Why Red Rose is a "Distinctive" Tea

Because it is largely composed of the fine teas of Northern India, which are generous in strength and richness. These, blended with the flavory teas of Ceylon, produce the qualities for which Red Rose is famed.

N.B.—Coffee users will find Red Rose Coffee as generously good as Red Rose Tea.

MARY JANE VEINOT OF ANNAPOLIS VALLEY

(By Murdoch MacKinnon, in Toronto Globe.)

In the heart of the Annapolis Valley, where they raise Gravensteins and Bishop Pippins of high quality, where the bobolink sings its sweetest and every change of season but adds to the variety of the scene and charm of living, where lads and lasses peep their pretty faces through the apple blossoms, there Mary Jane Veinot, the deaf-dumb-blind girl was born.

She is popularly known as Jean, and for the last three years she has been the centre of attraction in the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Halifax. She is a favorite not because of her many deprivations, but because of her buoyant, playful temperament, the unexpected ways in which her very misdeeds shows itself, and her apparent determination to be disengaged from the limitations within which her spirit has been hemmed. Her prison-house, higher than stone walls, stronger than iron bars, she must dissolve, the experiences and achievements of past and present she must know. In her endeavor to use the sense of touch and smell to greatest advantage she is eagerly bent forward with a tiny left hand raised for those who would hold converse with her. Her outline but slightly accentuated would form what her teachers say she already is, an interrogation mark.

"May I talk with you?" is the first salute, gentle and inoffensive, that leads many an unsuspecting victim into her clutches. The objects of her inquiry range anywhere from the heavens above to the earth beneath and the waters under the earth. Aristotle's dictum that all men by nature have a desire to know finds a living illustration in Jean, whose thirst for the knowledge is acute, intense and chronic.

She speaks with regret of the death of King Edward, the comet's tail brought her much enjoyment and no terror, and her interest in current events is greater than that of most politicians. In proof of her oneness with childlike everywhere, she is very fond of play and can make her way about the grounds without difficulty. Not a year passes but at least one or two exceptionally bright pupils graduate from this school. It remains to be seen whether Jean will be ranked with these when her turn comes. In the meantime she is looked upon as an apt and alert pupil, who looks out upon the future with unquestioning hope and confidence.

Born in Berwick, Kings County, Nova Scotia, ten years ago, much deprivation and loss have been packed into the few years she has known.

Presentation to Rev. N. A. MacNeill by Crescent Lodge

At its regular meeting on Thursday evening last Crescent Lodge, I. O. O. F., presented Rev. N. A. MacNeill, Past Noble Grand, with a Past Grand's regalia, accompanied by an address. The presentation was made by Past Grand J. W. Peters, on behalf of the Lodge. Attached to the regalia was a ten dollar gold piece and three one-dollar bills. There was an unusually large number of members of the Lodge present. The following is the address:

Dear Brother MacNeill:—

It is with the most sincere regret that we have learned you are soon to leave us; and we take this opportunity to express to you our appreciation of what you have been to our Lodge, and to us as individual members.

We are very glad to have had the pleasure of initiating you into the mysteries of Oddfellowship, and we have enjoyed seeing you advance step by step, until you have reached the highest office in our Lodge. We felt that we were honored by having our Lodge presided over by a man of your ability and standing. We want you to know that each one of us have been helped by your presence at our meetings; feeling at all times that as you were a messenger of Christ, you were gradually leading us to higher ideals, more sincere fellowship, stronger love for one another, and have helped us to better carry out the principles of our beloved Order. In doing this we feel that you have been doing a good work, touching the lives of those whom you might never have had the privilege of reaching in any other way. The influence you have left here is so deeply rooted that it will continue to grow in our lives, and we trust that we will never cease to be guided by your wise counsel and example. We want you to feel that Crescent Lodge is your home and we hope to welcome you to many a home-coming.

