Revolving or cyclical accounting has to date been little used by small retailers, and it presents what appears to be the greatest conflict of interest in the retail trade, perhaps one of the important reasons for the setting up of the Retail Council of Canada in 1963 to speak separately from the long established Retail Merchants Association. This system of accounting—if revolving credit can be called a system when it appears to be a generic rather than a specific term—has been a source of much confusion and misunderstanding. The customer is in the dark as to the carrying charge on his purchase; the general credit manager for Simpsons-Sears Ltd., Toronto, spoke of "the further complications in the retail department store business caused by what we call 'add on'..."; and development of this system has even made it necessary for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to discontinue publication of meaningful and detailed data on consumer credit which it formerly reported.

Coming events were already casting their shadow before in a DBS report on retail credit for the fourth quarter of 1950:

> "A new form of credit known as 'revolving credit' has been expanding for some time past. Because of its increasing importance and its inclusion in the new Consumer Credit regulations, an attempt has been made to obtain consistent reporting of this type of credit. In this report, it has been included with the charge or other credit category."

But the system spread and took many different forms, and the task of the DBS became more difficult, until a decade later all attempts to obtain consistent reporting had been abandoned and retail credit statistics were thenceforth lumped together under "total accounts receivable". No longer were instalment accounts distinguishable from charge accounts.

So complicated is this method of granting credit that a Retail Council of Canada representative said "... we cannot conceive of any form of disclosure which can be devised to handle our cyclical and add-on type of accounts." His colleague agreed with the suggestion of a committee member that, "It probably would be possible to figure an interest rate with a computer," adding, "but whether we could afford to do that is another question." The argument against requiring disclosure of interest rates charged on this type of account was summed up by a then Co-Chairman: "What you are saying is, in effect, if there is legislation in this regard you will have to change your accounting methods. That is all you have said, as far as I can see."

It appears to us that a type of accounting which is admitted to be incompatible with disclosure legislation and which makes it impossible for the retailer to tell the customer the interest rate, is hardly likely to enable the customer to figure that out for himself. Much less can he be expected to do any comparison shopping between different merchants, or to consider whether it would be to his advantage to obtain the money from another source. When interest rates are surrounded by mystery, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture reminded us that "unwise and damaging purchases are made by those who cannot really afford them." We have come to the conclusion that to make an exception from general regulations for a type of account which is so vaguely defined, and yet is being used in a growing number of firms, would be opening the door to confusion. There is a great danger that this system will tempt the unsophisticated and those with small incomes to pile up debts beyond their ability to repay. We support the view advanced by most disinterested parties that we should confine ourselves strictly, if at all possible, to the annual basis. We note that Mr. Irwin, the financial consultant, shared that opinion, although he warned that unless you get acceptance from those using revolving credit "they can foul it up pretty well, too." We express our confidence that reputable business firms will act in an ethical way.

Consumer-Borrowers Not All in Same Position

For many—probably most—Canadians, all that is needed to put them in a bargaining position roughly equal to that of the lenders is access to objective and unbiased information. These are the people who, with all the cards on the table, and with access to various sources of credit, can do their own shopping. But investigations in the United States have shown what is no doubt true here too: that a section of the consumer public are not comparison shoppers, and they are likely to be individuals with the lowest incomes. It is they who "often pay the highest interest rates and are in the greatest need of protection."

Most comparison shoppers fall into the group that has aptly been called the unrationed minority. A recent study made for the National Bureau of Economic Research, and brought to our attention by more than one representation, suggests that there are two kinds of consumers:

1. The unrationed minority—those who choose to pay all or part in cash or to accept less credit than is available to them from primary lenders. They pay lower rates than rationed consumers and the limited amount of rate information that consumers have is pretty well confined to this group.

2. Rationed consumers—the majority, whose marginal borrowing cost is in excess of the going rate of primary lenders. The only alternatives open to this group are paying the going rate or doing without the commodity.

Rationed consumers, when they are in desperate need of a loan, meet the lender under such unequal conditions that if he is unscrupulous he is in a good position to press his advantage. But even rationed consumers sometime take out loans for purposes that can hardly be considered essential, and this may be done without consideration or understanding of the consequences. It was represented to us by those whose work brings them in contact with lower-income families that if the true costs of borrowing had been clearly explained in advance, some of the tragedies due to debt would never have developed. This view is supported by empirical investigation of the National Bureau of Economic Research which found the strongest response to acquisition of knowledge of finance rates was "a reduced willingness to borrow among households in the rationed group."

Fortunately, most rationed consumers are above what could be called the poverty line, and would no doubt be able to manage their finances, including some credit buying, if they were in possession of all the facts necessary for making a sensible decision. These are the people who will benefit from disclosure by becoming comparison shoppers.

But we are left with the problem of the minority of rationed consumers who, with all the necessary information, and understanding that their income does not allow for any commitments to pay the high cost of the credit available to them, are in such desperate need of a loan that they will agree to the impossible. The situation of these people has given us cause for concern, and leads us into consideration of how this problem can be solved.

The Gap in the Credit Picture

In view of the importance of credit in business today, various methods are used to ensure that sound credit standards are maintained, and that credit is available at reasonable rates to meet legitimate needs of business as well as of private borrowers. Except in times of emergency, when the national interest is involved, maintenance of sound credit standards is generally left to the judgment of the lenders, the theory being that it is in their own interest to curb unwise use of credit. It has been argued that this is not always a safe assumption, when the salesman has his eye on filling a quota, when collection of the debt is separated from sale of the goods, and when any risk to the lender is virtually eliminated by harsh enforcement methods. That question is discussed elsewhere. Here we are considering measures to ensure that necessary credit is available.

The monetary power of the Bank of Canada aims at seeing that overall, the credit for business is sufficient to meet the needs. The Bank uses its power to influence the interest rates, thereby increasing or curtailing the money supply as seems advisable. The Bank's actions are also reflected to some extent in policies of commercial banks in dealing with their consumer borrowers. And when money will bring high interest rates elsewhere, life insurance companies are more reluctant than usual to expand their low-interest lending to policy holders. In any case, policy holders who are family heads generally resist the idea of encumbering the protection they have provided for their wives and children in case "anything should happen" to them.

But it is well known that sources of credit which are sensitive to the nation's money policies are not open to the low-income person who is without assets to pledge as security. He must rely for cash borrowing on consumer loan companies and money-lenders—institutions whose business expands when money is otherwise hard to get. When interest rates are high enough, there are sure to be willing lenders, and a tight-money period is precisely the time when numbers grow of those who are anxious enough to borrow that they will agree to almost any conditions. The only alternative generally open to the average man is to buy on credit, with the debt accruing to the retail dealer or to a finance company. These are expensive methods of borrowing, and sometimes the rates are exorbitant. Furthermore, no matter how desperate the need, there is always a residue of individuals who are turned down by the consumer loan companies; there is also a limit beyond which it becomes difficult for some to get retail credit.

In addition to those who, because of their personal situation are considered by the commercial lender to be too great a risk, there are others whose requirement for money, theoretically regulated under the Small Loans Act, happens to fall into what lenders consider "a non-profit area", roughly defined as between $1,000 and $1,500. Some lenders refuse these loans, and it is admitted that this area is not now adequately served. The danger is that in order to obtain the money they need, borrowers will be driven to assume a larger debt, bringing them beyond the upper limit of protection under the Small Loans Act.

When a man applies for a loan somebody else decides whether or not the loan is granted. If the decision goes against the applicant, what then? Several committee members raised the issue of the need for some alternative source of credit at reasonable rates for those who are denied a loan when they really need it, and perhaps also for those whose business is least profitable to lenders, and the cost of carrying which pushes up rates for other borrowers.

Precedents for Government Action

Businesses operating for profit can hardly be expected to go far beyond what they regard as economically feasible, for the sake of fulfilling a socially desirable need or one that is in the national interest. The Government has long recognized this, and has stepped in to fill gaps of this kind, making available loans at low interest rates, either by guaranteeing loans made by traditional lending institutions or by setting up agencies which make loans directly. This is sometimes spoken of as, "Increasing the effectiveness of monetary action through ensuring the availability of credit..." For more than two decades the Industrial Development Bank has provided capital-type loans to small and medium sized firms. The bank is authorized to lend or guarantee loans of money to persons or corporations when

> ..."15 (b) credit or other financial resources would not otherwise be available on reasonable terms and conditions..."

Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, in effect for roughly the same length of time, the Government guarantees farm improvement loans, provided that certain conditions are met. The maximum loan, originally $3,000, has been successively raised until it is now $15,000. The Veterans' Business and Professional Loans Act of 1946 provided for loans up to $3,000, and guaranteed loans for prairie farmers—with the original maximum of $1,000 now raised to $3,000—are available under the Prairie Grain Producers' Interim Financing Act, 1951. The Prairie Grain Loans Act (1960) guarantees loans up to $1,500 to actual producers. For more than thirty years there has been legislation providing mortgage loans to fishermen, and since 1955 the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act has made available government guaranteed loans of up to $4,000.

Fishermen's loans may be obtained from banks, credit unions, caisses populaires or other designated cooperative credit societies. Most of the other guaranteed loans are made through the chartered banks, with the government, as a rule, undertaking to make up any losses as well as to pay the cost of administration.

The Farm Credit Act of 1959 set up the Farm Credit Corporation, which makes low-interest loans to farmers whose farms are mortgaged "and whose experience, ability and character are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated."

In 1960 the small businessman was added to the list of Canadians eligible for a guaranteed government loan. Under the Small Businesses Loans Act loans up to $25,000 may be granted to "small business enterprises". The Act defines a small business as one with gross revenue not over $250,000.

Social as well as Economic Considerations

Many of these government guaranteed loans are provided for the purpose of expanding or strengthening the economic well-being of the borrower and indirectly, of the Canadian economy. But an interesting example of taking into account social as well as economic considerations—specifically, the credit needs of home and family—is provided by the full title of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944-45: "An Act to encourage the provision of Intermediate Term and Short Term Credit to Farmers for the Improvement and Development of Farms and for the Improvement of Living Conditions thereon". Even earlier, in 1937, the Home Improvement Loans Guarantee Act made it possible under certain conditions laid down in the legislation, to borrow up to $2,000. The upper limit for home improvement loans is now $4,000.

For more than 20 years low-interest loans have been made to home-owners under the National Housing Act. But consumer-borrowers, who are the particular concern of this Committee, are mainly urban dwellers, and a high proportion of them are wage-earners. Because of the vulnerable position of low-income people in need of credit, we were impressed by the findings of the Poapst consumer survey for the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that those who suffer from intermittent unemployment are more likely to be involved in instalment debt than in mortgage debt. Undoubtedly a high proportion of low-income families are tenants. These people do not benefit by the help given to home-owners under the National Housing Act; nor do they qualify for loans under the Home Improvement Loans Guarantee Act. In any case, that Act does not provide for loans to cover appliances and furniture, essential equipment for the modern household.

Lending Policies of Private Businesses and Government Institutions

The main difference between lending policies of private business enterprises and those of government institutions is that the former are naturally interested mainly in profits, whereas the latter make loans for clearly defined purposes considered to be economically and socially desirable for the individual or company as well as in the general public interest. Perhaps we could adopt a phrase from the credit unions and extend to a wider group of private consumers the privilege which government has long accorded to specified categories of Canadians, of securing at reasonable rates, loans guaranteed by the Government, to be used for "provident and productive purposes". This credit would not be available to acquire minks and diamonds, or for travel to far-off places, but only for purposes related to the well-being of home and family. A high proportion of borrowing by the hard-pressed low-income wage-earner would clearly come within this definition.

Consumer lending companies take the position that borrowers "who lack readily marketable assets and who are in a relatively weak bargaining position need the services provided by responsible lenders under a suitable regulatory law." We do not quarrel with this, but we believe the time has come when that service must be made available to this vulnerable group not only by the private institutions with which they are now dealing, but by an independent source which would provide an alternative for those who are turned down by commercial lenders. This service element would include much-needed advice concerning the meaning and the cost of credit. The evidence convinces us that the risk of losses on the loans would be very small, and the public interest would be served by preventing low-income families from becoming enmeshed in debt from which they could never hope to extricate themselves unaided.

Commercial banks are already providing consumer credit on a large scale to borrowers who are considered good risks. They also make loans to individuals who might not otherwise qualify, on condition that the Government guarantees to recoup any losses from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. We believe they could be persuaded, with the same kind of government guarantee, to serve the lower-income consumers we have in mind.

If we were to make it possible for farmers and city dwellers alike to borrow at reasonable rates for what could be regarded as necessary expenditures related to the satisfactory functioning of the home, in the same way as we do now for home ownership or farm implements, that could hardly be regarded as establishing any new principle. It is now a matter of official concern to help preserve and strengthen family life, and specifically, to raise the standard of living of families which have failed to share in our general affluence. The strains on family ties that result from overwhelming debt are well documented.

But what makes our suggestion doubly attractive is that it would benefit lenders as well as borrowers. Various witnesses have suggested that in the lending business today, major loans more or less carry the cost of serving smaller borrowers. If lenders were to be relieved of the bulk of both high-risk and low-return customers, it should be possible for them to reduce somewhat the rates charged to their other borrowers. A representative of the consumer loan companies agreed that this was a reasonable hope, although he added a note of caution: "One would have to look at it very carefully."

We have considered various ways of determining who should be eligible for government guaranteed consumer loans. Although the extent of a man's indebtedness is often related to the amount of his income and assets, that is not always the case.

Proposal for Filling the Gap

A spokesman for the consumer loan companies suggested that the dividing line between their business and that of the commercial banks is the income of the borrower rather than the size of the loan, implying that those whose incomes do not meet the bank's requirements must go to consumer loan companies. The immediate and urgent concern of this Committee is an even lower income group—those who do not meet the requirements of the consumer loan companies, or, if they do, they are served at the cost of higher rates for other borrowers. Our suggestion is therefore that government guaranteed loans at a reasonable interest rate be made available to the lowest income groups as an alternative to borrowing from commercial lenders.

It is not easy, of course, to draw the line between those who would be eligible to use a public facility of this kind and those who would not. In introducing the recent amendments to the National Housing Act, the Minister of Labour said the government is "trying to help those people in the lower and medium income brackets." He added that the new provisions of that Act will benefit mainly "the group earning $5,000 and over". Taking into account today's economic conditions, we believe it would not be unreasonable to make this alternative source of consumer credit available to all families whose annual income is $4,000 or less. The maximum amount that could be borrowed under this scheme would be $1,500. The responsible government agency would provide information and advice to all who wished to have it.

Incidentally, the proposed government guaranteed loans should greatly assist current efforts to establish Indian families in the mainstream of Canadian life. Those responsible for helping them to move from the reserves to the regular working force have noted that credit, which may very well be essential if the transition is to be made, is usually denied to Canada's original inhabitants.

Used Cars—A Special Case

When a representative of the Consumers' Association of Canada was asked where their members feel that the greatest abuses in consumer credit lie, she answered: "I think there are very often abuses in the sale of used cars." Evidence produced in some provincial investigations confirms our impression that there is no group of consumers with so many unhappy purchasers who have made considerable sacrifice to gain possession of an article which they sorely need and which turns out to be useless. Yet no redress for their grievances is available.

Those who buy new cars can learn a good deal in advance about comparative performance of different makes. In any case they are protected by the maker's warranty, and his desire to maintain the reputation of his product. It is fairly safe for the buyer of a new car to make his selection on the basis of appeal to the eye of various designs and colors—factors that are usually stressed by car dealers. But the purchase of a used car is a different proposition. The buyer is often entirely dependent on the dealer's word concerning the age and history of the car, and he must put his faith in the number of miles recorded on the speedometer.

The most important question, of course, is whether the car will go. No matter how attractive its appearance, a car that will not move does not solve a man's transportation problem. When this situation develops after he has signed a purchase agreement as well as a promissory note independent of the agreement, the buyer may find himself liable for paying over a period of months or even years, for a vehicle that never takes to the road. And he is apt to be making these payments, not to the one who sold him the car, but to the purchaser of his agreement or promissory note. We learned that "it is the almost invariable practice that the buyer is required to waive the rights which the common law and the various provincial sales of goods acts confer on him with respect to the quality and fitness of the goods he purchases."

Even assuming that the car is roadworthy, as most cars undoubtedly are, it is not unusual for the purchaser to commit himself to pay more than he can possibly afford out of his income, with the result that he falls behind. When that happens, a man is apt to find that he has agreed to provisions in fine print that are very harsh indeed.

Recognizing the importance of the motor car industry to Canada's economy, we nevertheless believe that the used car business has become a social problem. A member of the Committee who is president of a social agency told us that his agency is sometimes called on to supply food for children at the same time as their poor father is obliged to keep up payments on an old car. "So this organization, whose object is to help poor people," he said, "in reality helps the finance companies."

The reasons why the financing of used cars is a special problem are: (1) that people with small incomes are more likely to buy used cars than new cars; (2) that finance charges on used cars are considerably higher than on new cars; (3) that a high proportion of used cars are repossessed, due in some cases simply to mismanagement on the part of the would-be purchaser, but excessive finance charges no doubt help to make the size of the payments unrealistic in relation to the income of the debtor; (4) that a used car may be the only means of transportation to and from work, in which case repossession is a calamity for a wage-earner and for the family dependent on him; (5) that when the used car is not as represented, sometimes so deficient that it does not serve the purpose of transportation, the purchaser may be forced to continue making payments to the buyer of a conditional sale agreement who accepts no responsibility to him; (6) that there is no limit to the charges that can be made under the guise of reconditioning it, and this may very well exceed the value of the vehicle. We were informed of a case recorded in a Montreal court where a truck purchased for $650 and repossessed one week later, was resold for $25.

It is clearly in the public interest to provide some protection to used-car buyers, perhaps to make it possible for them to do what is commonly done by purchasers of new cars—borrow money and pay cash. We believe that one of our major recommendations will take care of this problem by making credit available at a reasonable rate in the particular and urgent situation when the car is needed for transportation to work. The individual would then be essentially in the same position as a member of a caisse populaire whose car can be financed altogether by regular payments at reasonable rates of interest and with no lien attached to the car. Furthermore, our recommendation that a maximum financing rate for all used cars be fixed by law (as is now done in New York State for both used and new cars) should help to make dealers more careful in selecting their purchasers. Because of the many possibilities of misrepresenting the age and condition of a used car, introduction of an identification system such as is used in Britain and in some parts of Canada, would make it possible to check in a public place, the history of any car offered for sale. This should not be an insuperable problem in the computer age.

Summary

The most widespread hardships for debtors today arise out of retail credit transactions rather than cash borrowing, and troubles are particularly common in connection with the purchase of used cars. Buying on credit has become a well established practice for all income groups. It is a perfectly legitimate practice, one that stimulates sales and makes it possible for many to enjoy now amenities which they are well able to pay for later in instalments. Undoubtedly there are credit purchases made which are unnecessary and unrealistic, but the same could be said of cash purchases. In our society we are free, as individuals, to use our own resources in any way that gives us the greatest satisfaction, and the Committee has no quarrel with that.

What does concern us is the consequences for themselves and for society when unforeseen circumstances make it impossible for one who has committed himself to credit payments to meet these obligations. Unforeseen circumstances can arise for two main reasons: (1) because the consumer did not understand what he was undertaking, or (2) because his personal situation has changed. When a small income is committed beforehand, a period of illness or unemployment, or even the need to repair the home or replace an expensive item of household equipment or clothing, can completely throw out the family budget. As is often the case, if remedies are to be effective and to prevent recurrence of trouble, they must take into account the root causes. In arriving at our final recommendations we have kept this in mind.

III GROWTH OF CONSUMER CREDIT

Introduction

To pay for the use of money is so much taken for granted today that it may come as a surprise to some that prior to the middle of the sixteenth century it was generally regarded as a serious evil to take any interest, whether exorbitant or not. Up to that time clergy of all denominations condemned usury; the law punished it with imprisonment and forfeiture of principal and interest.

This attitude was based on two thousand years of church and moralist writings. Money was regarded as a medium of exchange. Like any other article, when it was loaned it was absolutely under the borrower's control. We learned that as late as 1572 a lawyer and moralist, Thomas Wilson, wrote a Discourse Upon Usury which he declared to be nothing but "a fraudulent and crafty stealing of another man's goods."

In those days of the relatively simple village economy large amounts of capital were not generally required. Customers of the local money man were mainly peasants, artisans and small merchants who fell upon lean times. Proverbs surviving from that period reflect the social climate of the day: "Better buy than borrow", "Better give a shilling than lend a half crown." In the latter part of the sixteenth century the whole situation changed; with the beginning of the modern economy as we know it came the need for more capital.

Changing economic conditions brought about a change in public attitudes, with resulting pressure for institutional changes. As is often the case, it took some time for the law to catch up with public opinion, and there was a period when practice was removed from theory and principles. Attempts were made "to charge interest indirectly or under another name or through some device."

When the Low Countries began to permit the charging of interest up to 10 per cent the competitive position of English trade was affected. Although the Canon laws were gradually relaxed to permit some exceptions, the big turning point came in Britain in 1571 when Parliament passed an act permitting interest up to 10 per cent. This marked abandonment of the traditional attitude that any profit on money lending is usurious and wrong.

Recognition that interest can be reasonable, changed the meaning of the word "usury" which is commonly understood now to refer to money-lending at exorbitant rates, especially at rates higher than those fixed by law. Interest at a reasonable rate is universally accepted as entirely proper. As a member of parliament put it, the distinction thereafter was between "biting and oversharp dealing" and "a reasonable maximum interest rate set by the State."

Nowadays, for reasons discussed elsewhere, page 2883) those borrowing money, particularly individuals operating as consumers, are concerned not only about interest rates, but equally—perhaps more—about other charges that become part of the cost of the loan.

What is Consumer Credit?

As in all areas of study, there is some difficulty about exactly defining consumer credit, but a reasonable definition appears to be, as the Bank of Canada representative put it: "credit advanced to individuals to finance their expenditures on goods and services as consumers." This would exclude credit extended to businesses, borrowing by individuals to finance housing (capital expenditures) and credit used to acquire financial assets such as stocks and bonds. Consumer credit is used to finance things that by their nature have a short life as well as things that will wear out "in a reasonably short time", including furniture, and—an important part of the picture today—motor cars. Articles of this latter kind are what are known as durable goods as opposed to non-durable goods.

23031—108½

Although the granting of credit to consumers in one form or another has a long history, instalment credit on a large scale seems to have grown up with the development of relatively high-value durable goods. It is particularly associated with wide use of the motor car. Parallel with the growth of consumer credit was development of institutional arrangements to facilitate it. Another factor responsible for the increase in consumer credit has been a change in attitude to the incurring of large debts for consumption purposes. And underlying the whole development has been expansion of consumer incomes.

Consumer credit is mainly of two kinds:

1. Cash loans, and
2. "transactions relating to the sale of goods or services on some kind of time-payment plan."

Time Payment Plans

The idea of selling on time is not new. It has been known in Canada since 1850. Many of the earliest time-sale agreements covered the sale of horses—the equivalent of the modern motor car. But much the older form of credit is the cash loan, where the primary transaction is the borrowing of money. This explains why legislation developed mainly to regulate that kind of business.

In recent years, particularly since the Second World War, there has been a tremendous upsurge in the form of credit where the primary transaction is the purchase of goods. This kind of credit also gives rise to debt on which interest must be paid. The subject of interest as well as the wider cost of providing credit to consumers have become matters of public concern.

Needless to say, effective demand for the purchase of goods on credit was low in the thirties due to unemployment, and in the war years it was curbed in the national interest. Before World War II it was mainly the larger items of durable goods that were bought on "time or instalment payment terms". When the family needed a piano, a refrigerator, or a large piece of furniture and they did not have ready money to pay for it, it was bought "on time". It was customary in those days for cash buyers to be given a discount. Then the practice grew up of putting part of the charge for instalment service on the price of the article, with the remainder of the cost a direct charge—perhaps as low as 5 per cent—for "instalment terms".

The Situation To-day

To-day there is seldom any discount for cash. The usual practice is to state a cash price along with the charges for "instalment service". In addition, new types of accounts have been developed to allow for purchase of a wide variety of consumer goods, including both the smaller durable items and also non-durable goods, that is those designed for immediate consumption.

Except for a set-back in 1951 when restrictions were imposed during the Korean War, consumer credit outstanding has risen steadily from $678 million in 1948 to some $7,000 million at the end of 1965. Table 1 shows that the rise has continued not only in absolute terms but also as a ratio of the gross national product as well as of personal disposable income. Thoughout the fifties it was customary to compare our situation favourably with the United States. In that country, where consumer credit is more highly developed than anywhere else in the world, the ratio of consumer credit was always higher than ours as measured by either of these indices. However, since 1961 we have surpassed the United States both in our ratio to GNP and to personal disposable income.

TABLE 1

CONSUMER CREDIT OUTSTANDING, RATIO TO GNP AND TO PERSONAL DISPOSABLE INCOME, CANADA AND U.S.A., 1948-1963

Year	Ratio to GNP		Ratio to Personal Disposable Income
	Canada	U.S.A.	Canada	U.S.A.
1948	4.3	5.0	5.9	6.8
1949	4.9	6.2	6.8	8.5
1950	5.4	6.5	7.9	9.1
1951	4.6	6.2	6.6	8.9
1952	5.7	7.2	8.5	10.5
1953	7.0	8.2	10.4	11.6
1954	7.5	8.2	11.0	11.7
1955	8.1	9.0	12.2	13.0
1956	8.2	9.3	12.4	13.3
1957	8.4	9.6	12.4	13.6
1958	8.8	9.2	12.6	13.0
1959	9.4	9.9	13.9	14.2
1960	10.1	10.5	14.4	14.9
1961	10.2	10.0	14.8	14.5
1962	10.6	10.5	15.3	15.1
1963	11.1	10.9	16.0	16.0

SOURCE: Bank of Canada brief, proceedings, p. 118.

At the close of the year 1965 the consumer credit owed by Canadians was distributed as shown in Table 2.

This table tells us who the creditors are, but data are not available to produce a comparable table showing who are the debtors. We do know that a study made in 1959 of 1,500 wage-earning families in Quebec found that 75 per cent of them used some form of credit. The average debt was $1,200 per family; the poorest families used the most credit, the average used it the least, and the wealthiest were in between.

Investigations made for the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance confirm for a wide sample of the population the fact that poor people are heavy users of credit. The Royal Commission reported as follows:

> "Instalment debt is found in 32% of households and at all income levels, although its highest relative use is found in the lower income categories..." and that, "Clerical and labouring personnel use instalment debt most frequently." Furthermore, those "with the smallest amounts of reported assets also make heaviest use of consumer credit —partly because of the absence of any other collateral."

TABLE 2

COMPOSITION OF CONSUMER CREDIT OUTSTANDING, CANADA, DECEMBER 1965

	Millions of $
Cash loans
Chartered banks (unsecured)	2,186
Consumer loan companies	962
Life insurance policy loans	407
Credit unions and caisses populaires	840 +	(estimate)
Quebec savings banks (unsecured)	16
Credit buying
Sales finance companies & motor vehicle dealers	1,162
Department stores	565
Furniture & appliance dealers	209
Other retail dealers	422
Oil company credit cards	68
Consumer loan co. instalment credit	67
Total	7,000	(approx.)

Source: Bank of Canada Statistical Summary Supplement 1965.

OPEN-END ACCOUNTS

Some retailers allow the customer 30 days to pay for goods without making any extra charge. There are also merchants who make instalment sales contracts clearly setting out the purchase price and carrying charges as well as the amounts and dates of the payments. It is not difficult for customers who enter into arrangements of that kind to figure out the effective annual interest rate. But the Retail Council of Canada informed us that these accounts "probably comprise a very small percentage of the total volume of credit extended by our members." It is the new types of accounts, known as revolving credit or cyclical accounts, budget or "easy payment" plans, that are responsible for much of the growth in credit buying in recent years, particularly in the large department stores. It is these revolving credit accounts which, according to professional social workers who appeared before us, seem to create the greatest difficulty for low-income people.

Revolving credit is a general term applied to a type of accounting mainly used by the large department stores and some retail chains, which permits occasional purchases to be added into the arrangement. It originated south of the border, and appears to be pretty well confined to North America. The system is regulated by law in New York, California, and Massachusetts, but in Canada, where it has become common only in the last decade, it is still unregulated. There is no uniformity in the plans used even by the major retailers, but the method of billing the customer means that he is not informed of the extra charge for the cost of the loan (referred to as the service charge) until some time after he has acquired the goods, when the bill comes from the accounting or credit department. Any particular individual may not receive his bill at the end of the month because the system involves spreading the billing evenly over the whole period. The "service charge" is usually stated in dollars and cents, and not in percentages. Some firms do inform customers of the monthly percentage charged on the outstanding balance, but it is generally agreed that this type of accounting does not lend itself to informing him of the annual rate of interest he is paying.

IV HISTORY OF REGULATIONS

Federal Action

Three federal acts, one of them no longer on the statute books, were considered by the Committee to be pertinent to a study of consumer credit: the Small Loans Act, the Money-Lenders Act and the Interest Act. Only the Small Loans Act fixes responsibility for administration on a department of government. It is the duty of the Superintendent of Insurance to watch over that Act, and the former incumbent of the office reviewed the whole situation for the Committee. The Money-Lenders Act has been repealed. The Interest Act is still in force, but we were told that it has never been really effective in controlling excessive rates of interest.

Perhaps it is worth noting that the earliest legislation in Canada relating to "interest, usury and money-lending", passed in 1777, fixed a maximum rate of 6 per cent per annum for all contracts, the same limit that has been specified in the Bank Act until the recent revision. Severe penalties were laid down, including voidance of the contract, for charging higher rates.

This Act and a similar Act passed in Upper Canada in 1811 were repealed in 1853 and replaced by a new Act which, while it maintained the 6 per cent ceiling on interest rates, reduced penalties provided for infraction in that the contract was voided only in so far as it related to excess of interest. The provisions were further eased in 1858 when the contracting parties were permitted to agree on any rate, with the 6 per cent ceiling retained if no rate was stipulated by the parties or by law. This 1858 Act is the origin of sections 2 and 3 of the Interest Act.

The British North America Act of 1867 specifically allocated the subject of interest to the Dominion. Consequently, in the years 1873 to 1886 Parliament passed several acts concerning interest applicable to specific Canadian provinces.

The Interest Act

These various acts, together with certain provisions concerning Prince Edward Island enacted in 1869, were consolidated in the Revised Statutes of 1886 as "An Act Respecting Interest", which permitted any rate agreed upon. Among the sections subsequently added to the Interest Act were the present sections 4 and 5, sometimes identified with the name of Sir Oliver Mowat. It was he who introduced a bill in the Senate in 1897 which, after extensive revision, emerged in this form. Sections 4 and 5 of the Interest Act provide that unless the yearly equivalent is expressly stated, only 5 per cent per annum can be recovered under a contract running for shorter than yearly intervals. There is provision for recovery of any excess interest paid. Sections 12 to 15, which apply to the western provinces and the Territories, came later. There have been no changes in the Interest Act since 1917.

The Money-Lenders Act

This Act, passed in 1906 and said to have been the inspiration for modern unconscionable transactions relief legislation, was a watered-down version of a bill introduced by the late Senator Dandurand in 1899 as "An Act Respecting Usury." Purporting to impose a maximum limit of 12 per cent on all loans of $500 or less, it was ineffective for two reasons: it lacked any definition of "interest", and no one was fixed with responsibility for its administration. The Act remained on the statute books long enough to be included in the Revised Statutes of 1952, but when the Small Loans Act was revised in 1956, the Money-Lenders Act was repealed.

The Small Loans Act

The Small Loans Act, 1939, which is further discussed elsewhere, is the most important piece of legislation affecting consumer credit, and the only act for which responsibility is fixed on a department of the federal government. Six small loans companies and 79 money-lenders were licensed under the act at the close of 1964. The distinction between them is the method of incorporation, i.e. whether by a Special Act of Parliament or otherwise.

The outstanding feature of the Small Loans Act is that it regulates in the area in which it operates, the whole cost of the loan, including any and all other expenses as well as pure interest. The maximum rates, stated in per cent per month, apply to the principal amount of the loan outstanding from time to time, and charges may not be compounded or deducted in advance.

The Act requires a lender to be licensed by the Minister of Finance if he wishes to charge more than 1 per cent per month on a loan with principal amount not exceeding $1,500. The charges permitted on personal loans are fairly high because amounts involved are generally small and loans are for relatively short periods. Expenses connected with providing the loans are not directly related to the size of the loan.

The maximum amount that may be charged by licensed lenders is 2 per cent per month on the first $300, 1 per cent on the next $700 and one-half of 1 per cent on the next $500 up to $1,500. What this means in effective percentage rates is illustrated in Table 3.

TABLE 3

EFFECTIVE MONTHLY AND ANNUAL RATES PERMITTED UNDER THE SMALL LOANS ACT, SELECTED SIZES OF LOANS

Amount of Loan	Percentage Rate
$	Monthly	Annual
300	2.00	24.00
500	1.81	21.72
1,000	1.48	17.76
1,500	1.27	15.24

The Superintendent of Insurance is required to inspect the chief place of business of every licensee at least once a year, and annual financial statements must be submitted in a prescribed form. These are used as the basis of a published report by the Superintendent. The excellent annual reports have been a great help to the Committee in studying the operation of the Act. Originally the prime function of small loans companies and money-lenders was to provide facilities for needy borrowers of small amounts. Although this is still important, these companies have expanded into wider fields. Regulation under the Small Loans Act applies only to loans up to $1,500, but many licensees lend larger sums as well. Some operate also in the unregulated "sales finance" field, which means that they purchase conditional sale agreements. Today licensees under the act have come to be regarded as an integral part of the instalment buying pattern, a form of merchandising which evidently appeals to all income groups.

Early Regulation under Private Acts of Parliament

Much of the small loans business is done by a few companies operating under special acts of the Parliament of Canada, and because the original acts of this type antedate the Small Loans Act—and represent the first attempts at regulating the business—a brief review is necessary.

In the first quarter of this century money-lending was, for all practical purposes, unregulated. Sporadic complaints were voiced about exorbitant charges being exacted in spite of the Interest Act and the Money-Lenders Act. Small loans companies or personal loan companies developed to meet the needs of the ordinary man for relatively small sums of money for shorter periods of time. They are one kind of so-called finance companies, and most of them have the word "Finance" in their names.

The first small loans company, since re-named Household Finance Corporation of Canada, continues to do by far the greatest volume of small loans business. This company was incorporated in 1928 by a Special Act of Parliament which fixed charges for "interest" and "expenses". The actual annual rate was then "about double the apparent rate,"—roughly 14 per cent for a loan of $100 and 16 per cent for $500.

In 1930 the second company of this kind was incorporated—now the Community Finance Corporation—and in 1933 the company known today as Beneficial Finance Co. of Canada completed the group of the big three operating before World War II. Nine other small loans companies have been incorporated since that time, of which three—Canadian Acceptance Company, Laurentide Finance Company and the Brock Acceptance Company—are still in business, making a total of six. The three last named were set up in the post-war years. At the close of 1964 the three original companies held more than half of the balance of small loans in Canada. They have left it to others, generally speaking, to take the leadership in providing large loans and purchasing conditional sales agreements. A few giants also dominate among the licensed money-lenders, with six of the 79 holding 80 per cent of their small loans outstanding at the end of 1964.

Loans Companies Act Amendment

During the early thirties borrowers were finding it difficult to understand the effective rate of interest represented by the complicated scale of charges on loans. In 1934 an amendment to the Loan Companies Act placed an overriding ceiling of 2½ per cent per month on all companies operating under powers granted by the Parliament of Canada. Although this Act is mainly concerned with companies which lend money on the security of real estate, the ceiling affected small loans companies along with others.

Difficulties soon arose over the fact that business of some small loans companies was mainly concentrated in particular provinces. It was argued that when they had to comply with provincial as well as federal regulations it was a problem to compete with companies operating mainly under other rules. We learned that, "The entire situation continued to be unsatisfactory from almost every point of view."

Need Felt for More Effective Control

At a meeting in the Department of Insurance in 1934, representatives of the small loans companies agreed that the practice of deducting charges in advance should be abandoned. Instead, there would be "single monthly percentage applied to the amount of the loan actually made and remaining outstanding from time to time." But this did not solve all the problems, and it finally became clear that effective legislation was needed.

In 1936 Senator Dandurand, his interest in the subject unabated, introduced a bill based on a recommendation of a sub-committee of the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee, providing for a flat monthly rate on outstanding balances. But for various reasons no action was taken on it by the government.

In 1938 the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House of Commons studied the problem for months, with a stated objective of securing "the best procurable rate for the borrower". That Committee came up with a draft bill providing for a flat, all-inclusive monthly rate of 2 per cent on outstanding balances. The bill applied to loans of $500 or less. In spite of opposition by some lenders, the bill, which required the Superintendent of Insurance to inspect licensed companies at least once a year, finally became law. It is known as the Small Loans Act, 1939, and has been in effect since January 1, 1940.

There have been no changes in the Small Loans Act except for amendments in 1956 raising the maximum loans to which it applies from $500 to $1,500, and substituting graded maximum rates for a flat 2 per cent per month.

Federal Legislation Concerning Credit Unions

Although credit unions are regulated by provincial laws, the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance noted that a federal law respecting credit unions was passed in 1953 "in order to remove any doubts about the constitutional position of the provincial centrals by permitting them to register under a federal act, and to establish a national central, The Canadian Co-operative Credit Society Limited". The report goes on to say that, "Membership in this society, which is supervised by the Superintendent of Insurance, is limited to central co-operative associations declared eligible by Parliament and approved by Treasury Board, a maximum of 10 co-operatives other than credit unions and 15 individuals. The society has not been very active: only four provincial centrals have taken out membership and their investment in its shares and deposits has not been large."

Provincial Action

Caisses Populaires—the "People's Banks"

It seems appropriate to begin the discussion of provincial regulation of consumer credit with a brief sketch of the origin of the credit union movement which pioneered the lending of money to people of small means. Indeed, in the early years of the century there was no other source of loans at reasonable rates for the low-income group.

Before the turn of the century, in his work as official stenographer in the House of Commons in Ottawa, Alphonse Desjardins recorded the debates concerning excessive rates of interest then being exacted by money-lenders from his fellow-citizens with low incomes. An insight into this area channelled his broad interest in economic and social problems into serious investigation of the problem of usury, and a search for possible solutions.

It was in the Parliamentary Library that he learned of the development of credit unions in Europe and Asia to deal with the credit needs of working people at a time when credit was generally available only for the needs of the businessman. These "people's banks" as they were called, were savings and loan societies organized co-operatively by working people for investment of their savings and to enable them to borrow money for their real needs at low rates of interest. Mr. Desjardins was instrumental in founding in Levis, Quebec, the first credit union on the North American continent in 1900. The Civil Service Co-operative Credit Society formed in Ottawa in 1908, is the largest co-operative credit society in Canada.

A credit union is more than a financial association; it is an association of individuals, usually with some common bond—industrial, parish, ethnic or community—banded together to help themselves and each other. Credit unions have a democratic and local character which appears to be successful in maintaining the interest of members, by encouraging thrift and by lending money for provident and productive purposes. The idea of sharing in the management of a common venture has wide appeal, and in the credit union one member has only one vote, regardless of the number of shares he holds. The chief source of income of credit unions is the interest on loans made to members. Although credit unions have power to borrow money, and sometimes they do borrow from the banks, they borrow mainly from their own "league central".

An important difference between credit unions and the caisses populaires is that loans of the former are principally for personal purposes, whereas the latter invest heavily in mortgages. Both types of organization are changing. They are moving closing together in that each is expanding into the main business area of the other.

In the thirties a group at St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, Nova Scotia promoted credit unions as part of a program of community economic development, particularly among the miners and fishermen. A similar movement developed in those years in the farming communities of the western provinces.

The first credit union act on this continent was passed, appropriately, in the province which gave birth to the movement. This was the Quebec Cooperative Syndicates Act which became law in 1906, largely through the efforts of Mr. Desjardins. Incidentally, he also aided the passage of the first act of this kind in the United States in 1909 in the State of Massachusetts.

Today there is credit union legislation in all the Canadian provinces, and generally speaking, it is somewhat similar. In all ten provinces the maximum interest that may be charged by a credit union is 1 per cent per month on the unpaid balance of the loan, and this interest covers all charges and penalties. Twenty per cent of net earnings must be set aside for a guarantee fund to take care of bad debts. The balance is distributed to members. The effective charge is usually from 8 to 10 per cent, and most societies charge the same rate on all loans. The caisses in Quebec lend at a somewhat lower rate.

The manager of Canadian operations for the Credit Union National Association, whose membership includes 96 per cent of all credit unions in Canada outside Quebec, informed the Committee that there are now in Canada approximately 4,622 credit unions with more than 3 million members and assets of nearly $2 billion. (Note: Quebec caisses populaires are included although they are not members of the association.)

Under the standard by-laws of Ontario the maximum credit union loan is $3,000 plus member's own money (shares) of $1,000; that is a total of $4,000. Some other possibilities (with first mortgages on real estate) may bring the loan up to $10,000. By-laws of some larger credit unions in Ontario permit mortgage loans up to $30,000. For small loans of under $200 no security is required. The protection is said to be "personal character".

The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance stated that, "Each of the provincial credit union acts provides for a system of inspection and supervision. In all provinces except Prince Edward Island, where the league is formally responsible, and Quebec, where the law is unclear, a government agency is responsible for the supervision of credit unions." In some provinces inspections are regular and thorough; in others they are infrequent.

Credit unions, although they perform for members the same lending function as the commercial money-lenders, have quite a different philosophy and outlook. Unlike the business firms, with their emphasis on the glamorous things that credit will buy, credit unions do what they can to encourage thrift. Their borrowers are also savers. In fact, an official of the Ontario Credit Union League informed us that out of 1,000 members of a credit union, about 600 are savers only. The other 400 borrow as well as save.

Retail Instalment Sales Legislation

Under the common law those engaged in conditional sales were doubly favored: on the one hand "they were able to maintain a proprietary position even though the buyer was in possession of the goods"; on the other hand "they were able to avoid registration requirements of the emerging bills of sale acts as well as the fetters which equity places on a mortgagee seeking to foreclose."[1] Although considerable legislation has been enacted to improve the bargaining position of the buyer, revolutionary changes in methods of retailing have resulted in large-scale selling on time that is subject to no public supervision. The seller alone lays down the rules of the game.

Registration of Conditional Sales

Between 1882 and 1907—before anything similar had been done in England, Australia or most of the United States—"all the provinces and territories adopted some form of legislation requiring registration of the conditional sales agreement or the marking of the goods with the seller's name, and, except in the case of Manitoba, conferring upon the buyer a right to redeem following repossession by the seller."

---

[1] The quotations in this section are from a definitive article, "Retail Instalment Sales Legislation", University of Toronto Law Journal, Vol. XIV, No. 2, 1962, by Professor Jacob S. Ziegel, an expert witness who appeared before us. A good deal of the historical information is based on his research.

These early acts formed the substance of the first Uniform Conditional Sales Act of 1922 which became the revised uniform act of 1947 and then 1955. Legislation of this kind is in force today in most of the provinces.

Farm Implements and Agricultural Machinery Acts

The next important development was special legislation in the prairie provinces (Alberta 1913, Saskatchewan 1915, Manitoba 1919) dealing with sale of farm implements. Although this legislation was designed to meet a special situation, it is important because it contains many features today regarded as essential for safeguarding the interests of consumers in instalment sales. It eliminates oppressive contractual provisions by introducing statutory forms of agreement; it protects the buyer's equity in the goods; and licensing provisions ensure that the statute is observed.

Seizure of Other Goods (Alberta and Saskatchewan)

In 1914 Alberta moved to regulate the extra-judicial seizure of goods, including goods repossessed under a conditional sales agreement. Seizure was to be by a sheriff or one authorized by him, and a judge's order was required for the sale. The provisions were completely revised in 1929. Very important from the buyer's point of view is the power of the court "to suspend any order of sale pending payment of the debt by such instalments or the performance of such other conditions as the court may determine."

Under this legislation a seller must notify the buyer beforehand of an intended sale. If the buyer informs the sheriff in writing that the value of the goods exceeds the amount of the seller's claim, they may not be sold without the sheriff's consent. Finally, after the sale, the seller must file with the sheriff a statutory declaration of particulars, and pay over any surplus. A 1942 amendment requires the seller to elect between suing for the balance of the purchase price and repossessing.

