good taste to refer to these leaders whom they have chosen as agitators. Let me repeat that, even with a foreign president and officers at the head of these labour organizations, no strike can be declared in the Dominion without a secret ballot first being taken. Not until the men have declared by secret ballot in favour of a strike can a strike be declared, or any of the foreign officers of the union be called in. While it would be more Canadian and national if our labour unions were officered by Canadians, still you cannot coerce the labouring men. Let us therefore endeavour, on more amiable and conciliatory lines, to cultivate among our labouring people the opinion that it will be more in their interest in every way to have their organizations and unions officered by men of their own nationality.

Mr. HOLMES. In discussing this clause I will endeavour to confine my remarks to the clause itself. I would ask if it is in order to discuss on this clause the various phases of the labour question?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion has been quite irregular, and I would ask hon. members of the committee to come back to the provision before us.

Mr. BOYD. It seems to me that the discussion has not only gone beyond the provisions of this Bill, but that we have been taking up the time of this House in considering legislation which we will have no power to make any practical use of. After we have adopted this measure, we will have no means of compelling either one side or the other to be governed by it or to accept any award which it may enable us to make. It seems to me that the only object of this Bill—the only effect it has had or can possibly have—is to enable those who represent the labour unions and professional sympathizers with labour to spread themselves and speak to the gallery. It has certainly been taken advantage of to-night for this purpose, and in this connection to attribute opinions to the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), to which I am sure the majority of this House will agree with me in saying, he never gave expression when speaking on this Bill. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the House spoke about flaunting the red rag to the bull and agitators, and all that kind of thing. I do not know what sort of a constituency the hon. gentleman represents, but I do not believe that my hon. friend for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) would make use of any expressions calculated to create the impression that he is opposed to the labour of this country. Why, everybody knows that he employs a great many men, everybody knows that he furnishes work and money for many more men—in all probability for one thousand men to every one employed by the hon. gentleman who has taken this opportunity to indulge in this very paltry attack. How many of these men, I may ask, employ labourers? How many of the lawyers who have found it necessary to spread themselves and wave their arms here to-night are employing one hundred, or twenty-five, or ten men—or even one, unless it be an underpaid clerk? Mr. Chairman, the fact is this, that without capital, labour is of very little use; and it is when labour is at its highest and when men are drawing probably the highest wages they have drawn for ten years, at a time when they can afford to waste time, that they turn a willing ear to the agitator, and the agitator is always there ready to take advantage of the opportunity. And I have no hesitation in saying—and I have watched this question with considerable interest—that just such Acts as we have listened to to-night are what very frequently leave the labourer without his hire. For the capitalist is not obliged to put his money out in precarious undertakings; and when the labourer becomes so exacting as he is becoming in Canada to-day and throughout the United States, capital draws in and says, Well, we don't have to continue those worring misunderstandings. We can get along very satisfactorily by keeping our money in the savings banks, and we know which side suffers then. But we have so many men in Canada and in the United States who are so anxious to stand well with this labouring element that as I have said before, in order to win this vote, they are ready to assent to things that do harm both to labour and to capital, but the greatest harm to the men they pretend to serve.

Amendment (Mr. Puttee) adopted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the amendment moved by Mr. Charlton be adopted?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What is the meaning of that amendment?

Mr. CHARLTON. That persons not members of labour associations or trades unions shall not be discriminated against in the settlement of labour disputes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) think that this accomplishes the object he has in view?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think so.

Amendment (Mr. Charlton) adopted.

Bill, as amended, reported.

IMPORTATION OF ALIENS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Charlton: that Bill (No. 106) to amend the Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens, be now read a second time.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to make a very few remarks upon this Bill——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Ross) who moves the motion to adjourn the debate, seconded the motion for the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. If permitted to speak on the motion to adjourn the debate——

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think I am able to put the motion to adjourn the debate, because the hon. member who moved it himself seconded the motion for the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) this afternoon had extended to him the courtesy of three or four minutes——

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no motion before the Chair, except the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. CHARLTON. I presume the motion will carry. I am under great obligation to my hon. friend who has kindly come to my rescue, and I think his motion will stand as a motion and probably be acted upon by the House in the affirmative. However. I desire to say a few words with reference to the Bill that is now under consideration of this House. The Alien Labour Law of 1897, in section five, chapter eleven, provided that new industries established for the first time in Canada might employ skilled labour brought from abroad in cases where such labour was unobtainable in Canada. This provision did not apply to industries already in existence. The Bill I have the honour to offer to the House proposes to expunge the words 'in or upon any new industries not at present established in Canada,' and to provide that skilled labour may be employed upon industries in Canada provided such skilled labour is not obtainable in this country. Now, I am unable to understand why any discrimination should under the provisions of this Act of 1897, have been made against the established industries of this country, why, this provision should have been made to apply only to new industries being established here for the first time. I venture to think that in no other country in the world has such a provision been adopted or is such a provision in force.

The Alien Labour Law, of which this provision is a part, was, in my opinion, founded altogether upon false principles. It was adopted—perhaps I am not entitled to say avowedly—but it was adopted as we all know in retaliation for a similar law of the United States, a most unjust and abused law, passed by congress and enforced in that country. Now, this American law, absurd in its operations, was one that we copied in the provision made in this chapter eleven of the statutes of 1897, and it is a law that has not been enforced in the United States against Canada, it is so manifestly abused that public opinion there does not require its enforcement. To-day hundreds of persons cross from Windsor to Detroit every morning and engage in operations in that city, every one of whom could be turned back if the Alien Law were enforced. The same is being done at Buffalo and a number of other towns on the frontier. Labour from the Canadian side passes over unimpeded and in violation of the provisions of the Alien Labour Law; yet we have a law on the statute-book here which, in so far as these provisions about skilled labour is concerned is, if not rigidly enforced, is so much of an impediment to the manufacturers as to be found by them very oppressive in its operation, and very detrimental to their interests.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman name one manufacturer who has suffered on account of this law.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, I will name myself; and I can procure for the hon. gentleman many names of manufacturers. This Bill was put into my hands by the Manufacturers' Association with a representation that the operaton of this Bill was very detrimental to their interests. Now, in this age, there is a keen competition between manufacturing nations. The manufacturing interests of Great Britain, the manufacturing interests of Germany, and of Russia, and of the United States for that matter, are keenly alive to the importance of adopting new and improved machinery; and in all these nations anything that is invented that lessens the cost of production is at once seized upon by active and progressive manufacturers. The invention of new machinery has in the United States given that country the lead in the boot and shoe trade, in various other lines of business. The boot and shoe trade machinery in the United States, machinery for the production of pig iron, for the manipulation of steel, and various other lines of manufacture, are imported into Germany, into Great Britain, into Russia, and with this machinery it becomes necessary in most cases to send skilled labour from the country where the machinery is invented to the country where it is to be put into operation. Now, under this law a Canadian manufacturer is unable to avail himself of the advantages that will be conferred upon the country by the introduction of new and improved machinery that is calculated to reduce the cost of production in his particular line of business, because he is prohibited by law from importing the labour that is necessary to put that machinery into operation, to run it and to teach Canadian operators how to run it.

The labour unions, I suppose, are unfavourable to this provision. I think they stand in their own light in this matter, and fail to understand the scope of the operation of this measure. If there was no impediment in the way of introducing new machinery to give the manufacturers the facilities that they think necessary to put that improved machinery into operation. The law is utterly absurd. The law does not propose to give to the manufacturers the right to employ skilled labour or to bring in skilled labour that is obtainable in Canada. The Bill simply provides that those provisions regarding skilled labour should be applied to all manufacturing interests; that the skilled labour can be imported for carrying on these manufacturing operations if that skilled labour is not obtainable in this country. Well, who can object to that? What possible objection can there be to the permission given to manufacturers to improve their methods of production and bring in the most modern and up-to-date machinery to enable them to compete with their rivals in the United States and other countries? They have got to do it if they are going to hold their place in the race. But this law which prohibit them from obtaining artisans and experts that can put that machinery up, and run it, and teach others to run it, is a law detrimental to the manufacturing industries of Canada. Certainly we ought to afford to the manufacturing interests reasonable protection, reasonable advantages, reasonable privileges. We ought not to debar them from the introduction of methods, and means, and machinery that will permit them to reduce the cost of production, to increase the effectiveness of their staff, and to bring them into competition with other manufacturing interests that have all these appliances. The provision that prohibits the employment or the introduction of skilled labour if it is obtainable in Canada will protect the interest of skilled labour here, and will prevent any abuse. The manufacturer is not going to import skilled labour at a high cost or bring it from abroad if he can get it in Canada, and if he can get it fifty or sixty per cent cheaper. In no case will the manufacturer import skilled labour that is obtainable in this country, and in that fact is a safeguard against abuse in reference to this matter. I therefore beg to move the second reading of this Bill, which eliminates the provision with regard to established industries and permits any manufacturing industry in Canada to import skilled labour where that labour is not obtainable in this country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). My hon. friend suggests that the necessity for this amendment arises from the fact that occasionally there is a change of machinery in old established industries, and that there is no labour in Canada capable of working the new machinery. Perhaps such a state of affairs from time to time does exist. But I would rather think that in the introduction of new machinery to-day there is quite enough ingenuity amongst the workmen engaged in our industries to enable them in a short time, and with proper educational advantages afforded them, to learn how to make use of this new machinery. I recollect one instance in point. I remember quite well what was supposed to be an intricate new piece of machinery, having been introduced by an established industry, and there were no skilled labourers in Canada capable of working that machinery. The employer came to me and asked me what he ought to do. It was not for me to guide him but I intimated to him a very simple method by which he might get over the difficulty. Instead of importing an army of skilled workmen to work the machines I suggested that he might get some one to teach the men in his employ to use these machines. He did so and in a short time he had these men, Canadians, working these machines. Such a course as this might get over many of the difficulties to which my hon. friend alludes. To make the amendment we perhaps would open the door to an abuse of the Act, which my hon. friend knows was placed on the statute-book not from choice but from necessity. Therefore, I would favour the amendment of the hon. member for Cumberland Mr. Logan) that the debate stand adjourned.

Amendment (Mr. Logan) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

FRUIT MARKS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. HENDERSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 130) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad if the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) would follow the example of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) and allow his Bill to stand until the next day, so that it may have the personal attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would be very glad to meet the wishes of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) in his absence, if I could have any assurance that this Bill will again be reached during the session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I shall accede to the request.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. Minister of Agriculture arrived in Ottawa this evening, and will be able to give the Bill his personal attention on the next day when public Bills are taken up.

Mr. HENDERSON. Next Monday will be a holiday, and it will be two weeks from to-day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There will be another day. I will give my hon. friend that assurance.

Order allowed to stand.

PROHIBITION OF THE IMPORTATION, MANUFACTURE, OR SALE OF CIGARETTES.

Mr. BICKERDIKE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 133) to prohibit the importation, manufacture, or sale of cigarettes.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have to declare in regard to this Bill that I do not consider it has been properly introduced, and for the following reasons: When this Bill was introduced the other day, I did not then have the opportunity of reading it over before its introduction, and I was then unable to declare whether it should have originated in committee of the whole House, or whether it should have been introduced on a motion for leave. I see now that the Bill has for its object to prohibit the manufacture and sale of any cigarette or cigarette papers, and the Bill also provides that no cigarette or cigarette papers shall be imported into the country. It was suggested the other day, when the Bill was introduced, that such a measure could only be brought in by a member of the administration, and not by a private member, because it affects the revenue. The contention concerned was an erroneous construction of our parliamentary law, because according to our rule 86, which governs the point raised the other day, it is provided that the House cannot provide any vote for the apportioning of any part of the public revenue, and cannot impose any tax or impost that has not been first recommended to the House by the Governor. This Bill, though dealing with the question of tariff, does not impose any tax or impost, and it can then be introduced by a private member. But when introduced by a private member, the proposition should be first considered in a committee of the whole House. A Bill relating to trade and to alteration of the laws concerning trade should originate in committee of the whole House. By section 41, of our rules, it is provided as follows :

No Bill relating to trade, or alteration of the laws concerning trade is to be brought into the House until the proposition shall have been first considered in the Committee of the Whole House, and agreed unto by the House.

This enactment has generally been followed in the Commons of Great Britain, as in the legislative assembly of the colonies having constitutional government, though they have not in England, as in some of the colonies, a rule as formally expressed as it is in our procedure, as you may see by Bourinot, pages 591 and 592. We have in England as well as in this country certain precedents on the matter. I will not undertake to quote them all, but I would be permitted to refer to a precedent of 1883, which is to be found in the 'Commons Journal,' page 377, where a Bill to regulate the sale of or prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquors originated in committee. In 1885 a Bill to amend certain portions of the License Act, of 1883 was initiated in committee. In 1880 and 1885, a Bill regulating the sale of fertilizers originated also in committee, and in 1886, a Bill regulating the manufacture and sale of oleo-margarine and butterine also originated in committee. I then come to the conclusion that this Bill was not properly introduced in the House, and the fact of presenting it on motion for leave would be a departure from the usage which has been adhered to in numerous instances and precedents. I declare the motion for its second reading as being irregular and out of order.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Whilst I shall bow respectfully to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I would draw your attention to the fact that I was going to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole. I would refer you to the decision of Mr. Speaker Cockburn, given in 1868, which is as follows:

The procedure on a Bill which ought to have originated in Committee of the Whole, but which has been read a first time by leave of the House, can be proceeded with when the House has subsequently resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, and adopted the resolution on which the Bill is based.

Mr. SPEAKER. That has not been followed in this case. In the case quoted by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) the resolution had been adopted in Committee of the Whole when the second reading of the Bill came up for discussion. In this instance the same procedure has not been followed.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would move that the rule be suspended, and that we go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPEAKER. That motion has to be made with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have no doubt that the House will consent, because we have to have a discussion of this Bill at some time.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think that section 31, of the rules and orders require that two day's notice must be given.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, the motion has to be made with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Speaker, could you say why the objections were not taken when the Bill was first introduced, in order to save time ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Because, as I explained a minute ago, I had not seen the Bill then, and I could not decide whether the Bill was for the purpose I have indicated or not.

Mr. MONK. I think it is fair to ask, in view of the vote given on the resolution introduced by my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike), if the government will take any steps to cure this difficulty, which is, after all, only a technical difficulty ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nothing in the circumstances which requires the government to intervene. Mr. Speaker has explained that this Bill may be brought up again by way of resolution. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) has only to give notice of his resolution in the usual way, and proceed in committee in order that this Bill may be introduced. It does not require any action upon the part of the government.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Will the government give me an opportunity to go on with the Bill if this is done ? It will probably be a little late for this session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That can be considered later on. In the meantime the hon. gentleman had better proceed in the ordinary way as pointed out by Mr. Speaker.

Bill withdrawn.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT, 1898—AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe) moved second reading of Bill (No. 136) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898. He said : This Bill proposes to alleviate certain grievances which the National Association of Marine Engineers of Canada labour under. This body has addressed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) and to other members of the House, circulars in which they have set out their grievances under seven heads. The first three of these are as follows :

1. That every vessel coming under the Steamboat Inspection Act of Canada of whatever capacity be required to carry certificated engineers.

2. That all temporary certificates be abolished.

3. That engineers holding 4th class certificates be allowed to take charge of boats from 5 N. H. P. single cylinder, up to 10 N. H. P. of compound type.

The Bill which I now propose will remove the grievances specified under these three different heads. As regards the other four sub-heads of the complaint of the marine engineers of Canada, I do not think they can be reached by a Bill of this kind, because they are regulated by Order in Council passed by the Governor General in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. These four subheads are as follows :

4. Candidate for the fourth-class certificate must have 36 months' service in a machine shop on the making and repairing of steam engines, also 12 months' service in the engine room as an oiler or fireman, or in lieu of above service, he must serve 48 months as fireman or oiler on the watch.

5. That all candidates before going up for examination for certificates have their credentials or recommendations examined by the subordinate council of the National Association of Marine Engineers in the locality in which they reside for verification.

6. That owing to confliction often arising between the engineers and the deck officers, re the use and care of deck hose on steamboats, such hose being used in the dual capacity of fire and deck hose, and which hose is used exclusively by the deck officers. Therefore, we, the engineers of Canada request, that the law be amended so that after said hose is put in proper order and passes the scrutiny of the inspector, that all responsibility for the proper care of such deck or fire hose be transferred from the engineer to the deck officers for the remainder of the season.

7. That the Order in Council permitting vessels to ply in Canadian waters, irrespective of Canadian laws, or inspection and manned by uncertificated engineers is a detriment to the marine interests of Canada in competing with Canadian built vessels, and also an injustice to men holding certificates of competency under the Canadian law. We ask that said order be rescinded and that all vessels plying in Canadian waters be subject to the laws governing Canadian built vessels.

Every hon. gentleman will see at a glance what is proposed by the Bill which I now introduce, and it will not be necessary therefore for me to dwell at length upon its different sections until the Bill reaches committee. I desire, however, to point out to the hon. the Minister of Marine that should he desire to provide a remedy for the four last subsections of the grievances complained of, he will have to amend the Order in Council now existing and in order to meet the desire of the National Association of Marine Engineers of Canada, I would sugest to the minister the advisability of amending part 5 of the regulations, section 112, subsection 'B,' which now reads as follows :

Engineers shall keep the fire pump and hose and their connections in perfect condition ready for immediate use and when found unfit for use from age or other cause shall report their condition to the inspector of hulls by whom the steamer was last inspected.

This section should be amended by substituting the word 'put' for the word 'keep' in the first line thereof and striking out the words 'or other cause' in the fourth line thereof and substituting the words 'or defects,' and by adding the following paragraph to the section :

And after the granting of the certificates under the Steamboat Inspection Act, the said hose and their connections, shall be in charge of the deck officers of the said steamboat who shall be responsible therefor, and if at any time they are found unfit for use from age, or other cause, they shall report their condition to the inspector of hulls by whom the steamer was last inspected.

I would also suggest to the hon. minister the following amendments to part 6 of his regulations, subsections 'B,' 'C,' 'D,' and 'F' of section 1 should be repealed and the following substituted :

(b) He shall have served an apprenticeship of not less than thirty-six months in a steam-engine shop and being employed on the making and repairing of steam engines, and have served twelve months in the engine room as an oiler or fireman of a steamboat—or, if he has not served such apprenticeship he shall have been employed for not less than thirty-six months as a journeyman mechanic in some workshop on the making and repairing of steam engines and have served twelve months in the engine room of a steamboat as oiler or fireman ;—or

(d) He shall have served not less than thirty-six months as oiler on the watch in the engine room of a steamer of not less than thirty nominal horse power, and twelve months in the engine room of a steamboat as oiler or fireman ;—or,

(e) He shall have served not less than forty-eight months as fireman on the watch in the fire hold of a steamboat of not less than thirty nominal horse power ;—

(f) And in any of the above cases of service twelve (12) months service in a boiler shop on the making and repairing of steam boilers may be accepted in lieu of twelve months of the service named, provided however, that he shall in all cases have served at least twelve (12) months in the engine room of a steamboat as oiler or fireman.

The marine engineers think that these amendments will alleviate the grievance referred to in the six subsections of their complaint.

I may say that the main basis of the grievances of these gentlemen seems to be that an applicant may apply to the department and obtain a certificate enabling him to act as an engineer upon the different steamboats plying on Canadian waters. They allege that this authority has been granted and that certificates have been granted to various engineers when there was no necessity for such certificates being granted, the result being to deprive certified engineers of employment. These gentlemen tell me that there is really no necessity for granting these certificates to non-certified engineers who have applied in previous years. I do not vouch for that because I have no personal knowledge thereof, but I do think that their contention is logical when they say that employment should be found for engineers holding certificates before another applicant should be given a certificate. If the department provides for amendments in the present regulations in the line of those suggested by the Marine Engineers' Association of Canada, it will go far to remove the difficulties which they now complain of. This association, I may say, is a large and representative body in Canada. They have held meetings at various places, and the circular which is addressed to me comes from St. John, N.B. I believe that every member of the House has received a copy of this circular, and that most, if not all, the members, have heard from the grand president of the association, who has spent some days in Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I have no objection to the Bill being read a second time, and being referred to the Committee of the Whole, and progress being reported, for the reason that up to the present time, I have been unable to get a full report on the subject from the officers of the department. As regards the merits of the Bill, I think there are some very good suggestions in it; there are others that may not be so good; and before discussing the Bill as it should be discussed, I would like to get from the officers of my department the necessary information.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). May I ask the minister whether the officers of this organization to which reference has been made by the hon. member for North Simcoe, did not appear before him recently?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were before me, and I have asked the department for a report which I have been unable to get as yet, owing to the opening of navigation and nearly all the officers being away.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I would like to ask if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has heard more than one side of this question. It is, as the hon. gentleman knows, a very large question, and the Bill involves probably more than appears on the surface. I am not going to give opposition to the Bill, but I do think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be more apt to do justice to all parties concerned if he has this Bill printed and distributed, and gives the country a chance to see what it contains before it is crystallized into law. And I hope the hon. gentleman will not take simply one side of the case, and assume that there is no other.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). I have not had time to give this Bill the consideration I ought to give to it; but I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to take into consideration the lakes situated in the west where it is somewhat difficult to get engineers to comply with what this Act calls for. On lake Winnipeg there are ten or fifteen boats used to haul nets to the frames. There are also one or two small tugs plying between Selkirk and Norway House. There are also one or two steamers on Lake Winnipegoosis. I have heard the owners of these boats complain of the difficulty of getting competent engineers up there, and it seems to me that if this Bill passes it will be almost impossible to get certificated engineers to go up for the short season, and the remuneration asked by them will be almost prohibitive. I do not want to object to the Bill, but I merely ask the minister to take into consideration these lakes before he allows it to pass this session.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (Victoria). This engineer business is a matter of very serious importance. I know that a committee in Toronto is searching for a gentleman named Cap. Sullivan, and he is drifting because an engineer cannot be got for the tug. This engineer question is a very serious one.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). I confess I have been considerably surprised to see a Bill of this character introduced by a private member instead of emanating from the government. I do not know why the hon. member for North Simcoe has brought forward this Bill. I do not know whether he has undertaken this duty without consulting the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but I certainly think that legislation of this kind should emanate from the minister who is responsible for such legislation, surrounded as he is by officers who should be able to give him every kind of information necessary to enable him to draft a proper Bill. I am sure the House would receive such a Bill with a great deal more confidence than one introduced by a private member, because we would have the assurance that those best qualified to deal with the matter had given the Bill their very careful judgment. I have looked at one or two clauses of this Bill, and I fail altogether to see any reason why the amendments proposed should be adopted. It would almost seem to me as if there were some other motive behind it than the public good—possibly a means of some particular person or class of persons securing a position, which, with a Bill emanating from the government, would not be permitted at all. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should look carefully into this matter, and, if he intends to maintain the dignity of the high and honourable position which he occupies, I would hardly think that he would permit even a supporter of his to forestall him by introducing important legislation of this character. I regard the whole Bill regarding steamboat inspection as one of the very greatest importance. Having in view the protection of life and property, it is a Bill that should be drafted with the very greatest care, and with all the safeguards that can possibly be thrown around it by the best qualified officers we have in the country to deal with the matter. It would be dangerous to allow a a Bill of this kind to go simply through a Committee of the House, which has not the advantage of the experience and skill of the gentlemen who ought first to pronounce on a Bill of this kind. I trust that the minister will take the matter into consideration, and guard the interests of the country by first bringing to bear upon the Bill all the information that is possessed by the officers of his department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). I do not think there is much in the objections of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). The association at whose instance no doubt my hon. friend brought this Bill before the House, is a very large, important, influential and intelligent class of people, and its representations have no doubt been made to the minister and to the department and to the members of this House from year to year. I think the hon. member for North Simcoe is quite within his right, as any member would be, in introducing legislation of this class, and I think it is a very good way to bring the matter to the attention of the House and the country. One hon. member suggested that the Bill might be printed and distributed among those who should have an opportunity of studying the views of the association in regard to the proposed legislation. With regard to the criticism of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the remarks he has made show that his department are taking a deep interest in this subject, with a view to protecting the public interest, and he has informed the House that the delay which he is now asking for is necessary because he has not yet received a report from the technical officers of his department on these matters. I am inclined to think myself that some of the amendments asked for by this association are just and defensible, in the public interest; with regard to others there may be a difference of opinion; and in that respect, I agree with the hon. member for Halton that those interested in these matters should be asked to report to the minister and the House, and give us the benefit of their experience. At the same time, I think my hon. friend is doing his duty to a large class of people and to the public in bringing this matter before the House, as he has done, because it is difficult for one not well versed in all these matters to understand the representations made to them by the parties so much interested.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman taken into consideration the fact that there is a very large number of men in this country who have never passed examinations, who have never belonged to an association, who are advanced in years and who are yet very efficient men, owing to their long experience. That class of men would be entirely cut out if this Bill became law.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That being the case, no doubt the House will be particular about passing legislation that would do injustice to a large class of men. We all know that there are many men capable of doing work of this description, who perhaps could not pass a technical examination, and that is one of the great difficulties we have in legislating on matters of this kind. But that objection could be guarded against no doubt by the officers of the department whose special duty it is to deal with these matters. We have to think first of the public who use the boats, and then we have to see that no injustice is done to the class just mentioned. But I think we may by means of legislation bring about a gradual improvement in the class of men who are taking up this business.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time.

INSPECTION OF TEXTILE FABRICS.

Mr. W. SCOTT (West Assiniboia) moved second reading of the Bill (No. 137) to regulate the sale and provide for the inspection of textile fabrics. He said: The purpose of this measure is fairly well set out in its title. The main intent of the Bill is contained in the third clause, which reads as follows.

3. Every manufacturer of textile fabrics shall mark, label or tag such goods in plain printed letters or figures which cannot be detached except by design; and the mark, label or tag shall state accurately the constituent fibres of every material of which such goods are composed and their relative proportions.

As I said when introducing this measure, it is one of considerable importance to the public in general, the wool raisers of the country in particular, and incidentally to the woollen manufacturers. I may state that the measure was prepared by the Sheepgrowers' Association of the North-west Territories, at whose instance I am introducing the Bill. The conditions of the wool trade in the North-west Territories, as throughout Canada generally, have been for a long time past very depressed. It must be within the knowledge of every hon. member that notwithstanding the great prosperity which prevails generally, the prices of wool remain depressed, not only in this country, but in the world over. In England many of the woollen manufacturers have been driven out of business within recent years. In France many of the woollen factories have been turned into cotton factories, and in Canada there is really no profit in raising and selling wool. Especially in the Northwest Territories is this depression felt, so that sheep are raised there now only for the purpose of being sold as meat, there being no profit in the raising and selling of wool. It is thought by the sheep men of the Northwest Territories that perhaps legislation such as I am submitting will have a beneficial effect. In those territories there are great possibilities for the sheep industry, if we had favourable conditions. The natural conditions are very favourable. There is a large tract in the southern and western portions much better fitted for sheep than for cattle. There is a portion of country extending probably over ten million acres, bounded on the north, roughly speaking, by the Canadian Pacific Railway main line, and of which the centre of the north boundary would be at a point near Swift Current. There is there, south of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, an area of nearly ten million acres in extent, much better fitted for sheep than for cattle. The condition in all countries has led to very general alarm on the part of sheep raisers and, to some extent, on the part of woollen manufacturers. No doubt many hon. members are aware that last summer, about the time of the imperial conference, there was another conference held in London, at which were representatives from practically every colony which has a sheep industry, and this alarm to which I have referred, found expression at that conference. The reason given for the depressed condition of the sheep trade was the fact that in the manufacture of the textile fabrics referred to in this Bill there has grown up a very large custom of substitution, and that, to a very great extent, cottons are used in the fabric of materials going to the public as pure woollens. And all authorities I have had the advantage of coming in contact with agree that the principal cause of the depression I speak of is the adulteration of woollen goods. That depression cannot be charged against overproduction, because the increase of production of woollens and worsteds has not kept pace with the general growth of population in the various countries. One chief cause, as stated by the authorities, is the increased use of cotton where wool was formerly the material required. And this was made possible, as I have indicated, by the advance in the art of colouring and designing cotton fabrics. The increased use of shoddy is another cause of depression. The following statement is from the proceedings of the International Live Stock Convention held at Chicago :—

> There are several classes of shoddy. The best is made from the sweepings of tailors' shops and the emptying of rag-bags in civilized countries. The worst which constitutes the greater part used in America, is from the rotten, cast-off rags of beggars and the lazar and pest houses of Europe, having in them all kinds of filth and disease. These are gathered by rag-pickers from the slums and alleys and sent to America by shiploads, where they are purchased by a certain class of manufacturers, who, in order to take the curse off the name, term the stuff 'reused wool fibre.' It must be remembered, however, that in most instances, when tearing this shoddy to pieces preparatory to again weaving into cloth, it is found to be so rotten and dead that nothing is produced but dust, and in order to get two ends, so that it can be spun, a minimum portion of wool or cotton is mixed with it in order that it may be held together. The next step after weaving carries it to unscrupulous dealers, who sell this production to labouring men—and, in fact, all classes of society—for 'pure wool,' thus getting for a suit worth but three or four dollars more than three times this amount. To encourage such a fraud is simply putting the lousy rags of European paupers in competition with the sheep and wool-growers of America and elsewhere, and robbing the consumers who wear woollen garments by selling them the stuff under a misrepresentation.

If these statements are facts—and it is hardly likely that a body like the American Live Stock Association would state them if they were not—it will be seen that, apart from the fraud and misrepresentation in the matter, there is considerable danger to the public infection, and it would seem well, therefore, that legislation should be framed to guard against this danger.

The need for the protection of retail buyers in the purity of the articles they buy is becoming recognized in all lines of trade. In the primitive stages of society this protection was not needed, because each man or family prepared with their own hands everything they required. But the development of commerce due to the progress of civilization has made it necessary, and is making it more necessary every day, that purchasers shall be protected in the articles they wish to buy. Thus, we have in all our communities daily inspection of milk. The people are protected also with regard to butter; we have a law prohibiting the sale of oleomargerine as butter. Then, in recent years this parliament has provided for the inspection of fruits. In many articles there is still no inspection of this kind, but in regard to many important articles of daily use we have now provided for the protection of the public, regular systems of inspection. And I think we all agree that protection with regard to many of these things is essential if it can be given. I think the facts I have stated will go to show that the protection of the public in the matter of these textile fabrics is a necessary protection if it can be given. The use of shoddy, as I have said, has been increasing. It is fast increasing in Great Britain. It is stated that to-day shoddy is used to the extent of 130,000,000 pounds in a total output of wool of 500,000,000 pounds, and, in the United States, even against the enormous duties, levied against the importation of rags, the use of shoddy in one year amounted to 34,-500,000 pounds in a total output of 400,000,-000 pounds. It is stated that within thirty miles of the manufacturing city of Bradford there are scores of mills in which for every bale of wool used ten bales of shoddy, mungo, cotton, &c., are used, and, in some factories of so-called woollen goods there is not a pound of wool used in a year. I have here a statement made by the Hon. George W. Wallace, of Santa Fe, New Mexico, a prominent wool-grower, to the effect that ninety per cent of woollen goods sold in the United States contain cotton and that in forty-five per cent the proportion of cotton is over three-quarters. Now, admitting the advantage to buyers of being able to buy cotton goods with 10 or 15 per cent of wool, we still cannot get away from the fraud of disposing of materials as 'all wool,' or 'pure wool,' which contain less than 50 per cent of wool. This fraud the public have a right to be protected from, if protection in this sphere is possible. Upon this point of practicability I may say——

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order. I submit that this Bill is not regularly before the House. This is a Bill affecting trade and has not been introduced first by resolution. Following the decision you gave, Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, I fail to see any difference between the present Bill and the Bill of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike); and if you are going to rule that Bills of this kind must be introduced by resolution, I do not see that there is any object, at this late hour, in continuing the discussion. I ask for your ruling.

Mr. SCOTT. If my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will defer his point of order for three minutes, I will state the other point I wish to call to the attention of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that when the whole question of the introduction of Bills has been so thoroughly considered and the similarity of the two Bills is so complete, there should be no difficulty in arriving at the decision at once as to whether this Bill is in order or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that the point of order taken by the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) is well founded. The same question came up some years ago. I find that the Bills respecting the inspection of staple articles of Canadian produce have generally been founded on resolutions. If I mistake not this Bill provides for certain inspection. Now, we have decisions in similar cases. It was decided that a Bill respecting the culling and measurement of timber should originate in Committee of the Whole; also a Bill regulating the sale and disposal of butter did not pass its second reading because it was not commenced in Committee of the Whole. I think this last decision applies to the Bill of the hon. gentleman, and I do not hink the motion for the second reading would be in order.

DRY DOCKS CONSTRUCTION—GOVERNMENT AID.

Resolution respecting the payment of a subsidy for the construction of a dry dock, read the second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 178) respecting the encouragement of the construction of dry docks.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 19, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 179) to amend the Act respecting safety of ships.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is simply to make the Canadian law the same as the English law regarding deck loads. It is purely a technical matter.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to bring to the attention of the right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister, a telegram which I have received from Dawson : 'Official organ says committee has been appointed to investigate Treadgold,' and the inquiry is made as to whether or not this statement is correct. Would the right hon. gentleman inform the House ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The statement is premature, but the commission will go in a very few days.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 17) to aid in the settlement of railway labour disputes.—Sir William Mulock.

SUPPLY—ATLANTIC AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. C. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this motion, but of drawing attention to something of great interest to the county I have the honour to represent. Two years ago a subsidy was granted the Atlantic and Superior Company for thirty miles of road. In the subsidy Act I find this clause :

The Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway not exceeeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of 50 per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile.

The subsidy was voted for thirty miles from Caplin to Paspebiac and amounted to $96,000. I understand that an application is before the Minister of Railways for another $96,000, an additional or double subsidy. By the law as it now stands, I am precluded from discussing the merits of this second application, because I understand that, by an Order in Council, that subsidy will be voted and paid over. The House will remember that this company which was formed in 1893, transferred this road in 1900 to trustees, and late in 1900 they gave additional powers to the trustees. These trustees have built about three miles of road within the last two years. I am free to say that the work from New Carlisle to Paspebiac has been done almost exclusively out of the Dominion subsidy. This vote of $96,000 was divided into three portions. One, of $35,000, was allotted to the Hamilton Bridge Works Company, for four bridges out of which $33,000 has been paid. Another portion of the subsidy was to be used for the completion of the roadbed and the works incidental thereto. I understand that under the second item, $35,000 has been paid, and $10,000 is still due. Now, the third portion of $16,000 was reserved for the payment of overdue balances for material, labour, boarding house claims and supplies furnished in connection with the construction of the said section of railway. For the purpose of getting at the facts with regard to the third subsection of the subsidy, the Minister of Railways at my request, issued last December, a circular which was distributed throughout the county of Bonaventure inviting those who had claims for labour, material, board, &c., to send in their claims in the form of affidavits. These have been received, and the aggregate for thirty miles of road is $226,276.88. We are now placed in this position—we have to distribute $16,000 among creditors to the extent of over $226,000. The proportion is so small that I am going to ask the government to change this last clause of the subsidy so as to begin to pay the labourers who are still in possession of their time checks, the labourers who have not sold their claim on the road, so that we may pay them at least fifty cents on the dollar if not more. But I wish to go further and ask the government, when they will take up the new claims of the Atlantic and Lake Superior to remember that these trustees, represented by Mr. Joquin Galindey, advanced money to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway and the guarantee that they have since 1900 been in possession of one hundred miles of railway which they are working for their own advantage and benefit, whereas the men who built the road, the farmers who gave the right of way, the men who supplied the material and the men who boarded the employees remain unpaid; so that if any money leaves the Dominion exchequer for this Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway or the trustees thereof, the government should take upon itself to pay the men who built the line and not pay the trustees who have taken possession of the road, and thus guaranteed their own advances. I believe that I need say no more, except that I wish to thank the right hon. the premier (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) for the great trouble they have gone to in the effort to bring order out of chaos in the affairs of this road. And, before I resume my seat I very humbly request the government, before granting this additional application of the trustees of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway :

1. That the Department of Railways and Canals ascertain by means of a public circular the amount due on the Baie des Chaleurs and Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway from Metapedia to Caplin, for right of way, labour, board, material, damage, &c.

2. That all circular payments to the trustees of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway be withheld until their line of railway has been placed in a proper condition, that suitable fences have been erected on the whole road and that the section from New Carlisle to Paspebiac has been completed and is operated and that the road-bed is improved, unsafe wooden bridges and trestles replaced by proper constructions.

3. That any additional subsidy granted this railway besides that of $3,200 per mile for thirty miles from Caplin to Paspebiac authorized by chapter 7, Ed. VII., be applied by the government itself to the payment of debts due on the railway for right of way, board, material, construction and operation; that the trustees of these bondholders being in possession of the road and being therefore guaranteed for their advances and benefitting by its operation and by the work of unpaid labour, material, &c., of other creditors should not share in this additional subsidy.

4. That if a double subsidy of $6,400 per mile on the thirty miles of road amounting to $96,000 be granted on the application by Joquin Galindey and of the trustees or any other of said trustees, or of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company, or any sum or part thereof, that said sum be applied by the Department of Railways and Canals to the payment of the unsecured creditors mentioned above.

5. That the trustees or the company itself have no right to claim additional subsidies for work which has not been paid by them and which according to the sworn claims produced with the Department of Railways and Canals exceed $220,000 for thirty miles of the line only.

6. That legislation be asked for by the Government during the present session if necessary to authorize the Department of Railways and Canals to pay to the unsecured creditors any subsidy granted to this road in addition to that of $3,200 per mile mentioned in section 9 chapter 7, 1 Ed. VII.

7. That the balance of the original subsidy of $96,000 voted in section 9, chapter 7, 1 Ed. VII, not already paid or reserved for payment of labour, board and material be withheld until the line of railway has been put into proper condition as indicated above.

I believe both sides of the House will agree with me that what I ask in most reasonable. These claims are due to poor people, for the most part labourers and farmers who have suffered through the construction of this Baie des Chaleurs Railway to such an extent that it has become a by-word in the railway history of the Dominion. During the last fifteen or sixteen years, the county of Bonaventure has gone through a crisis probably unparelleled in Canada; and I hope that before any more money leaves the Dominion exchequer for the purposes of this road, the government will see to it that the people who have built this road shall be first paid before any other payments are made by the Crown or by the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I assure my hon. friend (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure) that the matter shall have consideration.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—WINDSOR JUNCTION ACCIDENT.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I wish to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if it is his intention to lay on the Table the evidence that will be taken in the investigation held into the cause of the accident at Windsor Junction on the Intercolonial Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had not thought of it, but if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) desires it, I shall be very glad to do so.

CLASSIFICATION OF FREIGHT.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). I would like to inquire from the Minister of Railways if the new classification of freight known as the Canadian Freight Classification No. 12, has been authorized, as is customary, by Order in Council ? The same came into affect on May 1st.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I could not answer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) offhand, I have no recollection of any recent order passing that had reference to any classification of freight. This may possibly have received sanction some months ago, though it only came into effect this month. I will ascertain and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. KEMP. To explain, I may say that the last classification was authorized by Order in Council in 1899 ? I hardly expect that the minister would have authorized another classification on the eve of the appointment of a commission. There are some very radical departures in this new classification. I will read the rule, which has never been applied to any other classification :

> When articles are shipped under false names, in order to deceive the carrier, or to avoid this classification, agents at destination will collect charges according to proper classification, plus fifty per cent in addition to the rate which would have been charged had the property been correctly described.

There are 3,000 different items in this classification, perhaps more, and there is great confusion and misunderstanding between the shippers and the railway. This rule, if carried out, means that the company's view of the case in all instances must be the correct one, that they must be the judge, jury and court of appeal, and if goods upon which the freight would amount to $100, were not, according to their opinion, in accordance with this classification, one in which the public have nothing to say, if they consider that the goods are not properly described under this classification, which as I say contains 3,000 items, then they have a right to charge $50 extra on freight which would be $100, and to exact that as a fine from the shipper before the goods will be handed over to the consignee at the other end. I just draw the minister's attention to this matter in view of the appointment of a commission. There are other rules, new rules, in the new classification which are just as radical, and although all the merchandise of the country has been shipped under that classification, at this moment I am almost inclined to believe that the same has not been authorized by Order in Council according to law. If it had been authorized by Order in Council, it would be noted on the classification the same as on former classifications, by number 11, which was authorized on December 19, 1899.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I would suggest that the hon. member put his question on the Paper, and I will have the matter looked into. I do not recollect now that any recent Order in Council has passed on that subject.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion is put, I would like to inquire of the government whether it is proposed to submit to the House the terms of the proposed commission to investigate matters concerning the Treadgold concession, and whether any and what precautions are to be taken to preserve the interests of the public by having them safeguarded by counsel. In other words, is it to be a thorough investigation, or is it simply to be a departmental investigation in which the public may possibly have no rights whatever, and in which the facts may not be so thoroughly investigated as might seem to be rendered necessary by newspaper comments and comments elsewhere with regard to these concessions. The Prime Minister is not here, and perhaps my hon. friend may not be able to give an answer to my inquiry at once. In the absence of the right hon. gentleman, I am giving this intimation rather in the shape of a notice of what will probably be demanded at an early day, and at somewhat greater length, in regard to this matter. I would also like to know whether the proposed investigation respecting the Treadgold concession is to be confined to that alone, or is it to deal also with other concessions in the Yukon which have, in that part of the country at least, caused almost as much comment as the Treadgold concession itself. I think it right at the earliest moment to ascertain the intentions of the government. I shall bring the matter again to the attention of the government, and I now intimate that the proposed commission will no doubt be discussed. At the earliest possible moment the intentions of the government with regard thereto will certainly be asked in this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). In answer to the hon. gentleman I have to say that it is not possible for me to-day to answer in detail his various questions. But I may say that the government is now engaged in formulating the instructions that will accompany the commission. The commission will be comprehensive and far reaching in its work. It will apply not only to any existing concessions, but it will deal with the hydraulic needs of the district in connection with the development of the mines.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it the intention of the government to lay the composition of the commission and the instructions to the commission on the Table in order that they may be discussed before finally being sent out; in other words, will the House have any opportunity of discussing the terms of the commission before it is finally signed and sent forward?

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That point has not been discussed, I will make it known to the government. No doubt, as soon as the commission is ready all the terms will be submitted to the House, but whether that will be before or after the adoption of the terms of the commission, I am not able at this moment to say. If the hon. gentleman desires to renew this question on this subject to-morrow, I will perhaps be able to give him an answer. In the meantime I may say that the commission will not only deal with the existing conditions as to the outcome of any grants, but it will endeavour in a comprehensive way to deal with the needs of the country. For that reason one of the commissioners at least will be an expert, competent to deal with the important question to be investigated by the commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If I may be pardoned another word to the hon. gentleman, I may say that it would not perhaps be of any use to submit the commission and the instructions to the House after the terms have once been settled and gone forward. It is within the bounds of possibility that some suggestions might be made from this side of the House which would be of use to the government and to the country with regard to the terms of the proposed commission, and it is in that view that I have made the remarks to the hon. gentleman which I did. It seemed to me, speaking of course with every deference, that there might be very good reason, seeing that this matter has been under public discussion, and a subject of considerable comment in the country, why the government should observe the course which has been taken in some cases, and submit to the House the terms of the proposed commission and the instructions to the commission before the commission has been fairly settled and sent forward.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As I have already mentioned to the hon. gentleman, I will make his observations known to the government, and perhaps I may be able to answer him to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Harbours and rivers, Quebec—River St. Lawrence ship channel, $515,800.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). This vote of $515,800 is to continue the widening and deepening and improvement of the St. Lawrence channel between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. MONK. Would the hon. minister give us some more details as to the expenditure of this large sum?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A large amount of this vote is for the work of dredging. There are seven dredges employed. It is estimated that $340,000 of this amount will be spent in the working of the dredges, $26,800 for shipyards, supplies, &c. New dredging plant, scows and repairs to dredges, $113,000, surveys, $25,000, and inspection and superintendence, $15,000, making a total of $515,800.

Mr. MORIN. Would the hon. minister be kind enough to tell the committee at what places it is proposed to dredge the river ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This dredging is all to be done on what is known as the channel between Montreal and Quebec. There are about sixty-five miles out of 100 that will be widened and deepened, the dredges will be set at work at different places, and they will continue the work that has been going on for the past two years.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that there are 100 miles to be dredged ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not say that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How many miles does the hon. gentleman say ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About sixty miles.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We cannot hear the hon. gentleman at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not my fault if the hon. gentlemen do not hear. I am speaking a great deal louder than is necessary. The estimate of the department is that about sixty miles of dredging is to be done on this channel.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not think that my hon. friend, if he allows me, is right in saying there are sixty miles to be dredged now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that either. I was asked a question as to the amount of dredging that was to be done, and as to what distance of this channel was to be improved. I said that the officers of the department estimated about sixty miles. According to their estimate about half the work is done, or about twenty-eight miles out of the sixty have been completed to a width of 450 feet, and to a depth of thirty feet.

Mr. MACLEAN. What is the estimated expenditure on the whole work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $1,500,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. How much has been spent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On this channel already there has been spent about $6,000,000. A great deal of that was spent by the Harbour Commissioners, but on this work which is under consideration now and which is to be continued, there has been an expenditure of about $4,000,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. And when completed, that will give a channel of what depth ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About thirty feet.

Mr. MORIN. What width would the channel be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Four hundred and fifty feet.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the minister under consideration the question of continuing this work to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the chief engineer of the department tells me that the work of the department goes only to Longue Pointe, and that the balance of the work is under the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. INGRAM. What are the names of the dredges that are employed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will be kind enough to turn to page 152, of the Report of the Minister of Public Works, for the year 1902, he will find the names of the dredges. They are the 'Lady Aberdeen,' the 'Lady Minto,' the 'Laurier,' the 'Laval,' the 'Lafontaine,' Dredge No. 8, the 'Baldwin,' the 'J. Israel Tarte' and spoon dredge No. 6. This dredge No. 6, I think, has been abandoned.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In this vote of $515,000, is there any sum for the construction of dredges, and if so, where will these dredges be built ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there is no sum estimated here for the construction of dredges. There is a sum for the purpose of building some scows and improvements and repairs to dredges.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I received a communication from Sorel the other day concerning the title to the property that the government has at present for its works and docks. I would like to ask the hon. minister from whom the government purchased the site of the Sorel works or docks, and what price was paid for this property ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would be very much more convenient if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) would defer his question until we reach the item in connection with the works in Sorel, and which will be probably reached to-day.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Chairman said it had been passed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, he made a mistake. The item stood for the purpose of bringing down some information, and I will be prepared to give the information which the hon. gentleman asks when that item is under consideration.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. These docks are not on the same side of the river as the government shipyards. The docks are on the south side of the river and the shipyards are on the north side. They have no connection whatever.

Mr. MONK. At what particular places between Montreal and Quebec is this dredging to be done, and what proportion of dredging is to be done in each place ? Will it give us a channel from Montreal to Quebec 450 feet wide and thirty-five feet deep at low water ? Has the large and costly dredge which we purchased two years ago been working satisfactorily ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The distance requiring deepening and widening was estimated by the engineers to be about sixty miles, and about twenty-eight miles of that is already completed, leaving thirty-two miles still to be done.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this sixty miles altogether, or is it at different points ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is at different spots. As to the large dredge, the 'J. Israel Tarte,' I am informed that during the latter part of the season this dredge did very excellent work. It was a new piece of mechanism, the first of its kind in this country, and there were some delays.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many yards of sand, of clay, and of rock have yet to be taken out ? What did this new dredge cost us per yard ? I am anxious to know that because a promise was given last session that this dredge could work at considerably less than one cent a yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know what our experience might be next year, but the report of the department last year shows that the cost was two and one-half cents a yard. I am informed by the engineer that there is no more rock dredging to be done.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I may say that the dredge that bears my name cannot work in heavy clay, and especially in rock. Mr. Robinson invented a rotary cutter which is attached at the end of the pipe and that enables the dredge to work in pretty hard material. The American dredges in the past were supplied with injectors which forced out water to soften the material, but this did not enable them to work in as hard a material as our dredge does with the rotary cutter. The work of the dredge cannot be judged by our operations last year, but nevertheless I am informed that in the last month in which it worked, October, I think, she dredged the enormous quantity of over 600,000 yards. It is hoped by those who designed the dredge that she will turn out 1,000,000 yards a month. Her working capacity is 2,000 yards an hour and in my presence I saw her do that, but of course there will be accidents and perhaps delays. The estimated cost of the dredging by this dredge is half a cent a yard when everything goes right, but even if it should cost one cent a yard it is pretty cheap indeed.

Mr. COCHRANE. Has the attention of the minister been called to the fact that some of the curves in that channel are too short ? I am informed by an eminent engineer and by some captains who navigated that river that a curve which was sufficient ten years ago is altogether insufficient today, because the vessels now are much longer than they were then. This engineer stated that if the curves were too short they had a tendency to run the vessel aground on the other side, and that the deepening of the channel where the curves were short was rather an impediment, because the increased depth caused a stronger current in the channel and made the navigation more difficult. This gentleman's idea was that if the money was spent in straightening the curves rather than in deepening the channel it would be a more useful expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a good deal in the representations made in regard to these curves and we are trying to improve them. The chief engineer tells me that between Longue Point and Verchères there were eleven curves at one time, but now they have been reduced to three. That is receiving the attention of the engineers on the work, and the curves are being reduced to a minimum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the minister whether, when this work is completed, we shall have a perfect channel 450 feet wide from Montreal to Quebec, and also whether or not he has any map showing that portion of the channel upon which the dredging operations are being conducted ? If so, I think it should be laid on the Table of the House while we are discussing this item, so that we may be enabled better to understand what we are really voting this money for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The result of this work will be to make the channel between Montreal and Quebec 450 feet wide and 30 feet deep. I think there is a plan, which I shall be glad to lay upon the Table, showing in detail where these improvements will be made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The maps have been changed year by year as the works have been proceeded with, and I believe these maps are available. The House would be under a very wrong impression to suppose that we have been only proceeding with the dredging of the river. Along with the deepening of the channel the work of straightening and cleaning the river has been proceeded with. When we first took up the work there were numerous curves and other difficulties. The part of the work which has been completed has been carried out thoroughly and well. In a few months the works between Lake St. Peter and Montreal will be fully completed, and in such a manner that both day navigation and night navigation will be not only possible, but easy in that part of the river.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What arrangements have been made for night navigation?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has erected, especially during last year, very fine lighthouses along the channel. There is some little work yet to be completed, which, I understand, will be completed within a few weeks, and it will then be easy for the largest steamers to travel night and day between Sorel and Montreal. This part of the work, I suppose, will be pretty far advanced when this season closes, and the balance completed within two years. The 65 miles of dredging that was to be done three or four years ago will be thoroughly completed to a depth of 30 feet and a width of at least 450 feet, in the straight parts, and more in the curves. When we speak of a depth of 30 feet, we of course refer to the depth at the lowest water, which is only for about two months of the year. During the other months there is plenty of water, and the largest boats can navigate the river without any trouble. When the Department of Marine and Fisheries complete their part of the work, the channel between Montreal and Quebec will then be one of the safest channels in the world ; I say that without hesitation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What about the accident to the 'Carrigan Head' ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That vessel was grounded between two buoys, simply because one of the buoys was not located. At this time of the year, as my hon. friend from Gaspé knows, there is plenty of water in the channel of the St. Lawrence. The draught of the vessel was 26 feet ; but even if it had been 30 feet, there was plenty of water. The inquiry showed that the grounding of the boat was an accident.

Mr. MONK. I think we should have a map showing where this work is going to be done this year. The hon. minister has admitted the usefulness of that, and I for my part do not like to vote such a large sum of money without seeing exactly what it is proposed to do this year and where. This work is a splendid one, and one in which we are very much interested, and I think we ought to be informed how far it is expected to go towards the completion of these 32 miles this year. The dredge which bears the name of the ex-Minister of Public Works, I understand, dredged 600,000 yards in one month last year ; and we are told there are six other dredges at work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They cannot all do as much.

Mr. MONK. They cannot all do as much, but they can do something. We ought to advance very materially towards the completion of these works during the present season. Under the circumstances, I would like to know where the work is to be done this year. No man would think of spending so large an amount of money as this without having that information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my hon. friend is perfectly correct, and he has indicated what information he would like. We all hope this work will go on. How much will be done will depend largely, as the hon. member for St. Mary's says, on the working condition of each dredge. If the dredge turns out as we expected, with the improvement and changes made during the winter, there will be a wonderful difference in the amount of work done in the coming season. It is estimated that with this dredge and the others, there will be at least eight or nine miles dredged during the season, perhaps more.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That will only be a quarter of the work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be over a third of the work because it is the heaviest portion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many hundred yards must be excavated in order to finish these thirty-two miles ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not estimated the number of yards.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. An estimate should be made every week in the department. What sort of an engineering department is that which does not make a weekly estimate ?

Mr. SPROULE. Last year or the year before an approximate estimate was given.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The approximate estimate of the number of yards to be removed is something like 32,000,000. If my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) will look up page 152 of the report of the Public Works Department, he will find the information which he requires.

Mr. BENNETT. In this half million dollars are the wages of the shops of Sorel included ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the expenditure of the shops there last year ? It seems to me that it alone ran up to $175,000. What is the estimated expenditure this year in the shops as against $175,000 last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Just about the same for labour and material.

Mr. BLAIN. How much would it cost to fit up the 'J. Israel Tarte' dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost of the dredge is $300,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What does that include ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Everything.

Mr. BLAIN. What amount did the furnishings cost ? I find there some pretty large items, for instance, one leather box lounge, $85.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were some $30,000 spent during the past season, which of course, will not be given in detail in the Auditor General's Report, until next year, but that was altogether for improvements and changes in machinery.

Mr. MONK. Is not the cost nearer $400,000 than $300,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The figures given me by the officers of my department are $307,000, including the improvements done during the past season.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That dredge was built by the Polson Iron Works and the plan prepared by Mr. Robinson. It was found that some pieces of machinery were a little off. Any one who has had experience in new machinery knows that there are always breakages incident to any new work. The piping had been located in a wrong way. It was beneath the deck where the engineers could not reach it easily and it had to be changed. Before I left office I made a thorough investigation in company of Mr. Robinson and we found that some changes had to be made. Those changes have cost some money, but we have now a dredge which will give a good account of itself.

Mr. BLAIN. How many miles does the hon. minister expect to dredge of Lake St. Peter this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About seven miles.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I thought so. The estimate given us a minute ago, I knew, applied to the 'Tarte' dredge, and the other dredges should dredge as much as the 'Tarte' dredge should do in Lake St. Peter. I should expect that this year about fourteen or fifteen miles would be dredged. There remains about thirty miles of dredging in round figures, a little less, but let us say about thirty miles. So, if the dredge 'Tarte' carries out the expectations we have formed of her and does between seven and eight miles and the others do as much, there will remain only fifteen to eighteen miles to do another year. The fleet of dredges is now completed. These are all new dredges. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has at his disposal a very fine fleet of dredges, tugs, stone lifters, &c., and his department is in a position to carry out work with a great deal of delight, if I may use that expression. But let me add immediately that a good deal depends upon the crew. The officers of the department will tell my hon. friend that we had a good deal of trouble in keeping all the officers at their posts at times. The dredge 'Tarte' especially has to be manned with a great deal of care—it is a very complicated piece of machinery, very complicated indeed, and requires all the officers on board all the time, otherwise there will be accidents and the work will not be carried out as the department has a right to expect it to be carried out. I hope my hon. friend will take advantage of the first holiday we give him to make a personal inspection of that dredge and of all the dredges. He will find that if he goes himself—if he will allow me to suggest it—his presence will give encouragement to the men, and his supervision will add to the quantity of the work, I am sure.

Mr. MONK. I think the hon. gentleman will have to take me along with him if he wishes me to understand the work. The reference he has given me does not exactly answer my questions—in fact does not answer them at all. Where are our dredges to be placed ? I see that the dredge 'Laurier' last year excavated over 400,000 yards, while the dredge 'Tarte'—probably because it got to work very late—only excavated 93,000 cubic yards.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In what month ? That is the work of her first month.

Mr. MONK. I know the dredge is capable of doing a great deal more than that. But I do not find in the document which the hon. gentleman has referred me the information I wanted. I wished to find the capacity of each dredge by the year or by the month, the cost of operation of each dredge, the place where each dredge is to be located and the portions of dredging that will be completed this year. The minister a moment ago mentioned seven or eight miles, while the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says that we shall have accomplished fifteen miles. So, we seem to be a little in the dark.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will see that I can hardly give him in detail the cost for next year. But the reference I have given him shows the cost per cubic yard for each dredge last year, and it is fair to assume that it will be the same with all the dredges, except the 'J. Israel Tarte,' next year. As I explained, if the improvements made during the winter turn out all that we hope, the 'J. Israel Tarte' will do as good work as she did the last month of last year, in fact we hope for a great deal more work and at a lower rate.

Mr. BLAIN. How many days did the 'J. Israel Tarte' work last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Altogether one hundred and twenty-seven days. The ex-Minister of Public Works probably explained, that as might be expected, when the dredge was first set to work there was a good deal of delay and loss of time. Though the first month's work was estimated to cost something like 8 cents a yard, the last month's work cost only 1½ cents per yard.

Mr. BENNETT. As to this expenditure for workmen, as I understand the hon. minister, it will cost $175,000 to pay the wages of the men employed in this shipyard at Sorel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is for men and material, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT. It would seem to have run to $175,000 last year for wages alone.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officers of the department advise me differently. The amount given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) includes wages and material. They seem to keep the books so as to show both items under one head. I am not able to separate the payments for wages.

Mr. BENNETT. I have the document under my hand. If the hon. minister will turn to the Auditor General's Report, page V—35, and continuing to page V—46, he will find the total charges there of $175,000 for last year, and, glancing over it page by page, it seems quite clear that every dollar of that is referable to wages alone.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. As I have taken a deep interest in the shipyard at Sorel, I may be allowed to say, for the information of the House, that a good deal of the wages are paid for repairs. In a large fleet of dredges, tugs, scows, &c., such as that which the department has at its disposal, there are always breakages calling for repairs. A good many of the dredges are working in hard material. Heavy pressure is brought on the machinery and there are breakages every day. To carry on the necessary repairs, the department must always keep in hand a pretty large supply of parts and materials. So, there were also new scows and boats and other equipment of all kinds to be built. In point of fact there is a quantity of work that the ordinary layman cannot understand unless he goes to inspect these works. I would be very glad indeed if members of parliament on both sides of the House, when opportunity offers, would visit these shipyards.

Mr. MONK. Quite right.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) went once, and did not find them in such bad shape that he has much to say about them. These are very interesting shipyards. They are the only shipyards the government has and perhaps may be a kind of experiment. I would like very much indeed if members of the House, on both sides, when they pass by the thriving town of Sorel, would call and visit the shipyards of the government.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Perhaps the minister would give us an excursion there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) I would say that if he will read the explanatory foot note, given by the Auditor General as to the wages, he will see that they are taken out of other votes as well as this. For instance the building of the new dredge for the maritime provinces and the new dredge for Ontario come under this heading.

Mr. MONK. Is a new dredge being built for the maritime provinces ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister if there is no special account kept of the repairs on these boats. All I want to know is how we stand. This is a very large amount that we pay out at Sorel, though, of course, these yards are extremely useful. But we would like to know a little about the details. These dredges must have cost a good deal in repairs. What, for instance, is the cost for repairs on these seven dredges which we maintain in the St. Lawrence ? The minister will understand that there is reason for inquiring about that $177,000 for wages. What part of that was chargeable for repairs on these dredges ? Surely there must be a separate account for repairing each dredge. Again, is not my hon. friend mistaken when he speaks of the construction there of a dredge for the maritime provinces ? I think I have seen a special item in the estimates for a dredge for the maritime provinces.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The wages paid out at Sorel include other items. The chief engineer informs me, that under the system of bookkeeping at Sorel they could give detailed information with regard to the amount spent on each dredge. I will be pleased to have a copy made of the accounts, showing the amount of repairs put on each dredge. But I wished to explain to my hon. friend that the amount of wages paid out there is not altogether in connection with this vote, but on other works as well.

Mr. BENNETT. It means that $175,000 is to be expended by the department next year at Sorel. That is evident from the discussion in reference to repairs to be effected on barges, tugs and other craft owned by the department. I would like to call the attention of the minister to this, that it means the employment of about 250 men every day in the year at $2 per day, making repairs on boats. It means that out of this vote of $500,000 there will be at least $175,000 spent in wages for repairs. I turn to the account of the material supplied last year, commencing on page V—23 of the Auditor General's Report, and ending on page V—42, where it would appear that about $425,000 was spent for materials. Assuming the new dredge, the 'Tarte,' cost $300,000, that leaves about $125,000 for sundry material. May I ask the minister how much it is estimated will be spent the coming year for material or work to be done at the shops ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken as to the amount spent at Sorel. The 'J. Israel Tarte' was not built at Sorel.

Mr. BENNETT. The expenditure is $425,000, and in that is included an expenditure for the 'Tarte.' So deducting $300,000, which in round figures was the amount, spent on the 'Tarte,' that would leave a balance of $125,000 spent at Sorel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I was saying, the 'J. Israel Tarte' was not built at Sorel, and the expenditure of $300,000 was not made at Sorel.

Mr. BENNETT. Referring to the Auditor General's Report, he will find that the total expenditure on material was $425,000, and in that is included $300,000 for the 'Tarte.' Then the balance of $125,000 must have been in respect to other material that was used at Sorel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was a great deal more than that. They are building a dredge there costing nearly double as much as the 'Tarte.'

Mr. BENNETT. That was not last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and the material purchased for that dredge alone must have cost a great deal more than that. I was trying to explain that this $175,000 in wages is not for repairs alone at Sorel. It is for building, wages paid out in connection with these different boats, on barges, scows and tugs that are being built, and are charged to the different votes. If the hon. gentleman will look more closely into the Auditor General's Report he will see them shown in detail.

Mr. BENNETT. Where are they being built, if not at Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The 'J. Israel Tarte' was built at Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. That was the subject of a contract. Now, starting at page V—23 and continuing on you find an expenditure amounting to $425,000. Included in that are a lot of large expenditures in respect of this dredge, the 'Tarte.' I notice one of $137,000 and another of $45,000, and others amounting in the aggregate to $300,000. If you deduct that $300,000 from the $425,000, it seems plain that there were $125,000 spent for material which was used at Sorel and probably in connection with these different dredges that were on the work, tugs, &c. Would the minister say how much money will be required out of this grant of $515,000, for material to be used by these workmen, whether on repairs or on new work at Sorel this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That expenditure was in connection with the repairs on these dredges that are on this channel work, in construction of the large dredge for the maritime provinces, of the dredge for the province of Ontario, and for scows and tugs in connection with the work. As I have said, I would be pleased to have a statement made from the books in Sorel showing in detail how much was spent on repairs of each dredge.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I may be permitted to explain what expenditures are taken from that sum under discussion now, $550,000. First, the department has to pay for the working of all the dredges that are in commission on the St. Lawrence. This is a special item for the River St. Lawrence ship channel, we have seven dredges. We have ten or twelve dredges, perhaps more than that. We have the hydrographic survey, which I do not think will be transferred to the Department of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But last year the survey of that work was taken from this item. Now there is inspection work, all these working expenses have to be taken out of this item. Then there are repairs, building new scows and boats and all the implements that are necessary for dredging operations.

Mr. MONK. Can the hon. gentleman say about what that amounts to ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I cannot say this year. But my hon. friend perhaps will be in a position to tell us how much he expects each dredge will spend this year. Last year one of the dredges was not supplied with electric light. These dredges are working night and day. The department has to pay double crews and it costs a large amount of money. There is a pretty large amount of money spent in repairs and there is a very large amount spent at Sorel, because there are other works which are not carried on under this item. For instance, there is the large dredge for the maritime provinces which is being built there, and which has nothing to do with the St. Lawrence ship channel. In other words, to pay wages, to pay for the maintenance of the stone lifters, the inspection boats, and the hydrographic survey it costs a pretty large amount of money. This work will be completed within the year as it is very far advanced. The hydrographic survey costs about $20,000 or $25,000 a year. That item covers the ground I have just described.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, it would seem clear, that, if last year it cost $125,000 for supplies and $175,000 for these works at Sorel making a total of $300,000, there is left out of this vote $215,000 to be spent on dredging. After that money is spent amongst the different dredges for wages and the keep of the men, you get your return for the work done in dredging, so that, of the total vote of $500,000 for the St. Lawrence ship channel over $300,000 is for work at Sorel and supplies furnished for the boats.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Out of that amount pretty large sums of money have also been taken to equip the shipyards and to complete buildings. In the shipyards there are always new implements required as any one who is familiar with mills and machinery knows. Out of that amount all these things have had to be bought in the past and I suppose this year the hon. Minister of Public Works will be also obliged to buy new implements. There is always something required in connection with a big work of that kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We hope that the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte' will work satisfactorily as the result of the changes and if so we expect to reverse the figures and that at least $350,000 will be spent on dredging.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not understand what the hon. gentleman means, because the improvements will not give any more capacity to the dredge. There are only some piping and wheels to be changed. That will not add to the capacity of the dredge at all. If the hon. minister will give some attention to the subject he will find that the changes have nothing to do with the question. If the dredge 'Tarte' does a million yards a month it will be so much the better, but the wages of the crew are the same whether the dredge does a large amount of work or does a less amount of work. The wages were the same last year. Unfortunately some of the machinery broke down, but the wages had always to be paid, so that it does not affect the expenditure at all. The expenditure will be the same whether the dredge works well or not, but what the hon. minister means, I suppose is, that if the dredge answers our expectations a much larger amount of work will be done, and the dredging will cost less, but the expenditure will be the same.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I made both statements and I think I am strictly correct. If the dredge works satisfactorily we will accomplish a great deal more work. If the dredge works five or six months instead of 100 days it will cost more money, as the 'Tarte' consumes forty tons of coal per day, but we will get more work.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is an item that I would like a little explanation on :

A. W. Robinson, consulting engineer, four days time at Ottawa, consultation, $40 per day..	$160 00
Journey to maritime provinces, to examine conditions under which proposed dredging will be done, and report on same, four days at $40 ; fare $40.50 ; sundry outlay, $25.25..	225 75
One day at Sorel on shipyard improvements, $40; expenses, $4, April 2, 1900.	44 00
One day's time at Sorel, consultation..	40 00

It seems to me that this is a very large amount to pay—$40 per day—for a consulting engineer. Perhaps the hon. minister can give us some explanation of that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only explanation I can give is that the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) saw fit to engage a gentleman of talent and experience and probably had to pay him for his services.

Mr. BLAIN. Is he in the employ of the department all the time or is he specially employed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, he has been the consulting engineer to the department.

Mr. MONK. Who is he ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Robinson.

Mr. MONK. What are his qualifications ?

Mr. BLAIN. He is from Montreal.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year of the $500,000 voted something like one-half of it was to be expended in this way : To build a tug, $25,000; two large dump scows, $26,000; completion of one scow, $4,000; construction of one flat scow with boiler. $7,000; construction of one saw-mill, $15,000; construction of equipment of marine railway, workshops and shipyard, $20,000 ; refitting shipyard, $5,000; rebuilding wharf, $3,000; and unforeseen expenses, $30,000. Take these items from the $500,000 voted last year and you will get what the hon. gentleman would expend in dredging during the past year. The year previous there were about sixty miles of channel to be dredged and ten miles of that was dredged out of the $500,000 vote of last year. Now, the hon. minister has increased the vote from $500,000 to $515,000. What I want to know is if all the works that the money was voted for last year have been completed. If they are, the hon. gentleman will have a much larger sum this year for the purpose of dredging.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The expectation is that we will be able to spend a very much larger sum on the dredging out of this total estimate—$340,000 or $350,000 we think will be spent. Some of these works the hon. gentleman has mentioned are completed and some are under construction.

Mr. INGRAM. I asked the hon. gentleman the names of the dredges. In answer to another question the hon. gentleman said that dredging cost per yard something like two cents and a fraction. We have a dredge here which does the work at one cent a yard and others which do it at three or four cents a yard. What is the cost per yard of each of the dredges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That, of course, altogether depends on what kind of material the dredges are working in. Some work costs less than three cents a yard, and in some other cases it would run nearly up to seven cents a yard. In the case of this dredge the first month the average cost was as high as eight cents a yard and the last month she worked it was a little less than one and one-half cents a yard, giving an average cost of two and one-quarter cents.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In spite of the fact that the dredge 'J. Israel Tarte' was new and did not work all the time, what amount of dredging did she do last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. One million nine hundred and sixty-one thousand two hundred and fifty yards.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. So that the House may understand the great improvement that this dredge is, would the minister say what amount was done by all the other dredges ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The other dredges altogether turned out a little over 2,500,000 yards. If the dredge 'Tarte' is in good working order this season it ought to handle as much material as the other six, or about 2,500,000 yards.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Of course, this does not prove that the other dredges are not good; they are simply of a different pattern. The 'Tarte' is a suction dredge destined to work in sand or in light clay while the other dredges are elevator dredges with buckets, and are intended for heavier dredging. I have seen one of the other dredges working for hours and hours at a piece of rock which afterwards we had to remove with a stone lifter. These other elevator dredges are fine dredges indeed; they are about the best of the kind on the continent of America, but their capacity cannot be estimated by the capacity of the 'Tarte,' which is a different kind of dredge altogether. The dredge which we are building for the maritime provinces will be both a suction dredge and an elevator dredge combined.

Mr. SPROULE. To get any fair idea of the capacity of the different dredges we would have to know what amount of work each one would do working in the same kind of material.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is so.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The average capacity of these dredges is between 5,000 and 6,000 yards a day, or about 8,000 yards night and day.

Mr. ROSAMOND. What is the cost of one thousand yards of dredging done by the government dredges as compared with the cost of one thousand yards done by the contract dredges ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would be about two-thirds less by the government dredges.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand that the construction of dredges is practically done now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. INGRAM. What dredges are not completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are building a large dredge for the maritime provinces. Are you referring to the dredges that are working on this channel ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are all completed.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it expected that this dredging will remain with the Department of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. When these items were being discussed before, we heard a great deal about the division of the departments; are all the dredges on the St. Lawrence to continue under the management of the Department of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What dredges, if any, have been taken out of the Department of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. None that I know of.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not catch the number of cubic yards which the hon. gentleman said would have to be dredged.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid I cannot give the hon. gentleman a complete estimate.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood there was a statement last year that 24,000,000 cubic yards would be taken out of the whole channel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer estimates that in Lake St. Peter alone 10,000,000 yards will be removed.

Mr. INGRAM. We have contradictory statements as to that. Last year we were told that the quantity was 90,000,000 yards, and we were also told that the total was 24,000,000 yards. If the hon. gentleman looks up 'Hansard,' he will see these contradictory statements.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it must be some mistake. The information I gave the committee is from the chief engineer of the department. I asked him to give me an approximate estimate of the quantity, and he said it would be something like 22,000,000 yards.

Mr. BENNETT. As it is contemplated in the coming year to spend $125,000 for material and $175,000 for labour at Sorel, does the minister think it good policy to expend so large an amount of money without calling for tenders for the work to be done ? I assume that during the coming year some scows and probably some tugs will be built there. Is that in contemplation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is in contemplation to build one spare dump scow of 200 yards capacity ; reconstruction of the upper part of the 'Laval' ; additional accommodation on the 'Laurier' for the night crew, at a cost of $2,000 ; a winch scow, with boiler and winch ; a flat scow, with derrick ; changing the buckets on the 'Aberdeen' and the 'Minto,' to make them suitable for working in hard material ; a new coal barge, at an estimated cost of $15,000 ; and completion of tug No. 9.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely the amount of work which the minister has outlined is not going to keep 250 men employed every day in the year at Sorel—for that is what it amounts to--at an average of $2 a day, though many of them are not paid that much. I think it would be in the interest of the country to call for tenders for the construction of that new coal barge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The $175,000 is not paid out of this vote, though a portion of it may be. There have been at least 400 men working at Sorel in the past, if there is not that number there now.

Mr. BENNETT. I have searched the Auditor General's Report, and I can only find one expenditure respecting the employment of men at Sorel, and it totals up to $175,000. Where is the rest of the expenditure, if it is not all included in that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained that that was not paid out of this vote. For instance, there was a special vote for building a dredge for the maritime provinces, and there are other special votes. So that if the hon. gentleman would deduct the amounts of these special votes from the amount paid in wages, the balance would be something less than $100,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would my hon. friend allow me to make the matter clear, if I can ? Would my hon. friend tell us how much he expects to have to pay for the crews of his dredges on the St. Lawrence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that the $340,000 which I referred to includes the pay of the crews and the cost of the coal. I have not the amounts separated.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How much does my hon. friend expect to pay in wages at Sorel out of this item ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Out of this vote, $125,000 is expected to be paid in material and wages, and the accounts are not kept in such a way that I can give the amount for each. Perhaps it will be about one half.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The material, I understand, is for the building of a scow and a coal barge ? Is that all the department intends to build this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does my hon. friend intend to build that barge in steel or in wood ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In wood.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What kind of wood, may I ask ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that it is British Columbia fir.

Mr. BENNETT. According to the Auditor General's Report there were $175,000 spent, not for material, but for wages to workmen who were employed in the shops at Sorel. If the report of the Auditor General is wrong, we will have to amend it. The hon. minister says that in the coming season he does not expect that $175,000 will be spent in Sorel for wages, but that $125,000 will cover all the money expended there, including materials for work to be done in that place. We will have to wait until next year and see if he is effecting a saving between $175,000 for labour alone and $125,000 for labour and material.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is quite mistaken, I was explaining what amount would be spent out of this vote at Sorel, but there are four or five hundred men working there on other work not provided for in this vote, and their wages will be paid out of these other votes. The Auditor General however, has made out the account in such a way as to make it clear that it all comes out of this vote, which causes the misunderstanding.

Mr. BENNETT. Then it is expected that there will be $125,000 spent in wages at Sorel in the coming year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is right. It is estimated that the total amount paid for wages will be about the same as last year.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. gentleman consider it good policy to build by day labour and purchase the material, I presume, without tender, for a barge worth $15,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that we have to utilize these shops for repairs and for the building of these scows and tugs, it is good policy to have that work done by day labour at Sorel.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. minister any returns showing the work turned out during the past year and expected to be turned out during the coming year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just read that. I have read four or five times over a list of the scows, &c., intended to be built at Sorel and estimated to cost $113,000. There is a large dredge for the maritime provinces which will cost $150,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the half a million dollar dredge being built by day labour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. Then of course there are in addition the general repairs of the whole fleet of barges, scows and tugs.

Mr. BENNETT. Here we have the other departments calling for tenders where much smaller expenditure is involved. Take the Postmaster General's Department, tenders are called for carrying the mail bags a distance of ten miles, involving an expenditure of some $60 per year, yet in the case of an expenditure of $150,000 for a dredge, no tenders are called for and the work is done by day labour by a horde of officials, numbering some 400, paid top wages and hired on political grounds, and the material bought, I presume, without tenders. Are tenders called for to supply the material required for this new dreuge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I understand that tenders were asked for.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did the lowest tenderer get the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that it was awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. INGRAM. When was that tender awarded ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not say that there was a tender for the dredge, I understood the question to be whether tenders were called for to supply the material.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this is a dredge which was to cost $500,000. Last year it was estimated to cost only $300,000. What is the cause of the difference ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The estimated cost, if I remember rightly was $520,000, and I gave the details.

Mr. BENNETT.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When the department was under my direction, the work was started in Sorel, and I believe that the plans have been since changed. I believe that this is right. I believe that it is a dredge which is more complicated than any we have yet built, and I think that the first estimate of Mr. Robinson was not so high.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The first estimate by my hon. friend was some $300,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What was the cause of the difference ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know that there are any particular changes, but the estimate given by my hon. friend must have been too low. There can be no question about the accuracy of the estimate now as so much of the material and machinery have been purchased, and so much work done. I gave the details when the item was under consideration.

Mr. INGRAM. The fact is that the cost has gone up from $300,000 to $500,000. The hon. gentleman tells us that a part of the material was bought under contract, after tenders had been asked for. Whether the additional cost was in labour or in material not contracted for, it does not seem clear how the hon. minister can say that there has been no particular change.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has been no change at all. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works, as I understand it, says it was a very large work and that the change has been made under his direction on the advice of his engineer.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When I asked Mr. Robinson's advice, he placed an estimate before me, and, if I remember aright that estimate was about $300,000. I concluded to go on with the work. Now, the government has a shipyard at Sorel which cost a pretty large amount of money, so we started building that dredge by day labour, just as a contractor would build it. For, in a matter of this kind, the department is in the position of an ordinary contractor, having its own shipyard. I found that shipyard in existence when I took office, and it had been in existence for years. Such an institution is necessary to the carrying on of the work on the St. Lawrence under the system in use. If the work on the St. Lawrence had, in the beginning, been given out by contract, it would have been a different matter. But when the present government took office, the work of dredging the St. Lawrence was in progress, and the shipyard was in existence. We had only to continue the work then under way. The shipyard was in a very dilapidated condition. The men were working in the rain and snow. I improved the shipyard, thinking it was the best policy, for otherwise we could not carry on there any work of very great magnitude. Moreover, I thought it good policy for the government to have a shipyard of its own. In the past the government has imported its dredges from Scotland and elsewhere, and I made up my mind that it was better to have Canadian workmen build these dredges here. With the consent and hearty co-operation of my colleagues, I began the erection of these works in Sorel, and also began building dredges and so on. Well, the government, having that shipyard, went on with the work of building this dredge, the estimate placed before me being, as I have said, about $300,000. It is six months since I left office, and I am not responsible for what has been done during that time. I suppose that everything is going on all right but I am not responsible and it is not for me to answer.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to give me one piece of information.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Certainly.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the estimate was $300,000, and this was submitted to the hon. gentleman by Mr. Robinson and the officers of the department while he was Minister of Public Works ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I cannot remember the exact figure, but it was in the neighbourhood of $300,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that, before leaving office, the hon. gentleman changed the plans of that dredge ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not change the plans of that dredge, but I believe that some changes—some slight changes, not very important—have been made in the plans.

Mr. INGRAM. Well, then, if there are no important changes made in the plans, I do not think the explanation satisfactorily accounts for this additional expenditure beyond $300,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) wish me to say ? Does he wish me to say that the dredge will not cost $520,000 ?

Mr. INGRAM. No, what I want is to have the hon. minister give us an explanation of why there is this difference between $300,000 and $500,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) no doubt has explained that thoroughly to the satisfaction of my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram).

Mr. INGRAM. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Whatever the estimate was, I found there had been expended for the expenditure made or arranged to be made up to June 30 next, was $321,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How much will be spent up to July 1 next ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Up to January 1 last there was spent, in round figures, $300,000, and there will be spent up to June 30, $321,955.

Mr. BENNETT. Would that include the engine ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That would include everything.

Mr. CLARE. There were $300,000 spent up to January 1 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and an estimate in the department that $21,000 more would be spent in the present fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it possible that there is $200,000 more work on that dredge ? I cannot believe it. There must be some explanation of that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) must have got the information on the vote for the dredge when it was passed. We spent hours upon it. I have no objection to taking it up again, even in this fashion, out of order as it is, to give information that any hon. gentleman may desire. But I think that no hon. gentleman, even on the other side, would support such an extreme departure from the existing rule as to commence anew the discussion of an item passed some weeks ago after being discussed in such detail. I appeal to my hon. friends that that is beyond the limits of reason and an unjustifiable departure from the rule. The vote asked for $200,000 for the completion of the work. I believe that, perhaps, this dredge cost more than it would have cost if it had been built at a well-equipped factory. At the same time, if it turns out as we expect, it will be one of the best dredges in the country, even though, perhaps, it cost a great deal more than the value of it, judged by the cost of a similar work done under contract.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When the hon. minister says that it would have cost less if it had been built in a well-equipped factory, I would ask him if he has visited the ship works at Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I have.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, surely the hon. minister will not say that these are not well-equipped shipyards. I have visited nearly all the shipyards on this continent, and I say that the shipyards at Sorel are well equipped. I do not say that they are complete, of course, none are complete.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend will allow me, I would say, that to have this item which has already been discussed——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But if the hon. minister will allow me, I cannot permit him to say merely as a matter by the way that I have made a big mistake and that that mistake was due to the fact that the shipyard at Sorel was not well equipped. He is wrong on that point.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps one word, if the hon. gentleman will allow me, will settle the whole matter. He knows that the shipyard is not in a position to make machinery and all that sort of thing in connection with a work like this.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I differ with the hon. minister entirely. The shipyard in Sorel is quite capable of building engines and everything——

Mr. BENNETT. Boilers ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, boilers and everything needed in connection with such work. At times, we have not been able to complete certain works, but only because we have had too much to do. But the shipyard is perfectly equipped to carry out any kind of work though we have been compelled to go outside sometimes because of having too much to do. That is the reason why when the 'Tarte' was built we went outside—though at that time the shipyard was not so well equipped as it is now. We have been equipping it gradually and now it is a very fine shipyard. I do not think the Polson Iron Works are as well equipped—certainly they are not better. And there are hon. gentlemen here who know that those works are a very well-equipped shipyard. I am glad to say that the shipyard in Sorel is better equipped than that at Collingwood. I have visited them, the shipyard in Sorel is well equipped, and the reason why the work has not been carried out as quickly as it might have been, is not the one that is given now. I do not blame my hon. friend in any way, but it is only fair for me to state that the reason he has assigned is not the proper one.

Mr. INGRAM. Am I to understand that, supposing a dredge is to be built at Sorel, for which the hon. gentleman asks $300,000 in his estimates, we are to be told the following year that that dredge is to cost $500,000, and that the money has already been expended on it ? When we ask what that dredge is to cost, I think the officials at Sorel ought to be in a position to tell us as nearly as possible. The difference between $300,000 and $500,000 on the cost of a dredge is altogether too much. I do not think the minister has given us a satisfactory answer.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me now, getting right down to business, that the minister should be in a position to tell us within a radius of $200,000 what the dredge is going to cost. Common sense would tell me that his department should be in a position to give us some kind of a fair estimate, and if he has not any officials capable of deciding a question like that, he ought to call in somebody else. I agree with the ex-minister when he places the government in the position of a manufacturer. To a certain extent they can assume that position. But when you come to get into details, there is a very wide departure from the course a manufacturer would adopt in getting his material. It appears to me that any business man, if he wanted a certain amount of material, would ask for tenders, there would be no political consideration in connection with it. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works or any other minister, can they free themselves from all the political influences that surround them ? I do not care what party is in power. The same trouble existed when we were in power, but it is very much worse now, because we can readily understand how hungry the Liberal party was to get a little money when they got into power. All these influences are now at work. Is it possible in human nature that any minister can free himself from the political influences surrounding him ? Can he ask for tenders and get material supplied without any consideration from party friends at all ? Enormous sums have been expended in connection with these works. I don't care for what the money was expended; when I know that every dollar of the public money is honestly expended, I don't care where it is expended. Now we don't want any such erroneous statements made in this House, telling us last session that the dredge was going to cost $300,000 and now telling us it is going to cost $500,000. Why, will any man tell me that any business concern in the Dominion of Canada would be as wide of the mark as $200,000 in the construction of a dredge ? I don't believe it. It appears to me there must be something radically wrong when there is $200,000 of a difference between the supposed cost of the dredge and the actual amount it is going to cost. I do not say that we were always right when we were in power; but is it any justification to say, every time we bring up this question : Oh, you did it. Why, Mr. Chairman, I recollect the time when we could hardly go out to get a breath that our friends opposite did not demand that we should do it under contract. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) used to make the House ring with his denunciations, even when a member of the government went out to breathe, if he didn't do it under contract. Now he and his friends sit complacently and see all these expenditures of money, and not one dollar under contract. They swallow all their professions, and when we make any complaint they reply to us : Oh, this is great Babylon that we have built, these are growing times. Well, Sir, I am here to tell you that it will be good policy for this government, instead of frittering away the public money, $200,000 here, $60,000 there, and nothing to show for it—for them to reduce the debt of this country, the growing debt, they used to talk so much about when we were in power. There is the Minister of Customs sleeping so complacently. I would give a great deal if I could sleep. It is a sad illustration of how human nature can degenerate. That hon. gentleman used to talk to us so loudly about extravagance that his constituency away up in Brantford could almost hear him when he was denouncing the extravagance of the Tory government. Now he can sit there complacently.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There was a time to speak then.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, but it is no time to speak now, because you are getting the emoulments of office, you are getting $2,000 more than your predecessor, in an office, too, that you said there was no need of. You said the country did not require that office, and you supported by your vote a resolution condemning it. You said that office should not have been created, that there were too many ministers, and now you sit there—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. COCHRANE. I say the other hon. gentlemen opposite did the same, they supported by their vote a motion declaring the office was unnecessary. And, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you, perhaps it would not be out of the way, that I can even remember your musical voice—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am talking about the $200,000.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will keep to the subject before the Chair.

Mr. COCHRANE. I was at the subject.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am in the judgment of the House if I was not trying to speak about that $200,000 that was not expended under contract; and I went back in memory and listened to your musical voice, along with other opponents of the Conservative government. I was referring also to the Minister of Customs when he used to denounce the old government for extravagance. But now he can sleep, and it is all right. Things have changed, say they, we are getting the emoluments of office, and the other fellows are out of office, and that is all the difference.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. MONK. No, Mr. Chairman. I think the minister ought to have come down with information. If he had done so he would get his items through quicker. I think he should be able to give us more information with regard to the output. It has been mentioned here this afternoon that the expenditure at Sorel was something enormous. When we pay out over $177,000 for wages, we want to know what it is for. I am in favour of continuing the establishment at that town, but I think we are entitled to know what we get for the money we spend. The minister should have foreseen that this afternoon we would inquire as to the cost of each one of these dredges, and the maintenance of each one. He has no information upon that point at all. He could have got it by giving half an hour's notice to the employees of his department. We do not know the capacity of these dredges, nor where they are going to be located during the summer. We have no information as to what they are expected to do this summer. If the hon. gentleman had taken the precaution to get us that information he would have saved an hour and a half time on this item. I think, in his department, he could get that information and if he had done so he would not have spent an hour, or an hour and a half, upon this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend has asked first, the names of the dredges, second as to the capacity of the dredges, and thirdly as to the amount of work that has been done. I have given that information over and over again to the committee to-day.

Mr. MONK. The hon. minister is mistaken.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not mistaken. I have given this information in its various details.

Mr. MONK. Let me ask the hon. gentleman what is the capacity of the dredge 'Laurier,' and the cost of maintenance. He has not mentioned that this afternoon.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have answered that question over and over again. Hon. gentlemen talk about getting the vote through. We have discussed for at least an hour and a half an item which has no more to do with this vote than something in connection with the Department of Agriculture or with Japan or any other place, but with the desire to give the fullest information in regard to all these details, I have answered all the questions which hon. gentlemen have asked: yet, we have an hon. gentleman getting up and accusing me of an unwillingness to bring down the information. I would submit to this committee if the discussion which has been in progress for the last hour, or hour and a half, is not completely out of order.

Mr. INGRAM. I object to that altogether. The questions that I asked the hon. gentleman were perfectly pertinent to the subject under discussion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never said the hon. gentleman's questions were out of order. I said that this discussion of the expenditure on the dredge 'Fielding,' which comes out of another vote altogether, and not one cent of the expenditure upon which is taken out of the vote now before the committee, is out of order. How can it be in order to discuss a work for which we are not asking any appropriation? From my desire to give the fullest possible information in every detail, I did not take the point that the discussion was out of order.

Mr. MONK. No point of order could be taken. This discussion is quite pertinent. Surely, when we are discussing the maintenance of seven dredges and we find that one dredge which is being built in a shipyard where these dredges are being repaired, and is going to cost $200,000 more than we anticipated it would cost, the hon. gentleman is not going to say that the discussion is out of order.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely the hon. gentleman who is a great lawyer would not say, that, while we are considering an appropriation for a certain work because there are other works going on at the shops at Sorel, he would ask for information in regard to something that has no connection with the vote whatever. It would be just as reasonable to say that if you were taking a vote for building a piece of roadway in Ottawa every other item of expenditure in Ottawa should come up for discussion. On every item that the hon. gentleman has mentioned I have given the information over and over again. If there is any other information that he wants I will be only too anxious to bring it down. If the department had been lax in bringing down any information asked for it would only be right that the discussion should be continued, or that the item should be held over until this information had been brought down. But, in this instance all the information has been given.

Mr. MONK. I must take exception to what the hon. minister says. I have been very moderate in my questions. He has not answered a single one of these questions. He has not told us where these dredges are going to be located during the summer because he does not know.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do know.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman has not stated where they are to be located.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did give that information. I gave the list of the dredges and I laid a plan on the Table that showed where the work was to be done.

Mr. MONK. I followed the discussion carefully. The hon. gentleman has not given that information nor has he put upon the Table any plan which shows where these dredges would be located during the summer. When the hon. gentleman says that he has given an answer to all the questions asked, I would remind him that I have asked as to the cost of the maintenance of these dredges. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that he has not given that information, nor has he given the capacity of these dredges, nor the results which he expects during the coming season. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that when this discussion began this afternoon he did not know the distance that these dredges were going to excavate during the summer. When the discussion began this afternoon he spoke about a channel sixty-five miles long and finally the hon. gentleman spoke about seven miles of a channel to be excavated during the summer, and which seemed so preposterous that eventually he brought it up to fourteen or fifteen miles. These are details which the hon. gentleman might have known that we would ask for. It might have been expected, in connection with the work of preparing these dredges that the discovery of an extra $200,000 in regard to a dredge to be built in the maritime provinces would give rise to a discussion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not under this vote.

Mr. MONK. It is true that the dredge is not built out of this vote, but there is this reference to dredges and are we going to be to told when we discover that there is an extra of $200,000 for a dredge which was intended to cost $300,000, that because we are discussing the channel of the St. Lawrence we cannot get information as to the cost of that dredge or discuss that point? It does seem to put a limitation upon the committee which the rules never intended.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This item was under discussion at a previous sitting of the House and all the information was given in regard to it. That is one of the reasons why I think I should not be found fault with and lectured. We have spent an hour or two discussing an item which was discussed for two or three hours on a previous occasion. I am in the judgment of the committee as to whether this is not an unjust criticism of me. The hon. gentleman asks for details as to two matters, and although I have given that information over and over again to-day, rather than he should be disappointed or have an excuse for saying that this information has not been brought down in detail, if the hon. gentleman will allow me I will give it again. The first question the hon. gentleman asked was as to the capacity of the different dredges. The capacity of the dredge 'Laurier' is 1,700 cubic yards. It is almost impossible to give a proper idea of the capacity of a dredge without stating the class of material the dredge is working in. This is in hard clay.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that working nine hours a day or ten hours a day ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is twenty hours a day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The 'Lady Aberdeen' does 2,000 yards and in ordinary earth 4,000, and the 'Laval' 400 yards a day.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. She has a greater capacity than that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is in rocks.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Oh, yes ; but that does not indicate its capacity. She does not work in rocks all the time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must give the information in that way. I know it is unreasonable information to ask for, except in a general way.

Mr. MONK. I asked in a general way, and that is the first answer I got.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps my hon. friend did not understand me, or he may have been out of the House.

Mr. MONK. I have been in the House all the afternoon.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to the point at which these dredges will work, I may say that the 'Lady Aberdeen' will be in Lake St. Peter and the 'Tarte' will be in Lake St. Peter. Of course, they will have to work over nine or ten miles of ground.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will the 'Tarte' start from the point where she left off last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And the 'Lady Aberdeen' will start from the lower part of the lake, going up ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it not expected that the Lake St. Peter dredging will be completed this year with these two dredges at work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineers do not think they will be able to complete that work this season.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How many miles will the 'Lady Aberdeen' be expected to cover ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The 'Lady Aberdeen' is sent there to prepare the work where the 'Tarte' is located.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will they both work on the same spot ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not at the same time. The engineer tells me that they will put the 'Lady Aberdeen' there to make a depth for the 'Tarte' to work on.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not understand that at all. I have been at that place many times, and they did not do that last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineer informs me that we are doing exactly the same as we have done last year.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is the crew on board the 'Tarte' the same as last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as I know. I am informed that the crew is practically the same. It has not come under my notice, but the chief engineer informs me that it is practically the same. The officers are the same.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not speak of the men ; I was referring to the officers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officers are the same.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I hope they will all stand by the dredge and remain on board, and see that the men work all the time. How many dredges are now at work on the ship channel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Six. The only dredge not at work now is the 'Tarte.'

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Where are the other dredges at work now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At Contrecoeur, and Varennes, and Verchères.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has the coal for the dredges this year been bought ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. We advertised for the coal, and the tenders are in now.

Mr. INGRAM. I want the minister to point out what the opposition has referred to that is not in keeping with this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am perfectly willing to go on and discuss the item. It will, I think, be admitted that the discussion should be confined to the object for which the money is used, and not one cent of this appropriation will be used in connection with the dredge 'W. S. Fielding.'

Hon. Mr. TARTE. As the cost of that work comes out of this item, I would like to inquire further when my hon. friend expects it to be completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that the estimate is that it will be finished this season.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would my hon. friend oblige me by saying if the projects which were under preparation when I left office for the part of the work that was to be done have been completed since ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must ask my hon. friend to allow me an opportunity to look into that, and I will let him know.

Mr. MONK. We had occasion this afternoon to discuss this item of $340,000, and reference was made to the large amount of wages paid at Sorel, part of which enters into this item. My hon. friend from Simcoe discussed that also, and the minister informed my hon. friend that there were other very important works proceeding there, amongst others the building of this dredge 'Fielding.' It was then that my hon. friend stated, what was news to many members of this House, that that dredge was to cost over $100,000. That is the way that question came up, so that the remarks made on this side of the House were in order. Let me ask my hon. friend, if he does not think me too insistent, to give us the cost of the maintenance of each of these dredges, the three principal items of which would be wages, coal and repairs. This was one of the first questions I asked this afternoon. Let me ask what it cost for the maintenance of the 'Lady Aberdeen.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In round figures, about $30,000. I must apologize if I gave too much information this afternoon, and brought up this subject; it was not with a desire to prolong the discussion. I certainly did not hear or notice the question which my hon. friend says he asked, in regard to the cost of maintenance of each dredge.

Mr. MONK. I claim a little merit, because I asked this question at the very beginning, but did not get any answer. I suppose the $30,000 which the hon. minister has mentioned, includes wages, coal repairs, and everything necessary to keep the dredge going during the season?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is what I am informed.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When I left office, the department was discussing the propriety of buying a piece of land adjoining the yards there. I do not know whether my hon. friend's attention has been called to the importance of securing that piece of land.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think we have bought one piece. I will bring down the information.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The officers will understand me. It is a square piece of land behind one of the yards.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister informs me that it is the Beauchemin property.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. One more question. I do not ask questions for the purpose of creating embarrassment; but we had a good many projects in hand when I left office, and I would like to know what is being done in regard to them. The Department of the Interior transferred to the Department of Public Works the point there; the title was ours when I left office, and we had some intention of building a slip there for the accommodation of dredges that were to be repaired. I do not know whether my hon. friend's attention has been called to that slip.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That matter will receive attention this season.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to let us have the names of the parties who tendered for the coal for these dredges, or state whether the order was given without any tenders?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Tenders were asked for, and after the tenders are opened and the contract awarded, I will bring them down.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Quebec harbour improvements, $100,000.

Mr. MONK. I am not aware that the item we were on before recess was passed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I declared the item passed and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) then asked what would be the next item after recess.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am in the hands of the committee, and if the committee want to debate the item further I shall not raise any further objection, but I was under the impression that the item had passed, which impression is borne out by what Mr. Deputy Speaker has just said. If any further information be required, I would have no objection to give it on another item.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Personally I have not the slightest objection to the item being declared passed, but I did not understand that it was passed before recess.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier should accept the offer I have made and that we should submit to the Chairman's ruling.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the item now submitted?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for additional berth room for deep draught sea going vessels along the river front. Here is the plan, which hon. gentlemen may examine for themselves. Representations were made by the harbour board of Quebec urging the necessity for more berth room, and I asked the engineers of the department to prepare for an extension, as shown on the plan laid on the Table, of 462 feet long and 40 feet wide at the base. I advertised for tenders and several were received, and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderers, Messrs Dusseault and Lemieux, or Lévis, for $198,700. The contract was awarded to them on the 8th of May.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Does the hon. gentleman mean to suggest that it was at the request of the harbour commissioners that the plans were changed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was on the representations made by the harbour board that the plan now on the Table was prepared.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. This is not an answer, and I must insist on a clear answer. The plans on which I advertised for public tenders were prepared by the department with the co-operation of the harbour commissioners at Quebec. These gentlemen came to Ottawa with the board of trade and interviewed the right hon. gentleman and myself, and the government decided to go on with the work. Money was asked and voted by the House. During the last session of parliament I laid on the Table of the House the plans on which these tenders were to be asked, and I say again that these plans, after being prepared by the department were submitted to the harbour board and approved by them. So I understand the hon. minister to say that these large plans—for the plans for which I advertised were for much larger works than those now proposed to be carried out—were abandoned at the request of the Quebec harbour board.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What reasons may have influenced them I do not know, but when I took office the representation made by the harbour board to me was that the plan at present submitted was the one they wished carried out. I am not seeking to avoid the hon. gentleman's question, but simply to say that representations made both in writing and personally by the president, engineers and other representatives of the harbour board were in favour of these plans. I am not prepared to say whether the harbour board had a meeting or not, and formally decided to ask to have these new plans substituted for the other, but they did ask that this plan be adopted at the present time, and they also made suggestions to me which I will explain when the plans they have suggested and which are a little different from the original plan are discussed.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What surprises me is the statement that the harbour board suggested smaller works, after they had approved of the plans on which tenders were asked. Of course, I have not one word more to say. But I have asked for the correspondence and I do not know whether it has been brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that the correspondence has been brought down.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I understand that the minister is doing this preliminary work, and that later on further provision will be made, if the trade requires it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Are further works in contemplation in the port of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, no other representations have been made to me, nor any other plans submitted.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Because, there was some difficulty about that work. Other parties wanted the work to be made elsewhere. But I am fully satisfied with the explanation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No further representations were made to me. The change in the larger plan as suggested by the harbour board was to extend four or five hundred feet or perhaps further to deep water before turning.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In fact only part of the larger works that would have been carried on are applied for this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is all.

Mr. KEMP. Is there any request from Quebec looking to the deepening of the harbour ? I understood that the water was not quite deep enough for some of the larger vessels that come into the St. Lawrence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No representations have been made, unless they were made some time ago. Nothing of that kind has been brought to my notice.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I suppose what my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr Kemp) refers to is the Louise basin ? It is very difficult to dredge deeper there, because the wharfs are built in such a way that if you dredge deeper they will tumble.

Mr. KEMP. I was told by a gentleman who comes from Quebec that there is a difficulty about docking. That is why I asked the question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will give them about forty or fifty feet of water. Outside of the basin I think they have about thirty feet. The matter has not been brought to my attention.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. minister kindly tell me how many tenderers there were and from whom, if he has the information at hand ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot speak with certainty from memory, but I believe there were five or six tenders, including one from M. P. Davis, or Davis Bros., the Connollys, Poupore—almost all the large contractors who have a plant.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How much additional space would these improvements give ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In round figures, 500 feet. The actual wharf is 460 feet.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is in one direction. How long is it in the other ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is straight out to deep water. It is left so that in the future, if we decide, we can either go further or return as by the plans formerly made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How many feet of water will be inside the works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The figures are given on the plan. It is shallow water.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The dredging will not be carried out now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not at present.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. So, there will be only one berth wharf for a large ship ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as I am concerned, the question with the department is whether we should extend this from 400 to 600 feet and then return.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The plans formerly decided on gave a large basin, and three berths. These reduced plans, will be a good improvement, however, though not quite so useful as the others would have been.

Mr. MONK. I remember seeing last year in 'Le Soleil,' the government organ in Quebec, that very extensive improvements had been formally decided upon in the harbour there, to cost several hundred thousand dollars, that the improvements had been approved of, the plans sanctioned and work to begin immediately. I believe the names of the successful tenderers were mentioned. The recollection I have is that these improvements had been solicited a long time by the people of Quebec, that they were absolutely necessary, and were to cost over a million ultimately. Now am I to understand that the harbour commissioners of Quebec approve of these improvements which have been decided on by the government, and to which reference has been made here to-night, and am I to understand that they have gone back upon their decision and are now satisfied with this vote of $100,000 and these diminished improvements ? Has the minister any authentic declaration to that effect ? And are these the only improvements which this year will be executed in and around the city of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as the matter has received the attention of the department, these are the immediate improvements that will be undertaken this season. It is perfectly true that, as the trade of the port increases, these plans will have to be extended, and it is expected that it will cost over a million dollars to complete improvements that will accommodate vessels of deep draught at the port of Quebec. Probably this is the work the papers referred to. After representations had been made to the harbour board, they decided to go on with this part of the work, and to advertise for tenders ; and I have just read the amount of the contract that was entered into.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The harbour commissioners and the board of trade of Quebec petitioned the government over and over again, and I submitted the whole thing to my colleagues. The Prime Minister and myself received a deputation, the whole question was discussed carefully, plans were prepared, which I laid on the Table of the House. I stated to the House last year that I was asking for only $100,000 then, but that those works would probably cost in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000. Tenders were received, some of them were irregular. I reported to Council, but before the report was adopted I went out of office. The hon. gentleman states now that the harbour commissioners have approved of the new plans. Well, so far as that goes, I have not a word to say. But I may add that the reason we decided to go on with those large works last year was that we expected that within a short time the fast line would be established, and as the port of Quebec was the natural port for these big ships, we thought it was necessary to provide for them.

Mr. MONK. Did the minister say that these new plans had been formally approved by the harbour commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. Further than that, I say that it was on their representations and suggestions that I carried out these plans. After they were prepared in the department they were sent down to the harbour commissioners to examine and to make any further representations which they wished.

Mr. MONK. Had any tenders been accepted for this work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, a tender was accepted and the contract let. The contractors are Dusseault & Lemieux, of Lévis. The contract calls for the completion of the work inside of two years.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What kind of timber is going to be used ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Spruce, and either elm or oak. I think if we can get good rock elm it is as good as oak. The engineer of the harbour board of Quebec, who has had considerable experience, consulted with my officials in regard to that. The plans have been approved by the chief engineer. The timber used is below water.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would it not be advisable, in cases such as this, to make sure that the timber contracted for will be the right kind ? If hemlock does as well, would it not be just as well to give a contract for hemlock instead of spruce, inasmuch as hemlock sometimes finds its way into the quantity supplied ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That matter was under discussion, and the officers of the department did not seem to think that hemlock is equal to hardwood. We are using concrete where it has to support a heavy weight. Hemlock might last under water for ages, but this work has to carry a very heavy weight.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would urge my hon. friend to use concrete as much as he can. The ordinary life of timber is not over eight or ten years, and I would advise my hon. friend not to be afraid of the additional expense of concrete. I think he has made a mistake in saying that correspondence has been brought down. The Clerk of the House tells me it has not been brought down. I shall wait for it. I do not object to the item because the correspondence is not brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend must have misunderstood the clerk, because the correspondence was prepared, and I ordered it to be sent over. I will see that a copy is brought down again.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the minister putting concrete upon the piling ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not piling, this is cribwork. The concrete is above low water mark. I am pleased to say that the improved methods of making concrete makes the difference in cost between concrete and timber very little now.

Harbours and rivers, Ontario—Port Arthur, dredging, $50,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman explain where he intends doing that dredging at Port Arthur ? Perhaps he has not the plans by him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the plan. This is in the channel. My hon. friend is no doubt familiar with the locality there.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, I have been there several times.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are the channels leading to the docks there through which the vesselmen have found so much trouble in getting their boats. This is to continue the dredging that I think was started a few years ago. Many representations have been made but more dredging is required to allow large boats to get in. The idea is to make this channel twenty-one feet deep.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. What channel ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In view of the great improvement in the trade of Port Arthur and of the importance which that port will assume in the near future, has the hon. minister given his attention to the possibility of extending the breakwater ? The breakwater is a very short affair, not over half a mile long, and I think it should be extended to make the harbour what the demands there would require it to be.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) that I had some representations made to me that the breakwater was long enough to protect the present docks. With an extension of the work there I dare say it would be necessary to extend the breakwater.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would like to know exactly where the hon. minister intends to carry out the dredging. There are two elevators in Port Arthur. There is the Canadian Northern elevator. There is also the King elevator. Dredging has been done at both elevators, but dredging is also required to deepen the channel. I would like to know exactly what the hon. minister intends doing. He has a plan prepared, I am sure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but it has not been customary to lay plans on the Table.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not ask the plans to be brought here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to do dredging from the entrance of the breakwater up to the docks which the hon. gentleman has named, the Canadian Northern dock and King's dock.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has just said a word about the breakwater. I was there in August last year and I made an examination of the works. That breakwater which cost a large amount of money, will be destroyed if the hon. Minister of Public Works does not repair it now. It is in very bad condition. I would invite his attention to the necessity of repairing it without delay. It is being destroyed now. It is a work of large importance. It is necessary work, yet, if it is not repaired, it will not be worth anything. I think it will cost quite a large amount of money, but all the same repairs are necessary.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is just a question whether the breakwater is not too close in towards the docks. At the time it was constructed the vessels that are now plying on the lakes were not built. Vessels of many thousands tons burden enter the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William. They find that the sea room inside of the breakwater is rather contracted. I am not finding fault but I merely want to give the hon. minister a suggestion. In case it should be found that the breakwater needs extensive repairing, or in case that a new breakwater would be constructed and extended in a line south-westerly from the present breakwater, it will be well to place it further out and give more sea room inside of the present breakwater there. As the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) suggests, something will require to be done, and at an early date, or the present breakwater will fall to pieces.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think we all recognize the importance of the great trade that is growing up at that port and which is likely to grow very fast. We hope so at any rate. The improvements to the breakwater and the dredging will have to be continued. This vote in the main estimates is especially for dredging to carry out urgent work. In fact, I have taken the responsibility, in view of the telegrams received and the representations made as to the urgency of this work, of giving instructions that the dredging shall go on as soon as this vote is passed. The further improvements which are required there will be carefully considered in connection with the supplementary estimates for 1903-4. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) refers to the necessity of repairing the breakwater. There is no doubt that is urgent and when the estimates are brought down we will see that the work is undertaken.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. minister is dredging a twenty-one foot channel. Would he be good enough to tell us in what way he is carrying out that work ? Is he carrying out the old arrangement that was made formerly ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I am at present just carrying out the arrangement.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it with the same company ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. With the Great Lakes Dredging Company.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Is it the same company ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. At the same price—fifteen cents a yard?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fifteen cents a yard.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. You cannot do better.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that an item of $35,000 was passed last year partly for the extension of the breakwater and partly for dredging. When that item was up for discussion the then hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) made the statement that $35,000 would complete the work. Could the hon. Minister of Public Works say whether that did complete the work, and if this is new dredging that he proposes to do ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be very much surprised to see that the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works said that $35,000 would complete the work at Port Arthur. I do not think that he said that. He may have said that it would complete that season's dredging or some special piece of work that he had under consideration at the time.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not remember very well what I said last year. Of course, it depends. There is plenty to be done there.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). You made liberal promises.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. As usual.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is right.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think this country should not hesitate for one minute to equip Port Arthur and Fort William and all the other important ports on the lakes. We have lost a great deal of time. These ports should be equipped as well as money can do it, and they should be equipped now and not wait till we are all dead and buried and in heaven.

Mr. BLAIN. This is the statement that was made :

We expect to spend $35,000 this year to complete the dredging necessary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No doubt the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works referred to the work that was pressing at that time.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Vessels this fall drawing only eight feet of water grounded in Port Arthur and there was considerable trouble as a result. This increases the rates of insurance on these vessels, and I am satisfied that no one would object to every dollar being expended that is absolutely necessary to place this harbour in a proper condition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is quite correct that vessels have grounded in this port, because I was at Port Arthur in the latter part of October, and I saw a vessel which had been aground for two or three days. Dredging work is undoubtedly necessary at that place and I entirely agree that such dredging should be done as to make it a safe port to enter. It is increasing in importance in proportion as the grain trade of the Northwest is increasing. That is true of Port Arthur as well as Fort William. I think the money could not be put to better use than to spend it in making Fort William and Port Arthur safe harbours for large boats to enter.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When I went to Port Arthur in August, I found that orders had been given for dredging to eighteen feet deep, and I immediately instructed the officers to dredge to twenty-one feet. Is there only one dredge at work there now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are three dredges at work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Belonging to the same company ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. Two belong to the company and one to Mr. Booth.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The three are at Port Arthur, and they are at the same price of fifteen cents a yard ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. What part of this $35,000 voted last year was expended for dredging, and what part on the breakwater ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was all expended for dredging.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The United States government and the various parties interested, have spent millions of dollars in making splendid harbours at Duluth and West Superior. At a little place called Two Harbours there has been upwards of $2,000,000 spent in giving shipping facilities. Canada has ports at Port Arthur and Fort William undoubtedly far superior to Duluth and West Superior, and I am satisfied that the Canadian government could make no wiser expenditure of a large sum of money than to equip Fort William and Port Arthur with harbours sufficient to meet the great demands that will be undoubtedly made on them in the near future. I believe that the minister could double and quadruple this amount and expend it on these harbours with profit to the whole country.

Mr. McCREARY. I cannot agree with the member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) when he says that Port Arthur and Fort William are better natural harbours than Duluth and West Superior. I am informed by those who know that these two latter harbours are the best on the American continent. I believe that we should not discuss this question here and now, but that we should wait until the transportation commission brings down their report, and one of the most important things this commission will have to consider will be to provide facilities for the shipping of grain from the head of Lake Superior. Sixty-five vessels stayed at Duluth this winter, and they were able to move grain out this spring at the rate of two cents a bushel. I learn from the grain shippers that Port Arthur is very badly equipped ; the breakwater does not go out far enough, and dredging requires to be done. At Fort William the river is too narrow, and I am told by men who know, that it will require an expenditure of half a million dollars, and not $95,000, to put these harbours in anything like as good shape as the harbour at Duluth and West Superior. We cannot expect that the minister will provide this large sum in the estimates now.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Why not ?

Mr. McCREARY. Because he is not acquainted with all the facts, and because it will be the duty of the transportation commission to inquire from all parties interested as to what are the actual needs at that point. There is no doubt that with the encouragement given to Canadian owners of lake vessels by the removal of the harbour dues and one thing and another, there will be a Canadian fleet put on these lakes able to handle all our grain. If that be so it will be the duty of the government to spend there half a million, or a million if necessary, for widening the Kaministiquia river and the two small rivers that flow into that point, and deepening the harbour at Port Arthur and extending the breakwater. When the question about the transportation commission is brought up, I intend to give the figures of the expenditures for the past twenty years on West Superior and Duluth ; these figures having been supplied me by a gentleman who is well acquainted with the subject. I urge on the Minister of Public Works the importance of doing something to increase the facilities at these harbours.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is what Col. Hughes did and you contradicted him.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I did not use the term 'natural harbour' in connection with Port Arthur and Fort William, nor can the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) use the term 'natural harbour' in connection with Duluth, because it is a created harbour. Not very many years ago what is now the great harbour of Duluth was simply a bog and it had to be dredged out. I have not the slightest doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) inclines towards favouring the harbour of Duluth. It is not so many years since the Liberal party in Manitoba endeavoured to tie up this country to a scheme to run a railway to Duluth, but owing to the policy of the Conservative party that road was diverted to Port Arthur and in consequence Port Arthur is a growing Canadian town and a credit to the Dominion of Canada. I do not know whether my friends from Manitoba of the Liberal cult have gotten over their discomfiture at the success of the scheme which was promoted by the Conservative party of making this an all-Canadian route. When my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was in the government, I was pleased to find him following the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party in developing our Canadian lake ports of Port Arthur and Fort William. I trust that my good friend (Mr. McCreary) will fall in line now. If one-half the money is spent on our own Canadian ports that has been spent on Duluth and West Superior, we need not fear the rivalry of the American ports.

Mr. McCREARY. It ill becomes the member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to accuse me of disloyalty when a moment ago I asked the government to spend half a million dollars and not $95,000. What I pointed out to the House was that unless we made Port Arthur and Fort William somewhat equal to Duluth and West Superior we might possibly lose the trade that should come through Canadian ports. The estimate quoted to me shortly before I left Winnipeg was that it would take $1,000,000 to put Port Arthur and Fort William in as good shape as Duluth and West Superior. With regard to loyalty, I do not think the hon. gentleman should say anything to me. Had I done what some of his friends did about twenty years ago, I would have stopped in Dakota or Minnesota instead of going on and settling as a pioneer in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Let us try not to make party politics of these broad questions, but discuss them from a broad standpoint. Duluth and West Superior are very fine harbours; they are practically one harbour. Both have cost a very large amount of money. The harbour of Duluth has natural advantages, which have been improved. I think the dredging alone inside of that harbour has cost in the neighbourhood of $2,000,000. There is a splendid breakwater to protect the harbour, and there are practically two harbours, an outside one and an inside one. We can make at Fort William and Port Arthur a very fine harbour. Port Arthur is a good harbour, though it has this disadvantage, that it closes about fifteen days earlier than Fort William. There is an island at the right hand of the port on which the ice jams, so that the entrance to Port Arthur is closed practically two weeks earlier in the fall than the entrance to Fort William. The first improvement that should in my humble opinion be carried on there is the dredging of Mission river, which would give an additional entrance to Fort William, and prevent the ice forming there so early in the fall and ensure it moving out earlier in the spring. This I think would give three weeks more navigation, and it would not cost a large amount of money. After I took a trip up there I instructed Mr. Coste, a very experienced engineer, to have a plan ensemble—a general plan—made of those harbours. I do not know whether that instruction has been carried out; if not, I think my hon. friend should lose no time in having such a plan prepared. I am sure that the House would be very ready to vote any sum necessary to make of these two harbours a really national harbour. My hon. friend is perfectly right when he says that Duluth offers advantages which these harbours do not offer. Duluth has one of the best elevators in the world. We are having a large elevator capacity built at Port Arthur and Fort William by the two railway companies; but it seems to me that it is the duty of this government and of parliament to help private companies to do what the United States government does, that is, to equip the harbours. That should be done without any delay. If we expect to get the trade to which we are entitled, we must spend the money necessary to achieve that end.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. minister able to state the amount spent on Port Arthur harbour since confederation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total expenditure is $550,332.42.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the amount is comparatively small when you consider the importance of the harbour. It is the only outlet for the great wheat fields of the west, where the two railways come together, and it should be made as fine a harbour as there is on the lakes. I think the government would be justified in doubling the expenditure on that harbour during the next year so long as they used the money wisely. If the government does less than make adequate provision for the shipping there, they will be criticised.

Mr. MONK. Is there any general plan of the improvements prepared?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have several plans and several reports. I said before, and I say again, that this vote is for carrying on urgent work which is under way at the present time. The whole matter is now receiving the attention of the department. I fully recognize its importance, and should be pleased to have the support of both sides of the House in doing what may be necessary under the circumstances. I shall be pleased to bring down a report on the subject.

Mr. MONK. Is the minister able to say what further expenditure would be entailed under the proposed plan for improvement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Discussing in a general way a few days ago of the improvement of the Mission river, which the ex-minister has referred to, I obtained a rough estimate that it would cost about $200,000. I do not say that would make the harbour equal to very large ports, on which millions have been spent; but that is my recollection of the discussion we had a few days ago, when some representatives from Port Arthur and Fort William were here.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Kaministiquia river is wide enough to make one of the finest harbours in the world when the work is completed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think it would be desirable for the government to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) as soon as possible, that is, to have a general plan made of the harbour at Port Arthur and the Kaministiquia river. That harbour impresses one with the possibilities of the future. I understood from those who were on the spot that the river alone could be utilized for about twelve miles and that the banks would afford available sites for elevators and docks for the shipping of grain. The river is very peculiar in being more like a natural canal than anything else. It is deep and of great width and with firm banks on both sides, capable of affording strong foundations for elevators. There would hardly seem to be any place which could afford better facilities than that harbour and especially the river I have alluded to. I do not think that this House would begrudge any money for the dredging of the river and harbour in the best possible way. But we should not spend any money in a fragmentary manner. We should have a general plan of improving the harbour and river after obtaining the best possible advice, and if necessary expert assistance from outside, so that there may be no obstacle to our securing the traffic which is developing so rapidly in the Northwest.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I might point out that in the near future Port Arthur and Fort William will be iron ore shipping centres, the same as Duluth and West Superior. I would like to endorse the opinion of my leader and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in support of some general plan being carried out. In addition the Kaministiquia river has a delta of three mouths which could be utilized very readily in case of necessity. Then the stream far above this is navigable several miles for vessels drawing fifteen to eighteen feet of water, and with a little dredging the river could be made of great importance. It requires a turning basin.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is a good turning basin there now.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is far above that. The Mission river is one of the mouths of the Kaministiquia. Far above that are the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators, and vessels have to back down from the elevators, which is a drawback. I might point out that the old Chicago river was not as large as the MacIntyre and Neebing. The old Chicago creek, which developed the largest inland city on the American continent was not as large as any of the mouths of the Kaministiquia, Neebing or MacIntyre rivers.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard a suggestion made which might be valuable, and that is for the construction of an iceboat to break up the ice. That would make navigation two or three weeks earlier. The gentleman who made that suggestion told me that in the straits of Makinaw they have boats which break up the ice without trouble.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have had my attention drawn to the necessity of having an iceboat there, but our first duty would be to improve the harbour. This matter is receiving serious consideration, and I am glad to know that if we can bring down a plan which will meet the approval of the House, the House will not hesitate voting the money.

Mr. SPROULE. An ice breaking boat would not conflict with any improvements going on in the harbour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No doubt, but at the same time it is questionable whether an iceboat would be necessary. There seems to be a great deal of difference of opinion on that point. But the suggestion is worthy of consideration.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the Mission river is dredged, it will not be necessary to use any iceboats, because the dredging will permit the vessels to avoid the ice which forms on the island and blocks the entrance of Port Arthur.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that is another phase of the question.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The boats then would simply go by the new channel.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That seemed to be the universal opinion of those to whom I spoke. The Mission river cannot be used for large vessels, and the idea was that if it were deepened so as to admit large boats, that would lengthen the season by two or three weeks.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have been listening to the remarks regarding the advisability of a large amount being expended on the enlarging and deepening of Port Arthur and Fort William, but what guarantee have we that we could thus prevent the diversion of the trade down to Buffalo and other American ports? Can the hon. minister give us an idea what quantity of grain goes to American ports and what portion to Canadian ports? I am afraid that they are expending a large amount of money for the advantage of American ports instead of our own, and neglecting perhaps the channels through Canadian territory, through which grain could be carried to our own seaports.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think that there is any doubt that with proper exertions we will be able to maintain a Canadian route for the grain from the west. I have not these statistics at hand just now, but I am in sympathy with the view that by means of proper harbour improvements and storage facilities we will be able to return a large portion of the trade for our Canadian routes.

Mr. CLARKE. I see that we have spent last year some $20,000 at Port Arthur on the extension of the breakwater and dredges, and some $11,000 were paid the Duluth Dock and Dredge Company for dredging at the rate of fifteen and a half cents per cubic yard. Was this done by tender or otherwise ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I doubt whether it was done by tender, as the difficulty is to get dredges. The price paid is the regular price.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does the hon. minister not think that we are making a great mistake in spending large amounts at Port Arthur and Fort William and neglecting the ports in the east ? We should spend money first in improving channels from the sea to these ports instead of commencing at the back and coming forward, only to find that the channels to the sea are not of a sufficient depth to enable us to send the exports that come from Port Arthur and Fort William out through a Canadian seaport.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The dredging in this case seems to cost fifteen cents per cubic yard. Of course, I know nothing about what that cost should be. But it has been represented in the discussion in the committee that in the St. Lawrence the price can be reduced to two cents and even less than that with first-class dredges. If I am right in my understanding of what has been said on that point, it would seem important, if these operations have to be carried on upon an extensive scale at Port Arthur and Fort William, that the government should take into consideration this very high rate that we are paying and should endeavour to approximate the work as closely as may be to the conditions that prevail in the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineer of the department informs me that a dredge such as the 'J. Israel Tarte,' which is a suction dredge, could not handle the material there. The price depends a great deal on the conditions, the class of material and the kind of dredge that is doing the work. I think the rates that we have been paying are lower than those paid on the other side of the line. The dredges are threatening to take contracts from the Americans, where, they say, they receive higher rates. Some material we cannot get removed for less than twenty cents at least. The question of building or buying dredges is well worthy of consideration, and it is a matter to which the department is giving a great deal of attention, making comparisons between the work done by the dredges of the department and those working under contract.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There are no dredges available on the Canadian side of the lakes. I know them all. They are good dredges, but not modern ; they are spoon dredges. But there is no doubt that, with an elevator dredge, the Kaministiquia and the Mission river and Port Arthur could be dredged at a rate of two or three cents a yard. In former days, there was a government dredge, No. 6 I think it was, which carried on dredging at two cents a yard at Fort William, and I make bold to say that if one of our dredges on the St. Lawrence could be sent up there—of course, it cannot be done—the dredging could be done there for less than two cents a yard. There is no possible doubt about that. I know that the department require spoon dredges to dredge near the wharfs, but the modern elevator dredges can work elsewhere. The department, in my humble opinion, could equip itself with one or two of these spoon dredges also. But in such dredging as that in the Kaministiquia or the Mission river, one elevator dredge could do more work than three or four of these dredges for which we pay fifteen cents a yard. That is the whole story in two words. But they are not available, so the minister cannot help himself.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the dredging in the Kaministiquia. I understood it was only soft material brought down the river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a good deal of soft stuff in the Kaministiquia, but there is hard material below it. If we had a large suction dredge, I understand it could do the work in the Mission river.

Mr. MONK. How much would an elevator dredge cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In round figures—$100,000 or $125,000.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It depends on the size.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The trouble is to get dredges. Some of the dredges that were under commission last year at the present rate told us that they could get better rates on the other side of the line, and we are in a position where we must make the best possible bargain. We have arranged at present to continue under the old arrangement.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does not all this prove that what we require is a broad, comprehensive plan and also a modern equipment ? There is only one way to do this thing, and that is to do it. The country will be quite willing to bear the expense. It is far better to have improved dredges and get the work done, than to fritter away the money of the people on a small and imperfect plan. Why should not the government take the responsibility of coming down with a plan for the improvement of these harbours, and, if necessary, provide the government dredges to carry out the work ? The result of this would be that we should actually get harbours improved and the work would be done at the lowest cost.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) must not lose sight of the fact that the work on the St. Lawrence ship channel will soon be completed. On a visit I paid to the lakes and harbours last year, I instructed Mr. Coste to prepare a general plan for the improvement of the harbours, and the rivers as well, from a Canadian standpoint. My intention was to come before the House with a report showing what, in my humble opinion and in the opinion of the officers of the department were the most pressing works to be carried out. The completion of the works on the St. Lawrence will set free a powerful fleet of dredges, and these dredges can work on the lakes. So, perhaps, we should not hurry too much in building new dredges. But, for the time being, it seems to me that the thing to be done is to prepare a careful plan not only covering Port Arthur and Fort William, but covering the whole system because it will be of no use if we carry out improvements at the head of the lake only. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) said that a great deal of our trade is diverted to American ports. The reason is obvious—these American ports are splendidly equipped. Duluth, Milwaukee, Chicago, West Superior, Buffalo are all magnificently equipped, while we have on the great lakes not one single harbour which can be called properly equipped. We have only the beginning of an equipment on any harbour on the lakes. We must equip the port of Montreal and all the harbours if we expect trade to be carried through them. It is all very well to say: Let us have improvements in the west; let us have more railways. I altogether share the views of my hon. friend from Lunenburg. Unless we equip our harbours on the lakes, the Canadian trade will not go through Canadian channels. Nobody who knows anything about the carriage of trade can fail to understand that the time will never come when an all-rail route will supersede the waterway. That is out of the question. So I cannot too strongly urge upon the Minister of Public Works to give his personal and immediate attention to the important question of equipping our waterways and our harbours on the lakes and on the St. Lawrence. That is a national question.

Mr. CLARE. When does the Minister of Public Works expect this dredge to be completed? When the vote was asked for, it was supposed $300,000 would complete this dredge, but the Minister of Public Works tells us to-day that it is going to cost $500,000, and at the same time he tells us that from the last of December to the 1st of June there has been expended $20,000 on it. At that rate it will take twenty-five years to finish this dredge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is mistaken. But I would say to him that we have fully discussed this question, and he can look up the report and see what was said.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would ask members of the committee not to diverge from the general question of transportation.

Mr. MONK. What was the amount paid per cubic yard last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fifteen and fifteen and a half cents.

Mr. MONK. At that rate the contractors must have made a fair profit. I suppose it is understood that we are not going to pay any more than fifteen or fifteen and a half cents a yard this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not if we can make a contract at that price.

Mr. SPROULE. I was up the St. Mary's river last year and inquired what was being paid for dredging, and my information was that it cost thirteen cents.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That may be quite correct. A dredge may make more money at thirteen cents in some localities than at forty cents in others.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Who is the engineer on these works, and who are the inspectors?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Temple is the engineer. I cannot give the names of the inspectors.

St. Andrews Rapids improvements, Red river, $100,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to carry on works under contract at St. Andrews rapids. I find on investigation that the progress is rather slow. On the contract itself something like $28,000 or $30,000 only has been spent.

Mr. PUTTEE. Has not the life of that contract nearly expired? Practically the work has not started yet. This is practically all a revote of the item of last year. I hope the minister will tell us what course he is going to follow to secure the early completion of that work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The amount of the contract is $469,000. The cost of the land, engineering and that sort of thing, is put down at $47,000. The time for the completion of the contract will expire during this summer. There has probably been good reason for the delay.

Mr. PUTTEE. What are the reasons?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were made asking for a change in the contract. I think my hon. friend will remember that the first year there was high water, floods had something to do with the delay. I have been looking over the matter, but have not come to a decision yet to recommend a change in the contract. I think they first started work in 1901-2.

Mr. MONK. What were the changes they asked for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I remember right, they asked to have concrete work changed to stonework. Representations were made that solid concrete work would not stand so well as stone work in that climate subject to extremes of heat and frost. I have asked for a report from the engineers on this subject.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The true reason why that work has not proceeded more rapidly is because the contractor took it at too low a price. I do not know what may have induced him to take that contract at the price he named. His tender was a regular one, he made a deposit and I signed the contract. He had been a contractor on the Canadian Pacific Railway on a large scale, and he made a deposit in the neighbourhood of $50,000, so I had nothing else to do than to sign the contract. But all the same, the price was too low, and it was not long before he asked to change the concrete to stone work. When my hon. friend has been Minister of Public Works for a longer time, he will find that whenever a contractor takes a contract at too low a price, it will not be long before he will ask for changes. The Messrs. Kelly, very able contractors, asked for changes. They stated that in their opinion it was better to have stone than concrete. Of course anybody who knows anything about works of that kind is aware that concrete is better than stone in that climate. I declined to make the change. I said to Mr. Kelly, I will do everything I can to help you out, I will not be unduly hard with you, but I cannot consent to that change. The hon. Minister of Public Works has just said that perhaps the demand for these changes has been a cause of delay, but I gave him a very clear answer, on the report of the officers of the department, of course, and other engineers with whom I consulted, that the changes could not possible be made, that I could not take upon myself to recommend to my colleagues that these changes should be made which would have increased the cost by a quarter of a million dollars. I could not possibly have entertained that suggestion for one minute. I said: If you want to give up your contract, I will ask my colleagues to give you back your deposit, although, in the ordinary course of business, we should confiscate it. That contractor cannot possibly carry out this work without a great loss of money.

Mr. KEMP. Has he done any work?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He has done very little work indeed. If parliament will insist upon a contractor losing money it has a right to do so. We have a right to exact from him that he will carry out his contract. We should say to him: You must either carry out your work or give it up. He did not carry out the work and he did not give it up. He waited but I declined to make the changes. I told him that I could not possibly recommend these changes. But, if I had a good word to say on behalf of the contractors, I would not hesitate in stating that they have very foolishly taken up that contract. Their price is too low by far, it is too low by at least $75,000 and perhaps more. It is a great pity indeed because I suppose these men acted in perfect good faith. These are facts, and if I were allowed, I would recommend these contractors to the mercy of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Mr. SPROULE. Have any changes been made or allowed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No changes have been made by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works or allowed by me. There have been some representations made by the city and by others as to having water power there. In view of the statement made by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works, I have been making some inquiries of the chief engineer, and he says that this contract is very much below his estimate.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Am I mistaken in saying that it is $75,000 below the estimate?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $100,000. That is one of the misfortunes in connection with public works of this kind. I do not advocate it, but if you were to give the minister latitude to say that he would not accept the lowest tender you might avoid a great deal of difficulty, because, when you let a contract under those circumstances in the face of the report of the officials of the department that the work cannot be done for the amount stipulated it only leads to difficulty. In view of the suggestion made by the hon. ex-minister I will take the matter up and be prepared to make a report in regard to it and to ascertain if the contractors are able to go on with the work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. These contractors cannot carry out the work for the price. They must have spent $20,000 but they have practically done no work.

Mr. MONK. If the contractors stand to lose $75,000, I for my part, would be in favour of relieving them. I do not think we should insist upon the carrying out of works where it is clearly evident that the contractors are going to lose such a large amount as that. I do not think we should countenance any change from the original specifications. Works of this kind are much better done in concrete than stone and one can very easily understand why the contractors are in favour of making the substitution. I am not in favour of that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works will never consent to this change.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to say a few words in reference to this matter. If hon. gentlemen will look up the first published report of the Winnipeg board of trade printed in 1879, they will ascertain from that report that a delegation was sent down to the government in 1879 asking for the improvement of St. Andrew's rapids. That delegation was promised that the work would be commenced within one year and this was about twenty-four years ago. The matter was urged upon the department each year until 1884, when Sir Hector Langevin visited Winnipeg, and although I am not supposed to be a very strong Conservative, I attended a banquet given to that hon. gentleman in Winnipeg that year because we united on both sides of politics to entertain that hon. gentleman in the hope that he would let a contract for this work. Notwithstanding that we gave him one of the best banquets that ever had been given in the city of Winnipeg, that we fed him well, that we dined him and wined him and sent him away rejoicing, not one step was taken in the direction of proceeding with this work. Matters remained in that form until this government came into power and we hoped that this government would do something. I submit that they have done something. They have made a beginning, but they have made little more than a beginning. As the hon. Minister of Public Works has said, the great mistake that was made was in letting this work by contract at all. I believe this work should have been done by day's labour. It is a work that one man can grasp and he could easily have looked after the whole thing. It is not like a railway which extends several miles away but it is a work that could be kept under the individual supervision of one man. However, a contract was let to the lowest tenderer and it has been pointed out, that the tender was $100,000 below what the work was worth. If it was $100,000 below what the work was worth at that time with the advance in the cost of material and labour which has taken place since, the work is worth $100,000 more now than it was then, and therefore, the tender is $200,000 lower than the work is worth to complete. Unfortunately, while these contractors were most energetic contractors, while they had been contractors in the city of Winnipeg for twenty years and had built the greater portion of the sewer system of that city, they seemed to have hard luck in the year they undertook this work. The first thing they did after getting the contract was to build a spur line from the Selkirk branch of the main line down to the works and the water became so high that the track was submerged. For twenty-one years I have been passing up and down that railway and never until that year had I seen the railway line submerged at four different places. Last year it was almost the same. The work has been hampered in every shape and form. They have done about $30,000 worth of work, they have machinery on the ground and 6,000 yards of sand and they will be out about $30,000 or $40,000. The matter is in a very unsatisfactory condition, but there is no use of crying over spilt milk. The best way for the hon. minister to do in my opinion is to try and grapple with the subject. If it is possible to get the contractors to give up the work then I would have them do so. On the first of July the three years term is up, but as the plans were not prepared until the 1st of October, the contractors claim that extra time, as they say they were not able to go on with the work. During the last six months the citizens of Winnipeg have been clamouring for water power. They find that cheaper power will have to be supplied to the city of Winnipeg and they have submitted a basis upon which tenders will be received for the supply of that power. The nearest source of power on the Winnipeg river is about sixty miles from the city, but it is believed that between 3,000 and 5,000 horse power might be developed at these rapids. The municipalities of St. Paul, St. Andrews, Kildonan and St. Clements, believe that if they could get a bridge across the river at some point there it would be greatly to their advantage and they are willing to contribute a share of the cost. The local government would also contribute. As I understand it, all that would be necessary for the municipalities to do would be to build abutments from the end of the dam to the shore on both sides. I am also informed that some of the railways would like to cross the river at about this point, and probably the bridge erected there might be made suitable for vehicular and passenger traffic as well as for steam railways and electric railways. I have been informed by a gentleman recently, that the electric railway company which is running a line to Winnipeg Beach, would be willing to share in the cost of the bridge if they were allowed to cross the river at this point. In view of all these facts, I think the minister should ask his engineers to report on what changes would be necessary to carry out the conditions which I have enumerated. I believe that the feeling of the people of Winnipeg is along this line. If 3,000 or 4,000 horse power can be developed there it would be a great benefit to the city. I would ask the minister to give this matter serious consideration within the next two or three weeks, and probably when the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) returns, the matter can be discussed at greater length.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Last year my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) estimated that the contractors would do $250,000 worth of work this year.

Mr. McCREARY. I hoped so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If they have only done $30,000 worth of work in the last three years, their attempt to perform the contract does not amount to very much. Is there any difficulty about dealing with this matter? Does not this contract contain the usual provision that if the contractors do not make satisfactory progress the work can be taken over by the government. I would be the last one to suggest that any harsh measures should be taken with contractors who made a mistake in the amount of their estimate, but at the same time I do not see any sense in waiting for these gentlemen to find that at the end of three years they have only accomplished $30,000 worth of work. At that rate it would take, I suppose, fifteen years to finish the contract. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) speaks of floods delaying the work, but I would hardly think that the floods have been so continuous for three years that only $30,000 worth of work could be done. When did the contractors come to the conclusion that this was a losing work and have they made any representations to the department? I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) when he says that the government should deal with this work efficiently and expeditiously. I do not know whether the scheme which he mentions is a scheme which the government should embark in, but certainly something should be done one way or the other. I agree with those gentlemen who say that the government ought to treat the contractors fairly, and perhaps release them from their contract on equitable terms if they are not in a position to carry it on. I agree also as to the inadvisability of making any such change in material as has been suggested, because there is no information before the House from the minister or from his officers which would justify it. In any event it would involve the necessity of a new contract being let, so that everybody in the Dominion who wished to do so would be at liberty to tender for this work. Perhaps the minister would inform us whether this contract contains the usual clause, and whether the contractors have made any excuse for allowing three years to elapse without doing any more than what may be fairly considered as trifling.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is only fair to the contractors to say that the contract was entered into in July, 1900, the price being $469,000. If, as the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says, the price was too low, then it must be still lower now considering the increased cost of wages and material in the meantime. The plans were not placed in the hands of the contractors until the fall of 1900, so that they have not been three years at the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I admit that; it is three years next October.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were then made asking for a change, but these representations were refused and that caused further delay. It was my intention to ask the chief engineer to go there and make a personal report, but with the various works going on and his attendance here in parliament, it has been found impossible for him to get away. It is also true that the secretary of the Canadian Pacific Railway has made an official proposition to the department, that if a change could be made in the work they would contribute to the cost. It may be of not only local but national interest that such a change should be made. I think the best thing for me to do is to ask the chief engineer to go there and make a full report on all these matters. We have also received a petition from the board of trade or the city council of Winnipeg, I forget which, with regard to the development of water power at these rapids. I do not believe myself, that this would increase the cost, but if it did we would have to consider whether such an income could be derived as would compensate us for that increased cost. At any rate, in view of the representations made to us by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, it would be well worth while to see how much of the cost they would be willing to contribute if the proposed change were made. I understand from the officers of the department that the representations as to changing from concrete to stone were made by a petition from the citizens of that district. There is a difference of opinion among the engineers, both of the Public Works Department and the Department of Railways and Canals, in regard to the matter. My own opinion is that good concrete properly put up is under most conditions better than stone; in other cases stone is better. To overcome the effect of great changes of temperature, I think the concrete should be made in blocks so as to allow for contraction and expansion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I observe that some criticism was offered last year in regard to the quality of the stone. I know nothing about that; but I think the minister has this matter entirely in his own hands. The contract in question must contain the provision which is in all government contracts, giving the government power to take over the work if it is not proceeded with, in the opinion of the engineer, with sufficient expedition to ensure its completion within the time fixed by the contract. We know that it has not been proceeded with with any such expedition; it has not been proceeded with at all, except so far as $30,000 may be compared with $469,000. This power which the government has is not, of course, to be exercised harshly or tyrannically; but it is to be exercised in such a way as to protect the public interest by enabling the work to be done within the time fixed by the contract. The department may take the work out of the hands of the contractors, and if they do, they should deal with the contractors fairly under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I may say, in answer to the hon. leader of the opposition, that the reason I did not exercise the right which the government undoubtedly have to take the contract from the Messrs. Kelly Brothers, was that every time we wrote to them and warned them that they were not carrying out the work, they invariably answered that they would go on with it. They were men of reputation, who had carried out very large works elsewhere, and it was pretty difficult for the department to say to such men : We have no confidence in you. The last time I told them very firmly that I could not grant the changes which they asked for, and I added that if they would not go on with the work I would cancel the contract immediately. Then Mr. Kelly told me that even if he lost $100,000, he would carry out the work. His words to me were : 'I have never failed to carry out a contract yet, and I will carry out this one.' The hon. minister says that since I left office the department has received an intimation from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they will contribute towards the work if certain changes are made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have a proposition in writing.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I understand that if that proposition is accepted by the government, new tenders will be asked, because it will be a new work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. As to changing from concrete to stone, I do not know whether I correctly understood the hon. minister to say that there was a difference of opinion on the subject in the Department of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said among the engineers. The hon. gentleman must know from his experience that engineers differ in opinion as between stone and concrete ; but I said that in my own experience good concrete, if properly put in, was better under certain conditions than stone.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not think that any engineer will say that stone is better than concrete ; it cannot be maintained. I know the way in which petitions are got up. The truth is, the contractor is in a hole, and if my hon. friend can arrange with him by paying him what he has spent, say $25,000 or $30,000, and ask for new tenders on the new proposition which he has before him, I suppose it would be the best thing that could be done. That work is of great importance. If the department obliges the contractor to go on, it will take him years to do the work, and he will be losing money all the time. Therefore, I think it will be better to arrange with him. The minister has in the department engineers in whom I have full confidence, and when he has a report signed by his engineers I have no fear.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that this item is in a very unsatisfactory position. When we approached it this evening, I understood the minister to say that it was intended to go on with this work. But unless we act very harshly with these contractors, we are not going to force them to execute their contract. I think it is evident that we are not going to hold the contractors to the execution of their contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that it was not my intention to make them carry out the contract.

Mr. MONK. When the item was first broached, the minister said that it was in order to carry out these works, that there was a contract, but that not much progress had been made, because difficulties had arisen. But I do not think there is any doubt that we are not going to force these contractors to carry out the work as undertaken. The remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), have led me to believe, since the government had the proposition of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company before them, and it would be possible to construct these works in such a way as to make them of assistance in developing power for the city of Winnipeg, that it would be desirable to construct them that way. For my part, if that were done, and if the arrangement proposed by these parties were put into shape, I would have much more pleasure in supporting this item. We are now voting more or less in the dark, because it is evident that these men are not going to be held to their contract, unless they are allowed to substitute inferior material, and the whole affair is in a state of uncertainty.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman has just stated that he will not allow any change any more than I did. His information is that the contractors are not going on with the work and he will try to arrange with them by paying them just what is due, and then ask for new tenders, owing to the proposition which was submitted to him by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I had no intention of doing anything else than go on with the contract as it is, but in view of the statements made here and the proposition submitted by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the department, hon. gentlemen will admit that it is quite proper to ask the engineers of the department to make a report.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would once more suggest that the hon. minister should try to arrange with the contractor as soon as possible so that before the session is over, a vote may be put in the estimates and new tenders asked for, and the work done as soon as possible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer cannot go himself, but we have gentlemen in the department who might take up all the propositions and make a report in a week or two.. Then I could ask the contractor either to go on with the work or, if any change is proposed, to come to some reasonable arrangement.

Mr. MONK. I did not suggest that the contractors should be paid, but that they should be relieved from this prospective loss of a very large amount.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is what I understood.

Mr. MONK. Have the contractors themselves made any proposition to be relieved from the performance of their contract without, of course, receiving any additional indemnity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have received no proposition. The last action of the department was notifying them of their delay and urging them to go on with their contract.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. If the contractors do not go on with their contract, as it is, new tenders will be asked ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. PUTTEE. We are in the same position to-night as we were in last year when this item was up, and I am afraid that we will be in the same position next year. It looks as if the contractors had never made an honest attempt to complete the work. Why there should be a mistake, I cannot understand, because tenders were called for twice, and when they found they could not do the work, without even making a fair start at it, there must have been something more than a mistake. As regards the changing from concrete to stone, the hon. minister says that petitions came from Winnipeg for that change, but these were based on the fact that there is native stone available, and the petitioners asked the department to decide whether a change could be made without detriment to the work. What the city of Winnipeg wants is not that the specification should be changed, but that the work should be proceeded with. They do not want to injure the contractor, but the work should not be held back when he is altogether in fault.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only promise I can make is that one I have made. I will take the best talent I have in the department and have a report made before the session closes.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there is an offer from the Canadian Pacific Railway and the city as well, and I would suggest that this power should not be allowed to fall into the hands of a private individual or even the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The proposition of the Canadian Pacific Railway is not to get the power, but propose that if certain changes are made, they will contribute to the cost.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. In answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg, I may say that I never hinted that a mistake was made. I only said that the Kelly's had tendered too low. They never said that they had made a mistake in their specifications or in any part of their tender.

Mr. LENNOX. It appears to me that it would be better to settle with the contractors in default before undertaking the larger scheme. If you send out an engineer and have it understood that you are abandoning the original scheme, then you will find that the government, instead of the contractor, will be in the position of having made default. The contractor will then say : I have expended $30,000, and I have a large quantity of plant and material on the ground, and if the government is going to take this matter out of my hands, I will be entitled to compensation. The minister should at once notify these men to proceed with their contract and put them in default before entertaining any of these larger propositions suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk and others. Otherwise they will find that, great as is the difficulty, we are in at present, still greater difficulties will surround us.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. minister will find when he visits Winnipeg that the question of improving the Red river to overcome the obstruction at St. Andrew's Rapids is a very live question. The object is to allow boats to go up into Lake Winnipeg and the tributaries of the lake and other water courses, and in that way improve transportation and allow supplies to come down at reasonable freight rates.

An hon. MEMBER. And fuel.

Mr. KEMP. Yes. The people of Winnipeg feel it is a serious matter that the work has not been gone on with. They have even gone so far as to say that the railways were, to some extent, responsible for the delay in carying out this work. I am not responsible for that statement, but I have heard it made. These contractors, it has been said, will neither give up their contract nor go on with the work. Is not the contract with the government the same as a contract with a private individual or an ordinary corporation ? Surely the government has the means of forcing them to do one thing or the other. It has been said that materials have advanced very much since the contract has been made and the contracts could not be made now at as low a price as at the time the contract was entered into. Have the government agreed to let the contractors off ? I do not see why the government should act as philanthrophists in dealing with these contractors who are now in default. At any rate, I hope the minister will see that this matter is settled at an early day, and that in some way the works are gone on with. Even if this work is not heard so much of here, the hon. minister will find when he visits Winnipeg that this question is one of the liveliest questions in the west, and the work one of the most important in the country. I hope that next session, whoever has the honour of occupying the position of Minister of Public Works, will be able to tell us that the thing has been cleaned up and that the work is proceeding as fast as possible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall make every effort to gain that end.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any sureties ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only surety is the deposit of $50,000. That is the usual way of letting these contracts.

Transportation facilities—Montreal harbour (lower division) — improvements below St. Mary's current, $243,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the work under contract.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When does the hon. minister expect that the contractor will be through his work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are taking a vote for the full amount necessary to complete the work. It is expected that the work will be completed before the end of the next fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The contractor is a little behind time, of course.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The work was to have been completed by July or August, if I remember aright.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. According to the contract, it was to be completed on the 25th December last.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And it will not be completed before the beginning of next season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the opinion of the chief engineer.

Mr. MONK. Was not some change made in regard to the material to be used ? Was not one kind of wood substituted for another with the consent of the department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. The chief engineer tells me that the only change made was that the contractor was allowed to use a certain amount of hemlock instead of spruce in the foundations —under water.

Mr. MONK. How many thousand feet ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Between two and three hundred thousand feet. The specifications, as I understand it, call for spruce, and hemlock is allowed to be used.

Mr. MONK. Was it not more than five hundred thousand feet ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that it was between two and three hundred thousand feet.

Mr. MONK. Was there any change in the price ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer and the department did not consider there was any difference in the value.

Mr. MONK. The question did not come up at all then ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was before my time. I take the information given by the chief engineer, who tells me that the report made to the minister was that the price was the same.

Mr. MONK. Is it true that hemlock was substituted for spruce for all the work under water ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that it was not.

Mr. MONK. Is there any report in the department on that point ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think there is.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, there is.

Mr. MONK. There is a report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that he does not remember any report, but I will make a memorandum of it, and if there are reports, they will be brought down.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am responsible for the change the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) refers to. The contractor came to the department and stated that it was impossible for him to obtain all the spruce that was necessary to carry on the work. I consulted the resident engineer and he made the report to me that hemlock was just as good as spruce. I consulted the chief engineer and he told me the same thing. I do not remember whether there is a written report from him, but I think there is. If my hon. friend will be good enough to look, he will find that there is one report at least. The change was made only for the interior of the foundation, what I may call the cross section. As hemlock was just as good as spruce and as we were anxious to get the work proceeded with as speedily as possible, I allowed the change. But there is certainly a report.

Mr. MONK. If the hon. minister will allow us to have the report, I shall be glad. I understand that in these works there are very heavy blocks of concrete over the hemlock foundation. Is that the case ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister, in connection with this item if anything has been decided with regard to the dry dock in the vicinity of where this pier is being built, or is that matter still in the same condition as it was a year or two ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No decision has been come to with regard to that matter.

Mr. KIDD. May I ask the minister what is the difference between the price of spruce timber and hemlock ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say from my personal knowledge, but I am told that at Montreal there is no difference in price.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have a subject matter I would like to bring up that is allied to this transportation question; I refer to the improvements in Summerside harbour that were started some three or four years ago.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid we cannot take up Summerside harbour.

Mr. LEFURGEY. But there is no other item in the estimates on which I could bring it up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There will be an item, and my hon. friend will have an opportunity of discussing Summerside harbour when I will be in a better position to give him information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is perfectly in order for my hon. friend to discuss the absence of an item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was suggesting that I would be in a much better position to give him information when the supplementaries come down. I know what he refers to, it is one of these unfortunate contracts.

Mr. LEFURGEY. At an earlier period of the session the minister promised to bring down the correspondence in connection with this matter; I do not think it has been tabled yet. I would like to have that correspondence down before the item comes up in the supplementaries.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The correspondence I have promised is being prepared, and will be laid on the Table perhaps to-morrow.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Did I understand the minister to say that there will be an item in the supplementary estimates for Summerside breakwater ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is my intention.

Port Colborne—harbour improvements, $142,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This sum is to complete the work under contract at Port Colborne.

Mr. BENNETT. When the work is completed what will be its length and width ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be fifty feet wide and 5,700 feet long, including a head block 100 feet by 60 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. In the original contract, was the width of the structure to be twenty-five feet or fifty feet ? And if there was a change from twenty-five to fifty feet, was that the subject of extras, or was there a new contract for the additional work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The original specifications were for a width of twenty-five feet. It was found that the work would be too light, and it was made fifty feet. No new tenders were asked for. The price was arranged with the present contractor.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the cost of the additional twenty-five feet in width ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In round numbers, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand, then, that when it was decided to widen it to an additional twenty-five feet, no tenders were asked for. Was that work performed by the original contractor, and how and upon what terms was the basis of payment arrived at ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An agreement was entered into between the department and the original contractors.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the additional work crib or pile work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was crib work, simply widened to fifty feet. The chief engineer informs me that it was the same kind of work, only made double width. The original contract price was $395,000; after the widening was called for the price was $495,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the original work done for a lump sum, or was it done for so much per yard or so much per foot ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The tender was for a lump sum.

Mr. BENNETT. Upon what basis was the widening part of the work done ? Was it so much per yard or so much per foot ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that the extra amount of cribwork was to be done pro rata the price of the original work.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems to me that was a very unfair computation so far as the interests of the public were concerned. As I understand it, the structure for twenty-five feet width had been completed, and after that work had been performed, the minister, without asking for tenders, gave an additional contract for widening the work twenty-five feet more, and the price for the addition was at the same rate as the original contract. As I understand it, this breakwater was to be 5,000 feet in length, running out into the lake. It must be patent that it would cost the contractor a great deal more to build 5,000 feet with a width of twenty-five feet than it would to build an additional twenty-five feet after the first original part of the work was completed. He had all the disadvantages in the first instance of placing his plant in the lake, of driving his piles and sinking his cribs; and in the second instance, he had every facility afforded by having prepared a dock upon which to work. I think the minister himself must give us a better explanation why no tenders were called for, and why the contractor was allowed to exact the same price for the additional twenty-five feet as for the first twenty-five feet.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Let me explain that, my hon. friend the minister is in no way responsible except as being one of my colleagues then. When I was in France, the first contract was signed. Before I left Canada plans had been prepared for a breakwater fifty feet wide. When I was away the plans were reduced to thirty feet wide. If I remember right, four or five hundred feet of that work was performed. When I came back Mr. Coste, represented to me, and the engineers of the department joined with him, that the work would be carried away like a straw if an additional width was not added. We had to make the work solid with stone and all sorts of material. The contractors were not responsible for the plans. They were carrying out the plans upon which they had been invited to tender, but these plans were not the original plans which I had sanctioned before I left here. The plans were reduced to a dangerous degree. My hon. friends, when they go there, will only have to look at the works to find that they have been distorted. They were very nearly being carried away. Parliament was not then sitting. It was not possible for us to ask for tenders because we were in expectation of the works being carried away. I immediately made an arrangement with the contractors as they were the only parties that could carry out the work quickly because they were on the spot with all their plant to do the work that was necessary. Any business man would do what I was obliged to do. It was a case of necessity as there is no doubt that the works would have been carried away. In point of fact the works as they are now will scarcely be able to resist the pressure of the waves. We have been obliged to pay a little more to the contractors than the price of their first contract, but it was a case of necessity. The trouble is that the plans were reduced with the view of economy when they should not have been reduced.

Mr. BENNETT. If I understand the hon. minister correctly a total length of 5,000 feet by a total width of 50 feet is now completed, and if not, will this $142,000 ensure the completion of the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This $142,000 is intended to complete the work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Has the hon. minister's attention been called to the necessity of having another breakwater on the other side of the canal entrance constructed ? The present breakwater and the works of the Department of Railways and Canals will be of no use—I make that statement here and I know I am right—unless there is another breakwater on the other side. The entrance will not be protected and ships will not be able to find anchor there. In point of fact the works of the Department of Railways and Canals have not been proceeded with because the breakwater was not built and the waves are so strong that the works of the Department of Railways and Canals could not stand the pressure from them. Perhaps, before the session is over, the hon. Minister of Public Works might inquire and he will find that what I say now is perfectly right. We want to equip the entrance of our Canadian system of canals. We have, I suppose, received a pretty good lesson. We are not handling very much freight through our canals and unless Port Colborne is equipped it is no use relying on any exchange of trade there, because boats cannot have shelter unless these breakwater works are built, and that without delay. The present breakwater must be considered only as the beginning of the work that has to be carried out.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. Minister of Public Works what is the depth of water at this 5,000 feet face of dock, and furthermore if any applications have been made by any parties for any use of the breakwater there, or has any use been made of that part of the work which has been completed up to date ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is only intended for a breakwater. I do not know that any application has been made for any use of it.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the depth of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From twenty feet down to twelve feet.

Mr. BENNETT. When this work was first launched a few years ago, involving, I think, an outlay between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Railways and Canals, of a sum exceeding very considerably $500,000, it was anticipated that as soon as it was completed applications would be made by private parties for permission to erect elevators on this proposed esplanade or breakwater.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Railways and Canals. It does not apply to this work at all. This is purely a breakwater built by the Department of Public Works and the amount spent there already, I think, is more than the amount mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett). I have not the amount spent by the Department of Railways and Canals, but the grain elevators are proposed to be built on the piers to be constructed by the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BENNETT. Are the piers that are being built by the Department of Railways and Canals opposite this or in a line from it in one direction or another? Unfortunately I have not been at Port Colborne and I am not familiar with the situation there.

Mr. GERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) says that the cost of improving the harbour at Port Colborne, including the work done by the Department of Railways and Canals, would probably exceed $500,000. My recollection is that the statement was made to parliament when these works at Port Colborne were launched was that the cost would be very nearly $2,000,000, and I think before Port Colborne harbour is fully completed, as it must be if the money already expended is to be of any public utility, there will have to be a sum in the neighbourhood of $1,500,000 expended there. The breakwater which is under construction at the present time and which is nearly completed, is a fairly good breakwater. I am not, I may say, absolutely in love with it. There was a mistake made at its inception by starting out to build a breakwater absolutely too narrow to withstand the strain of the waves coming down the whole length of Lake Erie. However, that was remedied by doubling the width. The breakwater now as originally contemplated is nearly completed. As has been said by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) it will not afford the facilities which will be necessary for a complete harbour at Port Colborne until another breakwater is constructed to the east shutting off the waves coming from the eastern part of Lake Erie. The piers which are under construction by the Department of Railways and Canals on which to erect elevators are inside the breakwater, which is already constructed and so far as westerly winds are concerned the present harbour is sheltered and it makes an excellent harbour of refuge from western or south-western storms.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask which direction the breakwater runs in—east and west or north and south?

Mr. GERMAN. The breakwater runs from Sugar Loaf Point out into the lake in a south-easterly direction. The piers which are under construction by the Department of Railways and Canals run directly south, starting from the shore line which is 2,500 or 3,000 feet inside the breakwater. The Canadian Transportation and Storage Company which is asking for incorporation this session, has already applied to the Department of Railways and Canals for the right to construct two elevators each having a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels. The promotors of this company are men of ample means, and they will have at least one elevator constructed at the opening of navigation next spring. The Wolvin Syndicate which is called in Canada the St. Lawrence Terminal Company, has also applied for terminal facilities at Port Colborne. I believe that the expenditure of money at Port Colborne in connection with the completion of our waterways will be a very valuable national expenditure indeed. I think that without a doubt, you will see from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels of the wheat of the west carried to the seaboard next year by way of Port Colborne and the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. That will not be half or perhaps one-quarter of what will eventually go through our Canadian transportation routes. Large quantities will go from Depot Harbour and Midland, and I submit that if we expend $1,500,000 or even $2,000,000 at Port Colborne it will be an expenditure for the general good of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT. The subject is interesting and perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) could tell us the length and width of those piers, and to what extent the work has progressed.

Mr. GERMAN. The piers are each 600 feet long by 200 feet wide. They were constructed by laying concrete walls on each side and the intention was to fill in the vacancy with loose stone that was dredged from the bottom of the harbour; the harbour being deepened from 14 or 18 feet to 21 feet. It has been stated by experts in elevator building that this loose stone would not make a satisfactory foundation for an elevator, and I am told by the Minister of Railways and Canals that he has instructed the contractors to not put any more loose stone in there, and it will be decided very shortly what kind of foundation will be laid in order to allow of the erection of elevators on the piers.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the depth of water at these piers?

Mr. GERMAN. When the work is finished the depth will be 21 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. You have not 21 feet there now ?

Mr. GERMAN. The piers are built on the solid rock. The rock alongside of the piers is blasted and taken out by the dredge. It would be useless to build concrete where the rock is, because the rock is as good a foundation as the concrete. They are building the piers on the rock foundation and all around the piers is deepened to 21 feet or 22 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. What would be the width of the basin formed between these piers and the opposite breakwater ?

Mr. GERMAN. Between the outer end of the piers and the breakwater is 2,500 feet or 3,000 feet which leaves ample room for the largest boats to turn in the basin provided the proper depth of water is afforded.

Mr. SHERRITT. Is it the intention of the government to do any work this year at Grand Bend on the Lake Huron shore ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That matter is under consideration. I can hardly tell the hon. gentleman what may be in the supplementary estimates, but it is under the consideration of the department.

Mr. SHERRITT. Will the minister tell us why this item has been dropped from the estimates ? In 1900, at the time of the election, the government engineer went up there and made a survey and in the estimates for 1901, there was an item of $5,700 inserted for this work. Since that, this item has been dropped out of the estimates altogether, and perhaps the minister can tell us why it has been dropped. I might state that this work would be very useful indeed. The fishermen for ten miles around come and fish at that point as it seems to be the best place for fishing in the district, and the completion of this work would be a great advantage to the fishing community.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only reason the item was dropped was, that in preparing the main estimates for 1903-4, only estimates were included for works under way. I think you will find that there are no new works provided for in these estimates at all, and as this work was not under contract it was left over for consideration the same as all other items of a similar nature.