You will carry with you the love and best wishes of each and every member, and wherever you go you will find a welcome among Odd Fellows, for we are all one family, working for the uplifting of humanity.

Truly realizing your worth to us, we ask you to accept this regalia, which you have so successfully merited and are now entitled to wear.

Yours in Friendship, Love and Truth.

OFFICERS and MEMBERS of Crescent Lodge, No. 63, I.O.O.F.

The future of any town depends entirely upon its citizens. If friends come to see you tell them what a fine town we have. If you have a legitimate "kick" put it on file and cease to go about in search of trouble. There is much in our town for which we should all be thankful, and can all be proud. Begin now by looking for the sunny side. Work and plan for the present, but with an eye for greater advancement and prosperity in the future. In plain words, be a "booster."

The gateways are not all closed, however. The sense of touch remains and by means of it communication may be had with the outer world and an imprisoned intelligence set free. The chief interest in this process centres in the initial stages. The principle by which one idea is conveyed can be made to render service in connection with all possible ideas. How is it gone about?

Jean Veinot began with the manual alphabet, and b—o—o—k was the first word spelled out for her. Then the word pen, and at the same time these objects were given her to handle until through the association of ideas she came to connect certain words with certain objects. Having learnt two words she went on to two hundred and two thousand, from nouns to verbs like walk, run, while at the same time she was made to walk or run, and so on with every part of speech, and, like herself, Jean's vocabulary is growing every day.

Those of a speculative turn inquire as to who hath made man's mouth or who maketh a man dumb or deaf or seeing or blind? From the heart of Christianity the answer comes—neither this man nor his parents. The septic and the man of despondent mood has no place in our modern economy. The hospital on one corner and the City Mission on another, the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb here and the School for the Blind there—together they form a quartette whose resultant harmony tells of a religion that is translating itself into life, and in our quieter moments their message to us is on this wise: "Go your way and tell John what things ye have seen and heard, how that the blind see, the lame walk, the deaf hear, the prison doors are opened and the poor have the Gospel preached unto them."

Outdoor Sports on School Grounds

There was a large crowd of interested spectators present at the school grounds last Friday afternoon, the attraction being the outdoor sports held by the pupils of the Bridgetown school. The various events were entered into with considerable zest and were keenly contested, the whole affair being a great success. It is to be hoped that such events may become of more frequent occurrence. Refreshments were served at the close of the program. LeMoine Ruggles and Arthur Dodge acted in the capacity of starter and timekeeper, and Earl Craig as recorder. The following were the events and the winners:

Entertainment at Belleisle

The entertainment given in the Belleisle Hall on behalf of the organ fund on Monday evening was an unqualified success from start to finish. In addition to the party of entertainers from Bridgetown, the committee had the good fortune to secure the help of Miss Myers of Granville Centre as reader. Encores and hearty applause was the rule of the evening. Serjt-Major Gill's sword cutting was much admired, whilst the items in which he figures with two of his pupils—a fencing bout with Miss Louise Ruggles, and club-swinging with Miss Doris Nelly was watched with the keenest interest and brought forth vociferous approbation. Of the rest of the programme (which we append) the names are a guarantee for its quality. Mrs. Ruggles charmed her audience as she always does, whilst Miss Myers' readings and Miss L. Ruggles' song fairly brought the house down, and to all of this the cornet duets were a pleasing and most appreciated variation. The takings amounted to nearly twenty-five dollars.

Sir Edward Grey was the Central Figure in the Balkan Peace

(By A. G. Gardiner, in the London Daily News and Leader.)