Saskatchewan moved in 1933 to strengthen the buyer's position. This was in response to a recommendation by a Select Committee of the Saskatchewan Legislature in 1932. Moreover, in 1939 and 1940 amendments were introduced concerning implied warranties and conditions and "empowering the court, on the buyer's application, to stay any intended repossession by the seller, on specified items... mainly those which a farmer would regard as indispensable for his operations."

In both Alberta and Saskatchewan the hurdles for the seller have been challenged as infringing on federal jurisdiction over banking and bills of exchange, but without success.

More Direct Control of Finance Companies and Retailers (Nova Scotia)

In 1938 Nova Scotia introduced a licensing statute, The Instalment Payment Contracts Act. It is not a strong statute, and we learned that "no licenses have been refused, cancelled or suspended since 1950." (The Saskatchewan Companies Inspection and Licensing Act, 1937, also provides for licensing of sales finance companies, but the primary concern there appears to be with their solvency.)

Consumer Credit Controls

(Federal Government, Quebec and New Brunswick)

Consumer credit controls were set up for the first time by the Canadian Government under the War Measures Act. During World War II the Wartime Prices and Trade Board was given jurisdiction over consumer credit and instalment buying. A minimum cash payment (about one-third) was fixed, as well as a maximum period for repayment (6 to 15 months depending on the type of article to be financed). Other policies worked with these controls to cause virtual disappearance of the passenger car for civilian use. The regulations were eased in 1946, revoked in 1947.

The second experience with Canada-wide controls came in 1950-52 under the Consumer Credit (Temporary Provisions) Act. There was concern then about inflation due to the Korean war. In 1951 the minimum down-payment on cars was 50 per cent, and maximum repayment period 12 months. During that year consumer credit actually declined. Since May, 1952 there has been no direct control of consumer credit throughout Canada.

In 1956 the Government was again seriously disturbed about inflation. At that time officials of the Bank of Canada met with representatives of instalment finance companies to try to get agreement on voluntary control of consumer credit, but the companies were not persuaded.

It should be mentioned here that in 1947, the year that the wartime regulations were abandoned, Quebec passed the Instalment Sales Act, apparently intended to continue control of instalment sales in the interests of consumers of modest means, a move that was said to have the full support of the Quebec business community. Generally speaking, the Act applies only to retail sales up to $800; a wide range of goods, including motor cars, is excluded. But within these limits, the legislation is more comprehensive than that of either Saskatchewan or Alberta.

The Quebec legislation fixes a minimum down-payment of 15 per cent and a sliding scale of maximum maturity periods. Payments must be of equal amounts with the exception of a smaller one at the end, and the buyer has the right of prepayment. The maximum finance charge is three-quarters of 1 per cent per month. There is provision for compulsory disclosure of the regular cash price, the time price, the down payment, and the instalments. A statutory form of written contract is laid down.

New Brunswick followed the Quebec precedent in 1949. The New Brunswick Act also called for a 15 per cent down-payment and the maximum maturity period was 24 months. Motor cars were not excluded. These restrictions were difficult to administer, and in 1959 the Act was repealed.

Disclosure

In 1954 Alberta passed the Credit and Loan Agreements Act with disclosure provisions similar to those already described in the Quebec Instalment Sales Act of 1947. The Alberta Act allows for disclosure of either a rate per cent per annum or the cost in dollars. A bill introduced in Manitoba in 1962 requiring statement of finance charges on time sales in simple annual interest rates never became law, and it was amended to substitute disclosure in dollars. A Nova Scotia Act which grew out of recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Cost of Borrowing Money, the Cost of Credit and Related Matters, requires disclosure of finance charges as simple annual interest rates. It became effective early in 1967. Last year the government of Ontario introduced a Consumers Act which among other provisions includes a disclosure requirement both as to amount and interest. Furthermore, the government indicated that credit grantors would be given a year in which to prepare for the inevitable.

Since 1960 a stream-lined disclosure bill which would require every finance charge to be stated in terms of effective rate of interest on the unpaid balance of the cash price, has been repeatedly introduced in the Senate. Debates on the bill have attracted wide attention and growing support, and they have helped to create the current public demand for more protection. The principle has been embodied in several bills introduced in the House of Commons in recent years.

Official recognition of current thinking was indicated in a statement issued after a federal-provincial conference on consumer credit held in Ottawa in December 1966. The meeting felt that "it is both desirable and feasible to extend interest rate disclosure on a uniform basis to personal instalment loan transactions throughout Canada affecting banks, retailers and sales-finance companies and others." The Minister of Finance noted that an amendment to the Bank Act requiring disclosure of bank interest rates would be introduced early in 1967. This assurance from Ottawa along with interest-rate disclosure legislation in varying stages in four provinces, and the other six provinces generally interested in following suit, means that the outlook for Canadians in need of a loan being able to shop for the best credit buy has never been brighter.

V REPRESENTATIONS AND BRIEFS

Carefully prepared briefs, further illuminated by able spokesmen, were a great help to the Committee in studying this complicated and many-faceted subject. Those in the business of lending money as well as retail merchants who sell consumer goods on credit, were represented by their respective associations. All these delegations included key men responsible for administration in some area of consumer credit. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce put before us views which the Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies said accurately reflect the position of Canadian business on this subject. Several other briefs, including one from the Retail Merchants Association of Canada, quoted with approval representations of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

A number of delegations spoke for the interests of all, or segments of, the borrowing public: the Consumers' Association of Canada for consumers as a group; the Confederation of National Trade Unions mainly for the working man; the Canadian Federation of Agriculture particularly for the farmer as consumer; the Family Bureau of Winnipeg with special emphasis on problems of low-income families.

Delegations from the credit union movement dealt with the needs of the small borrower, the solution of whose problems they pioneered around the turn of the century. They also enlightened us about their efforts to educate the public ("basically advertising") and their program of "family financial counselling..."

Then we heard from experts who are involved neither as lenders nor borrowers, but whose special knowledge was acquired either in an academic or an administrative role, or both. Submissions of those who appeared purely in their professional or technical capacity are summarized below. Experts who represented government agencies made equally valuable contributions which are reflected throughout the report and acknowledged in the foreword.

Business

The Executive Council of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, spokesman for 850 Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce throughout Canada, 2,700 corporation members and 25 association members, set out the over-all point of view of business. The focus of the Chamber's brief was on purchase credit rather than loan credit, and two members of their delegation also appeared before us when we heard representations from organizations which spoke more particularly for businesses engaged in large-scale retail operations, and finance companies which buy conditional sales agreements.

It was pointed out that of the total consumer credit outstanding at the close of 1963, roughly 60 per cent was in loan credit, chiefly held by chartered banks, loan companies and credit unions. Excluding the $54 million owing to oil companies through the use of credit cards, the remaining 38 per cent—more than $2 billion—was "purchase credit", i.e. credit created by way of sales by retail merchants. Nearly half of this purchase credit was assigned by the retailer to sales finance companies.

We were told that purchase credit would be "most directly affected by any legislation calling for interest rate form of disclosure," and the position was taken that "since the cost of credit is effectively the difference between the cash sale price and the time sale price it may be contended that it is unreasonable to ask that this mark-up be expressed in terms of an annual rate per year." The Chamber would rely on competition, which they say keeps cash prices in line, to do the same for the price of credit.

It is argued that "conversion of credit charges to interest per annum and the stating of same in a contract at the time of sale (1) is not practical in the case of all credit transactions; (2) that such legislation would seriously affect sales; (3) that the results would involve increased costs; (4) that such practice would tend to obscure rather than clarify credit costs and (5) that the requirement would impose a problem on all retailers but would particularly work a hardship on small merchants." The Chamber therefore supports disclosure of the dollar amount of finance charges, which they say the purchaser can readily compare with the cash price of goods or services so as to determine what he is paying for credit.

Money-Lenders

The two important associations of money-lenders whose strong delegations appeared before us represent, in the main, different segments of the business.

The Canadian Consumer Loan Association formed in 1944, speaks for 54 companies, all licensed under the Small Loans Act. At the end of 1964 they carried 95 per cent of the outstanding balances of loans regulated under the Act. An important feature that distinguishes members of this group from those making up the Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies is that regulated loans—the major part of their business—are made directly by lender to borrower with no dealer intermediary. We were informed that like the credit unions, and unlike the banks, they lend mainly to lower income people, those who seldom have readily marketable assets which can be pledged as security. The small loans companies find it necessary to carry out a good deal of investigation before making loans. For this purpose they operate Lenders' Exchanges. Unlike the loans made by sales finance companies, which are generally for goods or services acquired now for future use, a high proportion of loans made by licensees under the Small Loans Act go into consolidation of debts or refinancing.

Small loans companies also transact business beyond that regulated under the Small Loans Act. Although they agree that regulation of small loans is in the public interest, they are opposed to the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance and others that the scope of that act be extended to cover loans up to $5,000. The argument is that those borrowing above the present ceiling of $1,500 are, in the main, people with higher incomes, to whom a choice of several kinds of credit, some at much lower rates, is now open.

The Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies, set up in 1957, represents 48 companies whose "primary function is to provide wholesale and retail financing for a wide range of durable consumer and business goods." These companies, generally known as acceptance companies, are not parties to the original transaction of a retail sale, but many of the basic terms of the contract are determined by the sales finance company. Their interest in maintenance of a high level of sales is obvious, and in certain respects it is identical with that of the retail dealer. More than 90 per cent of all new cars sold to dealers in Canada are financed by these companies, and this represents a very large part of their business. Other important segments are appliances, furniture and other major durables. In 1964 finance companies accounted for approximately 70 per cent of sales finance credit to consumers, and 90 per cent of instalment credit to business. Together, they held about one-sixth of the total consumer credit outstanding at the end of 1964.

The finance companies expressed the view that "the single most important public policy issue surrounding the field of consumer credit is the manner in which the finance charge is disclosed to the consumer." They maintain that the present method of expressing the cost in dollars and cents is "the most meaningful disclosure of finance charges, from the consumer's standpoint." Armed with this information, they say, the consumer can make "an intelligent and reasonable choice, not only between a purchase on a cash or credit basis, but also among the various competing sources of credit which are available to him." They firmly oppose the idea of requiring disclosure of an annual interest rate or charge for credit. It is argued that to focus attention on the interest rate "may confuse the consumer and provide opportunities for exploitation by some unscrupulous retailers." The finance companies take the stand that, "Legislation enforcing interest rate disclosure would be a disservice to the Canadian consumer."

Their answer to those who believe that use of consumer credit may be excessive, is education in the proper use of credit. This they consider to be one of their own important functions, a function which they are trying to fulfil by co-operation with "high schools, universities, newspapers, radio, television and Better Business Bureaus throughout the country."

Retail Dealers

Like the associations representing the money-lending business, each of the two organizations of retailers is made up of members with more or less a community of special interests. Consequently, their points of view do not always coincide. Nevertheless, they have a common interest—shared, as mentioned above, with the finance companies—in maintaining the high and increasing volume of retail sales, a growing proportion of which are credit sales. Both associations of retailers affirm that they believe in full disclosure to the consumer of what they consider to be the information best suited to enable him to make his own choice of credit purchase.

The Retail Merchants Association is more than 60 years old. It was founded in 1896 and incorporated by Special Act of Parliament in 1910. It has some 20,000 paid-up members, including operators of small, medium and large retail establishments, but small businesses predominate. The Association is organized from the municipal level through provincial associations in all provinces but Newfoundland. It considers itself "official spokesman for independent retailing in this country", and in spite of the trend towards large-scale store operations, they say there is a growing demand for highly specialized shops with considerable service. Independent stores still dominate in number of establishments and they account for approximately 70 per cent of the total volume of retail trade.

The Retail Council of Canada, formed in June 1963, speaks for the main big department stores and retail stores which account for some 30 per cent of the retail store trade.

The Retail Merchants Association takes the position that "full disclosure of the cost of credit should be made to each purchaser at the time the sale is consummated and the credit contract is signed." It should be "meaningful to the consumer and manageable to the retailer." They oppose "any regulation which would require 'disclosure' in the form of an effective rate of simple interest." They believe this would be "impractical, if not impossible" in their business. The Retail Merchants Association submits that a regulation of this kind "would serve only as an impediment to the ease with which consumer credit is presently granted." Their conclusion is that declaration of an effective rate of simple interest "may have consequences which would impede the economy of Canada." Instead, they advocate disclosure in dollars and cents, arguing that "the declaration of simple interest in a retail credit transaction might well be an open invitation to the minority to engage in unscrupulous practices and to exercise deception on the consumer by various forms of manipulation and misrepresentation."

Perhaps the main area of disagreement in policy between the Retail Merchants Association and the Retail Council of Canada concerns the question whether or not, if regulations do require disclosure of annual interest rates, special exemptions should be allowed for revolving or cyclical accounts. These accounts are used to a limited extent by the smaller merchants, but they are an important and a growing part of the business of big department stores. In this type of account the cost of the credit is generally not made known to the purchaser until some time after the purchase is made.

The stand taken by the Retail Merchants Association is that to give special privileges to this type of account while requiring declaration of the effective rate of simple interest on other credit accounts would discriminate against small retailers. They argue that the same regulations should apply to all. "The independent retailer", they say, "is not in a position to dictate to his customers that all forms of credit will be in the shape of revolving or cyclical accounts."

The Retail Council of Canada admits that, "One of the most important circumstances affecting a contract for the loan of money or the financing of a purchase is the charge being made for the money lent." But they do not believe "that any accurate conversion of a money charge to a simple annual interest rate can be made in respect of the type of credit accounts which comprise the major part of the credit granted by our members." These are the cyclical or revolving accounts which are so hard to understand, and about which we heard so much.

Consumers

The Consumers' Association of Canada views consumer credit as a service with a price that can and should be shopped for carefully. They take the position that "in our competitive system free choice must go hand in hand with knowledge." To make free choice possible, they rely on truthful disclosure by the lender and education of the borrower. If the consumer knows the cost of borrowing, both in money and in terms of simple annual interest, they believe he will be able to make intelligent use of credit. They therefore want "legislation making full disclosure of financial charges expressed in terms of simple annual interest obligatory on all credit contracts..." They would have "the Government of Canada control the manner of calculations and degree of accuracy in computing the financial charges and calculating the cost in terms of simple annual interest."

Further, the Consumers' Association of Canada "request the Federal and Provincial Governments to enact legislation making provision for a 'cooling-off' period of three days" in the case of door-to-door sales. As to revolving credit, they commend the system used by The T. Eaton Co. in Montreal where, "There is a service charge of 1½ per cent per month calculated on the previous month's balance."

The Association supports the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that power to regulate loans under the Small Loans Act be extended to cover loans up to $5,000.

The Confederation of National Trade Unions with a combined membership of all affiliates numbering some 150,000 at the beginning of 1965, spoke from the experience of its members. They stated their conviction that "...credit buying is a social evil." They say it "creates the illusion that the majority can readily obtain goods they cannot acquire otherwise under the present economic system." The low salaries of many make this unrealistic; the high cost of interest further erodes their already precarious standard of living.

So convinced is the union of the need to protect families with low incomes, that their inclination would be to recommend abolition of the consumer credit system altogether. However, before suggesting such a radical step they say a good deal might be done to eliminate abuses and give the consumer more protection.

It is pointed out that, "Finance companies borrow at a low rate of interest and lend this same money at exorbitant rates." Misleading advertising and unnecessarily obscure contracts make it difficult for the borrower to find out what obligation he is assuming. It is argued that merchants and finance companies, interested in "profits beyond the sale profit" co-operate to bring this about. The high cost of "the multiplication of middlemen and agencies" is paid indirectly by the consumer.

The union has taken practical steps to educate its own members, and has offered the same help to the general population. Many working people have taken advantage of this. The union has organized a "family budget service" to protect the workers' limited purchasing power by (1) making clear to him the cost of credit, and (2) bringing about a better way of administering the family budget.

They feel that to make their work more effective, what is needed is better protection from the law. They say that the power over consumer credit is now in the hands of the financiers; that it should be reorganized in the interests of preserving the purchasing power and standard of living of consumers, and in the interests of the economy.

The Confederation of National Trade Unions agrees with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that the scope of the Small Loans Act should be extended to cover loans up to $5,000. They would fix a maximum legal interest rate of 9 per cent.

Specifically, the Confederation of National Trade Unions recommends:

1. That "the vendor be obliged to clearly indicate in a sales contract":
   (1) the cost of the product,
   (2) the difference between the cash price and the price on the instalment plan,
   (3) the rate and the cost of interest.

2. That legislators should declare illegal a provision commonly used in contracts for the sale of cars which has been declared by the courts to be "unfair and abusive" although it is "neither illegal nor contrary to public order." They say that, "Since the debtor remains liable for the final balance even after repossession and repair costs of the car, the charge is often greater than the value of the vehicle. In default of payment, the debtor remains liable for the repairs to be made by the garage, the balance of his account and the contract of the second purchaser." If provisions of this kind were outlawed, car dealers would be obliged to check more carefully the ability of the purchaser to repay the obligations he assumes.

The principal recommendations of the Confederation of National Trade Unions are summarized in their own words as follows:

"1. The appointment of a commission to investigate interest rates, particularly with regard to the influence of such rates with respect to the purchasing power and living standards of the consumers.

2. That, in the interim, the rate of interest be set at a maximum of 9 per cent per annum, on a decreasing basis.

3. That adequate measures be provided to enforce the revelation of interest rates, real cost and administrative costs of loans and credit purchases."

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, "a national general farm organization widely representative of farm people" supports the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance as to the need to continue effective control through the Small Loans Act on interest charged by loan companies. They agree that regulation of interest rates should be extended at least to loans up to $5,000. The Federation questions the direction of policy which would move "away from controls, limitations and guarantees on interest rates."

They are not convinced of the need to raise the ½ per cent provision, since they say the interest rate actually works out as somewhere between 12 and 24 per cent per annum. They note that the three considerations in money lending are:

1. the cost of the money to the loan company,
2. the cost of administration, and
3. the cost of losses for bad debts and collection from poor payers.

On loans over $2,000, they believe 12 per cent per annum "is more than should be charged." If a company is lending to high-risk borrowers who raise the costs to unreasonable levels, perhaps these people should be refused loans.

The Federation "recognizes that buying on credit has become a well established practice in the Canadian economy, and that there are legitimate interest charges and other costs associated with providing the financing of purchases on credit." Nevertheless, "it thinks consumers have a right to know in advance...the real level of finance charges involved, expressed in both dollar amounts and simple annual interest rates", and "that consumers are also entitled to reasonable protection from excessive charges and exploitation at the hands of those providing credit services." They add that "without adequate finance charges disclosure legislation, consumers generally are unable to protect their own interests."

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture calls on the Government:

1. "to pass finance charges disclosure legislation" applicable to "farm machinery and supply credit transactions with farmers as well as to consumer credit as more narrowly defined."

2. "to limit interest rates charged by finance companies to reasonable levels."

Specific suggestions are made for implementation of the legislation:

1. The responsibility should be given to "an appropriate department of government."

2. The administration would issue "an official standard form for finance disclosure purposes" designed to elicit clear and simple information. The form "would be required to be used and attached as one of the documents in every transaction involving consumer credit."

3. The administration would issue interest rate and finance charge books to save finance companies, retail stores and dealers from the need to make complex calculations.

4. The Act should contain a provision that "the price of the article must be that at which cash transactions are normally carried out."

The brief presented on behalf of the Family Bureau of Greater Winnipeg, a social agency financed by the Community Chest, provided us with an insight into the serious human consequences that can result from over-extension of credit. At the same time as they express concern about "consumer credit and debt collection", they recognize the important part that consumer credit plays in the economy. The brief points out that the federal government, "in the public interest" controls currency, and to some extent banking. Consumer credit has developed into "a third purchasing system" which requires government attention.

Although the agency welcomes provincial legislation to provide relief from unconscionable transactions, they emphasize that what is needed is protection "at the time transactions are being made." Families are sometimes forced to skimp on necessities of life to meet payments on agreements which would never have been made had they been understood.

But dealings that cause difficulties to pile up are not always unethical. Social agencies are concerned about credit issued in situations "where the ability to pay does not exist." They "sharply question" the assumption that in order to protect his own interests the creditor can be relied on to exercise the necessary caution. The creditor is not necessarily the chief loser when payments fall behind. Concern is needed for the debtor, for his family, and for the community at large. The tensions built up in harassed individuals and families "frequently contribute to family breakdown, mental illness, crime, and economic dependency."

Illustrations were provided of how situations arise for which there is no foreseeable solution even though lenders act "according to routine business practices, and the borrowers, without dishonest intent although without realistic thinking..." The submission is that, "The widespread existence of situations like these demonstrates that our present system of relying solely on the caution of the creditor does not provide adequate control."

The Family Bureau of Greater Winnipeg urges that legislation along the lines of the Orderly Payment of Debts Act (which was so helpful to low-income families in Manitoba until 1961 when it was declared to be bankruptcy legislation and therefore outside provincial jurisdiction) be enacted by amendment to the federal Bankruptcy Act. (See discussion of recent amendments, p. 2838). The agency would also like to see provincial legislation to exempt from garnishment or seizure "basic necessities" related to size of family; also "protections to the purchaser's equity on repossession of goods." Following is a summary of specific recommendations made.

1. That the total interest and other charges be stated as a simple annual percentage in both loans and conditional sales contracts.

They would amend the Interest Act "to include in the definition 'interest' all the costs of the loan on lien notes, conditional sale contracts and chattel mortgages"; bring conditional sales and lien notes within the Small Loans Act which, in its definition of "loan" includes all the costs of the loan.

2. That a waiting period be established in respect of conditional sale contracts and lien notes. This would be a three to five-day cooling-off period.

3. That there be protection from excessive charges on small loans, including conditional sale contracts.

The Family Bureau of Greater Winnipeg supports the Consumers' Association of Canada in recommending that the Small Loans Act should apply to loans up to $5,000. They would add "conditional sale contracts, lien notes and chattel mortgages."

4. That a minimum down-payment be required in all conditional sale or lien notes.

5. That steps be taken to investigate the practice of selling conditional sale contracts or lien notes in bulk to collection agencies and finance companies, with a view to establishing some controls in this area of business practice.

It is suggested that the assignee of a lien note or conditional sale contract should take it "subject to the equities between the original purchaser and vendor."

6. That the Parliament of Canada should take immediate steps to amend the Federal Bankruptcy Act to provide enabling legislation under which a scheme of orderly payment of debts could be established by the provinces. (See p. 2838.)

Credit Unions

The Ontario Credit Union League Ltd., incorporated under provincial charter in 1942, made its submission "both on its own behalf and on behalf of the 1,425 credit unions in Ontario", members of the League. The League in turn is a member of the Credit Union National Association which also appeared before us.

The Committee was told that it is the practice of credit unions to make full disclosure to members of the cost of their loans, both in dollars and percentage-wise, and we were given a simple formula for doing this. The belief was expressed that "... similar disclosure of dollar cost and percentage charge can be made by other lenders", and it was strongly recommended that all consumer credit lenders should be required to state in all contracts and all advertising and publicity:

1. the full dollar cost of credit (including all charges);
2. the percentage rate of all charges expressed in a uniform way.

The League endorses the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that regulation of small loans be extended to amounts up to $5,000, with the present 2 per cent per month maximum applying on the first $300, and 1 per cent per month maximum on all higher amounts.

The brief of the Credit Union National Association points out that the reason why it is necessary to disclose to the borrower "the total cost of the loan expressed both in dollars and cents and in terms of per centum per annum" are:

1. so the borrower will fully understand the obligation he is undertaking; and
2. so that he will be able to compare the cost of the loan with any other loan he might be able to secure.

Approval is expressed of provincial legislation such as the Ontario Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act, but it is emphasized that "there is also a desperate need for disclosure legislation to prevent the innocent or the ignorant user of credit from signing such a contract in the first place."

Specific recommendations are these:

"(a) that extenders of every kind of credit be required to disclose in writing to prospective borrowers both the total cost in dollars of the credit to be extended and the rate in terms of simple annual interest;

(b) that all advertising by credit extenders give full details of the total costs in dollars and in terms of per centum per annum;

(c) that victims of unconscionable transactions be granted redress by the courts, and those who have exacted the unjust terms be penalized under the law."

They also advocate continuing education of the consumer in the better handling of his finances.

La Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, in addition to describing the origin of their movement, which is discussed elsewhere, provide examples of the way in which they clearly set out payment conditions of loans, leaving the borrower in no doubt about the interest rate per annum, and illustrating how the rate is calculated on the gradually decreasing debt. For instance, the total interest paid on a loan of $100 for one year at 6 per cent, repaid over 12 months at the rate of $8.34 a month, is $3.30. (The part of the payment going to interest gradually drops from 50 cents the first month to 5 cents for the final month.)

The Committee was informed that the difference between the annual interest rate on mortgages and the charge made for personal loans is about 1 per cent. The equivalent of this 1 per cent reduction for mortgage loans is also given for personal loans "secured by shares, savings, or readily negotiable bonds."

La Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins urges the need for legislation:

"(a) to determine a reasonable limit to the cost of consumer credit and to eliminate usury;

(b) to oblige creditors and merchants to reveal the real cost of credit in terms of simple annual interest rate expressed in percentage form, so that the consumers may compare the costs of loans and credit terms offered and know the obligation they undertake;

(c) to force creditors and retailers to tell the truth as to the rate of charges when they advertise;

(d) to foresee the cancellation of those contracts which are not complying with this legislation;

(e) to oblige the lenders of money who presently come under the jurisdiction of the Small Loans Act to report to the Federal Superintendent of the Assurances on all their loans not exceeding five thousand dollars ($5,000);

(f) to oblige consumer goods retailers to demand from the consumer a money down payment equal to 20 per cent of the regular price of the merchandise offered, at the time of purchase, and to prevent them from charging interests and other finance costs exceeding 1 per cent per month or 12 per cent per year, and to establish interests and other financial charges on the unpaid balance of credit according to the simple annual interest method."

The Experts

In addition to the many experts who represented particular institutions or were part of delegations speaking for various groups, independent experts gave us the benefit of their technical knowledge, gained in the academic and practical worlds. Mr. Douglas D. Irwin, C.A., Financial Consultant to the Ontario Select Committee on Consumer Credit, and Dr. Jacob S. Ziegel, Professor of Law at the University of Saskatchewan and author of authoritative publications on consumer credit, prepared written submissions which are summarized below.

Mr. Irwin emphasized that pure interest rarely exists, but nevertheless the term is in common use. He suggested that the term "interest" might be avoided and discussion could be simply in terms of "the cost of money". However, a committee member expressed apprehension that to do this could further confuse the constitutional issue.

A summary of Mr. Irwin's expert opinion follows:

"1. It is mathematically possible to determine a rate % on all loan situations by use of:

—actuarial methods

—arithmetic methods

2. Practically, it would be an intolerable administrative burden to use the above methods from first principles to determine rates on individual contracts, but rates may be readily determined for an individual contract by development of tables of universal application to all contracts of a specific lending classification (with the exception of cycle credit accounts which are subject to special circumstances).

3. Disclosure requirements should be of universal application and the basic methods of calculating rates should be determined for each classification of loan contract.

4. Use of tables would not appear to add a significant administrative burden insofar as tables are presently used, extensively, to determine finance charges.

However, practical considerations suggest that the tables should permit a measure of tolerance when applied to a particular contract. A degree of accuracy of one-eighth of 1% has been suggested but this could be further refined.

5. A common language of expression and common criteria of measurement could be sought so that rates would be comparable. Pursuant thereto it would appear necessary that all elements of the cost of borrowing in all contracts must be included in the calculations.

In the case of blended payment contracts all payments should be nearly equal (say within a variation of 10% from the average).

6. Cycle credit accounts may have to be considered separately. If the buyer (borrower) retains the initiative the lender may have to be permitted some tolerance in regard to disclosure of the effective rate applicable from day to day. Compliance with rate disclosure might be confined to declaration and imposition of a monthly and/or annual rate % on the current balance or average balance.

7. Disclosure of rate % may be in addition to, not in substitution for, disclosure in dollars thereby providing for common language and measurement without disturbing possible borrower preferences."

Dr. Ziegel's brief contributed a good deal of the historical and background information used and acknowledged elsewhere in this report.

He points out that two American economists, Nugent and Henderson, predicted more than 30 years ago that, "As in the small loans field, society will probably begin by restricting the use of certain credit instruments and end by finding complete supervision necessary." A survey of the situation today "shows that their prophecy was substantially correct, not only for the United States, but also for other countries." Generally speaking, the initial concern is to protect the buyer's or hirer's equity. Then comes prohibition or regulation of unfair contractual clauses, especially those relating to warranties and conditions. "In the third—generally post-war—stage there is a belated realization of the importance of regulating the financial terms of the agreement. Hence disclosure requirements and hence the limitation of finance charges of various kinds and the statutory regulation of the buyer's right to rebate in case of prepayment."

Dr. Ziegel says "the social importance of some form of regulation can hardly be denied." And he concludes with this statement:

> "In the twentieth century, the century of the common man, the common man, paradoxically, has been at a disadvantage because of the powerful forces arraigned against him in the market place and his own excusable ignorance of legal and economic facts...."

In a supplementary brief dealing with the constitutional aspects of consumer credit regulation Dr. Ziegel listed sections of the British North America Act which in his opinion confer specific powers to legislate concerning consumer credit. They are:

Federal government: Section 91,

(15) Banks and banking
(18) Bills of exchange and promissory notes
(19) Interest
(21) Bankruptcy and insolvency
(27) Criminal law

Provincial governments: Section 92,

(13) Property and civil rights

91 (15) He considers that this section would cover "all aspects of consumer loans made by the chartered banks." He would have the position of the banks clarified, permitting them to charge more than 6 per cent, but requiring that actual, all-inclusive charges be stated in one rate. He would lay down regulations concerning advertising, and proclaim the right of the consumer to prepay a loan and save on interest payments, something that the banks now permit as a courtesy.

91 (18) He would make it impossible to deprive a consumer who is being sued on a note, of the right to raise defences which could be raised against the original seller. The businessman already has this kind of protection.

91 (19) He supports the principle of a disclosure law "which would require the finance charge component in every consumer credit transaction to be stated both in terms of dollars and cents and in terms of a percentage rate on the declining balance of the principal." He adds his support to the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that the limit of the Small Loans Act be raised from $1,500 to $5,000, and that the rate structure be reviewed. He would extend the Act to cover "all other consumer credit transactions involving a sum not exceeding $5,000."

The supplementary brief discusses the need to clarify the extent of the federal government's power to legislate concerning interest and matters incidental thereto, but be that as it may, Dr. Ziegel points out that "if the federal government has no power to regulate finance charges under this head, then the provincial governments do have it."

91 (21) "Provincial legislation frequently authorizes a county or district court judge to order the payment of a judgment debt by instalments." However, it has been held that legislation to permit consolidation of debts is beyond provincial jurisdiction. It rests with the federal government, because it deals with bankruptcy and insolvency, a subject within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government. Dr. Ziegel urges the federal government to exercise this power so that consumers who over-extend their financial resources can make plans "to rehabilitate themselves expeditiously and with minimum expense." (See p. 2838).

91 (27) Under the wide powers of the federal government to legislate concerning the criminal law Dr. Ziegel suggests that,

(a) certain types of undesirable activities which do not fall under other headings of section 91 could be prohibited (e.g. prohibition of "cut-off" clauses and wage agreements).

(b) criminal law power could be an alternative for legislation that may fall under one of the other headings in section 91, e.g.

1. Prohibition of usurious finance charges in instalment sales and service agreements, and
2. Disclosure law.

But whether or not this use of the criminal law powers would stand up in the courts he felt remained to be seen. Dr. Ziegel summarized his views as follows:

"1. There appears to be little doubt that, by virtue of its powers over banks and banking, the federal government has plenary powers to regulate all aspects of consumer credit loans extended by the chartered banks.

2. It seems equally clear that the federal government has the constitutional power—if not indeed the exclusive power—to curb abuses connected with the taking and negotiation of promissory notes. It is submitted that it also has a concurrent power to prohibit the insertion of 'cut-off' clauses in consumer credit agreements.

3. It is submitted that the Barfried case [discussed at length in the proceedings] does not impugn the validity of the federal Small Loans Act and future legislation of a similar character, and that a disclosure law would fall within the 'interest' power of the federal government, at any rate where that law is restricted to the disclosure of the cost of loans.

4. Whether the federal Interest power also extends to the regulation and disclosure of finance charges in instalment sales is a moot point, in view of the 'time-price' doctrine. The prohibition of usurious finance charges could, however, probably be justified under the criminal law power, though the justification of a disclosure law under this head would present substantial difficulties.

5. Finally, there is little doubt that the federal government has jurisdiction under its bankruptcy and insolvency powers to adopt legislation to provide relief for consumers who are overburdened with debts."

Mr. Dan McCormack is included with the independent experts because of his experience of more than two decades as sales manager for one of the largest independent sales finance companies in Canada. No longer in that business, he has, in his own words, "no axe to grind", but his intimate knowledge of "captive sales agencies and captive sales financing"—an area hardly touched on by others—was most helpful to the Committee.

Mr. McCormack did not prepare a formal brief. He made his presentation in person and submitted to extensive questioning. His evidence dealt mainly with "denial of economic freedom to dealers" because of manufacturers dictating to them the "choice" of finance companies. However, he did admit to counsel for the Committee that dealers, in turn, whether independent or captive, sometimes exert pressure on customers to direct their "choice" of financing.

VI COMMITTEE'S FINDINGS

Recent Trends

In order to place in perspective changes that have occurred in recent years in the whole consumer credit picture, we have compared the figures provided by the Bank of Canada for the years 1953 and 1963. In that ten-year period, as Table 4 shows, all segments of the consumer credit business have expanded but the rate of growth has varied widely. The most striking change is due to the entry of the chartered banks into the small loans business on a large scale. Now the banks have displaced the retail dealers as the largest segment. Both instalment finance companies and life insurance companies are relatively less active in consumer lending than they were a decade ago, and the reasons for that are discussed elsewhere. Growth of consumer loan companies has been phenomenal. Credit unions and caisses populaires have practically doubled their share of the credit business, but they continue to represent a relatively small segment of the whole (12 per cent).

TABLE 4

Change in Composition of Consumer Credit Outstanding at Year End, 1953 and 1963

Credit Grantors	1953		1963		10-Year Increase
	Millions of $	% Distribution	Millions of $	% Distribution	Millions of $	% Increase
Retail dealers	624	31.5	1,141	21.6	517	82.9
Instalment finance companies	516	26.0	873	16.5	357	69.2
Chartered banks	308	15.6	1,432	27.1	1,124	364.9
Life insurance companies	225	11.4	385	7.3	160	71.1
Consumer loan companies	176	8.9	808	15.3	632	359.1
Credit unions and caisses populaires	129	6.5	640	12.1	511	396.1
Quebec savings banks	3	0.2	14	0.3	11	366.6
All credit grantors	1,981	100.1	5,293	100.2	3,312	167.2

Source: Bank of Canada brief, proceedings, p. 112.

The fall of the retail dealers from first place occurred in spite of tremendous growth in department store credit sales. What has happened is that the weight of the retail credit business has shifted. At the same time as many retailers have been feeling the competition from other forms of credit, the big department stores, by moving into a system of accounting which is not readily adaptable to smaller firms, have been increasing their share of the credit business within the retailers' segment. (See Table 5.)

TABLE 5

CHANGE IN COMPOSITION OF CREDIT ON RETAIL SALES OUTSTANDING AT YEAR END, 1953 AND 1963

Credit Grantors	1953		1963		10-Year Increase
	Millions of $	% Distribution	Millions of $	% Distribution	Millions of $	% Increase
Department stores	167	14.6	456	22.6	289	173.1
Charge account credit (including oil company credit cards)	274	24.0	413	20.5	139	50.7
Instalment credit	183	16.1	272	13.5	89	48.6
At retail level	624	54.7	1,141	56.6	517	82.9
Instalment finance companies	516	45.3	873	43.3	357	69.2
All retail credit grantors	1,140	100.0	2,014	99.9	874	76.7

SOURCE: Bank of Canada brief, proceedings, p. 112.

This has no doubt been an important factor in the overall increase in their sales. Comparative data for department stores and for the other retail group in which credit granting is most common—the furniture, and appliance and radio dealers—are shown in Table 6.

TABLE 6

RETAIL SALES OF DEPARTMENT STORES AND OF FURNITURE, AND APPLIANCE AND RADIO DEALERS, CANADA, 1954 AND 1963

	1954	1963	9-Year Increase
	Millions of $	Millions of $	Millions of $	%
Department Stores	1,062	1,649	587	55.3
Furniture, and Appliance and Radio Dealers	486	581	95	19.5

SOURCE: Supplementary brief, Retail Council of Canada, proceedings, pp. 706–7.

Next to the chartered banks, the greatest absolute increase in the 10 years ending with 1963, in consumer credit outstanding, is represented by the consumer loan companies. Although these companies continue to deal mainly in cash loans, it has been suggested that they are gradually moving into the purchase credit area. Table 7 gives some support to this theory, and it is a possibility that the Committee has kept in mind.

TABLE 7

CHANGE IN COMPOSITION OF BUSINESS OF CONSUMER LOAN COMPANIES, SHOWING OUTSTANDING CASH LOANS AND INSTALMENT CREDIT AT YEAR END, 1953 AND 1963

Nature of Credit	1953		1963		10-Year Increase
	Millions of $	% Distribution	Millions of $	% Distribution	Millions of $	% Increase
Cash loans	173	98.3	753	93.2	580	335.3
Instalment credit	3	1.7	55	6.8	52	1,733.2
All consumer credit	176	100.0	808	100.0	632	359.1

SOURCE: Bank of Canada brief, proceedings, p. 112.

SMALL LOANS

Throughout the hearings of this Committee no subject has come up more often than the Small Loans Act, and practically all the words spoken about it have been words of praise. We were told—and the hearings have left us in no doubt—that a book could be written about this Act alone.

The Small Loans Act came into effect in 1940 at a time when it was generally agreed that the situation with respect to small loans was deplorable, and that legislation was needed in the public interest to bring order out of chaos. The provinces were consulted before the Act was adopted. Although one or two of them expressed some reservation about its constitutional validity, none opposed it at that time, nor has any province done so since. There was naturally some opposition from money-lenders, but by and large, the Small Loans bill had the blessing of those whose business it was designed to regulate. And to this day, with regulations adapted to changing conditions, the Act has continued to enjoy the confidence of those in the business. In fact the Canadian Consumer Loan Association helps the Superintendent of Insurance in policing the small loans business generally.

Administrators of the legislation assure us that enforcement has presented no serious difficulties; the few occasions on which it has been necessary to apply legal sanctions have generally arisen out of misunderstanding rather than deliberate evasion of the Act.

We heard no suggestions that operation of the Small Loans Act should be in any way curtailed, but many have urged that protection of the small borrower be improved both by increasing the size of the loan to which the Act applies, and by broadening the definition of "loan" to include specifically purchase credit as well as loan credit.

The arguments in favour of broadening the scope of the Small Loans Act are: (1) that more than 25 years' experience demonstrates the value of its provisions, and it would be in the public interest to extend the jurisdiction exercised under the Act; (2) that since the Act came into effect the whole field of consumer credit has greatly expanded and changed in nature, and that the small loans business has been much affected by these changes.

The Act has served many small borrowers well. Although the upper limit was originally $500, since 1957 protection has been extended to those borrowing up to $1,500. The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance has recommended that the upper limit should be further raised to include loans up to $5,000. This recommendation has been endorsed in briefs presented to us by the Consumers' Association of Canada, The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Family Bureau of Greater Winnipeg and others. It is opposed by the consumer loan companies, and Mr. MacGregor, with long experience in administering the Small Loans Act, feels that to move up to $5,000 might mean going beyond consumer finance into an intermediate area.

The other way in which we have been urged to recommend extension of the scope of the Small Loans Act is to ensure that it applies specifically to purchase credit as well as loan credit. Many types of credit transaction common today were not even contemplated a quarter of a century ago, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to say whether a transaction involves mainly the sale of goods or the lending of money. At the same time the evidence shows that the money-lending business has gradually moved away from the simple matter of supplying needy borrowers with small sums of money.

The small loans business continues to grow both in amount of money involved and in number of loans made. Loans regulated under the Act advanced in one year now total more than $800 million; the number of accounts is close to 1½ million, and the average loan is $570. As Table 8 shows, the size of the loan has been gradually increasing in recent years.

We learned from the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that "the administrative expenses of the consumer loan companies are the highest of any class of financial institution." The high expenses are associated with numerous small branch offices. "They have almost doubled in the seven years ending in 1961 until now there are a quarter as many consumer loan offices as there are chartered banks." In spite of these high costs, net profits after taxes are also high compared with other major institutions. For example, they are more than double those of the mortgage loan business.

TABLE 8

NUMBER OF SMALL LOANS MADE BY SIZE OF LOAN, 1962–1964

Size of Loan	Year
	1962		1963		1964
$	No.	%	No.	%	No.	%
1- 500	642,108	49.2	650,678	47.1	667,082	45.4
501-1,000	584,825	44.8	608,337	44.1	646,797	44.0
1,001-1,500	77,222	5.9	121,048	8.8	155,815	10.6
Total	1,304,155	99.9	1,380,063	100.0	1,469,694	100.0
Average size of loan	$537		$558		$570

SOURCE: Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, 1964, p. vi.

Refinancing and Consolidation of Debts

It has become a widespread pattern in recent years—evidently encouraged by money-lenders—for a person who requires a further loan before he has discharged his present indebtedness, to borrow more than enough to pay off his debt or debts, receiving at the same time a certain amount of money for his immediate use. If the transaction is with the finance company to which he already owes money, this is called refinancing his loan. If the new and larger loan is taken to pay off various debts, some to other creditors, it is called consolidation of debts.

Both practices have the effect on the borrower of increasing his indebtedness and putting off, perhaps indefinitely, the happy day when he hopes to be in the clear. Furthermore, the cost of the loan, that is the interest and other charges which he must pay for the use of the money, is likely to snowball. Those who enter into arrangements of this kind are generally low-income families in desperate need of cash, the families least likely to be in a position to secure money at favourable rates, and probably also lacking in understanding of business transactions. With current emphasis on the need to protect the family as an institution, and evidence on all sides of the threat to family solidarity that results from unmanageable debt, this seems to be an area where more protection is needed.

Without suggesting that there is no legitimate place for refinancing and consolidation of debts, we would point out that it can open the door to abuse. The practice of refinancing is now so common that only about 35 per cent of the money debited to present debtors is actually paid to them in cash. Well over 60 per cent goes to refinance previous loans. (See Table 9.)

Spokesmen for a number of consumer loan companies recently told the Nova Scotia Royal Commission that "there will be as many as three refinancings after the first borrowing and that the average borrower will remain on their books continuously for about seven years." The Nova Scotia Commissioner remarked that "a very substantial proportion of the persons who borrow from the consumer loan companies remain more or less indefinitely on the books of these companies." Because these current debtors are the source of 74 per cent of all new business, the practice of refinancing makes a big impact on the over-all accounts. So great is the impact that 47 per cent of all small loans goes into refinancing, leaving little more than half to be paid to borrowers in cash. (See Table 10.)

How the cash advanced is shared by those already on the books of the lenders, new borrowers, and those who have discharged earlier loans is shown in Table 11.

TABLE 9

REGULATED SMALL LOANS ADVANCED TO CURRENT BORROWERS, 1962–1964

Description of Loans to Current Borrowers	Year
	1962		1963		1964
	$	%	$	%	$	%
For refinancing.....	336,231,421	64.8	370,839,738	65.3	396,307,112	64.3
New funds advanced.....	183,014,326	35.2	196,792,439	34.7	220,078,008	35.7
Total.....	519,245,537	100.0	567,632,177	100.0	616,385,120	100.0
Loans to current borrowers as percentage of all small loans.....	74		74		74
All small loans.....	700,906,537		769,648,673		837,636,533

SOURCE: Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, 1964, p. vi.