Mr. SHERRITT. Has it been considered?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is under consideration now.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). In view of what the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has said, might I ask what is the intention of the government with regard to constructing another breakwater at Port Colborne ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is quite impossible for me to make any promise as to what may be done until council decides what shall be put in the estimates.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Is it under the consideration of the department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Sorel deep water wharf, $47,000.

Mr. MORIN. Is this wharf built for the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, or is it built for the public generally ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My information is that it was built for the general public.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The object of this vote, as explained on a previous occasion, seems to have been to create an ocean port at Sorel for the purpose of doing a large export business. I understood, from the remarks of the Prime Minister on this subject last year, that the expenditure was very largely based on the fact that a considerable railway system had been developed in the vicinity of Sorel. Would the hon. Minister of Public Works tell us what the railway situation there is at the present time and to what extent it warrants a very large expenditure at this particular point for the purpose indicated.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no doubt that the building of this wharf was to provide deep water accommodation at that port. I believe the depth of water at this point is now thirty feet. I understand that the railway system on which Sorel depended so much has been somewhat unfortunate; but I am informed that it is under operation again. As to what the volume of trade will be, I am quite unable to say. I suppose there could not have been any tonnage there previous to this accommodation being furnished. Whether it will meet the expectation of those who advocate it, I am unable to say.

Mr. KEMP. It looks as though from a very small beginning, we were in for a pretty large expenditure on this matter. Last year, in answer to some inquiries which I made in regard to it, the Prime Minister stated that $25,000 was first voted for this work. The papers which have been brought down and laid on the Table of the House, show that the engineer of the department estimated that it would take $935,000 to carry out the various works for which petitions had been handed to the government. The Prime Minister stated that the appropriation had been decided upon when the Minister of Public Works was absent from the city. As the amount voted was not sufficient, $100,000 was asked for and voted, and the Prime Minister stated that it would doubtless cost $150,000 or $175,000 to complete this work. He said :

But railways are taking the place of waterways, and two railways are now converging at Sorel, the South Shore which has been constructed from Montreal to Sorel and beyond Sorel to Nicolet, and will be completed this year probably to Lotbinière. There is the United Counties Railway also, which became the Rutland Railway, and which I believe now belongs to the New York Central, and it comes from the New York Central Railway system at Lake Champlain to the town of Sorel.

The papers which have been brought down show that the petitioners who were influential in getting the government to start this work were the United Counties Railway and the bank of St. Hyacinthe. The petition of the United Counties Railway in one place says :

Your government will readily understand that, in order to induce steamers to dock at Sorel, large inducements will have to be given to them by the line of railway carrying the freight to that point, which will be a heavy charge upon this railway, and for this reason, among others, your petitioners confidently appeal to your government for support in their undertaking.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the date of that petition ?

Mr. KEMP. The letter transmitting it is dated Montreal, December 22, 1899, and is signed by Mr. J. N. Greenshields. The petition further says :

This road's plans are entirely contingent upon the completion of the dock, elevator and opening of the channel, and the building of several miles of railway leading to the docks, on or before the month of June of next year, and this company is prepared to complete such work as it may be properly expected to assume on or before that date, and confidently expects that your government, in the general interests of the country, and the development of its carrying trade, will accede to the requests of the present memorial.

The acting chief engineer of the department, Mr. Eugene D. Lafleur, made a report on the subject, which I will read in order that we may have an intelligent idea of what is before us :

Department of Public Works of Canada,
Chief Engineer's Office,
Ottawa, January 10, 1900.

Sir,—With reference to file No. 208,734, being an application from Mr. J. N. Greenshields, on behalf of the United Counties Railway, for the construction of deep water terminal facilities at Sorel, I have the honour to state that a certain portion of the ground to be occupied by the improvements in question has already been surveyed by Mr. Assistant Engineer F. W. Cowie, and that judging from the estimate of the cost of the works then proposed, which only consisted of 1,000 feet of wharfing instead of the 2,000 feet applied for, the estimated cost of the works now required cannot be placed at a less figure than $935,000, as follows :—

Dredging an area 800 feet wide by 25,000 feet in length, an average depth of 18 feet to 27½ feet at extreme low water..	$255,000
Cribwork and sheds..	430,000
Elevator of 1,000,000 bushels capacity..	250,000

If the department decides to undertake this work it will of course be necessary to have a complete survey made, in order that the above estimate may be revised, especially as far as the dredging is concerned.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) EUGENE D. LAFLEUR,
Acting Chief Engineer.

The Secretary,
Department of Public Works.

Then, there is a petition from the city council of St. Hyacinthe and a petition from the Bank of St. Hyacinthe. There is a further report from the acting engineer, dated Ottawa, April 23, 1900, going into the matter more minutely. For, the dock at Sorel, which cost within about $5,000 of the estimate made by Mr. Lafleur, it suggests three sites. The site which he recommends would cost $260,330. There is nothing in these reports with reference to elevator facilities or dredging a channel to the dock; but it must be assumed that if the government built the dock, they would have to provide a channel which would enable deep water steamers to reach the dock. So that what I said at the outset is apparently, that we are in for a tremendous expenditure for this work; and for my part, I do not see what benefit it will be to the country. When this matter was up before, it was said that these three railways converged at Sorel. But one of them only runs occasionally and sometimes does not run at all, and the statement of the Prime Minister about one of them becoming a part of the New York Central Railway was rather mythical and visionary; nothing has come of it. We have spent a good deal of money there, but I do not see what is the use of going on with the work. Sorel will never be able to compete as an ocean port with Quebec or Montreal. It is a river port and should have been left as such, and for my part I do not see why it should be necessary to throw away the resources of the country in an attempt to make it an ocean port.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will see that the total cost is $273,500, and the work is almost complete. What I am asking now is for $40,000 to pay the balance of the contract in full, so that whatever difference of opinion there may be as to the value of the work, it is now nearly completed and we have to pay for it.

Mr. MONK. Is this for a wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. GALLERY. Will the hon. minister tell us whether, after all the money we have spent to improve the St. Lawrence route, the insurance rates have been reduced ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say whether any reduction has been made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The rates have been very much decreased this year. The Canadian Pacific Railway fleet have obtained rates just as good as those in any other American port.

Mr. GALLERY. And how is it that the Grand Trunk Railway can ship grain from Portland, 300 miles further than from Montreal, and cheaper than they can send it down the St. Lawrence ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. One reason is that we have no proper equipment in Montreal. The Grand Trunk Railway Company has an old elevator there and the Canadian Pacific Railway has two, but they are not modern elevators. The harbour commissioners are now building an elevator. Not only had we no modern elevators, but we had not handling facilities, and in fact we were not in it at all. I think that the rates this year will be as favourable as those at American ports. My hon. friend must not forget that perhaps competition was not as keen as it might have been between the different companies, but now that the Canadian Pacific Railway can make cheap rates from west to east, other companies will follow suit. We must not forget also that grain is only a small portion of a steamer's cargo. A steamer takes as a rule about 50,000 bushels, so that if there are other competing trades as well, navigation companies will be in a condition to give better rates.

Mr. GALLERY. When we have thirty feet in the channel from Montreal to Quebec, how is it that there are so many accidents ? Is the pilotage system bad or what is wrong ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman will find that last season there were very few accidents between Quebec and Montreal. The most of them were below Quebec. An accident happened to a man-of-war, but that ship grounded at a spot where the channel was 1,500 feet wide with fifty feet depth of water through a mistake of the pilot. Accidents of that kind will occur, but you cannot charge them against the St. Lawrence route. A week or two ago there was an accident because the buoys were either misplaced or displaced, and the pilot going between two buoys thought he was perfectly safe. Accidents like that cannot be explained, but there were no accidents last year between Quebec and Montreal worth mentioning. The channel is in good shape now. We have thirty feet of water all along the route at this period of the year, but after the 15th of September, when the water is low, there will not be that depth. In a year or two, however, we will have that depth all through the season, and the ship channel is in better shape than it ever was—better buoys and better lighted.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Hon. gentlemen are wandering away from the item which is for the construction of a wharf at Sorel.

Mr. KEMP. This item speaks of a wharf, but I understood the hon. minister to say that it includes the dredging of the channel Is it for both ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract is for the erection of a wharf but it includes dredging of the approach to the wharf.

Mr. KEMP. The report of the engineer of the department contemplates an expenditure of $935,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is all wrong. The total cost is $273,000, and this is to pay $47,000 which is the balance due to contractors.

Mr. KEMP. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to build a wharf 700 feet long, forty-six feet high, and forty feet wide at the base, and with thirty feet of water at low tide, together with 600 feet of trestle work.

Mr. KEMP. This report contemplates an expenditure of $935,000, and the intention was to make Sorel an ocean port. Will this expenditure, which the hon. minister has mentioned, make Sorel a port for ocean vessels of the capacity of those which go to Montreal ? If that be the case, how can the minister account for this estimate of $935,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never heard before of that estimate. We have to deal with the plan adopted and not with estimates which often vary.

Mr. KEMP. According to this report, the work should cost $900,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is an old report and was never acted upon.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. gentleman will not say that when the money is expended and the contract completed, we shall have an ocean port for large vessels.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not see that there is any doubt about it. There will be thirty feet of water and probably the largest vessels can stop there. I am told that when this is finished, there will be 1,300 feet of wharfage, which will give facilities for two of the largest boats.

Mr. KEMP. Who will build the elevator referred to in the report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is another question.

Mr. KEMP. Are there any prospects of using the port for ocean vessels and utilizing the railways that were referred to ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The local people seem to think that trade will come there.

Mr. KEMP. What does the hon. minister think ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The minister may be like my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) perhaps, not a very good authority, but optimistic, with great confidence in Canada and with great hope that all these ports will be successful in the near future.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No doubt, when this matter was put before the House by the Prime Minister last session it was represented to be in somewhat different shape from that in which the Minister of Public Works finds it to-night. The Prime Minister said :

Now, the intention is to make Sorel an ocean port.

And, at the conclusion of his remarks he says :

This——

That is, this expenditure——

—is not only for Sorel but it is part of the system to equip the harbours of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec. I am sure that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has no doubt whatever that before many years there will be enough trade coming from Ontario and the west to supply all those harbours, of which Sorel is one.

Does the hon. Minister of Public Works desire to commit us to a scheme of that kind to-night ? Is it not plain that Montreal and Quebec are not getting one-tenth of the trade they ought to have; and, while that state of affairs exists, are we to equip this third ocean port on the St. Lawrence without the slightest probability so far as any one can see of its being of any use for the purpose within the lifetime of any of us ? This vote may be to pay the contractors, but what is the intention of the government with regard to the project itself? My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp) reasonably asks : Who is going to build the elevator, which must be built if Sorel is to do the trade of the west along with or instead of Montreal or Quebec ? Does the government commit itself to the project of establishing Sorel as a port to do the grain business of the west ? One would suppose that that was so absolutely visionary that the hon. minister would not commit himself to it. Or, perhaps, he will do so. This extensive work that is being done seems altogether too large for local traffic, but entirely inadequate, without additional enormous expenditure in the future, for doing any of this proposed grain business from the west. This whole expenditure of a quarter of a million of dollars seems based upon the theory that these railways are to be part of a very important system, but that portion of the scheme seems to have absolutely broken down. In any case, the railway system with which it is proposed to connect Sorel, from what I can gather from the debate of last year, would direct the grain trade toward New York instead of Sorel. Of course, I do not speak by the book with regard to that. I think that before we pass this item the Minister of Public Works ought to be frank with the House and tell us whether he thinks it is a justifiable expenditure for the purposes of local traffic; or, if there is something more than that, and, if as the Prime Minister stated last year, this is to be an ocean port to take the grain trade of the west, where is our expenditure to stop, and what reasonable prospect is there in the mind of any of us that Sorel can ever compete with Montreal or Quebec, and what reason is there it should be required to do so ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a considerable expenditure for a wharf for local trade. But, of course, it has created an ocean port, if that is the term to apply to a port where you have a depth of thirty feet of water. As to the expectations formed, as my hon. friend has pointed out, that a great railway system, as was represented by the government, would do so much, it seems to have met with some mishap and the prospect is not so bright for the grain trade as it appeared at that time. The contract was entered into on June 25, 1901, and the work has been almost completed. No matter what my views may be as to the future prospects of Sorel, I think that there can be no doubt that we are called upon to pay the contractors the amount due. I am not in position to say what the future of this railway system, concerning which such representations were made to the government, may be. But, of course, we hope for the best.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to amount to this—that the hon. minister thinks there is not very much in this, but we are committed to it to the extent of $240,000, and we must pay a debt which the government contracted without very much justification. I am very sorry indeed that the right hon. the Prime Minister is not able to be here to-night. I am not complaining of that, because I know we cannot expect him to be here always. But I do think the hon. Minister of Public Works had better let the item stand until the Prime Minister is here, and we can then have some explanation from him, for, no doubt, he is more familiar with the matter than the Minister of Public Works is. I think it must be pretty apparent that the position the right hon. Prime Minister took last year is not a very strong one, to say the least. But he may be able to give us some explanation which my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works does seem to be able to give. But I think it is not unreasonable to ask that the item be allowed to stand in the meantime. Of course, if we are to say that every place on the St. Lawrence where you get thirty feet of water is to be equipped as an ocean port, and a quarter of a million, or a million or two million dollars must be spent there, we will all agree that that is a pretty plain proposition, but I do not know how far the Minister of Public Works would commend it as a sensible or a reasonable proposition. And there does not seem to be much in the proposition with regard to Sorel, that goes beyond that. I am willing to expend public money on Sorel, or anywhere else, if it is in the interest of the country to do so. But to expend a quarter of a million dollars there under present circumstances is really too absurd for us to discuss. We have got to decide what are to be the great ocean ports for our grain trade from the west, and it is our duty to equip them in order to keep that trade of our own country for the ports of our own country. But it seems to me that we are only handicapping our interests if, while leaving Montreal and Quebec and other ports which have a prospect of getting this trade, comparatively unequipped, we are to spend money in projects of this kind which have not any reasonable foundation, and which depend for any possibility of success upon schemes with regard to railways which have not had any success at all, and which have no probability or possibility of success except in the minds of certain railway promoters. I do not want to put this matter too strongly; but I have not heard anything from my hon. friend which convinces me that my view is a wrong one. It seems to me this sum is altogether too large to be expended at this place, unless you propose to equip it as an ocean port; and how can you justify the project of equipping it as an ocean port for the grain trade of the west, in view of the situation as it has developed there? Under these circumstances does the Minister of Public Works not think that some better explanation is due to the House before we should be called upon to vote this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps the proposition of the leader of the opposition is a reasonable one. I have only to say that we have spent a great deal of the time of the session discussing this question on various occasions. Perhaps the Prime Minister will make a statement and answer any question in regard to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We know that the hon. gentleman has had a good deal of discussion over his estimates, but I want to remind him that to-night we have been voting money at the rate of $5,000 a minute, according to a calculation I made a short time ago. So, for once in his life, he ought to be satisfied with the progress which has been made. Perhaps the views which I have presented to him may strike him as reasonable.

Mr. MONK. Before we leave that item, I would like to ask the minister if he would state the amounts that have been paid to these contractors since they signed that contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The amounts paid up to the 30th of September, were $178,788.81. The total amount that will be paid up to the 30th of June will be $226,500. There remains a balance of $47,000. Does the leader of the opposition want this item to stand?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want to interfere with any discussion that might affect the disposal of the item. If any hon. gentleman has anything to say about the item he might go on and say it. But I would like it to stand eventually in order that we may get some explanation from the Prime Minister of the situation from his standpoint.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let it stand.

Item allowed to stand.

St. Joseph, Lake Huron—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. McEWEN. Is it the intention of the minister to spend that money on this wharf this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the item is voted and we undertake to complete the work, it will probably be expended this year. The question to be decided is whether the work should be abandoned or whether the $5,000 now asked for should be voted and spent. The ex-Minister of Public Works mentioned the other night, when some objection was taken to the item, that he would look into the matter and that he had recommended the work to be gone on with. But now some exception is taken as to the value of the work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. When the item came before the House last year I pledged myself not to go on with the work without being there. In my absence, during the Paris exposition, some gentlemen from Montreal and St. Joseph came to Ottawa on a deputation to the Prime Minister, who promised them to look carefully into this question. He ordered a survey, as he was replacing me to a large extent in the department, so far as the province of Quebec was concerned. A survey had been made when I came back. I also pledged myself to look into the question and I did so. After the session was over last year I went to St. Joseph and found out what perhaps I might have found by looking at the map, that between Goderich and Sarnia there are thirty miles of coast without any wharf, except at Bayfield, around which there is scarcely any water. This is a wharf that has not been used very much in the past because there has been no available depth of water. But, having ascertained these facts I made up my mind that the work would be a most useful one, not to St. Joseph alone, but to the surrounding population that would be put in a position to trade with that point. There are different interests, I know, which are opposed to the building of this work. Those who have interests in the villages behind are naturally opposed to the building of a wharf there. Human nature is the same everywhere in the world. I know some of our friends have stores and interests at the station and they are opposed to the building of a wharf. A Minister of the Crown has not to look at these small interests. He has to look at the general interests. I made up my mind that it would be a good thing to have a wharf between Sarnia and Goderich. I ordered a survey, Mr. Corriveau, a well known and energetic engineer, made the survey. His report is in the department and it has been confirmed by Mr. Roy, who was then inspector general of public works. The work was to cost a little over $5,000. Under these conditions I ordered the work to be proceeded with. I am very much surprised to hear that it will cost $15,000. I understand there have been accidents. I entrusted the work to Mr. Sing, one of the most experienced engineers in the service of the department. I do not exactly remember the name of the foreman, but Mr. Sing was in charge. I understand that the work, not being completed, was partly carried away by the waves. That, of course has contributed to the increased cost of the work. St. Joseph is a little French village. It is a little French spot. There have always been little French spots over this Canadian land of ours. There are some industries already there. It is not a large village, but it is a very nice place, very picturesque and very nicely located indeed. I think that the building of a wharf would be a source of development and progress. It will serve not only the village of St. Joseph, but the population around. I would be sorry to see the work abandoned. It has cost a great deal more than I expected it would cost, because the estimate which was in my hands when the work was started was that the cost would be a little over $5,000. Part of the money is spent and it seems to me that the work should be carried out. Of course my hon. friend has now charge of the Department of Public Works, and if he believes the work should be abandoned it is his right to abandon it.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the government to allow this matter to stand over for another year. You have heard what the late Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has said about this village. These men who have this village in charge talk very large; in fact, very much larger than they will ever do. I do not wish to say anything against them but I would like this item to be left over for another year to see if they will carry out their undertakings. They have not yet established a manufactory of any kind or any other thing that would require a wharf. I would be the first one to assist them in getting it if there was any necessity for it, but there is not a single commodity of product there to be brought in or sent out. There is not a manufactory of any kind that is running. They have a sawmill and a number of other buildings. It is true that they have a hotel building 150 feet by 150 feet, but it is there high and dry and there is nothing for it to do. As to the wharf there has been $10,000 spent and I am very sorry to say that the money has been unwisely spent. There are seven or eight cribs on the shore and one crib in two or three feet of water and that is the whole result of the expenditure of $10,000. I know whereof I speak, as I have been there and have seen it. When I was there Mr. Cantin, the promoter of the village, told me that there had been 200 or 300 cords of stone gathered up along the shore but when I looked along the shore I could see no stone gathered up. There is a quantity of timber which has not been fixed up. In the meantime I think the government should allow the matter to remain in abeyance for another year so as to see if the promoters of this village will go on with their undertakings. If they do so, and if they show that they mean business I will be the first one to help them. But, under the present circumstances, I could not approve of this expenditure because nine out of ten of my constituents believe that the money has been unwisely expended.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Public Works will allow me to say that there has been a strong company formed to purchase the different properties and works that were initiated a couple of years ago by Mr. Cantin. I know the men in Montreal who are in this company and they are very substantial men. One of them is at the head of the very well known firm of Lamontagne & Company, one of the very largest firms in Montreal. The company that has been formed to develop the little village that was started two or three years, is a substantial company.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it not an American company?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. No, it is a Canadian company, mostly composed of French Canadians.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a work of encouragement?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is no reason why they should not be encouraged. They are good people when they are working for the development of the country, and it seems to me that the province of Ontario which has been losing population should not prevent French Canadians from settling there. I think if I appeal on this ground to my hon. friends on both sides of the House my voice will be heard with a certain amount of sympathy. I would appeal to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McEwen). These people will become his best electors. I would invite him to withdraw his objection to the work. He says that he will wait and see what these people will do. The way to help them is to give them a wharf. If you do not give them the means of communication they might not carry out as successfully as they expect the work they have undertaken. The work has been undertaken. An accident has happened. This is not the first wharf in a difficult place where an accident has happened. Other works have been carried away but have been built all the same. Under the circumstances, I think that my hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) would be wise in withdrawing his objection. Of course the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is responsible for the administration of his department, but I am giving my advice to the best of my knowledge, and it seems to me that the House should feel kindly towards those who have invested their money there. A big hotel was built there at a cost of $250,000 I am told, but it was a failure. There are two or three small factories, but I grant they are not big.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the bricks they were to manufacture, and that they were to ship to Chicago.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They are manufacturing bricks there now.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they sending them to Chicago ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They will when they have a wharf. There is no wharf between Sarnia and Goderich, a distance of thirty miles, except at Bayfield, where there is no water. It seems to me that the House should not hesitate to spend this small sum of money.

Mr. McEWEN. I would have raised my voice against this vote last year, only I never dreamt, and no one in that part of the country ever dreamt, that when the Hon. Mr. Tarte went up there and saw the place he would spend the money. The hon. gentleman promised to come my way and we would go out together and see it, but instead of that he went by way of Parkhill and he was there only two hours and we never saw a sight of him. The great majority of even the French people who are there never asked for this money. It is true that the people who put money into that scheme have lost their money and will never see a cent of it again. Mr. Cantin has a peculiar way with him and he seems to succeed in making people give their money to put into enterprises that could never produce a cent. What surprises me is that a man of his kind should be able to mislead this government into spending money where there is no need for it at the present time or for years to come, any more than there is any need of building a wharf on the top of a mountain. If this wharf is built it will be built at the foot of a hill where there is no way to get at it unless you buy land from some one, unless there will be a road built through a gulch that is a very hard place to get at. In the meantime they make the road through somebody's land, and they get around to it in that way, but where this dock is being built there is a hill about fifty feet high. It is not quite straight up, but nearly so, and it will be very hard to get at it suppose the dock is built. With all due regard to the engineers, $5,000 is not worth anything to build a wharf there.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. So far as the hill is concerned my hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) knows that it is an easy thing to have a slanting road there. I went down the hill myself and there is already a road there. My hon. friend has reproached me for not having called on him when I went there.

Mr. McEWEN. You promised to.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I will tell my reason frankly to the House.

Mr. McEWEN. I want to hear it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) showed himself very favourable to the work when he was talking to these men.

Mr. McEWEN. To what men.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, to Mr. Cantin and others and my hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) had written to me that he was not favourable to it. I always deal straight with men.

Mr. McEWEN. Did you deal straight with me when you did not come to see me as you promised ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) had written to me that he did not like the work while he had said to other people that he was favourable to the work, and under those circumstances I made up my mind to judge for myself, what any other minister would have done. Let us deal frankly and fairly between man and man. I fully made up my mind to judge for myself. My hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) moreover, had been elected as an independent member of the House against Mr. MacMillan, an old Liberal that we all respected here. My hon. friend (Mr. McEwen) was not looked upon as a straight supporter of the government. He was an independent member of parliament, having been elected against a strong Liberal, who sat for years in this House. Under the circumstances I thought that without meaning offence to the hon. gentleman, I was justified in going there as I had pledged myself to the House I would, and see for myself. The site of the wharf has been chosen with the greatest care, and it is easy indeed to get access to it. A big storm has carried away part of the work and it has increased the cost. I repeat that a strong company has been formed ; the little village has been divided into lots; there are two or three small factories; there is a brick factory; there is a pipe organ factory; I grant it is not a large place, but we have built wharfs in other parts of the country in places that were not very large.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This man is no doubt a good deal of the character the hon. gentleman (Mr. McEwen) spoke of. He seems to be able to live by his wits and to induce people to put money in schemes that have little foundation. I do not know him myself or anything about him except what I have heard in connection with this matter. He deceived a great many people into putting money into this scheme. It is stated now that a good many substantial people have taken hold of the work, and I think we might probably take the vote and spend it on the conditions as to whether they are going on to develop this place and the work will help to do so. Now that we have spent so much money we might go on.

Mr. SPROULE. And aid him to deceive others.

Mr. McEWEN. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says that I was elected as an independent. I wish to deny that statement in toto. I wish to say that the speech which I made at Seaforth the day of the nomination did not say anything to the effect that I was an independent. I have a copy of my speeches at home and I can produce them at any time, and they will show that the Hon. Mr. Tarte is not well informed about that. So far as the spending of the money is concerned, you can go on and spend the money if you like, but you will not do it with my consent. I voice the opinion of nine out of ten people, not only in my riding, but in the whole county, and I think my representations should have some attention paid to them.

Mr. TAYLOR. You seem to be an independent.

Mr. SHERRITT. This is an extraordinary state of affairs when we find the government going into the riding of a member who supports them and spending money there contrary to his wishes. It does seem to me that there is not a precedent for this to be found in the Dominion of Canada. I have listened with considerable interest to what was said by the hon. member (Mr. McEwen) and also what was said by the ex-minister who has referred to there being a French settlement at that place. I am very glad to be able to say that there is a small French settlement there, and I wish there were more of the same kind of people. They are an intelligent and industrious people, and I can assure the hon. minister that they are no more in favour of throwing away money in this way than the rest of us. It is news to me, as the hon. ex-minister told us to-night, that there was $10,000 spent last year at that point, because, if I remember rightly, $5,000 was the amount placed in the estimates last year, and from what I have heard of the amount of work done there, and the way it was done, I think the people of that part of the country considered that $5,000, or even a much less sum, spent on that work, was very improperly spent. I have not visited the place; but when listening to the discussion to-night, it occurred to me that as there is a hill there, it is a pity the wharf was not built on the top of the hill; for it would have served as useful a purpose as it does now, and the government would have been in a much better position to move it away and utilize it in some other part of the country. The ex-Minister of Public Works said there were men of capital behind this scheme. I can tell him that there were, and they have not now as much capital as they had before. I do not wish to make this statement to hurt the feelings of the man who was the chief mover in this work; but one of our wealthiest men lost his money in that enterprise, and died, I will not say a pauper, but very much poorer than he would have been if he had not met the gentleman who was pushing that scheme. I am stating not merely my own opinion, but the opinion of every intelligent man, whether Liberal or Conservative, who knows what the St. Joseph wharf is, when I say that when this expenditure is mentioned, it is looked upon as a ridiculous expenditure. I do not wish to say this in the way of criticising the government, because if that wharf were going to be of any benefit to that part of the country, I am sure that my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McEwen) and myself would be the last men to stand up in this House and ask that the item be dropped, because it is in a part of the country in which we are both much interested. As for any enterprise going forward at that point, there has not been any and there will not be any. I do not think the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works will stand up here and say that an expenditure of $15,000 or $20,000 will build a wharf at that place. Bayfield is a natural harbour, where work could be carried on, but St. Joseph is on an open beach, at about as exposed a place on the Lake Huron shore as it would be possible to find. I think all hon. members will agree with me that $15,000 or $20,000 is of no use to build a harbour there; and even if a harbour were built, I can assure you that it would serve no purpose. I am sorry the item was ever placed in the estimates. The money already spent there has been thrown away, and if the government spend any more there, it will be thrown away also. I can do nothing less than to move that the item be struck out.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Public Works will tell the House how much money has been spent at Bayfield. My hon. friend (Mr. Sherritt) should not forget that there is no harbour there. He knows that between Sarnia and Goderich for a distance of thirty miles, there is no harbour. I know he has been voting side by side with my hon. friend from South Huron (McEwen) against that wharf; I knew they were a unit against it. There are not many parts of the country in such an important portion of Canada as that district is where there is a coast of thirty miles without a wharf. My hon. friend knows that as well as I do; but still, because the place is called St. Joseph, my hon. friends are dead against it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Well, I express my views as I believe them to be. I really believe it, because I call the attention of the House and the country to this fact, that in a distance of thirty miles there is not a wharf available, and there is a large population of about 30,000 people in that district who will use that wharf later on. There is a large trade there. But there are two reasons why the wharf is opposed: First, because the little place is called St. Joseph; and, second, because there are interests at the station and at Hensall and Zurich which are opposed to that wharf, because they think it will drive business from them. These are the interests that have raised opposition to this little work, about which I think there should not be so much fuss.

Mr. McEWEN. I am sorry that our hon. friend the late Minister of Public Works seems to think that we are opposed to this work because the people there are French. I wish to inform him and the House that there is nothing in that, and I am sorry that my hon. friend, I was going to say, was foolish enough to say so. The people who were imported there by Mr. Cantin are waiting to get their money back from him. Whether in municipal elections or in other elections these people have been my very best friends. With regard to the position of Hensall and Zurich, I cannot speak for Zurich, but I am sure that the people of Hensall never thought of opposing this wharf because it would take business from them. That idea never entered into the question at all. There might be some opposition to a railroad on that account; but so far as the lake is concerned, $15,000 or $20,000 will build no wharf at that point that will be worth ten cents to any vessel that may come there. It is on the open lake, where there is a sweep of about 200 miles from the Northwest and about sixty miles from the west, and a single pier running out 200 or 300 feet in shallow water is not worth ten cents for any boat to come to. No sailing vessel will come there except at the very finest time of the year, and no steam barge will come there, because it is so close to the shore. As regards opposition to these French people, there is nothing in it and that charge is an absurd falsehood. These people are our best friends and there are none we would sooner help, but in that regard there is nothing to be done at present. In fact there is nothing doing there. I am aware that there is one man who makes pipe organs for the churches, and he is a very decent fellow who works all the time and apart from that industry, there is a small brick and tile works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that there is a great deal of difference of opinion with regard to this.

Mr. SHERRITT. Not in Huron.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has been over $10,000 expended on the work, but I am perfectly willing, if the item passes, to have an inquiry into all the circumstances, and if this work is not in the public interest, I will not finish it. The chief engineer of the department says that there are ten or eleven feet of water there, and I cannot understand how he could have made such a report if there is none.

Mr. McEWEN. As far as I am personally concerned, if the hon. minister will go up there and see for himself, I am willing to let the item drop.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman thinks that I should go instead of the chief engineer, I am quite willing to do so.

Mr. SHERRITT. Before the item passes, I want to put myself right. The ex-Minister of Public Works has said that I am opposed to this expenditure because the place is called St. Joseph. That sort of thing may make an impression in this House, but he would have considerable difficulty in getting the people of that locality to take any stock in it. The hon. gentleman is a little short of the distance because it is longer than he makes it out, between Goderich and Sarnia, but there is a place, some six or seven miles below that, for which an appropriation was made in 1891, and which is an old place of considerable importance, where there are mills and considerable business done, and where besides the municipality have spent $20,000 in straightening the river. I refer to Grand Bend. There was an item of $5,700 put into the estimates of 1901 for the purpose of dredging the river there, but that item has been dropped. I can assure the hon. minister that that is a work the people consider necessary, as the place is a fishing point which would be very valuable if proper accommodation were furnished. Besides, there is a good sawmill running there and considerable timber, and it is a very extensive summer resort. That is a place where work should be done, and I am glad that the hon. minister has promised to consider the advisability of putting in an item in the supplementaries for that purpose. We are further from market there than at St. Joseph, and it is a much easier place to build a breakwater and a harbour. I am satisfied that if the hon. minister will go there and will look into the matter carefully, he will see that it is a place where an expenditure would be a good investment.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am perfectly willing to go up there and consult the hon. members of the riding before anything further is done.

Item voted.

Bill (No. 180) to incorporate the Prince Edward Island Ferry Company.—Mr. Emmerson—by Mr. Fraser.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 181) to amend the General Railway Act of 1888.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) please state briefly the purport of the Bill ?

Mr. GERMAN. The object of the Bill is to put the law in such a condition that persons owning property adjoining a line of railway, which property is injured or destroyed by fire resulting from the operation of the railway, will be able to secure compensation for damages more readily than under the law as it now stands. The present law makes it incumbent on owners of property injured or destroyed by fire from a railway to prove negligence on the part of the railway company. Practical experience has demonstrated that this is always difficult, and very frequently impossible. The evidence to prove negligence must be secured from the railway itself. It is quite evident that most of the locomotive engines at present on our Canadian lines of railway are equipped with screens of sufficient fineness to prevent the discharge of sparks and cinders that would be likely to set fire to the property adjoining the line of railway. But the difficulty is that the engine driver with a heavy train, coming to a piece of track on which is anything like a heavy grade, will immediately throw open the screen, the result being that large cinders, as large as an ordinary sized bird's egg will be discharged from the locomotive and carried upon property adjoining the railway. As the law stands at present, if the fire originates on the right of way and extends to property adjoining, the railway company have been held by the courts to be prima facie guilty of negligence. But if the fire originates on the adjoining property it is incumbent on the owner to prove negligence on the part of the railway company before he can recover damages. This, in many cases is impossible. For instance, a farmer has a large part of a crop of grain or hay destroyed by fire from a locomotive and sustains a loss of forty or fifty dollars. In order to prove negligence on the part of the railway company he has to ascertain in the first place, the number of the engine. That is a difficulty in itself. Then he has to go himself or send experts to examine the engine to see whether it is equipped with a proper screen. Let us suppose that on examination the engine is found to be properly equipped in this respect. Then, in order to prove negligence on the part of the railway company the farmer must call the engine driver to prove, if possible, that that engine driver had opened the screen allowing the free exit of sparks and cinders, which otherwise would not have escaped from the engine. We all know that when you have to prove your case with adverse witnesses you have great difficulty. The proposed amendment will absolutely overcome that. It will put the onus of proof on the railway company ; they will be compelled to prove that there was no negligence on their part. The Bill provides that if it is shown that the fire originated from sparks, cinders, or other burning substance which has escaped or has been discharged from a locomotive engine operated or being run on the line of railway, that is sufficient to fix upon the company the liability for the loss which has been sustained, unless they can show on their part some good reason why it should not be fixed upon them. I think that the amendment is certainly in the interest of the people who own property adjoining a line of railway, and it is an amendment which fills a long-felt want throughout the country districts. I most sincerely trust it will be allowed to carry.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 182) to amend chapter 27, of the Revised Statutes, respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) please explain the object of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). In 1893 parliament authorized the printing for the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway to be done in the maritime provinces as it was found to be more convenient to do it there than in Ottawa. There is a provision in the Bill to the following effect:

That the cost is not to exceed what would be charged at the bureau in Ottawa.

Now the King's Printer always certifies bills for printing as fair and reasonable; ever since 1893 that has been the certificate put upon these bills. However, the Auditor General has decided that the certificate is not sufficient, that the terms of the statute must be carried out. Now the Order in Council is to change the law so as to authorize bills to be paid on condition that the cost does not exceed customary and fair commercial rates for similar work and for supplies of similar quantities. That is the intention of the statute, that is to say it is to give effect to what has been done since 1893; but I must admit that what has been done since 1893 is to some extent a departure from the terms of the statute.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE DESJARDINS CANAL.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 183) respecting the Desjardins canal. He said: The object of the Bill is to confirm a discharge given by the governement to certain landowners within the limits of the city of Hamilton of a mortgage which was on their property. Those who are from that part of the country will remember that in 1832, Sir Allan McNab, who was then president of the Desjardins Canal Company, borrowed money from the then government, acting through the receiver general, to the extent of £5,000 to aid in the construction of that canal. To secure this money, Mr. Peter Hamilton gave a mortgage on some property which he then owned and which is now within the limits of the city of Hamilton. That property has since been subdivided and is now vested in a certain number of private individuals. The original mortgage has been lost. After having examined the question, a year ago or thereabouts, we came to the conclusion that it was possible that prescription might be invoked against the government if we endeavoured to enforce the claim when a case was brought against the different property holders, and it was then alleged that no money had ever passed in connection with this original transaction. As no money had ever been paid over to Mr. Hamilton, and considering that during all these years we have not sought to enforce that mortgage against any one of the holders who had improved the property and who now were in possession of it, we decided not to enforce our claim. The discharge of the old mortgage was given to the persons interested. I have personally some doubts as to the rights of the government to give a discharge of a claim of that sort. In order to set that doubt at rest we think proper now to come to parliament and get the sanction of parliament for what we did.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I desire to say a word or two in support of the Bill. As a resident of Hamilton, I am aware of the circumstances which the Minister of Justice referred to. The land covered by this mortgage is owned by hundreds of people, poor people and wealthy people; and it would be exceedingly difficult, even supposing that it was possible, to maintain at the present day that anything was due on this mortgage from each of these people who may have been primarily liable. The amount of costs that would follow any attempt to enforce this mortgage would be something enormous. There is a grave doubt indeed whether there ever was any liability under it. Members of the legal profession fifty and sixty years ago, who were familiar with all the facts at the time regarding this mortgage, treated it as an unexisting security, as something that had no claim behind it; and for sixty years at least this document which was again brought into existence apparently about a year ago, was treated as an absolute nullity. So that it would be a most unfortunate thing for many unfortunate poor people who own small portions of the property in the city of Hamilton, if any attempt were now made to enforce it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

PETITION OF SHIPPERS OF FROZEN FISH.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked:

1. Has the government received a petition, during the year 1903, from the shippers of frozen fish and other perishable goods, from the province of Prince Edward Island, asking for compensation for losses sustained, owing to the failure of the government to provide communication from the island to the mainland, during last winter?
2. What is the intention of the government with regard to this petition?
3. Will they make good the loss sustained by the shippers? And if not, why not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine):

1. Yes.
2 and 3. Under consideration.

PURCHASES PREVIOUS TO GERMAN SURTAX.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked:

1. Has the following report been communicated to the honourable the Minister of Customs:—

Winnipeg, May 12, 1903.

To the President and Members of the Council of the Winnipeg Board of Trade.

Gentlemen,—Your committee, appointed on the 11th May to report upon the German surtax, beg to submit the following :—

1. That the date fixed by the government, viz., July 1, 1903, before which German goods, to escape the surtax, must be entered for consumption, and duty paid, will not allow sufficient time for Canadian importers to receive goods for which bona fide orders were placed before April 16th last. A large quantity of such purchases are for fall and winter delivery ; and in some cases importers have sold these goods on the old tariff. And we would, therefore, suggest that the board should strongly urge upon the government the necessity for an extension of the time to September 30, 1903, in which bona fide purchases may be entered for consumption in this country at the old rate of duty.

2. That as Winnipeg and other western points are situated at long distances from the seaboard (transportation taking from two to six weeks from Montreal and other eastern Canadian ports), legislation providing for a uniform date of entry would greatly discriminate against the larger portion of Canada. And it would, in our opinion, be only a matter of justice to all parties concerned that the arrival of goods at any seaport in Canada in the vessel in which they are shipped should be considered evidence by the government of their arrival ; and additional time allowed to pass entry and pay the duties on such goods reaching their final port of destination.

Respectfully submitted,

D. W. BOLE,
Chairman Committee.

2. Is it the intention to so extend the date fixed by the government, viz., July 1, 1903, so as to give ample time to western importers to enter at the old rate of duty ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) :

1. Yes.

2. As this is a subject that has not only engaged the attention of the Winnipeg board of trade, but of traders throughout the Dominion, I will say a few words in reference to it so that business men may be apprised of the action which the department, sanctioned by the Governor in Council, are about to take. The resolution before the committee defined that goods ordered prior to the 16th of April should be admitted without the surtax being charged, provided the goods were for immediate transportation. The time had to be defined by the department, and we thought that by giving ten weeks we would allow time either to cancel the orders that had been given or to make arrangements to transfer the goods via some other country. That notice reached the business men of the community, but very soon afterwards communications from all parts of the country reached the department pointing out that there were exceptional circumstances connected with the German trade, particularly that some kinds of goods were ordered and had to be made after the order went in, such as goods for the holiday trade, and it was impossible for the merchants to cancel the order, and even if they did cancel it they would be in this position, that travellers had already been on the road with samples selling them. The department after considering the matter and finding that a greater portion of the orders would be covered by the 30th of September, instead of the 30th of June, it is my intention to recommend to my colleagues an extension of time, maintaining firmly that the order must have been actually placed before the 16th of April, but that the time for the importation under the term 'immediate transportation' shall be extended to the 30th of September. With reference to the second suggestion of the Winnipeg board of trade, that inasmuch as goods landed in Canada might require some weeks before they reached the port of destination and make entry, to require not only that goods should be landed in Canada, but entered in Canada, would be manifestly unfair. The department has no desire to deal inequitably with any merchants living in any part of the country, and it is the intention to have that rectified by providing that the arrival of the goods at any port in Canada shall be sufficient notice to the department.

CATTLE-GUARDS.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the government to the cattle-guard question. On the 6th April last, the House adopted a motion for the bringing down of all correspondence in connection with the cattle guard inquiry, including the appointment of commissioners and all matters of that kind. I have inquired and I find that these papers have not yet been brought down. The government will see the importance of having these papers brought down immediately. A long time has elapsed already and if we are to have any benefit from them they must be brought down soon. Within a short time the government will have under consideration the Bill introduced by——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) must not make a speech in asking a question. If he wants to make a speech we will go into Supply shortly and he can then discuss the question.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not going to make a speech. I would like to ask the minister if the report of the commission has yet been brought down ?

The PRIME MINISTER. What report ?

Mr. LENNOX. The report in reference to the cattle-guard commission.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot say but I will take note of the inquiry of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) and I shall endeavour to give him an answer after recess.

TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I made an inquiry yesterday in regard to the terms of the proposed commission to investigate the Treadgold concession. The hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Hon. Sir William Mulock) said that possibly the government might be in a position to make an announcement to-day, and I merely rise for the purpose of reminding the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in case he should be prepared to make any announcement.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Hon. Sir William Mulock) informs me that he has been engaged to-day and that he has not been able to give his attention to the matter. I have reason to believe that after recess I will be able to lay the commission on the Table.

HALF-BREED CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. acting Minister of the Interior (Hon. Sir William Mulock) when I can get the balance of the return in regard to the half-breed claims commission ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The Deputy Minister of the Interior informs me that the preparation of the remaining part of the return would involve a great deal of labour—many weeks—and it was a question whether we would not have to seek outside assistance. I do not think it would be possible to get it out before the end of the session. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) could reduce his demand to something within reasonable limits and let me know and I will be glad to meet his object. Perhaps his order is a good deal larger than he intended it to be. It was for that reason and not from any wish to withhold at all the information that he desires that I instructed the department to prepare as much of the return as possible.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. From what I can gather from that part of the return which I have already received there are some 3,000 names on the list, and surely it would not take very many weeks to write down 3,000 names.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may be correct. I have no knowledge myself. I am only telling him what the deputy minister informs me. If the hon. gentleman would find it convenient to call on the deputy minister and make clear to him exactly what is wanted, he might be able to get the return completed.

I.C.R.—WINDSOR JUNCTION ACCIDENT.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). In answer to an inquiry made yesterday, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) said he had no objection to lay on the Table of the House the evidence taken by the commissioner appointed to inquire into the cause of the recent accident at Windsor Junction. I would like to know when that finding can be laid on the Table of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will take note of the inquiry.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Miscellaneous expenditure including North-west Territories, $37,000.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) is not here, but we expect him in a moment. This item for miscellaneous expenditure is the same as last year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I just wish on this item to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) to the point I raised some time ago. It is that prisoners of all grades are carried in the North-west Territories as first-class passengers and they sit in the coaches with those who have purchased first-class tickets. I drew the attention of the House some time ago to the fact that last fall there was a murderer and two or three other condemned criminals of the lowest type travelling from Edmonton to Regina in a car, and sitting in a seat adjoining a number of students who were going to attend the Normal School at the latter place. In Ontario and other parts our volunteers have to travel second class, and they have frequently been known to travel in box cars and cattle cars. I think it is a very improper thing that criminals should be allowed to travel in coaches with ordinary passengers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I think this is a matter which ought to be dealt with by the mounted police. The mounted police have charge of the conveyance of prisoners in the North-west Territories, and I apprehend that because officers connected with the police like to travel first-class they take these prisoners with them. However, now that our attention is drawn to it, I think that practice should be avoided if possible.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We want something more than to be left at the mercy of the mounted police, although I always stand up for the mounted police. I am perfectly willing that the mounted police should be able to have every possible comfort, but I object to these prisoners riding in that way. Do I understand that the Hon. Minister of Justice will give the subject his attention ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will have the attention of the officers of the mounted police drawn to this remark.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is covered by this item ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think this is practically all expended in the North-west Territories. Judging from the way in which it is drafted you would imagine that it was intended to cover expenditures other than those in the North-west Territories, but as a matter of fact, it is almost entirely expended there. It covers for instance the maintenance of prisoners at police barracks; transport of prisoners by North-west mounted police; Crown prosecutors; legal services and expenses; jury and witness fees; coroners inquests; sheriffs' fees; clerk of courts, &c. Last year these services cost : Maintenance of prisoners, $11,224; jury and witness fees, $11,673; transport of prisoners, $3,847; sheriffs' fees and expenses, $761 ; extradition fees, $2,091; and so on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the administration of criminal justice dealt with directly by this government so far as the expenses are concerned.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Absolutely controlled by us.

Mr. BORDEN (Haifax). And paid for by us.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Travelling allowances and expenses of judges in Manitoba, $3,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the usual sum for this purpose.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. This amount has been paid under authority of Order in Council since 1882, and there has been no variation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are travelling allowances for all the judges in all the provinces.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, but they are dealt with differently. In Ontario a round sum is paid each year to each judge, and in Quebec there is an allowance of $6 per diem while judges are attending court in other districts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In Nova Scotia it is a lump sum per circuit.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Haifax). In Manitoba it is a per diem allowance.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is fixed by Order in Council passed in 1882. The judge is allowed his actual moving expenses from his residence to the place where the court is held and return, and $5 per day during the time he is absent.

Travelling allowances of judges in British Columbia, $13,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This seems to be a large amount compared with the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The distances are very great in that province. The payment is based on an Order in Council passed in 1887, which says that the travelling allowances of the Supreme Court judges shall be fixed and determined by their actual and reasonable disbursements for travelling and hotel accommodation to be certified by themselves according to a stipulated form. In the case of county court judges an Order in Council of 1879 provides that each judge shall be paid his actual moving expenses from his residence to where the court is held and return, and $5 per diem for the time he is absent attending to the duties of his court.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that when I was in British Columbia last fall I had quite a conversation with one of the judges, and from my experience of travelling through that province I am quite sure that they are not overpaid.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They are not.

Mr. SPROULE. In fact I believe they are underpaid.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It did seem to me that the cost of living and especially the cost of travelling is much greater in British Columbia than it is in any other part of Canada. One can hardly appreciate it until he has travelled in that country, and I think the government would be justified in making an even more liberal allowance for this purpose. It is not as liberal an allowance as in the older provinces, taking into consideration the increased expenses in British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The judges in British Columbia are paid less than is received by the judges in Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. On what basis are the judges paid for the weekly high court sittings in Ottawa and in London ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When the judge sits at Ottawa he is allowed $25 for moving expenses and $10 for London, besides a per diem allowance of $5 during the time he is absent from his residence attending to this court.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by 'moving expenses' ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I should think that would mean the ordinary transportation expenses and the per diem allowance would go to pay his board bill.

Salary of divorce and matrimonial court, New Brunswick, $500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that under the statute ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That amount is voted each year. If it were omitted from the estimates one year the judge would not have it, as there is no statute which sanctions the payment of this sum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any difference in this regard between the judge of the Matrimonial Court of New Brunswick and the judge of the corresponding court in Nova Scotia? The Minister of Justice knows that at the time Nova Scotia entered confederation the judge holding the position of Judge in Equity was, by statute, authorized to dispose of divorce cases and matrimonial cases generally. The title of Judge in Equity has been, I think, continued in Nova Scotia for that reason; but apart from that the title of Judge in Equity has no significance in Nova Scotia, as all the judges in that province have the same general jurisdiction. There is a certain amount of business of this kind in Nova Scotia as in New Brunswick; and I do not see any reason for making any distinction between the judges performing these duties in the two provinces.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Last year the hon. gentleman brought this matter up in the course of the discussion of my estimates. I was struck with the force of his remarks, and on inquiry I found that the distinction arose from the fact that the judge in Nova Scotia accepted his duties and performed them without demur, whereas the judge in New Brunswick made it a condition of his taking the office that a salary should be attached to it. It did not strike me that this was a very satisfactory reason for the distinction, and when my hon. friend sees the supplementary estimates, I think he will find that the observations which he made last year have borne fruit.

Expenditure under cap. 181, R.S.C., $700.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the meaning of this?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is to meet the expenses attending executions.

Office for clerk of the court and judges' chambers, Prince Albert, $260.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is represented that there is not sufficient accommodation in the court building for the offices of the clerk and the sheriff; and rooms are rented in the town of Prince Albert, outside the court for these officials. I hope that some day we may have proper accommodation there, because if a fire occurred, the registers of deeds might be destroyed. Although provision has been made for their protection, the proper accommodation would be the construction of a court-house. I have endeavoured to bring this about, but have not yet been successful. The construction of a court-house is not under the control of the Department of Justice, but is connected with another branch of the public service.

Allowance to ad hoc judges, $200.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What ad hoc judges are there?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I find on looking over the accounts that this allowance has not been drawn upon for several years. However, it is occasionally found necessary, when a judge is required to hold court for another judge who is disqualified, to provide his moving expenses, and this vote is for that purpose.

Supreme Court of Canada—reporter, $2,100.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are increases of $50 each in the case of five or six officials.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These are ordinary statutory increases.

For the purchase of law books and works of reference for the Supreme Court library, $4,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The condition of the library of the Supreme Court at the present time is not, I think, very creditable to the country or to the court or to my hon. friend's department, although I have no doubt that no blame is to be attributed to him in that regard. The books are increasing to such an extent that it is almost impossible to do any work there. The room which is now used as a library was never very suitable for the purpose, and now that the number of books has increased so very greatly, there is really no room at all for counsel. It is impossible for the officers of the court, the librarian and the assistant librarian, to do their work properly. It is impossible for counsel to prepare their briefs. The whole library is to some extent in a jumble for lack of space. Besides I believe a large number of books are stored in the attic and another large number in the cellar. I think some steps should be taken to provide the library with better accommodation. To do that may involve a larger proposition than anything we can discuss very fully this afternoon. Still, I think it is right that the attention of the government should be brought to this condition of affairs, and I am sure that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who has some practical acquaintance with it, will realize it just as much as I do. If my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would go down there and look at it, his inspection would convince him that some remedy should be sought at a very early date. It is the highest court in the country, and counsel from all over Canada come there, and they have no place in which to get ready for the argument of their cases, except the library of the Supreme Court. The space formerly used as a means of communication between the two ends of the court-house is at the present time crowded with shelving, and one can barely edge his way through it. The condition of affairs is such that I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works should consult the hon. Minister of Justice and see whether something cannot be done to improve it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The matter has been brought to my attention by the hon. Minister of Justice, as well as by a delegation which I met some two weeks ago. Personally, I believe the best policy would be to erect a new building, especially for the court, but whether that would meet the views of my colleagues I do not know. I doubt whether any improvements could be made in the present building. The matter, however, will receive the consideration of the department as early as possible, and I hope to be able to make some recommendations at an early date.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would like to add to what my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has said that not only is the present court building very inconvenient, but it is exceeding dangerous to have the valuable library there in the condition in which it is at present. Some of the books could never be replaced, and it would cost from $50,000 to $60,000 to replace the whole library.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are the records of the court besides.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. I visited the building with my hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works, and we agree that no improvements of any value could be made and that the whole building would have to be reconstructed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that the building has been patched up as much as it possibly can be. When suggestions were made with regard to acquiring more land, I have always thought that there was no need whatever of our acquiring any more ground, as we have all we require in order to construct all the public buildings this country needs. The ground on which this building is erected, together with such additional land as could be taken in, would suffice to provide ample accommodation for the records of the court and the library and probably the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I fear very much that we have not ground enough, judging by recent requirements, for the public buildings we require. I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that the site of the Supreme Court may suffice for one building, but if we are to have the public buildings required in Ottawa, I fear that it will be necessary to spread out and acquire more ground. When one looks to the great increase of business during the past few years, one can form some idea of what may be the increase during the next twenty years, and we will have to face the necessity of acquiring more land for public buildings. No doubt a good building could be erected on the site of the Supreme Court. But whether it will be better to build on the open grounds is a matter for serious consideration. Opinions differ very much, but it will be most desirable to maintain the open spaces we have now and not crowd the buildings so close together.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that if we would build a high level bridge across the canal, we have there unoccupied land belonging to the government which we might use. A portion of this is taken up by the park, but if necessary for a public building, I do not see why we should not encroach on the park. We have, however, a lot of ground unoccupied, not used for park purposes, which we might use to build on. Then there are some departments which might be further away. At Washington many of the buildings are some three miles apart, no doubt owing to the great scarcity of ground. In this city there are departments which might be transferred to another portion of the city, and which could be easily reached by the electric cars. And it would not be difficult to get ground not very expensive, but which would be a little remote from the grounds here, and which would suit the purposes of the departments which the public do not often require to visit.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). The suggestion of the hon. Minister of Public Works is, in my opinion, a very good one. There is no doubt that we shall have to acquire more land to meet the requirements of the public service. I would throw out the suggestion that the government look out for some other site on which to erect a new parliament building and devote the present building to departmental purposes. In this we would be following the examples set in London and Paris and other capitals, and it seems to me that we could devise a plan for a building in which the representatives of the people could meet which would be a credit to the country at large.

Supreme Court of Canada—contingencies and disbursements—salaries of officers (sheriff, registrar as editor and publisher of the reports, usher, &c.), books for judges, not exceeding $300, and salary of messenger, $330, $5,030.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an increase of $30 here.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I find that the sheet of my memoranda containing the details of this vote is mislaid, so I cannot give details. The sheriff, of course, is given a per diem allowance during the sitting of the Supreme Court, and the registrar, as editor and publisher of reports, receives an amount in addition to his salary.

Printing, binding and distributing Supreme Court reports, $3,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that work done at the Bureau ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. At what price are these sold ? Is it sufficient to meet the cost ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At $2.50. The details are given in the Auditor General's Report. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page M—52 of the Auditor General's Report, they will see the amount paid not only for the Supreme Court Reports, but for the Exchequer Court Reports as well.

Mr. CLARKE. I see that $3,149 was received.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. From the sale of Supreme Court Reports, yes.

Mr. CLARKE. The expenditure in connection with the preparation and printing of these reports exceeded the receipts by $3,000 per annum ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, we here have to provide for the expense of preparation and publication, then the amount which is received, as shown by the Auditor General's Report, goes into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, a little more is received than is expended ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

For the purchase of law books and works of reference for the Supreme Court library, $4,500.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is an amount which has been voted for several years past for the purchase of law books for the Supreme Court library. I do not think that my hon. friends who visit the library will find there is any objection to the expenditure, because we are obliged to expend a large sum for reports, for we receive the Canadian reports, also the British and the American reports that are of value. In addition, we must buy text books. Those who are obliged to maintain a working law library find it an exceedingly expensive undertaking.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). One of the objections is that after you get the books you will have no place to put them.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No place to use them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And not even much of a place to put them.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the great difficulty.

Exchequer Court of Canada—junior second-class clerks, $1,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How many junior second-class clerks are there ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are two in the department—one has reached the maximum of his class, and I am making special provision for the other.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, this covers the salary of only one clerk ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it should read 'second-class clerk.'

Junior second-class clerk, Duncan Clark, notwithstanding any thing in the Civil Service Act, $900.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister seems to be giving this officer three statutory increases at once.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I wish to explain the circumstances. I can fairly say with regard to the Civil Service Act that I heartily approve of the conditions it imposes on the executive with regard to the treatment meted out to civil servants. This is one of the departments controlled by the Act, and so we could not give this officer more than $50 increase in one year. But there are special circumstances in this case which lead me to come to parliament and ask its approval of what I have done in increasing his salary to the extent of $150. The registrar of the Exchequer Court, under whose immediate direction this young clerk is, wrote to the deputy minister of Justice that this young gentleman has been in the department for nine years. He says :

He has proved himself a faithful, reliable and able officer, and the work he has to do is one of responsibility and requiring skill. Mr. Clark keeps all the documents and books in this office and takes down in shorthand and transcribes on the typewriter all my correspondence. He sells law stamps and generally does all the work at the counter, and in the discharge of such duties has proved himself most faithful. I may also add that he has not yet got one annual statutory increase. I believe he is most deserving of the increase which I now recommend.

I concur in the recommendation of the Deputy Minister of Justice, and I think it my duty to come to the House and get the statutory increase which has been recommended.

Mr. SPROULE. Has he been getting the regular or statutory increase from year to year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. With one exception, in 1897. From the information which was furnished to me about this young gentleman by the registrar of the exchequer court, if they were deprived of his services now they would find it very difficult to replace him with the salary they are now paying, $900.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to draw attention to this feature of the case, that there are many deserving clerks in the civil service who have had no statutory increase for a good many years, some of them owing to the fact that they were in the maximum of their class and could not be transferred to another class. This clerk has been receiving the regular statutory increase, it appears, with the exception of one year; but there are many others who have remained for several years without it, and it seems to me an injustice to them.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is a case of special merit. This young man went into the department many years ago, and has risen to the position he now occupies. He is vigilant and active in his duties, and under these circumstances we ought to show our approbation of what he has done.

Mr. SPROULE. I think I can point out instances where men have been in the service over twenty years and have received no statutory increase for the last eight or ten years.

Contingencies—judge's and registrar's travelling expenses, salaries of sheriffs, &c., printing and stationery, &c., and $50 for judge's books, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In regard to travelling expenses this is a very expensive court. The Exchequer Court sits at various places throughout the Dominion as occasion requires. If there is a case at Halifax or Vancouver originating in the Exchequer Court, and where it is necessary for witnesses to be heard, the judge goes to such place. As a result of that arrangement four-fifths of the time of the judge and registrar of the Exchequer Court is spent in travelling about from place to place. At the present moment the judge of the Exchequer Court is at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, trying a case. To-morrow he may have to go to British Columbia. I think he is careful in his expenses. I understand the expenditure stands now at the amount at which it stood in 1890. I think that is fair evidence of the fact that the judge has not been extravagant.

Additional to registrar as editor and publisher of exchequer reports, $300.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The registrar of the Exchequer Court has taken the responsibility of editing and publishing reports of the judgments rendered in that court, and for these services he has been receiving for many years the sum of $300. The registrar of the Supreme Court performs a like duty with respect to the judgments of that court and he also receives an additional salary.

Charles Morse, for furnishing reports of Exchequer Court decisions to legal periodicals, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $50.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These reports are extracts of the judgments which are rendered, and are furnished to the legal papers for the information of the general public.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not see that the government should pay for that service. The papers who are publishing that legal information should pay for it themselves.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend, who like myself belongs to the profession, knows that the unfortunate publishers of legal periodicals are not as a rule overburdened with this world's wealth. These periodicals, though they are exceedingly useful to the profession, are not a source of great remuneration to the publishers. As the expenditure has been going on for a number of years, it is hardly worth while to object to it now.

Salary of registrar in Admiralty, Quebec, $666.66.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With reference to this item and the next one for salary of marshall, in what way are these officers distinct from the registrars at St. John and Halifax ? Are they paid on a different basis ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These gentlemen who are connected with the Admiralty Court at Quebec were appointed at the time that court was a branch of the Imperial Admiralty Court, and their appointments were made subject to the approval of the home authorities. At the time of the change in our admiralty system when the Admiralty Court ceased to be a branch of the Imperial Court and became a branch of the Exchequer Court of Canada, these officers who were then in the receipt of a salary were taken over, it was understood their salary was to continue on as long as they remained in the office at the same rates that they were then paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think in the admiralty courts of other provinces the marshall and the registrar are paid by fees, which are a burden upon the litigants. I suppose the intention is, after the present incumbents cease to hold office, to place the court in that respect on the same footing as the courts in the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Act provides that when these incumbents cease to hold office their successors should come within the operation of our Exchequer Court Act, which provides that they should be paid by fees. In addition to this salary they receive fees also.

To provide accommodation when necessary for Exchequer Court in Admiralty, $300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this vote usually drawn upon ? Do not the judges in the Exchequer Court and the Admiralty Court make use of the court-house buildings provided in each of the provinces ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Sometimes a claim is made upon us, but this vote is not usually drawn upon. Take, for instance, the case of the Halifax court-house which, as far as my limited knowledge enables me to speak, is under the joint control of the province and the county.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The city and county.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, the city and county. A claim has been made on us by the county in respect to the occupation of the court-house by the judge of the Exchequer Court. The point is still in dispute, but it is to meet such cases that we have this vote. It has not been drawn upon to any extent.

Yukon Territory—travelling allowances of judges, $1,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do the judges in the Yukon go on circuit at all ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Very little, but they sometimes sit at White Horse and occasionally they have to move away from Dawson. I have made inquiry as to the amount spent under this vote and I find it is very small as a rule.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was expended last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have been referred to page M—17 of the Auditor General's Report and I have looked the matter through, but I cannot find that there appears to have been any amount paid. I cannot speak with any degree of accuracy. But I asked what amount had been paid under that item, and I was told that the judges sometimes went to White Horse and that a certain expenditure was made, but that last year a very small amount was paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty I find about page M—17 is that there is no item at the top to show out of which vote these things have been paid.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the page given to me in the brief that was prepared for me in connection with my estimates, but, upon looking at the page, I find that it does not give me any information whatever. There is an item for travelling expenses of $791.75 made up as follows :

George Craig, stenographer, travel, Dawson to Ottawa and return, $322.45 ; George L. Taylor, police magistrate, travel, Bothwell, Ontario to Ottawa, and removal expenses to White Horse, $49.30.

I do not find any item showing the travelling expenses of judges.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman explain what is the meaning of this item of $791.75 for travelling expenses ? Why should a stenographer travel to Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In respect to Mr. Taylor, I know that this expenditure was connected with his removal when he went into the country, but in respect to Mr. Craig, why we should pay his travelling expenses from Dawson to Ottawa and return, I am not in a position to say. I am quite willing to allow that item to remain over for the purpose of making inquiry as to these expenses.

Item allowed to stand.

Salaries of sheriff and clerk of Territorial Court at $4,000 each, $8,000.

Mr. CLARKE. In the Auditor General's Report at page M—54, there is some correspondence in reference to sheriff's fees. Would the hon. minister give us any explanation about that ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That was a difficulty that occurred with the sheriff previous to the estimates of last year. The sheriff was in the habit of receiving in addition to the salary voted to him a portion of the fees, but last year it was decided by the government that in future he should not have the right to receive any fees.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are we to understand by that ? Are the fees paid into the consolidated revenue fund, or are they abolished ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They come into the consolidated revenue fund. The arrangement with the sheriff formerly was that he received a certain amount by way of salary, then he had a living allowance and he retained one-half or one-third of the fees of his office. The Auditor General argued that it was doubtful whether the government had the right to make any such arrangement as that with the sheriff and after considerable discussion and some correspondence, it was decided that we would take statutory authority to pay the sheriff each year a fixed salary of $4,000, and take away his right to sheriff's fees. So that, the fees now go into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was that put into the form of a statute last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, and the salary was fixed at $4,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you make an allowance to the sheriff besides that for his travelling expenses ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We give the sheriff a living allowance in the district.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. One thousand eight hundred a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And no travelling expenses ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

Salaries of deputy sheriff and two assistant Clerks of Territorial Court at $1,800 each, $5,400.

Mr. LENNOX. Is that necessary? We have a sheriff and a chief clerk of the Territorial Court, as well as a deputy sheriff and two assistant clerks, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has looked into this matter at all. I do not know whether it is necessary, but I would not think it necessary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have been recently pressed for the appointment of two additional clerks of the Territorial Court, and I have withstood the pressure up to the present time because I could not believe it was absolutely necessary. I was under the impression that a chief clerk and two assistants ought to do the work of the court. But, in respect to the sheriff my information is that a sheriff and an assistant are required. The courts have had a good deal of work to do during the last two or three years, and I do not think any complaints have been made that the officials have not had plenty to do. There is considerable litigation going on in the Yukon.

Salaries for two stenographers of Territorial Court at $2,000 each, $4,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are these salaries in any way provided for by charges made against litigants?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The litigants are charged an amount which is more than sufficient to provide for that expense.

Yukon—living allowance of judges at $5,000 each, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Three or four years ago we had as an explanation of this item, that living expenses were very high in the Yukon, but notwithstanding that the cost of living is decreasing, the allowance is kept as high as ever. What is the explanation of that?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend will remember the trouble we had last year with respect to the living allowance paid to the judges in the Yukon. That trouble arose out of the fact that a certain sum was allowed by the Department of Justice, and in addition to that the judges were allowed residence, and fuel and light, by the Department of Public Works. We thought it better to take the position that we should pay these gentlemen in addition to their salaries of $5,000 a year each, a fixed sum of $5,000, in view of all claims for living allowance. They now receive no perquisities or allowances of any description that we know of, except this sum. This was done last year after the difficulty had arisen in connection with Judge Dugas. I may say that it became necessary for us to take action against Judge Dugas to make him account for certain perquisites he received outside of his living allowance paid by the Department of Justice. We came to the conclusion that he should have to account for anything he was paid by any other department than the Department of Justice, and we are having that issue settled in the courts now. To avoid all possible difficulty in the future, we have decided that the judges shall each receive $5,000 a year as salary, and $5,000 as living allowance, and no more. That amount was fixed after the discussion last year in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the judges given residences besides that amount?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, we do not give them anything whatever except the $5,000. We take the position that we give a judge in the Yukon $5,000 over and above what would be paid to a judge in a similar position in one of the older provinces, in order to compensate him for any additional expense he may be put to in connection with his residence in that country.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a good deal better system than the former system which was growing to be a scandal, because no one could tell what we were paying these judges every year or from what source it was coming. This system has the merit of showing us how much we are actually paying. I am not prepared to say whether the amount is too high or not, but it is claimed that the cost of living in the Yukon has much decreased, and if that be so, it would seem that the compensation is very ample. I see that in addition to that we are paying the sheriffs and other officials as well. I do not see why we should do that now. We are giving them good salaries, and in other portions of the country they would have to provide for their own living.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This amount for living expenses is put in the estimates every year, so that we may be in a position to reduce the amounts at any time we may think proper. It was originally suggested that the judges should receive $10,000 a year all told, and that that should be put in the statutes, but we thought it wiser to give the Yukon judges the usual salary paid to other judges in a similar position, and to vote the living allowance each year, so that we could decrease it at any time we thought we would be justified in doing so. I think, however, that the conditions have not yet reached that position where we should decrease the amount, but at all events, under the present system we can consider it each year.

Mr. LENNOX. The explanation af the minister appears to be satisfactory, provided that the decrease be made at as early a period as possible. I am not in a position to judge as to whether the $10,000 a year all told is too high or not, but it appears to me that it is quite questionable whether the additional $5,000 for living allowance is not decidedly too high at the present time. We pay a judge in the province of Ontario $5,000 a year, and out of that he has to furnish his own living. Suppose we estimate that at $3,500, and allowing, as we do, the Yukon judges $5,000 a year for living allowance, that would place their living expenses at $8,500 a year. As the result of the agitation from this side of the House last year, what has been referred to as an improper method of remunerating these judges has been done away with, and I have faith that the Minister of Justice will see to it that next session these living allowances will be revised. I do not want to put the judges in the Yukon on any unfair basis, but we should put them as nearly as possible upon an equal basis with the judges in the other parts of the country.

Mr. CLARKE. Did I understand the minister to say that there was a suit in progress against one of the Yukon judges to compel him to restore some moneys he has retained ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not say that. Last year we had a considerable discussion here with respect to the living allowances that were paid to the judges in the Yukon. I said that they received a certain amount by way of living allowance under the authority of parliament voted in the estimates, and it was discovered that in addition to the amount paid to them by the Department of Justice, they received divers other amounts from the Department of Public Works. I did not say they received money, but they received benefits such as being allowed to reside in houses that were the property of the government, or, that the rent of their houses had been paid by the Department of Public Works, or, that fire-wood or light had been supplied to them. When the matter was discussed in the House it was my opinion that it was more or less irregular that they should receive these allowances outside of the Department of Justice, and in order to have that opinion properly tested, I drew the attention of the judge to the fact, and asked him to refund the money. He replied that he was under no obligation to do so, because that was one of the conditions under which he went into the Yukon, and as the matter was in issue between us, I thought the proper way to have it tested was by a suit, and a suit was begun.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is trying the suit ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is an insinuation which I think I must repel. It will be tried in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. LENNOX. Do I understand the minister to say that the suit that is being brought is to recover, amongst other things, the money which represents rental and the expenditures for fuel and lighting which were in controversy a year ago ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Living allowances of sheriff, deputy sheriff, clerk of the court, assistant clerks, police magistrate and stenographers of Yukon Territorial Court, at $1,800 each, $14,400.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister tell us how much money Sheriff Eilbeck draws for salary, living allowances and incidentals, not only in his department, but in the other departments of the government ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentleman is rather unfair in expecting me to answer for all the other departments of the government. So far as the Department of Justice is concerned, he receives $4,000 as salary and $1,800 as living allowance.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see he was paid also expenses in connection with the execution of O'Brien, erecting scaffold, executioner's fee, &c., $586.80.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These are expenses which are paid in the other provinces by the provincial governments. When persons like O'Brien have to be disposed of, the sheriff cannot be expected to pay the expenses out of his own pocket.

Mr. TAYLOR. They cost a good deal, however. I also find that Sheriff Eilbeck is paid large sums by the Department of the Interior for selling town lots. He must be a valuable officer. I think his salary as sheriff should cover his services in selling government property at auction ; yet he is paid auctioneer's fees. I would like to know how much he draws altogether.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot say how much he drew in connection with the hanging of O'Brien ; but judging from the Auditor General's report, O'Brien proved to be an expensive luxury to the Dominion of Canada. It cost a good deal to catch him and a good deal to try him, but I think the way in which he was captured and disposed of reflected great credit on the administration of justice in the Yukon, especially on the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that Mr. F. C. Wade, Crown prosecutor, got $3,000 for his services in connection with the prosecution of O'Brien. It appears to me that these officials are drawing pretty large sums.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that all these officials are paid about as much for living allowances as they are for salaries. If their salaries are fairly adequate for the work done, I do not see why we should pay their board also. In no other part of Canada is it done. I could see some reason why it should have been done in the early history of that country, when living was exceptionally high ; but to-day living in Dawson is as luxurious as in most other parts of Canada, and the cost of living is not so great as it was. We pay two deputy sheriffs a salary of $1,800 each, which would be considered a fairly good salary in other parts of Canada ; and why we should add to that $1,800 more for living allowance I cannot understand. It practically means that we are paying $3,600 for a deputy sheriff in the Yukon, whereas in other parts of Canada such an official would not be paid half that amount. We are paying all these officials good salaries, and I do not see why we should pay them living allowances also.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the officials in the Yukon are being paid reasonably good salaries, and I think the question of living allowances is one that must be considered in the immediate future ; and in view of the discussion which has taken place to-day, I will look into it very carefully. When these estimates were prepared in December last, I was told that the cost of living in the Yukon was still very high, and was fairly represented by the amount we allowed. Of course, I cannot speak from my own experience, as I have not been there ; but one of the gentlemen whom I consulted on the subject was connected with the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. HENDERSON. With reference to this increased cost of living in the Yukon, may I ask the minister if he knows the cause of it ? I understand that in the Yukon they are now producing grains and vegetables of the very best quality, and I fail to discover how it is that our officials there require so much compensation on account of the cost of living. I rather fear it is because of the extravagant habits they have got into, and I am not sure that this parliament is justified in cultivating those habits. Perhaps it would be wise to put a little check upon these officials, and ask them to live more as other people do.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of course, if grain and vegetables were grown in the Yukon to a sufficient extent to meet the local needs, I would agree with my hon. friend. But if he supposes that to be the case, his knowledge of the Yukon is about as imperfect as mine. That is not my information. For instance, I have been informed that $75 a month has to be paid for a maid servant ; and if everything else costs on the same scale, one can understand what living in the Yukon means.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the hon. minister's source of information is the government officials. Of course, that does not explain why domestic help is so expensive. When there is so much immigration coming to the country, perhaps the government can do something in the way of providing increased help there.

Mr. TAYLOR. I notice that there does not appear to be any regular scale of living allowance. The sheriff is allowed $1,800, and the police magistrate, who bears a good name—George L. Taylor—receives a salary of $2,400 and a living allowance, from September 9 to June 30, of $2,433.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The police magistrate receives $1,800 living allowance.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's Report says he receives $2,400.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That was before last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Besides that, he is paid $469 for a trip from Bothwell to Ottawa, and from Ottawa to White Horse.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When he went into the country, the expenses of getting into White Horse were allowed him.

Mr. SPROULE. Take the stenographer there. He gets $2,000 per year, which is the same price as a stenographer gets here, and the work is not so heavy. But in addition he gets $34 per week for living expenses. Take the deputy sheriffs, they get $34 per week for living expenses, over and above their salary of $150 per month. If you were adding ten or twenty per cent to the salaries for the increased cost of living, that would perhaps not be unreasonable, but when you double the salaries, I think you are paying too much. It cannot cost a man $34 more per week to live there than here.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not say that there is not a great deal in what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be the case, then the hon. minister had better look into it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. But we have the same thing every year. Although there is partial admission of the soundness of our criticism, still from procrastination or from some other cause, the government puts off applying any remedy and there is no improvement.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is an improvement. Formerly the sheriffs were paid salaries by way of fees, but a remedy has been applied. The question is whether $1,800 per year for living allowance is too much. My information is that it is a reasonable amount, but in view of what my hon. friend has said, I shall make further inquiries, and if I conclude that that is too much, I am not compelled to pay it. The vote simply puts a certain amount at the disposal of the government, but the government is under no obligation to pay it out. It is not a contract.

Mr. SPROULE. The vote is for a specific purpose, and I do not see how the hon. minister can get out of paying it. If we vote an amount for salary, we have to pay that out.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If a man is voted a certain salary then a bargain is entered into with him; but with respect to living allowance, that is an amount which is to be paid him in addition to his salary unless we come to the conclusion that it is too high and notify him that we will not pay it. He then has the option of taking what we offer or giving up his place.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). As regards the cost of living in the Yukon, let me quote a few items from the 'Dawson Times' of April the 3rd, 1903. Butter, 50 cents per pound; fresh eggs, $1.50 per dozen; cream cheese, 50 cents per pound; lard, 35 cents per pound; potatoes, 21 cents per pound; onions, 20 cents per pound; carrots, 20 cents per pound; beets, 20 cents per pound; apples, 9 to 10 cents; oranges, 25 cents; lemons, $1.50; flour, $4 per hundred pounds; rolled oats, 20 cents per pound; sugar, 15 cents per pound. Fresh meats: sausages, 50 cents per pound; beef, 30 to 75 cents per pound; pork, 43 to 50 cents; mutton, 35 to 60; veal, 35 to 75; poultry, 45 cents; turkeys, 40 to 50 cents; ducks, 40 cents; white fish, 50 cents; oysters, $1.50—I do not know per pound or not. Canned fruits and vegetables, canned tomatoes, which are retailed here at 10 cents, sell in Dawson at 50 cents; beans, 25 cents; canned peas, 25 cents. These are the retail prices in Dawson. Everything seems to sell at extraordinary prices compared with the prices in Ontario. Dried apples which we can buy in Ontario at three cents, are sold at Dawson at thirty cents; peaches, apricots and pears are sold at thirty cents. Pearl coal oil sells at $7, but I do not know whether it is $7 per gallon or not; oats, seven cents; hay 15 cents; bran, seven and a half cents.

This will give some idea of the cost of living in the Yukon. Of course this is in the month of April when things perhaps are higher than at any other season, but according to these quotations, it would cost a man twice, if not three times as much, to actually live in the Yukon as it would in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt it would cost him a good deal more, but the hon. gentleman has partially answered himself by referring to the fact that he has quoted the market when it is at its highest. But compare some of the items with Ontario prices. Butter sells at 50 cents in Dawson and at 25 cents here, which would indicate that in the staple articles of life, the cost is twice as high as it is here. But when we give these employees $34 per week for increased cost of living, it seems to me we are giving an extravagant sum. You can get your board here at $6 per week, and if you add $34 to that, you have $40 as the price of board per week up there, and no one will pretend to say that it would cost that much. While the cost of living is much dearer there than here, it is not dearer in proportion to the increased allowance we give these officials. The hon. minister says he is at liberty to cut down this item. But suppose he notified one of the employees that he intended cutting down his living allowance, and the employee went on doing his work to the end of the year and demanded his allowance for living expenses as now voted, I am inclined to think that the Auditor General would say that he was entitled to it. I do not think we could prevent it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That would be right.

Mr. SPROULE. That being the case, we ought to revise it. At the time this was struck I was going to mention that there were perquisites coming to these officers from many sources. I have no doubt that, with the salary, a liberal living allowance, and all these perquisites, we made their remuneration very high. And, as the cost of living comes down, we ought to reduce the allowance. But we are making no effort in that direction, so far as I know.

Mr. BOYD. I would like to ask the minister from whom the recommendation was received on which the allowances for expenses were based? Who recommended to council to make these allowances?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The position we took last year, when this was fixed, was that the cost of living in the Yukon was about three times the cost of living in eastern Canada. I did not follow closely the figures given by my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Ross), but I should think the cost would be quite three times what it is in the east. In any event, that is the basis on which we proceeded.

Mr. BOYD. I am glad the hon. minister has given that explanation, because it enables me to draw his attention and the attention of the government to a matter we discussed here last year. It seems to me there is a little government clique in the Yukon, and whatever they recommend or propose or desire they are able to have carried through. I drew the government's attention last year to the fact that men are working in the Yukon—not labourers or anything of that kind—at salaries of $100 and $150 a month, without any allowance, I refer to the telegraph operators. It will be found by the Auditor General's Report that these officers are paid only $150 a month. These gentlemen are not in the clique I mentioned, and, not being in this little particular family circle, they are not allowed this $1,800 to $5,000 a year for living expenses. They are men of intelligence, education and ability, and, besides, they have a craft at which one cannot become expert with less than from three to five years' training. I would ask the Minister of Justice if he thinks this is fair treatment for one body of men as compared with that meted out to the sheriff, the Crown prosecutor and others?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I should not like to be asked to express an opinion on what my colleagues may do; I have as much as I can take care of to answer the questions with regard to my own department. But I do not think it fair to assume that this rate of living has been fixed at the suggestion of those who are benefited by it. I may say that when the rate was to be struck last year, I considered what was being paid out then, and I thought it ought to be reduced very considerably. I consulted those who, I thought, ought to be in a position to help me, including officials whose experience in that country would be likely to be useful in enabling me to judge what it would cost to maintain a man in that region. After considering the whole matter, I came to a conclusion that I thought fair. It may be that I looked at it from the generous side—I will not say that I did not; it may be that it is my nature to do so. I think I dealt fairly with these people. I may have transgressed somewhat, but I am willing to be criticised and to consider any facts relating to the matter that may be brought to my knowledge. When the supplementary estimates are before us, this matter will come up again. In the meantime I can discuss the question with those who are in a position to know, and, in that way judge as to the correctness of the conclusions we have reached.

Mr. CLARKE. I regret that the Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock) was not here to hear the statement of my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) with regard to telegraph operators. These are skilled workmen, and, in view of the fact that they must devote a number of years to their training before they can become expert in their craft, it is only reasonable that this should be allowed for in fixing their remuneration. And, if a subordinate official receives from $1,200 to $1,800 per year for living allowance, surely the claims of the telegraph operators are deserving of consideration. The Minister of Labour or the fair wage officer ought to look into the matter.

Mr. LAVELL. Do I understand that this $5,000 of living allowance to the judges is not a matter of contract with the judges, but is within the discretion of the Department of Justice?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The position we took was that, under the statute, we would fix $5,000 a year as salary, and, with respect to the living allowance we would make that a matter of vote to be passed upon each year by parliament, so that each year we might reduce the allowance if we felt that the reduction of living expenses would justify it. That is not a matter of contract at all, but it is a provision made by parliament for the maintenance of these gentlemen during the ensuing fiscal year. At any time, I take it, we could come here and say: We will abolish the living allowance altogether, or we could simply omit the item from the estimates. Or we could say: In view of the altered conditions in the Yukon, instead of proposing to parliament to give $5,000, we will propose to give only $3,000 or $2,500. Of course, there is a statute to fix the salary.

Mr. LAVELL. But once the amount is passed in the estimates and fixed for the year by parliament, the judge is entitled to it as a matter of right?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. With regard to the amount for a judge, I would say that it would be difficult to interfere with it. But with respect to an official who is not in a position to be able to say that his position is permanent, I think we can say to him: Parliament has voted $1,800 for your living allowance, but I consider that excessive. I would be within my right to notify an official that, in addition to his salary, instead of $1,800 living allowance, he would be allowed $1,000 or $1,200. If this were done, it would be for him to decide whether he would remain in the employ of the government or not.

Mr. LAVELL. But, so far as the judge was concerned, does the minister think it would be a matter of question whether their allowance was within his discretion?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Clearly.

Mr. LAVELL. It seems to me that it is at variance with the principle of the independence of our judges to give the government control, practically over their salaries—for that is what it comes to. Most certainly, under these circumstances they cannot be as independent of the government of the day as—well, as the rest of the judges of the country are.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The judge is appointed by statute, and his remuneration is fixed by statute. In addition, he receives this amount, but that has nothing to do with his position.

Mr. LAVELL. Nothing to do with his position, but very much to do with his remuneration. As I said before, it seems to me that this is calculated to interfere very seriously with the independence of the bench, which is recognized as part and parcel of our very constitution. There are no other judges, so far as I am aware, whose salaries can be at all interfered with by the government of the day.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think my hon. friend has suggested a broad question in bringing this matter up. But it does not go any further than we have been in the habit of going when we appoint judges, for instance, to act as commissioners and vote them remunerations in addition to their salaries. All these questions are on the same line. When parliament undertakes to give additional remuneration to a judge for additional services, we get on the fringe of the independence of judges, as my hon. friend has pointed out. I remember some years ago reading an interesting article on the subject as to whether, when a judge had been appointed for the purpose of giving the whole of his time to the country, it was not unconstitutional for us to take him from the service, to the performance of which he was appointed under the statute, and employ him for some other purpose, or to give him any other remuneration whatever for that additional work. However, that is one of the broad questions that I think I would not like to discuss now without giving it careful consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. I think we might direct our attention for a moment to what has been said by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). The Minister of Justice pointed out that he has no direct control over this matter of the telegraph operators, but he tells us that his sympathies are in the line of generosity. I think we ought to enlist his sympathies on behalf of this class of persons. It is unfortunate that the Minister of Labour is not here. It would be satisfactory if we could get that hon. gentleman down to some practical action in relieving these parties who require in many instances the assistance of the Minister of Labour in order to get fair remuneration. We make a mistake in think- that because a man holds a pen, or fills some other position that requires no particular amount of intelligence, he should get a large salary, whereas a man in a mechanical occupation which requires a good deal of skill, where he requires to be constantly on the alert, should be paid much on the line of an ordinary labourer.

An hon. MEMBER. Less than a servant girl.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, because according to what the Minister of Justice has said, a servant girl gets $75 and her board up in the Yukon. There seems to me to be a great disparity between the pay of these two classes of individuals. I think the scale of wages should be revised up in the line of assisting the telegraph operators, and revised down as regards these officials whose living expenses we have been discussing.

Mr. SPROULE. When I total up the items for the administration of justice in the Yukon, I find they aggregate $123,800. That sum is spent in a country not as big as one of our ordinary counties. It seems extravagant, and ought to be reduced.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. By way of illustration, let me remark to the hon. gentleman that for the maintenance of prisoners in the North-west Territories we pay to the mounted police sixty cents per head per diem. But when you come to the Yukon the charge is $2 per head per diem. So you get some indication of the reason why the administration of justice is so costly in the Yukon Territory. These figures show the difference in the cost of living between the two countries.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that the living allowance for the sheriff had been fixed. What was it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. One thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will he explain why he paid $2,437.23 from September to June ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That was for last year finishing in the month of June. The $1,800 was fixed during last session.

Mr. TAYLOR. Could not the hon. gentleman have found a gentleman in the Yukon country suitable to be appointed police magistrate, without coming east and getting a man to whom he had to pay $461 to get him in there.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I don't think you could find a better man than Mr. Taylor.

Mr. TAYLOR. The name is all right. He must be some party who wanted a government office pretty bad, and the government thought the best way to get rid of him was to send him out to the Yukon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By chapter 36 of last year's statutes, we provided that the police magistrate may be paid, in addition to his salary, such living allowance as may be fixed by the Governor General in Council. Are all these fixed by Order in Council ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, and voted in the estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand how six of the judges were paid $3,000 living allowance according to the Auditor General's Report last year. Now we are to increase it to $5,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend will remember what occurred last year when these items were voted. We had a very interesting discussion with respect to the payments to Mr. Justice Dugas. At the time I contended strenuously that he had been paid nothing except what he had received by way of living allowance from the Department of Justice. A reference to the Auditor General's Report established the fact that he had been allowed by the Public Works Department certain perquisites in respect to a residence and other matters of that sort. Then the question arose whether it was proper for the Public Works Department to make this allowance. I explained a moment ago that it had been necessary for us to take a suit against Mr. Justice Dugas to recover back the money value of the perquisites he received from the Public Works Department, as a test question to ascertain whether he was entitled to receive these perquisites. Then we determined that the salary should be fixed at $5,000, and that the living allowance should be $5,000 each year—not $10,000 together, but in addition to the permanent salary of $5,000, we might give him from year to year a living allowance of $5,000 so as to be able at any time to reduce that allowance without interfering with the independence of the judges.

Mr. BOYD. I see in the Auditor General's Report, at M—54, that the Auditor General says :

An Order in Council passed May 31 last, increases the sheriff's salary from $2,000 to $3,000 per annum, his living allowance from $1,200 to $1,800 ; and in addition allows him to retain one half of the fees after paying remuneration and expenses of his deputy or deputies and other expenses.

Then a little further down :

During the summer of 1900, Sheriff Eilbeck was paid $2,751.37 by the Department of the Interior for fourteen days services as auctioneer at the sale of mining claims in the Yukon.

Now, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice and also that of the right hon. leader of the government to these items. We all know the generosity of the Minister of Justice because his nationality would not permit him to be otherwise, we know the generosity of the right hon. Prime Minister himself. We all admit that and we are pleased with it. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the great disparity that exists between one class of the employees of the government and another. The right hon. leader of the government, I have no doubt, puts in the exact farthing that it costs to maintain the mounted police. Under the department over which the hon. Minister of Justice presides it costs $2 a day to keep a convict. They do not feed these men as a rule on delicacies; at least, they are not supposed to. If it costs $2 a day to keep one of these ordinary convicts what about the poor man who gets $100 a month, pays out $60 for board and has $40 left ? In view of the fact that a member of that particular family is involved in the question, $2,751 for fourteen days work does not seem to be out of place. This government will allow it to pass unquestioned. I would like to draw the attention of these generous members of the cabinet to the position of the mounted police to see if they will not do something for these men who, I believe, are under paid.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to say that we have been guilty of being too economical. We will try and not do it again.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there no answer to make to the statement that the sheriff was paid this large sum as an auctioneer in addition to the salary he received for his ordinary work ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have nothing to say about that. It is a question as to whether or not the Department of the Interior ought to have paid the sheriff any fee for the service he rendered in connection with the sale of mining claims. He never received it from my department and I am not responsible for the payment.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister said : We will fix the salary of the sheriff at $3,000 and give him a living allowance, but he said nothing about retaining his fees. The Auditor General makes the statement of the receipts and disbursements of fees by the sheriff. The disbursements were as follows :—

North-west Mounted Police and others for serving papers.. .. ..$	406 00
J. M. Eilbeck, as deputy sheriff..	750 00
Retained by sheriff as his share of fees.	819 53
Deposited to credit of Receiver General..	819 53
Total..	$2,795 06

Now, some correspondence took place with the hon. gentleman's department in which the hon. minister's deputy, Mr. Newcombe, says :

The government is authorized to pay him a salary of $3,000 in addition to such fees of office as may be allowed by the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I thought I had made myself clear about that. Last year there was a change in the position of the sheriff. We made provision that the sheriff, instead of receiving, as he had been in the habit of receiving, a share of the fees in addition to his salary, should be paid a fixed salary of $4,000 and $1,800 living allowance. That was to take the place of the fees he had received heretofore and to avoid the difficulty which the Auditor General had pointed out. That arrangement took effect late in the year 1901 or in the early part of 1902.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did you also relieve the sheriff of the privilege of being employed by other departments and being paid $2,700 for his services as an auctioneer, while neglecting his duty as sheriff, working fourteen days and drawing $2,700 for it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Department of Interior made that payment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I observe that a question arose as to the collection of the fines, the correspondence in regard to which will be found in the Auditor General's Report at page M—59. The correspondence is in an unfinished condition as a reference is made to the Hon. Mr. Ross who was then the commissioner of the Yukon Territory, and it is said that the matter will be dealt with upon his return.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Are those the fines paid to the magistrates ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think so.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These have been paid over. The fact is that a magistrate there was of the opinion that he was entitled as part of his perquisites to receive these fines. I agreed with the position taken by the Auditor General and as a result the magistrate's cheque did not go out until he had paid these fines in.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is a very extraordinary view of the situation for a magistrate to take that he would be entitled to these fines.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He argued that he was entitled to receive a portion of the fines. I never had any doubt about the matter and it was speedily disposed of when it was brought to the attention of the deputy minister and myself.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. minister to say that he had stopped officers receiving perquisites or salary from any other source.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not say 'salary from any other source.' You have the services performed as auctioneer, for instance. I could not control that.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister think that the government should allow a practice like that to go on, if a sheriff gets $4,000 a year and which is supposed to pay him for all his time ? For fourteen days work auctioning off mining claims we paid him at the rate of $195 a day in addition to his salary ? Is that not an abuse, particularly when we consider that in addition to paying $4,000 a year salary we are giving him $1,800 for a living allowance ? That is $5,800 a year that he receives by way of salary and in addition for fourteen days work he gets $2,751. Does the government think this is good management or that it is not unreasonable extravagance and mismanagement of the funds of the country ? It seems to me that it is. If the sheriff is paid for every hour of his time surely he is not entitled to charge the country with a large sum of money in addition to his salary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule). The sheriff has statutory duties to perform. His duties are fixed and circumscribed by the statute. He is obliged to perform these duties and he is not obliged to perform any other. If he is called upon to perform the duties of an auctioneer, then, he can reasonably be dealt with as if he were a stranger. He is not under any obligation to sell these mining lands or to perform these duties ? If he does perform them is it not possible that he may be dealt with as any other stranger would be ? It is not part of his duties to sell them. If it were a stranger that was called upon to perform these duties would the stranger be entitled to receive this money ? What is the difference between them, and why should he not be employed as an auctioneer, not with respect to the Department of Justice but with respect to the Department of the Interior which has no control over him and no command over his services ? That is the answer as it occurred to me, but I would like at the same time to make it clear that I am not undertaking to be responsible for what anybody else may have done. I find that my road is as hard a one as I want to travel to explain my own short-comings.

Mr. SPROULE. As the result of a very long inquiry in 1891, we found that many officials were receiving pay from different sources, and they set up the same justification for that as the minister now presents to the House. They said that having discharged their duty to their own department, they could sell their spare time to other departments without any injustice to the service or to the country. We found that civil servants were obtaining money from different departments while they were paid what was considered an ample salary for the services they rendered to a particular department. That was declared to be an abuse, and it was stopped. The law was amended so that if a civil servant were paid anything in addition to his salary under the Civil Service Act, it should appear in the estimates each year, and parliament if satisfied that such extra payment was justified, could then vote it after deliberation. Here we have the same abuse cropping up again, and we have the Minister of Justice giving the same justification for it as was given by the civil servants at that time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not justify it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Justice is not responsible from a departmental point of view, because this is not in his department, but the responsibility of one minister is not confined to the minister himself. It seems extraordinary to pay $2,751 for fourteen day's work to any man, but when you find that that amount is paid to a sheriff who is in receipt of an annual salary, it does require an explanation from some member of the government who is familiar with the circumstances. We should know who was discharging the duties of the sheriff during these fourteen days when he earned a sum equal to about two-thirds of his annual salary of $4,000. It may be that the sheriff is not bound to perform these services for the Department of the Interior, but if he does he should perform them for a reasonable amount. We are entitled to an explanation from the Department of Justice as to whether the sheriff was discharging the duties of his office during these fourteen days, because I suppose if the sheriff could earn $198 a day by conducting auction sales, he must have given his whole time to that particular work. Why, the remuneration which he received from the Department of the Interior was at the rate of $70,000 a year. I can hardly believe that possible ; surely this amount must include disbursements or something of that kind.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are there no disbursements ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know. I cannot find out. I am not surprised that the Minister of Justice cannot tell us, but some member of the government should be able to explain what seems to be an extraordinary condition of affairs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is there any explanation given in the report ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is what the Auditor General's Report says :

> During the summer of 1900, Sheriff Eilbeck was paid $2,751.37 by the Department of the Interior for fourteen days' service as auctioneer at the sale of mining claims in the Yukon.

That was paid to a salaried officer of this government ; an officer who is receiving $4,000 a year as salary and $1,800 for living allowance. We ought to have some explanation of that transaction.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This item was paid in 1900, and therefore it would not come up in a discussion on the estimates of the Interior Department, but I am quite willing that this particular item should stand over, and I will get the best information I can. I recognize that something should be said about it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is perfectly fair.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the minister give us information also as to on what basis deputy clerks and assistant sheriffs and stenographers and so on, are paid a living allowance at the rate of $150 a month, while telegraphers in the employ of the government in the Yukon are receiving no allowance at all.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It was understood that this question of the living allowance would be resumed on the supplementary estimates, and I will then endeavour to deal with my own responsibility as to the question of the living allowances paid to the officials under my control.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Justice has suggested that the cost of living is perhaps three times as much in the Yukon as it is in the east. The Yukon judges get exactly the same salary as that paid to judges in this part of Canada, and out of which the judges here are required to meet their own expenses. That certainly presents an anomaly. If the judges in the east had a living allowance of $1,700 a year each, then according to the view of the Minister of Justice, they would only be in the position which the Yukon judges now occupy. It, therefore, seems to me that some further consideration of these living allowances is necessary. I also recognize what my hon. friend (Mr. Lavell) has said as to the undesirability, on general principles, of having what is virtually the salary of judges, fixed by Order in Council so far as one-half of it is concerned. I do not think that is a very good principle to adopt, or one that should be persevered in any longer than is absolutely necessary. I understand the reason why these living allowances were given in the first instance. It was suggested that if you fixed a salary measured by the cost of living in the Yukon, you might have that salary fixed for all time, and, therefore, it was better, until the conditions of living in the Yukon became normal, that you should pay a salary and a living allowance as well. The question is whether the cost of living is not now approaching what will be the normal level for some years to come. If this is the case, speaking for myself, I should be in favour of fixing the salary and abolishing the living allowance, not only for judges, but for all other officials in that country. However, I understand that the matter will come up again when the supplementary estimates are before the House.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The difficulty we found ourselves in was this, that if we fixed the salary of a judge at say $10,000, that would be fixed for all time. The conditions in the Yukon might at any time become normal, and we could not explain how it was that we paid so large a salary. There is also this to be considered. The residences of these judges may not be permanent. It may be considered advisable at some time to take a judge from the Yukon and bring him to the North-west Territories. In that event, with this large salary, his position would be anomalous, and not fair to the other judges. So, under all the circumstances, while I agree that the conditions are not normal, and should not be continued for a day longer than it is possible to prevent them, this is the best solution I have been able to arrive at, that we should keep parliamentary control over these living allowances, and be in a position to regulate them each session.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has asked that this item stand until he can get some information with regard to the large payment made to Sheriff Eilbeck by the Department of the Interior. Will he bring down information as to the time that money was paid by the Department of the Interior, the time Mr. Eilbeck received leave of absence to leave the Yukon and come down to Ontario, and the date of the bye-election in West Durham, which was at the same time as he was granted leave of absence, and may have had some connection with it. Perhaps there will be some explanation why he was paid this large sum of $2,700 for fourteen days' work in the fact that he camped down in the town of Bowmanville during that election.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. And if there is no connection, what will my hon. friend undertake to do ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, there is a connection all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We still undertake to say that it is a pretty high sum to pay for fourteen days' work.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call the minister's attention to a matter which I think requires immediate consideration. We have from the minister the fact that a lawsuit is pending against a gentleman who has acted very badly, a gentleman who was originally appointed to his position by the government, and we know that lawsuits are expensive. It is important, therefore, that the minister should carefully consider whether there is any reasonable ground for expecting that this lawsuit will be successful; because if it is not, it will only have this result, that it will be expensive to the government and that the only person who will reap a reward will be some friend of the government who may be employed in prosecuting it. My reason for directing the minister's attention to the matter is this : He tells us that a year or two ago the judges were receiving a living allowance of $3,000 a year from his department, and that they were also receiving from the Public Works Department certain perquisites which brought their full allowance up to $5,000, or perhaps more. Now, I wish the minister to take into consideration whether, in view of these facts, there is any reasonable prospect of success in this suit. We have one minister allowing $3,000 for living allowance, and another making certain allowances by way of rent, fuel, &c., towards the living expenses of the judge. How can we expect, under these circumstances, the allowances having been concurred in and probably originating with the ministry, that that same government bringing action can possibly succeed ? I do not think the attention of the Minister of Justice has been directed to that point, or I imagine that with his astuteness he would hardly expect to succeed. I believe the suit cannot be undertaken with the object of getting back this ill-gotten gain for the government, and, therefore, I have great confidence in submitting the matter to the Minister of Justice for consideration.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I may say to the hon. gentleman in all seriousness that I have carefully considered the question, and here is the way it appears to me : No man, whether a judge or an official of any other kind, is entitled to receive anything from the public exchequer, unless it has been authorized by statute. In this matter the Department of Justice was authorized to pay Judge Dugas a certain amount by way of salary, and a certain amount by way of living allowance. The Department of Public Works, when the judge went in there, gave him certain assistance in connection with his going in, provided him with transportation, a house, fuel, light, and other perquisites. The question arises as to the authority of the Department of Public Works to do anything of the sort. It had no statutory authority to do it. The judge, on the other hand, says : These perquisites which I received, and the money value of which you ask me to refund, were paid to me under a contract which I entered into at the time with the government, as represented by the Minister of Public Works ; the Minister of Public Works agreed to supply me with these requisites. The question comes back to the authority of the Minister of Public Works. The Auditor General came to the conclusion that the remedy was in his hands, and that all he had to do was to stop the monthly cheque payable to the judge, on the ground that he being indebted to the Crown and the Crown being indebted to him, he had the authority to stop the cheque. That appeared to me to be a rather high-handed proceeding, in view of the plea set up by the judge that if there were laches, the government were partly responsible for them. We have determined to try the suit with the judge and endeavour to get back these moneys, we urging that the Department of Public Works had no authority to make these advances, and the judge, on the other hand contending—I have not yet seen his defence—that the Department of Public Works, as a department of the government, made a contract with him, and that if he had not received that consideration he would not have gone in at all. There is the case, and I need not attempt to foreshadow the result. I have stated the facts and the law as I understand it, and my hon. friend must be content to let the decision remain with the judge of the Exchequer Court, always bearing in mind the proverbial uncertainty of the law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely there is an anomaly which must have presented itself to the Minister of Justice, that the Minister of Public Works had the statutory authority or he could not have paid the money.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is what I was trying to say.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. With the checks we have provided against any expenditure, unless authorized by the legislature, and with the Auditor General, how could the minister possibly spend the money without the statutory authority of parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. As this is an important case, might I ask who is acting for the Crown.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am under the impression that we drew the information ourselves, but I must confess that I did not want to take the responsibility of pressing the suit myself, as we had been in the habit of doing, through the action of the Deputy Minister of Justice, but handed it over to Mr. Chrysler or Mr. McDougall, I do not remember which. The information however was draughted by the deputy minister, and there is no man more competent to do it.

Mr. LENNOX. I quite appreciate the force of what the hon. Minister of Justice has said. He puts an entirely new feature of the matter before the committee. I had no reason to apprehend that there was so great an irregularity as is disclosed by what the hon. minister has told us, but even should the suit result disastrously as to costs, if it is shown that the government may be estopped by the action of its ministers, that will be a useful piece of information for the country, and we will probably not be paying too high a price for it.

Some resolutions reported.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) moved that Mr. Clare be appointed a member of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts in the place of Mr. Ganong.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at six p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1903.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

JUDGES RETIRING ALLOWANCES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, and to provide as follows :—

1. If any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of any Superior Court in Canada, resigns his office, His Majesty may, by letters patent, under the great seal, reciting such judge's age and period of service, grant unto him an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his resignation ; to commence immediately after his resignation, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life, provided such judge has (a) attained the age of seventy-five years, and continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts, or as such judge, and as stipendiary magistrate of the North-west Territories, for twenty years or upwards ; or (b) attained the age of seventy years and continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for twenty-five years or upwards ; or (c) continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for thirty years or upwards.

2. Every County Court judge who has attained the age of seventy-five years shall be compulsorily retired ; and His Majesty may, by letters patent, under the great seal, reciting such judge's age and period of service, grant unto him an annuity, if he has continued in office as such judge for twenty-five years or upwards, equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement ; or if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period, equal to two-thirds of such salary ; the said annuity to commence immediately after his retirement, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

SUPPLY—TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, I would like to bring to the attention of the government a matter of some importance, and as to which I think there should be some announcement of policy by the government at the very earliest possible moment. In the speech from the Throne we find this passage :

The great influx of population into our North-western Territories and the very large additional areas of fertile lands which are being brought under cultivation, combine to further press upon us the need for increased transportation facilities for the forwarding of our grain and other products to the markets of the world, through Canadian channels. The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy much attention, and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

That speech was delivered to parliament nearly eleven weeks ago, and up to the present time we have had no announcement of policy, and no commission has yet been appointed. The utmost we have been able to obtain in the way of information on this subject is from one of the ministers of the Crown, some four or five weeks ago, who announced in the city of Montreal that certain gentlemen were to compose this commission. But there was some question as to whether he announced that as a matter that had been determined upon, or merely as a sort of prophecy with regard to the gentlemen who would probably occupy places upon that commission. The last information we have on the subject is from the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and who told us some few days ago that the terms of the commission were being settled in the Department of Justice. Now, it seems to me that under present conditions the House and the country are entitled to some information as to what the policy of the government is with regard to this matter.

The matter mentioned in the speech from the Throne is one of very great moment to this country, we are all agreed upon that. There are being brought into cultivation in the west large areas of land, the product of grain in the great west is increasing very rapidly, and we are glad to know that a very large and increasing immigration is pouring into that country. At the present time we have more than one scheme brought to the attention of parliament for the purpose of supplying these increased transportation facilities that have been referred to, and one of the companies proposing to engage in that work is at present having its Bill considered by the Railway Committee. I understand that throughout the country this is a subject of much discussion. We know that the Bill I refer to has occupied the attention of the Railway Committee for more than one session. It is necessarily a matter that must engage our attention, and upon which we should have some information in this House. It has been announced in the public press, and it has been announced by no less a person than the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, that the government propose to give aid to at least one of these transcontinental lines. It is probably the most important measure with regard to transportation in this country that has ever been brought to the attention of parliament since the time when the Bill relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway came before parliament. Inquiries are being made on every hand as to what the policy of the government is with regard to this transcontinental line. We have one minister of the Crown, the hon. the Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock), announcing that so far as he is concerned his policy is to build a government line from Montreal to Winnipeg. We have another very important member of the cabinet, the hon. the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair), who announces to the country that his policy is to build a government railway directly through to the Pacific coast. But in the meantime the government do not seem disposed to give us any information on the subject.

Now, there is a strong feeling in the country, and particularly in the maritime provinces, and one that the government should especially keep in mind, that the country should insist on guarantees that the termini of any road to which government assistance is given shall be within the limits of the Dominion of Canada. Public meetings have been held, boards of trade have passed resolutions, municipal bodies have passed resolutions, not only in the maritime provinces, but throughout the length and breadth of Canada, insisting on this condition. Indeed, I am led to mention this matter to the House now because of a resolution which has just been placed in my hands passed by the Halifax Board of Trade, and which I will take the liberty of reading to the House. This resolution was passed on the 23rd of May instant; at least it is dated 23rd May:

> Whereas, application has been made to the federal government for a charter to build a line of railway known as the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, from Quebec to Port Simpson, or Bute Inlet on the Pacific coast (said line to run south of Lake Winnipeg), and no provision has been made in application for the shipment of the traffic originating on said line through the maritime province ports in the winter season.
> And whereas, members of parliament representing maritime province constituencies at Ottawa, have urged that the charter be granted only on the condition that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company agrees to build the line from the Pacific coast to the town of Moncton, N.B.
> Therefore resolved, that this board approves of the stand taken by the representatives from the maritime provinces.
> And further resolved, that this board protests against government assistance of any kind being granted to any transcontinental railway unless a distinct and binding condition is enforced that said railway shall be built entirely on Canadian territory, and its export and import traffic shall be through Canadian termini, and that the rates of freight charged by said railway shall be as low via the ports of St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., as rates charged via any port on the Atlantic seaboard.
> And further resolved, that if aid is asked from the Canadian government by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway the interests of the maritime provinces should be safeguarded by compelling this railway company to commence the construction of the eastern portion of its line at Moncton, N.B., and complete it as far as the city of Quebec (or the bridge where connection is made with that city) concurrently with the commencement and completion of the western portion of the line.
> And whereas, the route from Quebec to the Pacific coast, running north of Lake Winnipeg, would in our opinion best serve the interests of the province of Quebec and of the maritime provinces, and open up for settlement a new and valuable part of the Dominion.
> Therefore resolved, that the government be urged to adopt this route for any new transcontinental railway company, seeking government assistance.
> This board also desires to express its opinion that the interests of Canada demand that the Intercolonial Railway be extended to the grain producing centres of the west, thus rendering it independent of other railway lines for its traffic.

I am informed that a somewhat urgent telegram has been sent from the board of trade, I think, in St. John, to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) to the following effect:

Unless the Grand Trunk Pacific build their line through to some maritime province port we believe the export business will continue to go through an American port as in the past.

Mr. Hays rightly says shippers can route freight as they please and if the Grand Trunk are interested in route via Portland, shippers can be easily influenced to route practically every ton of export freight that way.

We cannot believe that any arrangement can be made between Intercolonial and Grand Trunk which will prevent this.

We urge in the strongest terms that no government assistance be granted to any transcontinental railway that does not undertake to build their line through to some maritime province port.

I must confess, that, having regard to the conditions as they are in Canada at the present time in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway, I have not been able to reach a conclusion that such guarantees as have been spoken of in the press and in these resolutions, can be very easily enforced or carried out. I should be glad indeed to see the Grand Trunk Railway taking its part in the solution of Canadian transportation problems, and I hope it will be able to do so, but we have to consider conditions as they are and we know that the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway to a very considerable extent are, of course, centred in a winter port in the United States in which it has expended a very large amount of money in terminals and shipping facilities. The subject is one that I have not been able to consider carefully or attentively, and I am not professing to express an opinion upon it at the present moment, but, be that as it may, I think the House and the country are entitled to hear from the government an announcement in regard to this very important subject. Is the government in a position at the present time to say to the House and the country in what way it proposes to deal with this transportation problem? Is it able to disclose to the House and the country any really comprehensive national policy by means of which it may be able to deal with this question of transportation in the west and in the east also? We know that not only in the west of Canada, but in the east of Canada as well, it is of the utmost possible importance to the people, it is vital to the interests of the people that they should have means of transporting their products to the foreign market equally as cheap and equally as available as those which are enjoyed by their competitors to the south of us, and we know that it is otherwise impossible for our people in the east or in the west to compete on fair conditions with their chief competitors, the people of the United States of America.

Now, has the government any policy upon this matter which it is prepared to disclose to the people of this country, and if it has not any policy at the present time when may we expect that its policy shall be announced to the country?

It is some eleven weeks since this session began. It is no new question. Transcontinental lines have been engaging the attention of the people of Canada for a year at least. During last session it was currently said that great pressure was placed upon the government for the purpose of inducing it to grant aid to a proposed transcontinental railway and the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made a statement in the House during the latter days of the session in which he announced, as far as I recollect his language, that the government would come to a conclusion in regard to the matter at an early day, but that they were not able at that time to make any announcement to the House.

There are some interesting problems in connection with the transcontinental railway question at the present time. There are some interesting questions arising in connection with it. For example, has the government at the present time determined whether or not it will grant assistance to a transcontinental railway, and if it has decided to grant any such assistance is it prepared to state what form that assistance shall take? I think this is a matter upon which it is right that the House and the country should be informed while this Bill, to which I have alluded, is under consideration by the railway committee.

In the next place, has the government any policy in regard to the construction of an additional line from Winnipeg north of Lake Superior so as to connect with the east? This is a subject which is discussed very much in the public press at the present time, and it is one of the gravest possible importance to the country. Has the government come to any conclusion as to whether or not the congestion in the west can in any way be relieved by the construction of another line north of Lake Superior? Is it a fact, as has been stated in the public press and as has been stated, I think, by public men in this country, that the present line which runs north of Lake Superior does not command one-fifth, or even one-tenth, of the traffic which it would be capable of handling, and if that be a fact does the government seriously think that the building of another line north of Lake Superior will in any way relieve the difficulties with which transportation between the east and west is confronted at the present time? Whether or not the government has any policy, or any ideas upon this subject I do not know, but it does seem clear, speaking with all deference, that this is a subject upon which the government should have made up its mind before this, and it is a subject upon which it should have been prepared to state to the House and to the country what it intends doing.

Has the government any policy in regard to the proposition of my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), who seems to adopt the view that the best solution of the difficulty is to build a line which can be used in common by all railways between Port Arthur and the east, or between Winnipeg and the east, and in that way assist in bringing the produce of the west to the east at such rates as will enable our people in the west to compete on fair terms with the people of the United States ?

And let me ask this, especially : What guarantees or safeguards does the government think necessary, or efficient for the purpose of seeing that traffic over any transcontinental railway to which assistance shall be afforded shall be carried from the east to the west of Canada through Canadian routes and shall leave Canada for the markets of Europe by Canadian ports ? What is the policy of the government with regard to that ? Does the government regard that as a sound policy, and if so, in what way does the government expect to meet the difficulty pointed out by the telegram from St. John which I have read to the House, and which, quoting the language of Mr. Hays, says : Traffic must be routed in accordance with the wishes of the shippers. I think we might even go further than the business men of St. John have gone. Suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway should construct its line to the maritime provinces; suppose that it made connection with a port in the maritime provinces, what guarantee can you have, what safeguard can you have that the traffic from our Canadian west shall go through Canadian routes and via Canadian seaports.

Lastly, but not the least by any means ; why is it that the government has so long delayed the proposal which they laid before the House and before the country at the opening of the session ; why is it that they have so long delayed the formation of this commission on transportation. If we are to have in Canada any broad comprehensive policy of transportation, it seems to me that the government must call to its assistance the very best experts with regards to such matters that this continent can produce. It is not any ordinary problem that confronts the government of this country at the present time with regard to transportation, and so we understand from the speech from the Throne :

> The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy our attention and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

If what we hear through the press, the organs of public opinion which are in very close touch with the government ; if what we hear is true, the government proposes to deal with this question without obtaining the slightest assistance from the commission which is proposed to be formed; indeed it would appear that the government is likely to deal with the matter even before the commission has undertaken its work.

I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that on a question of this kind which touches the whole future history of the transportation question of this country, the government ought not to take any leap in the dark, it ought not to take any step at haphazard. If the government proposes to appoint a commission it should have appointed that commission long ago, and that commission should have been at work dealing with and studying the very problems of transportation which are now confronting the government. I submit that whether the government proposes to deal with the matter in that way or not, it is highly right and proper at this stage, when a very important measure is engaging the attention of a committee of this House, that the government should give to the country some indication of what its intentions are with regard to this matter, and should thus enable the House and the country to deal with the question of transportation between east and west in a more intelligent way than it otherwise could. I think therefore, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances, I am justified in asking the Prime Minister to take the House and the country into his confidence with regard to this matter, and to make that announcement of policy which it seems to me should have been made long ago in this session which has already occupied nearly three months ; and to state to us fully and frankly what we are to expect from the government in the shape of a policy on a question of so much importance to the most vital interests of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to express my regret that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) did not give me any notice of his intention to bring before the House such an important question as this. I would have been able to give him more information than I feel warranted in doing at this moment had he given notice, but at all events, I shall endeavour, though it be on the spur of the moment, to give to hon. gentlemen all the information to which they are entitled on this question which is no doubt of very great moment. In my humble judgment, the transportation question under existing conditions, resolves itself into three different parts. First of all there is the question of water transportation, chiefly connected with the terminals. Then there is the transportation question for the new and rapidly growing settlements in the prairie sections ; and then there is the question of transportation from the prairie sections to the seaboard. With regard to the first, this is the question which we had chiefly in our minds when at the opening of parliament we declared that the transportation question was engaging our attention, and that we intended to appoint a commission to deal with the subject. We have been carrying on works of great magnitude at all parts of our great water system, in order to develop it and to make the transportation of the products of the west, and of the products going from the east to the west cheaper to the producer and to the consumer. We have works on the great lakes ; we have works on the St. Lawrence ; we have works at Port Arthur and Fort William, and it is possible that we may require some more. We have works at the head of canal navigation at Port Colborne which are now under construction ; we have works in the city of Montreal which have been carried on both by the Harbour Commission there and by the government ; we have works at Sorel and Three Rivers carried on by the government ; we have works at Quebec and we have also extensive works in St. John, New Brunswick. Now, I think it may be said that all these works have been carried on, not under any general system, but chiefly from the local point of view of each particular place. We deem it of the greatest importance to have, if possible, all these different works carried on under a general comprehensive system. Before we ask for more money to be expended upon them, we think that it is advisable to have the report of a commission of the best experts that we have in the country in order that we may be able to lay before parliament at this session or next session a comprehensive plan, as to what should be done in these different localities or in other localities in order to meet the object in view. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that the commission has been organized, and not later than to-morrow its terms will be laid on the Table of the House. I may say now that the commission is composed of men of great experience whose names will I think command the confidence of the country. Sir William Van Horne is one, and Mr. John Bertram and Mr. Harold Kennedy of Quebec are the others. As to Sir William Van Horne it is useless for me to say anything. His experience, his great ability and talents will at once command the confidence of the country, and I believe it will be admitted that no better selection could have been made. I am sorry to say, however, that I am not yet sure if we can secure the services of Sir William Van Horne for this important work. He is engaged in so many other enterprises that it is doubtful whether he will be able to engage in the work of the commission. At all events we are using our best efforts to induce him if possible to take charge of this commission as we intended that he should do. Mr. John Bertram is one of the great merchants and ship-builders of the province of Ontario, and next to Sir William Van Horne I think that no better man could have been selected for the position. We have been informed that Mr. Harold Kennedy who is an experienced and extensive ship-owner in the city of Quebec cannot undertake the work of the commission as we intended, and we propose to replace him by Mr. Fry of the city of Quebec, who is Lloyd's agent there, and who is a man of great experience in the shipping business. The commission will be laid on the Table of the House to-morrow, and my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will be able to judge whether or not its terms are sufficient to meet his views. I think myself that they will be found not only to be sufficient, but extremely practical, and that they will form the basis of what I trust will be a very valuable report.

There is another feature of the system of transportation to be considered. At the present time the west is filling very rapidly. Next year the valley of the Saskatchewan will be one of the greatest producing areas of the country. It is of immediate necessity therefore that another artery in the form of a railway should be built in order to afford the settlers not only an outlet for their products, but a means of bringing in what they require from the eastern provinces. Probably this week, certainly at an early day, it will be the duty of the government to lay on the Table of the House certain resolutions with regard to this railway. But apart from that, there is another scheme which has been engaging the attention of the House and the country at large. It is generally accepted, I believe, at the present time, that we must have another trunk line to connect the producing centres of the prairies with the tidal waters of the east. This is the point which my hon. friend had chiefly in view when he spoke a moment ago. I may say to my hon. friend at once that the government are not connected, though he implied that they were, with any scheme which has been proposed. We are considering the matter, but I am not prepared to say that we can at this moment lay on the Table the conclusions at which we have arrived; but we shall deem it our duty to do so before the session is over. If we are not prepared at the present moment to lay on the Table of the House the conclusions at which we have arrived, we cannot be accused of dilatoriness. The scheme is a new one. It has only recently been launched. My hon. friend says that I referred to another transcontinental railway scheme last session. My hon. friend is in error.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not say with regard to this particular company ; I said with regard to transcontinental railways.

The PRIME MINISTER. It was not with regard to transcontinental railways, but with regard to railways from the east to the new and rapidly settling districts of the Northwest. Our policy in that matter is prepared; and we shall be able to place it on the Table of the House probably this week, at any rate at an early day. The proposition to have another transcontinental railway is a new idea, and it behooves the government not to launch too rapidly upon its consummation or to come too hastily to a conclusion with regard to it. I may say to my hon. friend that the government are not prepared to say that on that subject they have settled on this or that policy; but we are prepared to give at once to the House the salient ideas which we think should be kept in view in carrying out this new proposition. The first idea is that such a line must be exclusively on Canadian territory, from tidal water to tidal water, that is to say, eventually to connect the waters of the Pacific with the waters of the Atlantic; and that the first point at which it would reach tidal water at the east would be the city of Quebec in summer and Halifax or St. John, or both, in winter time. My hon. friend rather assumed that the government were committed to the scheme of the Grand Trunk. I may say that the government are not committed to the scheme of the Grand Trunk nor to any other scheme; but we say that if we are to have another transcontinental railway—and it may be that we should have to take steps in this direction during this very session—the salient idea which ought to guide our minds, and on which I believe we can command the support of the House, is that that road must be built exclusively on Canadian territory and afford the cheapest possible route to the east for the products of the west. My hon. friend asked what guarantee we had that the trade would not be diverted to American ports. I may say to my hon. friend that this is a subject which will be discussed with more propriety when we come before parliament with any proposition. At the present time perhaps it is premature to say how we can bind any company or any undertaking of that kind in such a way as to make it absolutely under any and every possible circumstance, that the trade should not be diverted from our own channels to American channels. Whenever we should lay any proposition before parliament on this subject, we shall do the best we can by legislation to ensure that object; but I have very little hope that any legislation which this parliament could place on the statute-book would ensure the result which my hon. friend and I have equally at heart, if we had to rely on legislation alone. It is always easy for lawyers, such as my hon. friend is, and as I was at one time——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I hope my hon. friend has not left the profession.

The PRIME MINISTER——to legislate on such matters; but even railways have sometimes found it not easy to carry it out. But there is another way of guiding the railways so that every pound of traffic shall go through Canadian channels; it is to take advantage of our geographical position, and to make sure that such a line would be the cheapest and the shortest between the Pacific ocean and the Atlantic ocean at the city of Quebec. A line of that character should run from the city of Quebec north of the mountains and on west to the prairies. With such a line we should have solved the problem, because we should have provided the shortest route from the Pacific ocean and the prairies of the west to the tidal waters of the Atlantic ocean. I am not prepared to say, however, how that line is to be built. Three propositions have been made to us, and between them we should have to choose. It has been suggested to us that the government should own and operate a railway itself, just as we do the Intercolonial railway. It has been suggested also that the government shouud build a railway and not operate it, but lease it or give it to any lines which would take charge of it. It has also been suggested to us that we should subsidize and give assistance to any of the companies now seeking aid. There are three companies seeking aid—the Trans-Canada, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk. I may say to the House that the government have not made up their minds to any one of these schemes—whether they will be prepared to aid this one or that one, or any one at all. The question is under consideration, and requires a good deal of consideration before any conclusion is come to. The field is open to all. I may say this much, however, to dispel some anxiety which exists in the minds of a good many people, that if the government make up their mind to give assistance to some company, it cannot be in the form of a land subsidy. The subsidy must be given in some other form. More than this I do not know that I can say at present. But I may say, before sitting down, that no conclusion will be come to before we shall have an ample opportunity of discussing the matter with those who do the government the honour of giving it their support.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that the weakness of the government's position is this, that an intimation was given to the House in the speech from the Throne at the opening of the session that a commission would be appointed immediately. After we have been here ten weeks, we have the announcement that a commission has been appointed or is about to be appointed. But, if I am not mistaken, the government intimated in the beginning of the session that this commission would be appointed in time to make inquiry and report to the House before the session closed. But certainly if the commission be only appointed to-day, it will be utterly impossible for it to report to the House before prorogation. The right hon. gentleman tells us that the commission will be appointed immediately. What does he mean by immediately ? Ten weeks have elapsed, and it has not yet been appointed.

The right hon. gentleman also told us that the transportation problem consisted of three important links : First, water stretches and harbours ; second, eastward to the seaboard; and third, an important space which must be built up by railway. I presume, then, no scheme can be the very best which will not embrace all those different portions and dove-tail them into each other so as to work in one harmonious whole. But no such scheme can be framed until the information which the commission is intended to gather is in the hands of the government.

Have the government proposed a policy on any portion of the scheme for a transcontinental line, on which, we are told in the press, week after week, the government intends giving us information ? But should a decision be arrived at without any definite knowledge on the part of the government, such decision cannot be in the best interests of the country. The government are face to face with a choice between two things. They must either bring down an immature scheme this session or await the inquiry and report of the commission. There are three schemes mooted—Grand Trunk Railway scheme, the Canadian Northern, and the Trans-Canada Railway. The government have not given us any information as to which one of these it will take up or whether it will take up any of them or not. They are therefore misleading some of the companies or the companies are misleading the country. The Grand Trunk Railway have certainly given the people to understand that their scheme has been practically adopted by the government. The president of that company wired home to his directors that the Grand Trunk Railway scheme will undoubtedly be carried out without any additional burden being imposed on the company. If that means anything, it means that the government are prepared to give the Grand Trunk Railway ample assistance to carry out their project. Is that correct or not ? Has the president of the Grand Trunk Railway misled his own directors, or are the government misleading the company, or are both the Grand Trunk Railway and the government misleading the country ? It is important that the House should have information on this question at an early day, because if brought down at a late day, it cannot be maturely considered and the worst results are likely to be the outcome. The government should come to a decision and inform the House without delay. If they wait for the railway resolutions, which are usually passed through the House at the dying stages of the session, that information will be received too late to be of any practical utility. If the government have any policy on this very important question, they should give that policy to the House and country at the earliest possible day. The House ought to be in a position to deal with any such policy intelligently, but if the government should spring such a policy on this country when it is too late to give it full and careful consideration, they will be doing considerably less than they ought to do.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART (South Lanark). I am very much interested, Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of this important question. I agree with the right hon. the leader of the government that it is one of the utmost importance. It is the most important that has engaged the attention of this House for a number of years. This question divides itself, as my right hon. friend has said, into three sections : The prairie, the lake and river, and the section connecting with the maritime provinces. I wish this House to remember that all grain exported from the North-west will seek the shortest route to Lake Superior, because it can be carried down thence to the place where it can be consumed, either in American or European markets, cheaper by water than it possibly can by rail. All railways that are carrying western products to the east try to secure the shortest possible route to the head of Lake Superior. The Canadian Northern Railway has done it, the Canadian Pacific Railway are doing it, and any railway which carries the surplus products of the North-west and Manitoba will get to that point as quickly as possible. We have in the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has a route from Winnipeg to Lake Superior, a line of route as good as it is possible to get from the western prairies to Lake Superior—a line with low gradients and built at an immense cost to our people. Coming eastward, the grades are about twenty-six and a half feet per mile, and going westward fifty-two feet per mile. It has an even roadbed, well constructed and capable of carrying three times as much as is carried from the west to the seaboard. We have besides another route, the Canadian Northern, which goes partially through American territory, connecting now with Port Arthur. It is not perhaps quite finished or in a proper state for carrying products, but I think it will be shortly. Then that part of our transportation policy will be accomplished, namely, to get all the routes we possibly can, with the easiest gradients to the head of Lake Superior. There will be no grain of any account carried on any road constructed to Quebec or Montreal, or St. Johns, or Halifax, because such a road would compete with other lines which connect with the waterways and reach the Atlantic. Any grain that is carried down that route, and over the Intercolonial Railway will be carried at a loss to the country—the people will get no return in any respect. We carry grain from Quebec to St. John and from Quebec to Halifax at an expense to the country, and it will be the same in carrying it from Winnipeg to Quebec, if it is carried to compete with grain going by the Canadian Northern or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other routes through the North-western States that reach Lake Superior. The very quickest all-rail route from the North-western to the seaboard would not at all compete with the route which goes in part by waterway.

Mr. CHARLTON. How about the winter?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I dealt with that in the remarks I made a couple of years ago. I showed the advantage the water route had over the all rail route. I showed that it amounted to from one cent to one and a half cents a bushel. I am not going over that again, but I assert it to be a fact that cannot be controverted that grain that reaches the head of Lake Superior and is carried eastward by the water route has the advantage over grain carried by any all rail route that it is possible to construct across the continent of America.

As to the traffic going westward, it may be necessary to build a road from Quebec to the north, not necessarily a competing line with those which we already have and which we have subsidized: the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would favour the route proposed by the right hon. Prime Minister, keeping it as near as possible to the height of land and running, perhaps, to the north of Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan valley. This would open a new country, and I hope to see the day when there will be cities to the north of Lake Winnipeg greater than Winnipeg and a traffic in that country greater than that now carried by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Port Arthur and Montreal. The right hon. gentleman says that he is bound to no route. In other words, he says that the government has put off the formulating of a plan of transportation policy until another session. He says that when the government have considered it, and decided upon a policy, they intend to bring that policy down to this House and ask that it be given the fullest consideration. When the speech from the Throne was discussed in this House on the 13th March last, I took the opportunity, when the right hon. gentleman was addressing the House on the question of transportation and saying that this question, including that of affording terminal facilities at our lake ports and seaports would be referred to a commission, to ask when that commission would be appointed, and the right hon. gentleman said that it would be appointed 'next week.' I asked the right hon. gentleman: Then we shall have the report of the commission, with its full consideration of the whole subject, so that we may intelligently discuss it, before any aid can be given toward the building of other routes, and the providing of facilities on our ports on the lakes and on the Atlantic? And that commission has not been forthcoming yet, and its members not yet appointed.

The PRIME MINISTER. The commission is appointed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I believe the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says the commission has been appointed. But he has not yet received acceptance of appointment from the most important man on the commission, and the only one named that I know of as fit to sit on such a commission. I know Mr. Harold Kennedy. He is a very efficient man. But he has not accepted the appointment. I never heard Mr. Fry's name in connection with transportation. He may be a very excellent man and fit for the position. But the man whose name sticks out, the man whom we at once recognized as acquainted with the subject is Sir William Van Horne. If he accepts a position on the commission where his interests would not conflict with the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway—for the Canadian Pacific Railway's interests come first in all he is bound to do—I would pay a great deal of attention to his report on the subject. But having been for so many of the best years of his life the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, his interest must lie in the furtherance of that enterprise.

Then, there are only two roads that can possibly receive assistance from the government. The Canadian Northern cannot, because, as I believe the right hon. Premier says, if assistance is given to any road it must be one running entirely through our own country, and the Canadian Northern passes in part through the United States. It could not get assistance unless it diverted its through line from the United States and built it altogether on Canadian territory. I strongly believe that any line that receives assistance from the government, no matter what development it may afford the country, must be one that goes through within our own borders. I agree with the right hon. gentleman in that. The lines then open are two. There is first, the Trans-Canada route. That is like a good many other roads—in the air. I do not know whether a mile of it has been built. It is a road from Quebec I gather—for we get pamphlets about it every day—and is to run through to Manitoba and the North-west. I do not know who the promoters are or anything about it. But, if the Grand Trunk Railway propose to build a road into that section of country that is another matter. The Grand Trunk Railway has done a great deal towards the development of this country, and the stockholders of that concern have had but meagre return on the money they have invested. Anything the Canadian people can do in return for the great benefits that that company has yielded to this country ought to be done, other things being equal. If they propose to build a road which will open up a new territory in the North-west and make a connecting line with Quebec, I would rather see it assisted than any other scheme I hear proposed, that is, if the government have determined on a policy of subsidies, and that is a policy which commends itself to the country—which I doubt very much, for I think there is a feeling in the country, voiced in a good many of the organs of public opinion that the day of subsidies is done, and that any railroad that proposes to build a line any where on our territory hereafter must build it as a commercial undertaking. The right hon. premier says that they will receive no land grant. Well, that seems very likely, for I do not see where we have any land to give them in the North-west, unless we go some where in the neighbourhood of the Arctic ocean.

An hon. MEMBER. Or the Klondike.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, or the Klondike, as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Who gave the lands away ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose it was the late government. And friends of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston, Cape Breton) in Manitoba and the North-west were coming before the government every day insisting that the land of that country belonged to the people of that country, and urging that as the government would not give them sufficient money for the purpose of building railroads to develop that region, the lands should be given away for the purpose of building railroads. Who was it, for instance, who advertised in the newspaper press for offers to build the Canadian Pacific Railway for a sum of money per mile and nearly all the available lands in that country ? In those days the feeling, even amongst those who were resident in the North-west, was that the public lands should be given to enterprising companies and corporations for the purpose of building railroads into that country. It was in obedience to the wishes of the people that that was done, it was done at the dictation of the people in that section of the country.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the hon. gentleman how in that case the government could propose to retain the power to fix the price of those lands, to name a maximum price and keep in its own hands the control of the price of those lands for the protection of the public interest ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I never heard of that, certainly that was not the proposition. The land was offered to any company competing for the building of the road, and the company was told : If you won't do it for this, how much more land do you want, how much more money do you want to build the road ? I say therefore that no attack can be made upon the late government by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston), who asked who it was that parted with the land of the country. I say it was done at the request of the people themselves in that section of the country, it was done in order to afford facilities for them to communicate with the east and to get their grain to market. If that had not been done we would not now see that great country opened up as it is at present with railroads running in every direction. The development we see there now is due to the policy of the late government in granting both land and money for the purposes of railway building. However, enough upon that subject.

As I said before, we have a choice of deciding between two companies for the building of this road. My opinion is that if the government should decide to give any assistance for that purpose, the company which is entitled to the preference is the Grand Trunk Railway Company. That company has done a great deal to open up this country, they have spent a great deal of money, and have received very little return for it. It may be the fault of the management of the company, but the fact remains that for the vast sums of money which that company has invested and which have had the effect of developing this country more than any other railway except the Canadian Pacific Railway, it has received very little return in the way of profits. I think the policy of the government should be to have this road built as far north as possible, to pass as near as possible to the height of land in order to tap a region of country which has not been opened up at present.

Now with regard to the policy of the government with regard to waterways and terminals, I think they should have decided on a policy long ago, they should have known exactly what they wanted to do, they should have come to a decision whether to expend money on little harbours here and there throughout the country, or to devote it to the development of a broad Dominion policy. Let them build a harbour at Port Arthur which will accommodate ships drawing twenty feet of water, ships which will pass through the Sault Ste. Marie canal and come down through Lake Erie. As to the building of that harbour at Port Colborne, I do not see a great deal in favour of it, though the late Minister of Public Works, as well as many others, were in favour of building it to a depth of twenty feet, so that it would take in vessels which would lighter there and pass through the Welland canal. They could do the same thing at Buffalo, they could go to Buffalo and tranship their cargoes into vessels that go through the Welland canal. I do not see what benefit there would be in that arrangement unless you intend to deepen the Welland canal to twenty feet. But there is no use deepening it to that depth, because in that case you would have to canalize the whole route of the St. Lawrence from Kingston to Montreal. The bed of the river is not deep enough, and you could not raise the water by dams on account of the over-flowing of the farms on each side of the river. You would therefore have to deepen the whole river from Kingston down to Montreal. The plan which I proposed some time ago, and which I think is best in the interests of the country, and the one which I think must be ultimately adopted, is to build from Lake Superior down to Montreal, via Lake Nipissing and the Ottawa river, a canal with a depth of twenty feet which will take vessels drawing that depth of water down to Montreal. Such a route would give us the command not only of the carrying trade of our own country in our own territory, but it would draw from American sources the whole of the trade of the American Northwest which at present goes down the Erie canal and finds its way to New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

As Mr. Hays stated to the committee the other day, water finds its own level, transportation finds its own level. When a vessel is loaded with grain it will inevitably go by the cheapest route, notwithstanding any legislation that you may put upon the statute-book to divert it into any other route. The right hon. gentleman is right, no legislation will prevent trade going by the cheapest route to the point of consumption. The cheapest possible route for grain grown in Manitoba and the North-west, and in Michigan, Minnesota and the neighbouring States adjoining our territory, is through our country via the St. Lawrence to the ocean. I am fully convinced on that point. Let the St. Lawrence be made navigable by the means that were mentioned the other day by the ex-Minister of Public Works and by the present Minister of Public Works, that is, by lighting the whole route in such a manner that the river can be made safe by night or by day. There is no reason why that should not be done from Montreal to Quebec, the same as it is on the River St. Mary, with a line of piers bearing electric lights, so that by night or day a vessel could navigate those waters quite as safely as any part of the ocean. The St. Lawrence, I believe, can be made navigable from Montreal to Quebec, and just as safe as any other river on the face of the globe. There are no tides, there are no heavy storms, there are no ocean waves to take away the piers upon which you plant your lights and fix your booms. You might have a boom all through Lake St. Peter, and in fact all the way down to Quebec, lighted night and day, which would make the St. Lawrence as safe for navigation as any other river in the world. I hope that our natural advantages will be utilized to their fullest extent by the government, and that a system of works will be carried out by which the traffic of the country may be taken through a twenty foot channel from the Canadian shores of the great lakes down to the waters of the sea. It is a cheaper way of carrying grain. It is the cheapest form of transportation. No railways that you can construct with the least possible gradients can ever compete in cheapness with that form of transportation. What grain does the Canadian Pacific Railway carry north of Lake Superior and down to Ontario and that section of the country ? It is carrying less than it does from Port Arthur down. It is just a moiety of what is raised in the western section of the country. The great bulk of it goes by way of Port Arthur, and it is being carried from there to the ocean. Part of it goes to Duluth and part is carried by the Canadian Northern to Fort William, but the cheapest possible way to get it down to the point of consumption is to get it to Lake Superior and have it carried down from there to the maritime provinces and from the maritime provinces to the point of consumption. That is all you can find out from any commission which you may appoint to make an inquiry. The question of transportation has been answered as far as railways are concerned. When you have ascertained the quickest possible way to reach water transportation, you have solved the problem. When you have reached that point, you must furnish means by which produce may be carried as cheaply through our waterways as it can be carried on the American side of the line. We have natural advantages. Make use of these natural advantages, and the carrying trade will be done in our country. I am sorry to say that the question is virtually put off until another session. If I understood the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) rightly, he said that the policy of the government when formulated would be brought down in the form of an Order in Council for the full consideration of the House. If the right hon. gentleman is going to consult this proposed commission on transportation and terminal facilities, it is not possible that this can be done this session, because, to get the report of the commission as to transportation and other facilities, it would require the remainder of the session and perhaps longer, and if the government are going to make a practical use of the advice that is to be given to the commission, it cannot possibly be done this session. I do not think there is any necessity for a commission. If there be any necessity, the only necessity for a commission is to determine which is our best waterway. The work of the commission should be confined to the question of terminals. There is no necessity for a commission as to railways. That commission might have been appointed before this session and the government might have formulated some policy, because now is the time to formulate a policy and to build the works that are necessary. The day of depression may come within a year or two, because this country cannot always be in the position which it is at present, and it should take advantage of the tide. A few years is a great deal in the history of a country, as it is in the history of a manufacturing enterprise. We should take advantage of the opportunity at the present time to divert the traffic into this section of the country while the routes are being formed, because once you have traffic going in a certain direction it is almost impossible to turn it into another channel. Take advantage of the present tide in our favour. Canada is in a better position now than she will be for a number of years to come to adopt a definite transportation policy, because this is a state of affairs that cannot continue for a number of years. Take advantage of the present, formulate some policy which is destined to build up this country, take advantage of the opportunity which nature has afforded us, because we are now in the best possible position to secure for ourselves a place amongst the foremost peoples on the face of the globe.

Hon. J. ISRAEL TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has made to-day three statements of importance. He has informed us, first, that the government has not yet come to any arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and, second, that next week, or in a few days at any rate, the government will place on the Table of the House resolutions concerning help to another railway company. The right hon. gentleman has not told us what that company is. I apprehend it is the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The last statement he has made is, that the government have not succeeded as yet in convincing some gentlemen to whom they had applied to accept positions as commissioners on the board that was announced in the Speech from the Throne. Sir William Van Horne is too busy, Mr. Harold Kennedy has not the time, and two other gentlemen will replace them. However, the government have fully made up their minds, as the right hon. gentleman has told us, not to spend any more money on the waterways before the commission, which is not yet appointed, reports. If my right hon. friend would allow me, I will say that it will be sad news to the country to hear that. The right hon. gentleman and the government have led us to believe that the commission to be appointed will cover the whole ground, not only in regard to waterways, but the whole ground. Now, we are informed that the government have resolved, without waiting for any report, to grant help to a railway company in the North-west. Well, we are all glad, indeed, that there is a North-west, and we are all very ready to help the North-west, but at the same time we believe there are other parts of the country which deserve consideration, and they are those parts of the country in which the waterways are located. The North-west is very much interested in the development of our waterways; if not more interested, at least as much interested as the older provinces are. The older provinces are deeply interested, the North-west is deeply interested also, and the whole country is interested. I fully share the view which is expressed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) when he says it is not necessary to appoint a commission to know that certain works have to be done. We are all aware that our great national waterways have to be equipped. If we are to handle the trade we must equip our harbours, we must deepen, light and prepare our waterways. Now, there is a port which is called Montreal, and which is, I believe, known to this country. Montreal is quite a village, and I have no doubt is known throughout the land. Montreal is located at the head of ocean navigation and at the foot of the lakes. It is one of the great centres of exchange between the west and the east. That port has to be equipped and equipped now. We have started too late. There is no public man who knows what the transportation question is, and who knows our geographical position, who will not freely admit that we have not constructed in the port of Montreal in past years the works of importance that should have been constructed. We have started; we have started by borrowing money, and borrowing money means dues on every pound of goods and every bushel of grain that goes through Canadian ports; whereas, in my humble opinion, they should be as free from dues as it is possible to make them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I believe that the government have done right in making the canals free this year, but that is only a small matter after all. The port of Montreal, the port of Quebec, the port of St. John and the port of Halifax should be free ports. What is the use of doing work by piecemeal as we are doing now. The result of the consideration I have been able to give to this important question—and it was not difficult to come to the conclusion—leads me to believe that to complete for the time being the improvements on the port of Montreal it will be necessary to spend at least $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 additional, and that is a small sum compared with the large amounts which are spent on the American ports. The harbour of Quebec has to be equipped also. The works carried on there in past years are scarcely of any value because they have been wrongly planned. The government is doing something there this year; not as much as in my opinion they should do, but they are doing something. Three Rivers has to be equipped also; St. John has to be equipped.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). And Halifax.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Halifax is a natural harbour and it is fairly equipped. Halifax will be an important port for passenger traffic, but so far as the western freight is concerned, St. John will be the port. The people of St. John have taken great risks upon themselves. They have spent about $1,000,000 of their own money and as they have to pay interest on that it means that they have to exact dues. I say without hesitation that it is the duty of the government to take over that debt and to make that port free just as it is the duty of the government to make the port of Montreal a free port. The port of Quebec is practically free now because the Quebec Harbour Commissioners have borrowed money and they have been wise enough not to pay interest on it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not ask them to pay the interest; far from it. They cannot pay interest; the trade is not there and they cannot afford to do it. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not a Montreal question; it is a Dominion question. From one end of the country to the other we have the same interests at heart. Let us develop our waterways. Will the right hon. the Prime Minister permit me to ask him that we should not take as final what he said a moment ago. There are works for which no commission is necessary. The equipment of the ports of Montreal, Quebec and St. John, and the completion of the deepening and widening of the river St. Lawrence are works for which there is no necessity for any commission. The raw material is there; the work is under our eyes and let us do it. I do not object to giving a few additional millions for the development of the west.

Mr. McCREARY. How much have you spent on Montreal in the last twenty-five years?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We have spent very little money on Montreal. Unfortunately we have not spent enough money there, and unfortunately too that money has been borrowed. The trade of the country has to pay interest on that borrowed money which is a bad thing, because every pound of merchandise and every bushel of grain has to pay dues to meet that interest. These ports should be free unless of course we make up our minds to ship through American harbours. The whole question is between the St. Lawrence route which is our national route, and the American route. That is the question just as clear as the sun at noonday. There is no use recriminating now. We have been doing for the best in the past but we did not expect such a rapid development of our country and so we did not understand the position. This is not a party question. Both parties are responsible for what has been done in the past and now let bygones be bygones once for all, and let us look to the future. What are we going to do. The right hon. gentleman has told us that the government have resolved to give a few millions additional to the Canadian Northern, because that is the meaning of what he said. Well, the Canadian Northern has been subsidized by us in the past. I repeat that this is not a party question, but as my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has said, the Canadian Northern goes through a hundred miles of American territory in Minnesota and it will be the easiest possible thing in the world to have a little tapping line to Mr. Hill's railways which will divert that trade of the Northwest through American channels. The best way and the only way to keep our own trade and to divert American trade through Canadian channels is to improve our waterways. If my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would within the next fortnight give his personal attention to the reports that are available in his department, he will find that the plans d'ensemble for that portion of the work at Port Arthur and Fort William is a very easy matter. It is only a question of money, and not very much money at that, to make these two harbours safe and cheap harbours for some years to come. As every one knows, there are a certain number of harbours on the lakes and are terminals for the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but properly speaking the Canadian Pacific Railway has no terminal ports on the lakes for through traffic. Up to the present time Owen Sound has not been looked upon as a port for export trade because the grades are too steep, and so to-day the fact is that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway are the lines which have terminal facilities on the lakes for the transportation of grain. The Canada Atlantic Railway has done a great work in the past but it is not sufficiently equipped on the lakes because they have not sufficient plant to carry the traffic between American and Canadian ports. Mr. Hays agreed last year to settle in Montreal—to settle additionally in Montreal if I may say so. However, the most important thing to be done now is the equipment of the ports of Montreal and Quebec, but Montreal especially. In the port of Montreal to-day there are fifty large steamers and at least for forty of these there is no accommodation. I again say that the right hon. gentleman should not ask us to take the statement which he made to-day as final. The government should make up its mind before the session is much more advanced to strengthen and equip the port of Montreal, because it is essentially our national port. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has alluded to the canalization of the Ottawa river. Well, it would be a good thing but it will take years to accomplish it. There is one thing that should not be lost sight of. The conditions to-day require that we should get along as quickly as it is possible to get along, and although the canalization of the Ottawa and the French rivers is a good scheme, it will be a pretty slow process. Let us put the port of Montreal in the same position as the port of New York is in. Let us have some harbours on the lakes like Buffalo, to be reservoirs of freight. Midland is about 365 miles from Montreal, North Bay is about the same distance and Depot Harbour about the same distance. These three ports are the ports to which we must give our very best attention. There are other ports which are used to-day for the grain trade ; but these are the ports best located for the trade between the St. Lawrence and the west.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will my hon. friend allow me to inform him that Mr. J. R. Booth a short time ago told me that he could have taken 5,000,000 bushels more grain to Montreal in the season than he did if we had proper harbour facilities there.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is no doubt that if we had proper harbour facilities at Montreal, all the railways would take more trade than they do. Yet I cannot forget that when I began talking about improving the port of Montreal, there were business men who called me a little notary from St. Lin. But the little notary had travelled a good deal, while the business men who spoke in this way had not travelled with that subject in view, which proved that notaries and lawyers may be good for something. I fully agree with the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals as to the importance of improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence river. Let us have it lighted in the best possible way. The American waterways from Duluth down are lighted in such a manner that it is possible to travel through them in the darkest nights and meet the largest ships without any danger. There are also good captains and seamen on these routes. Many of the accidents on the St. Lawrence route are due to the negligence and incapacity of the commanders of ships. The steamship companies have their duty, and the government have their duty in this matter. Let me ask the government not to direct their attention to one part of the country exclusively. In so doing, they would carry out an anti-national policy. If they do not improve the navigation at the outlets of the trade, vainly we shall develop the trade of the west, that trade will become Americanized, and we cannot help it. Let us develop the trade of the west, but for God's sake, let us develop the trade of the east as well if we want to be a nation. For that reason I would regret exceedingly if the government would not during the present session bring down to the House all the appropriations necessary to carry out the improvements required in our waterways, at the same time that they carry out the projects for the development of the west. For this parliament there is no west and no east, but there is a great country which is all Canada.

Hon. Mr. TARTE.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria). Mr. Speaker, this question as presented to the House, divides itself into three parts—the central, the west and the east. The great object before the country is to secure additional means of getting the products of the prairies of the west to the seaboard. The proposition is made that the Grand Trunk Pacific should be the only transcontinental route, and the one selected by the government and the people of Canada for assistance. I am prepared to endorse any proper scheme of assistance, that does not involve the country to too great an extent, to enable the Grand Trunk to reach the prairies of the west from North Bay ; but to suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway will abandon all their $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 worth of property between North Bay and Portland, and the $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 of improvements which they have made in Portland, and let all that property go to waste in order to have an all-Canadian route to the seaboard, is, to put it mildly, perfect nonsense. The Grand Trunk are not going to abandon, and no sensible man would ask them to abandon, their great system from North Bay to Portland. We find in this country many people advocating the admission of the Great Northern of the United States and the Northern Pacific into our Canadian North-west ; and the farmers there will not hesitate to tell you that it matters not to them whether their grain is delivered to the Canadian or the American seaboard, so long as they get a better price for it. What they want is the service, and if we can give to the farmers a better service by extending the Grand Trunk system to the prairies of the west, I am prepared to assist that scheme. But there is another aspect of the case. We are in danger of losing sight of a very important part of the Dominion of Canada. If you consult the reports of the officers of any of the departments who are familiar with the vast region north of the height of land to the north of Lake Superior—and these reports are undoubtedly as accurate as it is possible for any reports to be—you will find that there are vast areas of valuable farm lands in that region. Those of us who have travelled on the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior cannot fail to have been struck with the barrenness of the region traversed by that railway. But, forty or fifty miles to the north of that line you strike a fertile belt like the country around Lake Temiscamingue, which is to-day being rapidly settled up. Then, why should we not build a line or half a dozen lines through that country if the needs of the country demand it ? My own notion is that the government should be prepared to guarantee the bonds of, or endorse, to a reasonable extent, any legitimate scheme for building one, two, three or more lines across the country from our Canadian seaports or the eastern parts of Canada to open up the great west. If

Be that as it may, I am not an advocate of one route more than another, but will take the liberty of pointing out to the right hon. the first minister that when he says that the people of Canada owe an immense debt to the Grand Trunk Railway, he is not exactly speaking by the book. I am quite prepared to support the Grand Trunk Railway, but when an appeal for support is made on the basis of sympathy, I would point out that the people of my county are made to pay higher rates of freight to the Grand Trunk Railway than are charged on freight to Chicago. There is no use saying that the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Northern Railway or any other railway company are actuated by patriotic motives, and that we should assist them because of these motives, and because forsooth they charge cheap rates. Why, Sir, there is not a railway company in existence which will not grind the last dollar it can out of its customers and look for more. The eastern portion of the transcontinental business, I regard as by all odds the most important. You cannot expect the Grand Trunk Railway to abandon their road from North Bay to the east. No amount of prohibition can force them to travel over certain routes any more than prohibition can force people to be temperate in the use of intoxicating liquors or cigarettes. Freight will travel along the routes that people ship it by, and if the Grand Trunk Railway wants to bring freight over its route to Portland, the Canadian government cannot stop it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Unless the company have a shorter route to the ocean.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If the government should make the company a present of another route to the seaport, no doubt the company would be glad to accept and use it. I submit that there is room at Lake Superior for at least three transcontinental roads, and these roads should be forced to take the Quebec and maritime provinces route. Then in summer these new railways would develop our ports of Montreal, Three Rivers, and certainly Quebec, and in the winter they would develop St. John, Halifax, Louisburg and Canso and the other magnificent ports of the eastern sea board.

There is another aspect of the case which does not seem to strike the House at all. Any one who has visited the Pacific slope will know that the people out there are not so interested in the eastern as in the western route. The people of the Canadian North-west are awake to the value of the Pacific ocean trade, just as Mr. J. J. Hill of the Great Northern realizes its importance.

They realize that all the grain grown in the North-west is not going to find a market over eastern routes, but that as soon as routes are constructed west, the products of the North-west will find markets in China and Japan as well as in our Pacific ports. The question of a transcontinental route involves the eastern as well as the western part. As regards the question of profit in carrying grain by rail, which was raised by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) let me point out that grain is now hauled from the foot of the Rocky Mountains in the United States to New York harbour by rail in competition with water.

Mr. CLARKE. What charge ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The same by rail as by water. Owing to the reduction of grades, the improvement in rolling stock and road beds, &c., it is to-day possible—it is being done throughout the length and breadth of the United States—to haul grain by rail to the seaboard as cheaply as by water. When we are told it is impossible for the Canadian Pacific Railway to haul grain to the seaboard from Port Arthur and Fort William, I would point out that if the curves on the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior were straightened out, that would mean a shortening of thirty-five miles in the northern section alone. The grades are heavy and there are many curves. Reduce your grades and curves, and you can haul grain at a profit. Two years ago, in conversation with Mr. McGuigan, whom I regard as in many respects the ablest railway man on this continent, he pointed out to a number of gentlemen that an engine on the Vanderbilt system was capable of hauling 2,000 tons to New York, the road was so perfect. But that same engine could only haul about 700 over the Grand Trunk Railway system. The same engine, which could haul 2,000 tons over the American system, could only haul one-third that quantity to Canadian ports. I believe that the government should give liberal assistance to railway companies, but not in cash or land. We have been told that there is not much land available, but although a great deal has been given to railway companies, there are still millions of acres of excellent farm land in the Peace river valley, which will yet be filled with prosperous sturdy settlers, and where the soil and climate will be found more productive and genial than in Manitoba to-day. I would suggest that the government should, either by guaranteeing the bonds or by loans repayable in a certain period, give legitimate assistance to two or three roads. This country is young, and our people, in the near future, will be able to pay. The government should give assistance to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, if necessary, to improve their roads to the east of Port Arthur, so that these roads may be able to haul the grain to the east in winter, and I am satisfied that, in ten or fifteen years, the government would be amply recouped for its expenditure.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). This debate, Mr. Speaker, which has been sprung on the House somewhat unexpectedly, certainly opens up a question of great importance. Views have been expressed which will be of great service indeed in instructing the public as to the extent and character of the problem which now confronts the government—the problem of affording an outlet to the great and rapidly settling regions of the North-west Territories for the productions of that country. The hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) in the course of his speech, made reference to matters which, though not exactly ancient history, yet occurred some time ago. I might crave the indulgence of the House while I refer for a few moments to what was said by that hon. gentleman as to the scheme at first propounded by the Mackenzie administration for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the comparison made by him between that scheme and the one adopted in 1881, by the then government of Canada. The scheme of Mr. Mackenzie, broadly stated, contemplated the construction of a line from some point south of Lake Nipissing to the Pacific ocean. It provided that:

—the road, with its branches or sections, bridges, stations, engines, freight and passenger cars and rolling stock shall be constructed under the general superintendence of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) quoting from?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am quoting from chapter fourteen, thirty-seven Victoria, section seven. The Act went on to provide, in subsection three of section eight, that the company formed under this Act should receive aid to the extent of $10,000 per mile, and it went on to provide that aid should be provided on progress estimates. In subsection four of section eight the Act provided that the company should receive 20,000 acres of land per mile in separate blocks of 20,000 acres each, with a frontage of from three to six miles upon the railway, these blocks to be alternate blocks. Two-thirds of this land was to be sold—but I may as well quote the language of the Act with regard to that:—

Two-thirds of the quantity of land so appropriated shall be sold by the government at such prices as may be from time to time agreed upon between the Governor in Council and the contractors, and the proceeds therefrom accounted for and paid half-yearly to the contractors free from any charge of administration or management. The remaining one-third to be conveyed to the contractors.

Here are the broad features of the Act—$10,000 per mile cash subsidy; the road to be built in all respects under the supervision of the government; the government to control—of course with the consent of the contractors—the sale of two-thirds of the land grant; the land grant to be given in alternate blocks of 20,000 acres—which was superior to the practice subsequently adopted of making the land grants in alternate sections of 640 acres, for then the company would be required to make the improvements necessary to make the land valuable, while under the subsequent arrangement, the company would only have to leave the homesteaders and purchasers of other portions of the township to develop the township, the company reaping the benefit. Now the scheme ultimately adopted in 1881 involved a grant of $25,000,000 in cash, 25,000,000 acres of selected lands in the fertile belt of the North-west—the land grant under the Mackenzie scheme was to stretch along the entire line—and, in addition, the government built sections of the road at a cost of $32,000,000 which it handed over to the company, and it also subsequently loaned to the company $20,000,000 and took back land to pay $10,000,000 at $1.50 per acre. Thus the company received cash and other resources sufficient to build the main line; they received 706 miles of the most difficult portion of the line completed, and they received $20,000,000, only one-half of which they required to pay. They also received privileges and exemptions of the most important character—freedom from taxation for all time to come upon their main line and equipment; freedom from taxation on their lands for twenty years—(and it seems that twenty years under their interpretation of the law is almost an indefinite period)—and a monopoly of the transportation of the North-west by a prohibition against the making of connections between that country and lines to the south of the American border, in fact, a prohibition of the construction of any railway further south than within fifteen miles of the American boundary; the free admission of material, a privilege under which they imported for many years after the construction of the line material for renewing bridges and various other purposes. Now, I think a fair comparison of conditions and character of the two schemes would result in the exoneration of the Mackenzie administration from the charge of having proposed a scheme not in the country's interests as compared with the scheme actually adopted. I will say no more upon this point, but I felt that, out of regard for the memory of my old leader, the late Alexander Mackenzie, it was as well to place the facts before the House. I am sure that my hon. friend from South Lanark had no intention of placing Mr. Mackenzie in a more unfavourable light before this generation than the facts of the case would warrant.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount of cash bonus and what the extent of the land grant under the two schemes, leaving aside all the rest ?

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) will give me the exact length of the line from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific coast, I can give him the land grant by multiplying the number of miles by 20,000 acres, and the amount of cash subsidy by multiplying by $10,000. I have not the exact length of the line, but it was about 2,600 miles, I imagine.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was that the last proposition made by the Mackenzie government ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it was. That was the offer placed upon the statute-book which the Mackenzie government——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is not aware of any other ?

Mr. CHARLTON. No, and I have not the time, at the moment, to examine the statutes and see. Now, in the position taken by the hon. member for South Lanark as to the futility of attempting to force trade against natural conditions, I fully concur. Of course, it is necessary, in our own interest, to have railway lines through from one of our own seaports on the Atlantic to one of our own seaports on the Pacific. That line, in my opinion, should run from Quebec, which is our natural seaport, in summer at all events—much superior in many ways to Montreal and certainly more accessible. I believe that our effort should have been to concentrate trade at Quebec and make that our great national seaport instead of dredging a channel through Lake St. Peter to bring sea-going vessels up to Montreal in spite of the obstacles that nature has imposed. A railway from Quebec to the Pacific is a scheme which commends itself to us and that should be carried into effect. The only questions to be considered are the questions now before the government—whether there shall be a cash subsidy, a land subsidy, or a guarantee of bonds, or whether government itself shall undertake the construction of that line. It has always seemed to me that we had in our North-west one of the most magnificent fields for embarking in the business of government ownership of railways and government transportation that has ever been open to a government. It has seemed to me that it would be a wise policy for the government to build that road from Quebec to Port Simpson, from ocean to ocean; that such a road would be an asset worth very much more than its cost, and that we should not have to consider its cost, because it would pay interest upon that cost and pay, in addition, large sums of money toward other expenses of government, and so give to the government control, to a large extent, of freight rates through that whole country.

There has been, however, and is now, a question as to whether this business could be undertaken by the government of Canada, whether it is not a line of business foreign to the genius of our government, one that our government is not capable of grappling with upon business conditions. It must be admitted that if this road cannot be built honestly, if it cannot be built in conformity with sound business principles, and unless it can be run in the same way, placed in the hands of railway men who will run it upon railway principles and not allow it to be made a political engine for furnishing places for camp followers and so forth—unless these things can be avoided, it is useless to talk about the construction of the road by the government. The experiment would be a very hazardous one. I am free to confess that I have to some extent been forced to forego the strong bias that I had in favour of building a government road, and the bias I have now, believing it almost impossible to secure the condition that I mention regarding the construction and operation of that line. Be this as it may, however, the line is necessary, the line must be constructed, Canada demands it. The line should be pointed towards Quebec, with a winter outlet at Halifax or St. John, preferably, I think, at Halifax, so that the trade of the North-west could be accommodated, and an ocean port reached over our own railway lines, passing the entire distance across the continent upon our own territory. That should be done, we should be able to offer facilities, and the best conditions that can be attained, to the business of the west.