The war in the Balkans is over. The delegates of the belligerents are in London once more, not to engage in a long and profitless duel of cross-purposes, but to complete the formalities of peace. There are perils still ahead arising out of the conflicting interests of the allies, but the influence which have carried Europe safely over Niagara will not be unequal to the minor task which has still to be accomplished. We can face the future cheerfully, for the sky of Europe is clearer than it has been for years past. It is not merely that the long smouldering menace of the Near East is removed. That is an incalculable gain to peace and to humanity; but it is not the most important fact that emerges from the war. Far more significant is the rehabilitation of the concert of Europe, the recovery of a European public opinion that can override all individual interests, the demonstration of a collective sense of responsibility that can bear the greatest strain that is ever likely to be imposed upon the forces that make for peace. A victory has been won, not merely over the Turk; but over European jingoism. Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war, and the victory of European peace is the most splendid fact of the Balkan War.

In this victory, it is agreed on all hands that the chief factor has been the cordial co-operation of Great Britain and Germany. That co-operation is the link that has re-established the concert. It has welded Europe into a whole, and has imposed its restraining authority upon Austro-Hungary and Russia, whose armies were mobilized for action almost throughout the war. And the key to that co-operation has been the detachment of Great Britain from Continental camps and rivalries. We have had a free hand and with that freedom we have preserved the peace of Europe.

NOVEMBER, 1911.

The full significance of this fact can only be realized by casting our minds back to a certain day in November, 1911. We had just emerged from the Moroccan crisis and the House of Commons sat grave and silent as Sir Edward Grey told the story of the peril through which we had passed. We had been on the brink of war, not for any British interest, but for French interests. Throughout the Moroccan episode our hands were tied. We were committed to back France in every phase of the affair, and France, at the instigation of Mr. Tardieu and the financial interests, exploited this fact to the utmost. She negotiated with Germany in 1909 and mysteriously dropped the negotiations. Finally, she marched an army to Fez and openly tore up the Algeiras convention. Then followed the Afaid incident and the crisis with all its naval alarms and its talk of landing a British army in Belgium. Now France may have been right or wrong in this matter. That is not the point that concerns us here. The fact of importance is that we were committed to support her regardless of merits. It may be said that it was a part of the bargain by which we gained a free hand in Egypt—that in fact we were simply fulfilling a contract. In some degree that is so; but on the other hand the expedition to Fez should have cancelled that contract. The real fact is that we were supporting France at that time, not on the specific question of Morocco, but in pursuance of a general scheme of foreign policy. It is that scheme which the Balkan war has profoundly modified.

The Pills cause the bowels to move regularly, strengthen and stimulate the kidneys and open up the pores of the skin. "THE ORBIT OF DIPLOMACY."

What was it? There was a phrase which was much on the lips of Sir Edward Grey in those days, and which he used in his speech that November afternoon. It had relation to the peril of all the nations of Europe being brought into "the orbit of a single diplomacy," and that orbit the orbit of Germany. He was under the dominion of a tyrannous nightmare. He saw France and Russia falling victims to the wiles of Germany and a continent united in antagonism to one power, and that power ourselves. To defeat that spectre of the mind became the controlling purpose of his policy. The price he paid was to support France and Russia in all their external activities. France tore up the Algeiras convention and marched to Fez, and we assented. Russia tore up the Anglo-Russian agreement and destroyed Persian freedom, and we assented. We assented not because we approved, but because we desired to keep France and Russia out of "the orbit of a single diplomacy."

"THE BALANCE OF POWER."

In that speech of November, 1911, Sir Edward Grey definitely declared for the abandonment of the historic foreign policy of this country: "Splendid isolation" was an idle dream, and the power that attempted to adopt it would be "a public nuisance." The balance of power was the ideal, and in that balance we must have a place. Europe was in two camps, and we must in our own defence be in one of them. The implications of this policy were obvious and profoundly disquieting. It involved friendships, but also it involved hostilities. It meant that the entente with France had changed its character. It was no longer a friendship that all might share on the same terms; it was a friendship based on a fundamental antagonism. The new amity with Russia was charged with the same formidable policy which would not be governed by our sense of the abstract justice of an issue, or even by regard for the British interests directly involved. It would be governed by the need of making the Triple Entente victorious in every tug-of-war with the Triple Alliance. The springs of British policy would no longer be in London; they would be on the Seine and the Neva. We should dance to the tune of M. Tardieu and respond to the falconer's voice of M. Hartweg. Our armies would move to the throbbing of a distant drum.