TABLE 10

ALL REGULATED SMALL LOANS, SHOWING NEW FUNDS ADVANCED TO BORROWERS AND MONEY APPLIED ON DEBTS ALREADY INCURRED, 1962–1964

Destination of funds	Year
	1962	1963	1964
	$	$	$
Advanced to borrowers	364,675,116	398,808,935	441,329,420
Refinancing	336,231,421	370,839,738	396,307,112
All small loans	700,906,537	769,648,673	837,636,533

SOURCE: Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, 1964, p. vi.

TABLE 11

NEW FUNDS ADVANCED IN REGULATED SMALL LOANS BY CLASS OF BORROWER, 1962–1964

Type of Borrower	Year
	1962		1963		1964
	$	%	$	%	$	%
Current borrowers with earlier loans undischarged	183,014,326	50.2	196,792,439	49.3	220,078,008	49.9
New borrowers	128,117,933	35.1	143,444,483	36.0	157,414,766	35.7
Previous borrowers with earlier loans discharged	53,542,857	14.7	58,572,013	14.7	63,836,646	14.5
All new funds advanced	364,675.116	100.0	398,808,935	100.0	441,329,420	100.1

SOURCE: Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, 1964, p. vi.

Summary

The present situation is, then, that those who are already in debt to the small loans companies or money-lenders—and more than half of the borrowers are in that position—actually receive in cash only 36 per cent of the small loans debited to their accounts. Furthermore, nearly half of all funds advanced in small loans go, not to the borrowers, but to their creditors.

Who some of these creditors are can be deduced from the statement in the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that many of the consumer loan companies are "subsidiaries or affiliates of sales finance companies or of foreign-owned consumer loan companies." At the end of 1961 "five American-owned companies had 57% of all business and three subsidiaries of Canadian finance companies a further 28%."

That consolidation of debts is a lucrative business is borne out by a statement of a representative of the Retail Merchants Association. "At the moment," he said, "even some of the smaller finance companies are trying to get in on this credit bandwagon. They are trying to get people to consolidate their accounts, to borrow the money from them and pay cash. Many of those dealers in Canada now are refusing to take cash for goods contracted for on credit, because the credit is a good thing. They are in the finance business rather than in ordinary business."

In view of the fundamental changes in business methods as they affect transactions regulated by the Small Loans Act, the time appears to be ripe to re-think the definition of a small loan. Perhaps the whole purpose of the Act should be reviewed in the light of current practices in the credit business in the sixties.

The primary function of the small loans companies and money-lenders used to be to enable needy people to borrow small sums. Although they continue to be practically the sole source for desperate borrowers, the business of actually providing cash has become much less important to them as they have moved into other, and more lucrative areas.

It is not a simple matter to determine an appropriate scale of maximum rates for small loans. In Mr. MacGregor's words, "The proper objective would seem to be the level at which efficient lenders only may make a reasonable profit rather than a higher level that would attract the inefficient as well. Looked at from the borrower's standpoint, one must have regard for the desirability of ensuring adequate facilities, especially for needy borrowers of small amounts, and yet of securing the best procurable rate."

What facilities are now available to the little man who finds himself in need of a loan? Unless he is a member of a credit union he has little chance of borrowing at a low rate of interest. Of the three main sources open to him one, the finance company, does not deal directly with the consumer. If the money is needed to purchase goods he may be able to buy them on credit, in which case he may become indebted to the retail dealer or to a finance company if the agreement is sold. But if his need is for cash, there appears to be no alternative to borrowing from the small loans companies or money-lenders. The trouble with that is that if the man is already in debt—a most likely situation—the condition attached to receipt of money is likely to involve him in additional borrowing, putting off even further the day when he can hope to be out of debt.

Many customers of small loans companies and money-lenders are people who are unable to obtain credit elsewhere. Some have no doubt been turned down by the banks. The main reasons for this, as revealed in the Poapst sample survey for the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, are likely to be that they lack security, guarantee or collateral (39.3%); tight money policy (24.7%); poor risk (9.8%); insufficient income (9.5%). Furthermore, we were informed that about 50 per cent of those who apply for small loans to the consumer lending companies or money-lenders are rejected.

Even after this selection process, 60 per cent of the borrowers from these companies earn $400 or less per month, and about 80 per cent earn $500 or less. Because sales finance companies are not regulated, comparable information is not available concerning the financial status of their debtors, but there is no absolute selection of risk such as operates in the banks and insurance companies, and consequently a considerable proportion of their dealings are with people of small means. Table 12 shows that these three institutions—small loans companies and money-lenders; finance companies; and retail merchants —charge a much higher rate than do institutions which restrict their loans to the better off.

That is not to say that all borrowers from high-cost lenders are poor people, but individuals with substantial incomes and considerable assets are in a better bargaining position and are able to borrow at lower rates. Since choices are made only among actual alternatives, for the low-income groups the striking change in the decade 1953 to 1963 was the tremendous increase in involvement with consumer loan companies. Admittedly, retail dealers and finance companies both have more money outstanding, but their lending is not concentrated among the poor. The growing importance of the banks in consumer lending has had little effect on the business of the money-lender, since the banks restrict their lending to a higher income group. Part of the recent mushrooming of consumer credit—particularly bank loans—represents borrowing by what have been called unrationed borrowers. These are the people with other alternatives who borrow money only when rates are favourable.

Sales Finance Companies

Sometimes consumers wish to make substantial purchases which they are unable or unwilling to make out of savings. The balance may be financed by the retailer, or he may assign the conditional sale contract to a finance company. Companies of this kind, which grew up following World War I to finance automobile sales, continue to find their principal source of business in this area, but financing of household goods and of commercial and industrial items is also important to them. The role that these companies play in the consumer credit finance field has grown tremendously in the post-war years, and they are the largest single group of borrowers in the money market. But their developing power and influence have not been matched by increased accountability to the public. As the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance noted, they are the only major financial institutions unregulated by any act other than normal company legislation. They make no reports to responsible officials of the kind that form the basis of published data on consumer loan companies and money-lenders.

The finance companies insist that they are neither retail merchants nor money-lenders, but they describe themselves as "in the business of extending credit". Nevertheless, the larger companies have subsidiaries which are consumer loan companies. They also have affiliated insurance companies to provide that "service". And it is these large companies that control the lion's share of the business. Like the small loans business, sales financing is highly concentrated in a few companies.

Ten finance companies do about 90 per cent of the business covered by DBS statistics; the four largest account for about 80 per cent. Most of the others—there are some 150 in all—are quite small, many with only one office. At the close of 1965 Canadian consumers owed sales finance companies $1,140 million, and more than $900 million of this, roughly 80 per cent, was for the financing of passenger cars (including those sold for commercial as well as personal use). Financing the sale of motor cars accounted for 78 per cent of the business done in December 1965.

Although the finance company is not an actual party to the original contract between buyer and seller, it certainly seems to be looking over the seller's shoulder. The finance company has usually determined in advance for both buyer and seller the financial terms of the deal, generally including the requirement that the purchaser sign a personal note, which will be assigned to the finance company along with the agreement for sale. The finance companies even provide retailers with a standard form on which agreements are made. Once the customer has signed on the dotted line his relation to the finance company is soon made clear. In the words of one of their representatives, "We deal with the consumer after the fact, because he makes his payments directly to our offices." Some sales finance companies buy these agreements subject to recourse against the merchant if the customer defaults. The customer has no such recourse against the finance company if the goods prove to be deficient. The President of the Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies referred to the purchaser as "the customer of the dealer and therefore, indirectly, our customer . . ."

Finance companies compete to have retail dealers bring them their contracts, and the competition is in the terms on which they offer to buy these agreements. An important inducement offered to the retailer to obtain these profitable contracts is the "wholesale" financing of their inventories at much below retail rates (around 6½ per cent on new cars, 7½ per cent on used cars, including the "service charge"). Availability of credit at favourable rates is important to the retailer, and for some smaller businesses it may be essential to survival. We were informed that the sales finance company pays for the dealer's cars at the factory, and that the same arrangement may apply to appliances and boats. A member of the Committee expressed his view based on wide experience, that, "Retailers cannot possibly go into business today without the service of an acceptance corporation or a finance company."

Another bond between the finance companies and the retail dealers is that they share with the dealer the finance charges which the customer pays. The sum set aside for the dealer, sometimes called the dealer's reserve, is "the difference, if any, between the retail price for the financing established by the dealer and the wholesale price established by the finance company." The exact amount credited to the dealer varies somewhat, depending on whether the sale is of appliances, home improvement, new or second hand car. The dealer's share is said to vary from 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the total charge to the consumer.

A member of the Chamber of Commerce delegation, also Vice-President and Deputy General Manager of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation Limited, compared the dealer's share with the insurance agent's commission. The analogy implies that the finance company is paying for the service. Many retail dealers are very close to being agents of the finance companies. As one finance company representative put it, "It is the merchant who creates the business on our behalf."

Economic Effects of Consumer Credit

It is more than thirty years since Robert S. Lynd called the consumer "the man few economists know". Much has happened since that time to bring the consumer and his behavior to the attention, not only of economists, but also of governments and administrators. It is now recognized that decisions of consumers concerning whether to buy, what to buy, and when, exert a powerful influence on the flow of goods and services. When all is said and done, the goods and services produced and consumed form the substance of our national economic life. The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance observed that "it is the individual and collective wants of persons that the other categories of borrowers (the financial institutions and markets) are ultimately designed to serve."

Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services accounts for roughly two-thirds of Canada's gross national expenditure. The importance to the economy of all this spending is beyond dispute, but the more specific interest of the Committee is in the fact that a high proportion of the purchasing power of consumers each year goes for goods and services already received; at the same time they are committing their future income for things to be enjoyed now.

What effect this growing custom will have on the overall economy is causing some concern to responsible people. As far back as 1938 the final report of the Banking and Commerce Committee of the House of Commons spoke of the need for "further information as to the relation between consumers' credit and business depressions." Today the issue may be inflation rather than depression, but in a general sense several members of the Committee repeatedly raised the same question: possible effects on the economy of either uncontrolled rise or too much restriction on consumer credit.

Nobody suggested that consumer credit was not rising fast enough now. Except for references to the reduction in consumer spending that took place during World War II—when prices were controlled and consumer goods were scarce—and fears voiced by representatives of the finance companies and retail businessmen concerning possible repercussions if credit were to be curtailed, little light was shed on the economic effects that could be foreseen if the tide were stemmed. The General Manager of the Retail Council of Canada thought that increased use of credit probably caused people to invest more in capital goods, such as labor saving devices, and less in services. We note that the Ontario Committee felt it was not within their terms of reference to evaluate "whether the total volume of credit is at a desirable level or whether legislative action should be taken to restrain the use of credit generally..." Professor Ziegel gave us his view that credit restrictions would not impede the economy. He said that British experience with fairly strict regulations speaks for itself. "Consumer credit there has doubled... in the last five years." He added: "I think the same is true of Australia."

When a country is threatened with inflation or recession various methods may be employed to deal with it. We rely mainly on monetary and fiscal policies as an antidote. Monetary policies are used to regulate the overall amount of credit. When interest rates rise, there is a general tightening of credit to business, but a rise in interest rates appears to have little effect in curbing consumer credit. The reason for this is that in a period of tight money those with money to lend become more selective, making fewer loans and investments of the kind that tend to produce lower yields. The usual high yield on money lent to consumers is not particularly sensitive to changes in the much lower business interest rates. There may be a certain amount of credit rationing by the banks, and there are signs now that the banks are emphasizing saving in their advertising. The way Mr. Bouey of the Bank of Canada explained it was that finance companies can always get hold of money if consumers "want to pay" 15, 18 or 20 per cent.

Neither do consumer loan companies appear to make any major changes in their lending policies. Small lenders, who must depend on bank credit, may be short of funds, but the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance notes that subsidiaries of Canadian and American firms—and they do most of the business—"obtain all the funds they need from their parents and appear to be little affected by such difficulties."

So lucrative is the retail financing of motor cars that to ensure the flow of this consumer credit business, finance companies continue to undertake the wholesale financing of cars even if it is hardly worth the paper-work when they must borrow at approximately 6.25 per cent and lend at 6.50 per cent.

More than one member of the Committee raised the question whether unrestricted growth of consumer credit impairs control over monetary policy. Perhaps as good an answer as any is to be found in the evidence given in an earlier enquiry by the Governor of the Bank of Canada concerning his predecessor's efforts in 1956 to curb the volume of consumer credit, particularly instalment finance, by attempting to get voluntary agreement of the credit grantors. He was not successful. The Co-Chairman's question to the representative of the Bank of Canada as to whether "there is any indication that legislation permitting some control by the Bank of Canada over consumer credit agencies at a time of financial or monetary emergency would be beneficial" went unanswered. However, Mr. Bouey agreed with a member of the Committee that "if we felt consumer credit was getting out of bounds we could not look to the Bank of Canada to curtail it, it would have to be done through some act of Parliament."

Social Effects

The importance of the collective spending of consumers in influencing economic conditions has been considered above. But it must not be forgotten that how well Canadians manage their personal finances is of fundamental importance also to the well-being of the household and family, and indeed of the whole society.

It is reassuring to have the opinion of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance that "by and large Canadians manage their finances with greater wisdom than appears to be popularly believed. Most households appear to have a reasonable pattern of assets in relation to family needs, income and risk-taking ability. Most, too, have made sensible use of instalment and other credit to acquire physical assets that yield them high returns, not only in financial terms but in terms of convenience and ease of household living."

Overall statistical data document the striking growth of credit in the post-war years, but detailed information concerning consumers' personal finances is sparse. Available data are usually in gross figures or averages, and much of the discussion concerning possible dangers in over-extension of credit has been in terms of comparison of total consumer credit with aggregate earning power of consumers, with their total assets, or with the gross national product. When Mr. Bouey of the Bank of Canada was considering the "ratio of consumer credit to personal disposable income", he recognized that it can give only "a very rough indication of the probable capacity and willingness of consumers to incur further increases in debt." The Nova Scotia Royal Commission on the Cost of Borrowing Money, the Cost of Credit and Related Matters, points out the need for statistics on personal finances of consumers. The report of that Commission observes that the degree to which individuals are excessively committed cannot be determined by reference in general to the financial position of consumers. Professor Neufeld of the University of Toronto has also spoken of the need for "data on personal disposable income and net worth of individuals using consumer credit."

Although it is subject to the same limitation that it deals with "the average borrower", one of the few informed opinions that has come to our notice concerning a safe amount of credit for an individual to assume, is found in a statement made to the Ontario Committee by the chartered banks. They suggest that "instalment obligations up to 15 per cent of net income, exclusive of residential mortgages" would be reasonable. One who represented the Consumers' Association of Canada at the hearings of our Committee, recently told the Canadian Home Economics Association that only families who have an income above subsistence level can afford to use credit at all. Well publicized recent studies suggest that roughly one-fifth of Canadians are in what is declared to be the poverty group. It would therefore seem that her estimate that about 10 per cent of Canadian families are unable to cope with credit is no exaggeration. The words of the final report of the Commons Banking and Commerce Committee of June 1, 1938 bear repeating to-day: "The unhappy lot of those who have a deficit economy, in the sense that they are chronically unable to live within their income, is not to be bettered by borrowing (no matter the rate)."

Consumer credit can take various forms, but not all kinds of credit are available to the low-income groups who do not usually possess assets which can be pledged for security. Banks and insurance companies lend mainly to those who are better off, leaving the poor people—unless they can borrow from credit unions—to the small loans companies, retail credit dealers and the sales finance companies, all of whom, for reasons explained elsewhere, charge high rates.

A man may borrow from one party to pay another in cash, or he may deal with a merchant who sells him an article (or a service) and at the same time lends him the money to pay for it. If, as often happens, the retailer sells the instalment contract to a finance company, the debtor may be obliged to make his payments to one who has no obligation whatever to him. But the sale of the original agreement to pay does not change the nature of the transaction. The essential unity in consumer credit is the fact that it practically always arises out of the sale of goods and services, and in every case it creates debts which the consumer undertakes to pay.

From the point of view of the consumer, then, the important first question is whether or not he can afford to add to his commitments. This is something which the wise buyer decides for himself. But temptation is great in a world of easy credit, and not everyone is sufficiently well informed to make a rational decision. The danger is that poor people will, through lack of understanding of the consequences, bite off more than they can chew. At a conference on consumer credit held at the University of Saskatchewan a few months ago, a Co-Chairman of this Committee observed that the poor need protection because "they are more gullible, more easily cheated, less conscious of the quality of goods they buy, more likely to over-commit themselves, more likely to deal with high cost neighbourhood stores and pedlars, less aware of credit charges, less able to understand and assert their rights." He added that, "For them a missed pay cheque spells disaster."

Losses on loans and on time sale agreements are relatively small. Should payments fall behind, a well organized collection system includes "reminder notices, telephone calls, letters, and, in some cases, personal calls at customers' homes." Finally, there is the threat, at least, in the mind of the borrower, of legal proceedings, perhaps the dreaded garnishee of wages. Little wonder that the sacrifices that may have to be made by the debtor's family to keep up payments over an extended period are not the lender's prime concern, particularly if all contact with the original seller ends when the customer signs on the dotted line, and the agreement is immediately sold to a finance company.

Obviously, it is before he commits himself that the unwary consumer needs disinterested advice. Today this kind of person puts himself in the hands of those whose business depends on selling goods and services. A representative of sales finance companies, arguing against disclosure of annual interest rates, told us that the interest of the common man "is not how much percentage interest he is going to pay but, basically, is he apt to obtain credit." The applicant for the loan may very well allow the urgency of his present needs to obscure a realistic assessment of his future financial position, and enthusiasm for maintaining a business quota is likely to be uppermost in the mind of the lender. These circumstances combine to create a potentially dangerous situation for the borrower with scant resources.

Counselling

The president of the Canadian Consumer Loan Association told us of experiments being conducted in Ottawa and Winnipeg by the Credit Grantors' Association with what they call a "free debt counselling service" to help those whose debts have grown beyond their capacity to cope with them. Managers of various companies contribute their time in the evenings to counsel these people. This type of counselling was provided for 310 Winnipeg families in 1963 and 225 in 1964. We were told that the plan is expected to spread. There was some suggestion that these experimental programs "are trying to give free service" to those not in a position to pay for consolidation of their debts, but, generally speaking, consolidation of debts appears to involve adding to already high interest charges. A member of the Committee asked whether it would not be better to arrange for consolidation of debts without increasing the amount of money involved and adding to the interest. The answer was: "...I think that most good Canadian citizens are not anxious, when they get into a state of indebtedness, to go to a welfare agency and get assistance in that way. They want to pay their own way." We were informed that company staff is available "to talk to people and to guide them and counsel them in how they should pay and straighten themselves out."

We have learned also of a private agency called The Credit Counselling Service set up in Toronto under a 23-member board of directors. The president, a lawyer, said in a press interview that "the service was an outgrowth of a general belief among social workers, family courts and businessmen that inability to handle money creates many personal problems in a large cross-section of the community." The president states that the agency is not a charitable organization, and that they are "just as interested in seeing that the creditors get paid for goods legally bought as we are in guiding a debtor, or managing his affairs so he can pay his way out of his difficulties". Emphasis seems to be on working out ways to meet the payments and on the use of credit. There is apparently no plan to give advice on whether or not a purchase should be made.

The brief presented to us by the Canadian Consumer Loan Association stated that, "It is a matter of record that consumer loan companies cooperate fully with the armed forces benevolent funds and other welfare organizations when such organizations are called upon to assist families to adjust their affairs." The annual reports published by the Army Benevolent Fund Board set up by Parliament in 1947, illustrate the importance to veterans and serving soldiers, and hence to society, of this cooperation. Because families of serving soldiers and veterans form a large and probably representative sample of Canadian families, their experience with consumer credit problems provides an insight that is unique. Furthermore, many of the situations dealt with by the Fund have originated in civilian life.

In its report for the year ended March 31, 1962 the Board notes that "the consumer credit 'explosion' has had a serious effect on the financial well-being of a number of Canadian families."

> "Where the head of the household had thorough knowledge of money management based on a high educational level or perhaps sound training given by parents, no problem arose. If, on the other hand, the family had no opportunity to learn the fundamentals of domestic financing, they very often became the victim of highly-developed sales practices and easy credit with the inevitable result—a serious debt problem.
>
> Many of these families were found to have a critical lack of knowledge regarding interest rates, carrying charges, conditional sales contracts, charge accounts, revolving budgets and other forms of financing which must be readily understood if the consumer is to avoid becoming involved in personal debts."

The following extracts from two recent annual reports of the Board graphically describe contemporary problems affecting a great many Canadian families:

> 1963: "Again this year, the number of applications where a summons or judgment for debt has been issued showed a marked increase. Creditors appeared to be resorting to seizure, garnishment of wages, repossession of goods or other legal action for the satisfaction of debt in greater extent than has been the custom in previous years."
>
> 1964: "The cost of living continued to be a real problem for families living on a marginal income—and the need for assistance for such families marked the year's activities.
>
> The type of applicant assisted by the Fund is usually a good citizen. He is attempting to provide a reasonable standard of living for his family and very often his problem can be met by financial assistance, together with counselling which will permit him to overcome the temporary financial distress. The Fund has accepted the responsibility to help this group, where there is a willingness to help themselves."

Some measure of the importance of the work of the Army Benevolent Fund is the number of cases dealt with in a year. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, 3,142 grants were approved, most of which were made when an unexpected contingency had caused a financial problem. These contingencies included "sickness, accident, death or other occurrence resulting in loss of income, damage to property or severe financial indebtedness." Although many individuals helped by the Board are already financial casualties, a continuous preventive program is also carried on through publication of informative material on budgeting, consumer buying, sales financing, consumer borrowing, buying and selling of automobiles, insurance and savings plans, as well as by preventive individual counselling.

There is no doubt that a great many families—especially those with low incomes—desperately need financial advice. Those who can no longer cope with their debts certainly need help, but from the point of view of the individual consumer as well as that of society, the need for advice is most urgent before any new commitment is made. We are impressed with the preventive work done by the Army Benevolent Fund Board, and feel that to make that kind of help available to all families would be in the public interest.

Because those offering to lend money or sell goods are hardly in an independent position to advise prospective customers, we believe this kind of advice should be offered through the regular family agencies in the community. Emphasis would be more likely to focus on the best use that can be made of the limited family income, and there would be less chance of stress being put mainly on "the proper use of credit" when the budget cannot reasonably provide for any extra outlays.

When it has been decided on a rational basis that the consumer can safely assume a proposed debt, then the question arises as to which form of credit is the best buy for him. That usually boils down to the cost of the loan, a subject that is discussed below. Other than the cost of the loan, and consequences that follow for those whose payments fall behind, conditions of borrowing are of greater interest to lenders than to borrowers. For it is the method of financing the loan that determines who ultimately collects, and how much, for the use of the money and services connected with the transaction (i.e. interest and other charges). Finance companies, consumer loan companies and retail dealers as well as banks and credit unions, are all anxious to increase their share of consumer credit, although some are more selective than others of their clientele.

The Cost of the Loan

It costs money to borrow, that is to rent the use of someone else's money, and individuals and families are advised to shop for credit as for other goods and services. This advice comes not only from the Consumers' Association of Canada but also from those who offer to supply the credit: finance companies, money-lenders and retail merchants. The need for a loan is often directly related to an immediate outlay. Once it has been decided that the individual must borrow, the important question for him is whether it would be advantageous to borrow cash or to deal on credit with the seller of the goods. A spokesman for the Canadian Chamber of Commerce agreed that the best way of deciding this is to determine the respective rates of interest. If the decision is to buy on credit, it is well to take into account the possibility that the credit agreement may be sold to a finance company, setting up new obligations to unknown parties.

Should the plan be to borrow and buy for cash, the next question is where the prospective borrower can get the best buy. Those who have a relatively large current income, relatively good financial prospects, and sufficient assets that can be liquidated which they are willing to pledge as collateral, are in a good bargaining position. These individuals, who are not only willing but practically certain to be able to pay, are a lender's best risk. Although consumers generally pay a higher rate for credit than businessmen, those who are considered first class risks have no trouble in borrowing from banks. They are also more likely than the average man to have insurance policies on which they can raise money. Rates charged by insurance companies are most favorable, and bank rates on consumer loans are also relatively low.

But these sources are not generally open to the low-income group. Except for those who are members of credit unions, they must borrow from loan companies or money-lenders. Some kinds of retail credit buying are also open to them. Generally speaking, only the more expensive types of credit are available to the poor.

The main reasons for this are that in the small loans business, loans are by definition of a size that raises the costs of administration; and since these loans are often made without security, there is said to be considerable risk attached. In retail sales financing, the costs of administration are generally high. Current rates paid by consumer borrowers are summarized in Table 12.

TABLE 12

ESTIMATED ANNUAL PERCENTAGE COSTS OF CONSUMER BORROWING

	Rates
	Stated %	Effective Annual %
Cash loans
Chartered banks	6 p.a.	9¼–11¼
Credit unions	1 per month	8–10
Caisses		6– 8
Consumer loan companies (depending on amount of loan; under $1,500)		15.24–24
Life insurance policy loans		6
Credit buying
Sales finance companies
New Cars		12.5–18.8
Smaller contracts		16–23
Retail stores		13–17 approx.

Source: Compiled from data provided by Research Department, Bank of Canada.

Because the above rates differ somewhat from those presented by Mr. Andre Laurin of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, Mr. Laurin's estimates are set out below:

	Approximate annual %
Cooperatives	6
Banks	6–12
Finance companies	6–24
Acceptance companies	18–60

The man on the street thinks of the cost of borrowing money as interest, and generally speaking, that is the cost as far as the businessman is concerned when he is lending mortgage money or borrowing himself. But when he is dealing with the private consumer the word "interest" is taboo. So deep-seated is the desire to avoid speaking of interest rates that a representative of the sales finance companies said they figure their business in terms of "the return per $100 that we make available". A member of the Committee quickly observed that this was really the same thing as talking about percentages. In dealing with the consumer a separate method of calculation is used: all costs of a loan are usually lumped together in what is called the service cost for the whole transaction. Abandonment in transactions with the consumer of the age-old and otherwise universal practice of expressing yield on money as a percentage per annum was singled out by the Nova Scotia Royal Commission as "the direct and principal cause of much of the confusion which undoubtedly exists today concerning the cost of lending and credit."

The Nova Scotia Royal Commission pointed out that, without exception, disinterested Canadian sources favor disclosure of the cost of credit as a rate of interest. For loans regulated under the Small Loans Act, of course, all related charges are included in the cost of the loan. Opposition to extending this concept to larger loans and to retail credit agreements "has almost exclusively come from the industry, particularly from the highly vocal and well-organized sales finance companies who have mounted an extensive campaign against it."

Those who undertake to pay finance charges are in a poor position to assess their value when they are given no information as to how the charges are made up. Representatives of the finance companies who appeared before us estimated that more than half of the cost of the money they provide is for other than interest charges. We learned from the Chamber of Commerce delegation that "...most retail stores find two-thirds of the cost [of extending credit] is other than interest, and one-third may be classed as money cost. The other costs are legal, staff, space, telephone, stationery, investigation, collections, reserve for losses, etc. The charge for forebearance, or what we think of as interest, will cover only one-third of the actual cost of most retail transactions on credit."

No person has suggested that interest is not a factor in the cost of lending money. Professor Ziegel assured us that "so far as economists are concerned, interest means the cost of the loan or other credit being extended". That is not, however, the judicial interpretation. Admitting that other costs than interest often enter, it seems reasonable to inquire what these costs are, and to what extent they occur in different types of consumer credit. We have the word of a financial expert, that pure interest is an economic concept of the value attached to the use of money, per se. It is compensation for deferring satisfaction of wants which immediate use of the money would otherwise bring. Pure interest in this sense rarely exists, but the term is nevertheless in common use where other factors are present in the cost of the loan. "Perhaps the closest approach to pure interest", said Mr. Irwin, "is found in the case of a government Treasury Bill in regard to which service cost, direct costs and risks are, practically, non-existent."

Except for the rare case of pure interest, "every charge for the use of money includes, in some measure, at least three of the following elements:

1. Pure interest
2. Risk
3. Service costs
4. Direct outlays (e.g. legal fees)"

If the interest element is to be considered as simply compensation for forbearance of use of the money, presumably the interest rate could not depend on who borrows the money. The much higher cost of money to consumers must lie in the other three elements. As to the risk, it is true that consumer loans and consumer credit are often granted without security. However, the evidence as to losses suffered by lenders convinces us that the risk is relatively small, certainly not sufficient to account for the great difference in cost of consumer loans as compared with business loans. We agree with the Nova Scotia Royal Commission that, "Risks are grossly overstated in the modern context." It is doubtful whether the lender's risk is any greater—or even as great—as that assumed by the unsophisticated consumer when he signs an agreement to buy goods, perhaps of doubtful quality, from an establishment which he may never have heard of before.

"Service costs" are seldom spelled out and they naturally vary a good deal. Though some services are admittedly provided for the convenience of the consumer, others, such as purchasing the contract and investigating the applicant, are more likely to benefit the lender. When it was suggested to a representative of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce that "... what you are saying is that credit is an expensive service to the customer." the answer was: "It is a service. Whether it is expensive or not is a matter of opinion." Since there are no absolute standards in this area, opinions appear to be roughly divided between those in the money-lending business and all other members of the community. It is significant that the consumer is given little or no information on which he could base a reasonable judgment, and no choice as to whether or not he wishes to buy the services.

Direct outlays, including legal fees, enter into overall costs of lending. In the case of finance companies and money-lenders, costs of this kind as well as investigation of individual circumstances, should be greatly reduced by standardization of transactions and by the large amount of business done with people already on the books. (See Table 10.)

As for retail credit—department stores should seldom require costly legal work on individual accounts. There must be considerable expense connected with the sale of cars, but it should not be too difficult to account for necessary legal fees and disbursements in the same way as is done in mortgage deals and other transactions.

Our conclusion is that there is good reason for charging higher rates to consumer borrowers than to business borrowers, but we do not understand why the spread should be so great. If lenders refuse to reveal the elements that enter into the costs of consumer loans, we can only conclude that the charge is higher than economically justifiable. A spokesman for the finance companies defended their resistance to stating interest rates on the grounds that "people would be inclined to take a second look." This statement provoked one of our members to observe that that would be all to the good.

Honesty and Truthfulness

The Committee affirms its belief in the inherent honesty and truthfulness of the average Canadian. We include both individual businessmen and the general public—by no means mutually exclusive groups. All workers are consumers, and most adult consumers are workers. All businessmen are members of the general public, but only a minority of the public are businessmen, or even acquainted with business practices.

Borrowers

We learn from lenders that failure of borrowers to pay as promised results not so much from irresponsibility or deceit on the part of the debtor as from unforeseen changes in his circumstances such as ill health or loss of employment, making it impossible for him to fulfil his undertaking. Other evidence, particularly that of the credit unions and social agency representatives, emphasizes the part that lack of understanding of a transaction can play in entering on the road to disaster.

Lenders

A committee which appeared before the Nova Scotia Royal Commission on behalf of the local branch of the Credit Grantors Association of Canada, the retail committee of the Halifax Board of Trade and the Halifax-Dartmouth Credit Exchange, related their experience that "as much trouble had been occasioned by irresponsible credit granting and lending as by irresponsible borrowing and buying." Nevertheless, experience of administrators of the Small Loans Act—the only source of information concerning Canada-wide consumer borrowers over an extended period—is that lenders regulated by the Act seldom contravene its provisions. Any infractions have generally been due to misunderstanding rather than deliberate evasion. But even if we accept the fact that borrowers are generally truthful and that most lenders are carrying on a legitimate business in an ethical way, all admit that there is room for improvement in consumer lending practices.

Businessmen have a legitimate interest in curbing practices that give their business a bad name as well as in improving the efficiency of their methods. Legitimate operators in the small loans business welcomed the Small Loans Act which did so much to rid them of the unfavorable image of the money-lender. Obviously, a good deal of the resources of money-lenders or credit grantors go into selection of their risks and the exercise of control over extension of credit on their behalf. This helps to explain the very small losses on bad debts suffered by banks, finance companies, department stores, other retail stores, and even the consumer loan companies which deal mainly with the lower income groups. Representatives of these institutions informed us that their losses on loans are almost as low as those of the credit unions which have the undoubted advantage of personal acquaintance with the borrowers who are also their lenders. Losses suffered by these different lending institutions generally vary only within a relatively small range—from about one-half to one per cent. It is obvious that the interests of lenders are well protected.

It is the special role of government to protect society's weaker members. In transactions between corporations and businessmen on the one hand and the man on the street, there is no doubt about who is in the weaker bargaining position. Although some evidence of abuses was presented to our Committee, we learned a good deal more about this aspect from reports of individual cases brought to the attention of provincial investigating bodies. Abuses appear to be most common in the sale of used cars and in door-to-door selling; the growing practice of consolidation or refinancing of debts also gives us concern, and it is discussed elsewhere. There is evidence of changing practices in retail selling which may benefit some kinds of business at the same time as they damage the prospects of others. The second mortgage field, though not within our terms of reference, becomes relevant to consumer credit when, as sometimes happens, a mortgage is taken out to pay for consumer goods. Another practice, common in the United States, is emerging here: that of selling in a package deal with the house, a stove, refrigerator, washer and dryer—the durable goods that now make up a considerable part of consumer credit buying. Assuming that various segments of business will each look after their own interests, the fact remains that decisions facing the average man are becoming increasingly complicated, and the consumer's need for advice and protection grows.

Advertisers

Spokesmen for social agencies have long advocated that advertising of small loans be regulated, but until fairly recent times loan companies have claimed that they were advertising to inform the public that loans were available, not to persuade people to borrow. That is hardly a serious argument today when we are continually bombarded with suggestions to travel now to far-off places, and pay later, or to see "friendly Bob Adams" who will consolidate all our debts. There is a basic conflict between the philosophy of the advertising man, "Don't sell the steak—sell the sizzle" and the consumer's desire to buy a good steak. Nowadays advertisers lure customers with repeated reminders of the importance of making this purchase or taking that trip if they want to be like the others. Children and young people are extremely sensitive to advertising of that kind, and parents are naturally influenced by the aspirations of the family as well as their actual physical requirements.

The unsophisticated are easy prey for novel merchandising devices including package deals, special offers, premiums and services of all kinds when they are represented as means of stretching a small income. The endless stream of persuasion via television, radio, magazines, newspapers, billboards and in the mail, has become a predominant part of our environment.

It hardly seems fair to pit the man on the street against the most sophisticated psychologists employed to pierce his armor, but it would be difficult to regulate the gentle art of persuasion. However, when it is a question of misleading or deceptive advertising responsible authorities must protect the gullible. The Retail Merchants Association is concerned about practices of a few retailers who "persistently and deliberately carry misrepresentations in their advertising." A representative of the Association who appeared before us, recently told the press that while misrepresentation is practised only by a small percentage of retailers, the "image of deceit" rubs off on thousands of legitimate storekeepers who are trying to do business honestly. Association members say they are happy to face fair competition, but they are hurt by a few competitors who offer bargains that the public will never get.

Concrete examples of misrepresentation in advertising were brought to the attention of the Committee. One advertisement suggested that a sewing machine would be given away free with the purchase of a cabinet, the price quoted for the cabinet and the machine together being the same as the price for the cabinet alone. Another led prospective customers to believe that by purchasing a record library it was possible to acquire a stereo set free. The price quoted for 62 records was $4.98 each. Only 15 of these records were listed on the open market at that price, 17 were selling at $1.98 or $2.98, and the remaining 30 were discontinued records. Then there was the offer to buy $180 worth of silverware for $69.95, accompanied by a "credit gift certificate" for $110. The "balance payable" was exorbitant for the inferior merchandise offered.

Merchandising and advertising of goods and services important to health and safety have been regulated for many years by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and innovations of all kinds are constantly watched. Weights and measures are regulated with a view to preventing fraudulent and deceptive packaging. But there is strong public demand for further protection, not only from dangerous products and short weight, but from outright misrepresentation and fraud. The Retail Merchants Association would have the Combines Branch of the federal government regulate advertising in the same way as the Federal Trade Commission does in the United States, with power to order advertisers whose claims contain misrepresentations to "cease and desist."

An insurance consultant recently expressed the kind of concern that ethical businessmen have when standards of conduct in their own field are threatened, noting that advertising and sales methods employed by some accident and health insurance companies "provide an example in many cases of actions which may be legal but are far from ethical". He went on to say that, "Policy provisions which are hard for the insured to understand even when the insurer makes every reasonable effort to clarify them present problem enough. But for the unethical company, the temptation to take advantage of the insured's lack of knowledge is irresistible, and it is a simple matter so to word its advertising and its policy contracts as to trap the unwary, without actually breaking the law.[1]."

Similar concern for maintaining ethical standards in the retail business was expressed to us by a representative of the Ontario Retail Merchants Association. He referred to misleading advertising which seems to suggest no down-payment and which would convey the impression that no extra cost was involved in buying on credit. He felt that people advertising along these lines should be required by law to state what the ultimate total payment would be.

We heard criticism of those who advertise cash loans in such a way that the unwary greatly underestimate the cost of the loan. A professor who appeared before us mentioned the need for regulation of advertising practices of banks. He would make it mandatory for banks to disclose in their advertising the actual cost of the loan, stated in the same way as in the agreement itself.

Several submissions emphasized that all advertising of costs by those who extend credit, whether by lending money or by selling goods, should be required to state the total cost in annual percentage rates as well as in dollars and cents. That is a necessary part of applying the concept of full disclosure not only to those who are at the point of entering into a financial obligation, but to all Canadians. Only if the consumer understands the cost involved will he be able to decide freely and rationally whether his financial situation makes it feasible for him to assume credit. And his freedom to choose among different kinds of credit the arrangement that is the best buy for him, obviously depends on statement of the cost in simple and uniform terms.

---

[1] "Insurance Ethics—From the Inside Looking Out", Henry K. Duke, CPCU, CLU, Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, January 1966, pp. 102-107.

All which is respectfully submitted,

DAVID A. CROLL
Joint Chairman

APPENDIX No. 1

SENATORS AND MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT WHO SERVED ON THE COMMITTEE DURING INVESTIGATION OF CONSUMER CREDIT

(November, 1963 to April, 1966)

For the Senate:

The Honourable Senators

Bouffard (Deceased)
*Croll (Joint Chairman)
Davey
Deschatelets
*Gershaw
Hastings
Hayden
*Hollett
*Irvine
Lang
*McGrand
Robertson (Kenora-Rainy River) (Deceased)
*Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Stambaugh (Retired)
*Thorvaldson
Urquhart
*Vaillancourt—17.

For the House of Commons:

Messrs.

Allmand
Andras
Basford (Joint Chairman)
*Bell (Saint John-Albert)
*Cashin
Chretien
*Clancy
*Coates
Cote (Longueuil)
*Crossman
*Deachman
Drouin
Duquet
Gauthier
Greene (Hon. J. J., Joint Chairman)
Grégoire
Gundlock
Hales
Irvine,
Miss Jewett

Messrs.

Lachance
Lefebvre
Kindt
*Macdonald (Rosedale)
*Mandziuk
Marcoux
*Matte
*McCutcheon
*Nasserden
Olson
Orlikow
Otto
Pennell (Hon. L.)
Pugh
*Ryan
Saltsman
*Scott
*Vincent—38.

*Served throughout the hearings on consumer credit.

APPENDIX No. 2

LIST OF WITNESSES

	Date of Appearance	Name	Title	Organization
1.	June 2 and 9, 1964..	Kenneth R. MacGregor...	Then Supt. of Insurance.	Dept. of Insurance, Canada
2.	June 9, 1964.....	H A Urquhart.....	Admin. Officer.....
3.	June 16, 1964.....	Gerald K. Bouey.....	Chief, Research Dept...	Bank of Canada
4.	June 23, 1964.....	John M. Hallinan.....	General Manager.....	Ontario Credit Union League
5.	.....	John H. F. Burton.....	Assistant Supervisor of Exams.....
6.	July 7, 1964.....	J. M. Bentley.....	President.....	Canadian Federation of Agriculture
7.	.....	David Kirk.....	Exec. Sec.....
8.	.....	Lorne W J. Hurd.....	Assistant Exec. Sec.....
9.	July 14, 1964.....	Robert Ingram.....	Manager Can. Operations.....	Canadian Credit Union National Association
10.	.....	Robert Davis.....	League Legislative Specialist.....
11.	Oct. 20, 1964.....	Mrs. V. Wilson.....	Chairman, Comm. on Planning and Organization.....	Consumers' Association of Canada
12.	.....	Mrs. A. G. Brewer.....	National Advisory Council and former Publicity Chairman....
13.	Oct. 27, 1964.....	G. Egerton Brown.....	Director, Immediate Past Chairman of Executive Council.....	Canadian Chamber of Commerce
14.	.....	Paul Beaudoin, C.A.....	Member.....
15.	.....	W. F. Corning.....	Research Assistant.....
16	Oct. 27, 1964 and Mar. 23, 1965	Keith MacDonald.....	Member.....
17.	Oct. 27, Nov. 17, 1964; Mar. 9, 1965	N. Liston.....	Member.....	Canadian Chamber of Commerce and Retail Council of Canada
18.	Nov. 10, 1964.....	Dr. Jacob S. Ziegel.....	Associate Professor of Law, U. of Sask.
19.	Nov. 17, 1964 and Mar. 9, 1965	A. J. McKichan.....	General Manager.....	Retail Council of Canada
20.	.....	J. W. Erwin.....	Member.....
21.	.....	H. A Simmons.....	Member.....
22.	Mar. 9, 1965.....	Paul Harrison.....	Member.....
23.	.....	W. G. Upshall.....	Member.....
24.	Dec. 1, 1964.....	S. J. Enns.....	M.P., (Portage-Neepawa).....	Family Bureau of Greater Winnipeg
25.	.....	Daniel B. Fenny.....	Bureau Rep.....
26.	Dec. 8, 1964.....	Andre Laurin.....	Tech. Advisor of Ed. Service, Family Budget Section	Con. of National Trade Unions

LIST OF WITNESSES

	Date of Appearance	Name	Title	Organization
27.	Dec. 15, 1964.....	Emile Girardin.....	President.....	La. Fed. des Caisses Pop. Desjardins
28.	.....	Paul-Emile Charron.....	Assistant Director General.....
29.	Feb. 23, 1965.....	Douglas D. Irwin, C.A....	Financial Consultant, Ont. Select Committee on Consumer Credit
30.	Mar. 16, 1965.....	Don Rolling.....	Assistant Manager.....	Retail Merchants Association of Canada Inc.
31.	.....	W. W. Boys.....	Second Vice-Pres. Dom. Ass'n.....
32.	.....	Vincent R. Deir.....	Director, Ontario Association.....
33.	Mar. 23, 1965.....	Peter Paul Saunders.....	President.....	Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies
34.	.....	G. E. Trudeau.....	Director.....
35.	.....	J. Johnstone.....	Chairman, Legal and Legislative Committee
36.	.....	W. Watson.....	Vice-Pres.....
37.	.....	Dr. J. Singer.....	Research Director and Consulting Economist
38.	.....	E. Michael Howarth.....	Executive Vice-Pres.....
39.	.....	Kenneth Inch.....	Member.....
40.	Mar. 30, 1965.....	J. T. Wood.....	President.....	Canadian Consumer Loan Association
41.	.....	J. S. Land.....	Past Pres.....
42.	.....	E. J. Hendrie.....	Past Pres.....
43.	.....	R. A. Mackenzie.....	Member.....
44.	.....	R. G. Miller.....	Member.....
45.	.....	Helmut Miller.....	Member.....
46.	.....	R. W. Stevens.....	Counsel.....
47.	.....	F. C. Oakes.....	Public Relations Chairman.....
48.	April 21, 1966.....	Dan McCormack.....	Vice-Pres. and General Manager, Carling Acceptance Limited.

APPENDIX No. 3

BILLS REFERRED TO THE COMMITTEE

Shortly after the appointment of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit by the 26th Parliament, eleven bills already on the order paper were referred to us for study. All but one—the well-known disclosure bill which has been introduced in the Senate repeatedly since 1960—originated in the House of Commons. Some of these bills have changed sponsors during the life of the Committee, and a few new bills were subsequently referred. It sometimes happens that an identical bill, re-introduced in a new session, is again referred to the Committee; there are other instances in which a bill which has been several times introduced in Parliament with no change in substance, has been referred to us only once.