But after having done this we will find, as my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) points out, that actual conditions will in all probability divert the greater portion of that trade to another route. That trade will seek the waters of the great chain of lakes; inevitably, during the season of navigation, that grain will be carried to Lake Superior, and improvements have been made in the construction of lake vessels and the deepening of channels between the head of Lake Superior and Buffalo, which enable forwarders to secure the shipment of wheat from Duluth or from Port Arthur to Buffalo at a ridiculously low rate as compared with rates prevalent a few years ago. For a cent and a quarter or a cent and a half per bushel, you can transport your wheat from Duluth or Port Arthur, and put it in an elevator at Buffalo.

Mr. OSLER. That is only occasionally.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, you may count two cents as more than an average rate. Now when you reach Buffalo, there is a canal from that port to New York, which for years past has not been a factor in the transportation problem at all. It is a canal with seven feet of water, which served a good purpose years ago in regulating railway freights, but I doubt whether it has much influence in that direction at the present time. So when you reach Buffalo, if the competition is keen, if the American railway lines find it necessary, in order to secure the control of the business of carrying wheat from Buffalo to New York at a price which would leave them a bare profit, it can be done, I am told, on the New York Central Railway at fifty cents a ton, or one cent and six mills per bushel. So you have the possibility of carrying wheat from Port Arthur to New York for three cents a bushel, or at most four cents a bushel. Now there are conditions which render it, in my opinion, impossible at present to compete with that route. It is useless to think of hauling wheat from a point as far west as Port Arthur by an all-rail route to Quebec or to Halifax at prices such as those I quoted with regard to the American lines. Of course in the winter we should control, to a large extent, the transportation of that country. We should certainly, and under all conditions, control the transportation of all the products of the soil and of the forest north of the height of land, and between Lake Winnipeg and Quebec.

With regard to the appointment of a commission, some of my hon. friends have said that we have gone on and spent enormous sums of money in Canada on a system of waterways, and we find ourselves now in the position, after expending more than fifty million of dollars, of having a system of waterways and improvements of a character that are worthless. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not quite agree with that statement. We have a canal from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario with fourteen feet of water, and locks of a large size, not large enough of course to accommodate the large vessels of the upper lakes. We have the St. Lawrence canals deepened to fourteen feet. Now this is the system which we have created. The American system is a system of canals, one from Buffalo to Albany on the Hudson river of seven feet of water, one from Whitehall, on Lake Champlain to the Hudson river with seven feet of water, canals which are so inconsiderable in their capacity, so ridiculously inadequate for the immense amount of business they would be called upon to perform, that our own system of waterways, I think, is a credit to us. I think for the money expended, we have a system of waterways that have done us good service, and will do us good service still.

I do not believe that we are in a condition to-day, even if we decided to improve the Ottawa River Valley route, to decide what are the proper conditions upon which to proceed. For this reason I think the appointment of a commission to take this whole question under consideration is in the highest degree desirable, is not only desirable but is necessary. We are now confronting conditions that require careful consideration. We are called upon to inaugurate a policy and to proceed in a direction that has for its purpose the affording to the great North-west of transportation facilities. It is beyond all things necessary that we should make no false step, that we should proceed upon no false hypothesis or basis; and for that reason it is a wise thing to appoint a commission, composed of men who are capable of examining this question and arriving at correct conclusions. We cannot do it here in an expert and scientific manner, we must rely upon the service of men of the character of those who are to be appointed upon this commission. Let us wait untill we have the decision of these men as to the proper course to pursue.

Now with regard to the Ottawa Valley canal, if we decide that we must have that canal constructed to afford competition with the railway companies and afford another outlet for the North-west, for myself—and I have given a good deal of thought to the matter—I would be at a loss to say to-day whether I would favour the construction of a ship canal with twenty-one or twenty-two feet of water, or whether I would favour the construction of a barge canal for the transmission of grain to the mouth of the French river, thence carrying it in barges to Quebec, there to be elevated into vessels. I say I would not be able to decide at present which is the proper course to pursue. True, I would have before me the evidence taken by the commission in the state of New York, I would have the outcome of this investigation; I would have the fact that after the consideration for several years of the question of a ship canal versus a barge canal, the authorities of the state of New York have arrived at the decision to construct a barge canal with a draft of twelve feet of water, with large locks, and with barges of a capacity of 1,500 tons, these barges to be hauled in tows.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Can they build a through one to a depth of twenty feet?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, they are quite competent to build a through one. They have the alternative of building a ship canal from the Niagara river to Lake Ontario and of leaving Lake Ontario at Oswego and going by way of Albany or by taking the old Erie canal route. All these things have been considered and the state of New York, under the advice of competent men, and especially of Major Symons, who has made a life-long study of this question, has decided that a barge canal has advantages over a ship canal. Among the reasons they assign for this conclusion is that when a vessel fitted for the navigation of the lakes, or of the ocean, enters a ship canal she retains the whole of her crew, she retains all of her outfit and goes plodding through that canal at the rate of three or four miles an hour, when her normal rate of speed upon the sea would be fifteen or sixteen miles an hour. This is a consideration which has very much weight in determining the cost of the transmission of grain, and it is a question as to whether that grain had not better be transhipped into barges and sent through the canal and transhipped again into vessels at New York. There is an advantage in transhipping it. Elevating the grain at Buffalo cools it and improves its condition. It is put into these barges and goes through the canal, handled again and exposed to the air when it goes into the hold of the vessel. It is claimed that it is absolutely cheaper to transport it in that way and that the condition of the grain under this method is very much better. Here is a question that would confront us if we were proceeding with due caution, in determining the nature of our premises at the outset; here is a question that we have to decide, a question that may most properly be referred to a commission of experts, to collate information and statistics that will enable us to decide among other questions that we want to decide not from a party standpoint, not for the purpose of making party capital, but on a sound economic baisis for the purpose of commencing the prosecution of a system of works upon proper principles that will be found to be the best under the circumstances. If, after having given to our seaports connections in the form of a railway to Quebec right through the country, and a railway from Quebec for winter communication with Halifax and St. John, we attempt in addition to affording facilities and the best facilities that can be given, roads with low grades and great capacity for hauling heavy loads—such as the loads that can be hauled over the New York Central and Lake Shore of 2,000 tons to a train—to force trade over these roads we will make a mistake, because we have to allow this trade to find a natural outlet. We cannot prevent the diverting of grain to American channels unless we do it in an artificial manner. We might do it by export duties and custom-house restrictions which would provoke the resentment of the North-west, and we must remember in addition to this, that the time is not far distant when the North-west will be the master of the situation. That country is filling up rapidly, that country will demand that it must have access to the best markets it can obtain. The wheat growers of the North-west will not be particular whether they sell to the Minneapolis millers, or the millers at Rat Portage, or the millers in Ontario, or the millers in the eastern states, or the millers in England. What they want is the best market. They want access to that market, they will demand it and they will be entitled to have it. We must simply make with care and make efficiently, provision for securing this trade in our own seaports under circumstances which are possible, having regard to our natural facilities and natural advantages. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says that the question resolves itself into a mere question as to whether there shall be American trade or Canadian trade. Of course, there will be competition between American channels and Canadian channels which will have a salutary effect upon the business of the country that furnishes that trade, which perhaps will lower rates, which will keep down the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of the Canadian Northern, and which will keep down the rates of the trans-Canadian line if it is ever built. In so far as the diverting of trade from the Canadian Northern, south of the Lake of the Woods to the Jim Hill line is concerned, I have no fear of that. Let them divert the trade to the Jim Hill line if the farmers of the North-west are to be benefited, if their freight rates are to be reduced or if their facilities for reaching the markets are to be increased. The trade will reach its natural level and it will go by the best and quickest route notwithstanding any efforts we may make. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's demands that we should put the port of Montreal in the same position as that of New York. We cannot. It is impossible. New York is perhaps the finest harbour on the Atlantic coast. Montreal is away up the St. Lawrence, where you have to keep digging a channel through Lake St. Peter to maintain the thirty foot depth of water, when under natural conditions there is only a depth of fifteen feet.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. That is one of the most beautiful rivers in the world.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, it is a magnificent river and the outlet of a great chain of lakes, and down at the point where the river meets the sea, is found the proper national harbour, and it is the harbour of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We have no objection to that.

Mr. CHARLTON. Montreal has great advantages and displays great enterprise and the hon. member does well to stand up for his native city. I admire him for that, but it is impossible to make the port of Montreal the same as the port of New York, because nature has said you cannot. You have to spend large sums of money to secure an entrance to this harbour. The port is closed for several months in the year, insurance rates are against it, many things are against it, and so it is impossible to place the port of Montreal on exactly the same footing as to natural advantages, because the natural advantages do not exist. For that reason I may say again, that I have always been in favour of attempting to make Quebec the seaport of the Dominion. I have always thought that it was the natural seaport. I believe we would find, if we went into the business of maintaining access to the port of Quebec as long as possible, that we would have a season of navigation six weeks longer in the year at the port of Quebec than at the port of Montreal, and I think that we have been acting on false premises and that we have been expending money injudiciously in overlooking the natural advantages of Quebec, in overlooking the fact that this is actually and positively a seaport at the head of deep water navigation where vessels of the size that navigate the high seas can come in without dredging or artificial aid.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Of course, we do not object to Quebec having as much done for it as it is possible to do, but how can the hon. gentleman explain that with its deep harbour and its natural advantages there are fifty large ships in Montreal to-day although the channel has not yet been completed, and this has been going on for fifty years past? How is it?

Mr. CHARLTON. I give the hon. gentleman and his fellow citizens of Montreal credit, and they do deserve great credit for showing greater enterprise than the citizens of Quebec. I give them credit for having had these natural difficulties overcome. I give them great credit for concentrating business in Montreal, and for securing the apropriation of money for overcoming the natural disadvantages, and for making Montreal a great port, but notwithstanding that, I hold that Quebec is the better port, that it is more accessible, that it will answer the purposes of the Dominion much better than the port of Montreal, and that we should at least give Quebec a fair show by the construction of this railway line from Quebec right through the interior, by the construction of wharfs and elevators at Quebec, and by—if we ever construct the Ottawa valley canal—having transhipment take place at Quebec. Thus, we will give the ancient capital and the historic city of Quebec the position which nature destined she would occupy in this Dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) knows as well as I do that neither Montreal nor Quebec, nor any one port, can possibly in summer time handle the whole trade of this country. On the American side we have New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Portland. Let Quebec have all the trade we can give her; let the biggest ships come to Quebec; but surely my hon. friend does not mean to insinuate that the port of Montreal should be closed up.

Mr. CHARLTON. Oh no.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Or that the St. Lawrence should not be improved as much as money can improve it. Both ports combined will not be able to handle all our trade in the future.

Mr. CHARLTON. All right Mr. Speaker; we will give Montreal all the show my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) asks for it, and we will concede that we want more ports than one, and we will hope that Montreal will maintain its position and continue to grow. But all these things do not detract from what I have said, that Quebec has natural advantages and is the point where our natural seaport is situated. We must give to each fair play, and in view of the vast development of the trade of this Dominion and especially of the Canadian North-west, as the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) says, one port or two ports, or three, or four ports are not going to handle that business and the business of the American west. There will be Quebec; there will be Montreal——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Three Rivers.

Mr. CHARLTON. There will be Three Rivers perhaps; there will be Halifax; there will be St. John, and Portland and Boston, and New York and Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and perhaps ultimately a great city may grow up at Newport News near Chesapeake Bay. All these will claim western trade, and we have to confront conditions here and not attempt to force trade in any direction, but to give to each place the benefit of its natural advantages, to develop its natural advantages as well as it may, and to secure for our own route and our own seaports all the trade of our Canadian North-west that can possibly be attracted. But we must not allow ourselves to suppose that we can divert the whole of the trade or that we can overcome the natural advantages I have referred to with regard to some of the American lines.

Now, Sir, this debate sprung up upon the presentation of certain matters by the leader of the opposition who called the government to task for its failure to announce its policy with regard to transportation routes; for its failure to announce the names of the transportation commission; for its failure to deal exhaustively and finally with all these great questions. Why, we could not deal with these questions at once. We must take time. If we acted precipitately and hastily we might make very grave mistakes. The transportation commission, even if named at an earlier date in this session would not have been in a position to make a report before giving it a proper and intelligent consideration which would guide this House in its action. We must give them some time. The government have had to deal with many propositions. The government have had to look over a vast field; a field where great conflicting interests are contending for the mastery; a field where they had to decide whether they would themselves enter upon that field as a competitor for business and afford an outlet under their own supervision for the products of the great west. We must have a little patience; we must unite altogether in seeking to arrive at a decision and formulating and perfecting schemes for overcoming these difficulties and meeting these problems that confront us in the interest of the country without reference specially to this party or that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Let us look at this thing from patriotic motives, for it is the biggest question that ever has confronted us. We feel to-day the thrill of a new life in our veins; the electric thrill of a new energy that is flowing through all classes of our population. We are confronted by new questions. We realize that we have the resources of an empire; we realize that that country which we bought, supposing it to be a howling wilderness for $1,500,000 in 1871; we realize that it is an empire. We realize that it is the granary of the world with room for forty or fifty million people, and we want to look at these things candidly, carefully, and like business men. Let the opposition spur on the government if it does not do its duty or comprehend the issues, but let the opposition give to the government fair consideration, and fair play, and let us work together for the good of Canada and its development.

Mr. TALBOT. Might I ask the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) a question. He spoke of the enormous sacrifices that the Grand Trunk Railway had made for the development of Canada, and I would like to ask him how much the Grand Trunk Railway has spent to improve their shipping terminal facilities on the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They have very fine terminal facilities in Montreal.

Mr. TALBOT. How much have they spent?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They have as fine terminal facilities as any railroad in the country. I am not an advocate of the Grand Trunk Railway——

Mr. TALBOT. You are speaking of their railway facilities, but my question was directed as to their shipping terminal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose no railroad makes a port a shipping terminal or improves the shipping facilities. What the railroad does is to bring its freight to where there is shipping facilities, and these facilities are afforded them in the shape of docks and wharfs and depth of harbour.

Mr. TALBOT. What about Portland?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know, I never was in Portland in my life.

Mr. KEMP. Might I ask the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) a question? When the hon. gentleman was speaking I was not quite clear where he intended the railway to which he referred, to run from west of Quebec, and whether he intended that it would be a private enterprise; an enterprise encouraged by government aid, or a government built and controlled railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not profess to be in a position to lay down absolutely or accurately what the route of that road would be. I have a general idea that it should strike from Quebec pretty well north. As my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) said, it should go through the valley of the Notaway river and the Moose river, north of the height of land, and I would imagine that if it were a government road and was aiming for the Pacific Ocean, that it had better go north of Lake Winnipeg and skirt the Peace River Valley, having in view ultimately the construction of a branch from its main line to Fort Churchill for the purpose of utilizing, if it is capable of being utilized, the navigation of the Hudson's Bay. If I was outlining it, it would be a pretty broad and comprehensive scheme of national character and national importance. With regard to the question as to the method of the construction of this road, I do not think I expressed any special preference. I did descant in a general way upon the advantages I supposed would result from the construction of a government railway, always supposing that we could get ourselves into a position to keep ourselves free from the ordinary debasing influence of politics, so as to have that road built upon business principles and managed upon business principles by competent railway men who would have no connection with politics, who would not be influenced by politics at all, and would not be hauling coal at a loss of three or four mills per ton, or doing any business on that line for the accommodation of localities and to meet the demands of politicians. All these things would have to be secured to us, or I would at once condemn that proposal and say it was not a good one.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Since we are discussing this matter in a friendly way, would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Macdonald). This discussion is irregular. Hon. gentlemen cannot put questions from one side of the House to the other after they have made their speeches. An hon. gentleman can make a speech and include in it any subject he wishes, but this is not an interrogatory discussion.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I do not rise to put a question Sir, but to make a few remarks upon this very important matter. I cannot join with my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) in congratulating the government on not announcing their policy to the House at this late date of the session. This question has so long occupied the attention of the country, that long before this, the government should have made a definite announcement to the country on its transportation policy. Not only during the present session but in the last year of the last parliament, this question was under discussion, and the very idea of this transportation commission was suggested to the government in 1899 by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). In a speech which I see in 'Hansard' of 1899, the hon. gentleman suggested what I thought at that time and still think should have been the policy of the government. In a very exhaustive examination of the question, after going fully into all the intricacies of it, the hon. gentleman expressed himself thus.

For this reason I for one would be very glad to see the government hold its hand for a year, and in the meantime appoint a commission of engineers from the Department of Public Works and the Department of Railways and Canals to inquire, not only into the feasibility of the Ottawa, Lake Nipissing and Georgian Bay route, but also into the feasibility of the Toronto and Collingwood route. I am sure that no factious opposition will be offered by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, if they are satisfied that the government have selected the best route under all the circumstances ; and it is because I believe we have not yet the necessary information before us to justify us in endorsing the expenditure of $150,000 as an initial expenditure on the very vast work at Port Colborne that I have risen to make these remarks.

These remarks were made to the House as far back as August 2, 1899, by my hon. friend from West Toronto. What have the government been doing ever since ? The question has been discussed in this House. I remember the late member for Quebec West, the Hon. Mr. Dobell, who was a great believer in the possibilities of the west and also of the east, and especially of our seaport towns, getting up year after year as a minister of the Crown and calling the attention of the House to this very question. It seems to me that having had the valuable suggestion of my hon. friend from West Toronto, it was the bounden duty of the government—if it was necessary for them to appoint a commission, to obtain information which they could not supply themselves —to have done so, long before this. What have they been doing since that time ?

Mr. SPROULE. Marking time.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me they have been doing to a great extent what my hon. friend says—marking time. They have had no definite policy. We have spent large sums of money in improving harbours on the lakes and improving the navigation on the St. Lawrence river ; but there has been no general plan, and to-day we are face to face with this position. In the North-west we have, or are going to have in a short time, a great many roads—the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern, and probably the Trans-Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific—all supplying the needs of that vast territory and bringing to the seaports of the east the crops which grow there. In the face of this state of things, is it not a patriotic duty laid on the shoulders of the government and also upon the members of this House to see, as far as possible, that we have every benefit we can get from the hauling of the grain from the North-west down through the eastern portion of the Dominion of Canada ? I am a strong believer in a policy which would force, as much as nature would permit, every bit of the grain produced in the western provinces to come down through Canadian territory and help to build up our seaboard towns on the Atlantic and on the St. Lawrence river. My right hon. friend who leads the House says the government are about to appoint this commission. They are not yet appointed. Hon. gentlemen do not seem even to be quite decided on the names of the gentlemen who will form this commission. We all regret, I have no doubt, that it is impossible for Sir William Van Horne, as we are informed to-day, to be the head of this commission, because there is no man so well qualified to be the president of this important body, which will, to a certain extent, decide on the future transportation policy of the government of Canada. The names of other gentlemen have been suggested. I have the pleasure of the acquaintance of Mr. Harold Kennedy, and if that gentleman had been able to accept the position, I am sure all who know him would have been most pleased, and would have felt that the interests of Canada could not have been placed in better hands. As to Mr. Bertram, I know nothing. I am told that he is a ship-builder ; but whether he has sufficient knowledge for the position, I am not at present well enough informed to be able to say. With regard to Mr. Fry, I may say to the right hon. gentleman that there are ten or twenty men in the city of Quebec who would be superior to him in occupation to be a member of this commission in the place of Mr. Harold Kennedy. I have nothing to say against Mr. Fry ; he is an estimable citizen of Quebec, but nobody heard of him outside of his having been agent for Lloyds in Quebec for a number of years. It seems to me that if this commission is to be appointed, the government should first of all endeavour to obtain, irrespective of politics, the very best possible talent in the land, no matter what it would cost ; as all hon. gentlemen agree that this is probably the most important question that has been brought to the notice of this parliament. I may say that I for one do not believe in government by commission. I believe it is the duty of the government to handle these questions themselves. When this government came into existence in 1896 it was heralded all through this continent and through the continent of Europe as the greatest conglomeration of business men that was ever called into being; and it seems to me that such distinguished lights as those I see before me—as my right hon. friend who leads the government, the Minister of Railways and Canals, and my hon. and learned friend the Minister of Justice, who has studied this question—should have formed a commission to deal with this question, and obtain the information necessary to enable the government to come before the House with a definite policy. When I said a moment ago that I did not believe in government by commission, my right hon. friend smiled; the sunny smile with which we are all so familiar beamed on his face. But my hon. friend from West Toronto in 1899 probably did not believe that the government was such a great conglomeration of business men, and he thought it was necessary to have a commission to find out and report what policy the government should adopt.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has a better opinion of us now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have not. I am not yet converted; but it seems to me that, with the time they have had since my hon. friend from West Toronto gave them the cue in that speech which was so replete with information, and after all the discussions which have taken place in this House since that time, the government should themselves be in a position to state their policy to the House. I do not believe in government by commission. I really do not believe that it is constitutional for the government not to shoulder the responsibility of a great question like this, but to put it on the shoulders of men who are not responsible to this parliament. Here we are face to face with this great transportation problem, as to how we are to get the products of the wheat fields of the west down through Canadian territory and to Canadian ports. We have not decided that question yet. We are now going to appoint a commission; but before that commission will have time to report, the end of the session will have gone by, even should the session last until August or September. No doubt the commissioners will have to take their information in all parts of the country in order to become thoroughly acquainted with the transportation facilities, but in the meantime the traffic of the west which we desire to send through our Canadian ports will have taken another direction. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I am convinced, desire as strongly as we to see our own ports built up, but, judging by the experience of the past, if our western traffic should become diverted to American ports, it will be exceedingly difficult to bring it back into Canadian channels and Canadian ports, either on the Atlantic or the St. Lawrence river. Some time ago we were told by a gentleman of undoubted authority in railway matters that our spouts were too small for our hopper. Well, now is the time, Mr. Speaker, when we should enlarge our ports on the St. Lawrence and Atlantic coast. Now is the time when we should make our spouts sufficiently large to receive and to distribute everything that comes from the west. Now is the time to provide means for bringing the enormous products of the west to our own ports. In my opinion, the ports of Montreal and Quebec and the other important ports on the St. Lawrence and on the Atlantic coast should be made free. The government boasts of an enormous surplus, amounting, they say, to $13,000,000. They boast of having had the largest surpluses this country has ever seen. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the time to use this enormous amount of money in equipping Canadian ports on the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic ocean with all the facilities required to receive the enormous traffic of the North-west. I have every desire, and have always had, to do everything possible for the advancement of our North-west. The very earliest political speeches I ever made were in defence of the acquisition of the North-west. I was then convinced that the acquisition of that country would be of the greatest advantage to Canada as a whole. The Conservative government of that day was condemned by the Liberal party for their policy with regard to the North-west, but to-day the statesmanship of the Conservative party is fairly vindicated, and we have hon. gentlemen opposite compelled to admit that the prosperity of Canada depends in a great measure on the enormous wealth which flows from the North-west. We must not forget however that the people of the North-west owe something to the eastern portion of this country. We find in some newspapers the opinion expressed that the people of our North-west do not care at all about the east, that all they want is to sell their grain, and they care not whether it is exported through Canada or the United States. I feel convinced that such statements do not reflect the real opinion of our western friends, and I have no doubt that they are prepared to back as much as possible the patriotic policy of sending Canadian grain through Canadian territory to Canadian ports. I am not one of those who think that the improvements I have mentioned would cost too much. We can deepen our St. Lawrence, we can deepen the channels we now have sufficiently to allow us to ship the grain from Quebec or Montreal. Just see what the Americans have done to build their ports and waterways and other means of transportation from the west to the east. We have in this country a population every whit as patriotic as the population of the United States. If we want to build up this country as the United States has been, we must not shirk our opportunities. We ought to be able to accomplish everything, which can be accomplished with the aid of money and patriotism.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, when you rose at six o'clock I was adverting to the acquisition of the North-west. I am certainly not one who would not grudge a cent of the money that Canada has paid very lavishly for the acquisition of the the North-west Territory. If it were to be done again, I would be glad to support any measure which would bring into the country this large territory which has proved to be of such advantage to Canada as a whole. But what I say is that Canada to-day must reap the benefit of the large expenditure which it made at that time. It is said that grain cannot be hauled at a profit—a profit either to the railways or to the farmers of the North-west—if it passes around the north shore of Lake Superior. But it is admitted on all hands, I take it, that grain can be brought down to Port Arthur or Fort William and there transferred to barges and brought down to our ports on the St. Lawrence or transferred to other parts of our railway system and taken down to the port of Halifax or St. John. What, then, is our manifest duty ? It is to so improve our waterways as to give the cheapest and most direct route to Europe. It is said that this will cost a great deal of money. Well, what if it does ? We have the money. As I said this afternoon we pride ourselves on having immense surpluses. It seems to me that in no better way can the surpluses and immense amounts of money the government is deriving from the country be put to use than by building up our seaports. What I advocate is a bold policy at this very moment. It seems to me it is the duty of the government and of this House to have a bold policy. When, many years ago, it was decided to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, people said that this was a bold policy and our hon. friends on the other side of the House said, many and many a time, that this railway would never pay, even for the grease for the wheels. Of course, since then, we have changed, and, to-day, we know that there is no greater factor in the prosperity of Canada than this very Canadian Pacific Railway. It was a bold policy which animated our predecessors on the Conservative side when they made an agreement with a syndicate to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was a bold policy when, in 1882, I believe, they loaned $20,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway. At that time, the agreement was that the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be completed not later than 1891. But, Sir, in 1886, the Canadian Pacific Railway was built from end to end and the traffic came pouring into the eastern ports of Canada. To-day, we want a return for the sacrifices Canada made at that time, and the best return that can be made is to build up ports on the St. Lawrence and on the seaboard. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) seemed to advocate the claims of Quebec as against the claims of Montreal. There need be, and there is, no jealousy between these two ports; each port has its advantages and each should receive from this country and from the government the liberal encouragement that it deserves. Of course, Montreal is situated nearer the heart-centre of the wheat growing North-west. Situated, as it is, as the commercial centre of one of the principal provinces of the Dominion, of course, it will always be a great shipping port. I am not here to advocate the claims of Quebec as against the claims of Montreal or the claims of Montreal as against those of Quebec. But I say, as I said this afternoon, that what should be done, what should be the policy of the government, is to make the port of Montreal and the other principal ports in Canada free ports. And not only that, but, if it is true that we can secure the traffic at least during the summer months through the St. Lawrence route, we should deepen the channel between Quebec and Montreal, we should so light it and buoy it that it shall be as easy to navigate the St. Lawrence by day or night as it is to navigate the ocean itself. Of course, in the natural course of events, the larger ships, the ships that are building to-day, ships of great tonnage, will probably not be able to go so far as Montreal. These will go to Quebec. And here is the fault I find with the government in this matter—they are certainly not doing their duty towards Quebec; they are certainly not doing towards Quebec what they should do in view of its natural position and in view of the faithful support that they themselves have received from Quebec and the district of Quebec. Consider what has happened. Sir, last year, when this question came up, my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) speaking then as Minister of Public Works, brought down a project by which it was said that at least a million dollars would be spent to improve the harbour of Quebec. What is the condition of things in Quebec to-day ? How many berths are there for ocean going steamships ? How many elevators are there ? What accommodation have ocean-going steamships in Quebec ? I know very well that my hon. friends opposite may say, with some degree of certainty, that a mistake was made when large sums of money were spent in the port of Quebec. But we must take the facts as they are to-day. Conditions are not now as they used to be. We certainly have the prospect in view that, if the port of Quebec were properly equipped we should be able to load large steamers there, and the fact is that every day almost, large steamers would go to Quebec to be loaded if proper accommodation were given. I read in the papers the other day that there was one berth for a large steamer in Quebec, and that when a second large steamer came in, she had to stop out in the tide until the first steamer was unloaded. There is a state of things which the government certainly should have seen to before to-day. And, if this commission which they have promised is given, that is one of the first questions that should occupy its attention. The other day, again, I heard that the 'Monteagle' came to Quebec to unload, but there was so little accommodation in the warehouses on the docks, they were so overloaded that they could not take any more goods into it. That is a state of things that it seems to me should prove to the government that they have not done their duty toward the city of Quebec. I remember very well when this plan of the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was brought down to the House, 'Le Soleil,' the government organ in Quebec, had articles with great headlines on the subject. For instance, on the 29th July, 1902, it had an article with headlines which I have translated as follows :—

Hurrah for Quebec.
Construction of piers from Comner's Wharf to Beauport.
Work to be begun by the Department of Public Works.

And there followed an article which expatiated on the benefits that the city of Quebec would reap from these plans. Then, on the 8th of August, appeared an article with these headlines :—

Great news for Quebec.
Advertisement calling for tenders.
Cheques accepted.

—and the article said that these piers or wharfs were to be built from the St. Louise Basin as far as Beauport. Referring now to 'Hansard' of the same day, what do I find ? I find this plan exposed to the House by the Minister of Public Works of that day, who said :

However, Quebec has practically no harbour equipment. There is only one berth for large ships in the whole harbour of Quebec. A ship loading or unloading there has either to anchor in the middle of the river, or to be loaded and unloaded with lighters. Now, we think the time has come when the port of Quebec will have to be equipped. I have here a plan of the improvement, which I invite hon. gentlemen to examine with me.

I remember the hon. gentleman unfolded the plan on the Table of the House.

It shows the famous Louise Basin, of which we heard so much years ago. We propose to construct four berths for the largest ships. They will have 40 feet of water at high tide. Of course, we will build the cribs deeper than the existing walls of the old cribs, so as to give them greater solidity. These works that I intend to carry out gradually will cost about $1,000,000.

Sir, if I understand it aright, the policy of the government to-day is to build one berth in Quebec, not four berths as was then decided upon. It is decided now to spend $200,000 on the port of Quebec, and not $1,000,000 as was the policy of the government at that time. I say that that is not only unfair to Quebec but it is unfair to the country at large. And, if we are to carry out the policy which is based upon the saying that 'the spout should not be too small for the hopper,' we should see to it that, as soon as time will permit us to do it that the port of Quebec is so equipped that, when the grain comes down from the west, we in Quebec and Montreal may be prepared to receive it and ship it on board vessels which will take it to European ports. I cannot understand why the government has changed its plans upon this subject; I cannot understand why the government is not carrying out the policy which it propounded to this House last year; I cannot understand why this vast plan, which was heralded throughout the province of Quebec by the 'Le Soleil,' is not being carried out by the government this year.

My right hon. friend the Prime Minister, speaking this afternoon, mentioned several lines of railway which were in contemplation. He spoke of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Trans-Canada. I was glad to hear my right hon. friend say that the policy of the government is to encourage some of these lines by subsidies, but that not only one of them had yet been decided upon definitely by the government. I must say I was a little surprised to hear some hon. gentlemen say that they knew nothing of the Trans-Canada, that the Trans-Canada was a line that nobody knew anything about; they did not know where it started from, they did not know where it went, and they did not know the country through which it would pass. Now in speaking of this line I may be anticipating somewhat, because to-morrow, if I am correctly informed, a deputation from Quebec is going to appear before the Committee on Railways and Canals, and that deputation will give the committee all the information which it can desire upon the Trans-Canada. But let me say just now that the Trans-Canada is a line which goes in an almost straight direction from Quebec, or north of Quebec, to Port Simpson on the Pacific ocean. This line, from the information which we have now, goes through an undeveloped country, but a country which is perfectly susceptible of producing as much wheat as the country which lies to the south of it.

It is a line far removed from the international boundary; and if at any time, which God forbid, a war were to break out between the United States and Canada, when other lines of railway would probably become an easy prey to an invading force, the Trans-Canada line would be far removed from any such attack, and therefore would afford a safe and easy means of transportation for troops going from one end of Canada to the other. Then again the telegraph lines along this railway would be equally far removed from the international boundary, and communication could be kept up by them from one end of Canada to the other. There is another consideration I may mention, and that is that the Trans-Canada line will develop an important part of the province of Quebec. Now I fail to see from what I know, or from the information which has been given to us, that the Grand Trunk Pacific will have any such effect. If I understand the plan which has been imposed upon the Grand Trunk Pacific, that railway is going to pass through a part of the province of Quebec which will derive no benefit from it, and the province as a whole will derive no benefit from it. It is a line which, if my information is correct, will be almost impracticable. It is a line which is proposed merely to blind the eyes of the people of Quebec to the real situation. As to the Trans-Canada Company itself, I may say that it is composed of some of the best men in Quebec, and hon. members of this House who are acquainted with the incorporators know very well that they are energetic, that they are pushing, and that they will be able, if the government give them any support, to command as much capital in England as the Grand Trunk Pacific itself.

Now, Sir, let me briefly recapitulate the facts of the situation as they appear to me. First, the government has come down too late with this plan of appointing a commission to get information as to the best means of transportation through Canada; secondly, after all the discussions which have taken place in this House the government should be to-day sufficiently informed to be able to decide upon a policy and to propound it to this House; thirdly, government by commission is not in the true spirit of the constitution under which we live, and the government itself should take upon its own shoulders the responsibility of propounding to the House and to the country a policy upon a question so important as the one we are now discussing.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). It may seem out of place for a member representing a part of the country that is certainly the most deeply interested in the question of transportation, to take any part in this debate. The question of transportation has been up for discussion on a number of occasions ; but I must say, speaking for the western part of the country it seems to me that what the House considers transportation is quite a different thing from what we consider transportation. Canada extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a distance of 3,000 miles; I would suppose that national transportation meant the carriage of supplies from one ocean to the other, or over a part of that distance. But as this question has been debated in the House on the present and on previous occasions, transportation does not mean the carriage of produce or supplies, but merely their transference from rail to boat or from boat to rail at a lake or ocean port in the North-west are interested in the transportation question as Canadians, we are interested in the equipment of our ocean ports, we are interested in seeing Canadian traffic go through Canadian channels; we are interested in these things, I say, as Canadians, but not as North-westers. As North-westers, speaking locally and sectionally—we have no special interest in the equipment of these ports. But we do not look at the matter in that light, we look at it as Canadians desiring to build up Canada, desiring to see Canada developed in the east as well as in the west. Therefore we are prepared to vote money to build up ocean ports at Montreal and Quebec ; but we do not want it understood that the building up of these ports is for the special interest and development of the North-west. The great question of transportation is : How shall produce and supplies be transported most cheaply, to the benefit of the producer and the consumer ? It seems to me that we are wandering far from the real essence of the question when we think of the question of transportation as merely a question as to the port at which our supplies shall be transferred from the warehouse to the steamer. Would hon. members look at it in this way ? Our wealth is derived from our crop, and the question of transportation is important to us just in proportion as it affects the value of the crop. Give the crop a cheapening of transportation to the extent of a cent a bushel, and you add a cent a bushel to the trade of Canada. It makes no difference whether the crop goes out of the country by one port or another, you have added that amount to the trade of Canada by cheapening transportation. Is it more important to Canada that a crop of 100,000,000 bushels of grain shall be advanced in value one cent a bushel or that that amount of grain shall pass out of the country by a particular port ? If you can increase the vaule of your crop by cheapening your transportation, you are thereby benefiting the country by adding to the trade of the country, but if you are merely taking a course to, as it were, compel the trade of the country to go this way or that way, there is no special addition to the trade of the country and there is no benefit. Everything according to its value. We want to see Canadian trade go through Canadian ports. We are willing to vote money to help to put these ports into proper shape, but let me tell my hon. friends that the difference between the value in our export of grain that will accrue from the expenditure of perhaps some $6,000,000 at the port of Montreal will not possibly amount to more than one cent per bushel, taking the extreme view of the case. That amount of one cent per bushel could be added to the value of the crop of the west by a reduction in the rates over the railways very much more easily than it could by equipping the port of Montreal. If it is transportation we are to talk, let us talk transportation and the cheapening of transportation, and if we want to talk ports, we will talk ports and the improvement in the means of transfer. It was said here to-day by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that the New York Central carries wheat from Buffalo to New York at, I think he said, something less than two cents a bushel.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not say that, but I said that they could do so.

Mr. OLIVER. Could the hon. gentleman tell us at about what price they do carry it?

Mr. CHARLTON. About three to three and a-half cents per bushel.

Mr. OLIVER. We will say four cents a bushel. The distance is about 400 miles. The distance from Buffalo to New York is approximately the same as the distance from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay, and we pay twelve cents a bushel to carry grain from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay, when that same grain, after it gets to Buffalo, is carried from Buffalo to New York for four cents a bushel. Do you want to talk transportation ? Do you want to cheapen transportation ? Then cut the rate on grain between Winnipeg and Port Arthur, and add the difference to the trade of this country instead of to the dividends of the railway company. The cheapening of transportation will come by the improvement and increase in our railway facilities, and by the better arrangements we may make from time to time as to the control of rates over these railways ; that is as to getting the advantage of the facilities which we provide.

Let me say that in my own estimation, and I believe in the estimation of the greater part of the western country, we do not look for the cheapening of transportation by the improvement of our present canal system or by the addition of another canal system. We have a canal system of which as an engineering work, I presume we may be very proud. But as a means of drawing the trade of North America through our country, it has been a dismal failure. Then, we do not look to the duplicating of the system to accomplish what it has failed in doing. The day of canals has gone by. Canada has practically lost the money it has put into canals, and I am one to say that Canada has no more money to put into a canal scheme, the Georgian bay or otherwise. In regard to the equipment of ports, I believe, and we all believe, that our trade should go through our own ports, and that these ports should be equipped properly for the carrying of that trade, but there is a limit, or there should be a limit, to all things, and as one who is not amenable to the local vote, perhaps I have the opportunity of saying certain things that may not be convenient to hon. members representing localities in this part of the country. The qualifications of any place to be a national port depend upon the ease with which it can be made a national port, and I say that when it is declared that after the vast expenditures which have been made it will yet require $6,000,000 to equip the port of Montreal as the national port of Canada, it is evidence that Montreal is not properly the national port of Canada, that the day that Montreal could be so considered has gone by, and that we have to select a port nearer deep water than Montreal ; that is to say, Quebec. If we had only one means of reaching the ocean, and that one the port of Montreal, then we certainly would have to spend these millions of money, but we are not so confined. We have all the length of the St. Lawrence river, and I am credibly informed that from Three Rivers to Quebec these impediments to navigation which cause the great difficulty in reaching Montreal do not exist, that we are not tied to Montreal, but that we have from Three Rivers to Quebec as a means of accommodating the deep water ocean traffic without these vast expenditures which are necessary to bring it up to the port of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) permit me to tell him that this is the worst part of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. OLIVER. Where ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Between Quebec and Three Rivers. The Cap a la Roche is the most dangerous part of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. OLIVER. I will accept the correction, but I understand the large expenditures were made between Three Rivers and Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Oh no ; very far from it.

Mr. OLIVER. I accept the correction. I am not familiar with the circumstances, certainly not as familiar as is the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte). However, I repeat, that these expenditures are too vast for the good resulting ; and, that when we have a deep water ocean port at Quebec we cannot afford to spend so many millions of dollars to make Montreal that which nature did not intend her to be. This discussion, Mr. Speaker, has covered a great deal of ground; hon. gentlemen who have spoken have gone pretty far afield, and I will take a similar liberty to a slight extent.

The question of a winter ocean port for the proposed Grand Trunk Railway line has been spoken of. I understand that our friends from the maritime provinces are making a stiff fight against the Grand Trunk Railway project, unless there is connected with it a Canadian ocean port during the winter months. There is this difficulty about their position, if they will allow me to say so: that they do not seem to be decided as to which port is to be the Canadian winter port. To my mind there is only one port in the maritime provinces that is suitable as a Canadian winter port for freight traffic, and that is the port of St. John. If the maritime province people will unite in supporting the port of St. John I think I can promise them that many of our western friends will favour that port also. We want a winter ocean port in our own country, but we cannot have a perambulating ocean port.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. Neither can we have an ocean port that is too distant from the centre of production. I would like to say to my friends from the maritime provinces, that it is St. John or nothing. If they will unite on St. John, I will be, for one, ready to give them a lift. I believe we can make St. John our winter ocean port, and if we cannot unite on St. John, then we cannot put ourselves in a position to deal with the Grand Trunk Railway company on the basis of having a Canadian winter ocean port.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Did I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to say that the government were going to spend $6,000,000 on the port of Montreal?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I said it had been stated by the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that it would require $6,000,000.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If the hon. gentleman said the government were going to spend $6,000,000 on the port of Montreal, I would have wired it down there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is not such a large sum of money for such a purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the projects of the Grand Trunk Railway Pacific and of the Canadian Northern Railway, let me ask what are really the transportation propositions that are before the House, and before the country. There is no doubt that the development of the west requires the construction of another trunk line of railroad by an independent company, if not by the government itself. The transcontinental trunk line of railway which we have now has answered a good purpose; it has developed a part of the country, but it has not developed the whole country. If we are to have the whole country developed, we must have other lines of railroad constructed. It strikes me that it is much better that these additional lines of railroad should be constructed by an independent company rather than that they should be constructed by that company which already has its transcontinental line. If we must have new lines we may as well have an independent company owning these lines, and have competition rather than have monopoly. Therefore, I say that we welcome the proposition of the Grand Trunk Railway and the proposition of the Canadian Northern Railway to open the western country by the construction of two railroads. There seems to be an idea that there is room for only one of those two roads. I am not prepared to say how it is from Winnipeg to Quebec, but I will say to the House that there is room and there is need for both the Canadian Northern Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway Pacific to develop the country from Manitoba west to the Rocky mountains through the fertile belt. There is need of a railroad at least every forty miles. I would say even every thirty miles in the fertile country. There is a country there every foot of which is fertile for a width of from 100 miles to 200 miles, all the way from the Manitoba boundary to the Rocky mountains. That country cannot be fully developed by one line of railroad. It must have two; it must have more than two lines in order to be properly developed. Therefore, just as we need one line more than the Canadian Pacific Railway to develop the North-west, so we need more than one to develop that fertile belt. There is no danger of overcrowding in the fertile part of the North-west by two trunk lines of railroad. In the narrow strip of country between the international boundary and the lakes, a distance of 100 miles, there are five parallel lines of railroad and they were blocked with grain last fall. If 100 miles of fertile country in the province of Manitoba requires five parallel lines to do its work, surely the country further west equally fertile; a strip from 100 to 200 and 300 miles wide will not be overcrowded with two lines of railroad.

Now, in regard to assistance to the building of a railroad through that country, I am sure that the people will hear with great satisfaction the announcement of the Prime Minister to-day that there will be no grant of land in aid of railroad construction in the North-west. There is the strongest feeling in the North-west against giving aid to railroads by grants of land. The country has been throttled by that system; we do not want to repeat it. I was somewhat astonished to-day to hear the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart) say that these land grants to railroads in the North-west had been made at the request of the people of the North-west. That certainly was news to me, and I have been very well acquainted with the North-west for a number of years. I wonder if the people he alluded to were the half-breeds who in 1885 expressed their opinion in regard to the land administration of that country, by taking up arms in defence of what they thought to be their rights in regard to these lands—and the half-breeds were the principal people of the country at that time. Those deputations who came to the government here and asked that the lands of the North-west be given away to railroads—I certainly never heard of them starting. I do not know who they were, but we are bound to take the word of the hon. member in parliament. However that may be, I do not think they came from the North-west. Speaking, if I may, on behalf of the North-west, I will say that the people of that country have been so ill-satisfied and are so ill-served by our present railroad that they would welcome—in fact they look upon it as the only full relief—the construction of a government railway as a means of settling the transportation question in that country ; a railroad built and owned and controlled, even if not operated by the government. I presume, however, that that view will not find favour in the House, and that we will be required to make a bargain with one or the other company to build the railroad in consideration of certain assistance to be given. On that point I want to say very definitely that it is the absolute understanding of the case by the people of the North-west that any aid granted to a railroad company towards the construction of its line in that country shall be compensated by a corresponding control of the rates upon that railroad. Our view is : no control, no bonus.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. We would rather give a bonus and have control of rates than have the railroad built without a bonus and have no control of rates. The rates are everything. We can wait for the railroad for a year or two years, but if we have no control of rates, we are at the mercy of the railroad; the railroad is our master for all time, and we are its servants. Whatever bargain is made between the railroad company and this parliament or this government, our position is that for every dollar of assistance we give, either in guarantee or in money, we want a corresponding control of rates, which control shall be actual and effective, and not visionary. We cannot afford, this country cannot afford, eastern Canada cannot afford, to load ourselves up with any more indebtedness for the construction of railroads, which railroads, after they are built, shall be run absolutely regardless of the interests of the people of Canada, either east or west. Do you people of eastern Canada know how you stand in regard to this transportation question ? Your market for your manufactures and for your wholesale dealings is in western Canada; it is there or it is not anywhere. Do you know that the manufacturing and wholesale centres of the United States are much nearer the Canadian North-west, than your manufacturing and wholesale centres are ? Do you know that the distance is much shorter from Minneapolis and St. Paul than it is from Toronto and Montreal ? Do you know that you have to get, not the same rates, but lower rates per mile on your supplies going from here to the North-west than United States dealers get on their supplies going from Minneapolis, St. Paul or Chicago ? But you say, we will put up the duty. You cannot put your duty high enough, because just as you put up the duty the railroad puts its rates up to include the duty. You do not get the benefit of the duty; the duty is figured into the railroad rate every time, and do not make any mistake about it. Let my hon. friends look at the transportation question from this point of view; and when they are dealing with a railroad corporation to-morrow or on any other day, let them make up their minds that it is not the man growing grain in the North-west who needs control of the rates on his wheat going out, so much as you need it on your merchandise going in. You need it more than he does, because if he does not send his wheat by the Canadian road, he can send it by an American road; but you cannot send your merchandise in by any but the Canadian road. Make no mistake about it; eastern Canada is vitally interested in this question of the control of rates over any railroad that may be built between eastern and western Canada. There is no east or west in this matter. You want to trade with us, we want to trade with you, and it is for you as much as it is for us to see that our interests are protected according to the amount of money we pay or according to the amount of security we give.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, the present discussion arose this afternoon through two questions which the hon. leader of the opposition asked of the government. One question referred to the commission which the government had promised to appoint, and the other referred to the much-talked-of transcontinental railroad project. I do not propose to discuss in a general way the transportation question, which has been so much discussed this afternoon and this evening; but I will just confine myself in a few words to the two questions which the hon. leader of the opposition asked. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) raised a very important question this afternoon in stating what it cost to transfer grain from the head of the great lakes to the seaboard. He claimed that the cheapest route from Duluth and Port Arthur was by way of Buffalo and New York, and he made out a pretty good case in favour of that route. But it seemed to me that he was a little inconsistent when he came to deal with this transcontinental question for a line from Quebec westward, because, having demonstrated that the cheapest route was by way of Buffalo and New York, he proceeded to show the House that if the government could be trusted to manage honestly a government railroad, the government should build that road. As he had already argued that that road could not carry grain as cheaply as it could be carried in other directions, his reason for advocating the government undertaking the road was evidently because he felt that no private enterprise would do so. Then with reference to the commission, we were told by the Prime Minister that this commission was for the purpose of looking into the question of water routes and Canadian ports—Montreal, Sorel, Three Rivers, Quebec, St. John, and so forth. We were told that the commission was not to look into the question of railroad transportation. It seems to me this is a mistake. It seems to me that this commission, which was to have been appointed a week or two after the opening of parliament, should have power to look into the great transportation question in the broadest possible manner. If what the hon. member for North Norfolk has told us is a fact, that grain can never be carried as cheaply around the north of Lake Superior, through a country in which it is difficult to operate railroads, and if we have in view sentimental and patriotic motives in building up Canadian ports, what this commission should be in a position to tell us, after they have solved the problem to their satisfaction, is, how much more it will cost to carry the grain from the North-west by this northern route through Canada. For my part, I am prepared to support the sentimental Canadian idea, but I want to know when I come to vote what the extra cost is going to be. When we have the information we will be in a position to decide whether we ought to put our hands in our pockets and pay the amount required or not. We are informed however that it is very doubtful whether the gentleman mentioned as president will act. Possibly Sir William Van Horne may refuse to act. He may plead that he himself does not require the advice or counsel of the other gentlemen whom the government have suggested to advise with him on this commission. Or he may say that he is quite competent to advise the government forthwith. Or for any other reason he may decline to act. If Sir William Van Horne should refuse the appointment, I would suggest that the government should avail itself of his great experience and invite him to come to Ottawa and discuss that matter with them. Whether discussion should take days or weeks, it will be time well spent, and the government will have received valuable advice and suggestions from one thoroughly competent to speak on the subject and thoroughly versed in all its details.

Another matter with which the government have been dealing, and with which the government have been exceedingly dilatory is the Canadian Northern Railway. We are told by the right hon. the First Minister that a measure dealing with what we understand to be this road would be laid on the Table in a week or so. We must presume that the right hon. gentleman intended to convey the impression that a money subsidy would be granted this company. But why have the government not dealt with this matter before? Population has been flowing into the North-west far beyond our facilities for receiving and distributing it. There can be no possible excuse for the delay of the government. Last session they were not prepared to face this question, and they are in an equally helpless condition today. They knew last year that the tide of immigration was setting in, that greater facilities were needed to handle this immigration, still they had not the courage to deal with the question, and the Canadian Northern Railway people were asked to wait until this session. And here we are, beyond the middle of the session, and yet this measure is not before us. It is high time the government took some action. It is high time that we had a pronouncement and a definite policy submitted on this great transcontinental railway question in general. But leaving the question of the commission and the question of the Canadian Northern Railway and its subsidy, we come to another great question, we come to another proposition to build a transcontinental railway from a Canadian port on the Atlantic to a Canadian port on the Pacific. This is a matter which has been talked of for a year or more, and on which supporters of the government have been for a long time urging the government to take action. The granting of a charter to the Grand Trunk Pacific is now before the railway commission. Surely in a great national enterprise such as this, it is the duty of the government to announce its policy before the charter is granted. Members of the railway committee are called upon to discuss this charter, in complete ignorance of the policy of the government. We all realize that no railway will be built from one side of this continent to the other, through a country certain parts of which cannot furnish much freight or passenger traffic for many years to come, unless that railway receives a certain amount of subsidy or aid of some kind from the government. But when in the committee we seek to have the government declare its policy on the subsidy question, we are told that as the question of granting aid to the company is not before the committee, but solely that question of granting it a charter, we are debarred from discussing the subsidy question at all, and thus we are all at sixes and sevens and nothing is done. In contrast with this, an hon. member has pointed to another transcontinental charter which went through the railway committee at the rate of about a thousand miles a minute. It was said it was put through in three minutes and the line was 3,000 miles long. But supposing we should grant the Grand Trunk Pacific a charter embracing all the privileges contained in the charter before the committee what may happen. That charter gives them the right to go in for coal and iron mining and a host of other things concerning the propriety, of which I am not raising any question, but am simply pointing out what broad privileges and important concessions the company are asking. But supposing, I say, this charter should ultimately be granted and that the government then should decide to build a railway themselves from the Atlantic to the Pacific or that another corporation should come along and offer better terms, the question of vested rights would then stand in the way. We would be told that the Grand Trunk Pacific had gone to a great deal of expense and had acquired certain vested rights.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, further that we should have a declaration from the government as to whether it is the policy of the government to build a road from the city of Quebec or from a port in the maritime provinces to Winnipeg, or whether it intends to subsidize a company for that purpose, or what is its policy ? One hon. member referred this afternoon to the obligations this country is under to the Grand Trunk Railway. Well, we all recognize that the Grand Trunk Railway was the pioneer railway of the country and has done a great deal for Canada, but if the shareholders of that company did not reap the benefit they might have expected, I am not aware that the Canadian people are in any way responsible. Can it be charged to the Canadian people that they did anything or interfered in anyway in the management of the railway, which rendered it impossible for the company to pay such dividends as the shareholders expected. This question of a transcontinental road must be dealt with from a business and not, in this respect, from a sentimental standpoint.

Mr. Speaker, had the government the ability as well as the desire to deal with this transportation question, they would have no need to appoint a commission. Why delegate the powers of the government to a commission ? Why ask Sir William Van Horne or anybody else to submit to the country their views on this matter. It is the government who are responsible, and we should have had from the government long ago their policy. This business of shifting the responsibility on to a commission is not in accord with our ideas of responsible constitutional government.

What we desire to know from the government is the following : Is it the intention of the government at this session of parliament to grant aid either with money or land, or by the guarantee of bonds, principal or interest, or in any other way, to another transcontinental railway ? If so, has the government decided upon a route the terminals of which at the seaboard will be in Canada ? Does the government intend, if aid is granted, to make it a condition that the freight traffic originating on such railway and its branches and destined to the seaboard shall be shipped all the year round through Canadian seaports ? Does the government intend to prepare plans and formulate conditions relating to the building, or to the equipping, or to the operation of such railway ? If so, is it the intention to submit the same to the public for tender, with a view of ascertaining the most advantageous terms that may be secured from various parties, syndicates or corporations for the building of, or for the equipping of, or for the operation of such railway ?

Now, as I said before, we are all at-sixes-and-sevens with regard to the government's railway policy. We are more than half through the session, and we are supposed, during the remaining weeks of the session to develop a great transcontinental railway scheme, to arrange for the granting of bonuses and so on, in a manner that will meet the views of the country. The right hon. the Prime Minister is reported, in a despatch to the Toronto 'Globe' which is printed with very heavy headlines, as stating that, so far as he is concerned, he would favour guaranteeing the bonds for the railway. What bonds ? What route ? What terminals ? What conditions ? The amount which the government are to guarantee is not stated. These are the headlines on the despatch which is dated, Ottawa, May 20th :

> Bond interest guarantee for Grand Trunk Pacific.
> Government policy not decided, but the Premier personally seems disposed to advise an interest guarantee—no land.

Now, Sir, is this as far as the government has got on this great question ? I say we should have some more definite answer from the government with regard to this question which involves one of the greatest projects that has come before this country since the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have had very little satisfaction, and I am very much disappointed with the attitude of the government at this date with regard to this matter.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). The interest that has been displayed in this debate and that has been aroused on all questions of transportation, I think, should convince the government that the transportation problem is the most important that they have to deal with. Of course, when I speak of interest displayed, I mean displayed by the House, not by the government—they have not shown much interest in the matter. This question has been before the House ever since I first had the honour of a seat in this chamber. It has been talked of most earnestly, and, undoubtedly the speakers, and I think all hon. members on both sides, are in earnest on the subject. This question of how we are to get the products of the North-west to the market, that market being for the most part in Great Britain, is the most important question before the people of Canada to-day. It behoves us, then, to look at this question in the broadest possible way and to grapple with it—not to refer and to defer it from day to day and from year to year. Personally I have expressed my views in this House before on the question of railway subsidies. I have not altered my opinion. I believe that it is vicious, absolutely and entirely, to grant railway bonuses. I would appeal to the lesson taught us by the experience of the United States. I think I am right in saying that for twenty-five years, neither by states nor by the central government, have the American people given any aid to railways; and I can appeal to my friends from the west, and I think they will not contradict me when I say that there is no lack of railway building in the western states. If the government sees fit to grant aid to railways or to grant aid to public works, that aid should be granted in the general interest of the country and not in the interest of any one section. I contend, however, that the government, in the proposal which we feel is practically before the House, to grant aid to another transcontinental line, is going the wrong way; as some hon. gentleman has said, it is putting the cart before the horse. By building another railway they will still more congest our ports, will still more overwhelm our means of export and so will force, to a greater extent than now, export by way of foreign ports. I say that the first thing the government should do in this great question is to carefully look into the matter and make up their minds—if this government have minds that they can make up on any great question, which I very much doubt——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. On subsidies.

Mr. OSLER. They cannot even make up their minds on subsidies. They do not even know to what road they are going to give a subsidy, or how much they are going to give. They do not know but that they may give it to themselves. To build a government road, of course, I do not mean personally. I contend that the main question before this country to-day is how we are most cheaply to get our grain and cattle from Canada where they are grown to England where they are consumed. And I say also that if you build twenty transcontinental lines, you will not have solved, or even have begun to solve that question. That question must be solved by first deciding where our summer port and where our winter port are to be. If our summer port is to be in Montreal, then money must be expended on the St. Lawrence channel; you must light that river, you must deepen it and clear it and make the river and the port as safe to reach as Portland or Boston. It is absurd to think that we can export grain by the St. Lawrence route with insurance rates £2 and £4 per hundred—as they have been—higher than the railway rates charged from Boston or Portland. If you are going to make Quebec the port, then I say that is a matter that should be looked into, and decided upon once for all; and I believe members on this side of the House will support the expenditure of whatever sum of money is necessary to make Montreal or Quebec the port of Canada. I will go further than that, and I say without any hesitation that it will meet the approval of the whole population of Canada if you make Montreal and Quebec free ports. We are voting large sums of money for the development of railways and public works in various parts of the country. For what reason? In order that the farmers and the stock raisers may be able to transport their grain and their stock at a cheaper rate to Great Britain. How can you help them better? How can you help the Canadian agriculturist, the Canadian ranchman and all our other interests better than by securing for them cheap transportation to the seaboard, than by making the port where this stuff is shipped, free, by making it the best port in the world? We have difficulties to contend with as against Boston and New York ports, but I think we can overcome them if we face them. We are not overcoming them, and we will not overcome them if we build more railroads in the west while neglecting that one thing needful above all others, namely, a free and cheap port, and a cheap ocean rate. I think if the government were to expend public money in making Montreal, or Quebec, or Halifax, or St. John, as the case may be, as nearly perfect ports as it is possible to make them, in supplying the best possible facilities for shipment, they would do more for this country in the meantime than they would by bonusing railroads. In view of the rapid growth in the west at the present time, I do not think there is much danger of the people in that section of the country suffering from lack of railway competition or from lack of railway facilities. You may build three or four competing transcontinental roads, but you will find that almost the entire grain crop will be transhipped from the railroads to boats on Lake Superior. You can send it cheaper from Lake Superior by boat than by railroad, you can send it cheaper that way than by taking a long haul from Lake Superior, and I question whether it would pay to build railroads for that purpose.

Now I want to take exception to one statement made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). He said that the true distributing and manufacturing centres for the North-west were Chicago, Minneapolis and St. Paul, and that we must always look to these centres in securing competition for transportation to the east. I take exception to that statement altogether, I think it is entirely too narrow in its view. I have a strong idea that we should adopt a thorough national policy with the object of building up in our own country these manufacturing and distributing centres to compete with those which now confront us on the south of the line. I have a greater belief in the future of Manitoba and the North-west than the hon. member for Alberta has, if I am to judge from his speech. I believe that those of us who live ten years more will find in Winnipeg and Port Arthur and other western centres, the real rivals of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago. I believe that if we adopt a true national policy, in a very few years from now we will find Winnipeg, Edmonton and Port Arthur manufacturing goods for the people of that western country as cheaply as St. Paul and Minneapolis. While it may bear a little hardly upon the western people for a time, still that day is sure to come. I believe they are already getting their implements nearly as cheap as the people anywhere else in the world. Winnipeg is bound to become a great manufacturing centre, because they are going to get electrical power probably at one-fourth the cost of the power that is now supplied. In a short time you will no longer have to look to Chicago and to the other cities of the North-west for your manufactured articles. When Winnipeg becomes a manufacturing centre, you will have there a population of 200,000 or 300,000 ; Edmonton will be a large place, and look at what this will mean to the small farmers in the vicinity of those cities. When you have a good home market, you can make cheaper articles, and you can get cheaper rates over railways, because you get freight both ways. So I believe that this transportation problem, when looked at from this broad standpoint, and when looked at in connection with a true national policy, will very soon solve itself. But the first thing we have to do is to see that our seaports, wherever you may select them, should be able to compete with the best seaports on this continent.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). This discussion has taken a very wide range, and I will only occupy the attention of the House for a moment. In the speech from the Throne, which was delivered on the 13th day of March, we had this statement :

> The great influx of population into our North-western Territories and the very large additional areas of fertile lands which are being brought under cultivation combined to further press upon us the need for increasing transportation facilities for the forwarding of our grain and other products to the markets of the world through Canadian channels. The whole question of transportation and terminal facilities continues to occupy much attention, and my government will immediately appoint a commission of experienced men to report on the subject.

We have now reached the 26th day of May, and the right hon. the Prime Minister tells us that the commission has not yet been appointed, although we were promised in the speech from the Throne that it would be appointed immediately. We are also told that the government have no settled policy in regard to this transcontinental line. Now, Sir, that is entirely at variance with the utterances of Sir Charles Rivers Wilson, at a meeting held in London on the 16th day of April. He then told his shareholders that this whole matter had been discussed with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Prime Minister of this country, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues had that matter under their consideration, and that there was very little doubt but that substantial assistance would be given to that transcontinental line. He said :

> The Bill has been introduced, and the form and extent of the government assistance are under discussion with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues.

Now, Sir, if, on the 16th day of April, the Bill had been introduced, and the form of the assistance was under discussion by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues, is it not time that we should hear something as to the policy of the government on this great question ? We are dealing with the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill in the Railway Committee, and we are told from time to time by members of the Liberal party in that committee that we should discuss that Bill as if there was to be no subsidy, as if there was to be no assistance from the government. Why, Sir, it would be idle to discuss that Bill on any such idea as that. Sir Charles Rivers Wilson told his people at that meeting in London distinctly that they would not have gone into this great scheme which might involve them in heavy loss unless they were to receive substantial assistance from the government. I am not quoting his exact language, although I have it here. So I say it would be idle for us as members of this House to discuss that Bill on any other basis than that the Grand Trunk Pacific are going to get substantial assistance from this government.

Now, I think before we go further in discussing this important Bill in the Railway Committee, we should know something of the policy of the government on this question. Nobody recognizes more than I do that the time is approaching when a greater Canada than we now know of will exist west of Winnipeg. We all recognize that the North-west Territories are filling up at a tremendous rate. We all recognize that there may be a necessity for another transcontinental line, or at least a necessity for improved transportation from that country. But, Sir, when a Bill of the magnitude and importance of the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill comes before this House, or comes before the Railway Committee, we certainly should have from some member of the government a statement as to the policy of the government in regard to that Bill. We have had no statement from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) who sits in the committee day in and day out. This is probably one of the most important questions that has come before this parliament for many years, and it is a question of such great importance that the government evidently have not been able to grapple with it and to tell us what their policy is. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has made reference to the cities of Chicago, St. Paul, and other cities, as being the most convenient cities for the people of the North-west Territories to deal with. I would like to say to the hon. member that this is bringing up the old cry that was raised by the western farmers of the United States against that great national policy which was inaugurated in that country in the form of protection. It is the old cry that they had no manufacturing industries in the west and that the policy which was then advocated was only a policy which would benefit the eastern portion of the United States. I would like to call his attention to the fact that to-day in the state of Nebraska there are 5,414 manufacturing establishments with $71,982,127 of capital, and an annual production of over $143,000,000 ; in Iowa there are over 14,000 establishments; in Missouri over 18,000; in Minnesota over 11,000; in Kansas over 7,000; and in South Dakota, 1,639 establishments. Nearly all of these western states have developed large manufacturing establishments and the day is coming in this country when Winnipeg will develop just as large industries as Chicago has developed. It is poor policy for our friends from the western country to take any narrow or provincial view of this matter. These hon. gentlemen have to take a national view of questions of this sort, because, what is in the interests of the nation certainly should be in the interests of all the different provinces. The government having promised us that this matter would be dealt with immediately we are entitled to know now before this Bill goes any further in the Railway Committee what the policy of the government is going to be in rgerad to this transcontinental line. But, Sir, it is the old policy of delay, the policy of leaving things alone. We saw from the utterances of the hon. member from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) how these people acted in regard to the great question of the tariff. Let me just refer to a few words of the speech of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, in regard to the course they pursued in 1897. Now, I do not want to go into the question of the tariff, because that question does not form part of this debate, but only to refer to the speech of that hon. gentleman to show the course that these hon. gentlemen pursued. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, said :

> Of course, if the past utterances of some of my hon. friends of the Liberal party had been carried out, the tariff which is in existence to-day would not be where it is. We would have simply wrecked and destroyed this country. It was out of the question for any government in 1897 to try to carry out the utterances which some public men had delivered in the past.

Canada owes a great deal to the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's, in preventing these hon. gentlemen from carrying out their anti-election pledges which would have destroyed the tariff of this country, and which, to use his own words, would have wrecked and destroyed this Dominion of Canada.

I.C.R.—WINDSOR JUNCTION ACCIDENT.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the House to-night——

An hon. MEMBER. Who is it ?

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), or the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick).

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Minister of Customs to-night.

Mr. CLARKE. On the 19th of May I asked the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) if he would find it convenient to lay the evidence taken in the inquiry in respect to the cause of the accident at Windsor Junction on the Table of the House. The hon. minister said that he had not intended to do so, but that if I desired, it would be laid on the Table. I did certainly desire to see the evidence and the finding of the commissioner, and on the following day—the 20th of May—I again drew the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who was in his seat, to the matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What accident was it ?

Mr. CLARKE. The accident at Windsor Junction, involving the loss of four lives. The government were so impressed with the importance of having an investigation that a special commissioner was appointed to inquire into the cause of the accident. I asked the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals if he would lay the evidence and the finding of the commissioner on the Table of the House and he promised to do so. On Wednesday last, nearly a week ago, I drew the attention of the right hon. leader of the government to the promise which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals had made on the previous day. The right hon. gentleman was good enough to say that he would take note of the inquiry. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs to the fact that this finding and the evidence have not yet been laid on the Table of the House. I do not desire to take up the time of the House or of the Minister of Railways and Canals in discussing this matter the next time the House goes into Committee of Supply, but I think the hon. minister is in duty bound to implement his pledge by laying this information, which he promised to bring down, on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). I will take care that the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) are conveyed to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and I have no doubt that he will be anxious to carry out what he promised to do.

TRADE COMMISSIONER IN LONDON.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). I would like to make an inquiry of the members of the government. For some years it has been said that the government intended to appoint a Canadian trade commissioner with an office in London, England. I would like to inquire whether the government have the matter under consideration and whether they are prepared to make any statement in regard to it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) is giving consideration to that question. A gentleman was appointed not long ago to fill a similar position in Birmingham. I think the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has not yet reached a decision as to the man who shall take the position in London. I will mention to him that the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) has asked the question, and he, perhaps, when he is in his place, will be able to give a more definite answer.

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to make a few remarks in connection with the subject of discussion which has gone on for the most part of the afternoon and evening. It seems to me that the position which the House finds itself at present, not only in its work here but in its work in another place, seems to indicate that it has not been put in possession of as much information on the subject which every one in the House seems to think is of very great importance as it must have been. We are constantly hearing that the transportation problem is the great problem before this country, but when we come to discuss this matter we find that apart from the information which individual members can gather, there is nobody of ascertained knowledge on this subject to enable us to determine what ought be done for the solution of this problem. Judging from the remarks made by our friends from the North-west, this is the great question to them beyond all comparison, but it is a question in which we are all interested and in which the west is not peculiarly concerned. We certainly are interested in the outcome of any action that will be taken by the government as a government in constructing a railroad itself, or, in aiding as it may see fit any companies that are now or may hereafter be disposed to add to the existing railway facilities. Generally speaking we are all agreed that it is highly important that all the products of Canada so far as possible shall be turned in such direction as to be exported from this country through a Canadian port. In view of the light that has been thrown upon the subject to-day, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that arrived at by Sir William Van Horne in his celebrated expression 'that the hopper is too large for the spout.' Sir William Van Horne seems to be the gentleman whom the government is exceedingly anxious to secure as chairman of the Transportation Commission, and Sir William Van Horne has already given all the answer to the question that the commission would possibly give if it sat for months. His idea is that the urgent thing in connection with the transportation problem is to develop the facilities for exporting via the port of Montreal.

Mr. TAYLOR. Enlarge the spout.

Mr. BELL. Yes, enlarge the spout. As I understand it, there is an elevator capacity of about 4,000,000 bushels of grain at the port of Montreal, and at the joint ports of Port Arthur and Port William there is now or shortly will be an elevator capacity of 11,000,000 bushels, so that a spout representing 4,000,000 bushels is expected to relieve this hopper of 11,000,000 bushels. It seems certain that what is urgently required now is that some action should be taken in the direction indicated by the ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) namely, that for the immediate relief of the situation you do not need the construction of any further railroad in the west at present, but that you urgently need the enlargement of our facilities for export from Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. And on the lakes.

Mr. BELL. Yes. I think I saw it stated a few days ago that the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator at Montreal had no legs for discharging barges, so that it presumedly is not in a position to handle any traffic coming through our expensive canal system. If that be so, it is remarkable that after Canada has spent over $60,000,000 upon the St. Lawrence canals, there are no facilities at Montreal to discharge the barges which this $60,000,000 of expenditure has enabled to reach the port of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We use floating elevators.

Mr. BELL. Yes, they have some floating elevators in Montreal, but on the whole it is perfectly clear that Montreal is not properly equipped at all. You will find a proof of that in the report of the Montreal Board of Trade which says that in 1902, Montreal handled 15,000,000 bushels of wheat; in 1901, 12,000,000 bushels; in 1900, 9,000,000 bushels; and in 1899, 10,000,000 bushels of wheat. Our crops in the North-west have developed to something in the neighbourhood of 100,000,000 bushels last year, and yet we find that the exports of wheat from the port of Montreal actually declined from 1899 to 1900 by 1,000,000 bushels; only increased the next year by 2,000,000, and in the next year by 3,000,000 bushels. This refers to wheat alone. The whole trade of Montreal shows that while they exported of grain generally 31,000,000 bushels in 1899, last year they only exported 19,000,000 bushels or a little more than half the grain that was handled at that port in 1899. What is the use of all the expenditure made by Canada upon our canal system if the fact remains that the receipts at Montreal from that canal system are practically stationary, or, in view of the enormous increase of grain offering for export, the proportion being handled through the port of Montreal instead of increasing, is, in proportion to the great output of the North-west actually diminishing. In face of these facts, to build another line of railroad in the North-west in order to increase the exports of grain through Canadian ports is going entirely to the wrong place. We are undertaking by that to do something which instead of relieving the present situation will simply aggravate it. The remark was made in the Railway Committee the other day, by a gentleman who spoke for the Grand Trunk Railway, that he could fill the port of Montreal to congestion; that he could fill the port of Quebec to congestion—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to what took place in a committee until it has been reported to the House.

Mr. BELL. I did not know that I referred to the committee. I thought I had said; in another place.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman mentioned the committee.

Mr. BELL. The fact is that one of the Canadian railroads which is now carrying to the port of Montreal, could last year have sent 5,000,000 bushels more to that port if Montreal had facilities for handling that amount of grain. In view of these statements which are undoubtedly correct, if we are going to develop the export trade of Canada so that our grain products can go out of this country through a national port, then the first thing for us to do is to equip that port in such a fashion that it can do the business. I understand that at present the debt represented by the Montreal harbour works is somewhere in the vicinity of $5,000,000. Although I presume the city of Montreal bears a portion of the burden, yet I believe they are not paying or have not paid the interest.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Every cent of interest has been paid in Montreal.

Mr. BELL. I did not think so.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Oh, yes, they are not one cent behind in Montreal. Quebec does not pay the interest.

Mr. BELL. I believe that is so. There is an indebtedness of $5,000,000, in the port of Montreal. It is well enough that the city should bear its proportion, but if that port be of national importance as every speaker here assures us, then it is entirely worth the while of the government of Canada to supplement the efforts of the city of Montreal and to equip that port in such a manner that it shall become a great national port. We find that in the ports of the great nations of Europe, they do not hesitate to make very much larger expenditures. If I am not mistaken, the equipment of the port of Hamburg, has cost something in the neighbourhood of $75,000,000, and it was undertaken by the country of which that port is the outlet, and is looked upon, I have no doubt, as a good investment. It has been held to-night that it would be impossible to make Montreal the national port —that the very fact that we have spent so much money on it, and that it has not developed to a greater extent than it has, shows that it has not the advantages that it should have to become the national port of Canada.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Would the hon. gentleman say how much money the government has spent on the port of Montreal ?

Mr. BELL. I understand that the government has not spent anything, but it has advanced moneys to the harbour commissioners, which are looked on as their liabilities. It is held by some that because of what has been done for Montreal by the harbour commissioners without having effected more than it has, therefore the matter is settled, and we have proof that Montreal is really not a national port, and that it is impossible to make it such. This is not my argument ; I am merely repeating what has been stated in the course of this discussion. But when you compare the situation of Montreal with that of the other ports, I do not think you will find any reason for coming to the conclusion. The port of Glasgow, the greatest port in north Britain, is situated 20 or 21 miles from what was originally the port of West Scotland. The trade instead of stopping at Greenock, the old port at the mouth of the river, has been by the expenditure of money carried 20 or 21 miles up the Clyde, and Glasgow, which has not the natural advantages of Montreal, has been developed into the great port of Scotland. In the same way you will find that the great port on the Thames is not at the mouth of the river, but at London, a long distance from the mouth, where the trade is carried only as the result of a large expenditure of money and of the enterprise of the merchants and business people of that city. It seems to me that you can lay it down as a proposition which is almost invariably true, that business will ascend a navigable stream as far as it possibly can; and the natural feature which fixes the city of Montreal where it is, is the Lachine rapids, which make it impossible for trade to go further up the river. I feel convinced that Montreal is the natural port; and while some of the great ocean carriers drawing from 30 to 40 feet of water may stop at Quebec, nothing can take the trade away from Montreal except the construction of a great railroad through the northern country, which could bring the trade as cheaply to the port of Quebec as it could be brought to the port of Montreal. If that project should be carried out, then Quebec would probably compete with Montreal; but apart from that, I have no doubt that what has been the history of the country in the past will continue to be its history in the future. Quebec was not behind Montreal in the beginning; but in the course of time business following its natural channels has made a selection of Montreal, so that Montreal has developed to be the greatest city of Canada, while Quebec has remained where it has been for a long time. An hon. member speaking to-night has expressed the view that if the railroad under contemplation is to be constructed in a manner to meet the wishes of the people of the maritime provinces, it is absolutely essential that they should agree in selecting a port. It does not seem to me that that is more incumbent on the people of the maritime provinces that it is incumbent on the people of the province of Quebec to make a choice between Quebec and Montreal. These ports may grow up side by side, and we hope to see the ports of Halifax and St. John developed side by side to a certain extent. St. John has advantages in the matter of distance, not very important, but so far sufficient to decide that all the heavy traffic carried to maritime province ports should go to St. John. But, I do not feel at all compelled to assent to the proposition that you must limit a country or any district of a country to one port. What we do find is that business, in seeking its outlet through this country is, to such an extent as to make its operations very plain, following the line of least resistance. In the case of the maritime provinces, the fact that St. John is taking the export business rather than Halifax is simply because of the advantage of a few miles. If the port of St. John be the choice of the current traffic, because of the difference of a very limited number of miles indeed in comparison with transcontinental distances, then it seems that in dealing with this question of transcontinental transportation, we should have in view the shortest possible distance that can be obtained from the grain-growing districts of the west to some port on the Atlantic seaboard; and apparently it is necessary to go as far north as possible, where the parallels are shortest, to obtain that shortened distance which is the determining factor in these matters. The greatest differences of opinion have been expressed in this House on important elements of this question. We had one hon. gentleman contend that the North-west country required not one new transcontinental line, but possibly two. We had the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals on the other hand say that the Canadian Pacific Railway could handle three times the trade it has now. The most diverse and contradictory opinions are expressed, and there is an absolute want of knowledge that must be had before this question can be satisfactorily dealt with. In reference to such a very important question all the information that can possibly be got should be obtained and laid on the Table of the House, and it seems to me that the mode in which the government proposes to get the information is not a very satisfactory or efficient one. They propose to appoint a commission, and, judging from the names of the gentlemen mentioned in the House to-day, I do not believe their findings would carry a great deal of weight in the House or in the country. The only man who can be looked upon as the master of the subject, we are told, will not accept the position, and the other men whose names have been mentioned are not men of very great weight.

The other gentlemen suggested are not, as far as I can understand, men whose opinions would carry a great deal of weight. I cannot see any great necessity for a commission to investigate this matter. There cannot be any great difficulty in arriving at certain facts. The government could very easily make the inquiries necessary, obtain the statistics required, and put the House in possession of all the facts necessary to determine what course should be followed. If grain can be carried, as was shown to-day by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) from Duluth to New York at three cents to four cents per bushel, there is no reason why it should not be carried at a lower rate from Duluth or any other lake port through our canal system down to Montreal. Otherwise all the findings of the commission which investigated this question of the relative cost of carriage by water and by rail, in the interests of the United States, are at fault. We have every reason to believe that we have in our lakes and canal system, a channel through which freight can be carried at cheaper rates to the seaboard than it can be by any other route in any part of the continent. If this be not the case, there can be no confidence at all in the opinion generally held as to the comparative cost of moving freight by rail and water. This opinion is confirmed by this fact that, as far as possible, freight seeks the water route. From the prairies it comes to the nearest lakeport, then it follows the water route until it arrives at Buffalo, where it reaches the end of lake navigation for large freight carriers. It only takes the railway when compelled to do so by accident or by necessity. We have in Canada a canal system of fourteen feet navigation, and we have the findings of the American commission recommending that the Erie canal be deepened to fourteen feet. That commission decided against making waterways of greater depth and against using large vessels or ocean carriers in canal navigation. The cost of carrying these large and expensive vessels at the low rate of speed compulsory in passing through a canal system rendered the smaller boats much more economical. Well, Mr. Speaker, we are to-day in the possession of just such a system as this American commission says is what the United States require. Yet we find the traffic of the port of Montreal is worse than stationary; we find that in three years it declined from 30,000,000 bushels of grain to 20,000,000. Why then go to great expense in building other railways ? Why do not the government use their intelligence to find out the fatal flaw which prevents the port of Montreal from realizing the advantages which, according to this American commission, would be realized by the port of New York if that port were equipped with a fourteen foot canal such as serves Montreal to-day. Montreal is in possession of the very canal system which the American commission say New York requires in order it may get back the trade which has been diverted from it. Yet Montreal, which ought to be the great exporting point on the North American continent during the summer months, is practically, so far as the grain trade is concerned, not only stationery but a long way behind the position it occupied in 1899, and this, in spite of the fact that the grain exports of this country have doubled or trebled in the course of those three years. In view of these facts, which cannot be controverted, the idea of asking the people of Canada to submit to an expenditure or liability in the shape of endorsing or guaranteeing bonds for the purpose of building another railway to compete with those already existing—not to bring business to Montreal because there is no use of bringing business where it cannot be handled, but to Ontario, whence it must be diverted to the port of Portland, is absurd. It would mean asking the people of Canada to throw away their money on a piece of work which could not do this country a particle of good. If it is necessary to increase the facilities for moving freight from the western end of Lake Superior and the lakeports on the Georgian bay to Montreal, I am satisfied that it could be effected in a much cheaper way than by building a new and independent line. No one has yet pretended to show that any such line is required; no one has set up the contention that the Canadian Pacific Railway is overburdened with traffic on that portion of its system extending from the western end of Lake Superior to Montreal or to any points in Ontario. There is no necessity for increasing the facilities for hauling freight by rail from Port Arthur to any Ontario point because no freight or very little comes in that direction at all. Our object is to gather into elevators on the lake front the grain of the west and they send it by steamers to Buffalo, Midland, Port Colborne, or some other point on the Georgian bay. There is nothing at all to show any necessity for increasing the capacity of the railway for carrying freight over that particular distance, and yet a great part of the expenditure this country would be called upon to make, if it were to subsidize or in any way assist the new transcontinental railway, would be applied to increasing the facilities over that portion of country, which, so far as we have reason to know, requires no further facilities. But if it were necessary to increase the railway capacity between the extreme west of Ontario and the Ontario Peninsula, then it seems to me that that might be done at a very much less cost than by building a new and independent railway, which would not only be very expensive, but would impair, to a certain extent, the efficiency of the railway system already in existence. It is a fundamental principle that we should not set up competition which would injure existing rights.

We know that it is a principle that we shall not parallel an existing line and induce a competition which will impair the efficiency of both the old road and the new. A work that would, to my mind, give increased haulage to that section—if it were required, which I maintain it is not—would be to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway to double track its system over that part. Generally speaking, while I think it is not hard to show that another transcontinental railway is not wanted and cannot be justified at present to the people of Canada who are to be asked to pay for it, I think that a large amount of influence ought to be exerted upon the government of Canada to make a positive declaration of their intentions in this regard. In the Railway Committee, which is to meet to discuss the questions which are before the House and the government, as was very well pointed out by the hon. member for Cornwall and Stormont (Mr. Pringle), the knowledge of the course the government is prepared to take in regard to this matter is an essential feature. If you are asked whether you will grant a charter to another line of railway, that in itself is not a difficult matter to decide—you treat it as you would treat any other question, and consider whether it would be a disadvantage or an advantage to set up a competing line, or to open a line through new territory. But the really important question must be and ought to be settled before any reasonable result can be reached by the committee, and this involves a clear declaration on the part of the country as to whether or not they propose to give assistance by a money grant or extensive guarantee to the construction of any such public work. It is not enough—it is not enough by any means—for one gentleman or another to rise in this House and assert that the transportation problem is a great problem. That may be quite true. But the more important that problem becomes the more important it is that we should approach it intelligently, and that we should know every detail in connection with it; that we should not blindly or ignorantly put our hand to the work of effecting what we think would be an amendment or improvement, where, perhaps, instead of effecting that amendment or improvement, we may be aggravating the situation and at the same time adding enormously to the burdens of the people of Canada.

Mr. GEORGE A. CLARE (South Waterloo). It is not my intention to take up much of the time of the House, but I cannot let the motion pass without saying a few words. I was very much surprised by the remarks made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) this afternoon in reply to the speech of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I was particularly surprised to hear the right hon. gentleman say it was unfair that he had not received notice of the subject brought up by the leader of the opposition. It has been stated by the Liberal press and by many of the Liberal members of this House that this government is a government of business men, who understand the affairs of the country. I have also understood from many hon. gentlemen on the other side that the question of transportation was one of the most important questions before the House. It was surprising to me, therefore, that the Prime Minister should feel that he was taken unaware when he was asked to lay before the House and the country his policy on the question of transportation. As usual, the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who is the apologist for this government on every occasion, cropped up, and delivered one of his usual interesting speeches. It was also very interesting to me, and, I think, to every member of this House, to hear him speak of the patriotism we should show on this question of transportation and how we should forget our party feelings and work to develop a transportation policy which would be for the benefit of the country at large. It seems to me the hon. gentleman has not always been the patriot that he asks us this afternoon to think he is. When we think of him preaching throughout this country commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity, I do not think we can regard him as acting patriotically towards this country. And, for eighteen long years, according to the confession he made to the House last year, that hon. gentleman preached the policy of free trade, although in 1876 and 1877 he had urged his leader to support a policy of protection as being more in the interest of the country. It appears to me quite plain that, before the Railway Committee meets tomorrow to take up the question of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, the government should take us into their confidence and tell us what assistance they intend to give to that company. We have not had the policy of the government laid before us, and have no means of judging what that assistance may be. But we do know that Sir Charles Rivers Wilson has stated to the directors and shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway that it shall not cost the shareholders a cent, that with the assistance that is to be given by the government, and other means, they will be able to build the entire road from the Atlantic to the Pacific. If that is the case, I think it is fair that the Railway Committee should not pass a charter to that company. The business of the country would not be delayed if the government should take us into their confidence in this subject. I also think this House should adjourn now. We have had this transportation question discussed all this afternoon and evening, and only a few of the ministers have been present. The Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) has not been in his seat this afternoon, nor has the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland). These are the men who should tell us what the policy of the government is on this subject.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Law books and freight thereon, for the use of the bench and bar, and stationery and freight thereon for use of courts, $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of that item, law books for use of Bar?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are doing at Dawson as we did in the Northwest Territories. Up to two years ago, the law library was provided at the court house at Regina, and two years ago when a Bar Association was formed the library was handed over to the association and has been kept up by them since. At Dawson we have adopted the same system of establishing a library for the use of the bench and the bar of the court-house, where both judges and the members of the bar have access to it. But as soon as a bar association is formed at Dawson we shall hand the library over to them as we did at Regina.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In all the eastern provinces I believe the law libraries are kept altogether by the bar associations. I do not know the size of the bar, so far as members are concerned, in the Yukon Territory, but assuming that there is any considerable bar there, one would suppose that they should contribute something to that purpose out of their own resources, possibly not all. Is the minister able to state whether any portion of the expenditure on the library is borne by the local bar?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know what the local bar contributes. I know that the library up to the present time has not cost us a great deal of money. But with respect to the books in the library, I think they have all been purchased by the government and have been sent there for the common use of the judges and of the lawyers. My hon. friend will realize what an expensive luxury it is to get law books in there at all. It costs almost as much to pay the freight on them as it does to buy the books themselves. We paid $700 freight on one lot of law books which cost $1,700.

Miscellaneous expenses, including fees and expenses of Crown prosecutor, salary and living allowance of stenographer for police court, and other officials or employees connected with the administration of justice, coroners' inquests, &c., &c., $25,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I promised the other night to give information on several items of the estimates then under discussion, one with respect to contingencies of the Supreme Court. I promised the leader of the opposition that I would supply detailed information with respect to that item, and the information I now have before me. I find the details with respect to this item to be: Sheriff and constables, $5 per day during session, approximately, $500 to $600; registrar, as editor and publisher of reports, $600; usher, $100; books for judges, $300; salaries of messengers, about $400; reporting for newspapers, $100; total $2,100. The other items are the following: Binding for Supreme Court library, about $500; insurance on library last year, $285; postage, including that required for distribution of the Supreme Court reports, approximately, $600; printing for the office, including mailing lists for Supreme Court reports, $300; stationery for judges and office of Supreme Court, $750; telegrams for judges and office $250; rental of telephones and long distance messages, $250; cabs, used mainly in conveying books to and from the library to houses of judges, $250.

With respect to the leave of absence given to Sheriff Eilbeck, I find that on the 3rd of July, 1901, he applied for leave of absence during the vacation of the Dawson bar, which commences October 1, and lasts to February 1. He complained of ill health, and informed the deputy Minister of Justice that the business of his office would be well looked after by his deputy, who is a thoroughly capable and reliable man. The Deputy Minister of Justice, on the 4th of September, 1901, informed the sheriff that in view of what he had stated in regard to the business of the office being well looked after, there would be no objection to his having leave during the bar vacation. The leave of absence was subsequently extended for a month to 1st of March, 1902. Last year when my estimates were under consideration there was a discussion on this matter, which will be found in 'Hansard,' page 3586. Now with respect to the employment of Sheriff Eilbeck as auctioneer, this statement is furnished me:

Regarding the employment of Mr. R. J. Eilbeck, sheriff of the Yukon, as auctioneer to conduct sales under this department, I beg to say that during the years 1900 and 1901 the Department of the Interior decided upon disposing of all the fractional claims owned by the government in the Yukon by public auction, regarding which full notice was given. (Fractional claims are those portions which remain over after a survey has been made, and are really the difference between the lands as staked by the miner—which in nearly every case exceed the limit of a claim—and the area as afterwards found by survey. All these fractions then become the property of the government).

The arrangement in the first place for the employment of Mr. Eilbeck was made by the then assistant gold commissioner, Mr. J. Langlois Bell, and the commission paid at that time was three per cent. The department, however, later on decided that this commission was too much and on a later sale held in January reduced it to two per cent. The assistant gold commissioner in explanation of his engagement of Sheriff Eilbeck as auctioneer stated that he was afraid there would be some collusion with regard to the sale between other auctioneers and persons who might attend the sale, and that he had already heard a rumour to that effect. Consequently he undertook to engage the services of Sheriff Eilbeck.

It may be mentioned that the list of claims sold included a large number and the price realized did not average a very high figure.

Mr. Eilbeck was, of course, known to be well qualified, and perhaps was the best qualified of any of the persons whose services might have been had at the time to make the sale a satisfactory one. His fees for the various sales which he conducted amounted to $2,751.37.

The engagement of the sheriff was made by an official of the Department of the Interior, and we had nothing whatever to do with his engagement. As a matter of fact, when the attention of the Department of Justice was drawn to the fact that he had received this large sum of money for services rendered as auctioneer, the assistant Gold Commissioner was notified by the Department of Justice that his services were not available for any such purpose, and the Department of Justice was assured that the sheriff's services would thereafter be devoted exclusively to the performance of his duties as sheriff.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wanted to show how much this sheriff is costing the country. I see in the statement the minister has furnished the leader of the opposition that it includes $5 a day out of the general expenses.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That statement furnished to the leader of the opposition has reference to the contingencies with respect to the Supreme Court here

Mr. TAYLOR. I find that he drew from one department of this government. for fourteen days work, $2,751, acting as auctioneer, and at the same time he was paid as government official by another department for services the year round, a salary of $7,000, besides living expenses of $1,800. Over and above that he retains half the fees, amounting that year to $1,819. Altogether he drew $8,370. He is rather an expensive luxury. At the same time he was given leave of absence to come down and attend to the election in West Durham. He was there during the entire by-election, taking an active part, and was instrumental in returning a government supporter. Perhaps this may account for the very large sum he drew for fourteen days services just previously because as we know he received $2,751 from this government for fourteen days work. Did he receive this money for the purpose of spending it in West Durham? I think that should be condemned by every hon. member of this House whether he be a government supporter or a member of the opposition, and I hope, before the session is over, we will draw the attention of the House to that question and ask the sense of the House as to whether the government is justified in paying to one of its officials who is in receipt of a yearly salary $2,751 for fourteen days work. I think it is an outrage upon this country.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Minister of Justice was also kind enough to say that when we reached Supply he would advise us in regard to the principle of paying living allowances and why the telegraphers should be discriminated against. They seem to be the only paid government officials who have no living allowances made to them.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When I took charge of the Department of Justice, it occurred to me that possibly it was an anomalous practice to allow gentlemen living at such a distance away to take any share of the fees paid into the government offices, and I thought it would be much safer for the administration of justice that these gentlemen should be paid a certain fixed salary and a certain amount by way of living allowance, putting an end to all perquisites. Then the question arose: How are we to fix the living allowance? I asked Mr. Cory, who is now and has been for many years connected with the Department of the Interior, to proceed to Dawson in connection with an investigation he was making into the affairs of the officials of the Department of the Interior, and to make an audit of the accounts of those who are connected with the Department of Justice. The result of that was that he made a report recommending that certain salaries should be paid to these officials in lieu of the allowances they had been receiving theretofore and that they should be paid a certain amount in the way of living allowances. This report was based upon the information which he gathered in the country, but not content with that, I inquired of officials connected with the mounted police, and I asked them to give me some data upon which I might determine the amount of these living allowances. The information which I received from the commissioner of the North-west Mounted Police is to the effect that rent in the Yukon for a small house is $150 a month. That makes $1,800 a year. Wood, say fifty cords, which is a small allowance, as it runs up as high as seventy-five sometimes, $12 per cord, making $600; light, water, &c., $300; servants, say two, at from $100 to $150 a month, two of them would amount to about $1,800 a year. Now, I am told that all house furnishings and domestic necessaries, may be estimated at from three to four times the value of similar articles if purchased in the east. Fresh meat is from thirty to seventy-five cents per pound, according to the cut and the supply on hand. Butter from forty to sixty cents a pound; tomatoes retailing in Ottawa at ten cents a can are thirty-three cents a can in Dawson; peas, fifty cents a can; fresh potatoes, eight to ten cents per pound. The allowance of $5,000 which is paid to the judges barely covers the cost of house, wood, light and servants.

Mr. CLARKE. The stenographers come under a smaller scale ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Stenographers get $1,800.

Mr. CLARKE. What about telegraphers ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not concerned with them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) must not get me beyond my depth.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the hon. minister to say that wages of servants were from $100 to $150 a month.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. I find that telegraphers are paid from $90 to $100 a month, and there is no allowance made to them.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There may have been a change lately.

Mr. CLARKE. We can get that information probably later.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, I think that would be safer.

Dominion police, including one junior second-class clerk, A. J. Cawdron, at $700, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $30,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the same as last year. In respect to the proviso 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' my memorandum from the commissioner of police says that Cawdron is a clerk there now and receives $500 a year. It was proposed to increase him to $700 a year. He acts as clerk and stenographer in the office of the commissioner, he has been in the public service for eleven years, during nine and a half of which he has held his present position. He has passed both the preliminary and qualifying examinations and discharges his duties in a satisfactory manner. I think that a man who acts as clerk and stenographer to the commissioner should get $700 a year, and I have decided to give it to him with the permission of the House.

Penitentiaries—general, $7,820.

Mr. CLARKE. There is an increase of $1,500.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In respect to penitentiaries my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will find that in the general vote there has been a decrease of $17,570.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the cause of the increase of $1,500 in this vote ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The increase is caused by the removal from Kingston of Mr. Adams, the architect, whose salary hitherto has been charged to Kingston, notwithstanding that his services were available for all the penitentiaries in the Dominion. I have had him removed to Ottawa, where he can be more directly in contact with the inspector and other officials with the result that instead of charging $1,000 to Kingston we charge it now to the general penitentiary fund. Then there is an increase in office contingencies of $500. In the office here we have not only an architect, but we have also a general accountant, who passes on the accounts of all the penitentiaries. I have removed Mr. Creighton from Kingston so as to enable us to have direct control over all the penitentiaries in the central office. This has enabled us to make this large decrease that my hon. friend has noticed.

Kingston, $178,600.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a decrease here.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a decrease of $8,900 in Kingston in part as a result of the reorganization of the binder twine industry and generally of the system of keeping the accounts. Mr. Creighton was the accountant there at a salary of $1,200 a year and he has been brought here to Ottawa because he is a very efficient and capable young man and we thought he was entitled to promotion. Mr. Adams who acted as architect for all the work that was done at the penitentiaries has also been brought to Ottawa, and his salary was formerly charged to Kingston. Mr. Hughes the chief keeper and clerk of the cordage industry has also been promoted, and the others have been changed to other positions or allowed to go. The balance, $5,000 is a decrease in the working expenses.

Mr. TAYLOR. On the first of May the warden of the Kingston penitentiary issued a circular which I presume was distributed to all the members of the House, stating the price at which the twine would be sold to the farmers this year and it quoted pure manilla 650 feet to the pound at 11½ cents. To-day I received the same circular of May the first, but stamped across it is 'the 650 feet twine all sold a few days after this circular was issued.' Can the minister tell me to whom all that 650 feet twine was sold and at what price.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot say to whom it was sold, but the price was the price mentioned in the circular. The price was estimated on this basis ; we took the estimated cost of manufacture per pound, the cost of the raw material, the expenditure for bags and paper and repairs and renewals ; we took the convict labour at the price of free labour ; the cost of salaries, advertising, &c.; depreciation of plant at five per cent and interest at three per cent, and having added all these items we were in a position to offer the twine at the price mentioned.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman get us the information as to who purchased that twine, and whether it was sold by tender or not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It was not sold by tender. A circular was issued to farmers fixing the price at which they could purchase the twine, and that was done under instructions from the House, as the House had determined the conditions under which the twine would be offered for sale, namely, first come first served.

Mr. TAYLOR. This circular says 'for farmers only' and leaves the impression that the twine was to be sold to the farmers of the country. We did not receive this circular until several days after the first of May, and now we receive another saying that this particular class of twine was all sold. I want to know to whom it was sold.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In July, August and September, 1902, we manfactured 110 tons. The mill was stopped until January because the price of manilla was so high that we did not think it profitable to carry on the industry. In January, February and March, 1903, we made 61 tons so that there was only 171 tons to be sold of all sorts. I understand that the hon. gentleman asks to whom the twine was sold, what quantity was sold to each, and the price. I will get that information.

Mr. TAYLOR. I refer to the 650 feet quality.

Mr. SPROULE. A price list was sent out last year to the farmers and only a small portion of the twine was sold to farmers, but before the season was nearly over the balance of the twine was sold to one individual, and sold to him at about half the price the farmers were charged for it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend will remember that a resolution was passed by the House some years ago which restricted the sale of twine exclusively to farmers. Notices were sent out and farmers were asked to take the twine, but at the end of the fiscal year more than two thirds of the twine was on hand. What was done was done in conformity with the instructions of the House. There was nothing left for us to do then but to offer it for sale by auction, and Mr. Henderson Black, of St. John, bought the twine.

Mr. SPROULE. At what price was it sold by auction.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At four and four-fifths cents, and five and one-tenth cents. When this matter was under discussion last year before the Committee on Agriculture, the committee came to the conclusion that a mistake had been made and they cancelled the former resolution of the House, and reported in favour of the matter being dealt with by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. What I complain of is that the price at which the twine was offered to the farmers was quite as high as they could buy it at almost any retail store in the country, and in the opinion of many it was more than the twine actually cost. Had it been sold to the farmers at anything like the price that it was sold for to this individual at auction, it would have been snapped up so quickly by them that there would have been none left before the season was half over. The farmers did not get an opportunity of buying it at a reduced price, but some favoured individual bought the balance at about one-third the price that the farmers could buy it. If the twine had to be sold at a reduction, surely the farmers ought to have had an opportunity to share in the advantage as well as some speculator.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend is not fair in making that statement. The House, not the Department of Justice, decided in 1901 that the twine must be sold exclusively to the farmers of this country. Not only did they do that, but they fixed the price at which it should be sold to the farmers, that price being the cost of the raw material plus the actual cost of manufacture. So that the Department of Justice had no responsibility whatever in fixing the price, we having simply conformed to the resolution adopted by the House. We found, however, that the farmers did not want it, and my hon. friend says that we then sold it to favoured individuals. After the expiration of the time during which it could be marketed, we advertised for tenders, and it was sold to the gentleman who made the highest bid for it; and if my hon. friend will ask the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) who knows Mr. Henderson Black, of St. John, he will tell him that that gentleman would not be likely to be much favoured by the present government if there was any politics in it.

Mr. SPROULE. At what time was the twine sold ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Immediately after the first of July. That was the date fixed by the resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman one thing, that if the farmers of Canada had known that the binder twine was for sale at any such price, it would have been taken very readily and very rapidly by them. But the price at which the twine was calculated was about the same as the price at which you could buy the product of any other factory in any hardware in the country.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But my hon. friend knows that the responsibility was not with us. He knows that we were acting in conformity with the resolution passed by the House. After the resolution had been in operation for a year, however, it was considered that we had made a mistake. I take my share of the responsibility for it, because the resolution was carried by a unanimous vote; but after it was in operation one year, it was found to be so unjust in its operation, that it was decided to withdraw the resolution and leave the Department of Justice to fix the price.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister give us the calculation showing how the price was fixed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We estimated the cost of manufacture based on the actual cost during the seasons of 1898-99, and 1899-1900. We took the number of pounds manufactured and added the cost of oil, bags, &c,; repairs and renewals; that convict labour; allow five per cent for depreciation of plant and three per cent for interest on the outlay; then add the actual cost of the raw material, and I may say that in the purchase of the raw material we enjoyed certain advantages, taking advantage of the lowest price, and of course having the cash to pay for the material. These are the items taken into account in fixing the price.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the number of pounds of raw material represent the number of pounds of binder twine you turn out ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The inspector tells me that by the Auditor General's Report it would appear that there were 137,000 pounds of raw material manufactured. That would produce about the same number of pounds of binder twine—I speak subject to correction, because I do not know very much about this business—because the oil supplements what is lost in the way of waste.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the minister to state that the binder twine was sold last year on the terms of the resolution passed by the House ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, up to the first of July, 1902.

Mr. BLAIN. That was altered by the resolution adopted by the committee.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The resolution of the committee was passed on May 9th, 1902, but I read the resolution as being applicable to the next season's output. It would not apply to that season's output, because we had issued circulars all over the country offering the twine to the farmers at a price which we had fixed in accordance with the resolution of the House. The resolution passed by the committee on August is applicable to the output of this year, but not to that of last year.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought the complaint of the hon. minister to the committee was that the resolution called on the department to sell the twine on hand on the first of July by tender ; and when that matter was up for consideration in the committee last year the committee passed a resolution setting aside that portion of the resolution of the House calling for tenders and the department were not called on to offer the twine for sale by public tender after July the first. That was my understanding of the matter when it was up in the committee.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that was about what was done. Here are the words of the resolution reported by the select Committee on Agriculture :

> The committee having heard and considered the evidence of the officers in charge of the manufacture and sale of binder twine at Kingston penitentiary, recommend that binder twine industry thereat be continued, and the product sold directly to the farmers of Canada ; and that the responsibility of fixing the date up to which such sale should be made to the farmers be left with the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLAIN. That being the case, it is hardly fair that such a large quantity should have been sold at such a low price. Last year the complaint was that a resolution compelling the department to sell binder twine on hand, July the first by public tender, was against the best interests of the department.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I find that I was entirely wrong. The selling of the stock on hand was made in July, 1901, and not last year. The inspector tells me that the output of last year was sold entirely to farmers. The sale in 1901 was made to Henderson Black, of St. John.

Mr. BLAIN. That is the item in the Auditor General's Report at five and one-tenth cents ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, at page M—47.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are Henderson Black and John Connor, of Ottawa, one and the same person ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot tell you. My own impression, since I have had anything to do with the department, is that every sale of binder twine at auction or by tender or in any other form, has in some way been made to Mr. John Connor, and as a result of that, I have made a change in the binder twine factory at Kingston, and Mr. Connor's brother has ceased to be superintendent.

Mr. BLAIN. All the twine made last year was sold direct to the farmers, and that system has proved a success ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is a circular which was issued May the first, fixing the prices for the current year. It seems to me very strange that a second lot of circulars should be issued so soon saying the binder twine 650 feet to the pound was all sold. Surely all this twine was not sold direct to the farmers ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There was only manufactured in all last year 80,000 pounds of twine 650 feet to the pound, of which we had less than a ton on hand at the beginning of the season. That was snapped up by the farmers immediately. There are 200,000 pounds still remaining of twine 600 feet.

Mr. CLARKE. Who was the lucky man got that ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The man who came first.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you know his name ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will get it.

Mr. BLAIN. There ought to be some discussion as to whether this system ought to continue. I have no desire to unduly criticise the department for no doubt they are doing their best. I am personally a little interested because it was I who brought up the resolution two years ago instructing the department to sell the twine direct to the farmers. That portion of the resolution calling for sale by tender on July the first, I am not responsible for, as I had nothing to do with it. Last year the committee struck out that portion of the resolution. With that portion set aside, the system of selling to the farmers at cost or about the cost has been successful ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, this year also. We cannot make the twine fast enough.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it rather strange that in this circular issued May the first, and the other circular issued May twenty-second, we are told that all the best twine is sold. It looks as if one or two put in an application and bought it at a fixed price. I think that the department should continue the manufacture of this twine in larger quantities and sell it direct to the farmers. The department are quite right when they say that they should not be bound down to offer a commodity by public tender, because I am sure that when the farmers understand that they can purchase their binder twine direct from the institution every year, they will purchase their full quantity of twine from the government. This being a business government, the department will, no doubt, be able to do what is right, and see that all this twine is sold direct to the farmers. And in such case, we should not find such large items as these $18,000 sold to an individual, another $11,000 sold to another individual, neither being farmers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That was a good while ago.

Mr. BLAIN. It was some time ago. I accept that explanation. There should not be any disposition on the part of the government to abolish the manufacture of binding twine in that Kingston penitentiary, but rather to increase it, and put as much binder twine into the market as possible in order, in some measure, to keep down the prices.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is an industry in which necessarily a great number of people are interested. It is one of which I can personally know but very little, but which I am anxious to see successful. I think it would be very useful if the Committee on Agriculture would fix a day for the purpose of discussing this question of binder twine. I would be on hand and have my officials present, and we would have the benefit of the experience of those in the House who are conversant with the business.

Mr. FRASER. If the government will take my advice they will sell the whole machinery or send it to the junk shop and save money.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Send $40,000 of machinery to the junk shop ?

Mr. FRASER. I would do it immediately. Here we have a resolution at one time ordering the government to do a certain thing and at another session the House lays down another rule. The idea of parliament making rules for the sale of binding twine—

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a statute governing that in the United States.

Mr. FRASER. I would not care to follow that precedent. I believe that this was begun for political purposes—to try to make the farmers believe that the government was going to help them by reducing binder twine. And so it has been carried on. I think the wise thing to do is to let the farmers or the manufacturers produce the binder twine. A number of farmers have gone into this business, and I think there are seven or eight binder twine factories in Canada to-day. Why should the government, assuming the expense and doing little else, go into competition with them ? We are told that about 800 farmers have bought our binder twine. What is that number compared with all the farmers in Canada. I think the quicker we get rid of this as a business speculation the better. It will always be coming up in this same way ; no matter what party is in power, fault will always be found as to the method of carrying on the business. It is not a business for a government to go into, and I do not think that the results have proved beneficial either to the farmers or to the government.

Mr. KEMP. What other lines of merchandise are the government interested in coming under the management of the Department of Justice ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am happy to say I have only binder twine—besides the quarrying of stone at St. Vincent de Paul and making brick in British Columbia.

Mr. KEMP. I should think it would not be a very serious task for one of the minister's qualification to become an authority on one line of business. Since the question was brought up in the House, he tells us he has paid great attention to the subject, and it seems to me he ought to have it down fine by this time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) overates my ability. I humbly confess it.

Mr. LENNOX. I am greatly surprised by the attitude of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). However, I do not know that I ought to be surprised. Last year, I called the attention of the committee to the fact—a more than ordinarily gratifying one—that one minister of the Crown was prepared to take the representatives of the people into his confidence.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is that ?

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Justice. That hon. gentleman said he would be glad to have the advice of the opposition in his endeavour to make his industry more successful than it had been in the past. I think that is the proper way to approach such questions as this. I do not know whether that accounts for the warmth, the excitement, I may say, of the hon. member for Guysborough. I was afraid for a moment that we were going to have another of those family quarrels with which we have been so familiar in the past. I think however, that the Minister of Justice prevented this coming to a crisis. Now, I hope this industry will be continued. The hon. member for Guysborough asks us what are seven or eight hundred farmers. I do not know that they are a large number compared with the entire population of the Dominion, or with the number of farmers of the Dominion. They are not a very large number in proportion to the amount of wealth that is invested in the farms of this country. But, if we can assist seven or eight hundred farmers, and if we can extend this industry in the way suggested by the hon. member for Peel—and particularly if the hon. minister continues to receive the able assistance of the opposition—this will be one of the most successful branches of the public service.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) desires this manufacture of binder twine under the government to be done away with. That hon. gentleman is more interested in fishermen than in farming. But the whole number of those engaged in farming is far greater than the number engaged in fishing. I am sure he would raise very serious objections if any hon. member of this House proposed doing away with something that was in the interest of the fishermen, and I think we have equal ground for objecting to his observations. He said, in the first place, that this factory was started for political purposes. Whatever purpose it was started for, it had one beneficial result and that was keeping down the cost of binder twine to the farmer. That is a fact that cannot be successfully contradicted. From the time that the factory in Kingston penitentiary began to turn out and sell binder twine, until the present government came into office, the farmers got their binder twine at lower prices than they ever got it for in Canada before or since. And why was this ? Because the government that then controlled the factory provided that the person purchasing the binder twine should sell it to the farmers at not more than 10 per cent profit. So, if any farmer found that he was obliged to pay a higher figure for binder twine elsewhere he could apply to the Kingston penitentiary and purchase it at this low price, viz., 10 per cent above that for which it was sold wholesale. During the time that this factory was under the management of the predecessors of hon. gentlemen opposite who now control it, what were the farmers paying for binder twine ? They were paying from five and a half cents to seven and a half cents per pound. But when this government took control of it and began to sell it to speculators under their system—a very improper system as we contend—the manufacturers throughout the country were able to reach an understanding as to what they should sell it at. The same speculators bought up the output of the Kingston penitentiary, and of the Central prison of Toronto, and controlling the output of these factories, they appear to have reached an agreement with other manufacturers of twine that all would sell at the same figure no matter where it was manufactured. Therefore, the farmer was obliged to pay a very much higher price than before. And, from that time to the present, binder twine has remained at a high figure. We say that binder twine has been at a high figure, because the output of the Kingston penitentiary has been improperly handled by the government. Why, who got the output of the binder twine from that factory ? Mr. H. N. Bate, of Ottawa, the Hobbs Hardware Company, of London, and Mr. Connor, of St. John. When tenders were asked for the purchase of this twine, there appears to have been an understanding between them, so it did not matter who got the binder twine, they all shared in the profits.

Mr. CLARKE. Played Hobbs with the whole business.

Mr. SPROULE. The result of it was that the government paid Hobbs with the whole industry, and the farmers suffered in consequence. We remember very well when tenders were asked for and were put in by H. N. Bate, of Ottawa, and by the Hobbs Hardware Company, of London, and one by Connors as well. The contract was given to a firm in London, and when they were called upon to put up their forfeit the reply was that the Connors Company would put it up here in Ottawa—showing conclusively that they were in collusion.

The same parties who had control of the output at the Central Prison controlled the output at Kingston as well and then they sold it as they saw fit. The farmers were obliged to pay from nine and a half to twelve and a half cents a pound for their binder twine, whereas the year before the highest price paid was about seven and a half cents a pound for the best twine. Now we claim that increased price was a consequence of the improper way in which it was sold by the government.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). What about the cost of the raw material ?

Mr. SPROULE. The cost for three years was very much the same, averaging about four and a half cents a pound. It has been shown over and over again by the Auditor General's Report that during the three years when binder twine was sold at the very highest price to the farmer, the cost of the raw material was practically about the same as when the twine was sold at the lowest price. That shows plainly that the difference was not due to the increased cost of the raw material, because the twine was sold at a price out of all proportion to the raw material. Now we are told to-night that no matter who sold it, it got into the hands of Mr. Connor. One time it got into the hands of Connor under one name, and another time it got into his hands under another name. It seems that the same practice has been going on from year to year. At the commencement of this season, on the 1st of May, a circular was issued, at a time when no farmer requires binder twine, for his crop ; but in a few days the quality which was made 650 feet to the pound was all bought up. The regulation was that this was to be sold to the farmers only. Have we any information it was sold to the farmers ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, if my word is worth anything. You have all the information you want.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister of Justice to say he was not aware to whom it was sold.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, and I am going to have it investigated. I undertake to give the quantities sold, to whom sold, and the price paid by each party.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood it was all picked up by one party.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, never.

Mr. SPROULE. If it was sold to a number of individuals, then can we not get the number of those who purchased it, with the quantities purchased ? We are entitled to know whether it was sold to the farmers, because the resolution required that it should be sold to the farmers only. But if it was sold to the speculators, it is not carrying out the spirit or the letter of the resolution.

Mr. FRASER. I desire to say now, as I have said on previous occasions, that this is not a business that the government should go into at all. The statement made by the hon. member shows that it has not been a success.

Mr. SPROULE. Since the present government took hold of it.

Mr. FRASER. It has never been a success. We had trouble after trouble, and judgment after judgment against purchasers of the twine when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power.

Mr. KEMP. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that it was not managed on business principles ?

Mr. FRASER. According to the evidence given against the late government and statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite that things are not just right now, I would say decidedly that it was not managed on business principles. I believe the business is done now as well as any government can do it. But my point is that it is not in the interest of the country that any government should engage in that kind of work.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think this is a time for recrimination, nor for a discussion as to the way in which this was managed. If I wanted to go back to ancient history I might tell the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) that when we took charge of the business in 1896 there was $50,000 odd of the price of the output of 1894 that had not been paid. Now, I do not want to go into these details, they are unnecessary, and it would not be wise for me to do so if I want to get my estimates through. But this industry has been managed since 1896, perhaps not successfully, but at all events, so far as my knowledge has gone, honestly, and every pound of twine sold from that day to this has been sold on tender, after public tenders were called for, and the output has been given to the man who offered to pay the highest price for it. As I said a moment ago, Mr. John Connor has been connected with this industry since its inception; that is my firm belief, perhaps if I were asked to prove it I might be at a loss to do so. In 1894 and 1895 he was undoubtedly connected with it, and I believe since that time he has continued in connection with every tender that has been put in. I thought under the circumstances it would be wise to make a change with respect to the management of the industry where his brother was in control in Kingston. I do not say there was anything wrong between them, any common understanding between the brothers, because I have no knowledge of anything wrong; still I did not think that the gentleman who was getting the output of the industry should have charge of the industry. A change has been made in that respect, and since 1901 the twine has been sold to the farmers direct. The result was that in 1901 we had a large amount on hand at the end of the year which we sold by public tender, and since 1902, it is now being sold to the farmers. As far as last year is concerned, the hon. gentleman will find in the Auditor General's Report the names of the farmers to whom the twine was sold, the prices paid and the amount sold to each man. So far as this year is concerned, all that has been sold up to the present time I will account for, I will give the names of the persons to whom it was sold, the prices paid, and the amount sold to each. Now, with respect to the industry itself, if it is to be regarded as a regulator of the price of twine, I suppose to some extent it has effected that purpose. The amount of binder twine, if I am correctly informed, used in Canada, is 10,000 tons, of which 2,250 tons are manufactured in Canada. At Kingston the extreme limit of our capacity is only 500 tons. So to some extent it seems to me this may be considered a regulator of the price of binder twine. But with respect to the other feature of the business, let us bear in mind that we must find some occupation for the inmates of the penitentiary. Let me say what we have accomplished by the means of this industry. We have charged against this output which we have put on the market by convict labour, $6,598 for one year. We give them a useful occupation and we realize that amount of money. We charge, in addition to the $6,598, the salaries of the officials connected with the industry. Then, in addition to that, we have the plant which is there. We charge for depreciation of the plant, five per cent, and we charge for interest on capital invested in that industry, three per cent. I do not know if there is any industry connected with the government that shows anything like the same result. Take the Printing Bureau here. I had recently occasion to look into that in connection with the prices they charged. They make no charge for plant depreciation, building, or the like.

Mr. TAYLOR. And they run in debt.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. LENNOX. Have you the amount of the salaries there ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Formerly there was a superintendent, Mr. Connor, to whom we paid $1,500 and an assistant superintendent to whom we paid $900. Now the superintendent and the assistant superintendent have disappeared and we have appointed one man named Dickenson as superintendent of cordage at $1,000 to do the work of them both. The $2,400 in salaries formerly paid to Messrs. Connor and Price are saved, and we now have a man at $1,000 a year as superintendent.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. minister give us again the total amount of the twine estimated to be used in Canada and the total amount manufactured in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is almost impossible to get a correct estimate, but I have had an inquiry made by the inspector, and according to the returns I find that the total amount used in the country was about 10,000 tons, and the total amount manufactured in Canada by the industries here 2,250 tons last year. The limit of our capacity is 500 tons, but as a matter of fact, we have not exceeded 400 tons.

Mr. CLARKE. The fact is then that nearly three-fourths of the twine is made on the other side of the line ?

Mr. KEMP. What is the object of selling binder twine at a lower price than the farmer can buy it for from a retail merchant ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) is a business man and he will appreciate the reason which I am about to give. We pay for our raw material, manilla 8·42 cents per pound, which is a better price than the ordinary manufacturer has been able to get it at because we happened to pick it up at a time when the market was favourable; New Zealand 6·90 cents per pound, and Mexican sisal 5·50 cents per pound. If you add together the items making up the cost of manufacturing including oil, bags and paper, repairs, renewals, convict labour, salaries, freight, depreciation in plant and interest you will find that it adds 1·813 cents to the cost. As a result of that we manufactured 16,000 pounds running 650 feet, 120,000 pounds of 600 feet, and 86,000 pounds of 500 feet and 4,000 pounds of 500 feet. Taking the cost of pure manilla at 8·42 cents a pound, and adding the cost of production amounting to 1·82 cents per pound it gives us 10·24 cents per pound as the cost.

Mr. SPROULE. When you speak of pure manilla you mean that there is not more than one-third of pure manilla in it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am discussing the question of cost.

Mr. SPROULE. The question of cost will depend on what you put into the binder twine. When you speak of pure manilla you must understand that the twine does not contain pure manilla.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. member is a doctor and of course an expert. I am a lawyer and I am not an expert. The inspector tells me that pure manilla means pure manilla. Take the cost of pure manilla at 8·42 cents per pound and the cost of manufacture at 1·82 cents per pound, that gives us the cost at 10·24 cents per pound and we put it on the market at 10¾ cents a pound and in ton lots or to clubs of farmers at one-quarter of a cent less than that price.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. Minister of Justice that there is not a pound of pure manilla twine made in Canada today. The fact was brought out in the report of the committee which looked into the question that pure manilla twine was not all made out of manilla but that it was a mixture.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of course I defer to the better knowledge of my hon. friend, but I have to rely on the reports of the two inspectors who are both here and who both re-affirm that pure manilla is pure manilla twine.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know that it is necessary to discuss the question as to whether pure manilla means pure manilla or not. The Brantford Company which I believe for years has made as good twine as you will find anywhere in Ontario, or perhaps anywhere in Canada, I was positively informed by one of the directors, who, at the present time, has a seat in this House, make their best twine out of 60 per cent manilla and 40 per cent sisal. My own impression is that any twine that contains 60 per cent manilla and the balance of sisal is equally as good and is much better than twine that is made absolutely of manilla. In fact I do not think that the farmers care about twine made entirely of manilla fibre. That may be the reason why the Kingston twine is not as popular in the country as it ought to be. Go through western Ontario and you will find that the twine made at Kingston is not popular with the farmers. They will buy other twine in preference to the Kingston twine, and it may be for the reason that they put in more manilla than should be put in. The difference in cost is not so very material. I find by reference to the Auditor General's Report of last year that whilst manilla hemp cost 6 cents per pound, sisal cost 5⅜ cents per pound, only a fraction of a cent difference. It may be that I am not sufficiently familiar with the mode of calculating to arrive at just what a pound of twine ought to cost, but I followed the hon. Minister of Justice very closely, and I confess that I am entirely unable to reach the high figure of 11¼ cents as the cost of a pound of twine.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I said 10·24 cents.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well take the lower price of 10·24 cents. A pound of twine does not consist all of manilla or all of manilla and sisal. We know that there is about one-fifth part of what is called cordage oil, a coarse oil that goes into the manufacture of twine. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) here says one-sixth, but there is not very much difference between one-fifth and one-sixth. I have always understood it to be one-fifth. Now, taking one-fifth as oil, 60 per cent of the balance as manilla and the remainder sisal, I make out the cost of a pound of twine in this way: The actual cost of the material would be the one-half of six cents which is the cost per pound of the raw material.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Where does my hon. friend find the six cents?

Mr. HENDERSON. In the Auditor General's Report for 1902, page 27—M.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am figuring on the price paid to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not aware that there has been any great disturbance in the market from which we buy this raw material, and I have not access to any better guide than the Auditor General's Report. I will give the minister the calculation I have made. The manilla fibre in a pound of twine would cost three cents; the sisal would cost two cents and the cordage oil one cent which would make six cents. Adding the cost of manufacture and the other incidentals the minister has referred to, we will say two cents, it would make the cost of a pound of twine eight cents which falls very far short of the ten and a quarter cents which is the price fixed. On this basis we would get it down to something like the cost that twine was manufactured at some years ago. I fail to see that the farmers are receiving justice at the hands of the minister, and I am afraid that in selling it at ten and one quarter cents he is demanding a large profit from the farmers. The late hon. David Mills when Minister of Justice stated that the cost of manufacture was three quarters of one cent per pound, and even allowing for the other things which the present Minister of Justice adds, it would seem that the price charged to the farmers is unreasonable when we consider that according to the Auditor General's Report he pays six cents for manilla, five and three-eights cents for sisal and nine cents a gallon for cordage oil. Eight cents a pound is a reasonable price to sell this twine to the farmers if it is intended that no profit should be made by the government. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who has now left the House, endeavoured to introduce the political element into this discussion. He said that the manufacture of twine was started in the prison for political reasons. I will give the hon. gentleman the credit for making one correct statement to-night. It was started by his friends in the central prison in Toronto no doubt to gain political advantages. That was however, years prior to the plant being installed in Kingston by the late Conservative government. They simply followed suit, and in order to offset what their political opponents were doing in Toronto. I shall not enter upon the larger question as to whether it is advisable to continue this industry in the Kingston penitentiary. The minister has told us that it is necessary to keep the prisoners employed, and they might as well be employed in making twine as anything else, but I do say that so long as twine is manufactured in Kingston it ought to be manufactured not for the purpose of making a profit but for the purpose of using it as a lever to maintain a fair level of price. As was said by the member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) three-fourths of the twine used in Canada to-day is imported from the United States. These large American trusts combine together, and I am sorry to say they have combined with some of the small Canadian factories to raise the price unduly to the farmer. Twine is not worth ten cents or eleven cents a pound, much less fifteen or sixteen cents, and I have no doubt that the farmers will be called upon to pay by retail fifteen cents a pound for this American twine this year. The Kingston penitentiary is only able to turn out out about one-fortieth part of the total consumption, but still that is a factor and it may be used as a lever to protect the farmers against the exorbitant charges made by importers and by the large manufacturers in the United States who practically control this industry in Canada. I hope the day is not far distant when the government will see its way clear to encourage this industry in more ways than one. There was a time when we had a respectable duty on twine and when the greater part of the twine used in Canada was made in this country. Under the protective system the competition among Canadian factories maintained a fair level of price, but an agitation was started in favour of removing the duty and it was gradually reduced from 25 per cent to 12½ per cent and finally it was removed altogether. The lower you made the duty the higher you made the price of twine, just the same as in the case of coal oil and barb wire. That has been our experience all along. The Americans keep up a good stiff duty against us of two cents a pound, and if we had an industry in this country manufacturing twine it would have to pay that duty going into the United States while they send their twine in here free. I believe there is to be a small duty now of about three-eighths of a cent per pound. I maintain, Mr. Chairman that we should continue this industry at Kingston and increase the output as much as possible. I would not advise the government to make any profit out of it, but use it for the purpose of breaking down the price of the American twine that comes into this country. I would not sell the Kingston twine in large quantities to any one man, but would scatter it throughout the country as much as possible amongst farmers or small dealers, and use it in every way possible to operate against the attempts on the part of importers or American manufacturers of twine to unduly enhance the price against our farmers. Even if we should lose thousands of dollars I would not allow any one man to get possession of 200 tons of it so that he can fix the price to suit himself and charge the farmer what he likes. I hope that will be the policy that the government will pursue. For my part I would rather lose money by it than give up the industry altogether. I believe there is a benefit accruing from it, and so far as I am concerned I would not advocate the making of any profit out of the industry.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in the calculation which the hon. Minister of Justice has given us, that the price per pound for the raw material, taking the thre different kinds together, that manilla at $8.42, the New-Zealand at $6.90, and the Mexican sisal at $5.50, you get the average price per pound of the three kinds. Then $1.81 will cover the cost of the manufacture, which makes the average cost of the three kinds eight and three-quarter cents per pound. But at the prices you quote in your circular the average price would come to ten and two-third cents.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are not dealing with averages.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not fair to take the three different prices, and put them together and find the average price ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Certainly not.

Mr. SPROULE. If you take 100 pounds of each kind.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What object has the hon. gentleman in view ?

Mr. SPROULE. The object is to ascertain the actual cost.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, the hon. gentleman is trying to make a case.

Mr. SPROULE. If you take 100 pounds of each, you get what is the actual price.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I do not know by what species of calculation the hon. gentleman can come to any other conclusion. You can only make 300 pounds of twine out of 300 pounds of raw material, except for the additional weight of the crude oil, which is about one-third or one-fourth of a cent a pound. But if you take the three qualities together, 100 pounds of each, you only make out of them 300 pounds. You sell these 300 pounds at the prices stated in this circular—manilla at eleven and a half cents, the other at ten and three-quarter cents, and the Kingston special at nine and a half cents a pound. You sell 100 pounds of each. You add the cost of the three together, you add the cost of manufacturing which the minister has given, and that represents the whole cost, does it not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am afraid my arithmetic is out. I am lost, so far as the calculation of my hon. friend is concerned. You take a ball of manilla hemp containing 600 feet for which I paid $8.42 per 100 pounds. To that you must add ten per cent for waste, which is replaced by ten per cent of oil. When I make up my calculation as to what this has cost, for the purpose of ascertaining the price at which it should be sold, I take the cost of the raw material and the cost of the oil, but I have nothing to do with the average cost of New Zealand or Mexican sisal, which does not enter into the calculation at all.

Mr. SPROULE. What difference does that make if you take 100 pounds of each, add them together, and divide by three. You have only so many pounds of twine, which costs you so much money. 100 pounds of one kind costs $8.42, 100 pounds of another $6.90, and 100 pounds of the third, $5.50. Add these together and divide by three, and you have the average price of the three. Then I take the average price at which the binder twine is sold, which is ten and two-thirds cents per pound, while according to the minister's calculations, the average cost was eight and three-quarter cents per pound.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I think we have carried this debate far enough. The subject has been stretched too long. The question is, shall we go on manufacturing binder twine at the Kingston penitentiary ? I think the sense of the House is that we should, and that the farmers of the country should get the benefit of it. My idea is that we should take means to increase the output at Kingston penitentiary, not only for the benefit of the farmers, but for the sake of the men in the penitentiary. At a certain time some of them may come out to earn their own living, and they may be trained to some useful employment. The Minister of Justice is glad to receive advice from the opposition as well as from the supporters of the government in this respect, and if my advice would be worth anything, it would be that he should see that the best and most improved machinery be used in the Kingston penitentiary, and that the facilities be enlarged so that the output would be larger and the farmers would have the benefit. I do not think the price is too high, otherwise the farmers would not buy the twine from the penitentiary in preference to buying it from other manufacturers of the article. But I agree that it could be sold at such a price that there should be no large profit made, but that the farmers should get the whole benefit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I fully agree with what my hon. friend has just said, if the farmers were getting the benefit; but since this government have undertaken the handling of binder twine, the farmer has been the man who has been fleeced, and the jobber has got the benefit. If my hon. friend will look at the Auditor General's Report at page M—47, he will find the sales given, as follows :—Beaver, 180 pounds at eight and one-third cents and 5,125 pounds at eight and one-half cents to the farmers; and 366,793 pounds, the balance of that quality, to Mr. John Connor, or Mr. Henderson Black, who represents him, at five and one-tenth cents.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I am dealing with the future, not the past.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the way it was dealt with up to the first of July, 1902. Why should this government sell the twine to this man John Connor for less than the cost of the raw material ? We have maple leaf, sold 17,325 pounds at ten cents. Was that sold to the farmers ? John Connor got 220,000 pounds mixed manilla at five and a tenth cents, and the government are paying eight cents per pound for the pure manilla. The New Zealand was all sold at six and a half cents per pound, but none of it was sold to the farmers. The next sale is 60,000 pounds at four and five-eighths cents, and at the same time the farmer paid nine and a quarter cents for what he got. John Connor was a lucky man. Henderson Black was only another name for John Connor. $12,000 worth was sold directly to John Connor, and $32,000 worth sold to Henderson Black. There was $45,000 worth sold at four and five-eighths cents in job lots, and then the department turned about and bought raw material for the next year's manufacture. There was evidently some job in every one of these dealings. First it was Hobbs Hardware Company, and then H. N. Bate, and afterward John Connor.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend forgets that he is speaking to the committee and imagines that he is speaking to some meeting in a back constituency, otherwise he would appreciate the fact that a parliament in 1900 directed the sale of binder twine to be made to the farmers up to the first of July, after which date it was to be sold by public tender. Up to the 1st of July, 1901, it was sold direct to the farmers, and then the balance on hand was sold by public tender by parliament's direction. If my hon. friend see a job in that, I will go before a committee any time he choses.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is in the position of a trustee, and if he called for tenders and accepted a tender for the manufactured article at a less price than he could buy the raw material at, how can he justify that ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The time for selling was gone by and it would depreciate 50 per cent if kept over a year.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is not in business, or he would know that it would keep two or three years without depreciating.

Mr. SPROULE. We should know what this binder twine costs and whether it has been sold to the farmers at less than the cost or more. The complaint is that while the government have convict labour, they sell at the same price as in the retail stores.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is not a manufacturer in the country who sells that at the same price as we do. I have letters from manufacturers complaining about our prices.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. minister that it was sold last year at the stores at the same prices.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are talking of present prices.

Mr. SPROULE. What I complain of that it was not sold to the farmers at the cost price plus one cent a pound, which is what the resolution required. The hon. gentleman should bring his experts from the Kingston penitentiary before the Agricultural Committee.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I agree.

Mr. SPROULE. The information given to-night differs from that given a few years ago, and we wish to ascertain whether the firms are getting binder twine in accordance with the resolution.

Mr. CLARE. I see that in the calculation which the Minister of Justice has made that the profit on the manilla is 1·26 per hundred or 10 per cent, in the medium twine the profit is 2·04 or 23 per cent. And in the cheaper twine 2·19, or a profit of 30 per cent.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot have given the figures correctly.

Mr. CLARE. The cost of pure manilla is given at 8·50, 1·82, 8·72, and 10·24 per pound. The cheapest was sold at 9½ cents.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The cheapest is sisal, sold at 9½ cents with a profit of 2·30 cents. Perhaps I should explain. With respect to the manilla the cost of the raw material is 8·42 cents, to which add 1·82 cents of manufacture, and you have a total of 10·24 cents. That is pure manilla running 650 feet, and sold at 11¼ cents. Then you have pure manilla--the same material—but running only 600 feet, at 10¾ cents. Then there is what we call Kingston special, which is made from New Zealand material. That costs 6·90 cents for raw material or adding 1·92 cents for manufacture, a total of 8·72 cents. That is sold for 9½ cents. The sisal was purchased last fall at 5·50 cents per pound; the price to-day is 8 cents per pound. Pure sisal, which cost 5·50 cents a pound for raw material and 1·82 cents for manufacture, a total of 7·32 cents, is sold at 9½ cents. I ought to say, perhaps that if my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) would compare these prices with the prices ruling in Chicago on the same date, the 31st of March, he will find that for pure manilla of 650 feet, the Chicago price is 13 cents against 11¼ cents, which is our price.

Mr. CLARE. What I want to get at is this—why does the hon. minister add 10 per cent to the best twine and about 30 per cent to the cheapest twine? Why make the farmer pay more in proportion for the one than for the other?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The lower grade made from pure sisal is a cheaper article and we have only about 4,000 pounds altogether. As it is a low grade and as we have but a small quantity, the inspector thought that altogether the raw material is now worth 8 cents per pound, we might fairly put the price at the figure mentioned. It is much cheaper than any one else sells it. If my hon. friend would allow me, when I come back to my estimates, I will bring letters from manufacturers from all over the country complaining of the prices at which we sell binder twine.

Mr. CLARKE. Selling Canadian or American binder twine?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Selling Canadian twine. The price in Chicago fixes the price elsewhere.

Mr. CLARE. Was it not arranged last year that the government should add one cent per pound to the cost of the binder twine?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think it was left entirely to my discretion to decide. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clare) will remember that a resolution was at one time passed that fixed everything, but last year the Committee on Agriculture discussed the matter and decided that this should be left with me to exercise my own discretion.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the minister a question or two. I listened with great interest to his statement. Like any other minister, the Minister of Justice must not be expected to carry all the details for which we ask in his head, but must necessarily depend largely on what his officers tell him. I wish to call the attention of the hon. minister to two or three matters which are in direct conflict with what he has said. He will remember that a very thorough investigation was made before the Public Accounts Committee two years ago, and that the evidence there went to show that, including all the services the hon. gentleman has enumerated, the cost of manufacturing the twine was one cent per pound. It is an important thing if, from changed conditions, or from the facts not being correctly stated then, or not being correctly stated now, the cost of manufacture is counted as being nearly double what it was counted at before. There was another statement made, a very important one, bearing on the selling of the twine—and, perhaps I may be permitted to digress here for a single moment. I think some question came up between the superintendent at Kingston and the Department of Justice as to whether the twine should be sold at the expiration of a certain time, it not having been sold to the farmers. The Minister of Justice gave it as his opinion that it was necessary, and so the twine was sold. That point I do not intend further to discuss. But the point to which I wish to call attention, I think the minister will agree, is a very important one. The evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee disclosed the fact—correct or incorrect, I am not able to say—that twine did not deteriorate by being held over one year. But we have from the hon. gentleman's own department two statements in direct opposition to each other, and I would like to ask the minister if he is able to account for that. The witnesses were under oath and were closely examined, and yet there was a clear contradiction. These matters as to the cost of manufacture and as to the affect upon the binder twine of keeping it over one year are important questions. I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I think the minister will see that these points should be answered.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. As to the question of deterioration, the inspector tells me that the result of keeping the binder twine in their warehouse is that the oil is apt to run out and the twine therefore may not work so satisfactorily as new twine would, and the farmer would not buy twine which had been kept in the warehouse from one season to another, or, if he did, would not pay so much for it as for new twine. The proportion of deterioration is a matter of opinion. I had not consulted the inspector when I said that I believed that it would deteriorate 50 per cent, and I do not wish the officials to be held responsible for a statement that I made on my own responsibility. As to the cost of manufacture, I confess that I do not recollect the evidence given before the committee two years ago, I cannot carry the evidence so long in my memory. I will give the basis on which I proceed, and I think it is a fair one. First, I take the actual cost of raw material that goes into the manufacture of binder twine. Then I add the cost of labour at the same price as free labour.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman will permit me—

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will explain that as the inspectors puts it to me. They charge thirty cents per day for convict labour, and, as we feed and clothe and house these people, they count the total expense the same as free labour. Then I add the salaries of the officials connected with the industry, also the advertising and the freight on material. Then I add 5 per cent for depreciation of the plant—which I think is a very low allowance—and 3 per cent for interest. That is the basis of my calculation. And, as I say, it seems to me, to be a fair one. The result is a total of 1·81 cents and a fraction per pound—practically two cents in round figures.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has made what appears to be a fair statement. But I am amazed at the statement that was made on a former occasion when all these services were said to be taken into consideration. Now, could the hon. gentleman tell us offhand how much is charged to labour, how much for deterioration, how much for interest, and so on ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These items are used to fix the price of the output of the present year, and we had to take the items of the expenditure for the past year to ascertain the true amount. We manufactured in 1898-99 and in 1899-1900, 1,726,320 pounds of fibre, for oil, bags and paper we paid $5,436.40 ; for repairs and renewals, $1,109.85 ; for convict labour, $6,598.35 ; salaries, advertising, freight, &c., $11,910.39; depreciation, five per cent, $4,000; interest three per cent for two years, $2,400. That makes itemized over each pound, 1·813.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to this bugaboo of depreciation, my experience is this : For three years in succession we kept twine over every year on my farm. I asked the men whether they found the twine to run all right and to give satisfaction, and they said it worked equally well with that which was bought fresh every year. Of course, we can imagine that it might dry a little.

St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary $110,300.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a decrease here: Salaries, $1,500; maintenance of convicts, $2,000 ; working expenses, $3,500 ; equipment, land and buildings, $1,300. The number of guards has been reduced by four.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister give us the cost per diem of the prisoners in the various penitentiaries ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentleman will find that in the beginning of my report, page xv.

Manitoba penitentiary, $50,100.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Minister of Justice if there is an understanding that some item will be reserved on which we may have a further discussion on penitentiaries ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will hold over any item my hon. friend may wish. I suggested a moment ago that we could resume this discussion in the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. CLANCY. That committee is rather overburdened now with work, and I doubt if we will be able to resume it there this session.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has sent me over his report, but I do not find any place where the cost is given of the keep of the prisoners in the various penitentiaries.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At the head of page xv, he will find the gross expenditure for the years beginning 1896-97 down to 1902, the cost per capita per diem for all the penitentiaries together.

Mr. SPROULE. I wanted the cost in each penitentiary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentleman will find on the preceding page a comparative statement of the cost per capita for six years for the different penitentiaries, Kingston, St. Vincent de Paul, Dorchester, Manitoba and British Columbia.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—OFFICIAL GUIDE.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Was the Official Guide of the Intercolonial Railway of Canada and Prince Edward Island Railway, of 1902 and 1903, the title page of which states that it was issued by authority of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and the introduction of which appears over the name of D. Pottinger, general manager of the Intercolonial Railway, compiled and issued by any department of the government railways ? And if so, by what department ? Or if not, by whom was it compiled and issued ?

2. How many copies of said Official Guide were printed ?

3. What was the cost of printing said Official Guide ?

4. What was the total amount received for advertisements in said Official Guide ?

5. What sum, if any, was received by the government railway, or by the government in any other way in connection with the publication of said Official Guide?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair).

1. The Official Guide was issued under the authority of the Minister of Railways and Canals, but was not issued by any department of the government railways.

2. It is understood that 5,000 copies were issued, but at no expense to the government.

3. It was not printed at the expense of the government, therefore cannot say what it cost.

4. The government received nothing in cash, but it is thought that the traffic of the government railways must have benefited.

5. It is not possible to state what amount the government railways benefited by the circulation of this guide book, but there is no doubt the guide book is a convenience to the travelling public.

Mr. SPROULE.

MEDICAL EXAMINERS OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Clarke—asked :

1. Has one Doctor Ellis been employed by the government as port physician, or medical examiner of immigrants landing at Quebec, during the years 1902 and 1903, or during either of each years ?

2. Is the said Doctor Ellis employed by the government in any other capacity in connection with the medical service in and about the port of Quebec ? If so, what are his duties ?

3. Has the said Doctor Ellis an annual salary; or is he paid so much for the season, or in any other way ?

4. What is the amount of the remuneration, either annual or otherwise, of the said Doctor Ellis ?

5. Is Doctor Howe employed by the government as port physician at Quebec, or medical examiner of immigrants, or in some other capacity in and about the said port ; and in what capacity ?

6. What is the salary or remuneration of the said Doctor Howe ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). In the absence of the minister, I beg to reply as follows :

1. Dr. Ellis was employed for about two or three weeks of the year 1903, in supervising the examination of immigrants landing at Quebec, under the new regulations which had just come into force at that port.

2. Dr. Ellis is the medical officer of the Department of the Interior, and subject to the direction of the department as to his services. He is also the medical examiner at St. John, his headquarters being at that port.

3. Dr. Ellis is not employed by the season, but by salary.

4. The salary paid to Dr. Ellis is at the rate of $2,000 per annum, his whole time being engaged by the department.

5. There are two medical attendants in connection with the immigration service at Quebec. Dr. Arthur Potvin is the medical attendant on all patients in the immigration hall, or those who may be compelled to remain over for hospital or other treatment, having been rejected or refused permission to go forward to destination until they are cured of the diseases for which they were rejected. Dr. Howe is medical examiner of immigrants at the same port.

6. Dr. Howe is paid by fees and receives $5 for every vessel examined by him with 100 immigrant passengers or less, and ten cents extra per head for every immigrant passenger over 100, provided his total earnings do not exceed $100 in any one month. If the fees exceed the amount named his total allowance is $100.

LIGHTKEEPER AT NORTH HALFWAY POINT.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Why was Denis Ménard, keeper of the range light, North Halfway Point, dismissed from the service of the department ?

2. Did any one make a charge against him ?

3. Was said Denis Ménard given communication of the complaint, if any, made against him ?

4. Was any opportunity given said Denis Ménard to be heard before his dismissal ?

5. How long has the said Denis Ménard been in the service of the government ?

6. Was the said Denis Ménard allowed any delay to find another situation ?

7. By whom was his successor, Jos. Lord, recommended to the government ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine) :

1. In the public interest.
2. No.
3. No.
4. It was not necessary.
5. Since the 17th of August, 1890.
6. No, this is not the practice of the department.
7. A petition of influential persons of that locality has been standing in the department since 1896, requesting this change.

CANADIAN FREIGHT CLASSIFICATION.

Mr. KEMP asked :

Has the Canadian Freight Classification No. 12, taking effect May 1, 1903, been approved by the Governor General in Council ? If so, what is the date of such approval ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The Canadian Freight Classification No. 12, has not been approved by the Governor General in Council. There has been no freight classification approved since October or November, 1899.

MR. CAMILLE DESJARDINS.

Mr. BUREAU asked :

Was Camille Desjardins, a clerk in the Public Works Department, at Montreal, appointed by Order in Council ? If so, on what date ? What salary does he receive for each day's work ? Is he paid for holidays, Sundays and days of absence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. No, not by Order in Council. He was appointed 26th January, 1896.
2. Paid by the month at the rate of $90 per month.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I understand from the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) is going to make his statement in connection with the Intercolonial Railway to-morrow. There are three notices of motion asking for returns to be brought down—Nos. 11, 12, and 13. I would ask if he would be kind enough to have them before the meeting of the House to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he would like to have them to-morrow ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, if the hon. minister is going to make his statement first thing to-morrow. I would like to have them before he makes his statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid I cannot have them to-morrow. The orders for these returns would require to be sent to Moncton, and it will be some days before the information could be got here.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You could telegraph to Moncton.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but the information would not be here in time even then. It would be available later just as well as to-morrow for reference. If the hon. gentleman makes these motions, I have no objection whatever to their passing and I will telegraph for the information and get it as soon as possible, but it would not be possible to have it here to-morrow.

THE RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 3,

Mr. MACLEAN. The minister informed us, when last we were considering this Bill, that he would consider whether the Bill should be made to apply to express companies or not. What has been the result of his consideration in this respect ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I have been considering the matter carefully since the last sitting of the committee, and I have come to the conclusion that, considering the enormous magnitude of the Bill, it would be quite impracticable to encumber it with any further provisions if it is to be disposed of during the present session. My own view is that if it is desirable express companies should be taken under control of the railway commission, it would be necessary to have that dealt with by a separate Bill. I cannot think of incorporating it in the present Bill. It would complicate it, and would involve a great deal of labour in making alterations and amendments in other clauses.

Mr. MACLEAN. Seeing that the minister has made a study of this matter, I would ask him whether the Inter-State Commerce Bill, and the several State Bills dealing with this matter, do not give jurisdiction over express companies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Except so far as they may control common carriers, I do not think that they deal with any of the express companies in any of the states.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is not an express company a common carrier ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not dealing with the liability or the power of common carriers in this Bill ; we are dealing with railway carriers.

Mr. MACLEAN. The board of trade of the city of Toronto and other boards of trade have represented to the minister that it is essential the rates charged by express companies should be subject to regulation by the railway commission. I agree thoroughly with that idea. If this Bill is as comprehensive as it is said to be, it should contain such a provision, and without such a provision it is an incomplete Bill and almost useless. The express companies handle a great deal more freight now than ever before, and their charges in some cases are said to be excessive. The commercial people of this country desire that express companies should be included in this Bill, and I cannot see any reason why the minister purposes not to do so. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway have three or four car loads of express matter on each train now, whereas formerly half a car was sufficient for the express business. Again, it is the railway companies that own these express companies. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway own their express business. I again ask that the express companies be brought within the purview of this Bill.

Mr. KEMP. I think the minister would do well to reconsider his intention not to include the express companies in this Bill. A few weeks ago the fruit-growers waited upon the minister and complained that their fruit, which is largely shipped by express, was subject to the discriminations and irregularities which this Bill is supposed to overcome in respect to railways. Hundreds of car loads of fruit are shipped by express, and it seems to me a reasonable thing that the express rates should be regulated by the railway commission. Not only the fruit-growers, but other shippers are very anxious to have some regulation of express companies, and I trust the minister will include them in this Bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not know why these hon. gentlemen bring up such matters as these at the present time, unless it be their object to defeat this Bill. While the express charges are very high throughout Canada, yet I believe that if we are going to hamper this Bill with every detail of transportation that can be thought of, the result will be to prevent its passage during the present session. I believe the majority of the members of this House are in favour of having this Bill passed at once, and having the railway problem solved so far as it is possible to solve it in this respect.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCREARY. We cannot expect to cure every ill by one Act. This is something like the Municipal Act, and it will require amendments probably for the next four or five sessions before it is made nearly perfect. The railway Bills in Minnesota and Dakota have taken ten or twelve years since their passage to reach their present condition, and they are not perfect yet. We cannot expect to have this Bill perfect all at once, and if we desire to pass it this session we should not encumber it with details in regard to express charges or telephone charges or telegraph charges, or anything else but construction, equipment, management, operation and rates on railways. We could deal with the express companies either in a separate Bill or after we have finished the main body of this Bill.

Mr. KEMP. So far as my knowledge goes of the agitation which was the cause of the introduction of the amendment to the Railway Act by the Minister of Railways and Canals, the complaint was in regard to freight tolls, and not, as the hon. gentleman seems to think, in regard to the construction of railways. The great complaint throughout this country was that the railways were not held within reasonable bounds in respect to freight rates, and express rates as well. If we are going to have a Bill dealing with the tolls on railways, why not have it regulate rates by express as well as by slow freight ?

Mr. MACLEAN. I resent what the hon. gentleman from the west says. I am very anxious to see a railway commission Bill carried through the House, and I will do my best to help to get it passed. I believe the country will support the minister in putting such a Bill through but the country expects that a Bill dealing with freight rates will deal with all freight rates, including those of express companies. Why should not the railways be regulated in regard to the rates they charge on express matter as well as in regard to other freight ? Goods are sent by express not only for speed, but often also because they are perishable. Carload after carload of perishable freight is sent by express from the fruit districts of Ontario, and the fruit-growers have said time after time that they can only grow fruit under the condition of having favourable freight charges. If the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher)—and I would like to see him in his place to-day—wishes to aid the farmers, the fruit-growers and the dairymen of this country, he will see that this Bill takes jurisdiction over express charges. I am anxious to see the Bill passed, and I suggest to the minister now that there is no reason why he should not put into this clause the word express or introduce later a clause, providing that express companies shall be considered railway companies, to make them subject to the jurisdiction of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that the jaunty way in which my hon. friend would dispose of the question and the confident ease with which he thinks this matter can be dealt with, show that he has a lot to learn as to the proper and effective method of legislating on this question. The assumption of my hon. friend that we are withdrawing express companies for the carriage of goods from the operation of this Bill is a mistaken one. All arrangements between railway companies and express companies are subject to the control of this proposed legislation, and I do not myself apprehend that there will be a great deal of difficulty in a general or broad way in covering all reasonable complaints with regard to the carriage, not of express freight, but of express packages—all goods which are taken up by express companies. But beyond that it would be absolutely necessary, I may tell my hon. friend, in order that proper legislation on that subject should be on the statute-book, that it should be dealt with by itself in a separate Bill. I have given a great deal of attention to this and other questions in connection with the proposed Bill, and have spent a good deal of labour upon it, and I want to say to the hon. gentleman that what he suggests cannot be done. It would simply destroy the Bill, and probably would not be effective at all. But what my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) said a moment ago has much force in it. We cannot hope to exhaust all legislation for the carriage of merchandise by railways and other carriers in this Bill. I feel myself that we have undertaken as much as we can well and properly carry out during the present session. I do not want the Bill to be encumbered, if I can avoid it, with any new propositions. I want to deal with what we have here, and when we get this Bill in proper shape and working order, we shall have a footing on which to proceed to take up other cognate questions and deal with them in a much more effective manner than we could undertake to do in the present circumstances. Referring to what has been said by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), I do recall that some delegations of fruit men waited upon me, but I do not know that they made any special reference to grievances which they suffered from the express companies. What they did impress on my mind was that, owing to the facility with which the railway companies were able to change their freight classifications, so as to transfer merchandise from one class to another, it was possible for them to do a good deal of injury to fruit and other perishable goods. It was express freight, so far as my recollection serves me, that they had in mind, and as to which they impressed on me the need of improvement. We are covering express operations in a much larger degree, I believe, than the hon. gentleman imagines, because the word express company is not in the Bill. A railway company cannot, through an express company or other instrumentality, exact exorbitant charges. Its actions over its line are controlled by this board. I do not know how much more you could ask in a general way.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the railway company were an express company, could it not evade the law ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it could if it were an express company any more than it could if it were not. I do not think, as legal entities, any of the railway companies are express companies. I suppose some of the individuals who constitute one company may constitute the other ; but for all legal purposes they are distinct corporate bodies. I believe that to be the case in regard to the Canadian Pacific Express Company, and I think it is likely to be the case with regard to the others. If my hon. friend desires, as I believe he does, to see this legislation go through, he will not urge that it should be encumbered with an attempt to deal with other questions than those included in it, and I would strongly counsel him to have patience with regard to these matters which he has in his mind, because in another session somebody will be able to take them up and deal with them if we are not here to do it. We certainly have a very large contract on our hands to get through with all these various clauses, and discuss all the complicated questions involved in the Bill, without increasing the number.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This Bill proposes to give to the commissioners the absolute power to fix rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not come to that yet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We are discussing it under this clause. I do not see how it would encumber the Bill or affect it in the slightest to give these commissioners power to deal with rates on freight carried either as express freight or in any other manner by a railway. Express companies are put to much more expense handling small freights in the different sections of the country than railway companies are subjected to on the average class of freights they carry. But the commission could make allowance for the difference and could fix the rates accordingly. And inasmuch as the express companies deal with nearly every individual in the community, inasmuch as, compared with railway companies, they stand pretty much in the position of retailers as compared with wholesale dealers, I fail to see why the commission should not have the power of fixing express rates as well as rates on ordinary freight. In the American states, jurisdiction is given the commissioners to deal with this very class of freight. Then, it is provided that this Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways other than government railways, within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. I suppose the hon. Minister of Railways knows what particular railways are not within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. I believe that all railways with a provincial charter, concerning which there is no express enactment declaring them to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and some railways which have a special charter subjecting their rates to the approval of the Governor General in Council, would be removed from the jurisdiction of this commission. I would ask the hon. minister what railways are included or excluded.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that a portion of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway would not come under this commission, so far as any reduction in their rates is concerned, unless their income should come up to a certain percentage.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much of the main line ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From Callander west.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is nearly the whole railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have a good many more miles of railway in the west of Canada subject to this commission than would not come under it. They are extending lines in all possible directions. Their whole system in the east of Canada would come under the operation of this Bill. Year by year the mileage of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which would be subject entirely to the control of the railway commission as regards rates, will be increasing. My hon. friend is under the impression that none of those railways should come within the operation of this Bill which were incorporated under the old Railway Act, and allowed a margin of 15 per cent. I think that the hon. gentleman is in error. I have no doubt, and I think that legal opinion will bear me out, that there are no other companies incorporated in Canada which would be exempt except that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway I have named. It is perhaps true that railways with local charters and which have not come under the legislative jurisdiction of the federal parliament would be exempt from the operation of the Act. But there are very few lines of any importance, and their mileage is very limited indeed, which have not been brought within the jurisdiction of this parliament. But if it should become necessary, by reason of the amount of business done, or because of any complaints concerning rates, that parliament should have authority, there is a very easy and simple method of obtaining that control. A general Act declaring these roads to be works for the general advantage of Canada would bring them within the jurisdiction of this House. On the whole, I think that railways doing 95 per cent of the business of Canada will come within this section.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister, in reply to a statement of mine, says that this Bill will apply to certain railways which were chartered at a particular time when the Railway Act provided that there would be no interference with the rates until they had earned at least 15 per cent on their capital. But what I pointed out was that this provision operated in the nature of a contract between the government and these companies. I understand that the power is vested in this government of absolutely expropriating without remuneration at all to these railways. But they got their charters when the general Railway Act provided that there would be no interference with the rates until they had earned 15 per cent. It is true, we have the power, but will it not be an interference with the mutual contract or understanding applicable to every railway company which received a charter under that particular Railway Act ? Though you may have the power, the moral obligation, the mutual contract remains with these railway companies, which got their charters at that particular time. Then, as to the application, the hon. minister admits that these roads which are not under the jurisdiction of Canada by being declared works for the benefit of Canada would not be subject to this commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As regards control over the rates.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. minister does not argue that the commission would have power to regulate rates on roads which are purely provincial and have not been brought under the jurisdiction of this parliament by the clause declaring them to be of general advantage to Canada. I would like to see a decision on that question—whether the general Act of the Dominion which states that all railways which touch or cross government railways, the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, are brought under the jurisdiction of Canada, is valid. It is possible it may be so, but I doubt the legality of it. To bring a work under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada you should at least specifically declare what work it is.

In the case of a railway you should name the two points between which you assume jurisdiction over that railway. If my interpretation of the law in that respect is correct, the jurisdiction which we can confer upon this commission will be a very limited one. It will cover works which receive their entity from the Dominion parliament, except as the hon. minister says, the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander westward; but it will not cover roads which have provincial charters. Morally, if not legally, it must exclude roads which receive their charter under the virtual notice given by the government that the parties investing money in railway enterprises need dread no fear of interference with rates until they have declared a dividend of fifteen per cent. I doubt very much that it can apply to those roads which were supposed to be brought under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament by being declared works for the general advantage of Canada, because they touch or cross the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. As I say if we have power to take over the jurisdiction over these roads, it should be by a specific declaration as to the points between which our jurisdiction is to extend. If my contention is correct, this Bill will have an application only to a moiety, perhaps to a minority, of the railways in the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must confess that I am quite unable to form an opinion as to what is the attitude of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) on this question—his mental attitude or his political attitude. He attacks this Bill because of its limited application. The apparent inference is that it is not worth while to promote a Bill looking to the establishment of a railway commission because of this limited application, and I understand, for that reason he opposes the Bill. Is that his attitude ? Is it possible that he opposes the Bill on the ground that it is not more comprehensive, while he argues that it cannot be made more comprehensive? Is that his attitude ? My hon. friend, then, I assume, is in that frame of mind. But, how comes this, when he was such a red-hot, enthusiastic supporter of a railway commission not nearly so far reachng in its power as this, which his friend the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy tried to establish by the measure which he introduced session after session in this House. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) ardently supported that Bill and was deeply pained that it did not receive the support he thought its merits justified. What is the difference between the conditions then and the conditions now ? The same special contract was in existence and confirmed by legislation with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that company covered a larger proportion of the territory under which railways within our jurisdiction were built than it does to-day. The same law existed then which exists to-day with regard to the power of the provincial legislatures and our legal attitude towards local roads was exactly the same. Why is it that when the difficulties were much more serious than they are to-day my hon. friend so warmly supported the Bill which he cannot support to-day ? Now, he says that in this Bill there is an element that is immoral——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Immoral ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, immoral. The hon. gentleman says it may be legal, but it would be immoral for this parliament to take away from the companies which were incorporated under the former Railway Act, the privilege of exemption from control of rates until the time when their profits realized fifteen per cent. It may be legal, he says, but it is wrong. Now, by whom was the wrong done ? By my hon. friend himself. How is it possible for me to understand my hon. friend when he criticises a Bill which in this respect is simply a transcript of the Bill introduced by himself—or, if not by himself by the government of which he was a member—which gave control of these railways to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council irrespective of whether they were earning fifteen per cent or not. How is it that he can have got himself into such a frame of mind ? How can he so shut his memory against what he himself has done ? Is it any wonder that I find it difficult to understand what he his aiming at ? Is he for or against this measure ? If against it, is he against it for the reasons which existed when he was in favour of this class of legislation ? If I do him less than the justice he may think he is entitled to, it is only because I am unable to comprehend the position in which he stands.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals cannot mention anything I have ever said against the creation of a tribunal for the purpose of controlling railways. I was not arguing in that light at all, the hon. minister must notice it. I was pointing out that this Bill had application to only a moiety of the railways of the Dominion, as against the claim of the hon. minister that it had application to nearly the whole of them. I was pointing out that it could have no application to provincial railways. I pointed out—and the Minister of Railways and Canals admitted that point—that it had no application to that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Callander. I expressed doubt of its applicability to those roads which were supposed to have been brought under our jurisdiction by the section of the law which declares them works for the general advantage of Canada. But all this is no reason why I should object to the Bill itself. I was a party to the Act—at least I was supporting the government under which the law was passed—which virtually gave notice to every man who invested in a Canadian railway that there would be no interference with railway rates until fifteen per cent profit had been paid. I was also a party to the Bill which annulled that, and which would make it exclude from the benefits of that section all the roads which received their charters afterwards. Does that mean that I changed my mind as to the application of that section while it was in force? Not at all. I am simply pointing out that this Bill would have application to comparatively few of the roads in Canada. The hon. gentleman refers to my attitude in the past——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) say that under the Railway Act introduced by the government of which he was a member and which is in force to-day, that railways incorporated prior to a certain date were exempted from the operation of the Act?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not say anything of the kind. What I stated was that the moment that law was passed, it was a notice to every one who got a charter under it that there were no conditions in it such as that under the fifteen per cent clause. That does not say that because the Act was passed that from that time any person applying for a charter had a different notice——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does distinctly and absolutely.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It does?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I say not. That is my opinion to-day. Why, then, can you not take under control the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman asks me a question, I will tell him. Because there was a distinct contract between the government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that contract was confirmed by this parliament; and we could not, we would not, no man would venture, without the sanction of the Railway Committee under these circumstances, to rescind that contract.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That contract is no more binding than a contract made with any other company under the general Railway Act, in which rates are not to be interfered with until they earn fifteen per cent. You changed that law, and you took away from them some rights which were virtually a contract with these companies. You have the same power to take jurisdiction over the Canadian Pacific Railway. No contract should interfere with such control if it is necessary in the interest of the public. The hon. minister knows that he can take the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under control, notwithstanding the contract that the government made with them, and put them under the jurisdiction of this Act, the same as he can any other railway, the same as he can when he assumes jurisdiction over a provincial railway by claiming it to be for the general advantage of Canada. In the same way he could declare this work to be for the general advantages of Canada, notwithstanding the conditions of the contract and the part of the charter they may have received from a provincial government. By the terms of his commission, in proposing to take control of the railways he violates contracts, he violates solemn agreements embodied in the statute-book, just as much as he would by taking control over the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway and putting them under the control of this commission. I am not arguing against the commission, I am merely pointing out the anomalies and the troubles the minister has to get over, and when I do so he should not attack my inconsistency for supporting the Bill establishing a railway commission introduced by the late Mr. McCarthy some years ago. I am of the same opinion still; but even if I had altered my opinions or discarded them, that is no reason why the hon. gentleman should complain. During my lifetime I have discarded or altered many opinions which I formerly held, and if they are of any advantage to the hon. gentleman he is welcome to them. I would say with the late hon. Mr. Howe, that no man has more contempt than I have for opinions which I have altered or discarded in my lifetime.