That was in November, 1911. The crisis had passed, but it had not cleared the air. It had only revealed a permanent menace that was inherent in our policy.

What is the position today? Again Europe has emerged from a crisis, but it has emerged not like two armies drawing off from an indecisive field of battle and ready to renew the encounter under favoring conditions. It has emerged with the most remarkable victory over Europe separatism that has been achieved in our time. And in that victory the principal factor has been Sir Edward Grey. He has bridged the gulf between the two camps. He has played the great role of the "good European." He has re-established the concert of Europe and asserted the authority of the collective conscience over separate interests. He has restored the sense of a moral governance in the affairs of Europe which had seemed to be dead. In saying this, it is not intended to detract from the services of other men—notably of M. Sazonoff, whose loyalty to the cause of peace in the face of M. Hartweg and great internal difficulties calls for acknowledgement—nor is it intended to cast doubt upon the good faith and desire for peace of powers other than this country. But without England and without Sir Edward Grey the concert could hardly have been reborn and certainly could not have survived.

THE CHANGE OF ITS SIGNIFICANCE.

That the contrast between 1911 and 1913 indicates a change in the orientation of the British policy is apparent. The nightmare has been exercised and the doctrine of the "balance of power" in which we are a part has visibly faded before the truer doctrine of a collective Europe of which we are the inspiration. That doctrine is based on the realities of our position. We have no just place in any camp in Europe. Nature has divorced us from the continent. It has given us a "splendid isolation" in the seas and the corollary of that physical detachment is a political detachment. A policy of "splendid isolation" does not mean a policy of selfishness. We have nothing to gain on the continent and no interest to serve there except the interest of peace. It does not mean the desertion of friends; it means the inclusion of every nation in the circle of our friendship so long as its purposes are consistent with the common interests of Europe. An understanding with Germany does not mean a weakening of our entente is an expression of mutual and sincere friendship. If it expressed anything more than that, if it involved us—as at one time it seemed to involve us—in an obligation to involve the chestnuts out of the fire for France, then it would be a weakness to us and a menace to Europe. The best service we can do to the continent is to keep out of it, to preserve our independence and freedom of action, to cultivate friendships and to avoid entanglements. Napoleon at St. Helena said that England would remain unassailable so long as she kept to the sea, but that she would be doomed if she sought to be a continental power. That saying has gained authority with the development of conscription and the continental armies. We can play no part in continental warfare without disaster and yet a policy of continental entanglement must inevitably lead to the creation of a military weapon that will make that policy a reality. It is a vicious circle from which there is no escape, except by keeping out of it altogether. Policy and armaments are in the relation of cause and effect, and if we wish to avoid conscription we must avoid the policy that leads to conscription.

And in avoiding that policy we have the shortest and swiftest path to power. The influence of England on the continent has not for many years been so wide and so universal as it is today. It was recognized throughout the crisis that this country was playing a wholly disinterested part, and it was the moral effect of that conviction which made the concert a reality and enabled it to stand Niagara. Sir Edward Grey has, at a bold leap into the position of mediator of Europe, that is the position which should inalienably attach to the British Foreign Secretary. But it can only attach to him so long as we remember that we are an island, that we have no part in the domestic quarrels of the continent, and that the balance of power is a vain and mischievous snare.

NOVEL FORESTRY EXHIBITS.

In connection with the Canadian Forestry Association Convention in Winnipeg, on the 7th, 8th and 9th of July, there will be interesting exhibits of forest woods and forest insects, which will enable the people of the prairies to see at once the quality of the various kinds of timber growing in the province, and the pests which are most destructive to them. Experts have been engaged in research and collection with the object of making the form of the exhibits as interesting as possible to the general public. It is expected that there will be a number of other features in connection with the convention which will give it a distinctly unique interest to all those attending. There are assurances from a large number of forestry experts and officials, both in Canada and the United States, that they will be in attendance, and it is assured that the convention will be one of the best in the history of the association.