The bills considered by the Committee (14 in all when duplicates have been eliminated) are listed below in the order in which they were officially brought to our attention. Each bill is explained briefly, and some general comments follow.

Bill Referred By	Title and Purpose	Sponsor or Sponsors
26th Parliament	(1) An Act to make provision for the Disclosure of Information in respect of Finance Charges Every person who carries on the business of extending consumer credit would be required to disclose in writing to the consumer the total cost, expressed both as a lump sum and in simple annual interest.	Senator Croll
	(2) An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (wage-earners' assignments) Outlines procedure for granting debt-ridden wage-earners extension of time up to three years or longer in court's discretion, at price of discipline of budgetary control, to pay debts 100 cents on the dollar. Also provides for relief against unconscionable transactions.	Mr. Gilbert (Broadview) and Mr. Orlikow (Winnipeg North)
	(3) An Act to amend the Small Loans Act (advertising) Would require licensees advertising amount of monthly or periodic repayments to state cost in terms of annual percentage rates.	Mr. Orlikow
	(4) An Act to amend the Small Loans Act (interest rates) The rate of interest or "cost of loan" would be reduced from 2 to 1 per cent per month on any part of the unpaid principal balance not exceeding $300.	Mr. Orlikow and Mr Gauthier (Roberval)
	(5) An Act to provide for the Control of Consumer Credit Provides for disclosure of actual amount of interest charged on the sale of both real and personal property, as well as for restricting interest to 10 per cent per annum.	Mr. Scott (Danforth)
	(6) An Act to amend the Bills of Exchange Act and the Interest Act (off-store instalment sales) Amendment to the Bills of Exchange Act would give consumer three full days to cancel any bill or note given as collateral in sales made in his home or other "off-store" premises. The change in the Interest Act would compel the seller to include a clause to this effect in the contract.	Mr. Orlikow

23031—111

Bill Referred By	Title and Purpose	Sponsor or Sponsors
26th Parliament	(7) An Act to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (instalment purchases) Object is to enable persons who give bills or notes in retail credit transactions to defend themselves against transferees by requiring that note on face indicate relationship with a retail transaction.	Mr. Peters (Timiskaming)
	(8) An Act to amend the Interest Act Proposal that interest be limited to 12 per cent.	Mr. Orlikow Mr. Leduc (Gatineau) and Mr. Allard (Sherbrooke)
	(9) An Act to amend the Interest Act (application of Small Loans Act) Would limit interest rates generally to those stipulated in the Small Loans Act unless otherwise provided by law.	Mr. Martin (Timmins)
	(10) An Act to provide for Control of the use of Collateral Bills and Notes in Consumer Credit Transactions Consumers who sign promissory notes as collateral in credit transactions would be warned that they could become liable to innocent purchasers of same. Interest rates would be limited to 1 per cent per month on principal amounts up to $500 and one-half of 1 per cent on any balance exceeding $500.	Mr. Ryan (Spadina)
	(11) An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (captive sales financing) Would prohibit practice of "captive" sales financing by manufacturers or distributors of goods or associated sales finance companies, and so permit customers to shop in a free, competitive market.	Mr. Noble (Grey North)
27th Parliament	(12) An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act (truth in packaging) Bill is intended to ensure that a retail purchaser of packaged goods is fairly informed of the weight or measure of the contents.	Mr. Orlikow
	(13) An Act to amend the Small Loans Act (interest rates) The upper limit of loans to which the Small Loans Act appl es would be raised from $1,500 to $5,000. For loans over $1,000 the interest rate would be reduced to one-half of 1 per cent per month on unpaid balance.	Mr. Allard
	(14) An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act (trucking industry) "Trucking" would be added to the definition of a business enterprise. The definition of "small business enterprise" would be broadened to include a business with estimated gross revenue up to $300,000 instead of $250,000.	Mr. Leblanc (Laurier)

Comments on Bills

Disclosure

One of our main recommendations endorses the substance of the Senate bill dealing with disclosure in writing of the total cost of consumer credit both as a lump sum and in simple annual interest. This bill is a descendant of one first introduced in the Upper House in 1960, now simplified for the reason that some of the original provisions are being taken care of in other ways. The revision of the Bank Act now before Parliament, which followed the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, means that banks will lead the parade of financial institutions giving meaningful disclosure to their customers of the full cost to them of borrowing money. The long-time sponsor of the bill, which applies the same principle to other lenders has said that, "We can expect and cannot accept less from other credit grantors in the field."

As to the disclosure bills originating in the House of Commons, one goes beyond our terms of reference in that it covers real property transactions as well as consumer credit. The other would require small loans licensees to specify in their advertising the cost of loans. We agree with the objective of this bill, and one of our recommendations attests to that.

Interest

There is ample evidence of widespread support for bringing down the cost of borrowing. Three members of parliament have separately introduced bills to amend the Interest Act so as to limit the interest rate to 12 per cent per annum. Another bill would extend to other types of loans the rates fixed under the Small Loans Act. Three separate bills propose a reduction in the rates under the Small Loans Act, one of them providing also for extension of the scope of the Act to loans up to $5,000, a plan which has solid support and which is among our recommendations.

Limitations on interest rates are also set out in two other bills dealing respectively with disclosure and with credit purchases. The Committee has considered these proposals as well as others made to us during the hearings. We do recommend that some limitations be put on interest rates, and we have particularly kept in mind the importance of ensuring that low-income people have access to credit at reasonable rates for essential needs.

Wage-Earners' Assignments

Recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Act will enable the setting up of machinery to make it possible for wage-earners to assume orderly payment of their debts without extreme sacrifice. This is essentially the purpose of one of the bills referred to us.

Bills and Notes in Consumer Credit Transactions

One of the bills before us would require bills and notes in consumer credit transactions to be so identified in order to warn the purchaser of the circumstances; another would give warning to the consumer that if he signs the document it may be sold to a third party against whom he will have no claim. One of our recommendations should take care of the undesirable practices which these bills are intended to do away with.

Captive Sales Financing

The Committee agrees that customers should be free to shop in a competitive market, and we believe that our recommendations will work towards that end.

Off-Store Sales

We recommend that when purchases are made from itinerant salesmen, time be allowed for a cooling-off period, something that has been urged on us by many responsible people and is contemplated by one of the bills referred to us.

Truth in Packaging

We are in sympathy with the purpose of this bill, but it is more appropriately a subject for the report on Consumer Credit (Prices).

Small Businesses

This subject is beyond our terms of reference.

Present State of Legislation

Experience has convinced us of the truth of a statement made when the Committee was set up, that there is need for "an attempted consolidation of these inter-related acts." After studying the subject for many months one of our most knowledgeable members informed the House of Commons that there was "need for complementary and cooperative action by the federal and provincial governments for the purpose of securing the protection of consumers . . ." Considerable progress has been made in this direction, and many parts of the report bear this out, but much still remains to be done in this rapidly changing area of business.

APPENDIX No. 4

Selected References

1. Proceedings of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit, 1964-66, Queen's Printer, Ottawa.

2. Annual Reports of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, Small Loans Companies and Money-Lenders licensed under the Small Loans Act 1939, 1940 to 1964, Queen's Printer, Ottawa.

3. Report of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Banking and Commerce respecting Small Loan Companies, No. 14, June 1, 1938, Queen's Printer, Ottawa.

4. Various annual and other publications of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on consumer credit, Queen's Printer, Ottawa. Note especially monthly report on Credit Statistics, Catalogue No. 61-004.

5. Report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, 1964, Queen's Printer, Ottawa.

6. Poapst, J. V., Consumer Survey, a study prepared for the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, 1965, Queen's Printer, Ottawa.

7. Urquhart, M. C. and Buckley, K. A. H., Editors, Historical Statistics of Canada, 1965, Cambridge University Press.

8. Final Report of the Royal Commission on the Cost of Borrowing Money, the Cost of Credit and Related Matters in the Province of Nova Scotia, 1965, Queen's Printer, Halifax.

9. Final Report of the Select Committee of the Ontario Legislature on Consumer Credit, Sessional Paper No. 85, June 10, 1965.

10. Ziegel, Jacob S., "Retail Instalment Sales Legislation: A Historical and Comparative Survey", University of Toronto Law Journal, 1962, Vol. XIV, No. 2, p.p. 143-175.

11. Ziegel, Jacob S. and Olley, R. E., Editors, Consumer Credit in Canada, proceedings of a Conference on Consumer Credit May 2-3, 1966, The University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, Canada. Note especially Professors Fortin and Neufeld.

12. Juster, Francis Thomas, and Shay, Robert P., Consumer Sensitivity to Finance Rates, National Bureau of Economic Research, 1964, New York.

13. "Ethics in America: Norms and Deviations", Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, January, 1966.

14. Annual Reports of the Army Benevolent Fund, 1962-64, Ottawa.

15. Bill S-17, An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act as passed by the Senate, 26th May, 1966, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, See Part X.

16. Bill C-222, An Act respecting Banks and Banking, 1st Reading, July 7, 1966.

17. The Attorney-General for Ontario V. Barfried Enterprises Ltd., Canada Supreme Court Reports, 1963, p. 570.

THE SENATE

Friday, February 17, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets tabled:

Copy of an Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of British Columbia for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, chapter 54, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English text).

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-261, to establish the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Leonard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-261, to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Louis P. Gélinas: Honourable senators, before this bill receives third reading may I make a few remarks?

In this house yesterday, and also in the committee this morning, a question was raised about the caisses populaires being included in the other institutions coming within the provisions of this bill. The caisses populaires do not at this time come under the jurisdiction of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and there is not as yet a provincial deposit insurance fund in Quebec, but, since 1948 the caisses populaires have had their own deposit insurance fund. That fund today amounts to approximately $2 million. Therefore, the depositors are protected now, and have been for the past 19 years.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

17 February 1967

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 17th February, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 21, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT PARIS, FRANCE

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 9, the adjourned debate on the notice of the Honourable Senator Aird that he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twelfth Annual Conference of NATO Parliamentarians held at Paris, France, 9th November to 14th November, 1966, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I did not intend to speak on this subject today—or on any other, for that matter—so I want to reassure you at once by saying that I have left at home the few notes I had. Therefore, whatever my speech may lack in substance, it at least will have the merit of brevity.

First, I wish to congratulate Senator Aird and Senator Lefrançois on two excellent pieces of reporting.

When I recall that the last Canadian delegation to the NATO Parliamentary Association Conference consisted of such persons as Senator Brooks, Senator Aird and Senator Lefrançois, I must say I am immensely pleased. But I have felt inclined to complain about the casual manner in which we select our delegates to the meetings of international associations.

I was a delegate to the NATO Parliamentary meeting in New York two years ago. Parliament had been dissolved and the members of the House of Commons were no longer members of Parliament. They were busy with the general election. Finally, in order to get delegates to the conference, the authorities responsible scraped the bottom of the barrel, and two or three days before the conference was to open in New York I was asked if I would go along. I consented to go only when I found I was to be accompanied by some very substantial persons, including the Deputy Leader on this side of the house (Hon. Mr. Choquette) and Senator Chubby Power.

Nevertheless, when I arrived at the meetings in New York I found that the British, the Americans and the French had evidently exercised great care in the calibre of the people they had selected to represent them in their delegations.

I remember that Senator Power, unfortunately, was called away on business. At the first meeting of the Political and Economic Committee Senator Choquette and I found ourselves sitting opposite the British, French and American delegates.

The French delegation was completely brilliant. Its chairman, an Alsatian, spoke English, almost the most beautiful English I have heard in many years. Indeed, Dean Rusk, in a meeting which he addressed at the conference, said he hoped to live long enough to learn to speak English as well as this French delegate.

The British delegation had persons of the calibre of Lord Gladwyn Jebb, a man who had been the British Minister to the United Nations, who had served as the British Ambassador to Paris, and who has recently written an authoritative volume on foreign affairs. With him was the Baroness Elliott, wife of the once famous Walter Elliott, a leading light of the British Conservative party and, incidentally, a half-sister of Margot Asquith, a woman who had been attending these conferences year after year. When she discussed NATO and its obligations and difficulties she reminded me of a good sports editor sitting down and discussing sports.

These people sat directly opposite us and next to them were the Americans. In that delegation there were Senator Saltonstall, a distinguished gentleman from Boston; Senator Case of New Jersey, one of the ablest senators in the United States and an expert on foreign affairs; the distinguished Senator Javits, who is now being mentioned as vice-presidential candidate in the United States in the coming elections, and lastly there was Senator Robert Kennedy.

As we sat facing such eminent delegates it was brought home to me that if we are going to attend conferences such as that, we must be more careful in selecting our representatives. This holds true of the Canada United States Interparliamentary Group.

I am sure His Honour the Speaker will understand what I have in mind when I say that the United States selects for these conferences people of the highest standing and order, and they maintain a continuity.

Senator George Aiken and Congressman Cornelius Gallagher have been on these conferences year after year. All of you will remember two or three years ago when these gentlemen visited us here. We had on the floor of this house Mr. Mansfield, the Democratic leader in the United States Senate. We had Senator Saltonstall, and Senator

Sherman Cooper, a man of great distinction in American politics. These were the people they sent, and they have been sending them to us year after year. I must confess that the people we have been sending to these conferences, a lot of the present company including His Honour the Speaker excepted, have not been of quite the same calibre.

I remember the day we met these people in a committee room at the last conference. Do you know what they had in front of them on their desks? They had Mr. Gordon's book Troubled Canada, and they knew all about his writings. While these are charming people, while in their hospitality they are magnificent, when you meet them face to face across a committee table they are a bit different. They can be cold, hard-headed and at times ruthless.

Again I say there is some value in being representatives at these conferences, especially the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, but if we are going to do it, in the name of common sense let us do it right or not at all. I would rather not go to a conference of that kind than go there improperly or inadequately briefed, and with delegates not quite up to the standard of the Americans.

So far as NATO is concerned, I was interested the other day when Senator Aird and Senator Lefrançois spoke pridefully of the great prestige which Canada and our Canadian delegates enjoyed at this conference. It may well be that they enjoy such prestige, but I must confess that at the conference I attended Canada's prestige was at a very low ebb.

Let me give you an example of what I mean. I found myself on the Political and Economic Committee, and was one of the members appointed to draft the recommendations and resolutions. Well, all that meant was that the secretariat drafted the resolutions. When the final draft came before us, I discovered that the main recommendation, which I am quoting only from memory, said "We recommend that NATO continue the integration of American and European forces."

American and European forces! I took that resolution to Senator Saltonstall and I said, "Senator, surely you do not agree with this. Do you realize what we have in Europe in the way of NATO forces? Do you realize that of the fourteen nations represented in this conference, we are at least fourth in our military contribution to NATO, and here you are recommending to the NATO Council a continuation of the integration of American and European forces?" Senator Saltonstall replied, "You are perfectly right, and if you wish to bring it up on the floor I will be glad to support you." There was no sense in bringing it up on the floor, but I wrote a letter and sent it to the president of the conference. He wrote back to me under his own hand and said, "Do you want to say American, Canadian and European forces?" I said no, that there was no need for that at all. All that was required was to say "North American and European forces." And in his own hand he wrote that in.

These people apologized for this oversight. They admitted, "We know what Canada has been doing; and we don't do this to disregard you or to downgrade you, we just did not think about Canada." And, honourable senators, this is true—they just do not think about us. But that was the way the resolution was going to go.

Now, I say that the only way we can change this situation, if we want to change it, is to see that in future the Canadian delegates to these conferences are not selected because the Government or the Senate want to give somebody a trip. I know there is some value in members of the Commons and the Senate being allowed to go to these conferences and to acquire the information that can be acquired there, but there should be some continuity in the leaders. When we send two or three delegates each year they should not leave Ottawa with the small degree of information given to them. I am not blaming the Department of External Affairs. I remember that before leaving for the two conferences I attended, I went before extremely able men from the Department of External Affairs for a half-hour briefing. Honourable senators, this is nonsense. You just cannot come in out of the cold and absorb all the knowledge that External Affairs has in five or ten minutes' briefing.

As regards going to NATO conferences, I think there is something else that should be said. We in Canada are inclined to speak of a NATO that was born some twenty years ago. Well, two years ago one of the leading European experts on foreign affairs wrote in a European journal that NATO in fact had become an historical relic. He said, in effect, this is not the thing we set up in 1949—or whenever it was set up—and this is not the world that existed when we set up NATO; therefore, the time has come to reassess our position.

I think the time has come to reassess Canada's position, and we should stop this talk about fulfilling our obligations to NATO. How many members of the Senate or of the Commons know exactly what are our obligations to NATO, and how many senators can rise and tell me now whether if we are called upon to fulfil our North Atlantic obligations to NATO we could put to sea the ships and men to fulfil those obligations? I say we cannot, and I am sure the Government Leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) knows that. We could not today put to sea the ships, the submarines or any naval forces to fulfil what we have agreed to do under our obligations to NATO.

I read in this morning's press—and I am not going to quote the article—that yesterday in the British House of Commons there was presented a White Paper on Defence. The vital thing about it was that the British intimated clearly to West Germany that unless she agreed to pay more towards the upkeep of the British Rhine forces, a great number of those forces would be withdrawn. But the White Paper said more. It was produced in the British House of Commons and was subsequently explained at a press conference by the Right Honourable Mr. Healey, Secretary of State for Defence, who said:

> A reduction of European-force levels by both NATO and the Warsaw Pact powers would contribute to a detente between eastern and western Europe.

Then going on to note that NATO itself, with the withdrawal of France, is re-examining its European strategy, it expresses the hope that the Allies may find it possible to withdraw some of its forces and rely on constantly improved air transport to provide for front-line reinforcements.

In his press conference Mr. Healey also said:

> There is little danger of aggression now from the Soviet Union and its allies.

And he went on to say:

> The likelihood of a major war in Europe is very small indeed, because it would certainly become nuclear immediately.

Honourable senators, in the light of this, in the light of France's withdrawal, in the light of vastly changed conditions in Europe and the rest of the world, why do we in Canada go on continuously paying for fulfilling our obligations to NATO? What are those obligations under this changed strategy? What are those obligations under the changed NATO itself?

One criticism I feel like making of our Government—though I am sure I will be accused of partisanship—is that year after year, we get no information of any substance from our Government about what our foreign policy really is.

Let me give you an example of this. Two years ago the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West)—and I am sorry he is not in his seat—came before this House and with a great flourish told us we were agreeing to send troops to Cyprus. I remember then asking him whether any other governments had decided to send troops to Cyprus; and he said, quite properly, that they were not in a position to reveal this information, that it was confidential. But he did say that other nations were sending troops, and that we were not alone in this enterprise. He particularly mentioned Brazil. Brazil has sent nothing to Cyprus. The Scandinavian countries have sent a small token force; Ireland has sent a small token force; but we have been there for two years, and we have been told continuously that almost immediately, or in a very short time, our forces would be withdrawn. Well, they have not been withdrawn. This is not a UN force, and I cannot see how it can do anything for the prestige of the United Nations, as everybody knows it is not a UN force. Even the UN tabs on the caps of these Canadian troops are paid for by Canada. We pay for their food, for their clothing, and for their transportation. We would pay the pensions of dependents of any of our soldiers killed in Cyprus.

What is it all about? Does any honourable senator believe that this country, alone almost in the world, has some obligation to keep the peace between Turkey and Greece? Honourable senators, these are two NATO powers; they are on one of the flanks of NATO. If it is the obligation of any nation or any number of nations to keep Greece and Turkey apart, that obligation is with the NATO nations themselves.

Hon. Mr. Rattenbury: Would the honourable senator permit a question, please?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Yes, indeed.

Hon. Mr. Rattenbury: In view of the job you say we are doing in Cyprus, are you familiar with our naval commitment to NATO, and how far we are short of it?

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I think it is true that if tomorrow we were asked to put certain ships to sea manned by a certain number of sailors, we would not be in a position to do it.

Hon. Mr. Rattenbury: That is an observation.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): That is an observation, but I think if you look into the facts you will find it is correct.

I say it is not the role of Canada, it is not the duty of Canada to go to this far-off island and keep peace between Turkey and Greece.

The distinguished Senator Fulbright, in a book which he has just had published, said that Americans today are acting as if they were God's agents on earth to see over all human behaviour. I think this criticism is fair, but I am afraid we are getting in the frame of mind—a little nation such as Canada—that we think it is our duty to keep peace in Cyprus, and so we have been constantly told without the least substance of truth. We have been told constantly that the presence of our troops there averted war. I have not seen one scintilla of evidence to support that claim. I do not believe it, and I doubt if any honourable senator in this House believes that, just because we have a certain number of troops there, Turkey has been kept from going to war with Greece. It is not pleasant for me to say these things.

I had some other observations to make—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I have not the facility of my honourable friend to keep in my mind all these things. I am only acting as a pinch-hitter here to keep this House in session today. I was asked just 20 minutes before the house met if I would rise and continue this debate. I said that I had no notes, but that I would do my best.

An Hon. Senator: You are "pinching" all right!

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I hope I have not unduly annoyed anyone, but I do insist that we in Canada deserve more information from our Government about what it is doing.

What is our policy with respect to Vietnam? I have tried to read the statements of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I frankly say I cannot make head nor tail of them; I do not know what he is talking about. This is not as it should be. I think some further information should have been given this House about Cyprus. The matter was brought in here with a great flourish. The Government Leader said this was a new fact in the Senate: we are now giving you information about foreign affairs. We are asking the Senate to agree to this. And we agreed to it, but since then we have not heard a blessed word from Senator Connolly about the force in Cyprus.

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie: Honourable senators, may I make a suggestion to Senator O'Leary?

As I think you know, this is a field in which I have had a life-long interest and one in which I continue to try to keep informed. I was very much interested in what Senator O'Leary told us; it does suggest to me we do need more information. We have in the Senate a Standing Committee on External Relations. The chairman of that committee is not in the chamber this afternoon, as he usually is, and I would hope that Senator O'Leary might suggest to the appropriate authorities of the Senate and to the chairman of that committee that, in due course, it should meet and call before it the kind of people who could give to the members, and through them to the Senate, the kind of information for which Senator O'Leary has asked.

The only other thing I want to add is that I understand there is a conference being held at Scarborough near Toronto, between March 2 and 5 on the question, "Is NATO obsolete?"—which is exactly the point Senator O'Leary has raised. It is to be held under the auspices of three distinguished organizations, and those taking part in it are prominent and knowledgeable individuals. I would hope and expect that out of that conference we would get some reports which would be useful to Senator O'Leary and the members of the Senate.

Much to my regret, and although I have some responsibility for the organization and the calling of this conference, I will not be able to attend because of commitments in western Canada. However, I thought it would be in order for me to suggest to the Senate and to Senator O'Leary (Carleton) that this matter might be pursued a bit further by the Standing Committee on External Relations.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have to leave the chamber in ten minutes, and I should like to say a few words on this subject before leaving.

I congratulate Senator O'Leary (Carleton) for bringing up this matter of whether we in Canada have an obligation to police the various nations of the world that get into trouble because of their quarrelsome character. When we were sending men to the Congo I expressed a great deal of concern and doubt as to what we were doing. I think I expressed the same sentiments when we sent men to Cyprus, and I have voiced them on various other occasions with regard to all the extra-Canadian military activities of ours. So, while in this off-hand manner I am not expressing an opinion with respect to what we are doing at this moment in Cyprus, I do think, in support of Senator O'Leary's suggestion, that we ought to be fully and continuously informed as to what we are doing and what our representatives are doing around the world.

Let me say something about Senator O'Leary's comments as to the conference which he attended. I think one of the criticisms which he did not level at us, at himself, or at his fellows on that occasion, and one that is due, is a criticism of our modesty. That is particularly pointed up in this instance by the fact that we had two leading members of this chamber facing a larger number, but they were the equal of any of them, namely Senator O'Leary (Carleton) and Senator Choquette. At the same time, I do feel that our delegations to these conferences are necessarily weak—not in the quality of the delegates themselves but in the method of selection, in the lack of a briefing, and in the lack of continuity.

For some years I spent a great deal of time on the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I felt I was being honoured and favoured on several occasions by representing Canada at those conferences abroad. I thought it was a compliment and a privilege to be able to represent Canada, but there is no continuity in the representation.

Though I attended a conference not long ago in the West Indies, at the request of the government of that country, I have not recently attended other conferences. In saying that, please do not misunderstand me—I have no wish to attend any more of them because there is plenty of work to do here in Canada. My loyalty, my obligation, and my wishes are to serve Canada and to serve her here.

I do think, however, that we should give further consideration to the whole question of our representation at these affairs. Notwithstanding the desirability of new members going abroad and learning what it is to represent Canada, and learning something of the nations that they visit, we should put that selfish attitude aside. As Senator O'Leary said, the leaders of the delegations should have a certain continuity, and be men who have devoted themselves to the study of foreign affairs and of the subjects that are brought up for discussion. Moreover, they should be men who are capable of holding their own in all circumstances, as Senator O'Leary and Senator Choquette did on that occasion.

It is my opinion, arising out of the honourable senator's description, that he should not have been satisfied with having the chairman change the resolution. He should have accepted that as an opportunity to tell the rest of them what Canada is doing and has done in world politics.

Thank you, honourable senators, for allowing me to say these few words. Let me thank Senator O'Leary (Carleton) for his free and vigorous thought, and for the wonderful way in which he expresses it in this chamber.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Everett, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 21, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 21, 1967

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES

DEBATE ON MEETING OF NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS AT PARIS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we proceed with our business this evening I should like to rise on a point of personal privilege to make reference to the remarks of Senator O'Leary (Carleton) on Friday last when, unfortunately, I was not present.

First, I should like to commend the honourable senator for contributing to this debate, though he was not a delegate at the NATO meeting in Paris last fall. I do not want him to think that in saying that I am applying soft language first in order to deliver a knock-out punch later. I do thank him for his participation in that debate and compliment him upon his contribution.

I think it is fair for me to say this evening that I have a complaint—one which I believe is shared by all of us—that too few honourable senators participate in our debates. In view of the ability of the people who are here, this is regrettable. For example, we seldom show much enthusiasm for sitting in the evening. I am not against that lack of enthusiasm, but I feel that we might very well accomplish a good deal by sitting occasionally in the evening as well as in the afternoon.

I know some of these remarks will appear in the press, for it is only when we make critical remarks of the Senate that they get to the press. But perhaps we owe it to ourselves that this should be said.

I also think that after a relatively long adjournment when we come back to business senators are very often unprepared to proceed with debates, some of which are urgent. Without being in any way invidious to any individual, I think this is rather unfair to all honourable senators.

I should like therefore to appeal to the more experienced senators to lead the way and to encourage the newer members of the Senate to make contributions to the debates as various pieces of legislation come before us. This is the work of the Senate. It is the work that is reported from the Senate, and this chamber is well qualified to do it.

Since I have been the leader I have tried to do as much as I can to spread sponsorship of bills as widely as possible. I cannot ask members of the Opposition to sponsor a bill and defend the Government—although on one occasion when my party was in opposition I sponsored a Government bill, explained it, and urged that the Senate should pass it, but this was an unusual occasion.

The business of the Senate and the work of every committee is every senator's responsibility. That is the first point I want to make.

Honourable senators, the second point is this. Senator O'Leary (Carleton) talked about the inadequacy of preparation on material that is available for delegates who attend international meetings. I think he gave an unfortunate example, that of NATO parliamentarians' meeting held in New York two years ago when Parliament was dissolved. He and Senator Choquette and Senator Power were appointed to be members of the Canadian delegation. The plain fact of the matter was that the members of the House of Commons did not exist at the time, because it was during an election.

I was particularly pleased that on that occasion there were members of the Senate who were able to go to New York and represent the Canadian Parliament. And I say frankly to Senator O'Leary—and I wish he were present to hear this—that if the occasion arose again I would be the first to nominate him to go, and these other senators too, because I think the capacity to do that resides in this house, and on that occasion they discharged their responsibility very well.

He complained that on that occasion there were poor briefings. As a matter of fact, on that occasion there may not have been any briefings. It is perhaps of interest that I should recall the first NATO meeting I attended. I was appointed by Senator Ross Macdonald. The only briefing that we had was a half-hour period on the morning we left for overseas. I made up my mind on that occasion that if ever I were involved again, this procedure would not be repeated. The next year, I insisted that NATO delegates be given thorough briefings over a period of time by officials from various departments who had specialized knowledge, and I think these briefings were of value.

When a senator or a member of the Commons is appointed to one of these delegations, not only is he there officially, but in my humble opinion he has a personal responsibility to see to it that he represents his country as adequately as he possibly can.

At the second NATO meeting to which I was sent—and there was some continuity in this because I did go a second year—I was in the Opposition at the time and arranged with an official of the Research Council, an official of the Department of Defence Production, and an official of another department,—I forget which—to help by giving me some material for papers which could be submitted.

The Economic Council of NATO at the time was going to discuss the question of the economics of work in outer space. I remember a particularly useful paper that was prepared, and which I adjusted to suit the requirements of the NATO meeting. The paper dealt with the Alouette weather satellite that was put up by Canada, a non-nuclear power and not working in outer space at the time. This was of immense value and interest to other NATO countries who did not have the capacity to put these vehicles into outer space, and this has been used a number of times.

I use that as an illustration—and I hope you believe me—not to say what a great fellow I am or to pat myself on the back, but because opportunities are available to every parliamentarian at international meetings, if he will but use the occasions to do these things. This involves a good deal of personal initiative.

I remember too on the occasion when Senator Javits was chairman of the Economic Committee, trying to do as much as I personally could to help him. Senator L. P. Beaubien was there at the time, and we both took some initiative in trying to help him develop a corporation which later became known as ADELA and which acquired a capital of some $25 million to assist developments going on in Latin America.

There was no doubt about the fact that Senator Javits and the other members of that committee appreciated the kind of help given to the chairman on that occasion. But one has to seek out these opportunities. Here again in the Senate there are people who cannot only seek out such opportunities but can take advantage of them.

Senator O'Leary mentioned Lady Elliott in the course of his speech. She was particularly impressed with the work done by the Canadian delegation on that occasion. I do not think there is anybody who can speak English as fast as she can, but she happened to have on her committee Mr. Paul Tardif, Member of Parliament for Russell, who also can speak English pretty fast. When he found that Lady Elliott was getting her words in between his, he very quickly switched into fast French and beat her to it!

However, the idea of good general briefings has got across to the officials in charge of the work of these international meetings and anybody who goes to the meetings now, after the years of experience that some parliamentarians have had, could not complain that there were not opportunities to be properly briefed.

Let me say something about the Commonwealth meeting last year. I happened to be the Chairman of the General Council, not the President of the Canadian Branch at that time. I arranged as a personal initiative first to get a paper for committee work for that conference on what Canada was doing in the field of education in external aid. This was of immense value to the committee considering the problem.

I arranged, and had to pay out a good deal of personal money, to get a professional opinion on changing the rules in the House of Commons. This paper was a contribution of value to the people who participated in that conference.

I had a paper done by officials of the Senate on the workings of the Upper House in Canada, and the debate in the committee on that particular subject was greatly enhanced by reason of the material provided in that paper, and particularly because of the way our retired colleague Senator Hugessen dealt with the material.

I also arranged for a paper to be prepared on the work in the field of external aid by the Canadian Churches in Commonwealth Countries. I was most grateful to Dr. Bennett of the Canadian Branch of the World Council of Churches in Toronto for the invaluable material he sent to me for that purpose, and to Father George of the Canadian Catholic Conference in Ottawa for information as to the work done by missionaries of the Catholic faith.

It may be that other international groups such as the Canada-United States Committee, and the Interparliamentary Union are not as fully briefed as are the others. I would think that in the case of the Interparliamentary Union the briefing is now quite thorough.

In my view Senator O'Leary (Carleton) is perhaps too pessimistic about the value of the Canadian contribution to this work. This is demonstrated by the fact that the first Canadian President of the Interparliamentary Union was Senator Dessureault from Quebec, who sits here tonight; the first Canadian President of NATO Parliamentarians was Mr. Jean Dubé of the House of Commons, and he is in office now; and I happen to be the second Canadian chosen to be the Chairman of the General Council of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, having been preceded in office a number of years ago by Senator Roebuck.

Senator O'Leary also complained that since the Cyprus force was originally established, "we have not heard a blessed word from Senator Connolly about the force in Cyprus." I wish he had been with me last Sunday night when I had the privilege of occupying the pulpit in Glebe United Church to make a speech. If he had been there he would certainly have heard the "blessed word"—but I do not know that he would have described it that way. I am pleased to say that tomorrow afternoon I shall attend a function here in the city in connection with the installation of the new Roman Catholic Archbishop, and I am going to be able to speak aloud in my own church. The only time I have ever spoken aloud in my own church was at my wedding, and that was fine for me but not for my wife.

Senator O'Leary was critical of our role in Cyprus and of our role in NATO. Now I would say to Senator O'Leary if he wants to be critical of these two items that is fine with me; that is his business and he, like any other senator, is entitled to criticize. But I do not think it is necessarily incumbent upon me to make a speech about Cyprus or about NATO on every occasion an incident happens to come up. He encourages me, apparently, to make speeches.

I have had many words of complaint from some of my colleagues that I speak too much in this chamber, and I do not have to look far away to see some of my most cogent critics who now laugh. But the plain fact of the matter is that if Senator O'Leary wishes to criticize, or if any other senator wishes to criticize in this way, there are practical ways of accomplishing results. These were indicated by Senator MacKenzie and Senator Roebuck in the debate the other day. Questions can be asked, and when they are asked I shall do my best to get answers to them. We have too in this house the invaluable device of bringing matters of serious national consequence to the attention of the Senate. Senator O'Leary could inaugurate a debate on this type of topic if he so desired.

There is yet another step available to him: he could have directed his attention to one of his own colleagues, the chairman of the Standing Committee on External Relations. I am not being critical of Senator Thorvaldson when I say this, but the External Relations committee has the capacity to investigate problems of this kind any time it desires. It is a simple matter to raise this with the chairman of that committee. I am sure he would be more than pleased to convene a committee meeting and arrange for the appropriate individuals to attend.

Having read Senator O'Leary's speech, and believing in the old adage that you should not send a boy on a man's errand, I have already taken the initiative and have spoken to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and asked him if he would be willing to come and talk about these matters before the Standing Committee on External Relations. He informed me that he would be more than happy to do so at any time the chairman or Senator O'Leary desired.

Honourable senators, I hope I have not taken too much time on these points but it seemed an appropriate opportunity to deal with some of them in fairness to us all.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I did not know we were going to have a debate on this subject tonight, otherwise I would have been better prepared—perhaps that would have been unfortunate in itself!

As I understand the Leader of the Government, he has two complaints. One is that there are not enough members making speeches, either long or short, on the subjects that come before this chamber for consideration.

A number of honourable senators were formerly members of the House of Commons, and they appreciate that there is an incentive to speak in that house which is not apparent in the Senate. I realized that when I was appointed to the Senate. The members of the House of Commons, of course, represent constituents, and when they rise in their place to speak, most of them are speaking not only to the House of Commons but also to their constituents, whether they be in Saskatchewan, New Brunswick or elsewhere. In this chamber we are supposed to give sober second thought to legislation, and I have often thought that there should be more sober second thought given by honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In an institution such as ours, where we have more than one hundred members, I do not think the debating should be left almost entirely on many occasions to ten or fifteen honourable senators. We have an excellent opportunity to prepare speeches in the Senate. Before receiving bills for consideration here they are debated for sometime at the resolution stage in the House of Commons and the press deals with the principle and the subject matter of each bill. Then after further debate the bill is given second reading, and more often than not it goes to a committee. So, if honourable senators wish to speak on these subjects there is splendid groundwork available upon which they can build their speeches and make comment, give sober second thought, and make changes if necessary.

So much for speeches. I, as Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, together with my colleague, have asked a good many honourable senators time and time again to prepare speeches, but because on occasion even months pass before matters of which we have been notified are brought before the house, these honourable gentlemen are often away when the bill in question is before the Senate. I know that some honourable senators who expect to speak on matters that are coming up in a few days in this chamber are not present tonight. However, we do our best so far as arranging for debate is concerned.

I am sorry that I was not here the other evening when Senator O'Leary (Carleton) delivered a very good speech, but I have read it. He spoke on NATO, and he seemed to know what he was talking about. He was a bit critical about the preparation of the delegations we send to these various conferences. I agree with the honourable Leader of the Government that our delegations—at least, those of which I have been a member—have generally been well prepared. I could make the one criticism, that very often the delegates are chosen three or four weeks or perhaps longer before the conference, and then at the last minute some of them discover that they cannot go and others who have had no opportunity of preparing themselves have to take their place.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is very true.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I was a member of the delegation to the NATO Conference at Paris this past year. I have not spoken in the Senate on NATO problems as yet, but I am going to speak on them when the matter of defence comes up. As anyone who has followed the situation in NATO over the past two years knows, it changes almost from month to month and even from day to day. A speech one would make on NATO today might not be appropriate in two or three weeks' time.

However, NATO is there, and it will need to be there for as long as Europe is divided into East and West, and for as long as Berlin is divided. There is no question about that. NATO is not obsolete. NATO will be needed just as long as Russia keeps 124 or 125 divisions—a tremendous army that she is showing no signs of reducing—in eastern Europe. NATO surely will not be in a position to reduce its forces while Russia keeps such a large force there. China and Russia are having their differences now, but they may resolve them in a few years.

I must not get into my speech on defence at this time, but what I want to say is that NATO is not obsolete, and the people of this country and of the western nations must not think so.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I was a member of the delegation to the United Nations on several occasions, and I want to say that our External Affairs people, whether it be in connection with the United Nations, NATO, or any other organization, brief our delegates very well.

Cyprus was mentioned in the speeches made the other day on NATO. I would point out that Cyprus has nothing to do with NATO; the Gaza Strip has nothing to do with NATO; Malta has nothing to do with NATO; and the Congo has nothing to do with NATO. These are matters entirely outside its jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They are peacekeeping operations.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, but they are under the United Nations.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They are peacekeeping operations.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: But they are not under NATO.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, that is right. They are under the United Nations.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: So, the speeches made the other afternoon had almost nothing to do with NATO at all, except the remarks of Senator O'Leary (Carleton).

As I was going to say, I went with Senator Dessureault to Belgrade one year. Senator Dessureault, the head of the Interparliamentary Union, and our officials in Belgrade had meetings every morning and we were thoroughly briefed.

I was at the United Nations in 1955 when the present Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, was the Minister of External Affairs. Every morning for an hour, before we went over to the United Nations building to discuss the different problems, we had a good briefing. If it was a military matter that was being discussed, men like General Burns spoke to us. We also had meetings with Mr. Ritchie, who was our ambassador to the United Nations. There were others as well, and they were all completely competent. These men always gave us briefings. I learned this lesson well when I headed the Canadian delegation to the United Nations in 1962.

The delegation to the last NATO conference was an excellent one. I want to pay a tribute to Mr. Ryan, who was the head of that delegation, for the good work he did. We were briefed before we left Canada, and we were briefed in Paris.

I am not one of those who believe that when a delegation is sent to the United Nations, or to any other international conference, it must be composed always of old members. I think these delegations should be composed half of new members and half of older members. How are the new members going to learn if they are not offered the opportunity to attend these meetings? In my opinion, a well balanced delegation to the United Nations, NATO, or anywhere else, is one that has among its members experienced men who have attended before, and also bright, new men who are willing to take their part.

Honourable senators, I have nothing more to say. I feel that the officials of our Department of External Affairs do an excellent job, and they are the people who are responsible for the briefing of our delegations.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before any other member speaks may I observe that the discussion participated in so far by the honourable Leader of the Government and the honourable Leader of the Opposition has been based upon a question of privilege, and I would remind the House that the subject matter of the discussion is still on the Order Paper. The debate in which the honourable Senator O'Leary (Carleton) spoke was adjourned and its continuation is on the Order Paper for this evening. There will be an opportunity for further debate on the subject.

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie: Honourable senators, I do not wish to make a speech, but merely to make one comment further to what I said the other day.

I think Senator O'Leary (Carleton) was unduly modest in his opinion of the representatives that Canada sends to conferences abroad. I have attended a great many of these conferences, beginning back in 1924 with the League of Nations when Senator Dandurand, Honourable E. M. MacDonald and Dr. Skelton were the delegates. At all of these conferences, almost without exception, I have been proud of the quality, character, ability and intelligence of the Canadian delegates who attended. They may not have made as many speeches, and they may not have talked for as long as some of those to whom Senator O'Leary referred, but there are reasons for this. The main one is to be found in the very nature of Canada itself in relation to the importance of the issues involved as compared with countries such as the United States, the U.S.S.R., Britain or France.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege. I regard it as a point of privilege because the remarks that have been made refer to some extent to all of us who have at any time represented this chamber at an international conference. I say that in order to bring my remarks within the limits imposed by His Honour the Speaker.

I am sure Senator O'Leary (Carleton) would be quite capable of replying to the comments on his speech by the honourable Leader of the Government, if he felt that any reply was required. However, I did notice that the honourable Leader of the Government suggested that Senator O'Leary (Carleton) should have raised the points that he did raise by some other method of procedure, such as by question, inquiry, or reference to a committee. I point out that Senator O'Leary made his remarks in what surely is the most normal and appropriate way, and on an occasion on which it was opportune to make them, namely, when he was resuming a debate which was adjourned on his motion, the subject of which was exactly the subject of his remarks—a NATO conference, and the attendance at it of Canadian representatives.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate upon his recovery from an attack of influenza. The rest seems to have done him a great deal of good because he rose promptly on a question of privilege immediately we began this sitting. This is a matter that he could very easily have brought up other than on a question of privilege.

I should just like to say that some of us who have served as delegates at these international gatherings have certain reservations about what the leader has said.

JOINT COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Otto had been substituted for that of Mr. Andras on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living; and that the name of Mr. McQuaid had been substituted for that of Mr. Woolliams on the Special Joint Committee respecting Mr. Justice Landreville.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-170, respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Maurice Bourget, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill now under consideration is, in my opinion, very complex. You will realize that in a few moments when I try to explain some of the 116 sections it includes. You will easily understand that I do not intend tonight to explain the bill clause by clause. I will therefore give only a general summary of it and I will point out the most important items so that the members of this house who did not have the opportunity to attend the sittings of the committee or were not members of it will be able to understand at least the general scope of it.

But before getting to the heart of the matter, I am pleased to mention here the active part taken by the members of the Senate who sat on the joint committee and to mention also how faithfully they attended the many sittings of that committee.

It might be interesting to point out here with regard to Bill C-170 now under consideration that the committee had to hold 33 sittings which lasted an average of two and a half hours each.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald (Brantford): You were the joint chairman, I understand?

Hon. Mr. Bourget: I am only speaking of those who were members of the Senate, excluding the co-chairman, who was also a senator.

[Translation]

Last week, when the bill was being discussed in the other place, I had the opportunity to hear some speeches delivered by members of all political parties. I am aware of the fact—as you yourselves undoubtedly are—that we are not supposed to read in this house speeches delivered by honourable members of the other house, but there is nothing to prevent us from going there once in a while to listen to their speeches. I found out—as you yourselves probably did—that it is more interesting to hear the honourable members deliver their speeches than it is to read them later in Hansard.

In any case, I spent several hours there in order to see how the bill was being discussed by our colleagues in the other place. I must say that all without exception—and as I said, speeches were made by members of various political allegiance—expressed their satisfaction of the work performed by the committee. It was also emphasized that the discussions during those meetings remained free from any political partisanship and that the sole purpose of committee members was to bring the best piece of legislation possible before both houses of Parliament.

It might be interesting to point out that even though there was not full agreement on the 116 clauses of the bill, there was nevertheless sufficient agreement for the report submitted by that joint committee to be concurred in unanimously.

I would be remiss if I failed to mention the valuable assistance we were given during this study, by the officers of the Treasury

Board as well as by the three Public Service commissioners. I believe that once again, the honourable senator members of the committee will second me when I say that these officers, those of the Treasury Board as well as those of the Civil Service Commission, have shown their high qualifications in helping us to understand better and to grasp more thoroughly the complex problems involved in this legislation.

I must not forget, either, to give particular thanks to the clerk of our committee for his unfailing devotion.

[Text]

Members of this chamber are aware that the provisions of Bill C-170, an act respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada, has been the subject of careful and exhaustive examination by a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. In large part, the provisions of the bill follow the recommendations of the preparatory committee on collective bargaining in the Public Service which was established by the Government in the summer of 1963.