Mr. MACLEAN. The minister has referred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as being, in a way, outside the jurisdiction of this Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I said in one respect only, and that is the control of rates. In every other respect the company is entirely under our control.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am coming to that point. There is already a way to bring the Canadian Pacific Railway and its rates under the jurisdiction of this parliament and of this commission, and it is set out in the contract which he has quoted, and I have myself referred to many times in this House. The clause which regulates the charges of the Canadian Pacific Railway is this:

20. The limit to the reduction of tolls by the parliament of Canada provided for by the eleventh subsection of the 17th section of the 'Consolidated Railway Act, 1879,' respecting tolls, is hereby extended so that such reduction may be to such an extent that such tolls when reduced shall not produce less than ten per cent per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway.

Now, we have asked this government to ascertain in some way what the actual cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway was, as set out in this Act, and the government have never done so. But the moment it is done the Canadian Pacific Railway and all its charges can be brought under our control. I believe that time has arrived now. They are earning sufficient on the actual expenditure incurred to bring them within the jurisdiction of the Act, and one reason why we need this railway commission is to ascertain what the actual cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been as provided in this Act. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) in regard to the partial jurisdiction of parliament over these railways. I believe this parliament has an absolute and supreme jurisdiction over these railways. If we have not supremacy, we ought to have it. I do not believe that we are bound so much by the vested rights of the companies, because the whole tenor of our parliamentary institutions is to take jurisdiction over these railways and to regulate them in the public interest, no matter what the past legislation may have been, and I believe no injustice would be done to the shareholders, the stockholders or any one else, and it is high time that parliament should take possession. The Minister of Justice, although he has heretofore strongly argued for vested interests, I am glad to see now that, by giving his consent to this Bill, he abandons somewhat his former position, and that it is now the intention of the government to take complete jurisdiction over all these railways. This parliament has now jurisdiction over all the other railways, and the only one excluded, the Canadian Pacific Railway, can be brought under by this commission immediately if the government should take the steps providing for it in the Act incorporating the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Now, to return to the question of the express companies. The minister says that he does not wish to encumber the Bill. Does he not see that if he allows the express companies to remain outside he gives the railway companies an opportunity of evading the Bill? They will turn themselves into express companies, and probably do all their business as such, and in that way they will get outside the jurisdiction of the Bill. The way to regulate the whole of them is to bring them under the jurisdiction of this Act.

Mr. MONK. I wish to point out that it is very essential that we should include the express companies in this section three. Of course, as the Minister of Railways and Canals is aware, the express companies with which we have to deal are closely connected with the railway companies. They may be separate legal entities, they are no doubt; but the connection is notorious. It is so close that undoubtedly if the railway commission for which this Bill provides secures any amelioration in the matter of rates, there will be a tendency in the railway companies to take back in the matter of express charges what has been lost in railway charges. I think that applies not only to the community in general, not only to fruit growers, but to that numerous class of persons who ship perishable goods of other kinds. I am sure that the advantage of the railway commission, if there is any, will be in many cases totally lost unless it has control over express rates. I point that out to the minister, because I feel convinced from my experience that there will be a tendency to take out of the public in express charges what may be lost by the commission taking control of the railroad rates. For my part I have very little faith myself in a commission. I believe in retaining in the hands of the minister all that authority which, to a certain extent, he is now divesting himself of in the creation of this commission. I believe in responsible control. I believe it is better for the department to have under its control a large number of experienced men of whom the minister himself should be the responsible head, and in all important matters he should be responsible to parliament. But that is outside the clause we are now discussing. This question of express charges, I do not think, will encumber the Bill. It will enable the commission to act equitably with these parties and it is absolutely essential for the proper and successful application of the Bill.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Mr. Chairman, I regret to hear the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals say that it is not possible to bring express companies under the provisions of this Bill. I hope he will find a way, on further consideration of the Bill, to bring express companies under its operation. The express and railway companies are intimately connected especially when we consider the relationship of the Canadian and Dominion express companies with Canadian railway companies. If they are not the same as the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway Companies they are at any rate owned and operated by the same men. We know as a matter of fact that if any complaint is made to the express companies in regard to the rates the onus is very frequently thrown on the railway companies, and the immediate reply is: We have to pay so much to the railway company that we are unable to reduce these rates. In some cases the payment has to be made by the express company to a railway company other than with which it is connected. I know of numerous cases where express companies have charged very much higher rates for carrying carloads of fruit a short distance than they have charged for carrying them a much longer distance by their own company, and when asked why they should charge so much more for carrying fruit for a short distance than for a long distance, the reply was: We have to pass over another railway, we have to pay it a fixed charge, and having to pay that charge, we are unable to reduce the rates. The express companies say positively, and apparently, candidly, that the charges they are making are not excessive, because they are not able to pay their shareholders more than 6 per cent dividend. We have no means of knowing whether this is true or not. The railway and express companies are so intimately connected with each other that it may be that the express companies do not make more than 6 per cent, but it may also be the fact that any profit over and above that is credited to the railway companies. So it seems to me that there is very great reason why the express companies should be brought under the operation of this Bill on account of their intimate connection with the railway companies, so that they would not be able to shift the responsibility upon the shoulders of the railway companies. I notice that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said that he did not remember that the fruit growers had brought this matter to his attention, but I read in the 'Globe' of the 12th February, some remarks by one of the delegates who waited upon the hon. minister which would seem to indicate that the question of express rates was discussed:

Mr. Bunting, president of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, said that in September last 2,500 baskets of peaches were shipped by express from the Niagara district to points east of Toronto, principally Montreal. The transportation companies received thirteen and a-half cents per basket, whereas the grower received only eight and three-quarter cents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I remember that statement was made, but I did not understand that it referred to express companies. I understood that it referred to express charges by the railway company.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I know what the rate is from the Niagara district to Montreal. The express rate is 13½ cents per basket, so that Mr. Bunting, in referring to it, evidently referred to the express company's charge, because that was the express company's charge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not take it in that way.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Yes, that was the express company's charge. They charge 80 cents per 100 pounds. I should hope, therefore, that the hon. minister will find a way to bring the operations of the express companies under this Bill. The express companies do a large portion of the business in fruit. From the Niagara district I should say that not less than $200,000 annually are taken out in express charges on the fruit carried from that district. Whether this is more than ought to be taken out of this district it is difficult for us to say. We know that in many cases by a reduction of rates the fruit growers would capture markets that are now controlled by fruit from the United States. We think the companies can afford to carry fruit at a lower rate, but being unable to know ourselves, we cannot press our claim on the express companies with as much force as we could if we had definite information on the subject. The great Northwest is supplied with fruit from California and from Ontario. It absorbs an enormous quantity of fruit, and the demand is constantly increasing. Our fruit is of such a perishable nature that we require the best accommodation possible. We do not receive that at the present time. Our express service is very inferior indeed. The fruit has to go by way of Ottawa and Carleton Junction instead of going by North Bay, and the train service is inferior. The fruit is not carried on the best trains and an enormous trade is lost to Canada and is placed in the hands of the fruit growers of California simply because the express service is not as good as it ought to be. I hope the hon. minister will find his way clear to bringing the express companies under the operation of the commission, so that it will be able to control the rates and see that the railway companies do not charge the express companies more than they ought to charge them for carrying fruit cars.

Mr. MACLEAN. I see the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) in his place now. I think he was otherwise engaged, and did not hear the argument of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith). The statement has been made repeatedly that the fruit growers cannot get into the markets unless they have the best possible express service. They cannot hold the market of the North-west Territories unless there is some regulation of the charges made by these express companies, and I cannot see now, after all that has been said in this House, why these companies should not be brought under the jurisdiction and control of this commission. What is the reason of this protection that seems to be given to telephone and express companies in Canada? Their charges are exorbitant. They are rivals of the government. The government is carrying on a large business in what is known as the parcel post system. They have a much better parcel post system in Europe than we have in Canada. We in Canada want to have the same kind of a parcel post system that they have in Europe, and we have asked for it, but for some reason we cannot get it. I know the reason. It is because of the influence which the express companies are able to exercise. They are able to wield a potent influence that enables them to escape public jurisdiction and control of rates. It is time that these companies were regulated. The government has gone to the country and said they would propose legislation that would regulate all railway charges, and they bring down a Bill that completely ignores the most important feature of these charges. Why is this peculiar protection afforded to telephone companies and express companies ? Why should express companies not be brought under the jurisdiction of this Bill ? Why should the hon. Minister of Agriculture not go to his colleague the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and say : In the interest of the farming community, in the interest of the dairying community, in the interest of the fruit-growers I recommend you to include provisions in the Bill dealing with railway companies for the complete control of express charges.

Mr. KEMP. In the report of the interview of the delegation that waited on the government on the 11th February, in regard to the charges on fruit to which the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) referred, I find that this statement was made :

A very large proportion of the fruit grown in the Niagara district, is necessarily shipped by express. Taking express and freight rates together, and averaging the season through, one-third of the price realized on the Niagara fruit sold in Montreal is absorbed in the carrying charges imposed for hauling from Niagara to Montreal.

In view of the fact that such a large proportion of this fruit is taken by express the hon. minister will see that it is a very important matter. I wish, however, while I am on my feet, to refer to the question of the appointment of the commission. I am not prepared to make any statement as to the legal aspect of this question. I do not know what the moral or legal obligation of the people of Canada is in respect to what dividends the railway shall earn, but I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway are entitled to earn a dividend of 10 per cent on certain portions of their mainline before their rates can be regulated. It is news to me that any moral or legal obligation rested on the people so far as the other railroads are concerned. I am one of those who would not seek to interfere with vested rights or to enter upon a campaign to confiscate the rights of any corporation or private individual. At the same time most people admit that so far as the tolls and freight charges on railways are concerned, the railways have been free up to the present time to impose just about what conditions they like upon shippers. Whether the Railway Committee of the Privy Council could or could not interfere for the protection of the public, the fact remains that up to the present that body has not done so. I have not myself been an enthusiastic supporter of the idea of a railway commission, because I have feared that perhaps the constitution of that commission might be such that it would not accomplish the ends we seek. The fact remains that there is today no control over railways, that the public have suffered and are suffering, and that some way or other the railways have been able in the past to get the ear of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council or the officials. Let me give an illustration which I think will convince every hon. member of this House. I put a question on the Order paper as to whether a certain classification of freight which had been framed by the railways had been authorized by the Governor General in Council. The Railway Act clearly states that it is the duty of the Governor General in Council to authorize this freight classification before it is put into effect, and so far as I know all such other classifications have been authorized in the past. The Minister of Railways replied to my question that the last freight classification authorized was in November, 1899, to take effect in January, 1900, and that none had been authorized since. I hold in my hand a freight classification issued by the railways which has never been submitted for the approval of the Governor General in Council. It contains all kinds of regulations which are no doubt all right from a railway standpoint, but what is to become of the public if every private individual or every public corporation in Canada can make rules and regulations to suit himself or themselves. Here is apparently a flagrant violation of the Railway Act. This unauthorized classification came into effect the first of May, 1903, and every pound of freight from the Atlantic to the Pacific is now being shipped under it. Surely this this would prove that if the railway commission is properly constituted and if this Bill is of any use, it will be a benefit to the public. I do not oppose this Bill. I quite believe that the minister realizes as a great many people realize, that the time has come when something should be done. It is not the intention of any one in this House I am sure to take away from the railways any vested rights or just privileges which they enjoy, but I repeat that the public should have some means of being heard before a tribunal whether it be a railway commission or a re-organized Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I would like the minister to explain how it comes that this freight classification can be issued by the railways in absolute violation of the law ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have never expressed any very enthusiastic opinion as to the outcome of such legislation as we are now considering. I have always felt that the public were hoping for and anticipating greater results than the operation of such a law would justify. I therefore am quite in sympathy with those who have expressed their doubts in that direction. But there is no doubt whatever in my mind that the Railway Commission of the Privy Council, composed as it is of members of the cabinet who have multitudinous duties to perform, is not a tribunal to do effective work, and I do not know of anything that can take its place except a railway commission. That seems to have been the judgment of all English speaking communities who have had the same experience as we have had. The opinion seems to be settled that the appointment of a railway commission is the best remedy to adopt. There may possibly have been instances where, when a railway commission was once constituted having control of railways and rates, the law under which it was constituted has been repealed, but I know of no such instance. I do think that these commissions afford a great deal of protection to the public, and the public soon realize that they reap some results, perhaps quite beneficial results, from their constitution, although they may not have come up to their expectations in practice.

My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) has called attention to the fact that the railways have sent out a joint freight classification to take effect on the first of May, without having obtained the approval of the Governor General in Council. I do not know how it would be possible for the Department of Railways to prevent them doing that. I do not know what measure of criticism or blame should be attached to the Department of Railways because of that, but I do say that it was a high-handed proceeding on the part of the railways all the same.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there no penalty against the railways ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have provided one in this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. None in the present law?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. It was an indefensible act on the part of the railways, without a word of communication being sent to myself or to my deputy ,or to any of the officers of the department. I confess that until the subject was mentioned the other day, I had not heard that this freight classification had been issued. I don't think that the department is at fault. It would be at fault if, knowing that this classification had issued, it failed to take any action the law empowered it to take in order to have that classification recalled or rescinded. I am now having the matter reported to me as to what remedy we have in our hands. The railway commission, I think, will be in a very different position. It will be their exclusive duty to see that the law is not violated and to see that those who violate it are brought to book. Acts of that kind they will be amply competent to deal with ; and they will, I think, assure the public against offence in the future. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) almost suggests to my mind the case of an individual who has been crying out for a long time for a railway commission ; then he gets it, and, after he gets it, he enters upon a close scrutiny of the Bill to see if there is some little point that might be put into it which is not there; and, after having made patient search, he finds at last that, broad and comprehensive as this Bill is, there is one thing that it does not comprehend—it does not give the commission power over all express companies ; and the moment my hon. friend discovers that, he begins to preach that this Bill is no good. That is the one thing he is particularly anxious to have in it ; there is nothing else that measures in value to that feature ; and because that is not in the Bill, he is going to give it no particular show. The hon. gentleman is running away with the idea that express companies will be allowed to run riot under cover of the railways, in handling express business. That is not permissible under the Bill. If the hon. member had listened to what I said a while ago, he would have heard from me that this Bill assumes control of the railways, and the railways could not put freight in the hands of express companies, and allow them under the cover of the railway to make all sorts of extravagant demands. In regard to the tolls that are to be paid to a railway company by an express company out of its earnings, they will be subject to the control of the commission.

Mr. MONK. We do not control the rates of express companies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No ; and you cannot do it with this Bill without encumbering the Bill needlessly, without introducing into it, almost from the first to the last, exceptions and amendments to such an extent that I tell this committee frankly I am not prepared to undertake it at this time. I am not able to do so. It requires more thought and time and care than I can give to it. When I tell the hon. gentleman that, he has only another year to wait. We have lived through the past without much control, according to the hon. gentleman ; we have lived down to the year of grace 1903 ; and one might suppose that we could continue to live in the same way for another year. Any one who feels keenly on this matter might introduce a Bill himself, and I am sure it would receive the consideration of parliament. Such a measure should not control simply those express companies which are operated on railways, and let every other express company run free of control. That would be unjust. It will not do to deal partially with the question ; it will have to be dealt with carefully ; and I am not prepared to take that question up at this session of parliament. If my hon. friend will apply that bright, penetrating, astute intellect of his to the serious questions which we may deal with in this Bill, I am sure that his assistance will be most valuable, and I shall be glad to have it, because I know that he has a great deal of interest in these general questions which are of public importance. But let me give my hon. friend one little word of advice. Do not assume, because these questions are not being dealt with, that there must be some motive or influence or power operating upon one's mind to prevent him dealing with them. My hon. friend is not one whit clearer from influences of that character than the people whom he criticises, and it would be much better and fairer on his part to deal with questions on their merits.

Mr. MACLEAN. On almost every occasion when I bring up questions in this House, the hon. gentleman undertakes to lecture me. I have a right to express my views here without being lectured by him, and I have a right to criticise his conduct whenever it seems well for me to do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And I have a right to lecture you.

Mr. MACLEAN. When I look at the hon. gentleman's administration of the Railway Department of this country, what do I find? I find that this illegal classification has existed for years without his protesting against it. What is he there for ? What do we pay him for ? Why does he not bring these companies to time ? As a matter of fact, not one dollar of tolls can be collected by these companies without being approved by the Governor in Council. Yet there sit fifteen men who confess here to-day that this thing has taken place, and nothing has been done for the protection of the public. The hon. gentleman has lectured me in regard to this question of express companies. He says an opportunity shall be given to me to amend. I propose an amendment now. Mr. Chairman, I beg to move to amend the clause by inserting the words 'express companies' after the words 'to all' in the first line. The hon. gentleman says that the opportunity will be open to me to do something next session. I am sent here to do something this session. It is all very fine for the hon. gentleman to talk about imputing motives. Probably he is inviting this kind of thing today so that the Bill will not pass. He has promised it for this year, and when we propose to make it a good and complete Bill, he gets up and assumes a fatherly air and lectures everybody who ventures to criticise it. That lecture may be worth little or much. It has very little influence on me. In the interest of the public, of the commercial community, of the farmers, of the fruit growers, I propose that this Bill shall take jurisdiction forthwith, from the time of its passage, over express companies as well as railway companies. Express companies are another name for railway companies, to enable them to evade the control of the law. Why not bring them under the law now ? It only means that another schedule of rates shall come under the jurisdiction of the commission. I wish to see this commission created. I wish to see the measure pass this session. I will give every assistance I can to have it become law this session, and I hope that the minister will listen to suggestions made by gentlemen on this side of the House for the purpose of making the Bill as good and complete as we can, without delivering lectures to them.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see why the hon. minister should complain of too minute an analysis by an hon. member as he has done in the case of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Maclean). It is our duty to scrutinize most carefully every section of the Bill in order to make it as perfect as possible. But what I rose more particularly to refer to is the fact that a good many railways will be outside the jurisdiction of this commission. We first exclude the government railways. I do not see why we should. If a railway commission is a good thing, it ought to be equally as good for the farmer in the maritime provinces as for the farmer in Ontario. It is quite conceivable that the government, in its management of the Intercolonial Railway, may discriminate unjustly against one shipper in favour of another. It would do no injustice to government or to the people to make this Bill apply to government railways. Then we exclude a large portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also railways with provincial charters. Leaving these out, the Bill will apply to only a few railways at the best, and shippers will be confronted with the same difficulty as they were met with a few years ago before certain railways were declared for the general advantage of Canada when they had one-half of a railway a provincial road and the other half a Dominion road. Suppose a shipper in Ontario sends something to the seaboard. He first sends his freight over a provincial railway and then there is a dispute. He complains of being charged higher rates than somebody else. The company reply that the rate was a through rate and governed partly by local and partly by federal authorities. Under what law will the citizen prosecute to get his rights ? Will the commission deal with that question ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 5 specially provides that this Bill shall apply.

Mr. SPROULE. It applies to companies which are within the legislative authority of Canada, but these provincial railways are not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With respect to their traffic they are.

Mr. SPROULE. But not local traffic. What I was going to point out is that if this commission is to be as useful as we hope it will, it can only be made so by working in conjunction with provincial commissioners on the plan of the interstate law in the United States. We have an equal right to include electric railways just as well as steam. The interpretation clause says :

The expression 'railway' means any railway which the company has power to construct or operate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend will turn to page 29, section 118, subsection F, he will find that the Act applies to electric railways.

Mr. SPROULE. I looked to the interpretation clause, assuming that the electric railways would be found there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Can the hon. gentleman name any railways in the province of Ontario which are not subject to the control of this parliament ?

Mr. SPROULE. There is the Brockville and Westport.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That has a Dominion charter.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the railway being built by the provincial government towards Temiscaming come under this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The number of railways which will not come under this commission is so small and their mileage so limited, that they are not worth considering. The Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are the two great systems doing business in the older provinces and they apparently are going to do the business in the west.

Mr. SPROULE. Take Manitoba and Ontario, and the hon. gentleman will find there are quite a few.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The number is rapidly diminishing.

Mr. SPROULE. But it seems to me if we want to make the best use of the Bill, we should have provincial commissions as well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will find that all these railways will come under this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. May be in the future, but not now. Will the hon. minister tell me why the government railway should not be under this commission ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why should it be ? Is there any institution in the country more amenable to public opinion and to the demands which the public make, or one more likely to be run in the general interest than is the government railway ? You institute a commission practically free from control, but the management of a government railway would be infinitely more responsive to the demands of public opinion. That management can be got at, it can be got at here on the floor of parliament. That is why the Intercolonial Railway was expressly exempted from the Railway Act when it was first passed and why it has been exempted on the different occasions when the railway law has been revised or codified. There is no reason why the people should seek to control this road indirectly through a commission when they control it directly already.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say I have heard a great many complaints of the management of the Intercolonial Railway and the discriminations it charges on freight carried over it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will hear a great many complaints. We have had many complaints, for instance, because we could not furnish cars during the great pressure of business. But that is not the fault of the road, and it is not a difficulty which the commission could solve. In response to the complaints which have been made parliament has been asked to furnish money to provide more cars, so as to make up the deficiency as rapidly as possible. The Intercolonial in this respect, is much more responsive to public opinion than an ordinary railway would be.

Mr. SPROULE. The complaints I speak of have gone much further than that, I have heard it claimed that the Intercolonial Railway would carry one man's goods, even, for instance, one man's furniture, for little or nothing, while it would charge another man the full rate. I have heard that freely stated.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only say to the hon. gentleman : Do not believe these stories that are circulated; they are pure gossip—nothing in them. There is no railway in the country that is not more likely to be influenced in the direction of discrimination than a government railway. A government railway cannot discriminate, for the management knows that what it does for one man it must do for another. No management could exist that would countenance or tolerate discrimination in any way; it would be heaping up untold trouble for itself. There was never such a thing known. It may be that, by the action of the Governor in Council, in the case of a great fire, or as a means of helping the sufferers from some other calamity, certain freight might be carried cheaply or for nothing. But as for carrying one man's furniture for nothing while making others pay, under ordinary circumstances, nothing of the kind could occur; it is perfectly out of the bounds of possibility.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to rest in the conclusion that the hon. minister is as perfect in his dealings with the public as he seems to think he is and that nothing of the kind I have referred to could occur. But I have heard it very frequently stated that these discriminations have been granted. I am not prepared to say whether that is correct or not. However, I think that if the railway commission is to be of use, it might as well apply to the government railways as to others. I see no reason why it should not apply to government railways. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) says that we are only now establishing a railway commission, that the system will be perfected by amendments from time to time, and that, some time, we may include express companies under the jurisdiction of this commission. But we are told that the United States have included express companies under their railway commission, and to this, the hon. member for Selkirk replies that the United States have had a railway commission in operation for years. Well, surely we can learn by their experience. If they have brought express companies under the operation of the railway commission and are working out a successful system, it seems to me that we should take advantage of their experience rather than wait eight or ten years before we make this a part of our system. I do not see how we could hope for the best results in the operation of this law when, on the same train you have certain cars with goods the rates of freight on which are regulated by the commission and also other cars with goods for which the carrier can charge exorbitant rates or make rates which discriminate in favour of the person as against another. I do not see any reason why all the goods carried on a train should not be under the protection, so far as rates are concerned, of this commission. The hon. minister speaks of it being so difficult to bring the express companies within the operation of the Bill. I listened carefully to his explanation, but I did not hear any explanation of what this difficulty was. The hon. minister says it would be troublesome, but in what respect it would be troublesome he did not inform us.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think there ever has been a Bill introduced in this House which was received with more general commendation than the one now under consideration. There is hardly a board of trade or an association interested in trade matters that has not approved of this Bill. The idea of a railway commission has been for twenty-five years, to a greater or less extent, before parliament. Ever since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, there has been talk of introducing a railway commission Bill, but the idea has never come to maturity until now. The late government talked about a railway commission but they never actually introduced a Bill to establish it. The board of trade of Toronto sent a deputation to Ottawa which commended the Minister of Railways and Canals for the perfection of his Bill. It is true they suggested some amendment which they thought would improve the measure, but, if there was danger of the Bill not going through this session, they desired rather than that, to have no change made. It is probably right that a Bill of such importance as this should be criticised, but I rather think some of the criticism has gone a little too far. For my own part, I would like to see express companies brought under the operation of the Bill, and I have no doubt that, in time, this will be done. But as the Minister of Railways and Canals has pointed out, the Bill as it is covers them to a very large extent. And, if there is any danger that, in attempting to bring express companies under the operation of the Bill, the Bill itself would be made unworkable, we ought not to cumber the measure with such clauses. The hon. minister has intimated his wish that express companies should be placed under the control of this commission. But has pointed out that it would be better to do that by a separate Bill, which he purposes to introduce possibly this session, or, at all events next session. The hon. minister has given a great deal of care and attention to this Bill, and it is a Bill which ought to become law. It is supported, as I have said, by every public institution in the country. It is a Bill that has been petitioned for very widely and, as it stands it has been everywhere commended. Instead of our throwing obstructions in the way of the passage of the Bill we ought to help it along. Therefore, after the minister has given us the assurances we have heard, I think the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) should not pursue any further this hypercritical course in throwing out the little technical objections that he has been doing. One of the objections taken by the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is that this Bill does not provide for provincial railways. How can he make it apply to provincial railways ? How can he make it apply to the railway being built by the Ontario government ? Every possible railway that it can be applied to will come under its jurisdiction. Therefore, instead of that being a reason against the Bill, I think it is a reason in its favour.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not give that as a reason why it should not be passed. I am not opposing the Bill, I am in favour of it ; but I am endeavouring to point out its defects.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He pointed out that it would only apply, as he said, to a few railways at best—those were his words. Now, in point of fact there are only a few railways at best that it does not apply to. It does apply to 95 per cent of the railways in Canada; as to the other 5 per cent I understand the government have not power over them. I therefore think that the Bill should receive the support of the House. I believe it is a very good Bill, and the Minister of Railways deserves great compliments for bringing this measure before the House.

Mr. BARKER. On more than one occasion I have endeavoured to find out, and I have not yet found out, on what grounds the Minister of Railways and Canals proposes to keep the government railways out of the jurisdiction of this commission. I can quite understand that the minister would prefer to run the government railways himself. He no doubt has more confidence in the present Minister of Railways and Canals than he would have in any commission, whether appointed by his own government or not. But we want to know why it is that the government railways should not be put under the jurisdiction of this commission just as the Grand Trunk Railway or any other railway will come under it. The hon. gentleman knows that if there is one thing that is particularly desirable in connection with this Bill, it is that wherever possible there shall be uniformity of regulation, uniformity of tariff, of rates and of every detail in the management of railways. It is of the utmost importance that there should be no line of demarcation between the several railways of the country, that the commission should not be restricted in their power to control the rates over all the railways in the country. When the public want to know what the rates are to be from Woodstock or Windsor to Halifax or St. John, the commission should be able to tell them and not be obliged to turn around and say: For a thousand miles of this railway we have nothing to say, that is under the control of the hon. gentleman who happens for the moment to be Minister of Railways and Canals, and of his officers. Now we have, of course, the highest respect for the present Minister of Railways and Canals. He has managed this railway so well for several years past that perhaps he considers he can do it a great deal better than any newly appointed commission. But the hon. gentleman may be a commissioner himself; it has been so stated in the press, it is certainly a possibility; and therefore we may have him as one of these gentlemen who are going to compose this commission, and we may have a new minister without any experience whatever. Surely the public would be better satisfied to have this commission, appointed for a series of years, and composed of experienced men with all the railway interests of the country under their charge, rather than have some portion of the railway system under a minister for the time being who may not have had the slightest experience, and who may not possess our confidence in the same degree as the hon. minister who now occupies that position.

So far I have heard nothing from the minister on the subject except that he intends to omit government railways. Now surely, if the railways of this country are to be under a commission, and if it will be a benefit to the trading community that they shall be under this commission, we ought to know why it is that any portion of the railway mileage must be exempt. I would like to have that question answered. The hon. gentleman gave an answer a moment ago which he probably considered satisfactory. He said that in all the railway Acts that have been passed the government railways have been exempted. But what application has that to the present condition of things? The hon. gentleman knows that in the past the general Railway Acts have not applied to government railways, in all their details, at all events, for the simple reason that all the other railways were worked by officers appointed by independent companies. Therefore there were restrictions upon the management and their officers that do not necessarily apply to government railways. But that is being all changed. We are no longer going to have the matters to be dealt with by this commission left in the hands of the various railway companies and their officers, they are going to be controlled by this commission, and why should not a railway operated by the government and its officers be controlled in like manner? You are not proposing to interfere arbitrarily with the various railways, but you are proposing to interfere just so far as the public interest requires and to that extent the commission should have jurisdiction whether a railway is owned by a company or by government.

I may mention also that there are various things that will come under that commission as to which I am sure the public would feel safer in the hands of a commission than even in the hands of the hon. minister. I may recall to the minister that a short time ago there was a very serious accident upon the Intercolonial Railway, and there was an inquiry made into the accident. The minister, in referring to that in this House, spoke in the highest terms of commendation of the engine driver who was concerned in that accident, he gave a very high character to that man. Yet I understand that since then the investigation has shown that that man was not worthy of the commendation the minister gave him; it was shown, as I understand, that he was a drinking man, and he had been drinking before he went upon the train, and was not in a fit condition to run the train. Now, all that took place under the management of the government. I ask why a railway that is subject to such accidents should be exempted from the commission which is to have jurisdiction as to all other railways. There are many other things that should come under the control of this commission besides the operation of the road and the control of tariffs and rates. The hon. gentleman does not provide for counsel appearing on behalf of either party when the commission are investigating matters upon the Intercolonial. The hon. gentleman is to be a law unto himself in that respect. He assumes that the trading community are going to be content with all the minister and his officers may do. But I can assure him that the trading community will not be content, they will be just as anxious to know every detail of the rates on the Intercolonial Railway as they will be to know the rates of any other railway in this country. I think we are entitled to know, not what the hon. gentleman wishes, but why it is that these government railways should not be under the control and jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. KEMP. Has it ever been suggested to him, may I ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, to put the matter of tolls, leaving out everything else in connection with the management of the Intercolonial Railway, under the jurisdiction of the commission ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. KEMP. That has not received the attention of the hon. minister ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not been suggested.

Mr. KEMP. I may draw the attention of the hon. minister again to this matter of classification to which I have referred. Although it has not been authorized by the Governor in Council and although it is not supposed to be a legal classification, yet, I notice that the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway have consented to it with all the other railways, and that the name of one of the officers of the Intercolonial Railway is given as being one of the classification committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can understand how that occurred. A joint committee composed of representatives from all the different railway companies meet periodically. I would not say that they meet at stated periods, but frequently meetings are held to consider traffic questions arising between them. I presume in this case they had a meeting in the usual way, and that they had agreed amongst themselves as to what they would recommend. It would devolve upon the companies that were moving to have the matter presented to the department for submission to and approval of by the Governor in Council. I do not blame the traffic officers for the issue of that, because that would not properly be part of their duty. They only meet and agree upon what they think should be recommended. But, the department would not be committed in any way by any action of a traffic officer.

Mr. KEMP. I quite understand the position, but in effect, under the Railway Commission, the government railways in respect of tolls will be subjected to the commission inasmuch as their officers who meet with the officers of other railways agree to this in joint committee, so that, the tolls on the Intercolonial Railway would be in effect under the jurisdiction of the commission, would they not ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, that is only in reference to classification.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has only reference to classification. The rates are another thing.

Mr. KEMP. The same officers agree to the rates as agree to the classification.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The rates which govern on the Intercolonial Railway are not the same rates which govern on other railways.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The government have a member on the classification committee and from time to time there is an alteration in the classification. The classification is sent up to the department for approval. No doubt this has been sent to the department month after month and has been neglected by the department and therefore has not got the necessary assent by Order in Council to confirm it. Perhaps that has occurred under other regimes as well as the present one, and after all if the classification is in accordance with the freight rates which have been approved of by the Governor in Council, if it does not increase the rate upon any particular article, I do not think it requires the assent of the Governor in Council to it. If the classification has the effect of lessening the rate charged or leaving it at the same figure as before, I do not think it necessarily implies the assent of the Governor in Council to the new classification. The first think I did when I was minister was to inquire from the officers of the department if the new classification had the effect of increasing the rates or tolls which had been charged before, and if it did not have that effect, I do not think the officers went to the trouble of having an Order in Council passed to confirm the classification. I think the statute says that all rates and tolls have to be approved by the Governor in Council and that any new classification must be in accordance with the last classification approved of by the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The last classification was the eleventh that was promulgated by the railway company, and approved by the Governor in Council. I think it is necessary under the Act that each classification as it comes out, if it varies from the previous one, as of course it must, otherwise they would not issue a new one, must be approved. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) suggests that probably the companies might have sent this classification into the department and that it has been overlooked. I am informed that it has not been submitted to the department at all, and even if it had been submitted and overlooked that would not warrant them in issuing a new classification and taking action upon it. The law reads:

> The company in fixing or regulating the tolls to be demanded and taken for the transportation of goods, shall, except in respect to through traffic to or from the United States, adopt and conform to any uniform classification of freight which the Governor in Council on the report of the minister from time to time, prescribes.

Mr. KEMP. What clause is that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. 226. Some hon. gentlemen are complaining because they say I have not given them any sufficient explanation of why I pointed out that the inclusion of express companies by express terms could not be made in this Bill. I will try to repeat myself and make it clear if hon. gentlemen really desire information on the subject. I have said that the present Bill, I think, covers the subject quite fully now. It does not deal with all express companies. It only, by imputation, deals with the express companies which do their business upon railways. So far as the receipts of express companies are made up of railway charges and charges in respect to carriage upon railways, these charges are entirely within the control of the railway commission under this Bill. I am not prepared to say that the commission could not compel the carriage of these goods by the express company or by the railway company through the agency of the express companies who are using the trains to carry these goods at such a price as the railway commission might determine. The present Bill goes as far as we can properly go with respect to railways. The express company end of the thing is another matter. Possibly an express company might be justified in making some additional charge for removing goods from a warehouse or dwelling to a railway, or from the railway to their destination. Perhaps an express company might properly make some charge in respect to the oversight of goods in transit, but so far as the railway carriage is concerned, that is subject absolutely to the control of the railway commission under this Bill. I have seen the language of some of these clauses in the United States legislation, and I can understand how they deal with express companies. One cogent reason would be, that some of these Bills are Bills for the purpose of regulating tolls and charges which are imposed by common carriers. The definition of 'common carriers' is determined by a long series of judicial decisions, and under our law common carriers have not the same liabilities and are not the same people as common carriers in the United States. The relative rights and duties of common carriers are largely dependent upon the common law in this country and in the United States, and in the United Kingdom, modified to some extent by statute. We could not say that express companies in their express business shall be subject to the control of this Bill without setting up a machinery to provide for it. Express companies send by steamers as well as by railways and perhaps by horses and wagons, and if you are going to control their business it would be necessary to provide machinery for so doing. There is no common sense in putting in a clause saying that express companies shall be controlled in their rates by this railway commission when you have not any machinery prescribed, at all events for dealing with that portion of their business which is not carried by the railroad. If we limit or restrict the business of express companies which do their business by railroad, don't you think they would have reason to complain that we left a free hand to express companies who transacted business through other agencies.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If freight is carried partly by railroad and partly by water, don't you give the commission the power to apportion the rates to each.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but that does not touch the fringe of the question. As an illustration, the steamers between Montreal and Quebec do an express business, and so do the railways between these two points. You would have control over the one and not over the other, and if the express companies who did their business by railroad were to complain that they were restricted by legislation and that the water carriers were free, there would appear to be some reasonableness in that complaint. It appears to me that you can only properly deal with the control of express companies by independent legislation. If you insert it in this Bill, you will have to string all the way through the Bill provisions which will exempt certain clauses from application to them, and that would simply complicate the Bill and make it difficult of operation. I give my honest conviction to gentlemen opposite, whether they accept it or not, that this is a matter that can only be satisfactorily and properly dealt with by separate legislation. This Bill has reference to railways and all questions connected with railways that effect the public interest. It is not simply to control rates on railways, but its provisions govern the incorporation of companies, the construction of railways, the protection which is afforded to the public by railways, the operation of railways in all their various departments; and it would be a mistake to thrust a clause into it to say that the Bill shall apply to express companies without looking ahead to see what other alterations will have to be made and what additional machinery may be required. I have no objection at all on principle to the control of express companies. I think it would be a proper thing to have power to control express companies, but let us do it in the right way. If we do it, let us do it efficiently.

Mr. MACLEAN. Would the minister allow me to make this suggestion which would meet his objection:

This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways including the express business of such railways.

Mr. BARKER. That would not do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course I have had no opportunity of considering the bearing of that amendment, but this thought occurs to me; Why should you throw the express business out of the railways and into other hands, which would be the result of that amendment.

Mr. KEMP. I think that this matter of express companies could be dealt with in four lines without affecting the general scope of the Bill. The hon. minister seems to think it would be necessary to extensively change its wording. I am advised by a very eminent lawyer that the addition of the following few words would accomplish what we want in regard to express companies:

Section 2, subsection C. The expression 'company' means a railway company and express company and includes any person having authority to construct or operate a railway or express company.

Section 3, subsection 4. Sections 1 to 50 inclusive, and 251 to 280 inclusive, only shall apply to express companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know whether the eminent lawyer my hon. friend refers to has been asked to express an opinion whether or not the present Bill does not practically control all rates that are levied for railroad carriage of every kind and description. Has that question been asked by the hon. gentleman?

Mr. KEMP. I may state that it was Mr. Staunton, who waited on the hon. minister with some other gentlemen, who framed that proposed amendment. He informed me that it would cover the whole case. The hon. minister must believe that Mr. Staunton is very sincere in his desire to see this Bill become law, and he would not make that statement unless he was sure of his ground.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure that Mr. Staunton would not express that opinion unless he was assured in his own mind that he was right, and I am sure also that he is in sympathy with the Bill and desires it to become law. All the same, I am not prepared at this moment to express the opinion that express companies would not be as adequately covered by the Bill without that provision as with it, unless there were other provisions. There is no doubt whatever that other provisions would have to be incorporated to make this Bill, as a Bill, operative upon express companies, stronger than it is now; and, moreover, after you had done that, you would only have reached a portion of the express business and a portion of the express companies. It is a matter which I think this parliament ought seriously to consider, whether, when we are dealing with express companies, we ought not to deal with them as a whole. I cannot see what justification we can possibly have for dealing with them by instalments, or for dealing with a portion of their business, and not with the balance of it.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to deal with them as common carriers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We cannot, because we are not legislating on the subject of common carriers here.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean in any proposed Bill to deal with them as a whole.

Mr. MACLEAN. If the minister says this is a question worth consideration, I am willing to leave it for the present, especially if it is to be taken up in connection with the amendments suggested by Mr. Staunton, to provide for jurisdiction over the charges of express companies, which are, as a matter of fact, a subject of common complaint throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to let this section stand, if hon. gentlemen want to think more about it. But I would like those who wish to come to a direct conclusion on the subject to seek an opinion from those who may be expected to know, whether or not this Bill, as it is now framed, does not comprehensively cover the case of express companies, as respects the carriage of express merchandise on railways.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, yes, it does that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then you cannot make the Bill go any further by providing in specific terms that it shall apply to express companies, because you would have to include other provisions in order that the commission could deal with express companies in their business on other routes and conveyances than railways.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister's Bill may provide for the carriage of articles by express on railways, but that does not reach the question at all. Suppose an article is put in an express company's office twelve miles from a railway. It has to be carried to the railway station, and there should be an allowance for that and for warehousing as well as for the carriage on the railway. That principle is admitted in the Bill, because it gives to the commission power to apportion railway freights as distinct from lake and ocean freights. Otherwise the thing would be useless in the case of an article shipped partly by lake or ocean and partly by rail. In the same way you would have to give to the commissioners power to apportion so much for the carriage to the station and for the warehousing as well as for carriage by rail.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would need to have provisions inserted for determining that, and you would then be dealing only with a certain portion of the business of express companies.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Do I understand the minister to argue that under the Bill as it is now the commission would have authority and power to regulate the express rates so far as the goods were carried on a railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, certainly.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). If that is the case, it covers 99 per cent of the goods shipped by express, because only a very small fraction of the goods so shipped are not shipped entirely on railways ; and the argument that express companies ought to be exempt from the operations of the Act because you could not cover their entire operations, is in exact contradiction to the argument that this Act is a good Act with regard to railways although it does not cover government railways, and some other lines of railway. If the Bill is a good one with respect to the operations of railways, although it does not cover them all, it seems to me it would be an excellent Act if it covered the operations of express companies on railways alone, because 99 per cent of the goods are carried on railways, not on water or by wagon.

Mr. KEMP. The suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways is a fair one. He proposes to let clause 3 stand in order to see whether the proposition I have made can be adopted. It was not clear to Mr. Staunton that the wording of the Act covered express freights on railways.

Mr. LANCASTER. What part of the Act is it which the hon. minister thinks covers the express business ? I do not find anything in the interpretation clause to lead to that conclusion. The word 'company' is interpreted to a railway company and to include any person having authority to construct or operate a railway. By no stretch of the imagination can we say that that includes express companies. Nor can it come under the interpretation of the word 'railway.' It would be well if the hon. minister would point out what particular part of the Act he relies on for his opinion that express companies are included.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that I need particularize any one or more sections of the Bill. Take the sections between 251 and 280. This Bill gives to a railway commission power to say what shall be the tolls exacted by railways on every article of traffic. That is pretty comprehensive to start with. The commission need not wait for the railway company to say how much it wants to charge but may arbitrarily fix what the toll shall be. We do not discriminate between goods carried by an express company and those which are not. Every article carried on a railway must get, in respect of the tolls levied, the approval of the commission.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. minister has given in his Bill a special definition to the word 'railway' and the definition will exclude express companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. An argument of that kind would result in this. All that a railway company would have to do in order to shirk its responsibility and escape the control of the commission would be, instead of carrying its goods itself, to carry them in the name of an outside corporation—call it an express company or agency company or anything you like.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is why we want express companies included.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the particular advantage of indicating any one company by name any more than any other ? When you say that this Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, other than government railways, what more do you want ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman ought to readjust his interpretation clause. He is giving a limited definition to those words 'persons, companies and railways.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will find no limitation.

Mr. BARKER. The word 'railway,' in the interpretation clause, means any railway which the company has authority to construct or operate, and that word 'company' means a company operating a railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the third clause, this Act applies to all persons, companies and railways other than government railways. Of course that means all companies operating railways, and when it means that, it means as well all companies doing business on railways and getting benefit out of the carriage of goods on railways.

Mr. BARKER. It would not mean a company carrying on a book-selling business on a railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there are no freight rates in that business.

Mr. BARKER. By your definition of the word 'companies,' it includes any person having authority to construct or operate a railway. Express companies do not operate railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not affect the case. The Bill applies to all persons, companies and railways. If you can suggest anybody who is not comprised in one or the other of these, there might be some reason for changing the Bill.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Will it cover telephone companies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not anything necessarily to do with railways.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). This Act applies to all persons.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that have to do with railways, that are operating, owning or carrying goods on railways.

Mr. LANCASTER. It does not say anything about carrying companies. It says 'any person having authority to construct or to operate a railway.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the definition of the word 'company.' The Bill, in its provisions, does apply to all persons, companies and railways.

Mr. BARKER. Section 278 rather implies that express companies have a different meaning. It says : 'Every company'—that would mean a railway company—'which grants any facilities for the carriage of goods by express to any incorporated express company or person, shall grant equal facilities on equal terms and conditions, to any other incorporated express company which demands the same.' That rather implies that the general scope of the Act does not cover express companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not necessarily. This provision is included in order that there may be no advantage given to any express company over another. If you will take the clauses with regard to traffic and tolls and all that, you will gather this clearly from them, that no traffic can be carried on railways nor can any tolls or charges be imposed in respect of the carriage of such traffic, until the Railway Commission has said what these tolls shall be. Now, if the railway company itself cannot do that, it cannot by any contract that it may make or any authority it may delegate to anybody else, authorize some other person to do it. Any person or company who may, by the authority and permission of the railway company, have any special privileges in respect of the carriage of traffic over that railway can only exercise that special privilege subject to the control of the railway company. Otherwise all that would be necessary would be for the railway to hand its freight business over to another company and it would thereby avoid all control. That, I think, should be thoroughly understood, and it is so clear that it ought to be accepted. If the law does not mean that it is not worth the paper it is printed on even to control business carried on railways outside of that managed by the express companies.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. minister means what he says, why not amend clause c, of the interpretation clause, so as to cover distinctly what he says ?

Mr. GERMAN. I do not think that any amendment is needed at all. If hon. gentlemen will look further on in the Act, they will see the word 'companies'——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amendment would be needed if you want to control the express business outside of railways.

Mr. GERMAN. Quite so. Clause c, of the Interpretation Act says that the expression 'company' means a railway company. If hon. gentlemen will look through the Act they will find the word 'company' here and there throughout the whole length of it. But clause 3 says :

This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways.

—and so on. That word 'companies' there has no reference to the Interpretation clause of the Act——

Mr. LANCASTER. Surely.

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly it has not, and I think I can give my hon. friend very ample authority for my position. This is the word 'companies' which is not interpreted by the interpretation clause, but the word that is interpreted is 'company' and that occurs throughout the length and breadth of the Act, and is interpreted to mean a railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And it has a capital 'C.'

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly. The word 'company' in the third clause has not the restricted meaning given in the interpretation clause, but has the same meaning as it would have in any other Act passed by this parliament. So when we say 'all persons, companies and railways' we mean exactly what we say, that all these are subject to the Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) mean that the interpretation clause applies only to the singular of the word 'company' and not to the plural? That is what his argument means.

Mr. GERMAN. Certainly, that is exactly what I mean. Here you have the interpretation of a word, the word 'company' and that word is carried throughout the whole Act, and is interpreted to mean a railway company. I venture to say the word 'companies' is also used here and there throughout the Act, and that where it does not come within the meaning of the Railway Act it is a general term which covers all companies and is not intended to be restricted by the interpretation clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does not the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) know —I am sure he does, but he has not profited by the knowledge—that in the general Interpretation Act governing all statutes the very word 'person' means company as well as individual?

Mr. LANCASTER. I know that very well. But the hon. minister is not content with the general Interpretation Act, but proposes special interpretation clauses for his own Act, which he is asking us to approve. If he is not satisfied with the general Interpretation Act, we suppose that he regards these interpretations that he proposes as having special significance. In reply to what the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) says, I know very well the difference in the interpretation which he speaks of, but this Act expressly states what a railway shall mean and what the word 'company' shall mean. But I do not agree with him when he says that the word 'company' has a different significance in the singular from what it has in the plural.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) read the Bill?

Mr. LANCASTER. I have read it all through three or four times.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND Canals. Is the hon. gentleman of opinion that, if this Bill becomes law, any railway company in Canada can carry goods or allow goods to be carried on its line without first having arranged for tolls and tariffs approved or authorized by the railway commission?

Mr. LANCASTER. Not quite in the way the hon. minister puts it. But I want to point out that, in my humble opinion, the way to provide for what he desires is not by giving a special interpretation to the word 'company.' If he wants to make his Bill apply to the carrying of all traffic on railways, the natural, simple and efficacious way is to say that it shall apply to express companies that are carrying goods on railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) seriously tell this House that a railway company, if this Bill were in force, could not carry goods at rates fixed without the authority of the commission, but that it could authorize an agent to do so?

Mr. LANCASTER. No; but one way of reaching the point may be much more cumbersome than another. And if you wish to make the Act apply easily, quickly and cheaply, as it is in the interest of the country that it should do, to traffic carried on railways, the Act should be simple and direct, and should leave no question that the express companies, if they do carry freight, carry it as the agents of the railway company. We all seem to agree as to what should happen, but we disagree as to the way of getting at it. I submit to the hon. minister that he should put it beyond doubt by saying that express companies shall be in the same position as the railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it would be creditable legislation to us to attempt to remove doubts that do not exist. If the hon. gentleman admits that a railway company cannot carry goods over its line without being subject to the provisions of this law, he has not a leg to stand on, so far as the charges on express business carried on railways are concerned. And that is all we propose to deal with under this Bill. The hon. gentleman says it would be better and simpler to deal with the express companies as agents of the railway companies. I contend that it is simpler and better to deal with one company, the railway company, than to deal with a company and also with its agent. The railway company is responsible, under severe penalties under this clause, for any departure from the rates fixed by the commission. You do not want to deal with anybody else but the railway company. So far as it is necessary and proper to control the express companies in connection with the railways, they are controlled by this Bill. When you speak of general control of express companies you have not got it here, and you cannot put it here without embarrassing the Bill and imparing its value by introducing what is really an outside element, something that had better be dealt with in a separate and distinct measure.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would just like to put a case to the hon. minister. Suppose that goods to be carried in charge of an express company start on a railway in my county. The railway I refer to is not one of the railways included under this Act, it is not within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. It is an electric railway which carries fruit, and runs from the county of Lincoln——

Mr. GERMAN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him ? When he speaks of the Niagara Central, that is under the control of the Dominion parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not talking about the Niagara Central, I am talking about an Ontario electric railway. I said a railway not included in this Act. I refer to the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway, and that road never had any connection whatever with the Niagara Central, which is now the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto railway, running from Port Dalhousie to Niagara Falls. But the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway starts at the village of Beamsville and runs through a fruit growing belt to the city of Hamilton. That is an electric railway only incorporated under an Ontario Act, and is in no sense covered by this clause three. Now, the question I want to put to the minister is this : Suppose some constituent of mine ships his fruit on that electric railway to be carried to Ottawa. It is to be carried by the Dominion Express Company that starts on the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway and is then transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is a railway within the provisions of this Act ? Now, what does the minister say about that express business ? Where the traffic in the goods originates on a railway not under the operation of this Act if this transfer occurs on their journey, whether the commissioners that look after this traffic are to do anything to help the shipper, because they must look after the goods on their whole journey from beginning to end. Now, would not the minister do better to say that this express business should be dealt with under this Act, that this Act should apply to any express company that carries goods on either an electric or a steam railway and whether such railway is or is not one of the railways covered by this Act ? Because in the case of fruit growers I have mentioned they do not ship their goods on a railway which is within the authority of this Act, their goods go twenty or twenty-five miles before they reach a railway that is within the authority of this Act. I think that class of cases ought to be provided for, and would be covered by the amendment such as I have suggested.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not wish to do the hon. gentleman any discourtesy, but I would recommend him to read the Bill, because when he reads the Bill he will find that the case he refers to is entirely covered by section five. There the hon. gentleman will find that the moment a through shipment is made and it is transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, then the rate must be a through rate and will be controlled by the commission. But I am ready to consider the suggestion that has been made. In any case, I would now move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ERIE-ONTARIO POWER COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Erie, Ontario Power Company.—Mr. German.

On section 11,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 11 has been amended to read as follows :

11. The directors may issue as paid-up stock, shares of the capital stock of the company in payment for all or any of the businesses, franchises, undertakings, rights, powers, privileges, and properties which the company may lawfully acquire by this Act or by law, and may, for such considerations, allot and hand over such shares to any person or corporation, including its shareholders or its directors, and any such issue or allotment of stock shall be binding upon the company and such stock shall not be assessable for calls nor shall the holder thereof be liable in any way thereon ; or the company may pay for the same wholly or partly in paid-up shares or wholly or partly in debentures, as may be agreed upon ; provided that any allotment and issue of stock under authority of this section shall be approved by the holders of at least two-thirds in value of the stock of the company, previously issued and held at the date of such issue and allotment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to ask any hon. gentleman who was in the committee whether or not he has examined similar provisions made in previous Bills in reference to the handing out of stock of this kind in payment. It does not seem to me that the clause safeguards the enterprise at all because the shareholders might hand over the stock for a mere nominal consideration. They might pass it over for a song and if the stockholders are all interested in one way, that is, in getting a distribution of stock among themselves, there is nothing to prevent it being done under that clause as it stands. I do not think it has been well considered.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is the usual clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure it is not the usual clause because there is no provision to safeguard the transaction, except the consent of two-thirds of the other stockholders shall be had. Is it desirable or not that we should confer the power upon any company that we incorporate here to hand over its stock for nothing if it chooses? If two-thirds of the stockholders are prepared to give the stock out without any valuable consideration being received in return upon any terms which they choose, it is a question whether this is a desirable clause to incorporate in the Bill or not. That is my proposition and if it has been well considered perhaps there will be some hon. member of the committee who has had the matter in charge or was present when the discussion took place who could throw some light upon it.

Mr. GERMAN. That clause was not originally in this Bill, but when it came before the Private Bills Committee the acting chairman at that time, one of the hon. members for Ottawa, proposed that the original clause should be struck out and that this clause be inserted, being exactly in line with a clause in a Bill which the Private Bills Committee had passed the day before. I do not see very much difference between this clause and the one that had been originally in, but I was quite willing to accept it and the committee passed it. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence, (Mr. Bickerdike) had a Bill with this same clause in it which had passed the Private Bills Committee. When it was considered by the Private Bills Committee it was thought that this clause should be adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there is much difference between the two clauses. I think there should be something in this clause which will require the transaction to be a bona fide transaction, not a mere nominal transaction, but a bona fide one in which bona fide value is being given for the stock. That is not secured by this present Bill. I do not think the new clause is any better than its predecessor. They are both open to the same exception.

Mr. GERMAN. So far as the promoters of the Bill are concerned they are not objecting at all to any reasonable amendment that the hon. minister, or any one else, desires to put in to ensure that it shall be a bona fide transaction. The gentlemen who are asking for incorporation are going into it in a bona fide way and they are willing to have any restrictions placed around them that are reasonable and that other companies are bound to submit to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no such clause in the General Company's Act and no such clause would be admitted in the General Company's Act, I am quite sure.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. GERMAN. What would you suggest?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not prepared at the moment to frame a clause. There will no doubt arise circumstances under which stock might be handed over for property which was being acquired in a bona fide way for the interests of the company. If any person wanted to put through a transaction which was not a bona fide transaction, but simply a cover to the getting possession of the stock, with a properly framed clause, the stock might be taken away from them and proceedings might be taken which would invalidate the transaction, but they could not be under this clause as it stands.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that it is doubly dangerous for this reason: In clause four the capital stock which the company may issue is placed at $5,000,000. They can divide that as they see fit so long as shareholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock agree. Then they can issue bonds to the extent of $5,000,000 and deal with them afterwards. With the provisions in clauses 4, 11 and 13 it seems to me to be susceptible of a good deal of stock jobbery if they were disposed to go into it.

Mr. GERMAN. This Bill was drawn in an exactly similar way to the Bill incorporating the Hamilton and Lake Erie Power Company, which was obtained from this parliament in 1895. The clause originally drafted was taken verbatim from the act to incorporate the Hamilton and Lake Erie Power Company. I had supposed in drafting the Bill that what had been done on a former occasion by this parliament would be done again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You might reasonably do so.

Mr. GERMAN. One might reasonably suppose that. The company does not desire anything more than what is fair, and they intend to go into the project in a bona fide way if they go into it at all. Engineers have already looked over the ground and it is supposed to be a feasible and profitable proposition, and having taken this clause verbatim from a Bill which has already passed parliament, I cannot see why there should be objection to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps we should have a model clause.

Mr. FRASER. I think there should be a clause common to all Bills, but if some such words as 'bona fide' are inserted here, I do not see what objection there can be to the wording of the clause as it stands at present. If any party is willing to take stock in payment, then when two-thirds of the shareholders say that it is a good bargain rather than to give cash, I do not see what harm there is in it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose they should be all in a ring.

Mr. FRASER. Then they would have to be in league with the parties who are giving them the franchise. It often happens that a corporation can make a better bargain with parties who are willing to take stock than if they have to go on the market and get cash. If you wish, let there be some safeguarding words in this section which will apply to similar Bills through all time.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If you strike out the words in the clause 'may make and' and leave it that the directors 'may issue as paid up and non assessable shares' I think it would meet all objections. The moment the stock is paid up, is it material to any one what they do with it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) apprehends the full extent of my objection. Even if these words be struck out it would still be possible for the company to issue as paid up and assessable stock any amount they please without getting anything in return.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I want to guard against that.

Mr. BELCOURT. As a member of the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills I am glad that this question has come up. Bills of this kind invariably contain a similar clause and on every occasion there is considerable discussion in the committee. The clause now before the House is the clause as amended by the committee, and we adopted it on the ground that it has been inserted in many Bills already and is looked upon as a model clause. If the House in committee should now rule as to what is a proper clause for such Bills it would save a great deal of the time of the committee and act as a guide. I cannot say that I have much objection to the clause as it stands. As the member for Guysborough has said, it is sometimes advantageous for the company to purchase real estate or other things by means of stock, and if there is any way in which the clause may be limited so as to overcome the possibility of fraud might be well to insert that limitation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman prefers, I am willing to have a clause drafted and submit it for consideration.

Mr. GERMAN. Surely there can be no objection to the company issuing stock as paid up stock for the construction of buildings, the purchasing of franchises or of any property as contemplated by this section. I infer from what the minister says that this is legitimate so long as the transaction is a bona fide one, and that if they are getting value they can pay for it in stock or in money. If people enter into a project with the intention of committing fraud it is very hard to prevent them from doing so by legislation, and if any clause can be devised whereby you can prevent persons from being guilty of fraud who desire to commit fraud, I would like to see it, because I have never seen it yet. What is there wrong about issuing paid up shares in a company as consideration for a contract for the construction say of a race-way that would cost $1,000,000? Why should not the contractors be allowed to take stock in the company just as well as forcing the company to raise the money to pay the contractors ? So long as you accede to the principle that the company may in a bona fide way issue stock as a consideration for payment of a contract or any franchises or privileges, I do not see how you can prevent them doing wrong if they want to do it. I doubt very much if it could be done. I am quite willing that the Bill should stand over, and if the minister can devise a clause that will meet the case, I should be satisfied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not wish it to be inferred that I took the position that a power of this kind might not be very properly and honestly exercised ; but what I did say was that this clause as it stands is peculiarly liable to abuse. The only condition attached to it is that two-thirds of the stockholders shall be consenting parties to the transaction. That is no protection at all. What I thought, and still think, would be an ingredient that would greatly militate against the use of this section in a fraudulent way, would be to include in it such terms as would practically make the transaction void if it were not in compliance with the terms of the section. If the parties to the transaction knew that it was liable to be attacked in the courts and set aside on that ground, I think they would hesitate.

Mr. MONK. Would not the non-compliance of the transaction with the provisions of the clause not render it void ipso facto ? Does the minister mean that if all the formalities of the clause were not complied with, the transaction would be void ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not thought about the proper wording of the clause ; but there is nothing in it as it stands that could not be complied with, and yet the thing might be the most fraudulent transaction in the world.

SUPPLY—THE PREFERENTIAL TARIFF.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sidney Fisher) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

M. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs if he will lay on the Table of the House a copy of the amendments made by the officers of his department to the certificate of origin of British goods allowed to enter into Canada under the preferential tariff.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I shall have pleasure in doing that. I think it will be amended in the direction that I explained the other day. Does the hon. gentleman want the certificate enforced to-day ?

Mr. CLARKE. I refer to the amendments made to the certificate of origin rendered necessary by the surtax on German goods. May I ask the hon. minister when he will lay the amended certificate on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I announced to the House the other day that we had to extend the time somewhat. I have to obtain the sanction of Council to that. I have not yet obtained it, but as soon as it is obtained, I will lay the amended certificate on the Table.

Mr. CLARKE. I have not quite made myself clear. A certificate of origin of British goods imported into Canada under the preferential tariff was required to be filed. That will have to be amended in accordance with the resolution adopted by the House respecting the surtax on German goods. I understand from a recent number of the 'London Times' that such an amended certificate has been prepared under the officers of the Customs Department and it is a copy of that amended certificate which I ask the hon. Minister to lay on the Table. May I ask him when he will do so ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I can lay that on the Table immediately; but, as I have explained, we are extending the time from the 30th of June to the 30th of September, and the certificate pursuant to that change has not yet been printed; but I can lay the original one on the Table.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Militia—pay and allowances, $391,405.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Before the item passes, I would like to ask the minister if he proposes to make his general statement now.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I do not propose to make a general statement as to the condition of the militia, or as to any changes that may be proposed until the supplementary estimates for 1903 are brought down.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I presume that if we go on with the estimates to-night, the hon. gentleman will consent to let one item stand.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Before we go any further, I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to one matter and ask for some information upon it. I allude to a late official of the department, Mr. Martineau. I would like to know when he was appointed and how appointed, and whether he gave any security to the department at the time he was appointed. I understand that he was appointed in a financial capacity. I would like a short statement in regard to him.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I scarcely expected to be asked to make that explanation to-night. The hon. gentleman is aware, I think, that a commission was appointed to inquire into that case, and into the condition of financial matters in the different departments. I think that commission has completed its labours, and it would perhaps be more convenient for me to make a statement on the subject when its report is brought down. However, if one item is left, I shall be very glad to make a statement at a later date. I have not the papers with me to enable me to give the correct details of the matter now. If the hon. gentleman will kindly accept that explanation and let the matter remain until a later period, I think it will be more convenient and satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I have no objection. I was not aware officially, though I saw in the newspapers, that a committee had been appointed.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is really a commission.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Then I would ask the minister to give us information of the commission, who was appointed, and whether he can give us an assurance that its report will be down before we take up the supplementary estimates.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to give that assurance, because it is a matter which my colleague the Minister of Finance has directly under his control. He suggested the commission, and I think he made a statement to the House early in the session with regard to it. But I will promise the hon. gentleman to speak to the Minister of Finance and endeavour to have the report brought forward as soon as possible. But in any case I shall be prepared to answer questions in reference to this matter on the next occasion when the militia estimates are brought up.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I would only, then, wish to say this much further. The hon. minister can hardly expect us to pass the estimates for his department until the report of that commission has been brought down. If it is not down, I hope that the hon. gentleman will not consider that we are unduly pressing the matter if we object to allow the estimates to go through without that information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Do I understand that my hon. friend objects to our going on at all now?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Not now, but at a later stage we might not feel inclined to allow the estimates to go through unless we have the information.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That commission is looking into all the departments.

Mr. MONK. It is to be regretted that we should not have had the Bill, notice of which was given on the 3rd of April, before taking up these estimates. I recognize that the hon. Minister of Militia is entitled to some indulgence, but this year we have reason to expect considerable changes in the militia organization. The committee will remember that during the colonial conference in London, engagements were entered into by our representatives at that conference, and we are entitled to know how far the government intend adhering to those engagements, and what changes are contemplated. Under the circumstances, it is to be regretted that we have not had from the Minister of Militia some outline of all the changes he contemplates. We have estimates to the extent of over a million and a half dollars, and it would be more satisfactory if we knew in a general way, before voting those estimates, what new schemes the government may have in view. Another matter to which I wish to refer is this: I would like to know if the militia who were called out during the strike in Valleyfield, a considerable time ago, have been paid by the government or not? On the 11th of this month some questions were put regarding this matter, which will be found on page 2759 of 'Hansard.' Among those questions, which were put by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin), were these:

Were the militia ordered out at Valleyfield at the time of the strike? If so, what was the cost of the troops? By whom was the said cost paid? Has the town of Valleyfield paid the costs?

In the absence of the hon. Minister of Militia, the Postmaster General replied:

The mayor of Valleyfield made a requisition for the services of the militia on October 25th at the request of the company, and two companies of infantry arrived in Valleyfield from Montreal that night.

And in reply to the other questions, the Postmaster General said:

The Department of Labour has no information on the subjects referred to in these questions.

The questions were not put to the Department of Labour nor to the Minister of Labour, nor to the Postmaster General, but were put generally to the government, and I think that the answer given was neither fair nor sincere, because, from the information I have gathered, the troops on that occasion—just before the elections of 1900—were paid by the government, and no claim has since been enforced against the town of Valleyfield for reimbursement. If such be the case, I submit that the answer given was neither sincere nor true. There is another matter to which I wish to refer. Recently at Montreal the troops were called out, not to protect any private industry as in the case of the Valleyfield riot, but to protect the shipping interests of the country. I am informed that the militia have not yet been paid. Some of the officers are even out of pocket. It is only just that these troops should be paid at once, and that the cost should fall, not on the city of Montreal, but on this government, if there is any strength in the Valleyfield precedent. In Valleyfield the troubles were between the men employed in the mill of the company and the company itself, whereas, in Montreal the troubles were of a far more public character. Troops were called out to protect the harbour, which is to a large extent under the jurisdiction of this government, and I think that, under the circumstances, the cost should not be saddled on the city of Montreal, but should be paid by the government. These are questions to which we are entitled to an answer. We are entitled to know whether the reply given by the hon. Postmaster General on the 11th of May is correct or not, whether the government have definitely assumed the cost of calling out the troops at Valleyfield, and what is the intention of the government with regard to the cost incurred at Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not think the hon. gentleman has any right to charge insincerity in the answer given. It so happened that I was not in the city the day that question was put, and until this moment, my attention has not been called to the nature of the answer given. I gave instructions that the question should be answered and the answer sent to the Prime Minister, but possibly through some inadvertence that was not done. There is not the slightest objection to answering the question. The government paid the men, of course. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look at the law governing the case, he will see that it provides that when two magistrates or the mayor of the city make a requisition on the senior officer to call out the troops, in case of riot, the expense is paid by the city or the municipality interested, but where, for any reason, the pay is not immediately forthcoming, the Act authorizes the government to pay the men, and the officer in command, upon whom the requisition was made, then proceeds to sue the municipality for the amount. That is the law. In the case of the town of Valleyfield, the men were paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, and I understand that the commanding officer is taking the necessary steps for the return of the money. I do not know. That is beyond my control ; I have nothing to do with it. So far as the city of Montreal is concerned, the law, of course, is precisely the same as I have just quoted. There is not a question whether it is shipping or a government building or anything else that is to be protected ; it is simply a question of the violation of the peace. That having taken place and a riot threatening, the Act enables the chief magistrate of a municipality to call upon the militia to protect the citizens. That was done in the city of Montreal. If the men have not been paid they will be paid under the authority contained in the Act which I have quoted. I was informed on Saturday morning by my deputy that the accounts had not yet been forwarded to him, but that he had made inquiry into the matter, and, so soon as the accounts were forwarded to him they would be paid under the authority I have mentioned, if, in the meantime, the city had not chosen to pay them ; and then, of course, the same proceeding I have mentioned in the former case, the usual proceedings, would be taken—the officer in command of the troops would sue to recover the amount of money paid.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand the hon. minister (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) to say that no claim has been received from the military authorities in Montreal for the pay of the militia ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said that up to Saturday last no accounts, no claim of any kind, had been received here at headquarters.

Mr. MONK. There is one thing that is certain now, and that is that during the difficulties that occurred in Valleyfield in 1900, in the early part of the fall of that year, the troops were paid by the government. We have that now as a certainty. And I may tell my hon. friend (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) that, like many other members of the committee, I was quite aware of the provisions of the law to which he has referred. But my hon. friend slid very rapidly over those provisions of the law which require the government to make demands afterwards on the municipality that has caused the calling out of the militia. My hon. friend is familiar no doubt with that part of the law also. But, since 1900, there has been an election in Valleyfield. During the campaign that preceded that election, one of the topics discussed was the question as to whether the government would or would not insist upon the payment by the town of Valleyfield of the cost of calling out the troops, which amounted, if I mistake not, to between $5,000 and $8,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A little over $4,000, I believe.

Mr. MONK. That question was very much discussed. And I am informed that assurance was given during the heat and fever of the election—assurance of the most positive character—that there would be no exaction of the payment of this indemnity from the town of Valleyfield. Is that correct ? Is there anything in the department which warrants me in making that statement ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No ; there never was any assurance given by the department.

Mr. MONK. Was there any correspondence ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. MONK. Was any assurance given by any member of the government that this claim would not be pressed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not aware of it. Of course, I am only speaking for the Militia Department.

Mr. MONK. I see the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) knows something about the question.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Nothing ; but I am keen to be enlightened.

Mr. MONK. I did not see the hon. Minister of Justice in the municipality at that time, but he has a very long arm, and he may have reached some knowledge of the matter.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have nothing to say.

Mr. MONK. There were other ministers there. The assurance that I speak of, that the government would exact nothing from the town, had great effect. And, as a matter of fact, since 1900 no demand has been made upon the town for this amount. I am not mistaken there. There has been no demand on the department by the town of Valleyfield for this amount ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I presume there has been the usual demand.

Mr. MONK. Has there been any ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe there has. I cannot speak more positively than that. The commanding officer, of course, must——

Mr. MONK. The hon. minister will undoubtedly be able to find out if there has been such a demand.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman says that he has carefully studied the law. He knows, then, that it is the commanding officer that brings the action.

Mr. MONK. Who instructs him ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He does not require any instruction ; he is obliged to bring action under the law.

Mr. MONK. But these officers are under the control of the department; and it should not surprise the committee if, under the circumstances of this case of the town of Valleyfield, I should claim that it is the duty of the government to see to it that these soldiers who served in Montreal are paid without delay, and also that a different rule should not be applied to the city of Montreal from that which has been applied to the town of Valleyfield. The mere fact that there happened to be a by-election in one place and not in the other should not make a difference in the application of the law. I do not ask that Valleyfield should be obliged to contribute to the pay of the militia, but I do find it unjust that the city of Montreal, which contributes more to the revenue of this country than does the town of Valleyfield, should be subjected to a different rule from that which was applied in this other case.

Mr. CLARKE. I wish to enter a protest at this stage about this matter. If the militia were called out in Valleyfield to suppress a riot and the government paid the cost of the maintenance of those soldiers while on duty, the same rule should apply to the city of Toronto. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is quite right in demanding that no exceptional treatment should be given any municipality. Some time last summer, I think it was, the militia were called to do duty in the city of Toronto owing to an anticipated riot because of a street car strike, and the city of Toronto was called upon to pay the necessary expenses in connection with the presence of those troops there. Now, this unfortunate trouble in Valleyfield took place about three years ago. I presume that the men were paid immediately after their service. Surely some officer of the department instructed the commanding officer to proceed to collect this money. Or, are we simply bandying words about this business ? It is time that we should know whether one rule is to be applied to Valleyfield because a by-election was coming on, while another rule must apply to other municipalities. If the law is that the municipality is to pay for the troops, that law should be enforced.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will see that there is no way by which the commanding officer can force a municipality to immediately hand over the money if the municipality does not see fit to do so. In the case of Toronto, evidently the city authorities felt that they were bound to pay and they did pay. That has happened in a great many other cases, in the city of London, for instance. The town of Valleyfield —and the same has happened in other cases —there was hesitation and delay about paying. Of course, the men had to be paid, and, under the authority given in the Act, the government advanced the money.

Mr. CLARKE. But three years have elapsed since the money was paid, and surely some steps should be taken, if it is the duty of the municipality to pay.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Here is what the law says. In the event of the money being advanced by the government out of the consolidated revenue fund, then the commanding officer shall at once, in his own name, proceed against the municipality for the recovery of such sum.

Mr. CLARKE. Then is the officer commanding the troops who were called out still in command ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not quite sure whether Colonel Gorden, who is the officer commanding at Montreal now, was in Montreal at that time. I think he was in South Africa, and that Colonel Roy was commanding at that time. But I will get a statement upon this point, and bring down the exact condition of affairs, when the estimates next come up.

Mr. CLARKE. Will instructions be issued that this money shall be collected ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My impression is that steps have already been taken to collect it.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I am not satisfied with the answer of the minister. I do not find fault because the government paid the money, it is a proper thing for the government to pay in the meantime if the municipality does not. But now nearly three years have gone by, and we are voting the estimates to-day, and the minister does not know. I do not accept his statement that it was none of his business. It is not only his business, but it is his duty as head of the Militia Department who are out this money, to take steps to collect it. I go further, and I say that we have no right to remit the money, and if any such steps were taken at the time as have been spoken of, they were taken beyond the authority of the law. The government could not pay this by Order in Council. Therefore, I do not accept the minister's statement that it is not his duty to know. Is it to be understood that when a municipality refuses to pay, the government is to assume the debt ? Supposing Toronto had declined to pay, suppose Montreal should decline to pay now, the government should promptly see that the proper steps are taken to collect the money. It is not the duty of the commanding officer, because he is immediately under the control of the Department of Militia and Defence, he is only acting as the trustee of the government, or of the department. Therefore, when these estimates come up we have a constitutional right to insist upon this explanation. I was surprised at the trivial answer of the Postmaster General, or the Minister of Labour. Everybody knew that he had no business to answer, it was not his place to do so. It was his place to say, the Minister of Militia and Defence is not here to-day, let the matter stand, and it would have stood as a matter of course. Then if the Postmaster General, or the Minister of Labour, had not interfered to give that answer, the Minister of Militia and Defence would have given us the information and we would not have been compelled to ask the government for it on another occasion. I say the language of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is none too strong in characterizing that answer as unsatisfactory and trivial. Look at the result. If he had communicated with the Minister of Militia and Defence and informed him of what had happened, the Minister of Militia and Defence would have inquired and this discussion to-night would have been avoided. Now, I must say that since I have been in opposition I have not engaged in any obstruction; but I want my hon. friend to understand that I propose to be severe in my criticisms when necessity calls for it, and when the government endeavour to trifle with us I wont stand it. So far as I am concerned, if the minister will give us this information it will be satisfactory, but I do not accept his explanation that it was not his fault that the answer was given in that way.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I certainly will do as I promised, and bring down a statement with regard to this matter.

Mr. CLARKE. Will he bring down a statement as to whether his department or the Justice Department, or the Labour Department, has instructed the proper officials to proceed against the municipality to collect this money ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was no need of any instructions under the law.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister bring down a memorandum explaining exactly how the matter stands, so that we may know what steps this House may take, if necessary, to have that money collected ?

Mr. MACLEAN. The money of the country is controlled by the Minister of Finance, and the moment the Minister of Finance consents to an extraordinary expenditure of this kind, he debits somebody with that amount of money and he never rests until he gets that money back. He calls on the Department of Militia and Defence at least once a week to know whether they have recovered that money. If the business of the department is conducted in this careless fashion, what will be the result whenever there is a disturbance in any town ? Immediately the troops will be requisitioned to keep the peace, and immediately that municipality will repudiate its obligation and oblige the government to pay the troops. That will be a serious condition of affairs. I say the law is a good law, and ought to be administered and carried out in a way to compel these municipalities to pay their just debts. The Minister of Militia and Defence, or the Minister of Finance, or the Minister of Justice—because he is involved in it—somebody has to institute legal proceedings to recover this money, and the responsibility for doing so cannot be shifted on to the commanding officer of the militia. Somebody in the government is responsible, I think it is the Minister of Finance, and he ought not to rest until that money is returned.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend, although like myself not a lawyer, knows something probably of the glorious uncertainties and the inglorious delays of the law. He knows that if an individual or a municipality wishes to repudiate its debts it can occupy a good deal of time. Now, I am correct in stating that there is a suit pending, and has been pending for some time against the municipality of Valleyfield for this money, that it is being pressed forward as rapidly as possible.

Mr. BENNETT. When was the writ issued ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say, but I will get the particulars.

Mr. MONK. I deemed it necessary on this item to bring the question to the notice of the government. I do not blame my hon. friend the Minister of Militia so much as the whole government collectively. Those who have any knowledge of what took place in 1900 in the town of Valleyfield know perfectly well that the organization which was supposed to be an organization of labour, but which was in reality a purely political organization, provoked a strike just on the eve of an election. In some way or other through the instrumentality of some one of the same political faith as the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, the militia was called out at Valleyfield just before the election, and the whole blame of this was, through some instrumentality, laid upon my friend Mr. Bergeron, so that he lost his election in consequence of these manoeuvres. Now we find that the government comes down and pays for the calling out of the militia, the sum of $4,480 and there is no further question raised whatever until a by-election comes on, and then, when the by-election comes on and when the question of this organization by which Mr. Bergeron was defeated in 1900 is threshed out before the people, we find that ministers of the Crown—I do not say the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), although he appeared to me to be pretty well aware of what was going on ; it may have been the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) because he came down there—ministers of the Crown came down and gave the electors of the town of Valleyfield the complete assurance that they would never be called upon to pay a cent of this large sum which was employed as a political manoeuvre. Now, I leave that aside, but what I would ask is this : What is going to be the rule ? We know the law, but is the law going to be applied ? If it is going to be applied in that way I say we must reimburse the city of Toronto for the money that has been expended there, and that it is unfair that these men who have been doing duty in the city of Montreal should not have been paid in full. I know many of them have suffered from not being paid. I know that many of the officers have been disagreeably situated on that account. But, I go further and say that you must apply that rule to the city of Montreal as well, and if there are $15,000 or $20,000 to be paid there, it should be paid by the government. All I want is that justice shall be done, that the same rule shall be applied to everybody and that the machinery of the Militia Act and the Department of Labour shall not be used in any way for political purposes. It is proper that we should bring this matter to the attention of the House and the country.

Mr. LOY. Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow the statements which have been made tonight to go uncontradicted. I took part in that election. I attended every meeting at which any of the ministers were present, and I never heard one single member of the government give any assurance to the electors of Valleyfield that that amount would not be collected from them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. LOY. There is another point which I think it well to contradict, and that is the statement in respect to the labour union being a political organization. If it was a political organization it was composed of both Conservatives and Liberals. There is also another statement that I wish to deny, and that is that the strike at Valleyfield was provoked by the labourers. In my own opinion, if an investigation were held, it would prove to the entire satisfaction of those who would be honest enough to admit proof, that it was the Montreal Cotton Company which was responsible for the strike of their employees.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend (Mr. Loy) is giving himself a great deal of trouble contradicting what I did not say at all. Certainly, I am surprised that my hon. friend who has been some years in politics, should suppose that the ministers would go down to Valleyfield and state publicly that they would give the town of Valleyfield $4,480. What I said was, and what I repeat is, that the statement was made by somebody in authority on the eve of the by-election and my hon. friend was elected.

An hon. MEMBER. Who made it ?

Mr. MONK. I did not attend the committee meetings or the private meetings where that assurance was made, but it was made and it had that effect. Nor did I say that the labourers of Valleyfield had provoked the strike. Why does the hon. gentleman take the trouble to contradict what I do not say ? The labourers of Valleyfield I know as well as my hon. friend does. I never treated them as my hon. friend treated them when he brought their affidavits into this House to read them, but what I say is that the organization which brought about that strike and called upon the mayor to call upon the troops, was conducting a political manoeuvre. We have proof of it to-day in the fact that the account has not been collected. The city of Toronto and the city of Montreal ought to stand in just as fair a position as Valleyfield, yet Montreal and Toronto are treated in the way in which we know they are treated. This is the proper time to raise the question. Let the hon. minister give us an assurance that even justice will be dealt out to all before we vote this $391,000. It is only fair and I think we have a right to exact that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no hesitation whatever in giving the assurance that we shall proceed under the law and that we will do our best. It is not always possible to do it, but we will do our best and see that even justice is given to all.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. and learned Minister of Justice when the writ was issued and who was the solicitor acting for the government in the endeavour to collect the money from the town of Valleyfield ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not aware that a writ issued nor am I aware that there has been a solicitor appointed to act for the government, because, as I read the statute, action must be taken by the commanding officer. He alone has the right to bring suit and he alone has control.

Mr. MONK. The hon. Minister of Justice knows perfectly well that although the commanding officer is the party who claims the amount, he is entirely under the control of the Department of Militia and Defence and of the government. At any rate I wish to make my own position clear in view of the statement of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy). What I demand and what I think we have a right to exact from the government is that the same treatment should be meted out all around. I believe, as the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) said, it might lead to grave abuses if this practice is adhered to, because, the hon. Minister of Justice will, himself, admit that abuses would be easy. Upon the slightest trouble of any kind whatever you could requisition the militia and cause considerable expense and profit to certain individuals and the municipality, being on the right side, probably, would have nothing to fear. I believe the law is a good one, but it has to be administered in the same way for all parties.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will see that it is the city authorities themselves who make a requisition for troops ; therefore, that seems to safeguard the question of improper expenditure.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Loy) has just told us that the militia were brought to Valleyfield on the requisition of the Montreal Cotton Company. Is that right ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, no.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman, as I understand, said that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, that was not the fact any way.

Mr. EMMERSON. He said that the strike was caused by the Montreal Cotton Company.

Mr. CLARKE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, then. But it all goes to show how necessary it is that we should understand where we are in this matter. If a strike is caused by a company whose head office is many miles away from the scene of the disturbance, and the local authorities are requested to bring the militia out for the purpose of awing the strikers, it should be clearly understood that the expenditure for the maintenance of these troops should be borne by the municipality. The gravest possible abuse may arise in the calling out of troops here or there where their services are not required. If the precedent is established in this case, that for certain reasons a municipality must not bear the responsibility of its action in calling out troops, then other municipalities may call out troops when their services are not required. It would be scandalous if one rule is applied to Valleyfield, and another to Montreal, and another to Toronto. We are entitled to know what action the government purposes taking to spur on the commanding officer of that regiment to do his duty. It appears to be one of those cases where it is nobody's business to act. The militia were entitled to be paid for their services, and the government having disbursed $4,000 or $5,000 of the money of the people, they should take steps to collect that money from the municipality if the law says the municipality is responsible. Will the Minister of Militia tell us whether he will give the proper officer instructions to proceed forthwith to collect this money from the municipality of Valleyfield ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is not a case of the minister giving instructions, but I certainly shall inquire to ascertain why this officer has not done his duty, and then it will be my business to deal with the officer.

Mr. CLARKE. Quite so. If it is the duty of the officer to protect the public treasury as well as life and property, and if it is his duty to collect the money from the municipality, surely he is guilty of a gross dereliction of his duty if he does not proceed forthwith.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think so.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister take cognizance of that ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly I will.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Minister of Justice evades his responsibility and the responsibility of the government who profess to be the watch dogs of the treasury by casting the blame upon some officer. I, for one, am not willing that this question should pass until there is an assurance from the Minister of Finance that he considers it his duty to recover that money at the earliest possible moment. We have been told that irregularities in connection with the Militia Department are to-day the subject of inquiry by special commission. Here is work for another special commission. I don't know that I have ever heard before that money can be paid out of the treasury without warrant, and that no steps are to be taken to recover it from the municipality which owes it. I will not be satisfied until I have a statement from the Minister of Finance that as guardian of the treasury, and as the custodian of the people's money, he intends to get that money back. It is nice to see the Minister of Justice laugh at the idea of the government being custodians of the money of the people. It is a joke. Open the bag boys and pass the money around ; that's their idea of it. The men who have the public money to guard, occupy a sacred trust, but these gentlemen on the treasury benches do not seem to understand that. I want an assurance that the Minister of Finance does intend to get that money back, that the Minister of Justice will assist him in getting it back, and that the Minister of Militia will insist on the commanding officer doing his duty in the premises.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I certainly would not have spoken again were it not for the attempt by the government to fasten the responsibility upon the commanding officer, and I am surprised that the Minister of Militia should allow such a thing to be done. As soon as the men are paid, the commanding officer has no further interest except that the law says his name shall be used in an action for the recovery of the money. If the Minister of Militia is going to hold the commanding officer responsible for the collection of this debt, I am satisfied that every militia officer in the country will resent such a thing, and that not one of them would serve an hour longer. It is absurd to contend that a commanding officer should be put to the expense and risk of entering a suit to recover such money for the Crown. If that is the law then there is not one officer out of ten who would take such a responsibility. For my part, I would not. Does any one mean to say that the Minister of Militia is going to stand up here in the face of the militia of Canada and say that this officer is neglecting his duty. Why the thing is absurd. I would resign my position as Minister of Militia, much as I might pride in it, before I would allow such a principle to be laid down. The Minister of Justice cannot disclaim his responsibility. When I was Minister of Militia, if such a thing occurred, instructions would have been sent to the Justice Department to collect the money, and then the responsibility would be upon the Minister of Justice. If the Minister of Justice received such instructions he is responsible, and he is doubly responsible as a member of the cabinet, because the whole cabinet is responsible in a sense for the proper administration of any one department. It is absurd to say that it is the duty of the commanding officer to move without the initiative of the Minister of Militia, and then the action should be taken on the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. I do not believe that on consideration, the Minister of Militia will take the responsibility of saying that the commanding officer in this case is in any way responsible for the neglect to collect this money. We are given to understand that it is the duty of the commanding officer to take action, but the Militia Department should be behind him, so that, even if he is in South Africa his name can be used. I agree with the hon. member for East York that the most important question is whether the responsibility is to be shifted from the department to the officer.

Mr. LOY. I think it well to state that so far as I know a demand was made on the town of Valleyfield for the payment of the expenses in connection with militia being called out. I know that the town refuses to pay the whole amount demanded. I do not know whether it assumes the responsibility of part of it; but I think it does. I know that the demand was made on the town.

Some hon. MEMBERS. By whom ?

Mr. LOY. By the Militia Department or by some one authorized by the government; but I think the town is resisting the claim, or a part of it. I think it is only right for me to say that, in respect to the charge which was made, that some one had been authorized to promise that the amount would not be collected. For my part, I assisted at nearly every meeting, and I do not know of any person being authorized to make any such statement. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would give me the name of the party who made that statement.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if in his opinion this debt is going to be collected from the town of Valleyfield, or if it is not going to be collected ?

Mr. LOY. I may say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that the town claims that it was not responsible, because the strike was provoked by the employees of the Montreal Cotton Company.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will the hon. gentleman inform us at what date that demand was made ?

Mr. LOY. I cannot tell the date.

Mr. WARD. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to a short discussion which took place on this item last session. On page 4260 of 'Hansard' I find the following :

Contingencies—further amount required, $4,500.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is simply to reimburse the department for the amount paid over to the troops in connection with the Valleyfield riots. Proceedings were taken to collect that money from the town, but in the meantime the men had to be paid and were paid out of contingencies. There was no other way of paying them.

Mr. WILSON. From whom are you trying to collect the money ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. From the town. From that it would appear that proceedings were taken at that time, and I think we should be told by whom those proceedings were taken, what was the result, and what is the reason for the delay since last session. I am sure the hon. minister will be able to give us that information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no information. I have no doubt that what I said at that time was absolutely true, and was said after I had made inquiry in the department. I did not expect that this question would be asked to-night, and I am not prepared with the dates: but I have no doubt whatever in my own mind that proceedings have been taken and are going on to recover that money, and we propose to recover it if it is possible to do so. My hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) did not quite apprehend my meaning when he assumed that I proposed to throw the whole responsibility upon the commanding officer. What I said was that I would cause inquiry to be made to see why the officer had not performed the duty assigned to him under the statute. I said nothing about his responsibility, or about his paying the money out of his own pocket, or paying the cost of the suit, or anything of the kind. The statute prescribes a duty for the commanding officer to perform, and I said that I would inquire and ascertain why he had not performed his duty—that is all.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think the first thing to be done is to ascertain the fact before we proceed to pass judgment on what has occurred. The first thing to be ascertained is whether or not the commanding officer has performed the duty assigned to him by the statute. If he has, then it would be a matter of inquiry, I apprehend, to ascertain whether or not he has proceeded diligently or has been remiss in the performance of his duty. If he has not performed the duty assigned to him, then it seems to me that it is properly within the jurisdiction of the committee to inquire why he has not performed his duty. But let us start by knowing whether or not anything has been done. When we ascertain the fact, then we can apportion the blame and determine on the responsibility. I would like to make a statement of the law, as I understand it, with regard to the calling out of troops by the civil power. It is a matter of statutory duty. The government is absolutely without power to interfere, either to call out troops or to prevent them being called out. The very moment peace is disturbed within the limits of a municipality, those who represent the civil power in that municipality have a right under the statute to call on the military authorities for assistance, and it is the duty of the military authorities to give those who represent the civil power that measure of assistance which they think necessary. Up to that point the government cannot interfere in any way. When the civil authorities make their demand, they make it upon the senior officer in the district, who in the exercise of his discretion calls upon such number of the militia force as he thinks necessary under the circumstances to give to the civil authorities the measure of aid they require. In that he acts within his discretion. After he has performed his duty, and the services of the troops are no longer required, the question of remuneration comes up for consideration. It is then the duty of the commanding officer to apply to the civil authorities who are responsible for his action in the premises, to liquidate the obligations which he has contracted towards the militia. If there is any default or hesitation on their part, the statute provides that he can apply to the government. The funds are then taken out of the consolidated revenue fund for the purpose of liquidating this obligation to the militia; but that is only a temporary expedient. The duty still remains on the commanding officer in his own name to proceed against the municipality—I am reading from the statute—'for the recovery of such pay, allowances and cost of transport, and he shall, on receipt thereof, pay over the amount to Her Majesty.' Therefore, hon. gentlemen will see at a glance that the duty in the first instance is on the commanding officer. If he fails in his duty, then it is for the government to consider how far they can interfere, using his name, to force him to recover the amount, or to recover the amount by direct action. The first thing is to ascertain whether or not he has performed his duty in the premises. That is a matter of inquiry, and the Minister of Militia will be in a position to inform the committee when his estimates come up to-morrow.

Mr. MONK. I understand that the question was put in the Senate to-day by the Hon. Senator Landry, whether judicial proceedings had been taken to recover from the town of Valleyfield the amount paid by the Militia Department for calling out the troops, and what was the amount paid by the department? To these questions the Hon. Mr. Scott replied that the amount paid was $4,480, and that a suit was pending for that amount.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Then I am out of it.

Mr. MONK. I do not think that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will claim that it is now the duty of the government to study the question and find out whether it is possible to get this officer to urge his suit. No doubt this officer is performing a statutory duty under the direction of the government. I do not want to blame that officer, but I want equal rights, and I will put this last question to the Minister of Militia and Defence: Will he give us the assurance that he will not press this claim against the city of Montreal until he has settled the Valleyfield business? That affair is three years old, and if he will make this promise, I shall not criticise any further.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The only assurance I can give is that the letter of the law will be applied in the case of Montreal as in every other case.

Mr. SPROULE. As in the case of Valleyfield?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. That may be very satisfactory for Valleyfield and Montreal, but I would like to know where Toronto comes in. I think that we should have the assurance of the hon. minister that he will send a department cheque to the city of Toronto for the moneys that city contributed to pay for the calling out of the militia. If Valleyfield and Montreal are to go scot free, Toronto should be reimbursed.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am afraid I have not the power.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. Minister of Justice, in the graphic way in which he has explained the mode of procedure, seems to throw the responsibility on the commanding officer. But to my mind the commanding officer is simply a figure head. Who has to supply him with the sinews of war to carry on a lawsuit, if it be not the department?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not I who am throwing the responsibility on the commanding officer, but it is the statute which puts the responsibility both on the government and on him. The statute puts the responsibility on the government of paying, in case of default by the municipality, and then puts the responsibility on the commanding officer of collecting the money, just as absolutely as it puts upon him the responsibility of calling out the troops when requisitioned to do so by the civil authorities. With regard to legal expenses, there has never been any request made to the government to come to the assistance of the commanding officer under the circumstances. When he seeks to collect the amount due, under the conditions described, the expenses are very trivial, and I have never known a commanding officer to apply to the government for aid, but if he did his request would be favourably considered.

Mr. KEMP. It is not in the usual order of things that a lawsuit for $4,000 or $5,000 can be carried on two or three years without involving heavy costs.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This case is not without a precedent. My hon. friends from Quebec will not forget the case that occurred at Pontiac in 1895.

Mr. MONK. That was under another government.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In this case it is quite clear that if the commanding officer has not done his duty and does not wish to do it, there must be some means by which we can recover from the municipality the amount we have paid to liquidate an obligation it is under to the militia.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it be possible for the commanding officer to issue a writ without the knowledge of the Minister of Justice?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, he would retain his own counsel without any reference to the department.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any correspondence respecting the issue of a writ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I could not possibly answer now. There is a lot of work done in the department without my personal knowledge. I shall let my hon. friend know everything we have in the department.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. minister give us the correspondence regarding the payment of the militia at Valleyfield ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. MONK. I suppose the same delay will be given Montreal as the town of Valleyfield ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We will ask Montreal to pay as promptly as Toronto did.

Annual drill and musketry, $520,000.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What is the number you propose to drill ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Last year the report indicates that the system of what is called skeleton drill was adopted, and the camps were composed very largely of officers, non-commissioned officers and a very few men. This year it is proposed to send more men, but still to continue the skeleton drill, which the general officer commanding seems to think works very well. The best selected men from the different companies will be taken into camp, about twenty-two men for each company.

Mr. WARD. I wish to ask if any provision will be made this year for increased pay to the men ? The hon. minister knows how difficult it is to procure men under existing conditions. I would be glad to know if, should the Bill be brought down this session, or by any other way, provision will be made for increased pay.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say to my hon. friend that even if the Bill should be brought down this session there would be no provision in it with regard to pay. It is not proposed to include in the new Bill a scale of pay as is done in the present law. That would be left to the executive and to parliament to settle from year to year. I hope, however, that a solution of the difficulty may be reached in this way. Beginning at fifty cents for the first year, for every additional year that a man serves, up to say five years, there should be given good conduct additions of five or ten cents, as is done in the North-west Mounted Police. We have not actually adopted that scheme, but it was recommended by the former general officer commanding, and I think the present general is in favour of it. And I must say that it appeals to me as being one of the best ways, perhaps the most effective way, in which we could deal with this question.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understand, then, that this is purely an estimate, that it is not based on actual numbers ?

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understand that neither numbers nor rates of pay have been settled. I see the men are ordered out in June——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The rate of pay will be the same as last year.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Will the other questions be dealt with in the supplementary estimates ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. And information will then be given and we shall be free to discuss——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But this is not intended to cover that—it will be in the supplimentary estimates ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. minister intend to hold a camp at Niagara this year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. When I was at home last week, they told me they had received no word about it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is to be a camp.

Mr. LANCASTER. In June ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would urge upon the government, in view of what the hon. minister has said, the necessity of increasing the pay to the young men who go out to the camps. There are a number of very fit young men who should be in the camp at Niagara, but, it would be altogether too much to expect them to go out for fifty cents a day. The commanding officers tell me that it is almost impossible to get them, that it is asking too much of the young men, when they are so busy with their fruit-growing and other things—the very best class of young men, well fit for drill and willing to go, but quite unable to leave their duties at that time unless fairly paid. So, if the hon. minister has not determined the rate of pay he is going to give these young men, I would urge him to materially increase it. Considering the way things are going now and the rates of pay men are receiving working at other things than learning drill in order to serve their country, these young men should be paid considerably more than is paid now.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is as well, perhaps, to say a word or two on that point. There is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) says. But the hon. gentleman will see that if we undertake to pay a man what you might call adequate, reasonable fair wages, we would at once practically double the militia vote—more than double it. Well, now, I really don't think that is necessary. Much as I would like to increase the pay, I think we have a right to expect now and in the future what we have had in the past—a response to this demand for military service on the part of young men who have a taste for it and are willing and anxious to undertake it if they are only indemnified for actual money loss. I believe that a very large percentage of the young men who turn out do not go for the money. Otherwise, at this moment, it would be very difficult to get men to go into camp no matter what you might do, because they are so busy with their own personal affairs. It would take a very large sum of money to tempt them if it were not for this love of the service, this strong military ardour. I do not think it is largely a question of money at all. I believe that we shall get the men as we have done in the past. Forty years ago when I first joined the militia of my own province, no such thing as pay was talked about, and we had in the province of Nova Scotia as large a militia as we have now in the whole Dominion of Canada. The men turned out without a dollar—turned out because they liked it and because they felt it to be a duty. I do not think that we should hold out to the young men of this country the expectation that this parliament is going to vote them any very large sum of money. Rather I would expect them to do, as I said a moment ago, now and in the future, what has been done by our young men hitherto, that is, give their services, provided the government indemnifies them for actual loss of money. I think that we should give them more than we do now. But I do not think there should be a very material increase.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. minister, perhaps, has not understood me. I did not wish to say on behalf of these young men that they want to make money out of their military service. There are two extremes to this matter, and perhaps we are at one extreme to-day. What I mean is that at the present rate of pay they are not indemnified for actual loss, and would not be at three times the amount. What I submit is that there ought to be a better average struck. There is no lack of military ardour, but the fact remains that these young men are simply unable to pay their debts and give their time to this military service for so small a sum as fifty cents a day. They do not ask to be even fully indemnified, but they do ask to be better indemnified than they are now, and I think they should be.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a fair question.

Mr. WARD. I confess that I am somewhat disappointed by what the hon. minister has said with regard to the paying. I doubt, even if the pay were increased by the small ratio the minister suggests, that it would be satisfactory. I wish to call the minister's attention to one thing which militates against the regiment which I have the honour to command in securing men. There are two other arms of the service in the county from which my regiment is recruited, the artillery and the cavalry, and each is allowed a dollar a day for a horse. That is, a horse is counted to be worth double what a man is. When these young farmers can get $1.50 a day by taking a horse, they much prefer the arms of the service that offer that opportunity. I think, notwithstanding what the minister says about patriotism and all that sort of thing, that the men who give their services to the country for these twelve days in the year are entitled to a better treatment from the government than they receive. It seems to me that, when only half the number of men of each company are to be taken out, a small advance might be given in the pay of those who are going to serve. I would strongly urge upon the minister to reconsider this matter and, if possible, to consider it in the light of the increase of the facilities the country has for obtaining money. It seems to me that when the revenue is so large, the militia should obtain a little benefit from it. I trust he will give his consideration to the case, and I am sure it would be greatly to the benefit of the militia if he would do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us at what time in June the camp will assemble in Niagara ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it is the 23rd, but I am not absolutely certain.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It is the 9th, I believe.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I think it is later than the 9th. There is a camp on the 9th at Deseronto.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). At Niagara.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) is right. It has all been published in the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I was discussing it the other day; I feel safe in saying that it is the 9th.

Mr. WARD. There also was to have been a camp in Kingston on the 16th. I would like to ask why that has been changed to the 23rd ? It is a less convenient date, because the troops are kept in camp on a holiday, the 1st of July, which they would prefer to spend at home. If the camp at Kingston could be arranged for the 16th, the men would arrive home before the 1st of July. I am sure, however, it would be much more satisfactory if the camp were held on the 16th.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All I can say is that it is a detail, as my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) will appreciate, which the military branch control and settle, and they do it after corresponding with the district officers commanding in the different districts. I do not interfere in the slightest respect, but since the matter has been mentioned, I will have great pleasure in bringing my hon. friend's observations to the notice of the Adjutant General.

Mr. MONK. Is there going to be a camp at Laprairie this year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe not.

Mr. MONK. What is the reason the department has ceased to have a camp at Laprairie ? I think it has been now some time since we have had a camp at Laprairie.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Two years, I think. The reason the camp was not held at Laprairie two years ago was because of an outbreak of small-pox. It became necessary to secure another camping ground, and a very favourable place was found at Three Rivers, and at a reasonable cost. A camp was held there last year, and I believe will be held there this year. The General Officer Commanding was very much pleased with it, and he again selected the place for a camp this year. The hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Monet) has spoken to me with reference to this very matter, and I assured him that very likely next year a general camp would be again held at Laprairie. There is only one camp being held in the whole province of Quebec, at Three Rivers, which is the most convenient place, and the cost of transportation is somewhat less at that point. It is more central than Laprairie. Nevertheless, the Laprairie camp was a very good one. I think it is desirable that these camps should be changed from time to time. The whole militia of the province of Quebec camped at Laprairie three or four years ago, and there is no reason why it should not do so again.

Mr. MONK. Had the member for Laprairie made these representations before the minister had determined upon Three Rivers for the camp this year ? Is there any correspondence ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I think not. He spoke to me about it only to-day.

Mr. WARD.

Mr. MONK. Is it the intention to have the camp at Laprairie next year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is probable. I may explain that these are matters which are settled chiefly by the staff here, the General Officer Commanding and the Adjutant General, with the officers he has around him, with the assistance of the officers commanding the different districts. I never interfere with recommendations of this kind that are sent to me, because I think these gentlemen know the most about it. Still, I do know that Laprairie is a good ground, and I think it probable that the General Officer Commanding will recommend that a camp be held there, perhaps next year.

Mr. MONK. Small-pox is the reason why the camp was not held there two years ago?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. There was no reason why we did not go there last year except that we had a good ground at Three Rivers.

Salaries and wages, $95,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I want to ask the committee to allow me to divide this item. The money provided here is for the purpose of paying the stores branch of the department, and also for the care of buildings, rifle ranges, &c. It is intended on the 1st of July to place the stores in the military branch under the supervision of the General Officer Commanding. That has been decided upon since the estimates have been made up, therefore, I want to transfer out of this vote $45,000 to the vote for pay and allowances.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What distinction do you draw ? This covers salaries, wages, superintendents of stores, inspectors of clothing and miscellaneous employees. Are you going to take miscellaneous employees out and leave the stores alone ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman knows that we have a chief superintendent of stores at Ottawa, who has a considerable number of officers and clerks under him. He also has a stores branch and a superintendent of stores in every military district in the Dominion. Now it is proposed to create a department of ordnance, with the chief superintendent of stores as a military officer at the head of that department. He will be called the director-general of ordnance, and his department will then become military, and will be paid out of the fund for pay and allowances. I wish to transfer that portion of this vote, and to carry to the officers and men of the stores branch to the pay and allowance vote, so that they can be paid from that vote instead of as in the past.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It will take all the employees of the stores into the military branch.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Exactly.

Mr. MONK. Is that change provided for in the new Bill ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is not necessary to provide for it by statute. The present law is sufficient.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I forgot to ask the minister whether we will have that Bill down before the supplementaries are taken up, because if we are going to have a general discussion then, we ought to have all the information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly. I intended to say to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), in reply to an observation he made, that I am prepared, when the general discussion is taken up, to state, and perhaps before that, what we intend to do with reference to introducing the Bill this year. I have given notice of the Bill, but there are some reasons why it has been impossible to go on with it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to transfer $45,000 of this vote to number 74. It will be a permanent change. This vote will be reduced to $50,000. It is a matter, perhaps, for the clerk to settle how it shall be done, but surely it would be possible to divide this vote into two parts, and to say 'pay and allowance, $45,000 in addition.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Item 76 would then read as follows :

That a sum not exceeding $436,405 be granted to His Majesty. &c.

That would be adding the $45,000 to the $391,405 for pay and allowances.

Mr. MONK. That is not the best way to do it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Say in addition to pay and allowances $45,000, and then you would have the $50,000 for other purposes. I notice there is an addition in that vote of $5,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, it is due largely to the additional number of caretakers. We are building armouries, drill halls and new rifle ranges, and the employees in connection with these will be paid out of this vote of $50,000.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Where are you appointing these new caretakers ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Take military district No. 11, for instance; there is an increase of $631 owing to the appointment of W. L. Davis, as caretaker, at a salary of $540. In district No. 9, which is in Nova Scotia, there is a clerk, Major Black, appointed at a salary of $540.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What is he required for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He does work for the district officer commanding. I may explain in regard to this officer that he was the brigade major when I came in, a very deserving man, but he was stricken with illness and rendered unfit to do that work. He is able, however, to do clerical work. He could not come under the pension law and as he was not very well provided with this world's goods it seemed a public duty that we should make some provision for him. Then, there is a man named F. R. Hiltz, who was employed as caretaker of an armoury at $1 a day, and John Potter who is employed at the armoury in Cumberland county, also receives $1 a day. That makes an increase of $1,277 there. So I might go through the whole list.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. What I want to know is if these men are employed where new armouries have been provided, or are they additions to the staffs in localities which are already supplied ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, they are employed at new armouries.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I mean all through—the balance of the additions.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, pretty much. There are some cases of increased wages. There are increases from $1 to $1.25, and from $1.25 to $1.50 a day.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. minister if these soldiers who went out to South Africa and who were in the employ of the government have all been taken back since they returned ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) will remember that a return was moved for and that return, I know, has been prepared by every department and will be laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. MONK. I wish to invite the hon. minister's attention to the case of a man named Herbert Cottee, who writes me from 257 Bolton street. As I understand his communication he was ten years in the service of the government. He went out with the 4th contingent, joined as a private, was promoted to be lance corporal and has not been taken back since his return.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What department was he in ?

Mr. MONK. He says :

I have been in the employ of the government for over ten years and was the only one to my knowledge that did not receive his position back on returning from South Africa. Then, I know others who received full pay when absent who volunteered when I did. I trust you will do what you can for me.

I remain, respectfully,
(Sgd.) HERBERT COTTEE.

I really think the case of this man may have been overlooked.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will be very glad to look into it.

Mr. MONK. He is very deserving, I should judge from his communication, and perhaps, when we continue the discussion of these estimates, the hon. minister will have looked into the case and will see that justice is done to him.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If my hon. friend will send me the papers, I will give him an answer tomorrow. I may say though, that I think Mr. Cottee is mistaken in saying that in the last contingent in which he was, any officers were paid their salaries. I may be wrong. In the first and second contingents that was done, but latterly I do not think it was done, although I will not be absolutely positive.

Mr. MONK. He may be mistaken as to that, but I think in other respects his claim may be worth looking into.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will look into it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it would be well that we should amend the phraseology of item 76 so as to read that:

A sum not exceeding $95,000 be granted to His Majesty for salaries, wages, pay and allowances.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That would leave it uncertain. It seems to me that we should divide it into two items.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It could be made to read in this way: 'Salaries and wages $50,000; making one item, and then another item saying: 'Pay and allowances $45,000.'

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That will do.

Item as amended voted.

Military properties, $190,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the usual vote. There is $35,000 for maintenance of drill halls, &c., and rentals and renewals of military properties generally; rent of buildings and rifle ranges, $10,000; fuel for buildings and rifle ranges, $10,000; lighting, $12,000; water, $1,000; sundry expenses, $2,000. There is a certain amount required annually in the different districts for repairs and it is proposed to divide it in this way: London, $8,000; Toronto, $10,000; Kingston, $8,000; Montreal, $8,000; St. Johns, $5,000; Quebec, $10,000; Fredericton, $8,000; Halifax, $5,000; Winnipeg, $2,000; Victoria, $2,000; Charlottetown, $2,000, and Ottawa, $5,000. For putting up armouries generally, $5,000. There is $20,000 to keep the historic walls of Quebec in some sort of respectable shape. We have been voting this money for the past three years, and they are in a much better condition than they were. There is $8,000 for general repairs for the cartridge factory; repairs to the Wolseley barracks, London, $5,000; repairs to Stanley barracks, $2,000; Toronto cavalry quarters, $1,500; extension of drill hall at Ottawa; Royal Military College, installation of fire protection; Quebec, heating officers' quarters, general repairs to store buildings, painting and general repairs to R.C.R.I. barracks; general repairs at Levis; levelling grounds for Bedford rifle ranges, $5,000; new sidewalks around drill hall, Halifax, $2,000.

Mr. WARD. Last year the same sum of $190,000 was voted for this purpose, but it would appear from the Auditor General's Report that $268,000 was spent. What is the explanation of that. There was $315,000 spent for the annual camps out of a vote of $520,000. Would the excess expenditure on one vote come out of the balance left from the other.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It ought not to. I cannot give the information now, but I will make a note of it and give the explanation later.

Mr. WARD. I see that there was an under expenditure of about $23,000 for pay and allowances last year.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That happens almost every year in connection with that vote.

Mr. WARD. There is a statement as to the lapsed amounts in the Auditor General's Report, but that item does not appear amongst them. For annual drill and musketry there was $520,000 voted last year and only $314,000 expended. However, the minister says he will get the explanation.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That item includes stores and equipment of all kinds and last year we added considerably to the equipment and stores and the balance of the vote was expended in that way.

Mr. MONK. It does not seem as if any of these repairs at any place have been done by contract. That is very regrettable. The citadel of Quebec seems to have been stormed every day since the celebrated battle of the Plains of Abraham. Twelve thousand dollars of work seems to have been done by the day.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it would be impossible to do that work by contract. I am so advised.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid the minister has got among very bad people in my own province; it makes me feel doubly sorry to say so. None of these repairs amounting to over $5,000 seem to have been done by contract. This naturally excites some curiosity. What are the repairs to the citadel to the amount of $20,000 to be done this year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Militia report, at page 22, he will find all the details.

Mr. MONK. I think it is sufficient to look at the public accounts of last year to see that a great saving would be effected by giving most of these things out by contract. The plumbers seem to have held an orgy last year, and if we pursued the rule we would have more money for the militia.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All new plumbing work is given out by tender, and I assure the hon. gentleman that wherever possible we ask for tenders; but for such work as repairing these old walls it is impossible to get tenders, and I think it is in the public interest to pursue the course we have been pursuing in that respect.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any truth in the report which reaches us from time to time to the effect that the government intend to establish a new military depot in the city of Montreal ? I believe that the establishment of such a depot would be productive of much good, and, as the hon. gentleman is aware, deputations have come to Ottawa several times in connection therewith. We have no small-pox there at present. I mention that because I see the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Monet) here, for I believe the camp has been taken away from there because of small-pox. But we have none in Montreal, and we would be glad to have a military depot there.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot make any positive announcement now; but if the hon. gentleman will carefully scan the supplementary estimates, he may be pleased with what he will see there.

Mr. MONET. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has alluded to the small-pox at Laprairie, as having caused the removal of the camp from there to Three Rivers a few years ago. But I am glad to know that next year we may have the camp at Laprairie again.

Mr. MONK. That was the explanation of the camp being taken away in the first year, but it did not apply the second year.

Mr. MONET. There was still some small-pox there.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid that my hon. friend seeks an excuse, that is not to be found in disease, except another kind of disease.

Mr. MONET. There were two or three cases there.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman has assumed too much from what the minister said, in saying that the camp will be brought back to Laprairie next year.

Mr. MONET. I said I hoped it would.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to know whether any provision has been made by the Militia Department or the Public Works Department for completing the work on the Toronto drill shed. I feel it incumbent upon me to bring the matter to the attention of the minister. I have already on several occasions, as the minister is aware, brought it to his attention and also to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. It is after all a serious matter, in which both this government and the previous government are involved, and it should be disposed of in one way or the other. As the minister knows, we have three or four fine corps in Toronto. I believe he has authorized additions to the cavalry corps, and, in view of this fact, it is the duty of his department or the Department of Public Works to take the necessary steps to complete this work. Three or four years ago this matter was brought up formally by the city of Toronto. A resolution was adopted in 1899, setting forth the conditions under which the drill shed site was granted, and calling on the hon. Minister of Militia to proceed with the erection of the armouries for the cavalry and artillery, as shown by the government plans and as formerly intended. The matter has been discussed recently, as the hon. minister is aware. I believe His Worship the Mayor of Toronto brought the matter to the attention of the government when he was down here a short time ago, and there has been some correspondence published recently in the newspaper press respecting the conditions under which the city of Toronto provided the $150,000 for the site. There were two letters respecting this matter published in the Toronto 'News' of Saturday, the 9th of May—one from Col. George T. Denison, the other from Col. J. H. Mead. Col. Denison has been for a life-time connected with the militia. He was formerly commander of the Governor General's bodyguard, and was very active at the time steps were being taken to procure the passage of the money by-law for purchasing the site. Col. Denison is a reputable citizen and a militia officer of very high standing, and I shall take the liberty of reading his letter because I cannot put in stronger language the obligation which I conceive to be binding on the government of completing the work which the government pledged itself to perform when the citizens voted $150,000, and purchased the site.

Heydon Villa, Toronto, October 1, 1902.

My dear Howland,—You were asking me about the understanding as to building the cavalry quarters as well as the artillery quarters along with the armouries. I remember well the circumstances. The plan prepared by the government and shown to the officers commanding corps included accommodations for the infantry, cavalry and artillery. It was all one proposition, one building really and for the whole force, and we were told and we informed our men and our friends that if we could get the by-law passed and the money voted for the purchase of the land that the building would be built by the government. We all worked for the by-law and voted for it, and have paid our share of the taxes for the land upon that understanding. When the land was got, a portion only of the building was put up—the infantry were provided for and the cavalry and artillery done out of theirs.

I have been enforcing criminal law for twenty-five years, and have sent down hundreds of criminals to the penitentiary or Central prison for fraud and obtaining money under false pretenses, and the moral wrong has often been no worse than the wrong done to the cavalry and artillery, whose taxes have been paid for years to buy land upon the false pretense that they would get certain specific rooms and quarters.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE T. DENISON.

That is a pretty strong indictment to make against the government of Canada. I happened to be the chief executive officer of the city at the time this bylaw was voted, and I know that had it not been for the active co-operation of the officers and men of the militia in the city of Toronto, the citizens would not have voted the sum of $150,000 to purchase this site. They had the assurance of the Minister of Militia that if the money were voted, the required building would be furnished by the government. The citizens, in good faith, voted the money and purchased the site—a magnificent site in the heart of the city. The militia force of Toronto are cramped for accommodation, as the Minister of Militia well knows. The Department of Public Works and the Militia Department are in duty bound to keep their part of the bargain. There was an understanding that if the citizens of Toronto would purchase the site, the government would put up a building to accommodate the various branches of the service, and it is only fair that the government should keep faith and provide accommodations for the artillery and cavalry. There is also a letter from Colonel Mead. Colonel Denison was the commanding officer of the cavalry, the Governor General's Body Guard, and Colonel Mead was the officer commanding the Toronto Field Battery. Colonel Mead wrote as follows

Toronto, October 3, 1902.

To His Worship the Mayor, Toronto.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that I was in command of the Toronto Field Battery of Artillery at the time negotiations were in progress between the government of Canada and the city of Toronto, respecting armouries for the accommodation of the militia force of this city. A plan was prepared by the government, showing accommodation proposed. This comprised a drill shed for the infantry, and a riding school for the mounted corps. In this latter building, there was a satisfactory number of rooms for armouries, and squadron rooms for the cavalry, a gun shed and rooms also for the artillery.

I believed the plan submitted formed part of the agreement between the city and the government, and under this belief and as the riding school contained adequate accommodation for my corps, I approved of it. Similar approval having been obtained from the other officers commanding corps, the land was purchased by the city and, as I understood and believed, the government undertook to complete the two necessary buildings to accommodate the mounted corps of the city.

I constantly urged the completion of the arrangement, as ever since the construction of the one building for the infantry, the artillery has suffered greatly from want of adequate accommodation.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Yours very faithfully,
(Sgd.) J. H. MEAD,
Major-Lt.-Col.

I cannot put this case any stronger than the gentlemen whose letters I have read, have put it to the public and the government. It is a notorious fact that the militia has not sufficient accommodations for its stores. It is also notorious that two or three years ago the officer commanding the district, Colonel Otter, made application to the city of Toronto for the use of a portion of St. Andrew's market buildings for the storing of certain material. Two years ago Colonel Otter wrote to the chairman of the property committee of the city hall in Toronto, and I shall put this letter on record again, in the hope that it may have some effect on the Ministers of Militia and Public Works. Colonel Otter, commanding district No. 2, wrote as follows:

Stanley Barracks,
Toronto, March 22, 1901.

Sir,—I have the honour to make application on behalf of a portion of the local militia force for the temporary use of the 'Arcade,' St. Andrew's market, for the purpose of storing guns, wagons and harness.

With the present strength of the city corps, it is impossible to find enough accommodation in the armouries, and pending the provision of such, I am compelled to appeal to the municipal authorities, as no place adapted for the purpose in view can be obtained.

I sincerely trust your committee will see its way to recommending my application to the council, and that a favourable answer may be granted.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. D. OTTER, Col.,
Comd'g M. D. No. 2.

The Chairman of the Property Committee,
City Hall, Toronto.

The committee, upon receipt of this letter, made the following report to the council:

Temporary Use of Arcade in St. Andrew's Market for Storing Guns, &c.

Application has been made to your committee by Col. Otter, commanding M.D. No. 2, on behalf of the local militia force, for the temporary use of the Arcade in St. Andrew's market for the purpose of storing guns, wagons and harness. In his communication, Col. Otter states that with the present strength of the city corps it is impossible to find enough accommodation in the armouries, and pending the provision of such he is compelled to appeal to the municipal authorities, as no place adapted for the purpose in view can be obtained.

Your committee, after due consideration, beg to recommend that the temporary use of the Arcade in the St. Andrew's Market be granted to the local Militia force for the purpose indicated, the council reserving the right to terminate this arrangement upon giving one month's notice to Col. Otter, or to such officer as may be authorized to carry out the duties now performed by him.

Two years have elapsed since the council of the city of Toronto provided the additional accommodation necessary for the storage of this military equipment, and nothing has been done, although repeated demands have been made on the government, to provide the requisite accommodation. I telegraphed to-day to the City Clerk of Toronto to ascertain if the military authorities were still using St. Andrew's market for storage, and I have his reply: 'Yes, two rooms in market annex for storage.' This reply was sent by Mr. Littlejohn, City Clerk. Surely we have the right to ask the government to put up the necessary buildings and afford the accommodation required for the Toronto militia on the site which the people of Toronto have furnished out of their own pockets. Surely if one of the parties has lived up to its contract, the other is in duty bound to do so. We are not asking a favour, we are demanding a simple right. We are very proud of our militia. Many of them made considerable sacrifices to keep up their corps, and the government should treat them reasonably and fairly by fulfilling its pledge and keeping faith with men who are doing so much, as these young men are doing, in connection with the militia corps in Toronto to maintain the esprit de corps of the militia force.

I think we have the right to demand—I do it most respectfully, but as firmly as I can—that faith should be kept with the city of Toronto. I myself had something to do with getting that money voted. I had to carry out the work of getting that site expropriated, and I feel a good deal on this matter personally. We have fulfilled our part of the arrangement and provided a site at a cost of $150,000, that our militia forces might be provided with the accommodation necessary to make them reasonably comfortable. I have had sent to me clippings from the 'Globe,' the 'Mail' and other newspapers, with respect to the accommodation provided at Buffalo, Malone and other places in New York State for the local militia companies, and they certainly put us to the blush. The accommodations in Buffalo armoury for one regiment are greater than the accommodations in the Toronto armoury for three or four. I hope it will not be necessary to bring this matter up any more. I think we are not asking anything unreasonable when we ask to have this shed completed at once; and I would appeal—and I do appeal with a good deal of confidence—to the present Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) and the present Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) that this be disposed of, and that accommodation for the cavalry and artillery be provided at the earliest moment.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) says that there is nothing unreasonable in his asking that additional accommodation be given to the people of Toronto——

Mr. CLARKE. The militia.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. For the militia. There is certainly nothing unreasonable in it. It is the hon. gentleman's duty to do so, and I am bound to say that he has performed that duty very faithfully. But my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will not complain, I think, if I tell him that I do think it is not reasonable for him to hold my hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works and myself responsible for the failure of his own friends to fulfill their obligations. Now, I have always looked upon my hon. friend as one of the fairest, straightest men in this House or any other House. But I do think he might have said to this committee, when he is putting all this on record in 'Hansard,' that the indictment which he read, penned by Colonel Denison, was an indictment against the late administration.

Mr. CLARKE. All the worse for the late administration. And all the more creditable to the hon. gentleman, if the late administration was derelict in its duty, that he should perform the work which it failed to perform.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is a legacy which has come to us from the late administration. But, notwithstanding the letter that Colonel Denison has written, let me, to some extent, come to the rescue of my hon. friends, and let me tell him that I have diligently searched for one particle of evidence to show that there was any written understanding—and surely the business men of Toronto would not enter into an agreement to purchase $150,000 worth of land upon an agreement with the government without having it in writing—not a particle of writing that I have been able to find, not a single plan, or letter, or statement, or agreement of any kind or description, to show that the government of that day bound itself to do anything in particular with reference to the drill hall of Toronto. There is, apparently, an opinion abroad among the military people there that certain promises were made, but the plan to which my hon. friend has referred, I have never been able to procure, though I have asked for it. But let me dismiss that view of the case. I have agreed with my hon. friend on this floor before, and I agree with him now, that there should be increased accommodation given to the garrison of militia in the city of Toronto. Moreover, I do not care what the agreement was with the late government, or whether they kept their agreement or not, it is absolutely a fact, and I admit it, that the city of Toronto to-day requires a very considerable amount of increased accommodation for the militia of that city. I agree with all that my hon. friend has said as to the excellent character of the militia of the city of Toronto. In the time of trouble we would look to that city almost before any other place to respond to the call, if it were necessary to call the militia to arms ; and they would turn out and would do their duty as they have done their duty. Now, let me say a word as to the concrete question. I have made a recommendation to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, which he has now before him, and I sincerely hope that we shall be able to make provision for the additional accommodation which is greatly needed, which has been too long needed, in the city of Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. I was very careful to say, in speaking of this matter that it was the government of Canada that was responsible. I did not attempt to throw the responsibility upon the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) or his colleagues. Since I have had the honour of a seat in this House I have not hesitated to draw attention to the laches of somebody in connection with this matter. The fact that the site was selected and approved of by the Department of Militia and the fact that only half of that site is occupied with a building, is evidence that the intention was to erect a further building to afford the necessary accommodation for the various branches of the service. The land that was expropriated was exceedingly expensive land. The city of Toronto would not expropriate a site double the extent of the present building if the citizens had not what they deemed to be a reasonably satisfactory assurance from the militia authorities that that land would be required and the necessary buildings erected. The construction of the present building was not completed until about the time when the late government left office. The same representations would have been made to them that are being made to hon. gentlemen opposite, had they remained in office. I do not know whether those representations would have been more successful, but certainly we could not have been much worse off than we are at the present time. The late government, whatever its faults, certainly carried out part of its contract with the city, for it erected the present splendid shed, and representations were being made to the late government to complete that work. Governments, apparently, are very slow to move in matters of this kind. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, in bringing this matter up, either to remove responsibility from the late government in the first place or to throw any undeserved responsibility on the present government. But the Minister of Militia admits the fact that there is nothing like sufficient accommodation for the militia of the city of Toronto. The hon. gentleman, in his administration of the department, has increased the cavalry corps. There is, therefore, greater need for additional accommodation. I think I am justified in calling attention to this matter. And, if the hon. minister thinks that he will be relieved in any way by throwing the responsibility on his predecessors for not completing the building in one or two years, I am not at all concerned about that ; I am satisfied that he should do that, provided he will do what I think he admits is reasonably and fairly his duty in the premises by insisting that the building intended to be put upon the site shall be completed and that our various regiments shall have the space and accommodation they ask for and absolutely require.

Mr. MONET. I did not understand the Minister of Militia as answering the question put by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) about the establishment of new divisions of the permanent corps. The rumour is that there are to be three. I would be glad if the hon. minister would tell us whether that is true, and where these new companies are to be situated.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is rather anticipating matters, but I may say that there will be a small addition to the permanent force. Just where the additions will be located I am not in a position to say because it has not been finally settled, and I do not think it would be proper to speak on the subject.

Mr. GALLERY. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence on what grounds the department charged the city of Montreal for calling out the militia ? This matter has been discussed in the city council of Montreal, and as I am also a member of the city council, I would like to get that information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend, I suppose, did not hear the discussion that has taken place this evening. It was pointed out that under the statute the government had no direct responsibility in the matter at all. The Minister of Justice pointed out with great clearness that if a riot is threatened the mayor of the city may call upon the commanding officer of the militia in that district to turn out the militia to assist the civil authority. The law further provides that the municipality shall pay the militia, and that in the event of its not doing so, the government may take the money out of the consolidated revenue to pay the troops, and the commanding officer who called out the troops shall immediately proceed to collect the money from the corporation.

Mr. GALLERY. But I want to point out to the minister that the property which was threatened belongs to the government, the city of Montreal cannot collect five cents in taxes upon it, and has nothing to do with it. We wanted to tax some sheds there recently, and took the case down to Quebec, and it was decided against the city. Why should not the government protect their own property now the same as in years gone by ?

Mr. MONK. Perhaps my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Anne, (Mr. Gallery) was not here when we had an assurance from the government that the city of Montreal would not be called upon to pay. I understood the Minister of Militia to say clearly that he would only call upon the city of Montreal to pay after Valleyfield had settled. My hon. friend knows, therefore, there is no danger of Montreal being called upon.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As a matter of fact, I said nothing of the kind. I want to say this, however, to my hon. friend, that it does not matter to whom the property belongs when a riot is threatened, whether it belongs to the Dominion government, or the provincial government, or the city. The corporation of Montreal is bound to see that order is maintained within its borders, and the law provides how that may be done and at whose expense.

Mr. WARD. Before we leave this item, I desire to call the attention of the minister to a peculiar item that I find in the Auditor General's Report, page Q—44. It is an item in connection with the expenditures on military properties, and is very peculiar. I find some gentlemen named Coté Freres did some work repairing walls, and they received $376.98 for supervision. You would imagine that having received that much they would have sharpened their own tools. But I find here an item for sharpening and repairing 728 dozen of tools at fifteen cents a piece. That is 8,726 tools at fifteen cents a piece, $130. It seems to me out of all proportion for the work done, and I hope the minister will make an inquiry and find out what these tools were.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I give it up, but I will make an inquiry.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Militia and Defence, House adjourned at 12 o'clock, a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 28, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE PATENT ACT—AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 184) further to amend the Patent Act. He said : In introducing this Bill, I think that perhaps a short explanation is due to the House. The immediate necessity for the passage of an Act of this character is due to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada last December in the case of Power vs. Griffin, the effect of which decision has been to alter materially the practice of the department, and in some cases to throw a doubt upon the validity of certain acts of the department in the past. The Bill provides for various other amendments to the Patent Act which have been asked for by the applicants for patents and by those who are practising as patent solicitors in Canada. The Bill provides first of all, to remove doubts raised by the decision of the Supreme Court as to the powers of the deputy commissioner of patents or the acting deputy commissioner of patents. While the decision of the court itself did not involve any question as to the powers of these two officials, still there was an expression of opinion by some of the judges that the deputy commissioner and the acting deputy commissioner had been performing certain acts which they considered to be only within the purview of the commissioner himself.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are these acts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The granting of extension of time for manufacture in the country, and extension of time for importation under the Patent Act. The Bill also makes an important amendment as to the duration of the existing Canadian patents. At present, under our patent law, all Canadian patents cease, determine and are void whenever a similar patent in a foreign country becomes void for any reason whatever. That is a relic of by-gone patent legislation. It has already been removed from the law of Great Britain and the United States and other foreign countries, and those who are connected with the administration of the patent law in Canada believe that Canadian patents ought not to become void simply because of the voiding of the same patents in a foreign country. This amendment will make the existence of the Canadian patents entirely independent of the life of the same patents in foreign countries. We have found in the administration of the patent law that certain difficulties have arisen in the way of the voiding of patents because of non-manufacture in this country. There is a pretty large class of patents, the manufacture of which is practically impossible until a demand arises for them. A patent for a graving dock is an example. There might be no necessity for the building of a graving dock in Canada for many years after the period of the patent had expired because of non-usage. There are other patents for processes, the manufacture of which is not necessary unless the article, the use of which the process is required for, is manufactured in the country. It seems to be an injustice to the patentee that because of the non-use of the patent in this country the patent should become null and void. In Great Britain they have adopted a system of licensing, and this Bill proposes to apply the British license system to this class of patent when the owner of the patent applies for it, and when, in the judgment of the commissioner of patents, it is a proper patent to allow that licensing system to prevail in regard to, instead of the patents becoming null and void because of the non-use or non-manufacture of the article in this country. Then, as the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada has shown that certain acts of the deputy commissioner of patents and the acting deputy commissioner of patents were beyond their powers, this Act will render valid acts which have been so performed by these officers. We further propose to revive certain patents which were void, either through failure to manufacture in the country, or by reason of the permission not to manufacture having been given by the officers of the department in a way which this decision of the Supreme Court says was illegal and ineffective.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How far do you make your ex post facto legislation valid, and to what cases does it apply ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will explain that further in detail. I was going over the Bill first. Then we propose another radical amendment in the administration of the office, which has really not occasioned any great trouble, but might do so at any time. The present patent law provides that all papers in connection with patents should be open to public inspection. That provision applies to applications for patents before the patent has been granted. There is no doubt that under that interpretation of the law there is a danger that a person who has filed an application for a patent, a paper which ought to be confidential, might have his patent stolen from him by reason of that fact. We remove the applications for patents from the operation of that section of the law, and make them confidential just as caviats are, until the application has been dealt with and passed upon by the department. There is also a provision, not to change, but to make clear the tariff in regard to the fees on the re-issue of a patent. These have been a subject of dispute, and patent solicitors who appear before the office have generally considered that the ruling of the office was not indicated clearly by the wording of the Act, and I wish to make the wording of the Act so as to indicate more clearly the ruling of the office, which has been sustained and upheld. There is also a clause to extend the time within which the Commissioner of Patents, under certain circumstances, may be able to give a permit for an extension of time to import. We have clauses conserving the rights of people who may have acquired rights through the decision of the Supreme Court, the results of which by this Act are to be modified to a certain extent. We propose to retroactively maintain and make valid certain patents which at the present time are null and void. We conserve the rights which were acquired during the period in which those patents were not valid. The hon. member (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has asked me particularly in what way we make the Act retroactive. I think the first clause, which deals with that is clause 9 :

> The validity of any extension heretofore granted or assumed to be granted under subsection 2 of section 37 of the said Act, of the period of two years limited by that section, or by that section as heretofore amended, for the commencement of the construction or manufacture of a patented invention, or of the period of twelve months thereby limited for the importation of the patented invention, shall not be open to impeachment, because——
> (a.) Such extension was so granted or assumed to be granted by the Deputy Commissioner of Patents, or, as acting Deputy Commissioner of Patents, by a person performing the duties of Deputy Minister of Agriculture under the provisions of the Civil Service Act in that behalf, instead of by the Commissioner of Patents; or because
> (b.) In the case of the invention to which such extension relates, there had been granted or assumed to be granted a previous extension or previous extensions of the period of two years or the period of twelve months, as the case may be, so limited.

The Supreme Court of Canada has decided that while one extension of time may be permitted, no more can be granted by the Commissioner of Patents. It had been the practice of the department to grant more than one extension. This Act will make valid the extensions which have been granted, but, of course, the practice of the department will now change, and only one extension will be granted in each case.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How about rights acquired by the voiding of a patent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a general provision carefully preserving all acquired rights under the law.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose a patent lapsed this year, could that be revived in two years from now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The Bill only makes valid the patents which have lapsed up to the period when the new practice of the office will commence, and on the ground that the practice of the office has changed. In section 10 there is a retroactive provision. It provides as follows :

10. The validity of any patent heretofore granted shall not be impeached by reason of the failure of the patentee to construct or manufacture the patented invention, provided such patentee within the period of two years from the date of the patent allowed for such construction of manufacture, or within an authorized extension of that period, became, and at all times thereafter continued to be, ready either to furnish the patented invention himself or to license the right of using it, on reasonable terms, to any person desiring to use it.

2. In the case of any patent the validity of which is protected from impeachment by subsection 1 of this section, it shall be incumbent upon the patentee, or his legal representatives either (a) within six months from the date of the passing of this Act to commence, and after such commencement to continuously carry on in Canada, the construction or manufacture of the patented invention in such manner that any person desiring to use it may obtain it, or cause it to be made for him, at a reasonable price, at some manufactory or establishment for making or constructing it in Canada, or (b) within such six months apply for and thereupon obtain an order of the commissioner under section 7 of this Act making such patent subject to the conditions set forth in that section and upon his or their failure so to do such patent and all the rights and privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine, and the patent shall be null and void.

This is dealing with an old decision of the Patent Office made in 1877.

Mr. INGRAM. Are you changing the old Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the reading of the old Act is entirely different because the decision of the Supreme Court completely controverts and overrides Dr. Tache's decision of 1877. And because the Supreme Court holds that the decision upon which the patent law has been administered ever since was erroneous and incorrect. This section provides that the patents still in existence, the holders of which have complied with Dr. Tache's decision, shall be rendered valid, provided that within a fixed time they do what the new reading of the law requires. It is only right that those patents which have become void through the patentee following Dr. Tache's decision should be given an opportunity of being made valid again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How will you give the patentees notice ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That would be a matter of administration. But I should think that the passage of the law and its appearance in the statutes would give most people sufficient notice.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It gives technical notice, but I mean actual notice.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We could undertake, though it would be great labour, to send notices to the patentees, whose addresses we have, but there are a great many with whom we have had no communications and whose addresses we do not know.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many patents are voided by this decision of the Supreme Court ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are so many patents voided on one ground or another that I could not tell off hand.

Mr. INGRAM. In the case of a patent, the manufacture of which has not begun at the expiration of the two years, does this extend the time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It gives them six months to comply with the new reading of the law. This Bill also makes valid patents which have expired through the expiry of foreign patents. That is another way in which it is retroactive, of course providing the safeguard of acquired rights. There is a general clause in the Bill giving protection to acquired rights under every provision of this measure, and the Department of Justice and my own deputy minister, who is a lawyer, considers that the clause, as it is drawn, will preserve any acquired rights under any retroactive provisions of this Bill. I may say that this decision of the Supreme Court was quite unexpected, that the jurisprudence of the Patent Law had been maintained on the lines I have been discussing some 26 years, and it was only last December that a change was made. I may say that the Department of Justice and my own deputy minister concur fully in the ruling of the Supreme Court, but at the same time I think that the continuous existence of a condition of affairs based on a wrong reading of the law in the department, proves that it was high time that an experienced lawyer was made deputy minister, and I am very glad that I was able to secure the services of an experienced and sound lawyer for the position. I am satisfied that such an appointment will conduce to the more satisfactory administration of these branches in which legal knowledge is required.

Mr. INGRAM. Will it be necessary to come forward with a private Bill in order to renew lapsed patents ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Most of the private Bills which come before the House to make valid lapsed patents owe their existence to the neglect of the patentees themselves. This Bill does not deal with any case in which the patentee has been simply neglectful, but we are trying to remedy a condition of affairs, the existence of which is due to the action of the department and not to the negligence of the patentees. The House will still have the power to pass a private Bill in order to make valid any patent, but this Bill only affects certain classes of patents which have become void owing to the action of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had appointed a lawyer as Deputy Minister of Agriculture. Does not the work of the patent officer devolve almost entirely on the chief clerk ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the work of the patent branch is directly under the deputy commissioner of patents, who is also the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. True the chief clerk has charge there just as chief clerks have in other branches, but at the same time it is first of all the minister acting through his deputy, the commissioner of patents, who has direct responsibility and control over the work. One of the chief parts of the work of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, as now constituted and for a long time back, is to deal with these non-agricultural portions of the work of the department. As my hon. friend knows very well, experts and specialists have charge of the various agricultural branches of the Department of Agriculture, but there has not been anybody of that character in the non-agricultural parts of the department. Therefore it is necessary that somebody should be able to deal with these things as a deputy minister.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

GEORGE ROY, INSPECTOR OF HIDES, QUEBEC.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Is Mr. George Roy, of Quebec, in the service of the government as inspector of leather and hides ?
2. If so, when was he so appointed ?
3. What is his salary ?
4. Is it a new position
5. What are the places in which he performs the duties of his office ?
6. Since his appointment, has he done any inspecting in connection with his office ?
7. If so, when, how often, and where was such inspection done by him ?
8. Is he allowed, over and above his salary, any travelling expenses when moving about on inspection ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) :

1. Mr. George Roy, of Quebec, is in the service of the government as chief inspector of hides.

2. He was appointed under authority of subsection three of section two of the General Inspection Act on the 12th July, 1897.

3. $1,500.

4. It was a new position.

5. Under his letter of instruction, he was to supervise the inspectors of hides at Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, London and other points, as occasion might require.

6. Since his appointment he has supervised the inspectors at various places.

7. Whenever occasion required, or whenever he was specially instructed so to do from the department.

8. He is allowed actual travelling expenses when absent on duty.

SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES, MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Has the honourable the Minister of Justice received from the County Court judges of Manitoba a memorial or petition asking that their salaries be increased by one thousand dollars ?
2. Is it the intention of the government to introduce at this session such legislation as will provide for a more adequate salary to the judges of our high and county courts of Manitoba and the Territories ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) :

1. I have received such a memorial.

2. The matter is now under the consideration of the government, but nothing so far has been finally decided.

CONCILIATION BOARDS.

Mr. BELL asked :

1. How many 'conciliation boards' have been registered under section three of the Conciliation Act, 1900 ? (b) How many of such conciliation boards are still in existence ? (c) In how many instances have the services of such conciliation boards been invoked for the settlement of labour disputes ? (d) In how many instances have such services been invoked successfully ?
2. In how many instances have inquiries as to labour disputes been instituted by the Minister of Labour, under subsection 'a,' clause 1, of section 4 of the said Act ?
3. How many applications have been made for the appointment by the Minister of Labour of conciliators, under subsection 'c,' clause 1, of section 4 of said Act ? 1. By employers ; 2. By workmen ? (b) In how many instances have such applications been acted upon ?
4. In how many instances has application been made to the Minister of Labour for the appointment of arbitrators, under subsection 'd,' clause 1, of section 4 of the said Act ? (b) In how many instances have such applications been acted upon ?
5. In how many instances has a memorandum of the settlement of a labour dispute, as a result of the appointment of such conciliators or arbitrators, been filed with the Minister of Labour, under clause three of section four of the said Act ?
6. In how many instances has the Governor in Council, under section seven of the said Act, appointed a commission to take evidence under oath respecting labour disputes ? (b) In how many instances has application been made for the appointment of such a commission ?
7. In how many instances has the Minister of Labour appointed a person to promote the establishment of conciliation boards, under section nine of the said Act ? (b) How many conciliation boards have been established as the result of such action ? (c) How many of the conciliation boards so established are still in existence ?

8. What has been the cost of administering the Conciliation Act, 1900, in each year since the said Act has been in force ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. There have been no conciliation boards registered under section three of the Conciliation Act, 1900. This will answer all the subdivisions of question one.

2. The Minister of Labour has never had occasion to institute inquiries into labour disputes under the subsection of the Act in question.

3. Since the establishment of the Department of Labour twenty-four applications have been made to the Minister of Labour for the appointment of a person to act as conciliator in case of industrial disputes. (1). Of these, two applications were made by employers or their representatives, and twenty-two by employees. (b). The department has taken action in all of these applications.

4. There has been no case of application by both parties to a trade dispute for the appointment of an arbitrator under subsection 'd,' clause one, of section four, of said Act.

5. In no case has a memorandum of the settlement of a labour dispute, under the Conciliation Act, been filed with the Minister of Labour, other than in the form of an official report of the action of the conciliator, published in the 'Labour Gazette' for the month following.

6. There have been no instances of the appointment of a commission under section seven of the Conciliation Act and no application has been made to the department for the appointment of such a commission.

7. There have been no instances of the appointment of a person by the Minister of Labour to promote the establishment of conciliation boards under section nine of said Act.

8. No separate account is kept in the Department of Labour of the cost of administering the conciliation provisions of the Conciliation Act, the only items of disbursements limited exclusively to conciliation proceedings being for travelling expenses of the officers of the department which amounted as follows :—

1900-1	$ 250.30
1901-2	1,010.33
1902-3, to May 1st	496.20

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, BATHURST, N.B.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

Is the Customs Department aware that P. I. Veniot, collector at the port of Bathurst, N.B., absented himself from his office forty-nine days, at various dates, commencing June 12, 1902, and ending March 28, 1903 ? Had the collector leave of absence for the above time ? Is the department aware that Veniot is an active political partisan ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Prefontaine) :

1. The Customs Department is not aware that P. I. Veniot, collector of customs at Bathurst N.B., absented himself from his office forty-nine days, at various dates, commencing June 12th, 1902, and ending March 28th, 1903.

2. The collector had only the usual three weeks leave of absence from duty from the department during the above time.

3. The department is not aware that Veniot is an active political partisan.

METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Has Dr. Mehan been removed from the meteorological service at Bathurst, N.B.?
2. If so, for what cause ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Prefontaine) :

1. Yes.
2. Discontinuance of the station.

HARBOUR MASTER, BATHURST, N.B.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Has Michael Daly been dismissed from the position of harbour master of the port of Bathurst, N.B.?
2. If so, for what reason ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Prefontaine) :

1. Yes.
2. In the interest of the public.

PILOT NAZAIRE HATCHERY.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Has Pilot Nazaire Hatchey been appointed harbour master ?
2. If so, is he legally eligible as pilot to hold such position ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. Yes.
2. He is not disqualified by being a pilot.

BUOYS IN BATHURST HARBOUR, N.S.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Why was contract for placing buoys in Bathurst Harbour taken from P. J. Burns ?
2. Has this contract been given to Nazaire Hatchey without tender ?
3. If so, why were tenders not called for ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. The contract was not taken from Mr. Burns, it terminated on the 12th of March last.

2. Mr. Nazaire Hatchey was appointed harbour master of Bathurst harbour in the early part of April, and he was instructed as an officer of this department to take charge of the buoy service, the cost not to exceed the former contract price, and to provide vouchers for the work.

3. Tenders were not called for because the work was put in the hands of a government officer who is also a pilot and understands where the buoys should be placed in the interests of navigation. An improved system of inspection of the buoy service on the north side of New Brunswick has been introduced, by sending a steamer specially from harbour to harbour to see that the work is properly done and to prevent complaints about the service. This system will admit of changes in the number of buoys from time to time if necessary without interfering with contract prices, as would be the case if a contract was made.

LIGHT-KEEPER AT MISCOU, N.B.

Mr. WILMOT asked :

1. Was Robert Rivers dismissed from the position of light-keeper at Miscou, N.B. ?
2. If so, is he receiving superannuation allowance ? What is the amount ?
3. And has any one been authorized to receive any portion of such allowance by Rivers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. He was not dismissed.
2. He was superannuated and is receiving $250 a year.
3. Not so far as this department is aware.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF LAND IN TOWN OF LEVIS.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Pope—asked :

1. Did the government, in the year 1900, or thereabouts, purchase from A. H. Murphy, or from Miss Murphy, a certain lot of land situate in the town of Lévis, for the purpose of extending the land already owned at the said place by the government, for the use of the Intercolonial Railway, or for other purposes ?
2. What was the price per foot paid for said lot of land so purchased from A. H. Murphy, or Miss Murphy ?
3. How many cheques were made out in payment of the price paid by the government for the said lot of land ? To whom were same made payable, and what was the amount of each cheque ?
4. What was the total price paid by the government for and in connection with the said purchase ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes.
2. $1.75 per foot was paid for the land taken.
3. Two cheques. One in favour of Laura Murphy and E. Lemieux, agent of the Department of Justice, for $7,336.40; and the other in favour of the estate of the late Sir J. A. Chapleau and E. Lemieux, agent of the Department of Justice, for $8,252.60.
4. The total price paid for the land taken was, $15,589.

USE OF GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'MINTO.'

Mr. BELL asked :

1. Was the government steamer 'Minto' sent from Pictou to Magdalen Islands, on May 18, to convey certain passengers ?
2. Were the passengers in question engaged in any matter for the government ?
3. Did the regular mail boat leave on same day ? If so, why was the government steamer 'Minto' used to convey the persons in question ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine) :

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. I don't know.

APPOINTMENTS TO OFFICE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette)—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. How many members of the House of Commons, or ex-members of the House of Commons, have been appointed to offices of emolument under the Crown since 13th July, 1896 ; (b) what are the names of such members, or ex-members, of the House of Commons ; (c) to what offices were they so appointed ?
2. How many members of the Senate, or ex-members of the Senate, have been appointed to offices of emolument under the Crown since 13th July, 1896; (b) what are the names of such members, or ex-members, of the Senate ; (c) to what offices were they so appointed ?
3. How many members, or ex-members, of the House of Commons have been appointed to the Senate since 13th July, 1896 ; (b) what are the names of such members, or ex-members, of the House of Commons ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would ask the hon. gentleman to move for a return.

REPORT OF COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to mention to the Prime Minister a fact that I have already brought to his attention. So far as this House is concerned, no documents whatever relating to the colonial conference have ever been brought down. It is true that a few members of parliament have been able to procure a copy of the documents which were laid on the Table of the Imperial House, but so far as this House is concerned, it is in absolute ignorance of any of the results of that colonial conference, unless the documents have been brought down some time during my absence. I mentioned this to the right hon. gentleman some time ago, and I understood from him at that time that there was no objection to bringing down the documents so that every one of them might be available and in the hands of every member of this House. It seems to me that is a very reasonable proposition. I would like, therefore, to ask the right hon. gentleman whether there is any objection to that. Also I would be glad if he would bring down any such documents that have not been laid on the Table of the imperial parliament and that may particularly concern the interest of this country as represented at the colonial conference. I would also ask that when the documents are brought down they should be printed with as much expedition as possible, so that they may be in the hands of hon. members on both sides of the House before the conclusion of the session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that there are no other documents to be brought down or in existence than those contained in the Imperial Blue-book. With regard to the advisability of having the blue-book printed for the information of the members of the House, that is a reasonable request, and steps shall be taken immediately with that object in view.

SUPPLY—THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I propose, with the permission of the House, before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, to make a general statement, as has been customary, respecting the Intercolonial Railway. In doing so, let me first make reference to the operations of the railway for the past year. The earnings of the road for the year ending 30th June, 1902, were as follows :

RECEIPTS, 1902.

Passengers	$1,770,941
Freight	3,644,513
Mails and express	255,921
Total	5,671,385

For the purpose of comparison I give the receipts for the year ending 30th June 1901 :

RECEIPTS, 1901.

Passengers	$1,607,166
Freight	3,121,006
Mails and express	244,063
Total	4,972,235

This shows an increase for the year ending 30th June, 1902, over the year previous, of $699,150. There were in operation 1,314 miles of railway in both years. The earnings per mile were, for the year 1902, $4,313, and for the year 1901, $3,782, or an increase in the earnings per mile of $531. The gross earnings per train mile for 1902 were $93.46, as against $79,39 for 1901. You will observe from this statement that the increase in the passenger traffic in 1902 over 1901 amounted to $164,000, while the increase in the freight receipts over the year 1901 were $523,500, making a total increase of about $700,000 in the results of the business for the year.

I have here a comparison between the receipts for the year 1902 and those in the year 1896, which was the year preceding that in which I took charge of the department :

RECEIPTS IN 1896 AND 1902 COMPARED.

	1896.	1902.	Increase for 1902.
Passengers	$ 971,000	$1,770,941	$ 799,600
Freight	1,788,800	3,644,513	1,855,700

This shows that the freight receipts in 1902 amounted to about $200,000, more than double those of 1896, while the passenger receipts fell only $174,000 short of being double those of 1896. Now, in order that the comparison of the volume of receipts between the two years may be absolutely fair, I have added the percentage of increased mileage so as to place up the receipts of 1896 on the same basis as those of 1902. The increased mileage was fifteen per cent ; and allowing for that, I find that the increase of 1902 over 1896 was, for passengers $653,822, and for freight $1,587,379. The receipts from mail and passenger express services, of course, are relatively small, and the difference in favour of 1902 is $28,921. If you allow for the fifteen per cent mileage, showing in favour of 1902 under this head would be something less than that amount.

Now, let me turn to the statement of the gross earnings and working expenses and compare these. As you have heard, the gross earnings for 1902 were $5,671,385. The working expenses for that year were $5,574,563, leaving net earnings for the year ending 30th June, 1902, of $96,822. A comparison of the working expenses of 1902 with 1896, making the addition for the mileage of 1896 to bring it up to that of 1902, produces the following results :

Working expenses, 1902	$5,574,563 02
do do 1896	3,464,751 00
Increase, 1902 over 1896	2,069,812 00

Mr. CLANCY. Would that include the rentals ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That includes rentals in all calculations. I will give you later the figures showing the items of working expenses, particularly that portion which goes to the maintenance and betterment of the road. However, the details which I am now about to furnish will answer the purposes of my present statement. The chief items in this general branch of expenses include all moneys expended in the maintenance of the roadway and the works connected therewith, repairs to locomotives and cars, their renewal, and all other expenses which maintain and improve the character of the road and its equipment. These expenses in 1902 amounted to $2,030,930, while in 1896, adding the fifteen per cent mileage to make the comparison absolutely fair, the total amount expended for these purposes was $1,532,077, or a difference in round figures of $500,000. That is to say, in the year 1902 we spent out of the earnings of the road in the betterment of the road, in the improvement of its equipment and in those directions which go towards enhancing the value and capacity of a railway, half a million more money than was expended in 1896 for the same purposes upon an equal amount of mileage. And we did that and at the same time, at the end of the year, we came out with a surplus of $96,000 and upwards.

Now, let me depart for one moment from a further examination of the conditions and operation of the railway for the past year, to give you a statement, so far as, and down to as late a period as, it is possible to make it out, of the operations for the current year. The statement which I am about to furnish brings us down to the end of the month of March. We have not yet received a statement of the results down to the end of April. I give them to the House as far as they are available. Our earnings for the nine months just past of the current year run up to $4,745,000. The receipts for the corresponding period of last year were $4,184,000, an increase of $561,000 in the gross earnings for the nine months of the current year. For the same period this year the working expenses were $4,775,000, as compared with $4,187,500 for the corresponding period of last year, an increase of $570,000. The earnings for the nine months were $4,745,000, the working expenses for the nine months were $4,775,500. The excess of working expenses over earnings was $30,500. On the 31st March last year, we had a deficit of $60,000, while on the 31st March, 1901 we had a deficit of $130,000, and yet at the end of the fiscal year 1902, we had the surplus which I have stated of $96,800. Now, I may, perhaps, take a moment to furnish the House with a little explanation as to why this ordinarily occurs.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before passing from that would the hon. gentleman say what was the amount expended upon capital account up to March 31st ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must beg my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) not to interrupt me on the question of capital at this stage. The question of capital does not alter this statement nor its bearing to the extent of a hair's breadth.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It was just for my own information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not taking into account one copper of capital outlay in any particular.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It was for my own information, and not for the purpose of affecting the hon. gentleman's argument at all. If the hon. gentleman has it, I would like to have it, but if he has not, I do not wish it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not hesitate to give it to the hon. gentleman now, but it would be very inconvenient to break into the statement and speak about the amount expended upon capital account. I will give the hon. gentleman the information in due course.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I wish to apologise to the hon. gentleman. He was giving the amount expended and the receipts, and I thought perhaps, in the same table from which he got the information, the officers of the department would have given the total amount of the expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am endeavouring to give a statement of the amount which goes into consolidated revenue account, or in other words, the gross earnings of the road on one side and the expenditure incurred in the operating of the railway on the other, and so far as the question of capital expenditure is concerned, it does not in the remotest degree affect the matter one way or the other. If we had spent less money in maintaining the railway, and if a comparison had been made between previous years and this past year, and it appeared from that comparison that I had expended less money in the maintenance of the road, and that I had taken money from capital account and spent it for the purpose of keeping up the road, then I could understand the relevancy of my hon. friend's desire to get this information. It does not bear upon it in any particular at all. I have shown that we spent upon the actual operation of the railway out of earnings, not out of capital, $500,000 more than was expended in 1896, which is a fair average year under the hon. gentleman's administration. I claim the benefit of the comparison. I have shown that we were in a much better position in operating the railway in 1902 than my hon. friend was in 1896.

When my hon. friend interrupted me, I was about to offer an explanation. There is a portion of the year in which the road is more expensively operated than in other portions of the year, and when the business is not as flourishing as during other months. It happens that during the winter months, December, January, February and running into March, it costs more to maintain and operate the line, and that the business is not usually so large; so that every year you make a poorer showing to the end of March than you are able to make when the year closes, because, after that, your expenses for maintenance are less and your receipts are larger. We were able in 1902 to convert what had been a deficit of $60,000, on the 31st March, into a surplus of $96,800 on the 30th June. My estimate is that at the end of the present fiscal year we will be able to show, everything going well, and from present indications I think I can speak with some confidence, a surplus of at least $125,000. It is fair to call the attention of the House to the important and significant fact to which I have just pointed, that out of the earnings which came from the traffic of the railway in the year 1902, we spent in the same proportion which had been spent under the previous administration, and we had out of these earnings $500,000 more which we were able to spend in the same direction for the betterment and improvement of the road. If we had spent no more, and I want to impress that fact, because it is a significant fact, upon the attention of the House—if we had spent no more in the maintenance and in improvements upon the road and its equipment than had been spent by our predecessors, I would have been able to come down to parliament and say that instead of having a surplus of $96,800 I had a surplus of $596,000.

My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) laughs at that, but there is no ground upon which he can ridicule that statement. Where did the money come from? It did not come from the skies. It did not come from capital; it did not come from the issue of bonds; it was not given to us—it was earned; earned by the carriage of the traffic upon the road. We earned $500,000 more or we would not have been able to expend $500,000 more. That is a significant fact, therefore, because the road is better by $500,000. Mark you, when I speak of the $500,000, I am not speaking of money that has been spent in earning the receipts which come from the carriage of traffic; I am speaking of money that has been spent upon the equipment and the betterment of the road. And if we had the money to spend it must come out of the earnings, and if it came out of earnings, as it undoubtedly did come, then we must have been able to manage the road and carry the traffic upon the road under more favourable conditions than my hon. friend (Hon. John Haggart) was able to do. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) had spent $500,000 upon betterments and improvements in 1896, he would have had a deficit of $555,000 instead of a deficit of $55,000. There is no getting away from that; the fact is too clear to need elaborate argument to support it.

If there were no other fact to which I could call the attention of this House and of the country in pointing to our efficient administration of the Intercolonial Railway, I would be able to claim from this fact alone that the Intercolonial Railway had certainly come under an improved management, and is showing greatly improved results. But, before I conclude, Sir, I hope to be able to point to a number of other convincing facts which will serve to impress upon the mind of parliament and upon the mind of the people of the country, the fact that the condition of the Intercolonial Railway has been, under our management, improved year after year until it presents a more favourable spectacle to-day than ever before in its history. Let me give some of the details which go to make up this item of working expenses and which are entirely included within that class of working expenses which mean the improvement of the roadbed and the improved equipment of the railway. I have calculated these upon the basis of the same number of miles operated as in 1896, because I want to be absolutely fair to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart). I want to treat him as though he had been handling a railway of exactly the same mileage as I am handling. Any other comparison would not be fair, and I do not want any comparison which is not fair, because being unfair it would militate against the value and force of the statement which I shall make. I take the actual expenditures which the hon. gentleman made in 1896 for the purpose of improving and maintaining the railway, and I add to that expenditure 15 per cent, which is the difference between the mileage then and now. Taking the different items of these accounts which I will read to the House, and comparing them with my own, I will be able to show where the improvement comes in.

Repairs and renewals of engines, tenders, &c.	$265,000	$375,000
Repairs of water tanks, pumps, &c.	35,000	40,000
Renewals and repairs to passenger cars.	74,750	117,400
Postal and baggage cars.	22,000	31,200
Freight cars, &c.	235,000	304,000
Maintenance of the road.	406,000	492,000
Rails and fastenings.	62,100	69,500
Ties.	110,000	192,500
Timber, lumber, bridges, cattle-guards, &c.	94,870	181,000
Buildings and platforms.	71,000	100,000
Tools.	9,500	17,500

Under these different headings I have given the amounts chargeable in 1896 and chargeable in identically the same way in 1902, and they show that there was $526,000 more expended in 1902 than was expended in 1896.

Mr. BELL. How much more in 1902.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $526,800 to be accurate. That is out of earnings, outside of what may have been expended out of capital. Out of the money that was earned on the Intercolonial Railway in the carriage of freight and the doing of business, there was $526,000 more expended in 1902 than in 1896. But that is not the case for the year ending the 30th of June, alone. That has been done year after year. We are improving the character of the road. I do not care who the man is who uses that road he will say that it never was before in the condition that it has been in for the last few years, and it is improving every year.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I claim that the Intercolonial Railway is improving year after year, and without making an unfounded boast, I can claim that the road is a credit to the government of the country, and to the people of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a credit to us, both in respect to its roadway and in respect to its equipment, and for the information of hon. friends opposite, I will say that it is going to be better still.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been surprised to hear one hon. gentleman opposite who is a keen critic of the Intercolonial Railway, and of the railway administration of the government, and who has had, as I am informed, a good deal of experience with regard to railway administration in some form or other; I was surprised to hear him state that in his opinion it cost $1.10 to earn every dollar that is earned on the Intercolonial Railway. Perhaps that statement was not made seriously and perhaps the hon. gentleman did not intend it to be taken seriously, but he made the statement with all seriousness in appearance, and I think he was not unwilling that the impression should be entertained in the country this government railway was in the lamentable condition that the more business it did the worse it was off, and that for every dollar we earned on the road we were actually laying out $1.10. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can throw some light upon that matter now. But, if the statement be true, let us see what is the result of it. In 1896 with $3,000,000 worth of business, there was a deficit of $55,000, and his conclusion would be that with the same amount of money expended in proportion upon the road, and upon equipment, and in various other ways in connection with the operating of the railway, we might properly show, without being subject to criticism, a deficit of $110,000 on $6,000,000 worth of business, figuring on the results obtained on the Intercolonial Railway during the last year of the Conservative administration. If with $3,000,000 of business there is a deficit of $55,000, with $6,000,000 of business there should be a deficit of $110,000. But what was the actual result? It was not, as my hon. friend, with his $1.10 theory, would have us believe. If his theory was correct, and if on $3,000,000 of business, $55,000 was a proper deficit, then on $3,000,000 more business, you would have to add $300,000 more deficit—a total deficit of $355,000. My hon. friend would have us believe that that might have been the result of the administration of this railway by the government. The actual result, however, for the year ending the 30th of June last, was $96,000 of a surplus, after $520,000 odd had been expended for betterments and improvements over and beyond what was laid out by my predecessor, and $55,000 to be added as representing the deficit which the hon. gentleman had in 1896. You can thus see, without going into any further figures or making any closer inspection of the situation, what the difference was between the two administrations. $670,000 is the difference between the operation of the railway under existing conditions, and its operation under the conditions which my hon. friend experienced.