Mr. Lawler, the Secretary of the Association, reports that the recent advances in ideas of wise use of the forest resource are very noticeable in the West at the present time, and that it is not unlikely, considering the demands which are being made on all sides for further scientific management, and in view of the importance of the questions to be considered at the Winnipeg Convention, that considerable progress should be the direct outcome of the present activities.

A VOICE FROM THE CORN.

I was made to be eaten and not to be drunk. To be husked in a barn—not soaked in a tank; I come as a blessing when put in a mill. As a blight and a curse when run through a still. Make me up into loaves and your children are fed. But make into drink I'll starve them instead. In bread I'm the servant; the eater shall rule. In drink I'm the master; the drinker a fool. Then remember my warning:—"My strength I'll employ, If eaten to strengthen, if drunk to destroy."

When your child has whooping cough be careful to keep the cough loose and expectoration easy by giving Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as may be required. This remedy will also liquify the tough mucus and make it easier to expectorate. It has been used successfully in many epidemics and is safe and sure. For sale by all dealers.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1913.

One of the wonders of the day is that marvellous young lady, Helen Keller. Never before in the world's history has there been such a case as hers. Blind, deaf and dumb from early childhood, if not from birth, she has reached a stage of mental development which seems almost incredible. In childhood, conscious of some impediment which prevented her from being and doing as other children were and did, she would occasionally give herself up to uncontrollable bursts of passion, determined to break open, as it were, the doors of her prison house. The usual avenues to the mind and heart were totally barred, and there remained only the sense of touch as a means of access to the inner and outer world. Her condition, therefore, seemed to be one of unusual and utter hopelessness. At last a teacher was found, Miss Sullivan, willing to undertake the seemingly hopeless task of instruction and education. The endeavor was for some time extremely discouraging. It was a doll which was the means of first access to the mind. Taking the fingers of the child in hers, the teacher touched the doll with them and then traced with them the letters of the word, doll. At length a smile of intelligence crossed the child's face. She knew the lines traced by the fingers meant the name of the doll. Soon she recognized that everything had a name, and in one day she learned the names of thirty common things. The development was thenceforth rapid. Phillips Brooks, visiting her, was requested by Miss Sullivan to give the child some instruction about God. She replied, "I have always known Him, but I did not know His name is God,"—an evidence that in every human being there is an intuitive conviction of the great First Cause.

She was soon reading, through the touch of her teacher, books of science and philosophy, and the Greek and Latin Classics, preparing herself for an advanced education. Finally, she graduated with distinction at Radcliffe College, having passed successful examinations in the usual studies. Perhaps the most wonderful thing of all is that she now talks. Standing before an audience she says, in tones adequate to the building, "I was deaf and I hear; I was blind and I see; I was dumb and I speak." She answers questions put to her with readiness and humor. Being asked, "Is it true that you can play on the harp and even on the organ?" she replied facetiously, "If I play on an organ it must be a hand organ." Another asks, "Is your sense of touch abnormally clear?" she answered, "It is the same as yours, but it has been developed more thoroughly." Again, it was asked, "Do you know we are applauding?" her reply was "I feel it." She had felt the vibrations of the floor occasioned by the applause.

It is largely through the lessons of Helen Keller's life that Schools for the Deaf and Dumb are dropping the latter word. They are calling themselves Schools for the Deaf, and are teaching the deaf to speak with a good degree of success.

Since writing the above we have observed, in the last Report of the Halifax Institution for the Deaf, the story of Mary Jane Veinot, a Nova Scotia girl, which will be found on the first page of this paper, and to which we draw special attention.