As honourable members may recall, this committee of senior government officials under the chairmanship of Mr. A. D. P. Heeney, was asked by the Government to make preparations for the introduction into the Public Service of an appropriate form of collective bargaining and arbitration. Its report and recommendations, prepared after months of intensive research and extensive consultation with employee organizations and with a number of highly qualified labour-relations specialists, was presented to the Government in the summer of 1965. The legislation was introduced in the Commons in the spring of 1966, and following second reading was referred for detailed study to the special joint committee to which I have made reference.

As a joint chairman of this commitee, I would like to assure honourable members that this study, which was a very thorough one indeed, was conducted throughout in the same non-partisan atmosphere which has always characterized parliamentary consideration of legislative measures relating to the internal administration of the Public Service. The deliberations of the committee have resulted in acceptance by the Government of a number of significant improvements in this legislation.

Honourable senators, this is surely an indication of the value of the work done by the committee. I am sure that all honourable members will agree that the committee is to be commended for a job well done.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And its chairman.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: Well, I bow to the honourable leader.

Passage of this legislation will provide employees of the Government of Canada with collective bargaining rights comparable with those accorded employees in the private sector, rights which have been sought by our public servants for the past several years. It is a source of much satisfaction to me, as I am sure it is to all members of this chamber, that these important rights are now to be made available to employees of the Public Service.

Members of the Senate will be familiar with the broad legislative framework within which these rights are to be exercised. In essence, the legislation is rooted in the principles governing collective bargaining legislation in the private sector.

A Public Service Staff Relations Board, the counterpart of the familiar Labour Relations Board under other labour relations statutes, will be responsible for administering the legislation. The board will consist of an independent chairman, vice-chairman, and from four to eight other members, appointed by the Governor in Council as being representative in equal numbers of the interests of the employer and employees respectively.

Its responsibilities will include the determination of bargaining units, the certification of bargaining agents, and the investigation of complaints alleging violation of the statute by either the employer or employees' organizations.

In addition, the board will be responsible for providing administrative support to the other third party functions envisaged by the bill, relating to dispute settlement and grievance adjudication.

The responsibilities of the chairman will extend beyond those normally assigned to chairmen of labour relations boards in other jurisdictions, embracing functions which, under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, for example, are vested in the Minister of Labour. I refer in particular to the responsibilities assigned to the chairman for the administration of the dispute settlement provisions of the bill.

I have said, honourable senators, that the bill is rooted in the principles of collective bargaining legislation applying to the private sector. Having said this, I would point out, however, that there are a number of significant differences between this legislation and that governing collective bargaining in the private sector. This will come as no surprise to members of this chamber, all of whom are familiar with the special characteristics of a national public service.

One important difference relates to dispute settlement. In most jurisdictions in Canada, conciliation is the standard process for the resolution of disputes arising out of negotiation of collective agreements. Unlike most labour relations statutes, Bill C-170 provides employees with a choice of two dispute settlement processes. Disputed matters may be referred to the Public Service Arbitration Tribunal for binding arbitration as contemplated by the bill, or they may be referred to the more familiar ad hoc conciliation board process for report and recommendations.

The bill provides that, before notice to bargain may be given, the bargaining agent will be required to specify the dispute settlement process that is to be applicable to the bargaining unit in respect of which it has been certified. The process so certified would remain binding on employees in the bargaining unit during the ensuing negotiations, and the process would continue in effect until changed in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

Employees in bargaining units subscribing to the arbitration route—I think this is the most important part of the bill because it gives members of the Senate an idea of how this most important clause will work. As I said before, even if I wished to explain all the clauses, I would not be in a position to do so because I do not have the know-how to explain the effect of all the clauses. However, this is the part of the bill that appealed to me, and I suppose it is the same with members who sat on our committee—this is one of the most important parts of it.

Employees in bargaining units subscribing to the arbitration route would be prohibited from striking in all circumstances. Employees in bargaining units that have opted for conciliation, on the other hand, would be free to strike seven days after a conciliation board had presented its report to the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

The right to strike—here again is a very important aspect—would not apply to employees in the bargaining unit performing duties necessary in the interests of the safety and the security of the public. In this regard, the bill provides that no conciliation board may be established and no strike may occur until the employer and the bargaining agent have agreed upon, or the Public Service Staff Relations Board has determined, the employees in the bargaining unit whose duties relate to the safety and security of the public.

Honourable members will recognize that these provisions of the bill are designed to achieve a reasonable balance between the right of the employees on the one hand to withdraw their service in a labour dispute and, on the other hand, the need to ensure the continuation without disruption of those services which impinge so directly on public safety and security.

There are other differences to which I should like to make a brief reference. The bill places certain restrictions upon the matter of collective agreements. Unlike employees in the private sectors, a number of important terms and conditions of employment applying to employees in the public service have been the subject of special parliamentary enactment, that is to say, the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Civil Service Act, which, with the enactment of a bill—that will be another bill, C-181—will be replaced by the Public Service Employment Act.

The terms and conditions with which these statutes are concerned have broader application than to the employees contained in a particular bargaining unit, applying as they do to employees throughout the public service. In addition, the capacity of the Government as employer to implement an obligation arising out of a collective agreement dealing with any such term on condition of employment is circumscribed by Parliament.

For these reasons, the Government has concluded that these restrictions on the subject matter of collective agreements were fully justified—as a matter of fact, a conclusion with which the joint committee has agreed.

Similar restrictions will also apply to arbitral awards and conciliation board reports.

While on the subject, I should point out that these provisions of the bill ensure that the "merit system of appointment"—which honourable Senator Choquette will know of, as he is from Ottawa and has heard a great deal about it—which has been one of the great traditions of the Canadian Civil Service, will not be subjected to the stresses and strains of the bargaining table.

Another noteworthy difference relates to employee grievances. Under the provisions of the bill the employer will be required to establish processes throughout the Public Service for the resolution of employee grievances. Provision has also been made in the legislation for the adjudication of certain kinds of grievances by adjudicators appointed by the Governor in Council.

Grievances that may be referred to third party adjudication include those arising out of the interpretation or application of a collective agreement or arbitral award, together with those relating to disciplinary action resulting in discharge, suspension or financial penalty.

Most labour relations statutes in other jurisdictions, while providing that grievances arising out of the interpretation or application of a collective agreement are to be resolved by binding arbitration, leave the establishment of grievance procedures to the initiative of the parties and the bargaining process. A statutory provision in this legislation requiring the employer to establish grievance processes was considered necessary in recognition of the fact that it might be some time before all employees in the system were represented by bargaining agents and covered by collective agreements.

Before concluding my remarks I would like to draw the attention of members to those provisions of the bill concerned with the commencement of collective bargaining. The provisions of the original bill in this regard were examined very carefully by the joint committee with the result that the relevant clause 26 has been substantially revised.

Clause 26 is designed to permit collective bargaining to be implemented in an orderly manner. This objective is to be accomplished in two ways: One, by provisions requiring that during a transitional period and subject to a discretionary power in the Public Service Relations Board, to be used in prescribed circumstances, bargaining units for all portions of the Public Service other than the separate employers listed in the bill are to be based on the occupational group concept; and, two, by provisions permitting the carryover of the existing cyclical pay review process into the transitional period.

I quite agree that many of the members of the Senate cannot readily understand clause 26, and that is the reason I would suggest that those who are interested in seeing what the clause really means read what the witnesses, the experts, or the members of the treasury Board have said in that respect.

Under its provisions, employees would become eligible for collective bargaining within the sixty-day period after the coming into force of the Act; that is, within this period, organizations representing employees in the several occupational categories specified in the bill could make application for certification as bargaining agents. The dates after which collective agreements could be entered into, or arbitral awards rendered, with respect to employees in each category, are identified in Schedule B of the bill. These dates are as follows: March 31, 1967 for employees in the operational category; December 31, 1967 for employees in the professional, scientific and technical categories; and March 31, 1968 for employees in administrative support and administrative and foreign service categories.

I should also explain that under the existing pay review program, the pay review date for each category occurs six months earlier than the dates to which I have just referred. This six-month difference between pay review date and the date after which a collective agreement may be entered into will permit the parties to utilize pay data supplied by the Pay Research Bureau and pertaining to the pay review date in negotiating the first agreements. I should add that the Government has indicated a willingness to consider retroactivity to the pay review date with respect to rates of pay negotiated in the first agreements.

In my view, honourable senators, this is good legislation. It is my hope, as I am sure it is the hope of all honourable members, that its enactment will assist materially in developing a mature employer-employee relationship in the Public Service of Canada. I am aware, of course, that a sound legislative framework will not of itself ensure the emergence of this kind of relationship. Much will depend on the attitudes of the respective parties themselves. The legislation will be successful to the extent that the employer, bargaining agents and the employees they represent, are prepared to meet the challenges of collective bargaining in a mature and responsible manner. Goodwill and a spirit of "give and take" will be required on both sides of the bargaining table. I wish them well.

[Translation]

These are some remarks which I wanted to make concerning the bill. I hope honourable senators now have a better idea of its significance. This measure is undoubtedly not perfect, but I think it will be recognized, as it has been unanimously in the other place, that this legislation will appreciably improve the relationship existing between the employer, which is the government, and the civil servants. We will be able to observe the application of this legislation in the following years and, with the experience we shall have gained, bring in the necessary amendments.

In closing I should like to quote some words concerning the bill now before us spoken by the Prime Minister of Canada during an address to the founding convention of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. I quote:

> An efficient collective bargaining scheme between the government and its employees cannot be created by an act of parliament or the governor general's signature. This objective can only be achieved through the efforts of a great number of people working in good faith in order to serve the interests of management and employees, at all levels of the public service. Obviously, problems will only be solved by dint of hard work and with great patience. We must not count on miracles.

[Text]

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Before adjourning the debate I would like to ask a question. This bill was given extensive study by a joint committee and it was studied clause by clause, and therefore I do not think it is necessary to send it to a committee of the Senate. Is it the intention of the sponsor to do so?

Hon. Mr. Bourget: If the honourable senator thinks it is not necessary, I would agree. As I said before, it took only about six or seven hours to pass these three bills, C-170, C-181, having to do with the civil service, and C-182, having to do with the Financial Administration Act. Because of the time spent, I do not think it will be necessary to send it to a Senate committee. It is quite clear that even if it is not perfect, the report of our joint committee has been unanimously accepted.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I may not even wish to speak after this thorough explanation, but I will adjourn the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-181, respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have the opportunity of introducing Bill C-181 intituled "An Act respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada." This bill was given first reading in the House of Commons on May 12 last. In the interval it was given second reading and referred to a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons. In due course it received third reading in the other place.

The joint committee met whenever possible during the autumn and winter months and gave careful and detailed study to the bill and to every section in it, as well as to various briefs presented to the committee and the witnesses who appeared before it.

I would like to pay tribute to the members of this committee who, in my opinion, were unusually well qualified for the task assigned to them; and I would pay special tribute to my colleagues of the Senate, among them Senator Bourget, who acted as Joint Chairman and did an admirable job, Senator Cameron, Senator Deschatelets, Senator Denis and Senator Fergusson.

Perhaps I can do no better than to read you some paragraphs from the statement made to the committee by the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. John Carson. With leave of the Senate, I would include certain relevant portions of that statement in the record. Mr. Carson said:

> The first major objective that will be served by the proposed Public Service Employment Act is the re-affirmation of the merit principle as embodied in previous legislation and the extension of its application to certain groups of employees that are now exempt from the provisions of the present Civil Service Act... It provides the necessary statutory > framework and inspiration for the development and maintenance through changing circumstances of an effective and efficient staffing agency... the legislation has to take into account a new dimension—the proposed system of collective bargaining for public servants.

That was dealt with in Bill C-170.

> It is expected that organized employees will negotiate with their employer to arrive at mutually satisfactory conditions of employment and pay. This is a situation that precludes the participation of a third body independent of the organized employees and of the employer... Bill C-181 accommodates the requirements of collective bargaining in that it relieves the Commission of its traditional responsibility for recommending rates of pay and certain conditions of employment. Furthermore, Bill C-181 removes matters of discipline from the jurisdiction of the Commission .
>
> Bill C-181 makes possible the extension of the Commission's jurisdiction to groups of employees that are now exempt from the provisions of the Civil Service Act...
>
> Under the proposed Public Service Employment Act, all departments and agencies will enjoy certain freedom of action in staffing matters with a view to facilitating efficient and effective operations in an age characterized by rapid change. Yet at the same time a greater number of employees will benefit from the basic guarantees of fair-play and equity inherent in the bill.
>
> Specifically, Bill C-181 allows the Commission to delegate any of its powers, functions and duties, except the hearing of appeals.

There was considerable discussion in the committee on this question of the hearing of appeals, and an amendment was introduced because it was felt that it would not be proper for the same body that was responsible for making appointments to sit in judgment on the justice and the propriety of these appointments. Therefore special arrangemnets were made in the amendment to deal with this situation.

> It is the intention that deputy heads and their officers should have delegated authority for making appointments to and within the public service.

This provision will have a marked effect in that it will greatly reduce the time involved in making appointments particularly at the regional and local levels.

The legislation will explicitly require the commission to report annually to Parliament on the discharge of its responsibilities, and particularly in this area of appeals where there is any dissatisfaction with the actions or decisions of the commission. Under this legislation all matters having significant financial implications will be transferred to the Treasury Board.

Now, honourable senators, turning to the specific clauses of the bill which occasioned most of the debate and discussion at the joint committee, I would refer you to clause 6 which deals with the delegation of authority, clauses 8 and 9 which deal with authority to appoint, and clause 12 (2) which prescribes selection standards and ensures that there shall be no discrimination on the basis of sex. This resulted in an lively discussion in the committee in which Senator Fergusson was particularly interested, and she made a valuable contribution to ensure that her sex would not be overlooked.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Nobody can overlook that sex.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: Clause 16 (2) deals with the use of both the English and French languages and, for that matter, other languages that may be necessary for the purposes of the appointment. It explicitly states that the candidate may request that he be examined either in English or in French or in both, or if the appointment has a concern for another language, in that language too. Clause 21 provides for appeals and for the nature and composition of the appeal board. Clauses 26 and 27 deal with resignations and with the abandonment of employment. Clause 28 deals with probation.

Clause 31 deals with incompetency and incapacity, and clause 32 has to do with political partisanship. This was one of the most difficult matters we had to deal with, and I think it would be in order if I were to read that clause in detail. As amended, it reads as follows:

> (1) No deputy head and, except as authorized under this section, no employee, shall
>
> (a) engage in work for, on behalf of or against a candidate for election as a member of the House of Commons, a member of the legislature of a province or a member of the Council of the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories, or engage in work for, on behalf of or against a political party; or

(b) be a candidate for election as a member described in paragraph (a).

(2) A person does not contravene subsection (1) by reason only of his attending a political meeting or contributing money for the funds of a candidate for election as a member described in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) or money for the funds of a political party.

(3) Notwithstanding any other Act, upon application made to the Commission by an employee the Commission may, if it is of the opinion that the usefulness to the Public Service of the employee in the position he then occupies would not be impaired by reason of his having been a candidate for election as a member described in paragraph (a) of subsection (1), grant to the employee leave of absence without pay to seek nomination as a candidate and to be a candidate for election as such a member, for a period ending on the day on which the results of the election are officially declared or on such earlier day as may be requested by the employee if he has ceased to be a candidate.

(4) Forthwith upon granting any leave of absence under subsection (3), the Commission shall cause notice of its action to be published in the Canada Gazette.

(5) An employee who is declared elected as a member described in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) thereupon ceases to be an employee.

(6) Where any allegation is made to the Commission by a person who is or has been a candidate for election as a member described in paragraph (a) of subsection (1), that a deputy head or employee has contravened subsection (1), the allegation shall be referred to a board established by the Commission to conduct an inquiry at which the person making the allegation and the deputy head or employee concerned, or their representatives, are given an opportunity of being heard, and upon being notified of the board's decision on the inquiry the Commission,

(a) in the case of a deputy head, shall report the decision to the Governor in Council who may, if the board has decided that the deputy head has contravened subsection (1), dismiss him; and

(b) in the case of an employee, may, if the board has decided that the employee has contravened subsection (1), dismiss the employee.

(7) In the application of subsection (6) to any person, the expression "deputy head" does not include a person for whose removal from office, otherwise than by the termination of his appointment at pleasure, express provision is made by this or any other Act.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is that a new section, or was it in the old act that is now being repealed?

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: It was not in the original legislation—that is, the old act. This is a new section and new legislation.

As I stated earlier, there is provision in section 45 for a report to Parliament. With respect to the question raised by the honourable Senator Aseltine, I think it would be in order to point out that the concensus of the joint committee was:

> ...that the whole question of political participation by public servants should be reviewed after the next general election in the light of experience and knowledge gained to that time. Interested groups might then wish to make more specific representations for the consideration of Parliament.

Honourable senators, as was pointed out to you by my colleague (Hon. Mr. Bourget) who introduced and moved second reading of Bill C-170, a great deal of time, thought and work went into the study of these bills. Many amendments were proposed and accepted. Other than those I have mentioned, most of these were concerned, not with the content but with the wording of the bill, with a view to improving it and making it better legislation.

Again, I say of this bill—as was said of the other bill—that there was in due course unanimous agreement on the bill as amended and the report to the House of Commons and to the Senate. So, honourable senators, I commend the second reading of Bill C-181 to your favourable consideration.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Under section 32 of the new legislation, do I understand that any member of the Civil Service can join a union—that is, the C.L.C., or the Teamsters'

Union—or a half a dozen, a dozen or even a hundred, and run for Parliament while belonging to a union or organization outside the Civil Service?

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: Section 32 makes it possible for any member of the Civil Service, other than those exempted, to participate in political activity. It specifies what that participation means, and it does include the right to stand for election and, if elected, naturally, to become a member of the appropriate legislature for which that person has been elected. There were no qualifications in this section on the point you raise as to membership in bodies that are outside the scope or competence of the Public Service Commission, or of the legislation in question.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the Committee's reports Nos. 1099 to 1146 inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

BAPTIST GENERAL CONFERENCE OF CANADA —BILL WITHDRAWN AND FEES REFUNDED

Hon. J. Campbell Haig, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the Order of the Senate of 7th July, 1966, referring the Bill S-43, intituled: "An Act to Incorporate Baptist General Conference of Canada", to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, be discharged and the bill be withdrawn; and

That the Parliamentary fees paid upon the bill be refunded to the petitioners.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, this bill, to incorporate a religious body, is now not necessary because an amendment to the Canada Corporations Act provides that a group of not less than three persons may apply to the Registrar General to be incorporated by Letters Patent, and thereby receive the same powers they would have if incorporated by a special act. This is a cheaper method of doing what these petitioners wish to do. The organization is not wealthy, and the petitioners now intend to apply to the Registrar General for incorporation by Letters Patent.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 22, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Bourget, for the second reading of Bill C-170, respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, in the first place I would like to congratulate Senator Bourget on his very clear and comprehensive analysis of Bill C-170, an act respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Senator Bourget was a dedicated co-chairman of the special joint committee of both houses which examined the bill. His co-chairman was Jean-T. Richard, M.P., an old friend of long standing. That committee, of which I had the honour to be a member, was assiduous and thorough-going. It held 48 meetings and heard the evidence of 47 witnesses who presented extensive briefs.

Honourable senators, that this bill is before us at all is due in large part to the work of the joint committee. Many amendments were made, to the manifest improvement of the bill. As honourable senators are aware, the committee's report covers more than 20 pages in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons for Friday, February 3, 1967.

In passing, may I observe that there has been a recent parliamentary development which I consider to be in the best interests of the Senate, of Parliament and of Canada as a whole. I refer to the extensive use now being made, in almost every matter of national concern, of joint committees of both houses. Each set of members, that is the senators and the commoners, brings to bear upon the subjects under discussion a somewhat different set of values. As senators, it is not needful for us to have an eye on the next election—although some of us retain a certain academic interest in such affairs—and are thus enabled to take a view which might not completely coincide with that of those whose destiny it is to account periodically to the electorate.

I tried to list these joint committees, but I lost track. Suffice it to say that they include such matters as immigration, divorce, consumer credit, the hearing of the case of Mr. Justice Landreville, and many others.

For my own part I do not propose to vote against the second reading of the bill in this chamber. In so stating, however, I must confess that I retain certain misgivings concerning at least one aspect of the bill, namely, the provisions relating to the right to strike. This right is not one which has been formally accorded to public servants, except in very few countries, not including either the United Kingdom or the United States.

I seriously question the advisability of Canada's taking the lead in the Anglo-Saxon world by endorsing by formal enactment a right to strike within the public sector, in effect against the Government, despite all efforts to exclude designated employees. Rather, it seems to me, that the tradition which has governed since Confederation in the public sector should be extended to the parties of the so-called private sector, when the national economy and interest become involved, and this without the sporadic intervention of isolated Acts of Parliament designed to close the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

I suspect that the alleged demand for the right to strike is either completely illusory or of very recent vintage indeed. I have here the view submitted to the Special Committee of the House of Commons by the Civil Service Association of Canada in April 1961. On page 21 of that brief the following appears, and I quote:

> We strongly emphasize that the strike is not now, nor ever has been an issue. Government employees, with some very minor exceptions, do not wish to strike. Rather we prefer impartial arbitration as a method of resolving differences.

I do not wish to ignore what may have transpired in the last five or six years, but I do issue the warning that organized government may be sowing the seeds of its own obstruction, if not destruction. The picture of a small group of "designated employees"—and that is underlined—running around like roosters with their heads cut off trying to administer the Government of a country which, according to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may be the third or fourth most powerful nation in the world within 25 years, is a sorry spectacle indeed. A general without an army cannot win a war; a designated employee with no staff cannot administer the Government.

In what I have said, honourable senators, I am being in no way critical of what has been described as the finest civil service in the world. Quite the contrary, I would like to see it there continuing to work for the betterment of Canada and not out on strike.

It has been wisely said that the genius of the British Constitution is to be found in the fact that continuity of government at all times is thereby guaranteed. For an Act of Parliament to contemplate a situation in which 80 or 90 per cent of the civil establishment would refuse to carry out their administrative responsibilities is, to my mind at least, ridiculous. It is all very well to say that the public and private sectors should be treated equally; it is also easy to say that a dedicated servant will never strike. Much the same has been said in the past about dedicated school teachers. What needs to be said is that if the strike is to assail the foundations of effective government itself, a halt should be called. My understanding is that the right to strike is to be denied not only to designated employees but to the armed forces and, I believe, to the R.C.M.P., but if the entire Treasury Department were out on strike these people would be on short rations indeed.

Honourable senators, strikes are not free of consequences. If you will bear with me I would like to quote a few paragraphs from what I consider a very important editorial which explains this question probably better than I could do. I read from the Globe and Mail of Friday, April 29, 1966 as follows:

> Revenue Minister E. J. Benson has indicated that the strike weapon will be granted to the vast majority of civil servants. Only those whose duties are necessary for the safety and security of the public will be denied strike action, and the Government's definition of safety and security will be so narrow as to make these few in number. It would not, for example, prohibit a strike by postal workers.
>
> Mr. Benson added that if a work stoppage continued so long as to create chaos in the country Parliament could order a return to work. But this power Parliament already has, and it is a power that should remain extraordinary in use. If Parliament became a regular part of the machinery of negotiation, it could expect to be frequently in use, for many unions feel that to fail to use all available bargaining tools is to run the risk of getting less than the maximum possible for their members. We could be courting recurring chaos and the degeneration of Parliament into a sort of permanent conciliation board.

If you will bear with me I will quote further.

> One need only review last summer's postal strike to see the problem. The strike chiefly involved workers in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver—it was nowhere nearly total. And in Montreal, where it lasted longest, it ended in 17 days. Yet in that time the Montreal public moved from sympathy to antagonism for the postal workers, to the point where it was sending delegations to Ottawa demanding that the strike be ended.
>
> The strike hurt Montrealers. Old-age pensioners had to go to special centres to pick up their cheques, and to get there some had to spend money they couldn't afford, others collapsed while they waited in line, others were too infirm to make the trip and simply had to do without, as did many private pensioners.
>
> Businesses lost millions of dollars. Some almost ceased to operate as orders were cut off; others were pressed close to bankruptcy as payments ceased and they were without working capital.

The editorial continues in the same vein, and I will spare you from further reference to it. That gives a true picture of what may happen when we give the people the right they had not asked for until at least 1961.

As recently as last evening, the Ottawa Journal, the Government Leader's favourite newspaper—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Except at election time!

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, except at election time—contained an interesting editorial on the very point I am dealing with now. One short paragraph states:

> But whatever may be the theory of equal strike rights for civil servants, the fact is that they are regarded as having responsibilities apart from those of the ordinary worker.

A little later it states:

> We share the concern of some Opposition members who now are wondering whether any employees should be granted the right to strike. The federal employees are being offered rights to negotiate as unions and should also be granted assurances of fair arbitration with arbitrators of the calibre of Supreme Court judges.

The Civil Service should never divorce itself from reality in demanding rights equal to those of persons working for private enterprise. A civil servant enjoys certain serenities and working conditions known by relatively few outside government service. Among other things they have reason to believe that their employers are not suddenly going to go out of business.

Here is a little hint for this chamber:

Perhaps the Senate will take a closer look at this bill?

Having said that, and having meant what I said, I must add that the bill, taken as a whole, should inure to the benefit of the public service and to that of Canada as a whole. One must appreciate that most legislative measures these days are experimental in character. They are, if I may say so, as much "acts of faith" as they are Acts of Parliament. We are told constantly, even when we doubt the validity of some pieces of legislation, that experience will show what has gone wrong and what needs to be repaired. Fortunately, in Parliament we are often able to repair our mistakes and to take a new approach to the future.

I for one am no preacher of doom and gloom. Nor am I one who takes any great measure of satisfaction in being able to say, "I told you so!" That sort of exercise is for children. We should, therefore, hope that this piece of legislation will serve to the advantage of public servants, without prejudice to the state, and I for one, for all my misgivings, am prepared to give it that opportunity.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, we are all indebted to the sponsor, the honourable Senator Maurice Bourget, and to the honourable Senator Choquette for their excellent speeches on Bill C-170.

Since Senator Choquette has expressed some misgivings about the specific point as to the right to strike within the public service, I would like to speak very briefly at this time from some notes I have in favour of this specific aspect of the legislation.

A large number of Canadians inside and outside the public service feel strongly that the right to strike is a fundamental right. To these people a strike prohibition is repugnant, and can only be justified where at least a case can be made in the public interest. A strike prohibition in the legislation, therefore, would deny a right that has been granted to employees generally in the private sector. Services provided by many public servants, though important, cannot be construed as essential, and certainly no more essential than services rendered by many employees in the private sector.

Honourable Senator Choquette referred to the postal strike of 1965. I should like to say that it clearly indicates that employees will strike even though a clear legal right to strike does not exist. Having these considerations in mind, the Government concluded that it would be unrealistic in this legislation to deny the right to strike in all circumstances.

The legislation adequately protects the public interest by certain provisions which, (a) permit disputes to be resolved by binding arbitration; (b) deny the right to strike in all circumstances to employees in the public service who are performing duties necessary in the interests of the safety and security of the public; and (c) grant the right to strike only where a conciliation board has been established and seven days have elapsed from the receipt by the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board of the report and recommendations of the conciliation board.

I should like also to emphasize the fact that the public interest in this matter is further protected by the capacity of Parliament to act where the rights granted by this legislation are being used in gross disregard for the well-being of the community.

The provisions of the bill relating to strike were adopted, as all of us know, after very careful consideration. They have received the support of the special joint committee of both houses, and they are therefore in this bill. The purpose of my remarks at this time is to point out that there are some safeguards and some flexibility in this measure.

Honourable senators, these are the points that I thought advisable to put on the record at this time.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I join with others who have spoken in this debate in thanking Senator Bourget for the wonderful explanation he gave of this bill. I should like to join also with the Honourable Deputy Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets), in his statement that the right to strike is fundamental—whatever that may mean. It is essential to freedom. The abolition of it is a denial of freedom. I think that the right to strike granted in this bill is the best part of the bill because honourable senators should remember that the power to strike does not depend on this bill. Civil servants have that power, and have always had it.

My friend across the way says that in 1961 the civil servants expressed in an orderly way that they had no wish to strike. Of course they had no wish to strike. Who has? The strike is a costly procedure to both parties. It is like war—generally, both parties are losers. On the other hand, war is often necessary and is forced upon us, and sometimes the weapon of strike is forced upon the employee, sometimes by the unreasonable and dominating character of the employer.

Freedom to strike is simply freedom. We have found in times gone by that the cure for too much freedom is more freedom, and now we will find that the real solution to this question of combined action on the part of some against the power of others is a deeper appreciation of the rights of others, a more kindly and calmer thought on the part of both parties, rather than compulsion by Parliament or by themselves or others. Yes, it is just a bit of growing up, shall I say; it is an adult attitude rather than a juvenile thinking by both parties in the course of their negotiations.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: There are three parties here, the Government, the employer and the strikers.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And I am going to draw a distinction between two of those parties, the Government and Parliament, in just a moment. However, before doing so, let me say that had it been possible for Parliament to prevent strikes—and what my friend has said about strikes in the Civil Service applies to strikes everywhere; it is war and almost universally a loss to both parties—that kind of legislation would have been passed long ago.

As a matter of fact, the House of Landlords in England did their best to prevent even the formation of unions, and many a man was deported just for belonging to a union. I remember very well the story of the Tolpuddle Martyrs, the men who formed a union and were deported to Van Diemen's land, and some of their descendants are now in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That was many years ago.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It was well over a hundred years ago. It so happens that I was Minister of Labour for the Province of Ontario when the hundred years passed, and we celebrated the anniversary in the City of Toronto. We brought the descendants of the Tolpuddle Martyrs to Toronto and gave them a dinner. At that time I was able to produce a pamphlet written by my great, great uncle who defended the Tolpuddle Martyrs on that occasion, both in Parliament and in the courts. That pamphlet had been on the shelves of my family for a hundred years.

A hundred years ago unions themselves would have been declared illegal, perhaps not in this country but certainly in Great Britain, if that would have made unionism impossible. However, it was not possible, and the choice today is between orderly freedom and the responsibility of those who exercise it, as against cobblestones, shall I say, and violence, on the part of those unjustly suppressed.

I wish to draw a distinction in this instance between the Executive and Parliament itself. The right to strike, which we are now granting, and which power already exists on the part of the grantees, would not be exercised against Parliament; it would be against the Government, the Executive, the bureaucracy, the Establishment; it would be against those exercising power but not against Parliament itself.

The situation will not be greatly different in the future from what it is today. When a strike takes place after a conciliation board has acted, after those in authority have done what they can, then finally the parties will come to Parliament. It will be substantially the same in the future as it has been in the past. I am sure that these people in the Civil Service will act very much as did the teachers in the Province of Quebec just recently; they have taken the decision of Parliament and gone back to work. They were not prepared to accept the decision of the Establishment. Their fight was with the Establishment, not with Parliament, and so it will be in the future. If these civil servants strike, it will be against the Executive, against those who arbitrarily set wages and pass rules. Their appeal will be to Parliament itself, and I am reasonably sure that when Parliament acts, its laws will be obeyed in the future as they have been in the past. The general result will be freedom rather than suppression.

I think the best part of this whole bill is the abolition of the supposed suppression of strikes by arbitrary power and the acknowledgment of the right of civil servants to do what they now have the power to do should they will to do it. This is enlightened legislation.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I say a word or two on this bill concerning that particular phase which has been spoken of by the last two speakers.

To my way of thinking, if you are giving collective bargaining to any group, it must be collective bargaining as a whole. If, for example, you take away the right to strike, then you are not giving collective bargaining. I see no objection to that in view of the way business relationships between employer and employee are carried on in this day and age.

My only objection would be that in certain cases there is no right to strike, such as where the safety and security of the public are concerned. One of the speakers mentioned that in the case of the postal workers it made no difference that they did not have the right to strike because they could strike anyway.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): If they could strike anyway, why put in a prohibition against any class of worker? Personally, I believe that we are nearing the time when perhaps there will be some new type of relationship between employers and employees. We may have labour courts and bodies of that kind. But as long as we have the present system, those who are employed in the Government should have every right along with those employed in the private sector of industry. I can see no reason why there should be any difference between the rights of those in the public sector and those in the private sector.

Let us face facts. Many of the gains which have been made by employees have been made through the use of strikes. Others have been made because the right to strike is there. Perhaps over the last two years there have been more strikes than normal, but in every one of those cases, as I recollect them, a substantial gain has been made by the employee by the use of the strike.

Always, again according to my recollection, the employers state they cannot afford increases. There is always some good reason advanced why wage boosts cannot be given. Yet, at the end of the year in the financial pages of the newspapers you see that these companies who said they could not afford a wage increase enjoy a larger profit than they ever had before.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Not the Government.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): The Government is no different from any other employer.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It does not make any profit.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): Some may say that such strikes are against the public. Every strike affects the public some way or another. If Parliament should decide that its employees should not have the right to strike, then it must give something in place of that. Their employees' wages must be higher or the benefits must be better in some way.

I have no doubt in the world that the time will come when we will see strikes in the unions of public employees. We usually see strikes when negotiations break down. That is not something of which we need to be afraid.

I say that Government employees should have the right to strike just the same as anyone in private employment, so I have no objection to the granting of the right to strike in this case. My only possible objection would be that those who are employed by the Government should suffer any restrictions with respect to rights enjoyed by those in the private sector.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, my participation in this discussion will be brief. I would like to start by complimenting my friend Senator Bourget on the excellent speech he made in presenting the bill to the Senate, and to couple with that a word of appreciation for the way both chairmen of the joint committee, Senator Bourget and Mr. Richard, discharged their responsibilities during the 49 sittings of the Joint Committee on the Public Service.

I would like to pay a special tribute to the members of that joint committee. I have been in the Senate for eleven years and in that time I have sat on many committees. I would say that this has been one of the best committees in which I have ever participated. It had strong representation from every party. The attitude at all times was reasonable and constructive. The fact that, in a bill as contentious as this, we were able to get a unanimous recommendation to the Government speaks for itself. We did have differences within the committee, but these were resolved in a true democratic process. When I tell you there were 55 amendments made to the original bill in those 49 sessions, it will give an idea of how thorough and complete the analysis was.

My comments on Bill C-170 relate to a reservation on the bill. I am in favour of the measure for I think it marks a forward step in labour-management relations in this country. But I would be less than frank if I did not say that I have a very strong reservation about the granting of the right to strike in any organization affecting the public services.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I think this has to be guarded with extreme care.

This bill is experimental, and I am in favour of it. I look upon it as an interim bill which can be amended and modified as time goes on. The fact that in this bill we grant the right to the public service to strike imposes a dual responsibility. There is one responsibility on the civil servants to use their power with responsibility and discretion. I was very glad to note in a communication from the Professional Institute of the Civil Service that they did not think that the right to strike was an essential part of this bill, or words to that effect. We have given the right to strike and it imposes a very heavy responsibility on the civil service to use that power or that right with discretion.

The second responsibility which this bill imposes is on the Government. The Government of Canada today is one of our largest employers of labour. It is big business, and it is the responsibility of Government more than any other employer in Canada to set a good example of expeditious and efficient management. I am sorry to say that this has not always been the case. There are many instances, all too many, in the spectrum of government administration today when the Government as an employer has been dilatory and inefficient in carrying out the administration of business.

This dilatoriness and inefficiency has come about, in my judgment, because there are too many officials, particularly at the lower level of the Civil Service, who operate from Ottawa, perhaps 1,000 or 2,000 or 3,000 miles away from the people whose welfare they are dealing with. They are dealing with people and with problems about which they have an insufficiency of knowledge. Also there is on the part of our civil service establishment a built-in resistance to change, which I am sorry to see. It has been said that we have a good civil service in this country—and we have. Particularly at the upper levels, Canada is very well served.

However, I want to say to this chamber and to the Government as a whole that there is a growing feeling today that the Civil Service is exercising a role which is almost usurping that of government in too many cases.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: This bill is a good example on which to raise this matter. As I said a moment ago, no country is better served by its top level of administration than is Canada, but there are too many people in the Civil Service who are looking for reasons not to change, who are hoping that if they do not do something the bogey will go away. You and I know that there is no reason in the world why it may take six weeks, two months, three months or 15 months to get a reply from some civil servants in this town. But this is true—and it is true of some ministers of the Crown. This goes back across parties. In an ordinary business administration this just would not and could not happen. I sound this warning: the Government should set an example both with respect to the speed with which decisions are made and with respect to the efficiency of the operation.

Now that we are giving the right to strike, I want to just make an observation about strikes. To me a strike is anarchy. That is a pretty strong way of putting it, but it is so. It is anarchy in the field of labour-management relations. I do not blame the people in organized labour who have gone on strike and who will continue to do so, but once you have a strike the effects are considerable. First there is a breakdown in communications; then there is a disruption of services, a disruption of business, a disruption of friendships and personal relationships and, lastly, a disruption of community life.

At this time in the twentieth century there must be a better way of settling disputes than through the kind of anarchy I have described here. This is the only weapon organized labour has had, and they have been justified and will be justified in using it in the future unless the Government and private management deal with their grievances more expeditiously and efficiently than has been done in all too many instances.

Reference has been made to the postal strike. I am one of those who are very critical of the postal department in this country. I think it needs to be overhauled from top to bottom, and I hope we get to that another time. But I have gone into the matter of the postal strike and studied the Montpetit Report, which is an excellent report, and there is not a shadow of a doubt that these postal men had every right to stirke. They had grievances going back for months and years unanswered. They were frustrated; they had no indication that they were going to get justice done. I do not blame them, although a postal strike is one of the most disruptive things that can happen.

You could go along the same lines with the longshoremen's strike and with the C.N.R. strike. They had grievances building up over years which had simply been swept under the rug or had not been dealt with nearly as quickly or as expeditiously as should have been the case. Under this new act, if we are going to avoid strikes and further obstructions the Government has the first responsibility to make sure that there is a new approach to labour-management relations.

There is a better way in my judgment to solve industrial disputes, whether it be in government or in private industry; as I said in my speech in the Senate on November 16, 1966, it is by the establishment of labour courts. Some countries have labour courts which have access to the complete documentation of the productivity of labour, both from the company's standpoint and from that of profits earned.

It is very unpopular to say to some companies that they must open their books so that the Government can see what the situation is. But this will have to come. If the Government of Canada, speaking for all of the people of Canada, is going to have the right to set up this kind of court it must have access to the facts. It must be able to adjudicate on the basis of factual knowledge, and it must assure both government and labour that justice will be done.

That is all I have to say in connection with this piece of legislation. It is a step forward. It does give the civil servant a right he has not had before—a right which I hope he will use with discretion. More important than anything else, however, is the fact that the Government should take a new look at its business relationships and deal more expeditiously and efficiently with grievances than it has in the past.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, as has been indicated, this is a substantial bill which has required assiduous study by the joint committee appointed to consider it. This committee and the sponsor in this place, who happened also to be co-chairman of that committee, deserve the thanks of Parliament for the work they have done.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: At this point there appears to remain only one contentious question, namely, the one being debated this afternoon: the right to strike given to some of the public servants.

After the experience which we have had recently in the Province of Quebec—which by the way is the first state, I would say, in the Commonwealth to experience the public servants' right to strike—we should not regard the provisions of this bill in this respect as a great victory or achievement. I have some misgivings, and I am far from being convinced that Parliament is not being dragged into adopting this provision by the strength of a "sacred cow" principle, which I call the right to strike, rather than by real conviction. Indeed I am far from believing that Parliament really is earnest in its decision, for I have not seen many legislators here in Ottawa or elsewhere who have shown complete assurance that this right to strike by public servants is a good thing.

One must make a distinction between the right to strike in the private sector and the right to strike in the public sector. In the private sector it is an essential tool of negotiation and furthermore can be exercised with good results. You can go on strike in the private sector and remain on strike for a long time before it affects the public generally. You can remain on strike long enough to convince the employer that it should revise its position. But in the public sector, except in a very limited area, the experience has been that this right cannot be exercised for a long time. This has been proven with railways. We could never afford to have a long strike of our railway employees. Therefore this right in the public sector does not mean the same thing as it does in the private sector.

If, as has been the case, Parliament has thought it its duty to intervene before a strike of railway employees could take place, or very soon after it did take place, it means that we cannot afford to give this right to strike and it means that this right to strike has no significance or value in this domain.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Please do.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Have not the railroad men on all occasions obeyed Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am not discussing that point at all. I agree that they have obeyed Parliament, but I was not discussing that point. I was just pointing out that, when Parliament considers that a right should not be exercised, it intervenes before a strike takes place, or intervenes only a few days after the strike begins. And this has not the same meaning as the right to strike in the private sector where the strike can last for a long time. So I do not think that you can envisage the right to strike in the public sector in the same light as you do in the private sector.

Honourable Senator Roebuck has said the right to strike is of the essence of freedom. I like the idea; I think it is part of this sacred cow principle that I was mentioning earlier, but I do not think it is really a part of freedom. What is essential is a means of achieving justice for the employees concerned. This is of the essence of freedom, and not the right to strike. If it were of the essence of freedom, why should it not be given to members of the armed forces, or to members of the police forces, or to firemen? Their freedom is as important as the freedom of other employees. Why should you not give it to all employees of all departments from the deputy minister down to the last member of the R.C.M.P., if it is of the essence of freedom?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I answer the question you have just asked as to why we do not give it to policemen and to firemen?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Please do.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I had much to do with that, and I can give you the information that the policemen voluntarily relinquished this right. They were not forced to do so; it was not done over their heads; it was not arbitrary. It was an agreement, or an understanding between the Legislature of Ontario and policemen and firemen. That is the distinction.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: This is a question of fact and I would not deny it. I do not know what the circumstances were to which my honourable friend is alluding. But the point I am making is that if the right to strike is of the essence of freedom it should be given to everybody. If members of the police forces do not wish to use it because they think they should not do so, that is all very well, but if the principle is as strong as my honourable friend indicates, this bill should not restrict the right to strike or take it away from the R.C.M.P. and the armed forces.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You may be right.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But I suggest it is not of the essence of freedom; I suggest it is a tool of negotiation or a way of achieving labour conditions which are just and fair. In this connection I can call upon the support of somebody who is not a member of the parties represented here and could not be branded as anti-labour. I refer to Mr. David Lewis, a member of the New Democratic Party. I quote from the report of the debate which took place last August concerning the strike of railway employees. Mr. Lewis had this to say:

> We did not utter pious phrases about the right to strike being a sacred right and then propose legislation that takes it away. It is just sheer rubbish to talk about its being a sacred right if you do not intend to let people exercise it. What good is a right if there is no opportunity to use it? The fact is that it is impossible for the country to permit a long strike of the railway workers, a strike which would really give them victory, because sooner or later parliament would have to step in. We realized that and knew that was the case.

Is there any difference between the right of railway employees and the right of the majority of public servants? I think Parliament would have to step in right away and do the same thing it did in the case I was referring to. The problem is that the Government or Parliament has not found an alternative to this right to strike in cases affecting the public services. We should have tried to find a formula to settle problems pertaining to the labour conditions of public servants. In the same speech I quoted from a moment ago, Mr. Lewis had this to say about the railway employees:

> The solution to the problem was to set a standard by which the earnings of the railway workers could be measured.

I say that we should have searched for such a standard to measure the salaries of public servants and take away a right which is a complete illusion because we cannot let them exercise it. And I am very sorry that we did not have the intestinal fortitude to face the reality as it is. This is my own feeling—that we are afraid of being misunderstood and criticized by refusing the right to strike to public servants. Yet at the same time we know very well that we will not let them exercise it for any length of time, if they act collectively, that is, if it is not a strike in an isolated area.

We should have provided a standard by which their labour conditions could have been measured. If we had done this we would really have achieved something rather than succumb to the idea that the labour unions would have been critical of Parliament for not allowing the right to strike.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We had the standard of durable goods.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Yes, but the problem of arbitration boards is that they have no rules by which they are governed. If you provide simply compulsory arbitration without saying under which rules it shall operate, it cannot give any guarantee to anybody. What I am suggesting is that we should have provided compulsory arbitration by boards which would operate under certain very definite rules. This would have been something worth while; this would have been progress. It would be quite different from giving a right that has no meaning any more in the public service because we cannot let the public servants use it for any length of time or in a truly efficient manner.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I am much impressed by the calibre of the discussion on this bill which has already been thoroughly threshed out in committee and has been very well debated here. Personally, I tend to agree with my colleague Senator Flynn in that it seems rather futile to allow people the right to do something which you will have to step in and stop if they try to do it. If the railway employees go out on strike and tie up the country we must pass a bill and stop the strike.