Now, it is only fair to say that it may be held while it costs you a certain amount of money to operate the railway with gross earnings of $3,000,000, it ought not to cost you relatively as much when you are earning $6,000,000, because the fixed charges would be only very slightly increased in earning the additional $3,000,000. I want to put the case quite fairly, as my hon. friend would put it. While some allowance would have to be made for that consideration, in the case of an ordinary corporation railway, it is not true to any considerable extent with respect to the Intercolonial, and I will tell you why. A corporation railway has its bonds and its stock dividends to pay; its bonded obligation is a fixed charge, which does not increase with the increase of business. Therefore, it would not be fair to expect such a railway to show equally favourable results on a small business as on a large. But in the case of the Intercolonial, we have no bonded obligations.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No interest to pay.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no interest to pay; there are no fixed charges or, if there are any, they are very trifling. The general head office expenses are the only fixed charges which would remain whether the business increased or diminished. But these would amount to a very trifling sum and would not be sufficient to vary or alter the calculation in any material degree. But I maintain that I am entitled, in the judgment of any person who is at all disposed to consider this question with a fair mind, to have him ask, To what is it due that these larger results have been achieved? Why is it that these large expenditures out of earnings have been possible? To what is it due? That is the question. I have pointed out that it is not due to any sum of money which the government have borrowed on the public credit and handed over to the officers of the Intercolonial to be expended. I have shown you that there was but one source from which the money came—the surplus earnings over the cost of carrying and handling the goods; and I am entitled, I think, to claim some credit for that, and I will show you where and how and why these improved results have been achieved.

One of the reasons is, I frankly confess it, because we have made a connection with Montreal. That the connection has been made is, I think, due to the more favourable view which the government have taken of the Intercolonial Railway than was taken by our predecessors. For the readiness with which the government took up that project and made the effort to bring about better results on the railway, I think we are entitled to credit. That extension has already begun to bear fruit, though not to the full extent which we have a right to expect in the future. But the railway has made progress, and has achieved large results, and one of the means by which this has been brought about has been the extension to Montreal. Another has been the improvement or modernization of the road. That has done perhaps more than any other one thing to produce a larger percentage in the earnings over the cost of carrying and handling the freight. Let me just pause for a moment to show in one particular how much the modernization of the road has done.

The putting of larger locomotives capable of hauling heavier loads upon the railway has cut down enormously the cost of carrying and hauling the freight. I cannot too strongly enforce on the mind of parliament or on the people of the country this conviction, which is founded on absolute verity, that when the Intercolonial was running with little engines of from 45 to 50 tons, capable of hauling only 180 or 200 tons of freight, they required the same staff and practically the same cost of fuel and management that is required to carry from 800 to 1,000 tons. The margin of wages is a large and most important item in the whole account. When I tell you that in the outlay for working expenses, which has been stated to amount to $5,700,000 for last year, labour amounts to $3,500,000, you will see how large an element the question of wages is in this matter ; and when you are able to handle and carry freight in much larger quantities with the same expenditure of labour, you are beginning to achieve results that can be achieved in no other way. When I think over the matter, I become alarmed at the possibilities which lay before the Intercolonial if the condition of things which existed down to 1896 had been suffered to continue.

If the same volume of business we are now carrying had then been forced upon us, and if we had been compelled to handle it with the same kind of equipment and under the same conditions as then existed, our deficit would have been more likely a million per year instead of $55,000. With the extra equipment we have provided, we are able, on the same mileage, to do to-day a larger percentage of business and make a larger profit. My hon. friend was short of cars. In saying this I have no desire to cast any reflection upon his management, for nothing else could have been expected. But he certainly had not sufficient to do the business, because I find that he was paying from $60,000 to $80,000 per year, if my memory does not fail me, on car mileage to other companies. We have changed that. To-day we pay a little car mileage but very much less. I think we pay $50,000 per year less than the hon. gentleman did. We pay this much less because we have the cars. We had to get them and we bought them very largely on capital account, but it paid us to do so. Calculate three per cent on all the cars we have bought, and you will find that we save in car mileage sufficient to pay the interest on what these cars cost, which I think is very good and defensible business. My hon. friend had a balance of car mileage against him, and I had for some time also a balance against me, of from $60,000 to $72,000 per year. That represents what we had to pay other railway companies for the use of their cars when we had not sufficient of our own. During my hon. friend's administration and during a portion of my own, that amounted to from $60,000 to $72,000 per year. Well, Mr. Speaker, last year we had $16,800 to our credit on this account, so that we had made enough to wipe out the deficit in respect to car mileage and leave us $16,800 besides, making a total saving of $82,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand my hon. friend to say that there was a balance of $60,000 to $72,000 per year against us ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say against my hon. friend's administration alone because I had the same experience during some years, but as fast as we were able to get the new cars and put them on the line, the balance was lessened. We had to get the cars or we could not do the business, but the business we did warranted the expenditure, because last year we had a surplus to our credit, on the car mileage account of $16,800. Adding $16,800 to the average balance against us in the years I have referred to, and you get $82,000 as the actual saving effected between the former period and the present, and $82,000 comes very near paying the interest on $3,000,000 on freight cars alone.

Incidental to our putting ourselves in a position to do the business that was offering and to do it without absolute loss, we not only had to get heavier engines, but all the other essentials to placing heavier engines on the road had to be attended to. We could not begin to economize in our management until we got heavier rails, stronger bridges, longer sidings, larger engine houses, larger turning tables, improved equipment in all respects, and in addition put on a dining service with a better class of cars, which has borne results of a most fruitful character. But all this cost money. The results are the strongest possible proof of the wisdom of the policy we have adopted. They show that had we not pursued that course, we would have covered ourselves with absolute discredit as respects the ownership and the operation of the Intercolonial Railway.

I have by no means exhausted the extent of the showing which I am entitled to claim. I had furnished me by the general manager a carefully prepared statement of the conditions which existed in 1896 as compared with 1902, in regard to the cost of material, supplies, wages and other items, which go to make up working expenses. In 1896 the same number of employees, the same quantity of material, and all the other matters of expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway cost, compared with 1902, much less, and if I can prove this, I am entitled to all the benefits resulting from such comparison. I show you a surplus for the year ending 1902 of about $96,000, and I am able to do this notwithstanding the fact that we paid in wages last year on the Intercolonial Railway $240,000 more money than was paid in 1896 in respect of precisely the same number and class of employees. I am not seeking to make an unfair comparison, but am comparing the wages of exactly the same number and the same class of employees as the hon. gentleman had in 1896; and I tell this House that, in respect of that same number and that same class we took out of earnings in 1902, $240,000 more than he did in 1896 and distributed it among the employees. If we had not shown better results than my hon. friend was able to show—and this is the point I wish to make—we would have had a deficit of about $140,000 instead of any surplus whatever. The wages we pay are not excessive; no man will say that we pay more than we ought to pay or more than other railways are paying. But, if we paid $240,000 more in 1902 than the hon. gentleman paid for the same number and class of employees in 1896, I am entitled to claim that our showing for last year is $240,000 better than his would have been under the same conditions. Now, I come to the item of coal. On the same quantity of coal that was consumed on the road under my hon. friend's administration, we had to pay $150,000 more than he had to pay. That is so much additional charge on the road. If things were not improved in the administration some way or other, we should have been that much behind. And I would ask you to consider this point in this connection—and perhaps I should have mentioned it before—there has been no increase in the rates. We are earning no more for carrying a ton of freight than we did before; the charge is the same. The business may increase, the cost of material may be enhanced, wages may rise, but the tariff for carriage of traffic on the Intercolonial Railway remains stationery, and we must figure it on that basis—we cannot raise it because our expenses are higher. Hon. gentlemen opposite and their supporters and their press would be the first to raise an outcry against us did we add anything to the tariff of the Intercolonial, and the political consequences, the disadvantages to us and the advantages to them, would be so important that no government would think of undertaking it.

Mr. BELL. Do I understand the hon. minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) to say that rates are no higher now than they were in 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I do. I state to my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) that the rates are no higher now than they were in 1896. There may be an instance or two, some trifling particular, in which, in view of special circumstances, they are changed; but I am making a general statement with respect to this, and I say without fear of successful contradiction—I think I ought to know if it were otherwise—that the rates are the same practically now as they were in 1896, in fact the same as they have been ever since the Intercolonial was established and put into operation. They may be a little lower in some particulars than they were at first, but they certainly are no higher. I have stated that we spent $151,000 more for coal than did our predecessors. Then, for stores and supplies of the same quantities and kinds that were procured in 1896, the prices in 1902 applied to that quantity would have caused an increased expenditure of $131,000. So, we have these three items—$241,000 for wages, $151,000 for coal and $131,000 for stores. Add these to the $521,000 spent in bettering the road and you have over a million dollars actually paid out in the year 1902 over and above the proportionate expenditure of 1896. And they had a deficit of $55,000 while we, notwithstanding all, have a surplus of $96,000.

Now, it may not, perhaps, be of great interest to the House, but I would like to make the statement that, if my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) as head of the department that had to employ on the Intercolonial in 1896 as many men as the increased traffic has made it necessary for us to employ in 1902, the amount he would have had us pay over his actual expenditure would have been not merely $240,000 but far more. Mr. Pottinger had a very careful examination made and he tells me that applying the rate of wages of 1896 to the present entire staff of the Intercolonial for the current year, the total amount of our increased payments of wages is $1,075,000—a very significant fact indeed.

Now, there is, no doubt, a very widespread impression with regard to the Intercolonial, that, because it is owned and operated by the government, it must necessarily be a failure so far as financial results are concerned—that no government can hope to make a good financial showing with regard to the operation of any railway it owns. I hold that no such sweeping condemnation is justified by anything that has ever occurred with regard to the management or operation of the Intercolonial Railway. It is unjust to the Intercolonial, and I do not think the people of the country wish to form any unjust opinion, or to condemn the government railway unjustly, but would be glad to welcome facts which would disprove and disabuse their minds of any such erroneous view. It is not fair to condemn the management of the Intercolonial because large financial results have not been achieved in times past—and I include my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and his party in this general statement—because it is a government railway and is managed under government supervision. I do not think that the general idea prevails now to any extent which did prevail so largely, that political influences and political pressure and all these pulls that were alleged to exist upon the government railway, exist at present. In the first place I deny that they exist, but suppose they do exist, they are not reflected in any material degree in the results of the operation of the road.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend says hear, hear. He knows that so far as it is humanly possible, the Intercolonial is not a political machine, it never has been a political machine to my knowledge within the past six or seven years. The officers of the Intercolonial are not allowed to issue passes and distribute them at election times to one political party, or to any political party. People who want to use the Intercolonial, whether Liberals or Conservatives, during election times are treated precisely upon the same basis, and they have got to pay for their excursion tickets if they want to travel over the road. There is no discrimination, and as regards political influence the operations of the railway suffer very little harm indeed from that cause. I will tell the House why In nearly all the branches of the management of that railway the staff is organized upon a basis that recognizes seniority and merit for promotion. You have got to start at the bottom. You cannot put one man over the heads of other men who are his seniors in service, or who have more merit. That system exists today in almost the entire service. Therefore, the field for political influence is very limited, except in respect to appointments for the first places, and there it is legitimate and proper. But when recommendations are made to the officials of the road by our friends to fill vacancies that may occur, before any of these people can be appointed they have to submit to a test to show they are qualified to discharge the duties, and if they are not, I do not think they are retained in the service. So you cannot say that political influences are in operation.

But if political influences are so harmful as they are alleged to be in the government management of railways, how is it that government railways are so frequent in other countries ? Not only are the sweeping inferences which people draw with regard to the inefficiency of government management not warranted by the facts, but I will prove to a demonstration that even if there were political influences, they are not reflected in the financial results. If government railway management of railways is successful in other countries, why should it not be so in Canada? What is there in the condition of Canada that makes it an exception to all rules ? Why is it that government railways can be operated in the four corners of the world, in Europe, Asia and Africa, in Italy, in Germany, in the Australian colonies, where governments own roads and operate them successfuly, and they cannot be operated successfully in Canada ? Take Australia ; the government railways show a profit of three and a half or four per cent upon the cost, and their railways as a rule cost twice as much to build as the Intercolonial has cost this country. Why is it that other countries can do this successfully ? Will anybody pretend to argue that there is not as much political pressure brought to bear in the management of government railways in Australia, or South Africa, as there is in Canada ? Why, Sir, there can be no justification for any such statement. There is no reason in the world why Canada should be singled out, why any one should say that while in all other parts of the world government railways are operated successfully, they are not operated successfully in Canada. The assertion that here political influence is detrimental to the efficiency and utility of government roads is not founded on fact ; it is a delusion, it is a prejudice. I would like to see that prejudice rooted out, because so long as it exists it is injuring the country, it is injuring our own institutions, and it is calculated to do a great deal of harm to Canada in the future.

Now, somebody may say : Why, in Australia the people were so dissatisfied with the government management that they changed the system and put their railways in the hands of a commission. Well, I believe some of them did so, but not all. There was dissatisfaction, but they did not propose to give up control of their railways altogether ; they proposed that the people should continue to hold them. But what occurred in Australia and New Zealand was this—I know it occurred in New Zealand. They found that under government administration they were building more railways than were really needed, they were building them in portions of the country where they were not self-sustaining, where there was not sufficient business to justify their construction. The public decided to try the experiment of putting the management in the hands of a railway commission. They tried the experiment and continued it for a few years, but not finding any better financial results, the consequence was that in 1893 the people came to the conclusion to go back to government management, and that is where they are to-day. All the time, however, whether the roads were under government management or under a commission, the result was that they paid a substantial return, sometimes larger and sometimes smaller, a substantial percentage of interest upon the outlay. I said that the railways in Australia cost twice as much to build as they do in Canada. In some cases they have cost $75,000 to $80,000 per mile, as compared with about half that cost on our own railways.

Now, when I am told that the Intercolonial does not pay, that as a general thing there is a deficit, that the income hardly ever meets the working expenses, I ask: Do you think that is due to the fact that it is a government institution? If you do, figure out what other roads are paying on the cost. We will say they are paying three or four per cent. Some roads, the Canadian Pacific Railway for instance, I suppose is paying five per cent. Why does not the Intercolonial pay an equal return upon the cost, somebody may ask. Well, three per cent upon the cost of the Intercolonial would amount to something over $2,000,000. Sir, will any sane man suppose, after reflecting a moment, that the difference between operating that road by the government and operating it by a company, maintaining the same rates, would amount to the sum of $2,000,000 in net results? Is there anybody so intensely prejudiced against the management of the Intercolonial by the government as to suppose that if this road were in the hands of a private corporation, and if that private corporation could not charge any heavier tolls than the Intercolonial does, that instead of having a surplus of $96,000, it would have a surplus of over $2,000,000?. In other words, $2,000,000 and upwards a year is wasted by reason of government ownership and because of political pressure. That is what it means. If it does not mean that, what does it mean?

I am going to ask the House to follow me through an examination of the question because I think it is of such importance as to warrant an examination, and we will see how much more economically other roads are being operated than the government road and what greater results they show than the government not only at present, but in times past as well. I am not going to distinguish against hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and in my own favour in this statement I am about to make. We paid $5,574,000 last year for working expenses. The political enormity, the devastation which results from government ownership must find itself somewhere within that $5,574,000 of working expenses because the working expenses would have to be reduced by $2,000,000 before you could get any $2,000,000 results. These $2,000,000 must represent the extravagance, waste and mismanagement necessarily incident to the operation of the railway by the government.

Now, let us see where that is going to land us. The earnings of the Intercolonial Railway were in round figures $6,000,000. Ordinarily the railways of this country which are operated successfully by railway companies think that they are doing very well if they get 40 per cent of net earnings out of their gross receipts, and putting our earnings at $6,000,000 we would get around to the $2,000,000 basis I spoke of a moment ago, provided our working expenses were one-third of what they ought to be, and provided that this road was being operated under conditions which would apply if a company were operating it, and under which the government is absolutely unable to operate it according to the criticisms which are passed. The working expenses, as you see, were more than would produce that, and they added up to $5,574,000. Where has this money gone to? I am going to give you a statement showing precisely where these working expenses have gone. I am going to give you the different classes of expenditure, and I think I can give them to you in such a way that you can see clearly the conclusion to which I am pointing, and I think you will agree with the conclusion at which I shall arrive.

First, we have paid $5,574,000 in working expenses. Let us deduct by the process of elimination. The first item that goes to make up that $5,000,000 and upwards is the item of wages, and the item of wages sums up $3,537,000. I have said, and I repeat that the wages of all the employees on the Intercolonial Railway, except those of two or three at the head and except the clerical staff, amount to $233,000, are scheduled and classified, at a rate according to a year after year increase and length of service, and scheduled by agreements which have been arrived at with the different organizations to which the men belong. I say that we do not pay any more than we ought to pay, taking into consideration the present cost of living. We cannot cut them down. You could not attempt to take any portion of this $3,537,000 and point to any of the items and say there is room for economy there, there is waste here, there is extravagance somewhere else. You will have to go into some other field if you are going to find wasteful and extravagant expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway under government ownership as compared with corporation railways. You would not find any field in the item of wages in which to operate in the way of making a reduction. If you take $3,500,000 out of $5,500,000 you have only $2,000,000 remaining. Now, you have to get in all your fine work in the way of this political influence within that $2,000,000. Let us see what is the next big item. The next big item is coal. We pay over $1,000,000 for coal. I say we do not pay one dollar more than we are compelled to pay—not one dollar. We ask for public tenders and competition and we buy our coal at the lowest figure we can get it for. and there are many members of parliament who know that to be a fact. If we can we take the coal companies by the throat and make them reduce their price, but if we cannot, we have to pay them what they demand. There is no field within the area of the coal item, for exploiting these economical ideas and explaining where political influence, corruption, pressure and wrongdoing hold high carnival. Therefore, you must take off three and a half millions for wages and you must take off another million for coal, and that makes four and a half millions. That leaves you only a million. Now, you will have to find this waste and extravagance within this million. What goes to make up this million ? We pay for printing and advertising $50,000. We may possibly pay a little too much for advertising. We may possibly advertise a little more freely than we ought to, but it is only a mare's nest after all. It does not go very far towards explaining about this $2,000,000. It does not reach out far in that direction. Fifty thousand dollars at all events is paid, and $50,000 will continue to be paid, or in that ratio, and I want to say right here that other railways are just as much subject to the pressure of their friends and outsiders in the way of advertising as the Intercolonial Railway is. You ask railway men and they will frankly acknowledge it to you. They are not free from this sort of pressure. They want to accommodate their friends, they want to stand well with the public, they want to stand well with the different great corporate bodies and with parliaments, and they show to those people with whom they want to be on friendly terms a good deal of consideration. They are just as subject, just as open to pressure and influence as the Intercolonial Railway or the officers who may be connected with it. Now, we have rentals amounting to $140,000. There is no field for economy there. We pay $67,000 for our ferries and we pay for land damages some $20,000. We leave, therefore, for general stores and covering the other outlays $750,000. Now if it were all waste; if the whole $750,000 for stores were not required, and we threw it all away, it would still be a long distance from explaining the difference between the 3 per cent, the earnings on capital of the corporation railways, and the results on the Intercolonial Railway. I have an explanation to make with regard to this item for stores. I venture to say that we buy our stores by public tender and by open and public competition to the extent of nine-tenths of the total quantity. I am hazarding a conjecture there, but I think I am not far astray when I say that nine-tenths of our stores are bought in that way. Now I speak with knowledge on the question, and I say that if the railway companies will allow anybody access to their books, who has curiosity enough to inquire, as to how they conduct this department, I will challenge a comparison between what we pay for our stores and what is paid by other railway companies for their stores, and I hold that the comparison will be favourable to us. People seem always very anxious to supply the government and the competition is exceedingly keen amongst them, and no tenders are accepted at a higher rate than the lowest offer provided the articles are up to our specifications. I am proud to say that this branch is managed by officers who are most economical and careful men. I do not think it would be possible to find in the service of any of the railway companies, more competent, more careful, more economical and more cautious men than those gentlemen on the Intercolonial Railway to whom the purchasing of these supplies is largely entrusted. There is no field for any considerable reduction in that respect. There will, of course, always be little things come in, but take it from first to last, I do not think there would be a difference of $100,000, even including such things as additional stations which we give for the accommodation of the public more than would be supplied by private railway companies. I say without fear of successful contradiction, that all this talk about the management of the Intercolonial Railway by the government, being wasteful, is a mere bugaboo and will not bear scrutiny.

Mr. CLANCY. Why does the hon. gentleman not show results then ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) will show a little patience I will show him results which will make a favourable impression on his mind, whether he will acknowledge it or not. There is no more efficient test as to whether the government is managing the railway extravagantly or wastefully, or whether it is managing it as economically as other railway companies, than can be found in the sworn returns which according to law are furnished by the railway companies year after year, and which returns are open to inspection by any one who desires to inspect them. Out of curiosity, I have had a careful abstract made of a comparison of the different items on the Intercolonial Railway with the two great railways, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will give the House the result of that comparison and let the House judge if these figures are not potential in favour of my argument.

The proportion of the earnings of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway to each one hundred dollars of operating expenses is as follows :

	G.T.R.	C.P.R.	I.C.R.
Proportion of earnings to each $100 of operating expenses..	$154	$161	$173

Take that into your minds please, and keep it there. For every $100 of operating expenses, the Canadian Pacific Railway gets $61; the Grand Trunk Railway, $54, and the Intercolonial Railway, $73 on the results of last year. This sworn return gives the cost of operating, and the expenses and charges in the different branches, and the following is the result :

	C.P.R.	G.T.R.	I.C.R.
Total operating expenses per train mile..	$1 11	$0 93	$0 91

There is a slight fraction to be added to the cents in these figures, but they show that on the Intercolonial Railway it was less than the Grand Trunk Railway per train mile, and a great deal less than the Canadian Pacific Railway. It shows that we have operated the Intercolonial Railway at less cost—and that includes the working expenses; not capital, not interest, not dividends, nothing but the actual handling of the trains—we operated the Intercolonial Railway at less cost than the Grand Trunk Railway, and at a good deal less than the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is there any evidence there that the management of the Intercolonial Railway has been defective or that it does not compare favourably with these other lines? These figures show that we are not wasteful and that we operated our trains with as much economy and indeed with more economy than the other two great railways.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When you come to the maintenance of way works and the buildings per train mile, we find the following results : The Canadian Pacific Railway spent twenty-six cents and a fraction; the Grand Trunk Railway spent twenty cents and a faction, and the Intercolonial Railway nineteen cents and a fraction. We were not very wasteful there at all events. We are about on the same standing as the Grand Trunk Railway and quite a little better than the Canadian Pacific Railway. For every mile of railway we compare favourably with these roads in both these directions. Now let us take the working and repairs of engines per train mile, and we find that it cost the Canadian Pacific Railway thirty-five cents and a fraction; the Grand Trunk Railway thirty-two cents and a fraction; and the Intercolonial Railway thirty-three cents and a fraction. The cost of working and repairs of cars per train mile was as follows : Canadian Pacific Railway seven cents and a fraction; Grand Trunk Railway eleven cents and a fraction; Intercolonial Railway ten cents and a fraction. The cost of general operating expenses was as follows per train mile : Canadian Pacific Railway forty-one cents; Grand Trunk Railway twenty-eight cents and a fraction, Intercolonial Railway twenty-eight cents and a fraction. Under all these different headings the figures of the other railway companies, given in sworn returns, do not make an unfavourable comparison with the results on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. gentleman give us the comparison of the earnings per train mile ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given it to you.

Mr. CLANCY. You are giving the expenses, I want the earnings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am furnishing the hon. member with the return as it is required to be handed in by all the railways according to law. I am not picking one thing out of one place and another out of another and putting them together. I am giving the return just as it has been brought down.

Mr. CLANCY. What I understood the hon. minister to give us was the relative proportion of expenses. I am asking him if he can give the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway per train mile in comparison with those of other railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No ; I am just giving you what has been returned. I think the earnings per train mile will be in the same proportion, or perhaps less than those of other railways. I am not stating that as within my knowledge, but simply as my present judgment warrants me. Now, in view of such statistical and reliable facts as I am presenting, it is a fair conclusion that the Intercolonial Railway has no right to get a black eye, or to be treated in the sneering way in which it is generally spoken of, as a failure, because it does not produce the same net results that other railways do ; and it is unfair to ascribe these consequences in any material degree to political pressure or to government operation. I think that if any gentleman, knowing the conditions that exist on the Intercolonial, were to converse with the managers of any other railway on this subject, they would say that it is a mistake to suppose that the government road is in an exceptional position in that regard, or is more subject to the influences to which reference has been made. I had a conversation with a prominent railway man, a president of one of the railways in the United States, only a few months ago, and in the course of the conversation I opened up this subject. I told him that the government railway was rather prejudiced in the minds of the people because it was said : You cannot resist pressure, and that must always be detrimental to the management of a government railway. He said : 'I do not know to what extent pressure of that kind exists in your country, but I can tell you that we in the United States are not by any means free from it. Although we are operating a company railway, we are subject to it. Do not run away with the impression that corporation railways are exempt from such disabilities ; they exist with respect to them just as you say it is alleged they exist with respect to your government railway.'

Now, the earnings and working expenses of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway for the year ending the 30th of June last were as follows :—

	Grand Trunk.	Canadian Pacific.
Gross earnings	$22,211,813 80	$36,866,875.14
Working expenses ..	14,397,692 81	22,823,200 39
Net earnings	$ 7,814,120 99	$14,043,674 75

If we were to earn a couple of million dollars in excess of our working expenses, our showing would be relatively as good as theirs. Well, I am going to come down to the kernel of this matter, and I am going to show you why we do not earn that much. I am going to show you that the fault does not lie in the management of the road, nor in the fact that it is owned by the government. The fact is not due to any wastefulness, extravagance or wrong-doing of any kind, nor to any causes that are not incidental to other railways as well as government railways. There are two causes. One is a greater cause than the other. I will refer to the minor cause first, though it is not very much inferior to the other. The minor cause is the location of the railway. There is no question that the Intercolonial was not located with reference to business or commercial considerations. I have remarked before, and I remark now, that there was one particular in which political considerations did fatally injure the Intercolonial Railway. That injury was done, not merely once, but for the entire life of the railway. The location of the Intercolonial was most unhappy from the point of view of achieving financial results, and was due entirely to those considerations of state—imperial, if you will—war considerations, large and potent considerations, which were thought to overbalance altogether business considerations. As everybody knows, the location is very unfavourable, not only because of the enormous distances between important points and between the termini of the railway, but because of the inferior character, from a productive business point of view, of a large portion of the country which it traverses. A large portion of the railway does not yield returns at all commensurate with the cost of its operation. That important portion between St. John and Halifax is, I think, paying quite a handsome return over its cost and the expenses of operation ; but the rest of the railway is not, and that is due to the enormous distances over which the traffic has to be hauled, to the small amount of local traffic which comes to the road, and to another consideration of a very potent character, which is, that at almost every important point on the road, at all events from Halifax nearly to Montreal, it has to face water competition. The Intercolonial Railway has settled land only on one side of it ; it has water on the other side. It is a one-sided institution in that respect, and it suffers under that disability.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). And the Canadian Pacific Railway on the other side.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and the Canadian Pacific Railway on the other side. But that is not all. That disability cannot be removed. I doubt if the other can be removed. I had a careful study made and a careful statement furnished to me by the traffic officers of the Intercolonial Railway, as to the general traffic, of tolls and freight charges which govern on the Intercolonial Railway and those which govern on the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway; and the result of that statement, keeping well on the safe side, is that the rates upon those two railways are from fifty to one hundred per cent higher than those upon the Intercolonial Railway. I am not going to suggest that the rates upon either of the two other roads are higher than they ought to be. I have not the requisite knowledge which would enable me to pass an opinion. But I do know that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway are even lower than I have stated, when you consider the question of distances and the question of scarcity of traffic. It goes without saying that it costs no more money to carry a thousand tons of freight at $10 than at $5 per ton. If then you add fifty per cent, which is the minimum excess of the rates of freights on the other roads as compared with the Intercolonial Railway, to the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway in the carriage of freight, our revenue would be increased by that amount and our expenditure would not be increased one farthing. Let me make a calculation. The gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway on its traffic, not including passenger traffic, for the year 1902 were $3,900,000. Add fifty per cent to that to bring it up to this minimum excess, and you get $1,950,000 of addition. In other words, if we could have collected on the Intercolonial Railway the minimum rates charged by other railways, we would have had $1,950,000 more revenue from freight than we did, and this would have brought our total earnings up to $7,600,000, including passenger traffic. And our working expenses would not have been increased. Deducting working expenses, we would have had a surplus for 1902 of $2,046,000. My hon. friend smiles, but these figures cannot be gainsaid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I smile when I think of what we have missed by not putting up the rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would smile on the other side of my face if I were asked to put up the rates. We have no right to put up the rates. Nobody expects it. If my hon. friend were in charge, he would not put them up, or if he did, he would take them down again. We cannot put them up. The rates on the Intercolonial Railway are no higher than those which were imposed at the time when part of it was owned and operated by the government of Nova Scotia and another part by the government of New Brunswick. The rates are, I think, substantially the same. When confederation was formed, the Dominion took over the road under the conditions and rates then existing, and from that time down the people of this country, the government and parliament, have all agreed that these rates and conditions should continue, and they exist to-day. Another reason why it would not be possible to raise the rates to any appreciable extent is to be found in the fact that the Intercolonial Railway is subjected at every point to a keen and active water competition. If you were to raise the rates, you would find that you would not get the business. I repeat that we would have $2,000,000 better results if we were to be treated upon even less than the present basis upon which the other two systems are conducting their business. This is a material and fair argument, because those who condemn the management of the Intercolonial Railway do not condemn it because it does not put up its rates. They do not look at that side of the account. They condemn it on account of wastefulness and extravagance and wrong-doings which they never specify and cannot indicate, and because the financial results do not make any kind of comparison with those of the other great railways. You have therefore $2,046,000 which would have gone into the treasury of this country if the rates on freights had been fifty per cent higher than were charged last year. That would have shown forty per cent earnings to sixty per cent working expenses, and everybody would have exclaimed 'what marvellously good management and administration.' You can always furnish evidence of that. All you have to do is tax the people a little heavier, make them pay a little more if possible, and you have this evidence of splendid administration. $2,046,000 would have paid three per cent nearly on the whole cost of the Intercolonial Railway, which is just as good as either of these other companies are doing. Take the rates in the Australian colonies, and you will find that they are a good deal higher than the rates on which I based my argument.

Mr. CHARLTON. Higher than our rates with fifty per cent added ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, higher than the minimum excess over ours. $2,000,000 might have been brought into the treasury if we could have added fifty per cent to our rates, but that money remained in the pockets of the people who have done business over the Intercolonial Railway. They have been taxed that much less, and if the Intercolonial Railway has relieved these people of $2,000,000 taxes and contributed besides in a material degree to the general improvement of business and the development of the country, I am not so sure that the people have not reaped as good results as if that money had gone into the treasury. So beneficial are these results that if the people were thoroughly cognizant of the advantages which have accrued to them from using the Intercolonial Railway—and these advantages are not confined to any one province by any means—they would never cavil at the results. And they would only wish that it had occurred to somebody in times past to construct a railway through their portion of the country instead of aiding to build railways to be owned and managed by private corporations. In making this defence of the Intercolonial management I appeal to the judgment and opinion of those who do business with the road, and I am sure that they will say that they are well satisfied with the manner in which they have been served and that they would be truly sorry if any change were made under which the tolls were changed so as to lay an additional burden on the traffic that is carried.

Now, Sir, I have pointed out these advantages, and I will here endeavour to give to the House a thorough and complete statement of the actual existing conditions. I do not know that, as respects this question of rates and tolls upon the road, the people of Canada have been as fully informed before as I have now informed them. I do not think there is any disadvantage in the people knowing these facts ; I think they are entitled to be apprised of them. And I believe that when they realize all that has been done by the government railroad in the development of these portions of Canada, and the increase of traffic with the other provinces, that the connection it affords has brought about, and when they realize that all this has been done at such a moderate cost to the country and has imposed so light a burden upon the people, I think they will realize as they have not realized before the magnificent property they possess in the Intercolonial Railway of Canada. I do not think they realize it now, but I hope they will come to that realization.

I am not making, I hope, any personal or individual claim in regard to these results. Only in a very small measure should I be entitled to do so. If I were to award credit for the showing we are able to make, I would award the greatest share to the good men and true, faithful in their duty and loyal to the public, who give their best attention and employ their best energies in the discharge of the duties connected with the Intercolonial service. I think they are entitled to great credit, indeed, I venture to say that you cannot travel over any railway in Canada on which you will find a better class of men, more attentive, more courteous, or are more deeply interested in their work and in the welfare of the road they serve. I am bound to say this in justice to the employees of the road, for so I have heard them spoken of by many who have travelled over the Intercolonial Railway. To these men I would award their proper measure of praise. I am only claiming for the government that we realized what the necessities of the hour demanded, we realized what would be desirable—nay, what would be imperative—if we would rescue the Intercolonial Railway from the alarming condition in which it was ; if we were to escape a continuance not merely of half million deficits, but of deficits far in excess of half a million ; realized that it was necessary that we should go to work in a business like way, that we should adopt modern methods, that we should act as men who knew that good results were to be achieved only by adopting the means necessary for the economical working of the railway and the carrying of its traffic. It was only because we were impressed with the importance and necessity of going about the working of the Intercolonial Railway from that point of view that I claim we are entitled to credit from the people of this country.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). The Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) began his statement concerning the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway with a comparison between the management of the present day and the management of 1896 under my regime. He accounted for a good deal of the large expenditure on revenue account by showing that large sums had been spent in the improvement and maintenance of the road. He made a comparison of the sums spent on maintenance out of revenue account last year and in 1896 which appears very favourable to his own administration. I could not take down all the items, but I shall have an opportunity later on of examining them, and, perhaps, of discussing them more in detail than it is possible for me to do just now. Fancy the minister charged with the management of the Intercolonial Railway, having nearly double the locomotive power and car accommodation that his predecessors had, claiming the extra amount expended in repairs to locomotives, tanks, cars and so on, as an extra sum spent in improving the road and enabling him to compare his management favourably with that of his predecessor. Then he goes on to say that the higher rates of wages paid to keep the road in repair makes a certain aggregate sum over that spent in 1896, and, assuming that the same amount of work is done per day by each man, the whole is to be counted as paid for the improvement of the road and is in favour of the management of the present day in comparison with that of 1896. The whole comparison is about as absurd a one as it is possible for a minister of the Crown to make. Because he spent $500,000 more than his predecessors in repairs to passenger cars, stations, roadbed, and so on, he claims this whole amount as an improvement of the road and a benefit to the country, and so much in his favour as compared with his predecessor. The whole thing was simply a part of the hon. gentleman's advocacy of the idea of the government road being extended from the present terminus perhaps of Georgian bay, perhaps to the prairies of the west, perhaps to the Pacific coast. I hear many supporters of the hon. gentleman voicing that opinion. But, before I am done, I think that if they are ready to take the Intercolonial Railway under its present auspices as a basis of judgment as to this proposition, they will hardly be so favourably impressed with it. Let me show what the hon. gentleman has expended on the road since he got into power, in 1897. I gave the figures a couple of years ago, but I would like to put them again before the country. If the country can calmly contemplate such an alarming expenditure—I am not going to say extravagant expenditure—on one of its important works as that which was made for the purpose of having the Intercolonial road extended to a terminus in the city of Montreal, and if they submit to it without complaint, it is their fault and not ours. Our duty is simply to draw the people's attention to the enormous expenditure which is being made by the hon. gentleman in the management of the Intercolonial Railway. In 1897 he expended on capital account, $145,142 over and above the receipts of the road. In 1898 he expended $252,367.20, in 1899, $1,081,929.94 ; in 1900, $1,796,348.29. In that year he purchased the Drummond Railway, for which he paid $1,459,000. In 1901 we find the expenditure still going up, for he expended on capital account $3,633,836.57. In 1902 he expended $4,665,590.80. Giving him credit for the $92,000 which he claims this year, there was a loss in operating the road of $418,029.39. Subsidies to the Victoria Bridge, $500,000. Now it was not for the purpose of interrupting the hon. gentleman in his remarks that I asked him for a monthly statement of the receipts and expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway, because I knew he had it, at least he ought to have it. He has a monthly statement of the amount which is likely to be expended, and the probable receipts of the next month. He gave us the expenditure on revenue account on the Intercolonial Railway until the 1st of March last, and the receipts from that road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not get any monthly statement, I get a monthly estimate of the actual expenditure on working accounts, and on earnings. I get no such monthly statement, except that when the accounts of the month are made up I get a statement of the working expenses of the month. I get the weekly statement of the earnings, and when the month is up and they are able to complete the statement, they send it forward as soon as they can. That will show both the earnings of the month and the working expenses. That is the only monthly statement I get.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentle not get the total expenditure on the Intercolonial during the month ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Does the hon. gentleman say he was in the habit of getting it ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so, except for working expenses of operating.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then it is left entirely to the officials down in Moncton to discriminate between the earning expenses or what should be attached to the revenue account and what should be attached to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, that is fixed in the appropriation.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways knows perfectly well that when I was Minister of Railways hundreds and thousands of items, amounting to sums of thousands and millions of dollars were charged to revenue account which are now charged to capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are wrong.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What I asked from the hon. gentleman was this. Surely he has a monthly statement of the receipts and expenditures on the Intercolonial. That is what I wanted. Then I wanted to know what was the amount of expenditure upon capital account up to the 1st of March last.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get that for the hon. gentleman, but I do not carry it in my head.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I asked him in the politest manner, I thought perhaps he had it before him when he was making his explanations. I am trying to show to the people of this country what has been expended, or what will be expended on the 1st of June next, on capital account, and what the deficits will be on the Intercolonial.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will give the hon. gentleman the information to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, he has got it then ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, but I can get it. There is no difficulty in getting it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then I am obliged to go to the estimates. I will give as nearly as possible the expenditure for the year. The amount voted for the Intercolonial for 1902-3 was $3,200,000, of which I see, appropriation not required, $978,800. I am debiting the minister only with what he has expended of that amount. It is possible that in the supplementary estimates a provision will have to be made for an expenditure during the year further than what is stated in these estimates, and I am pretty certain there will. However, the amount would be $2,281,200 that was expended on capital account last year. He has expended on the Prince Edward Island Railway, on capital account, $2,736,200, that is, adding the deficits from 1897 up to the present year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman complain of that expenditure ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am simply making a statement of the expenditure the hon. gentleman has made on railways. The hon. gentleman interrupted me a while ago, and he said that what I was saying did not affect the argument. What pertinence has it to the argument whether I object to the expenditure or not ? The amount expended, then, is $2,736,200. But there is besides a large amount, I see, to be added to the capital account in the current year, there is a large amount asked for the Intercolonial and a large amount for the Prince Edward Island Railway. We pay to the Grand Trunk Railway a certain sum every year, $140,000. Deducting the $140,000, which the hon. gentleman has a right to take to his credit the amount capitalized at 3 per cent which has been paid out of the revenue of the Intercolonial for the present year, is $4,526,607. So there was actually expended in cash, $18,798,670, or adding these two amounts together, $23,325,331, from 1897 down to the first of June next. Supposing, Sir, we had a government railway stretching from Montreal across to the Pacific, and supposing it was under the management of the Minister of Railways, what would be the amount expended in five years on capital expenditure on that road ? What position would the country be in with a like expenditure as upon the Intercolonial ? The hon. minister may talk, but these are the bald, naked facts that stick out to view. They came into possession of the Intercolonial Railway with a capital account of a little less than $44,000,000, and at the present day it is nearly $69,000,000. The hon. gentleman talks about the improvements he has made to the road and he says that the amount of rolling stock and the number of locomotives that he found upon the road when he took possession were not sufficient for the working of the road. I have from his deputy who sits beside him here, his trusted and efficient man, and from the manager of his road down there of whom he speaks so favourably, a statement that there were more than sufficient locomotives and rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway and that if I acquired the Drummond County Railway, there was sufficient to run it without purchasing more rolling stock. The hon. gentleman says: Look how efficient the Intercolonial Railway is. The balance of mileage instead of being against us to the extent of $80,000, is now $15,000 in our favour. Does the hon. minister know the effect of the statement he is making? What is the reason? Simply this; that it is notorious in every part of the country that he has a superabundance of rolling stock, and that it is being used by every railway in every section of the country. That is the cause of the balance being the other way. I put a notice upon the paper in regard to that question, because I had heard that no railway down near the Intercolonial Railway purchases rolling stock at all. They rely upon running their roads with the locomotives of the Intercolonial Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway borrowed eight locomotives from the hon. gentleman. Nearly all the passenger coaches and freight cars used by the different roads in that section of the country belong to the Intercolonial Railway, and then the hon. minister gets up and boasts of the balance of mileage being in his favour to the extent of $15,000 a year.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I was dealing with the comparison which the Minister of Railways had made between the expenditure for maintenance upon the Intercolonial Railway in 1902, as compared with the expenditure under my administration in 1896. He spoke of the increased rate of wages at the present day compared with what it was in 1896, but it never seemed to have occurred to the Minister of Railways that if a man did the same work in 1896 that he did in 1902, the increase in wages would be an argument to the minister's disadvantage, because if the rate of wages is $1.25 now and I paid $1 a day in 1896, then if the same man did the same day's work I got for $1 what the Minister of Railways is expending $1.25 for. I do not wish to use any term which might be considered in any way opprobrious, but I think I may say that to my mind the argument of the Minister of Railways is an absurdity. Before six o'clock I spoke of the enormous expenditure which the people of this country were called on to make, a sum of about $23,000,000, for the purpose of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. Why, Sir, that amounts to nearly the whole surplus of this country in the time of its prosperity, and it could have been better spent in works of utility which would have been beneficial to Canada. We could have had a government railway, if necessary, from the province of Ontario to the prairie lands of the North-west for nearly the same sum of money which the hon. gentleman has expended in improvements on the Intercolonial Railway. I have no objection to improvements on the Intercolonial Railway, providing the expenditure is used for the advantage of Canada, but the position of the Intercolonial Railway to-day is no better than it was in 1896. It may have increased accommodation and a good many things that way; it may have better cars, but the road in 1896 was one of the best roads on the continent of America, so far as roadbed is concerned. My instruction to my officers of the department was to keep up the rolling stock to the fullest extent, so as to make the Intercolonial Railway of the highest standard amongst all the railroads on the continent of America. And it was, too. It had rolling stock sufficient for its purpose. When the hon. gentleman came into power he made the statement that the expenditure he would make on the Drummond County to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal would be repaid to the people of the country through the benefits that would be derived from the increased business of the Intercolonial Railway. But the hon. gentleman has a new system of book-keeping. The Intercolonial Railway is in a different category from any other railway in the country in that respect. Other railroads have to pay interest on their bonds and other securities, but the anomaly and paradox in reference to the Intercolonial Railway is that it is government money that is going into it, and it is not expected to pay interest at all on the investment that the country makes in it. We are not only to keep the promise that we made with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the time of confederation, but we are to go on with interminable expenditures until the capital account in that road alone is $68,000,000, and it is not expected that the country is to be recouped in any way for that expenditure. It is to be for the benefit of the people down there, in cheaper freights, in the cheaper carrying of passengers, and it is all done without any political bias or political influence at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am glad to hear that the Minister of Railways states that no political influence enters into the administration of the Intercolonial Railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It was so in my day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes ; it was so in my day, and the hon. gentleman says it is so in his day. It is possible, however, that on some great occasions tickets may have been given under his regime to electors for the purpose of enabling them to reach the polls to vote in the right direction.

In consequence of the lights in the Chamber having gone out, Mr. Speaker announced that the sitting of the House would be suspended for half an hour.

House resumed at 8.55.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, when the lights went out, I was speaking about the protest of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals against the suggestion that any political influence was exercised in the control of the Intercolonial Railway. He assured the House that no political influence was allowed to interfere with it in any manner, which he intimated was in strong contrast with the management of the railway under his predecessors. Well, if the hon. gentleman does not use political influence in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, he has changed his mind since a short time after he became Minister of Railways and Canals. In the town in which I reside there were two bridge tenders employed, and when the hon. gentleman came into power he dismissed these men without a single complaint being made against either of them, and appointed political supporters of his in their places. In addition to that, he sent a letter to Mr. Frost, at present a senator, who was at the time representing Leeds and Grenville, stating that there were fifteen employees on the Rideau canal—a good many of them were old sergeants, some of whom had been in the British service for twenty years or more—and asking the hon. gentleman to recommend successors to these men. Mr. Frost stated in this House that he had received that letter ; but he had enough honour in his composition not to accept the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and he refused to name any successors to them. This is the hon. gentleman who declares to this House and the country at large that no political influence is being used in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. He has changed his mind and his method since he came into power, and it is a good thing for his party that he has done so, after that slap in the face which he got from one of his strongest supporters in this House. What has become of the hon. gentleman's promise ? He asked and obtained from this country over $18,000,000 in cash for the purpose of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, besides an amount which capitalized would equal $4,000,000, making altogether $22,000,000. He gave authority to the right hon. gentleman who leads the House to make the statement in Sohmer Park, Montreal, that the Intercolonial Railway would recoup to the people of Canada the extra expenditure that was incurred in extending the railway to Montreal, and that the era of deficits would cease. How has he performed that promise ? He comes here to-day and claims a nominal surplus of $96,000. How does he arrive at that surplus? By charging to capital account items which ought to be and which formerly were charged to the ordinary revenue of the Intercolonial Railway. He comes here with a statement which does not compare with those of his predecessors, because his system of book-keeping is entirely different. He does this notwithstanding the fact that the leaders of the Reform party in the House claimed again and again that it was time that the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway was changed. So it is ; it is time the people of Canada knew the difference between cooked balances on the Intercolonial Railway and the real loss that the running of that railway imposes upon them. The real loss to the country from 1867 up to the present time in the running of the Intercolonial Railway is $23,000,000, and the railway is the better to the extent of the extra rolling stock that it has, the Drummond Counties Railway, and the terminal facilities in Montreal. The hon. Minister of Railways has done more to prevent the people of this country embarking in a government railway than any other man. He has pointed out what the result would be if the Intercolonial Railway were extended to the Pacific ocean. What would be the result if the charges to capital account on such a railway were in the same proportion as those he has made on the Intercolonial Railway ? The whole revenues of this country, I will venture to say, would not supply the deficits of such a railroad conducted in the same manner as the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman states perfectly correctly that the government can obtain employees for a government railway as cheaply as any corporation in Canada. He states also, what is true, that the supplies for such a road could be got as cheaply by the government as by any private corporation.

An hon. MEMBER. Except ties.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Ties could be got just as cheaply too, if they were bought by public tender and contract. In my experience of the management of the Intercolonial Railway, I found that people who were furnishing supplies or labour of any kind would rather deal with the government of this country than with any railway corporation, and that the railway could be run as cheaply by the government, if properly managed, as by any corporation. In Germany nearly £15,000,000 sterling is contributed to the general expenses of the country out of the surplus earnings of the state-managed railways ; and similar results have been achieved in other countries. But, unfortunately, in this country, under the management at present in vogue, there has been a totally different result. Under efficient management, however, I believe that a government road could be carried on as cheaply as any railway managed by a corporation. I believe that to be possible, but it would require that the men at the head of the administration should have no political bias, that they should not, at election time, put on large numbers of persons who are not required for the running of the road, and that they should not, in one season of the year, buy 1,300,000 ties, when it was impossible to use more than 500,000 or 600,000. They would have to run the road as economically as a corporation would do it. As I have said before, the hon. gentleman has, by his maladministration, put into the background the possibility of building a government railway from Montreal either to the Georgian bay or the western prairies or the Pacific coast. That may be unfortunate or it may be a good thing for the country, but, in either case, the result of the present management of the Intercolonial Railway is to put an end to any policy of government constructed railways in this country. Evidently, however, the whole tendency of the hon. gentleman's speech was to show the advantages of government ownership of railways, and the extension of the Intercolonial Railway. That same opinion we find voiced in the Railway Committee and expressed in this House again and again, and I noticed how carefully the right hon. the First Minister dealt with this particular point the other day. He was on the swing between subsidized roads and a government road. The government had not determined on a policy and pressure was evidently being brought on the right hon. gentleman by members of his own cabinet and by the government rank and file for the purpose of having a government road erected from Montreal to the Pacific, but I venture to say that if such a scheme be ever suggested to the people, they will be nearly unanimous against any such burden being imposed on the finances of the country as would be entailed by the construction of any such undertaking.

The hon. gentleman went into details with regard to the running of the Intercolonial Railway. He said that if the rates charged for the carrying of freight and passengers by the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway had been adopted on the Intercolonial Railway, he would have had a surplus of nearly $2,000,000 instead of $92,000. The rates, he said, charged on freight by the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway were from 50 to 100 per cent higher than those charged by the Intercolonial Railway. That must be comforting to the residents along the line of the Intercolonial. But I think that if the mileage is looked in to, we will find that the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway are nearly as high as those charged on the other two lines, and the reason the latter appear higher by comparison, when the totals are taken into consideration, is because the hon. gentleman has attempted to divert against nature the products of the North-west and Manitoba to St. John over the Intercolonial Railway. These products he is carrying at a loss, but the rates on this enter into the general estimates and calculation of rates which the hon. gentleman has made, and that is why the rates on the Intercolonial Railway appear so low. I venture to repeat what I have already said, that by no legislation, by no government road, can you divert traffic from that point where it will secure the cheapest means of transport to the place of consumption. No matter what rolling stock you may purchase or what improvements you may make, you will never divert the traffic of the North-west and Manitoba over the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax and St. John. By no legislation or railway construction can you make traffic go by a route to the seaboard, which is more expensive than another route, and the people of this country will not be content to run a railway year after year that shows heavy deficits in order to obtain a result which is not economically correct.

I have not had an opportunity of going into the details of the different matters which the hon. gentleman has brought before the House, but what I wish to protest strongly against is the enormous expenditure, uselessly laid out on the Intercolonial Railway, of $23,000,000. What would $23,000,000 do ? And this is not the end of it. Take the capital account of the Prince Edward Island Railway, you will find votes on that account in the main estimates, and there will be further votes in the supplementary estimates. As the hon. gentleman says, the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway is not at all closed. He complains that he has not sufficient rolling stock to handle the freight. If he would keep the rolling stock, which he says is yielding a revenue to the people of $15,000 per year instead of the adverse balance of $60,000 which formerly existed—if he would keep that rolling stock on his road, he would have sufficient to handle the traffic. If the hon. minister understood his business, he would know that the balance should go against the railway on this account, because that would show that nearly the whole of his rolling stock was being employed on his own line. What do other railway companies pay the Intercolonial Railway for the use of its freight cars ? They pay twenty-five cents per day for the first eighteen days, and then they pay a fine of one dollar if the car is not returned, or you will get from them six cents per day for the use of a freight car which costs on an average $900. Where is there a railway in any section of the country—especially the small roads in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—which would not rather give the hon. gentleman his $15,000 balance in his favour in order to utilize his rolling stock ?

Let me point out further that the increased receipts on the Intercolonial Railway are due to the increased local trade in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The results attained by building the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal have not fulfilled one-fiftieth part of the hon. gentleman's expectation. Where does he get his increased freight from ? He gets it through the increased development of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, his own province, but the doubling of the amount carried of one single article—lumber. The hon. gentleman states that he has had to contend with enormous difficulties in getting his surplus of $96,000; he has to pay so much more for labour, so much for supplies, so much more for coal. Why does he not start a coal mine of his own ? I know the difficulty the hon. gentleman has to contend with—a combine amongst the coal mine owners of Nova Scotia. I had to contend with the same. They fix the price and divide the quantity to be furnished the Intercolonial Railway according to the output of the several companies, and they—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) never paid over $2.10 a ton.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That may be. But I had to pay more than the Canadian Pacific or the Grand Trunk for the same coal. The hon. gentleman has virtually told us that he pays for coal far more than he ought to pay. He and his department simply do not use sufficient means to get the product of the mines delivered to the road at reasonable prices. If I remember rightly, we paid nearly $2 per ton at the pit's mouth, which is nearly double the price it ought to be, and I think the hon. minister pays nearly $3. Of course, that helps to account for the large expenditure on the Intercolonial. I have just said that the hon. gentleman has had the benefit of the development in the maritime provinces which did not exist in 1896. And what is the cause of that development ? The cause is the policy of his predecessors, the building up of manufacturing industries and the expansion of the steel and iron manufacturers as well as the increased production of coal resulting from the duty preventing competition from abroad. We started all this development which has reached its climax in Cape Breton and which has given the hon. gentleman as he tells us, the best paying branch of the road's business, carrying freight and passengers between Halifax and Cape Breton. Besides that, the hon. gentleman has had advantages which he shares with every other road on the continent of America. This has been a growing time. There has been abundance all over the continent. There is enormously increased passenger traffic and freight traffic as well—far in excess of any time with which the hon. gentleman makes a comparison. He has advantages of the best times which this country has ever known. And what is the result ? By an expenditure of at least $2,000,000 which he ought fairly to have charged to revenue account, he is able to come down with a surplus of barely $96,000. Is this carrying out the promise to the people that he would put life into the old road ? Is this carrying out what he told us when he said that expenditures such as these he was making were like those of a man moving from a back street to a main street, and spending money to increase his business—that the increased expenditure would justify itself by increased revenue ? After all this enormous outlay at the expense of the country, he comes before us with a nominal surplus of $96,000, a surplus which can be manipulated at any time by those who have control of the financial statements of the Intercolonial to show a deficit or a surplus according to the wishes perhaps of the officers of the department, or even of the head of the department himself. The hon. gentleman need not make comparison with 1896, for as I have said, times are different. My expenditure on capital account for the six years in which I had charge of the road, including loss on working, did not amount to one-third of that under the hon. gentleman.

I have spoken longer than I intended to speak at this time. I shall have an opportunity to go into details when the estimates are before us. The information which I expect and hope to get at that time will enable me intelligently to discuss these details. There are other gentlemen in this House who are more fully conversant with these things than I am. But the bold, hard fact sticks out, and meets the view of the most casual observer, that in his management for the last six years the hon. gentleman has shown nothing but an absolute increase of debt upon the road of nearly $18,000,000 in cash, besides $4,000,000 of an obligation to the Grand Trunk. Yet we have heard the hon. gentleman speak in many parts of this country in advocacy of government railways and of further expenditure for that purpose by the people of this country. This, to my mind, is too ridiculous. He may get some of his friends who have no other politics, but further expenditure in the provinces which they represent to approve his policy. But we have a different and higher view. We are in favour of the advancement of this country and are ready to advocate the expenditure of any sums necessary for the development of the country as a whole; but we are not ready to fling further enormous sums into the sink hole that he has made of the Intercolonial Railway to-day.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). I had not intended to say anything on this subject to-night, expecting, at a later stage, to go into the hon. minister's (Hon. Mr. Blair's) figures in some detail. But, as the hon. minister has made a rather pointed allusion to myself, or rather to the criticisms which I made upon his accounts last year, and the year before, I think I may be permitted to say a few words now in reply to his general observations. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, does not himself need that I should say one word in answer to the argument which he has made this afternoon. But his remarks seemed to meet with so much applause from hon. gentlemen behind him, that I may be excused if I say a few words to show how utterly fallacious is his argument in making, or appearing to make, a comparison between the operation of the government railway and that of other Canadian railways. I do not think I need occupy much time in showing that, but I think I can show it rather effectively. The hon. gentleman is perfectly aware—I have pointed it out to him before this—that the system on which he keeps his accounts is one which prevents the people from making any attempt to compare his operations and the percentage of his working expenses with those of other railways. I pointed that out more than once, and the hon. gentleman is as well aware of it as I am myself or as any person can possibly be. But, before I take up a few of the items in which the hon. gentleman so far departs from the ordinary system of keeping accounts, I wish to point out the results of the hon. gentleman's operations as he has shown them himself. In his report—and I have taken the few figures I have here entirely from his own report—he shows that the gross earnings of all the railways of this country during the year for which this report was made up, amounted to $83,666,502. He shows that the working expenses of all these railways, including the government railways, amounted to $57,343,592. Now, in order to ascertain exactly what the working expenses of the other railways are, apart from the government railways, I deduct his own working expenses and earnings, and the result shows that all the railways outside the government railways have earned during the year $77,747,513, and their working expenses were $51,482,494. Now, Sir, the result of that is that all the railways of Canada, big and little, in new districts and old districts, taking all their operations, earnings and expenses, have on the average worked at sixty-six and one-fifth per cent, while the government railways—I am including the Intercolonial and the Prince Edward Island Railway—the operation of which the hon. gentleman is so proud of, were worked at, what do you think, Mr. Speaker? Ninety-nine per cent. The hon. gentleman earns for this country $1 for every $100 that he takes in. The result of the operations of the two railways is, even according to his own statement, and omitting hundreds of thousands of dollars that ought to be charged to working expenses, the result that the hon. gentleman has given us as something that he is entitled to be proud of, is $57,891, or a little less than about one-thirteenth of one per cent upon the capital invested; and this is the wonderful result that was applauded by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Now, it may be quite true as the hon. gentleman says, that his traffic is worked at a lower rate than the traffic on other railways. I do not accept unreservedly the hon. gentleman's figures in this respect; though I will do so for the moment; but it does strike me that it is a most extraordinary statement—and I presume the hon. gentleman was speaking on behalf of the government—that we should hear from the government that this railway is worked at such rates that there are $2,000,000 lost every year in railway operation in order that a section of the country should get low rates at the expense of the entire community. I do not know whether that will be a pleasing thing for hon. gentlemen to announce to their constituents; I should say that it was a most extraordinary statement. The hon. gentleman tells us that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway have certain rates that he says are not unreasonable, and that if he charged those rates upon the railway under his administration he would have earned $2,000,000 more, and he would have had that surplus. Yet the hon. gentleman, having an opportunity to thus earn $2,000,000 a year, and save something of the many millions he has been expending during the last six or seven years on capital account, prefers to take that money out of the public funds of this country and let the people in the eastern provinces get ahead of the rest of the Dominion by just so much per annum. That is the result of the hon. gentleman's statement.

Now, I hope it is not quite so bad as that. I think perhaps the hon. gentleman has occasionally been carrying freight to St. John, where he has been spending so much money in recent years, at less than cost. I think that is very probable, but I doubt whether the hon. gentleman is carrying all his traffic at these wonderfully low rates. All I can say is that if he has, the rest of this Dominion have got something to say in the matter. We surely have a right to contend that the business on that government railway should be so conducted that if $2,000,000, or $1,000,000, or $500,000, can be earned at reasonable rates, that money should be earned, and the capital expenditure the hon. gentleman is making year by year should be reduced accordingly. Surely that is a plain business proposition.

But I want to show that the hon. gentleman's working expenses are not the working expenses as they are understood by all ordinary railway companies. And before I show that I want to point out that the hon. gentleman's working expenses as they are in his accounts to-day are not at all those of his predecessor, they do not mean the same thing at all. The hon. gentleman's predecessor charged to working expenses many things that the hon. gentleman is now paying out of capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BARKER. I beg your pardon also. I am speaking of that which I know, and I can say this, that not only is the hon. gentleman charging differently from what his predecessor charged, but he is charging differently from what he himself charged the first couple of years of his administration. The hon. gentleman got new light as he went on. His predecessor, when he put in new rails on the government railways to replace old rails worn out in service, charged the whole cost to working expenses. The hon. gentleman knows that, he cannot dispute it, his officers will tell him that is so. Not only that, but when his predecessor put in heavier rails he charged the whole cost, even of the additional weight of metal to his working expenses. He was not obliged to do so, it was against himself. When the hon. gentleman began his operations in 1897 he followed the very same course that his predecessor did. But since then, what has the hon. gentleman done ? Why, he takes up the sixty-seven pound rail that was there before, which was worn out by use, and which it was his duty to replace by another sixty-seven pound rail at the cost of his working expenses, and he puts in a new eighty pound rail. He would be entitled to charge only thirteen pounds, but he charges the whole eighty pounds to capital. I showed that last year and the year before, I gave the figures, I worked it all out on the figures in the hon. gentleman's own report. I showed that the hon. gentleman had charged to capital $436,000 for steel rails, every dollar of which ought to have gone to working expenses. I have not made up the figures in his report for this year to see exactly what amount the hon. gentleman ought to have charged against revenue that he has charged to capital. But taking the same proportion as in the previous year the hon. gentleman ought now to add about $400,000 for rails to his present working expenses. The hon. gentleman for this year 1901-2 obtained a vote of $600,000 for rails. I have not gone through the accounts closely enough yet to see exactly how much he expended, but he got that appropriation on capital account, and he insisted that he had a right to charge that to capital. It was protested against last year and the year before. The hon. gentleman did not answer the argument but he stuck to his flag and insisted upon getting money on capital account. If the same proportion has been expended there will be $400,000 which should have gone to his working expenses and the $57,000 that he claims as a surplus, does not exist at all. He has a deficit instead of a surplus. I should say here that last year we had Mr. Pottinger, the general manager of the railway, in the witness box before a committee of this House and I put a question to Mr. Pottinger, as the hon. minister will recollect. I said, Mr. Pottinger, do you as a railway man pretend that you are justified in charging the whole cost of these new rails, replacing old rails, to capital account ? The hon. minister knows what Mr. Pottinger's answer was. I quoted it last year and I will quote it again from Hansard. I asked Mr. Pottinger what he thought of charging to capital account all the cost of replacing rails. Mr. Pottinger's answer I quoted then and I quote it again.

Why should I object so long as parliament votes the money ?

That was the reply of the hon. gentleman's chief official whom he lauds here to-night. Why should these railway officials object to parliament voting them money for capital expenditure that they ought to charge to working expenses ? No railway official would object to that. Mr. Pottinger from his answer never pretended that this was a proper way of charging the money. He never pretended that any other railway company would charge it in that way. Mr. Pottinger admitted inferentially that it was an improper charge, that he had no right to charge it to capital when he said : Why should I object when parliament votes the money ? What could more clearly show that the hon. gentleman is improperly charging to capital what he ought to charge to working expenses ? He is by his method misrepresenting to this House the true state of the account and the true result of the operations of the railway.

There is another feature of the hon. gentleman's accounts that I pointed out last year, and it appears again this year, but in an exaggerated form. I pointed out last year that the hon. gentleman was buying rolling stock, buying cars on capital account that he ought to provide out of working expenses. He had a large number of old cars on hand condemned as unfit for traffic. The hon. gentleman's duty, as would be the duty of any railway manager, as any railway manager acting for an ordinary company would be compelled to do, was to replace these cars out of his working expenses and he should not have been allowed to charge one car, one dollar on capital account, until he had replaced every car that had been worn out in the service, out of his expense account. What did he do last year ? The hon. gentleman had 364 cars, I think, condemned. These cars would have cost him to replace out of his working expenses, $250,000. But the hon. gentleman did not charge them to working expenses.

He just left them as condemned cars and used capital from parliament to enable him to substitute others for them ; and they are there in the condemned list still. I will show that from the report which the hon. gentleman has just issued. The hon. gentleman started his year on the 1st July last with 364 condemned cars. These are the ones that last year I said it was his business to replace out of working expenses before he bought new cars out of capital. The hon. gentleman has had condemned during the year 272 more cars, making a total of 636 condemned cars. He has rebuilt only sixty-one, leaving 575 condemned cars in his stock to-day. Of course, as the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says, he could not be lending cars to the railways in the neighbourhood at twenty-five cents a day if he had 575 dead cars and did not replace them. What did the hon. gentleman do ? It is all here in his report. He purchased during the year on capital account 1,342 new cars. No wonder the hon. gentleman does not do his repairs, and it is not much wonder that he can show $57,000 profit on the operation of the road. If the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway would only manage their accounts in that way they could pay very rosy dividends to their stockholders. I think the Grand Trunk Railway would be able to pay dividends on its common stock. The hon. gentleman has a simple method, he gets a vote in parliament. The hon. gentleman obtained a vote of $2,000,000 for rolling stock on capital account. He provided 1,342 cars out of capital, and he has 575 cars, lying there condemned and out of service. It is the simplest kind of book-keeping in the world. If the hon. gentleman was subject to an auditor acting for shareholders against officials, that auditor would have told the hon. gentleman that 767 of these 1,342 cars should be charged to capital and 575 to working expenses. The hon. gentleman knows that perfectly well. I suppose it is one of the elementary principles that a going concern must maintain its property out of revenue and not out of capital ; and the hon. gentleman has never made a pretense of showing to this House any justification for this sort of thing that has been going on year after year. The hon. gentleman thought he had me in a corner when he asked on a previous occasion : Did you look into the state of the rolling stock when I took it over ? I told him I did and I gave the status of the rolling stock as handed over to him by his predecessor ; and there was a very small number of cars at the time out of service. I pointed out to the minister year after year he had gone on increasing in a very large degree the number of dead stock on his hands and that all the time he had been adding to the rolling stock out of capital account. When the hon. gentleman boasts, as he did boast a few hours ago, of what he had been doing and when he said that he had not been borrowing money, that he had been doing all these things out of the results of the operation of the road, the hon. gentleman must have overlooked his charges to capital for cars and steel rails. The hon. gentleman has added about $20,000,000 to the debt of the country since he has been operating this road. In seven years he has put nearly $12,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway proper and yet the hon. gentleman thinks he is not borrowing anything while operating the road. He reminds me very much of that gentleman in Dickens who, when he gave a promissory note, said : Thank Heaven that is paid. The hon. gentleman thinks when he has expended money on capital account he has not borrowed it, that it has fallen from the clouds. Anything he can stick into capital account just helps to make so much apparent profit in his operations and so much more applause from the hon. gentlemen behind him. Then the hon. gentleman speaks about the economy with which he is buying his stores. Well, I think he must have a wonderful opinion of the short memories of the hon. gentleman behind him. Has the hon. Minister of Railways utterly forgotten what appeared last year in the reports of his own officers about the purchase of those 1,300,000 ties ? The hon. gentleman did not require to put in more than 500,000 ties in any year, and yet in that wonderful season, when the general election was on, he bought 1,300,000 ties, and, according to the reports of his own officials, many of those ties had only four inches face, and were more like scantlings than railway ties. That is his economy ; that is the wonderful management that the hon. gentleman claims credit for. I will say this for his officials, that they ferreted this thing out. The manager—I do not know whether it is the gentleman who has just left the service or not—that gentleman insisted on an inquiry, but it does not appear from first to last that the minister was very active in the investigation. The manager insisted upon the inquiry, and up to a certain point it was carried out at the instance of the official, but if it had not been for that inquiry made, we perhaps would have never have heard of this thing at all. All we do know about the minister's part in it is that at one stage of the proceedings he gave a certain pencil order to one of the contractors. So far as that inquiry did go it disclosed a most disgraceful state of affairs in purchases on the Intercolonial Railway. The minister gave us some details about train mileage and other matters of that kind, which I shall take the opportunity of going into in more detail on another occasion. I will only say now, that the minister knows as well as I do that cost per train mile depends to some extent upon whether the train mileage is excessive ; whether he is running fewer cars or lighter trains, or more frequent trains, than would be run by any ordinary manager, that he may, by making more train mileage than is necessary in the operation of the road, reduce his cost per train mile down to the standard of other roads. But it does not follow that what he is doing would be considered good management on another road. If all this wonderful management has been in existence for years upon this road, it certainly should have shown some better results. It is absurd to tell us that this government road, running with all the advantages that the minister representing the government of Canada has ; with all the credit he has in buying stores ; that it cannot be worked on better terms than it appears to be worked. The minister knows that there are many items of expense that an ordinary railway has to bear that he never hears of. An ordinary railway manager has to meet the interest account all the year round on the money he requires for his operations, but I take it that the minister has behind him a proprietor who supplies him with all the money he wants without interest—I am not speaking of interest on fixed charges ; I am speaking of the ordinary interest charges that are incident to any trade or business. The minister has no taxes to pay ; he has every facility ; he has the command of all the money he can possibly need at any time, and yet he apparently is unable to compete with ordinary management, which has to meet taxes and all other charges. Yet the minister boasts, as if it were greatly to his credit, that he works at 99 per cent of his gross earnings, when all the other railways in the country can work at 66⅔. It is only necessary to state that simple fact to show that there is nothing whatever in the minister's report that he can boast of.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. I only want to make one more remark. I do not know myself about the hiring of cars to other companies. The hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says they are hired at 25 cents a day. I can only say this, Mr. Speaker : that if railway companies can hire freight cars at 25 cents a day, no company in this country is very likely to be so foolish as to buy cars while the minister will supply them at that rate. Surely it must be a mistake. It seems to be absurd. It means simply that a railway car lent out by this government is supposed to run from twenty to twenty-five miles a day. I hope that the hon. gentleman will be able to contradict the statement because if he is hiring these cars, and we can only get that rate out of them, the sooner we get out of the business the better.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). After the able criticism on the present management of the Intercolonial Railway, which was delivered by the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), it is unnecessary for me to take up the time of the House at any length. However, Sir, there was a statement made by the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) which is so contrary to the real facts of the case—facts that are within my own intimate knowledge and within the intimate knowledge of every person in the province of New Brunswick at least—that I must raise my voice in protest against that statement. I refer to his statement with respect to non-interference on the part of officers of the department and on the part of himself with the franchise of the employees of the road. Never in the history of the Intercolonial Railway has there been so much interference with the franchise of its employees as there has been under the management of the present minister. Why, Sir, not content with interfering with the right of the men to vote as they please in federal elections (for which there might be some excuse on the ground of political exigencies), the minister has interfered with their freedom of voting in provincial elections, a thing that was never known of until he took charge of that department. He, or his satellites, has gone so far as even to interfere with the men voting in municipal elections. We had a provincial election in New Brunswick only a few months ago, and the minister came himself in his own private car and took a very stiff hand in that election, with a result which was no doubt very satisfactory to himself. He went to two different points, the city of St. John and the city of Moncton, both large railway centres, where there are a large number of employees who are voters, and in both places he used to the utmost his influence to induce and force and compel the men to vote against their consciences, many of them, for the candidates which the minister favoured. That is a matter of common and notorious knowledge in the province of New Brunswick. He was successful in the constituencies in which these two cities are, and then went to a third place. In that constituency there were no railway employees under his control, and there he was not so successful. The gentleman whom he opposed there had a majority about twelve times as great as his majority in the previous election. Whether that was on account of the presence of the hon. gentleman, I know not ; but that is the fact. I merely make this statement in order that the House may not lie under the wrong impression which the hon. minister attempted to create this afternoon—an impression which could not be made in the province of New Brunswick, where the facts are so well known.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he knows of his own knowledge that I personally used all sorts of pressure and influence in order to coerce the men employed on the Intercolonial Railway to take part or vote in an election. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to understand that that is his statement ?

Mr. FOWLER. That is the statement I made, Mr. Speaker, and I reiterate the same statement now. Any person who read the speeches of the hon. gentleman in St. John and Moncton will know that my statement is exactly in accordance with the fact. The vehemence which the hon. gentleman displayed this afternoon when he was trying to urge his followers to applaud him—which as a matter of fact they seemed very loth to do—was as nothing to the vehemence he exhibited on the platform when he was attempting to coerce those employees to vote in favour of his candidates in the late provincial election.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. gentleman any evidence or any personal knowledge of the facts other than what he says appears in reports of my speeches in the newspapers to support the statement he has made ?

Mr. FOWLER. Those I think should be sufficient; but if they are not, I may say that the common rumour throughout the province is to that effect.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER. Common knowledge. Common rumour has a very great effect, you know, and is generally founded somewhat on fact, too.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity of saying that what the hon. gentleman has said is absolutely and entirely without the slightest foundation. I invite the hon. gentleman to take an early opportunity of reading to this House the reports of the speeches which I delivered, and I venture to say that they will not corroborate the statement he has made.

Mr. FOWLER. Why, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman's reputation were not so well known throughout the province of New Brunswick, the people would be shocked and surprised at the statements he made this afternoon. But knowing him so well as they do, they simply shrug their shoulders and say nothing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will accept my invitation, I will abide by the result.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I listened with the greatest possible attention to every word that fell from the lips of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals when he made his explanation this afternoon. I sympathized a good deal with the hon. gentleman, because he had a very difficult task in explaining the results of his management of the Intercolonial and other government railways during the past six or seven years. He quoted a great many figures as to the increased traffic, the increased sums paid for wages, the better position of the road, and a whole lot of things which to my mind did not throw very much light on the situation. He was asked by the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) during the early part of his speech to give the House some information with regard to the capital expenditure made on account of the railway, during the time he has administered the affairs of the department. I am not aware that he vouchsafed the information asked for; but there are two or three facts which stand out prominently in the administration of the hon. gentleman which cannot be too frequently impressed on the House and the country. The hon. minister made a comparison between the administration of his predecessor in the one single year, 1896, and that of himself in the year 1902. A more unfair and misleading comparison could not have been made, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, the conditions existing in Canada during the past twelve months as compared with the conditions which existed in 1896 rendered it impossible to make a fair comparison between those two years. For an hon. member to try to justify the administration of the Railway Department over which he presides, by making a comparison of the year 1896, a year of unusual depression not only in Canada but throughout the world, with a year of redundant prosperity, especially in that part of the Dominion served by the Intercolonial Railway, is certainly not what we might expect from a gentleman who has had the long parliamentary experience of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways. If he desired to be fair, he would have compared the six years during which my hon. friend from South Lanark administered the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, with the six years during which he has managed them. I appeal, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. gentleman himself and to every hon. gentleman who supports him, whether, if he had desired to do simple justice to the hon. member for Lanark, he would have confined his comparison to one single year ? Let me state two or three facts to the House, and I will leave the hon. gentleman to make an explanation of them. Since 1897, when the hon. gentleman assumed the management of the Intercolonial Railway, how much has he expended on capital account ? Is it not a fact that during the past six years he has expended on capital account on the two government railroads $13,890,542 ? Will the hon. gentleman deny these figures ? I obtained them from official documents, and I challenge him to say whether they are correct or not. During the previous six years, when the hon. member for South Lanark was administering those roads, how much was expended on capital account ? $2,835,691. The colossal fact stands out, and it cannot be contradicted or challenged, that during the past six years the hon. Minister of Railways has expended over $11,000,000 more on capital account than his predecessor did during his six years. And what has been the result? A colleague of the hon. Minister of Railways boasted in Toronto a few years ago that when this administration came into office they found that the western terminus of the Intercolonial Railway was in a ploughed field, and their policy was to bring the railway into the great metropolitan city of Montreal. We all hoped for good and great things from that policy; but what has been the net result of the operation of the road since then? During the six years in which the hon. member for South Lanark operated it, the deficits in the receipts as compared with the operating expenses amounted to $949,784. If we were justified in incurring the enormous expenditures which we did in bringing the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and in equipping it with gilt-edged plant of all kinds, what have we reaped as the result? During the past six years in which the hon. gentleman has been administering the Railway Department, the receipts on the railway have been actually short of meeting the operating expenses by no less than $886,763. All we have gained in those six years in net results, as compared with the previous six years, has been the miserable sum of $60,000, notwithstanding the enormous expenditure on capital account.

The hon. gentleman's deficits in operating expenses during the past six years have just been $60,000 less than the deficits in operating expenses during the previous six years, when the business conditions of this country were not nearly so prosperous. That is all the hon. minister can take any credit for; and if he thinks parliament was justified in voting these enormous expenditures on capital account in order to save in six years the sum of $60,000, he may take what comfort he can from that opinion. These are facts that cannot be controverted. During the past six years he has spent $11,000,000 more on capital account than did his predecessor in the previous six years, when there was not that revival of trade which has since characterized all parts of Canada; and he has only succeeded in reducing the balance against us, as between receipts and operating expenses, during the whole of that period by $60,000. But he pleads that there are exceptional conditions in connection with the location of the Intercolonial Railway, which make it impossible to pay as well as other roads. There is the water on the one side and competing lines on the other But did not the same conditions exist before that hon. gentleman assumed the administration of the Railway Department? Did not his predecessor have precisely a similar condition of things to contend against? In my humble judgment, the hon. gentleman himself is between the Devil and the deep sea in his endeavour to invent some plausible explanation, and when the people have time to read carefully his arguments, they will come to the conclusion that the administration of our railway affairs during the past six years has been extravagant, unwise and prodigal, and that they have not received the value they were entitled to from the enormous expenditure made by the hon. gentleman. Let me emphasize what has been so well said by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). He pointed to the argument of the hon. minister that if he had charged as high rates as other roads—which rates he admitted were not unreasonable—his revenue would have been much larger. H admits, therefore, that notwithstanding the fact that this country has run into debt $16,000,000 during the past twelve years, through our capital expenditure on the Intercolonial, yet the freight rates have been lower than they might have been. In other words, that he has failed to earn money that he should have earned in reduction of this huge capital expenditure. What will the people of the other provinces think when that statement goes to them? Should we not expect better things from this business administration than that they should have persisted in running the Intercolonial Railway at a loss? Had we not a right to expect some better management by the hon. minister than is shown by this humiliating confession, that although he is running the road at a heavy loss, the rates charged on the traffic are from 50 per cent to 100 per cent less than those charged by other lines? That is a most astounding admission; and I would point out to the hon. gentleman, with all possible respect, that it is his duty, under the circumstances, at the earliest possible moment, to so readjust the rates on passenger and freight traffic that at least the expenditure will not exceed the receipts. If the public debt of the country is being added to by millions every year for the purpose of operating the Intercolonial Railway, the people have a right to insist that reasonable rates should be charged; and if the rates charged are not fair and reasonable, they should be readjusted so that the Intercolonial Railway system may cease to be a sink hole into which millions of public money are being thrown every year. I did not intend addressing the House, but I felt compelled to emphasize the fact that while, under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, the debt of this country for the operation of the government railways has been increased by the enormous sum of $14,777,305, we have, so far as these two reads are concerned, practically nothing to show for that expenditure.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Among the different charges, Mr. Speaker, made by the hon. member for Lannark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) against the management of the Intercolonial Railway, there is one in particular which I think should be specially emphasized and discussed. That is the charge that the hon. Minister of Railways is deceiving the country by a false system of accounts. If that charge be true, surely there is not an hon. gentleman sitting behind the hon. Minister of Railways who would support him in this wrong-doing ? If the charge be not true, then it seems to me that my hon. friends from Lanark and Hamilton ought to withdraw it. The charge has been made by these two hon. gentlemen flatly and unequivocally that the Minister of Railways has brought down cooked accounts, and that, by a system of false book-keeping, he has endeavoured to deceive this House and country. One can hardly imagine a more serious charge, and I sincerely hope that the hon. minister will either controvert it or frankly admit that he has done wrong and promise to do better in the future. My hon. friend from Hamilton states that all railway companies properly administered charge to working expenses, the renewals of rolling stock. For instance, if a railway company, at the outset, spends a million dollars on rails, it charges that amount to capital account, but whenever a rail is worn out and has to be renewed, the cost of the renewal is charged to working expenses. The wisdom and propriety of such a course are evident even to one who is not conversant with the management of railways. But if a different system is followed on the Intercolonial Railway, if the renewals are also charged to capital account, then, in the case, for instance, of the renewal of a rail, you will have two rails charged to capital account, one of which is worn out, but both are assets. Such a system of keeping accounts is certainly not honest, and from it you can obtain an accurate idea of the value of our assets. The same contention holds with regard to the purchase of cars. If when a freight car, which was originally charged to capital account, is worn out, another is purchased to replace it, and the new car is also charged to capital account, you have two items against capital account which are represented only by one asset. If you spent a million dollars on cars, in the first instance, and then spent another million dollars to replace these, and charged each expenditure to capital account, you have a capital account of $2,000,000, which is represented only by an asset of $1,000,000. If the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway are kept in this manner, the report of the Minister of Railways, instead of being called a blue-book, should be called a cook book. When one thinks of this parliament, the highest court of the land, voting improperly on capital account, moneys which should be charged against working expenses, and when we find a leading official of the road declaring that he is compelled to falsify his books in order to make them agree with the parliamentary vote, surely parliament has no reason to be proud of what it is doing. Surely not even the most ardent supporter of the Minister of Railways will argue that it is proper for parliament to do that which, if done by a humble clerk in a financial institution, would cause him to be sent to one of our provincial penitentiaries. I am not making any charge against the hon. Minister of Railways, because I do not pretend to be conversant with the facts, but when so serious a charge as that of cooking accounts s made against him, the hon. minister should either refute it and show that he is not keeping his books in a manner different from that followed by other railway companies, or else bow to the inevitable and adopt a proper system of book-keeping.

Mr. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). The protests that are annually offered against the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway seem to me unworthy of the Canadian sentiment that ought to prevail in this parliament. I have no desire to refer to the Intercolonial Railway from a sectional standpoint, for that railway has not been, in any sense, devoted to the interests of one particular section of this Dominion. It has contributed more to the interchange of thought and the interchange of trade between the different provinces of the Dominion than any other factor we have had. In former years the people of the maritime provinces traded to the south of them across the Bay of Fundy. The building of the Intercolonial Railway contributed to the bringing together of the people of Ontario and Quebec and the people of the maritime provinces. That seems to be forgotten; and it seems to be forgotten, as well, that the manufacturers and the merchants of Toronto and Montreal, have, by means of the Intercolonial Railway, been enabled to find a very large and profitable trade. The protests which are made against the rates that are charged on the Intercolonial Railway are based on the idea that this is a sectional advantage. But surely the benefit of any such lessening of charges is for those living in Ontario and Quebec as well as for those living in the maritime provinces. We forget, seemingly, that the Intercolonial Railway was built for a certain purpose. It was built largely as a military road, and I presume it was built where it was built because of political exigencies at the time. But it was built as part of the compact of confederation, and as a national highway, and should be treated in the same way as other highways of the country. How is it that I hear no word of protest from my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) with respect to canal charges ? Only the other day a very large and influential delegation waited upon the right hon. Premier and, in the interest of trade and commerce, in the interest of the people of this Dominion, demanded that the tolls on these canals should be entirely removed. Is there any protest against that? Do you hear any protest on the part of hon. members from the east with respect to the large expenditures made upon the canals and not a dollar realized to the revenues of the Dominion arising from them? It seems to me that this is slightly unfair. It was not my intention to take part in this discussion; but when I hear hon. members refer to expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway and insist that these expenditures are largely political, I, as one having some knowledge of that field, cannot remain silent. Political influence, you say, is exercised to the detriment of the management of the Intercolonial Railway. Why, if political influence is being exercised, it is being exercised by the same men who, for eighteen or twenty years exercised that influence when their friends, hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. Fault is found with the book-keeping on the Intercolonial Railway, yet the book-keepers are the same men who were there from 1879 to 1896, and the system of book-keeping is the same as it was during that period.

Mr. BOYD. A different minister.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is the same manager, the same accountant, the same chief book-keeper—the same men from top to bottom; there has been no change. I am not reflecting upon these men at all in making that statement; I simply say that when you charge against this administration or against the Minister of Railways and Canals, the exercise of political influence you are speaking of something that does not exist. I remember well when there was a change of government in 1878 and, from the head of the Intercolonial, the late C. J. Bridges, down to the very hod carrier in the railway yards at Moncton, they went out by wholesale. The general manager, also Mr. Luttrell, the chief superintendent, were removed and hundreds of men in the shops were thrown out of work. And why? Because of political influence. That continued down to 1896. Any man who was suspected of having political leanings in favour of those then in opposition soon found that he had to seek some other means of livelihood, for he was not allowed to remain in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway. But, has there been a change since then? The same men who were in the employ of the road when the change of government came in 1896 are employed there to-day. There has been no change in the officials, no change in the workmen. I am sure that those who are conversant with the actual facts also know this—that in matters of promotion in the Intercolonial Railway it is not only men who are friends of the administration now in power who are recognized, but all, including those who have been working tooth and nail at every election—as I know from a personal standpoint—ever since 1878, and even down to this year of grace, against the party with which I have been allied for all these years. I say that political influence, if any has been exercised, has been exercised against the present administration, and I say this as the representative of the county of Westmoreland and as knowing whereof I speak. Therefore, I protest against any idea going abroad throughout this country that the administration of the Intercolonial Railway is in any way coloured or tinged with partyism and political influence. If there is such a tinge and colour, it is not with the 'rouge,' as they say in the province of Quebec, but rather with the other colour.

Now, as to the rates on the Intercolonial Railway, they are the same as have been in force since 1878; there have been no material changes; certainly there has been no increase, and, as the hon. minister explained, the conditions are such there, by reason of water competition, that if any attempt were made to charge higher rates it would only result with loss in advancement to the road. The question of political influence is always raised against government ownership of railways. Now, there are many kinds of partisan influence, and I question whether the people of this country should denounce simply the political influence if such does exist under government ownership, as against the political influence that may be exercised in a very different way and by a very different method. I am sure the people of Canada would prefer to have the party in power exercise its political patronage—and I care not what government may be in office—rather than be throttled by great corporations which have a peculiar method of exercising political influence, a political influence which is even recognized within the precincts of parliament. In your committee rooms when bills are under discussion, and in parliamentary debates, you recognize that political influence, and it does not arise out of, nor has it any connection with, party institutions, but it arises from the corporations of the country. There are none who know this better than hon. gentlemen opposite. It is known throughout the country, and the newspapers of the Dominion, especially the independent newspapers, teem with articles day after day pointing out these influences. I say it is far better in the interests of Canada that we should submit to any disadvantages, to any evils if there are such, arising from the government ownership of railways, than to be bound down by the pernicious influences, I would almost say the damning influences, resulting from the control of great corporations. Hon. gentlemen may wish to make a point against the administration of the Intercolonial, but they all recognize that what I am now stating is true. They all recognize that it would be far better to submit to political influences in the exercise of patronage by government in the administration of a railway, than to submit to these other influences to which I have referred and which I need not elaborate.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman make the charge that members of this House are influenced by corporations in their deliberations in this House ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Certainly not. I am sure no hon. member would be willing to say that any such influences could be exercised.

Mr. CLANCY. Then what does the hon. gentleman mean ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I mean exactly what I say. There may be an exercise of influence, of course, in a proper way, in a parliamentary way, and without any results that might be termed unpleasant ; but I am referring to the influences that are abroad in this country arising from the power possessed by great corporations. I make the point simply to show the contrast between any disadvantages there might be in connection with government ownership of railways, and the disadvantages which arise under the system which has largely prevailed in this Dominion and which prevails to a great extent in the United States. If I were to attempt to make an argument for government ownership, I might refer to a great many things which I should not mention now, but which I may have an opportunity to mention later on.

But I cannot permit this occasion to pass without entering my protest against some references which have been made against the maritime provinces. During the course of this debate there have been insinuations made that the construction of this railway and its management have been wholly in the interests of the maritime provinces and in the interests of Quebec through which the Intercolonial runs. This is my third session in this parliament, and I have listened to many discussions on the Intercolonial, but not yet have I heard my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) the leader of the opposition, get up and express his views with respect to the rates on the Intercolonial, and with respect to these denunciations which we have heard against the Intercolonial and its management as a government road. As that hon. gentleman represents the city of Halifax, it would be interesting to have an expression of his views on the points which have been raised in that direction. There are other hon. gentlemen coming from the maritime provinces whose opinions we would like to hear on these questions. They remain silent, as does the leader of the opposition, and say nothing in answer to the charges which are thus made. If the canals are established in the interest of trade and commerce, and if no tolls are charged upon these canals, why do we not hear hon. members coming from a particular section of the Dominion make that fact a subject of complaint ? I want to say that we do not hear hon. members from the extreme west indulging in any such denunciations, but they come from a confined circle, and I am thankful to say it is a confined circle. I hope that the individual members belonging to that particular circle will broaden out in their views, and look upon this matter from a national standpoint, as a railway that is serving the interests of Ontario as well as those of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island ; I hope they will look upon it from the standpoint of a united Canada. Because there may be some things in the management of the Intercolonial which may not meet the views of hon. members, that does not justify them in attacking the Intercolonial as a sink-hole of expenditure for the whole Dominion. It is unfair to the policy which has been pursued by successive governments, it is unfair to the founders of confederation who agreed upon that railway in the interest of the whole Dominion. They established it with the idea that it would cement together the several provinces, and it has resulted in much good in that direction.

The Intercolonial to-day is, in my judgment, the best asset that the Dominion of Canada has. We have been told that the public debt has been increased to the extent of $23,000,000 by the Intercolonial. What have you to show for it ? You have your road and your rolling stock as a splendid asset. I do not pretend to be a prophet, but I believe from the bottom of my heart that within a few years it will be one of the best paying properties belonging to this Dominion. But do those hon. gentlemen who complain about the increase of the public debt on this account make any complaints against the exceedingly large outlay that was made in subsidizing the Canadian Pacific Railway ? The Intercolonial I believe represents about $60,000,000 of public money expended on its construction—and in its maintenance, if you will. But the moneys that were paid out in subsidies for the Canadian Pacific Railway exceed that sum by a very large amount, without taking into account the countless acres of land which were given in land grants to that road, lands which to-day are selling for $6 or $7 an acre and sometimes higher. We hear no complaint about that. Yet we do not own to-day a spike of that great highway, we do not own a foot of the land. The money is gone, and we are paying interest on it, and there are no complaints. I say it is manifestly unfair to the people, detrimental to the harmony that should exist between the different provinces, to make these exceptional complaints against the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. members as a party would reflect greater credit upon themselves, and they would stand better in the country if they looked upon this subject in the way the people of the country look upon it, in the way that the people of Ontario, the rank and file of the voters, look upon it. One hon. member said, and he made the statement very positively, that these railways were maintained for a section of the people. I protest in the strongest language possible against utterance of any such opinion on the floor of this parliament. There are travelling, I venture to say, at this moment in those maritime provinces, hundreds of commercial travellers representing whom ?—representing the house, perhaps, of the hon. member for one of the Torontos (Mr. Brock) and representing other great mercantile establishments. Why are they there ? To secure the trade which exists in that section of the country. The Intercolonial Railway largely interferes with the wholesale business of the cities of Halifax and St. John. Why ?—because the intercommunication between Ontario and the country in the east was made easy, and the trade came here. The rates on the Intercolonial, no doubt, contributed very materially to the building up of that trade. Yet, these same hon. members from that section of the Dominion that is particularly interested in building up that trade will stand up in their places in parliament and give utterance to such sentiments as those to which I have referred, and hon. members around them, having the same interest in that trade, will applaud the idea. I say that such a thought in this parliament is unworthy of parliament and unworthy of the great province which some of these hon. members represent. Now, I shall not enlarge upon the question which has been raised in respect to the ownership of government railways, but I do say that hon. members of this House must not run away with the idea that any of the evils resulting from the management of the Intercolonial Railway are due to the exercise of political influence in favour of the party now in power.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, in connection with the working of the Intercolonial Railway, I put a question on the Order paper some little time ago which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) asked me to replace by a motion for papers which he said would be brought down immediately it was moved. I do not think these papers have yet been submitted. May I ask the hon. minister if he has submitted the return asked for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I brought it down at once.

Mr. BELL. Well, it has not been reported to me. That would be of importance and I would be very glad to look at it in connection with the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in reference to the matter of rates. I am very much in sympathy with the view held by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) and I feel that we members from the maritime provinces cannot very well remain silent if it be broadly stated here in parliament that that part of Canada is receiving an unfair advantage in having a railway conducted at the expense of Canada generally, which is to confer some special benefit upon us. I really feel that to a very large extent in fairness to our friends from Ontario it must be borne in mind that the remarks that have been made here tonight have been elicited by the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How ?

Mr. BELL. Because he made the statement very broadly that the rates charged on the Intercolonial Railway were 50 per cent less than those charged by other lines in Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By the two railways, the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the rates charged in Ontario by the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway were from 100 to 150 per cent in excess of those charged on the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I said from 50 to 100 per cent.

Mr. BELL. It strikes me that an examination of the figures showing the freight rates that are charged on the Intercolonial Railway will scarcely bear out the statement made by the hon. minister. In respect to a very large part of the traffic and the revenue of the Intercolonial Railway it is quite evident that his remarks do not apply at all. That is in reference to the passenger traffic. In reference to the receipts from passenger traffic which form a large part of the revenue, I think, we in the lower provinces are paying just as much as they are in any other portion of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As to what ?

Mr. BELL. The passenger traffic.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confined my remarks distinctly to the question of freight rates. I emphasized that.

Mr. BELL. I am simply calling attention——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Or rather I eliminated passenger rates from the receipts.

Mr. BELL. I think the hon. minister did that, but I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that so far as passenger traffic is concerned, the people of the lower provinces are not unduly favoured. They are paying rates at least as high as the rates paid in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will at once see the force of this. Except that all passengers from any point on the Intercolonial Railway, Moncton and east will get to Montreal for exactly the same rate, no matter how much greater the distance, as they can get to Montreal over the Canadian Pacific Railway; or from St. John over the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, a passenger is carried on a ticket for exactly the same price as the Canadian Pacific Railway charge.

Mr. BELL. Of course the point of the hon. gentleman's observation is that the Intercolonial Railway is somewhat longer, and that the passenger is carried a greater number of miles for the same figure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BELL. That is a feature which characterizes all railways in Ontario, and everywhere else throughout Canada. I think that compensation has to be made by railways that are working in competition, one with the other. Accepting the hon. minister's explanation which is entirely in accordance with my understanding of the matter, I say that so far as passenger traffic is concerned, the lower provinces are not receiving any advantage at the expense of the rest of Canada. If the people of those provinces are unduly favoured it is in reference to freight rates, and I think in so far as local rates are concerned it will be found that they are not very much lower than they are in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BELL. It has been said by the last speaker that the tariff of freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway has been the same for a number of years. I think the hon. minister will scarcely agree with that statement. He must recollect, and the country generally knows perfectly well, that when a gentleman named Mr. Harris was placed in charge of the Intercolonial Railway he raised the freight rates very considerably, so much so that the effect was a strong protest from every province where the Intercolonial Railway was doing business, and if I am not mistaken, and I am a customer of the road to a large extent, and pay freight to a large extent—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With what result ?

Mr. BELL. With the result that there was a great deal of dissatisfaction created.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With the result that the rates came down.

Mr. BELL. In some cases they did, but in other cases they remained where Mr. Harris put them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in stating that as a general proposition. There was a rise in rates upon certain classes of merchandise made by Mr. Harris or what was equivalent to it in the way in which the impost was made. So violent was the public clamour against that action from all parties and all sides that the tariff was reduced, put back to practically where it was before in the manner in which the carriage of the goods and the arrangement of the traffic was adjusted.

Mr. BELL. I must accept the minister's statement because it is a matter which is entirely within his own department, but I think it is a matter of common opinion in Nova Scotia that the rates on certain classes of freight are considerably higher than they were when the minister took charge of the Intercolonial Railway. There can be no question that the freights both upon sawn lumber and logs are considerably higher now than they were before. I think it will be found that the reason why the Intercolonial Railway is making a fairly good showing to-day—and I am not at all going to abandon the argument made by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker)—it will I think be found that the good statement made by the minister is very largely owing to the manner in which he has adjusted his revenue and his capital account. There is no answer at all to the argument made by the member for Hamilton on that point. Still, I believe that the good showing which the minister is able to make is largely because the hopes he expressed when he took over the Drummond County Railway as part of the Intercolonial Railway, have not been realized, and that he has never succeeded in developing that large through-traffic in grain and other products which he expected. If we examine his report for the last year, it will be found that the large increases of business on the Intercolonial Railway have been made in local traffic, and that in many departments that through-traffic to which the minister looked with great confidence is diminishing. His good showing is due to the fact that he has not continued to develop the through-traffic which was being conducted at an unprofitable figure, but that he has the advantage of the enormous development in the business of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, and in the lumber business of the lower provinces generally, which has been carried at profitable local rates. A very large proportion of the great expenditure charged to capital upon the Intercolonial Railway was made for the purpose of developing through-traffic and not for the local traffic at all. It is a reasonable criticism made upon the minister by railway men, that the heavy engines and equipment which he introduced were not at all adapted for local traffic. The result was to place upon the road rolling stock which the road was unable to carry and which involved an enormous expenditure in the direction of improving the track, enlarging the buildings, strengthening and replacing the bridges. What is there in the circumstances of the Intercolonial Railway that would justify such criticisms as are resented by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson)? They are unquestionably not the fact that the Intercolonial Railway was being conducted from year to year either with profit, or at a comparatively small loss to the country. During the regime of the present minister there has been a period of unexampled prosperity—as regards Nova Scotia at all events—during which for a large part of the time the Intercolonial Railway was in a state of congestion, when the sidings for hundreds of miles from the seat of activity at Sydney were filled with traffic awaiting its turn for movement, and yet in the face of all that extraordinary prosperity and that enormous inflow of business the fact remains that in the matter of deficits the present minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) shows a betterment over the history of the last six years of the Conservative regime of only some $60,000. Now, we do not like at all in the lower provinces to have any unkind criticism addressed against us or against the railway management of the Intercolonial Railway. We do not feel that it is pleasant to us to have a feeling engendered in the minds of the people of Canada generally, that the Intercolonial Railway is being conducted in such a way as to unduly favour the people of the lower provinces at the expense of their fellow citizens in the rest of Canada. Therefore it is of the highest importance to the people of the maritime provinces, that the Intercolonial Railway should be economically and efficiently managed, because the result of anything short of first-class management is to evoke this criticism. No people in Canada are so directly interested in the able economical and efficient management of the Intercolonial Railway as are the people of the lower provinces. We are deeply interested in the success of the Minister of Railways, and so far as we are concerned, we would like him to meet with the very highest possible degree of success in maintaining that road in a high state of efficiency, and presenting to this country only such favourable balances as would entirely prevent any criticism of a local character by the representatives of the people of Canada in this House. While we are ready to stand up for the Minister of Railways and to urge him to give us in the lower provinces efficient management and favourable rates, I am afraid that the protestations which the minister has made so strongly to-day in reference to the total absence of anything of a political character from the management of that railway are not altogether borne out by the facts. I do not believe that it is possible for the Minister of Railways to make the people of the lower provinces, who are familiar with the management of that road, believe that there is an absolute freedom of anything like political pressure so far as the employees of that road are concerned. It is perfectly true, as the minister has said, that in the case of quite a large proportion of his employees they are protected against political interference by their own associations. Their orders and their brotherhoods protect them to a certain extent from the pressure which the minister may feel disposed to bring to bear upon them. I would not go so far as to say that the minister himself personally interferes, but I know that the gentlemen who represent the Liberal party in some constituencies in the lower provinces, do habitually interfere with the employees of the Intercolonial Railway, not only in Dominion elections and provincial elections, but in municipal contests, where we elect our representatives to our county councils. They do that, and they can do it successfully simply because the people of the county in which I live and of some adjacent counties, have got the impression on their minds that when a local politician or a defeated candidate writes a letter or brings pressure to bear upon the trackman or the sectionmen or the employees of the railway generally, behind that local politician is the authority and the influence of the Minister of Railways. I would not for one moment doubt the minister ; I am perfectly willing to accept his statement, and I would like him to supplement it by making it perfectly understood throughout the lower provinces, and particularly in my own county of Pictou, that no man need be afraid of any threat addressed to him by any local politician or partisan. I trust the minister will make the people understand that behind that threat is not the authority or the power of the Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have caused that to be made known upon more than one occasion.

Mr. BELL. I am perfectly willing to accept everything that the minister says, but at the same time I am aware of circumstances in my own county where men have been moved about and placed at a disadvantage, when it could have only occurred because it was done in such a way that it did not reach the knowledge of the Minister of Railways, for had it been done with his knowledge he could not acquit himself of the charge of allowing political pressure to be brought to bear upon the employees of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will take this opportunity of stating the fact, that personally I gave most explicit orders during the last Dominion election to the general manager, to notify all the officers and employees of the road that they were to be free to come and go; that every facility was to be afforded to them irrespective of their politics to get to where they wanted to vote, and to vote according to their own wishes. The general manager had instructions to that effect from me in the most direct and positive manner during the last Dominion contest.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman state why Mr. Russell left the service of the government railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He wanted to go, I do not know why. I did not dismiss him.

Mr. INGRAM. Did he not state that political influence was used against him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He never stated or communicated that to me.

Mr. INGRAM. He stated so publicly in the press.

Mr. BELL. I am perfectly willing to exonerate the minister, and I am familiar with the fact that he did take the course he has indicated here. Still others, using the weight of his authority, I will say entirely without his consent or desire, have brought pressure to bear to induce the electors not only to vote, but to do extraordinary things. I will give him an instance that occurred in the last provincial election in Pictou. The law in Nova Scotia prevents Dominion employees from voting in provincial elections. That law was adopted by the anti-confederation party in 1868, and it has been in force ever since; and during the time the Conservative party was in power, no man who was a Dominion official or had been in receipt of emoluments from the government railway for fifteen days previous to an election ever tendered his vote. In the last election unwilling men, knowing that they were employees of the Dominion government, were forced to go to the polls and tender their votes in the face of the statute designed to prevent them from voting; and in some cases they actually took the oath which was put to them by the officials in polling places, and practically, as far as I may judge, had to commit perjury in order to do so. Does the minister suppose that these railway employees would have done that extraordinary thing unless they were doing it under the force of great compulsion? It is not at all likely, and I would like the hon. gentleman to devote a little of his time, if he can do so, to an inquiry into the circumstances I am now mentioning, in order to satisfy himself whether or not the system of the Intercolonial Railway is as entirely free from political pressure or interference as he has given the House to understand that it is. I am presenting this statement without the slightest desire to give offence to the minister. I am assuming that he is absolutely truthful in what he has said; but I wish him to understand that his name and authority have been used to induce the railway employees under his control to vote in a way in which in many cases they are most unwilling to vote. Now, I do not altogether blame the minister if he finds it impossible to be everywhere, and to know everything that is being done on the hundreds of miles of railway under his control. But if he will devote himself carefully to an inquiry into the management of some parts of the system which are not protected by the system of brotherhoods, he will find that there is absolutely no other criterion for the appointment of men on the railway than their political partisanship. I do not know one Conservative appointed on the Intercolonial since 1896.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am told that there have been a good many, but I am not aware of any. I do not know their politics.

Mr. BELL. I am not aware of one. So far as the county of Pictou is concerned, the hon. gentleman's preserve is not invaded at all. But it is a matter of current statement that men are introduced into the service in a way that was utterly unknown in the time of his predecessors. Instead of the appointments being made from headquarters, in many cases they are made by local political managers, and men are put to work on the road without receiving their appointment from headquarters. I am not making charges against the minister; I am assuming that in many cases at any rate these things are done without his knowledge. But I would like to guard him from making statements such as he has made here today, when it is a matter of common knowledge and belief in the counties through which the railways run, that there is no other influence exerted in appointing or maintaining in office employees of the railway than political pressure. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend at this time to say anything further in criticism of the hon. minister's remarks. I shall be very glad indeed to have the return, which I understand he is to bring down, and I think it will tend to prove that any good showing made by the Intercolonial is entirely due to the fact that the business of the road has not developed in the direction that was expected by the acquisition of the Drummond Counties Railway, but that while the profitable local traffic has been developed, the unprofitable through-traffic has not been allowed any longer to make adverse balances for the minister.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to this debate, and if the statements which have been made are true, I think that both parties must have badly managed the Intercolonial Railway, and it is time that that railway were placed under a commission so that we would not have this quarrelling for a whole day about its management. Now, I understood from the minister that it is not the intention to allow the government roads to be controlled by the commission which is about to be appointed. The discussion which we have had to-day has shown us plainly that the commission should have control over that railway, above all others. It seems that the book-keeping is not properly done ; but in that case one party says to the other, you are another, as the book-keeping was done in the same manner under the old regime. If that be so, it is time the book-keeping were done properly. To charge steel rails, locomotives, cars, and all that class of material which is continually wearing out, to capital account, seems to me to be a fallacy. I might as well charge to capital account my binder that is worn out in ten years, or my plough or my harness. These things must be charged against the revenue of my farm. So all those things on the railway that become worn out, should be charged against the revenue. I know something of the history of this road. I remember over forty years ago, when the Trent affair occurred, and troops were sent over from England and landed in Halifax, this country was obliged to bring them in the dead of winter through a thousand miles of snow.

The British army was brought up from Halifax to defend our country against a threatened invasion, and the government of that day very properly considered that they should build a railway from the frontier, over which the troops might be brought at any time without interference. That was the origin, as I understand it, of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not think it was ever pretended that that road would pay from a commercial standpoint, but I do think that the same rates per mile for hauling should be charged over it as are charged over other roads. I do not think that the Intercolonial Railway should carry merchandise cheaper than other roads carry it, but it seems to me that the only remedy for this state of affairs would be to take the road out of the hands of the government and place it under a commission. I am strongly in favour of a railway to the Pacific being built by the government. I think that it is time that this government had energy and force enough to help the people in the west out of the difficulty they are under of getting their produce to market. We know that they are severely overcharged now, but no doubt, if the Grand Trunk Pacific obtain a charter and subsidies, the men who take hold of the scheme will expect to make fortunes out of it. For my part, I do not see the need of any more Lord Mount Coxes or Lord General Booths, but we want the people to own the railway and get the benefit. With regard to the Intercolonial Railway, it seems to me that both parties have made mistakes, and it is no use in their casting slurs at each other. We had better right about ship and manage the Intercolonial Railway better in the future, and not have it said that every man who works on it must vote Grit or be discharged. We are told that, no matter how good a man may be, no matter how well he may work, he cannot get a position on the Intercolonial Railway or hold it unless he votes Grit. That sort of thing I despise. I care not what may be the religion or politics of a man who works for me, if he does good work. I do hope that these discussions will take place in a better spirit. This afternoon I felt very sorry to see the spirit exhibited by the hon. Minister of Railways. I felt sorry for him, as I do for anybody who gets so angry when he speaks, and I hope it will not occur again.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

Intercolonial Railway—to increase the accommodation at Sydney, $97,000,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand why these estimates are being taken up. Inquiry was made last night as to what business would be done to-day. There seemed to be some difficulty among the ministers, but finally they arrived at the conclusion that the Minister of Railways should make his statement, and after that the militia estimates would be taken up. As there was some confusion, I inquired of my right hon. friend the First Minister, and he informed me that the Minister of Railways would make his statement and then the militia estimates would be taken up. As some gentlemen have gone away who are interested in the railway estimates, I think we should not go on with them just now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not aware that there was any such statement made. I supposed that in the ordinary course, after I had made my statement, we would go on with the railway estimates. But if the hon. gentleman believes that a different impression prevails and would desire that the estimates should not be gone on with, I should be very sorry indeed to persist.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The facts are exactly as I have stated them. Not only were we told this in the House last night, but the same thing is stated in a personal letter to me from the Prime Minister received this morning. It may be that we can employ the time by discussing amounts as to which my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is ready, but we would not be ready to go on with estimates of the road generally, because my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) went away on my representations to him of what was stated last night and to-day. We can go on with some items.

Mr. BARKER. As to this first item, to increase the accommodation at Sydney, I would ask the hon. minister—I think I asked him the same question last year—whether this $97,000 will complete all the works he intends to construct at Sydney ? On one or two occasions before, the minister was not able to say at all definitely whether he would or would not require more money. This is a revote of money asked for a year ago, and I think the department ought to be able to say whether or not they will require more money for this service. I would like a definite answer on that point—whether this will finish the works in Sydney and what is the probable extent of those works.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps it would be better, in order that I may keep on safe ground, that I should defer answering, because my impression is that this covers the work that is now under contemplation. But I could not say that it might not be found necessary to do some additional work at Sydney at an early day, unless I were fortified by the information of the general manager. I know of nothing further in contemplation at present, but there may be.

Mr. BARKER. Of course, I do not mean to say that the minister should be called upon to promise that in three or four years there might not be some further works to be done. But these are large expenditures to provide terminal accommodation for the road. It is a usual, and, I think, very proper rule, that the engineer, or whoever is responsible for the work, shall lay out all the works at a point, and that there shall be an understanding at the department of what works are to be undertaken and what the cost is likely to be. If you do not follow that course you may drift into an enormous expenditure which you would not undertake if you knew from the beginning what was involved. Were the House to vote money year after year for a place like this, we ought to have an announcement from the minister that he has obtained a statement from the proper officer of the department as to what is likely to be required and whether the money voted will cover the works in contemplation.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Coming from the town where the money now being voted is to be spent, I may be allowed to say a few words as knowing a little of what is required for the Intercolonial Railway at that place. I would like to say to the hon. member (Mr. Barker) and the committee that the amount now asked for is not by any means sufficient to afford terminal accommodation for a place like Sydney. Being the eastern terminus of the Intercolonial, we should have the facilities of a water terminus. That has not been provided for, and it would take much more than this vote, even if this were intended, for that particular purpose, whereas, I understand, it is not intended to provide by this vote water terminal facilities for that port. I wish to say to the minister here that a much larger sum will be required to provide proper and suitable facilities for the Intercolonial at the town of Sydney.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may explain to the hon. member (Mr. Barker) that these items are not part of a provision for a general scheme. The items which go to make up this $97,000 are self-contained and require no explanation beyond their own sphere.

Mr. BARKER. What are they ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The new station house, covered platforms, coal house, car repair shops, a larger electric light plant and so on. These are within a compact area and are part of the necessary station facilities for the end of the road at that point. I have not considered the questions that may be involved in the project of a deep water terminal which my hon. friend (Mr. Johnston, Cape Breton) has spoken of. If that should be undertaken at a future day, it cannot be said that any part of this work could have been left undone. The other would be a question which would stand entirely by itself and would be taken up as a separate and distinct matter.

Mr. BARKER. Will this $97,000 complete that station and all the matters connected with it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is my opinion.

Mr. BARKER. And this is not a blanket vote for Sydney, but is a total of estimates in the minister's hands and is required for particular works ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, exactly.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. minister place on record what the items are ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated them.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not hear the hon. minister do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimate placed in my hands of the items making up this $97,000 is as follows. New station, $60,000; covered platform, $6,000; coal house, $4,500; car repair shop, $7,000; heating for car repair shop, $1,000; electric light plant, $7,000; fittings and furniture, $1,000; engineering, inspection, contingencies, etc., $10,500, total, $97,000.

Mr. LENNOX. All new work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Entirely.

Original construction, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the ordinary item.

Mr. BARKER. It is not for anything specific ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

To strengthen bridges, $165,100.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am obliged to ask for a revote of $77,000. Owing to the contractors being unable either to procure the material to construct, or, at all events, not being able to furnish us with the bridge structures. We had an appropriation for 1902-03 of $225,000. We expended from the 30th of June, to the 30th of January, $88,489. It is estimated that before the end of the current year we will be able to lay out over $58,000 of that original vote, which will leave $77,711 to be revoted. The balance due on bridges as tendered for is $31,000. The plans will cost $4,000, painting, $1,400; false work, $4,500; doubling up of bridge, $35,000; inspection, $1,311,100. There is, you will observe, an additional amount included in this estimate of $87,388. The purposes for what that amount will be expended are: To pay for the bridges already tendered for, in addition to those mentioned, $44,300; doubling up bridges, $33,900, the balance being for painting floors and engineering.

Mr. BARKER. Would the hon. minister tell us where those bridges are ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot at this moment, but I will get the information.

Mr. CLANCY. Of what kind of material are those bridges made now in existence ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably most of them are iron, they were all built many years ago.

Mr. BARKER. Is the hon. gentleman charging to capital the whole cost of the new bridges ?,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I am using the old bridges. The hon. gentleman may recall the explanations I have made on two or three occasions with regard to these. I am taking up the bridges which are weak and doubling them. That is, take a weak bridge on a certain stream called 'A;' take another weak bridge on a stream called 'B;' take the bridge that is over 'B' stream and put it alongside the bridge over 'A' stream, doubling up the latter. That bridge then becomes of added weight and added strength, and is a complete and satisfactory bridge. I put in a new structure of the proper weight in the place which has become vacant by the removal of the first bridge.

Mr. BARKER. Are there any places where these old bridges are put in for the first time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no knowledge of any instance where they do not take the place of old bridges. The bridges which were placed on the Intercolonial when it was constructed were uniform in type and character, so we have no trouble at all in doubling them up.

Mr. BARKER. Do you mean to make a double tracked bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, if you put up two spans, one alongside the other, you get double strength and weight.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the minister give us a statement of where these bridges are ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. On whose advice was this method of strengthening followed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the advice of the chief engineer.

Mr. BELL. What instances could the minister cite of bridges strengthened in this manner ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been dozens of them, pretty nearly over the whole line, I should judge.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman say what is the length of the spans of bridges of this character ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not from memory.

Mr. BELL. Are they long or short spans ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get the information.

Mr. BARKER. That item will stand, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You can bring the question up again on another item.

Mr. BARKER. Let it stand only for this explanation, there will be no comment on it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I fancy we will have something in the supplementaries on which this matter may be brought up again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It might be as well to let it stand as a reminder to the hon. gentleman, and then we will have the information.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the minister if this process of doubling up has not been carried on for some time. I think he has been asking this House to vote sums year after year for this same purpose. The hon. gentleman says this work is being done over the whole line, speaking in general terms. I think three years ago the hon. gentleman asked a vote for the same purpose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have continuously.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it because these bridges are becoming weak through use? He has been using them in the meantime with heavy engines, I presume. Have they ceased from use to have the strength they formerly had?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been no change in the system. We have pursued this system since we found it necessary to strengthen the bridges. There have been quite a number done every year.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman know of any other railway in this country that has adopted that method of strengthening bridges?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not made the inquiry, but I should be very much surprised if there were not others. The hon. gentleman may have a superior knowledge to any that our engineers possess on this question; but I cannot imagine anything that would be more defensible than doubling up these bridges. The iron is perfectly good, the only trouble is that the bridge is not as strong as it ought to be within the limits of safety. We have been using upon the line now for two full years, and perhaps a good part of the third year, heavy locomotives, and we have in cases, over portions of the line which have these lighter bridges, been obliged to shore them up, to put bents under them and strengthen them before we could run the heavy locomotives over them. I think the general character of the alterations and of increasing the bridge structures has been of the description I have mentioned with the exception of two or three crossing large rivers such as the Miramichi and Restigouche. They are exceptions, because, of course, we could not in the same way use these spans for strengthening these bridges. The narrower rivers and streams are crossed by these other bridges, but we have two or three large rivers such as the Miramichi and the Restigouche, or perhaps the Metapedia, where these spans are not used.

Mr. INGRAM. That plan has not been adopted in regard to the Miramichi bridge, because I see that the Dominion Bridge Company put in an estimate for six spans which would be erected according to a different method altogether.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, a different method. It may turn out, when I make inquiry about the bridges that a large portion of this appropriation, or the whole of it may apply to the Miramichi bridge. In that way, I want to qualify the statement I made that it would be a joining of two bridges together. The prevailing mode of alteration over the whole Intercolonial Railway, with the exception of these large rivers, if my memory serves me, has been that which I have mentioned.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose there is a written report from the engineer recommending these works?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKER. Would the hon. gentleman have any objection to bringing down that report and laying it on the Table of the House?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will bring it down, if I have it.

Mr. BELL. In the case of the Miramichi bridge, I suppose the separate spans of such a bridge are sometimes used in this doubling up process?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we are putting the Miramichi bridge, one span or both, over the Hillsborough river in Prince Edward Island. It is a splendid bridge, it is as good as ever it was for the weight which would be required to be carried there.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask the hon. minister if in placing these new bridges at the points where they are required the work is done by day labour or contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where we are putting two bridges together, we do it by our own workmen. If we are putting up a new bridge it is done by the company under contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When I say the company, I mean the company which has the contract. The bridges are put up to public competition. There are the Dominion Bridge Company, the Canadian Bridge Company, and I am not sure but that there is another. One of the Canadian companies get the contract, and they complete the structure.

Mr. CLANCY. Do their contracts include the removal and doubling up of the spans, and the building of new work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, if we are putting two of the older bridges together we do it by men that we have in our own employ. The bridge company, speaking within my best recollection now, have nothing to do with removing one of these old bridges and joining it to another bridge. Their contract covers the construction of the superstructure itself and putting it up.

Mr. CLANCY. That work has to be done while the trains are running, and there are necessarily two parties concerned?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. And the railway traffic must go on as best it can, and get over these places with care ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman not been required to employ additional hands on occasions of that kind ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I dare say some of our railway hands may be employed. I think this work is done uniformly on Sunday.

Mr. INGRAM. I may say to the hon. minister that they can construct a bridge while traffic is going over it, and they are doing it every day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no disturbance at all from it.

Mr. BELL. There must be no Presbyterians in that part of the country.

To increase accommodation at Lévis, $72,000.

Mr. BARKER. The same question arises there as to how far we are to go. Is this to go on year after year, or has the hon. minister a report from the engineer showing what has been spent there and when this is going to end ? That certainly is a place where a particular work must cover the whole of the requirements. It is not a terminus. It is a station yard or something of that kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. I presume that work will not be done without a general report from the engineer showing what was to be done. Could the hon. minister tell us whether this will wind everything up, and if not what more we are to expect ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression in regard to that is that this covers the estimated cost of what is required to be done there. It is a very congested point as everybody knows who has been through Lévis.

Mr. BELL. There was $75,000 spent last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I dare say.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was the work done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. There was a vote of $75,000 in 1901-2, a vote of $22,000 in 1902-3, and now the hon. minister is asking for $72,000. It does not look as if he had quite known what he wanted ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKER. Why do you expect to spend $72,000 this year, when you only spent $22,000 last year ? One would have expected it to be reversed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The work was all contemplated at the outset. The sum which I am asking it is estimated, will complete what we will have to do.

Mr. BARKER. It will complete all the station works ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does it involve—the building of a new station ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the station is already built. The situation is a very awkward one. I do not know whether all the hon. gentlemen who are within hearing are acquainted with the situation there or not. In times past, and up to the present, it has been a very dangerous situation. The station has been on the right hand side of the track, and people have been obliged to cross over these tracks to get to and from the ferry. A very great many people, particularly on the arrival and departure of trains, are going and coming across these tracks. It was found necessary that we should transfer the station to the other side. Fortunately, the present station is one that we require and may use to great advantage for freight and office purposes, so that in putting the new station on the other side, we are not by any means failing to utilize the building which has heretofore been occupied as a station. We have put the other over on the water side of the track and we have provided an overhead bridge which will enable the people to get to and from that station without crossing the tracks and without any personal risk or danger. In this item of $72,000 we estimate what the works contemplated will cost. The estimate is as follows New baggage room, $12,000 ; overhead bridge, $10,000 ; concrete platform, $14,000 ; stone curves, $1,105 ; roofs for the platforms, $30,000 ; tank, $1,850 ; engineer, $3,000, making a total of $72,000, which I am advised will complete the work.

Mr. BARKER. Are they let under contract after tender ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the minister no architect in his own department ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have engineers, and as a general rule they draw the plans of all our buildings.

Mr. INGRAM. I see that there is $1,000 paid to an architect for drawing the plans of the Lévis station.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no man in the department who would probably describe himself as an expert architect. It was expected that we would put up a nice presentable station at Lévis, and it was thought better to secure an architect of standing and reputation to draw the plans.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There was considerable correspondence last year between the Auditor General and the minister as to the mode of auditing the accounts, which I suppose referred to the charges to capital and revenue accounts. The minister agreed to change the mode of auditing the accounts. Would he kindly say what changes have been made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That correspondence had no reference to the question of revenue or capital account. The Auditor General seems to have been very much impressed by the remark made by a gentleman of the opposition in the Public Accounts Committee last year, who thought it was the business of the Auditor General to audit the accounts which were paid at Moncton. The Auditor General, on looking at the statute, came to the conclusion that it was broad enough to enable him to claim the right to withhold payment of any bill until the audit had taken place by himself personally or by some officer that he might appoint. I had several conversations with the Auditor General, and I pointed out to him that this would result in a great deal of inconvenience and no public advantage, because, as the result of many years' experience at Moncton, nothing had transpired to show that the officers at Moncton had failed in the performance of their duty. I pointed out to him that we had a large auditing staff at Moncton which had been there for many years, whose sole duty it was to audit these accounts, and that if he were to audit the accounts, there was no sense at all in paying for two different audits of the same account. I submitted to the demands of the Auditor General, as we could not carry on the business of the Intercolonial Railway unless I did. He is apparently the only person in this country who is to be trusted to properly supervise expenditure and to judge as to what ought be the proper functions of government, and so I submitted with as good a grace as I possibly could. Since then there has been a great deal of inconvenience. For instance, if a sheep happens to be killed on the Intercolonial Railway and the officers inquire into it and report that the sheep ought to be paid for, it not unfrequently happens that correspondence ensues and papers are called for.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And a doctor's certificate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes; a doctor's certificate has to be forthcoming, and these papers oscillate between Moncton on the one hand and the Auditor General on the other; further investigations are made, and the whole staff is set in motion in order to afford reasonable assurance to the Auditor General that this sheep is actually dead or has been seriously injured.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Or ever had an existence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. It is under those circumstances that the correspondence took place.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it not a fact that the Auditor General, in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton, stated that large sums of money were paid as to which he had absolutely no knowledge? Did not the correspondence arise out of larger matters than the Minister of Railways refers to?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am free to admit that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is responsible for the present condition of things, because his remark led the Auditor General to take this view of his duties. If the Public Accounts Committee should meet again at an early date, I wish my hon. friend would withdraw the remark, so that it may be possible for the officers who are engaged in this work at Moncton to do business in a business-like way upon the Intercolonial Railway. I confess that a great many things much larger than that have to be dealt with. I mention this to show what capacity can be found in a faithful and zealous public officer to grasp a needle as well as to strike at larger objects. One of the difficulties which we have is to get bills passed or paid at all. For a long period of years, ever since I have known anything about the Intercolonial personally, and from what I could gather from others who knew it before I came into the department, there was a recognized system of audit for printing done in connection with the Intercolonial. The Auditor General has since last session insisted that accounts for printing shall be audited and paid on the same basis on which the printing is done at the Printing Bureau. An examination of that system shows that no charge is made in connection with the investment, the cost of plant, or any of the hundred and one things that are outside of the actual labour and paper; and there has not been for a year past a single account settled or adjusted by the Auditor.

Mr. CLANCY. Can this printing not be done at the bureau?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It cannot be done at the bureau, for it is too far away, and it has never been thought reasonable that it should be done there. The claim is not that the work should be done at the bureau, but that it should only be paid for at bureau prices.

But printers cannot print at those prices ; they ought not to be asked to do so, and the law is not different to-day from what it has been for years. Under the law as it is now, and with the same knowledge of what it is, the Auditor has authorized the payment down to the current year of bills at the reasonable commercial price.

Mr. REID (Grenville). After that explanation the hon. minister cannot find fault with us. He knows that the Auditor General was appointed by the Liberal government, and if he is now putting the brakes on in that way, it must be because he has not the same confidence in this government that he had in their predecessors ; and if we are suspicious in that regard, we certainly have much more reason to be so than he has. However, I would like to ask the hon. minister, whether in case of capital expenditure, for instance for rails, the old rails are disposed of and the amount for which they are sold is placed to the credit of capital account ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. I would wish to make a remark or two on the subject of the audit. The hon. gentleman knows that the points on which the discussion occurred in the Public Accounts Committee were not at all of the nature that he has alluded to. There was no question of deciding upon a claim on a calf being killed or anything of that kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what it developed into.

Mr. BARKER. I am speaking of what occurred in the committee. In one or two cases we found that after parliament had authorized the government to spend a certain sum of money at a particular place the government spent twice that sum, without any authority whatever, and I asked the Auditor General how it happened that he had passed those accounts. He said that they were all paid before he knew anything about them. Out of that arose a discussion on the question whether there was a sufficient audit. There is a departmental auditor at Moncton, but that gentleman is precisely in the position of a staff officer on a railway who can be dismissed at any time by the manager. He simply looks after the details between the departments. Such an audit is no protection to the proprietors of the railway, nor would such an audit be a protection to the people of this country. We want somebody to audit the accounts as between the public and the railway department, not a gentleman who will object to a particular item at the peril of the loss of his situation. The hon. gentleman knows that the Auditor General cannot be dismissed by the government, and for that reason matters such as I have alluded to should be audited by him. We should have the protection of such an officer's endorsement of the expenditure, not the endorsement of some gentleman down at Moncton, who knows that he must do exactly as he is told, who will audit a particular account, but who will not criticise the government if it is spending two or three times what it is authorized to spend. That was what led to the discussion in the Public Accounts Committee, as the minister knows perfectly well.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Postmaster General, House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 29, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 185) respecting the Canadian Steel Company.—Mr. Fraser.

Bill (No. 186) to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—The Minister of Inland Revenue.

Bill (No. 187) to amend the Electric Light Inspection Act.—The Minister of Inland Revenue.

Bill (No. 188) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.—The Minister of Inland Revenue.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That from this date to the end of the session government Orders have precedence on Mondays after Private Bills and Questions to be put by members.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). I would remind the right hon. gentleman that last Monday he promised that an opportunity would be given to bring up the Fruit Marks Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not forgotten that promise, and should this motion carry I shall ask the House on Monday to take up the two Bills relating to this subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). This motion takes away our right to make any private motions whatever, such as motions for returns. Is that necessary ? For instance yesterday a question was put by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) asking how many members or ex-members of the House of Commons have been appointed to offices of emolument under the Crown since the 13th July, 1896, and also how many members or ex-members of the Senate, and he was directed to move for a return. But should this motion carry, it will be impossible for him to do so. There seems to be a remarkable discrimination made between questions put on this side of the House and those put on the other side. I called attention to this early in the session, and was told by the hon. Minister of Customs that no such discrimination was intended. But let me point to two instances of such discrimination during the session. In the 'Hansard' of March 26th, the hon. gentleman will find a long return given by the Minister of Customs in answer to a question put by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes)—a return which takes up the greater part of the page. I called attention to this and was assured by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs that no discrimination was intended. No doubt the question was asked by the hon. member for West Huron, at the request of the hon. Minister of Customs, and with this I am not finding fault, but what I do object to is that we should find in 'Hansard' an answer to such a question and that hon. gentlemen on this side should have to move for returns which would not be any more voluminous than the one given in the answer to which I have referred. Another extreme instance is to be found on the 30th of April in 'Hansard.' A certain question was put by the hon. the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), at the request, no doubt, of the hon. Postmaster General, and nearly two columns of 'Hansard' are taken up, without the slightest demur, giving long statistics with regard to three different subjects. Yet when my hon. friend from Marquette asks a question, the answer to which would not take up nearly as much space, my right hon. friend tells him to move for a return. I do not want to unduly complain, but I think that my right hon. friend should make an effort to have the one rule applied to both sides, and I am sure that if that were done, we would not find the condition of affairs to which I have just drawn attention. My right hon. friend must admit that the answer to the question of my hon. friend for Marquette could not possibly involve anything like the lengthy details given in answer to the question of the hon. member for West Assiniboia, but even if it should take a half a column or two columns of 'Hansard, what difference is there? The minister of the Crown has to bring down the information, and the only difference between bringing it down in reply to a question and bringing it down in reply to a motion, is that in the one case he reads it, and in the other he lays it on the Table. It does not seem to me that so many cases should arise in which so many gentlemen on this side are asked to obtain information by way of motion. A very inconsiderable portion of some of the business of the House at least has been concluded up to the present, and it is quite possible that we may require information which will be obtainable only by an address or Order of the House, and it seems to me that the right hon. gentleman ought to reserve some opportunity at least to hon. gentlemen on this side for obtaining information which they can only obtain by way of motion. I do not think therefore that my right hon. friend should press the motion in its present form.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say to my hon. friend that if there has been any discrimination, I was not aware of it. I would be the last man to try to take an adadvantage over the other side. It may be, however, that sometimes an answer may more readily give the information than a return in reply to a motion, but there are other cases in which the form of a motion may be more suitable. For instance, with regard to the question of the hon. member for Marquette, I have no objection to give the information desired, but I wish to introduce an amendment and bring down some further information so as to avoid discrimination. Perhaps as the question will involve discrimination, a motion to which I would add an amendment would put all parties on an equality.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That can be accomplished by having a question put on that side.

The PRIME MINISTER. It would be as well accomplished by having my hon. friend from Marquette move a motion and then moving an amendment to that motion, so that the motion and the amendment would go together. We have come to the time of the session when such a motion is usually moved, and I am only following the usual practice. When we have reached a certain period of the session the government takes possession of all the days in order to facilitate, or rather to accelerate, the business of the House. This year, I think, there ought to be no objection at all by my hon. friend to this motion, for, I have only to recall to his mind that, at least of late, on days reserved for private members business, the paper has been gone over, we have been able to finish all the business standing in the nature of private members that was ready to be dealt with and to reach the business of the government. I have no objection that on Mondays, even though this motion is carried, the motions which are not debatable should be called and passed without any objection. Also, we can take up the Bill of my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) and the Bill of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). I think that ought to satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. ARCH. CAMPBELL (West York). I would call the attention of the right hon. the First Minister (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to the fact that I also have a Bill before the House, a very important measure, Bill (No. 20). This has been kept back largely at the request of the government, that they might have an opportunity to consider it. If all the Mondays are now taken by the government, there will be no opportunity to consider this Bill. The Bill has been referred to a special committee. I would ask the Prime Minister if he would not allow that also to be taken up.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not on the Order Paper. It will be called later on when the committee reports.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I would draw the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister to the fact that, no matter what the period of the session, this motion was seldom made until the main estimates were all passed. At present the estimates of a good many of the departments have not been even touched. Information may be wanted by members of the opposition to enable them intelligently to prepare for the discussion of the estimates. For instance, three or four points concerning which I have notices on the paper came up in the debate yesterday. I was without accurate information on the subject and could only speak on the facts that I gathered outside. Opportunity should be left the private members of the House to move motions to get the information necessary for the discussion of the estimates.

The PRIME MINISTER. With the permission of the House, I would say that I do not agree with the statements of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) that this motion is generally made only after the main estimates have gone through. It is not only proper, but it is the invariable rule, that all information necessary to the discussion of the estimates should be given, even if not moved for. If it is not furnished, the opposition have a very easy way of enforcing it, and I do not know but that they have availed themselves of that power on occasion even during the present session. With reference to motions of which notice has been given, they will be called up by consent. But even if the motions referred to by my hon. friend are not called up, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has promised that the information shall be brought down before his estimates are completed. There will be no trouble on that score. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) shall have the information which he requires.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well, we ask for information when the estimates are under discussion and yet it is almost impossible to get it. The minister may promise it, but he may forget, or for some other reason it is not furnished anyway. There is nothing left for us of the opposition but to do as the right hon. gentleman (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) suggests, and declare that the item shall not pass until the information has been given.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would suggest one thing, if Monday is the only day we are to have. I notice that when these unopposed motions are called, some member of the government is apt to call 'stand,' for some reason best known to the government themselves. The effect is to prevent the putting of the motion. They could do so with a motion of any kind, and so no opportunity would be afforded to the member who has given notice of a motion to have it passed by the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will tell my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) why the government call 'stand.' When a motion is called and the member in whose name it appears is not present, if nothing were said, the order would be dropped Many debatable questions have been called up in this way, and the hon. member who has given notice not being present, I have called 'stand' so that the notice might remain on the Order Paper. But on Monday all the motions will be called and those which are not debatable can be passed. For instance, the motion of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) which stands on the Order Paper is a debatable question and would not be called. But all motions moved for the production of papers will be allowed without any objection.

Motion agreed to.

I.C.R.—WINDSOR JUNCTION ACCIDENT.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). With the unanimous consent of the House, I would move for :—

The interim report of the commissioners appointed to investigate the accident on the Intercolonial Railway near Windsor Junction at 23 o'clock, April 11, 1903.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the Table the interim report of the commissioners to investigate the accident on the Intercolonial Railway near Windsor Junction.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TRAFFIC RATES.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair). In the course of his remarks, as will be found at page 3654 of 'Hansard,' he referred to——a careful study made and a careful statement furnished to me by the traffic officers of the Intercolonial Railway as to the general traffic of tolls and freight charges which govern on the Intercolonial Railway and those which govern on the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Might I ask if that paper can be laid on the Table of the House. It would furnish valuable information in connection with the discussion that may arise as to the rates on the Intercolonial Railway. I presume the hon. minister has no objection to lay that report on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I shall be very glad to consider the matter and let my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) know. I would say to him that I should be very glad to show the report to him if he wishes to see it, but I am not quite clear at the moment that it would be desirable to lay on the Table a memorandum prepared for my own information. I will consider that point.

Mr. BELL. I should have supposed that the minister, having read from the document and used in accordance with his speech, the document becomes the property of the House.

TREADGOLD CONCESSION COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called I would ask the Prime Minister whether or not the terms of the commission inquiring into the Treadgold concession have been settled, and whether the commissioners have been appointed ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The terms of the commission have been settled, Mr. Speaker, and I have reason to believe that we shall be able to lay the document on the Table on Monday—not later than Tuesday.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the right hon. gentleman propose to permit the House to have an opportunity of discussing the terms before they are settled ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No ; I will bring down the Order in Council.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. AULEY MORRISON (New Westminster). I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he has been informed of the influx of a large number of Japanese into the province of British Columbia within the last fifteen days, and if so, whether the Japanese Consul at Montreal has been communicated with, with respect to the arrival of these Japanese.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have not received any communication upon this subject. This is the first intimation I have had of it.

THE RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 3, subsection 1,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I stated to the committee the other evening that I would consider the suggestions which had been made to include the express companies within the scope of this Act and to place them under the jurisdiction of the railway commission. I have given that subject consideration, and I am not able to see that it will be of any advantage to the Act ; on the contrary, I think it would impair its value if we were to make the change which is proposed. I am of opinion that it would be necessary, in order to cover the ground fully and to make the legislation effective, to bring in a separate Bill.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Does the minister consider that the Bill gives any control at all over the rates charged by express companies ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Bill gives absolute control over the rates which are charged in respect of all merchandise carried over railways, where railway carriage is concerned. There can be no question about that.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Do I understand that the commission will have control over the whole route covered by express companies in carrying merchandise that is carried on a railway, or only over that portion of a route over which the railroad charges express companies for hauling their goods ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All charges which are incidental to the carriage of goods over a railway and which would be made in respect of railway carriage, are subject to the control of this tribunal. What is not subject to their control, and what I think cannot be properly made subject to their control, unless we have a separate Act, are the charges which the express companies would make beyond the railway charges. I stated that the other day. I do not think such charges would come within the jurisdiction of the railway commission under this Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would not the result be that wherever the express charge includes anything beyond or in addition to the charge of carriage on the railways, it will not come under the control of this commission ? Because I do not see how you can divide it up. Suppose you have an express charge covering transmission by a certain railway and covering further a certain distance by coach or by boat, there will be only one charge for the entire distance made by the express company. How can you determine what is the proportion of railway charge and what is the proportion of coach charge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that could be very well worked out so as to exercise control over a portion of the charge with respect to another carriage. To do that I think would require a special Act which, to be comprehensive, would have to take control of the rates and charges of express companies in respect to any portion of the route over which it carries goods. I am not disposed to do that in this Bill, I cannot do it comprehensively in this Bill without encumbering the Bill. At another session perhaps the subject can be taken up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman suggests that this additional legislation called for is impracticable. But was there not some such legislation introduced by way of amendment to the Railway Act in 1900, on account of a difficulty which had arisen between the Yarmouth Steamship Company and the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company ? It seems to me that what the hon. gentleman has just stated was attempted by legislation of that kind ; whether it was actually carried out, I do not know.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so, I think that dealt exclusively with the rates charged in respect of what was railroad rates in the ordinary sense on goods carried from one point to another, a part of the distance being covered by water carriage. The steamship company had received freight to be taken to some point on the Dominion Atlantic Railway and to be carried by that railway. Then parliament gave to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council power to control that rate, and provided that there should be a declared rate in respect both of water carriage and rail carriage. But there the railway company was the contracting party, or the party who engaged to receive and carry this freight. Now an express company is not in the same position. An express company contracts with its patron to receive a package of goods, not to carry it all the way by rail necessarily, but to carry it to a certain point, and the company is the party which undertakes the carriage. The company may take a portion of it by steamer, it may take a portion of it by carriage over an ordinary highway, and it may take a portion of it by railway. When it gets upon the railway, then, the charges which are made in respect to the carriage of that merchandise will be subject, as I clearly understand this Bill, to the control of the railway commission, because, the railway cannot by any arrangement or understanding that it may have with an agent, or with some other company, or outside party, permit, or secure to itself, any higher rates to be imposed on such carriage than the law through this commission shall declare.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I recollect the case now to which I referred a few moments ago. The difficulty there was in respect to a railway company which also had a line of steamers which connected with Boston. The Yarmouth Steamship Company was a rival company. The allegation was that the railway company had imposed altogether too high a charge for railway carriage on freight routed to Boston by the Yarmouth Steamship Line and in that way had subjected the Yarmouth Steamship Company to an unjust discrimination. The hon. minister's position, I understand, to be this : The express company is a separate corporation undertaking business by any means within its power, and that business can be accomplished partly by railway, partly by carriage over highway and partly by boat, and therefore it does not come within the scope of this Bill to control the rates beyond those which shall be charged by the railway. Well, that brings us back to the position that practically where the express charge covers conveyance beyond the railway we have no control at all. It does bring us back to that conclusion does it not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not disputing the hon. gentleman's position; I am just endeavouring to find out where we are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then it is a question of policy whether we should undertake to do more and the hon. gentleman thinks we should not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not in this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When the hon. gentleman says : 'not in this Bill' does he intend to convey any meaning beyond that, that he has in mind the preparation of any other legislation which would control matters of this kind ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not hesitate to say that if any difficulty arises in respect to the control and regulation of the tolls or rates of express companies I would not be unwilling to examine into the subject and see whether legislation might not be proposed in another Bill. I would be disposed in my own mind to favour legislation which would give to the public protection against excessive rates being charged by express companies. That is a fair matter for consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Chairman, I understand the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to say that express matter carried over a railway would be under the control of this commission as far as the rates go ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As to the railway carriage.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume this Bill is modelled largely upon the legislation in the United States under which the American Railway Commission proceeds ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in some decisions on that question given by the Inter-

State Commerce Commission that this rule is laid down :

Express business, conducted as a branch of the business of the railroad company, held to be subject to the Act.

Express business, conducted by an independent organization, acquiring transportation rights by contract, held not to be described in the Act with sufficient precision to warrant the commission to taking jurisdiction thereof.

They hold that it would be required to be expressed in the Act in such a way as to bring it under the control of the railway commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The whole principle of the Acts which provide for the appointment and jurisdiction of a railway commission in the United States and the whole scope and basis of those acts are entirely different from this Bill. I think there is no similarity at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I think they are different so far as they are entitled to exercise control over express companies, charges where carried on a railway whether carried by an independent express company or carried by an express company which is part of the railway company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will find there legislation giving control of charges to the commission as respects merchandise handled by a common carrier. That is not the principle of this Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be a little clearer in regard to a matter that was under discussion when the committee rose the last evening upon which this Bill was under consideration. When the committee was sitting on that evening upon this clause, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was kind enough to tell me that if I read clause five of this Bill I would find that it did apply to express companies in regard to a case that I put to the hon. minister; that is a case where goods are shipped by express over a railway that is not within the jurisdiction of this Bill and not within the scope of section three which is before the committee now. I gave the example of an electric railway which runs through the county of Lincoln, entirely a provincial railway, which does not cross any other railway, which does not come within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada and I pointed out to the hon. minister that these goods shipped by the railway I am speaking of from Beamsville to Ottawa or, say fruit shipped from Beamsville to Ottawa or Montreal, changed hands at Hamilton, were taken from a railway not within the scope of this Bill and given over to the Canadian Pacific Railway which is a railway coming within the scope of this Bill. The hon. minister told me that if I read section five carefully again I would find that it covered that question, that section five showed that goods that would be carried by express over these two railways, one not within the scope of this Bill, and one within the scope of this Bill, being handed over from the former to the latter in the middle of the journey, would be covered by this Bill. I want to understand this legislation before I vote for or against it. I may be lacking in ordinary intelligence. The hon. minister seems to think that I should read the Bill over three or four times more before I understand it. I would ask the hon. minister to explain how section five meets a case of that kind. Section five reads as follows :—

All the provisions of this Act relating to any subject or matter within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and for greater certainty but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms, all provisions relating to railway crossings and junctions, highway crossings, through traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not.

It seems to me that no words in that section can possibly apply to express companies unless they are the words 'through traffic.' I do not think that the hon. minister will say that the words 'railway crossings and junctions, highway crossings, offences, penalties and statistics,' will bring any express company within the operation of this Bill in the way in which it was said this Bill would apply. I would now ask the hon. minister whether he means that the words 'through traffic' do cover express companies in cases of that kind, because, if they do, I suppose it follows that the Bill would cover express companies generally, and there seems to me to be a great deal of misunderstanding and a great deal of misconception between the hon. minister and hon. members of this House as to how far these express companies come within the operation of this section. I think it would be well if the hon. minister would point out how section five covers the carriage of express goods by a railway which does not come within the scope of this Bill and which are handed over to a railway which does come within the scope of this Bill. That cannot be covered by this Act at all. The minister said that if I read section five I would find that it covered this exact case, but it can only cover it if it is included in the words 'through traffic.' Will the minister tell us in plain language if the words 'through traffic' include express business on railways such as I speak of.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman referred to merchandise which started on one railway and was taken up by another and carried to its destinatiton. That is through-traffic, and that is provided for by section 5. It is perfectly clear from that section that when a railway company is constituted by the legislature of a province it does not become subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada ; whether this is so or not, if that traffic was through-traffic in the way he described it, it would become subject to this Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. Shipped by express.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care whether shipped by express or not, so long as it is carried over the two railways as through-traffic. I can understand that a doubt might arise if a person in Sarnia were shipping to Ottawa and he sent his goods to Toronto, took them off the train, and some one took hold of them and reshipped them to Ottawa, thus making two distinct shipments. A doubt would probably arise there as to whether the first railway, not being subject to the jurisdiction of this parliament, would be under the control of this commission. But if there is a through shipping over two different railways, and if there is a rate arranged for at first to carry the goods to their destination, then they would become 'through-traffic,' and as such, whether express or not, they would be subject to the provisions of this Act, in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). It is not clear yet to a great many of us whether this commission will have power over the rates charged by express companies. As I understand it, the Act will only protect express companies as against the railway companies. The only control this commission would have over rates would be on the railways, and that is but a small part, scarcely half the charge made by the express companies. The express companies make charges for teaming in cities and towns, for the time of their messengers on the train, and for other services, which make up more than half the charges of the express companies, and, so far as I can see, the control which this commission would have over the rates charged by express companies would be of no use whatever to the shipper. Has the minister taken fully into consideration the points mentioned the other night by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), who stated that Mr. Staunton, an eminent lawyer who considered this matter carefully, had declared that by the insertion of a very few words the express companies could be brought fully within the scope of this Act ? Why should not the minister put a private individual in the same position as an express company, and have it declared in this law that a private individual can ship his goods upon a railway upon the same terms as an express company can ? If that were embodied in the law, it would meet the complaint of shippers of express goods, and of the fruit-growers in particular, who ship the greater part of their products by express, and who are very much concerned about this matter. When the fruit-growers interviewed the minister last winter they never dreamed for an instant that express companies would not be brought under this Act. I can assure the minister that they have always taken it for granted that the express companies would come under the operations of the Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what these gentlemen may have taken for granted, but I think they will find that this Bill will afford them a great deal of relief if they have any grievances of which they can justly complain. At all events, it makes it possible for an independent body to investigate and determine as to whether or not the charges that are made in respect to the railway carriage of these goods are reasonable charges, and if they are not they can reduce them. I read from 'Hansard' the question put to me the other night by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). He asked :

> Now, the question I want to put to the minister is this : Suppose some constituent of mine ships his fruit on that electric railway to be carried to Ottawa. It is to be carried by the Dominion Express Company that starts on the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway, and is then transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is a railway within the provisions of this Act ? Now, what does the minister say about that express business ?

That is a question of through-freight beyond any doubt, and I answered the hon. gentleman accordingly. I told him that the law provides for that case just as fully as it provides for any case in which business is being done by express companies, and the fact that the initial road was not under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada did not prevent it being brought under the provisions of this Bill as a carrier of through-traffic by the fifth clause, which says :

> 5. All the provisions of this Act relating to any subject or matter within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and for greater certainty but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms, all provisions relating to railway crossings and junctions, highway crossings, through-traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not. 51 V., c. 29, s. 4, Am.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As I understand the minister, all freight carried by express companies on railways is under the jurisdiction of the commission. As my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has pointed out, that is of benefit solely to express companies and is of no benefit at all to the private shipper. The charges made to the express companies by the railway can be regulated by the commission. But here is an express company which perhaps receives its incorporation from the provincial legislature and over which the Dominion government has no control whatever. It makes a contract with an individual to carry goods by express over the railroad at a greater charge than the commission allows the railway company to make. I do not see how under this Bill we could exercise any control over the express company in a case of that kind. I do not say that it ought to be so ; but the Bill affords no remedy at all to a shipper by an express company, and I do not know whether you could in an Act like this make regulations that would do so. Take the case of freight initiated on a road of a purely provincial character like an electric tramway between St. Catharines and Toronto. This Bill provides that the Dominion parliament shall give the commission power to regulate freight charges ; but in a case of that kind, I do not think such a clause is worth the paper it is written on. What right has the parliament of Canada to take control over a company which receives its entity and corporate power from the local legislature, and say that it shall only charge so much for the carriage of goods ? It has no control or jurisdiction whatever over it. I am perhaps with the minister to this extent, that it is rather a difficult job to embody in a Bill like this provisions giving the commission power to regulate express rates, for a good many reasons. Most of the business done by express companies is done under special contracts and at prices which could not possibly be regulated by a commission. For instance, the express companies carry money for banks from the different agencies to the headquarters or to central points, and they make special arrangements with the banks under which they receive for the carriage of that money perhaps ten or twenty times the ordinary rate of freight. That is a perfectly legitimate transaction. The express companies are entitled to a large remuneration for the risk they run. Why should we prevent them making such an arrangement, and attempt to provide in a purely railway Bill, that they shall receive no more than is charged for carrying ordinary freight ? I can see the difficulty of the minister in making these provisions apply to express companies. But he could make them apply very easily by adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for Lincoln, which would remedy the whole grievance ; that is, to provide that a railway which carries freight for an express company shall carry the goods of an individual on the same terms and at the same rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think my hon. friend would support a motion of that kind.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not say that I would.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is another important consideration in support of the argument of the minister and the hon. member for South Lanark. People are not bound to go to the express companies at all. We must not forget that this is a general Bill for a specific purpose, and a very broad purpose ; it is a Bill for railways alone. We have other general Acts of various kinds ; and if you want to regulate express companies, you can only deal with them intelligently and effectively by means of a general law with respect to express companies, which are different creatures from railways. I think that is logical. We should be very careful, in passing a general Act of any kind, not to incorporate in it things which have no relation to its object. It would be unfortunate, I think, in the interests of the shipper if express companies could not operate in such a way as the hon. member for South Lanark mentions. I do not know what banks or others similarly situated would do. We are prepared to pay extra rates if we want our goods rushed from one point to another by an express company. We often pay for quick expedition in the carriage of goods, and we are willing to pay. If we are going to regulate express companies, my idea is that we should do so by a general Bill dealing with express companies.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I agree that we are quite willing to pay a higher rate for an extra rate of speed, but the express companies do not give it to us. It is the railway companies that give us the speed, because they carry the goods. I would like to ask if there is any provision in this Bill which entitles shippers to demand from the railways the same rate of speed and the same charge for the carriage of their goods which the railways give to the express companies. If so, that will solve the difficulty. In many cases the shipper could dispense with the extra services for which the express company charges the shipper. For instance, he could transfer his goods to and from the railway in his own wagon, and he could dispense with a messenger accompanying the goods on the railway. I would ask the minister if there is anything in the Bill to enable shippers to get the same treatment from the railways as the express companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend will hardly expect freight to be carried in the same way as a parcel of goods is carried by express. Freight and passengers are not carried together, but an express car is attached to a passenger train, and in that way goods are carried at an express rate of speed. There is no provision in the Bill which I think would compel a railway company to carry ordinary express freight, as it is called, at the same rate of speed as carriages containing express goods are conveyed in passenger trains. There is no provision in the law especially authorizing them and I do not know that there is any provision in this Bill which by implication would authorize it. As at present advised I would not favour the introduction of any such clause. By this Bill we confer upon the commission power to determine what is just, fair and reasonable, and we impose penalties of a serious character on a railway company or its officials or anybody connected with it who would disregard the orders and regulations of the commission, but we cannot undertake to ramify through all the channels of railway operation and discrimination and provide some superabundant power which will meet every possible contingency that may occur to anybody's mind.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is another point. The express companies are responsible and not the railway companies. They have to pay an allowance to each railway company. We give them their charters, believing that they serve a useful purpose, and you need not go to an express company unless you please. They are separate corporations, with special powers and are responsible. I am not satisfied that a railway company can undertake this class of business. They may often refuse it. I remember an instance of a railway company wanting to prevent an express company operating on its line, and it was only under a clause of the Railway Act that the company was compelled to do so. The railway company said: 'We will not take that business at all,' but they found they had to. If the express companies were taking advantage of the public, that would be another question, but the more I consider the point raised, the more I think that it would be an unfortunate experiment to deal with it in this general Bill.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). With regard to the statement that railways cannot do this business, the railways in England are doing it. They carry goods at a rapid rate of speed, and if they do not get their cars in on time, they have to pay a fine. Suppose a shipper had a carload of fruit to ship to Winnipeg. He does not want any messenger to go along with it, but is willing to take the responsibility himself. It goes the same way as ordinary freight, except that it goes in a swifter train. If there is no other way of controlling the express companies, why should not the shipper, if he signs a contract to take the responsibility, have the same rates as the express company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that the passenger trains on English railways carry express goods. They run special fast trains for what they call express freights, but these trains do not run as fast as our express trains. The conditions are quite different.

Amendment (Mr. Maclean) negatived.

Mr. BARKER. I have asked on one or two occasions on what grounds government railways are excluded from the jurisdiction of this proposed commission, and have not yet been able to obtain an answer. Up to the present moment the only reply I have been able to obtain from the hon. gentleman is that he does not wish it. He has given no reason for his wishes. I wish to point out the relative importance of the government railway mileage. Take the hon. gentleman's report, I find that the total number of miles of steam railway in the Dominion is 18,868, and electric railways, 558 miles, making a total of 19,426. The hon. gentleman said the other day that 95 per cent of the railways would come under this commission. He may have meant 95 per cent of the companies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave the off-hand opinion that 95 per cent of the provincial roads, incorporated under provincial Acts, and which ordinarily would not come under our jurisdiction, had come under it by virtue of the legislation of this parliament from time to time.

Mr. BARKER. I am not holding the hon. gentleman down to 95 per cent. But in a general way he spoke of bringing 95 per cent under this Bill. As I understand, the Canadian Pacific Railway will not come under it, so far as the mileage of its main line between North Bay and Vancouver is concerned.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. From Callander to Vancouver.

Mr. BARKER. After looking at the time table, I find that the mileage west of North Bay to Vancouver is about 2,542, and that the government railway mileage is 1,552, making a total of 4,094 miles excluded from the jurisdiction of the commission. That would mean that instead of only 5 per cent being excluded, there would be nearly 22 per cent of the mileage of the railway companies excluded from the jurisdiction of this commission. I think that that is a very serious subject for consideration, and while I admit that the hon. gentleman possibly cannot get over the difficulty with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, it does not follow that he should not have the 1,500 miles of railway operated by the government brought under this commission. I think there is no line of railway which is so important to have under the jurisdiction of the commission as the railway owned and operated by the government. For, this is really the terminal railway. We are discussing in this House the question of adding to the transportation facilities of this country for the purpose of ensuring that the products of the great west shall be directed through our own territory to the sea. The major portion of that traffic may go over the government railway—that is the pipe through which the most of the grain may go. It is of immense importance to those in the west, and to those in the other provinces as well, that the commissioners who control and regulate rates and various other matters as provided in this Bill, should have jurisdiction with regard to this terminal road, the great government road which leads to the sea. There are 1,552 miles of government railway. I admit that that includes a couple of hundred miles of the Prince Edward Island Railway. But there are over 1,300 miles of the Intercolonial alone, and it is a very important matter that this control of rates by the commission should not be limited so as to exclude that mileage. We are entitled to have from the government something more than their mere wish on this point. There may be reasons why the commissioners should not be allowed to regulate charges upon the Intercolonial, but I believe that the public and that every member of this House will think just the other way. I think that all the discussion we have had in this House, even the elaborate speech with which the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) favoured the House yesterday with regard to his own operations, shows if it shows anything, it is of immense importance to this country that somebody outside of the mere political head of the department should have an opportunity of knowing what is going on in connection with that railway. We are told by the hon. minister that a great discrepancy exists and must exist between the rates charged on the government railway and those charged on other railways. Surely this strikes at the very root of the appointment of this commission. Rates should be fairly regulated, and a shipper should know what rate he is to be charged, not only for a portion of the haul, but for all of it. I persist in the request I have made, and, as I have not had an answer, I move that section 3 be amended by striking out the words 'other than government railways.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should have answered, or at least made an effort to answer, the question which the hon. member (Mr. Barker) put to me the day before yesterday, but that we came to a conclusion about the business of the House very shortly after he had spoken, and before I had an opportunity to respond to his appeal. I recall very well the line of argument he addressed to this committee—practically the same as he used to-day—in which he suggested that there was apparently only one reason, or that he had concluded there was only one reason, why this clause should stand as it does in the Bill, and that was that the Minister of Railways and Canals did not want to hand over the management and operation of the Intercolonial road to the commission, but wanted to continue to be in charge of it himself if he remained in the department. I can only presume that the hon. gentleman speaks under a misapprehension as to the intended scope and purpose of the commission. This commission is not to engage in the management of railways at all; it is a commission constituted to keep the railway companies in check. It seems to me that upon the very surface a good and sufficient reason is to be found why this Bill should not include the government railway. I do not specially, or even largely, rely upon the fact that in constituting the Railway Committee of the Privy Council it was thought well not to give that body the same measure of jurisdiction and control over the Intercolonial that was given it over other railways. But it does occur to me that there are the strongest possible reasons why control over the Intercolonial might have been given to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as constituted, and yet the strongest possible reasons why that control should not be given to this commission as it is to be constituted. If the government owned all the railways operating in the country you would never have heard any appeal or demand for the appointment of a commission. Why ? Because the grievances of which the people complain would never have existed. And, if they did exist the people would have in their own hands a very ready and very efficient means of remedying their grievances. They would hold the government of the day responsible for the perpetuation of such wrongs as those of which many people in Canada complain to-day with respect to the operation of other railways. It is not for the purpose of preventing the Intercolonial Railway from imposing excessive rates upon the people of this country that the railway commission proposed to be created, it is not for the purpose of compelling the Intercolonial Railway to obey this or that law or this or that regulation that the cry has arisen for the creation of a railway commission ; it is because the other railways of the country have apparently been so conducting themselves, or, at all events, in the course of their operation, have created such a sentiment in the public mind, that some control of this kind is necessary to be exercised as regards those railways. Now, it is always enough in legislating to remedy the grievances which you know or believe to exist. There is never any advantage in undertaking to remedy conditions which you think may in the future become grievances, but which have not become grievances and are not crying for remedy. The fact that the government of the country owns and operates the Intercolonial and is answerable to public opinion for its action and conduct for such administration, is the best reason in the world why you do not require to set up a tribunal outside of parliament for that purpose. It would strike almost any person at first blush, I think, that it would be a great mistake to confer upon any body of men, I do not care who they might be, control, beyond the reach of parliament or the government, of the management of any public institution and particularly the managment of a railway. You cannot reach them as you can reach the government. They would not be as responsible as to time, and would not be as ready to answer to any demand of public opinion upon them. They might possibly even do something more. Give to this railway commission the powers to fix and determine what the rates are, and they would have it in their power to compel the people who are doing business over the Intercolonial to pay higher rates than they are paying to-day. I do not see how they could avoid it. They have the power to make uniformity of rates. Here are the standards, they cannot regulate in any way. Here is a standard tariff, here is a special tariff and here is a competitive tariff. They have got to be governed exactly under the same conditions. If you put all railways under the jurisdiction of this commission there is no discretion on their part to except any one from the operation of the law. I do not think the people of this country are prepared to hand over the power which they now possess through parliament, to any tribunal to interfere with the rates which are charged upon government railways.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that the function of that commission would be to fix what would be a just tariff. Therefore, if they fix a just tariff on other railways, why should the hon. gentleman except any railway from coming under a just tariff ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a question of public policy whether or not this parliament is prepared at this moment to make the change proposed. Are there any reasons why the condition of things which has existed ever since we have been a Dominion, when the different provinces agreed to enter into this union, should now be rescinded and that arrangement relating to the Intercolonial be dissolved ? Hon. gentlemen have got to think these things out in their minds a little better before they plunge into amendments of laws which have been on the statute-book ever since this Dominion has been in existence. They must stop and think where they are landing. I do not think the members of this House are prepared, from a national point of view, to make that change. The people of Ontario who do business over the Intercolonial, who sell their goods, manufactured and imported, in the maritime provinces, who do nine-tenths of the wholesale business which is done in the maritime provinces, I do not think they are prepared to say that any advantage will accrue to them by making the rates on the Intercolonial uniform with the rates on all the other roads. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that the result would be anything but disastrous.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The commission would not have power to raise the rates, if they are now sufficiently low on the Intercolonial, even though they had power to raise them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will read the Bill, he will find that the commission has not only power to do this, but it is their duty to make such rates in respect of all traffic over any and all railroads as it thinks are just and reasonable.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That only applies under the Bill to maximum rates, and the railroad cannot charge less.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all ; there is no maximum business about it. The hon. gentleman has not read the Bill. He will not find the words 'maximum rates' in the Bill as applied to any measure or scale of tariff.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Am I to understand that the rates charged on the Intercolonial now are less than those charged on other railways in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure that they are less than are charged on the two great railways of this country, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and always have been. The tariffs are divided into three classes. There is the standard freight tariff, the special freight tariff and the competitive tariff, provided for by section 260 :

> The standard freight tariff or tariffs where the company is allowed by the board more than one standard freight tariff, shall specify the maximum mileage tolls to be charged for each class of the freight classification for all distances covered by the company's railway. Such distances may be expressed in blocks or groups, and such blocks or groups may include proportionately greater distances for the longer than for the shorter hauls.
> The special tariffs shall specify the toll or tolls lower than in the standard freight tariff to be charged by the company for any particular commodity or commodities, or for each or any class or classes of the freight classification, or to or from a certain point or points on the railway, greater tolls not being charged therein for a shorter than a longer distance, the shorter being included in the longer.
> The competitive tariffs shall specify the toll or tolls lower than in the standard freight tariff to be charged by the company for any class or classes of the freight classificaion, or for any commodity or commodities.