A writer in the London "Times," referring to the enormous sum of about £161,553,330, spent in Great Britain, in 1912, for alcoholic liquors asks the pertinent question:

"What Do They Get for It? It may be worth while, to consider very briefly how far the national expenditure on intoxicating liquors is or is not a waste of the national resources. The money which is spent on intoxicants—particularly that which is found by the weekly wage-earners—amounting probably to £2,000,000 per week—represents an enormous amount of hard work performed by such workers, and a great drain upon that portion of the national resources which is represented by the time, strength, and capacity of its toilers. It may, therefore, not unfairly be asked, what return do these workers get for such toil when they purchase intoxicants with its proceeds? It will not be contended that they gain strength, intellectual vigor, home comforts, or higher ideals—for commerce, medical science, social science, and religion conclusively prove the contrary."

If the answer is correct,—and comparatively few will conscientiously question its correctness,—then from a material, economic, sanitary standpoint, to say nothing of morals or religion, every one interested in the welfare of his brother man must acknowledge himself under obligation by example and influence and any other method he can legitimately employ to arrest the flow of the deadly river to which Robert Hall gave the fitting name "Liquid Damnation."

Supreme Court Proceedings

From Tuesday to Friday noon of last week the sessions of the Supreme Court were taken up with the trial of the three Graves Brothers. The Court House was crowded during the whole proceedings of the trial. Among those to give evidence in the trial were the three brothers themselves. The examinations of witnesses closed on Thursday, after which Mr. W. E. Roscoe made an able appeal asking for the acquittal of the prisoners. Mr. H. H. Wickwire, on behalf of the Crown, addressed the Jury, showing from the evidence that the rough treatment administered by the prisoners accelerated the death of Mr. Lee.

Judge Ritchie gave his charge to the Jury on Friday morning. He said in part: "Both you and myself have a grave responsibility to discharge in this matter of life and death of these three men. The Jury can find three verdicts, murder, manslaughter or acquittal. You must take the law from me and not the counsel. You are not to be controlled by my views but by the evidence entirely. The final decision is with you."

His Lordship went carefully over the evidence of all the witnesses and summed up with the doctor's testimony, nearly three hours being taken up. The Jury retired at 11.30 and at 3.30 returned a verdict of "guilty of manslaughter."

On Saturday morning the three brothers were brought before His Lordship for sentence, and were each sentenced to fifteen years in the Dorchester penitentiary. In pronouncing sentence the Judge said: "You have been ably defended and have had an impartial trial. I may say to you that I could give you a life sentence, but because you have been under the sentence of death for one year, I have considered the matter carefully and reduced the time. Some people may think I should give you more and others less. . . . Your crime has been of a most revolting nature. You will be taken to Dorchester penitentiary, and there confined for fifteen years."

The docket of civil causes was taken up Friday afternoon. The first case, Starratt vs. White, was by consent taken from the Jury. Damages will be assessed this morning by the presiding Judge.

The case of O. S. Miller vs. Bessie Whitman has gone over to the fall term of Court.

The two causes of Elias Bruce and L. P. Bruce vs. Hallet, Bruce and Ernest Congdon were tried yesterday and will go before the Jury this morning.

The case of Thos. H. Chipman vs. E. J. Elliott will be tried before a Judge at Chambers.

CANADA IS MANUFACTURING A GREATER PROPORTION OF HER PULPWOOD.

In 1911, Canada exported 847,339 cords of pulpwood; in 1912, 980,868 cords were sent out of the country, nearly all of which went to the United States. In spite of this total increase the proportion of pulpwood exported is decreasing. In 1911, a little over forty-four per cent of the pulpwood cut in Canada was manufactured in this country; in 1912, this percentage had increased to almost forty-seven per cent. These are the figures collected by the Dominion Forestry Branch, Ottawa.

The loss to Canada through sending pulpwood out of the country in an unmanufactured state is still a tremendous one. The value of the pulpwood exported was about $6,700,000. If manufactured into pulp this