However, I also agree with Senator Cameron that we are to a certain extent exploring with this type of legislation, and therefore I think we should pass this bill. If there are too many abuses these things will correct themselves in time.

One point I want to bring up is that there are three parties involved in all these disputes: There are the strikers, the employers and the general public. In the domain where we are dealing with a government-granted monopoly, a great many people are involved, because they rely on the assurance that certain things will be done, such as the mail being delivered, trains running or the ports admitting goods from abroad. The innocent public can be seriously hurt and even put out of business, and they should have the right of appeal to the courts.

I know a man who a little over a year ago bought some steel in Europe and chartered a ship to transport it. It lay in the harbour of Montreal for weeks, and that nearly ruined him. By hearsay, I know of another fellow who had a farm on which he raised chickens. He bought grain, but it was lying in a warehouse in the harbour of Montreal and he could not get it out, and so had to kill off his chickens. When the postal strike was on there were many people who suffered financial loss because they could not collect the money owing to them. People mailed their cheques out, but they were not delivered. As I say, there are many people hurt in such situations, and it seems to me something should be done in the domain where the Government has created a monopoly. The Government is responsible when the innocent bystander is hurt through absolutely no fault of his own.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I am not quite clear on a certain matter and I am seeking information.

Clause 3 of the bill, on page 6, states:

> This act applies to all portions of the public service.

Then there follow these words:

> Additions to and transfers within Schedule A.

I look at Schedule A on page 52 of the bill, and there are listed forty-nine departments and other portions of the public service of Canada in respect of which Her Majesty, as represented by the Treasury Board, is the employer.

Am I to understand that all the employees of these various branches and departments will be given the right to strike, if and when this bill is enacted? Can anyone answer my question?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I am sorry that the sponsor of the bill is not present this afternoon, and since I had nothing to do with its presentation I am not in a position to give a proper answer. However, if he would like me to take this question as notice, I will certainly supply the answer by tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I would like a proper answer with regard to that matter.

If honourable senators will look at the list of bodies set out in Schedule A, you will see that the last mentioned is the War Veterans Allowance Board. If it is a fact that all these branches and portions of the Public Service are given the right to strike, then the War Veterans Allowance Board employees are given that right and, in consequence thereof, may deprive war veterans—who gave their blood and the best part of their lives for their country—of their allowances.

The spirited speech made by our honourable colleague Senator Flynn caused me to look at this a second time. I admired what he said, and am quite sure he spoke in the interest of all Canadians. Therefore, I am of his opinion.

Let us take another body included in the list, the second to last, the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Are all the employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission given the right herein to strike? If they are, can you imagine the plight of the many unemployed—300,000 or 400,000, most of the time—in this country who are obtaining unemployment insurance? Are we giving the employees of this commission the right to strike and thereby depriving these 300,000 or 400,000 Canadians of their unemployment insurance for a while? If we are doing that by this bill, we are not performing an excellent service for our fellow Canadians.

Others listed are: The Tax Appeal Board, the Tariff Board, the Statute Revision Commission, the staff of the Supreme Court—it would be terrible if the Supreme Court, the Exchequer Court, or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police went out of existence for a time—I think there is some provision against their going on strike. Then there is the Royal Canadian Mint. I hope they do not go out of operation because of strike action. I hope the Government will not be responsible for keeping them out so that we will not have money to spend.

Once upon a time I was a civil servant; I was a mere magistrate. As I listened to the various speeches, I was wondering what would have happened in our little province if all the magistrates and their clerks had gone on strike. Crime would not have been checked and various matters could not have been brought before the courts.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There would have been fewer people in jail anyway.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Yes, there would have been fewer people in jail, and you could not have let out those who were in; that is the trouble.

There are other offices: The Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, the Representation Commissioner, the Governor-General's Secretary, the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Fisheries Prices Support Board, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics—and I guess we could get along without some of the statistics—the Atlantic Development Board, and so on.

I am not sure whether the right to strike is being given to all the employees of these various branches of Government. If such is the case, I can see the day is not too far distant when we will not have a Government because there will be no employees. I think we are playing with fire here. I agree that every man, woman and child in this country should have certain rights guaranteed by the Government of Canada.

What is the need for this? Are there many people in public employment who are suffering as a result of the fact they now do not have the right to strike? If there are, there must be some other means of helping them.

A few days ago we had a strike in a hospital in Newfoundland. To me, that is dastardly, and if the Government of Canada or the Government of Newfoundland gives the right to strike to employees of any hospital, then I have no use for such a government, whether it be federal or provincial. There are many things in this connection we have to consider.

As I say, I was impressed by the speech of the Honourable Senator Flynn. We are not speaking in a partisan manner at all. There are many good features in this bill we should pass, but I think we ought to understand clearly just where we are going to get off if some day some fool in a unit of employment under the Government takes the law into his own hands. After all, there are individuals in this country who can convince everybody else that they must follow him. I have seen that happen in my own province, and you might see it happen in the Civil Service. If we have strikes whereby so many departments and branches of departments are going to be held up, then, my friends, we shall not have a country at all for a while. I know there may be measures which will help to cure some of these ills, but why should we create them? I repeat, I am only asking for information.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I am in a position to give a short answer to the honourable senator's question. The answer is: Yes, subject to the limitations specified in the bill as to the security and safety of the state.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson moved the second reading of Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

She said: Honourable senators, Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act which was passed in 1951, is the third bill in the legislation package proposed by the Government with the object of implementing collective bargaining in the Civil Service.

In the main this bill is concerned with tying up the loose ends created by the other two bills, and for that reason it must be considered in relation to them.

As honourable senators were told when the other two bills were introduced here, these three bills were studied over a long period by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, which had extremely capable joint chairmen and many members who were very knowledgeable about the problems of government employees and labour relations generally. Senator Bourget stated there were 33 meetings of the committee on Bill C-170, which is the longest of the three bills and required the most study. I think that on the three bills there were about 49 meetings of the committee, many of them being very protracted.

The members of the committee obviously were determined to avoid using the committee as a forum for the expression of political or party prejudices. They co-operated very well, with the apparent objective of producing workable bills to provide a system of collective bargaining for civil servants that would be to the advantage of all employees of the Government and a credit to Canada. This made attendance at the meetings interesting and worth while, and it produced many suggestions for amendments that were accepted and acted upon by the Government. These, in my opinion, improved the original bills.

The assistance given the committee by the officials of the Treasury Board, Dr. Davidson, Mr. Love and Mr. Roddick, and by the three Commissioners of the Civil Service, made the task of the committee very much easier. The patience of these officials in explaining the bills, their willingness to consider and refer to the Government suggestions made by the committee members, and to bring back acceptable amendments, engendered in the members of the committee warm appreciation and great respect for them. The complete knowledge of the standing of every clause in the three bills which the secretary, Mr. Edward Thomas, always had at his finger tips was also most helpful to the committee.

Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator MacKenzie for his kind references to me last night in connection with the work of the committee, but I fear my contribution to that work was slight. I was particularly interested in the work because for ten years immediately prior to my appointment to this chamber I was a civil servant. Nevertheless, I found the proposed legislation required a great deal of study in order to understand it. My most valuable contribution, I think, was in the fact that I was almost always present at the committee meetings. I am grateful to the Honourable Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for appointing me to this committee and for giving me the opportunity of learning so much about the operation of the Civil Service of Canada. I shall certainly follow with the greatest of interest the future operation of these bills if they become law, as I hope they will.

Honourable senators, perhaps I should not have the temerity to mention this subject today, after the discussion in this chamber during the last two sittings as to the kind of delegates Canada sends to international organizations of which she is a member. However, when I was in Iran in the fall of last year as one of the Canadian delegates to the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union I was exceedingly interested to learn that in that country they were setting up a civil service under a Civil Service Act and a Civil Service Commission. This was a project under the auspices of the United Nations for which plans had been in the making for several years. Although they did not adopt all of the Canadian legislation with respect to the civil service, among the things they did decide to adopt were the merit system of appointment and promotion, which we value so highly, and also our system of classification. My interest in this was greatly enhanced when I learned that the leader of this United Nations project was a Canadian civil servant, Mr. Laco Hunt, who has now completed his assignment and returned to Canada.

As I have already mentioned, Bill C-182 is so closely concerned with the other two bills in this package that it can only be understood when considered in relation to them, and for that reason I must refer to them briefly.

Bill C-170, the Public Service Staff Relations bill, which was introduced so ably in this chamber by Senator Bourget, a joint chairman of the committee, provides for the introduction into the Civil Service of a system of collective bargaining and arbitration. A very important element of this plan is the identification of the Treasury Board as the representative of the Government as employer in this central bargaining system.

Bill C-181, which was explained so clearly by Senator MacKenzie, is primarily concerned with re-defining the goal of the Civil Service Commission as a staffing agency concerned with preserving and strengthening the merit system of appointment and promotion, and job security which has long been enjoyed by civil servants in Canada. Under Bill C-181 these rights will be extended to thousands of additional employees of the Government who up to this time have been prevailing-rate employees. With so many additional employees being covered by the proposed legislation the Public Service Commission, as it is named in the legislation, will operate over a wider field than that in which the Civil Service Commission has operated. However, the managerial responsibilities which the Civil Service Commission has carried for approximately half a century will not be assigned to the Public Service Commission.

To give effect to the underlying assumptions in Bills C-170 and C-181, it is essential that the Treasury Board have the necessary authority to carry out the obligations placed upon it by Bill C-170, and that it assume the managerial responsibilities that are being removed from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

Bill C-182 is primarily concerned with fitting the Treasury Board for its broader role as the central management agency of the Public Service.

A moment ago I stated that the Treasury Board is to have the principal responsibility for representing the Government in the collective bargaining system for the Public Service. If it is to exercise this responsibility effectively it must be in a position to enter into commitments at the bargaining table and to carry out those commitments. The Treasury Board now has much of this authority. The scope of its authority over the matters which may enter into negotiations is, however, incomplete and is the subject of some doubt.

At the present time, the Treasury Board shares some elements of personnel management authority with the Governor in Council, the Civil Service Commission, individual ministers, and a large number of boards and commissions.

Uncertainty regarding the scope of the Treasury Board's management authority also exists because of the qualifications now contained in the Financial Administration Act, which provides that the board's authority in matters of personnel management is "subject to any other Act." In other words, whenever the Treasury Board now wishes to exercise authority in the field of personnel management it must be certain that its actions are in accord with any limitations or qualifications as may have been established in any other statute. I am told there are at least 75 statutes which place limitations or qualifications of varying degrees on the personnel management authority of the Treasury Board.

If this situation were to continue it would be extremely difficult, if not completely impossible, for the Treasury Board to exercise its employer responsibilities at the bargaining table. You will find that Bill C-182 corrects this situation and concentrates and places in the hands of the Treasury Board, for the first time, management authority over the matters which may form the subject of collective agreements and arbitral awards.

Bill C-182 also recognizes that, important as the negotiation and administration of collective agreements may be, personnel management in the Public Service goes beyond these activities. The Royal Commission on Government Organization stated there was a need for central co-ordination and determination of broad personnel policies for the Public Service. The Glassco Commission also stated that departments and agencies should be given greater authority to manage their own personnel and be held correspondingly more accountable for efficient performance in their departments or agencies.

Honourable senators will find that Bill C-182 provides that responsibility and authority for determining and co-ordinating personnel management policies for the Public Service will be placed clearly upon the Treasury Board, and also that it will allow authority to be delegated to departments and agencies so that they can apply and adapt these policies to their own requirements, within guides and subject to accountability measures determined by Treasury Board.

Honourable senators, if Bills C-170 and C-181 are passed by this house, as I trust they will be, in order to round them out, complete them and make them workable, it will be necessary to pass also Bill C-182, which I recommend to you.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 1099 to 1146, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 1075, for the relief of Helen Ann Georgina Manels Pitre.

Resolution 1076, for the relief of Jacqueline Margaret Allard Parent.

Resolution 1077, for the relief of Annette Champagne Mainville.

Resolution 1078, for the relief of Colombe Gervais Gauvin.

Resolution 1079, for the relief of Denyse Mathieu Cousineau.

Resolution 1080, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Bernadette Boileau Dulude.

Resolution 1081, for the relief of Joseph Leonce Boulanger.

Resolution 1082, for the relief of Roland Gariepy.

Resolution 1083, for the relief of Louis Morency.

Resolution 1084, for the relief of Lise Longpre Thouin.

Resolution 1085, for the relief of Joseph Jean Jacques Couvrette.

Resolution 1086, for the relief of Paul Leo Gingras.

Resolution 1087, for the relief of Pierrette Bergeron Bilodeau.

Resolution 1088, for the relief of Pierre Jarry.

Resolution 1089, for the relief of Tamas (Thomas) Scitovszky.

Resolution 1090, for the relief of Shirley Ann Cripps Fryer.

Resolution 1091, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Roland Boivin.

Resolution 1092, for the relief of Jean Paul Daunais.

Resolution 1093, for the relief of Judith McGregor Romano.

Resolution 1094, for the relief of Maria Theresia Bitter Stenner McIntosh.

Resolution 1095, for the relief of Jane Helga Larson Stolovitch.

Resolution 1096, for the relief of Marie Paule Louise Marinier Mercier.

Resolution 1097, for the relief of Hymie Lozner.

Resolution 1098, for the relief of Claudette Gauthier Desormeaux.

Resolution 1099, for the relief of Heather Florence MacTavish Racine.

Resolution 1100, for the relief of Noreen Elizabeth Bramhill Vipond.

Resolution 1101, for the relief of Riva Pressman Betnesky, otherwise known as Riva Pressman Bennett.

Resolution 1102, for the relief of Jean Claude Gelly.

Resolution 1103, for the relief of Manuel Berkson.

Resolution 1104, for the relief of Simonne Venne Trudeau.

Resolution 1105, for the relief of Joyce Naomi Herscovitch Abbey.

Resolution 1106, for the relief of Chrystalenia Platis Vlahos, otherwise known as Chrystalenia Platis Vlachos.

Resolution 1107, for the relief of Patricia Ann Hewer Stecko.

Resolution 1108, for the relief of Roslyn Davidson Lomonosof.

Resolution 1109, for the relief of Paul Emile Guimont.

Resolution 1110, for the relief of Marise Evelyn Roobroeck Matthews.

Resolution 1111, for the relief of Esther Ginsberg Kanter.

Resolution 1112, for the relief of Margaret Rose Paine Stone.

Resolution 1113, for the relief of Anne Kirkland Langdon.

Resolution 1114, for the relief of Dorothy May Timperley Johnson.

Resolution 1115, for the relief of Champlain Rosen.

Resolution 1116, for the relief of Barbara Tessie Aronovitch Pecker.

Resolution 1117, for the relief of Myrna Cohen Myrovitch, otherwise known as Myrna Cohen Myro.

Resolution 1118, for the relief of Claudette Chatelain Tremblay.

Resolution 1119, for the relief of Guy Serafimoff.

Resolution 1120, for the relief of Dorothy Fuchs Hartel Chrastina.

Resolution 1121, for the relief of Maria Dydynski Soumalias.

Resolution 1122, for the relief of Martha Pollack Nemtin.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the resolutions be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 23, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Goyer had been substituted for that of Mr. Richard on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee respecting Mr. Justice Landreville.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RETIRING ANNUITY BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-265, to provide for the payment of a retiring annuity to the Governor General of Canada.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is among the House of Commons bills which have been distributed to all honourable senators. It is in the form in which it received first reading in the other place, and in that form it was passed last evening not only without debate but without explanation.

This bill apparently was discussed a good deal privately and went through very quickly. I am not insisting upon anything more this afternoon than the privilege, for which I thank honourable senators, of being able to explain it at this time.

I should say first of all that the present salary of the Governor General of Canada is, in Canadian dollars, $48,667. This figure was reached many years ago when the salary of the Governor General was fixed in pounds sterling at 10,000 pounds. At that time the pound was worth $4.86⅔. The Canadian equivalent of the salary as originally fixed has never been changed. I do not know how many years back it goes, but obviously it goes back very far indeed.

I may say in the second place that under section 10(1)(k) of the Income Tax Act this salary is not taxable. The Governor General as the representative of the Crown in this country receives the money and is not subject to tax for the salary he receives while holding office.

The bill itself will affect three people: the present Governor General, General Georges Vanier, the immediate past Governor General, Right Honourable Vincent Massey, and one other earlier Governor General, Lord Alexander of Tunis. I may say too that it could affect and benefit the wife of any previous or existing Governor General, and would in fact be applicable to Madame Vanier and to Lady Alexander in so far as the widow's entitlement is concerned.

The amount of the pension proposed to be paid to retired Governors General is set out in clause 2 of the bill which provides for an annuity equal to one-third of the salary of the Governor General, and that annuity amounts to $16,222 per annum. This sum is payable in equal monthly instalments. It is taxable in Canada, and it is taxable also, so far as Lord Alexander is concerned, since he is a resident of the United Kingdom, under the tax convention between Canada and the United Kingdom, in the United Kingdom. There is no withholding tax on any annuities which would be paid to Lord Alexander.

In addition to the provision of an annuity for a retired Governor General, the bill contains a provision that an annuity shall also be paid to the widow of a Governor General if she was his wife at the time he ceased to hold the office, and that the annuity payable to the widow shall be one-half of the annuity payable to the Governor General. In this case the amount payable to the widow in Canadian dollars would be $8,111.

As I have already indicated, the payments will be made in monthly instalments out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The payment that is made to any retired Governor General or, indeed, to a widow, as the case may be, will not affect or be affected by the payment of any pension or annuity that any person coming under this legislation might become entitled to as a result of any Act of the Parliament of Canada. We can go no further than that. In other words, there is a complete entitlement, and there is no deduction. I repeat that the annuity will be income in the hands of the recipient and will be taxable in the appropriate jurisdiction.

Honourable senators, this is the pith and substance of this measure. It is obviously a simple one.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Might I ask the Government Leader if provision is made for paying their entertainment expenses, or are they required to pay them out of the salary?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, there is an entertainment allowance. There is an allowance for expenses incurred by the holder of the office, the amount of which, I regret to say, I cannot give at this moment. However, I think it fair to say that Governors General have to dip into these non-taxable payments of salary they receive, perhaps to some considerable extent, to meet expenses incurred in the conduct of the affairs of their office.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Is it possible for the Government by Order in Council to increase the salary of a Governor General? Is it possible by Order in Council to increase it from the $48,000, or does this have to be done by an Act of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I apologize, but I cannot give a definite answer. I can only say to the honourable Senator Beaubien that if the Governor General's salary is fixed by statute, then an Act of Parliament would be required. If the Governor General's salary is not so fixed—and I think the latter would be the case—then it can be increased by Order in Council, but just what the procedure orginally followed was I am not in a position to say. I can inquire and let the honourable senator have the information.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I think I would be attempting to gild the lily were I to speak about the high regard in which all Canadians have held the persons who are to benefit under this act. I think that one of the great acts of the previous Government—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: One of the many!

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not want to enlarge and I do not want to become political, but one of the great acts of the previous Government was the appointment of General Georges Vanier as Governor General.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I know of no individual who has been more dedicated to the service of his country, not only as Governor General but during his distinguished career in the Diplomatic Corps and particularly during his distinguished and valorous career in our armed forces.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Both he and Madame Vanier have endeared themselves to the hearts of Canadians everywhere.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I shall say no more about them. Perhaps it would be improper were I to do so.

I should like to pay a similar tribute to the first Canadian to hold the office of Governor General of Canada. I speak of a very distinguished and cultured Canadian, one who has done great things in the field of philanthropy, education, culture, and, indeed, in the field of business, and who has served his country superbly as Governor General, the Right Honourable Vincent Massey.

I have a special place in my heart, as I am sure have all other honourable senators who have met him, for Lord Alexander. He served this country very well after valorous service in the last war in both Africa and northwest Europe. He came here and performed the functions of the office of Governor General in a way that commanded the admiration, respect and affection of all Canadians. With his name I couple that of Lady Alexander.

Honourable senators, it is only appropriate, even at this late date, that we should be giving this kind of recognition for such outstanding service on the part of these several outstanding people.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to move the adjournment of the debate. It does occur to me, however, that in the cases of Lord Alexander and the Right Honourable Vincent Massey some amendment should be made to this bill. I have not read the bill carefully, so I do not know for sure whether this is necessary, but section 2 (2) reads:

> An annuity payable under this section shall commence on the day the annuitant ceases to hold the office of Governor General and shall continue thereafter during his natural life.

I would think there would have to be an amendment of some kind made, although, as I say, I have not really studied the bill, and no doubt it will receive study in committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I will answer Senator Brooks question briefly now so that it will be on Hansard. Section 2 applies not only to the present Governor General but to future holders of that office. Section 4 specifically refers to former Governors General and the widows of former Governors General, and it makes applicable to those persons the provisions of subsections 1 and 3 of section 3. That is the section that authorizes payments to be made to previous holders of the office.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, I had not read the bill very carefully.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

JOINT COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I call to your attention the fact that the joint committee of both houses studying the quesion of divorce will meet on the half hour. A very distinguished contingent will be making a presentation to the committee. There will be two bishops, two reverends and three professors—a very strong and important delegation from the Anglican Church of Canada.

I have reasons for anticipating that not too many members from the House of Commons will be present, so I am asking that as many honourable senators as possible attend the meeting of the committee at 3.30. May I at this time withdraw?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, in the interests of ecumenism as well as the interests of the Senate, I endorse what Senator Roebuck has said. However, I hope that we shall have no difficulty about a quorum at the time of Royal Assent, which honourable senators can anticipate being announced a little later.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Consolidated Index and Table of Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, for the period January 1, 1955 to December 31, 1966. (English and French texts).

23031—114

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 28 at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Can the honourable Leader of the Government give us some idea of what business we can expect to deal with when we return here next Tuesday evening? Can he also give us an idea as to whether the plan or intention of the Prime Minister to conclude the present session on March 10 next is being adhered to? Does the Leader feel it will be possible to conclude the session by that date?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In answering the second question first, I think the Prime Minister was making an educated guess when he announced that date, and it is now turning out to be an uneducated guess.

I cannot begin to assess the length of time that will be required to complete the legislation before Parliament this session. It may not be unrealistic to assume that if we are able to conclude before Easter we shall have been reasonably successful in dealing with the work that is before Parliament. However, this is a personal view and certainly not one that would in any way bind or express the intention and the views of the Government. It is simply a guess on my part.

At the present time in the other place they are dealing with a bill to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board. They have announced that a bill to provide general incentives to industry for research as one of the next measures to be dealt with. Third reading has to be given to a bill dealing with the Excise Act. There are certain statutory salaries of judges to be adjusted by legislation. The Small Businesses Loans Act is to be amended, but it is not a major piece of legislation. The Income Tax Act is to be amended as a result of the second last budget, the major budget of the year. The Bank Bill and the bill on the unification of the Armed Forces, both of which are now in committee, have to be dealt with. Therefore, there is a good deal of work ahead for this session.

I proposed the adjournment of the Senate to Tuesday evening especially to accommodate the honourable Senator McCutcheon. I understand that at that time he proposes to speak on Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act. Senator Blois may be speaking on that bill this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There is no great pressure of business, is there? I presume the adjournment until Tuesday evening is in order to accommodate Senator McCutcheon.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Except that there is pressure upon us, honourable senators, to deal with an extensive program of legislation. I am bound to say that there is a good deal of work ahead of the Senate. I am most grateful to the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) for the kind of co-operation and help he gives me in trying to schedule the sittings of the Senate. I am afraid that without proper co-operation of that kind both sides of the house would be seriously inconvenienced at times.

I try to schedule the work here so as to cause the least inconvenience, as I know that travel arrangements are difficult for some honourable senators. I hope honourable senators have it in mind that this is one of the real problems a leader has. I am told I worry too much about it, but I think it is worth worrying about.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That was not the point, Mr. Leader. I can assure you that I am very pleased indeed to co-operate in the work of the Senate and always will be. However, you said it was to accommodate Senator McCutcheon. My point was that because there is not so much business pressing us now, it is no inconvenience to the Senate, as far as I can see, to let this bill stand over until Tuesday. We have given close attention to the three bills dealing with civil servants. Yesterday we had an excellent debate on the Public Service Employment Bill and the Financial Administration Bill. There is no reason why it should be considered an accommodation for Senator McCutcheon personally to let this bill stand over until next Tuesday.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Maurice Bourget moved the third reading of Bill C-170, respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: It has been moved by the honourable Senator Bourget, seconded by the honourable Senator Deschatelets, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, for the second reading of Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take much time discussing this bill this afternoon, but there are some things I would like to say. I do not intend to go into the financial sections, or those referring to the Governor General's warrant, as I understand an honourable member from this side of the house intends to speak on this later.

Honourable senators, the bill was ably explained to us yesterday by the honourable Senator Fergusson. She explained that this is one of three bills, Bills C-170, C-181 and C-182, dealing with matters pertaining to civil servants. There is one section in the bill now before us which causes me some thought and which I wish to bring to the attention of the house. It involves the tremendous amount of work that will be put on the Treasury Board.

We know that many of these responsibilities have been handled by the Civil Service Commission. The major portion of these will now come under the authority of the Treasury Board. We realize that members of the Treasury Board who are also members of the cabinet are very busy men. No doubt their departments take up practically all their time, and I do not feel they can afford the time to look after all the matters enumerated here, some of which seem to be minor.

For instance, on page 3, in the proposed new section 7(1) there are many points which seem to me to be minor ones.

Paragraph (a) of that subsection says:

> determine the manpower requirements of the public service and provide for the allocation and effective utilization of manpower resources within the public service;

That may not take up too much time, but it certainly will take up some.

Paragraph (b) says:

> determine requirements for the training and development of personnel in the public service and fix the terms on which such training and development may be carried out;

It would seem to me that a lesser body could carry some of these minor duties now going to the Treasury Board.

Paragraphs (c) and (d) say:

> (c) provide for the classification of positions and employees in the public service:
>
> (d) determine and regulate the pay to which persons employed in the public service are entitled for services rendered, the hours of work and leave of such persons and any matters related thereto;

These seem to me to be minor details which are to come under the authority of this very important board, the Treasury Board.

The next paragraphs say:

> (e) provide for the awards that may be made to persons employed in the public service for outstanding performance of their duties, for other meritorious achievement in relation to those duties and for inventions or practical suggestions for improvements;
>
> (f) establish standards of discipline in the public service and prescribe the financial and other penalties, including suspension and discharge, that may be applied for breaches of discipline or misconduct, and the circumstances and manner in which and the authority by which or whom those penalties may be applied or may be varied or rescinded in whole or in part;
>
> (g) establish and provide for the application of standards governing physical working conditions of, and for the health and safety of, persons employed in the public service;
>
> (h) determine and regulate the payments that may be made to persons employed in the public service by way of reimbursement for travelling or other expenses and by way of allowances in respect of expenses and conditions arising out of their employment; and
>
> (i) provide for such other matters, including terms and conditions of employment not otherwise specifically provided for in this subsection, as the Treasury Board considers necessary for effective personnel management in the public service.

The Treasury Board is to deal with those things and it is to be a bargaining board as well. It will be the employer of the various employees of the Public Service, which now runs into many thousands of people.

I realize that the Treasury Board is probably the brain body of the Cabinet. It is composed of important, busy people. This bill puts on that board what seems to me to be an unnecessary amount of work. Surely the Civil Service Commission could handle its work just as effectively.

I am not objecting particularly to this provision. I am simply calling it to the attention of members of the Senate. It would seem to me, after careful thought, that this bill might be held up to find out why it is considered necessary to burden the Treasury Board with all these small details in addition to the real work it has to do in the days that lie ahead.

I think the bill deserves some attention by this honourable body which is here to give second thought to legislation. This is one case where sober second thought is much needed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, for Hon. Mr. McCutcheon, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions numbered 1075 to 1122, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson, for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 1075, for the relief of Helen Ann Georgina Manels Pitre.

Resolution 1076, for the relief of Jacqueline Margaret Allard Parent.

Resolution 1077, for the relief of Annette Champagne Mainville.

Resolution 1078, for the relief of Colombe Gervais Gauvin.

Resolution 1079, for the relief of Denyse Mathieu Cousineau.

Resolution 1080, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Bernadette Boileau Dulude.

Resolution 1081, for the relief of Joseph Leonce Boulanger.

Resolution, 1082, for the relief of Roland Gariepy.

Resolution 1083, for the relief of Louis Morency.

Resolution 1084, for the relief of Lise Longpre Thouin.

Resolution 1085, for the relief of Joseph Jean Jacques Couvrette.

Resolution 1086, for the relief of Paul Leo Gingras.

Resolution 1087, for the relief of Pierrette Bergeron Bilodeau.

Resolution 1088, for the relief of Pierre Jarry.

Resolution 1089, for the relief of Tamas (Thomas) Scitovszky.

Resolution 1090, for the relief of Shirley Ann Cripps Fryer.

Resolution 1091, for the relief of Joseph Arthur Roland Boivin.

Resolution 1092, for the relief of Jean Paul Daunais.

Resolution 1093, for the relief of Judith McGregor Romano.

Resolution 1094, for the relief of Maria Theresia Bitter Stenner McIntosh.

Resolution 1095, for the relief of Jane Helga Larson Stolovitch.

Resolution 1096, for the relief of Marie Paule Louise Marinier Mercier.

Resolution 1097, for the relief of Hymie Lozner.

Resolution 1098, for the relief of Claudette Gauthier Desormeaux.

Resolution 1099, for the relief of Heather Florence MacTavish Racine.

Resolution 1100, for the relief of Noreen Elizabeth Bramhill Vipond.

Resolution 1101, for the relief of Riva Pressman Betnesky, otherwise known as Riva Pressman Bennett.

Resolution 1102, for the relief of Jean Claude Gelly.

Resolution 1103, for the relief of Manuel Berkson.

Resolution 1104, for the relief of Simonne Venne Trudeau.

Resolution 1105, for the relief of Joyce Naomi Herscovitch Abbey.

Resolution 1106, for the relief of Chrystalenia Platis Vlahos, otherwise known as Chrystalenia Platis Vlachos.

Resolution 1107, for the relief of Patricia Ann Hewer Stecko.

Resolution 1108, for the relief of Roslyn Davidson Lomonosof.

Resolution 1109, for the relief of Paul Emile Guimont.

Resolution 1110, for the relief of Marise Evelyn Roobroeck Matthews.

Resolution 1111, for the relief of Esther Ginsberg Kanter.

Resolution 1112, for the relief of Margaret Rose Paine Stone.

Resolution 1113, for the relief of Anne Kirkland Langdon.

Resolution 1114, for the relief of Dorothy May Timperley Johnson.

Resolution 1115, for the relief of Champlain Rosen.

Resolution 1116, for the relief of Barbara Tessie Aronovitch Pecker.

Resolution 1117, for the relief of Myrna Cohen Myrovitch, otherwise known as Myrna Cohen Myro.

Resolution 1118, for the relief of Claudette Chatelain Tremblay.

Resolution 1119, for the relief of Guy Serafimoff.

Resolution 1120 for the relief of Dorothy Fuchs Hartel Chrastina.

Resolution 1121, for the relief of Maria Dydynski Soumalias.

Resolution 1122, for the relief of Martha Pollack Nemtin.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, February 21, the adjourned debate on the motion of honourable Senator MacKenzie, for the second reading of Bill C-181, respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I congratulate Senator MacKenzie on his excellent presentation of this bill, to which he as a member of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Public Service of Canada, contributed a great deal. Valuable contributions were made also by Senator Bourget, who was the distinguished and hard working co-chairman of that committee. As he has told us, that committee sat for no fewer than thirty-three sessions, most of them long sessions, afternoon and evening, and it gave this bill and the other two bills with which it is associated a very thorough examination.

The title of the bill might, on first glance, appear to be misleading. It is entitled "An Act respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada." Of course, it is far from the only act dealing with that subject, and it most certainly does not cover all aspects of employment in the Public Service of Canada. The bill on which Senator Blois spoke deals with the same subject, although it is only an amendment to the Financial Administration Act, but it brings about a fundamental change in the Government's employer-employee relationship.

The pivot bill of this trio, C-170, is entitled "An Act respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada." So, as the sponsor of this bill has said, the three bills are very closely connected. Perhaps to put my remarks in context I should distinguish them in that particular respect, although I am not suggesting that this is a complete distinction of the three bills.

Bill C-170 introduces what has been called the "new dimension" of collective bargaining into the public service. We have heard various views in this chamber as to the wisdom and desirability of that. I will not comment on the generality of it, but will have some remarks to make on particulars as they are dealt with in Bill C-181.

One of the main effects of Bill C-182 is, as Senator Blois stated, to make the Treasury Board the bargaining agent, or, to be more exact, the official representative of the Government of Canada for bargaining purposes under Bill C-170.

In some respects Bill C-181 is a cleanup bill. It deals with a number of matters consequent upon this very important decision of the Government to introduce the principle of collective bargaining into the public service. It deals with some of these incidental or coincidental matters very well. With others I think not so well, as I will suggest as I go along.

The scope of the bill might be summarized as follows: It replaces the existing Civil Service Commission with a new body to be known as the Public Service Commission of Canada and which is described in this act. By and large it is the same commission and, as we have heard recently, apparently the present commissioners, or at least the present chairman, will carry on. That is my understanding.

The bill of course—and this is the core of it—perpetuates the traditional "merit system" of employment, promotion and release, which has been the heart of our public service tradition in Canada since the original act of 1918. The bill also places the specific responsibility of staffing and selection in the public service on the new Public Service Commission. This introduces into the principle of collective bargaining what some might regard as a fundamental contradiction, because it divides the employer into two. In its aspect as Treasury Board, the Government bargains with its employees; in its aspect as Public Service Commission the Government appoints, promotes and releases.

This is one of the difficulties that will no doubt be encountered in the operation of this act, but in bringing this to the attention of the senators it is not my intention to be critical. It must be a long time since any bill or group of bills brought before this chamber had the background, study, preparation, examination and analysis that this group of bills has had.

It has been decided, in the wisdom of the Government and, generally, on the recommendation of the Heeney Commission which sat for two years, then on the recommendation of the Government of the original bill, and then again on the recommendation of the joint committee, and finally on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole of the other place, that the original government bill should be changed in many respects. Consequently there were many amendments, and while we may have some doubts about the efficacy of some of the original measures or subsequent amendments, I think the fair thing to do is to agree to give it a try.

In this matter of the dual personality of the employer, arguments are of course already beginning. The crux of the main argument is: what belongs in collective bargaining? If employees argue that hiring, promoting and firing form an essential part of the process of collective bargaining and should be under collective bargaining, I think it would have to be said that there is good argument in favour of that position. However, we are faced with a division. The Government on the one hand deals with one part of the subject matter of employer and employee relations, and on the other hand it deals with another part—hiring, promoting and releasing. We can only wait and see how it will work out and hope that it will work out for the best.

The bill, as incidental to this ingenious, if strange, division of powers—the splitting of the personality of the employer—removes all matters of pay and discipline from the new commission, the Public Service Commission, and gives them to the Treasury Board. This, I would think, is a concession to the employee point of view that pay and discipline most certainly are matters that should come under the collective bargaining aspects of the employer-employee relationship.

This bill, then, in the now famous section 32 attempts to describe the conditions under which political activity will be permissible to members of the public service, and it will apply to something like 300,000 Canadian citizens. I call it an "attempt" because, as I read the bill and as I read the discussions on it, I would say that the bill as we have it leaves far more questions unanswered than it answers. I will deal with that in a minute.

Finally, this bill pointedly ignores one very important group of public servants of Canada—somebody says they might amount to 1,500 in number—the employees of the House of Commons and of the Senate. There has been a good deal of discussion about that and I will refer to that matter again in a moment.

Perhaps I might deal with the first four points together, because they are very closely interrelated. I refer to the new commission itself, the merit system, the establishing of staffing arrangements, and the pay and discipline clauses.

We start off with the fact that the Government of Canada is Canada's largest employer. As we look at the new commission we are reminded, or should be reminded, that the basic purpose of the old commission which it replaces was, above everything else, to maintain the merit system in the public service of Canada.

As one of the most informed authorities I can think of in this matter said on one occasion, and I refer to Mr. Arnold Heeney, perhaps our most experienced public servant, "If we cannot maintain this distinction between the independent Civil Service Commission and the Treasury Board as employers, I say in my judgment that the whole Canadian tradition will fall to pieces."

So the question naturally arises, honourable senators, can we under the conditions of this bill and the two corollary bills maintain that merit system? Naturally, we all hope we can. But I think certainly that in one respect, and perhaps in two, this bill has inherent in it a deficiency which is going to cause a great deal of trouble in the maintenance of the merit system.

I have already said, of course, that the Public Service Commission will have the responsibility for hiring and firing. However, the bill provides for a delegation and a subdelegation of that authority which I for one think is extremely dangerous. In future the Public Service Commission may and no doubt will, because it is anticipated that it will, delegate this power to appoint, to promote, to release, first of all to deputy ministers, and the deputy ministers under section 6 are empowered to make a further delegation to officers of their departments. I need hardly spell out for honourable senators the danger inherent in this. Instead of this impartial Public Service Commission, distinguished above all else in the fact that it is impartial and set apart from all Government departments, instead of that we are going to have deputy ministers in the position of being able to hire, promote, demote and fire, and they are going to be able to delegate that power.

Surely this is a retrograde step. I have endeavoured to find out why it was incorporated in this bill, and I have seen no explanation that makes any sense. The one usually given is that this is in line with the recommendations in the Glassco Report, and those of us who have sat in the Finance Committee have heard over and over again an explanation of the Glassco Commission's idea that there should be great decentralization in the administration of the public affairs of Canada. Personally, I think there has been perhaps too much lip service given to that; I think too many people have come to believe that decentralization is in itself a good thing. I suggest that here we have an example of decentralization gone wrong. I do not for one minute agree that there should be a delegation of the Public Service Commission's powers in matters of appointments, promotions and releases to any departmental body, because it is exactly in this area that all the abuses of the past arose, abuses sometimes called political patronage. This opens the door to a return to that system. Surely a deputy minister, close as he must be to this minister, who is a politician and one would hope a statesman, would be under his influence and would be under very definite political influence in this matter of merit which is the very heart of our public service tradition.

This matter has been raised elsewhere, but not I think as strongly as I am raising it now. Perhaps to some extent this arises out of experiences of my own. I am also aware of the fact that there is a further extension in this act, a very important one, that the provisions of this bill and of the other bills are now extended to the prevailing rates employees whose appointments were, and I do not think I am being anything but factual when I say this, regarded as basically a matter of political patronage. It is a good thing that they are not now the subject of political patronage except again through this delegation of the impartial power of the Public Service Commission to the various departments.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if the honourable gentleman would mind an interruption at this point, and I do not do this for the sake of scoring a debating point. The matters he has raised have been the subject of very serious consideration by independent bodies and groups who have studied the problem raised by the presentation of this legislation and faced by the Government. I would point out to him that there is much to be said first of all for the recommendation of the Glassco Commission on the point of decentralization, and I think that that recommendation found general acceptance in quarters in which the problem arose. I think also there was a firm feeling that the merit system should continue to prevail in appointments to the public service of Canada, and that, indeed, if the merit system did not prevail, then we would be taking a very retrograde step. I want to give that assurance as a point of government concern and government policy. I would like to ask the honourable senator if he does not think that this language in section 6 helps greatly to meet the difficulty which he apparently sees in the legislation. Section 6 is permissive in the first place and says:

> The Commission may authorize a deputy head to exercise and perform, in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the Commission directs...

and so on. It was hoped by the inclusion of those words that much of the kind of criticism being voiced by the honourable gentleman might be answered. Perhaps he does not think it has been answered completely; it is very difficult to put the kind of language down that would do what I would like to see done, and at the same time comply with what I consider to be the laudable objectives in this segment of the Glassco Commission report. I simply ask him to consider the language of section 6 (1) in that light.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government for his interjection and for what he has just said, which, I might say, supports the theory I have had for a long time that it would be an excellent thing if in this chamber we were to go into Committee of the Whole to debate some of these matters. I think he would agree with me that he may have extended the rules a little bit in his interjection, because I was just about to indicate some of the qualifications that have been made. I do not really object to an interjection such as this, but I would suggest very respectfully to him that it would be helpful to me if he would wait until he hears my whole argument before he gives me what he considers to be the view of the Government on any of these matters.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I apologize. I thought the honourable gentlemen was going on to deal with the prevailing rates, and I wanted to make the position clear. I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: That is quite all right. I really made this remark so as to get a breather and to see exactly where I was. I would have gone on—and perhaps it is not necessary now—to quote what Miss Addison, a member of the Civil Service Commission, said on this matter. She said:

> I would like to assure you and the members of your Committee that delegation of authority by the Commission does not mean abandonment of responsibility.

Miss Addison said other things which I feel it is only fair to add to my remarks:

> ...there will be a systematic analysis of the results of all staffing appeals to identify and isolate any cases of misrepresentation or misuse of selection standards by Commission or departmental officers.

She also said:

> ... There will be a periodic statistical analysis of the distribution of employees by occupation and level to identify shifts that may be attributable to the improper application of standards.
>
> Third, there will be a systematic spot-checking or post audit of individual cases selected at random in each occupation and level to ensure that the provisions of the act and regulations are being met by officials holding delegated authority; and fourth, there will be a periodic review of staffing processes in the Commission's own organization and in departments to develop increasing competence of staffing officers in the application of the Commission's selection standards.

I was going to say that it is of the utmost importance that the commission recognize that this delegated authority is temporary, that no department should be allowed to believe that the old days are back again and that because the commission delegates this authority to the department it can now hire, promote, demote and fire as it wishes. One criticism I have of the bill is that this assurance of Miss Addison does not appear in it. We can only hope. Of course, this authority given by the commission to delegate is permissive, but we are assured there is to be the implementation of the Glassco Report in this respect.

I come now to the fifth aspect of the bill I mentioned in my original enumeration, one that has perhaps caused the longest and certainly the most heated discussion. This is section 32, which attempts to define the degree of political activity that will be allowed public servants.

The history is that the Government completely shied away from this. The original draft of Bill C-181 incorporated the provisions of the earlier act, which provisions have been taken generally to be a prohibition of all political activity on the part of public servants covered by the act. The minister made no bones about this. He said, in effect, "We will leave it to the committee. The committee is composed of members of all parties, and we will let you tell us." The committee made this recommendation, as appears in the bill, and the Government accepted it despite serious attempts to have some amendments made.

Section 32 of the bill starts with a general prohibition on all political activity. It says:

> (1) No deputy head and, except as authorized under this section, no employee, shall
>
> (a) Engage in work for, on behalf of or against a candidate...

and so on. Then it makes three exceptions: a public servant may attend political meetings; he may contribute funds to a political party; and he may become a candidate in an election, with the permission of his department or the Civil Service Commission. It is obvious that everyone has completely ducked the problem.

I think that honourable senators with practical experience will agree that to say to public servants, "You may attend meetings; you may contribute funds; if you get permission, you may be a candidate"—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: And heckle your minister.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: We will come to that in a moment. The whole thing is abundantly absurd: "You may attend meetings; you may contribute funds; if you get permission, you may be a candidate." What about all other political activities? It does not say you can be a member of a political party. When an attempt was made to clarify that, the Government held up its hands and said, "No, we do not want to go that far; we are afraid of that." It was even said, "Maybe we do not need to. Maybe there is a difference between the responsibilities of the public servant as a public servant and as a private individual." In fact, it seemed to me and others that the minister went so far as to say that there is no prohibition at the present time on a civil servant becoming a member of a political party.

I bring up that one point in support of the fact the Government and everyone else has completely ducked the real problem here, and I think it is a real problem for our public servants. They are entitled to know and have explicit guidelines as to what degree of political activity they may or may not engage in, particularly when we remember that the prevailing rate employees will come under this legislation when it becomes an Act of Parliament.