Now, the standard freight tariff is settled in one of two ways. The company may make out its tariff and submit it, and if it is approved, then it becomes the standard freight tariff ; if it is not approved, the board may make out specifically such tariff as they please, and which should be designated as the standard freight tariff.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The argument I was making is this, that the commission seemed to fix the maximum tolls, and it was left to the company to charge any tolls under that. The hon. gentleman stated there was no maximum price fixed at all by the commission.

Mr. LANCASTER. The explanation of the minister, if it can be called one, has not warranted me in coming to the conclusion that the amendment of my hon. friend from Hamilton is wrong, and has not convinced me that I was wrong in seconding his amendment, and unless I have better evidence than I have now to show why these government railways should not come under the control of this commission, I must vote for that amendment. Now, we are all obliged to the minister for giving us the advice he does, but I think charity begins at home. Let the minister himself take some of his own advice and think a little more carefully about these matters which he asks this House to sanction. The arguments made by the members on this side of the House are made in the interests of the country, because they understand that people want a railroad commission to be a railroad commission in reality, and to attend to the business that it is proposed to submit to it, not to do a patch here and a patch there, not to attend to one section of the Dominion or to one locality to the exclusion of others, but to attend to freight shipped from any part of the Dominion to any other part. A little while ago the minister told us that it was not right that goods shipped from the Niagara district to Ottawa should be under the control of the commission, whether shipped by express or otherwise, but that it is quite right that the whole journey should be dealt with as through-traffic. I understand him to say that the words 'through-traffic' in section five are to apply to that. What is the principle that the hon. gentleman has in his mind in regard to that? Surely it is that there should be no difference whether many or few railways handle the goods. Surely it is that people shipping goods from one part of Canada to another shall deal with the commission in regard to the whole matter and not in regard to any particular part of it. They are not going to be supposed to have a special rate in regard to one railway that the commission cannot control, and another in regard to another railway that the commission can control. If there is any merit at all in the hon. gentleman's Bill it is in that sense. To enlarge the illustration that I gave, suppose any one shipped goods from Halifax to Toronto or from Toronto to Halifax or St. John and these goods are going to be carried by the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway part of the way and by the Intercolonial Railway the rest of the way. What harm is there in the Intercolonial Railway being under the same jurisdiction and having the same authority over it as that placed over the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway? Suppose that the people in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are not satisfied with the rates, and in view of the discussion that took place in this House yesterday, I can well understand that some of them would be dissatisfied, suppose that they think the rates should be adjusted; if there is any merit in the commission there is just as much merit in applying its supervision to the rates charged on the Intercolonial Railway as to those charged on any other railway. If the Intercolonial Railway is to be dealt with as a business proposition why should its business not be properly carried on and why should not this commission have jurisdiction over its rates in the same way as it is proposed that it shall have over the rates of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway? We suppose that the Intercolonial Railway is doing a railway business. It seems to me that the hon. minister is afraid that the rates will be increased on the Intercolonial Railway. I do not know that it would do very much harm if they were increased a little. Perhaps they would not be paying out so much on capital account if they were increased. I suppose that the people would be willing to pay reasonable rates. The hon. gentleman evidently believes that the commission would increase them. I am not at all sure that the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is not right in saying that it is the maximum rates that are to be dealt with. Suppose that the rates charged on the eastern portion of the journey on goods shipped from Toronto to Halifax are altogether inadequate, and we say that the commission shall have no power over the Intercolonial Railway but that they may adjust the rates on the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway, surely the members of that commission could not exclude from their minds the rates which the Intercolonial are charging. If they had power to enforce any order that the Intercolonial Railway rates were too high or too low if they could apply that order to the other end of the journey and if they could arrive at a reasonable conclusion, they could the more readily satisfy the shippers and purchasers of those goods. The hon. minister says that he does not think we should legislate for grievances that do not exist, but that we should only legislate for those that do exist. Well, if they are the same kind of grievances they are likely to exist and why should grievances that may exist be excluded from the operation of the Bill. The hon. minister surely does not want full power to do what he thinks the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway ought not to do. I do not suppose the hon. minister wants us to understand that he desires power to do that. If these grievances exist on the large trunk lines, on the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway, and if the Intercolonial Railway is going to spread out (and we hear talk about extending it), is there any harm in asking that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway shall be controlled in the same way as they are to be controlled on the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway? Are not the same grievances likely to exist on the Intercolonial Railway? They may not have arisen at present. They may be only about to arise. The hon. minister, for all I know, may expect them to arise next year. If they do arise they will need to be dealt with by this commission, and there is no harm in the commission having control over the rates on the Intercolonial Railway. In regard to the handing over the power that the hon. minister speaks of, I do not see how that remark applies to the case at all. I do not understand that this commission is to manage the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think the hon. minister means us to take him seriously when he says that by giving the commission control of the rates on the Intercolonial Railway we would be giving the commission power over the management of the Intercolonial Railway. That is practically what he says. I think there is nothing that will so much cause hon. members on this side of the House to think that the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is right as the weak defence that has been put up by the hon. minister as to why it should not prevail. Upon consideration of all that the hon. minister has said I am firmly of the opinion that the Intercolonial Railway ought to be governed by this commission the same as other railways are, and I shall have to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton.

Mr. FRASER. I noticed a few days ago that when the government announced that the canals should be made free that everybody could carry anything he wanted through them without paying a cent, there was not a word from the hon. members on the other side of the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. What has that to do with it ?

Mr. FRASER. We have spent as much money on the canals as we have spent on the Intercolonial Railway, and everybody can carry everything free through them. We, in the lower provinces, when we travel or when we ship goods, have to pay for doing so.

Mr. LANCASTER. What has that to do with the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. FRASER. It is now admitted, that, if, under the Bill, we applied the commission to the Intercolonial Railway it would be treated like any other railway.

Mr. LANCASTER. Certainly, why not ?

Mr. FRASER. The Intercolonial Railway was built for the purpose of securing to this Dominion the lower provinces, and it is as much a part of our constitution as if it were written in. We know that the maritime provinces would not have entered into confederation if the promise to maintain the Intercolonial Railway as a government railway had not been given and carried out. It is as much a part of the constitution as if it were a section of the British North America Act.

Mr. SPROULE. That did not imply that the goods were to be carried for less than the service was worth.

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. FRASER. It implied that the government must always be in charge whether it be Liberal or Conservative, that it must always be a government road because it was built for the purpose I have named. That condition must always be carried out so that our interests shall be protected in accordance with the promise given. We do not desire that goods shall be carried free, although you have your canals absolutely free.

Mr. SPROULE. I always thought the building of the Intercolonial Railway was to unite the lower provinces.

Mr. FRASER. It was the condition under which we came in. It was not to unite the provinces. The lower provinces would never have entered confederation had not the Intercolonial Railway been built. We saw the difficulties that would occur, we saw that on everything that we brought from the upper provinces we would have to pay a large price, we saw that the tariff, small as it was then, would be increased and that this new country would be able to build up a large trade in the lower provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not for the same reason that we asked to have the tolls taken off canals—so as to permit of the carrying of goods at a cheaper rate ?

Mr. FRASER. The rates still remain on the Intercolonial Railway. You must take things as they are.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) if he is afraid that this commission will do wrong with the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. FRASER. No, but if they are honest men they will raise the rates on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. What does that mean ?

Mr. FRASER. I have no doubt that it will be found that the abolition of tolls upon canals is going to be a good thing in the interests of the trade.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would like to ask the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) a question. Does he not know that one of the chief objects in making the canals free is to give the maritime provinces the advantage of cheaper goods from the western provinces ?

Mr. FRASER. That is very kind indeed. That is a kindness that we accept with the greatest satisfaction possible. But, coal is not sent through the canals and we do not receive anything in the lower provinces through the canals. Everything we get in the upper provinces comes by the railways, Intercolonial Railway included. What comes through the canals is what goes to foreign parts.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No.

Mr. FRASER. Excuse me, I would like to know what we get in the lower provinces that comes through the canals.

Mr. HUGHES. Flour.

Mr. FRASER. Excuse me, flour does not come through the canals.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Flour will go.

Mr. FRASER. You are always speculating as to the future. I am talking of present conditions.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Flour is going.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the wheat you get go through the Welland canal.

Mr. FRASER. We don't use any wheat to talk of. You grow the wheat and you grind it and you grind us by compelling us to pay a duty on it if we buy it any where else. We have no mills down there except a small one in New Glasgow, and I don't know whether it is going or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are some mills grinding native wheat.

Mr. FRASER. We have the ordinary mills grinding native wheat, but we get no wheat from the upper provinces and consequently the abolition of canal tolls does not benefit us one cent. If you put the Intercolonial Railway under the commission then if they are honest men they will deal with the Intercolonial Railway exactly as with other roads.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BARKER. Would this commission not do a good service to the people of the eastern provinces by preventing discrimination between these people on the part of those who manage the railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There never is discrimination.

Mr. FRASER. I speak in the presence of Conservative members from the lower provinces and I say that the railway rates are largely in the interest of Conservatives, because they are the large producers. If the Nova Scotia Steel Company or any other company wants a special rate because they ship in large quantities perhaps it is given to them, but so far as the ordinary business man in the lower provinces is concerned whether they be Liberal or Conservative they are all treated alike. Hon. gentlemen opposite want the Intercolonial Railway put under control of the commission, and if the commissioners were honest men they would treat the Intercolonial Railway exactly as they would other railroads, and then we would have the magnificent spectacle of Ontario men getting the benefit of the $80,000,000 we spent on the canals and we would have no benefits from the Intercolonial Railway. They would have free canal tolls and we would have high railway rates. Is that broad statesmanship. The condition under which the lower provinces entered into confederation, was that the Intercolonial Railway would be built to cement the provinces together, to give us an opportunity of consuming western products and to give you an opportunity of consuming our products, but you take very little of the things we produce. It may be a speculation to say that our coal comes up here, but I notice that some hon. gentlemen opposite, not all, are clamoring that even the duty be taken off coal so that they can get it from the United States when the freights would perhaps be one-third of those on Nova Scotia coal. I care not whether the government of Canada is Liberal or Conservative, I want that government to hold the Intercolonial Railway, to judge what the rates on the Intercolonial Railway shall be, and thus carry out the cementing process that was understood when we entered into confederation.

Mr. HALE. I have always thought, Mr. Chairman, that it would be in the best interests of the section of the country I represent that the Intercolonial Railway should come under the control of this railway commission. Ever since the Intercolonial Railway has been in existence it has been operated in direct antagonism to the best interest of the western part of the province of New Brunswick, because the rates on that road have been so low that the products of the upper provinces are carried to the cities of St. John and Halifax for less than we have to pay to carry freight from the county of Carleton and the river counties into these cities. The western produce is thus enabled to come in to competition with the produce that we raise in our section of country. I have thought for a long time that something ought to be done to regulate that. Many years ago I brought this matter to the attention of the late hon. Mr. Pope, then Minister of Railways and Canals, but nothing has ever been done to relieve the situation so far as we are concerned. I believe that it is just and fair that the Intercolonial Railway should come under this commission and that if they are good honest commissioners who will regulate the rates on that road, we will get justice for our section of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I never understood that it was part of the terms of confederation that we should build a railway to carry freight for less than the cost of handling it. I do not think that you will find in the British North America Act or in the debates on confederation anything that will justify that contention. The argument of the member for Guysborough in favour of that proposition is decidedly unique.

Mr. FRASER. It has often been advanced in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard it repeatedly stated in this House by members from the maritime provinces that they were charged as high freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway as on other railways in Canada and that they got no advantage. But the member for Guysborough seems to have the idea that the removal of tolls on the canals is for the benefit of the upper province people and that forsooth because of this, the Intercolonial Railway should carry freight below cost for the people of the maritime provinces.

Mr. FRASER. What I said was that the condition that has existed on the Intercolonial Railway since confederation should be maintained.

Mr. SPROULE. The conditions on which the maritime provinces entered into confederation has been kept to the letter, but it never was part of the compact that freight on the Intercolonial Railway should be carried below cost, or that the rates should be so low as not to afford a reasonable profit. Let me tell my hon. friend that the reason why the tolls were taken off the canals was to enable the freight of the west to be carried down to the maritime provinces instead of having it sidetracked off to New York and Boston and other American ports. It was for that purpose and that purpose alone that the canal tolls were removed. The member for Guysborough says that one of the aims should be to carry the coal of the maritime provinces into Ontario.

Mr. FRASER. I did not say what one of the aims should be. I said it could not be done, and the fact that they were asking to take off the duty on coal in Ontario indicated that it could not be done.

Mr. SPROULE. I would remind the hon. gentleman that it not only has been done, but it can be done, and that Nova Scotia coal has been carried as far west as Belleville.

Mr. FRASER. Then there is no need of taking off the duty.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the principle has always been enunciated and supported by the Conservative party that the duty should be kept even on coal, because that was part of the national policy. It is not the Conservatives who are in favour of taking off the coal duty. If the contention was that that duty should be taken off, that was put forward by his own friends in the upper provinces, and not by the Conservative party as a party. As to whether or not the Intercolonial Railway should come under this commission, I have always held that if the commission is expected to do what is right and fair—and we assume that they will be men of intelligence and honest intention—then I cannot understand why there should be any valid objection to the Intercolonial Railway coming under that commission any more than any other railway in Canada. If it were expected that they would not do what is right and fair, I could understand it; but it is expected that they will do what is right and fair—not that they will compel any railway to carry freight at lower charges than will pay, but that they will not allow any unfair discrimination in regard to the short haul and the long haul or between one shipper and another.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Last night the hon. Minister of Railways explained to the hon. member for Pictou that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway were exactly the same now as they were when the men now in opposition were in power. There was then no word about the rates being too low. But I want to impress on the public outside of this House that the disposition of the opposition, as expressed by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) last night, was to increase the rates on the Intercolonial Railway for both freight and passengers. There is another view of this subject that has been overlooked altogether, that is, that the carriage over the Intercolonial Railway is not for the benefit of the maritime provinces alone. Hon. members must not forget that the people of the west get the advantage of these low rates in shipping goods to and from the West Indies and Great Britain in the winter season. I think it would be just as well to leave the management of the Intercolonial Railway in the hands of the hon. Minister of Railways, who has done so well with it during his term. I am sure the hon. member for West Toronto would find the hon. member for Pictou in opposition to his suggestion to increase the rates.

Mr. FRASER. And the leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The leader of the opposition has been very silent on this subject, because he is not in accord with his own supporters when they advocate an increase of the rates on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that I never made the statement that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway were too low or too high.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I did not at all attribute anything to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. The contention on this side of the House has been that the fact that the Intercolonial Railway is not a paying concern, is due to improper management, not to too low freight rates. We have never, as a party, dealt with the question whether the rates were too high or too low. Personally I have never said that they were too low.

Mr. FRASER. Then you cannot vote for this amendment, which says they ought to be raised.

Mr. SPROULE. The resolution is that the Intercolonial Railway be included in this commission. It does not say a word about the rates, whether they are too high or too low.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister, if this commission had control over the rates of the Intercolonial Railway, and it found those rates too low, would it have power under this Act to increase them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt about that. I have not any hesitation at all in expressing my opinion. I read the sections which show that the railway commission has absolute power to determine when the rates are just and reasonable, and to impose those rates ; and after it fixes a tariff, until it changes that tariff, you cannot make your rate any more or any less. That is the rate you have to pay.

Mr. BLAIN. That is to say, the commission would have power to increase the rates if they found them too low ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that hon. members from the maritime provinces are unduly excited over this question of rates. I understand that one of the great objects of this railway commission is to secure for the public a general reduction in rates. The contention is that our railways on the whole are charging too much, and our express companies also. In the face of that, why will hon. members from the maritime provinces suppose for one moment that the commission would act directly in opposition to the great purpose for which the commission is being inaugurated ? To my mind, the maritime provinces will be protected under this commission, if the general policy of the commission is what I have stated, and I believe it is. It would seem to me that to make the system uniform all over the country, the Intercolonial Railway should be brought within the scope of this commission, and I, for one, fail to see any cause for alarm on the part of the members from the maritime provinces. While their rights on the Intercolonial Railway will be preserved, I think they will be aided by this commission in securing low rates over other railways from the west. I do not apprehend for one moment that there will be any interference with the special privileges which the maritime provinces now enjoy.

Mr. CLANCY. I think if there was any doubt in the minds of the members of this House as to the necessity of having the Intercolonial Railway placed under the jurisdiction of this commission, that doubt has been dispelled by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). My hon. friend has told us that the express terms upon which the maritime provinces came into confederation were, first, that there should be an Intercolonial Railway built—which is admitted—and second, that they should be exempted from paying the same rates of freight as are paid by the balance of the people of Canada. That is specifically neither more or less than what the hon. gentleman has told us. Well, I am not prepared to believe that any Minister of Railways will lay down a rule of that kind. As an illustration of his argument, our genial friend from Guysborough pointed out that if the Intercolonial Railway came under the jurisdiction of this railway commission, the Nova Scotia Company would be in a worse position than it now occupies.

Mr. FRASER. I said there might be special rates, and I instanced the Nova Scotia Steel Company as large shippers who would be entitled, on that account, to special rates.

Mr. CLANCY. Either they are entitled to special rates or they are not.

Mr. FRASER. Like all other large shippers on any railway.

Mr. CLANCY. Let me suppose that there will be, as we all hope there will, an institution of the same magnitude at Sault Ste. Marie, which will have to compete at a point half way with the Nova Scotia Steel Company, will the hon. gentleman argue that the latter company would be entitled to the advantage of exceptional rates over the Intercolonial Railway to that competitive point which the other industry could not obtain over the other railways that come under the commission ? Yet that would be the logical outcome of the hon. gentleman's argument. The hon. gentleman also pleads that the tolls are being reduced or entirely wiped out on the canals without protest from anybody. But it seems to me that the amount of these tolls is so insignificant as not to be worth considering. By the abolition of canal tolls, the country is losing the large sum of $315,425 per year, or less than six-tenths of a cent for each person in Canada.

What I wish to impress on the hon. Minister of Railways is that if we are to have a railway commission, it should not be a meaningless one. The object of a railway commission is to correct the inequalities in freight charges and excessive charges where there is no competiton. Does the hon. gentleman propose that this work of the commission shall be confined to those railways in Canada which are not government railways and that, while all other railways may be forced to do what is fair and reasonable, the Intercolonial Railway is to be exempt from any interference ? The people of this country have contributed large sums for the obtaining of railway facilities. Are we to handicap these railways which have been aided by Dominion, provincial and municipal bonuses ? Should we not give them a living chance as against the Intercolonial Railway or any other railway that may, according to my hon. friend's contention, be run in the interests of any particular section of the country ? What amount of bonuses has been paid ? The Dominion has contributed to railways in Canada at the rate of $9,083 per mile. The provincial governments have contributed at the rate of $1,177 per mile, and the bonuses given by municipalities have amounted to $892 per mile.

Mr. FRASER. And we paid equally with you.

Mr. CLANCY. That does not touch the fringe of the question. What I say is that the people of this country have contributed large sums in order to get railway facilities. My hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Hale) has pointed out that even in the maritime provinces, certain sections are put at a disadvantage by reason of the lower rates charged by the Intercolonial Railway to other competing sections. How can you expect a private enterprise to supply railway facilities in any section of the country, if the people in that section are getting lower rates on the Intercolonial Railway than are charged by any other railway in Canada ? How can you expect private enterprise to invest in railways, if these railways are to be swamped by the rates charged on the Intercolonial Railway ? It is all very well for the government to tell the people that they are getting lower rates on the government road. That is a mere electioneering dodge, which may be resorted to by whatever government may be in power. If you charge lower rates on the Intercolonial Railway than the goods can be carried for, or than a private enterprise could carry them at with a reasonable profit, you are simply taking money out of the pockets of one section of people for the benefit of another. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways has told us that had he charged the same rates of freight on the Intercolonial Railway as are charged by other railways, and he went further to emphasize the fact by adding that the rates charged by other railways were not, in his opinion, excessive.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I expressed no opinion as to that.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend was especially prudent on that occasion. He was careful not to express an opinion, but he must have assumed that they were not excessive, or he would have expressed an opinion to the contrary. He told us that if he charged on the Intercolonial Railway the same rates as are charged on other railways, there would be $2,000,000 more in the treasury. Well, what is he doing? He is piling up a capital account of immense magnitude. The people of this country are paying on that capital account not less than half a million dollars per year for interest. The hon. gentleman boasts of a magnificent surplus of something like $96,000, but he forgot to tell the people that he is taking out of their pockets half a million dollars in interest on the capital added to our public debt for the purpose of producing this surplus. Is that surplus really an economy or is it not a fiction ? It is the purest kind of fiction, a mere juggling of figures, a mere deception on the public, a brazen attempt to make the people believe that they have saved $96,000, whereas in reality they have been bled to the tune of half a million dollars. If we are to have a railway commission, I can see no reason why the Intercolonial Railway should not come under its jurisdiction. It certainly should, if we are to do every section of our people the same justice. Suppose that the dream of the hon. gentleman were to be realized, in which he indulged when out to the Pacific coast last fall. Suppose the hon. gentleman were to do what he is hinting at as possible, and build a transcontinental line at the public cost. That road, being a government road, would not come under the jurisdiction of this commission. So, the hon. gentleman would be able to say to the people : Being beyond the control of the commission, I can do as I like with rates, and I will give favourable rates to those sections which support me, and unfavourable rates to others. It is impossible not to see what the effect of such a state of affairs would be. We have devoted millions to the subsidizing of trunk lines to the Pacific coast, and the government road would have no right to become an unfair competitor with those lines, and to use for the purpose of competition its advantages in the way of freedom from taxes and from the obligation which rests upon railways of earning interest upon the cost of construction. Nothing could be more destructive of our great national outfit, our railway system of which we are so proud. It would be contrary to justice, contrary to common sense, contrary to every business principle. There is no reason why there should be a lever in the hands of the government to give favours that cannot be given to the people in common. What do we hear with regard to other classes of trade ? There has been a cry that convict labour should not be allowed to come into competition with the honest wage-earner. I say that is a good contention. To act upon the contrary principle would be useing public institutions against private interests ; and I say that it would be wrong to use the Intercolonial Railway or any other road owned by the government to injure private interests. It might yield apparent advantages to a section of the people, but advantages which must be paid for dearly by the people at large. I say again that I know nothing more contrary to reason, common sense and business principle, than the suggestion that the Intercolonial Railway should not come under control of this commission.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has asked a question. But first as to what the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Hale) says. I can understand him when he says that the produce from the province of Ontario comes through his county, carried on the Intercolonial Railway at cheap rates, and comes in competition with the produce of the farms of Carleton. But the public of the lower provinces know that the county of Carleton cannot supply them with everything they require, and so they want others to come in and supply them. And—even though it be considered small—they are of opinion that it is better that the county of Carleton should suffer to a limited extent rather than that the whole of the lower provinces should suffer. Referring to the lower provinces, I desire to say one thing, and in this I speak for Nova Scotia alone. Nova Scotia has given more per head to build railways, either to compete with or to feed the Intercolonial Railway than has been given for railways by the people of any other province in the Dominion. Moreover, Nova Scotia has received less money per head voted by the parliament of Canada for railways than the people of any other province of the Dominion. The return was brought down to this House which proved it. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has got away from the fact of the canals. Whatever the rates are on the Intercolonial Railway, at least this year we have a surplus. But we have never had a surplus on the canals. And this year we are adding two or three hundred thousand dollars as a free gift to the people who benefit by those canals, to be added to the deficit. There would be judicious management of the Intercolonial Railway whether the Conservatives or the Liberals were in power. And we must not forget the long distance between the lower provinces and Montreal, which is covered by the Intercolonial Railway. Cannot we trust the making of the rates upon this road much better to a government that can consider broad questions of the public interest than to a commission that must rigidly enforce the law, and that must insist upon rates——

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) permit me ?

Mr. FRASER. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Is he presuming that the commissioners will be enforcing an unjust law ?

Mr. FRASER. That has nothing to do with it. I say you can trust the government, whatever party that government may represent, to fix the rates in the best interests of the country. There is also the consideration that the Intercolonial Railway was built to bring about confederation, a fact that has been stated in this House a dozen times in my hearing and never contradicted until to-day. Any government will do better in the interest of the whole country than a commission that must simply follow the law, caring nothing for the people. The rates on the Intercolonial Railway have been substantially the same since the road was built—do not hon. gentlemen think that we can reasonably expect that road to carry out the same in the future ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) looks at it from the Ontario standpoint, but he forgets to take into consideration the canals which were built largely for the benefit of Ontario, and which never had a surplus and never will.

Mr. CLANCY. We on this side have never defended or condemned taking off the canal tolls, or expressed ourselves on that subject. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) look to his own friends for that.

Mr. FRASER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) does not favour the removal of the canal tolls he has the opportunity to express his opinion, and, as a member of this House, to move that they be not taken off. The fact that he expresses no opinion and moves no motion on the subject, ranks him with those who are in favour of the change.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) is simply putting up a man of straw and knocking it over.

Mr. FRASER. We have heard now from two prospective ministers, for the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), if I am to judge, must be in any government formed by the leader of the other side. If these hon. gentlemen had their own way they would increase the rates on the Intercolonial Railway in the lower provinces. If their attitude means anything, it means that. We understand it now ; that is the way our Conservative friends would treat the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The question before the committee is simply this—shall the Intercolonial Railway come under the jurisdiction of this commission or not. As an argument to the contrary, the hon. Minister of Railways states that, being responsible to parliament and to the people in fixing the rates, the people would have better control than if the commission were given jurisdiction over the road. I stated that the commission had nothing to do with fixing the rates on the Intercolonial Railway. They only fix the maximum tariff, and under that maximum the minister could make any charge he liked. The minister contradicted me when I stated that. He asked me if I had read the Act, and stated that the commission had the right to fix the tariff of tolls and that the government would be obliged to exact those tolls from any one using the Intercolonial Railway. There was no one on this side who said that the tolls charged on the Intercolonial Railway were less than those charged on the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway. It was the hon. Minister of Railways himself, when he was appealing to supporters from the maritime provinces. He turned around to them and said: 'I could have a surplus of $2,000,000 if I were allowed to charge the same rates on the Intercolonial Railway as are charged by the other railways.' I would like the hon. gentleman to point out in what respect the charges on freight traffic or the charges on passenger traffic are less on the Intercolonial Railway than on the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway.

Let me mention the passenger freight rate on the Intercolonial. You pay three cents a mile, and if you get a return ticket you get it for one and a half the full rate. Isn't that the same custom on every railroad of the Dominion? Don't you pay the same when you travel on the Intercolonial as we do here? There may be a couple of mines from which coal is carried to Halifax, there may be exceptional cases where freight is carried lower on the Intercolonial than elsewhere; coal is carried from particular mines to Halifax or to some favoured lumberman at specially low rates. But the poor farmer, the industrious man, the traveller in every portion of the maritime provinces pays as much for the user of the Intercolonial as we do for the user of our railways in the western part of Canada. That is why the control of rates on the Intercolonial should come under a commission. As I said last night, the reason of the apparent reduction of rates on the Intercolonial, the reason of the loss in carrying freight, was an effort on the part of the minister to carry freight which would naturally follow other channels, and to divert it in an unnatural course to St. John or to Halifax. We will have a comparison of the freight rates before the estimates are through, we will have a comparison of the passenger rates, and I venture to say that my statement will be found correct. The hon. gentleman is indulging in parish politics of the lowest kind. He is appealing to his followers on the back benches, saying: Look at the glorious things I have done for you in the management of the Intercolonial; look at the envy it has excited throughout the Dominion. I am giving you cheaper passenger rates and cheaper freight rates, and these people in Ontario and in the west, if they had the power, would impose upon you rates entirely different. The minister is perfectly correct, and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is correct; there has been but little change in the rates on the Intercolonial from its inception, either under the Conservative government or the Liberal government. But the rates are fair, they ought to pay, and possibly, if through rates were imposed, there might be a greater return to the people. All we ask is a fair rate for passengers, a fair rate for freight. That fair rate is being imposed upon the people. Under good management and economical management the Intercolonial, instead of being a drag and an imposition on the people, would give us a fair return for the expenditure. We have no wish to impose on the people of the maritime provinces. When we talk about the management of the Intercolonial we are not finding fault with the charges that are made on passengers and on freight to people using the road locally; we are only asking that economical management should be exercised.

But to return to my question. What objection is there to the appointment of a commission whose principal object and work would be to fix and control the rates and tolls? Surely the minister does not think that the rates and tolls fixed by a commission would be less than those that he now charges on the Intercolonial. Then what has he to fear? There may be arguments advanced on both sides of this question. My hon. friend thinks that under the absolute control given to the commission they would have power, not only to control the rates, but the appliances to be used, the speed to be observed in the running, the rolling stock and everything else. Perhaps it would be better. We know the powers of commissions appointed by governments in other countries for the purpose of dealing with railways. It is the commission which steps between the individual and the railway company, as a sort of arbitrator, to say what is just and right in reference to the dealings between the general public and the company. My own opinion is that it would be better for the Minister of Railways and Canals to be directly responsible to this House and to the people. I would not like him to have a further opportunity to shield himself behind a commission. If he does wrong, let him come here where he is responsible to this House, and we will talk to him and find out all about it. In a government railway, I think that the controller of it should be directly responsible to the people of the country and to parliament, and that there is not much call for the interference of a commission.

Mr. KENDALL. We have been told on this side of the House by hon. gentlemen opposite that the Intercolonial is an institution which is run in the interests of the maritime provinces.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Nobody said so.

Mr. KENDALL. Well, I have heard some hon. gentleman say that the deficit incurred by the Intercolonial in the maritime provinces was paid by the people of Canada generally, and for the express advantage of the people of the maritime provinces. Now, I think that hon. gentlemen opposite will recollect that a few months ago the board of trade of the city of Halifax passed a resolution calling upon the government to hand over the Intercolonial to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that was exactly the tenor of the resolution. The resolution asked the boards of trade throughout Canada to consider that question.

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, and I suppose there was never a greater storm raised among the boards of trade throughout Canada than that very resolution of the Halifax board of trade. How did they take it up? The boards of trade in Moncton, in St. John, in Quebec, in Montreal, and the board of trade of the city of Toronto, which I presume has the confidence of hon. gentlemen opposite, passed strong resolutions condemning the proposition to turn over the Intercolonial to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I presume that the board of trade of the city of Toronto represents fairly well the manufacturers of Canada, the manufacturers of nearly everything in which iron enters, the manufacturers of textiles. It represents the millers of Canada, who send hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of their products to the maritime provinces every year; and they recognized that the working arrangement between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial in the maritime provinces affords them protection against the excessive rates which might otherwise be charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway which runs to the city of St. John. I presume that the board of trade of Toronto did speak with some authority for the great manufacturing classes of Canada when it said that it was thoroughly satisfied with the administration of the Intercolonial. The hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) suggested that the rates might be raised on certain commodities going over the Intercolonial. He intimated that certain privileges were being granted to the lumbermen. I wish to point out that only this year, when the lumbermen of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick approached the Minister of Railways and Canals and asked for certain reductions in the freight on lumber to the seaport, that request was refused, and I think we will all say very rightly refused. If, two years ago, those lumbermen could make money when deals were selling for $9 and $10 a thousand, they must be making more money to-day when they are bringing $13 or $14 a thousand. I would not be opposed to seeing the rates on lumber carried by the Intercolonial raised to a certain extent. The hon. gentleman intimated too that coal was carried at too low a rate. That may be correct, but it is a pretty serious matter for this House to say that the rates on coal should be raised, serious for the consumers of coal in Quebec and Montreal. I recognize that the coal companies of Nova Scotia are charging the consumers of coal too much for their coal, but how are you going to benefit the consumers of coal by raising the price of the carriage of coal to Quebec and the eastern part of Ontario. I think if the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) were again entrusted with the responsibility of being Minister of Railways and Canals he would hesitate, because numbers of his supporters would call upon him to hesitate, before he would raise the rate on the carriage of coal. We in the coal mining districts do not get the benefit of these rates, but the people in the west do.

Mr. SPROULE. I failed to hear any one on this side of the House contend that coal was carried too cheaply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall) is not doing quite justice to this quesion when he speaks of the origin of this discussion in regard to freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) made this statement in the House when he was presenting the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway to parliament.

> That important portion between St. John and Halifax is, I think, paying quite a handsome return over its cost and the expenses of operation.

Now, I suppose this statement is only consistent with fair rates being charged. In so far as I am concerned it was news to me yesterday to hear the announcement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals which I am about to read. I am sure the people of the maritime provinces do not want the Intercolonial Railway conducted on any system which is not fair to the people of the rest of Canada. They do not want the Intercolonial Railway conducted on a principle which would make the people of the rest of Canada pay any portion of the freight charges which should be paid by the people of the maritime provinces. At the same time they do have regard to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway was part of the terms of confederation and there may be circumstances which would justify the reduction of freight rates upon that railway to a point perhaps lower than those charged upon some other railways. These are conditions which should be viewed just as much by commissioners as by the government of the day in the administration of the Intercolonial Railway. They ought to be considered by the commission just to the same extent as they are supposed to be considered by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Therefore, it seems to me, that a large part of the discussion in regard to whether the rates should be controlled on the Intercolonial by the commission or by the government is beside the question, because exactly the same consideration should apply to dealing with this matter by the commission as to dealing with it by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Now, I think it is most unfortunate that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should have made the statement which he did make in the House yesterday unless he is absolutely sure that the facts are as he states them. As I said before, I have no means of knowing whether the facts are as the minister has stated them. I will read to the committee the remarks of the hon. minister which led to this entire discussion and which, I think, placed the people of the maritime provinces in a false position in regard to the people of Canada as a whole. I suppose that the hon. gentleman by stating that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway afford a fair return as between Halifax and St. John, and a certain portion of the maritime provinces has stated that these rates are fair rates. I do not know what else the statement means. If they afforded a fair return on a portion of the road in a fairly thickly inhabited district surely they must be regarded as fair rates. The hon. gentleman has made that statement, but notwithstanding that, he goes on to say this :

> I had a careful study made and a careful statement furnished to me by the traffic officers of the Intercolonial Railway as to the general tariff of tolls and freight charges which governs on the Intercolonial Railway and those which govern on the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway; and the result of that statement, keeping well on the safe side, is that the rates upon those two railways are from 50 to 100 per cent higher than those upon the Intercolonial Railway. I am not going to suggest that the rates upon either of the two other roads are higher than they ought to be.

Well, if the rates on the Intercolonial Railway in Nova Scotia afford a fair return and if these rates to which the hon. gentleman refers in Ontario are from 50 to 100 per cent higher, I think the hon. gentleman ought to be able to form an opinion upon them, although he says he has no opinion whatever. I think it is important that the hon. minister should place upon the Table of the House the information upon which he relied when he made that statement, and which I do not think does justice to the people of the maritime provinces as far as the Intercolonial is concerned. I have a great deal of doubt, with all deference to my hon. friend, as to whether or not his statement as to the rates being 50 to 100 per cent higher will be found to be exactly borne out by the facts. I am not impugning the varacity of my hon. friend, but I must say that I shall have my doubts until the information is placed upon the Table of the House as to whether or not that statement is correct. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether or not it is a fact that these rates have to be submitted to him as Minister of Railways and Canals or to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Is it not a fact that these rates cannot be raised until he has approved of them ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Freight rates are subject to approval by the Governor in Council. Until they are approved they are not collectable, or they are not supposed to be collectable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, it seems to me that my hon. friend has placed himself in a somewhat curious position, by stating that the rates on the Intercolonial Railway afforded a fair return between Halifax and St. John because he has, I would think, as a logical result, said that these are fair rates ; and then he has stated that the rates in Ontario are from 50 to 100 per cent higher. If these rates have been approved by him it seems to me he has placed himself in the position of having approved of rates that are altogether too high. There should be some escape from that position. Of course, the hon. minister will explain it if there is, but it seems to me that these two statements on that point leave him in somewhat a dilemma. The Intercolonial Railway was a part of the terms upon which both provinces entered confederation and the Intercolonial Railway, I think, is entitled probably to some special consideration so far as rates are concerned, whether that consideration be given at the hands of the government or at the hands of the commission. As I said before it seems to me that exactly the same considerations would influence the commission if the commission were dealing with the matter as those which influence this government and presumably influenced the late government in dealing with that road. The Intercolonial Railway as it was constituted at first was intended to bridge over the gap which existed between the more thickly settled portions of the maritime provinces and the great provinces of Quebec and Ontario. It was a means devised of bringing scattered communities together just as now we are seeking by the same means to bridge over the gap which separates the eastern part of Canada from the fertile prairies of the west. In all these matters I suppose there must be some consideration of the special circumstances such as I have suggested. We cannot deal always too strictly with these rates or from a purely business standpoint. We must have regard to the fact that there are portions of the country which are sparsely settled and communities which are spread over great distances and for the purpose of bringing these communities together, for the purpose of bringing them into closer touch with each other, it is sometimes necessary that we should overlook purely business considerations and make allowances in fixing the rates which possibly might not be regarded as fair under other conditions. I do trust that my hon. friend will place the information upon the Table of the House in regard to the statement which he made and that we shall have a full opportunity of knowing whether or not that statement is exactly accurate in the way in which he put it before the House. I do not think the people of the maritime provinces want anything in the way of charity from the rest of Canada. They simply want fair play from the rest of Canada. But in asking that fair play, I think they have a perfectly legitimate right to ask the people of Canada as a whole, to consider the matters that I have very briefly placed before the House; having regard to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway was a part of the terms of confederation; was for the purpose of bringing together scattered communities, and that in fixing the rates upon that railway some regard should be had, at least to some extent, to these considerations. I know that the people of the maritime provinces have not always been pleased with the rates which my hon. friend the minister has fixed. It was stated to me by leading business men of the city of Halifax two years ago that the minister fixed a rate from the city of Montreal to the town of Sydney—or shall I say the city of Sydney, because if not a city it very soon will be—which was no higher than the rate on freight from Halifax to Sydney. I know there was a good deal of feeling in the city of Halifax at the time, and I must say in justice to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals that I believe that after the matter was brought to his attention some remedy was found at a very early date with regard to that. Let no one in this House suppose that there is not dissatisfaction now and then in the maritime provinces with regard to the rates charged on the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friends from both sides of the House who are familiar with the question of Intercolonial rates in the lower provinces, know that there is more or less question with regard to these rates now and then, but as I said before, the people of the maritime provinces—the people of Nova Scotia for whom I feel more particularly capable of speaking—are not desirous of having any charity from the rest of Canada at all. They want simply fair-play, but in asking that fair-play they think they are not out of place in demanding some consideration for the reasons which induced them to come into confederation; some consideration for the reasons which, in the first place caused the building of the Intercolonial Railway; and that having regard to the fact that we have coal and iron products in Nova Scotia, and many other products which are desired by the people of Ontario, and that we on the other hand take from the people of Ontario a large amount of their manufactured products—that there should be some reasonable consideration in regard to rates, particularly long distance rates, for the purpose of continuing and promoting that intercourse which is so beneficial to all parts of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not been quite clear this afternoon during the discussion, as to whether my estimates were under consideration or whether the Railway Bill was being dealt with. The debate has passed from one theme to the other, so that it was almost impossible to discriminate as to what was in the minds of the gentlemen who are addressing the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. You did the most of that yourself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the committee hear my hon. friend deliberately and coolly state that I occupied the most of the time of the House ?

Mr. SPROULE. The question was started by the minister's own friends and replied to from this side of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that I spoke more than once or twice when I was called up by members of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And then you were worse than the Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be very glad to furnish to the committee the information which has been supplied me in regard to this question of the freight rates upon the Intercolonial Railway. I was, however, amazed to hear the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Haggart) state that the local rates are the same upon the Intercolonial Railway as they are upon the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway in other parts of Canada. I felt very much like turning the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) over to the tender mercies of the member for Carleton (Mr. Hale) who complained that to his knowledge the Canadian Pacific Railway charges on freight from Woodstock to St. John were so much higher than the Intercolonial charges for the same kind of freight that it was a serious handicap for their business and that the people of the county of Carleton and the river counties were not able to place their goods in St. John in fair competition with the goods carried over the Intercolonial Railway. I leave my hon. friend (Mr. Hale) to deal with the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and to tell him that he was not really well informed as to what was doing on the Intercolonial Railway when he was head of the department. At my request one of my officers has supplied me with a statement which will show the difference between the rates which are in force on the different railways, and I will furnish that to the committee. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not studdied the Bill perhaps as attentively as I should, but, is it a part of the scheme of this Bill that railways should be prevented from giving lower rates than those fixed by any one of the tariffs referred to in the Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; except incompatible with the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. It is part of the scheme of the Bill to prevent a railway company from giving a low rate if it wants to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is what he said.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only way in which a railway company can make a lower rate is by submitting the tariff and having that considered and passed upon by the commission; otherwise there would be no end of opportunity for all sorts of unfair discriminations. The tariff would have to be established and approved by the commission.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They may go lower than the tariff.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; because that is one of the fruitful means of affording opportunities of discrimination, and discrimination is the thing that the country is crying out against.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do I understand the minister to say, that applies to the competitive tariff and to the maximum tariff, both.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That applies to the question of tolls. The competitive tariff will not under this Bill have to be submitted and approved before a lower rate can be charged.

PRIVATE BILS.

ERIE-ONTARIO POWER COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Erie-Ontario Power Company.—Mr. German.

On section 11,

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the Minister of Railways was to confer with the promoter of the Bill and have a clause recast.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is the clause, but I do not think it has been recast.

Mr. SPROULE. If the promoter of the Bill is not here, would it not be well to postpone it until he is here ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We can pass the clause, and leave the Bill in committee.

Bill (No. 124) respecting the Hudson's Bay and Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Stewart.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Militia transport and freight, $40,000.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. We were promised some information about the commission.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman asked the other evening for some information about the appointment of Mr. Martineau. I had not then the particulars, but I have them here now, but I think it would be better to defer the discussion of this subject until the report of the commission is laid on the Table. The report is in the hands of my hon. colleague, the Finance Minister, who will be back in a day or two, and I think it will be much better to postpone discussing this matter until that report is before the House, more particularly as it affects the Department of Finance as well as Militia. In reply to my hon. friend, however, I may say that Mr. Martineau was employed first on the 22nd of August, 1901, and continued in our employ until he was arrested. He was a junior second class clerk, paid at the rate of $800 per annum. He was not appointed specially to the accountant branch, but was a clerk of the civil service in the Militia Department, and was given certain duties to perform in connection with the accountants branch. No guarantee was asked, because none was required. None of the officers in the departments here—at any rate none in my department—have anything to do with the handling of money. I understand that it is only in departments such as customs and post office, where moneys are actually handled by the employees, that guarantees are required. That is all the information I have to give at present.

Mr. INGRAM. Who are the commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The manager of the Bank of Ottawa, Mr. Burn ; the Deputy Minister of Finance, and Mr. A. L. Kent, a prominent accountant of the city of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. When will that report be laid on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As soon as the Finance Minister returns.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course, if we pass this item, it is understood that we will be at liberty to discuss this report on any other item ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It was agreed the other night that one item would be held back on which we would have full opportunity to discuss all the other items.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understand that there will be supplementary estimates.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, both for the present and the next year.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It was understood that the hon. minister would not make his general statement until then, because there would be some new matters.

Mr. BENNETT. Did Martineau pass his civil service examinations ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that further information was to be given regarding claims against the town of Valleyfield—whether a writ had been issued, and when, and what is the position now.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Legal proceedings were taken on the 13th of April, 1901. The riot occurred in the autumn of 1900. The troops were paid on the 17th of April, 1901. I shall read the letter which I have found in the department, which will perhaps, better than anything I can say, show exactly the present position of the case. The letter is from Edgar N. Armstrong :

Montreal, May 8, 1903.

Lt.-Col. Alexander Roy,
D. O. C. No. 6 District,
St. Johns.

Re A. Roy and others versus Valleyfield.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your communication, this case is at present pending upon a demurrer filed by the defendant, which will be argued next week. Incidental proceedings in the matter have caused some delay. As soon as a decision upon the demurrer has been rendered, the case will be inscribed for final proof and hearing upon the merits, and I trust it may be heard at the next session of the Supreme Court at Beauharnois, where the action was instituted. I will let you know the decision upon the demurrer when rendered.

Yours faithfully,

EDGAR N. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. SPROULE. The case was inscribed in the fall of 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. And nothing more done since ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. On account of the case being fought on all sorts of technical and other objections, it is only coming to an issue now.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the paper which the hon. gentleman has contain all the information about the various phases ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. BENNETT. On what date was the writ issued ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not the date of the issue of the writ.

Mr. CLARKE. A writ has been issued I presume ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, long ago—in 1901, I take it from this statement.

Mr. BENNETT. If the action was commenced in the spring of 1901, surely it could not have run until now on a demurrer to any of the pleadings or the institution of the action.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am sorry the information is not more complete, I will endeavour to get further particulars, to be given when the militia estimates are again under consideration. This file of papers was handed to me, and I assumed that it was a complete answer to questions asked the other night. At any rate, the letter I have read shows the committee that the case is now being pressed to a conclusion, and that the lawyer in charge of it expects that it will be tried finally at the approaching term of the Superior Court in Beauharnois.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Will the hon. gentleman lay on the Table the papers that he has there that we may examine them ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Is Mr. Armstrong acting on behalf of the government ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. For Colonel Roy.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). In his name?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). As I understand it, these troops were called out some time in 1900 to suppress a riot. They are young men employed as clerks and mechanics in the city of Montreal and surrounding towns. They lost undoubtedly, larger pay while they were absent from their regular duties than the fifty cents a day that they were to be paid for their military service. Yet, have they not yet got the paltry pittance of fifty cents a day?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They got it long ago. They were paid in 1901.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am glad of that. Well, take the case of the recent threatened riot in Montreal. Young men who turned out for the suppression of the riot there lost their regular pay and were drawing only fifty cents a day for the service they rendered. Has the minister taken into consideration this aspect of the case—that troops called out for special service, for the preservation of law and order should be paid higher rates, rates somewhat commensurate with the wages they are losing in the establishments they regularly serve——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If I may interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes, Victoria), I may explain that the statute fixes the rate of pay for this military service.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am well aware of that. But the hon. minister is introducing a new militia law, and I am giving him a suggestion for it. In his new militia law I think it would be very advisable to provide that troops when called out for the preservation of law and order in a municipality they should be given a little more than the original fifty cents a day. It would have the advantage of being a warning and a lesson to the municipality.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The new Bill provides for a higher rate.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I was going to suggest a higher rate of pay for all purposes. I am sorry to say that I could not be present when the item of militia pay was under discussion. But I trust that the minister purposes fixing the rate of pay for volunteers somewhat higher than it has been. It might be fifty cents for the first year, seventy-five cents for the next year and after that one dollar as long as the man remains in the service.

The MINISTER OM MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps the committee will bear with me while I say to my hon. friend that the matter was pretty fully discussed the other evening, and I said that while we had not come to any conclusion, I felt that the better way to give the increase, which I thought ought to be given, was somewhat in the way suggested by my hon. friend, that is, that 50 cents should be the rate for the first year, then, for the second year a man served, if he was a good man, he should get his increase as good conduct pay, and the third year a further increase, his pay to remain at that maximum so long as he served and was within the age limit.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

Mr. CLARKE. If these proceedings in the case of the municipality of Valleyfield were initiated by the commanding officer, how comes it that this correspondence is in the office of the hon. minister? As I understood the hon. minister's explanation to us the other evening, the government had nothing to do with the matter as it was the commanding officer who entered the suit. And yet we find the correspondence in the Militia Department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The correspondence will speak for itself. It seems clear that the officer did not immediately proceed, and I presume he was hoping to collect the money. He waited a reasonable—or unreasonable—time, then the Valleyfield authorities refused to pay, and the officer was asked what he was doing——

Mr. CLARKE. By whom ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. By the General Officer Commanding—it was all done through the military branch. The General Officer Commanding very distinctly states his opinion, in agreement with what I stated the other evening, that it was the duty of the officer commanding the troops that had turned out to suppress a riot to begin an action in his own name.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But not at his own expense ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Oh, no.

Mr. BENNETT. It would appear from this correspondence that the suit must have been commenced through the Department of Militia here or by others with the commanding officer, because it refers to the fact that there are others connected with Colonel Roy as plaintiffs. On the last page of the file there is a letter from the Justice Department stating that there were no steps taken through that department relative to this suit. May I ask the minister if he is aware who Mr. Edgar N. Armstrong is, and whether instructions were given by the Department of Militia and Defence to Mr. Armstrong to commence the action ? I assume from the record, that Mr. Armstrong is a solicitor in the city of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no information respecting Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. BENNETT. It may be that some hon. member from the city of Montreal can tell us who Mr. Armstrong is.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). He is a practising lawyer in the city of Montreal, a son of Mr. C. N. Armstrong.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The proceedings seem to be carried on by direct correspondence with the commanding officer, instead of through the Justice Department. It might be open to the department to commence proceedings in that way, but I think that an examination of the precedents will show that such proceedings were formerly commenced through the Justice Department. I know that was the course under the former regime, and I think it is the proper one. I notice by the memorandum that the department instructed that proceedings be commenced by the commanding officer. It says: 'Instructions to take legal proceedings were sent to the commanding officer of district No. 5 on the 3rd April, 1901.' That is from the department——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The military branch.

Mr. CLARK. Of what?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Of the Militia Department. It does not seem to me a desirable way of proceeding, to pass over the charge of these matters to the commanding officer, who is in no way interested, as I remarked the other evening, except as a trustee for the department. Can the minister explain why instructions were not sent to the Department of Justice to proceed to collect this money? There ought to be some explanation, it seems to me, unless the minister considers that he has pursued the proper course. So far as my judgment goes, his course is irregular. We have a Justice Department here at the service of the government, which should take proceedings in the regular way, and the head of that department is responsible to the government, to parliament and to the country. But instead of that, the hon. gentleman seems to have imposed this duty on the commanding officer. Now, I think the constitutional way is to hand it over to the Justice Department. Besides, the Militia Department is not equipped to take these proceedings at all. Surely the hon. gentleman will recognize that parliament must hold the minister responsible, and therefore he should utilize the proper department of the government to institute proceedings of this sort. It seems to me an unusual proceeding.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend was here the other evening when these estimates were discussed, and he heard the Minister of Justice state that it was a matter which the law fixed, and that the department here, in the first instance, had nothing to do with it. The law reads as follows:—

When the active militia, or any corps thereof, is so called out in aid of the civil power, the municipality in which their services are required shall pay them, when so employed the rates authorized to be paid for actual service to officers, men. . . . . And in addition, shall provide them with proper lodging, and with stabling for their horses; and the said pay and allowances for subsistence and forage, as also the value of lodging and stabling, unless furnished in kind by the municipality, may be recovered from it by the officer commanding the corps, in his own name, and, when so recovered, shall be paid over to the persons entitled thereto.

Under that clause the general officer commanding, as my hon. friend will see if he reads the General's letter, instructed the district officer commanding who called out the troops, that it was his duty to act, and the department had nothing to do with it, at that stage at any rate, and have no other obligation in the matter.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. My sole object in dwelling upon this matter now is to get the minister to take a stand on what he considers to be the constitutional practice that should be followed under these circumstances. When the municipality does not pay the troops the law explains that the department should pay them—that is what happened here. Now, while the law does say that the commanding officer should, in his own name, take action, the money is not going to the commanding officer, but to the Militia Department. Naturally, as the government have paid the money, they have a right to collect it, and the commanding officer has no business to touch it. My object is to get the minister to say on his responsibility what procedure ought to be taken. I contend that under the proper construction of that law the Justice Department should enforce it and take proceedings to recover. It becomes a legal matter then, and it is for the Justice Department to see that legal proceedings are taken. I want to press this matter in order that the militia officers may understand the construction that is put upon it. I think if the officers understood that they are to take these proceedings at their own risk, on their own responsibility and at their own expense, you would very soon find them declining to act as commanding officers. I expressed myself strongly the other night on the same line, and the conclusion of the discussion was that the minister should bring down the information, as he has done, that we might discuss the question more intelligently. Now, we find that the Militia Department instructed the officers to proceed. I say that is not a proper course to follow, because the money to be recovered belongs to the country. Does the hon. gentleman know of any other similar cases that have occurred under his administration?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There has been one case in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. How did you proceed then? Did you pay the troops?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We paid the troops, and took proceedings to recover in the same way.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Was the case sent to the Justice Department to recover the money?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. You directed the commanding officer there to do it?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, he was reminded of his duty, and he proceeded to collect, and did collect in that case, I think.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Well, I think it is time attention was called to the irregularity of proceeding in that way. I submit that is not what is intended under a fair construction of the law. The statute had to provide for some person to bring the suit. But if the practice the department has been following is according to law, the law ought to be promptly changed, and that is the reason why I am laying stress on this matter. Under the old regime, this course would not have been taken. The law is sufficient in its present form if it was carried out in a constitutional way. If the commanding officer had to pay the men himself it would be a different thing, because then he would be acting for the men. I submit that if the law is to be so construed that this money must be collected by the commanding officer, the law should be amended.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the point my hon. friend has taken is well worthy of consideration. I am not a lawyer myself, therefore I am at a disadvantage as compared with him. I assume that the practice followed in this case was the same as the practice followed in preceding cases that have happened. There have not been many, but there have been at least two before this one, one in my time and one before. My deputy minister is a lawyer, and I have a good deal of confidence in him, because he has had a good deal of experience, and I felt quite sure he was pursuing the proper course. I may say at once that I think it will be very proper to submit the question which my hon. friend has raised to the Department of Justice to have our position defined under the statute. I am not able to construe the statute. I have simply stated the construction which was put upon it the night before last by the hon. Minister of Justice within the hearing of my hon. friend. So far as the expense to be incurred by the district officer, or the commanding officer, is concerned, it does not seem to me that there is any question as to that. I do not think there could be any doubt under the statute that where an officer is compelled to do a certain thing it must be understood that the money shall be provided for him, and that he shall not be put to any expense. It does not seem to me that that can admit of argument at all, no matter what course is pursued. It cannot be presumed for a moment that a person who is compelled to bring this suit shall be expected to do so at his own expense.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think there should be any difficulty whatever in working out the statute in that case. As a matter of fact I think that in practice the pay and allowances for the men are provided by the government because usually there is some delay before a municipality pays them over. A suit in regard to a similar matter in the province of Nova Scotia went first to the Supreme Court of that province and then to the Supreme Court of Canada. There was no difficulty about it. The department hands over to the men the pay and allowances provided by the statute. Well, then, the department having done that, the commanding officer, not for his own benefit, or on his own account, but on account of the government, calls upon the municipality for the reimbursement of that amount. The commanding officer is merely the trustee for the government, because the government have paid the money and are entitled to recover it in the name of the commanding officer. The practice pursued in the case I refer to is this: The municipality declined, or neglected to pay over the money to the commanding officer, the Department of Militia and Defence simply placed the case in the hands of the Department of Justice and the Department of Justice instructed its agent to take the necessary proceedings for recovery. These proceedings were taken. A question arose as to the sufficiency of the requisition in that case, as to whether or not the requisition came within the terms of the statute. That case was eventually decided in favour of the Crown and the amount was recovered from the municipality in question. The commanding officer is a mere figure head. He is simply a trustee for the government. If he refuses to take action the government would still have a remedy. That is beyond doubt, and I do not know why there should be any difficulty in a case of this kind more than in any other case, because, the fact that he refuses should not in any way effect the right of the government to recover from the parties who are liable as the law provides. In so far as the hon. Minister of Justice makes any argument to the contrary, I am not clear as to what he means. In so far as he makes an argument to the effect that this is only a matter for the commanding officer, I do not agree with him. There cannot be any question about that. The commanding officer is simply the person in whose name the statute has authorized the suit to be brought. The object is very clear. In the first place the liability is created between the municipality and the officers and men who are entitled to their pay and allowances. It would be inconvenient for every one of these men to sue the municipality; therefore, the statute provides that the action shall be taken in the name of the commanding officer. Another provision is necessary. That is that the men shall be paid while the questions arising with the municipality are being determined by the courts. Therefore, the statute provides that the government may advance these moneys, but it also provides that this shall in no way interfere with the liability of the municipality. Then, it says that the commanding officer shall proceed to sue, and that upon the recovery of the amount he shall pay it over to His Majesty. He is what in law is called a bare trustee for the Crown, having no personal interest whatever. There should be no difficulty in working out the statute and taking the necessary proceedings to recover the money.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think we are entitled to know when these proceedings really were taken by the colonel of the regiment. It was on the 13th April, 1901, that Colonel Aylmer sent instructions to the district officer commanding in these words :

Be so good as to carry out the requirements of the Militia Act, as set forth by the major general commanding in his minute, No. 4, of the 4th instant, and as approved by the hon. the Minister of Militia.

This was on the 13th April, 1901, but it was not until the 24th September, 1901, that the money was paid. So that these instructions to collect from the municipality of Valleyfield were given some months prior to the date of the actual payment of the money as shown by this memorandum from the general officer commanding to the deputy minister, in which he says :

I forward herewith the papers in connection with the claim for payment of the troops employed on duty in connection with the riots at Valleyfield, and, as it will be seen from the preceding minute of the deputy officer commanding militia district Nos. 5-6, that the course prescribed in the Militia Act has been duly carried out, I recommend that the amount due, viz.: $4,442.91 be paid by the government pending a settlement with the Valleyfield municipality.

(Sgd.) R. H. O'GRADY-HALY,
Maj. Gen. Com'd'g. Can. Militia.

That is dated the 24th September, 1901, so that it cannot have been subsequent to the date when the money was actually paid. I see that the hon. minister has his deputy here. Perhaps he will tell us at what date the instructions were given to this gentleman, Mr. Edgar N. Armstrong, who is apparently the solicitor on the record, to commence proceedings. Is it a fact that proceedings were instituted through the department and instructions given direct to Mr. Armstrong, and if not when were the instructions sent by the department to the commanding officer to commence action ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In April, 1901.

Mr. BENNETT. But the money had not been paid by the department until September of that year.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That did not make any difference.

Mr. BENNETT. There is nothing in the records of the department that will show ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The riot occurred in October, 1900. The district officer commanding waited until April. He failed to collect. The general officer commanding inquired what was going on and reminded the district officer commanding of his duty under the statute to bring action to collect the money. I do not know the date at which the district officer commanding began action but he was instructed in April, 1901, to bring the action. Later on the Valleyfield people, having still refused to pay, in September, I think it was, the money was paid.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not conversant with the practice in the province of Quebec, but it seems to me very odd that when the suit was commenced in April, 1901, the demurrer in the courts has not been disposed of yet.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not say the suit was commenced. I said that a reminder was sent to the district officer commanding that he was not attending to his duty and that was sent in April, 1901.

Mr. BENNETT. It was the whole contention the other night that this action was delayed, that no process was issued, that no steps were taken to show that the department was pressing for the payment of the claim which had been made against the municipality of Valleyfield for months, and that it was dragged on pending a by-election that happened in that county. The hon. minister must have something in his department that will show the actual date of the issue of the writ, or when instructions were given to Colonel Roy that he must press for payment by process in the court.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to give the date of the issue of the writ, but I will get it and complete the file of papers the next time these estimates come up.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it be unreasonable to ask the minister to bring down a copy of demurrer filed by the municipality of Valleyfield ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If it is filed I will get it.

Mr. BENNETT. The plaintiffs are Roy et al. Who were the others associated with Mr. Roy in the action.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am unable to say. I will endeavour to get the file of all the papers from the court and produce them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A very interesting case arose out of this matter in connection with the refusal of a certain commanding officer to turn out his corps when ordered. What are the facts of the case as determined by the court ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. You refer to the case of Col. Cole and Col. Cooke ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I would ask my hon. friend to let that stand, because I am bringing down an item in the supplementary estimates with regard to it, when the whole thing can be discussed.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understand that the minister has declined to bring down the special report which has been made by the major general commanding. Would the minister please repeat his reasons, as I will probably have something to say about it later on.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I consider this report of the major general commanding to be of a confidential character, precisely similar to the report made by the Defence Committee in 1898 for which the House voted $5,000. That report was marked 'secret' and was intended for the use of the government and of the intelligence branch of the war office.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the war office an intelligence branch now, or had it then ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, so-called. I do not believe there is a country in the world in which reports of that kind are published.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I am not speaking of the Defence Committee report.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I say that the report of the major general commanding is precisely of the same character as the report of the Defence Committee, and I am arguing that it should be treated in the same way. I shall be very glad to submit both these reports to the leader of the opposition and to whatever members he wishes to associate with him as a confidential committee, but I do think it would be very much out of place to publish a report of that kind or lay it on the Table of the House.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The minister's explanation of what the report is——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is a defence scheme.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I quite agree that a defence report should not be published because it is a plan by which an enemy could be most successfully met, but I do not understand from the explanation of the minister that the report in question is of such a nature. I thought it was a report on what the major general believed would put the militia of Canada on an efficient footing. In his annual report, the major general says :

> With this report I have the honour also to forward another special report to which I have given a great deal of thought, and it contains a broad scheme for the improvement of the militia. If the proposals contained in it are carried out they will in my opinion conduce to the greater efficiency of the militia.

It would not appear from this that there would be anything secret about the report. There may be reasons why the minister would not carry out the recommendations in that report, the expense among other things, but seeing that the major general does not say that it is a confidential report, I do not think the minister should take the responsibility of keeping it from parliament. I have not the honour of knowing Lord Dundonald even by sight, but he is an officer of very high reputation and very great experience, qualities which commend him highly to the people of this country and to the militia force, and consequently his views on what would add to the efficiency of our militia are extremely important to the public, and I have no doubt would be very beneficial if they could be carried into effect.

With all deference to my leader, and with all the confidence that I have in him, I do not think the private examination of that report should be left to his responsibility. I think we are all entitled to get the benefit of it. At this time especially, when the relations of the colonies to the Empire, particularly in regard to defensive measures, are a live question, it would be most opportune to have a scheme devised by a man of the capacity and responsibility of the Major General Commanding, and endorsed by the government. I am one of those who have no desire for what is called militarism in the sense in which that word is generally used. I think we ought to do our share, and we ought not to be afraid to do our full share, of providing for the defence of this country, and if we do that, it may be fairly taken as our quota towards the defence of the empire. That is my idea at the present time of the distance we should go in that direction. I know of nothing that would be more satisfactory to myself, as a representative of the people, and I believe to all other representatives of the people in this House, and to the militia force, a part of which made such a splendid record for themselves in fighting side by side with the force which in case of need would help us to defend this country. I regret that the minister has taken the view he has expressed. I hope I may be able to induce him yet to reconsider his decision. In my opinion he will make a serious mistake if he does not submit the report to the public view. It will be a mistake for him in his position, for his department, and for the government, and a disappointment to the force, if we are not allowed to see that report, prepared by a great and experienced soldier, one of the finest officers, from his record, in the British service. Let us see it and judge for ourselves. I do not think it is at all on the line of the defence report. There were most important and essential reasons why that should be secret, but none of those reasons seem applicable to a report of this sort. While the scheme may be too large and too expensive in many ways, yet I think it would be an excellent thing for us to have the views, extravagant or otherwise, contained in this report as to what will be necessary to put our militia into an efficient shape, and as to the proper size of that force. I am more than ever desirous of seeing it for this reason. So far the Major General and the minister have not shown a disposition to expend money extravagantly in the way of training the militia. They are introducing some new features. Probably from what the hon. minister says about the supplementary estimates, and about postponing the discussion until we have them before us, we may have some statements at that time in regard to those features. But in the meantime I hope he will change his mind and allow this report to be seen and judged by all the people of this country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I thought it was understood that we were to postpone this discussion; but I am afraid my hon. friend is rather inclined to anticipate the discussion on the item which I agreed to bring down later on. I thought that was the proper course to pursue, because I hope in the supplementary estimates to have some items on which a discussion of this kind can properly be raised. Of course, my hon. friend has the advantage of me in coming to a judgment of the report he is talking about, because he has never read it, and I have. Let me repeat to him that the report is in my judgment very similar to that of the defence committee which sat here in 1898. That report has been adopted by this government, and approved by the intelligence branch of the War Office, with which we must be in touch in carrying out our defensive schemes in this country. I do not think it is wise to pursue two lines of a defence scheme at once. I prefer to get rid of one before I begin with another. When the estimate which I have to bring down is brought here, I propose to take the House into my confidence, so far as I can, with reference to the contents of the defensive committee's report of 1898 and the contents of the Major General's report of a recent date.

Mr. INGRAM. What the hon. minister has just stated would rather confirm the widespread rumour that there was a difference of opinion between the General Officer Commanding and the hon. minister respecting this report; and if we look at the statement in the Militia Report, submitted by the General Officer Commanding, we shall see that he finds a good deal of fault with the way in which the militia force of Canada is conducted, for instance, in the matter of equipment. I would like to know how we are going intelligently to discuss the estimates of the Militia Department without being in possession of all the necessary information. I submit that the hon. gentleman should at least give us that portion of the report which it would not injure the militia to make public; and instead of the minister reserving his general statement until the supplementary estimates are brought down, if that statement had been made when the estimates were first introduced, we would be enlightened as to his policy with respect to the militia of this country. But not knowing what the policy of the hon. gentleman is, I fail to see how we can discuss these estimates as they ought to be discussed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). With reference to defence schemes and confidential documents, the history of European countries shows that these are largely instruments to encourage some confidential clerk to sell them to neighbouring agents. I do not know that there should be any confidential scheme of defence for Canada. The cheapest confidential scheme would be to have all our young fellows trained to be good shots so that they could make any enemy feel that it was a rather dangerous experiment to cross the border.

Mr. BOYD. Puncture them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes, puncture any enemy that would cross the border. We heard a great deal about the confidential scheme of the war office for the invasion of the Transvaal, but when the South African war broke out, there was not a solitary map of the Transvaal or Orange Free State in Britain. So far as the confidential report of the general is concerned, that has been discussed before, and I shall not reopen the discussion. I should be sorry to have anything said here which would tend to produce the slightest friction among the officers of the Militia Department. It has always been my aim and the aim of hon. members on this side to keep the issues in the Militia Department out of the arena of contentious discussion as much as possible, because we should all stand shoulder to shoulder in the upholding of our country. I have not had an opportunity of reading this famous report, but the hon. minister has expressed himself in this House as very favourable to the views stated by the general. He has told us that he and the general are in accord in all these matters. That being the case, I am not disposed to probe too deep into any little wound or any confidential reports there may be in the department, but I trust that in due time these things will be used in the best interests of the militia. I may inform the hon. minister that it is my intention, either on the militia estimates or on going into Committee of Supply, to take up the question of training the youth of the country in the use of the rifle. My whole aim is to get both young and old men trained in the use of firearms, so that should an enemy assail us, I care not whether our cousins to the south, or invaders from any other quarter of the globe, they would hesitate before they crossed the Canadian border to face the lads of this country.

Mr. INGRAM. Does this deal with transportation going to and returning from camp?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. This covers the transport of officers of the headquarters and district staff of the permanent corps on staff duties during annual drill—$8,000, transport of officers and men of the active militia and the permanent corps to and from the schools of instruction, also transport to and from the different stations, $10,000; freight and express charges on stores, $20,000.

Militia—grants to asociations, $38,000.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. How many of these associations are there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This vote is divided as follows:

Grant to Dominion Rifle Association..	$10,000
Artillery Association..	5,000
Provincial Rifle Association..	8,700
Local Rifle Associations..	6,500
Bands..	7,500
Military Institutes..	300
Total..	$38,000

In round numbers, the number of men enrolled in the different rifle associations is close on 20,000. There are two classes of associations. There are the military associations in the different militia corps, the assistance given to which is 200 rounds of free ammunition per annum. Then there are the civil associations, composed of not less than forty members and up to eighty. To each of these we give 100 rounds of ammunition and a certain number of rifles. Of course we cannot spare as many rifles as we would like.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. How do you see that these rifles are cared for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The captain of each civil association is an officer of the militia.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Would a retired officer do?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is being done with regard to the furnishing of ammunition to the various schools of the country for rifle practice? I refer to miniature ammunition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At present we have no authority under the law to do that, but I hope that in the new Bill we will take that authority.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If an institution were willing to purchase, would it get the ammunition at a reasonable rate?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. How much was expended last year on this item?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Forty thousand dollars.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Formerly the rifle associations obtained larger grants from the government than they do now. Why has the amount been cut down?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I was not aware that it had been cut down.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I may say on behalf of the association I have the honour to represent that we are very glad to get it doubled up again.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The same amount of money or a larger amount is expended, but it is given in a different way, in the maintenance of rifle ranges and in other ways.

Mr. FOWLER. This amount covers the grants to civil associations as well as military. In what proportions is it divided between them?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not think I could give the exact figures.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that this is a matter of some importance, that we may know how far the general public have taken advantage of this offer.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already informed the hon. gentleman that we have 20,000 men enlisted in the civilian associations.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me there ought to be in the department information that could be given to the committee with respect to this matter. I am surprised that the minister seems to treat it so lightly. It seems to me a matter of importance to know whether persons not enrolled in militia camps are taking an interest in making up associations and becoming proficient in the use of the rifle. We have understood that it will be a very important feature if ever we are called upon to defend this country, that the young men—and old men too—should be well trained in the use of the rifle whether they are connected with the militia or not. I think the minister should be able to give us this information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I shall be glad to give the hon. gentleman the information. I find that, according to districts the associations are divided as follows:—

	Military.	Civilian.
District No. 1, London..	7	21
" 2, Toronto..	15	22
" 3, Kingston and Ottawa..	24	14
District No. 5, Montreal..	7	13
" 6, St. John..	..	7
" 7, Quebec..	3	2
" 8, New Brunswick	8	9
" 9, Nova Scotia ..	5	10
" 10 Winnipeg	6	32
" 11, British Columbia..	5	10
District No. 12, Prince Edward Island..	4	9
Ottawa Brigade..	1	1

Mr. FOWLER. It must be very gratifying to every member of this committee—I am sure it is to me—to know that the general public is taking an interest in the matter of rifle practice.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) for asking the question.

Mr. FOWLER. I asked it in order to bring out the information, for I may say to the minister that I think this the most valuable improvement made in connection with the Militia Department, and I was anxious to know how the people were taking hold. Would the hon. Minister tell me whether there were any differences made between the grants given to civilian associations and those to the military associations.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is no difference, except in the ammunition. The military get two hundred rounds—that is, they get one hundred rounds at the time of their annual drill and they get one hundred besides—while the civilian associations get only one hundred.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose that in some of these civilian rifle associations there would be military members

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. They would be formed, I suppose, in rural constituencies where it would be impossible for a sufficient number of military men to get together, and would be filled up with civilians. Could the minister give an idea how many altogether are civilians and how many are military men ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am afraid I cannot. But in the province of Manitoba where we have far the largest number of civilian associations, there are very few members who belong to the militia at all. That is a very satisfactory point. In the other districts I am not able to say ; but I can say that a very large proportion of the members are civilians. Let me say one word further. We did not feel justified in making this large grant of ammunition without getting some pledge in return, and all the members of the civilian associations signed an agreement to serve in case of emergency, to join the active militia and serve their country for three years.

Mr. FOWLER. I think that is a very proper thing. I would like to know the total enrolment in these associations.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About 20,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Are rifles supplied to them ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. Unfortunately we are not able to supply many rifles, but we supply ten Lee-Enfield rifles to every 40 men of the civilian association.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the authority under which the hon. gentleman acted in supplying civilians with this ammunition ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have the vote of parliament, and we have the regulations of the militia which have been authorized by this parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that so far as high schools are concerned he did not provide this ammunition to them free. But I find an exception here, the Hamilton Collegiate Institute has been supplied with free ammunition. I think that all the institutes ought to be treated alike.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I suppose in that case they are connected with one of the corps, and are over 18 years of age. We are limited by the Act, there is an age limit, and that is the reason we cannot grant clothing, money or ammunition to boys below the age fixed in the statute. In this particular case it is a voluntary corps, and the rifle has been issued under the Militia Act.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In regard to the Hamilton Collegiate Institute, I have the target returns in my possession for the senior corps. They are members of the regular rifle association and shoot over the long ranges. The junior corps shoot with the miniature ammunition. I do not know whether that ammunition has been supplied free or not. The collegiate scores are all at 200, 500 and 600 yards, seven rounds at each range. Out of a possible 105, I find the score running up to 68, 54, 46, 45, 37 and so on. This is at 200, 500 and 600 yards for boys. Then they had one match of seven rounds rapid firing at 500 yards, and I find that the scores were very creditable. Out of a possible 35 one made 26, one made 18 one made 17, 19, 15, 17, 11 and so on. The scores all through are very creditable. Although these are cadets in a collegiate institute, nevertheless they shoot with long range rifles, and at very long ranges. In the case of the junior cadets, they used miniature ammunition and the score there for the boys from 12 to 14 years of age is remarkably creditable, and I will give it to the House later on.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to get authority to supply ammunition to the different schools throughout the country ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have it already, but we have not had enough ammunition to go round, so far. It is manufactured in Quebec. Next year, on account of the largely increased machinery, we expect to be able to manufacture over 2,000,000 rounds.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it a fact that to the junior class in this collegiate institute at Hamiltion you have charged for the miniature ammunition supplied, or was it supplied free ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was not supplied free.

Mr. FOWLER. Then the reason that the others could get none was not because there was none, if you supplied it free in this case. If you supplied it to the senior class free why should you not supply it to the junior class free ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have explained that the senior class comes within the law and the regulations, and the junior class do not.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to get authority to supply the juniors ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In the new Bill which has been prepared and of which notice has been given it is proposed to take that authority. I stated the other night that I would be able to say whether I would bring down the Bill this session or not, but I am not prepared to say that to-night.

Mr. INGRAM. It is a most inconsistent thing to supply the juniors with ammunition and make them pay for it, and to supply the seniors free. The reason cannot be that it is dangerous for the juniors, because it would be just as dangerous for the seniors. I am sorry to see the minister so indefinite in regard to introducing his Bill this session. Last session he gave us a promise that the Militia Act would be amended so as to give these boys an opportunity of having free ammunition. There are several other things that should be provided in connection with cadet corps. For instance, the arms are too heavy for them, as the hon. gentleman will see by his own report. More interest should be taken in the cadet corps. I hope the hon. gentleman will not overlook the importance of providing that these cadet corps should spend at least a short time in camp, perhaps for one day, subject to certain restrictions safeguarding and protecting them in such a way as that the parents of these small boys would not object to their attending camp. I trust the hon. gentleman will give this matter consideration.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I agree entirely with my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) and other hon. gentlemen who have indicated their opinion as to the importance of looking after these young cadets. At the same time it must not be forgotten that under our constitution the provinces have control of educational matters and this to a very large extent must come under their purview. I am making arrangements with some of the heads of the educational departments of the provinces with a view of trying to agree upon some plan by which we can do a little more to further the end which my hon. friends and myself have in view.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would say that this is another point I purpose bringing up when this question is discussed at greater length, but now that we are on the question, and in view of the early coming on of the military camps, I will take the opportunity of giving the hon. minister a few suggestions and like the old medicine, if they will not do any good they will not do any harm. The target practice, even under the very capable instructors that are placed over these camps is largely, to use a mild term, wasted at the present time. The riflemen go down and practice at the targets. What the hon. Minister should see carried out is that every officer not only practices shooting, but that he also take hold of the squad and instruct the squad how to carry out its rifle practice. Then, when they get through with that they should go on to the long range and the officers and non-commissioned officers in turn should take charge of the instruction, because men learn by doing. It is all right for a man to stand off and see another giving directions, but unless he gets into harness himself and has to put his men through the firing practice he is not as proficient as he otherwise would be. I have watched them frequently in camp. I watched them last year at the Niagara camp for part of a day. It was very nice—I will not say it was useless—but it was not as useful as it might have been. I just give the hon. minister these suggestions in order that if they commend themselves to him they may be carried out in the coming camps. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has considered the proposition as to placing, not only rifles with all these Dominion associations and a couple of rifles in each school in the country for the use of the school associations, but ultimately of placing a rifle in the hands of every ablebodied man in the Dominion of Canada under proper auspices.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I would be delighted to do it, but when I have only $35,000 for rifles, I find it very difficult.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the hon. minister to say that a portion of this amount went in aid of military bands ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. minister give us some information about that ? What principle is adopted in assisting bands and what bands are assisted ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The amount given to bands depends npou the number of men in the band and its efficiency. It ranges from $25 up to $100. It is given to all the bands throughout the country and to all the corps.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is the judge as to efficiency ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The commanding officer. It may be the district officer commanding or possibly be an officer from headquarters. I think usually it is the district officer commanding.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to the cadets, what is the limit of age ; that is, how old must they be before they can enter ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Twelve.

Mr. SPROULE. From twelve up ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Even at the risk of being somewhat unpopular, I have entertained the view for some time that there is a possibility of carrying this military spirit a little too far. There is no doubt whatever that we are fast developing by our system, or conduct, a strong military spirit all over the country and that we are attracting the youth of our country from the industrial pursuits of life. I notice that these military cadets are very popular in towns and villages. It is there you would expect them to be popular, but I notice as well that the youth of smaller towns and villages and those connected with country schools all over the country are taking it up very rapidly and there seems to be a strong and growing ambition to be connected with some military organization, military cadets, or military something. Many of them are showing the strong inclination owing to that to get away to the larger fields of life where they can be more intimately associated with military life than they are in the country villages or at the country schools. We have at present, in my judgment, too many attractions to draw the youth of the country away from the agricultural pursuits of life especially. This seems to be another one that may grow to dangerous proportions in future, and I am merely throwing out this word of warning. While this is no doubt intended to be in the right direction there seems to be a possibility of starting an agitation that afterwards may grow beyond the proportions that we intended it should reach and beyond the proportions that are healthy in the interests of the country. I think we ought to be a little careful and not encourage it too much, because if it is continued and grows as rapidly in the future as it has in the past, it may be a trouble to this country, because we cannot keep it under control as we may desire to do. There is no question that this is one of the things to-day that is becoming very attractive to the youth of the country and is tending to draw very many away from home at an earlier period in life than perhaps they should be taken away in their own interests, or in the interest of their parents, or of the pursuits of life with which they are connected.

Mr. BENNETT. If there is no hard and fast rule by which the rifles of a battalion are to be kept entirely at the headquarters of the battalion, I would like to ask the consideration of the hon. minister to the request that the rifles of the two companies which have their headquarters at the town of Orillia may be kept there. In the cities it is much more easy to get up a feeling of kindliness, if I may so term it, towards the militia, owing to the fact that in cities the companies cultivate the social side of military life. In the town of Orillia one very attractive feature has been the friendly competition between the civilian corps of shooting men and those connected with the militia, but owing to the fact that the rifles are kept at the battalion headquarters at Barrie, these two companies have been without the attraction of rifle shooting that other companies have in the battalion. I would ask the hon. minister if these companies could have their rifles, and as the armoury is not as good there as might be desired, I would call his attention to the fact that in the public building used for the purposes of a post office and other government offices, there is a large room that I think is not in general use which might be used for the storage of these rifles.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I sympathize very much with the views expressed by my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett). I am very sorry indeed that a change was made in the rural battalions by making central headquarters, and I am frank enough to admit that I think it was a mistake. There seemed to be some sort of extraordinary dread, when I came into office, in the mind of the then general officer commanding as to issuing the new rifle. The officers seemed to have an idea that it should be packed in cotton wool, and that the militiaman should be allowed to see it only once a year. We have outgrown that now, but the prevailing idea then was that we must not issue the rifles until there was a central armoury and a competent armourer. In the meantime we have constructed certain armouries, and I suppose we feel under an obligation to make use of them ; but I think that the proposal made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is perfectly fair, and I will take it into consideration and see whether his wishes in that regard cannot be carried into effect.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The theory to which the minister refers was due to the fact that the myth was abroad that once a rifle had been fired with cordite cartridge it must be cleaned immediately. I have a rifle that I have carried in 1899 and 1900, and every year since, and it has not been cleaned once.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I may explain that it belongs to myself ; and though it never has been cleaned once, yet strange to say its bullet sometimes finds its billet. It has fired some thousands rounds of ammunition, and it is all right.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think that is the general experience.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am sorry the minister did not reply to the remarks of my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) in relation to the creation of a military spirit in the country. So far as I am concerned, I would have every boy and, for that matter, every girl, in Canada imbued with the military spirit, and then you would never have to dread militarism. Our permanent corps are begging Canadians to join and they will not do so, but in a district where there is a proper military spirit abroad you will find our young men joining the volunteers enthusiastically.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The reason I did not reply to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was because I felt that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) could reply very much better than I could.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me give an illustration of what I mean. Not very long ago I was passing a country school and saw a number of boys, ranging in years from nine to fourteen, each of them with a little wooden gun marching under the command of a small boy, and each with a cigarette in his mouth, puffing away for all he was worth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. SPROULE. It did seem to me that the doctrine of teaching the young idea how to shoot had been inculcated into them too early in life, and that they had associated with it other habits of military life.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have carried a gun for thirty-seven years, and I have never had a cigarette or a pipe in my mouth yet, so the two things do not go hand in hand.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. There are few like my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes), and we cannot expect the ordinary individual to be the same as he is.

Mr. INGRAM. I disapprove of the idea that we should not encourage our boys to join the cadet corps. It is not so much that it creates a military spirit as that it promotes discipline and strength of character. If the member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) saw the cadet corps in connection with our Collegiate Institute, and saw those boys one day before they joined the cadets and two weeks afterwards, he would find them greatly improved.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INGRAM. The cadet corps creates discipline, it gives the boys a bearing which they preserve through life, and if they should ever be called to the defence of their country it imparts to them at all events the rudiments of military knowledge. I believe these cadet corps ought to be encouraged, and I believe the parents of our Canadian boys approve of them. The gentleman in St. Thomas who looks after the cadet corps there has received very great praise from the commanding officers for the discipline which he imparts to the boys. My hon. friend will find that could they have cadet corps in villages the same as we have in cities, and if he inquires into it, he will find that instead of encouraging the boys to smoke cigarettes it would train them to habits directly the opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. If it were confined to collegiate institutes the boys would have reached more mature years, and the system would not be so objectionable. My experience is that in nearly every rural school throughout the country the spirit is becoming so prevalent that children of seven or eight years are imbued with it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. Those acquainted with rural districts recognize that there are attractions in military life which draw the youth at too early an age from their quiet farm homes to the cities. We have been considering how we can prevent this depopulation of the agricultural districts. There are various reasons for it, and in my judgment this is one of them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The argument of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) defeats itself. If the policy of having all the youth of the country trained in military exercises is carried out, there will be no need of these boys rushing to the cities and towns to indulge in military training. I can say to him, with a good deal of pride—and the gallant and learned gentleman from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) will endorse this statement—that at the time of the military review at Toronto, two years ago, some of the rural corps took second place to no corps from Toronto or any other city on that occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that due to the system of military cadets inaugurated some years ago ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). To speak personally, I had the honour of leading a regiment which I think was considered second to none on that occasion, and I can assure the hon. member for East Grey that the efficiency of that regiment was largely due to the fact that many of the men had been trained in the schools before joining the volunteer corps. Fully one-half of one company and about one-third of another, were boys who had their training in the schools of the country previous to going into camp. The hon. member for East Elgin has very properly pointed out the great advantage of this training. Where do you find men with more respect for law and order than the old soldiers of this country ? You never find them indulging in disorder, except in an occasional celebration on pension day, and I am sure that my hon. friend from East Grey would not object to that. Wherever you have a strong military spirit, you have more manhood in the youth of the country. As the hon. member for East Elgin says, when you have a boy who stands with his head erect and his hands out of his pockets, you have the making of a man ; but when you see one standing with his head down and his hands in his pockets, and a streak of tobacco down his jaw, you can safely say that he is on the way to the gutter. I trust that the hon. member for East Grey will reconsider the conclusion he arrived at on seeing those boys going around with cigarettes in their mouths. I am surprised he did not stop them and read them a moral lecture. But I am sure that if he will make the school a present of a Union Jack and the teacher a present of a new bonnet for their proficiency in drill, the result will be that the boys will give up smoking.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no doubt the hon. member is able to give a great deal of valuable advice ; but I fail to see that he has advanced any logical reason why I should change my views on the subject. I admit that a military training does make boys look more manly ; that is in the right direction. But in many other directions I am afraid it is not for the well-being of the youth of the country. The hon. gentleman suggests that the member for East Grey might have read these boys a moral lecture. Well, he is perhaps not as much in the habit of reading moral lectures to others as the hon. gentleman is, and there may be some excuse for my refraining.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to point out that if the youth of the country are trained in the way we have been describing, the necessity will be avoided of the General Officer Commanding making such remarks as the following in his report :

> For example, at Niagara-on-theLake this year, out of 1,054 non-commissioned officers there were not less than 440 who put on the stripes for the first time. Such a force certainly does not provide the trained frame-work needed to make a citizen army efficient in time of war.
> As with some of the non-commissioned officers, so it is with some of the officers.

Militia—contingencies, $22,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This item is made up as follows : Printing and stationery, $13,000 ; military survey, $4,000—a survey carried on by the pupils of the Royal Military college, under the direction of a competent officer of the college, which has been going on for some years ; injuries at annual drill, covering cases of illness and accidents to men and occasionally to horses, $2,000 ; telegraphic expenses, legal expenses, and sundries, $3,000. It is the usual vote.

Royal Military College, $75,000.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I see that is just the same as the vote of last year. There is nothing new in it, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it is the same.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see in the Auditor General's Report, at page Q—83, an item of $3,288 which was paid to R. Crawford for coal. Was that purchased by tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Livingston & Bros. were paid $7,201 for clothing. Was that also purchased by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. It is impossible to do that, because the clothes are made to measure. We have pursued the course that has always been pursued since the college was established.

Defenses of Esquimalt, $114,703.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is the usual vote. It is based on an agreement entered into between this government and the imperial government, the terms of which were laid on the Table of the House two years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. This expenditure is spread over a term of years. How long was it supposed to run ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Ten years, I think.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There has been a good deal of discussion throughout the press, especially in the old country, as to why Canada does not get on with her general officers commanding. If we are to judge by the verdict recorded by almost every one of these generals, each one found that his predecessor was absolutely useless. Discuss the matter with any imperial officer of high standing in the old land, and he will tell you that there are three types of generals sent out to this country. One of these was the second in command of a certain regiment, and in order to avoid having to give him the command of that famous regiment, he was shipped to Canada to get him out of the way. Another was sent but because they wanted to keep him a year or two longer on the full pay list. Another was such a born crank that they had no place for him in the service in the old country and so they sent him out to Canada. And another came out in order that he might make the Canadian militia a stepping stone to the position of commander in chief in the imperial service. For the first time in history, we have in Canada a general officer who was sent here by the imperial authorities on his superior merits. I have therefore no hesitation whatever in encouraging the House to increase his pay. I am thoroughly in favour of having an imperial trained officer to command our militia, but I am also thoroughly in favour of reforming the training of the imperial officer. The fact that in many cases these officers have been failures in Canada is not necessarily due to any fault on the part of the people in Canada, but because the pay was not sufficient to attract an officer considered fit to take the position, and inferior men were sent out. This is what you will be told by officers high in the imperial service in the old country. But we have to-day a general officer commanding who is a credit to the imperial service, who is an ornament to the British empire, whether you take him as a gentleman or a soldier, and I should be very glad to see his salary increased to what it should be. If such were done, we could look forward to having the proper men sent out to command our militia.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Since my hon. friend has been in charge of the Militia Department, the pay of the general officer commanding has been raised to a figure which we thought would be an inducement to officers, such as the one we have now, to take the position. As to our former generals, I do not think that the gossip which my hon. friend heard in England is at all applicable to them, nor do I think it desirable to repeat gossip of that kind reflecting on gentlemen who are no longer at the head of our militia, but who served us well when in this country. When we discussed the question of pay, we compared the amount these officers get in the other colonies and increased ours accordingly, and I apprehend that the gentleman who is here now understood what pay he was going to get when he accepted the post, and that pay compares fairly with what is paid by the other colonies.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I owe no apology to this House or anybody else for the comments I have made. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that he was not long enough Minister of Militia to know very much about it. Take these generals, and the fact that they have all run foul against the various Canadian governments has reflected adversely on this country in more ways than one. I know that that subject has been discussed in the old country very recently, and the fact that there has been occasion for such discussion is due to no fault on the part of the Canadian people or government. This remark is applicable to past governments as well as to the present one. As regards the increases of salary, I was the first to bring that matter up and I fought it to a finish. I found that the little colony of New South Wales was giving its officer commanding a higher salary than this Dominion was giving, with its population of 5,000,000 and its immense resources. To-day we should still further increase the salary of the general officer commanding. I maintain that we can very properly increase the pay to what it should be and encourage not only this officer to remain but similar officers to come to this country.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria), takes the responsibility of saying these things for himself, of course, he bears his responsibility. But what I understood him as stating before was the gossip he heard in England. If he speaks of his own experience and sentiments, I have nothing to say about it. But, I will say that the gentlemen who have come here from England have been, as a rule, capable men, and they have served this country well by helping materially to bring our militia force to the splendid state in which it now is. And I may repeat that it will not help the position of this country, nor will it improve the opinion held of Canada in the old country, to bring these things up with regard to gentlemen who have served us for some time and have returned to their regiments and to take the rank they were entitled to at home.

Mr. SPROULE. As one who is not a military man, I may be permitted to state, how, in my opinion, this strikes a good many people throughout the country. To many it is inexplicable that nearly every general officer commanding who comes out is praised very highly for a time after he comes, leaving us to think that we have the best officer commanding that could be secured, but, after a time, there is dissatisfaction and grumbling, and these keep increasing until it must be very unpleasant for the general officer commanding if he tries to remain throughout the natural length of his term of office. I think the impression is that we have had some good general officers, notwithstanding that dissatisfaction has been expressed before they left the country. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) said—I forget whether he intimated that it was a remark he heard on the other side of the water—that the general officers came in contact with snags over here. In defence of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, who might otherwise be thought to be one of the 'snags' I think I might ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) to whom he intended to refer by that expression.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Certainly not to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who I regret to say, has been very sycophantic to some of the gentlemen.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps I may be expected at this point to say a single word. There is a great deal of truth in what the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) says as to the salary given to the general officer commanding. It is, no doubt, true that Canada pays less than any other colony of the British Empire to an officer of equal rank. I do not think however, that that fact makes very much difference in the class of officers——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes, it does.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, I think the fact that Canada occupies a leading position among the colonies of the British Empire makes the position here sought after, and officers are rather anxious to get here. For instance, I happen to know of a gentleman who was offered a position of very much higher emolument, but declined it in order to come here. That is some proof of the correctness of my argument. That, however, is not a very good argument as bearing upon the question, whether we are paying our general officer commanding adequately or not. I think that that is a very good subject for consideration. On that point I can only refer to what I said the other night. I do do not care to be drawn into that discussion again, except, perhaps, to repeat one observation I made the other day, and that is that while gentlemen who have been sent out here have been very good soldiers, they have not been men with the kind of experience necessary to qualify them to occupy the very delicate and difficult position which the general officer commanding occupies in this self-governing country at the head of the militia force. Most of these gentlemen—all of them in fact—are regular soldiers accustomed to command in the regular army and men who have not had experience in the war office in connection with the executive of the mother country or any other country. I will not add anything more.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. minister if, in making his general statement, he intends to deal with the recommendations in the report brought down?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. By the general officer commanding?

Mr. INGRAM. And by all the officers who make recommendations?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understand that item 83 will stand.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Item 83 stands.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). If there is no objection we will proceed with the customs estimates. But if hon. gentlemen object to that, we will not press it. Perhaps we might take half an hour at the customs estimates.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). There is nothing contentious in the customs.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Unfortunately a number of gentlemen who are specially interested in the customs estimates, and familiar with the matters involved, are not present, and, perhaps we could not make much progress to-night. But, if the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir William Mulock) is particularly anxious to go on, we might go on until eleven o'clock.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It was expected that the militia estimates would last all evening.

Customs—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the various provinces and in the North-west Territories, $1,059,865.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase of $80,000 here. This surely will require a lengthy explanation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is a very large increase, but I know that the committee will readily grant the amount asked. We must have the money to carry on the business of the department. I do not know of any objection that could be taken. The business having increased, of course it cannot be carried on at the same expense as before. I may explain that while we take $100,000 more this year than last year, it will really only be $50,000 more, because I will ask for a supplementary estimate of $50,000 for the current year. When you grant that supplementary of $50,000 it will no doubt be an increase over 1902-3, but it is necessary from the expansion of business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman give us an explanation of what the $80,000 is composed of?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Sixteen thousand eight hundred is required to meet increased contingent expenses at various ports. There are contingent expenses for cartage of goods and different things of that kind. There is also an increase in postage of some $6,000, owing to increased business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman tell us what the department has to do with the cartage of goods ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is an examination required, under the Act, of one case of merchandise out of every ten. If there are ten cases of dry goods coming in, the law requires that at least one case must be taken to the examining warehouse and be examined. If there are only two cases, one of them must go to the examining warehouse for examination. The department pays for the cartage of those goods thus taken to the examining warehouse, and as there is a large increase in the importation of goods, the cartage account has also increased.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much of this is for cartage ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The contingent expenses at the port of Montreal are $3,850 more, largely caused by increased cartage owing to increase of business. There is also an additional expenditure of $2.50 per day for a man to deliver invoices from the custom house to the examining warehouse. The expenditure for contingencies at this port for eight months to 28th February, 1903, was $10,517, or at a rate of $15,775 for the year. The estimate last year was only $12,650, and we think it is advisable to raise it to $16,500. That is for the port of Montreal. I will give you some figures to show why we want this increase. The customs revenue at Montreal in 1900-1 was $8,981,787 ; in 1901-2 it was $9,965,366. So there was an increase of about $1,000,000. In the eight months ending on the 28th of February, 1903, the revenue was $7,816,620, or at the rate of $11,724,930 for the year. The cost of collection in 1900-1 was $1.72, while in 1901-2 the cost of collection was $1.55. I give these figures to show that while contingent expenses are increasing, that is entirely owing to the increase of business ; and that while we are increasing the expenditure, we are reducing it in the percentage of cost. Then there is an additional expenditure at the port of Ottawa of $500, largely for cartage.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not given us the details of the expenditure at Montreal.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not got it detailed in that way, nor do I know that I could give that. But the hon. gentleman will find it largely set out in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman lays down the principle that if there is a large increase in the sums collected at Montreal, there is as a necessary consequence a proportionate increase in the cost of collection. It is a very large sum for the city of Montreal, $16,000 more, by reason of the increase of revenue there. The details would be very important.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the hon. minister give us the figures of the total cost at the port of Montreal for the years 1896 and 1902, the years in which he draws a comparison of the percentage ? The percentage is not a fair comparison at all. It costs no more to pass an entry for a million dollars than for one hundred dollars. The labour is practically the same. The imports may be larger in 1902, but there should be no more work for the office. There is the same amount of clerical work in both cases. What he ought to do is to give us the expenditure at the port of Montreal for the two years referred to as compared with last year, not the percentage.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are now talking about contingent expenses, in which there is an increase of $16,800, and I gave the increase at the port of Montreal as an illustration of how this sum is made up. It is not a question of the total business at the port of Montreal, but merely of what is called the contingent expenses. These do not include the salaries of officers, but merely the necessary expenses about the office they have to be provided for.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the hon. gentleman to furnish the figures of the cost at Montreal in 1896 and 1903.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will give the figures for the port of Montreal as I have those by themselves. The hon. gentleman says that it requires no more clerical work to collect a larger amount than the smaller amount.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is where there is one entry.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I quite recognise that, but there is more than that. The hon. gentleman asks me to make a comparison between the years 1894-5 and 1895-6 and last year. Here are the figures :

Entries inwards—
1894-5..	501,357
1901-2..	785,512
Increase 56 per cent.
Entries outwards—
1894-5..	90,130
1901-2..	226,382
Increase 151 per cent.
Railway reports inwards—
1894-5..	438,982
1901-2..	705,997
Increase 60·8 per cent.
Railway reports outwards—
1894-5..	135,739
1901-2..	256,475
Increase 88 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. What are these railway reports ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. All the manifests from the railways come in and have to be passed upon, examined and dealt with. That means clerical work.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that he was not increasing any salaries. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that this refers to the employing of clerks to do extra work ? He says that there is a large increase in the number of railway reports dealt with. Is any of this sum to pay extra clerks in the office there ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, we have had to engage extra officers, of course, as the business has gone on.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, a portion is for salaries ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Perhaps I did not make myself plain. There is an increase of $80,000 in this item, of which $16,800 is for contingencies in the various offices—increased expenses, which are called contingencies. The balance of it is for salaries and I was going to deal with that later on. I was making a distinction. I am simply now giving the increase in contingencies at the port of Montreal. It is made up by the increase in the staff of officers that has been necessitated by the extra work and the contingencies of the various offices which have increased. In the Auditor General's Report at F—16, hon. gentlemen will find a list of the contingencies given.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. minister while he has the Auditor General's Report in his hand, to page F—16, as follows :

Temporary employees..	$9,353 79
"	1,197 50
"	4,220 00
"	2,577 75

All these are temporary employees. Is there any way of avoiding that and of placing these employees on the permanent list ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. At Montreal—I have not the figures under my hand now, but I dare say there are a hundred temporary employees. Perhaps I should not say that, but there are over fifty and running up to one hundred, who are what are known as temporary employees. These are men who have not passed the civil service examination and have not been placed upon the permanent list by Order in Council. Many of them, while they are called temporary, necessarily owing to the distinction which the Act makes, are really as permanent in one sense as any of the other officers who have been placed on the permanent list. I would be very glad to place them on it also. They have urged it upon me and put pressure upon me to get on for the very obvious reason that a temporary officer under the law, as it is now, if he is taken sick, cannot receive his pay. He is not entitled to his three weeks' leave of absence, and, therefore, the temporary employees are very anxious to get on the permanent list. I have told them that if they will only pass the qualifying examination, which is requisite for that purpose under the Act, I will be only too pleased to put them on, because, as it is, it works a hardship upon these men. There are some men who have been twelve or fifteen years in the service and who are just as good and just as faithful officers as others who are on the permanent list. We have a number of men who come on in the summer and we let them go in the winter. But, I am speaking of a number of men who have been in the service for ten or twelve years or more, who are on the temporary list, and who would like to get on the permanent list. I say to them : I would be only too pleased to put you on if you pass your qualifying examination. I dare say that when they left school they could have passed the qualifying examination such as is prescribed under the Civil Service Act, but they are afraid to try it now and do not do it. But, there is only one office to which we can appoint them without passing the examination that is to the position of preventive officer. A collector at a port does not have to pass the examination. The appraiser at a port does not necessarily have to pass the civil service qualifying examination, but he has to pass a special examination, the reason for which hon. gentlemen will see as he has to be an expert as to the quality and value of goods. In many cases I have appointed some of these men who have been faithful officers to positions as preventive officers. The office has no particular, designated duties. We appoint them and assign them to this position or that position. But as long as the Act remains as it is, requiring that these officers should pass the civil service examination, I hesitate to place them on the permanent list in a general way, but I am trying to induce them to pass the examination. There are men who have been in the service a long time and who can do their duty as well as younger men who can pass this examination, and in regard to these I have felt warranted in appointing a good many of them to the position of preventive officer, although a good many of them have not been appointed in that way yet. They are virtually permanent men as far as remaining in the service is concerned. The greater bulk of them were employed before I was charged with the department, and they have remained on. One result of the disability they are under is that if they get sick, the collector must certify that they have worked so many days and he can only certify to the number of days that a man has worked and unless he gets such a certificate the wages are not paid. This is a hardship on these men. Formerly, when the old Superannuation Act was in force, it was a matter of greater consequence than it is at present not to be on the permanent list, because, when an officer on the permanent list became aged, he retired upon the superannuation fund. Of course that does not come in now, because, with the new law, there is a certain amount retained from the salaries of the permanent employees which the government give to them with interest compound when they leave the service, but there still remains the difficulty that if they have lost time through illness they are not entitled to their wages as the permanent employee is with whom they are working side by side.

Mr. SPROULE. The reasons given by the minister are very good for not putting them on the permanent list, but the strange thing is that we constantly see civil servants appointed who have not passed the examination. To-night we were told that Martineau had not passed the examination, but he started on a salary of $700 a year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the inside service.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the difference between the inside service and the outside service, when the Act provides that both must pass the qualifying examination ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). It can be said for the members of the outside service that many of them have passed the age when they could go up for the civil service examination. I know personally that there are many men in the outside service who are just as capable, and perhaps more capable, than those who have passed the examination in the inside service. In the case of bonded goods leaving a ship these officers are there to deliver them, and they must keep a correct memorandum of their work, and sometimes they are employed at night as well as at day. I have had some experience, and I know from personal observation that there are men who are engaged in that service who are most capable men, and as a rule they are very much underpaid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the minister come to any conclusion as to a change in the system by which the transportation companies now pay some of our customs officers for night work and overtime ? The present system, as explained to me, does not seem to be very satisfactory. I understand that objections to it have been presented to the hon. gentleman, and I would like to know whether he thinks there is any good ground for these objections.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will have to bring in a supplementary estimate to provide for that service for 1903-4. I am not unmindful of the request made a year ago by the hon. gentleman that we should estimate our expenditure more closely, and I think it is very desirable that we should when possible, and it certainly would be more convenient and more pleasant, if we did not have to ask for a supplementary estimate. The fact, however, is that the business has increased so rapidly that we have hesitated each year, and this session I will have to ask for a supplementary estimate of something like $100,000 for the purpose of paying these amounts to officers to which the leader of the opposition refers. It arises in this way : The hours for officers in the outside service are from eight o'clock in the morning to six in the evening. At all the frontier ports you must have men on duty at night to meet trains or boats, and up to the present the pay of these officers has been charged to the transportation companies. It was said to my predecessors in office, and it has been said to myself : It is the duty of the government to give every facility to trade and commerce, and as it would not be reasonable that you should ask that trains should be run between eight in the morning and six at night, you should pay your own officers for being on duty when we do run our trains. Hitherto we have said to the companies : You may run your trains and we will put our officers there, but it is for your convenience and you must pay for them. Their argument was : You recognize that it is your duty to give every facility to trade and commerce, and your officers are there to guard the revenue of the Dominion, and it is the duty of the Dominion to pay their salaries ; if you have to have your officers there at night as well as in day time, you should pay them for their services instead of making us pay. I have never been able to answer their argument to my own satisfaction, and I feel now that it is only just that we should accede to their wishes. I have always felt that it was anomalous that our Dominion officers should receive pay from transportation companies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The transportation companies pay this amount to the collector and the collector pays it out to the men who have earned it, so that the officers were not paid direct by the companies. I will have to ask for $100,000 in the supplementary estimates, but we may be able to economize, so that perhaps we shall not require to use the whole of it. Hon. gentlemen know from the conservative and prudent manner in which that department is managed that the money will not be spent if not needed. Occasionally an officer will be required by the transportation companies purely for their own convenience, and we will still make them pay in that case. For example, the Grand Trunk Railway in competition with other companies will find it to their convenience to have a Canadian officer at Boston say, who will forward goods through in bond. That officer will be for the convenience of the railway company, and we will ask them to pay for him. The United States government keep their officers in certain ports in Canada in order to afford similar facilities to passengers, and the railroads pay for those officers, but so far as I can ascertain, the United States do not charge one cent to the transportation companies for the payment of officers who perform extra service or night work. That is the point the hon. leader of the opposition has brought to my attention. That is not covered by this extra vote, but will be an addition ; and when I bring the supplementary vote it will be hardly fair to contrast the expenditure of the Customs Department, with that $100,000 added, with the previous expenditure, when that expense was contributed by the railway company.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked the hon. gentleman for a comparison of the total cost of the Customs Department in 1895-6, and in 1901-2. As he did not give it, I will give the figures, having before me the estimates of 1895-6. For this same service for which we are now asked to vote $1,059,000, the estimates for 1895-6 were $801,580, an increase of $258,000 by the hon. gentleman since he came in to administer what he calls this economical department. Taking all the expenses together, for which he asks $1,301,505, the same work was done in 1895-6 for $874,285, an increase of $427,000, or nearly half a million—over fifty per cent of an increase. It is true, the imports have increased, the business of the offices has increased somewhat, and more money has been collected; but because more money has been collected, it does not necessarily mean that there should be half a million dollars paid to extra officers to collect it. At the port of Gananoque, where the business has probably doubled, the same officer has done the work during the past year who did it in 1895-6. There has been no increase there, and why should there be an increase in other ports ? Because a man who imported $100 worth in 1895-6, imports $1,000 worth now, there is no more work in making the entry or taking the money. My hon. friend speaks of percentages. That is a nice way of putting it. He says he collected more money at a smaller percentage of cost than his predecessor; but that is not a fair comparison, in regard to running the Department of Customs. The bare fact is there, that the hon. gentleman has increased the expenditure of his department nearly half a million dollars, and then he says it is an economically managed department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman's remarks will not commend themselves to the fairness of the committee. Does he actually think it possible to do double the amount of business on the same expenditure as before ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it possible in the hon. gentleman's business, or any other business in the country. Many merchants and manufacturers have doubled their business, but have not increased their staff or their expenses twenty-five or even ten per cent. The hon. gentleman knows that his own business has probably increased to two or three times what it was in 1895-6, but his expenses have not increased accordingly. No manufacturing concern in the country would sustain the hon. gentleman in increasing his expenditure practically fifty per cent over what it was under the late administration, in order to collect a little more revenue.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not myself been in business lately, but when I was we were doing a continually increasing business, and we found that our expenses were continually increasing, in doing it. The hon. gentleman's experience may not be the same. He has quoted the expenses of the year 1895-6; but that is not a fair comparison, because when I assumed office the estimates for the year were not sufficient; part of the expenses of that year had to be paid in the following year. But we will take the year before that, 1894-5, which was a complete year under the late controller, who I think was considered to manage the department very well. How much did it cost in that year to collect the revenues of this country ? As I said, you cannot collect $35,000,000 of revenue, which represents so many more goods arriving in the country, so many more packages to be examined and carted, so many more entries to be made, so many more clerks to be employed to do the work, at the same cost as half the amount. You must apply the rule of percentages. In 1894-5 the cost of collection was $5.13 for every $100 collected ; in 1901-2, the cost was $3.62. If we apply the rate of cost of collection of 1894-5 to the revenue of 1901-2, I would have paid $1,663.429 to collect last year's revenue. In other words, if the percentage of cost of collection last year had been the same as it was in 1894-5, I would have spent $487,405 more than I did. That is the amount of the saving. The hon. gentleman says, you do not expect the same proportion of increase in expenditure. No, we do not, but we do expect an increase. We expect this year, if the revenue keeps up, that it will be collected at a less rate than it has been collected in the country before. Any business man must know that when the revenue is doubled, there is more work to be done at the custom-houses. The habit of trade now is, with the facilities which we have for transportation, that people, instead of buying in such large quantities as they did before, do very much more in the way of repeat orders. They make smaller purchases more often renewed. That means more work and more entries. I grant that if a clerk is working at a desk and has an entry of $1,000, if it is a short invoice, he can perhaps attend to it just as quickly as he could attend to a $100 invoice containing the same number of items. But for the extra work that requires to be done, extra men must be employed. I have not mentioned the extra ports that have been opened, I have not spoken of the increase of business in all parts of the Dominion, or of our desire to give some of our officers higher salaries, who are not paid sufficiently for the work they do. This will be part of the increase we ask, but we are keeping in mind the reduction of the percentage of the cost of collection. If we can keep that reduced to the extent we have been doing, fair minded business men will admit that the department must be fairly well managed. There is no use in saying that we can collect $35,000,000 with the same expense as $17,000,000. We cannot have the imports of the country nearly doubled without putting increased work on the appraisers staff and the clerical staff, and your landing waiters. Then there is the opening of new ports. I have now about twenty applications for new ports in places that where they say trade has so increased that new ports are required. I cannot give all the new ports demanded, but I do what I can. I can assure you that our officers are earning their salaries and that a good many of them are not paid what they should be, considering the present conditions, and while we may not be able to meet the views of all of them, we think that there are certain cases so strong that we must make an effort to do them justice.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman talks about the increased work causing increased expenditure. Let him take the port of Gananoque and he will find that although the business there has doubled, and although the amount collected has trebled, the expenses have not increased, and the staff is the same. Why should not the same result be found at Montreal and other ports ? The hon. gentleman does not want to compare the year 1895-96 with the present, but wants to go back to 1894-5, when the depression was still greater, in order to make a comparison of percentages. Well, let him take 1896-7, when he had complete control, and when he asked for a vote to pay the deficiency of the late government. With the same items that he is asking for to-day, he had the work done for $956,000 for which he is now asking $1,300,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What was the revenue last year ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That has nothing to do with it. Take the port of Gananoque, the revenue increased there, but not the expense. The fact is that at Ottawa and at Montreal and at other places, the department is overrun with labour not required, and in order to make places for hungry heelers, since 1896-7 the hon. gentleman has increased the expenditure of his department $345,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will be $100,000 next year.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will not find fault with that, because it is taken off the transportation companies and put on the government ; but compared with 1896-7, the hon. gentleman is asking $345,000 more for the same work and the same staff, though, of course, some more taxes have been collected and more burdens have been put upon the people. The hon. gentleman compares percentages, but it costs no more to collect $1,000 than $100. In none of the departments are the officers overworked. I know the customs work that has to be done at my out port, and I know that the employees there do not do the work that is done in factories or in business offices or anything like it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are many ports where the salaries have not been advanced, owing to the fact that the officials formerly had not much to do, and could easily do a good deal more work, and Gananoque may be one of these. But where the business of ports has increased as it has done in Montreal, it must be evident that the expenditure has to be increased. It is impossible to do $1,000,000 more business without increasing the expenditure. Why, the receipts at Winnipeg, when I took office, were about half a million. They are nearly $2,000,000. It is simply impossible to have that extra work done without increasing the expenditure. Of course, we could let the work go, we could give the people their goods, but it is our bounden duty to have sufficient officers to collect the revenue. Where you have the cost of collection reduced from $5 per $100 to $3.50, that shows that the expenditure is not increasing in ratio to the increase of business. The proper test is the number of entries and the actual clerical work which is performed. If $35,000,000 worth of goods come to this country there must be nearly the double number of packages that came in when only $17,000,000 worth of goods were entered. These packages have to be opened and examined and attended to by the landing waiters. They have to be checked and entered by the clerks in the long room, and all the different branches of the department must necessarily have more work thrust upon them. Then in addition you have ports, such as Depot Harbour, where no revenue is collected, but where you must have two and perhaps three men to attend to the transshipment of grain. We must have men at Coteau when grain is going through. You have to have this, though it adds to your expenditure and does not show any revenue at all. I maintain that the department is worked as economically as it is possible to work it, to safeguard the revenue and collect what ought properly to be collected. If I were to be pressed further in that direction, and some hon. gentleman were to ask me: Are you sure you have enough officers at certain ports to efficiently safeguard the revenue? I do not know that I should be able to give as satisfactory an answer as I am to the question whether we employ too many of them. Do not let hon. gentlemen judge the whole service by a port like Gananoque, where at one time the officers had not enough to do to occupy their time, and where more work could easily be done without increased expenditure. The increase in such a port has not the same effect upon the expenditure as the increase in Montreal, Winnipeg and other large ports throughout the country.

Mr. CLANCY. Did I understand the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) to say that the per capita cost of collecting the customs had decreased or merely the percentage on the amount collected?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The percentage.

Mr. CLANCY. Then he does not contend that the per capita cost has decreased?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You do not judge it by the per capita cost?

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman, in the criticisms he made of the Customs Department some years ago when he was on this side, used as one of his arguments figures intended to show that the per capita cost had increased. Of course, if his experience has caused him to repent, he has improved to that extent since 1896.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I never based it on the per capita cost.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman used that argument in his criticisms in this House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, no. If I did, I know better now.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has learned something——

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not admit that I needed to learn, and I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) could prove it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps hon. gentlemen will like a little further time to consider these items.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we have made substantial progress, for the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) has been enabled to take about two-thirds of the time in explaining matters to us at enormous length. I admit they require explanation, but I do not think that this side have had a fair chance at the item yet. Therefore, perhaps, the hon. Postmaster General would permit the committee to rise at this stage?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And not take an item at all?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has had two-thirds or three-quarters of this item, so far as the time necessary for its discussion is concerned. The progress has been ample, I think. It is a very comprehensive item as I think the hon. gentleman will see.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is why I want it to go through.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will bring down the figures with regard to Gananoque in 1896 and 1903. Meantime I would point out to him that the other institutions of the country, such as the banking institutions, are doing double the business they did in 1896 and yet their expenses have not increased. There is hardly a bank but is doing double or treble the business it did before handling more cash, receiving and discounting more notes, yet with practically no increase in expenses.

Mr. HEYD. Somebody was asking where Gananoque was.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the hon. gentleman gets the figures from the customs he will learn.

Mr. HEYD. It was intimated here that, probably in 1896, there were twice too many employees in the Gananoque office and that is why the number has never been increased since.

Mr. TAYLOR. It has always been run by one man.

Mr. HEYD. Well, it could hardly have been run by less.

Some resolutions reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business is to be taken up on Monday?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Part of the private member's business for Monday remains, and private Bills and questions. Then there are the two Bills in the hands of private members which, I believe, have been fixed for Monday—Bills relating to the Fruit Marks Act, in the hands of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith). After these are disposed of, we shall proceed with government business, proceeding first, I think with the Railway Commission Bill, though I have not been able to see my colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals on that subject. After that, I think we shall take up Supply, proceeding probably with the estimates of the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not know whether there are any government Bills to be proceeded with but I would like to have it understood that, if there are any, the government will be privileged to move them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it would be advisable, in order to expedite the business of the House, that we should have as distinct a statement as possible at adjournment of the work at the next sitting, otherwise it is not always convenient for us to arrange that the gentlemen on this side more particularly interested in the different branches of the House shall be present and ready to proceed at the proper time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that what I have outlined will pretty well exhaust the day—first there is the private members' business, then the Railway Commission Bill, followed by Supply, taking up the estimates of the Customs Department. I should think, considering the progress made this evening, that, perhaps, these items alone will be a 'pièce de resistance' for Monday. If not, we will proceed with the railway estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I understand from my hon. friend the Postmaster General is that we may expect, so far as the government business is concerned, the Railway Commission Bill, after that the estimates of the Minister of Customs, and after that, if any other business is taken up, it will be the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs thinks that perhaps the Minister of Railways and Canals may be occupied a part of the evening with a conference over his Railway Commission Bill outside of the House. If so, we will proceed with the estimates of the Department of the Interior instead. But as the Minister of Railways and Canals has commenced his estimates it would be advisable to continue them. But, there will be the estimates of the Department of Customs.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 1, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 148) respecting certain trust funds of the diocese of Moosonee.—Mr. Osler.

Bill (No. 162) respecting the Hamilton and Lake Erie Power Company, and to change its name to the 'Jordan Light, Heat and Power Company.'—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 164) to incorporate the Pacific Bank of Canada.—Mr. Galliher.

UNITED EMPIRE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 163) respecting the United Empire Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Thompson (Haldimand and Monck).

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this Bill merely means an extension of time for a year to make the deposit of the Finance Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bill was considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee during my absence, and personally I am not acquainted with it. But I think that is correct.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No doubt it has been well considered, but——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was absent from the city when the Bill was considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has any doubt, I will let the Bill stand. We might go on, and before the third reading I shall have an opportunity to consider the matter.

Mr. BELL. The Bill was thoroughly discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have no objection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This seems quite an elaborate Bill erected on a very small foundation. I suppose the Committee on Banking and Commerce has considered whether the usual notice given in the 'Canada Gazette' and other local papers is sufficient to cover all the amendments. But there does not seem to be very much remaining of the Bill as at first proposed. I do not know whether the attention of the Finance Minister has been directed to this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have observed just now that instead of a very small Bill, merely extending the time for making deposit, we have quite an extensive measure. No doubt it was well considered by the Committee on Banking and Commerce. But, in view of the point that has been raised, I would suggest that we go through all the Bill but the last clause, and before it reaches another stage I can give the matter my attention.

Progress reported.

CITY AND COUNTY BANK.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 172) to incorporate the City and County Bank of Canada.—Mr. Rosamond.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are merely verbal changes and do not affect the Bill at all.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 185) respecting the Canadian Steel Company.—Mr. German.

QUESTIONS.

LANDS VOTED TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. SCOTT asked :

1. With respect to lands voted to railway companies, and not earned, what is the area in each case which may yet, under existing legislation, be earned ?

2. What is the area in each case respecting which the time specified for the earning of the land has elapsed ?

3. What is the area now reserved in each case, if any, for companies that have failed to earn their grants within the time specified, under existing legislation, and what is the intention of the government regarding such cases ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. The Canadian Northern Railway Company having constructed its line from Beaver to Gladstone and from Mafeking to Erwood, has applied for the passage of an Order in Council passing to the company the land subsidy appertaining thereto, being for 46·70 miles at 6,400 acres per mile, and 22·16 miles at 12,800 acres per mile, making a total area of 582,528 acres applied for. The company may yet earn about 6,400,000 acres by construction of its line to Hudson Bay.

The Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company originally obtained a charter from the Dominion parliament to build a railway from Calgary north-easterly, and a land grant was authorized to the company of 6,400 acres per mile for a distance of about fifty-five miles. The question whether this company has. under its charter, until the 1st July, 1903, to complete the railway and if so, whether the construction and completion of the railway by 1st July, 1903, will under the Acts and Orders in Council entitle it to the land grant is before the Department of Justice.

OFFICES OF TRANSLATORS OF DEBATES.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

1. Is Mr. D. V. Ranger the owner of the premises, No. 461 Sussex street, Ottawa ? If not, who is the owner thereof ?

2. Who is in charge of the offices of the translators of debates, located in said premises ?

3. Why are these translators detached from the House of Commons buildings, and by whose authority ?

Hon. Mr. CARROLL.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. The lease was made with D. V. Ranger to whom the rent is paid ; officially the department do not know any other owner.

2. The offices are in charge of the staff of the House of Commons.

3. For lack of space in House of Commons building.

CENSUS OF RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS.—ST. JOHN, N.B.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

Has the census commissioner, at any time since May 31, 1902, asked the enumerators for the city of St. John, N.B., to revise their returns, with a view to correcting errors brought to the attention of the commissioner, relative to the religious classification and enumeration of that city ? If so, at what date was such revision made, and with what result ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) : On March 16 last a letter was sent to Mr. James Dillon, an enumerator of St. John city, concerning a Free Baptist church at 179½ Water street, which was entered on the schedule as having 545 communicants and a seating capacity of 494. Mr. Dillon was asked to explain how more communicants were credited to this church than the edifice could accommodate, and replying on 19th March, he said : 'The pastor of the church named gave the number reported 594* as communicants, adhering to the custom prevailing that as long as members have not asked for letters of dismissal, while perhaps not adhering to the church, he considered them communicants. To place the matter more clearly before you, he has on his church roll about 600 members. Of that number, 300 are non-resident, and he looks upon these as members and communicants of his church until letters of dismissal are asked for.' The compilation of the religions of the people in St. John city has been carefully revised, and no error has been discovered in the work.

*The number reported on the schedule is 545.

CENSUS OF RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS—GRAND MANAN, N.B.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

Has the census commissioner, at any time since May 31, 1902, asked the enumerators for the island of Grand Manan, N.B., to revise their returns, with a view to correcting errors brought to the attention of the commissioner, relative to the religious classification and enumeration of the people of that parish ? If so, at what date was such revision made, and with what result ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). No correspondence has taken place between the census commissioner and the enumerators of Grand Manan, N.B., relative to the religious classification and enumeration of the people of that parish. The compilation of the religions of the people in the Grand Manan parish has been carefully revised and no error has been discovered in the work.

2. If so, what is the rent of the building so occupied ?
3. What is the duration of the lease ?
4. What is the annual rental paid by the government ?
5. Who is the owner of the said building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland).

1. Government occupies all the building ; part is rented and paid for, occupied and looked after by the Department of the Interior ; the other part of the building is rented by this department for the use of the Agriculture Department.

2. $2,250 for portion occupied by Department of Agriculture.

3. Five years from 17th February, 1902. Part occupied by Department of Agriculture.

4. For premises occupied by the Department of the Interior, $1,950; lease expires on the 22nd August, 1903.

5. Estate of late Charles E. Pearsons.

TENTS FOR MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Is J. W. Wood, or J. W. Wood & Company, of Ottawa, now furnishing any quantity of tents to the Mounted Police Department ? If so, how many, and were tenders asked for the said tents ?

2. Did he, or they, supply any tents to the Mounted Police Department during the years of 1901 and 1902 ? If so, how many, and the value of same ? And were tenders asked for the supplying of said tents ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

1. No.

2. 1901, nine tents, value $348.50; 1902, twelve tents, value $269.

Tenders were not asked for these tents.

WOODS, LIMITED, OTTAWA—SUPPLY OF TENTS.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Is J. W. Wood, or J. W. Wood & Company, of Ottawa, now furnishing any quantity of tents to the Militia Department ? If so, how many? And were tenders asked for the said tents ?

2. Did he, or they, supply any tents to the Militia Department during the years of 1901 and 1902 ? If so, how many, and the value of same ? And were tenders asked for the supplying of said tents ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden).

1. No, but a rush order was placed with Woods, Limited, of Ottawa, for tents for ensuing annual training to replace tents supplied to Department of the Interior for immigrants; about 2,000, without tender.

2. No, but the then J. W. Woods Company supplied (during 1902) 100 bell tents at the old contract price, $18.50, notwithstanding the increase in price of duck.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—REPORT OF MR. POTTINGER.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART moved for :

Copy of the report of Mr. Pottinger on the inspection of ties for 1900 and 1901.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Would my hon. friend make the motion read 'any report' instead of 'the report ?'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. All reports.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Any or all.

Motion agreed to.

I.C.R.—PURCHASE OF LAND AT LEVIS.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Monk—moved for :

Copies of all Orders in Council, contracts, documents, letters, correspondence, and papers, in connection with the purchase by the government, in or about the year 1900, of a certain lot of land in the town of Lévis, for the purpose of the Intercolonial Railway, or for other purposes ; and also copies of all cheques paid out in relation to the said purchase, vouchers, receipts, &c.—Mr. Casgrain by Mr. Monk.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection to this motion at all, but my hon. friend should specify more accurately what he wants. It says 'a certain lot of land in the town of Lévis.' Several have been purchased. Would he indicate what lot in particular he wants ?

Mr. MONK. Perhaps there was only one lot purchased in the year 1900.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think there must have been more.

Mr. MONK. I am not familiar with the matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let it go, and when Mr. Casgrain comes, we will see what he wants.

Motion agreed to.

FRUIT MARKS ACT 1901—AMENDMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER. Independent to the wish of my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith), I beg to move that the order with reference to Bill (No. 86) be now called.

Motion agreed to, and House resumed adjourned debate on proposed motion of Mr. Smith (Wentworth) that Bill (No. 86) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901, be now read a second time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sidney Fisher). Explain.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). This Bill provides for the appointment by the government of inspectors who may be called upon by the shipper or the receiver of closed packages of fruit to inspect it and mark its grade. At the present time we have inspectors, but their powers are limited to examining the fruit and stating whether it is falsely packed or not. That is of no commercial advantage. It is undoubtedly of great advantage in detecting false packing. I may say at the outset that when the Act was first proposed by the fruit growers, they wished inspectors to be appointed for the purpose of branding the apples, but they thought it would not be wise to encumber the Act with that provision at the beginning for fear of endangering its passage. Consequently they omitted to ask for it.

There are a great many advantages in having closed packages of apples or pears marked by a government inspector. It is hardly fair to ask the farmer, the fruit grower, or the packer to put on his goods a mark which may cause him to be fined. There is no other class in the community placed in exactly the same position. The Act, when first brought into this House, did not provide that the packer must put on any particular mark. It provided that he 'may' put on certain marks; it was left optional. When the Act was in that position, there was no hardship. If a person put false marks on his barrels of apples, he knowingly took the responsibility on his own shoulders. But, the Act as amended last year provided that the farmer or packer must put on certain marks. If he thinks his apples are No. 1, and he puts on that mark, and they happen to fall below that standard and come under the notice of the inspector, he is liable to be fined. That is to say, the government compels the packer to put himself in a position where he is liable to be fined, which I think is not the case with any other class in the community.

By the amendment I propose, that onus would be taken off the packer. Under the present Act, the only way in which the packer can escape the onus is by marking his apples No. 2 or No. 3. I think three-fourths or nine-tenths of the apples packed last year were marked No. 2. Almost any kind of apple may be marked No. 2, so long as the apples are the same all through the barrel, as there is no specification of that quality. Many of the apples thus marked were possibly No. 1, but the fact of their being marked No. 2 must to a certain extent have injured them on the market; yet the packer in many cases was afraid to mark his apples No. 1 lest he might subject himself to the penalties of the Act. I would not cancel the provision of the Act which provides for a No. 1 grade. I would rather have another provision defining the No. 2 grade; but I would take the onus off the farmer or packer of being compelled to mark his apples one or other of these grades, and I would provide that a sufficient number of inspectors should be appointed who, on the application of the packer, would take the responsibility of deciding whether his apples were No. 1 or No. 2.

It may be objected that this would cost a good deal. In my amendment I have not provided the method of payment; perhaps I should have done so. I do not for a moment propose that the government should take upon itself the cost of providing inspectors for every one who wants them; but these inspectors would be paid as the inspectors of hides and the inspectors of many other commodities are paid, namely, by fees, made as low as would be consistent with covering the actual cost of the operation. When these fees are placed on the inspection, I am sure that there will not be an overwhelming quantity of apples to be inspected. I presume that nine-tenths of the apples that go forward are sold on consignment, and when they are so sold it is not absolutely necessary for them to be marked with any particular brand, as they are sold on their merits, and it must be a disadvantage to a man selling his apples in that way to feel compelled to brand them as No. 2. But there is a large quantity of apples, perhaps one-tenth or one-fifth of all those sold in this country, which are sold outright, by bargain sale—the way in which I think all fruit should be sold to ensure the seller getting the full value of it. If a government inspector could be called upon to mark these apples, see the position in which a farmer would be placed. A farmer has a quantity of apples to sell, and he grades them, and calls the inspector. The inspector marks them No. 1. The farmer immediately has a merchantable article which he can sell in Winnipeg or in the old country, or anywhere else. His apples have the standard brand of a government inspector, which is something of value to him, enabling him to place them on the market at their full face value, whereas at the present time he does not dare to mark them No. 1, but marks them No. 2, for fear he will overstep the mark and be fined.

The only objection which may be urged against this Bill is the cost of the inspection. I propose that that shall be paid by the farmer or the packer, so that that objection is removed. It may be said that to carry out the Act will require an army of inspectors. That will not be the case, however, because only a limited quantity of apples will require to be inspected. With proper management and care as many as a thousand barrels can be inspected in one day. I do not by any means, propose that the inspector should inspect every apple barrel, but that he should inspect the apples as they are inspected when sold in the old country—one in ten or one in twenty, as the case may be, of each brand or variety of apples. The apples may be opened up by men in the employ of the shipper, inspected by the inspector, and immediately closed up again by the shippers' employees, so that an inspector might easily in that way inspect a thousand barrels a day. It may be said that the inspection would be no guarantee of the quality of the apples, because the inspector does not inspect every barrel ; but that would be the well-understood condition of the sale—that only a certain percentage of the barrels were inspected. It would be a guarantee between the buyer and seller—whether between the farmer and the packer, or the packer and the merchant —that one barrel in every fifteen or twenty of these apples was inspected. So that I do not think that there is anything in the objection that this will be cumbersome. I cannot see any other valid objection why we should not have an inspection of apples as of other commodities. We have an inspection of cheese and butter. When a man sends a cargo of cheese and butter to Montreal and there is a dispute, the inspector is called in and his verdict is binding. Why not follow the same practice with regard to apples, which certainly require inspection just as much as butter and cheese ? We have hides inspected. A man cannot sell a hide unless it has been inspected by the government inspector. You will find a government inspector in every city and town of the country, whose business it is to see that hides are properly examined and stamped. We have also an inspection of grain, though on somewhat different lines. This inspection of grain, as of many other goods, is paid for by the government, and costs many thousands of dollars annually ; but the inspection of fruit I do not propose to have paid by the government but by the people who ask for it. For my part, I cannot see any valid reason why this amendment should not be accepted. The fruit-growers are in favour of it. I wrote a number of prominent fruit-growers in different parts of the country, and in every case I was told that they fully agreed with me and were in favour of having this amendment put into our statutes. I wrote to Mr. A. H. Pettit, of Grimsby, who has always taken a leading part in all questions of legislation regarding fruit. Here is what he replied :

> Your amendment is all right, but if I read Mr. Henderson's correctly it would annul the Inspection Act entirely. The great importance I attach to the inspection, is that being inspected and branded by the inspector, it settles all questions as to the condition and quality, and we can never expect to make satisfactory contracts with the old country people unless we can give them the guarantee (the inspector's brand). I have spoken to others and they all approve of inspection and brand, with success to your amendment.
> P.S.—Since writing the within, this thought strikes me. An Act for the prevention of fraud under which we are now acting is all right, but your amendment covers a more practical point. I want to sell, say 1,000 barrels of apples to an English firm, at a price f.o.b. I cannot ask that firm to accept draft unless I have some surety to offer the firm that I have fulfilled my part of the contract as to quality and condition, the inspector's brand settles that point, the all important point, sale by contract is far preferable than shipping to brokers.

I wrote Mr. McKinnon, who, as the hon. minister knows, is another gentleman of high repute and standing, whose opinion is respected by all who know him. He said :

> Your own Bill I heartily approve, provided the buyer as well as the seller shall have the right to call for inspection and the party calling for it pays expenses.
> Mr. Henderson's Bill is simply one to kill the Act in so far as it tends to make a distinct reliable Canadian brand.

I have here a letter from Mr. George Fisher. Mr. Fisher has been for years the inspector for the province of Ontario, and has always given the greatest satisfaction in his work. He is regarded by everybody as a man of good judgment. Here is what he writes :

> Yours of the 6th to hand. Your Bill providing for the official inspection of fruit is part of my contention, but I see no reason, if we pay for this inspection, which is quite right and proper, why inspectors should not be available to inspect any quantity large or small. I certainly think they should be, and this work should be done only at the request of the shipper and to serve his purposes alone, as when he requires a certificate in making a sale.

There are a number of other shippers who approve the principle of this amendment. I trust that the hon. minister will see his way clear to amend the Act on these lines. There are some other changes that may be made, but this strikes me as the most important.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I am very glad to have heard my hon. friend's remarks with regard to this amendment, because I was unfortunately absent when the Bill was first brought up. At that time my hon. friend the Minister of Finance asked that the Bill should stand until my return, and I have arranged with my right hon. leader the Prime Minister that an opportunity shall be given for its discussion. I have been thinking a good deal about this amendment and discussing it with a number of other people. There are strong objections to it. The hon. gentleman has, to a certain extent, discussed some of those objections, but I would like to put them a little more forcibly and clearly than he has done. In the first place, while the hon. gentleman read one or two letters asking for an amendment of this character, he did not state that the Fruit-Growers' Association of Ontario had discussed this Bill and appointed a subcommittee to consider amendments to the Act, but that committee had neither passed any resolution nor asked for this or any other amendment to the Act. Various opinions were expressed, and a thorough discussion of all the provisions of the Act was had, yet the Fruit-Growers' Association could not agree on any recommendation regarding any amendment to the Act. In Nova Scotia the Fruit-Growers' Association also held a meeting and discussed the proposed amendment to this Act. They all agreed upon one amendment and one only, which they thought would be in the interests of the province. That amendment was not the present one, but was to the effect that No. 2 fruit should be defined. There is now only No. 1 or xxx defined, and other fruit-growers wanted the Act to go further and define No. 2 or xx as well as No. 1. Thus these two associations practically endorsed the Act as it now stands, and I do not see that because individuals here and there have objections to the Act as it now stands, while the representative bodies of fruit-growers do not believe and cannot agree upon this or any other amendment, with the one exception I have mentioned, we should make any serious change. My hon. friend has stated that the first Act as introduced did not contain this clause.

My hon. friend is mistaken in that. There was a Bill which did not become law, and which was only tentatively introduced in 1900. That, I believe, did not contain this clause C of section 4. But the Act as originally passed did contain the requirement that the grade of fruit shall be marked upon the package, and the amendment which made that stronger still in 1902 was simply an amplification or extension of clause C of section 4. My hon. friend, however, must confess that this Act as it was introduced and adopted by parliament has always contained the requirement that the grade of fruit be marked upon the package. I confess that I consider this one of the essentials of the Act. I hold that if the packer is allowed to send forward a closed package without marking on it what it contains, he will escape to a large extent the wording of this Act, and the effect of the Act—which has been very good indeed upon the fruit trade of the country—will be almost nullified. I appreciate the fact that what the hon. gentleman has said with regard to the particular section does not militate against the argument which he put forward for the adoption of this amendment, but still I want to correct the statement he made with regard to the introduction at first of the Act. Now the hon. gentleman said that he wished to have the packer relieved from the onus of designating the quality of the fruit himself. But it seems to me that this is essential to this Act. Nobody but the packer can really grade the fruit. It is true that, under the hon. gentleman's suggestion, the inspector can go and open 10 per cent of the packages and see what they contain. But this would not inform him as to what the other packages contained. He may easily light upon ten packages in a hundred which will grade No. 1 or x x x; but there might be other packages very inferior, that he would not light upon. Under the hon. gentleman's suggestion, not only will all the fruit in such a case be designated as of first quality, but the government's stamp will be put upon it, and the reputation of the department of the government of Canada will be pledged to the quality of the fruit so stamped. Nobody can grade fruit in a closed package without first opening the package, except the packer himself; and it seems to me that it is proper and right, as well as the only safe way, that the packer should have the onus thrown upon him of packing his fruit honestly and marking it exactly for what he has put into the packages. The whole object of the Act is to protect the buyer from dishonest or negligent packing. Nobody except the packer can tell what is in the closed packages, unless the inspector opens every package. The hon. gentleman himself is well enough versed in the trade to know that it would be impossible to open every package—and that he would be the first,—and all the trade would agree with him—to object to the inspector opening every package, to judge of its contents. This is in addition to the fact that it would be a practical impossibility, to find the army of inspectors necessary to carry out the work as designated by this amendment. The hon. gentleman says that, if a fee were charged, at first at any rate, very few inspectors would be called upon to inspect and grade fruit. I dare say that such would be the case, for one season. But if the buyers judge the fruit by its marks and consider the inspector's mark as a guarantee, you may be sure that they will very soon demand that the government inspector's grade shall be given them and the mark of the government inspector be put upon all closed packages, and so sellers will be obliged whether they like it or not, in the interest of sales, to ask for this inspection. The result must be that it will require for this work an army of inspectors, at a certain time of the year, competent men well versed in the fruit trade and in fruit growing, who at that time of the year are specially difficult to find. Last year, there were nearly 500,000 barrels of apples sent through the port of Montreal for export alone, to say nothing of the great number sold throughout the country on local markets. This export trade is all rushed into, I suppose, less than three months of the autumn. And, for any number of inspectors to be set to work to inspect and grade half a million of barrels of apples in the course of three months or less, to say nothing of the large number of the internal trade which is certainly as much if not double as much, would be almost a physical impossibility. The hon. gentleman says that, acting under his suggestion of inspecting 10 per cent of the packages, an inspector could inspect about a thousand a day. That is to say, they could inspect and know what was in one hundred packages, and they would mark nine hundred without knowing what was in them. I do not think this is at all desirable. I know it was not what the House or the country expected or wanted when the Act was passed. I must say also that, in the working of the Act no serious hardship, I believe, has arisen to justify this very material and essential change. Now, the hon. gentleman spoke of the onus on the packer, and said it was not right that the packer should have that onus thrown upon him, that, in fact, it was practically impossible for the packer to grade fruit correctly. I know that, during the last season a very large amount of fruit was sent forward as No. 2, because, unfortunately, the season was a bad one, and a very large proportion of the fruit was actually No. 2. But I doubt very much indeed if it could be substantiated that any fruit was sent forward which a packer believed to be No. 1, and yet marked No. 2. It is quite contrary to the spirit of the trade to do so, and it is not at all necessary under the provisions of the Act; for, if the fruit is honestly packed as No. 1, the packer is perfectly safe in marking it No. 1, especially when, under the Act, a certain percentage of apples not quite up to No. 1 is allowed even, when the No. 1 mark is put upon the package. I think the packers can very easily live up to the Act by honestly and correctly packing; and I think the public expect that of them. The purpose of the Act was to bring that about, and it has brought it about to a very large extent. I have had very satisfactory reports from the old country as to the packing of Canadian fruit during last season, and of the condition in which the fruit has reached the market. The people have declared distinctly that this is due largely to the operation of the Act. I cannot say from memory which paper it was in, but I saw the statement that not long ago, one of the associations of boards in England, had gone so far as to recommend to the United States the passing of such an Act as our Canadian Fruit Marks Act, because our Act has helped the fruit trade so much that it would be to the interest of people in the trade for the United States to adopt a similar law.

I venture to think that the amendment which is proposed would to a large extent nullify the operation of the Act, and that there would be a serious danger both to the government and to the trade of the country; because I am satisfied that no government inspection could be as accurate and as careful as that of the packers themselves, and that if the government inspector were to make a mistake and, through neglecting to turn over every package, were to put upon some bad packages his stamp of No. 1 quality, it would affect the trade much more than if a private individual were to make a mistake and were to send forward fruit improperly marked. Of course, you may say that the government inspector must not make such a mistake. But the government inspectors, like other people, are liable to make mistakes, and especially would they be liable when they did not turn over more than a percentage of the fruit, and if they did not know what kind of fruit was in more than a percentage of the number of packages which they were marking. Now the shipper himself, we will say, is making a reputation by the way in which he marks and packs his fruit. If the government steps in and takes that place, then the shipper himself is no longer responsible; if anything is found wrong he can shrug his shoulders and say, it is not my fault. The result is that he loses that great benefit which any person gets who makes a reputation for himself over his own name. I think myself that the shipper's own guarantee is worth more to him—it may not be to the purchaser—but it is worth more to the shipper than any government guarantee could be. A government guarantee would be looked upon as impersonal, while the shipper's own guarantee, which is one of his own creation, is looked upon as personal to that shipper. If a man does his work well and honestly, he will make a reputation for himself and get a better price for his goods and a readier sale. All this will be taken away from him if the government inspector steps in. I do not feel, therefore, that I can accept this amendment.

I would say a word with regard to the difficulty of operation under the amendment. If the hon. gentleman's proposal were carried out, and if every package was to be opened, I do not think the hon. gentleman himself, or those whom he professes to represent, would be satisfied with the result. If it were to be undertaken, it would be practically a physical impossibility to do it. The only way to carry out such an amendment as this, it seems to me, would be for the packer to employ a government inspector to come to his packing house and stay there during the whole time of the packing season. That would mean a great expense to him, and lead to greater evils probably than the present condition of affairs can possibly create. Now the whole intention of the Act from the beginning was, not to have our fruit inspected, but it was clearly defined and stated here in the House that it was meant to be a deterrent, it was meant to be a sword held over the dishonest or careless packer, to force him, by fear of the penalties attached to this Act, to do what he ought to be willing to do in his own interest, in the interest of the trade and in the interest of the reputation of Canada. The condition of affairs in this trade before this Act was passed, was such as to require some such action, and parliament in its wisdom adopted the Act as it stood, and changed it last session to make it more stringent in this particular section and in this particular respect. I am informed by those who have been watching the operation of the Act, that it was not only good in the first place, but that the increased stringency of section 4 has made it still more beneficial. Under these circumstances, therefore, I cannot believe the amendment to be in the interest of the trade, or in the interest of the country, or even in the interest of the packers at large. There has been no general demand for this amendment from the representatives of the Fruit Growers' Association or from the packers; and even if it were adopted, I cannot see how it could be carried out in such a way as to improve the facilities of the trade, and carry out the intention of the Act itself. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I must ask the House not to pass the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before the motion is put, I desire to say a few words. I think the House, on consideration, would be in favour, if not of this amendment of my hon. friend from South Wentworth (Mr. Smith), at least of some amendment drawn on similar lines. I would say to the Minister of Agriculture that some of the fruit growers in the Niagara district find some objection to the present law in that there is no place, no locality where inspection can be expected to take place as a matter of course. My hon. friend from South Wentworth is moving in that direction in trying to get apples, to mention only that class of fruit, inspected where they are packed, or as near to the place where they are grown as possible, or to the place where they are packed and going to be shipped. I would point out to the Minister of Agriculture that there is no specified place where the inspection must take place. The inspectors go where they think the most apples are handled, they go to the large centres like Montreal, or Toronto, or perhaps Windsor.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They go where they find the most fruit.

Mr. LANCASTER. They want to do as much inspecting as possible. It would strike me, and has struck some of the fruit growers in the Niagara district, that if the inspectors went where the fruit is grown, not where it is taken off the cars or boats, but where it can be inspected before it is shipped, they would strike equally large quantities. Supposing, for instance, they inspected at Hamilton, or Grimsby, or St. Catharines, or Winona, they would find as much fruit shipped in a day from these places as they would find in Montreal, that is to say, the inspectors would be exercising just as much economy of time in going to these towns I first mentioned when the apple shipping season is at its height. If they went to Winona, and then five miles further on to Grimsby, then sixteen miles further on to St. Catharines, they would find a very much larger number of barrels of apples or other fruit to inspect than by confining their operations to the larger cities. I think the Act requires some amendment in principle like this, providing some place where the shippers could be expected to have their apples inspected. I think the amendment of my hon. friend is in the right direction. It is much easier for men to look after their fruit at home, and it is reasonable that a fruit grower should expect his apples to be pretty well taken off his hands after they get upon the railroad. After he has shipped a great many barrels of apples, he has a lot of business to attend to, a large number of men under him, and it is natural that he would like to get rid of responsibility for his apples as soon as possible after they are shipped. When they get on the cars for Montreal, if they are going to England, he thinks his responsibility should cease. The minister may say that the fruit can be traced, that the fruit grower has an opportunity of knowing just as much as the railroad how many barrels he ships. For instance, if he ships on a railway, he knows by his bill of lading how many barrels they have in custody, and how many he can hold them responsible for, and I do not think it would be unreasonable that he should be able to know as to the quality. The government provides for an inspection which shall be made somewhere, and I think it is better that it should be made as near as possible to the place where the goods are produced.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The government does not provide that the goods shall be inspected anywhere. There is no provision in the Act that any fruit shall be inspected. It must be shipped under certain conditions and it may be inspected to see if those conditions are complied with, but the government does not assume the responsibility of inspecting fruit.

Mr. LANCASTER. Technically the Act may not provide for its inspection, but practically it is inspected by the government because an inspector is employed and the inspector prosecutes any person whose fruit is represented to be what it is not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are thousands of barrels that are never looked at.

Mr. LANCASTER. The fruit-grower, if this Bill were passed, would be induced to bring about such a state of affairs that there would be a correct, proper and honest packing of fruit. We know that when the reputation of a certain place arises, when some man living at Grimsby, or St. Catharines, or Winona, or Burlington, succeeds in making a reputation for shipping good fruit, somebody else at the same place may get the benefit of that reputation because it is not the man's name that will be remembered so much as the name of the place where the fruit comes from. Where did this fruit come from ? It came from Grimsby, or St. Catharines, or Burlington, or Winona, or Guelph, or some other place, and that fact will probably have more weight with the purchaser than the name of the individual shipper. If the inspectors make an inspection, as we assume they will, being employed for that purpose, in order that the Act shall be properly enforced, I think the Bill of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) is in the right direction, because it would result in the inspectors making their inspection at the place where the goods are first packed. In regard to the number of barrels in each car that would have to be inspected, I do not think that any difficulty would be found in that. I do not know very much about it and I speak subject to correction, but I think that wheat is often inspected by the carload by government inspectors. They, of course, do not examine all the wheat in the car, but they examine samples taken here and there, and they form a pretty good opinion from such an examination. If a man packed a carload of apples and the inspector went through and took out a barrel here and there, I think we would be pretty safe in taking it for granted that he would be able to make a good inspection in that way. I do not think there would be anything unreasonable in making a regulation to that effect, as it would provide for such an inspection as the hon. member for Wentworth wants, and I think it would be a reasonable inspection without examining each barrel. As to the question of packing, of course, it is more or less a matter of opinion. If the inspector is where the apples are grown and he differs from the shipper as to the classification it would be an easy matter to settle such a difference. The inspector says to the shipper : You must not put that fruit in as No. 1. The shipper asks : Why ? The inspector gives the reason. They would talk it over right there and one or other of them would have to give in. If the inspector were firm in his opinion the shipper would know what he must do with the next barrel, or next carload, or next season's crop of apples. It seems to me that it would be much easier to carry out the Act to secure the proper packing of apples if the inspector and shipper were brought in contact where the apples were being shipped. The hon. minister seems to think that a man's reputation would compel him to ship properly. That is all very well so far as it goes. But in many cases a man's reputation does not come quickly enough. The reputation of a fruit-grower, sometimes takes the best part of his business life to make, and it is desirable that he should be able to get the best price for his apples before he has made his reputation. It sometimes takes a man ten or fifteen years to make a reputation, because it sometimes takes him that time to learn how to produce the best fruit, and in another ten or fifteen years he may not have more than five or six good crops. If you wait until he has had enough good crops after he has learned how to grow the fruit properly to make a reputation, I am afraid the man will be ready to depart this life before that result has been achieved. I think he should get the benefit of the price that his apples are worth, if in the first year he is able to grow apples that are A No. 1. There is another matter that is not covered by the Bill which I do not think the hon. minister will object to me mentioning, although I am not prepared at present to move an amendment on that point. The present section 4 of the Act, as amended, provides that the shipper is entitled to mark a package containing fruit of the first quality No. 1, xxx, No. 2, xx, No. 3, x. Several fruit-growers in my part of the country have told me that they are satisfied that a fraud has been perpetrated upon them by some people they have shipped to. Unfortunately, they are not in a position to prove it because it is a fraud which is so easily committed. It is committed in this way : A fruit-grower ships a barrel of fruit marked xx, and the man to whom he ships takes a stencil and puts another x beside the original mark. The first purchaser sells these goods as being of first quality, or xxx. We, in the Niagara district, are satisfied that this has been done more than once. The person who is blamed in the cases in which this fraud has been detected, is the person who ships the fruit and who marked it xx. The shipper says : I only branded the fruit as xx, but the evidence is altogether against him. I think this practice would be made impossible if the shipper were only to mark upon the package the quality in plain figures as No. 1, No. 2, or No. 3, and nothing else. These figures could not be altered, No. 3 could not be changed to No. 2, No. 2 could not be changed to No. 1, and there would be nothing which could be put beside the figure which would change the classification of the fruit. It would then not be so easy for the first purchaser to accomplish this fraud so as to get the benefit of selling fruit of a certain quality at the price of a better quality which he has been able to do without taking any risk himself. If he is caught he simply says : There is the barrel, there are the marks upon it, go to the man who shipped the fruit. I think this suggestion is worth consideration.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me in regard to the last objection, that that might be remedied very easily by changing the kind of stencil that the shipper uses. If he only leaves sufficient space to enable the proper number of X's to be put in, then, another could not be put there. In regard to the Bill before the House, I wish to say a word or two against it, because I do not see how it could be worked out if we were to have government inspectors of all fruit. I do not see how you could, under the present condition of affairs, authorize any one shipper to send word to an inspector that he must come at a certain time and go through a carload or a dozen carloads of fruit. It might occupy the time of one inspector for days or weeks while his services would be required in some other part. If the government is willing to take the responsibility and expense of sending a sufficient number of inspectors to inspect every barrel of fruit which is packed, then and not till then can we consider a provision of this sort. If the government is prepared to go to the expense of doing that, then this provision would be workable, but otherwise it would not, and although I represent a fruit country, I rather hesitate to ask the government to go to that expense, because I think it would be unreasonable. Moreover the present Act is giving fair satisfaction throughout the country, and it has certainly accomplished a large measure of good. I believe that since the passage of the Act the fruit is better packed, and that a better reputation is being secured for our fruit in the foreign market.

Mr. HOLMES. I heartily endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), because I believe it would be practically impossible to make this Bill workable, unless the government intended to employ a very much greater number of inspectors than they have at present. This amendment to the Act would mean that the inspectors shall be at the call of the shipper whenever there is fruit that they think needs inspection, and that would entail the employment of an army of inspectors. There are other portions of the Dominion besides the counties of Lincoln and Wentworth from which apples are shipped, and it would certainly be very expensive to have inspectors at all these points. There is another feature in connection with it to which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) referred, and I think he was wrong on that point. He said that the reputation of the apple is known by the locality whence it comes, but I am of opinion that the brand of the fruit accounts for the reputation more than the locality. All the shippers have their own brands and they go on their merits in that way. It occurred to me that perhaps in the shipping season it might be advisable if the government could employ a few additional inspectors or sub-inspectors in certain localities, but if we make this Bill law it will be found to be impracticable to work it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture what is the practical operation of the Act at present. Is there an inspection of some portion of all the apples exported or used throughout the country. I suppose it means that only a few barrels, for instance, of a large shipment would be inspected. If some of them are found not up to the mark what is the course pursued ? Do the inspectors in that case inspect every barrel. The Act does not seem to be of very much value unless that course is pursued, and yet if you do pursue that course you would require to do a very large amount of work in order to ensure any value whatever from the marks placed upon the apples by the shipper. If apples are not found to be up to the standard, are proceedings taken by the government against the packer or shipper or the person who is responsible.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must reiterate what I have often said to the House : that this Act does not contemplate the inspection and grading of fruit by government inspectors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that perfectly. But it does to some extent propose to ensure that the marks placed upon the fruit by the shipper, are marks which can be relied upon by the consumer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It does that by providing machinery for the working of the law, and penalties for punishment in case the barrels are improperly marked. The government have provided the machinery which any one can put in motion, and they have gone further and appointed certain inspectors so that shippers and packers would understand that in addition to the people to whom they were selling, there were also officials on the watch for infractions of the law. It is believed that the fact of having that machinery and having inspectors who are liable to drop on any shipment at any time, causes the packers to take more care in the packing and as to the marks they put on the fruit. I have figures here which have been submitted to the Committee of Agriculture by the gentleman who has charge of the work, and they show that last season the total number of barrels opened was 78,016 and the total number of boxes opened was 525. These were individual packages of shipments which aggregated 154,000 packages. The practice is that the officer of the department opens, say ten or fifteen packages out of a shipment of 100, and if he finds them good he goes no further. If he finds them not up to the mark, he either condemns the whole lot as being similar to those he has opened, or, if the shipper wishes or requests it he examines the whole lot and grades those that are good and those that are bad. That is the practice. I may say that we have four inspectors during the autumn in Montreal; two travelling inspectors in Ontario; three inspectors in the maritime provinces; one in British Columbia and one in Manitoba. It is quite understood that these men cannot possibly deal with more than a percentage of the packages and the whole intention of the Act is deterrent; not necessarily to catch them but to induce them to act honestly through the danger of being caught. Generally when a first offence is detected the persons are warned, and if the offence is repeated they are prosecuted, and so far we have not failed in any prosecution we have undertaken. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) referred to a case where the first purchaser changed the mark by adding another x. There was no difficulty in proving that offence, and the first packer was exonerated, and the seller who changed the mark was punished. There is no great difficulty in making proof of that kind, but nevertheless the first packer ought to make such a mark that it cannot be easily changed. If a ring were put around the original two xx the third x could not very well have been added, and the stencil is usually made with a ring around. I am sorry that some packers do not use stencils which are difficult to change, and if they are so careless I am not sure that they ought to be protected from their carelessness. Stencilling is so cheap and easy that I would not care to change the Act so as to protect those who are so indifferent as merely to mark with a blue pencil on the package. However, I may say that we have encouraged the use of the marks Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and I am glad to know that that encouragement is bearing fruit, and that a great many packers throughout the country are using these marks instead of the old ones, and I hope that before long the Canadian fruit trade generally will use a uniform system of marks.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the minister think it necessary to have the x marks as well as those ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was allowed in deference to a section of the country in which the x marks were largely used; but I am glad to say that the Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are being largely used instead of the x marks. With regard to the locality of the fruit and the use of personal marks, I may say that in a great many instances the packer uses his personal mark, though the fruit comes from ten or a dozen different localities. I am sure that my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) buys fruit all over the province of Ontario and puts his name on it. Though the localities from which the fruit comes are not known, Mr. E. D. Smith is known. That is the reputation which I had reference to having been built up by my hon. friend.

Mr. HOLMES. May I be allowed a word more, with the consent of the House, with reference to the matter alluded to by the minister—the case in which the packer had changed the brand ? There was a case of that kind in my own county, in which the fine imposed was merely nominal; and the general opinion of the fruit growers and packers throughout the country was that the fine was entirely inadequate to the offence.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the fine for an offence of that kind ought to be ten times greater than for the other offence.

Mr. GILMOUR. There is one particular in which the Act places the apple dealer at a disadvantage. It is this. There are men who, like the hon. member for Wentworth, buy thousands of barrels of apples on the trees. They then employ men and boys to grade these apples and pack them, and the Act holds the man who buys the apples responsible for these packers. If the apples are not properly packed, he is fined, and his name is sent broadcast through the country as that of a man who has been fined for fraudulently packing apples. If I were a shipper of apples, I would send them out under the second grade, and would work out my own reputation, as suggested by the hon. member for Lincoln. I think the government, in their care to have apples properly packed and sent forward, so as to ensure a good name for this country, should not have gone any further than to require a barrel of apples to be packed uniformly from the top to the bottom, leaving people to put on their own marks. If the apples were found to be not uniformly packed in the barrel from the top to the bottom, then impose as heavy a fine as you please.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I want to ask the hon. minister a question. I stated that the Act at present compels a man to put on the grade mark, whereas the Act as originally introduced into the House in 1900 did not do so. I understood the minister to say that I was mistaken. If so, I would like to have my mistake pointed out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. I said that the Bill as originally introduced in 1900 did not contain that clause, whereas the Bill as introduced in 1901, when it was made law, did contain it, in section c of clause 4. The Bill introduced in 1900 was only a tentative Bill, and was not even discussed.

Motion negatived, on division.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). In the absence of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), I beg leave to move that Bill (No. 130) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901, be now read the second time. The purport of this Bill is simply to abolish the designations and grades of markings in the Act. The objections urged by the fruit growers to the Act in that respect are so well set forth in a resolution passed by the Fruit Growers' Association at Burlington, that I cannot do better than read it. The purport of it is as follows

Noticing that Bills to amend the Fruit Marks Act are being introduced in the House of Commons, many fruit growers consider it an opportune time to draw the attention of legislators and the public to some grievance which exist under the Act, and possibly to suggest remedies for some of these evils.

No one questions the fact that great improvement in the packing of fruit has resulted from the passing of the Act of 1901. As far as known all fruit growers are in the fullest sympathy with what was ostensibly the purpose of its designers. The purpose of the Act as clearly stated and understood at a conference between the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture and representative fruit growers and dealers was—so to frame it as to consider the interests of the growers in preference to those of the dealers when these interests conflicted :—

To prevent fraud in packing by having the contents of all closed packages to correspond fairly with the face or shown surface of such package.

To give the packer's name and address in full as a guarantee of good faith.

And to stipulate that certain marks to be defined were not to be used unless the contents of the package graded up to a certain standard, all other marking to be at the discretion of the shipper.

These provisions would have adequately protected the public from fraud, would not have been onerous on the grower or shipper and would have been entirely acceptable to the great majority of fruit growers and to fair minded dealers.

The beneficial results have been derived principally from section 7 of the Act, which provides that the face of any package shall be a fair representation of the contents, and from clause 'A' of section 4 which provides for the name and address of the packer being placed on all packages. These are the vital points in the Act and constitute within themselves a sufficient safeguard for the public, and with the penalties imposed for infractions a sufficient deterrent to such packers as may be fraudulently inclined. These demands are not too much to expect of the ordinary fruit grower, who can readily understand the difference between honest and fraudulent packing and who cannot but understand the importance of fruit going forward under his name having a uniformity of excellence.

These improvements in the trade and satisfactory conditions, as before stated, have been effected entirely under certain sections of the Act as originally passed in 1901, but in the dying hours of the session of 1902 amendments to the Act were railroaded through the House without explanation or due consideration, and being quite uncalled for either by the public or the fruit grower. The objectionable feature of these amendments are principally embodied in clause 'C' of section 4, which arbitrarily demands that a farmer shall grade to a specified standard which must necessarily vary materially in different sections, and in the ideas of various individuals, and then brand with a fixed mark to designate the grade or quality, which no other class of the community is called upon to do and to which no class but the farmer would submit.

It is therefore widely regarded as an unwarrantable interference with the fruit growing industry and with the rights of a citizen, and the farmers of the Dominion should as one man raise a protest against this injustice being perpetrated on a section of their calling and resent the indignity thus thrust upon them.

Penalties are provided for failing to comply with all the conditions required and heavier penalties for attempting to do so when the judgment of the farmer fails to conform to that of the inspector, although it may be the judgment of an experienced and honest packer against that of an inspector whose efficiency is questionable, and the farmer is at once branded a criminal without the privilege of trial by jury. Thus trade is seriously hampered by terrorizing the grower who, rather than take the risk of marking his packages, and incurring the odium of being fined, is induced to sell his fruit to the speculator much below its value or allow it to remain in the orchard.

This compulsory grading and branding is not only impossible as applied to all packers under varying conditions but it is both absurd and useless. Being the marks of the owner who is an interested party, these marks demanded by the Act would not be considered by any court and would consequently have no commercial value in case of a dispute between buyer and seller.

There should be no compulsory grade marks, and responsibility for grades should not rest on the farmer but on qualified and competent inspectors, who should be available to do inspection work when required, and issue certicates as in other lines of business—these certificates would be final in case of dispute as to quality.

The Act might in the opinion of many shippers define No. 2 or No. 3 fruit, but it should be entirely optional with a shipper whether he has his fruit graded to a government standard or not. Millions of bushels of wheat change hands annually without inspection, and when it is inspected the owner does not indicate the quality, but the inspector makes his examination and issues his certificate. In such cases the person requiring the services of the inspector pays the established fees.

I cannot put the case plainer than it is put in this circular. Under the Act a packer is compelled to put certain marks on his barrels. The hon. minister has told us that in the Act of 1901, there is a similar condition. I cannot see it. Section 6 describes a brand called A No. 1 Canadian brand apples, and section 7 describes No. 1 Canadian brand, and provides and the Act provides that any one who uses these brands must conform to certain specifications. No one, however, is obliged to use these brands. That is what the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) complains of, and his Bill wipes out the grades altogether. I would not go so far. I would like to see these grades in the Act, but only as they were in the Act first introduced. I would like to have two grades exactly defined, but to have the branding of these grades optional. Let the packer not be obliged to put on these marks and thus avoid subjecting himself to a fine if he makes a mistake. The trouble with the present law is that a packer has to put certain marks on the apples without being in a position to know whether the packing corresponds to these marks or not, and he thus may render himself innocently liable to a fine. The hon. minister's objection that the inspection would cost too much is not reasonable. When a car is examined, every barrel is not inspected, but only some of the barrels. If you take one barrel out of a lot of one variety, packed in the one orchard, it is fair to assume that the remainder of the barrels will be the same. The Act is an excellent one in many respects and has done a great deal of good, but it lacks some things to make it perfect. There are three things wanting. First, grade No. 2 should be defined; second, the marking of these grades should not be compulsory; third, the inspector should be appointed at the instance of any one requiring him. Suppose a car of apples is refused on its arrival. An inspector is called in, and he may go or not as he likes. If he happens to be on hand, and does go and examine a few of the barrels, what may be the consequence? The shipper may be asked to lose fifty cents or a dollar a barrel on the whole cargo when the inspector has only examined five or six barrels. That, according to the hon. minister's contention, is not fair, because five or six barrels would not indicate what the cargo is like, and consequently the shipper has no right to lose. Of course I know that the inspection would not hold as evidence in a court of law, but nevertheless any one can understand that when a shipper goes into court and the evidence of the inspector is taken, the verdict is likely to go against him. I do not know but that the inspection would be absolutely just if it were taken on each of the different brands in the car, but if only taken on five or six barrels which happened to be shoved to the front and were picked out as the worst barrels and then the whole cargo condemned, one can see the injustice. But if the apples had been examined before shipment, and it was then found that they were not up to grade, the shipper could either repack them or sell them as grade No. 2, instead of grade No. 1, for which he would get within twenty-five cents of No. 1. But once the apples are shipped and received by the consignee, and condemned on the examination of a few barrels by the inspector, as not being up to the grade mark, the shipper has to take whatever he can get, because it would not pay him to go to law. Instead of being a benefit as it might be, if made before the apples were shipped, the inspection becomes a detriment. Suppose a shipper sends his apples to Winnipeg or Montreal, and on arrival they are condemned, he is in no position to remedy what he might have done very innocently, because in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the packer gets the best apples he can, but they may not be put up all right. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, as the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) pointed out, the packer gets men to pack the apples. He gets the best men he can, but if they do not put them up right, according to his judgment, still, he is at their mercy to a great extent. The hon. minister knows that very well. When the apples reach Montreal or some distant place, he may be notified that they have not been properly graded and he is then in no position to save himself. If his apples were condemned at home, he could re-pack them and get what they are worth out of them. There are many other things to be said on this subject, and I trust that other members will take up this discussion. I feel that we rest under a grievance as things are at the present time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I understand that we are now discussing the Bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). It seems to me that the argument of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) was, to a certain extent, mixed up with his argument for his own Bill. While I would not presume to reflect in any way upon the clearness of what he has been saying, I must confess that I have been a little at a loss to know whether he has been speaking in favour of his own Bill or in favour of that of the hon. member for Halton. However, I may follow his example; and I would like to quote against the Bill now before us what the hon. gentleman read in favour of his own Bill. He read two or three letters in which remarks were made about the necessity of having the inspectors go to the orchards and there inspect the fruit. But he read other sentences from these same letters which stated distinctly that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halton, if passed, would completely destroy the efficacy of the Act. I agree with those statements. I think that if this amendment were passed, the Act would be emasculated to such an extent as to be of very little use. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) referred back to the Bill of 1901. I have not at the moment that Act under my hand. I understood that when the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Smith's) own Bill was being disposed of, and the hon. member for Halton not being present, we would not take up his Bill, so I sent my papers away. Speaking from memory of the Bill of 1901, it did not specify any particular marks, but it did require the designation of the grade contained in the Act of 1901, which are now part of the law, but it did specify in part that the grade of the fruit should be marked upon the package. That was and is an essential of the Act. If the packer is allowed to pack his fruit and not mark upon the package the quality of fruit, it would be impossible to hold him to any penalty under the Bill. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) bows his head. Is that the object—to prevent the packer being pursued and punished for improper packing and false marking? If it is his object, I take issue with him squarely, and say that the country wants the packer to be pursued and punished for bad packing and false marking, and that that is the very object of the Act. I do not think the hon. gentleman really wants the Act so emasculated that the packer shall escape all responsibility. I do not think the hon. gentleman would take the responsibility before his constituents of saying that he wants to emasculate the Act in that way.

Mr. GILMOUR. How is the hon. minister going to reach the packer, when he is really employed by the buyer of the apples?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gilmour) that the man who actually packs the fruit is responsible, and, under the Act, is liable to a penalty as his employer is.

Mr. GILMOUR. But you cannot find him. How then can you fine him?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Exactly. That is why we want to get at the employer. You cannot find the poor man who has been paid $1 a day to pack the apples—he may be a hundred miles away. But if we found him and punished him, that would not be of any use. We look to the employer, who is a responsible man and responsible for the working of his employees. That is essential to the Act, and I think the House and the country want that to remain a part of the law. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smith) himself would like to see the employer relieved of the responsibility. If this were done, the Act would not be worth the paper it is printed on. If the hon. member for Wentworth employs men to pack fruit and can throw the responsibility for bad packing on those men, how could he be held responsible or be punished for the bad packing of the fruit?

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). The hon. minister is quoting me wrongly——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am speaking of the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour).

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). But I am referring to what was said before the hon. member for East Middlesex spoke. I made no reference in what I said to the packer escaping responsibility.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE No; but the hon. member for East Middlesex did. I said that the hon. member for Wentworth would not wish the packer to be allowed to evade responsibility. He knows that the employer ought to be responsible, for he is the only person who can be successfully pursued. The workman who is employed at $1 a day cannot be pursued. It is true that if he does bad packing he is liable to a fine, as his employer is. But if we could pursue him only, the Act would not be of any use. It is the employer who must be looked to and held responsible. The hon. member for Wentworth sells his fruit under his own name. When I buy a barrel of apples marked 'E. D. Smith' I expect to get something good, for the hon. gentleman's reputation, position and standing are back of all he does. But if I turned to John Jones, employed by Mr. E. D. Smith to pack fruit in his orchard and tried to hold him because a barrel of apples I bought was not equal to the markings, I should stand but a poor chance. The hon. gentleman does not wish the buyer to be put in that position, I am sure. He does not want to shirk responsibility, nor does he believe that the employers of labour wish to shirk responsibility. Their reputation is made by being responsible, by giving a guarantee for the fruit they pack and ship under their name. But what I was saying, and what the hon. member (Mr. Smith) misunderstood me about, was in regard to clause C of section 4, which was originally in the Act as passed by this House. In the session of 1902 there was an extension of clause C of section 4, specifying certain markings which had to be put upon the package. That was done to secure uniformity of markings, but the clause is no more stringent in requiring the designation of grade to be put upon the package than was that of 1901.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). If the hon. minister will permit me——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I cannot see how the minister can argue in that way. The original Act did not compel any man to put any particular mark on the package.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman will excuse me. Here is the Bill of 1901, section 4:

> Every person who by himself or through the agency of another person packs fruit in inclosed packages intended for sale, shall cause the package to be marked in a plain and indelible manner before it is taken from the premises where it is packed:
>
> (a) With the initials of the Christian names and the full surname and address of the packer;
>
> (b) Both the name of the variety or varieties; and
>
> (c) With the designation of the grade of the fruit.

That is the Act of 1901. It contains clause c.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). As passed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. That is not the Bill as proposed, it is the law that passed, and in 1902 an addendum was made to that clause which required that in making the designation of the grade of the fruit, certain marks should be used, namely, x, xx and xxx, or No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. That is an addendum to the clause ; but the essential of the clause, that the grade of the fruit has to be put upon the package, was contained in the original law.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I was referring to the Bill that was introduced at the suggestion of the Fruit Growers' Association.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was introduced in 1900, but after further discussion with the fruit growers, with the dealers, and with the packers, and after full consideration in committee, that Bill was drawn up and introduced in 1901, and the designation of the grade of the fruit was required, and it was passed in that form by this House, after thorough discussion in which the hon. gentleman himself took part.

Mr. WADE. I think this amendment destroys to a large extent the original intention of the Act. As stated by the Minister of Agriculture, in the Act of 1901, clause c, of section 4, merely says that the barrel or package shall be marked with the designation of the grade of the fruit. Then section 6 forbids any person to sell, offer, expose or have in his possession for sale, any fruit improperly marked. This was found not to be definite enough in operation, hence the Act of 1902, which states in subsection c that the packages should be marked :

With a designation of the grade of fruit, which shall include one of the following six marks : for fruit of the first quality, No. 1 or XXX ; for fruit of the second quality, No. 2 or XX ; and for fruit of the third quality, No. 3 or X.

Then it was necessary to amend section 6 in consequence. Now the amendment before the House proposes to sweep away everything that was done in 1902 and leave it to the general expression that there shall be a designation of the grade of the fruit, leading to the same uncertainty that existed before. I think that would be very unwise. In my judgment the only amendment that is needed in this Act is the one that has been asked for by the fruit growers and shippers of the maritime provinces, namely, that not only should there be a specification of the variety of No. 1 or xxx, but there should also be a specification of the varieties Nos. 2 and 3, so that a party should be fined for improper packing of those varieties just the same as in the case of other varieties. I think, therefore, it would be a mistake to do anything which would lead us back to the uncertainty that has existed. No Act of this kind can be framed and put into successful operation from the start. It requires some experience. I think that the amendments passed in 1902 were based entirely upon the experience of those who had been endeavouring to operate the Act. I am sure that so far as the growers and shippers of the lower provinces are concerned, this Act is popular as it stands, and that the only amendment it requires is one with regard to this specification.

Mr. LANCASTER. As I understand the present Act, it only applies to fruit marked No. 1, and not to the other grades.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It provides for them, but it does not describe them. I am in sympathy with the proposal of my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade), and the hon. member for Wentworth himself stated a few minutes ago that he was in favour of having No. 2 grade defined. I think the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) will find that there is a special clause describing what must be put into a package marked No. 1, but there is no clause describing what must be put into a package marked No. 2 or No. 3, and it is that definition which the fruit growers of Nova Scotia and the hon. member for Wentworth have proposed. I am in sympathy with the idea, but I have not yet prepared an amendment to the Act. If I think best, before the end of the session, I may do so.

Motion negatived on division.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question before the Chair is clause 1, of section 3, and the amendment of Mr. Barker to include railways in the operation of the Act.

Amendment (Mr. Barker) negatived.

On section 3, subsection 2 :

Any section of this Act may, by any special Act passed by the parliament of Canada, be excepted from incorporation therewith, or may thereby be extended, limited or qualified. It shall be sufficient, for the purposes of this subsection, to refer to any section of this Act by its number merely.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely we have that power at any time in the future without putting it in this Bill ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose there is no objection to that phraseology. We are following the present Act in putting it in. We have the power, no doubt, but there is no harm in stating that it is intended to be of universal application except there is something in a special Act which otherwise provides.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I could understand that in a special Act which has already become the law in the Dominion, but it refers to future Acts of parliament that may be passed. It means that a person might make an application for a charter and you reserve the power to the Dominion of Canada to pass an Act which may exempt that special charter from any clause of this Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are providing for application to Acts which are passed. They are covered by this sub-clause and this subclause qualifies the first sub-clause of the section.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am at present of the opinion that this is rather dangerous legislation :

Any section of this Act may, by any special Act passed by the parliament of Canada, be excepted from incorporation therewith——

—that is from incorporation under this Act, —or may thereby be extended, limited, or qualified. It shall be sufficient for the purposes of this subsection, to refer to any section of this Act by its number merely.

If you are passing this Bill in the sense you are supposed to be passing it, I think if there is one thing above another that we should look after it is the certainty that it shall apply to all railways and that we should not be delegating our powers. I have every confidence in this House as it is at present constituted, but we are doing a very serious thing and we are doing more than at first sight may be supposed. We are saying that notwithstanding the fact that we are creating a commission to dispose of the matters that are said to be creating so much trouble in the country—that a commission is necessary, any railway company may receive a charter by special Act exempting it from the provisions of this Bill, and that if the Railway Committee recommend the granting of such a charter it will be passed because in the House the onus is usually laid upon any person who objects to make a strong case in opposition to the report of the Railway Committee. It is dangerous legislation in connection with a Bill whose application is supposed to be universal. It is true that we have been told it is not the intention of the government that it shall apply to government railways but it is universal except that it does not apply to government railways. If it does not apply to all the railways of the Dominion it is no good. This is legislation to create a Railway Commission to look after those matters which are supposed to be creating so much trouble in the country that a commission is necessary to deal with them, and if it does not apply to all railways there does not seem to me to be of very much use—in passing this law. This subsection is an invitation to this parliament, or to the next parliament, or to any parliament, or to Railway Committee in any year to pass a special Act incorporating the railway and exempting it from the provisions of this Bill That is the effect of it. The hon. minister may say that parliament would not do anything that was not wise. I do not think we should pass legislation that would imply that it might do so I think the Bill would be much better if that subsection were not in. The Bill would still fulfil all its purposes. It would not impair the strength of the Bill itself. This is not in the old Railway Act. I have compared the old Act with this Bill, and there is no such section as this in it. There is a section in the old Act which says :

This Act, subject to any express provisions of the special Act, and to the exception hereinafter mentioned, applies to all persons, companies and railways within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, except government railways.

This subsection does not help to carry out the Bill at all. It cannot strengthen the Bill or make it more easy to work. Unless there is some better reason than that which has been advanced, I think we should strike that subsection out.

Mr. MONK. Does it not seem to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that this subsection is useless ? It simply enunciates a principle that does not require to be stated in the Bill. There is no doubt that the party who drafted the Bill thought it necessary to have this subsection 3 preceded by a recital as in subsection 2, but it seems to me that the subsection is useless and as the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says may encourage parties seeking special charters to have these charters excepted from the operation of some useful section of this Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must confess that I cannot see this matter in the way in which it has presented itself to the minds of my hon. friends opposite. I cannot see there is the slightest fault in the subsection, but I see every advantage in it. This is certainly no more an invitation to parliament to introduce special exceptions into special Acts which may be passed hereafter than is the existing law which says :

This Act, subject to any express provisions of the special Act, and to the exception herinafter mentioned, applies to all persons, companies and railways within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, except government railways.

That is what the old law says, and I cannot see any harm in it. Parliament will exercise its discretion, as it must have the right to exercise its discretion, as to whether in any case it will make any special enactment varying from the general enactment.

Mr. COCHRANE. If this parliament can always do it, what is the use of telling them in this Act that they can do it. It is no argument to say that this clause has always been in the law. Why, that is more Tory than I am. You practically say that because it always has been, it always shall be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be sorry to assume that everything in the existing Act requires to be amended. It must be remembered that this Act is not an Act simply for the purpose of creating a railway commission.

Mr. BARKER. We are discussing here a public Bill containing a broad general principle that the commission shall have jurisdiction over all railways except two, and yet in the sub-clause we provide that an Act creating a particular company hereafter may contain a clause detracting from the general principle we settle on here. There is a great deal to be said for the argument that the principle of a Bill of this important character should not be subject to be altered by some private Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This Act provides for a great variety of things such as the construction and alterations of lines, railway crossings, protection required on railways, and hundreds of other different things. When parliament created the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to deal with all these matters it deemed it advisable that they should exercise their power under the Railway Act, subject to the provisions of any special Act that might be passed.

Mr. LANCASTER. We should have a little better explanation from the minister. I am trying to help to make reasonable legislation out of this, and although I do not pretend to know as much railroad law as the minister does, yet I think that all he says he wants to do by this clause is done by the constitution without any such clause as this at all. It is safe to say that any particular Act of the parliament of Canada can exempt itself from the operation of this Act without this clause being in at all. As to the argument of the minister, I would say that the more things there are for a special Act to interfere with, the more dangerous it is to invite them to interfere by such a clause as this. Even on the minister's own argument this clause should be struck out. I appeal to the Minister of Justice if I am not right, that without this clause at all any special Act of the parliament of Canada would have the effect which this clause says it shall have. I say it is bad legislation to put in words which are mere surplusage, and which would leave doubt in the minds of the judges who would be construing this clause as to what the intention of the parliament of Canada was in passing such a law. According to the intention of the promoter of the Bill there are five lines here which are absolutely unnecessary, and I say that it is bad draftsmanship and mere confusing surplusage to pass such a law. I wish that some one more eloquent that I am could impress upon the Minister of Railways and Canals the necessity for striking out this sub-clause.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am not a lawyer, but it appears to me that the legislation of this House should be drafted so that a man of common sense can understand it. I cannot help but draw attention to the fact that I have heard in this House from the Minister of Justice and other members of the government the expression: what do you mean by this legislation? Not long since the Minister of Justice put that question in one of the committees. Would it not be better rather than to have such crude legislation passed by the parliament of Canada, that some person should be paid who would be able to bring common sense into the drafting of a Bill so that we would know what the language means? What is the use of passing legislation in this House with reference to which the Minister of Justice, who is supposed to have the brightest intellect in the House has to ask what it means? Should not a Bill be so drafted that the trained intellect of legal gentlemen can tell what it means when we put it on the statute-book? How can we expect the judges of the land to construe such legislation when even the Minister of Justice does not know what it means? It appears to me that it would be better for the Minister of Railways and Canals to bring common sense to bear on this legislation. Can we not have a clause here, founded on common sense so that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Railways and Canals will know what it means? I am willing, as the representative of a rural constituency, to pay a man who is skilled in drafting legislation. It may appear to be a frivolous subject to some hon. gentlemen, but I feel serious about it. Perhaps these hon. gentlemen want to make a little money out of the legislation when it comes before the courts; but I want our legislation to be so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein; and I am willing to pay from the exchequer of Canada a gentleman who is skilled in drafting legislation, so that when it is placed on the statute-book we shall know what it means.

Mr. SPROULE. It appears to me that the following words might be left out of this section:

> Any section of this Act may, by any special Act passed by the parliament of Canada, be excepted from incorporation therewith, or may thereby be extended, limited, or qualified.

These words appear to me, as a layman, to be unnecessary, because they give us no power that we do not possess already. Perhaps I am not right in my interpretation of them, but that is the way they appear to me.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LANCASTER moved that subsection two of section three be struck out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to point out to the committee that the three subsections of section three are all parts of a uniform whole, and are quite in keeping with the general character of our legislation. It is certainly a very proper thing to say in terms that the provisions of any special Act which are in conflict with this, shall not be held to be within the purview of this present Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. We have to look at this Act in the interest of the people, as to how it may be construed. In my humble opinion it is very dangerous legislation to put any language into an Act which is not necessary; because, although we are legislators making the law, the judges in construing it do not go by what we may say here, or by consulting 'Hansard,' but they go by well known legal principles of construction. If a case arose under this Act, and an argument were made by counsel on one side and on the other, the court would be almost constrained to say: We must give a different effect to the Act from what we would if that subsection were not there. If the minister could state any special reason why he is putting this language into the Bill, if he could show that it made the Bill mean something that it would not mean if this language were not there, I could understand it being there; but if it only means what would be the case even if the language were not there—simply that a special Act can, if it is necessary, in the opinion of parliament, at the time it passes that special Act, override this general Act—if that is all that is meant, then I do not see the use of these words being here at all. If we put this in, the courts may feel bound to give special effect to every word, phrase and sentence in the Act, and will conclude that parliament meant something else than would have been the law if this were not in and therefore different to what we intend.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Section 3 provides:

> This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, other than government railways, within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed as one Act, with the special Act, subject as herein provided.

It does not say it shall apply absolutely, but it shall apply 'subject as herein provided.' Therefore you cannot leave out subsections two and three, unless you strike out 'subject as herein provided.'

Mr. LANCASTER. Subsection three makes that perfectly clear. You will have a complete section without subsection two being in at all. I am only proposing to strike out subsection two.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he would strike out subsection 2 and make subsection 3 subsection 2?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Subsection 2 refers to Acts that may be passed, but subsection 3 refers to Acts heretofore passed. Under the old law subsection 3 was a section by itself, but it went further than the first subsection of this section 3 does, because it says:

> This Act, subject to any express provisions of the special Act and to the exception hereinafter mentioned, applies to all persons, companies and railways, within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, except government railways.

So, if you strike out subsection 2, you would change the law as it heretofore existed. I am not sure of this point, but I am submitting it for the consideration of the committee. The old law provided, in case there might be any doubt, that the special Act was specially authorized to change the General Railway Act. Now, whether that was necessary or not is a question for us to consider. But, we found it necessary in 1888, when we consolidated the Act, to make special provisions, that the special Act overrode the Railway Act. I do not know whether it is the intention of the minister, but it might affect my judgment to learn, whether it was his intention to divide that section into three subdivisions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that was my intention; and I may say to the committee that this section as a whole has been very carefully considered, and has been gone over and over and talked about a good deal. It does, in a measure and to the extent which I shall state in a moment, vary the old third clause. Now, let me point out that the main portion of the section, the first subsection, could not very well be left standing alone and declaring on the face of it that this Act shall apply to all the railways within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. You would have to recognize, as a matter of fair notice to everybody trying to interpret the law, that there might be within the four corners of the special Act exceptions which would override similar or corresponding clauses and sections of this Bill. That is fair drafting, it seems to me, and we cover the point by stating:

> This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed as one Act with the special Act subject as herein provided.

And what is that ?

Any section of this may, by any special Act passed by the parliament of Canada be excepted from incorporation therewith, or may thereby be extended, limited, or qualified.

That is, it is not left merely to implication as I read the clause. Parliament, in a special Act would except from the operation of the general law any one clause or clauses that it chose to so describe and so declare. Well, it is not a complete answer to the propriety of putting it in here to say : Well, parliament has the power to put it in any way. Proper and usual drafting would rather impel one to put in just such a clause as that. Then, we come to the third clause, which deals with the case of special Acts heretofore passed. Now, the old section 3 provides :

This Act, subject to the express provision of the special Act——

That conveys, as my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) has very properly said, the idea that parliament contemplated that special Acts would be passed which would vary the provisions of this Act, and deem it advisable to so enact that one will see at once it speaks in general terms of the special Act. That special Act might be a special Act of the parliament of Canada or it might be a special Act of one of the provincial legislatures. For we are frequently in the habit of declaring some special work constructed under some local incorporation, a work for the general advantage of Canada. That is one of the difficulties we had to face in creating this Act, but we have all sorts of provisions in the local Acts entirely at variance with the General Act, and the question is whether we have by the general nature of these Acts made these special Acts part of the law of Canada and thereby withdrawn the case from the operation of the General Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I sympathise with the minister's views to a certain extent, and in criticising the Act, my only desire is to get a better Act if possible. But I do not want to change the old clause, unless the hon. gentleman can point out good reason for it. It is important that we should know, when we grant a charter, just what we are granting. It is important from the practical and financial point of view, for, from any experience I believe that the difficulty is not in getting a railway charter but in getting the money to build railways. In the committee, I am sometimes charged with being too liberal in the granting of charters. But we want railways in this country, and I believe a railway charter is worth nothing unless it contains clearly, and in such a form as to be seen by the capitalists before whom it is put, the rights and privileges it purports to grant. As I say, I am prepared to support any changes in the law that are shown to be necessary. I think it covers everything that he mentions; if it does not, I am quite prepared to have it divided into subsections and change it. The old Act says :

This Act, subject to any expressed provisions of the special Acts and to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, applies to all persons, companies and railways within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada except government railways.

I am the more mystified and unsettled by the language of this subsection divided into three subsections than I was before, and I am prepared to support the clause of the Minister of Railways and Canals, as he has drawn it if he will show me any necessity for the change. I think it is one of the first rules of legislation to use terse and comprehensive expressions. As the hon. member for Lincoln has said, there is less chance of the court attempting to put some construction on the elaboration than there was in the old system. I want the minister to understand that so far as I am concerned the bulk of this Act meets with my hearty approval. It shows a great deal of care and attention to the important and difficult subject of a railway commission, but it seems to me some of these general sections may have an application that we do not intend. But I have not heard a satisfactory reason why it is necessary to have this elaboration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had not concluded what I was going to say when my hon. friend rose. I am glad he is giving his attention to the Bill, because I know he will regard it fairly, and that his only object is to make it as perfect as possible. The hon. gentleman does not see why we should have three sections, where one was sufficient before. If he will turn to section 6, he will find that we are putting in a compact form subsection 3 of section 2. Moreover, if the hon. gentleman will look at section 5 of the present law, he will find there that several of its subsections have been dispensed with. Section 5 of the present law says :

The provisions of this Act, from section 32 to section 89 both inclusive, do not apply to every company and railway within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, but apply to——

(a) Every company whose authority to construct or operate any railway is derived from the parliament of Canada, and to every railway constructed or to be constructed under the authority of any Act passed by the parliament of Canada ;

(b) Every company and railway to which such provisions are made applicable as hereinafter provided :

2. Such provisions shall, in so far as they are applicable to the undertaking, and unless they are expressly varied or excepted therefrom by the special Act, be incorporated with the special Act, form part thereof, and be construed therewith as forming one Act ;

3. Any of such provisions may be excepted from incorporation with the special Act by enacting in such special Act that the sections of this Act propose to be accepted, referring to them by the numbers which they bear respectively, shall not be incorporated with such special Act, which shall thereupon be construed accordingly.

It is quite a complicated series of sections and subsections that are practically rendered unnecessary by our including subsection 2 and subsection 3 under section 3.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. As I said the other day, when you change your Act from the ordinary consolidation in the way I speak of, it is more difficult to get at the full meaning of the minister. Now his statement that this section is broader than in the old Act makes it more difficult for me to understand what he is aiming at.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a difficult thing to follow, I confess that.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand him correctly to say that in making these changes he is only carrying out the substantial provisions of the old Act, with such improvements as he might consider necessary, but putting them in a different order ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think I have got everything in the new Bill which is in the old one. We have not sought to make any change except in this one particular : Under the old Act, the special Acts referred to there might not comprise local special Acts, and there have been several instances to our knowledge in which serious complications have arisen. It is not proposed, when you enact that a railway whose company has been incorporated by a local legislature, is a railway for the general advantage of Canada and thereby becomes subject to the Railway Act of Canada, that that Railway Act should be cut away in its provisions by all the enactments that may be passed in local legislatures. There must be some authority to make it clear where the final power rests.

Amendment (Mr. Lancaster), negatived, and subsection 2 adopted.

Mr. INGRAM. Not being in the House this afternoon when the question was up in respect to the words 'other than government railways' in the first subsection of section three, I simply rise for the purpose of entering my protest against this exception because I believe government railways should be under the control of the commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When this Act gets into operation a very short time would tell whether any complications will arise, and it will be a simple matter for parliament to amend it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In reference to subsection three, has the hon. minister a record of the railways that this clause will apply to ? Has he a schedule or list of those which will be exempted from the present operation of the Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

On section 4,

Where any railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, is declared, by any special Act of the parliament of Canada, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, this Act shall apply to such railway, and to the company constructing or operating the same, to the exclusion of the whole of any other general railway Act, and of such other of the provisions of the special Act of the provincial legislature as are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This is entirely new ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Will the hon. minister kindly explain the intention of this section ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We remove the difficulty I pointed out a moment ago; that is when a special Act passed by a local legislature comes into direct conflict with the provisions of the general Railway Act. I think we have safeguarded that point very well so that no special Acts shall have the effect of rendering this Bill practically nugatory.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. In other words, if I understand it aright, because it is very broad, it means that we are assuming that we have the right, and I do not dispute it, to legislate both positively and negatively, that we have the right to include by the mere declaration that it is for the general advantage of Canada the jurisdiction of any provinces that may have chartered a railway. I am not saying but that we have that full power, but if I understand aright that is the intention of the section, is it not ? To prevent any possible question arising we assume that we have that right ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Has the hon. minister satisfied himself that there is no question about our authority to do that ? If we have that right I heartily approve of the section. I think we ought to make that perfectly clear, provided that under the British North America Act we have that jurisdiction. Has the hon. minister the approval of the Department of Justice about that provision or did he think it was so clear that it was not necessary to consult the Department of Justice ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the British North America Act simply gave the power arbitrarily to the general parliament by a declaration to undertake control of all these works. That has been the accepted idea and no question of doubt has been expressed in regard to it. That being the case, if parliament does choose to so declare, then, it is important that we should not be confronted with two conflicting jurisdictions, that we should not have provisions of special Acts conflicting.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that where a railway company receives its corporate powers from the provincial legislature and we assume jurisdiction over it, or declare it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada and take it under our jurisdiction with the corporate powers it received from the provincial legislature, this Bill changes all the corporate powers it received from the provincial legislature and only gives it such powers as we give to any railway under the general Railway Act ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think perhaps the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals did not fully understand the question of the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart). It does not change all the corporate powers of a company incorporated under a provincial Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not when they are consistent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Except in so far as they are inconsistent with this Bill. I do not think my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) quite understood that. We may declare that we take it over for the general advantage of Canada under the British North America Act. It is beyond question that this parliament has the right to legislate. This parliament is now legislating in advance by saying that when that is done then the corporate powers shall only continue in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this Bill. There is one thing I should like to direct the attention of the hon. minister to in regard to the wording of this section. There may be some further discussion in regard to the principle. In the third line from the end you say 'the whole of any other general Railway Act.' I presume the reference is to some provincial Act, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be better to so express it, because, otherwise, it would probably in the ordinary course have reference to the Act of this parliament. Is not the word 'other' at the end of the line superfluous ? Does it not interfere with what is intended as the meaning ? Would it not be better to exclude any provincial general Railway Act and such provisions of the special Act of the provincial legislature as are inconsistent with the provisions of the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see what the advantage would be in changing the word 'other,' but I would point out that there could be no other general Railway Act of this parliament and that it must necessarily have reference to this Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course the word 'Act' would in the ordinary course except by express mention or direct implication mean the Act of this parliament.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I differ from the leader of the opposition to some extent. We provide under this Act for the incorporation and organization of that company and under this clause we give it a new incorporation and new powers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have to have some general phraseology in order that the power may be clearly conferred. It becomes perfectly clear that if the provisions of the provincial legislation are not inconsistent with this Act they will be worked under, but if they are inconsistent, the inconsistent part must give way when the provisions of this Bill having reference to the same subject go into effect.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What would be left of the provincial enactment to be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think I could answer that. If the company had already been incorporated under a special Act, then the incorporation would not be destroyed although the company might not have been organized under the provisions of this Act. In so far as the provisions of the special Act are inconsistent with this Act they would cease to be operative from the time the work was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. It is nothing new. An exact case occurred with regard to the Western Counties Railway in the province of Nova Scotia. I had occasion to investigate the status of this railway and I found that the board of directors had continued to be constituted under the special Act after the railway had been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and I had to advise that the constitution of the board of directors under that Act was not valid in so far as it departed from the provisions of the general Railway Act. What is intented by the Minister of Railways and Canals would be worked out just in the same way. From the time the work is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada then you must work out the corporate powers of your company in accordance with this Act, but it would not destroy anything that had been done before. Everything that had been done up to that time would be exactly as valid as if this Act had come into operation, but from the time this Act comes into operation you must observe the provisions of this Act which in so far as it provides for matters of that kind constitute the charter of the company in place of the provisions of the special Act under which it was originally incorporated.

On section 5,

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This is a very broad provision and I do not know that it is not well but that we should have such a provision in a Bill of this kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the same as at present, except that the words 'through traffic' are added.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. They are very important words.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is why they were inserted.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I do not question the advisability of that, but has the minister considered whether we have authority to legislate as to highways which are largely under the control of the provinces.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that parliament must have the right to authorize the crossing of highways by railways, and when you have laid down a railway that is under the control of this parliament you must have some authority to cross the highway by that railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why did you put in the words 'through-traffic'?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For greater certainty.

Mr. LANCASTER. There must be some important reason for including the words 'highway crossings' in this section. Under the old Act we always had by virture of other sections such power as was necessary. This section is to take the place of section 4 of the old Act, and it is in effect the same except that in this section you have added the words 'highway crossings and through-traffic.' The prima facie control of highway crossings devolves to the municipalities through the provincial legislatures, and the other sections of this Act sufficiently provide for crossing the highways. I do not say that the section is wrong, but I think we ought to know that it is right because if we pass it without due consideration it might involve some jurisdiction over highway crossings that possibly would be ultra vires of this parliament. I would like to know from the minister whether the words 'highway crossings' are necessary in this section, and if the matter has been carefully considered from that point of view.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The inclusion of these words was very carefully considered by myself and by those who have acted with me in the preparation of the Bill. The fact that we must necessarily, if we are to enact a thorough law, have control of the crossings of railways and the crossing of highways by railways, makes it important that we should leave it absolutely free from any doubt that we have asserted and maintained the right to exercise that power. It is a protection to the public; it is a sort of police power in one sense; and it is as necessary as almost any other power that we could give to the commission, in the interest of public safety. Nobody, I think, would be justified in claiming that this was the assumption of a power which could not be usefully and properly employed in the public interest; and the fact that we have the power to make regulations for the operation of all railways within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, and everything pertaining to that, would put it also within our power to confer on the commission the power to regulate the crossings of railways and highways by the one or the other.

Mr. LANCASTER. I may point out to the minister that he is saying, in the last words of the section, that the Act shall apply to highway crossings, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not. If they are not within the authority of parliament, this Act cannot bring them in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is in error in that.

Mr. LANCASTER. Suppose they are not otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament, does not that mean that this parliament has no control over them? This parliament cannot give itself control over them by simply saying so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would not have authority as a parliament to interfere ordinarily with the public highways, but the moment we undertake to say that a railway shall be laid across a highway, then we have the power, incident to the exercise of our authority in regard to the railway; and every local or provincial power which conflicts with our power in that respect must be subordinate to it. For that reason, I think this language is quite proper in that connection.

Mr. BARKER. I do not think there is any doubt whatever that these words should be in the Act. In that respect I do not agree with my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). They are placed here for a particular purpose. It is well known that the parliament of Canada, in exercising its jurisdiction in respect to railways, undertakes to restrict people in the use of highway crossings. They are not allowed to permit their cattle at large on the highway within a certain distance of a railway. The parliament of Canada has no right to interfere with the people locally in the exercise of their rights over the King's highway except as an incident of railway legislation. Therefore when this provision is inserted in this Bill, it is inserted for the purpose of the railway, and power is given to this parliament for such a purpose whether otherwise parliament would have jurisdiction or not.

Mr. LANCASTER. If my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is right, I understand that this Bill is extending the powers of parliament further than does the old law, which does not contain these words; and if the Bill is meant to give this commission authority over the highways, I am all the more against the section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I might ask the hon. gentleman this question. Suppose parliament has authorized the construction of a railway, through an unsettled section of the country. Population comes in, and the people require roads. Does the hon. gentleman say that the municipal authority should be empowered to declare whether any protection was necessary or not where the roads crossed the railway? Should the municipal authority be allowed to lay down a crossing over the railway without being subject to the restriction of any other power?

Mr. LANCASTER. I think so, if they made it safe.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who is to determine when they have made it safe—the council which does it or the general government through its proper officers, who are responsible for the protection of life and property wherever these railways run? The very moment the hon. gentleman says, if they made it safe, he is weakening his position; because he does not leave the municipal body which puts the crossing over the railway to judge for itself whether it is safe or not. That would never work out in the world.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I think it is clear that there must be one jurisdiction. My hon. friend from Lincoln may be right in saying that we have not that jurisdiction.

Mr. LANCASTER. I say you cannot get it by saying so, if it belongs to the municipalities through the provincial legislature under the British North American Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. We may not have it, even though we have power to enact it, and that is the reason I raised the point I did. But it is clear in my mind that only one parliament has it, and in my opinion we have the right in connection with the railways to take it. If we do not take it, it belongs to the local legislature. It would be a sad state of affairs if we had two jurisdictions, because the public would be always in doubt as to who had the right to assert it.

Mr. INGRAM. The word 'highway' is interpreted by the interpretation clauses, but there is no interpretation of highway crossing. Such a crossing might be overhead or underhead or on the level.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A highway crossing would be something crossing the highway, whether overhead or on the level or underneath.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What part of through-traffic is there that is not in the legislative authority of this parliament? Is it traffic that originates in a foreign country? I do not understand why you take it under this clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is merely a general statement.

On section 6,

Subject to the provisions of section seven of this Act every railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by special Act passed by the legislature of any province, now or hereafter connecting with or crossing a railway which, at the same time of such connection or crossing, is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be the work for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As I understand it the object of this is to take all the provincial railways affected by this clause within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. These are very general terms.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This is the old law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think the old law was that these railways should come under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada for the purpose of regulating crossings and connections.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is practically the same thing. It is to bring the conditions on which crossings shall take place clearly within the jurisdiction of the railway commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is a very far-reaching clause. I think that originally there was some legislation of this kind in regard to the Intercolonial Railway. I did not know that it had ever gone as far as this section contemplates with regard to other railways. The obvious affect of this will be to bring every railway of Canada under the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was the intention before.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That must be the way it works out, because railways must connect with each other. So, no railway will be left within provincial jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the authority, and we must either exercise it or refrain from exercising it. And I think it is clear that we should have power to direct the terms of crossings.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I have said is subject to the doubt as to whether or not that provisions of the British North America Act must be carried out by direct statement, naming the railways to be brought under our jurisdiction. I believe that question has been raised by some very eminent lawyers.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. This has been in force for fifteen years, and I believe no case has ever been carried before the court generally. This is the old clause, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This goes a good deal further than the old clause. The point referred to was raised in the Manitoba crossing case.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was the point decided in the Manitoba crossing case ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not formally decided. It was argued by Mr. Mowat and Mr. Dalton McCarthy, on one side, and Mr. Blake and Mr. Christopher Robinson, on the other. But the Supreme Court—I was going to say dodged the question. But at any rate, they got around it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They did not find it necessary to decide it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They did not even make allusion to the argument, though the matter was argued very fully. They were content to answer the questions submitted ; but the answers at least implied doubt as to our jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Even if power is given us under the British North America Act surely it ought to be exercised by specific reference to the works we are taking within our jurisdiction, either by naming the road or by stating the points between which we assume jurisdiction over the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see any special difference between the way it is done here, and the way it is done under section 306 of the Act now in force. It proceeds to name every known railway at that time, showing very clearly that parliament did not intend that there should be an exception to the rule, and after naming all the railways it declares these to be works for the general advantage of Canada——and each and every branch line or railway now or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railway or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

That does not mean branch lines of these railways alone. So, it seems to be about the same thing as we have here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There might be some very fine question as to the effect of that. For instance, suppose a provincial legislature incorporates a railway, and it is built until within the last ten yards of the last half mile of connecting with the railway which connection would clearly make it a work within the jurisdiction of this parliament. At what time does it come within our jurisdiction ? What is the meaning of the words 'connecting with or crossing ? Does it only become a railway 'connecting with or crossing' when completed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By the Act of crossing or connecting with one of these other lines, it becomes subject to the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But might it not be argued that it comes within our jurisdiction from the very beginning of the undertaking which would necessarily bring it to the connection that makes it subject to this parliament ? It seems to me that some question might arise as to that, because after all, that which gives a provincial railway the character contemplated by the Railway Act is that to complete it, it must be brought in connection with a railway under the legislative authority of this parliament.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that this parliament does not regard such a work as one for the general advantage of Canada until it connects with or crosses a railway that is of that character. This parliament is seized of the importance of acquiring the control of the railways in respect of crossings or connections so as to prevent crossings or connections which by the absence of proper appliances and regulations might jeopardize life.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The point raised by the leader of the opposition is well worthy of consideration. In the old law there were two sections in place of section 6, sections 306 and 307. Section 306 mentions the Intercolonial and numerous other railways, which, it says,

Are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and each and every branch line of railway now or hereafter connecting with or crossing the said lines of railway, or any of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

That to a certain extent recognizes the principle that the Minister of Railways has evolved in this new section, though he has gone a step further, because he has drawn on the future to the extent of saying that any railway hereafter——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is in the old Act.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE—connecting with any railway constructed under the authority of the parliament of Canada. Technically, I can point out one thing that may happen, and that will be dangerous. Supposing we incorporate a railway that we do not declare to be for the general advantage of Canada, yet under this clause it would be covered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We cannot do that if we are incorporating it in a province.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. We can incorporate a railway without declaring it to be for the general advantage of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Within the limits of a province. Can we incorporate a company to construct a railway which should be wholly within the limits of any one province without declaring that work in terms to be for the general advantage of Canada ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But supposing it is in two provinces ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then it becomes so of necessity.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The point is technical, I agree, but it deserves consideration. If we go further than we ought, it might be held ultra vires. In the old Act we went on to say :

Every such railway and branch line shall hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

But we are leaving that out here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we do not repeal this.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But it says :

The provisions of any Act of the legislature of any province of Canada——

We are leaving that out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we do not propose to leave out either of these two sections, we propose to except them from the general provisions of the repeal clause, to leave in force these two sections 306 and 307.

Mr. BARKER. I would suggest to the minister that it would be much safer in this clause to adopt the course pursued on a former occasion and name all the provincial railways it is proposed to bring under this section. It is a serious question to these provincial companies to be left in doubt under what jurisdiction they may be. That may cause serious trouble, especially to roads now under construction. It will be very little trouble to name all the railways that will be affected by this clause. If parliament can enact the clause as it is drawn. I see no reason why it may not do away with entirely with the whole provincial jurisdiction. If the minister can do what he proposes to do here, he can deprive the provinces of all power of railway legislation. In order to protect the companies that he is dealing with, it would be far better to name them specifically and thus avoid doubt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must confess that what the hon. gentleman suggests impresses my mind favourably. It might be desirable to think it over, and I will let the section stand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It can be easily done by adding as subsection 3 something like this : The railways referred to in this Act shall, without restricting the generality of the foregoing provisions, include those set forth in the schedule to this Act.

7. Street railways and tramways, while hereby expressly declared to be subject to such of the provisions of this Act as are referred to in section 5, shall not by reason only of the fact of crossing or connecting with any such railway as mentioned in section 6, be taken or considered to be works for the general advantage of Canada, nor to be subject to any other of the provisions of the Act.

2. This section shall apply to all electric railways (as distinguished from electric street railways) passing through or over the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, or through or over the property of the province of Ontario lying upon or along the Niagara river and known as the Chain reserve.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This withdraws from the operation of the general clause which we have allowed to stand, all electric railways, so that the mere fact of crossing a railway which is within the legislative jurisdiction of parliament, does not thereby make it subject to such jurisdiction. It is identical with the existing law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Generally you take jurisdiction over the crossings and connections.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we do that, and we say that the mere fact of crossing does not make it a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing a tramway is chartered from the province of Quebec to the province of Ontario, how does this Act affect such tramway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see that it would affect it. Any electric railway that parliament has created, of course continues subject to parliament, and therefore would not fall within clause 7, because clause 7 only applies to these electric railways which have been created by a provincial legislature and which, by reason of their crossing a Dominion railway, are not made thereby works for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Do these street railways and tramways include electric railways running out into the country and gathering freight for large railways ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it does not. It is for the committee to consider whether it will be desirable to do that. Subsection 2 of section 7 says :

This section shall apply to all the electric railways (as distinguished from electric street railways) passing through or over the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, or through or over the property of the province of Ontario lying upon or along the Niagara river, and known as the Chain reserve.

Mr. LANCASTER. That only applies to Niagara Falls.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know. You might put in there, if it is desirable to do so that railways which are carrying freight, so far as their freight business is concerned shall be subject to control of the committee.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). I should think it would be most desirable indeed. We have an electric railway in our district that does more business than a great many steam roads in gathering freight and transferring it to other steam roads. This Bill would be of very little use to the people of that section if these electric railways were not included because a large quantity of freight originates with this road. Hundreds and hundreds of cars are collected every season. The road is some twenty-five miles long and runs through the whole fruit district.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does it connect with the Dominion road or is it merely a local railway ?

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). It connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo and Michigan Central.

Mr. INGRAM. Tramways are only in their infancy, but within the next few years there will be a great many constructed and in order to control freight rates the commission ought to have control of the rates on tramways. Some provision ought to be included in this Bill giving the commission this right.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is incidental to the discussion we had on the express business the other day. I pointed out to the hon. minister an example of goods shipped over the road that the hon. member for Wentworth speaks of in his county, and the hon. minister told us that if these goods were handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway at Hamilton they would be under the control of the commission and therefore it was not necessary to make any further provision in regard to express business. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Smith) desires, and I agree with him, that this commission shall be empowered to deal with the freight business of an electric railway of that kind. This is entirely a provincial railway. That road only runs from Beamsville to Hamilton and I do not know that this commission could be given power over it. I do not say that it cannot, but I think it is right that we should draw the hon. minister's attention to it. The hon. minister will remember that the other day we were discussing the case in the committee of express goods shipped from the county which I represent over this electric road, which is purely a provincial railway, and in no sense within the contemplation of section 3 of this Bill (which is the section that says what this Bill is to apply to) and transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Michigan Central, at Hamilton and then coming down to Ottawa, or Montreal, or going some where else. The hon. minister explained that by virtue of the words 'through-traffic' in section 5 the commission would have jurisdiction over express goods of that kind as being through-traffic, but, now, we are getting just half the case I put. The hon. member for Wentworth desires and I agree with him that freight shipped over that road shall be under the control of this commission. What bothers me is whether this parliament or this commission can control such freight under the wording of section 3 as drawn and as passed by this committee, because that railway is in no sense brought under the jurisdiction of the commission. That is a section regarding the application of this Bill and it was stated the other night, and I think must be admitted by all parties that the Bill does not apply to a provincial railway which does not cross or connect with any other railway which is under the jurisdiction of this parliament. The Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway begins at Beamsville and runs to Hamilton. It is entirely a provincial railway. I quite agree with the hon. member for Wentworth that the fruit growers ship a great deal more fruit over that road than they do over the Grand Trunk Railway which is the only other road they can possibly use. I quite agree with him that this road ought to be under the control of the commission. I think it is a serious question and one which has perhaps not been thought of whether you can exercise control over that road at all by this Bill or by this commission, it being purely a provincial railway.

Mr. INGRAM. There is another point in connection with this and it is the collection of freight on short lines and exchanges by tramways. We know that the tramways in several districts of the country are used for the purpose of changing cars between short lines and trunk lines. They are used as feeders for the trunk lines. They take cars from the trunk lines, the cars are left on the small lines, and when they are loaded they are handed over to the trunk lines again. If the tramways do not come under this Bill great abuses might arise as between the trunk lines and the short lines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not aware that the carrying of freight on electric railways had developed to any considerable extent in Ontario, or to the extent which hon. gentlemen have stated. They have not established any business of that kind in the maritime provinces or in the city of Montreal so far as I am aware. No doubt the future will find very great development in the construction and operation of this class of railways. They will be found to be inexpensively run and it will be possible to do a great deal of business over them ; so that, the question would require to be considered.

Mr. INGRAM. There are fifty miles under contract now in my district.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Contemplating freight business?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member for West Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has not quite fully stated my view upon the question as I gave it the other day and it would not be a correct statement of my view upon the present point. I admit that as far as my own opinion goes this parliament would not have control over electric railways constituted by the provincial legislatures, even though they were doing a freight business purely and simply, but I am quite clear that while direct control cannot be exercised over them, such as we exercise over other railways, an indirect control is capable of being exercised when the business is done in the ordinary way. If a man who has a carload of merchandise to ship at Beamsville by the electric line and the Canadian Pacific Railway to some point on the Canadian Pacific Railway beyond, consigns those goods in that way, the Canadian Pacific Railway could not name a rate which would not be subject to the control of the railway commission. Therefore, it will be dealt with as through-traffic would be within the jurisdiction of the commission. But, on the other hand, if freight were carried on an electric railway as far as the electric railway would take it, if it were consigned to some one at the end of the railway, and he made a consignment on a further bill of lading in the absence of any freight rate, if there was a special rate simply for carriage on the electric road, and a distinct and separate rate for carriage on a railway, then I have my doubts as to whether the commission would reach that.

Mr. LANCASTER. The case I put to-night is the case of stopping at the terminus of the electric road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know how we could overcome that. I think it will be felt in practice that as a general rule where goods are sent straight through, the railway company would be very much more disposed to give a favourable rate than they would if it were done the other way, and the through route would become the much more advantageous method of sending the goods than would the other, and being advantageous it would be adopted, and being adopted, it would come within this law.

Mr. INGRAM. So far as these sections are concerned, if they are going to exclude tramways from their operation the Bill is not worth the paper it is printed on in reference to sections of the country that rely on tramways to remove their freight. If you gave the commission power to control the rates over those tramways it would be in the public interest.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite of opinion that it would be desirable if possible to include control over tramways which do a freight carrying business. I will think that over and perhaps I may come to a conclusion in the sense suggested. I was not aware that there was any considerable amount of merchandise carried by these tramways.

Mr. INGRAM. People are now very anxious to construct these railways solely with the object of having their freights removed to the trunk lines. If these tramways were to charge high rates there would be no relief to the sections of the country in which they are operated.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will let the first subsection stand, and I will consider it.

Subsection one of clause seven allowed to stand.

On section 8.

The Railway Committee of the Privy Council is hereby abolished and, in lieu thereof, there shall be a commission, to be known as the 'Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada,' consisting of members who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council, at any time after the passing of this Act, and from time to time as vacancies occur. Such commission shall be a court of record, and have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Each commissioner shall hold office during good behaviour for a period of ten years from the date of his appointment, but may be removed at any time by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons; and shall cease to hold office upon reaching the age of seventy-five years. Each commissioner on the expiration of his term of office shall be eligible for reappointment. One of such commissioners shall be appointed, by the Governor in Council, chief commissioner of the board, and shall be entitled to hold the office of chief commissioner so long as he continues a member of the board ; and another of the commissioners shall be appointed by the Governor in Council, deputy chief commissioner of the board.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS move that section 8 be amended by striking out after 'governor' in the eleventh line, the words 'General on address of the Senate and House of Commons,' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'In council for cause.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the reason for the change ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The opinion of Council, in going over the Bill, was that it would be desirable to place the members of the commission very much in the same position as lieutenant governors under the British North America Act. It is a very cumbrous proceeding to invite the action of the Senate and House of Commons by an address. Cases might arise in which it would be very important and desirable that prompt action should be taken without waiting for a session of parliament.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the object of extending the term of appointment to ten years ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The period of the tenure of office varies a good deal in various countries. The hope is that by affording a reasonably long tenure of office to the appointees, we shall secure a good class of men. I think it would be practically impossible to expect that any gentleman qualified to fill this position, and being engaged in active business life, would throw that business up to take up a position of this kind for a short term, and be subject to all the loss which would be incident to such a state of affairs. I think any shorter period than ten years would be a mistake.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman provides that each commissioner shall be eligible for reappointment. If his conduct were satisfactory, he would be appointed again. If a man, after his appointment, turned out to be undesirable, then I suppose the government would exercise their power to remove him by action of the Governor in Council. If the term were shorter, he would be put on his good behaviour, because by doing his duty for the shorter term he would secure his reappointment.

Section agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that the blank in the fourth line be filled up by the word 'three.'

Mr. INGRAM. Are we not entitled to know the class of men to be appointed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only say that the intention of the government is to select the best class of men we can get for the position.

Mr. INGRAM. Railway men, lawyers, or what ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have intimated my own view that it would be desirable to have a lawyer, and a lawyer of some railway experience or knowledge. Then, it would be necessary to have a man of some knowledge and experience in the matter of operating railways, if we could get such a one ; but that is a question which is not yet solved. We have not yet begun to consider the personnel of the commission, but we shall have to give it attention as early as possible. The difficulty of getting men now filling responsible positions in the railway service of the country who would be likely to accept a position of this kind, would be very great ; but we shall do the best we can in that regard. Beyond that I cannot go.

Mr. INGRAM. Has there been any representation made for a prominent farmer to be put on the commission ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had representations for men in various positions of life, and I do not know that I can say that the farmers have been an exception in that regard. We have not really got so far as to give much thought to the personnel of the commission.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand, from the complaints the farmers are making throughout the country, that they have very serious grievances against the railways in the matter of rates. I presume the hon. gentleman will do his duty by the farmers of this country, and have some important farmer appointed on this commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We shall try to see that the interests of the farmers are safeguarded as much as possible.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be well to call this body the railway commission of Canada instead of the board of railway commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is much easier and simpler and more convenient to speak of it as a board. I do not think there is any objection to that word, and it is a very appropriate term.

Mr. SPROULE. It is always referred to by the press as the railway commission and all the petitions ask parliament to establish a railway commission.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The railway board is declared in the interpretation clauses to mean the board of railway commissioners for Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the object of making this board a court of record ? You are providing also that it shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The court seal is evidence of itself. All the orders and regulations of the board are judicial determinations, and go out as such.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Clause ten virtually provides that the chairman and deputy chairman must be lawyers, because; no matter what may be the opinion of the other commissioners, the decision of the chairman or deputy chairman on the question of law must be accepted by the others.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 10,

Not less than three commissioners shall attend at the hearing of every case, and the chief commissioner (or in his absence the deputy chief commissioner), shall preside, and his opinion upon any question, which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law, shall prevail. In any case where there is no opposing party, and no notice to be given to any interested party, any one commissioner may act alone for the board.

Mr. INGRAM. There is too much law in this thing. Three commissioners are to be appointed, two of whom must be lawyers. Where are you going to get the different interests represented? The common sense man is certainly left out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We must treat this section with particular respect, because it happens to be an exact transcript of the English Act. I think, however, we had better let it stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 11,

No commissioner shall be disqualified to act, by reason of interest, or of kindred or affinity to any person interested in any matter before the board; but whenever any commissioner is interested or of kin or affinity to any such person, the Governor in Council may either upon the application of such commissioner or otherwise, appoint some disinterested person to act as commissioner pro hac vice. The Governor in Council may also appoint a commissioner pro hac vice in the case of sickness, absence or inability to act, of any commissioner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose that we add to this subsection two :—

No commissioner shall hold, purchase, take or have interest for his own behalf in any stock, shares, bonds, debentures or other securities of any railway company subject to this Act, nor shall directly or indirectly have any interest in any device, plans, machine, patented process or article or any part thereof which may be required or used as a part of the equipment of railways, or of any rolling stock to be used thereon, and if any such stocks, shares, bonds, or other security, device, plans, machine, patented process or articles, or any part thereof or any interest therein, shall come to or vest in any such commissioner by will or succession for his own benefit, he shall, within three calendar months after the same was so given to or vested in him, absolutely sell or dispose of the same or his interest therein.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the result of this section. It does not seem to provide any sanction by this qualification by penalty. Perhaps it is provided further on in some subsequent section of the Act, but as it stands there is simply a prohibition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not thought desirable to put it in the Bill in a form making it illegal for a commissioner to hold stocks, &c., lest, one of the commissioners might inadvertently invalidate the action of the commission. I think that, having declared that no commissioner shall hold these things, we can rely upon the Governor in Council enforcing it. It seems to me that the control of the government would be more effective than any other.

Mr. BARKER. This clause will only prohibit a commissioner from holding stock for his own use?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Should it not go further? Should it not prohibit him from holding such securities either for his own use or for the use of other persons? Otherwise he might hold them for the use of a member of his family.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think this is the clause in the English Act.

Mr. BARKER. But there is no reason why we should not improve upon that. I think a commissioner should not hold stocks either for himself or for anybody else while he is a commissioner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see any particular objections in providing that. But it may possibly cause some hardship. A man might have some stocks in a trust capacity and could not well relieve himself of his trusteeship. This seems to be pretty amply covered by providing that he shall not hold stocks on his own behalf. I have no doubt that, in framing the English Act they felt that this would be as far as it would be reasonable to carry it.

Mr. BARKER. The object is to prevent the commissioner having any interest that might make him act in a manner contrary to his duty as commissioner. Holding these securities his judgment might be warped, but in the same way his judgment might be warped if he were holding the securities for his wife.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to accept the suggestion without consideration. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) desires it I will consider the point. Let the section stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 12,

Each commissioner during his term of office reside in Canada in such part thereof which may, from time to time be designated or allowed by the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to amend that so as to fix the residence of the commissioners at Ottawa. I move to strike out all the words after the words 'reside' and insert the following: 'At Ottawa in Canada.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. 'At or near Ottawa' is a better phrase. That is the judges' rule, and the designation of the Railway Act is within five miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 'At or near' is very indefinite. But there might be cases in which the Governor in Council could extend it to advantage. I will submit a new section, and in the meantime this might stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 13,

It shall be the duty of the board to hold sessions, and to hear any complaint, matter or thing determinable by the board or do any act, consistent with the power vested in the board as provided in this Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move that section thirteen be expunged, and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof:

The commissioners shall devote the whole of their time to the performance of their duties under this Act, and shall not accept or hold any office of emolument inconsistent with this section.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 15,

Whenever special circumstances render it expedient to hold sessions without the city of Ottawa, the board may, subject to the approval of the minster, hold the same in any part of Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Will the minister suggest some circumstances under which the board might sit in other places than Ottawa? I know that people generally regard this as a very important feature of the commission, that is, its accessibility; and if the commission cannot be moved from Ottawa except under very important circumstances, it would detract a great deal from the value of the commission.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest that instead of the words 'special circumstances' some words be inserted like the 'public business' or 'convenience of the public.' Let them do like the judge of the exchequer court. He is supposed to sit in Ottawa, but if the convenience of the witnesses require it, he sits in other places, because it is easier for one man to travel about than for a dozen people to travel to him. There might be a large number of fruit growers or farmers from the west who wished to appear before the commission to give evidence, and in such case it would be better for the three commissioners to travel to St. Catharines, or Hamilton, or Toronto, or wherever these people might live, than to bring them all the way to Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The object of this section is to enable the commissioners to do exactly what the hon. gentlemen desire them to do, that is, the court may be a migratory tribunal, and wherever the convenience of the public can be best served, it would certainly be the duty of the commission to move about. They may, for instance, need to go to some locality to view the ground, a variety of circumstances might arise which would render it expedient for the commission to meet in the locality where the controversy has arisen. But I would be willing to strike out the words 'special circumstances' if there is any objection to them.

Mr. LANCASTER. It would be better, because otherwise the commissioners might think it was their prima facie duty to stay in Ottawa, and they were not to move except when there was special reason.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing that the word 'special' be struck out.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would also suggest that the words 'subject to the approval of the minister' might as well be struck out too, so that the commissioners might have the right to go whenever and wherever they thought best. I am not saying the minister would improperly withhold his approval, but they might not always be able to reach him conveniently.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At first I was of the opinion that this power of moving about should be subject to some supervision, as of the Governor in Council, because when left to their own discretion any tribunal might travel about the country for the purpose of junketting when they imagined they were on public business. Visits to other towns would always be attended by more or less expense, which has to be paid for out of the public purse. On further consideration, it seemed to be rather a cumbrous thing to leave it to the Governor in Council to deal with requests of that kind, and I thought it would be more expeditious to leave it to the minister or the acting minister to grant the power to hold sessions without the city of Ottawa. It might be desirable that the commissioners should be able to state to the minister when they wished to go on an expedition of this character.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you not say the same of your exchequer court judge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is only one judge to begin with. When there is no business to do he cannot create a business, the business arises in the locality, and it is not a matter of discretion at all. But it is a different thing when there are three men with their clerks.

Mr. LANCASTER. I believe it is contemplated that there shall be an appeal from these commissioners to the Governor in Council. Am I right about that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then, the Minister of Railways and Canals who would start them on their journey to any particular place, would, to a certain extent, be prejudging the matter before they heard it and he would be hearing an appeal from their decision afterwards, because, he is one of the tribunal known as the Governor in Council and probably the most prominent one in a railway matter. I do not think the hon. minister should know anything about it beforehand, or should have anything to say about what the commissioners should do. I think that this commission would have the confidence of the people to a greater extent if we left that approval out.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood that we were to have a railway commission free from any political bias, but I find amendments with a political flavour are inserted too often to bear out that contention. Of course, I do not mean to insinuate that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals would abuse his position for any political advantage, but this course is not in keeping with the promise made in this House and throughout the country that this was to be a non-political commission, and that it would deal with questions independently of political considerations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to see how you could make it any more so.

Mr. INGRAM. I think if this section is to be amended in the direction which the hon. gentleman suggests we might as well not have any railway commission at all. We might as well go back to the old practice of leaving these questions to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The hon. gentleman recommends certain things and as a rule the recommendations of the hon. gentleman would be carried out. If the hon. gentleman felt disposed to use his position for political effect he could easily do so. Farmers are complaining about drainage across lands and other complaints are made in respect to railways and if the commissioners are not to have it in their power to leave Ottawa and go to any particular district to remedy a complaint, I cannot see what use this commission is going to be. They should be perfectly independent in regard to that. The minister must remember that their proceedings are subject to the condemnation of the Governor in Council. If they do not meet with the opproval of the Governor in Council, or if they do anything that cannot be justified before the Governor in Council, he can dismiss them. Therefore, I think it would be unwise to amend this Bill in the direction which the hon. gentleman suggests. It would be better to leave it to the commission and hold the commission strictly responsible for their conduct.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be a little confusing if when an application were made to this commission to redress grievances that existed in a certain locality, and it was necessary that the trial should take place there the commission would be obliged to say : We must first get the consent of the Minister of Railways and Canals ? Would it not raise the question as to whether they would have to apply to the minister to get his consent for the commission to go there and then apply to the commission to take up the case ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not attach very much importance to it. Hon. members seem to think that it might hamper the commission some way. I would yield to their suggestion and strike it out. I move :

That section 15 be amended by striking out the word 'special' in the first line and by striking out the words 'subject to the approval of the minister' in the second and third lines.

I do this the more readily because I quite realize that if it should be found necessary to include any restricting clause it can always be done by parliament.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 16,

The commissioners shall sit at such times and conduct their proceedings in such manner as may seem to them most convenient for the speedy dispatch of business ; they may, subject as in this Act mentioned, sit either together or separately and either in private or in open court, but any complaint made to them shall, on the application of any party to the complaint, be heard and determined in open court. Any members of the board shall constitute a quorum and no vacancy in their body shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why do you keep in the word 'private ?' This is a court record.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If any party to the complaint wishes to have the matter heard openly it may be so heard. I presume it will be open, but there may be occasions when it might be desirable to sit in private.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In their deliberations they might sit in private, but in hearing cases they ought not to sit in private.

Mr. INGRAM. For instance railway companies and their employees have difficulties and it may be very important that there should be private or secret conferences in the matter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The commissioners have nothing to do with that.

Mr. INGRAM. The commissioners have to do with matters of rates or grievances.

Mr. SPROULE. They would have nothing to do with any grievances with reference to labour troubles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a court of record and as such it should not sit in private.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is not familiar with the proceedings of courts of record.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It should not hear cases in private.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The board of railway commissioners in England sits in private, although it is a court of record and it is especially authorized by law to do it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, I know. This is a copy of the English Railway Act, but I do not see any reason why a court of record, unless it is making up its judgment, should sit in private.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose it was dealing with the matter of rates ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then the public have a right to know all about it.

Mr. INGRAM. It might be necessary to exclude a certain party from the court in reference to a matter of that kind.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The objection is now that some case might come within the rule, but this section gives power to the commissioners to hear all cases in private.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not if any of the parties complaining desire that the court shall be open.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the parties agree in not desiring a public hearing why should they not be allowed to have a private hearing ? I beg to move :

That the word 'two' be inserted in the 25th line and that after the word 'quorum' the remaining words be changed so as to read : No vacancy in their body shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to act.

Motion agreed to,

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). What business will be taken to-morrow.

Mr. INGRAM.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will go on with this Railway Bill as the first government Order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And go right along with it to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes ; in the evening possibly there may be Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to give notice that when the House is next moved into Committee of Supply, I will move an amendment substantially as follows :

This House is of opinion that the tariff of customs duties should give such protection to iron and steel industries as will not only secure to our own producers and manufacturers the Canadian market in articles now produced or manufactured in this country, but will also develop and sustain the manufacture in Canada of other iron and steel products which at present are imported in large quantities from other countries.

And that the present tariff of customs duties should be now readjusted on this principle.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have delayed for a few days on account of the absence of the Minister of Finance, as I thought it would be desirable that he should be present when the motion is made. If the House is to be moved into Committee of Supply to-morrow, I will move this resolution ; not with the idea that it shall necessarily be regarded as a motion of want of confidence, but with the hope that the government may, notwithstanding the declaration of the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, be inclined to give consideration to the ideas expressed in the resolution and to act in accordance therewith.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 2, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 189) to incorporate the Canadian Telephone and Telegraph Company.—Mr. Birkett—by Mr. Taylor.

Bill (No. 190) respecting the Queen's College of Kingston.—Mr. Harty—by Mr. Logan.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter that is both serious and of a pressing nature. The rumour has circulated from time to time —in fact it was announced to the House— that a commission would be appointed to investigate the granting of concessions in the Yukon Territory, and, amongst others, the Treadgold concession. Since then the rumour has been consistent that Mr. Justice Britton, of the High Court of Justice of Ontario, has been appointed a commissioner to make inquiry into these matters. It is also stated that a gentleman who is a civil engineer will be associated with Mr. Justice Britton to conduct the inquiry, and that Mr. Lacombe, a member of the legislature of Quebec, will be, or has been, appointed secretary of the commission in question. I shall put myself in order by moving at the end of my remarks that the House do now adjourn. This morning the papers announced that Mr. Justice Britton has actually left Kingston on his way to Dawson. Now, it seems to me that this is a most extraordinary way for the government to treat the House. Here we are in session; this matter was discussed in the House the other day; the announcement was made, as I said a moment ago, that a commission would be appointed to investigate; and now, all at once, we learn, not from the ministry, but through the public press, that the appointment has actually been made and that Mr. Justice Britton, with another gentleman, will carry on the investigation. It seems to me that it was the duty of the government, first of all, to inform this House of the appointment of the commission, of the names of the gentlemen who would be charged with this difficult and important investigation, and also to submit to the House—as I think was almost promised some time ago—the terms of the commission under which Mr. Justice Britton and the other gentlemen would act. This matter is of a grave nature, and I take it that the members of this House have a right to know what were the instructions to be given to Mr. Justice Britton. These instructions should have been submitted to us, so that we could have seen whether or not in our judgment they were sufficient and covered sufficient ground.

Now, this matter is of more importance than the ordinary mortal would believe at first sight. Not wishing at all to refer to a debate which has already taken place in this House, let me simply call attention to the fact that the principal denunciation of what took place in the Yukon in regard to these hydraulic concessions was brought to the notice of the government by the government's own friends. When the member for the Yukon went before the electors the very first questions which were put to him were whether he would have the Treadgold concessions cancelled, and whether he would have the other, or the hydraulic, concessions cancelled also. Let me read to the House—because they will bear repetition—some of the questions which were put to him at the time when he went before the people as the government candidate in the Yukon. One of the questions was this:

Will you agree to advocate for and insist upon the cancellation of the Treadgold concessions?

Will you pledge yourself to advocate and insist upon the punishment and exposure of officials both in Dawson and Ottawa by whose fraud or culpable negligence or inefficiency those concessions were granted in the first instance, or are now continued in force after the same by their terms should be cancelled?

. . . .

Will you support the appointment of a commission of five persons of whom two shall be nominated by the premier, two by the leader of the opposition and one by yourself to inquire into the administration of the Yukon country, both local and federal in all departments and report?

I believe the member for the Yukon was not present at the time in Dawson city, or near Dawson city, and he could not answer these questions; but a gentleman well known to this House, a high official of the government, the Gold Commissioner for the Yukon, Mr. Congdon, wrote in answer to the questions as follows:

Dawson, November 4, 1902.

Sir,—I beg to say that your questions were received and forwarded to Mr. Ross at too late a date for it to be possible for him to have answered them by this time. I know the views of Mr. Ross as well as any one can and have no doubt he will advocate the course of action you suggest in your questions.

Now let me call the attention of the House further to the fact that it is requested in these questions that there should be punishment and exposure of the officials, both in Dawson and Ottawa by whose fraud or culpable negligence and inefficiency these concessions were granted; and to this the member for the Yukon, by his agent, by his friend, by his right hand man in that territory, answered that he would see to it that this commission was appointed, not a commission of one man or of two men, but an absolutely impartial and independent commission, the members of which were to be appointed by the premier, by the leader of the opposition and by the member for the Yukon himself. Now, Sir, that is not all. When the member for the Yukon was nominated by the Liberal convention, here are the resolutions which were put to him:

Resolved that the government be requested immediately to make careful examination and obtain reports upon the subject with a view of cancelling forthwith the Treadgold concession, and undertaking such supply as a national enterprise.

Resolved, that in the opinion of this convention many of the concessions now held were obtained by fraud and imposition; that it is in the interest of this territory that such concessions should be annulled, and to that end that inquiry should be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances of such fraud and imposition, and action taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

And the member for the Yukon, in a letter in answer to the resolutions which were passed at that convention nominating him, wrote as follows :

With this in view I shall advocate the reduction of fees, &c. . . . the thorough investigation of the charges of fraud made in respect to the manner in which certain concessions are alleged to have been obtained, and if such fraud is established the immediate commencement of such proceedings as may be required to vacate the grants, and the enforcement of strict compliance with the conditions embodied in all crown grants in the Yukon.

And furthermore, at a meeting of the Liberal club, held at Dawson, this resolution was passed :

That an inquiry may be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances under which the leading hydraulic concessions were obtained, in order that action may be taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

Now, Sir, it will be seen that, not members of the opposition, not gentlemen in any way connected with the party which we represent in this House, but the very friends of the government allege that the Treadgold concessions and the other concessions were obtained by fraud, by false representations, and that the government was, as it were, imposed upon by certain parties, and they asked that a thorough investigation be made of this fraud, not, as I said before, by any body who would be open to the least bit of suspicion, but by an independent and impartial tribunal. Sir, I do not wish to say anything in disparagement of the character of Mr. Justice Britton. We knew him here in the House, he was a very estimable member of the House, until some time after the last general election, when he was appointed to the bench, either in 1900 or 1901. Now it seems to me that Mr. Justice Britton was not a fit and proper person under the circumstances to be charged with this most important inquiry. He comes, as it were, from the very hotbed of politics, he is fresh from the political arena ; and although he may be upright and honest, he is like every one of us, a man, and he must have his political leanings. Now I ask, is it fair to Mr. Justice Britton himself, is it fair to those who have brought these accusations of fraud and misrepresentation against the government, against officials of the government, and against ministers themselves, is it fair that an inquiry of this nature should be put into the hands of Mr. Justice Britton, and that Mr. Justice Britton should be put into this position, that he is between the fulfilment of his duty which he will swear to accomplish, and his political leanings ? Because, Sir, although, as I said before, he may be perfectly honest, he may be perfectly upright, he cannot fail, like every one of us, to have his political leanings ; and having been associated so long with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, having been a devoted supporter and partisan of theirs, having been appointed only lately to the bench, is it possible they can have in him that confidence they would have in such an independent and impartial tribunal as was suggested to the member for the Yukon by the Liberal convention. Why, Sir, it is well known—and this is not in disparagement of the character of Mr. Justice Britton, I take it—it is well known that when he was a member of this House during the last parliament and a part of the present parliament, the government had no more ardent and no more active supporter than the judge himself. When an investigation was asked for and a committee appointed to investigate matters pertaining to the administration of the affairs of the country by the government, for instance, into that question of military rations for South Africa, and I believe also in the question of the West Huron and Brockville elections, Mr. Justice Britton was appointed by the government as the best man they could probably get to defend the government in those two matters.

That is not all. If we look at the 'Hansard' what do we find ? We find that upon these very questions of the administration of the Yukon, Mr. Justice Britton expressed his opinion on several occasions. We all know that when a judge has expressed his opinion upon a matter that afterwards comes before him, or upon a matter similar to one which afterwards comes before him to be adjudicated upon in his official capacity, the judge recuses himself by his own motion, or if he does not, he is recused by the parties interested. On the 13th of April, 1899, my hon. friend for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) moved an amendment to the Address to His Excellency with regard to the maladministration of the Yukon. Mr. Bertram, who then sat in this House, moved an amendment to the amendment expressing satisfaction at the prompt action taken by the government with respect to this maladministration. Mr. Justice Britton, then a member of this House, voted in favour of the amendment of Mr. Bertram. Again on the 28th of June, 1899, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, the senior member for Pictou, moved a resolution with respect to the maladministration of the Yukon. A vote was taken on the 29th of June. It is true that Mr. Justice Britton did not vote on that occasion, but he was paired for the government with a member on this side of the House. On the 31st of May, 1900, the senior member for Pictou moved another resolution respecting the maladministration in the Yukon, and Mr. Justice Britton spoke upon the motion in opposition to the arguments which had been given to the House by the senior member for Pictou. At this time also he did not vote, but he was paired again for the government. On the 28th of June, 1900, the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) moved a resolution upon the same question, and again Mr. Justice Britton spoke in defence of the government upon this resolution, and voted with the government against the resolution.

Now, Sir, it seems to me that under the circumstances the choice of Mr. Justice Britton as a commissioner to investigate these serious frauds which are charged by supporters of the government is an unfortunate choice, unfortunate for this House, unfortunate for the country and unfortunate for Mr. Justice Britton himself. I would like to know what the terms of the commission are under which Mr. Justice Britton is acting. Have counsel been appointed to conduct the investigation, because we all know it is a complicated matter, it is a matter which requires a good deal of study and preparation, and such an involved case as this, without saying anything against gentlemen who do not belong to the legal profession, is a matter that should be placed in the hands of counsel so that a prepared brief could be made up and an effort made to get at the bottom of facts as to the manner in which these concessions were granted. Where is this commission going to sit ? We have seen it in the papers that Mr. Justice Britton is leaving Kingston for Dawson and that he expects to get there in twelve days. I remember that some time ago a challenge was thrown down to us here by the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) to go before this commission, make our accusations and try and support those accusations with evidence. Are we to leave our duties here while this House is in session and go to the Yukon at our own expense ? Are we to lose our time and not to perform the duties which are imposed upon us as members of this House and go to the Yukon to conduct this investigation or to lay our charges before the commission ? What opportunity is given us of conducting an investigation into these very serious matters ? It seems to me, that, parliament being in session, that this House being now met for the discussion of the affairs of the country, the proper course to have taken would have been to appoint a parliamentary commission to investigate these matters. If a parliamentary commission had been appointed during this session we could certainly have brought witnesses down from the Yukon territory at less expense than it would have cost us to go up there and conduct the investigation. And besides, as I mentioned when I read the questions put to the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross), this alleged fraud was committed not only in Dawson but also here in Ottawa. Then, it becomes, of course, the duty of Mr. Justice Britton and of this commission to sit also in Ottawa, but if this commission is to sit in Dawson and Ottawa also, certainly, that is another argument in favour of the appointment of a parliamentary commission which could go fully into this matter and report to the House, so that the House during this session would see whether or not any charges which have been brought against the government and the ministers are well founded and whether or not any of the hydraulic concessions were, as the resolution of the Liberal Club said, obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. Let me tell the House that there are ugly rumours afloat about the granting of this concession. I am not repeating anything that is not said on the street every day. I am not repeating anything that is not said in the corridors of this House, and it is constantly repeated that large sums of money have passed between the grantees of this concession and certain gentlemen in authority. These are questions which should, in the interests of this government be investigated also. If these rumours are not true, if these rumours are ill-founded, then, so much the better for the credit of the government and the credit of the country. I stand here as a member of this House wishing that the government for the credit of the country shall wash its hands completely of these accusations which have been brought constantly and persistently against the members of the administration. I beg, Mr. Speaker, to move the adjournment of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) were not so credulous as he has shown himself to be, and if he had exercised a little of the judgment with which Providence has endowed him, he would not have made the statements which he now makes. My hon. friend has been caught by a rumour and he has risen simply because he has read in the newspapers that Mr. Justice Britton has left for Dawson City. All I have to say is that if he has read this rumour he should have taken the trouble to verify it before saying what he has said, because I can inform him that there has been no communication with Mr. Justice Britton except to ascertain whether or not he is agreeable to serve upon the commission. Nothing has been done with Mr. Justice Britton up to the present time except simply to ask him whether or not he is willing to serve as a commissioner to go to the Yukon to inquire into the matters which have been referred to the commission. My hon. friend says now that there are rumours now going on the streets that large sums of money have been paid to high officials of this country, and he expresses the hope that the government will wash its hands of these accusations. The government will not appoint a commission simply to investigate rumours. If the hon. gentleman will take the responsibility of these rumours by making a statement upon the floor of the House and asking the judgment of the House upon it, the government would be prepared to appoint a commission to investigate his accusations. But the hon. gentleman is not serious, surely, when he tells us that we should appoint a commission simply to investigate wild rumours. I am about the corridors of this House as much as the hon. gentleman is, I am about the corridors every day in the week. I have not heard of these rumours. Perhaps they have been heard by those parties only who are interested in hearing them. So far as I am concerned, I have not heard these rumours. If any member of the House of Commons will take it upon himself, according to parliamentary usage, to give voice to such rumours, then he shall have all the investigation that he wants. In regard to the charges made by the hon. gentleman against Mr. Justice Britton, I think he must himself admit that they are equally uncalled for. One of the best members of the Ontario bench at the present time, I think is Mr. Justice Britton. Mr. Justice Britton is human, as my hon. friend has said. He may have had his political leanings and he had in the past, but is my hon. friend prepared to say that because a man has had political leanings he will not be an upright judge ? That would be a severe indictment against the bench of Canada, because men on this side or on the other side who have been appointed to the bench have had their political leanings, but still, I do not think that the bench of Ontario has ever been charged with political partisanship. I know that men have been appointed to the bench from the Liberal side and from the Conservative side who have in their day had strong political leanings, but I have never known of a judge who ascended the bench against whom the charge of partisanship has been laid. Though Mr. Justice Britton, when he was here, may have had political leanings, still, I am not prepared to say that Mr. Justice Britton would not be a most admirable man to perform the duties which he has to perform. Mr. Justice Britton has had large experience in the province of Ontario as a drainage commissioner ; he understands, therefore, something of hydraulics, he understands something of the questions which are to be investigated in the Yukon, and that is one of the reasons why we selected him to perform the duties which he is to perform. It is true that while Mr. Britton was here he voted on a motion which was made charging maladministration in the Yukon. When Mr. Britton gave that vote at that time, I do not know that he did not give the very vote which he should have given as events have developed. We have heard a good deal about maladministration in the Yukon, but these charges are now proved to be futile and worthless, to have nothing in them, and if anybody has to recant or apologize for the vote which he gave on that occasion, it is not those who voted as Mr. Britton did, but rather those who voted in favour of the motion against which he voted. I have nothing further to say in defence of the character of Mr. Justice Britton. I do not believe that there is a single man who ever appeared before Mr. Justice Britton since he has been on the bench, who will be ready to countenance the charges made against him by my hon. friend. As I understand, everybody in the province of Ontario is satisfied with his judicial spirit, with his impartiality, with his efficiency, and I have reason to believe that he will perform the duties of this commission as ably as he has performed his judicial duties. It is quite proper that before Mr. Justice Britton proceeds upon his mission, the terms of the commission should be laid upon the Table of the House. The commission shall be laid before parliament before Mr. Justice Britton proceeds to Dawson, and before he takes charge of the matter. We shall not avail of the invitation to invite the advice of parliament as to what should be the character and terms of that commission. We shall proceed according to parliamentary rules and usages. We are responsible to parliament for whatever we do. We exercise our duties to the best of our judgment, and when we have put them in concrete form we submit them to parliament and it is for parliament to pass upon them. If, when we bring down to parliament the instructions given to Mr. Justice Britton, they are not satisfactory to my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) it will be for him, if he chooses, to move that other instructions be given, but we are not prepared in advance to say that we should consult parliament as to what instructions should be given in this investigation. For these we are responsible. Unfortunately they cannot be brought down for a day or two, and the reason why they are not brought down to-day is that the gentleman we wanted to associate with Mr. Justice Britton has given us notification that it would not be convenient for him to serve upon that commission. I do not know that I have to say more than this at the present moment. The commission will be brought down in proper time, and if it is not satisfactory to my hon. friend it is open to him to move any kind of motion he wishes in connection with it. Just now I have only to protest against the assumption of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) that a man whose record has been most honourable up to the present time, is not fit to discharge the duties with which he has been intrusted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The House might be very much impressed with the earnestness of the right hon. Prime Minister, if we had not had some illustrations of the same earnestness on some somewhat similar occasions heretofore. Nothing could have been more delightfully earnest than the right hon. gentleman when he got up to tell the House some years ago how desirous he was that there should be a thorough and sweeping investigation into the West Huron and Brockville elections ; and when he assented at once to sending these matters to the committee, the right hon. gentleman was eloquent on the subject—the purity of parliament must be preserved; no stream could be pure that was polluted at the source and elegant phrases of that kind. And the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) was not far behind him. And then, when we went to that committee, this gentleman against whom no charge had been made by my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) but in reference to whom only certain facts have been stated—this gentleman was one of the men put forward on that committee to fight the battle of the government and to protect the men who were being charged as being criminals. He is one of the men who voted in that committee that my witnesses, whom I brought there, should not be heard until the criminals themselves had first been put upon the witness stand. I have nothing to say against Mr. Justice Britton, except that he was a very intense partisan on all occasions in this House; a very intense partisan indeed; a man whose character led him to be such; a man of very intense opinions. I do not know that I am saying anything to his discredit in that, because there are a great many intense partisans on both sides of the House here to-day; but I do say that it is a remarkable thing that Mr. Justice Britton who has just only left the arena of politics, should have been selected, and that the government should have seen fit to appoint him, before every other judge in Canada, for this particular purpose, especially when as pointed out by my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) he had been present during four debates on the maladministration of the Yukon; he had spoken in two of those debates, and he had voted or had been paired on every occasion when a resolution was proposed to the House, and on every such occasion he had voted against any such investigation as was demanded from this side of the House.

Now, these are not charges against Mr. Justice Britton; they are simply facts that no gentlemen in this House can controvert. Under the circumstances, I join with my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) in regretting that the government saw fit—having so wide a choice among the judiciary of Canada—to select Mr. Justice Britton for this particular occasion.

This matter has been brought up, and it has been discussed in parliament, and my right hon. friend says that the government would be prepared to grant any investigation that is demanded from this side of the House when charges are laid. Did we not lay charges from this side of the House once before, and did not my right hon. friend call upon his followers to vote them down, and were not they voted down, and was not the investigation that was proposed refused, although the hon. gentleman on this side who made the charges stated from his seat in parliament, that he would consider it his duty to retire from public life, and would consider himself incapable of holding any office in the gift of the Crown. unless he made good the charges he read before the Speaker of the House. And yet my right hon. friend stands up and says that if any hon. gentleman will make charges, that is all that is necessary, and an investigation will be granted at once.

The right hon. gentleman promised most definitely to bring this commission down not later than to-day. He said it would be brought down yesterday, but not later than to-day, and he tells us now that it has not been brought down because one of the commissioners has not consented to act. Is there any particular reason why we should not see the terms of the commission. Cannot the commission be brought down in blank, so that we can read the terms of it and understand whether there is any proper provision made for safeguarding the rights of the public. My right hon. friend must remember that very serious things have been said against this condition of affairs in the Yukon. I do not desire him to take the statements in the independent press; I do not desire him to take statements from people who are interested in any way as political partisans on the Conservative side; but I ask him to take the statements made by his own friends in the Yukon; by Liberal conventions; and I ask him to realize then, if he can, that this is somewhat a serious situation so far as the standard of public life in this country is concerned. For example, we have a convention of the Liberals of the Yukon in which the statement is made :

> That the commissioner should be requested to represent to the government that in the opinion of this meeting the insertion of such features in the Order in Council can only have been procured by gross misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment.

Further on

> Resolved, that in the opinion of this convention many of the concessions now held were obtained by fraud and imposition. That it is in the interest of this territory that such concessions should be annulled and to that end that an inquiry should be set on foot to ascertain the circumstances of any such fraud and imposition and action taken by the Attorney General of Canada in the premises.

It is the political supporters of my right hon. friend who are voicing the sentiments of the Yukon in this way. It is not any independent opinion; it is the opinion of those who are supporting this government; business men in the Yukon who sent the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) to represent them in this House. And the hon. gentleman from the Yukon (Mr. Ross) in adopting this platform used this language :

> I have received a copy of the platform adopted by the convention which honoured me by its nomination as a candidate for the House of Commons. I freely subscribe to every measure suggested therein.

And further, the question was put to him :

> Will you pledge yourself to advocate for and insist upon the punishment and exposure of officials both in Dawson and at Ottawa by whose fraud or culpable negligence or inefficiency those concessions were granted in the first instance or are now continued in force after the same by their terms should be cancelled.

And the answer given by the gentleman (Mr. Congdon) who is now the commissioner in the Yukon was, that Mr. Ross freely subscribed to everything stated in that platform. Under these circumstances, especially as a strong voice from the Yukon demanded that there should be an independent commission appointed, a commission in which the government, the opposition, the people of this country independent of the government or opposition should be represented, it might well have become the government and my right hon. friend to submit to the House in the first place, as he did in the case of the judicial investigation into the electoral frauds, the terms of the commission, in order that they might be discussed in the House, and that such steps might be taken as would insure a prompt and thorough investigation into these alleged frauds which have been referred to by the right hon. gentleman's friends in the Yukon. There is a precedent for that course in the proposal for the judicial investigation into the electoral frauds. In that case my right hon. friend brought down the commission before it was issued, in order that it might be discussed in this House. It was discussed in this House; suggestions were made, in some of which the late Minister of Justice, the late Hon. David Mills, acquiesced, and the commission was amended in accordance with those suggestions. In view of the gravity of the charges made on all sides in this matter, some of which have not been mentioned in the House, though I have no doubt they have come to the right hon. gentleman's own ears—at all events, they have appeared in the public prints in the Yukon—I say it might well have become the government to bring down the terms of the commission and have them discussed, as was done in the case to which I have referred. However, the right hon. gentleman has seen fit to adopt another course; he has seen fit to appoint a commission of his own choosing. What precautions are to be taken in the terms of that commission for safeguarding the public interest I do not know; because, although the commission was promised us to-day, we have not yet had an opportunity of perusing it. But, in view of the facts already brought to the attention of the House, the rumours, the more than rumours—the statements made in the public press of this country in regard to this matter—I think the right hon. gentleman has not taken the wise course in neglecting to take the House and the country into his confidence in regard to the terms of this commission, before he settled them and before he appointed commissioners for the purpose of making the investigation. Therefore, I think that my hon. friend from Montmorency was perfectly justified in bringing this matter to the attention of the House to-day, and that it would have been far better if the government had pursued in this case the same course which they pursued in the case to which I have referred.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I rise merely for the purpose of saying that I entirely concur in what has fallen from the lips of the hon. leader of the opposition, and particularly in the suggestions made by my hon. friend from Montmorency. The right hon. leader of the government is, I think, mistaken in saying that my hon. friend from Montmorency made a charge against Mr. Justice Britton. He made no charge of any kind at all; but what he desired was that the ordinary rules of administrative decency should be followed in this case as in every other. There is no question that in litigation, at all events in our province, Mr. Justice Britton would be debarred from sitting in this case, having on many occasions previously expressed an opinion, not exactly, perhaps, on the particular question involved, but on questions akin to it, and that he would have excused himself for that reason from sitting on the case. Under these circumstances, it seems only right and proper that my hon. friend from Montmorency should have conveyed to the government his sense, which is the sense of many other members of this House, of what is decent and proper in connection with this investigation. The right hon. leader of the government treats lightly the accusations which my hon. friend from Montmorency brought to the notice of this House. It may be that my right hon. friend is not aware of all the rumours, as he contemptuously calls them, which were circulated in respect to this affair; but I am perfectly convinced that if the right hon. gentleman were more in touch with what has been stated for weeks in regard to this matter in all the cities of the Dominion he would see that it is far too important a matter to be investigated by a man who has so recently occupied the position in politics which Mr. Justice Britton occupied. I am very pleased to hear from the right hon. gentleman that there has been as yet no acceptance by Mr. Justice Britton of this important mission; and I feel convinced, from my knowledge of that hon. judge, that taking all the circumstances into consideration, he will refuse to act on this commission, as I think it is his duty to do. There is another point which I think deserves to be brought to the attention of this House, and that is that Mr. Justice Britton, or whoever is going to investigate this matter, is to begin his investigation in the Yukon. Now, the Yukon is the country which has been aggrieved by this nefarious transaction, and it may be proper that that transaction should be investigated on the spot; but unless that investigation is made primarily here, and unless we have the opportunity of hearing, before those charged with the investigation, the people concerned in the transaction, most of whom are to-day in England, the real facts of the case will not be brought out. Because it must be not unknown to the hon. gentleman sitting on the treasury benches that serious charges have been made before the public—that it has been stated time and again by responsible men—and there is not a member of this House, I am sure, who will not corroborate what I say—that these concessions were only obtained by the payment of sums of money, as the hon. gentleman from Montmorency has said, to persons occupying high and controlling positions. The sum has been mentioned. It has been stated that a document was signed in connection with that transaction, and that that document is to-day in the city of London. Everybody knows that, and I demur to the proposition of my right hon. friend that a man is obliged, when he hears these rumours current in the public, when time and place and circumstances are stated—when it is stated, for instance, that my right hon. friend himself, when he was in England, was made aware of certain circumstances connected with this matter——

The PRIME MINISTER. I deny that absolutely.

Mr. MONK. So much the better, Mr. Speaker; but I say that has been stated, and I demur to the proposition that we are here for the purpose of bringing accusations.

The PRIME MINISTER. Do it, then. Do it, then.

Mr. MONK. We are here for the purpose of conveying to the House the sentiments of the public and what is stated by the public. I deny that my function is to go around finding accusations against ministers or against my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House. But when we hear these things stated constantly and continually, I say it is our duty, as representatives of the people, sitting here in the interests of the people, to bring these statements to the notice of the House and government; and it is then for the government to have the facts fully investigated. That is my interpretation of the duties devolving upon us, and I demur entirely to the proposition that when we make the House acquainted with matters charged not only by the Liberal Association of the Yukon, but in the public press, it is our duty to make an accusation when we have no personal knowledge of the facts; but it is the duty of the government in the presence of the public to have a full and complete investigation. That is my proposition. I venture to say that unless we have just such an investigation by men entirely disconnected with politics—and when I say that, I am casting no reflection on Mr. Justice Britton, for there is not a man whom I held in higher esteem when he sat in this House, but he has been too recently in the political arena for his judgment to give satisfaction to the public in a matter of this kind—I say that unless we have such an investigation, public opinion will not be satisfied. That is the ground I take. Unless we have the statements under oath of the men who engineered this concession, unless we have the explanation given by these men of this transaction, the public will not be satisfied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I only wish to make one reference to what the hon. gentleman has just said. The proposition advanced by the hon. gentleman is an amazing one to come from one who has had so much parliamentary experience. He says that if rumours are abroad reflecting on the integrity of any member of the government, and a member of parliament informs the House that rumours of this character are in circulation, the duty devolves on the government of appointing a commission for the purpose of having the matters investigated concerning which these rumours are circulated. Let me ask my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier and the hon. gentleman beside him if, in all their experience in public life, they have ever known of any such principle having been laid down before, or, if laid down, having been acted upon. Is it conceivable that the duty of gentlemen in opposition is to gather up all the garbage they can find and then constitute themselves into channels for spewing that out into parliament? And when they do undertake such a task, are we to be told that it is the duty of the government to appoint a solemn tribunal in order to find if there is any warrant for these slanders? Why, the government which would adopt any such course, would simply make itself contemptible in the eyes of the whole people. It would not only make itself contemptible but ridiculous, and would take up all the time it should devote to the discharge of the public duties in pursuing investigations of this character. One hon. gentleman after another gets up and says that there are rumours in London and in every city in Canada, that this or that minister has been conducting himself in a discreditable manner. They do not pretend to go into particulars, they simply state that they have been informed that certain discreditable things have occurred. They do not even say that they believe their information but that there are people who do believe it. If that principle were to hold, what would this parliament be doing? Why, every member of the House who approved of that sort of proceeding, who revelled in scandal, who wanted something to do, would take up some yarn and seriously retail it to parliament and then ask parliament to appoint a commission.

Mr. MONK. Why did you appoint a commission?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall tell my hon. friend in a moment. But I want to know whether a more absurd and more startling proposition ever emanated from any responsible member of parliament? I for one do not think that any member of this House, outside of my hon. friend, would seriously desire to commit himself to any such a declaration. Now, I shall tell the hon. gentleman why a commission was appointed. No commission was appointed or intended to be appointed for the purpose of holding any investigation into rumours which hon. gentlemen have brought here and which they say are in general circulation. No such commission is contemplated, but simply a commission for the purpose of deciding whether or not the method which the government has adopted for solving the problem of mining in the district is the best method that could be adopted. If hon. gentlemen opposite want to do any nosing around to see if they can get hold of something or other on which they can hang some reflection, they are at liberty to do so, but if they want any importance to be attached to their statements, they will have to take the responsibility of saying that they believe, at all events, that somebody has done wrong before they can ask, with any confidence or any reasonable degree of justice, for the appointment of a commission of investigation. Therefore I say that there is no good sense in the hon. gentleman's proposition.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). I listened with delight to the remarks just made by the hon. Minister of Railways, as I always do to all his statements. His speech was both eloquent and forcible, but it reminded me of the words of the old song: Like the flowers that bloom in the spring, it had nothing to do with the case. It was all very well for the hon. gentleman to call upon members of this side to make charges and assume full responsibility for matters of which they have no personal knowledge, but we were told that the government have appointed a commission. It was not we who asked the government to appoint a commission, but the government who announced that they had appointed one. From the lips of the right hon. the Prime Minister, we had that information, and accepting it as true, it cannot be out of place for hon. gentlemen on this side to endeavour, to the best of their humble ability, to assist the government in making that commission as efficient as possible. There are two possible objects of a commission. One is to disclose the truth and the other is to suppress it. Surely we are not to suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite have gone through the farce of appointing a commission in order to deceive themselves and the country and suppress the truth? Surely they cannot complain if we charitably assume that, in appointing a commission, they honestly desired to ascertain the truth? If that be the case, they cannot object if we make a few suggestions regarding certain features of this commission. I would be sorry to say a word against the hon. Mr. Justice Britton. No member of the bar of Ontario would support me if I were to say a word against his ability or integrity, but when we remember that Mr. Justice Britton who committed himself with regard to these charges when he accepted a seat in this House, we may assume, without any disparagement of his ability or integrity, that should his decision not be in conformity with the preconceived ideas formed by the general public, they will conclude that justice has not been done. And, Sir, we all know that it is almost as bad to have the public, or a large section of the public, believe that injustice has been done by the bench as it is actually to have such injustice done. Now, in the province of Ontario we have had a little experience of commissions. We have had commissions and commissions. We had a commission in the western part of the province appointed as this apparently is, a commission of judges, to investigate certain election matters. No provision was made for a prosecutor, no provision was made for the purpose of arranging to bring the charges home to the parties accused, no provision was made to have witnesses brought—simply one counsel appointed for the commission. From one end of the province to the other, Conservatives and Reformers all know that the only result was to bring not only commissions but the bench itself into discredit, because of the failure, in fact, the complete travesty of justice that was exhibited. We have had a second commission, a most important one in Toronto, the sittings of which have just been closed. Perhaps it would not be out of place, as the report of this commission is not yet down, to say that everybody thinks that that commission, composed of two of our most eminent judges, endeavoured to the best of their ability to elicit the truth no matter who might be hurt. In that case, we had those who were prosecuting and those who were defending, both appointed by the government, as though it were felt by them that the public, after all, were the people most interested, and that if counsel was appointed to assist one side, counsel should be appointed to assist the other side; if witnesses were wanted, it should not be left to the parties who might be making the charges to go to the expense of bringing those witnesses to prove a thing which, after all, was in the public interest. So, I venture to think that the right hon. premier would make similar provision to that of our recent Ontario commission and have counsel for the prosecution as well as counsel for the government, and give counsel for the prosecution power to bring witnesses and pay them and do whatever might be required to be done. I venture to say that when the commission made its report the public would have confidence in that report. I have here the remarks made by the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) as to the scope of the commission in this case now under discussion. In giving his views as to the scope of that commission, the hon. gentleman said :

I would also say to my hon. friend who tells us that he is so desirous of investigation that I am sure he must well know that it has been long the fixed intention of the government to hold such an investigation. The hon. gentleman must remember that, when the election was held, promises were given to the people of the Yukon that there would be a commission to inquire into the whole administration of that territory. There has been no opportunity since that date until the present to send in commissioners. I doubt if navigation is more than open, even if it is yet open. When the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Ross) returns to Ottawa—he is at present in British Columbia, I understand—and we can have the benefit of his advice, it is our intention to fully carry out the representations made to the citizens of the Yukon to have a full investigation into all charges or suspicions that hon. gentlemen may be good enough to mention or entertain in regard to any matters connected with the Yukon administration. I give that public notice to my hon. friend, so that, in addition to the advantage he has had of ventilating his views on the floor of this House, he will have an opportunity to make good, if he can, any of his charges or suspicions before a tribunal where newspaper extracts and letters will not be the only evidence, but where gentlemen will have the privilege of pledging their oaths to the truth of all they say.

It will be a matter of interest to this House, when the commission has actually been laid on the Table—and I presume some day it will be—if any of us live to that interesting day—to compare the utterance and the promises of the hon. Postmaster General with the statements just made by the hon. Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair). I am afraid that it will puzzle the ingenuity of even the right hon. the premier to reconcile the promise on the one hand and the statement on the other. I have no desire to go into the merits of the case, but surely it would not be out of place to remind hon. gentlemen opposite, when they so glibly call upon gentlemen on this side to make charges assuring us that there will be an investigation, of the tone and feeling on the other side of the water. It is but a short time since a British minister of the Crown, a gentleman against whom nothing was charged, but who simply happened to be a director in a company whose transactions had not been altogether creditable—though nobody, not even his enemies suggested that he had any knowledge or connection with these matters—yet, even of the company in which he was found it was deemed necessary, because of the pressure of public opinion, for him to resign his seat, which he promptly did. If that spirit were to be shown here, if hon. gentlemen read the newspapers in the Yukon, read the resolutions of the Board of Trade of Dawson, read even the utterance of their own political friends assembled in convention, I am sadly afraid there would be at least one vacancy behind my right hon. friend the premier before the present session is much older. We trust to that, hon. gentlemen opposite, in bringing down the commission which we looked forward to with hope and expectation, will help to realize the good opinion which we wished to have of them by allowing us to assist them in making this as perfect an investigation as can be made. For, surely, laying aside partisanship and viewing this simply as a Canadian, in view of the charges made in the British newspapers, in the newspapers of Dawson, by the Board of Trade of Dawson, by the vote lately taken by the elected members of the Yukon council, and by the statements made in this House this afternoon, there is no man who has pride in his birthright as a Canadian, who does not feel that, in the interests of our country, and as a defence of its fair fame and honour, these charges should be either proved or disproved at the earliest possible day.

Motion (Mr. Casgrain) to adjourn negatived.

ATLANTIC FAST LINE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) whether or not he has anything to communicate to the House with regard to the tenders for the Fast Atlantic Service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I expect to be in a position to do so within a day or two.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). There were three or four sections that were held in reserve until they might be considered and sections drafted. The first of these is clause (e) of section 2. It may be remembered that an hon. gentleman from Manitoba suggested that there were in his province political divisions which were not called counties, and that it might be desirable to add some words to meet such cases. I propose to insert, after the word 'division' in the seventeenth line, the words 'to that,' so that it will read 'or like division to that of a county.'

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If there is any division except that of a county in any province, would it not be better to use the name given to that division in the province itself?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are divisions like counties, but they are not called counties, they are called municipalities.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Then why not use the same technical name that is used in the province to designate the division ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This amendment I propose will sufficiently meet the case.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Now, in the same section, in clause (k), I propose to strike out the word 'passage' in the thirty-third line and insert the word 'public.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think clause (m) also stood over. The minister was going to consider what I said about giving that jurisdiction to county judges, because it would be a great saving of expense.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have considered that, and I think there would be no objection to it.

Mr. SPROULE. In clause (k), which reads :

The expression 'highway' includes any public road, street, lane or other public or communication other than a farm crossing.

It seems to me there might arise cases where it would be desirable to give the commission further power. For instance, a farmer might wish to subdivide his property and sell 50 acres of it. Now, the party who buys that 50 acres would also require a crossing over the railway, and the company are not always willing to give it, in fact sometimes they have refused to give it. It seems to me this commission ought to have authority to look into such cases and adjust them. There may be other cases where a portion of a lot is surveyed out for villa purposes, and another crossing is necessary over the railway. Also the railway has refused to allow travel over its road except by the farmer who owns the farm, and only for the purpose of doing work on that farm. This was done at West Toronto junction. Such cases are likely to arise, and we should provide that this commission shall have power to adjust such difficulties.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the law already sufficiently provides for what the hon. gentleman mentions. If he will turn to section 196 of this Bill, he will find that every railway company is required to make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried. If the company refuses, it can be compelled to do so by the commission.

Mr. SPROULE. The company claim that they are compelled to make only one crossing for a farm. If a farmer sells 50 acres off his farm, the company may refuse, and has refused, to make another crossing for the convenience of the new owner. Now, this clause (k) in the interpretation section, only provides for a public road or communication other than a farm crossing. I think the commission should have power to consider the right of a farmer to have more crossings than one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no provision in the Bill, except section 196, to deal with such cases, and that section makes it incumbent upon the railway companies to give the farmers a crossing. I do not know that we should require that the company should be compelled to give every person a crossing who wants it.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me state an instance that came under my own notice. The front portion of the farm was sold as far back as the railway, but the farmer reserved along one side of the line sufficient width for a road to the rear of 50 acres of his farm. It is doubtful whether the railway will consent to give him another crossing, because it is claimed that they gave him one crossing at the centre of the farm. He has reserved the right of way alongside the line fence of the farm, but part of the farm, because the balance of his farm is on the other side of the railway. I think he should be entitled to get a crossing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The right of way is reserved ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean that the person who owns the land behind owns the right of way ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That on one side he only owns enough land to give him the right of way, and that on the other side is a large portion of his farm ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The object would be to make connection between the two ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am inclined to doubt whether this section will cover that point, but I will consider it. I do not think we could alter the case by amending clause (k) of section 2.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Section 196——

Mr. SPROULE. Section 196 does not meet the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I admit it does not meet the case, but that is a proper clause to amend when we come to it, and before we get there we can think it over. I realize that what the hon. gentleman complains of is entitled to consideration. I beg to move :

That subsection (m) of section two be amended by inserting after the word 'superior' the words 'or county.'

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that section 4 be amended by striking out the last three lines of the section and substituting the following:

Such of the provisions of the special Act of the provincial legislature as are inconsistent with this Act and in lieu of any general railway Act of the province.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before passing from that section, I would like to call attention to these words in the third line: 'by any special Act of the parliament of Canada.' Does that refer only to Canada since the British North America Act was passed, in 1867?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but we have another clause that provides for railways incorporated prior to that time.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How do you apply this Bill to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which received its incorporation before 1867?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 306, which is not repealed, declares the Grand Trunk Railway to be a railway for the general advantage of Canada, and, therefore, it is subject to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The difficulty that the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) points out is this: In the old Act we named every road. The danger is that by cutting all that out and by attempting to cover the ground by a general clause we are rendering it open to question whether a railway such as the Grand Trunk Railway, which got its incorporation from the old province of Canada before Canada was confederated comes under the operation of this Bill. It is just one of those things that we have to watch very carefully. The old way may seem longer and more cumbersome, of naming the roads, but if we do not get our general language right, we may not cover the ground that is intended to be covered by these words.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is the hon. minister perfectly clear that the words 'by any special Act of the parliament of Canada' apply to legislation passed by the two old provinces?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think they do apply.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am sure of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 6 is adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to strike out the citations of the Acts as we go along.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do you think it wise to take them out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We always do.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is a very great advantage when you consolidate an Act to have the references at the end of a section to show where it came from. That subject was pretty carefully considered at the last revision in our own province and the references were put in. Where a statute was taken from the statutes of Great Britain, or of Ontario, or of our own province, the reference was put in. It frequently facilitates the work of any one who undertakes the construction of an Act, because he is able to know whether or not it is taken from any other enactment upon which there has been a judicial decision. I think that unless there is some objection you should leave the citations in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We might consider that point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) know what course is being pursued in respect to the present consolidation of the statutes?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are indicating the source. It is very convenient.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is very convenient.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have revised several of the most important statutes and we have followed that course. It is of very great convenience to the profession to be able to go back and find the origin of a statute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the Minister of Justice in his mind that they should be struck out as we go along.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They should be continued. Where you proceed as in the case of the state of New York and in Quebec by numbering the sections consecutively, they omit the reference, but for convenience it would be better to follow the old system and give the reference.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In one of the western states, opposite the section they give every judicial decision upon it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That has been suggested but that is going too far.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is absurd.

On section 7,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The suggestion was made yesterday by the hon. member (Mr. Ingram) that where electric railways were doing 'a freight business and charging tolls for the carriage of freight they ought to be included in the Bill. On consideration I have decided to propose an amendment to be inserted at the end of subsection one of section seven, which will bring such railways within the scope of the Act. This section provides that they shall be exempted, and I propose to add the words :

Unless such railways or tramways carry freight traffic and charge tolls therefor.

Mr. BARKER. If they carry freight will they be considered as works for the general advantage of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think so. If there is any doubt in the hon. gentleman's mind I will add some words to make it clear.

Mr. BARKER. I simply wish to know whether if they carry freight they shall be considered works for the general advantage of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, in crossing or connecting.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to strike out the words in brackets

Or in his absence the deputy chief commissioner.

and to substitute

And the chief commissioner when present shall preside.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 12,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose that this section shall read

Each commissioner shall during the term of his office reside in Ottawa in Canada or within five miles or within such distance thereof as the Governor in Council may at any time determine.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 21—staff of board,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose that the following be inserted as the first subsection :

The Governor in Council may, from time to time or as the occasion may require, appoint one or more experts or persons having technical or special knowledge of the matters in question, to assist in an advisory capacity in respect of any matter before the board.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not intended to give them any voice in the proceedings beyond advising ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not to be members of the board, but simply advisers, like assessors in the courts.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 24,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to have the words 'orders and' inserted after the word 'make.' The clause would then read :

The board may make orders and regulations—

—with regard to the matters covered by these various subsections.

Mr. BARKER. Are the words of this section broad enough to cover electric railways, just one car through the streets of a city or its suburbs ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

On section 24, subsection (a),

Limiting the rate of speed at which railways, trains and locomotives may be run in any city, town or village, or in any class of cities, towns or villages described in any regulation ; and if the board thinks fit the rate of speed within certain described portions of any city, town or village, and allowing another rate of speed for another portion thereof, which rate of speed shall not in any case exceed six miles an hour unless the track is properly protected.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to strike out all the words after 'thereof' in the thirty-third line. This would leave it to the discretion of the board what the rates should be. I do not think it right for us to limit their discretion too much.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not think we ought to go quite so far as that. These commissioners are given very wide powers under the Act; but this is a matter which involves such dangers to the travelling public in different localities that, I think, it would mean that the commissioners would be assumed to do what it would be almost impossible for any commissioners to do satisfactorily. It has been the law for a good many years under the present Railway Act that there must be some general limitation to speed in cities, towns and incorporated villages. The section of the present law which this is to replace says :

—which rate of speed shall not in any case exceed six miles an hour, unless the track is properly fenced.

Now, there have been a great many decisions in our courts under that section. Not to take up unduly the time of the committee, I would say generally to the minister, that these decisions have not been at all such as the railways can complain of. They have been against the protection of the public more than some of us representing the people here, and more than most of the people, think they ought to have been. We shall go still further if you take all limitation away and allow these commissioners to say what shall be the rate of speed at every crossing throughout the whole Dominion of Canada. With no limitation whatever they might have as many rates of speed as there are crossings. The minister will probably say: We must expect them to be reasonable and be governed by some regular rule. But it seems to me it would be better to carry out something like the old clause. If the minister thinks, for instance, that the limit of speed must be raised, that, living faster than we used to do, we should travel faster and be allowed to cross streets at a higher rate of speed in cities, towns and villages, I would be ready to consider whether it would be well to make the figure eight or ten miles an hour instead of six. But to say that this commission shall have no guiding rate at all, no standard that it shall be allowed to make any rate it sees fit at any crossing, that it is not bound to make them alike or consistent with one another, would be very much against the interest of the travelling public. Of course, there is no question about railways being liable to damages if they do not use ordinary caution. But damages do not pay for lives. There have been a good many accidents at these crossings at the older points in Ontario. At Grimsby, not very long ago, three young people from eighteen to twenty years of age were cut off in an instant while crossing Depot Street. They were returning from church and went behind a freight train which had just passed when an express train going the other way at a very high speed sent them into eternity in an instant. It is true that their people are entitled to recover damages for the loss of their lives; but that is not the point—the point is to avoid killing people. The Act is not provided as a means of enabling people to get money for the loss of life, only because the railways are responsible, and as the way to make them careful is to make their carelessness cost them money.

But that is no real quid pro quo, that is no real compensation to anybody for the loss of those that are dear to them. The travelling public who cross a railroad must be made safe as well as those who travel on the railroad at a high rate of speed. We have heard a good deal lately in regard to the safety of the travelling public on trains. But there is another class of the travelling public that has to use the highway when trains happen to be passing, and they have just as much right to be protected, and the commission for that purpose ought to be restrained in some way. If the ministers were to make a change of that rate from six to eight or ten miles an hour, I would not have so much to say about it; but I protest against striking out the last words of this section and permitting the commission to allow a railroad train to run at any rate of speed the commission may see fit. I do not think this commission will go to every village, town and city in the country to look at the different crossings, and unless they do, they cannot be certain as to what is the proper rate of speed for the train to make in such town or city. All railroad crossings are not equally dangerous, they are dangerous according to the lay of the land, and to other local circumstances. Sometimes a train comes into view all at once, at other times a train can be seen coming for half a mile. Therefore the danger is not at all the same at all the crossings. I submit there is no way of deciding as to what rate of speed is safe at any crossing unless you see that crossing itself, and see the geography, the hills, the hollows, the levels, the buildings, the trees and the state of the land. Therefore it would be a mistake to allow the commission to give the companies power to run at any speed they see fit unless they do so under certain restrictions. To give the commission power to let them run at any rate they like, without any guide or restraint, is asking the commission to do what is practically impossible; they could not do it unless the trains were limited to a comparative low rate of speed of six or eight miles an hour. Unless the minister thinks that trains should be allowed to run much faster than that, he ought to make this Bill read so that the commission should be guided as they are under the old Act.

While on this section I would like to point out that the words in the first line 'limiting the rate of speed at which railway trains and locomotives may be run in any city, town or village,' those words 'railway trains and locomotives' are rather inapt in view of the language of the Act. He has amended the first line by making it read that the board may order and make regulations limiting the rate of speed at which railway trains and locomotives may be run. I want to point out that the word 'trains' in his interpretation clause has a much wider signification than the words 'railway trains and locomotives.' I suggest that he use the word 'trains' instead of 'railway trains and locomotives,' because the word 'trains' in the clause (cc) of the interpretation section includes any engine, locomotive or other rolling stock. Now any rolling stock, whether it be railway trains or locomotives as described in this section 24, ought to be governed by the section, and the word 'trains' would make it cover all other rolling stock such as electric railway trains or single cars. The words 'railway trains and locomotives' have no extended meaning in this Act, they are not described in any interpretation clause. Therefore, in reading section 24 we really seem to be given to railway trains and locomotives their ordinary meaning, whereas if we use the word 'trains' it will include engines, locomotives and other rolling stock, the word 'trains' would cover everything that passes over the road. I would also point out that in the present Railway Act, where the words 'railway trains and locomotives' are used, they have not the same meaning in the existing law as in the Bill before us. Therefore, to make this section effect what it is designed to effect, that is to protect people at crossings by giving the commission power to regulate the speed, it must mean anything that crosses in the shape of an engine or anything that is used upon a railway. We should either say 'railway trains, locomotives or any rolling stock,' as suggested by the hon. member for East Elgin, or else give the word 'trains' the meaning it has in the interpretation clause.

Mr. INGRAM. This is a very important part of the Bill, because the railways throughout the country are doing their utmost to increase their rate of speed in order to compete with each other. The public generally want to travel at a very high rate of speed. I want to point out that if we frame a law confining railways to a speed of six miles an hour in villages, towns and cities, then the railways cannot run at the speed they are scheduled to run at the present time. There are no railway rules and regulations made in this country that can be carried out to the letter. Every railway in this country is violating from day to day the regulations that we have laid down for them. No railway in this country can be run by the regulations that are in existence to-day. I want to point out that if the public want railway trains to run at a high rate of speed, then it must be proper to increase the rate at which they should pass through cities, towns and villages. There is no use in framing regulations that will be a farce, because they will be a farce if they are violated. In the next place I want to say that if we are going to restrict railways to a speed of six miles an hour, when an employee is put on an engine for the purpose of taking a train through to its destination within a time which will require a rate of speed far exceeding the rate which we lay down, then if an accident occurs in the city, town or village, it is not the poor employee who should suffer but the railway company itself, because it is the railway company that gets the benefit of the increased rate of speed. At present, whenever a railway accident occurs in a city, town or village, the employee is brought forward at the coroner's inquest, the rules and regulations are produced by the company, and if it can be shown that the employee has exceeded the rate of speed laid down in the rules and regulations he is made to suffer for the accident. That is unfair to the employee, because unless he has made the rate of speed required by the company, they say to him: We don't want your services any longer, and we will get somebody else. For my part I am opposed to putting this imposition upon the railway employees. If a company and the traveling public get the benefit of increased speed I see no reason why the employee should be made to suffer. I think if this rate of speed is entirely too low in view of the clamour in this country from the public for an increased rate of speed on railways, I feel more like increasing the rate to twelve miles an hour than making it six miles an hour. We have a large number of railway crossings that are not properly protected. It will properly be a subject for parliament to consider whether railway crossings in thickly settled districts, or in towns and villages, are properly protected in order that this increased rate of speed may be brought about. These are things that parliament may deal with, and I do not want to shoulder the blame on the innocent party.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has not quite understood my contention. I am not objecting to the railways running a mile a minute if they want to, if they properly protect their crossings by watchmen and gates. The hon. Minister of Railways has struck out the rate of speed mentioned in this subsection: 'which rate of speed shall not in any case exceed six miles an hour, unless the track is properly protected.' I am perfectly willing that the rate shall be as fast as they want it if the track is properly protected, but they must protect their crossings with watchmen and gates so that people going along will be warned that the train is coming and be compelled to stand still until the train has passed, just as is now done in the most thickly populated parts of large cities. I want to put myself right and to point out to my hon. friend that he is wrong in his understanding of my contention upon this matter. I am not undertaking to say that he is wrong in what he was saying, but he is wrong in his statement of what I am contending for. I am not objecting to railways running as fast as they choose as long as they are protecting their crossings. This Bill says that the rate of speed shall not exceed six miles an hour unless the track is properly protected. The words in the old Act are 'properly fenced,' but I think the words 'properly protected' are better, because a judge will decide the question with reference to whether they have watchmen and gates to protect these crossings when the train is going along. It matters not at what rate of speed they run as long as nobody can get hurt. I am quite willing, if the speed of trains is required to be increased in the interests of the country, that it shall be increased, but if the railways are going to get permission to increase the speed they should be willing to go to the necessary expense to employ a few more men, a few carpenters to make gates and a few more watchmen, costing a few dollars extra, to properly protect their tracks. There may be some tracks which are properly protected almost by nature.

There will be some tracks in regard to which the railways will not have to go to so much expense in protecting as others. But if they are to be allowed to run at any rate of speed they choose all we ask is that the tracks shall be properly protected. The hon. minister strikes out the words 'which rate of speed shall not in any case exceed six miles an hour unless the track is properly protected.' Then the door is to be wide open for the commissioners, entirely unrestrained, to allow the railways to run at any rate of speed, and they are given to understand by virtue of this change in the law that they are not required to place any protection at these crossings. One of the commissioners is to be a lawyer, and we must assume that the commission will be composed of intelligent men. They will probably know what the old Act was and it will be drawn to their attention that the old law required the rate of speed to be not more than six miles an hour unless the tracks were properly protected. When they know that this has been expunged, when they know that parliament has seen fit to strike this out, if the crossings were not properly protected, they would be apt to say : We are not supposed to bother our heads about the question whether there is protection or not. I think it would be quite right that they should say that, because parliament has not required that the railways should protect their crossings. If the minister were to make the rate of speed eight or ten miles an hour, I would not quarrel with it so much. Perhaps eight or ten miles an hour is not an unreasonable speed, because there is a case pending in the Supreme Court now against the Grand Trunk Railway where the rate of speed was twenty miles an hour. The jury thought it was an unreasonable rate of speed at which to go through the village of Forest, and the question is now before the Supreme Court on the appeal from the Court of Appeal of Ontario, which decided in favour of the relatives of the people killed. It is not quite free from doubt what would be held to be a reasonable or an unreasonable rate of speed, but if the minister were to change it to eight or ten miles an hour, I would not have so much objection as to striking out the limitation altogether, and thereby to say that the commissioners need not bother themselves about whether the crossing is protected or not. If you leave it as the Bill was drawn you will require protection to be provided at crossings where they exceed six miles an hour. ' I think that would be right. If they do not have their crossings protected they must not go faster than six miles an hour, but if they want to run faster than six miles an hour, thirty-five, or forty, or fifty, or sixty miles an hour, they must have watchmen and proper protection at each crossing so that people will know that the train is coming. I think the section as drawn is better and more in the interests of the people than if the amendment prevails.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member, I think, perhaps, has not fairly grasped the whole scope of the Bill. This present section with which we are dealing is very similar to the clause in the present Act and is professing to deal with the rates of speed when trains are running ' in any city, town or village, or in any class of cities, towns or villages, prescribed in any regulation.' It is not dealing with the general rate of speed. It does not touch the speed at highway crossings or is not intended to. That is dealt with elsewhere. The question in my mind is whether or not it will be desirable to limit the number of miles or the rate of speed in this section. When you are declaring the jurisdiction of the railway commission, it is a question whether it would not be a proper thing to enact that practically this should be left in their discretion to a degree. The discretion which the board would be enabled to exercise in such cases would be, not the discretion to allow the trains to be run at any rate of speed which the railways might wish, not even to exercise a discretion to allow trains to run at what would be an abnormal rate of speed going through any district, but the rate of speed limited in the Act. If you turn to section 227 you will find that it is provided that :

> No trains shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than——

In the present Bill it is six miles an hour. On further consideration, I would say that six miles an hour is too slow a rate.

Mr. INGRAM. I can walk as fast as that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it should be higher. My own idea would be that is should be ten miles. Perhaps it should be twelve. It is a matter that I have no very strong view about either way. We have enacted that the rate of speed shall not exceed that in these particular classes of districts. The discretion of the commissioners comes in here. They may say that circumstances are so exceptional and of such a character that trains should not run up to the rate of speed laid down by the Act, because the Act says that they shall not go at a greater rate of speed than that. A discretion should be exercised, and I think it should properly be left to the commission to say whether the rate of speed might not be reduced.

On subsection (e) of section 24,

Mr. INGRAM. Would that mean that if they provide proper screens in the opinion of the commissioners, they will be removed from any liability under the law.

Mr. BARKER. That must be the effect of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A great many fires have occurred because the best class of nettings are not used.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I doubt if the language would necessarily take away the liability.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to amend subclause (f) by adding the words

Requiring the company to use or exempt the company from using upon the railway or any portion of it within such time or during such period as the board may deem expedient.

Mr. INGRAM. What becomes of the Bill of the member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) which the minister said in the committee he would consider. The minister does not specify that the latest equipment shall be applied to these cars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When we come to the proper stage in this Bill I propose to insert, if not all, many of the clauses in the Bill of Mr. Smith of Wentworth, just exactly as he has proposed them.

Mr. MONET. 'Do I understand from the Minister of Railways and Canals that if the commission does not think fit to order the railway company not to use the most modern invention, then if the company causes damage to any private property it would not be held responsible. Why should we not take charge ourselves of that part of the law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I propose. I propose that the board shall have power under subsection (e) to require the use of the most modern appliances.

Mr. MONET. Suppose the railway commissioners would not think well to give such instructions to railway companies. In case of Roy, the Privy Council held that the plaintiff suffered damages, but as the railway company had fulfilled the obligations of the Railway Act they were not responsible. I suppose the company could not now say under this Bill, that a government commission was given power to tell them what to do, and if the commission did not order them to do something they would not be responsible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that would follow.

Mr. MONET. In the case of Roy, the Privy Council held that as the company had fulfilled all the obligations of the Railway Act they could not be held responsible for damages. I presume that if the company was not ordered by the railway commission to do certain things for the protection of private property, then they would contend that they were not liable to damages, because they did not do what they were not ordered to do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to do that in this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to direct the attention of the minister to the language of this amendment. As it reads, it seems to be a rather remarkable provision. I suppose the idea is to provide that within a certain period the railway shall use these appliances; but the language used does not seem to convey that meaning.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The idea is that the board shall have the power, at certain places and within certain periods, to require the appliances proper and necessary to use, and that in certain other circumstances the railways shall be exempt from using them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will you not cover the case by simply requiring the company within a certain time to use these appliances?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so. I would like to go over the clause again.

Section allowed to stand.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the minister has perhaps forgotten the other argument which I made besides the one he overruled, in regard to subsection a; where the words 'railway trains and locomotives' are used instead of the word 'train' which, in the interpretation clause, includes any engine, locomotive or other rolling stock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the word 'train' would cover everything. I presume that if we were drafting the section anew, that word would be used; but we have just copied the old clause as it was.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In passing over the Act, the minister forgot the promise he made yesterday in reference to section 6, referring to the question of scheduling the railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have that still in mind.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that the hon. minister is not going to take up this Bill 'after eight o'clock, but that we are going into supply. It is within a few minutes of six and too late to take up another clause, and I want to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to what he said on Friday night:

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not been quite clear this afternoon during the discussion, as to whether my estimates were under consideration or whether the Railway Bill was being dealt with. The debate has passed from one theme to the other, so that it was almost impossible to discriminate as to what was in the minds of the gentlemen who are addressing the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. You did the most of that yourself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the committee hear my hon. friend deliberately and coolly state that I occupied the most of the time of the House.

I went over 'Hansard,' and I find that the hon. Minister of Railways occupied 458 lines, the hon. leader of the opposition 313 lines, the hon. member for Lincoln 270 lines, the hon. member for Kent 212 lines, the hon. member for Guysborough 220 lines, the hon. member for Cape Breton 90 lines, and the hon. member for South Lanark, the hon. member for Hamilton and one or two others less than this. But 50 per cent more of the space of 'Hansard' was occupied by the hon. Minister of Railways himself than by any other person. So I was quite justified in making the remark I did, that he had occupied most of the time himself. He has done much better this afternoon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend certainly does excel as a statistician.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the various provinces and in the North-west Territories, $1,059,865.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. gentleman the information he promised about the port of Gananoque ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson). The port of Gananoque is doing very well. In 1894-5 the revenue was $17,202.20 and the expenditure was $1,811.77. In 1901-2 the revenue was $20,591.61 and the expenditure $1,795.15. So that the revenues increased between those periods $3,000 and the expenditure is a little less. The hon. gentleman has a port which is very well and economically worked. The expenditure is about 8 per cent of the revenue.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of this $80,000 increased expenditure over last year will go in the province of British Columbia for salaries, &c.?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. About $6,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How do the revenues of the two years compare ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Last year the revenue was $2,354,404, and the year before it was $2,358,842, or about $4,000 less last year as compared with the previous year.

Mr. BLAIN. How is it that the expenditure is increasing in British Columbia when the revenue is growing smaller ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We felt that our officers were not paid sufficiently, and we advanced their pay. The cost of living there is very high. There was also an increase of business at Vancouver and Victoria, and we had to get some extra help. There must have been a decrease somewhere else to bring down the total.

Mr. BLAIN. How is it that the revenue decreased in British Columbia and increased in every other province ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know that I would have any means of ascertaining that more than the hon. gentleman himself. Perhaps trade in British Columbia has not been quite as brisk as in other places. Of course, many duties are collected in one province on goods which may be consumed in another. For instance, duties are collected on goods at the port of Montreal which go into all the provinces. Still the returns would seem to indicate that the province of British Columbia has not been quite so prosperous as some of the others.

Mr. SPROULE. The other night we inquired of the hon. Minister of Militia if the government were prepared to lay on the Table the report of the commission on the Martineau matter, and he replied that when the hon. the Finance Minister returned that report would be submitted. Is my hon. friend the Minister of Finance prepared to lay it on the Table now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will take steps to have the report printed and submitted to the House immediately.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Some time ago I brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs a petition for the establishment of a port of entry at Dauphin. As the hon. gentleman is aware, the town of Portage la Prairie, which is the nearest port of entry, is some 115 or 120 miles from the town of Dauphin, and the merchants of the latter are seriously handicapped by having the port of entry so far removed from their district. The town is a very important one, having 1,200 of a population and growing very fast.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My impression is that I have a report on this matter, but I have it not under my hand. I shall inquire about it and bring it down tomorrow. There are many places claiming to be made ports of entry, and we are doing all we can, year by year, to meet all these demands. I may say that since I have had charge of the department, I have established in the North-west Territories ports of entry at Edmonton, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat, Strathcona, Banff, Stand-off, Wapella, Whitewood, Qu'Appelle, Wolseley, Moosomin, Indian Head, Broadview, Grenfell, Qu'Appelle Station, Battleford, Olds, Canmore and South Qu'Appelle. In Manitoba we have opened offices at Melita, Morden, Rapid City, Neepawa, Selkirk, Manitou, Sprague, Mowbray, Stonewall, Gladstone, Minnedosa, Birtle and Yorkton. So that the hon. gentleman will see that we are endeavouring to give facilities as fast as we can.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have before me the estimates for 1895-6 and 1896-7, and I see that in those times it was the rule to divide the customs estimates according to provinces. For instance, in 1895-6 Nova Scotia required $108,000; New Brunswick, $88,000; Prince Edward Island, $16,000; Quebec, $201,000; Ontario, $286,000; North-west Territories, $3,000; British Columbia, $60,000. Of course, I give only the round figures. The columns in the estimates show the increase or decrease for each province. Now, the hon. gentleman bulks the whole Dominion in one sum. In the estimates for 1896-7 there is a record giving the total estimates for the outside service for each port, with a comparison of the estimate for the previous year. But now the hon. gentleman comes down this year and asks for an increase of $80,000, without any details given, and he has been increasing for the last five or six years, until now the total increase is about $500,000 a year. We ought to have the details as in the old estimates. He asks a bulk sum this year of $1,059,865, being an increase of $80,000 over last year, with no details given. Why has the wholesome rule of former years been departed from under the direction of the minister?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is not a new departure.

Mr. TAYLOR. It began with the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) himself.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I fancy I am responsible for it. But the change was made several years ago, and has been sanctioned by the committee. It is very difficult to estimate exactly what you need for each province. If, under the old system, we had a surplus of $8,000 in British Columbia, and were short estimated by that amount in the province of Quebec the Auditor General would not allow us to use that $8,000, but we had to have a vote with the sanction of the House. When the amount is voted in a lump sum, we are able to avail ourselves of the vote for any of the provinces. With reference to the ports, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) will find the receipts by ports in the Auditor General's Report, and I think they are also in the Trade and Navigation returns.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is quite true of the receipts, but, in the year 1895-6 and 1896-7, we have the cost for each port. Take Halifax for instance. The vote there was $44,000 for permanent salaries, $2,000 for extra services and $2,000 for office rent and contingencies—total $48,000. But the hon. gentleman has changed it so that he can run the whole amount through, leaving the committee in the dark as to the details. There should be a detailed statement by provinces and ports. As it is now arranged, we could spend the whole amount in one province and none in the other, and the Auditor General could find no fault. The House is left in the dark until they see the details in the Auditor General's Report a year or two hence—because we only get the facts up to the 30th of June of the year before, when the expenditure is an old story. But if we had the details down in black and white when we are voting the estimates, we could see in what provinces and in what ports the increases were taking place. Now, with a great flourish of trumpet the hon. gentleman speaks of the larger amount he is collecting as reason for the increased expenditure. But when I ask him to bring down the facts for one specific port, he shows, on the one side an increased revenue, but, on the other side an actual decrease in expenditure. If that is the case in one port, why not in others, and why should there be an increase of half a million dollars as compared with the expenditures of 1895-6? Under the present system we cannot tell whether the money is required or not. My own opinion is that the hon. minister is extravagant in asking us to vote such a large sum as compared with that of a few years ago.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I am not extravagant.

Mr. TAYLOR. The vote looks like it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No. The money has to be spent. The men render the service, and you have to pay them. There are quite a number of new ports such as those I have mentioned in the North-west Territories, and we have new ports in all the provinces. With regard to Gananoque, the port to which the hon. gentleman has referred, that port is not singular in the showing that is made. No matter how small the business is you must pay the officer a salary. In some of the maritime provinces ports the amount is as low as $400. The officer is not fully occupied, but he cannot take up any other occupation. In such a port there might easily be an increase of several thousand dollars without any necessity for increasing the expenditure. In the port of Montreal there has been an increase of about $6,000,000 collected in 1895 to about $10,000,000 in 1902—an increase of about $4,000,000. Yet, the cost of collection there is increased by only about $20,000. But it is plain that there must be an increase of expense there. The same is true of Vancouver, Winnipeg and all our larger ports. It is in these that the increase of expenditure takes place, and if hon. gentlemen will consider how many large ports there are they will see that the increase I have asked for is not so large as to be justly called extravagant.

Mr. TAYLOR. It seems to me quite unfair for the hon. gentleman to say that because he has collected so much more money and has increased the expenditure by only a certain percentage, therefore he is not extravagant. Yet the hon. gentleman dwells on that. And, in the case of Gananoque, and, no doubt many other ports, there is the increase in receipts without any increase of expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is regrettable that the hon. Minister of Customs has changed the old system of keeping the accounts. If his reason for the change is held to be good, we might as well apply it to the Public Works Department and vote a lump sum to the Public Works regardless to where it is to be spent, leaving the minister to apply it to any works he may see fit. But it did away with the possibility of ascertaining whether the money is spent economically. If we had the reports we could compare them with previous years and ascertain what work was done at these ports, the number of hands employed, and the amount of collections. We could tell pretty well whether the business was extravagantly conducted or otherwise, now we cannot do it. It may be it would be a little inconvenient to satisfy the Auditor General, but even that is not a sufficient reason for changing the accounts, because it leaves us in the dark in the endeavour to ascertain whether there is extravagance in any particular port.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to explain some of the changes which have taken place in Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know that I could give the hon. gentleman all the changes that have taken place in Montreal. It is a large port. I think no important changes have been made. There have been one or two superannuations, and some vacancies by death have been filled, and some extra men have been put on as the business has increased. I could give a list of the new officers that have gone on during the year.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I think the hon. gentleman might give us the names of those who have been superannuated. But if he cannot do that I will not insist, but I may ask him later on.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister surely does not expect to get this item through without giving us explanations of the increases that have been asked for ? I want to get a whole lot of information about the port of Toronto, about the appointments, about the number of superannuations, the names of those who have been appointed, whether they have passed the civil service examination, and a whole lot of information like that. I think the minister should allow this item to stand until he brings all that information down. We are going it blind if we do not get it. Now in 1896-97 the expenditures in Toronto were $67,687. What are they to be next year ? What is the cause of the increase ? How many additional officers have been appointed ? Who have received an increase of salary, and how long have they been in the service ? How many are in the service, and for how long a time, who have not received an increase, and why have they been overlooked ? These are certainly very reasonable requests.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. With reference to superannuations in Montreal, there has been only one, Mr. Lavoie, replaced by Mr. Menier.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Could the hon. gentleman give me the names of the new men he has employed this year ? If he has not got them under his hand, I will ask him later on. I am in no hurry.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. These are the names of the new men that have gone on in Montreal : William Mayberry, E. Redmond, A. Demers, L. A. Beaulac, H. Lajoie, A. Boyd, S. H. Carpenter, A. Fichaud and John Hamilton. Those are put on for the season of navigation.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. These are extra hands?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. Very few changes are taking place. Now about Toronto. In a port where there are two or three hundred employees, I have not myself been put through a course of questioning with reference to each one of these employees before. It is rather new to me, and it would be more convenient if the hon. gentleman would mention any particular cases where he thinks that an injustice has been done, and I will try to give him the information. But it would take a long time to give all the information in detail that he has asked for. He will find much of it in the civil service list, so far as the permanent employees are concerned, he will see the number of years they have been employed and the salaries they are getting. What we call temporary clerks of course he will not find on the list. But I will be glad to give the hon. gentleman the information with reference to any particular case. I can give him the names of the new men that have been appointed. All the permanent appointments must have passed the civil service examination. But they are generally appointed as temporary at first, and after they have passed the qualification they are placed on the permanent list by Order in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. It would be interesting to get the number of those who have not yet passed the civil service examination. I would like also to know the ages of the new appointments.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There are 108 at the port of Toronto, ninety-two are permanent and sixteen what we term temporary.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Why was Mr. Lavoie pensioned ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He had reached a great age, and had been more than thirty-five years in the service.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How old was he when he was superannuated ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I may say to my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's that he was 69 when he was superannuated. At the port of Toronto there are Thos. Armstrong, who is acting as a landing waiter, appointed on April 15, 1880 ; James Brooks, packer, salary $500, appointed in 1901 ; E. L. X. Jarvis, messenger, appointed 1897.

Mr. KEMP. Has the hon. minister the ages of these gentlemen ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) will make the calculation himself, he will find the ages. Armstrong was appointed in 1880 and he is acting yet. He only gets $320. Then, James Brooks, who is receiving a salary of $500, was born on March 14, 1840, and he was appointed 9th April, 1901. E. L. Darby gets $450, he was born September 20, 1879, and he was appointed July 27, 1897. Geo. A. Cresman gets $600, born November 29, 1874, appointed July 10, 1901. W. J. McCleary gets $600, was born in 1868 and appointed in 1899. Geo. Forrest gets $600, was born in 1836 and appointed in 1900, Geo. M. Biggs gets $300, was born in 1859 and appointed in 1900. John V. Horn gets $500, was born in 1866 and appointed in 1901. A. B. Stanbury, appointed 1901, gets $600 and A. R. Cochrane, appointed 1902, gets $300. And then it follows on.

Mr. CLARKE. How many of these gentlemen have not passed the civil service examinations ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. None of them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Some of them are 67 years of age when they were appointed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If they pass the civil service examination, and they are known to be good officers, we put them on the permanent list.

Mr. SPROULE. How can you do that when the Civil Service Act says that they cannot be appointed if they are over 35 years of age.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That only refers to the inside service. It does not apply to the outside service. I think hon. members are pretty well satisfied because this was debated the other night, and, Mr. Chairman, you might as well declare the item carried and we will proceed with the next item.

Mr. BLAIN. This is an item in regard to which we can get some information upon another important point. The item is a very large one and there is a very general complaint that there is a large number of officers appointed in the hon. minister's department who have not passed the civil service examination. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give us a general statement of how many officers are in his employ, how many have passed the civil service examination, and how many have been appointed in the last five or six years who have not passed the civil service examination.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course, we are dealing with what we call the outside service. The civil government estimate was passed some time ago when I gave the hon. gentleman the information he asks now in regard to the inside service. There are 445 temporary employees throughout the Dominion and 1,172 on the permanent list. There is a total of 1,617 officers in the outside service altogether.

Mr. BLAIN. How many out of that number have not passed the civil service examination ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The collectors and subcollectors do not have to pass. None of them have passed. The inspectors do not have to pass.

Mr. CLARKE. Are they included in the list of 400 odd ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The collectors are not. The temporary officers, I think as a rule, you will see, have not passed the examination.

Mr. BLAIN. How many are there ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Four hundred and odd.

Mr. CLARKE. More than 25 per cent of the service have not passed the civil service examination.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. As I said the other night, it would please me if these officers could pass the civil service examination and go on the permanent list. Temporary officers are at this disadvantage that if they are sick they do not get paid while they are absent as they do if they are on the permanent list, and they are not entitled to the three weeks holidays that the others get. Some of these officers are just as good officers as those on the permanent list. There are men who were appointed away back in 1880 and 1882 and from that time down. They have been in the service for from ten to fifteen years, and they are just as good officers and do the actual work of the department as well as if they had pased the civil service examination. They could have passed this examination when they came from school, but now they will not try it. I would like, speaking for myself, if parliament would pass a law that would somehow enable me to put all these men on the permanent list.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to express my disapproval of that kind of procedure. If we are to have a civil service examination and the employees of the different departments are called upon to pass this examination, I think it is unfair to those who go up for examination and pass that other men who are not called upon to pass the examination are put into positions, and especially when we have a large number of men who hold the proper qualification, having passed the examination, out of employment at the present time. I think the government should either abolish the civil service examination or see to it that the men who are appointed to the different offices in the departments should have the proper qualification under the examination I have referred to.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The trouble is that a great many of these men have been employed for years. In Montreal alone there are twenty-one of these temporary employees and they were there when I came into office. They are not all new appointments. We continue them and we have to continue them as temporary except they pass the examination. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is desirable that they should pass if they can.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the future ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are trying to do as well as we can. We are not perfect in the direction the hon. gentleman speaks of.

Mr. CLARKE. Are there any of these gentlemen who have been appointed since 1897 on the temporary list who have passed the preliminary examination ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not think so. We appoint them as temporary and then they pass. If a man wants to be a tide waiter or a packer he would have to pass the preliminary examination.

Mr. CLARKE. The only qualification the government requires now from these officials is the influence of political friends to get them in. They do not have to pass an examination now and the minister appears to be ignoring the Civil Service Act altogether. It is a dead letter in some places.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. It is so far as the port of Toronto is concerned. A number of men appointed there have not passed the preliminary or qualifying examinations. It is not unreasonable that this item should stand until we know the qualification of these men and their ages and all about them. What part of the $80,000 is to be spent in increasing the salaries of officers, and what officers are to have their salaries increased ? I am told that some of the men now acting as assistants and subordinates are getting as much if not more salary than the gentlemen whom they are assisting. The minister has the information at his finger ends in the department, and we should have it before we can intelligently discuss this very large item of over $1,000,000. The item had better stand until we get the information. If I had nothing else to do I could go to the Civil Service list and pick out those who are in the service of the government, but even that would not give me the temporary clerks because their names do not appear there, and there is a large percentage of them at the port of Toronto. I appeal to the Minister of Customs and to the Minister of Finance if it is not a reasonable request that this item should stand until we get this information, and get it not only with regard to Toronto but with regard to all these large ports : Montreal, Vancouver, Halifax and St. John ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The document I was reading before gave their ages, the date of their birth and so on. I will give the hon. gentleman the officers employed in Toronto. Thomas Armstrong, acting landing waiter, $1 per week day ; A. Calder, acting messenger, $500 a year ; E. L. Darby, acting mesenger at $400 per year ; W. J. McCleary, acting preventive officer, $600 a year ; George Evans, acting landing waiter, at $600 per year ; George Forest, acting packer, at $1.50 per working day ; J. B. Brooks, acting packer at $500 per year; D. Fraser, acting landing waiter, $600 a year ; J. V. Horne, acting messenger, $500 per year ; J. M. Biggs, acting landing waiter season of navigation at $50 per month ; A. B. Stanbury, acting preventive officer, $600 a year ; E. H. Ross, at $20 per month.

Mr. CLARKE. What does he do.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He discharges whatever duties the collector assigns him. I cannot be expected to say what they are.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems peculiar to have a civil servant at $20 a month.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I presume he is a boy. There is George H. Cressman, acting preventive officer at $600 a year; A. R. Cochrane, acting preventive officer. I think that is all. I think I have given all the information that I can, and I may say that in 20 years of parliamentary life I have never heard of such explicit information being asked for or given.

Mr. INGRAM. Who are the temporary officers at Windsor ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. J. W. Yearsley, J. Watson, and P. E. McEwen and the new collector, John Acheson Smith.

Mr. INGRAM. There are a large number of temporary officers who cannot qualify under the Civil Service Act, but who have certainly proved themselves efficient officers not only at Windsor but elsewhere. I am sure my hon. friend from North Essex who is interested in the officers around Windsor will bear me out when I say that the officers there are good officers. A great many of these officers are temporary, and it is a great injustice to them that they should be kept on the temporary list for years. It makes them subject to the influence of both political parties and places them in an embarrassing position. The government should take some means to amend the Act so as to enable these old, tried and efficient servants to be put on the permanent list, so that they cannot be interfered with no matter what party is in power so long as they do their duty. Would the minister state what part of the $100,000 which he says he will ask for, is for the purpose of meeting the fees now paid by the transportation companies.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. About $78,000 I think. That $100,000 is not in this vote, but it will, come in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. INGRAM. How does the minister arrive at that amount ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The transportation companies do not pay the men direct, but the payment passes through the department, and the accountant has knowledge of it.

Mr. INGRAM. As I understand it, that increase is for the officers whose special duty is to accommodate the transportation companies, and it is not for the officers who are stationed along the border line.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is for the same officers who work over hours, and that is to pay for their extra time, which we will pay in future instead of the transportation companies.

Mr. INGRAM. If you have officers doing day duty and night duty you need not pay them for extra time.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The men do their day duty and they earn their salary and then they are on night duty as well.

Mr. INGRAM. Why ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If we had a day staff and a night staff we would have to employ extra officers, and one reason why that has not been done is that the salaries of these officers are small and they are very anxious themselves to get some over time and extra pay for it. I agree with the hon. gentleman that when a man has put in 10 hours of faithful work in the day time, that ought to be enough, but they are very anxious to put in three or four extra hours to get extra pay for it and to supplement their salaries.

Mr. INGRAM. That was not the point I was making. At Fort Erie and Niagara we will say you have to have day and night officers. Having day and night officers now, how can you get in the extra time unless one officer lies off, either day or night ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We do not have day and night men at these ports.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, that is where the department should make the change. All the trains do not come over the line in the day time. Many come at night and it is as important to have night officers as day officers. For instance, at the city of Detroit, you should have both day officers and night officers. If the hon. minister has no night officers, and if this duty is to be performed by the day officers putting in extra time, for which I presume they get a higher rate of pay than they do for day work, then the department is paying more for the service than it would pay if it had both day and night officers, and I think the department should be reorganized for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is what we would like to; but that item is not under discussion now; it will come in the supplementary estimates. To have day and night men would probably be all round the best plan; but it would necessitate a larger expenditure. Suppose you have an officer to whom you are paying $600 a year, and who, for the extra time, which he is anxious to put in, makes from $150 to $200 extra. In that way he gets $750 or $800, while his salary is $600. If we were putting on a night man to do the service for which the day man is paid extra, he would expect $600 at least, the same salary as the day man. Then the day man would immediately press us and say, I was getting $800, and you are cutting me down to $600, and I cannot live on that. We would find him pressing for as much pay for his day work alone as he had been getting for both day work and the extra work. That system would entail an extra expense upon us, though I have no doubt it would otherwise be very satisfactory, and we may adopt it in some cases.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is referring to points where there would be only two or three hours of extra service. I am referring to points like Detroit, where it would be necessary to have men on duty all day and all night. In such cases it would cost a great deal more to pay day men extra for night services than it would to have day men and night men working the same number of hours.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). As I live at the city of Windsor, I can explain perhaps how this matter has been conducted in the past at that point. In connection with the ferry company, which runs its boats up to twelve o'clock at night the customs officials get twenty-five cents an hour after six o'clock, and they are glad to get it for the extra service. The extra pay in connection with the railways amounts to $40 or $45 a month. In these ways the officers' salaries have been considerably supplemented, and they have been quite willing to meet the trains and boats at night for this extra pay. On their behalf I can say that they are opposed to this change by which the government will pay them instead of the railways. However, there has been a request for this change made by the business interests of that and other localities. While speaking on this subject, I might refer to these officials who have been in the service for many years, and yet have not been put upon the permanent list. I found in 1900, when I came in, that there were four or five men in that position. I felt that if these men, whether Conservatives or Liberals, were good officials, they should be put on the permanent list, for this reason. It appeared that when they fell ill or took their holidays, they lost their pay for the time they were absent, by not being on the permanent list. I thought that a hardship, and therefore I recommended to the hon. Minister of Customs that they should be put on the permanent list, and I think they were—two Conservatives, appointed prior to 1896, and two Liberals, appointed subsequent to that date.

Mr. CLANCY. How did the hon. gentleman get these officers placed on the permanent list, in view of the statement of the Minister of Customs that he regretted that he was unable to do that ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Essex). I do not see why the civil service examination should apply so strictly to these officials as it does to other officials of the government. I thought it was nothing but right that they should be put on the permanent list, in order that they might be rescued from the disabilities I have mentioned.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not the question I asked. I quite concur in what the hon. gentleman says, that the evil he refers to ought to be remedied ; but I am now going to ask the Minister of Customs how the hon. member for Essex succeeded in doing what the hon. minister expressed himself as unable to do generally for officers similarly situated throughout the province. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain how that took place ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, yes, with pleasure ; and it is very simple when you know how it is done. Collectors do not have to pass the civil service examination, nor preventive officers, nor landing waiters. Appraisers have to pass special examinations. As I have explained before, I recognize the spirit of the Act to be that we should endeavour to get as many as we can to pass the qualifying examination, but in certain cases we take advantage of the clause allowing us to appoint clerks to the position of preventive officer without their undergoing examination. Where there are employees who have been years in the service and who are faithful and competent officers, but who do not feel competent to pass the qualifying examinations, we put them on as preventive officers. It would be very difficult for men who have been on the staff for years to pass this literary examination—I doubt whether I could pass it myself —and it would not be fair to compel them to do so.

Mr. CLANCY. I can quite understand that the rule which the hon. gentleman lays down is a good one, and that officers who have been years in the service and given satisfaction should be put on the permanent staff as preventive officers. But the hon. gentleman is constantly bringing in new men and putting them over the heads of those temporary clerks who have done efficient service for years. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but will he say that there are no cases of new men being put over the heads of these men who have served for years as temporary clerks ? The hon. gentleman will have the support of both sides if he will bring down a Bill to cure the evils of the past and prevent them from multiplying in the future. It is no excuse for him to say that the same state of things existed in the past. If he is a progressive minister, he will put an end to it. A temporary clerk who is employed throughout the year, and who is paid practically the same as a permanent officer, should no longer be left in that position, and then no new man should be appointed to any position in the service until he has passed the qualifying examination. I should like to have an expression of opinion from the hon. gentleman on this point. We ought to know whether he is prepared to take hold of this matter courageously and deal fairly with that class of men and put an end to a condition of things which is not consistent with good service or healthy administration.

Mr. CLARKE. This item comprises practically the whole vote, and we cannot let it pass without more information.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The last time we had this item under discussion, some hon. gentlemen opposite said I spoke too much, and I thought that I would let them do the talking to-night. If there are to be amendments to the Act, I shall have to submit my views to my colleagues. It is only just to those older servants, who do their work well and may not be able to pass this literary examination, that they should not be compelled to pass it. As regards future appointments, we are trying to do the best we can, but when deaths or other sudden changes occur we have to put a man on at once, and the way we have been doing is to appoint a man and have him pass the civil service examination later, or in some cases, where he is a valuable officer and does not feel competent to pass his examination, we put him on as a preventive officer. I think that the previous government, either by Order in Council or in some other way, put any one who had been in the service prior to 1882 and down to 1896 on the permanent list, and at that time those on the permanent list came under the Superannuation Act. But, of course, the question of superannuation does not come up to-day.

Mr. KEMP. Will the hon. minister have a statement prepared giving a list of the officials and the whole staff employed in the port of Toronto and the outports connected with it, showing salary received, the dates of appointment, and the total annual expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have the information all here. But it would take a good while to read over this whole list of about a hundred employees.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. minister send it over to us for a few minutes ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is in a book containing particulars of all the other ports as well.

Mr. CLARKE. Would not the minister have some clerk copy it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And bring it down on concurrence ?

Mr. CLARKE. Not on concurrence.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) does not want to hold the item until these particulars are furnished. The hon. gentleman wants this memorandum laid on the Table at any time.

Mr. KEMP. Yes—within a day or two.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. minister dispensed with the services of Mr. A. S. Gerald, of Prescott, and for what cause ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He was superannuated, I think last year.

Mr. BENNETT. What rule does the department follow with regard to salaries paid ? Has the amount of customs receipts anything to do with it ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, yes. It is not invariable. But when increases are asked the officers usually point to the increase of revenue, and, where we are able to grant increases, we like to see increased revenue if we can. That would be more particularly the case with the collector. But the payments are not uniform. In some ports the collectors are paid as much as those of other ports of twice the revenue.

Mr. BENNETT. I believe the collector at the town of Midland is paid only $800. I would call the minister's attention to the fact that a landing waiter was appointed, and, though the collector has been there for many years and is kept at $800, the landing waiter began with $600.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was under the impression that we had given the collector there an increase. However, I believe we eased the work by appointing an assistant. But the port is going ahead and the revenue is $26,500. While I do not bind myself, I think the collector would be entitled to a little more, comparing this port with others. In fact I think I have his name with others before me for consideration. I do not speak of this as making an absolute promise. This brings me to what the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said with regard to the estimates for the several ports. We dropped that purposely. The estimates had to be made for a long distance ahead—usually a good deal over a year—It might then be found impossible to give an officer the amount that had been asked for from parliament, and the officer would say not unnaturally : Parliament voted that money to me. Therefore, we asked the committee to leave the matter in our hands. But I would ask hon. members of the committee if they think that injustice is done to any officer or merit is not recognized. I would take it kindly if they will mention the matter so that we may give it consideration. Of course, the committee would not wish me to go through the list of the 1,600 employees we have and give the names and salaries. But each member of the committee knows the officers in his own locality, and I shall be glad to give any information with regard to any officer asked for.

Mr. BENNETT. While the receipts at Midland are much larger than in many other places where the officials are paid higher salaries, this of itself does not measure the work done by the collector. For a large quantity of grain passes through that port—last year the quantity was about 15,000,000 bushels. No duty is collected on this, as it goes through in bond. I hope the minister will at least advance the collector's salary by $200. It then would only be on a par with that of many other officers who have far less to do. May I ask the minister what rent is paid for the office occupied by the collector at Midland ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The rent is $180.

Mr. BENNETT. If the collector was paid at the same rate as the office is paid for, he would have $2,000 or $3,000 a year. I see that the rent was formerly only $60 a year.

But the leverage exerted by a warm camp follower has resulted in giving $180 for premises that would be dear at $90.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The accountant informs me that when the change of office was made we had a report from the inspector or the collector in favour of it. His recollection is, and, so far as mine extends, it is the same that the collector advised us favourably.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that perhaps the collector would have been afraid to report against it. There was formerly one large room, now there are two small ones. However, as a camp follower, the landlord is entitled to something, and he is satisfied with small things.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know about the camp follower, but my recollection is borne out by the recollection of the accountant—and his memory of these things is pretty accurate—that when the change was made it was because of the increase of the business of the port and it may have been said that there was a vault in the new premises or something like that. At any rate our record is that the collector recommended it.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the collector will be treated as liberally as the landlord.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, he will not be charged with being a camp follower.

Mr. COCHRANE. What is the salary of the collector at Campbellford ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does he attend to the duties of the office himself ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, they would be attended to by himself.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are you sure of that ? My information is that he was an official of the Grand Trunk Railway, and some deputy was attending to the business.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Still we should hold him responsible, and more than that, he should discharge the duties himself, and for anything I know he does.

Mr. COCHRANE. How much does the collector at Brighton get ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Six hundred dollars.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is not there a much larger revenue collected at Campbellford than there is at Brighton ? I venture the assertion that there is double.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then how do you reconcile the two facts ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is difficult to reconcile them.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is absurd to say that an officer at one port should get $500 for collecting double the revenue that an officer collects at another port who gets $600 for it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am afraid I am following in too large a measure what was done by my predecessors in these two places. I must do better.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have heard that answer so often that I am sick and tired of listening to it, especially when I hear it from the Minister of Customs, whose stentorian voice I used to hear so often on this side of the House condemning the party I supported years ago. And still to-day we hear that flimsy pretext that he is following the government that he condemned. Does a business government do business in that kind of a way ? It is so absurd to my mind that I hope no intelligent minister will give that answer any more, but take the responsibility of his own acts and not say, oh, you did it. The hon. gentleman used to denounce everything the Conservative party did, and now he has—I will not say what I was going to say, but I will say that he has the impudence and the hardihood to get up and say that he is following in the steps of his predecessors that he condemned. Is it not the height of hypocrisy for a minister to follow in the footsteps of a party that he condemned ? Get out. Make footsteps of your own, and be responsible for your own footsteps, and don't lay the responsibility on a party that has long since resigned the responsibility of office, and I think very largely to the detriment of the country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well I have a dim recollection that I used to find some fault with the previous government. Since I have been in office I have concluded that perhaps if I knew as much then as I do now, I would not have made all the criticisms I made then. I dare say my hon. friend, if he gets my position or one like it, will come to the same conclusion. But that is no reason for continuing a bad policy. If years ago a certain salary was attached to a certain office it is a difficult thing to reduce that salary.