As I read this bill, it seems to give even a deputy head, a deputy minister, the right to attend meetings, to contribute funds and to be a candidate. I have read the bill carefully, and I think I have read everything that was said in committee. If I am wrong I would like to be corrected, but certainly it does permit very senior public servants to engage in some political activities.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I am following the honourable senator very closely, but where does he find that reference in the proposed legislation which, in his opinion, opens up political activity to senior officials in the public service?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The answer is in the wording of the act. Perhaps the honourable senator would refer to clause 32, which reads:

> (1) No deputy head and, except as authorized under this section, no employee, shall engage in certain activities. Then:

> (2) A person does not contravene subsection (1) by reason only of his attending a political meeting or contributing money for the funds of a candidate for election as a member described in paragraph (a)

That describes the various types of candidatures that are covered, and that is it. The key word is "only," and I think that is the authority for my statement.

I will not argue the point, and I would not believe for one moment that any deputy minister would engage in this kind of activity, but certainly—and this has been said over and over again—there are other public servants in a highly confidential, advisory policy-making relationship with ministers who are going to be allowed to engage in some political activity.

If my judgment is worth anything, I would say it would have been much better either to prohibit any kind of political activity completely, or to spell it out explicitly. Senator MacKenzie attended the committee meetings. I think the committee recognized this point, but I thought they rather lamely said, "We are going to recommend this, and after the next election it can be reviewed." In other words they said, "We do not think it will work." And I agree with them.

I do not deny that there is a problem. I think most honourable senators would say that the ideal for Canada would be a public service that is impartial, non-political, non-partisan, dedicated to one thing, to serve Canada and the policies laid down from time to time by the government of the day.

In the minds of some, of course, that is in conflict with another important ideal, namely the right of 300,000 public servants to engage in political activity. I know that if I were a civil servant the last thing in the world I would want would be even the smell of permission to be allowed to engage in political activity. I would be much happier being told, "You are joining the public service. You are going to serve Canada, not any political party in Canada."

It is rather interesting to note that the Civil Service Commission itself, after considering this matter, was inclined to say that it might make sense to allow public servants to engage in some degree of political activity, but, if so, the decision should be left to the independent Public Service Commission. They reviewed what has been done in other jurisdictions. It is also interesting to see what happens when an endeavour is made to allow public servants to engage in some political activities but not in others.

A memorandum prepared by the Civil Service Commission and dated August 15, 1966, tells what the law is in France:

> More generally, French public servants enjoy nearly full political rights. They may join political parties, write for political publications, and participate in political meetings and congresses.

Then, listen to this:

> It is expected, however, that their behaviour will be characterized by a degree of restraint and moderation commensurate with the social responsibilities which they assume by virtue of their rank in the executive hierarchy.

That, at least, indicates how impossible it is to try to separate the public service efficiently from politics.

In the United States, of course, they have gone all the way over to allowing partisanship in the public service. This memorandum of the Civil Service Commission in describing the situation in the United States says:

> In the United States, employees in the competitive service—

That is one particular section of their public service.

> —may have a normal but unobtrusive political life.

I personally would not ask any public servant to try to carry on his public duties and have a normal but unobtrusive political life. In other words, it would be a failure because a political life that is unobtrusive is a failure. This memorandum goes on:

> They may express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates, make voluntary campaign contributions, participate in non-partisan local elections, sign petitions, attend political rallies and join political clubs, as long as they do so in such a way—

Again, this absurdity.

> —as not to take an "active part in political management or political campaigns".

I can go on ad infinitum and ad nauseam.

The United Kingdom, of course, has come up with an answer that appears to satisfy the public service and the legislatures in the United Kingdom. I should like to mention this because this is the system that the Civil Service Commission itself suggested should have been incorporated in this act. This is the "three-tier" system which separates or divides the public service into three classifications. The top civil servants, the policy makers or the higher ranking civil servants, may not engage in any political activity. This memorandum says:

> In the second group, the administering body would be responsible for delineating the type of policital activity in which various employees, or classes of employees could engage outside normal working hours, either during or between elections, and would also be responsible for granting special leave to those who, in its opinion, could be eligible to resume their position if they were unsuccessful candidates in a federal or provincial election. In this respect, the rule would be that the actual political activity permitted should not be such as to impair the continued usefulness of the person in the position in which he is employed.

I find it very difficult to think of any effective political activity on the part of a public servant that would not in some way either impair his future usefulness or—and what could be worse— greatly expedite his promotion because he had done a good job politically for the party that happened to be forming the Government.

The sixth aspect of the bill is the fact that the members of our parliamentary staff have been left out. I am not critical of the bill on this count, but I think it is important that it should be drawn to the attention of this house, having regard to the fact that it is my responsibility to discuss this bill from one point of view.

A very strong criticism here—and one that is very difficult to counter—is that parliament is now saying to the Government: "You must now bargain collectively with your employees. You must have standards set by the Treasury Board which must be followed by the Public Service Commission as to hiring, promoting, demoting, and so on. You must allow a certain degree of political activity. You must maintain a merit system." This is Parliament laying strict obligations in respect of the employer-employee relationship on the Government, and yet that same Parliament is saying nothing with respect to its own staff.

Of course, there are answers to this, and an obvious one is that no Act of Parliament is necessary for Parliament to deal with its own employees. As we all know, this is normally done in the other place through the Internal Economy Commissioners, and here by our own Standing Committee on Internal Economy. I suppose it could be said that the Internal Economy Commissioners in the other place are, in effect, the Government because the composition of that body is the Speaker and four cabinet ministers. Here we have a long tradition, and one that seems to have worked very well, in dealing with these matters through our Standing Committee on Internal Economy.

I suppose the justification for the omission might well be that in the event that collective bargaining is granted, as it will be, to other members of the public service, and a strike occurs, Parliament would always have the final recourse of intervening in the public interest, and it would be very difficult if Parliament, under a system of collective bargaining, had a strike of its own employees. Parliament might be made completely ineffective, and unable to intervene. It just could not work without its employees. I think most of us would at least grant that we might get along without any of our employees, but there might be a constitutional question as to where we would be without, for example, the services of our distinguished Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, not to mention our equally distinguished clerks at the table. I am not suggesting, of course, that they would ever avail themselves of any such opportunity, but this does raise the question.

Honourable senators may have been asked, as I have been, the question by some of our staff: Where do we stand? My understanding is that the Government will now take the initiative in referring this matter to the proper representatives of the employer—the two chambers of Parliament—and the suggestion has also been made that some kind of opportunity will be created for the staff of those two chambers independently to bring their wishes before the Internal Economy Commissioners of the House of Commons and our own Standing Committee on Internal Economy.

I would think this would be a forward step because I feel a great deal of sympathy for our own staff if they find themselves in the position of being completely left out of this "new dimension," as it has been called over and over again, in our public service.

Honourable senators, I have been critical of some aspects of this bill, but perhaps I should say in concluding that having in mind the many viewpoints that had to be reconciled, this bill is the best that could be expected. Although I have criticized some parts of it, I would not suggest for one minute that I could improve on it. It should now be given a chance, and I think it is obvious that for it to succeed it requires a degree of public spirit, tolerance and understanding on the part of both the employer and the employees. I think the employer particularly is going to find himself somewhat behind the starting line, because he will be dealing with people who have a good deal more experience in this very complex area.

I am sure all honourable senators join with me in wishing a full measure of success to this noble experiment, so that in the future there may be a growth of stature in and esteem of our public service to match the very high standard it has reached until now, a standard so many people regard as the highest in the world.

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind the house that if the honourable senator speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: Honourable senators, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the comments made by Senator Grosart about this bill, and I am grateful to him for the interest that he has shown by his study of the bill and by bringing to our attention a number of important and difficult questions that are inherent in the bill.

May I refer briefly to the main points which Senator Grosart touched upon. The first was the division of powers as between the new Public Service Commission and the Treasury Board, which was also dealt with by Senator Blois when he spoke on Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

I think it fair to say that this was done because it was felt that it would give the Public Service Commission a feeling of independence and of prestige, and a feeling, too, on the part of the members of the Civil Service of detachment, fairness and equity, if the commission were not the bargaining body to which they had to look for increases in pay and improvement in conditions of work. The actual appointment, the promotion, and as Senator Grosart called it, the firing or discharging of civil servants is left with the Public Service Commission. But again care was taken that provision should be made, where appropriate, that any individual who felt himself aggrieved might bring his grievance in an appropriate way to the attention of the proper bodies or individuals.

Because of this, I am not so concerned by this division as Senator Grosart is, nor am I so concerned as Senator Blois was about the increased responsibility of the Treasury Board. I am sure that by an enlargement of its staff it will be able to deal with the details he mentioned, and reserve for itself the major and difficult issues of policy.

The second point Senator Grosart dealt with was delegation of authority. I would like to assure him and the other members of the Senate that this was a matter to which the joint committee gave a great deal of attention, consideration and debate.

You have here a situation that arises so frequently in human affairs, that of choices between this good and that good, or, if you like, the choice here in respect of delegation of authority as to whether you are to leave it as it was formerly, to the commission itself to make all the decisions regardless of distances, locality, or the time involved. It was felt that in some cases this might mean weeks or even months of delay in respect of matters that needed immediate action. For this reason it was decided by the committee that it would be best to delegate, or allow a delegation of authority by the commission to a deputy, or a deputy minister, or through him, to some other official so that decisions might be made and action taken as quickly as possible and as circumstances required. But here again the right of the individual who felt himself aggrieved is reserved to appeal any situations in which he felt injustice to him had been done.

As Senator Grosart properly pointed out, the final authority does remain vested in the commission itself, and it can take back the authority if there is evidence of injustice or discrimination. As Senator Grosart said, in reading from the report of one of the present commissioners of the Civil Service Commission, there will be a periodic survey of the results of this delegation.

In addition, provision in the bill is made for reports to Parliament. Special mention was made in committee, and I think provided in the legislation, that these reports to Parliament would be thorough and detailed and would indicate how this policy was working out, indicating too where it was successful and where it was weak, with a view to amendment and changes in the procedures and practices of the commission itself, and more particularly in respect of the delegation of authority.

Coming to the third question, that of political activity, as I stated in introducing the bill the other evening, and as Senator Grosart so properly pointed out, this is and will continue to be a very difficult problem, because again you are here faced with a choice.

Senator Grosart made mention of the fact that there are 300,000 members in the public service. They are also citizens of Canada, and many of them feel they should have exactly the same rights and privileges as every other Canadian. Many of them feel there is nothing about the work they do that is so important or so sensitive that it should deny them the normal rights of the citizen to engage in political activity.

All of us I think have had some experience in public affairs, and we know that in business, and certainly in universities, there are situations or positions of a sensitive kind which make it difficult if not impossible to allow individuals to engage in political activity because of the consequences of doing so.

Senator Grosart also made mention of the British system. There is a great deal to be said for it. This was thoroughly discussed and debated, and I think the reason it was not accepted by the committee was that it felt that in a sense the British system suggested there were three classes of citizens. Canadians, by and large, do not like to think that they are not in every respect the equal of every other citizen, and to relegate a certain group to the category of three rather than one was thought to be rather invidious and undesirable. It was for this kind of reason that the British plan or system was not recommended.

As I have already stated, there was a great deal of discussion and debate in committee. I think there was a general feeling that this bill is neither a complete denial to civil servants of any participation in the political life of the country nor does it leave it wide open for everybody to engage in any and every form of activity.

This is an experimental and exploratory measure, the best that could be arrived at in the circumstances. Some people in key positions will be expected to refrain from engaging in political activity. Others are given limited areas in which they may engage in political activity.

There was considerable debate and difference of opinion about this limitation, and particularly about membership in political parties. I do not intend to repeat that today, as it is in the evidence of the committee which members of the Senate can read if they wish. It is my desire to assure the Senate that this point was carefully discussed and dealt with.

It was only at the end of this long discussion that it was decided that membership in parties, because of the different nature of the membership and demands on members when they become members, in terms of giving loyalty to a party and the discipline of a party, as contrasted with other parties, should not be specifically approved and thus was responsible for this section of the bill in its present form.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Would the honourable senator permit a question which is perplexing me. Would he agree that at the present time, as a result of the bills before us, no public servant in Canada knows or is able to find out whether he may or may not be a member of a political party and remain in the public service?

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: I can only give my personal opinion about that. The bill is here and it speaks for itself.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: It does not say anything about it. It does not say yes or no.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: It says certain things and I think it follows from what it says that an individual who is proposing to be a member of a political party would have second thoughts about it, in view of the fact that it is not specifically mentioned.

As the honourable senator says, it is one of the unanswered questions. The general recommendation of the committee, which the honourable senator described as a rather lame answer to the problem, was to have another look at the situation after the next general election, to see what has happened in the interval and to see how it works.

Honourable senators, an amendment was made in the House of Commons, to which I would like to draw your attention. It refers especially to the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. The Leader of the Government at the present time is already governed by other legislation.

At some future time the Leader of the Government might also be in the position where this kind of amendment would be important.

I refer to section 37, subsection (6), as it originally stood, and which read:

> (1) A Minister may appoint his Executive Assistant and other persons required in his office.
>
> (6) This section applies to a person employed in the office of the person holding the recognized position of Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons as it applies to a person employed in the office of a Minister.

No mention was made there of the office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate or of the office of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. The bill was amended so as to provide for these two individuals.

Honourable senators, with those remarks, I commend the bill for second reading.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, in the copy of Bill C-181 which I hold in my hand, as passed by the House of Commons on February 20, 1967, those words have been added. They are underlined in my copy as being changes made in the bill due to the activities of the joint committee which considered this subject. May I ask if what I have said is correct, or is there some longer wording which I missed?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, that is right.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: I am not sure if we are referring to the same editions of the bill, as there were several. The amendment to which I refer was made in the House of Commons on February 20. It was not in the second copy of the bill which was sent to us.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is in the copy as passed by the House of Commons on February 20.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: Yes, but not in the second one that was presented to us.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is not in the first reading edition of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa
23 February 1967.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 23rd of February at 6.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 6.40 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give royal assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

An Act respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 28, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 28, 1967

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN SENATE GALLERY

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the Senate to the presence in the gallery this evening of Mr. Howard Hilton Spellman, Chairman of the Special Committee on Matrimonial Law of the Association of the Bar of the State of New York. Mr. Spellman is said to be the father of divorce law reform of that state. A distinguished attorney, Mr. Spellman came here to give evidence before the Special Joint Committee on Divorce.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed with Order No. 1:

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 23, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson for the second reading of Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, at the outset may I thank all honourable members for agreeing on Thursday last to adjourn this debate so that I might say a few words this evening. I am also appreciative of the fact that the order of business has been changed somewhat because of my personal engagements. Were it not for the adjournment of the debate, Bill C-182 would have been passed as a companion bill to C-170 and C-181 and would have received Royal Assent last Thursday evening.

I also wish to pay tribute to the joint committee which considered these three bills, to Senator Fergusson's participation in that committee and to the manner in which she presented this bill to us.

Senator Fergusson said:

> Bill C-182...is the third bill in the legislation package proposed by the Government with the object of implementing collective bargaining in the Civil Service.
>
> In the main this bill is concerned with tying up the loose ends created by the other two bills, and for that reason it must be considered in relation to them.

With much of that I agree, but in her later remarks Senator Fergusson indicated what I want to emphasize, that this bill is a great deal more than a tidying up bill, to use her own words, "with the object of implementing collective bargaining in the Civil Service." For that purpose, I want to refer in some detail to the bill we have before us.

Clause 1 of the bill re-enacts section 5 of the Financial Administration Act and, as I think will be evident, it adds very greatly to the authority of the Treasury Board.

I do not propose to read all the subsections at length, but subsection (b) says:

> the organization of the public service or any portion thereof, and the determination and—

The next word is underlined, indicating it is new.

> —control of establishments therein.

In subsection 1(c) three words are underlined, namely, "financial management, including", and then it goes on with the detail.

Subsection 1(e) reads:

> (e) personnel management in the public service, including the determination—

Those are new words.

> —of terms and conditions of employment of persons employed therein; and
>
> (f) such other matters as maybe referred to it by the Governor in Council.

The words "such other matters" are new.

By subsection 2 the Treasury Board is authorized to exercise the powers, other than the powers of appointment, of the Governor in Council—in other words, the powers under the acts listed, other than powers of appointment, are in the hands of the Treasury Board. And these are very important acts. They are the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, and such of the provisions of any other act as may be specified by the Governor in Council.

Then there is provision for the enactment of regulations:

> 6. Subject to any other Act, the Treasury Board may make regulations—

And these are new.

(a) for the purpose of ensuring effective coordination of administrative functions and services among and within departments;

(b) for the establishment of general administrative standards of performance and respecting the assessment of the performance of portions of the public service in the light of such standards.

Those are new powers conferred upon the Treasury Board.

We come next to clause 3 of the bill which re-enacts section 7 of the act, and this is substantially new. Note the powers:

7. (1) Subject to the provisions of any enactment respecting the powers and functions of a separate employer but notwithstanding any other provision contained in any enactment, the Treasury Board may, in the exercise of its responsibilities in relation to personnel management including its responsibilities in relation to employer and employee relations in the public service, and without limiting the generality of sections 5 and 6—

I shall paraphrase these powers. It can determine the manpower requirements of the public service; determine the requirements for the training and development of personnel; provide for the classification of positions and employees in the public service; determine and regulate the pay to which persons employed in the public service are entitled for services rendered, the hours of work and leave of such persons and any matters related thereto. It can provide for awards for meritorious service, establish standards of discipline, establish and provide for the application of standards governing physical working conditions, determine and regulate the payments that may be made to persons employed in the public service by way of reimbursement for travelling or other expenses and by way of allowances in respect of expenses, et cetera, and provide for such other matters, including terms and conditions of employment not otherwise specifically provided for as the Treasury Board considers necessary for—and these are the governing words—effective personnel management in the public service.

Subsection 2 is a provision by which the Treasury Board may delegate some of these very broad authorities to the deputy head of a department, or the chief executive officer of any portion of the public service, a delegation which is to be in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the Treasury Board directs.

I move now to section 5 of the same re-enacted section 7, in which there is a provision that makes it abundantly certain that the very wide powers now conferred apply, notwithstanding prior provisions in that regard. I am not going to comment on the provisions of subsection 7 of that re-enacted section which largely relate to dismissal for security purposes.

The subsequent sections of the bill are the tidying up sections that I believe were referred to by Senator Fergusson. By and large they substitute for the Minister of Finance the President of the Treasury Board, and they separate the functions of the Minister of Finance in certain instances where in the former statute both the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance were mentioned. On the other hand, one subsection is interesting because it ties in with what I have said as to the enlarged authority of the board. I refer to clause 5 of the bill re-enacting section 15 of the act. There the significant words are added in paragraph (a), that the comptroller may:

(a) provide accounting and other services in connection with financial management—

Financial management and personnel management are the themes that go through this whole section.

I have said that the subsequent sections are, in my opinion, largely the tidying up sections, that is, tidying up sections which are consequential on the passing of Bill C-178, being the Government Organization Act of 1966, which received the Royal Assent some time ago. I had something to say in this chamber concerning that act, and I shall be referring to it again in a moment. As I said, the remaining sections are largely tidying up sections, with the exception of clause 6 of the bill which re-enacts section 28(1) of the Financial Administration Act. That is the section that provides for the use of Governor General's warrants. If I am not mistaken, the change in the section is simply to provide that it is now the President of the Treasury Board and not the appropriate minister who will certify to the propriety of the payment on the authority of Governor General's warrants in the context set out in the bill.

In so far as the President of the Treasury Board is now required to make that recommendation or report to the Governor General, then I suggest that this amendment is an improvement; but I do say with all seriousness that the continuance of the provision for Governor General's warrants in the Financial Administration Act is highly undesirable, and that while that provision has been there for many years—for all I know, for close to a century—in recent days it has been, in my opinion, abused. I am pointing no finger at any government. I make that as a simple statement of fact, that it has been used as the medium to accomplish that which it was not intended to accomplish.

A bill has been introduced in the other place in the last few days—I thought I had it here, but it matters not—which, if enacted, would do away with the use of Governor General's warrants. I am not suggesting that I agree with the provisions of that bill; but I think it does indicate a feeling that the time has come when some better provision must be made for the financing of the affairs of Parliament during special situations in which it is considered that Governor General's warrants should be used.

In that connection, I would like to refer to the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966. At page 18 there is a prologue following which the Auditor General says:

> When the 1965-66 special warrants were being prepared the departments were instructed by the Treasury Board that each vote and class of payments required special consideration in the light of section 28 of the Financial Administration Act.
>
> The Treasury Board also advised the departments to review and take into account the particular audit comments contained in the Auditor General's Reports for 1962-63—

I have no doubt he was commenting on what had taken place under the Government of which I had the honour to be a member.

> —and 1963-64. These general instructions were supplemented by specific guidelines for determining
>
> (a) the items which might properly be provided for by special warrant, and
>
> (b) the proper amount to be provided in each special warrant for each acceptable item.

Now, this:

> In the Audit Office view these guidelines were not always followed in the preparation of the special warrants—

I like the very careful language that the Auditor General uses.

> —and a number of the items provided for did not meet the test of being "urgently required for the public good" as required by section 28 of the Act.

Of course, section 28 of the Act provides that the only payments which may be authorized by Governor General's warrants are such as are "urgently required for the public good".

As one who has signed recommendations for Governor General's warrants, and in the presence of many persons who, I think, have done the same thing, I suggest that it is very difficult to meet the objective test of what is "urgently required for the public good" with respect to one's own department.

All I am saying is—I am not criticizing any government or any minister—that we should strain every effort to find a procedure which would avoid the necessity for this type of discretionary action.

This bill, rather than being merely a tidying up bill, is really a bill which implements the heart of the Glassco Commission Report.

When Dr. Davidson, the Secretary to the Treasury Board, appeared before the Senate Standing Committee on Finance on June 9, 1966—he appeared on a number of occasions during both the present and the previous session, but this happened to be the quotation which came most easily to my hand—he said, at page 219 as follows:

> The heart of the Glassco Commission's report and recommendations, so far as my own assessment is concerned, is to be found in Volume 1 which deals with some of the broad, overall issues relating to the management and organization of the Government service taken as a whole.

He then goes on to delineate what the first report that I have here says, and there are four reports in the first volume which is entitled "Management of the Public Service". He goes on to say that it has to do with:

> ...the creation of a new role for the Treasury Board as an entity separate from the Department of Finance under a President of the Treasury Board—an entity that is to be responsible for what you might call the central management function in the organization of the Government as a whole.

And later:

> As I say, this, in my judgment, at least—

And I am in complete agreement with Dr. Davidson in this.

> —is really the heart of the Glassco Commission's work because it relates to the whole range of activities of the Government of Canada and its various departments and agencies.

That is really what this bill is all about. This bill would have come before us, or should have come before us, without any regard whatsoever for the other two bills, because this is the bill which confers statutory authority on the prime and most important recommendation—to use Dr. Davidson's words again—to implement the "heart of the Glassco Commission's report," a report which was received with praise from all groups in Parliament.

But there is one important recommendation, and this disturbs me, which has not yet been implemented and which goes to the heart of this whole problem. Because I did not want to trespass on your time in view of your indulgence to me, I did not reiterate the new and very broad powers that this bill, if enacted, would give to the Treasury Board. I could have repeated them, I could have expanded on them and then I could have come back to them again to make sure that they had the proper impact. What I want to say is I think that this is the greatest transfer of power within the government service that has ever taken place, and it is done under the guise of a very simple bill to amend the Financial Administration Act.

In the course of producing its first volume, Management of the Public Service, the Glassco Commission made this recommendation at page 54:

> It is our conclusion that the Treasury Board needs to be strengthened by the appointment of a presiding minister with no departmental responsibilities, who would give day-to-day guidance to its staff, provide the initiative needed within the Board itself, and ensure that general considerations of good management find adequate expression within Cabinet on all matters to which they are relevant.

Now, when my colleague Senator Blois was speaking on this matter at the last sitting he suggested that the powers and responsibilities that were being conferred upon the Treasury Board were of such a nature and such an extent and so overpowering that he was concerned as to whether the Treasury Board could properly carry them out.

I must confess that I think the powers that have been conferred are proper and appropriate and can be properly administrated and executed. But I do suggest that that will not be the case unless this other recommendation which I have just read is carried into effect.

I made this same observation—which shows how little the present Government listens to my voice—when I was discussing in this chamber Bill C-178, the Government Organization Act, 1966, which is now law. That was the bill in which—I must be careful of my language—the Minister of National Revenue, for whom I have the highest respect, was also named President of the Treasury Board.

So right in the teeth of the recommendation of the Glassco Commission we have a minister presiding as President of the Treasury Board who, far from not having departmental responsibilities, has the most heavy departmental responsibility, and who no doubt is wondering when he can take that week off that the Minister of Finance referred to and read the recommendations of the Carter Commission so that he can make some forward plans as to the new computers which he will undoubtedly have to purchase in the somewhat remote event that the report is fully implemented.

Now I suggest, honourable senators, that if the responsibilities of the Minister of Justice prior to the enactment of Bill C-178 were such that they should be put under three ministers—and I hasten to add that there were a few responsibilities of the Secretary of State which were divided up in that trifurcation—then I do not quarrel with that; I think that that was probably appropriate. I do think the time may come when we have to distinguish between ministers and members of the cabinet or we will run out of space in the cabinet room—but that is because the administration of Government is becoming more complex.

Having said that, I think that the division of responsibilities between the now Minister of Justice, as defined in the new statute, and the Registrar General and the Solicitor General is highly appropriate. And I think that each of the gentlemen has plenty of responsibilities to keep him occupied. But I say, if the Minister of Finance—as the Glassco Commission indicated, and the bill before us suggests that the Government agrees—found the responsibilities of the Treasury Board, and certainly the very large responsibilities we are now dealing with, too great a burden when added to his other responsibilities, I say that they should not be the responsibility of any Minister of the Crown who has any responsibilities other than the general responsibility that a Cabinet Minister has to his colleagues.

I am very much concerned about this. I want to refer again to the report of the Auditor General. I will not read it but will just refer to the foot of page 3 and to the top of page 4, where he refers to his findings on the Royal Commission on Government Organization. This is his report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, where he refers to the very substantial increase of over 30 per cent in four years in the cost of the administrative overhead, staff, and so on, of government, and where he points out that during the year ended March 31, 1966 the number of employees authorized for departments, crown corporations and other instrumentalities had increased by nearly 11,000, which brought closer to 21,000 than to 20,000 the increase in the number of employees authorized since the royal commission published its findings, and he refers to the recommendations that have not been implemented, and so on.

I am sure Dr. Davidson, Secretary of the Treasury Board, would not agree in toto with the implied criticism by the Auditor General. It may be that with respect to some of these recommendations which the Auditor General says are not being implemented, the Government has not decided that they should be implemented. It may be that the staff and other increases can be satisfactorily explained. But I suggest that if the President of the Treasury Board had no other responsibilities save that, we would have proceeded faster in the implementation of the Glassco recommendations; that cabinet decisions would have been made more quickly; that if the Government were not going to proceed to implement certain of the many specific recommendations that were made, we would by this time know the decision, and we could ask why and endorse it or criticize it.

I suggest further that if we had a President of the Treasury Board who was freed of other responsibilities to which I have referred, we would have been able to press ahead more rapidly with the implementation of the heart of the Glassco recommendations, the management of the public service. I suggest that a minister whose sole responsibility was to do that would probably have seen that the senior staff or senior outside consultants were available to proceed at a much more rapid pace than that at which we have proceeded. In saying this I do not intend any reflection on the officials of the Treasury Board. I believe that the Secretary of the Treasury Board, who was my deputy at the time when his only responsibility was as deputy in the Office of Government Organization, and who was not responsible for the multitudinous other duties he has now, is probably the most overworked and overtaxed public servant in Ottawa today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And maybe underpaid too!

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I know he is. I assert that without question.

Reservations and doubts have been expressed both here and in other places about these three bills. I have spoken now, and I apologize for the length of time I have taken, only because I do not think this is a subordinate bill. By and large I think this is the most important of the three bills, and I wanted to put that in context if I could. Reservations have also been expressed about this trio here and in another place, but having been examined by the joint committee, all members of both houses are prepared, I think, to accept them for what they are, that is, an innovation in the management of the public service, whether we are referring to the function of the Public Service Commission, to the function of the Treasury Board, or to the so-called collective bargaining being instituted.

Having said that and having raised the doubts that I have and made the criticism that I have, I am not opposing this bill. I am sure the salient provisions and particularly the great omission I have referred to will be before us in an amendment to this bill or an amendment to one of the other acts to which I have referred or by other appropriate action. Therefore, far from opposing the bill, I support it. On the other hand, I think I should say that having regard to the importance of seeing that the heart of the recommendations of the Glassco Commission are implemented to the advantage of the members of the public service of this country and of the people of Canada, from the point of view of cost and efficiency, we will watch very closely what takes place in the next little while.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will the honourable senator permit me a question?

First, may I say that I have been very much impressed, as I am sure all honourable senators have been, with the very careful analysis he has made of this important piece of legislation. In the course of his remarks he made reference to the bill which is known to me only as Bill C-178, the Government Organization Act, 1966. I have this act in front of me, and in clause 32 which deals generally with financial administration and which amends section 3 of the Financial Administration Act among other things, it provides as follows:

> 3. (1) There shall be a committee of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada called the Treasury Board over which the President of the Treasury Board appointed by Commission under the Great Seal of Canada shall preside.
>
> (2) The committee constituting the Treasury Board shall, in addition to the President of the Treasury Board, consist of the Minister of Finance and four other members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who may be nominated from time to time by the Governor in Council.

It then goes on to deal with alternate members, rules and procedures, the duties of the President and of the Secretary of the Treasury Board, etc. My honourable colleague has referred to the fact that at the moment the President of the Treasury Board is the same person as the Minister of National Revenue. Do I take it from his remarks that there is nothing in Bill C-178 which would in fact prevent the Government from saying to a minister who occupies both positions, "Hereafter you will occupy one position and surrender the other."

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is quite correct. I hope the Government will do that very soon, and I hope the present President of the Treasury Board will continue to be the President of the Treasury Board.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I take this opportunity to thank again all honourable members for giving unanimous consent to proceed with Order No. 1 first at this sitting.

HON. ARTHUR W. ROEBUCK

BIRTHDAY FELICITATIONS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure you would want me on behalf of all members to wish one of our very distinguished and perhaps most elderly member a very happy birthday. I am, of course, referring to Honourable Senator Roebuck.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You will notice that he is wearing a red carnation. I am sure that is not without significance. I am also sure that I am expressing the views of all of us when I say that we pray every night that when we reach our eighty-ninth birthday we shall be as hale, as hearty and as alert as he is.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, it is difficult for me to reply to so kindly a reference as has been made by the Government Leader.

Birthdays are very important when one is very young, but then their importance edges off. They are not as important in middle life. Then they become very important when they run up into the eighties and the nineties. It is not difficult to grow old—you just have to stick about. But it is a problem to keep what you, sir, have just mentioned, your punch, your alertness, your ability to take pleasure in your work.

I remember an old fellow once in my position who said—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I bet he was 60!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No; he was older than that. He said, "You know how I know my youth is long spent? Because my get-up-and-go has got up and went." My chief reason for being thankful at the moment is that my "get-up-and-go" has not yet got up and went. But I still take great satisfaction and pleasure in the work of the Senate and of the committees to which I belong.

I suppose the finest thing in life is the friends you make. I know no more delightful group of friends than that I have around me in this Senate chamber. It makes very little difference in this chamber on which side of the Speaker you happen to sit. Your kindness, your friendship, your goodwill and this pleasant reference at the present moment make me happy indeed that I am one of the members of this chamber, and I thank you all for your friendship.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

JOINT COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Watson (Assiniboia) had been substituted for that of Mr. Irvine on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living; and that the name of Mr. Forrestall had been substituted for that of Mr. Brand on the Special Joint Committee on the National and Royal Anthems.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS CONCURRENCE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> Resolved: That this house do unite with the Senate in the appointment of a Special Joint Committee to study and report upon amendments to the Criminal Code relating to the dissemination of varieties of "hate propaganda" in Canada as set out in Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code"; and
>
> That 12 members of the House of Commons, to be designated by this House at a later date, be members of the said committee; and that Standing Order 67 (1) be suspended in relation thereto; and
>
> That the committee have the power to call for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and
>
> Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate informing that House that the House of Commons do unite with the Senate for the above purposes.
>
> Attest
>
> Léon-J. Raymond,
> The Clerk of the House of Commons.

POSTAL SERVICES INTERRUPTION RELIEF BILL

COMMONS AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-55, to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

> Page 2, Line 46. Immediately after clause 4 add the following new clause:
>
> "5. Where in respect of any application under section 2, any matter or thing is authorized or required by this Act to be done or proceeded with by or before a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, the matter or thing may be done or proceeded with by or before any other judge of the Court as though the application were an application to the Court."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly: I move that this amendment be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-267, to amend the Judges Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be read the second time now.

He said: Honourable senators, this is an important bill, as is any bill which deals with the judiciary. It might be easier for honourable senators to follow what I have to say if they have Bill C-267 before them.

It provides for an increase in the salary of judges who have been appointed by the federal Government; that is to say, judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, of the Exchequer Court of Canada, of the superior courts of the provinces, and of the county courts. This is the first salary increase that has been granted to judges since 1963. A percentage or uniform increase has not been made, but rather an attempt has been made to fix the salaries of judges at a figure in keeping with the importance of their duties and the respect connected with the judicial office.

Honourable senators will notice in clause 1 of the bill the salaries which are to be paid to judges in future. In the explanatory notes on the page opposite are the salaries which are now being paid. It will serve my purpose, I think, if I indicate the increase in each instance.

The Chief Justice of Canada will receive an increase of $5,000. The puisne judges of the Supreme Court of Canada will each get an increase of $5,000. The President of the Exchequer Court of Canada will be increased by $7,000. The Chief Justices of the provincial trial courts and courts of appeal will get an increase of $5,000. The puisne judges of provincial trial courts and courts of appeal will receive an increase of $5,000. The District and County Court judges will receive an increase of $3,000.

Honourable senators, in addition to the increases I have mentioned, the new section 20 of the bill provides for an additional salary of $2,000 annually to be paid to these judges, subject to specified conditions. At the present time in certain provinces the judges receive a provincial grant over and above the salary they receive from the federal Government. Section 20 does not prevent them from accepting that grant from the province, but if they do accept it they do not receive the $2,000 I have mentioned.

The amount of the provincial grant varies in different provinces, but honourable senators will understand that if in a province a judge receives in addition to his salary an amount of $3,500—which I believe is the amount paid in Ontario—he will not take the $2,000 from the federal Government, because he cannot have both. In some provinces that grant is not made, or if made it is less than $2,000, and in those circumstances the judge will no doubt accept the $2,000.

As this section will not come into effect until June 1, the judges will have an opportunity to decide which grant they will take.

I should explain further that in some provinces a general grant is not made to judges, but the judge is appointed to another position. He may be appointed to the position of judge of the Surrogate Court at a salary. There is nothing in this bill to prevent a province from doing that, but the result can easily be seen. In one province a County Court judge might get his $19,000 and his $2,000, whereas in another province he might also get a salary of, say, $3,000 or $5,000 for being the Surrogate Court judge. Honourable senators, I cannot think of anything the federal Government can do about that, except perhaps bring the attorneys general of the provinces together to see if they can work out some uniform basis. That is the position that will arise if this bill passes.

Section 21 provides that travelling allowances shall be paid to judges. No great change is effected by this bill. Judges who travel on court business will get their travelling expenses. Payment is made for travelling expenses if they are incurred on court business.

I shall not deal with clause 3. It merely deletes a reference to the Circuit Court of the District of Montreal. That court is not now in existence.

Clause 4 provides that the salary of a judge upon retirement is fixed at the amount of the salary I have mentioned, plus $2,000. For instance, the annuity on retirement of a County Court judge would be based upon $19,000 plus $2,000 or, in other words, on $21,000.

Clause 5 is quite important because it prevents a judge from acting as a commissioner, arbitrator, adjudicator, referee, conciliator or mediator. He is, indeed, prevented from acting in those capacities unless he is appointed by a government, either federal or provincial, or by an order in council. If he is so appointed he can act as an arbitrator, but if he does so act he cannot receive any fees, or any payment apart from his actual travelling and living expenses. This is a change from what has existed in the past.

As honourable senators know, a number of judges, especially County Court judges, have been acting as arbitrators, and have been spending considerable amounts of time in doing so. In some counties there have been complaints from the Bar that the County Court judge has been away too much in connection with arbitrations. It has been decided that in future a judge cannot act as an arbitrator unless he is expressly authorized by statute to so act. I might repeat here what I said before, namely, that if he does act he is paid only his actual travelling expenses.

Honourable senators, that explains the provisions of this bill. I should like to comment on the fact that the County Court judges will now be relieved in large part of the duties they have assumed in the past in respect of arbitrations. They will now be able to spend considerably more time in their counties.

At the present time the Divorce Act of Ontario provides that the Supreme Court of Ontario has jurisdiction for all purposes under that act. That is to say, in the province of Ontario—and I think this generally applies to all provinces—divorce actions must be tried by the Supreme Court judges. According to the latest figures I have been able to obtain, in 1964 there were 3,474 divorces granted by the Ontario courts, and in the same year there were 7,748 divorces granted in all parts of Canada, excluding Quebec and Newfoundland.

It seems to me that these divorce actions could be tried just as well by County Court judges. Indeed, it would be to some advantage, for such judges are sitting in the court of their county continually. At the present time a Supreme Court judge comes to a county four times a year. In the meantime motions can be heard before the County Court judge but in many instances it is necessary to go to the larger centres of the province to have motions heard. I realize that there may be some disadvantage in having a divorce tried in a particular county and that it might be felt that another judge would be better able to deal with it.

I would suggest to our leader, therefore, and I believe others have made similar suggestions, that if and when the Divorce Act is amended the present wording of the act:

> The Supreme Court of Ontario has jurisdiction for all purposes of this act.

be amended to read as follows:

> The Supreme Court of Ontario and the County Courts of Ontario have concurrent jurisdiction for all purposes of this act.

That is my suggestion, honourable senators, and I leave it with you for your consideration.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I had intended to adjourn the debate, but since it is quite early perhaps it might expedite the passing of this measure if I say now what I intended to say at a later date.

The honourable Senator Macdonald (Brantford) has given a good explanation of the bill. I shall mention some of the things he said, but I will try to avoid needless repetition.

As I read the bill, it accomplishes five things. First, its main purpose is to revise the salaries of our judges, which have not been revised for some time. Senator Macdonald stated that their salaries have not been revised since 1963—I thought it was longer ago than that.

Second, the bill makes provision for the payment of an additional salary of $2,000, subject to certain specified conditions. Senator Macdonald gave a very good explanation of that, and I will not deal with it at length.

Third, the bill clarifies and broadens the law in some respects as to travelling expenses that judges are allowed, by providing that judges be paid their actual expenses when required to travel to hold court, sit in chambers or perform other official functions.

Fourth, the bill provides some relief with respect to the payment of estate taxes for widows of judges who receive annuities under the act. Senator Macdonald did not touch on that, and I will just refer to the explanatory note opposite page 8 of the bill. It states that the purpose of the amendment is to enable estate taxes to be paid on widows' annuities by instalments.

Finally, subsections 1 and 2 of section 38 of the act are repealed and are replaced by a new subsection 1 which provides that judges can act as commissioners, arbitrators, adjudicators, referees, conciliators or mediators, if there is a federal or provincial statute authorizing them to do so, or they are so authorized by the Governor in Council or by the Lieutenant Governor of a province. However, they receive no remuneration whatsoever—only their actual travelling and other expenses if they are paid by the federal or provincial governments, as the case may be, for that kind of work. That is my interpretation of that section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: With regard to revision of judges' salaries, a District or County Court Judge will receive $19,000 per annum, an increase of $3,000. However, as Senator Macdonald (Brantford) said, they are usually paid something by the provinces in which they do their work, principally for Surrogate Court work. The additional sum they receive varies. I think our District Court judges in Saskatchewan receive $3,000. I was under the impression that in Ontario they received $4,000, but Senator Macdonald says it is $3,500.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is not for Surrogate Court work; they receive that as a general thing.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: For surrogate and other work that they do.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): For other work. Surrogate work is not specified.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: At any rate, it is quite clear that if they do receive from a province any annual or other periodic compensation as a judge of a Superior or County Court, they do not receive any part of the $2,000 from the federal Government.

All judges of the supreme or high courts get an increase of $5,000, with the exception of the Exchequer Court judges, who receive an increase of $7,000.

These salaries are set out in detail on pages 1 to 5 of the bill, and I do not intend to deal with them further. However, I wish to make some general remarks.

In the first place, these salaries are not as remunerative as they would seem to be. When the newspapers of the country report that the Chief Justice of Canada will be receiving a salary of $40,000 a year and that the salaries of the other judges will be increased, they fail to mention that the full salary in every case is subject to income tax, that the judges will have to pay back to the Department of National Revenue about one half of what they receive by way of salary. It means that the Chief Justice will only have about $20,000 left to live on and maintain his position in life. This also applies, more or less, to all judges. They must pay a heavy tax on their salaries and other income, if any. Incidentally, Members of Parliament are also heavily taxed on their indemnities.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is necessary that our judiciary maintain a very high standard. It is frequently said that the independence of the judiciary is the cornerstone of our Canadian democracy. I think that the increase in the salaries of our judges is warranted. An attempt is being made by this bill to bring their salaries more in line with those paid to judges in England. I for one have always contended that the salaries should be attractive enough that the leaders of the Bar will accept judicial appointments. I would rather err on the side of generosity than to be too niggardly. I am proud of our judges and of our courts. My experience of over 50 years of legal practice in Western Canada convinces me that our judges are of a very high standard. We want to keep them that way, and one way to do so is to see that they receive reasonable remuneration for their work.

I know I will be pardoned if I say that at one time I thought I would be appointed to the bench, but I became a senator instead. Whether that was a loss or a gain for the judiciary will never be known.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It has been a gain for the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: For some time I have been of the opinion that our County Court judges, or District Court judges as they are known in Saskatchewan and Alberta, might take some of the load off our Supreme Court judges if they were given jurisdiction to deal with divorce petitions. Senator Macdonald (Brantford) has dealt with that very fully. I do not intend to say much more about it, except that if our divorce laws are modernized, as I expect and hope they will be, until the cases level off in numbers there will be a great many petitions to be heard. In my opinion, there will be more than the judges of the superior courts can handle. By giving the lower courts jurisdiction in divorce matters, it would lighten the load of the higher court judges and would work to good advantage.

I said previously that most of our County Court or District Court judges do provincial work, and in some of the provinces they do all of the Surrogate Court work. They are paid for that work by the provinces. On that account, they would not qualify for any part of the additional salary of $2,000 as above mentioned, if they receive more than that amount from the provinces.

As Senator Macdonald (Brantford) has stated, their maximum would be $21,000 from the federal Government. This is somewhat less than the salary that the Supreme Court judges will receive, but I have not heard any real complaints on that score.

With regard to the extrajudicial duties of our judges, I sincerely hope that these duties will be kept to a minimum. Otherwise the work in certain judicial areas will pile up and will not receive the first-class attention it should have.

Honourable senators, generally speaking, I am in favour of this legislation.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, before I offer some comments on this bill, I would ask the honourable sponsor whether he intends to move that this bill be referred to a committee. I do not believe that it is necessary but I would like to know his intentions in this connection.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am in the hands of the Senate. If there is a desire that it should go to a committee, I would not object. I agree with the honourable senator, that there is no necessity at the present time, from what has been said so far, to send the bill to a committee.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: In the event that it is not referred to a committee, it may be that the honourable sponsor could give me a brief reply to some short questions.