Mr. COCHRANE. But he has changed the official. That argument would be good if the old official remained, but the old official at Brighton resigned, and he has appointed a new man and given him a salary very nearly as much as the old official had, while the official at Campbellford was appointed long previous, and collected an amount nearly double that was collected at Brighton. If it was the old official, there might be some argument in it, but there is no argument in it when you appoint a new man with a salary a great deal larger than the salary of the man who is collecting a much larger revenue.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is true, but after all you must remember that when a certain salary has been paid at a certain port, a salary which is not excessive, if you cut that salary down it is considered as degrading to the port, people look at it as lowering the standing of the town, as putting the town down.

Mr. COCHRANE. It would not be anything derogatory to the town of Campbellford if you increased the salary of that official to somewhere near where it ought to be, relatively to the other man.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman, I understand, has given a pledge to my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) that he will bring down a detailed statement of the staff of the Toronto customs house, giving the names, ages, dates of appointment and salaries received.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I will do that.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like also if the hon. gentleman would bring down a statement as to what part of this $80,000 he is asking for in this year's estimates will be distributed among the officials at the port of Toronto. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows what he is going to do, and whose salaries he is going to increase. Then I would like to know what plan he has adopted with reference to paying the assistant appraisers at the port of Toronto, I see some of them are getting $1,000, and some $1,600, while some of them are getting $800, some $750, some $1,200, and so on. I see the name of one very old friend of mine, Mr. McCaw, who has been there for twenty-five years, and he is getting the munificent salary of $800. Others who have not been there half as long are getting half as much more. What plan does the hon. gentleman pursue ? Does he follow the example of his predecessors in this respect, or is this a plan of his own ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The assistant appraisers, generally speaking, are under the Civil Service Act and get from $600 to $1,500. The appraisers run from $800 to $2,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What cast iron rule does the hon. gentleman lay down in fixing the salaries ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no cast iron rule, we try to be guided by the rules of equity and justice so far as we can. When I speak of equity and justice, it is with reference to the duties they perform. A man might be an appraiser for many years, and another man who has not been so long in the service might be getting more because he is more capable.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope the minister will apply the rule of equity and justice, and not merely cold justice, which I think has been the rule applied to many of these officials up to the present time. Some of these assistant appraisers are most competent men who have served many years, and their salaries remain stationary ; while others who have since come in and who are no doubt competent men, are getting half as much more, though they have not had the experience in the Customs Department, they have not had the training. Surely if equity and justice are to be the guide of the minister in apportioning the salaries to these gentlemen, there ought to be a reorganization of that department in reference to salaries, and those who have been standing stationary at a minimum salary of $750, should receive consideration. If we had the information tabulated such as my hon. friend from East Toronto asked for, we might be able to understand the position better. The gentleman I mentioned is one of the most efficient officers in the service, and his salary is $800 ; others who have come in since are getting double.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, he was appointed in 1877.

Mr. CLARKE. A very worthy man, too.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He was seventeen or eighteen years there under my hon. friend's government, and my hon. friend must not be too hard on me for not having been able to accomplish in something over six years what the late government was not able to accomplish in eighteen years. If he was appointed at $800 he remained at that.

Mr. CLARKE. What accentuates this case is the fact that assistants have been brought in since then who are getting double the salary he is getting. That was not the case with the late administration. The assistants did not come in then at $1,200 or $1,800, but they came in under lower salaries. There are men who have been in the service for years getting $750 who are thoroughly competent. Surely, if the hon. minister is going to apply any rule of equity and justice, he will not allow them to stand at $750 or $800 or $900, and bring in strangers who have not had the training or experience that these officers have had and put them at salaries at 60 or 75 per cent more than the old hands are receiving. I am sure, that, the hon. minister's attention having been drawn to these cases now, he will see that they at least get cold justice. They do not seem to have been able to get either cold or hot justice in the past.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Except there is some reason, it looks as if this officer were entitled to something more than he is getting.

Mr. CLARKE. There are lots of cases, and I think the hon. minister should allow this item to stand.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why should it stand ?

Mr. CLARKE. So that we could consult with him and show him that it is all wrong.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are asking for this extra money. We note down as far as we can before we make the estimates the officers whose salaries we think we will be able to increase. But we do not commit ourselves to it. New ports will have to come in. We have over 1,600 officers, and if I gave them $50 each of an increase the whole of this $80,000 would be gone. I cannot do that. We have to open new ports. A case such as the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has called attention to is a case that should receive consideration. I put it that way that it should receive consideration in case that it may not be said that I have violated my word, but I am going to look into that case. There is no use of our delaying the item, because the hon. gentleman will get the information that he desires.

Mr. CLARKE. It will be too late to do anything.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have to bring down supplementaries, and there is concurrence.

Mr. CLARKE. We know all about concurrence; we have been there before.

Mr. CLARE. The hon. minister states that the amount of revenue collected has something to do with the amount of salary paid. I would like to call his attention to the amount of revenue received in a few of the different customs houses and the salaries paid. At Bowmanville the revenue was $10,545 last year, and the salaries $1,500; Cobourg, revenue, $19,763, salaries over $3,000; Collingwood, $28,000 revenue, salaries, $1,635 ; Galt, revenue over $66,000, salaries, $1,850. This certainly seems very unfair. I have been asking the hon. minister for two years for an increase of salary for one of the officers at Galt. The amount collected is very much larger in proportion to the expenditure on salaries than at some other places.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The representations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clare) have not been forgotten. They have been noted. I do not know if I shall be able to accomplish it, but there has been a note made of the request and it will be fully considered. Of course, Galt is an inland town. At Cobourg there is trains-shipping and there are outports under the collector.

Mr. CLARE. There are outports of Galt, too.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose there are.

Mr. CLARE. When you take into consideration how much more is collected at Galt than at the towns I have cited, it is hard to understand why there should not be some increase if there is any fair division of salaries.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. gentleman turn to page F—11 of the Auditor General's Report and explain what he means by 'acting collector D. Ferguson' and 'acting landing waiter T. Morse' ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. At St. Thomas ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It means that these officers are not appointed by Order in Council at once. When they are not appointed by Order in Council at once they are referred to as acting collectors or landing waiters. When they are put on the permanent list by Order in Council they will appear as 'collector' or 'landing waiter.' The term 'acting collector' just shows that when he was first appointed he was not appointed by Order in Council.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the Order in Council been passed making Mr. Ferguson the permanent collector ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, he was appointed permanently on May 20 last.

Mr. INGRAM. What about Mr. Morse ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Morse was appointed permanently on April 1 last.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Chairman, before leaving this item, I desire to remind the hon. minister of the promise he made last year in regard to the superannuation of James Curry, the late collector of customs at Charlottetown. Mr. Curry was superannuated at the age of sixty-seven years, an active and vigorous man. I desired to obtain information last year as to what officer had reported on Mr. Curry's case and what data was before the treasury board when ordering Mr. Curry's superannuation. The hon. minister promised to give me that information last year, but I have not seen it yet. I ask him now if he is prepared to give it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, Mr. Curry was superannuated. I have forgotten the exact circumstances now. What was it I was to give the hon. gentleman last year ?

Mr. HACKETT. I have here 'Hansard' of last year :

Mr. HACKETT. Would the hon. minister state upon whose recommendation he was retired ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not expect to be asked for the details and have not got the information here, but I will bring it to the hon. gentleman.

The information I desire to obtain is this : Who was the inspector that reported that Mr. Curry was unfit for duty, was Mr. Curry retired under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and what information had the treasury board before it when retiring Mr. Curry ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will try to have that information for the hon. gentlemen when I bring down my supplementary estimates.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the hon. minister the salary that is paid to the custom-house officer at Napanee and the salary of the landing waiter there ? I think the customs officer there is also the inspector of excise.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He receives $800.

Mr. WILSON. Is that all ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Eight hundred dollars is all he gets from the Customs Department.

Mr. WILSON. Well, he is the inland revenue collector, too ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I could not tell the hon. gentleman about that.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to have that information.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would the hon. gentleman make that request when the inland revenue items are under consideration ?

Mr. WILSON. There ought to be enough members of the government present to give such information when it is asked for. There is no reason why there should only be two or three members of the government in the House. I do not see why they should not sit here as well as the rest of us.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course, the miniser whose estimates are under consideration has to assume the responsibility of explaining them, and some of the other ministers can be spared to attend to other pressing duties. This gentleman is also an officer of the Inland Revenue, and when the Minister of Inland Revenue is asking for his vote he will explain about him.

Mr. WILSON. What is his salary as landing waiter ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $500.

Mr. WILSON : And you do not know what he is getting as an inland revenue officer ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not.

Mr. WILSON. I will try and be here when the inland revenue estimates are up.

Mr. BLAIN. What number of officers were appointed in the Customs Department last year who did not pass the civil service examination, and what number were appointed in that department altogether ?

Mr. HACKETT.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot give that information to-night, as I did not know it would be asked for, but I shall get it.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister also give us a list of the appointees this year who have passed the examination ? And now that the attention of the minister has been called to the anomaly of some assistant appraisers receiving $750 a year and some $1,600, I think he should give some explanation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A note has been made of that, and it will be considered.

Mr. CLARKE. The preventive officers are paid all the way from $40 a month to $70 a month, and some of those recently appointed are getting a great deal more than the old-timers. What is the explanation of that?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no specified salary applicable to that class of officers ; you can give them as high as you like and as low as you like. You cannot assume that because they are all called preventive officers they discharge the same duties, because some of them are in the long room receiving entries, which is the most particular work, while others of them may be merely out on the wharf.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish the minister also to bring down the number of officers he has superannuated last year at the different ports, and the reasons for their superannuation. Was Mr. Gerald superannuated because he was unfit for service, or why was it that he was superannuated ? Did he apply for superannuation ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would have to refresh my memory from the list which has been placed upon the Table of the House, which gives the names of those superannuated and the reasons for their superannuation.

Mr. TAYLOR. In this $80,000 increase is there anything for increasing the salary of the customs officer at Gananoque, who collected last year $20,591, and the expense of the office was only $1,193 ? That is for Gananoque proper, and including the two outports the cost was only $1,700. The officer at Gananoque is entitled to an increase. At Bowmanville, where only $10,000 was collected, the officer and his assistant gets $1,643, as compared with $1,100 at Gananoque, where twice as much is collected.

Mr. BENNETT. His brother is a member.

Mr. TAYLOR. His name is Beith, and I presume he is a brother to the hon. member of that name. The minister should see that justice is done to the collector at Gananoque. There are more steamboat arrivals and departures there than there are at most other ports on the St. Lawrence, and notwithstanding that the customs officer has to do duty day and night he only gets a small pittance for salary.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no doubt that the port of Gananoque shows up very well.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister show his appreciation of this good service ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It would not be wise to make a definite promise, but a note has been made and I will consider the case. You cannot go solely by the revenue, because the officer at Galt collects $45,000 and gets $800.

Mr. TAYLOR. Guelph collects $113,000 and gets $3,550. In Toronto it costs $87,000 to collect $6,000,000, and in Montreal it costs $155,000 to collect $10,000,000. There is no comparison there.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, they vary very much.

Mr. KEMP. I wish to ask the Minister of Customs if it is the intention to adopt any more stringent rules or regulations to prevent the customs revenue from being defrauded by continental goods being admitted as British goods, and getting the benefit of the British preferential tariff ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We want to do all we can in that way. I do not know that we can devise anything better than we have at present. If there is any practicable way in which they can be strengthened, we would be glad to be informed of it. I think we have done about all we can do by means of rules and regulations. As to carrying them out, we are insisting on our officers being as vigilant as possible.

Mr. KEMP. But there is no barrier against certain classes of goods which are made on the continent coming here from Great Britain as if they were British manufactures. The certificate which the government requires to be on the invoice, and which is signed by the shipper or the clerk of the shipper, is no barrier. That is all that the government does in reference to this matter. When the preferential tariff was first adopted, a declaration was suggested, and a form was given to the collectors of customs which made it compulsory for shippers to go before a notary public, a commissioner, a municipal officer of a city or town, a British consul, or a secretary or a president of a chamber of commerce, and take an oath. That was in 1897 ; but in 1898 the government saw fit to put into effect a different sort of obligation—an ordinary certificate. That certificate can be made by a senior or junior clerk in the employ of the exporting firm, and it is merely the ordinary form of declaration. The hon. Minister of Customs knows, from his experience as a business man, of what little importance these certificates are in the eyes of exporters or shippers. We all know what little importance some shippers place upon an affidavit, and they place far less importance upon the mere signing of an invoice. This form in use at the present time, I know from personal experience, is often signed by a clerk employed by a firm which has probably a hundred invoices a day going out. The form going to Canada may be different from that going to India or Australia ; and that is the only barrier that the Customs Department has provided against continental goods coming into Canada and obtaining the preference as British goods. I believe it has been the intention of the government not to allow that to go on. In 1901, I remember the hon. Minister of Finance stating in the House that that was not the intention of the government, and he said practically what the hon. Minister of Customs says now, that if any other device could be suggested, he would be pleased to hear it. I am informed by one of our leading wholesale dry goods merchants of Toronto, a man who has had great experience in importing, that he could not say of certain classes of goods whether they were of German or Belgian or English manufacture. This gentleman stated this case to me : 'Some years ago I bought from a firm of very high standing in Bradford, before the preferential tariff came into effect, a certain class of dress goods as being of British manufacture, and they were placed in my warehouse in Toronto. My son was at the time living and undergoing an apprenticeship in a town in France. A short time afterwards he came to Toronto on a visit, and saw these goods in my warehouse, and asked where I had got them. I said from Priestley, of Bradford. My son said that they had been made in the factory in France where he was employed.' This same gentleman told me that he would not be prepared to swear in what country the following goods were manufactured : dress goods, certain classes of laces, silks, ribbons, velvets, velveteens, hosiery, underwear, gloves, buttons, linens, printed goods, and flannels. These different classes of goods, I believe, are coming into this country all the time as being of British manufacture, and I believe that a very large proportion of them are largely German goods. A short time ago there appeared in the Toronto 'News' an article headed 'How some German firms avoid paying full duty. Many manufacturers send goods to Canada via England. They thus save ten per cent. Germany to Canada, thirty-five per cent ; England to Canada, twenty-five per cent ; Germany to England, free.' The article, of which I will just read a small portion goes on to say :

The Canadian tariff on manufactured woollen goods imported from Germany is 35 per cent compared with 25 per cent imposed on British manufactures of the same class entering Canada. As these German goods are admitted free into England, the German manufacturer at once sees that by sending his goods to Canada via England, he saves 10 per cent in duties. Walter Muhlinghaus, Toronto, who represents the Hermann Muhlinghaus Company, Lennep, Germany, states that this unfair and round-about method of getting into the Canadian market is resorted to by several firms. With this end in view they established agencies in London and sold their goods through that medium. Mr. Muhlinghaus states, however, that his father's firm, to which he is attached, sends their manufactures direct from Germany to Canada.

Frequently this German agency was placed with a British manufacturer, who availed himself of what was known as the 'business secret,' that is he sold these German goods as the 'made in England' article, and in most cases the Canadian purchaser was none the wiser. The classes of goods in question were underwear and similar clothing.

Owing to the comparative cheapness of production in Germany, the British manufacturer found that he could buy certain lines of German goods and sell them in Canada at greater profit than by manufacturing the goods in England. Mr. Muhlinghaus stating that the cost of production was at least 30 per cent cheaper in Germany than in England.

I have satisfied myself that what I am stating is correct, and I believe the officers of the Customs Department know that this kind of thing is going on, and I have no doubt the hon. Minister of Customs knows it. It is a difficulty which should be overcome in some way or other. The British preference was not given for the purpose of letting in continental goods under it and thus swindling the government. There is another point I would submit. Under that German surtax, I believe there is a new regulation, but it does not amount to anything more than the old one. The temptation to get in German goods from Great Britain will be greater than it was heretofore. There is absolutely nothing in the way except a mere certificate of the exporter or his clerk on the bottom of the invoice, which means nothing. The buyer on this side does not consider that it is his duty to investigate. He sees his neighbour doing the same thing and it will not do for him to suggest to the Customs Department that the goods may be German, Belgian, Austrian or French. He says to himself: 'My neighbour will not do that, why should I? If I do it, it will result in raising the duty on myself.' That sort of injustice is being perpetrated and these foreign goods are coming in as British. Under this German surtax the temptation will be greater, the swindle will be greater, and the government should devise some better method of dealing with the case.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). How is it that the customs officers will not give receipts for customs duties paid at the various ports of entry—a straight receipt to the importer or his broker?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It has not been considered necessary. The importer pays his duty and gets his goods.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). When an importer sends money to his broker, the broker pays the duty at the port of entry and the importer has no check on his broker.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the merchant gives the broker his check, it comes back to him through the bank. If he remitted the cash, he would have to trust his broker.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). But he wants to know the items for which this money was spent. I do not see any valid reason why the officer should not give a receipt. This is done on the other side, right across the river, and it would be a great convenience to importers. The custom is to receipt a third copy of the entry, but that is a cumbersome way and it takes just as long as it would to give a straight receipt.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When persons are on the cars with small parcels, the officer gives them a receipt, but it is not usual in ordinary transactions, and this is the first time I have heard any complaint on that score. As a rule the brokers are responsible men and the merchant knows with whom he is dealing.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). It is not a matter of very great importance, but I know that a great many complaints have been made. I know of cases where the parties absolutely refused to pay the duty unless they got a receipt, and I can not see any reason why one should not be given. A proper form might be made out and submitted to the customs officers for approval.

Mr. KEMP. I would like to have an explanation with regard to the matter I brought up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I really cannot give any more information than I have already given. As the hon. gentleman has rightly stated, the department do not intend to let goods in, under the preference, that are not entitled to it. A certificate is required from the exporter, signed by himself or signed by one of his clerks, who must declare that he has personal knowledge of what he certifies to. But whether signed by the clerk or the merchant, the house is held just as firmly. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that when the preference was first introduced we required an affidavit accompanying the invoice. But we found that a source of great annoyance to our importers. Houses in the old country complained very much. They complained that they had to pay a fee of fifteen cents for each certificate, and in some cases they had to get their certificates from the Chamber of Commerce, and there was a good deal of trouble and annoyance especially in the cases of small parcels. The department concluded that if a house would deliberately sign a declaration on the invoice in the name of the firm, which was not true, they would also make a false affidavit. As far as the penalties are concerned, these penalties would follow just as surely a false declaration as a false affidavit. We thought that it would ease the trade in the old country and please the importers here and be just as safe to the revenue to have a declaration instead of an affidavit. You may say that a man might sign a declaration who would hesitate to make an affidavit, but I do not think there would be many cases of that kind. If a man would be careless in signing a declaration, he would be equally careless in the matter of an affidavit. We may probably be able to do a little better in the future in the way of supervision in the old country, because my hon. colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is appointing commercial agents in some of the cities in the old country. One has been lately appointed in Birmingham, and if we have any doubts about imports of hardware from there, we can avail ourselves of the services of that commercial agent. We are giving the matter every attention and care, and I will hail with pleasure any suggestion that would be workable and supplement the present regulations.

Mr. KEMP. I did not know that there was a fee charged by the secretary or president of the Chamber of Commerce, but if there was, it could have been but a very small fee. I happened to be in London about the time this order was changed, and Mr. Murray, the secretary of the London Chamber of Commerce drew my attention to it and prophesied that the result would be very unsatisfactory. His reason was that in London particularly, there are all kinds of merchants, and because a firm in this country imports from a certain firm in London, it does not necessarily follow that the firm in London is composed of British subjects of the high character of British merchants, whom we were glad always to think of as men of great integrity. These men are foreigners, to a very large extent. They reside in England sometimes only for a short time ; they are people of all nationalities, and if the precaution were taken by the government of insisting on their going before a notary or a secretary or a president of a chamber of commerce, and making an affidavit, that would be a greater safety for the government and for the revenue than the mere declaration now required. I think the government will do well to reconsider the step it took in 1898 in framing the new regulations, especially in view of the German surtax. The temptation will be greater under that even than it was before. I repeat that I do not think that the certificate at the bottom of the invoice amounts to anything in at least three-quarters of the cases. In the other 25 per cent it might be of some value. But, on the whole, it is no effective guard against bringing in continental goods and passing them through as British goods.

Mr. CLARKE. In fact it is not worth a continental.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot agree that it is no guard. With regard to Mr. Murray himself, I imagine that the fee on account of these affidavits was a personal perquisite. I take it that these fees would not go into the coffers of that chamber of commerce but would be one of the perquisites of his office.

Mr. KEMP. I do not know what the charge was.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If what I suppose is true, he would naturally favour having that continued. But there is this value to the declaration made by the firm that if there is a flaw, we seize the goods, and the importer, as an innocent party would have this recourse against the exporter, that, under our customs law, the perpetrator of the fraud could not collect for the goods sent to this country. They run the risk of having their goods forfeited and not being able to collect them. While some houses might be lacking in principle, the fear of the power of the law is there to help to keep them straight.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the minister what steps he takes or can take, if there is a fraud in the matter ? How, in the name of conscience, will he or his officers find out that there has been a fraud ? Will he enlighten us on that point ? We have drawn the attention of the minister to this question in years past, but he has never enlightened us on the subject. Will he do so now ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The party who signs that declaration knows whether it is a fraud or not.

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, but how can the minister's officers find out if it is a fraud or not ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. By their expert knowledge, they might be able in a case of a certain article to know whether it is an article of German manufacture or not. In the case of a textile, I judge, that would be a difficult matter. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) would be able to tell us about that.

Mr. CLARKE. But the difficulty is made greater by the fact that raw material from which the goods are made may be German. They may be manufactured in Germany and yet come in under the so-called British preference. How can there be the slightest safeguard, under the present system, against goods brought in under affidavit, that they are British goods, and yet, without a farthing of British labour put up on them ? The handicraft is the same. How, then, can the hon. minister's officers detect any difference ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have to rely very largely upon the affidavit. But if we are going to have a preference that difficulty occurs and you cannot help it. Has there been any deficiency on our part—that is the practical thing.

Mr. CLARKE. The whole preference is deficient.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman's argument is against the preference as a whole; but we have it, and we have to deal with it. The question is now, are we lacking in anything that would enable us to exercise greater circumspection ?

Mr. CLARKE. But the hon. minister is making the whole thing impracticable. The regulation cannot be practicably carried out. He says this is a British preference and we contend that it is a German preference. The government should change the name of it and call it a continental preference, not a British preference. The hon. gentleman cannot tell us any way by which he can find out where the goods are produced, unless he watches their manufacture from the time they are begun until the time they are exported to Canada. That has always been our contention, and now the hon. gentleman admits that it is right. Well, what does he intend to do under the circumstances ? Does he intend to allow these goods to come in as British goods under the preference when he admits that he cannot know, without watching the goods in the course of manufacture, whether the affidavit on the invoice is right or not ? Is he not going to advise his colleagues that this whole thing is a fraud on the face of it ? It is surely wrong to call this a British preference when he himself admits that foreign goods are coming in here and getting the advantage of the preference. The German manufacturer and the middleman in England and in New York are the only persons who are profiting by the preference—not the British artisan or manufacturer.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is mistaken. Of course he is leading the discussion away from what is really my point, the point that I seek to defend. He is opening up the question of the policy of the government.

Mr. CLARKE. For the reason that the hon. gentleman admits that there is practically no safeguard.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I do not admit that. I think we have a great safeguard in the declaration, and another in the expert knowledge of our officers. I hope we shall have an additional safeguard in our commercial agents. The hon. gentleman's argument is against the whole preference. The goods, to come in, must be declared to have been finished in Great Britain. We require the finishing process there. There must be at least twenty-five per cent of the value of the goods of British production, and this twenty-five per cent must include the last stage of manufacture. They could not send out British goods which would make twenty-five per cent of the completed product and have them manufactured in Germany and sent here. The last process must be in Great Britain. The hon. gentleman asks what further we can do ? Well, for instance, our attention was called to linseed oil which was coming in under the preference. We were informed that it was made largely from Argentine seed. This raised a very nice question. If the material was pressed from Argentine seed it could not come in under the preference. But if the seed came from India or some other British possession entitled to the preference, the value of the seed would be counted in towards the twenty-five per cent. We wrote to the High Commissioner and he investigated at the headquarters of the manufacturer, what proportion of Argentine seed went into the production of the oil. We take all the steps we can to guard the revenue. As to saying that you can absolutely determine all these points, I am free to admit that that cannot be done. But do not blame the customs department for that. We have to carry out the law. The hon. gentlemen about me, forming the parliament of Canada, have said : We want this preference. Parliament having declared that these goods shall come in under the preference we cannot exclude them. We let them come in under what seem to us the best regulations. But, if there has been a fraud, we seize the goods and the man who has made the false declaration cannot collect for them.

Mr. CLARKE. How many seizures have been made, because of false declaration, of goods brought in under the British preference ? Has there been one ? Surely that is an easy question for the minister and not an unreasonable one. The preference has been in force since August, 1891, I believe I hope it will not tax the memory of the minister too much to tell us, how many seizures have been made because of false declarations since that time.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I cannot tell the hon. gentleman. I do not think there have been many.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there one ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I should think so.

Mr. CLARKE. More than one ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so. We had a good many seizures.

Mr. CLARKE. I am asking about the seizures because of false declarations under the British preference. If there was only one, the hon. gentleman could give us some particulars, because it would be impressed upon his memory. Where was that seizure made ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is not impressed upon my memory particularly.

Mr. CLARKE. If the minister will bring down the information——

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I could not tell offhand.

Mr. CLARKE. Bring us down the memorandum when we next discuss the hon. gentleman's estimates, showing how many of these seizures there have been, where, and the amounts involved.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The department does not give the names.

Mr. CLARKE. Only the place, and the amounts involved.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You are asking me to bring down so many things I am afraid I shall forget some.

Mr. CLARKE. I am very sorry to burden the minister. But how can he know, except from the declarations, whether 25 per cent of British labour has been added to the value of these goods ? I need not remind the hon. gentleman that the circular issued by his department to the collectors in 1897 permitted the goods to come in as having had 25 per cent of value added to them, if the person who bought them in Germany, or Belgium, or France or Switzerland, sold them for export to Canada at 25 per cent more than he paid for them in the foreign country. That 25 per cent was to be accounted, according to the instructions issued by the hon. gentleman's own officials, as British labour, as an increased value given to the goods by British labour. In interpreting exactly what the hon. gentlman meant, how can he state that these goods have been enhanced by British labour to the value of 25 per cent ? Our contention has been that it is not necessary to add even one per cent to the value of these goods by British labour, foreign goods can and do come in under the preference. That is the reason why we protest against the so-called British preference, because we claimed it was a continental preference. Will the minister explain how his departmental officers could tell that 25 per cent had been added by British labour ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We cannot tell exactly. The hon. gentleman has a copy of the declaration. If the goods have been enhanced in value 25 per cent, he sees that it is an addition of 33⅓ per cent. 25 per cent off leaves 33⅓ per cent on.

Mr. KEMP. But that is 25 per cent on.

Mr. CLARKE. If the merchant in England or the middleman in England purchased $800 worth of goods made in Germany and sold them to the Canadian importer at $1,000, thus adding 25 per cent, the difference between what he paid for them and what he sold them for was to be counted, under the instructions issued by the hon. gentleman, as British labour. That is the point.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They have to be enhanced in value 25 per cent, enhancing in value 25 per cent means that 33⅓ per cent has been added, because 25 per cent off is equal to 33⅓ per cent on. Now there is no profit at 33⅓ per cent on a wholesale transaction.

Mr. CLARKE. 25 per cent includes the difference, the addition, made to the goods purchased on the continent, when they land in England and are sold in Canada, and may embrace insurances, freight, boxes, &c.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Here is $1 worth of goods, if they come in there must be additional value given to them as British labour. Take that 25 per cent off and that leaves 75 cents, 25 on 75 is 33⅓ advance. Now there is no 33⅓ profit made by the wholesale merchants, or anything of that kind. I think in textiles the cost of the labour averages about 33⅓ per cent. So while 25 per cent of the finished value of the goods is required to be put on, it is about 33⅓ advance.

Mr. CLARKE. I say that if the British merchant or the middleman brings in $800 worth of goods from the continent and sells them for $1,000 to a Canadian merchant, he has added 25 per cent to their value according to the instructions issued by the hon. gentleman, and he gets the advantage of the preference, although British labour has not added one cent to their value.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That would be a simple and direct fraud.

Mr. KEMP. That is what we claim.

Mr. CLARKE. And we claim that this fraud is permitted by the department because of the circular of instructions issued in 1897.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Can the hon. gentleman point out any other way by which a fraud like that can be avoided ?

Mr. CLARKE. We are asking the hon. gentleman to do that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But hon. gentlemen are finding fault, and I think it is not unreasonable to say, after we tell how we are doing it, that they should suggest any better way if they are able. One suggestion he has given that there should be an affidavit instead of a declaration. We tried that, and we abandoned it. But what other plan can he suggest ? The argument of the hon. gentleman is against the preference altogether. That does not concern our duty. The duty of the department is to administer the law as parliament, including hon. gentlemen opposite, have enacted. Parliament said, we want a British preference, we want the goods to come into this country that are made in Britain at a lower rate than those that are made in other countries. That being the law, we have to administer it, and in doing that we try to keep foreign nations from taking advantage of that preference illegally. I furnished the hon. gentleman with all the declarations, rules and regulations, and I think we have done all we can without unduly hampering the trade. But I shall be obliged to hon. gentlemen if they will tell us of any other step we can take that we have not taken.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister has at last taken our advice very kindly, and he has put on the surtax. They were slow to take advice offered from this side of the House, but at length they did it. But let me read for the hon. gentleman's information one paragraph contained in the circular issued by his department in 1897, which will sustain our contention :

In estimating the labour of the United Kingdom entering into the production of articles manufactured therein partly from imported material, the extent of such labour may be reckoned by the value of the manufactured article ready for shipment at the place of production after deducting therefrom the value on entering within the limits of the United Kingdom, represented by the component parts of such articles which are the produce of countries not entitled to the benefits of the preferential tariff.

Surely that can only have one meaning, that if the goods are sold for export to Canada for 25 per cent over and above what they cost when imported into England from the continent, the difference between what they cost and what they are sold for is to be acounted as British labour, although there has not been necessarily one per cent of British labour or any other kind of labour added to them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman has the latest circular that we issued, I gave it to him the other day. There is one-quarter to be added to the value of the goods.

Mr. CLARKE. No ; the hon. gentleman must not persist in maintaining that after this circular has been read.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What part are you referring to ?

Mr. CLARKE. I am dealing with what was in operation in 1897.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Deal with what is in operation now. I have the form of circular prescribed :

Form of certificate prescribed to be written, printed or stamped on invoices of all articles except raw and refined sugars, for entry under the British preferential tariff of Canada, when made and signed by a person other than an individual exporter.

1, (I).....hereby certify that I am (2).....of (3).....the exporter (s) of the articles included in this invoice, and that I am duly authorized to make and sign this certificate on behalf of the said exporter (s).....

I have the means of knowing and I do hereby certify that this invoice from the said (4)..... .....to (5).....amounting to (6).....is true and correct ; that all the articles included in the said invoices are bona fide the produce or manufacture of one or more of the following countries, viz.:.....(7).....and that a substantial portion of the labour of one or more of such countries has entered into the production of every manufactured article included in the said invoice to the extent in each article of not less than one-fourth of the value of every such article in its present condition ready for export to Canada.

(Sgd.) .....

Dated at.....this.....189 .

There is the declaration that they have to make. It enters into not less than one-quarter of the value of the article. If the article is of German origin, there must be 25 per cent of it that is the result of British labour. Take that off and the valuation is 75 cents. Twenty-five per cent on 75 per cent will not make up a dollar, but 33⅓ per cent will, and therefore there is an enhancement in value of literally 33⅓ per cent. Twenty-five per cent off is equal to 33⅓ per cent on.

Mr. CLARKE. I have not that circular.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no difference between that circular and the one which my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) has read. If an exporter in England purchases goods in Germany and makes 25 per cent profit on the transaction, he can take that declaration, because that 25 per cent is put on by his labour in purchasing and selling again. It comes down to the bald fact that 25 per cent of the value of the article so exported has not been added by goods of British origin going into it or British labour being employed in its manufacture. But it may be increased 25 per cent in value by the party who has purchased it in Germany, imported it and sold it again. He can take that declaration, and it is being done every day. The country is being flooded with German goods and they have the benefit of this preference, although they have not been enhanced in value by material or labour in England, except the value that is represented by wrapping and stamping.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has given us the form of declaration that exporters have to subscribe to, and he accompanies that with an explanation as to how they estimate the increased value. That circular provides that if the value is enhanced by 25 per cent over what the article cost the exporter in a foreign country that fact will be sufficient to justify him in making that declaration.

Mr. KEMP. The hon. minister has a very ingenious argument in regard to 25 per cent off being equal to 33⅓ per cent on, but I guarantee that not one exporter in a thousand understands the matter in that way. He understands it in the way that the hon. member for West Toronto understood it when he said that if $800 was the value of goods purchased in Germany and they were sold for $1,000 in this country, the $200 difference would be considered the 25 per cent. At any rate, if the goods were worth $800, the exporter in Great Britain might calculate his profit to be a certain amount, the carriage of these goods to be a certain amount, the packing to be a certain amount, and it might result in there not being 1 per cent of British labour put upon them under the regulations which are in effect in the Customs Department of this country. I think the argument of the hon. minister shows that he admits that fraud is perpetrated. I do not think he is prepared to deny that fraud is being perpetrated, that the regulations do not cover the situation and do not prevent continental goods coming in here and getting the benefit of the preference. The quantity that comes in, it is impossible to state. It is an indefinite quantity. The hon. minister says to us, having admitted that fraud does exist, and having admitted the correctness of our argument: What would you do? I ask the hon. minister if it is the duty of this side of the House to prescribe what should be done? Whose invention is this Is it not the invention of the government, and should it not be their duty to invent some means to overcome the difficulty to which we have referred?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Quite so, but I know if the hon. gentleman knew anything more that could be done to prevent possible fraud—mind, I only admit possible fraud; I do not say that fraud is committed, as I do not think there are many frauds committed—but I believe that if the hon. gentleman knew of any step that could be taken that would tend to greater security, his sense of patriotism, his desire to see the law enforced, would impel him voluntarily to give me his suggestion. These hon. gentlemen have not suggested anything. Although we are doing the best we can, they believe the best we can do is ineffectual. I grant that possibly it may be, but I do not know of any better system. When I was in England last year accompanied by my secretary, when we got through our work, we met a great many merchants. We were waited upon by a large commercial body in the hotel one day for the purpose of discussing an insolvency law. The delegation was composed of large shippers. I availed myself of the opportunity of finding out if they thought there were any large frauds perpetrated in reference to the preferential tariff. These were shippers of high standing and men whose word you would not doubt at all. Their interest would be, if any fraud was being perpetrated by any other house, to reveal it to me, because if any other house was perpetrating a fraud of this kind it would beat them out in the Canadian trade. Notwithstanding that their interest was to reveal any fraud if it existed, their reply was that they were not aware of a fraud of that kind being committed, and they did not think it was being committed to any extent. We had other opportunities of procuring information in regard to the subject, and my secretary, who is fairly up in the department, visited the establishments of some of the houses interested in the Canadian trade, and he was unable to discover that fraud existed to any extent.

Mr. CLARKE. These great shippers and leading merchants were supplied with the circular that provided that the profit of the middleman was to be counted as British labour. There was no fraud as far as they were concerned in interpreting the circular which the hon. gentleman had issued.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no such profit as 33⅓ per cent on the whole transaction. There is nothing of that kind.

Mr. CLARKE. If our contention is right these gentlemen with whom the minister and his secretary came in contact could not say that a fraud was committed, except it be a huge fraud on the Canadian public in calling the preference a British preference, when as a matter of fact goods that had not one dollar of British labour in them were classed as British.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Their testimony was in a general way that they did not believe that fraud was perpetrated under this preference tariff. We made personal inquiries and in some cases we availed of the services of the officers of the High Commissioner. I hope I may be permitted to say that this is outside of my estimates, which is a vote to pay the officers who must be paid, and I think you might now conclude to give me the money provided I spend it in a proper manner, which I will try to do.

Mr. CLARKE. It is pertinent to the estimate that we should ask for the number of seizures because of fraud. I understand the minister will bring that down?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I might not be able to trace that for a number of years.

Mr. CLARKE. For the last two or three years.

Mr. BLAIN. The linseed oil manufacturers of Canada sent a deputation to wait on the minister to complain that foreign oil was being imported under the name of the British preference. Has the Minister decided to remedy that wrong perpetrated on the linseed oil manufacturers of Canada and which is a very serious grievance?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My recollection is that we took steps to get the facts from the people who manufacture this oil, and the information we got from them did not agree with the information given us by our friends here. It was very clear to me that the labour in pressing the oil itself did not amount to 25 per cent, but if a certain quantity of seed coming from a country entitled to the preference entered into that oil, that together with the cost of production would entitle it to enter. My recollection is that while they claim that they use some of the Argentine flax, that there was enough of the other kind to bring it under the preference, while our manufacturers here claim that while they ran the Argentine seed they ran it pure, and they do not accept the statement that it is mixed. These manufacturers told us that to mix the two would lessen the value and that it was against their interest to do so. We were not able to determine whether it was right or wrong, and I have not heard very much since from my linseed oil friends or whether they feel that they are not getting fair play. It is one of the most difficult questions we had to tackle.

Mr. McGOWAN. I would like to know from the minister if there is any way of ascertaining whether there is any other seed than this Argentine seed in this linseed oil? I suppose the minister admits that there is not 25 per cent of British labour in the manufacture of this oil?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. McGOWAN. They got over that by saying that there was some British seed in it, and the minister let it go at that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We had inquiries instituted, and my recollection is—I speak subject to correction—that they claimed there was enough of Indian seed going into the oil so that with the cost of production it brought it within the preference.

Mr. McGOWAN. Could you tell from the oil itself whether there was Calcutta seed in it or not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot, and I do not know whether our experts could. Can my hon. friend (Mr. McGowan) tell?

Mr. McGOWAN. No.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, if you cannot tell I do not suppose that our experts can. It is a difficult matter, but we took all the steps we could.

Mr. McGOWAN. I do not know anything about these other things which my hon. friend from Toronto speaks of, but I am perfectly satisfied that in the matter of linseed oil the revenue of the country is being defrauded in connection with this preference. The minister says that there is not 25 per cent of British labour in the manufacture of this oil and that there must be enough British-grown seed to make up for the deficiency of the labour. I can tell the minister that this is not so. There is not 25 per cent British labour, and every one knows that there is no Calcutta seed going into it. I think the department should take the trouble to ascertain whether they are being defrauded or not in this matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The British colonies are entitled to the preference and British seed grown in India gets the benefit of it.

Mr. McGOWAN. How do you know that there is Calcutta seed in it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If there is not it is not entitled to the preference.

Mr. McGOWAN. It comes in all the same.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The labour expended in producing this seed is as much entitled to count in the preference as the labour of crushing it in England. The contention is that the cost of producing the seed together with the labour of crushing it in England entitles it to the preference.

Mr. McGOWAN. Did they furnish any information as to the portion of Calcutta seed in that oil?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so.

Mr. McGOWAN. Then I would like to have that evidence brought down.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman would not consider it too much trouble to come to my office, I will be glad to show him the efforts we made in order to arrive at a decision in this matter. I know that the views of the men here who understand the business do not agree with the views we received from the English producers.

Mr. BLAIN. We are to understand that the information furnished by the linseed oil manufacturers of Canada was found to be incorrect.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, it would be better to say that the department has not come to a decision yet.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister has been asking for suggestions to overcome this difficulty, and I wish to remind him that the linseed oil manufacturers of Canada gave him some very valuable suggestions on that score. I will just read one clause:

> Mr. Paterson then asked us what we could propose. We suggested that all persons making such a declaration should make a detailed statement of where the materials were obtained from which the goods were produced.

That is to say, you would alter your declaration so that the party who made the linseed oil would be compelled to make a declaration stating where the seed came from out of which the oil was made in England before it came to this country. May I ask the minister if he proposes to take action and adopt the suggestion of the linseed oil manufacturers, which I am satisfied would keep out of this country the foreign article ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is worth considering.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister would have to go further. If a portion came from a British colony which was entitled to the preference, he would want the declaration to state the proportion coming from the colony and the proportion coming from a foreign country.

Mr. BELL. It would appear, from the discussion that has taken place to-night, that the charges or statements made on a great many occasions with reference to the importation of goods from Germany, France and other foreign countries into this country, under the British preference were true. The Minister of Customs practically admits that they are true.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say there might be some come in.

Mr. BELL. That being the case, what steps have the government of Canada taken to protect the revenue ? So far as I know, they rely on the certificate, which has not the force of a declaration, and that in the face of the fact that the department knows from past experience that certain foreign houses in Great Britain have been in the habit of defrauding the revenue continuously. Not many years ago, under the present Minister of Customs, a foreign house in Montreal was detected in a very extensive undervaluation of invoices, carried on for a number of years, in which it was perfectly clear that any statement or declaration made by a house of that character would be perfectly worthless ; and yet, from the statement made to-night by the hon. Minister of Customs, he has relied entirely on evidence in the form of declarations or statements of people of that character of those with whom he had that experience in the past. Virtually the understanding at which the House must arrive, after hearing the minister's statement, is that in this matter the country and the revenue of the country are absolutely unprotected. There are a great many articles of foreign manufacture, which it has been asserted from time to time have been getting the benefit of the British preference, including some goods to which it was scarcely conceivable that any value could be added after their production ; for instance, cutlery, crockery, certain classes of textile fabrics, silks, neckwear, hats and caps, and many other classes of goods. These are apparently coming into Canada continuously as British goods, when the minister has practically confessed to-night that the department over which he presides is not at all satisfied that they are British goods.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not say that. I admit that it is possible that there may be some come in. I admit the possibility, but I do not go further than that.

Mr. BELL. When the minister admits the possibility, and is unable to discriminate or differentiate between a case in which the proper entry is made, and another in which it is not made, or in which an improper entry is made, he leaves the House and the country to come to the conclusion that as far as he is concerned the whole body of entries might be fraudulent, of course I do not say that they are ; that would be an extreme statement ; but apparently the minister is not in a position, with the resources he has in his department, to specify even what percentage of fraud is committed under this preference ; and, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Toronto, the inducement to commit this fraud is now doubled, because, instead of German goods entered as British goods receiving a preference of 33⅓ per cent, they now receive a preference of 66⅔ per cent, which is the difference between the surtax on German goods and the preference on British goods. So that there is danger that this fraud will be perpetrated much more extensively now than it has been in the past. In dealing with these irregular merchants, the minister would not think of accepting a declaration made by a smuggler, much less a mere statement made by a man who is defrauding the revenue of the country. In the case of a smuggler, he does not rely on the goodwill or the good intentions of a man who is under suspicion as a criminal. But he equips an efficient branch of his department as a detective branch, and by that means he has, I believe, to a great extent abolished smuggling on our coasts. In the face of all the statements made in years past, by members of parliament, importers, merchants and others, that German and French manufacturers were taking advantage of the British preference, is it possible that the hon. Minister of Customs has to admit that he has to rely on a simple form of statement, which is added to the invoice in the simplest manner in the world, in many cases by means of a rubber stamp, at the foot of which is put the initials of some clerk or employee of the shipper ? It seems incredible that the minister has not organized some system by which he would secure information in the English markets, such as Sheffield, Birmingham, Liverpool, or London, from which he has the greatest reason to suspect that these irregularities arise. Has not the Minister of Customs employed a detective to catch some of the culprits in this wrong-doing, and, by imposing heavy penalties, made it so serious a matter to evade the law in this respect, that it may be put a stop to ? As far as I can understand from the minister—and I would like to hear further from him in that respect—he has not taken any precaution whatever to secure the conviction of any person engaged in these fraudulent transactions. Nothing whatever would appear to have been done to secure detection or conviction. If I did not misunderstand the hon. minister to-night, he has practically admitted that he knows that a certain proportion of customs entries are fraudulent. I understood that the hon. minister is in the habit of sending agents to the United States and elsewhere to watch for cases of undervaluation. I understood that a portion of the machinery of his department was the employment of men thoroughly versed in the manufacture of the several branches in which undervaluation is practiced, and I am surprised to find that while the hon. minister was apparently compelled to admit that all the statements made with reference to the evasion of the preferential clause are correct, and so far he has taken no means to secure the detection of the guilty parties and prevent the continuance of those frauds. The country would sustain him in any reasonable expenditure in order to protect our manufacturers and the honest merchants by seeing that the preference we have given so generously to the mother country should not be taken advantage of by foreigners. If the hon. gentleman would apply the same energy to the prevention of frauds on the revenue by this abuse of the preferential clause which he does to putting down the operation of smugglers throughout our seacoast, he would find that this House would cordially second his efforts. There can be nothing more unsatisfactory than to find that the preference which Canada has given the mother country is not being enjoyed by the merchants of the mother country at all, but by foreigners, to whom certainly we would not be willing to extend any favour whatever, particularly at the expense of the manufacturers and the workingmen of Canada. It is quite possible that the hon. minister may not care to take the House into his confidence. He may possibly have taken some steps in this direction and not care to disclose them, in case that might prevent there being successful. Well, if he is in a position to say that he is prevented by the fear of publicity from fully taking the House into his confidence, I would not be disposed to press him unduly, but the impression I gathered from the whole discussion leads me to the belief that the minister was of the opinion that we were being cheated, but could look upon it with a good natured smile as one of those things no fellow could understand. It was a sort of fourteen-fifteen puzzle, which he was inclined to pass over to this side of the House in order that we might see what we could do with it. That certainly is the impression which the hon. gentleman left on my mind. This energetic minister of an energetic government practically confessed that he was beaten and threw up the sponge. He practically admitted that if these foreign houses in Britain choose to continue to send us goods of those different classes under the preferential clause, he did not see what he could do and was disposed to ask what we thought should be done. Does the hon. gentleman wish us to understand that there are insuperable difficulties in connection with this preference, that he has exhausted his ingenuity, that the cleverest minds in his department are powerless to devise a remedy, and that he is absolutely at loss to know what to do ? Is that the position the hon. gentleman takes ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. BELL. I am very glad to hear him say so, but might I ask him to take us to some extent into his confidence and tell us what he proposes to do. It is not at all satisfactory for the people of Canada to feel that they are being defrauded by foreigners, who are ingenious enough to get the advantage of the preferential clause, which it was never intended should apply to them. The people of Canada will not long tolerate a minister at the head of the Department of Customs who admits that he cannot remedy this condition of affairs, and it seems to me that it ought not to be very difficult to devise some means of assuring the conviction of those who thus evade our customs laws. There are only a very few business centres from which these suspicious invoices may come, and but a small number of houses which do this kind of business; is there any insuperable difficulty in watching the operations of those houses ? Can the government not secure evidence, if necessary, by acquiring information from the employees of these houses ? Convictions could thus be secured and the minister could make up a black list of exporters of the mother country, houses dealing in the class of goods under suspicion no statement from which would be accepted in any custom house under the control of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) is mistaken when he says that the hon. Minister of Customs has admitted that all the statements made with regard to fraudulent invoices under which German or other continental goods obtain the benefit of the British preference are correct. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bell) whole speech was based upon the assumption that the hon. Minister of Customs had admitted these statements. But the hon. minister has not admitted anything of the sort. What he said was—the hon. gentleman will no doubt reccollect it when I remind him of it—that it was possible that fraudulent invoices had been sent and goods fraudulently entered. Wherever you have a system of taxation somebody will manage to evade some portion of his just due. The difficulty is all the greater and the temptation is greater if you have two rates of duty on articles precisely the same or of a similar character. But I wish to say that I think it is a mistake to have the discussion proceed upon the assumption that there is widespread fraud in this matter. I have not the same information on this subject as my hon. friend the Minister of Customs. But to the extent of my information I agree with him in saying that I do not believe that such frauds exist to any considerable extent. And I will tell why. The Minister of Customs has said that he appealed to reputable business houses in Great Britain on the subject—and they would have an interest in seeing to it that fraudulent dealers were not permitted to carry on their business in this way—and the best information he could obtain was that this fraud was not likely to be perpetrated to any great extent. Among the numerous gentlemen who have waited on me with regard to tariff matters were many who believed that German goods were being fraudulently brought in as British. But I think I do not go too far when I say that in most cases when they were asked to look into the matter carefully and see if they could fortify their impression—because it was only an impression—by reference to particular cases, they failed to do so. We did not ask them to give public information whereby they would have been brought into trouble. We said: Give us a clue; give us your impressions, we will take your information confidentially—some things we could not take confidentially but that we could—we will be glad to follow up your clues and ascertain the facts if possible. And I think I shall not be doing wrong if I say that in most cases the gentlemen who thought that there was this widespread fraud are now inclined to believe that they were mistaken. Of course, some thought the restrictions should be greater—I do not say they upheld the whole preferential arrangement;—but I think that business men are under the impression, not that there are numerous frauds but that the law is being enforced. It may be that there is fraud—there is temptation. But I know on the other hand, that the hon. Minister of Customs has endeavoured to follow up any information he has gained from the merchants. Wherever he has had a clue he has followed it up to ascertain the truth of the case. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) is right in saying that in matters of undervaluation it is the habit of the customs to send agents abroad, if there is reason to believe that any fraud goes on even to a limited extent. It is the duty of the Minister of Customs in such a case, to send out his officers and to see to it that the revenue is protected. While I say with the Minister of Customs that it is possible and even probable that the revenue laws are sometimes evaded, still, my impression is that there is no such general evasion of the British preferential tariff as has been mentioned, and I think that most business men in Canada who have looked into the matter will confirm that impression. If in any case any gentleman in Canada, or any outside of it, will give information that will enable us to follow up the case, no expense shall be allowed to stand in the way of a full investigation. We have all the same object in view. We all want a British preference, that the article which is the product of British labour shall have the benefit of the British preference. That is why the hon. minister is acting fairly in saying that he would be glad to receive suggestions. When merchants have told me that they believed these evasions were taking place, I have asked them to give us the information and to look into the matter, and they have been compelled to say that they could not give the information and would drop the case. If any merchant in this House or out of it would give us information on which we could proceed, then I believe with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), we should follow the matter up and do everything that may be necessary to make the British preference a British preference in reality.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the mistake the hon. Minister of Finance makes is in talking about this as a fraud. If any exporter has this blank declaration before him what will he do. There are instructions accompanying it to the customs collector or inspector. And they tell him that in valuing the goods if they are twenty-five per cent in value over the value for which they were sold in the country from which the goods come, then they are to be entered under the preference. If the exporter makes out that declaration and the goods pass, he does not regard it as a fraud. He is complying with the regulations of the law, according to instructions given him from the Customs Department here. So he does not regard it as a fraud and in reality it is not a fraud to him. But it seems to me that the government have arrived at this stage—they admit that the law giving a preference cannot be worked out, that they cannot find ways and means of so working it out as to secure this preference for British goods, yet they will not repeal or amend it, but will allow it to remain as it is and allow this imposition upon the British public and the Canadian public to continue. Because, say they, we do not know how to devise ways and means to carry it out and the opposition will not tell us how to do it. That is about the situation. The hon. Minister of Finance says that they spoke to reputable business houses. Who were they? I assume that they are people who buy and import and export this very class of goods and who are interested in carrying on the business exactly upon that line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will permit me, what I said was that of the manufacturers who came with a view to obtaining higher duties, if they might, and who suggested their impression that German goods were being brought in under the British preference, I have not found one who, when pressed to bring information, could show a single case in which this has taken place.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman spoke of reputable houses that were consulted in London, England, and the Minister of Customs did the same. If he qualified it by saying manufacturers——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The manufacturers I refer to were in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Have we not shown the minister over and over again how it can be done. Has not the Minister of Customs himself admitted that it could be done in that way? Yet, with that knowledge before him, he does not propose to amend the law or repeal it, but will allow it to go on.

Mr. MONK. The Minister of Customs must admit that it is not very easy to allow such a large item as this to pass until he can give a categorical explanation as to what is being done to prevent these frauds. No doubt frauds have been committed—I have myself heard in Montreal time and again cases where the goods were introduced into this country coming from Germany, and without the observation of the clause in the tariff with which the minister is familiar. So I think we have a right to obtain a clear and categorical statement from the minister, in that voice that can be heard afar, as to what he intends doing to protect the manufacturers of linseed oil, and also what means he intends to adopt to prevent these frauds in the future. The minister must take the House into his confidence. If he is adopting means which he deems it in the public interest not to make public, he is bound to tell us what proportion of this large increase of $80,000 is going to be employed to prevent these frauds. Under these circumstances, I would suggest that this item stand until we have that categorical statement from the minister, to which I think the public are entitled. I move that the committee rise.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman, not yet. Not only do I want to get these items through to-night, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is waiting to get his estimates through. Of course the hon. gentleman is not serious in moving that the committee rise. Perhaps he was not in the House when I was giving categorical answers, as I have been doing all the evening, I have been doing nothing else. He will find my answers in 'Hansard,' and I am sure he will be satisfied with them. But there is not much fraud under the preferential tariff when you compare it with what takes place under the general tariff. I have admitted there may be fraud, but I go further and I say that under the general tariff I know there are frauds, lots of them. We know it, because we seize the goods, and we have to adjudicate upon these frauds. We have special officers in the United States who travel about ascertaining the values. Every little while cases are coming before me of frauds which have been going on for three years, where there has been systematic undervaluation during all these years; and in dealing with them we not only make the offenders pay duties for the three years, but we impose penalties for the three years. There are scores of such cases under the general tariff.

Mr. MONK. Of fraud?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, under the general tariff. You must have them, you cannot help it.

Mr. MONK. Have there been any seizures in regard to infractions under the British preference?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I believe so; but there has been nothing like the number that there is under the general tariff on goods coming from the neighbouring states, where we get all the information we can. There are scores and scores of seizures, always have been and always will be.

Mr. KEMP. The minister says he has officers throughout the United States investigating. How many officers have the government at the present time, or have they had at any time in the past, in the United States, or in England, in Germany, or France? How many officers have you employed to investigate matters under the British preference?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have not had one, nor do I propose going to the expense of sending one until I am more convinced than I am yet that frauds are being perpetrated. I do not believe there is an evasion of the preferential tariff to that extent that would warrant me in having special officers in England to look into the matter.

Mr. KEMP. Are the Americans more dishonest than the Europeans?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are doing a large trade with the states, and we have our officers over there. As I say, there have been scores and scores of cases in the department, always have been, of undervaluation and cases of fraud that we have to adjudicate. There is the general tariff, you take what precautions you can. What precautions do you take? Prima facie, the invoice, then there is the new declaration which I have introduced. The old declaration was 'certified correct.' That was all there was on the invoice. The merchant goes over to the other side and buys goods at 30 per cent discount. The invoice comes in certified correct. It was a perfectly true and honest invoice as between the seller and the purchaser, but it was not correct for the Customs Department, because customs duties are to be levied on the value of the goods when they are sold in that country. Our merchants were going on and making declarations of the price at which they bought the goods in the country of production. You pointed out to them that the goods were undervalued, and they said they didn't know. Well, we said, there is some one that does know, and that is the man who sells these goods, and we will make him certify to the price, and we got a declaration from him. Now when a case of seizure comes up, we come upon the importer and he says he had no idea the goods were undervalued. But our recourse is not on the foreign merchant, he is not within our reach, but these goods are within our reach, and we put a seizure upon them. It is idle to talk about there being no infringement of the preferential tariff, there may be, but there is nothing approaching the frauds that take place under the general tariff. When I say it is possible that some goods come in illegally, I could not say anything else. But if you want my honest opinion of the preferential tariff, I believe there is very little fraud indeed in comparison with the general tariff. Perhaps I have spoken longer than I should. We want to get on a little faster. We need this money, it is to pay your officers. You believe that your officers ought to be paid a little more, some of them at least; and we are asking for more money to pay them and to open new ports in order to keep up with the increasing business.

Mr. BLAIN. When the minister was in the old country last year he made, as he told us, an effort to find out whether frauds were being committed under this preferential tariff. During the debate a year ago this matter was brought to his attention and a quotation from a British newspaper was read to the House. I propose to read it and find out whether the Minister, when he was in the old country, endeavoured to find out from the publisher of this journal whether this statement was correct.

How Foreigners Rob Canada.

Since Canada granted a preference tariff to Britain, tons upon tons of German and other foreign textiles have been brought over to England and reshipped to Canada, after a so-called process of 'finishing,' in order that they may be classed as goods partly of British manufacture. In some cases this 'finishing' in England consists simply in taking off the German, French or Austrian labels, doing the goods up again, and then giving them a British name or label. There is no branch of trade in which this style of smuggling is carried on to the extent that it is in the textile trade.—(Belfast 'News,' January 23, 1902.

That was read when this question was up for discussion in the House on a former occasion. When the hon. minister was in the old country surely he would have thought it worth his while to go and see the publisher of this large and important journal to find out whether he was publishing articles without a tittle of truth in them as the hon. minister has said. Surely he would have thought it worth his while for the protection of the manufacturers of this country and in view of the complaints that were being made in this House and in the newspapers throughout the country to go to this leading publisher and find out whether this article was correct or not. This article says that tons upon tons of goods are being brought over from Germany to England undergoing slight alteration as to labels, &c., and then being sent to Canada under this preference. Surely the hon. minister would have thought it worth his while to put some special officer at work in this country and the old country to find out whether this condition of things could not be stopped in the interests of the people of Canada.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not see that article.

Mr. BLAIN. It was read in the House last year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not pay any attention to that article. It is like the criticisms that are rather too strong and which lose their force for that reason. Talk about tons and tons and tons! Such statements as those lose their force, just as my statements would if I were indulging in criticism and making statements which were altogether too strong. Perhaps there is a possibility that we may be defrauded in some cases under the preferential tariff just as we are under the general tariff, but there could be no better precautions taken than those we have taken that I am aware of, except to employ an army of men over there watching initial processes and then we could not cover every point.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not employ any at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, we had better get on, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONK. We have only touched the fringe of this question and we think a great deal more might be said upon it, particularly since the hon. minister has admitted that he does not employ any special men in Montreal or on the other side to prevent these alleged frauds.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not admit that.

Mr. MONK. This is another of the consequences of this unfortunate preference which has done no good to the British people and certainly has done no good to us. I would be prepared for my part to allow the item to pass but the hon. gentleman must understand we cannot go any further this evening.

Mr. BROCK. I must acknowledge that I have been quite moved by the appeal of the hon. Minister of Customs, not so much in his own behalf as on behalf of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr.

Préfontaine), whom we are keeping out of bed to such an unusual hour and who is so unaccustomed to it, but notwithstanding that, now that the hon. Minister of Finance has taken a hand in the debate, I would just like to draw his attention to something that probably might not have struck him before. I refer to the disastrous results of the budget that he brought down this year wherein he stated that he was not going to make any tariff changes. The disastrous results of that budget are beginning to show themselves. We put on duties first of all to collect a revenue, I have no doubt, to pay the expenses, but we also put on duties incidentally, I have no doubt, to protect the manufacturers of this country. The extent to which the manufacturers have been protected may be judged somewhat by the state of the industrial classes at the present time. Are we not aware of what is going on in Toronto at the present moment, and of the value that has been put upon cotton stocks, woollen stocks, steel stocks and other stocks that are affected by the tariff that the hon. Minister of Finance has placed upon the statute-book of this country ? How does he like to talk of millions and millions that are being lost in Canada to-day as the result of the disastrous tariff that the hon. Minister of Finance has imposed upon this country, and as the result of the want of proper protection to the industries of this country ? If we had had proper protection we would not have probably kept the committee so late and we would have been in a better spirit and temper to discuss the matter that is now before this committee. We, on this side of the House, do not object that the officers should be well paid. We think that a great many of them are underpaid. At any rate, the point I wish to make is that the state of affairs in Montreal, in Toronto, and in the large cities of this country is such as should startle the hon. Minister of Finance and make him feel that this country is suffering severely as the result of the want of adequate protection to its industries. The hon. minister says that he is assisting these industries by the small amount of duty that he is placing upon important goods. I contend that we would not have the present disastrous condition of affairs in this country that we regret to see by the Ottawa evening papers to-night had the hon. Minister of Finance taken the proper course at the beginning of this session. If, up to the present time, such serious consequences have resulted from the want of adequate protection to Canadian industries, are we not likely to suffer greater disasters if a change is not brought about ? But, we do hope to have a change. We do not hope to have that change with the present hon. gentlemen in power, but we hope that next year a change will be brought about by the people of this country.

An hon. MEMBER. Not much.

Mr. BROCK. I think some hon. gentlemen who say ' not much ' might speak with better knowledge. They know what is going on at the present time in Ontario and in Quebec, and they know how the people are suffering down by the sea. From one end of this country to the other the manufacturers are suffering and suffering definitely and positively in consequence of the manner in which the hon. Minister of Finance has managed the finances and the financial statement of this country. One of the reasons he gave for refusing to make any changes in the tariff this year was that the manufacturers came to him and he refused to accept statements from them which he said they wished to be kept confidential. There was a very good reason for wishing to keep these statements confidential, not from the people of Canada but in the interests of the people of Canada. I think that the hon. Minister of Finance owes the country an apology and the very best reparation he can make after having caused such an enormous loss, and it is no laughing matter—I can assure you it is a very serious matter——

Mr. DAVIS. That is blue ruin.

Mr. BROCK. To those gentlemen who are handling industrial stocks. The great cry of our hon. friends from the west is wheat. They are all right, but the people who are engaged in industrial pursuits, who have invested millions and millions, are losing their money entirely in consequence of the want of proper sympathy and support from the government of this country.

Mr. SMITH (Wentworth). Before that item is passed I would like to get an assurance from the hon. minister in regard to the matter I brought to his attention a little while ago. He is asking for large increases in the salaries of his officers. Surely it would not be too much to ask them to give a receipt when they take money from importers. It is a small matter, but I can assure the hon. minister it is a matter that is felt by those who place their money in the hands of agents at the ports of entry. It is important that they should have a proper means provided of getting a reckoning from these agents. Collusion might take place between the agent and some of the customs officers and a portion of the money in the hands of the broker might be retained. Between the two of them it should be accounted for.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to send me the letter I will correspond with the collector in reference to the matter. It would be inconvenient to make a law like that if there is no general demand for it, and in many of the large ports it would be impossible to do it.

Salaries and contingent expenses of inspectors of ports, and travelling expenses of other officers on inspection and preventive service; Board of Customs—expenditure in connection therewith; Customs laboratory—to meet expenditure in connection with the testing of sugar, molasses, &c., including pay of officers appointed or employed for that purpose; Salaries of officers appointed or employed for compiling statistical returns of imports and exports, $129,200.

Mr. TAYLOR. This item used to be given in detail, under the late government and in the first year of this government, and now we have a lot of these items grouped together and the minister is asking $129,000 for a service that a few years ago used to cost only $40,000. We must have detailed explanation about this.

Mr. MONK. We really have done a considerable amount of work. We have voted a million dollars now, and we spent the afternoon on the Railway Bill to suit the convenience of the Minister of Railways.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, carried.

Mr. MONK. These hon. gentlemen need not say 'carried' because we can stay as long as we see fit to do so. We require an explanation as to why these estimates should be grouped together. I think we have done enough work to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. We have done nothing.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course, there is no intention to force the committee at all, but I am an old enough parliamentarian to know how part of this discussion has gone on to-night. I know that it is not because of a lack of confidence in the Customs Department or in the officers, but gentlemen opposite are in the mood of enjoying themselves a little. I have been long enough in opposition to understand that. However, there will be an opportunity for that when some of my colleagues bring up their estimates, but mine is a business department. I was asked how long my estimates would take and I said they would go through like a shot because I knew that everything was right. Hon. gentlemen opposite have got up one after another on questions that are not very foreign to the subject although a discussion on the tariff was hardly germane to the estimate. We have got over the troublesome item now, and this is a very easy one. The increase is $8,500, but in the supplementary estimates this year I will have to ask for $6,000, because we were short. Here are the particulars: Twelve inspectors, salaries $24,750, expenses $8,500; board of customs, 27 officers, salaries $23,500, expenses $7,000; statistics, 51 officers, salaries $42,000, expenses $400; preventive service, 12 officers, salaries $8,350, expenses $1,300; laboratory, 3 officers, salaries $2,900, expenses $2,500—we have to pay express charges on sugar and other articles that are sent to be tested. Of the increase, $6,000 is to meet additions to the staff and increases. Taking out the 12 inspectors and the chief of the preventive service there are 92 officers and an increase of $50 to each of these would mean an increase of $4,600, I am not promising to give the increase, but I am saying what it would be if we did give it, and perhaps the hon. gentleman would not object to that.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend to give it?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think we will in some cases; yes.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister must have made up his mind to it or he would not ask for more money than he needs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are taking a vote for that, and if the hon. gentleman would please let us have it I think we will use it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should not these votes be kept distinct and separate as they were in 1897, so that we would know what each costs? What is the object of mixing them all up together to confuse them? Omitting this statistical branch which the minister has created, for what purpose we do not know, and which costs $42,000, the minister is now asking $129,200 for services which in 1897 cost us only $42,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This has been done for years, and has been sanctioned by the committee, and for the purpose of comparison is all right. The hon. gentleman is mistaken about the expenditure. There is $42,300 for statistics and $8,350 for preventive service which did not exist in 1897. We established it, and, as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) gave us credit to-night, I believe we have stopped smuggling altogether, and that was a tremendous evil in the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am speaking more particularly of the illicit importations of liquors from St. Pierre and Miquelon, which found their way into those provinces. That is not because the people of those provinces were more addicted to the use of liquor. We have, I believe, wholly stopped that smuggling, and the Minister of Inland Revenue, through that stoppage, finds his receipts greatly increased. The expenditure is against me, but the credit goes to the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. MONK. What amount?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That I cannot state. Unless the drinking habit is cured, the liquor which was formerly smuggled is now got from the home manufacturer, and the country gets the revenue from it. Then we have increased the inspectors since 1897. That was necessary to provide for the inspection of ports which had not been inspected for years. With regard to the statistics, the department have been congratulated by the manufacturers of the country for getting them out. We can send to the members and others at their residences, full returns for the previous month, as full as those that appear in the Trade and Navigation returns.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, by the Customs Department. We publish these returns by the authority of the House. We are taking the vote just as we did before, but we are asking $8,500 to meet the additions to the staff, and leave us a little margin to give an increase of salary to those who deserve it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman takes credit for establishing the detective service. Surely he cannot take credit for that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is the preventive service.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. McMichael was at the head of that service, with a staff of officers under him, and they were paid out of the vote in 1897. And yet the hon. gentleman claims that he established the preventive service. Nothing of the kind; he simply continued the service which he found when he came in, and I do not know that he has added anything to it. The other items were voted separately, whereas my hon. friend grouped them together for his own convenience a year or two ago. It may be that they passed the House unnoticed; but it is not right to vote $129,000 for half a dozen different services. The items should be voted separately so that we shall know what each service costs. My hon. friend claims credit for giving statistical information. We have a double service of that kind both by the Customs Department and the Department of Trade and Commerce. Why should there be this double expenditure unless it is to provide places for friends of my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This preventive service is different from the preventive service to which the hon. gentleman refers. The preventive service we took up, to deal with the great evil of smuggling from St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Mr. TAYLOR. We had that before.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No. Mr. Fred Jones was put at the head of that branch, and he and the officers under him have done great work, and the service has paid for itself many times over.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Jones was not employed, but Mr. McMichael was, and he was at the head of that service.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. McMichael was and is yet at the head of the service. He has inspectors going around to the different ports, but they do not deal with the smuggling. That service is virtually new. The statistics are also new. They are not published by the Department of Trade and Commerce. Every month we send out as fully detailed statistics with reference to the imports and exports of this country as you get in the Trade and Navigation returns, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that they are valued by the business men of Canada, especially by the manufacturers, who have passed resolutions commending me for that course; because it was at their instance largely that these statistics were published.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they not published by both the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Customs Department?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The report of the Department of Trade and Commerce is not in the same shape. They do not give all the details, as we do. What they give they get from the Department of Customs. We gather the information, and they compile it in their own way, in a condensed form.

Mr. MONK. I would like to get some satisfactory explanation from the hon. minister as to why he has abandoned the former system of giving us these expenses in detail. My hon. friend took nearly ten minutes to explain to us the details of this item of $129,000, which would have been perfectly unnecessary if the estimates had been made as they used to be. I have often observed that the report of the Auditor General in England is far less voluminous than ours, which gives us too much detail. But I maintain that a great deal of our time might be shortened if we had more detail given to us in the estimates submitted by the government. How is it that in former estimates we had all the details that we have been obliged to-night to ask from the minister?

We had then in former years the amount in each province, the increase in each province, and other details which saved a great deal of discussion. Under the present system the hon. minister may divert one expenditure to another, so that we do not know exactly what we are voting. The hon. minister should also explain the distinction between the statistics prepared in the new branch he has organized and those we find in the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I fail to see the difference, and this new department imposes on the country an additional expenditure of $42,000. Why has the hon. minister such an enormous staff in that department? The country got on very well before without these fifty-one employees, and the hon. minister tells us that he intends increasing the salaries of these men, who are doing just the same work as is done by the Department of Trade and Commerce. We have also a right to know from the hon. minister the names of those whose salaries he intends increasing.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If I gave the names my hon. friend would not be any the wiser, because he does not know the men. The expenditure this year shows an increase of $8,500 over the last. The expenditure last year was $120,700, and the House voted that amount. We need not therefore go behind that. We have that as a basis to start from, because the House sanctioned that last year, but hon. gentlemen have a right to ask for the details of this additional expenditure of $8,500.

Mr. LANCASTER. The conditions may be changed from last year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The only change is that we are asking a little more salary for some of the men employed in this work. I think it is a fair rule of criticism that you should start with that amount voted last year as a basis, and ask for details of the additional sum required.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman need not tell us what policy we should follow in criticising his estimates.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was simply pointing out what I judged to be legitimate criticism.

Mr. LANCASTER. We are the best judges of that.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister says that the opposition admitted that the vote of $120,000 last year was right. But he will find that the opposition objected as strongly to that vote then as they do now. But because we do not give an individual or separate vote on each item and because an item is forced through by the majority behind him, the hon. minister taunts us with having admitted that the $120,000 voted last year was necessary. We did not admit it then nor do we admit it now, and I would move to have the item reduced by this $8,500.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If you move to reduce this, you are going to place it out of my power to give any additional sum to men I consider underpaid.

Mr. MONK. Not at all, because under the system adopted by the hon. gentleman he can take the money from another part and increase the salaries. He is not bound by this item. The hon. gentleman has not answered any of my questions. I asked why he has abandoned the system of giving the various items composing this vote. We then could tell for what specific purpose we were voting the money. But to-day, instead of giving us the vote under a number of different heads, he groups it in one single item of $120,000, which will enable him to distribute the whole sum of money over the different heads as he chooses. We are asked to vote $120,000 for seven or eight different objects without knowing what amount will be devoted to each one. There may be reason for that. Surely the hon. minister is able to give us the reason. Otherwise, we shall pursue that course and, in future years we shall be voting still larger sums en bloc without knowing what amount is to be devoted to each separate item. That is contrary to the principle of voting money that we have usually followed and are still following in other matters. As representatives of the people we ought to vote the money for each separate item and limit the sum to that item. This is a wise rule that we have followed, and it is the rule followed in England, and, so far as I know, in the United States, and in the large budget that is voted in France. There may be a reason why we should not follow that rule, but, if so, why does the minister not state it? Another question which I asked, which the minister did not attempt to answer. I merely wanted to draw attention to the difference, if any, between the expensive statistical branch he has established and the one in the department of Trade and Commerce, which formerly gave us the same information. There has been no answer. Was the hon. gentleman himself when in opposition, satisfied with those on the treasury benches when they did not answer his questions? I have never had the pleasure of seeing the hon. gentleman perform the duties of a member of the opposition, but I am sure that he insisted upon answers to his reasonable questions. Then the hon. minister will observe that he has not given us the names of those whose salaries are to be increased, for which purpose he asked a considerable amount. Why not give these names? I think we have a right to answers to these questions, and I would like the hon. minister to give me that satisfaction before we pass this item.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said to the hon. gentleman that for years the estimates have been prepared in this way.

Mr. MONK. Not in 1896.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It has been so for some years. It is more convenient. If the items were specified, you would not be able to do with the officers of the department what you can now. The services are of like nature—as, for instance, the inspector of the preventive service, the statistical branch and the laboratory. You cannot estimate exactly what you are going to want for each service. But, in this way of voting the money, you can interchange the officers as you could not do otherwise and pass the Auditor General if the money were otherwise voted. You might want to take an officer of the statistical branch and assign him to the board of customs or one in the office of the board of customs and put him in the preventive service or the laboratory or make one of them assistant inspector. As changes become necessary during the year you can make them. It will be more than a year before this vote is expended, and it is impossible to say what changes may be necessary in that time.

Mr. CLANCY. Why should the hon. minister make any such changes? The hon minister will pardon me for saying that it is incredible that he sould need to distribute his officers in this way. Does he say that he has a staff of officers compiling statistics for whom he has not employment during the year? If so he had better dismiss them. And so with the other branches. It is unreasonable that the hon. gentleman should bulk five or six distinct services and ask the House to vote the whole sum. The country will expect him to tell how much he needs for travelling expenses of inspectors, how much for travelling expenses for other officers, how much for the board of customs, how much for the laboratory, and so on. Each of these is a distinct service. The hon. gentleman will concede that there is nothing unfair in that. I hope his answer will not be that the item slipped through in other years and that therefore it should be passed now. The fact that it slipped through without question before does not do away with the right of the committee to ask for the facts now. Will he give his estimate of how much is required for each service? If he cannot, he has bungled his department and its expenditure in such an extraordinary manner that the country cannot learn anything about it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I gave that detail, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) did not hear it.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman give it for each service?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, and I have no objection to repeating the figures for the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. CLANCY. I understood the hon. gentleman to give the estimate for last year. But, of course, that is only half the question. Will he give the expenditure?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the actual expenditure for 1901-2.

Mr. MONK. I think that, so far as getting any information from the hon. gentleman in regard to the difference between his statistical branch and the similar branch in the Department of Trade and Commerce, I must give it up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No. I must beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Monk's) pardon, I was going on to speak of that, when the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) interrupted me. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier can bring that up when the Minister of Trade and Commerce is putting his estimates through, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will then give his reasons for the publication that comes from his department. I have given the justification for the issue so far as the Customs Department is concerned. I believe every member of the House values this publication. By bringing the statistical department here we are able to do what we could not do before. We used to have great delay in obtaining the Trade and Navigation returns. Sometimes, even in the month of March, we could not get the returns of the imports and exports of Canada for the month of June previously. Members were forced to ask for special returns, whereas under this system, in the month of July, you can get the whole transactions, imports and exports, for the month of June.

Mr. MONK. I do not quite see that the statements which we get should necessitate so large a staff of employees. Here are fifty of them at an expenditure of over $40,000 a year. I can understand that possibly a larger number of employees might get out the information more rapidly than we got it before.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman will be pleased to know that our statistical department is doing its work very rapidly. There is not a country on the face of the globe that gets out as prompt returns and with as much information as we get. I believe Canada stands ahead of every nation in this respect.

Mr. MONK. I do not at all agree with the hon. gentleman. It is like our Year-book that we get a year after the proper time. If you go to New Zealand, to Australia, or to all the other British dependencies, you will find that their Year-book is out a long time before ours. If you go to the United States, you will find that their statistical abstracts of trade are more complete, sooner brought out, better printed, in fact better than ours in every respect. But the hon. gentleman, I think, has laid down a very erroneous principle when he claimed that because we had passed an item in a previous year we must necessarily pass it every year, unless there is an increase. I do not think the hon. gentleman adhered to that principle when he was in opposition. Parliament is called expressly for the purpose of criticising every year every item of expenditure; that is our duty, and we are endeavouring to fulfil it. Now when my hon. friend to my right made a motion to reduce this item by $8,500, he gave us an example of the kind of arbitrary power we are conferring upon the minister. What did the minister say? He said that in that case all the poor employees of his department would be deprived of their increase of salary for this year. What enabled the hon. gentleman to say that? Just the very rule which he has infringed for two or three years past, and which my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) pointed out. He gave us several services voted en bloc; and then he says that he can increase or diminish the number of members of the board of customs and their travelling expenses. He is absolute master of that sum of $129,000. My hon. friend knows what difficulties this government had with the Auditor General, most of which were based upon the failure to observe the good old rule that we should vote specific amounts for specific purposes. Now I venture to say that most of the correspondence that we find in the Auditor General's Report since this wise rule has been infringed, has been caused precisely by a failure to observe that rule. Under this particular vote let me point out that we can diminish the salary of all the employees of the board of customs out of the $24,000 that he says is required for that special service for this year. Out of that $24,000 he can divert any sum he likes, to provide for the expenses of a preventive service, for instance. Does he not see that voting money in that way deprives the House of Commons of its valuable privilege of controlling these expenses? We say to the minister: Here is a sum of $129,000, of which you can spend just as much as you like, provided you confine it to six or seven specific objects. If I am in order, Mr. Chairman, I move that this item 228, of $129,200, be divided so as to show the sum of money to be appropriated to each service. I think that would be bringing us back to a very wise rule, and save the government a good deal of trouble with the Auditor General.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the only safe rule parliament can follow in voting money. The object of separating it up into as many parts as possible is that the House may understand what the money is needed for, and afterwards that there may be control over its expenditure.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I trust hon. gentlemen do not think it necessary to do that. Where is the danger? If there be no danger, it is a convenience in the department. If I had to estimate for these different votes I should then have to estimate for a larger amount than I am asking here. I would have to ask for more money under different heads. Things will occur. There are fourteen months ahead before some of this money will be expended, and it is impossible to estimate the whole thing. As it is, this is in the hands of the minister, and it will be in the hands of the minister then. The minister has no more opportunity of doing what is unjust if the vote were divided than he has now. When you want to make an expenditure of a certain amount for a public work, you want to know how much money you are going to expend and what it is for. This is an absolutely different thing, because we are now dealing with the question of salaries and expenses attendant upon the duties of these men.

Mr. SPROULE. Under the old system, when it was broken up and specifically given, was it the custom of the government to ask for more? They asked for less.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will give the hon. gentleman an illustration of that myself. Formerly the vote was made by provinces. This was changed, because you could not estimate fourteen months ahead, and you would have to make an outside estimate for each province. If you ran short $2,000 in one province and you had $8,000 which you did not need in another province, you could not, under the old system, use the unexpended money in the province where your estimate had fallen short, and the officers in the province in which you were short would have to wait for their pay until the new estimates were passed.

Mr. BLAIN. If the House votes money for, say the board of customs, the hon. minister asks the privilege of being allowed to expend that on salaries. Would he not regard that as dangerous legislation?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The board of customs means salaries.

Mr. BLAIN. Or for travelling expenses. The hon. minister has a general vote here, and he can take that money and apply it to any purpose he wishes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Within the vote.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that not a rather dangerous kind of legislation? I think it is, and it is not permitted in any other department of government.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, yes; that has always been permitted in the estimates of the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. BLAIN. Not in the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is a very different thing.

Mr. BLAIN. It is a question whether this House has a right to pass legislation in that way. It seems to me that the minister having charge of that department in the House ought to be able to say nearly how much money he requires for the next twelve or fourteen months for the payment of salaries.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is what I am doing.

Mr. BLAIN. And that he should be able to say what he requires for travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is what I have done.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, if the hon. minister comes forward and says that he wants $20,000 for travelling expenses, what objection can he have to saying that it will be expended for that purpose alone?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You cannot tell exactly. Suppose a case of fraud arises and a special officer has to go to Kansas City, or New York, or Philadelphia, or Boston, you must have a little something to play on. If I had to separate this, I would have to ask for a larger amount than I have, because there would be a danger that in some way we might be short, and the expenses could not be paid. The mission would have to be foregone or the officer could not get his pay. I have given the actual expenses under the different heads last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much did they amount to ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $121,000. There is nothing to be gained by dividing the vote, and you will only make it more difficult for the department to work. You will just increase the book-keeping.

Mr. TAYLOR. How would it increase the book-keeping ?

Mr. SPROULE. Let us take the hon. minister's reasoning, and we could very much reduce the work of this House. Take, for instance, the Militia Department. There is money to be voted for cartridges, for travelling expenses, pay and drill. We have been dividing these items up and asking for a specific amount for each of them. We could reduce the work very materially by saying we want $2,500,000 for militia purposes. We might go through every department of government and do the same thing. But we do not do it, because parliament, in its wisdom, has devised a better way, and one that is calculated more to protect the public treasury.

Mr. CLANCY. How is the minister able to say what each service costs if there is that promiscuous sort of a thing, of one clerk going from one service to the other. How often has that happened during the past year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am told by the accountant that we have done it two or three times during the last two or three months.

Mr. CLANCY. The very rarity of its occurrence shows that there is no necessity for it. The minister was an able critic when in opposition and he did his country good service, but he knows that such a latitude amounts to license and that it is an extremely bad precedent. I am prepared to acquit the hon. gentleman of anything like stealing or misappropriating any money or anything of that kind, because I believe that if a greater sum were voted to him than is necessary he would only spend so much as would be in the interest of the country, but the principle is wrong.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no parallel between this case and the case of the Department of Public Works as has been cited. It would not be right to take a vote of $2,000,000 for buildings in Ontario without specifying where these buildings were, but here is a vote to pay salaries earned by our officers and what does it matter so long as the salary is paid whether it is paid under the head of statistics or under the head of Board of Customs. It is a convenience to the department and I hope hon. gentlemen will let it pass, as it is now nearly one o'clock.

Mr. MONK. I move to amend the second item of resolution on 228 so as to show the the sum of money to be appropriated to each service. I am quite prepared to admit that I believe the minister will make a judicious use of this money and that he will not divert it unnecessarily from one service to the other, but in order to defend this system he should not fall back upon his own honesty in which we have the most implicit trust. There is no such vote as this taken in committee of the British parliament.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My impression is that the whole army vote and navy vote is passed in a bulk sum.

Mr. MONK. No.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am inclined to think so, but I am very certain there is no such detail in the British estimates as there is in our estimates.

Mr. MONK. I am perfectly sure that the hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says that the whole army vote or the whole navy vote in England is passed in a bulk sum. We never find in the British estimates a number of items accumulated together as these are. In voting this sum of $139,000, we are confiding the disposal of it to the hon. gentleman's own discretion. That is what we have no right to do. My hon. friend says he would probably not make any undue use of the money, even in the exercise of that discretion. But in all previous years up to 1896, we voted the amount for the service under separate items. In 1896 it amounted to $819,000, whereas here it amounts to $1,000,000, all the items being grouped together.

Amendment negatived : Yeas, 7 ; nays, 28.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. minister if he proposes to establish a custom-house in Bracebridge ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Bracebridge is one of fifteen or twenty points with reference to which applications have been made. It is an important point, and the application is under consideration. We have not yet finally determined. We ascertain in all cases what business is done. I had a deputation to see me about Bracebridge.

Mr. CLANCY. I might ask about Dresden ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is under consideration, too.

Mr. CLANCY. May I ask the hon. gentleman if there is any comfort to be drawn from the fact that it is under consideration ? Does that brighten the present prospect any ? He took Dresden under consideration last year, when he asked for $10,000 for matters of this kind, including, I believe, some service in British Columbia. This year he is asking for a larger sum. The country has a fair claim on the large revenue the hon. gentleman is collecting from the people, and I think he ought to congratulate himself that there are not more than twenty places asking for additional advantages. I quite understand that the hon. gentleman is subject to constant pressure, in some cases not entirely warranted. I also recognize that it is difficult to make a distinction between different places; but there are always business interests, as in the town of Dresden, which should decide the matter, and the people there put to inconvenience in not having that point made an outport. The hon. gentleman has a preventive officer at Walpole Island, and I would suggest that he might transfer that officer to Dresden and do away with the service at Walpole Island. I know the locality very well. It is said that smuggling has gone on there to a large extent; but a very small sum is collected by the officer there, indicating that the smuggling is very small. I hope the hon. gentleman will consider the desirability of making this change.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It was represented that there was a large Indian settlement at Walpole Island, and that there was not only smuggling, but that the Indians were getting liquor, and that it was desirable to have an officer there. Dresden is becoming an important point. Bracebridge is also. As the hon. gentleman knows, Dresden is near Wallaceburg.

Mr. CLANCY. Twelve miles distant.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That would weigh against it as compared with Bracebridge, whose nearest point is Orillia, thirty-five miles away. I am not putting one place against the other. I am merely stating the points that we have to consider.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to know where the hon. gentleman gets the representation that the Indians are bringing in liquor to such an extent as to require him to keep an officer there. It is not liquor to resell. If it is a little bottle in an Indian's pocket, the officer would have as much difficulty as anybody else in protecting it. I would like to know where the representation comes from.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know whether it was an inspector or not who reported it, but it was reported that it was necessary.

Mr. MONK. I would like to call attention to the reports I have heard of frauds in Montreal in connection with importations from Germany. The hon. minister might employ somebody to find out whether those reports, which have reached me from reputable people, are well founded.

Miscellaneous—Day books, ledgers, bookbinding, printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, &c., for various ports of entry, legal expenses and uniforms for customs officers, $37,500.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is an increase of $2,500 here, which is required to meet the cost of printing a book now in course of preparation by the assistant commissioner, containing instructions to the customs officers on their respective duties. We have 1,617 officers, and I suppose each one should have a copy.

Mr. TAYLOR. How does the hon. minister account for requiring $37,500 now when in 1896-7 only $15,000 were required.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. $3,000 are accounted for by the expenditure on uniforms.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find by the Auditor General's Report that last year the department purchased from W. E. Charleson, goods to the amount of $784.94. Were those purchased by tender ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, they were just small items.

Mr. TAYLOR. They were small items bought at retail prices. There is no merchant in Canada who figures so often in the Auditor General's Report as W. G. Charleson. In this account, F—36 of the Auditor General's Report, there are sixteen coal screens at $7.75; enamelled measures, two sets $9.50; ever-ready flash lights, two, $7.50; hammers and hatchets, twenty-four at fifty cents, three at sixty cents; nail pullers, one at $1.25, fourteen at $1.50. In any hardware store you can purchase the best at one dollar. We want samples of these goods brought here. Paper clips, 101, $75.75; padlocks, two gross at $125. We would like to see a sample of the padlocks. You can buy them at ninety cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We want good padlocks.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, and I know what customs padlocks are. Why not go to a wholesale hardware man and pay cash prices instead of paying Charleson retail prices for two gross of padlocks, $250. Scales, union, three at $7; four at $7.50; special, seventeen at $6, one at $7; stamping scales, $7.65; small items, $38.40. These goods are charged from twenty-five to fifty per cent advance on the wholesale price. Why should the hon. minister throw away the people's money in this manner? I think this is enough to warrant the committee to be careful in voting money to the minister—in whose own honesty every person has confidence, but whose department we find buying articles from Mr. Charleson at such prices as I have quoted.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is something I do not know about. To tell the truth I did not know that Mr. Charleson's name was there. But I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has mentioned the matter. I do not know that we can buy these small articles by tender, but we have a right to be saved from over-charge. I will take this matter up with the clerk of supplies and shall question him as to whether we get proper value. So far as I am concerned, I want no extra prices paid for goods, I will look into the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. I see that legal expenses are included in this item. How much was spent for legal expenses last year?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There were only two small items, one for legal advice given to the collector at Montreal, $12 odd, and the other was over some trouble about a lease in Richibucto.

Mr. MONK. This is another case of grouping. And, to show that in England these items are voted according to the principles we have been defending, let me point out the difference. This item includes: day-books, ledgers, book-binding, printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, &c., for various ports of entry, legal expenses and uniforms for customs officers. In England they separate printing, paper, parchments, binding, small stores, printing for stationery, office publications. There is far more detail in England and each item is treated separately.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is not the army estimate put through in one vote?

Mr. MONK. I have not the army vote here, but the hon. gentleman may be quite sure that in England money is not voted in this way. Now, with regard to the point raised by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), why does not the department adopt the principle which is observed in England and which I have often advocated here? In England they send out a circular with respect to stationery and other articles which the department may require. A list of the articles is given, and the circular is sent to responsible persons, who are asked to report the lowest price at which they will furnish these articles. But the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) purchases these articles without tender, and without information as to prices from friends of the department. We lose more money in that way than it would take to put the port of Montreal in perfect condition in five years. Is the hon. gentleman willing to try the experiment of following the English fashion in this matter?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Day books, ledgers, stationery and such articles are furnished to all the departments from the Printing Bureau.

Mr. MONK. Why is not the principle adopted for all the departments? The hon. gentleman knows that at present when hardware is required, it is Mr. Charleson who sells it to the government at prices that are always or almost always excessive. We have gone into these details in the Public Accounts Committee, and in every case there was proof that a great deal more was charged than the regular price.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is a mistake.

Mr. MONK. No, I think the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) will recollect seeing in his own newspaper organs, statements that we were paying attention to trifles. They were trifles taken separately, but the aggregate of all these trifles was a very large sum. But, not only is it a loss of money, but the system is unjust to the people in the trade. Under the method pursued in England every man has an equal chance to sell his goods to the government.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this new arrangement is an ingenious device to get around the Auditor General who has been a very troublesome official to the government——

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not to our department.

Mr. SPROULE. Reading the correspondence in the Auditor General's Report, I think we are justified in coming to that conclusion. He has objected to expenditure in many cases because it was not, in his judgment, in acordance with the purpose for which the money was voted. Now, this new arangement is the only way—except by overruling by the Treasury Board—by which the government can get over the Auditor General. This is admirably calculated to answer the purpose and leave the government free to spend money in any one of half a dozen lines without any check whatever. We have just voted a sum of no less than $129,200 which may be spent on travelling expenses, board of customs laboratory, or statistical branch. No matter how the government arranges the expenditure within these broad limits, the Auditor General can make no complaint. If this system is to be continued, you might as well do away with the Auditor General, for his supervision of expenditure is reduced practically to nothing. I do not believe the country will endorse this or like it. The Auditor General is a most useful and important officer, and his power of imposing a check upon the government expenditure should not be curtailed. The sooner we drop this system and revert to that which we formerly had, the better. We asked the minister several times why he grouped the expenditures in this way, and he gave us several frivolous reasons—did not appeal to us as being legitimate or proper reasons at all. I think I can see through it plainly now, that is the reason for which it has been adopted. I think we will find many evils creeping in under this system, and the sooner we abandon it the better.

Mr. MONK. A moment ago I was pointing out how these items are voted in England. Here is a sum of £536,000 passed in estimates in England, and passed probably in a shorter time than it has taken to discuss this item. But every detail is given: Allowances to servants, allowances to one surveyor, allowance to assistants in laboratory, pay of each clerk, pay of boy clerk, increase in salary of boy clerk. Every single item of that large sum is given.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But they do not discuss individual items as the hon. gentleman is doing.

Mr. MONK. If we take a longer time to vote the estimates, it is because we do not have the information.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The item under consideration is word for word as it was in 1895-96.

Mr. MONK. That does not make it right.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman will certainly allow this item to stand until he brings down the information.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then we can stay here as long as the hon. gentleman can. My hon. friend said he did not know that Mr. Charleson spent $780 of this money last year buying goods. He says the storekeeper no doubt did it. But storekeepers only buy at such places as the government directs. I presume the minister tells his storekeeper where he shall buy his supplies.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I do not, the commissioner may.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman allow this item to stand until he brings down the information, telling us where the storekeeper purchased these goods and at what prices? And let him give us some illustration of the values that we get for the money we expend.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He purchased them because he wanted them, and he certifies to all of them as being reasonable.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let us have a sample of the goods. We have men in this House who know the value of goods as well as Mr. Charleson. The hon. gentleman does not know anything about the value of these goods.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He certifies that the prices are fair and just. I told the hon. gentleman that I would look into it myself, if that is what he means.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then bring down the information before the item is passed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. On concurrence. I cannot get it to-night. I am anxious to get this passed, so that we may pay these men.

Mr. TAYLOR. We can stay till six o'clock, and we are prepared to do it. The hon. gentleman is undertaking to bluff us to-night. He wants to pass all his estimates before he quits. He is not going to make any progress by adopting this course. Though we are few in numbers, we have just as strong powers of endurance as the hon. gentleman and his friends. We want some more information. Will the hon. gentleman bring down a sample of these goods and submit them to members of this House who are acquainted with the prices? He will find that the prices are outrageous.

Mr. McCREARY. Can you not criticise these items in the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. TAYLOR. But the minister is asking for these votes for next year, and probably a slice of them will go to Mr. Charleson again.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The accountant tells me that he cannot get a nail puller, that they have not got any.

Mr. TAYLOR. Your accountant will not tell you that he cannot get a duplicate of them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I know what an opposition can do if they want to. But when the hon. gentleman says he will talk till daylight, I do not think his friends will support him. The hon. gentleman says he thinks that we paid excessive prices for certain supplies. Well, I will take care to examine into that, I will do so to-morrow the first thing. I will have the clerk of supplies up, and find out what he has done. Now the accountant tells me that he gets a statement that the goods have been received and that the prices charged are fair and just. This person was not appointed by me. He is one of the higher salaried officers and a cousin of Sir Charles Tupper, I think, but a gentleman we have confidence in, and when the hon. gentleman says that they will talk all night unless I consent to let this go, I do not think he is reasonable. This item we are considering now has been the same year after year, with the exception that the customs officer's uniform has been added.

Mr. MONK. I do not think there is anything unreasonable in this demand. Here is an item of $37,000 which is not as it has been in previous years. It is more than doubled, and we find that Mr. Charleson has sold to the government an item of $708 worth of goods. I am not an expert in the value of hardware. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is, and perhaps the hon. minister is, and perhaps he will be struck with the prices that are charged in that account. They appear to be very abnormal and very extravagant and this is not the first time Mr. Charleson's name has come under the observation of this committee, and the Committee on Public Accounts in connection with excessive charges.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A customs lock would necessarily be a good lock.

Mr. MONK. Is there anything unreasonable in asking that we should see samples of this extravagant bill of sale?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. These goods are scattered all over the country.

Mr. MONK. There are no samples ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No samples, so the accountant tells me.

Mr. MONK. As my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) says they could be got at any time, and one of these locks would be worth keeping as a curiosity.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This clerk can go before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. MONK. When we have voted the money and find that these remarkable charges have been made, our duty is to recriminate.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would the hon. gentleman know the value of a padlock if he were to see it ?

Mr. MONK. I would. But there are other articles mentioned that I do not know very much about, and I would certainly like to see these samples. I do not think this is a very unreasonable demand. I venture once more to make an appeal to the hon. leader of the House. It is going on to two o'clock and I do not think it is fair to ask us to sit here any longer. I am ready to remain all night if it is necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I had hoped at an earlier stage of the evening that we might have had an opportunity of directing our attention to the estimates of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine), but it is rather too late now for that. I think, however, that having devoted so much time to the estimates of the hon. Minister of Customs, it is only reasonable that we should finish this branch of the estimates and then adjourn. In regard to the late hours, my own opinion is that if the session is to close any time this side of October we will have to sit later than we have been doing in the past. I hope to have the co-operation of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is all very well to adjourn at eleven o'clock if business is going on smoothly, but if the work is to be disposed of it will be necessary that we should sit later than we have been doing in the past.

Mr. MONK. I agree with the hon. Minister of Finance as to the desirability of finishing the session, but it seems to me that we are called upon too early in the session to vote large sums of money when important measures are left in abeyance until it is too late to do them justice. Now, as to the proposition of my hon. friend may I suggest to him that we finish these estimates of the Department of Customs with the exception of one item, the amount required to meet the expenditure in the Yukon. I make this request as there are really so few of us here to-night, and I think it would be well to leave one item open.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are supplementary estimates for the current year and the coming year to come down, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that they will afford ample opportunity for discussing customs matters, and that if they pass this item they will not in any way deny themselves the opportunity of discussing any customs questions at a later stage if in their judgment such is necessary.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have to bring down supplementary estimates for the Yukon for this year, and hon. gentlemen will then have an opportunity of discussing the question because there will be an expenditure made.

Mr. MONK. I suppose if we have an opportunity in the Public Accounts Committee to look into this account of Mr. Charleson we can bring it up in the supplementary estimates ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the slightest objection to you doing it?

Amount required to meet expenditure in the Yukon Territory, $40,000.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister ought to give us some explanation as to the increase because there has been a falling off in the revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not this year.

Mr. CLANCY. As compared with two years ago.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We ask $40,000 for 1903-4. For the current year we asked $31,000, and I will have to bring down a supplementary estimate for $5,000 extra for this year so that the actual increase will be $4,000 over the expenditure of the current year.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the cause of the increase ? As the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock) knows there has been a very great shrinkage in the revenue.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will have to ask for a supplementary estimate this year for $5,000 more, so that really when this is voted by the House the increase will be $4,000, as between 1902-3 and 1903-4. The increase is made up by an increase in living expenses of two officers at Dawson, Messrs. Harold Rolph and A. Forest, of from $1,200 to $1,800 per year each, increased living allowance to the appraiser, Mr. Wm. Marchant, from $1,200 to $1,800. That is for six months. He comes out from the Yukon to Victoria during the winter, and he is not allowed his living expenses then, but for the six months he is in the Yukon he is allowed $1,800. Then, we have a new officer, Mr. A. D. Ross, who has no living allowance, but who has a salary of $1,800, and there are two new officers who are employed seven months in the year at a salary of $150 a month each. They are T. W. Alcock and T. R. Moulton. These officers were employed on the recommendation of Chief Officer McMichael. He went up there during the summer clothed with plenary power to put the office in perfect shape and he made these arrangements.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—HIDES INSPECTION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I beg to call the attention of the government to the following telegram which I have received :

Some men interested in cattle trade called on me to-night and asked me to put in protest against government's Bill insisting on the stamping of hides. They say there should be no government interference in the matter, for instance, if their hides are stamped number three by the government inspector and they cannot get their price here and have to sell in the states the stamp will hurt them very much. Look into the matter and if you can say something in above line try and do so as I hear also it is the tanners who are at the bottom of it and against the cattle men and farmers.

This telegram is from Mr. W. F. Maclean. I understand the Bill is before the sub-committee and not finally considered, and I wish to call the attention of the government to it, so that they may know. Might I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Railways desires to resume the consideration of the Railway Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Will that be all for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we get through that we will be very glad ; the Bill is quite a long one.

Mr. SPROULE. If you get through will you go into supply ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not anticipate that we would get through with it, but if we should be so fortunate as to dispose of it——

Mr. SPROULE. If you dispose of that, will you go into supply ? It is of some importance that we should know.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is possible we might take up other Bills, but if all other business is disposed of, we would have to go on with supply, and in that case the estimates of the Minister of Marine will be under consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.50 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 3, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 191) to incorporate the Home Bank of Canada.—Mr. Russell.

Bill (No. 192) to enable the city of Winnipeg to utilize the Assiniboia river water power.—Mr. Puttee.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT—AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 193) to amend the Public Works Act. He said : Under the Public Works Act it is provided that the department shall invite tenders for all work to be done. But for the last twenty years, under an Order in Council and on the discretion of the minister, the department could do work up to the amount of $5,000 without inviting tenders. That Order in Council, I understand, has been declared ultra vires by an opinion of the Department of Justice. It is my intention to ask that the Act be amended so as to provide that the department can expend sums up to the amount of $5,000 without inviting tenders ; in other words, making legal by legislation what has been the custom for a great many years in the department.

Mr. MONK. Is there any provision for the transfer of a part of the attributions of the Public Works Department to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not in this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. WILSON—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. On what part or parts of the bonuses or subsidies, voted in 1896 and up to 1st of May, 1903, was interest payable ? How much of each of the said bonuses or subsidies, on which interest is payable, has been paid ; and what are the details with reference to each railway ?

2. What is the amount of interest paid in each of these years by each of the said railways on the bonuses or subsidies they have received ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The answer to both questions is that no interest has been paid on these accounts.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER ALIEN LABOUR ACT.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. How many writs, or prosecutions, for violation of the Alien Labour Act have been instituted since the coming into force of that Act ?

2. What was the date of the first, and what was the date of the last, of such writs or prosecutions ?

3. How many of such writs, or prosecutions, have resulted in recovery of penalty, or conviction ?

4. How many persons have been deported from Canada for violating the Alien Labour Act ?

5. How many applications have been made to the government for the institutions of writs, or prosecutions, under the Alien Labour Act, which have not been complied with by the Government ?

6. What amount has been expended by the government for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Act, in each year since this Act came in force ?

7. How much has been paid to informers on account of penalties recovered under the Alien Labour Act, in each year since the coming into force of the said Act ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). As to the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 7th questions, the government has no power to institute actions for violations of the Act, the law vesting such power in private citizens. The government has no information as to how many of such actions may have been instituted or what penalties may have been recovered. If any such penalties have been recovered, no portion thereof has been paid over to the Crown. Under an apparent misunderstanding as to the provisions of the law, eight applications have been made to the government for the institution of actions for the violation of the Act, but which the government has no legal authority to comply with.

4. Fifty-two persons were deported as the result of official investigations and nineteen left the country during the course of investigations, making a total of seventy-one deportations carried out at the instance of the Department of Labour.

6. The following sums have been expended by the government for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Act :—

1900-1..	277 65
1901-2..	277 65

Since the latter date there has been no separate account of the cost of enforcing this Act.

Mr. WILSON.

CONTRACT FOR NEW PIER AT QUEBEC.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. When was the contract for the construction of a new wharf, or pier, in the harbour of Quebec, granted to Messrs. Dussault & Lemieux ?

2. What is the contract price for the building of the said wharf, or pier ?

3. How many tenders were received for the said wharf ?

4. What are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender ?

5. After the contract had been awarded to Messrs. Dussault & Lemieux, were any changes made in the specifications and plans of the said wharf ? If so, what changes ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. May 8th, 1903.

2. $198,700.

3. Seven tenders were received.

4. Dussault & Lemieux, $198,700 ; The W. J. Poupore Company (Limited), $199,999.99 ; Lyons & White, $219,900 ; M. P. Davis, $249,000 ; M. Connolly, $273,000 ; Larkin, Sangster & Macdonald, $300,000 ; informal—cheque not accepted—Corry & Laverdure, $184,000.

5. No.

ILLUSTRATIONS IN REPORT OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. INGRAM asked :

1. Have any complaints been made to or by the Department of Public Printing and Stationery regarding the unsatisfactory character of the half-tone illustrations which appear in the annual report of the Department of the Interior ?

2. Were the half-tone cuts for these illustrations made in the Government Printing Bureau? If not, in what office were they made, and what was paid for them ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. The Department of the Interior complained of eight illustrations at the end of part 6. The two least satisfactory were cancelled and done over again. The King's Printer pointed out at the time that the original photographs, which were supplied by the Department of the Interior, were done by an unsuitable process, and better results could not be expected from them.

2. No, the half tone plates were not made at the Government Printing Bureau.

Of the illustrations which appeared, six were done in the Federal Press office, Ottawa, and the two others were done by the Grip Company, of Toronto. For the six $8.50 each, and for the two $12.50 each was paid.

MONTREAL POST OFFICE.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Has an investigation been made in regard to the accumulation of postal matter in the Montreal post office ?

2. By whom was said investigation made ?
3. What is the result of said investigation ?
4. Did the person charged with said investigation hear any of the employees upon whom devolves the duty of handling said mail matter?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). If it is intended by this question to suggest that there has been any accumulation of general postal matter in the Montreal post office, such a suggestion is without foundation. The history of the post office shows that at leading city post offices, on exceptional occasions, large quantities of printed, circular and other advertising matter, at times amounting to tons in weight, are at the same moment delivered at the post office for distribution, but such matter is not allowed to interfere with the regular despatch of ordinary regular mail matter. One such instance occurred at Montreal a few weeks ago, owing to the unexpected arrival at that point of a considerable quantity of American circulars, advertisements and sample newspapers, and was in due course disposed of without any interruption whatever to the despatch of the regular business of the office.

No formal investigation was called for or held. It happened that a certain newspaper in Montreal charged the department with delay in the transmission of mail matter, and the Chief Post Office Superintendent, being in Montreal at the time, looked into the matter and informed himself by inquiry of the proper officers as to what foundation there was for the charge, and he found the facts to be as above stated.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Is the government aware that bags of newspapers, circulars and catalogues have remained for weeks, and even months, in the Montreal post office, owing to the insufficient number of employees in said office ?
2. Have Montreal post office employees been obliged frequently to work overtime, in order to dispose of such accumulated mail matter ?
3. Have said employees been paid for such extra work ?
4. Has the Minister of Labour any knowledge of the above facts ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. No.
2. No, only occasionally to meet emergencies.
3. No.
4. The Minister of Labour is not aware that any employee at Montreal is either overworked or underpaid.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Is it the case that employees in the Montreal post office have been subjected to fines, and even suspended, for weeks at a time, for trifling and involuntary mistakes, in the discharge of their duties ?
2. What becomes of the fines thus imposed upon the employees ?
3. Have letter carriers been dismissed for delaying during one day the delivery of certain newspapers, while whole bags of newspapers, and even letters, remained unsorted and undelivered at the Montreal post office, contrary to the public interest ?
4. Is the Minister of Labour aware of the foregoing state of affairs ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. No.
2. The amount of the fine levied upon any employee, if deducted from his salary, would remain in the treasury.
3. No.
4. The state of affairs above suggested appears to be entirely imaginary.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in Committee on Bill (No.21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 26,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that in the latter part of the section there is some confusion of language. You say that :

> Every document purporting to be signed by the chief commissioner and secretary, or by either of them, shall be prima facie evidence in all courts.

I think that is all right.

It would be better phraseology to say 'any document certified by the commissioner or secretary, or either, to be a copy shall have the same force and effect as the original.' However, if the minister is satisfied with it I have no objection.

On section 29,

> The company shall, as soon as possible after the receipt by it, or service upon it, of any regulation, order, direction, decision, notice, report or other document of the board, or the minister, or the inspecting engineer, give cognizance thereof to each of its officers and servants performing duties which are or may be affected thereby, by delivering a copy to him or by posting up a copy thereof in some place where his work or his duties, or some of them, are to be performed. 51 V., c. 29, s. 25, Am.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest to the hon. minister that the words in the section, after the word 'thereby' be struck out, and some words like these inserted : 'And shall see that such regulation, order, &c., is properly carried out.' You are limiting the company to a certain way of delivering the document, and I think it would be more practicable to leave it to the company themselves to decide the best way of reaching their servants or employees, so long as they carried it out. I submit that for the consideration of the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were a number of suggestions made by some Ontario organizations, —boards of trade or town councils—and this may be one of them. Some of these suggestions, it was not thought well, on consideration, to adopt, because they were framed without a knowledge of the scheme of the Bill as a whole. On a superficial glance, they might seem to be all right, while if adopted they would dislocate some parts of the Bill. We have ample provisions in the Bill that the company shall do their duty, and defining what their duty is, so that it is not necessary to say in this clause that they shall perform their duty.

On section 35,

Any decision or order made by the board under this Act may be made an order of the Exchequer Court, or a rule, order or decree of any Superior Court of any province of Canada, and shall be enforced in like maner as any rule, order or decree or order of such court.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You make this new board of commissioners a board of record ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What, then, is the necessity of making any decision or order of the board an order of the Exchequer or Superior Court ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One very cogent reason is that it might be necessary to enforce it by some executive officer or some machinery of the court.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would this have the effect of giving the court jurisdiction over the matter or a right to hear an appeal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

On section 35, subsection 2,

Where an order or decision of the board has been made a rule, order or decree of any court, any order or decision of the board rescinding or changing the same shall be deemed to cancel the rule, order or decree of such court, and may in like manner, be made a rule, order or decree of court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to amend this subsection so as to make it apply to orders of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as well as to orders of the board. Therefore I move that after the word 'board' these words be added : 'under this Act or of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council under the Railway Act.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see that provision is made for an appeal from this board to the Governor General in Council. In case of such an appeal and of a change of the order by the Governor General in Council, what means would you have of enforcing that decision ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Exactly the same. The appeal would be from the order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council—under the law as at present. The Governor General in Council, if they saw fit, would rescind or vary the order in any way. When so adjudged it would be sent back to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and they would make their order in the terms of the order of the Governor General in Council. They would be obliged to do that. Then, that order, so amended, would be made a rule of court.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there any section that provides for that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is inherent in the necessity of the case.

Motion agreed to, and subsection amended.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 39,

When any work, act, matter or thing is, by any regulation, order or decision of the board, required to be done, performed or completed within a specified time, the board may, if the circumstances of the case seem to so require, upon notice and hearing, or in its discretion, upon ex-parte application, extend the time so specified.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that not a little dangerous to suggest that they may in their discretion, extend that time without hearing the other party ? They might be interfering with the other party's rights. There is no objection to their having the power to extend the time, but there is a danger that they might interfere with the rights of the other party if they are allowed to extend the time in their discretion on an ex parte application.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A sudden emergency might arise where it might be necessary to extend the time without giving notice, and where it would be undesirable to hamper them in the exercise of their discretion. It is well to make the Act as elastic as possible. We do not want to see the commission brought up standing against some legislative obstacle, as they might be if they are not given discretion. Circumstances may occur which would make it in the highest degree necessary to all parties that a moderate extension of time should be allowed. We could not afford to legislate in any such iron-clad manner.

Section agreed to.

On section 41,

No order of the board need show upon its face that any proceeding or notice was had or given, or any circumstance existed, necessary to give it jurisdiction to make such order.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Should not an ex parte application or order say that it is an ex parte one ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is necessary to require that that should be done in order to give the commission jurisdiction. This is a class of legislation which is very much adopted in order to avoid the possibility of acts of the tribunal being set aside.

Mr. LANCASTER. It may not be necessary to make the order show all the circumstances that are required to exist to give jurisdiction, but it would be right to have the order say whether it was given on notice or ex parte. I think my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is right. The order should state whether it is made ex parte or on notice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think where it would be ex parte we may be safe in assuming that there will be no likelihood of omitting the statement, but I would not like to put it in the statute. There are a large number of cases in which it is provided that ex parte orders may be made temporarily, made only to enable time to elapse so that notice to the other side may be given. It is hardly well to encumber the Bill too much or to assume that any reasonable statement of the reason for making the order would not be there.

Mr. LANCASTER. My point is this; I am not saying that the statute should say that notice must be given or that the order must say that it is ex parte or not. If the section read in this way it would be better :

No order of the board need show upon its face that any circumstance existed, necessary to give it jurisdiction to make such order.

It need not say whether notice was or was not given, but if you leave in the words 'any proceeding or notice' you are almost enacting that the board shall not say that the order was made on notice. You are rather indicating to them that it would be better not to do so. You are legislating on a matter that is all right from the hon. minister's contention, if these words are left out. By leaving these words in, we give notice to the commission that they should not say in their order whether it has been issued on notice or ex parte. I think they should be free to do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman is wrong in saying that any inference of that kind will be drawn by persons administering this Act. There will be no purpose served by setting forth in the order whether it was made ex parte or not, because the people who are interested and who claim that they ought to have had notice before any order was made would know whether it had been or not. They need not be acquainted with what is already within their own knowledge. It is not necessary to assert that the order was issued with or without notice in order to give jurisdiction. The fact of the notice is not necessarily an element in jurisdiction, because the Bill provides that temporarily and in emergencies interim orders may be made ex parte and this is regarded as likely to be necessary in many cases. You cannot reach people to give them notice. Some emergency may arise and the board ought to have power to act without notice.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is a different question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is not a different thing. Therefore, notice to the party would not be necessarily an element in jurisdiction in many cases. We are only dealing with the question of jurisdiction. We are only providing that the jurisdiction shall not be questioned because of the omission to allege or set forth any circumstances which existed.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would not that be sufficient without expressly saying 'any proceeding or notice was had or given ?'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It refers to the circumstances existing in the case relating to the merits. It is not the circumstance as to who made the application or who was present at the time the order was made. If the presence or absence of notice is necessary to constitute jurisdiction, then, it would be necessary to allege it in every case. It could not be alleged truthfully in every case, and it would not be necessary in every case.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not mean that it should be necessary to allege that there was notice given, and that if the parties got notice that is all there would be about it. The party who got the notice or did not might want to prove that he had the notice or he had not as the case might be. A party might want to be able to prove that it was an ex parte order, and I think he should be allowed to. The order would prove in the hands of anybody whether it was an ex parte order or an order on notice, and I think it would be well that it should do so.

On section 45,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved :

That section 45 be expunged.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You cut out section 45 altogether, and you do not give them power to award damages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. The more I thought of that the less favourably I was impressed with it. I do not think we should usurp the usual functions of the courts of this country.

On section 50, subsection 2,

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements and documents before the board, or in obedience to the subpœna or order of the board, or of any person authorized to hold any investigation or inquiry under this Act, or in any cause or proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him, may tend to criminate or subject him to a penalty under this Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think there ought to be here a provision like that in the Criminal Code with regard to protecting a man if he gives the evidence. Under this section, you might make a man criminate himself. But, in such a case sufficient public benefit is gained by his evidence and you should give him the protection afforded by the Criminal Code. The exact words of the criminal law on this point I have not at hand at the moment. But they have been found to work out very well. They provide that a man is bound to attend and give evidence, but, if he gives the evidence, he is absolved from criminal prosecution except prosecution for perjury in relation to the evidence he gives. I do not think it would be well, as a matter of public policy, to leave the section as it is here. Under this section a man might be compelled virtually to put a halter around his own neck and lock himself up. In that case he is apt not to tell the truth. But, if he is freed from a criminal prosecution, you can probably get from him, all the facts, and that is what is needed in the public interest. I should suggest that the hon. gentleman insert here the words of the Criminal Code with regard to a similar state of affairs.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I intended to propose an amendment which may be in line with what the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) suggests. I move to strike out the words 'a penalty under this Act' at the end of the clause, and to put in their place the following: 'any proceeding or penalty, but no evidence so given or any document so produced shall be used or received against such person in any criminal proceeding thereafter instituted against him, other than prosecution for perjury in giving such evidence.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that this point has been very carefully considered. It is covered in the Canada Evidence Act, I think, and I suppose, in the code also. Are we following the same language?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The same as the Canada Evidence Act.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose the following as a third subsection to section 50:—

In any proceedings before the board and in any action or proceeding under this Act every written or printed document purporting to have been issued by the company, or authorized by the company or any officer, agent or employee of the company, or any other person or company for or on its behalf, shall, as against the company, be received as prima facie evidence of the issue of such document by the company and of the contents thereof without any further proof than the mere production of such document.

Motion agreed to.

On section 60,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This does not seem to make any provision to meet the case where no date for the annual meeting is fixed in the special Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would be an oversight if it were not named in the special Act. It is always named.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In a great many cases that have come under my personal observation the day is not fixed in the Act and the directors are authorized to fix the day. In the province of Nova Scotia it is the usual practice not to fix the day but to allow the directors to do it by by-law. You might have a little difficulty with regard to the words 'on the day mentioned in the special Act.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you suggest that we name a special day?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You might say 'on the day mentioned in the special Act, or provided for by the special Act.' That would cover it perhaps.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you not fix, somewhere in the Bill the day of the annual meeting?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is alluding to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought it was fixed in the Bill for the purpose of making up the report.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recall any case in which it has not been fixed, but there may be cases in Acts passed previous to recent years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In view of what has been said by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) do you desire that there shall be a uniform day for the annual meeting?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is important that it shall be held anterior to a certain day so that we get the reports in time for our annual report. That is all we are concerned about. They generally hold these meetings on the 5th of September, or about that day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is of any importance this would be a very good place in the Bill to provide for fixing the day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We might say the first Wednesday or the first Tuesday of a certain month in cases where provision is not made in the special Act.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 61,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved:

That section 61 be amended by striking out the words at the end of the section 'evidence of the sufficiency of such notice' and inserting in lieu thereof 'sufficient evidence of such notice having been given.'

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 66,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under this you will still have to prove that the person signing is the secretary. It is a question as to whether or not we should not provide for that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would go very far to facilitate simplicity in these matters, because after all they are purely formal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some time ago I had to get a document certified so that it would be used in the courts of Massachusetts, and I had to get it certified by the Chief Justice, by the Lieutenant Governor, by the Secretary of State and by the Governor General, if I remember aright, and it took us about a month to get the document so prepared. In matters of this kind that are purely formal, and where there is no probability of fraud, it is desirable that they should be made simple. Perhaps the minister would consider the wording of this clause.

On section 73,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In a case which recently arose, the number of surviving directors did not constitute a quorum and they could not fill the vacant seat. Of course, that is unusual, but I propose to provide for it by inserting:

And in case such surviving directors do not constitute a quorum, then by the shareholders at a special meeting to be called for that purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister uses the words 'surviving directors' here, and the words 'remaining directors' in another part of the clause. Would it not be better to continue the words 'remaining directors,' and then you will deal with those who have resigned as well as those who are dead.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be better.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

ERIE ONTARIO POWER COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 134) to incorporate the Erie Ontario Power Company.—Mr. German.

On section 11,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Bill stood over that I might have an opportunity to look at the eleventh clause. I have considered the matter and have concluded that I would suggest to the committee the advisability of leaving out this section entirely and amending the corresponding clause in the General Act so as to cover the point which I think was intended to be covered. My amendment would be to strike out this clause, and renumber the clauses from ten down. There is no reason why this should be incorporated in all bills.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 143) respecting the Canadian North-west Irrigation Company.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member who is in charge of this Bill will be able to explain.

Mr. McCREARY. I have been asked to take charge of the Bill by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). I have no instructions except that the hon. gentleman told me that the Bill had passed the committee except for the eleventh section, which, it was agreed, was to be struck out as, I understand the provisions will be incorporated in the General Irrigation Act. So far as I know the balance of the Bill is satisfactory. If there are any objections, I shall have to ask that the Bill be allowed to stand over, as I do not know the merits of the Bill personally.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As I understand, the object of the Bill is to have this irrigation company take over some lands belonging to a railway company, and form a separate corporation for the purpose of irrigating the land. I think the Bill was allowed to stand over in order that the Department of the Interior might investigate. I believe that has been done and that the report upon the Bill is favourable.

Mr. McCREARY. Yes. There is a letter from the Deputy Minister of the Interior that the Bill, with section eleven struck out, is satisfactory. The company, under the original Act of 1893, have power to hold a very large quantity of land. The quantity they are allowed to hold under section five is much less than that allowed under the original Bill. The Deputy Minister of the Interior wrote the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that he was satisfied with the measure.

On section 11,

Mr. McCREARY. That is to be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Shall clause eleven be struck out ? Carried.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED EMPIRE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 163) respecting the United Empire Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Thompson (Haldimand and Monck).

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Finance Minister intended to look into this Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I have made some inquiries. The hon. member who has charge of the Bill will be able to explain the points involved.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). The purpose of this Bill was merely to extend the time of this particular insurance company. But the Department of Finance requested the promoters of the Bill to make some changes by which the powers of the company were limited instead of extended. These changes were agreed to, and the Bill was passed by the committee about a week ago. One or two other clauses were added also, one to enable the company to change its name, because the present name is very like the name of another company in existence. The Bill passed through the committee without any opposition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). One of the questions raised was in reference to whether or not the somewhat elaborate sections introduced by way of amendments were covered by the notice given of the Bill in the 'Canada Gazette' and the local press. That is a matter which perhaps would not come to the attention of the committee to which the Bill is referred and, of course, the Committee on Standing Orders would only have regard to the provisions of the Bill as originally introduced. Is there anything in the amendments which would fairly require further notice ?

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand and Monck). I do not know how that would be technically, but I think there is no need of anything of that kind. As I say, the amendments proposed in the committee deprived the company of some powers which they held under the old charter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where a Bill is introduced in conformity with the notice, the House claims the right to change it if necessary. I do not think there is anything in the rule which would prevent our considering it. Of course, if the changes were very material, it would be a fair argument that notice should be given so that the parties concerned should be protected. I was not present at the consideration of this Bill, but I am informed that officers of my department were present and were satisfied with it, and no doubt, taking that statement, it was well considered. Personally, I was not present, nor did I hear the discussion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we would have to take these suggestions with a little caution, because otherwise a very important measure might go through the House with very little notice. A single section of a Bill might be introduced in the first instance, and the necessary notice given, and then very elaborate provisions attached to it by way of amendments in committee. I should be inclined to think a Bill limiting the powers of a company would require notice under the rules of the House just as much as a Bill extending the powers. However, as the Department of Finance seems to have been satisfied with regard to the matter, and as I cannot see that any one is likely to be very much affected by allowing this Bill to pass, I am not disposed to raise any further question.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 180) to incorporate the Prince Edward Island Ferry Company.—Mr. McKinnon.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On section 91,

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the company, a dividend may be declared out of the net profits of the undertaking.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). It appears to me that technically speaking this is hardly in the form it ought to be. No dividend should be declared until after a full statement has been submitted by the directors to the company and approved of by them, which statement should show just what the transactions of the company have been for the year. This course is one which has been pursued by the principal companies. In the course of my communications with the companies they have not made any objection to the Bill being amended so as to provide that such a course should be taken.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is an important change in the Bill. Would the minister have any objections to leaving this clause so that we can see the amendments after they are prepared ?

Mr. BARKER. The practice with nearly all companies is that the directors at the end of the year decide what the dividend shall be, and as a rule it is paid out. But at the annual meeting which generally follows a month or six weeks afterwards, a formal resolution is taken confirming that divided, and it is thus really a dividend authorized by the shareholders. I think the committee ought carefully to consider any change, and I suggest that the hon gentleman have his amendment printed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am anxious to have the views of the committee on the subject. It is manifest from what the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has stated, that the course pursued is not one which is sanctioned by law as the law stands to-day, because it is the company at its annual meeting which declares the dividend according to the existing law. Seeing that the law is not in conformity with the existing practice, I think it is necessary that something should be done and that some change should be introduced into this Bill. I will pursue the course the hon. member has suggested, and before we come to deal with this again, the members will have an opportunity of seeing the proposed amendment.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 93,

No dividend shall be declared whereby the capital of the company is in any degree reduced or impaired, or be paid out of such capital, shall any dividend be paid, in respect of any share after a day appointed for payment of any call for money in respect thereof, until such call has been paid ; but the directors may, in their discretion, until the railway is completed and opened to the public, pay interest at any rate not exceeding five per centum per annum, on all sums called up in respect of the shares, from the respective days on which the same have been paid ; and such interest shall accrue and be paid at such times and places as the directors appoint for that purpose. 51 Vic., c. 29, s. 71, Am.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that amended in any way ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only change is from 6 to 5 per cent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This seems to be a rather singular provision. Does it mean that you can pay 5 per cent interest out of capital ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is what it means.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It has been on the statute-book for some years past, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does not the hon. minister think this is rather dangerous legislation even though it is sanctioned by the fact that it has been on the statute-book for so long a time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why should the company pay back to a shareholder who has put his money into the concern, part of that money pending the completion of the railway ? I have no doubt there must be some plausible reason for it which was urged when it was originally passed, but I am rather at a loss to conceive what that reason could have been ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only reason that occurs to my mind is that in the initial stages of these undertakings and organizations it is very important to offer considerable inducements to people to subscribe and pay up their stock. I presume it has grown to be a practice, and having become a practice has been consecrated by legislative enactment, and the law has been passed to allow people who have put their money into an undertaking of that kind which cannot possibly be a paying one at the outset, to receive interest upon the money which they have advanced, and from the date at which they have advanced it. I do know, from personal knowledge, having had some little acquaintance with the manner in which companies are financed and organized, that this is not an uncommon thing for other companies to do.

Mr. BARKER. I think the hon. gentleman's explanation is just what has taken place in these companies. If the money could not be obtained upon shares during construction, the company would probably have to borrow from banks and pay interest, and they therefore induce shareholders to pay up as early as possible under the promise of getting interest. While it appears an extraordinary thing to pay dividends not earned, yet if the shareholders did not pay up early, and during construction, when the company could not possibly earn any dividends, the company would have to borrow from bondholders or bankers and others and pay interest. I do not know that it wolud make any appreciable difference to the company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They could make calls payable as the directors might see fit.

Mr. BARKER. Subject to the approval of the shareholders.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the shareholders, by postponing calls and working the matter out under this section, would really get back part of the money they put into the company as capital. If you had a railway which occupied a long time to complete, you might have 25 or 30 per cent of the capital paid back to the shareholders by way of interest under this section. I do not regard the principle of the legislation as good, and as far as other companies are concerned, I do not know how any other company could do that legally except by virtue of some such statute as this. Apply it to the case of an ordinary commercial company and see how badly it will work out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is done all the same.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it is done the directors are subjecting themselves probably to a criminal prosecution. They are putting themselves exactly in the same position as they would place themselves if they paid dividends out of capital.

Mr. BARKER. This is only during construction.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is only during construction, but a railway takes a very long time to construct and it is different in that respect from the working of any other undertaking. In the latter case the operation begins almost at once. The operation of a railway may be postponed for a long time, and during that time the shareholders cannot get any dividends out of profits, because no profits can be earned. It seems to me that the better way is to leave this out. Any man who goes into the business of a railway knows when he has put in his money that he cannot get a return for four or five years. He is in no worse position than the man who puts his money into a life assurance company, and who knows that he cannot get dividends for five or six years. I cannot see very much distinction between allowing a life assurance company to pay dividends out of capital and allowing railway companies to pay dividends out of capital. However this may be sanctioned by practice and the fact that it is already on the statute-book, I am bound to say that I cannot approve of the principle of it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is the principle of it: Where a subsidy of so much per mile is given upon the completion of a road, the company hypothecate government securities and sometimes make an arrangement with the government by which the government become the trustees of the fund and one of the conditions of the trust is that pending the completion of the road dividends shall be paid out to the shareholders on the moneys they paid in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not think of introducing a clause into the Bill embodying that principle if it were not there, and yet I feel reluctant to suggest that it should be dropped out. There are many reasons against it, it is true.

Mr. CLARKE. Would there be any hardship in dropping it out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there could be anything that could be strictly described as a hardship. It may be less easy to finance an undertaking of this sort when it was dependent upon the stock subscribed.

Mr. BARKER. The chief objection to the clause arises out of the change that was made in another clause of the Railway Act. Originally no one could take stock in a railway company without the obligation to pay for the stock in cash, but as times went on and methods were found for floating companies, provisions were put into the Railway Act under which directors might give persons promoting a railway, either as directors or otherwise, stock as paid up stock. These people never pay a cent in cash upon their stock, and the objection I see to this clause is that shareholders who never paid a dollar might be able to draw dividends during construction. I would not see any practical objection to it if no one drew a dividend on the stock during construction except the man who actually paid his hard cash into the enterprise. The minister will see that where a contractor or promoter gets a considerable block of stock without paying anything on it, it may be a nice thing for him to draw a dividend during construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the Erie and Niagara Power Company's Bill was up the other night I asked that it might stand over until I gave some attention to a similar clause, and I hope to be able to suggest an improvement in that clause.

Mr. BARKER. Why not let this stand until the question is considered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very well, the section stands.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 103.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What do you mean by rateable shares. Do you mean by this clause any person who refuses to pay a call made upon him in respect to any shares?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is my interpretation of it.

Mr. BARKER. The call itself is rateable and the nonpayment should not forfeit the shares but should subject them to forfeiture.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And the shares are not forfeitable to the company. Suppose all the calls were paid but the last one, it is pretty hard that they should be forfeited to the company.

Mr. BARKER. It should be done by a resolution of the board.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Even then, when a forfeiture occurs, that is done by resolution of the board, not by Act of parliament, which makes the shares forfeitable by the company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, the word 'forfeited' is very often interpreted as equivalent to liable to forfeiture. That seems to be the effect of this section, because the forfeiture does not actually take place until there is a declaration thereof at a general meeting of the company. Is this the statute as it is now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is, and it is very curious that no question has arisen under it, so far as we know. However, we will let the three sections, 102, 103, and 104, stand for consideration.

On section 105,

The directors may sell, either by public auction or private sale, and in such manner and on such terms as to them seem meet, any shares so declared to be forfeited, or any unissued shares, or he may pledge such shares for the payment of loans or advances made or to be made thereon, or for the payment of any sums of money borrowed by or advanced to the company : provided that authority for such purpose and for the issue of the stock be first given at a special general meeting of the shareholders for the purpose. 51 V., c. 29, s. 83.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any provision in the Act giving the company power to dispose of its shares below par ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is not in the Railway Act a similar provision to that which I think can be found in the General Companies Act, authorizing the board of directors to declare a rate of discount. I think it is in the English Companies Act, and I know it is in the New Brunswick Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I read this section, it would give the directors unlimited power in that respect. The directors may sell either by public auction or private sale. Suppose we leave out the words that are immaterial, the section would read thus : 'The directors may sell, by private sale, on such terms as to them may seem meet, any unissued shares.' That is to say, the directors, having taken a few shares, enough to qualify themselves as directors, could sell the other shares by private sale at ten cents on the dollar. In that way the Act does give the directors power to issue the shares at a merely nominal figure. Is that the clause in the old statute ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the minister considered that as a matter of policy ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, the duty would devolve on the directors to dispose of the shares to the best advantage.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the statute give power to the company to increase its common stock ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. A special Act sometimes does. But then there are conditions attached.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not assuming a case in which the directors are acting otherwise than bona fide. I know power is sometimes given in special Acts, respecting industrial enterprises, to dispose of the stock on such terms as the directors may seem fit ; but there are always exceptional reasons which induce a legislature to grant a power of that kind, and the courts have been very strict in regard to such powers. Of course, I do not minimize the fact that this provision has been in the statute for a long time; but as a general principle I am opposed to giving any company power to dispose of its shares below par, and it seems to me that that is particularly applicable to a railway company. If you have a railway company which requires to raise $1,000,000, and you give it power to capitalize itself for $10,000,000, and under a section like this to issue that stock at ten cents on the dollar, you will have a difficulty about dividends and everything of that kind when you attempt afterwards to interfere with or control the rates of the company. It seems to me that a provision of this kind might merit from the hon. minister the attention which perhaps, in a very voluminous statute such as this, he has not been able to give to it up to the present.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With regard to these clauses concerning the issue of stock, no complaint of any sort having arisen, I did not scrutinize them closely with the view of seeing whether they contained any objectionable matter. I had my mind particularly directed to the other practical cases which had come under my own attention. I think that there is very much to be said in favour of a somewhat exhaustive examination and improvement of these clauses, but I would not like to undertake to cover the ground now.

Mr. BARKER. I do not see any objection whatever to allowing the directors to sell forfeited shares. They fall into the hands of the company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not raising any question as to that.

Mr. BARKER. But as to the other part of the clause, enabling directors to sell unissued shares at any price, I think that that is extremely dangerous. The fact that it has not given rise to any question so far is not quite material, because hitherto there has been no real value in railway shares, but there may be a great deal of stock held to-day, which in a few years may become valuable. It may be that shareholders, who perhaps had subscribed 20 per cent of the whole capital, would authorize the directors to sell 80 per cent to the existing shareholders at the rate of 10 cents or 5 cents on the dollar. In that way there would be watered capital from the very beginning of the enterprise. If there is one thing more than another, which the public objects to it is being made to pay dividends on watered capital. It does not at all follow that, because such a clause has been in former Railway Acts, that it was ever considered with any care. A good many clauses were inserted in Railway Acts because somebody had suggested them, and they were often put in for a private rather than a general purpose. It would be well to allow this clause to stand and let the minister appoint a committee or take it upon himself to consider the whole scope of these sections.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would involve a good deal of change to re-cast them all. We could deal very summarily with this by striking out the words 'or any unissued shares.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. My opinion is that the directors, with the consent of the shareholders at a special meeting, should have the absolute disposal of forfeited shares or the unissued stock of the company. That has always been the case. Perhaps in the case of forfeited shares, you might provide that the original owner should have some equitable interest in them.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a strong feeling against the shares of a railway company being sold at a very low figure, and then traffic rates being levied to pay a dividend on the par value of the stock, and some means should be devised for putting a stop to that practice. With regard to forfeited shares, even though you strike out the words 'unissued shares,' you might by collusion allow the shares of a railway to be forfeited—certain parties might allow them to be forfeited with the understanding that they would be sold by the directors to the shareholders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I agree with what the hon. member has just said. There does not seem to be any reason why the directors should have the right to place a mere nominal value on a large body of unissued shares, distribute this stock among themselves practically for nothing, and after the lapse of a few years dispose of them in the market as securities upon which dividends are expected to be paid. I am quite of the opinion that we should put an embargo on that sort of thing. At one time it was the law of the land that every one who subscribed for a share was bound to pay the par value in cash, or if the company got into difficulties, he could be compelled to pay the creditors the difference between what his share cost him and its par value. That is no longer the law, and it is now the custom for companies seeking incorporation to issue their stock without a farthing being paid into the treasury of the company. I think perhaps we had better let clause 105 stand, and see if it is not possible to do something in the line indicated.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 106.

A certificate of the treasurer of the company that the forfeiture of the shares was declared, shall be sufficient evidence of the fact, and of their purchase by the purchaser; and such certificate, with the receipt of the treasurer for the price of such shares, shall constitute a good title to the shares; and the certificate shall be, by the said treasurer, registered in the name and with the place of abode and occupation of the purchaser, and shall be entered in the books to be kept by the company; and such purchaser shall thereupon be deemed the holder of such shares, and shall not be bound to see the application of the purchase money—and his title to such shares shall not be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale; and any shareholder may purchase any share so sold.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is one thing that occurs to my mind at this moment in connection with this section. We know that the cases in which shares are forfeited are very few and that might be a reason why we should have a special clause with regard to that. But it occurs to me that as soon as we take away from the company the power to dispose of the unissued shares, the ingenuity or others in control of the undertaking will be directed in the other way, and they will have shares subscribed by parties who do not pay or intend to pay. These will forfeit the stock, and so by a roundabout way they will accomplish the same purpose as if the shares were alloted to them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That can be prevented by cancelling the shares when forfeited.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it will be better to let that clause stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 108,

Every shareholder shall be individually liable to the creditors of the company for the debts and liabilities of the company to an amount equal to the amount unpaid on the stock held by him, and until the whole amount of his stock has been paid up, but no such shareholder shall be liable to an action in respect to his said liability until an execution at the suit of the creditor against the company has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That would render the shareholder liable if his shares were forfeited.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He would be liable for the balance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is another clause by which it is provided that the forfeiture shall exempt him from liability for all actions for suits,—actions or prosecutions whatever.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is as between shareholder and shareholder. But he is not relieved of the balance due on his shares.

On section 110,

A true and perfect account of the names and places of abode of the several shareholders shall be entered in a book, which shall be kept for that purpose, and which shall be open to the inspection of the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there any provision under the Act that a majority of the directors shall be British subjects ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that is in the Railway Act. It is sometimes put in special Acts.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is so in some of the special Acts. But, as I understand it, they may come under the provisions of this Act by abandoning their special Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that where the special Act requires that the directors or a portion of them be British subjects, that would govern no matter what we might put in here. I do not think it would be well to put in a general clause that the directors or any particular number of them shall be British subjects.

On section 111—issue of bonds ; disposal of bonds ; extended borrowing power.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The reference to section 70 in the 37th line is an error,—it should be section 61, and I move that it be so amended.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move to insert after the words 'issue bonds, debentures' the words 'debenture stock.'

Mr. BARKER. Would the minister use there the words in addition 'perpetual debenture stock' ? That is a well-known species of stock in England, and I think there is something like it now being issued by the Mackenzie & Mann Company. They are called perpetual debenture stocks because they are not redeemable.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will make that addition also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any limitation in this Act as to the amount per mile for which bonds or debenture stock may be issued ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The special Act determines that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be that the limitation is fixed in every special Act which is passed by this legislature, it may be that that has been the practice. But may you not be confronted with this situation, that you have a special Act by a legislature, or a special Act passed by this parliament, which makes no mention whatever of any bonding powers ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In that case there would be a limit to the extent that it would not enable them to issue any bonds at all, because they have got to have a special Act to define the quantity.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there some provision to that effect ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not say there is in explicit terms. But I have not contemplated the probability of any special Act being passed which did not deal with a bond issue.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not considered this as much as the minister, and whatever I say is in deference to his better-considered opinion. But the scheme of this Act is that its provisions are to be treated with the special Act as one statute.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then you have a special Act which contains no provision whatever about bonding, but you have incorporated with that the express enactment in this section and subsequent sections which give power to bond under such terms as should be fixed at a meeting of the company. It would seem to me that the result of that is to give to the company power to bond for any amount that may be fixed at the annual meeting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Act everywhere speaks of the two being combined together, the special Act and this Act as containing the limit.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not observe those words before making my remarks. I suppose they will probably cover it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think by implication they would. I can see, however, that to make it clearer a word or two might be inserted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think what I said before might not perhaps be very pertinent except that in a special Act passed by a provincial legislature powers might be granted which this parliament would not consider justifiable. Therefore, it might be wise to put some limitation in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that if we say that the amount of the bonds, debentures, or other securities shall be fixed in the special Act and shall not be exceeded, we will make it clear beyond all doubt. They have to get in a special Act the necessary authority to issue bonds and the limit will be specified. In the general statute you could not name the quantity because every case must rest upon its own circumstances.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Suppose excessive powers are given by a provincial legislature, of borrowing that we would not think of giving here ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, the special Act passed Dominionizing, as it were, the railway would contain a limitation as to the power to issue bonds.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a railway went into an amalgamation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I make myself clear ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not to me. Suppose, under a special Act of a provincial legislature, a company is given what we think excessive bonding powers, the amendment of the hon. minister would hardly seem to meet the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It seems to me that you would require a special Act of this parliament to create the undertaking a Dominion work. That would be a special Act and in one of the clauses of that Act you would declare the amount of bonds that might be issued, provided no bonds had previously been issued. If they had already been issued, then, of course, it would be past and gone and there would be no remedy, but if they had not been issued you could do it in this way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the scheme of the hon. gentleman's Bill was that the mere connection of any proposed railway with a railway already under the legislative authority of this parliament would make it a work for the general advantage of Canada, and therefore they would require no Act of this parliament at all. For that reason it seems to me that the hon. minister does not quite meet the difficulty raised by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I see it now. We might leave that section and consider it later on.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 116,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This section is very inartistically worded. It is a transcript of the existing law and it starts out by the use of language which does not seem to contemplate the idea of a company making a note for borrowing on its credit, but rather suggests that it may simply have power to transfer the note it may receive. There are two things which I propose to do here. I propose to strike out the $100 and not place any such limitation as that upon the company. I propose to recognize in this clause the right of the company to borrow money as occasion may arise without limitation, not as they would on bonds with respect to which they would probably issue a mortgage, but to go into the bank if they wish for their temporary purpose ; suppose the company find it necessary to make a loan, for instance, to do some emergency work which they would expect to repay out of the earnings in the ensuing few months. A large company may want to borrow half a million or a million dollars and when its credit is good they should be allowed to go to a bank and give a note for it. Practically it is done every day, and it would be as well that it should be recognized. It is done but it is not done under as favourable conditions as if the practice were recognized by law. My proposal is to insert after the word 'may' in the first line :

May for the purposes of the company borrow money by either draft, promissory note, warehouse receipt, bill of exchange or otherwise upon the credit of the company.

I would strike out also the words 'less than $100.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I cannot imagine a railway company wanting to give a note for less than $100.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is absurd.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is unlimited for any purposes of the company, and it is unrestricted as to the time of repayment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and as to the amount.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They might in this case effect a twenty year loan.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Do you think the bank would look after that ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In England they have sometimes provisions of this character. They have borrowing powers not exceeding a certain limit, and these are usually secured by debentures or debenture stock, or what are called there floating securities. Besides that, the company has power, for its ordinary, every-day, temporary purposes, to effect loans of a different character, which are not taken into consideration upon an inquiry as to whether or not it has exceeded its borrowing powers. It is not considered to be an exercise of the borrowing powers to which I have referred. It seems to me that this clause, taken in connection with the bonding clause, might lead to a somewhat curious result. I do not know that I can point out at this moment any special evil that may be anticipated from it, but I have a feeling that we do not exactly know what we are doing in giving these special powers. I do not know whether the minister has thought the matter out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given the matter a good deal of consideration, and it did seem to me that a railway company which was not in a pretty strong financial position would not be able to borrow much, while a company which was, and could borrow on advantageous terms, would not be likely to do so unless it were necessary. Why should not the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk, for instance, be free to borrow any amount they really needed? They would not want to borrow more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the minister is satisfied, I do not take any objection.

Section agreed to.

On section 117,

If the construction of the railway is not commenced and fifteen per cent on the amount of the capital stock is not expended thereon within two years after the passing of the Act authorizing the construction of the railway, or if the railway is not finished and put in operation within five years from the passing of such Act, then the powers granted by such Act or by this Act shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the railway as then remains uncompleted. 51 V., c. 29, s. 89 Am.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is a pretty stringent clause.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have reduced the time for completion from seven years to five years. We are now putting five years in all our special Acts. After this Act comes into operation, that will not be necessary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any provision in the Bill with respect to a railway company which ceases to operate its railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman mean that without any question of insolvency it ceases running?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For example, I have in my mind two railways which were mentioned in the House during the present session—the United Counties Railway and another, which ceased to operate their respective roads for a considerable period of time; and when some question was asked in the House with regard to them, I think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals stated that nothing could be done under the law as it then existed; and it occurred to me, in view of this section, that possibly some provision could be inserted to meet such a case; and my inquiry was intended to elicit whether any provision of that kind has been proposed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is nothing in the present Bill that will cover the subject which the hon. gentleman alludes to. We deal with the case of a railway which ceases operation because of insolvency, and only that. The difficulty which I felt regarding the whole question was this. A company ceases to operate its line or part of its line, because it does not find it to its advantage to operate it: it is not profitable to do so. It might possibly be a solvent company. If it is, and if it has received any aid from the government, it would be liable, under its contract, to proceedings to compel it to operate the road and pay a pecuniary penalty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman mean that there is a provision in the subsidy contract that the company shall operate the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but how to provide anything like an adequate remedy in such a case is to me at present an insuperable difficulty. The government might take possession of the road, but that is a thing we could not seriously consider. There are many roads which are just managing to survive, because everybody in the district through which it passes is interested in helping it along, but if there was the slightest possibility of the government taking possession, in case the road should stop running, it would stop very soon. If anybody has any idea of some really workable plan, I shall be glad to know it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This clause supersedes any powers given for the construction of the road and any limitation of time provided in any special Act?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the special Act governs.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would that be perfectly clear if the special Act had been passed before the enactment of the general Act?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Section 3 provides for the case of any special Act passed previous to this Act as follows:—

If in any special Act heretofore passed by the parliament of Canada it is enacted that any provision of the general Railway Act in force at the time of the passing of such special Act, is expected from incorporation therewith, or if the application of any such provision is, by such special Act, extended, limited or qualified, the corresponding provision of this Act shall be taken to be excepted, extended, limited or qualified in like manner.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You still have the old nightmare of the special Act subsequently passed by a provincial legislature. Suppose you have an Act passed next year giving a railway company in the province of Nova Scotia seven years to complete its road. The road connects, let us say, with the Intercolonial Railway, and is connected at once, and then construction is started towards the Strait of Canso, as might be the case with the road proposed to be constructed through the county of Halifax. What would be the effect of this section upon it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that in that case, we could apply section 4.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This Act would then apply to such a railway to the exclusion of inconsistent provincial legislation. Therefore, you will not by section 117 reduce the time from seven years to five.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We may have amended it so as to destroy the application, but otherwise it would.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In any event I suppose it is a very unlikely case.

Section agreed to.

On section 118, subsection (g) :

Erect and maintain all necessary and convenient buildings, stations, depots, wharfs, and fixtures, and construct, purchase and acquire stationary or locomotive engines, rolling stock and other apparatus necessary for the accommodation and use of the passengers, freight and business of the railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to amend this section, in the first place, by placing the word 'construct' at the beginning of the section.

Amendment agreed to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see that the words in the existing law, 'carriages, wagons, boats and other machinery,' are struck out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. I propose also to insert in the first line of the subsection, after the word 'convenient,' the word 'roads,' and, after the word 'wharfs,' in the second line of the subsection, the words 'docks, elevators,' and to strike out the word 'fixtures' and insert the words 'other structures.'

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. BARKER. Why not, instead of 'passengers, freight and business,' use the words 'traffic and business,' for 'traffic' is defined in the interpretation clauses as covering passengers and freight ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very well. I move to strike out the words 'passengers, freight' and insert the word 'traffic.'

Mr. BARKER. There is no objection to the word 'business,' except that it seems to be covered by the other expression.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Better leave it there.

Amendment agreed to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why does not the hon. minister give the railway company power to buy carriages, wagons and boats for their business, to carry freight to and fro between the town and the station ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there is any doubt about their power to do that.

Mr. BARKER. The expression 'other apparatus' would cover that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A good many of the railways do their own freighting in the cities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think they do it through independent organizations.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Some do it through subsidiary companies, but others do it direct.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is covered by 'other apparatus.'

On section 118, subsection (i) :

Take, transport, carry and convey persons and goods on the railway, regulate the time and manner in which the same shall be transported, and the tolls to be charged therefor.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This will not give them compensation for carrying to and from the station. This is in line with leaving out the words 'carriages, wagons and boats for their business,' as given in the old Act. They are limited simply to tolls.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think these two clauses were intended to be broad enough to cover the case I was mentioning, where a railway acts as its own freighter in a city it could buy carriages and wagons and could charge something more than a toll as compensation for the freightage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The subject was discussed very fully, and it was thought that the word 'tolls' would be sufficient to cover it.

On section 118, subsection (j) :

Fell or remove any trees which stand within one hundred feet from the centre line of the railway, or which are liable to fall across any railway track.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to ask the committee to strike out the words 'the centre line' and insert the words 'either side of the right of way.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You give them power to cut trees within one hundred feet from the side of the line of the road. Suppose the right of way is sixty-six feet wide, that would give them 133 feet instead of 100.

Mr. LANCASTER. By the use of these words 'or which' you may be going further than 100 feet from the right of way. Should we not describe some limit as to how far you will go?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Go just as far as the tree may be high. If the tree is more than 100 feet high, they would have a right to cut it down.

Mr. LANCASTER. Look at the effect on the land owner. He would not know where the railway had a right to go, and he might get into complications in trying to prevent them from what he thought would be a trespass. It would be better to fix this a little clearer than to have the railway employees go into a man's field and take one isolated tree without being bound by any certain distance from the line of railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This has been the law for twenty years, and there have been no difficulties so far as we know.

Mr. LANCASTER. There have been troubles to my certain knowledge, and that is why I mention it. It would be better to say 150 feet if necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to restore a clause in the existing law and to make it subsection 2 of section 118 as follows:

Any company which has obtained from the Crown by way of subsidy or otherwise, in respect of the construction or operation of its railway, a right to any land or to an interest in land, has, and from the time of obtaining such rights has had, as incident to the exercise of its corporate powers, authority to acquire, sell or otherwise dispose of the same or any part or parts thereof; and such company may convey the same, or any part or parts thereof, to any other company which has entered into any undertaking for the construction or operation, in whole or in part, of the railway in respect of which such land or interest in land was given; and thereafter such other company shall have, in respect of such land or interest in land, the same authority as that of the company which has so conveyed it; and as to any lands given to the company by any corporation or other party as aid towards, or as consideration in whole or in part for, the construction or operation of the company's railway, either generally or with respect to the adoption of any particular route, or on any other account, the authority of the company and of any other company to which it may convey its right in any of the said lands shall be the same as if such lands had been obtained by the company from the Crown as aforesaid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If I understand the hon. minister rightly, this gives the company power to convey land to another company to be used for a similar purpose to that for which it was required by the company conveying it. It does not interfere with the purpose for which the land has been expropriated. According to some opinions when land is not used for the purpose for which it is expropriated it reverts to the original owners.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some opinions hold that it does revert altogether.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This gives the company which has expropriated land for railway purposes power to convey it to another railway company which has to use it for the particular purpose that the company which expropriated it intended to use it for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It enables a company to dispose of its lands as freely as a private individual may. It cannot acquire, sell or dispose of lands that it has obtained for the purposes of the company except in a very limited way and under special conditions, but if it has received by way of bonus or grant an area of land from any source, it can deal with these lands the same as a private individual can, and if there are any conditions attached to it, such as that a railway shall be constructed, the company may transfer these lands to another railway company and the other railway company is bound by the conditions and shall be entitled to exercise all the rights and powers the same as the original grantee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then it goes farther than I stated. Where a railway company receives a grant of land for the purpose of erecting a station in a particular part of the town it may, upon the non-user of the station, abandon the property, dispose of it absolutely to another person just the same as the original grantor could to the railway company or any other person.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it does not mean that. It is not applicable to any such case at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The trouble is that we cannot tell from looking at the amendment because we would have to look at the particular section which it amends and we have not that before us.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will pass it and if the hon. gentleman sees anything about it that he would like to have altered he can call attention to it.

Mr. BARKER. I think it would be desirable to let us see the original section and bring it up again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no objection to that.

Section allowed to stand.

Progress reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business will be taken up to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We shall take some of the Bills which are on the Order Paper, and when we dispose of as many as are ready, we will proceed in Supply on the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the Railway Bill come up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The Minister of Railways and Canals has other engagements to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

Bill (No. 194) respecting infectious or contagious diseases affecting animals.—Hon. Mr. Fisher.

QUESTIONS.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOUR DISPUTES.

Mr. BELL asked :

1. Of the twenty-four instances in which conciliators have been appointed for the settlement of labour disputes, under 'The Conciliation Act, 1900,' in how many cases has a settlement of the dispute been arrived at as the result of the appointment of such conciliators ?

2. In the case of such settlement, if any, in how many instances has the settlement sustained the claims of the employees ? (b) In how many instances has the settlement sustained the claims of the employers ?

3. Of such twenty-four conciliators, how many have been officials of the Labour Department ?

4. In the event of any settlements of disputes having resulted from the appointment of conciliators, why has not a memorandum of the terms of each settlement been filed with the Minister of Labour, as subsection three of section four of the Conciliation Act requires ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. There have been fifteen instances of the settlement of labour disputes by a conciliator, under the provisions of the Conciliation Act, 1900. Two of these were cases of strikes averted as the result of the appointment of a conciliator under the Act. There was in addition, one case in which, the intervention of the department having been requested by one of the parties to a threatened strike, negotiations were subsequently suspended at the request of the same party, and the matter in dispute left for final adjustment to the parties immediately interested.

2. In the case of the fifteen settlements referred to, three have been in favour of the employers, five in favour of the employees, and seven the result of compromises and mutual concessions. Two of the strikes in question arose purely out of misunderstandings and were settled by explanations of the real situation.

3. With the exception of the cases in which the Minister of Labour acted as conciliator, the conciliator appointed under the Act has invariably been an officer of the Labour Department.

4. The cases of conciliation effected under the Conciliation Act have not been effected through the medium of boards of conciliation, or of representatives of the different parties, as contemplated in subsection 3, of section 4, but have been effected through the instrumentality of officers of the department, and in each case the settlement has been announced in the next issue of the 'Labour Gazette.'

CENSUS—RELIGIOUS CLASSIFICATION OF PEOPLE OF CARLETON AND VICTORIA, N.B.

Mr. HALE asked :

1. Has the attention of the census commissioner been called to alleged errors in the religious classification of the people of the counties of Carleton and Victoria, N.B., especially of the free Baptists ?

2. Has the commissioner asked the enumerators, or any of them, in the counties of Carleton and Victoria, N.B., to revise their returns, with the view of the correction of errors in the religious classification ?

3. Was such revision made, and what report did the enumerators of the counties of Carleton and Victoria make to the commissioner ?

4. Has the commissioner corrected his compilation of the religions of the people of the counties of Carleton and Victoria, according to the corrections made by the enumerators ? If so, what changes have been made in the totals of the several denominations in these counties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

1. The attention of the census commissioner has been called to alleged errors in the religious classification of the people of New Brunswick, with especial reference to Free Baptists, but not in particular to the counties of Carleton and Victoria.

2. The enumerators of Carleton county have been asked to revise their returns.

3. The enumerators of Carleton county have reported that the religions of the people were entered on the schedule, exactly according to the information given to them by the people at the time of census taking ; but that when the revision was made during the present year, they were informed of cases in which persons entered on the schedules as belonging to one particular sect of Baptists, or as Baptists simply, belonged or were attached to some other sect of the same denomination. The compilation was made according to the entries in the schedules, the correctness of which has been attested by the oaths of the enumerators.

4. The tables were published before the revision in Carleton county was begun, and no changes have been made in the totals of the several denominations.

CENSUS—RELIGIOUS CLASSIFICATION OF PEOPLE OF SUNBURY AND QUEEN'S, N.B.

Mr. WILMOT—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has the attention of the Census Department been called to alleged errors in the religious classification of the people of the counties of Sunbury and Queen's, N.B., especially of the Free Baptist denomination ?

2. Has the commissioner directed the enumerators, or any of them, in the foregoing counties, to revise their returns, with a view to the correction of errors in the religious classification, if any ?

3. If so, what report did the above enumerators make to the commissioner ; and will that officer be directed to correct the classification of the religions of the people in the above counties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

1. No, except generally for the whole province.

2. Yes, concerning persons who were recorded as 'C. Baptists,' whose identical sect was in doubt.

3. The revision showed that some persons so described were Calvinistic Baptists, and that others were Christian Baptists, and the corrections were made for the first volume of the Census Report, the Christian Baptists being counted as Free Baptists, and the Calvinistic Baptists as Baptists.

STENOGRAPHERS IN YUKON TERRITORIES.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Has Mr. J. A. Valiquette been appointed stenographer for the Territorial Court of the Yukon ?

2. Has he also been appointed private secretary to Judge Dugas ?

3. If so, is the government paying him the same salary as the other official stenographer ?

4. Is it the intention of the government to provide each of the three Yukon judges with a private secretary ?

5. Has the government received any intimation that the time of the court stenographers is not fully required in their official duty?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick.)

1. Yes, in place of Mr. Shepard, transferred to Gold Commissioners' office.

2. No.

3. Yes.

4. No.

5. No.

POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES—HOLIDAYS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. How many letter carriers and post office employees, in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Quebec, have been deprived of their holidays in the years 1896, 1901 and 1902.

2. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to grant the usual holiday to all men employed in the post offices of the above cities this year ?

3. Can such a holiday be given to the Montreal post office employees in the present condition of that office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock.)

1. None so far as the Post Office Department knows.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

MONTREAL LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—PAYMENT OF MILITIA.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Is the government aware that the city council of Montreal has unanimously adopted the following resolution :

'Whereas the harbour of Montreal is recognized as the national port of Canada. Whereas the recent longshoremen's strike affected the trade and commerce of the Dominion of Canada. Whereas the Militia Act stipulates, in connection with such an emergency, that the pay of the force requisitioned may be advanced out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada : Be it resolved, that the Dominion government be humbly requested to pay the militia employed on the property of the harbour of Montreal during the said longshoremen's strike.'

This was carried unanimously.

2. Is it the intention of the government to relieve the ratepayers of the city of Montreal from the payment of the cost of calling out the militia at the time of said strike ?

3. What is the total amount of said cost ?

4. Will the government treat the ratepayers of Montreal as well as it has treated the ratepayers of the town of Valleyfield ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden).

1. The government is aware that the city council of the city of Montreal has adopted the resolution set out in the question, but it is not aware whether it was adopted unanimously or not.

2. Under the provisions of the Militia Act the government has no power to do so.

3. $18,850.42.

4. The government has no power to discriminate as between ratepayers of the different communities.

NORTH-WEST LANDS—SCHOOL TAXATION.

Mr. OLIVER—by Mr. McCreary—asked :

Are Canadian Pacific Railway lands in the North-west now subject to school taxation, as a result of the recent legal decision by the Manitoba courts ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The government is so advised.

P.E.I.—WINTER COMMUNICATION.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Is the government aware that the winter steamship 'Stanley' is in such a condition as to render her unfit to perform the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland ?

2. Has it been reported to the government that the hull of the ship has been weakened and plates bent and indented by contact with the ice, greatly impairing her usefulness as an ice steamer ?

3. Is it the intention to send SS. 'Stanley' to a first class shipyard in Great Britain during the present summer for repairs ? If not, Why not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Mr. Prefontaine).

1. The government is not aware that the steamship 'Stanley' is in such a condition as to render her unfit to perform the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the Mainland.

2. It has not been officially reported to the department that the hull of the ship has been weakened. There are some indentations in the plates, which must result from a service of that nature, but they are not sufficient to impair the usefulness of the ship. These indentations will be removed where possible and new plates placed where necessary.

3. No, as work can be done here.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is prepared to make an announcement with regard to the Fast Atlantic Service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I hope, to-morrow.

ELECTRIC LIGHT INSPECTION.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier) moved second reading of Bill (No. 187) to amend the Electric Light Inspection Act. He said : This amendment is simply to provide for the recovery of penalties from corporations when corporations are owners of electric plants.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 186) to amend the Inland Revenue Act, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,