In the new section 6 it is provided that the District Judge of the Admiralty District of Quebec, as well as those of the Admiralty Districts of British Columbia and Ontario, will receive a salary of $1,500. My understanding is that the judges who occupy these positions are justices of the Superior Court in Quebec or of the Supreme Courts in the other provinces and who will, by the other provisions of the bill, receive a salary of $28,000, being $26,000 plus $2,000 under the new section 20. The additional $1,500 under the new section 6, would put them up to $29,500, which is $1,500 more than the puisne judges of the Exchequer Court who are empowered to act in admiralty all across Canada. Would my interpretation be correct in this respect?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes. From my reading of the bill, I would think the honourable senator's interpretation is correct. Of course this is no different from a judge in a province receiving $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 for acting as Surrogate Court judge. He would get that in addition to his salary of $19,000.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I was not arguing this point. My next question is this. In view of the fact that we do not have before us the other sections of the act which are not amended but which may be affected by this bill, I wonder whether the pensions payable to the judges and their widows would be adjusted on the basis of the new salaries.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes. Under the provisions of this bill they are adjusted on the basis of the new salaries. I might say that they are adjusted on the basis of the salaries mentioned here, plus the $2,000, whether they get that $2,000 or not. Supposing they are getting $3,000 or $4,000 from a province, and they continue to do so, when it comes to calculating their pension it will be based on the $21,000.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: My last question to the sponsor is in connection with a comment he made about the new section 20. If I understood him correctly, he suggested that it was optional for the judges either to continue receiving the payments provided by the provincial governments or receive instead the $2,000 provided in this section. Would that be correct?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes, that is correct. They have until the first day of June to make their election. The honourable senator will see that in the new section 20(4).

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is my point. I do not see that there is any option. The new section 20 says:

> There shall be paid to every judge who is in receipt of a salary under this act... an additional salary of $2,000 per annum as compensation for any extra-judicial services that he may be called upon to perform by the Government of Canada or the government of a province.

Whether he is called upon or not, is irrelevant here. He gets the $2,000.

It may be done by subsection 2 of that section. It does not apply to "a judge who receives from a province any annual or other periodic compensation as a judge of a superior or county court." Then, would the honourable sponsor explain if this would not be in contradiction with the new section 39, as provided in section 6 of this bill.

It seems to me that we are trying to put into effect the principle, with which I am in total agreement, that any judge should not be able to accept any salary, fee or remuneration or other emolument for his services and should not be called upon to discharge any other duties than those relating strictly to his office.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not know if I follow the honourable senator's questions. A judge is appointed, we will say, by the federal Government to be a County Court judge, and he accepts that appointment. In accepting that appointment he gets a salary of $19,000 plus $2,000. There is nothing in this bill that will prevent a provincial government from also appointing him to another judicial position such as a Surrogate Court judge and paying him for that service. The option that he has of accepting or not the $2,000, only refers to any general payment which may be made by a province, without restricting it to any special work.

I can speak only for my own province where a payment of $3,500 is paid to the judges of the County Court for general services. Under this bill if a judge accepts that $3,500, he does not get the $2,000.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I am very much indebted to the honourable Senator Macdonald for his explanations.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the honourable Senator Macdonald may have omitted an answer to one question that the honourable senator asked earlier, that is, whether or not the $2,000 that is provided in the new section 20 here is included in the amount on which the judge's pension is based. I think that was the question.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I answered it.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That was answered. It is included, and the pension is based on that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is provided in clause 4, in the new section 30 of the act, and not in section 20.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It is included, but I think the honourable leader will agree with me that it seems strange, in this sense, when he had the option of refusing the $2,000 if he continues to receive an emolument from a provincial government. In any event, that may be the situation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The provincial governments of course may change their legislation in view of that.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I would suggest that that would be the proper thing to do.

Honourable senators, I do not propose to make lengthy comments. I merely wished to clear up a few points.

We are indebted to honourable Senator Macdonald for his explanations. This is an important bill and I am in full agreement with all that he and Senator Aseltine said regarding our judiciary. We have a well respected judiciary that we should be proud of. The main thing is to give our judges complete independence. I would agree with Senator Aseltine, that I would rather err in being too generous than in being niggardly with regard to salaries to our judges.

This bill makes an adjustment which is substantial in some respects but which is not exaggerated. I think it has met generally with the approval of the population of this country. What is strange, however, is that it does not really try to solve the problem that has been pointed out by the sponsor with respect to some extra-judicial duties or para-judicial duties performed by our judges and for which they receive a fee from either a provincial government or from other sources.

It seems to me that we should have dealt with this once and for all. In the Province of Quebec I know that the Judges of the Superior Court are not in receipt of any salary from the provincial government. From time to time they have acted as commissioners or arbitrators or in other capacities as described in Section 5 of this bill which amends Section 38 of the Judges Act. They have for these duties received some compensation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would that be for private parties?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Let us say when acting as arbitrators in a labour conflict sometimes they have been in receipt of compensation. I do not know if they are presently, but some years ago this used to be the case.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh yes. Sometimes it is provided in the labour agreement that a distinguished judge will be resorted to as an arbitrator.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: He would be acting as sole arbitrator, for instance.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, quite.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I know that it exists in some conventions as far as the provincial court judges of Quebec are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: But what I suggest is that the judges of Superior or Supreme Courts of our provinces are much too busy with the discharge of the ordinary work allotted to these courts to be taken away for periods of time to discharge extrajudicial or parajudicial duties. I do not agree with the idea at all that they should count on remuneration from other sources.

I think that we are providing here, or should provide here, an adequate salary, and that should be all, because if you allow a judge to receive a fee or a salary from another source, it is only human nature that he will be looking for this opportunity. We are trying to correct this in suggesting to some of the judges who have been in receipt of a salary from a provincial government, to forsake it and take instead the $2,000. But it seems to me that the way to do it would be to provide a salary of $28,000, as is provided for the judges of the Exchequer Court. We could say once and for all that they shall not act for anybody else or receive remuneration from anybody else, or we will apply strictly section 39 as amended. That section reads:

> Except as provided in subsection (3), no judge shall accept any salary, fee, remuneration or other emolument or any expenses or allowances for acting in any capacity described in subsection (1) of section 38.

Instead of "acting in any capacity described in subsection (1) of section 38," I would have said "shall not, for acting as judge, except if he is required to do so by the Governor General in Council or by the Lieutenant Governor in Council." Only in those instances should a judge appointed by the federal Government be allowed to discharge any extrajudicial duties, and in that case he should receive only his travelling and other expenses.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the honourable senator does not object, is that not done in clause 5, section 38, which reads:

> 38.(1) No judge shall act as commissioner, arbitrator, adjudicator, referee, conciliator or mediator on any commission or on any inquiry or other proceeding unless—

And then it gives the two exceptions. It seems to me that that covers the point you have raised.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I think that clause does not prevent a province from appointing a federal judge to the position of Surrogate court judge in his county.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is what I mean. I want to go further.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Very well. I apologize for interrupting.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Because section 20 here says:

> There shall be paid to every judge... an additional salary of $2,000 per annum as compensation for any extra-judicial services that he may be called upon to perform by the Government of Canada or the government of a province.

Whether he is called upon to discharge or to perform such extrajudicial services, is, as I mentioned, irrelevant because he gets it one way or the other.

My suggestion would be that we should provide a salary of $28,000 for performing the duties of his office, including duties that he may be called upon to perform by the Government of Canada or by the government of a province, but under an order in council. I would even go so far as to say with the prior approval of the chief justice, because we know—and this is the situation in Quebec —that our judges of the Superior Court in Quebec are overburdened with work, and when we ask a judge of the Superior Court to act as a commissioner, he may be away from his court for two or three years. In the meantime his colleagues have to assume the burden and share the work that he is not able to perform as judge. This should be restricted as much as possible.

I think we should do away with the practice of any provincial government paying an emolument of any kind to a judge appointed by the federal Government.

I am not opposing the bill. I realize that this is a pragmatic approach to this problem. It may be that the next step this Parliament will take will complete the solution of this problem.

So far as the increases are concerned, I think we are all in agreement that they are well deserved and are needed to maintain our judiciary in a completely independent state. Otherwise I hope that when the next bill amending our Judges Act comes before Parliament, the suggestions I have made may in part be enacted.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, in the discussion which has been going on I have enjoyed listening to the legal members of the Senate. I rise as a layman to say that I approve of the bill. I think one of the main reasons for giving judges adequate salaries, as has been mentioned, is that they should be an independent body. I agree with that, but I think the salary should be sufficiently attractive to induce legal men of high calibre to take positions on the bench so that they will be secure. The salary should be sufficiently attractive that they would not be tempted to remain in their professions where they could earn very much more.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would you exempt them from income tax?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Oh, no, I would not go that far. However, I have heard of many eminent legal gentlemen being offered positions on the bench but they declined because they could earn much more in their profession as practising lawyers. So, I am all in favour of the bill.

I would just like to say to the sponsor of the bill, Senator Macdonald (Brantford), that I was rather intrigued by this $2,000 and the discussion which has just taken place in reference to additional salaries paid by the provincial governments. Senator Macdonald used the term "for general services." I think this does not apply where a judge is appointed to a specific position, but in the case of general services which he gives. What is meant by "general services"?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I do not have the provincial statute in front of me, and I have no doubt that these words do not appear in the statute in that form. However, I do know that judges of County Courts in the Province of Ontario get an amount of $3,500 annually from the provincial government. I take it that that is paid to them for duties which come to them in the course of their position as judge of a county. I cannot detail what those services are, but I know they do receive that amount.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps it is for police commission work.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I think the cities pay them a fee for police commission work in addition to this $3,500.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They also get appeals from the court of revision and probate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes; and it probably has something to do with their work in the selection of jurors.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thirty years ago when I was more familiar with it than I am today, we gave them $3,500. This was given to all judges who performed Surrogate Court work. That may well have changed in the many years that have gone by since then, but in those days it was for Surrogate Court work only.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That would be in the Province of Ontario only?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: May I suggest that the provincial governments do not have to pay any salary to a judge if, by a provincial act, they give him jurisdiction in a certain field. If the Ontario law says that a judge of the Supreme Court shall act as Surrogate Court judge, the provincial government does not have to pay him any salary for that work.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is correct in Ontario. I can only speak for my own province. In Ontario the County Court judges are all Surrogate Court judges as well.

Referring to some remarks made a few moments ago by honourable Senator Flynn, I may say that I agree generally with what he has said. It has, however, been a difficult problem to change the legislation so that it would conform to the systems that have been developed in the different provinces. The province has counted on a judge to perform certain duties, and I do not know what the situation would be if the federal Government were to say that he could no longer do them. I think the solution would be, as I mentioned previously, a conference of attorneys general of the provinces to try to work out something that is common to all provinces. I think that is the only way this problem could be solved.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I do not have the original act here, but I wonder if the sponsor of the bill could tell us what is the widow's pension and what it is based on. Does she get one-third of the actual salary that the judge received on his retirement or half that amount? What proportion does she get?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I can only speak from memory, but I think it is fairly accurate to say that the position under the new act is that the judge would get two-thirds of $21,000, which would be $14,000. In the event of his death the widow would receive one-third of the $14,000.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It would be adjusted on the basis of the $21,000?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Would the Senate be prepared to give third reading now?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Is there any reason why it should receive third reading now?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Well, there is some urgency in connection with the bill. As honourable senators will understand, there are judges being retired from month to month under the present act. I believe there are some retirements due in the immediate future. That is the only urgency. I do not know what will be added by a delay of one day in giving third reading to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It could not receive Royal Assent tonight anyway.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I have no objection. Accordingly, I move that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1967

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-271, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-252, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

STATUTORY SALARIES REVISION BILL, 1967

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-266, to provide for the revision of certain salaries fixed by statute.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, in this case I shall also move with leave, that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting. This does not mean that all these bills will be dealt with at the next sitting, but at least we will have them on the Order Paper.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-270, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly with leave, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-274, to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, February 22, 1967, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Revised Capital Budget of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, and a copy of Order in Council P. C. 1967-255, dated February 14, 1967, approving same. (English and French texts).

Revised Capital Budget of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 15(2) of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act, chapter 12, Statutes of Canada, 1962-63. (English text).

Capital Budget of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition for the year ending December 31, 1967, pursuant to section 15(2) of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act, chapter 12, Statutes of Canada, 1962-63. (English text).

Report of Operations under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, chapter 183, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Report of the Royal Commission on Taxation, dated December 22, 1966, Volumes 1 to 6, inclusive, together with a Consolidated Index and Press Releases numbered 1 to 31. (Chairman: Mr. Kenneth LeM. Carter). (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 1147 to 1211, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): May I ask the honourable Senator Roebuck if that means that 1,211 petitions in divorce have been considered by the Senate during the present session?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am not sure when the numbering started, but I am certain of this, that during 1966 we passed over 1,000 resolutions which I had moved in this house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It occurs to me that the numbering commenced at the opening of the present session on January 18 of last year. So, the number of 1,211 covers more than a year.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But they are in the present session. They are cases which have been heard during this session, which has been a lengthy one.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is right. That number represents the cases heard during this session, commencing on January 18, 1966.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is right.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the Senate, and without referring to incidental matters like the commons amendment to the Postal Services bill, tomorrow it is proposed to deal with Bill C-252, to provide general incentives to industry, and Bill C-270, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Then, depending on the progress made on those two items, if there are other items on the Order Paper it might seem appropriate to proceed with, we shall do so. However, I think the two items I have just mentioned should have priority.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We have already given first reading to both those bills?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. They have received first reading and stand for second reading.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 1, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ENLARGEMENT OF REFERENCE TO JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> Ordered: That the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Public Service of Canada be further empowered to inquire into and report upon the matter of the pensions paid on account of the service of former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and of former members of the armed forces.
>
> Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours thereof.
>
> Attest
>
> Léon J. Raymond
>
> The Clerk of the House of Commons

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate:

> That the Senate do agree that the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Public Service of Canada be further empowered to inquire into and report upon the matter of the pensions paid on account of the service of former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and of former members of the armed forces; and
>
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL RELATIONS

NOTICE OF MEETING

On the Order for Reports of Committees:

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I wish to make a short statement regarding a meeting of the Senate Standing Committee on External Relations which has been arranged for next Wednesday, a week from today, at 9.30 a.m. The Honourable Paul Martin, Secretary of State for External Affairs, will be appear before the committee at that time. He will make what I believe will be a comprehensive statement on Government policy in regard to NATO. Indeed I believe that Mr. Martin will be making the most complete statement on NATO that he has made to date. Consequently, it is hoped that all members of the committee, and other senators as well, will arrange to be present. Mr. Martin will first invite questions on Government NATO policy, and then he will be prepared to invite questions on Canada's position regarding the conflict in Vietnam and on any other areas of concern in foreign affairs.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson moved the third reading of Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill C-267, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

> GOVERNMENT HOUSE
>
> Ottawa
>
> 1 March 1967
>
> Sir,
>
> I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 1st March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

POSTAL SERVICES INTERRUPTION RELIEF BILL

COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill S-55, to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the amendment be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, I think the amendment is one that would commend itself to the members of this house, but perhaps a brief explanation is in order.

Honourable senators will remember that we passed Bill S-55, which provided for relief because of hardship or loss suffered by reason of the postal strike and interruption of postal services between July 22 and August 7, 1965. The form of relief provided in that bill was by way of application to the Exchequer Court of Canada. I know I am threshing old straw, because Senator Denis, the sponsor, explained the bill very fully at that time.

The relief, as I have said, is to be obtained as a result of an application to be made to a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada. Some members of the other place felt that the use of the word "judge" might imply what the lawyers describe as persona designata, and that an individual member of that court who started with a case would have to continue it.

As honourable senators know, the Exchequer Court is a circuit court, which means that judges are at times absent from Ottawa for long periods. Therefore, it was felt that in order to avoid having the individual judge before whom the proceedings were initiated being required to deal continuously with those proceedings, an amendment might clarify the situation. The amendment, which will be clause 5 of the bill, provides that:

> Where in respect of any application under section 2, any matter or thing is authorized or required by this Act to be done or proceeded with by or before a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, the matter or thing may be done or proceeded with by or before any other judge of the Court as though the application were an application to the Court.

I think this amendment is entirely reasonable.

Amendment concurred in.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1967

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-271, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

He said: The form of this bill is the least of our concerns this afternoon, because it is in the usual form of all appropriation bills. The substance is the matter which concerns us, so I will devote my time to that, without specific reference to the clauses of the bill. Honourable senators are fully aware of the clauses in these appropriation bills and for practical purposes they are invariably identical.

The purpose of the bill is to permit the Government of Canada to lend to Expo a further sum of $21 million at the rate of 5⅝ per cent.

It will be remembered that on December 20, 1962, an act known as the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act was passed and assented to by this Parliament. The item in this case is in the supplementary Estimates of the Department of Finance. The Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act is chapter 12 of the Statutes of 1962-63. In sections 11 and 12 of that act there are financial provisions.

Section 12 is the key section. It provides:

> (1) With the approval of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Finance of Quebec, the Corporation may borrow money for the purposes for which it is incorporated, on the security of notes, bonds or debentures of the Corporation.
>
> (2) The Corporation shall not issue any notes, bonds or debentures under the authority of subsection (1) except at such rates of interest and subject to such other terms and conditions as may be approved by the Governor in Council and the Lieutenant Governor in Council and > unless payment of the principal amount thereof and of the interest thereon is guaranteed by Her Majesty and Her Majesty in right of the Province of Quebec as provided in subsection (3)...

This is the legal foundation for the proposal which is made to Parliament now.

I should advise the Senate that, to date, under that section 12, a total of $154 million has been loaned to the Corporation. In 1965, some $80 million was authorized, but all of that was not drawn before the end of that fiscal year; the amount of $44 million was drawn up to that time, and the rate then was 5⅛ per cent.

In the fiscal year 1966-67 there were borrowings in the amount of $110 million, also at 5⅛ per cent. All this money was drawn in the fiscal year.

I should advise the Senate that, in addition to these borrowings, there were grants to the Corporation totaling $40 million. One-half of this money is provided from federal sources: the other half is provided from sources in the Province of Quebec. Of the second half mentioned, 37½ per cent is provided by the provincial Government and 12½ per cent by the Corporation of the City of Montreal. All of these amounts and allocations were the result of agreements made by the authorities concerned in the year 1963.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Pardon me, what were the percentages again?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am referring now to grants and I am away from the borrowings. The grants were to total $40 million. Of that, 50 per cent was from the federal source and 50 per cent was from the Quebec source. The Quebec source was divided as follows: 37½ per cent from the province and 12½ per cent from the City of Montreal.

Section 10 of the Canadian World Exhibition Act provides:

> (1) The Corporation shall, as soon as practicable...submit for the approval of the Governor in Council and the Lieutenant Governor in Council its overall plan for the Exhibition, setting forth the various undertakings and projects proposed—

To this date the overall plan has been estimated to cost approximately $379,446,000. Of this, $221,436,000 is a capital outlay and $156,261,000 is for operating expenses.

This money is used for the purpose of Expo and for the work that is being done on the site by the Corporation. It includes the buildings that the Corporation itself erects, roads at the site, bridges and sewers. It includes buildings that may not be used by Expo but that will be rented by Expo for the purposes of the project. It includes, too, the provision of parking lots, some of which are on the south side of the St. Lawrence and for which access for persons using those parking lots has been provided.

This amount does not include the amounts that have been spent by the provincial government for roads or the amounts spent by municipal government for subway connections for traffic control and the like.

The investment obviously is enormous, but the tourist expenditure that can be expected as a result of the holding of this world's fair will also be enormous—not only in the City of Montreal but in many other parts of Canada. We will have visitors here in the centennial year from all parts of the world, and they will be touring many parts of the country.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Could the honourable leader tell us in whose name that $221 million will be vested?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It will be vested in the name of the Corporation. Perhaps the honourable senator will not mind if I continue, and as I go along I will make clearer what might happen with reference to the capital projects that have been developed.

I am informed that some 62 nations have spent or will spend two-thirds of the amount that Expo will spend on the site. This will be for their pavilions and their exhibits. This is only an estimate, but it gives another boost to the amount of money being spent on this project. The Exposition will open on April 28 and will close on October 27, a period of six months. In this respect it is governed by the rules established by the Bureau of International Exhibitions. Such exhibitions are authorized to be held every three years and they run for a period of six months.

So much for the expenditure side of the ledger. The revenue side is necessarily a forecast at this stage, but I am informed that the revenue forecasts are in part at least based on the expectation that some 35 million visitors will go to that site in the course of the six months during which the exhibition runs.

I am informed that the salvage value of the capital installations at this time can only be estimated. The asset value of the buildings and pavilions, not including such things as roads and sewers, is now about $175 million, of which sum the exhibiting countries will spend approximately $142 million. I am informed that there is still room available for more exhibitors, for more sponsorship of products and for such things as benches on the grounds and even for more pavilions, but the officials who have discussed this matter with me, have told me that this project is already assured of being a great success and will redound, not only to the credit of the City of Montreal and of the Province of Quebec, but to Canada as a whole. Revenues will accrue from income taxes on profits earned by exhibitors and others, from customs and excise sources, and from the tourist dollars that will be spent there and elsewhere. There will be an increase in the volume of foreign dollars spent in Canada, and inevitably there will be business contacts made that one may expect will result in a further expansion of Canadian trade abroad.

I am told that it is a rule of the Bureau of International Exhibitions that the foreign pavilions must be removed within a period of six months from the date the exhibition comes to an end, unless other arrangements are made with the host country and, in this case, with the Corporation. Some of the Canadian installations will, of course, remain as a tremendous asset to Montreal. They are, for example the stadium, being built by the Canadian Automobile Manufacturers, the administration building, the Expo Theatre, and Habitat '67 which contains living quarters on the Mackay Pier. I am informed that the transportation system known as Expo Express is already known to be a saleable asset. There has been a bridge built called the Concordia Bridge of which no disposition has yet been made since it has not been decided who will ultimately assume responsibility for it. Such matters will be handled by the Corporation in the normal course of business.

Honourable senators who have visited the site will recall an area called La Ronde, which contains an amusement park and is said to have cost about $26 million. I am also informed that this will probably be an asset of immense value which the Corporation can dispose of with little if any loss, and that it can continue to be used.

St. Helen's Island, which is part of the site, has been a park used extensively by the City of Montreal, and it will continue to be used for that purpose.

The buildings on Ile Verte are likely to be of interest to the City of Montreal only. The buildings on Ile Notre Dame, which contain most of the pavilions will have some marketable value. I understand that it is the intention of France to turn over its equity in its building to the corporation or other appropriate body. It is the intention of the Province of Quebec to dispose of its pavilion in the same way.

Honourable senators, what we are asked to consider here this afternoon is essentially a further advance to the Corporation of the sum of $21 million in addition to the $154 million already advanced by way of loans. These loans are guaranteed by the federal and provincial governments. It has been arranged that officials of Expo will come to the Senate Committee on Finance tomorrow morning to explain and discuss this project and to answer questions on any matters into which honourable senators desire to inquire. Honourable senators will probably not be primarily interested in the fact that an additional $21 million is being sought, although explanations will be given in respect of that item, which is a very considerable sum.

I am informed that there is considerable urgency about the passing of this bill. The minister tells me that Expo requires this money urgently before the end of this week. Therefore, I am going to ask the Senate to depart somewhat from its customary practice and give second and third reading to this bill today in order that it may receive Royal Assent later this afternoon. If honourable senators accede to this request and so permit advances under this $21 million allocation to begin as quickly as possible, this will in no way inhibit their asking any questions they wish to ask with reference to Expo when the officials from the Corporation are here tomorrow.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I had hoped that there might have been a member on this side more qualified than I to discuss the financial matters which form the subject of this bill. However, that has not proved to be the case this afternoon.

At the outset let me say that I see no reason why we should not grant the leader's request that this bill should be given second and third reading this afternoon, if it is in fact necessary. I accept his word that the minister has stated it is necessary that this bill should be passed so that the money needed may be available before the end of the week.

As the bill stands it simply contains a request for $21 million needed for the continuance of Expo. The Corporation is in need of the money. As far as the explanations to the committee are concerned, I feel that the time will not be taken too much in explaining why the $21 million is needed as in ascertaining why we have had such huge deficits in our estimates, and also in obtaining an explanation as to what has been done at Expo.

Expo is of course a tremendous undertaking for the City of Montreal. I think very few of us really know just what is being undertaken and how much has been accomplished. So, honourable senators, I know I speak for my colleagues on this side of the house as well as for myself when I say that we will make no objection to having third reading of the bill this afternoon.

However, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words about Expo. I, along with every other senator, and I hope the great majority of Canadians, have been watching with amazement and hope the construction of Expo. There were times when it looked as if it might not prove to be a success—it seemed almost a race against time. But now we have the impression that those who are responsible for Expo have rolled up their sleeves, as it were, and that we are well on the road to success in this tremendous undertaking.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: As the honourable Leader of the Government has said, those who have undertaken the work and the organization, the officials in the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal, and Canada's representatives overseas deserve the highest praise.

At the outset I want to say a word of praise for His Worship Mayor Jean Drapeau of Montreal, who has been an untiring and indefatigable worker for the Exposition, not only all across Canada but in many foreign countries. I have listened to him on the radio and have heard and seen him of television. I have been pleased and amazed at the effort he has made, and is continuing to make, and at the success he is achieving in "selling" Expo to Canada and the rest of the world.

For a while we thought the Province of Quebec was dragging its feet. That was a mistaken idea. The present Premier of the Province of Quebec, Daniel Johnson, and the former Premier, Jean Lesage, are both particularly anxious that Expo should be a major success. There is every reason why they should be, because no part of Canada, indeed no place in the world, is going to benefit more than the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal. If it is not a success, they will lose the most.

The honourable Leader of the Government spoke of the organization behind Expo. These are the men who have been responsible for the staggering amount of work that has been done: the building of bridges, the digging of tunnels, the development of St. Helen's Island. We all realize and appreciate that this has been a tremendous task. In this connection I also wish to mention the Honourable Pierre Dupuy, the head of the organization. He and his staff have been doing a fine job.

Honourable senators, the latest reports seem to confirm that Expo is going to be the greatest of all world's fairs; and if it is, that is saying a lot. We have had world's fairs in the cities of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Brussels and Tokyo, to name but a few. If the City of Montreal has the greatest World's Fair, it will be a credit to and a signal honour for not only Montreal but Canada as a whole. We all wish it much success.

The honourable Leader of the Government also spoke on the financial aspect. I must confess that I did not follow him closely, and that I do not altogether understand the financial situation.

This bill provides funds to cover a deficit of $21 million at this time. However, I recall that in the original plan approved by the federal and Quebec governments in 1964 the cost was estimated at $167,100,000 and the revenues at $119,600,000, leaving an estimated deficit of approximately $47,500,000. That was the opinion in 1964. These figures were revised in 1966, when the plans were approved by the governments concerned. I am not sure that these figures agree with those just given by the honourable leader, but they are the ones I have obtained. In 1966 the estimated cost was $282,800,000 and the revenue $221,300,000, creating a deficit of approximately $61,500,000.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): To be paid by whom?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: According to my understanding, to be paid by the federal Government, the Province of Quebec and the City of Montreal in the proportions set out by the Government Leader a few moments ago: 50 per cent by Canada, 37½ per cent by the Province of Qubeec, and 12½ per cent by the City of Montreal. Be that as it may, the estimated deficit in 1966 was approximately $61,500,000.

Now we understand that the current estimated cost is $332,846,000, with an income of $250,190,000, and an estimated deficit of $82,656,000. We know that is merely an estimate. We can all ponder what the actual figures will prove to be. Frankly, I have heard that the deficit will be between $100 million and $150 million.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does the honourable senator know whether that estimate includes any salvage?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I imagine that when they estimate the deficits they take into consideration salvage of whatever assets may remain.

Regarding salvage, that will depend partly on the sale of buildings, and whether the bridges, roads and so on that will be taken over by the Province of Quebec will provide some salvage revenue. Perhaps that is something that will be explained to us in committee. Of course we all hope there will be no deficit, but I think that is too much to expect—it looks very unlikely.

The honourable Leader of the Government used the word "investment." I believe that is the word the organization is using, and correctly so. It is a tremendous investment, and even if there is a deficit, I think it cannot properly be called a deficit, because if Expo is a success, as far as Canada is concerned the investment will reap a great benefit for many years to come.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: One of the members speaking in the House of Commons the other day used the expression "a colossal achievement." I believe it is going to be a great success. As a friend of mine who visited St. Helen's Island not so long ago remarked, "If this had been developed years ago when we spoke about 'the wonders of the world,' it would have been one of the great wonders of the world."

Yesterday, on reading Hansard of the other place in which this matter was being discussed, I gained the impression that there was no further need of calculating the proportionate shares on the basis of 50, 37½ and 12½ per cent. That is another matter which can be explained to us very well at the meeting of the committee tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That was the purpose of my question a moment ago.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes. I am a little bewildered myself in that connection, and it is something that should be cleared up for us when we meet in committee tomorrow.

There is another matter which I rather hesitate to mention, but I do not think I will be out of place in doing so. In the Montreal Gazette of yesterday there was a headline "Big Traffic Problem Afoot with Expo 67," and under it was a report of an interview with Mr. K. H. MacDonald, the general chairman of the Canadian Highway Safety Council. Mr. MacDonald expressed great concern that on the roads leading into the fair from different parts of Canada, but mostly from the United States, there are no signs in both languages. He said that this will cause serious difficulty.

I should like to read portions of this report because in speaking of the traffic problem that will be caused by Expo, Mr. MacDonald mentioned matters which I am sure must cause concern to the highway authorities of the Province of Quebec who are responsible for the road signs and road markings on the highways leading to the City of Montreal, particularly those used by visitors to Expo from the United States. Mr. MacDonald felt that these signs were inadequate, that they should be in both languages. He said that he felt very much concerned, and hoped that this matter is receiving whatever attention is necessary.

The report reads in part:

> Mr. MacDonald said that the inter-government committee which studied traffic conditions must have overlooked this safety aspect when it stated that the English language will not be used on any highway signs.

He said:

> Along the way the purpose of highway signs—that is a warning or source of information to drivers—seems to have become secondary.

He went on to state that we expect not thousands but tens of thousands of people to come from the American side of the border; that is where we are going to get the majority of our visitors.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Millions of them!

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, millions of them. Mr. MacDonald said also that these are the people who are going to spend millions of dollars at Expo, and the success of Expo will depend upon the numbers of people who come from the United States. Mr. MacDonald added:

> It's not a matter of politics or culture. It's simply a matter of safety—the safety of the visitors we invited.

Honourable senators, I have travelled through the northern parts of the states of New York, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine on my way to the Maritime provinces, and I have been very pleased to note that on the roads in and out of the towns and cities near the border of Quebec there are signs in both the English and French languages. Our American friends are setting a very good example to us in that regard.

I shall say nothing more on this subject. I am sure that there must be some misunderstanding, and that those who are responsible for the safety of our guests who will arrive from other countries will look after such an important matter as this and see to it that provision for their safety is made.

Honourable senators, we want to make this fair a success. We believe it will be a great success and will reflect much glory on our famous City of Montreal. May I say that Montreal is not considered by us Maritimers as a city of the Province of Quebec, but a city of Canada. When we think of big cities we do not think of Toronto—and I hope my Toronto friends will forgive me for this—we think of Montreal. In years past we used to think of Boston and New York as the big cities near us that we should visit, but today we think of Montreal. We wish success not only to the City of Montreal, but to the Province of Quebec and to Canada. This world's fair, I think, will be the greatest there has ever been since world's fairs first started.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I congratulate both leaders on their full explanations of this bill. I am in favour of the bill, but I should like to make just one point.

For a great many years I have been interested in the Royal Automobile Club of Montreal. The Royal Automobile Club has made many representations to the appropriate authorities in connection with road signs, especially those on the roads leading to Expo, and urging that they be in both languages. It is extremely important that these signs be in both English and French. I do not think anybody should worry too much about the English speaking Quebeckers. They have lived in Quebec all of their lives, and if they are not bright enough to read the road signs in French then I do not think they should have a driver's licence. But, the great majority of visitors to Expo will not know the way. They are the people who will need to read the road signs.

We have many limited-access highways on which the minimum speed is 50 miles an hour. When one thinks of what can happen when a motorist misses a road sign and then starts to back up, it makes one shudder. Therefore I do not think it makes any sense to put up road signs that the great majority of people who will be using the roads cannot understand.

There is another point I should like to make. Montreal and Quebec, after all, are going to be hosts to the world. Ninety per cent of the people who visit Montreal and Quebec this year will not understand the French language. Is it not sensible to put up road signs that these visitors can read?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable sponsor of this bill speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I shall be only a moment. I appreciate very much the attitude of all honourable senators with reference to the urgency in connection with this bill. I thank all of them for their obvious unanimous agreement to allow this bill to be read the third time today. I know that what I have asked is unusual, but I was requested by the Minister to do everything I could to further the progress of this bill, and I am sure that its speedy passage will assist him and all those who are working on Expo.

I thank the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) for what he has said. I think more than anything else, there comes out of his remarks a refutation of a rumour that got about that this was a Montreal exhibition. It is not a Montreal exhibition, and Senator Brooks, the Canadian of vision that he is, has clearly pointed out that this is a national project of which all Canadians can be justly proud. I know we all think of it in this way, and I am sure we are grateful to Senator Brooks for having spoken as he has in this regard.

I was also particularly pleased to hear him single out some of the people who have been responsible. I do not think there is really a more civilized man in Canada, with the exception perhaps of a few of my friends around me, than the Honourable Pierre Dupuy. It is a wonderful thing for Canada to have the World's Exhibition Corporation headed by a man who is in many ways a citizen of the world. Mr. Robert Shaw and Mr. Kniewasser also have done tremendous jobs since they took over their heavy responsibilities. But I want to say particularly that the contribution made by Jean Drapeau, the Mayor of Montreal, really beggars measurement. He has been a dynamo about this undertaking. We had a particularly interesting insight into this aspect of the project when the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association met there last year, and he spoke about the prospects for this venture in the council chamber which he had put at the disposal of the general council for a meeting. Indeed, when one looks at Montreal today and considers what it was like even thirty years ago when I lived there, it is, so to speak, a new city. Furthermore, when one thinks of Montreal as it was in 1867, we realize now that we have in this country one of the great metropolitan centres of the world. What the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and Senator Beaubien (Bedford) have both said so well today, I need not repeat.

This is a most important matter, and I think that the financial aspects and other issues which occur to honourable senators can be much more thoroughly discussed when the subject matter of this bill is before the committee for consideration tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I move, with leave, that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux moved the second reading of Bill C-252, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, before bringing before the Senate Bill C-252 entitled the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, I should like, with your permission and your indulgence, to extend to you and to all honourable senators my most sincere thanks. I was deeply touched by your warm welcome on my arrival in the Senate and I am still under the spell of the true cordiality which you have constantly been showing me since August 29 last.

To the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator John J. Connolly, and to the Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt, who willingly introduced me to their colleagues, initiated me in the Senate procedure and prepared me for my swearing in, I wish to express my sincere gratefulness. I deeply felt the words of welcome that were addressed to me from both sides of the Senate Chamber.

May I also, Mr. Speaker, say how much I appreciate the privilege and honour to serve, humbly, of course, but to the best of my ability, a growing Canada of unlimited possibilities.

My most sincere and ardent hope is to contribute with all my strength to the progress and development of our dear country. Such progress and development, to my mind, require as essential factors the brotherly joining of good will and the loyal practice of mutual understanding, the firm and clear support of all elements of peace, harmony, justice and unity.

For myself, I greatly hope that our young country will grow steadily stronger as it progresses toward full maturity.

I want to do what I can that it may be worthy and capable of occupying an increasingly higher rank amongst the great nations and of playing its full part for peace and prosperity.

Looking towards the future does not make me forget the present. The latter fills me with optimism, as well as with patriotism, indeed, for the whole Canadian nation. It seems timely to hope and wish that, despite inevitable conflicting interests, true love of our great country, free from narrow and petty exclusivism, animates each and everyone of our fellow citizens.

Honourable senators, is there need for me to add that I am proud of being a Canadian, of professing it, of being a French-speaking Canadian? I share the legitimate conviction of those who feel that Canada does not comprise only two, but several ethnic groups.

Under these circumstances, I humbly suggest that we cannot contemplate unilingualism or even perhaps bilingualism within our borders. Moreover, considering that no country can live in isolation and that thanks to our modern means of communication and new travelling facilities, the world is, so to speak, at our door, I find myself hoping that we, or at least those among us who are so gifted, shall learn the languages commonly used in our country and in those countries with which we maintain close relationship.

My ambitions, as a private Canadian citizen, urge me to go even further and higher. I should like, as far as my limited means allow me, to share in the cultural, social and economic development of all Canadians, regardless of race, language, belief or philosophy. I am expecting from them in return the same interest, the same concern, the same ambition for the common good and progress of our country.

Frankly, I am strongly determined, honourable senators, to practise the policy which I have followed in the past and to fight, from whatever quarter, any attempt to balkanize Canada no matter how diversified and how scattered our people may be on our immense territory. I feel furthermore that I am in excellent company here.

I anticipate the future of our country as an era of progress in a climate of freedom, straightforwardness and justice for all, among all forever protected against the eventual appearance of squalid ghettos confining bodies and souls. I have confidence in the future of Canada and its rich potentialities calling for the efforts, the initiative, as well as all the physical and spiritual resources of each of its citizens.

This being the centennial year of confederation, it is all very well to be proud of present achievements, but we should also look into the future and think what Canada will be when the 21st century comes around. Come what may, I am convinced that Canada will be what we ourselves and future generations make it. Canada is repeating the history of all countries since the beginning of time; we have a tremendous task ahead of us. But it is not beyond our ambitions and our strength.

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude my preliminary remarks with respect to my recently being admitted to the Senate by expressing once again my deep gratitude to the honourable senators for their kindness to me. I must confess that I admire the wisdom and sober second thought prevailing in discussions with respect to problems submitted to this house. This atmosphere is inspiring and provides a source of encouragement and confidence which will undoubtedly be very useful to me throughout my stay here.

I am therefore pleased to move adoption of Bill C-252 providing general incentives to industry for the expansion of research and development.

[Text]

Honourable senators, it is my privilege to sponsor in the Senate Bill C-252, an act to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Sir Harold Hartley once said:

> The best insurance policy for the future of industry is research, which will help it to foresee future lines of development, to solve its immediate problems, and to improve and cheapen its products.

In research there is no account taken of likes or dislikes of parties, of nationalities. Research seeks for truths, seeks to discover accurately what things are and how they work; and, challenging self-evident truths, methodically it seeks true knowledge. It results in victories and solutions, nearly always reached after long, costly, and concentrated efforts.

Honourable senators, it is an accepted view, I believe, that an important challenge facing modern and progressive nations today is to know how best to realize the benefits deriving from scientific and technological progress. There is much to be done in the organization of a systematic exploitation of science for industrial purposes.

Perhaps we have disregarded too often the vast potential economic and social gains that could have been derived from earlier generous support to research. In justice, though, it must be said that in comparing Canada with many of the modern countries, we have been pioneering in devising new and different techniques for the rapid and effective development of science by co-operation compatible with the institutions of our free enterprise economy. More and more we have come to realize that each finding of importance, each development of knowledge, each discovery through research, triggers off new ideas, new products, and creates new economic expansion, new contributions, new opportunities for general development and general welfare.

It is like saving. If postponed until needed, it comes too late. It is appropriate to recall Kinter's words:

> Research is the reconnaissance party of industry, roving the unknown territories ahead independently, yet not without purpose, seeing for the first time what all the following worlds will see a few years hence.

For some time the Government has been introducing a certain number of measures intended to give encouragement and support to scientific research and development in Canadian industry. In its consideration the Government had to pay special attention to the formation of a typically Canadian organization of research, because of the characteristic problems of our country, particularly its large area, its relatively small population and its unique industrial structure.

Perhaps, honourable senators, it would be well to review briefly with you the Canadian history of research through the co-operation of our Government.

The efforts towards research have been quite constant. Initially, research was related to the primary industries. Only geological mapping and agricultural research were areas of activities until the beginning of the century. In 1898 research of fisheries was added. In 1916 the Government founded the National Research Council to stimulate research in the universities through grants and scholarships. In the late 1920s and early 1930s, Canada's Government extended active research, with the establishment of its own laboratory system. War brought about wide expansion in scientific research when the Research Council assumed that responsibility for the three armed forces, including atomic energy.

In 1949 the Privy Council Committee on Research broadened the structure of its advisory body of senior officials to which it might turn for joint advice on the formulation and conduct of government scientific policies; and thus since then has two advisory bodies, the National Research Council and the advisory panel. The council, being composed of non-government scientists representing the universities, industry and labour, is well suited to keep the committee informed on the effects of government policy on the scientific activities of the country at large, and to advise on the actions necessary to maintain the universities and independent research institutes in a healthy condition. The panel, on the other hand, being composed of senior government officials, is the appropriate body to consider government policy affecting departmental activities and to advise the committee on government action.

In 1952 special crown corporations became responsible for atomic energy, atomic research and development. In the last few years the Government introduced a number of measures intended to encourage and support scientific research and development in our Canadian industry. Such assistance was extended to any eligible companies in any field in Canada whatever their size or importance.

In 1961, the Income Tax Act was revised to permit 100 per cent depreciation of capital costs for research purposes. As time went on, it was realized that concepts on industrial research were changing rapidly. The transformation of the nation into a highly industrialized society and the multiplication and extension of national activities in production, the fast expansion of numerous industries of national character, the requirements of the domestic market and the obligation of facing foreign competition brought the Canadian manufacturing enterprises to recognize the primary importance of research through the establishment of efficient research departments.

In 1962 the Income Tax Act was again revised to permit the granting of a special fiscal stimulant over a period of five years for scientific research.

The revised act of 1962 enabled corporations to deduct from their taxable income an additional allowance of 50 per cent of the amount by which the expenditures on scientific research exceeded their total expenditures for this purpose on the 1961 base year. This law lapsed on December 31, 1966.

It has been recognized that the incentives gave favourable results. For that reason the Government is proposing today a general incentive program. Hence, Bill C-252 is now before us.

The underlying purpose of the bill is to raise the technological capacity of Canadian industry by enabling corporations to expand their scientific research and development activities. The achievement of this will result in increased ability to meet foreign competition in both domestic and export markets, and to somewhat lessen dependence on foreign technology. It will induce Canadian corporations to undertake new scientific research and development programs and to expand existing ones. It will also be less discriminatory, since eligibility will not depend on a firm's tax position. Many small and growing firms will be able to participate.

The administration of this policy will be under the Minister of Industry, and will include many aspects to make it more accessible and efficient than the fiscal stimulant granted in 1962. In order to foster the provision of new laboratories and better equipment for industrial research, all capital expenditures will qualify for a 25 per cent bonus. A 25 per cent bonus will also apply to operating expenditures.

The new incentives will be given as outright grants or credits against tax liability and will represent 25 per cent of the defined expenses for research and development. The grants will not themselves be subject to income tax and will be in addition to the usual deduction of 100 per cent of all expenses for scientific research. Companies which are taxed at the lower rate and those with no known revenue will benefit equally with better established and more profitable companies.

Moreover, in providing a premium of 25 per cent on all capital expenditures for industrial research and development, companies will be able to benefit from new incentives for the establishment of new installations and the acquisition of better equipment for research and development.

These incentives will create a favourable climate for research and development expansion in many sectors of industry. A valid note is that particular attention is shown to developments of natural resources.

The bill before us was passed by the other place with only a few amendments. It was studied by the Standing Committee on Industry, Research and Energy Development.

One of the amendments proposed and approved was the deletion of the words "in Canada" from two or three clauses, which were required to ensure that if an expenditure does not qualify as being in respect of scientific research and development likely to benefit Canada, neither the expenditure nor any payment received in respect of such scientific research and development could enter into any calculation for the purpose of determining eligible expenditures under the act, nor could any of the provisions of the act apply to property acquired by virtue of the expenditure.

Certain expenditures for research and development, if not to the benefit of Canada, would not qualify for subsidy under this act. In making the total calculation of eligible expenditures, those particular expenditures would be deleted and there would be no subsidy paid in respect thereof.

Only one other amendment was considered, and it had to do with the value and source of information. Originally paragraph (h) of clause 14 limited the source of information in determining eligibility to that in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue, and information of other sources could not be taken into account.

The Minister suggested an amendment to provide that it should be determined by regulation how and in what manner information obtained by the Minister of National Revenue should be used.

There were no other suggested changes included in Bill C-252.

For Canada, the attainment of the desired rate of growth will depend to a larger extent than ever before on the expansion of an efficient manufacturing industry; this turn will necessitate more effective exploitation of new technology. We must look to research and development to spark the process of industrial expansion and economic growth for the future.

The Honourable Mr. Drury stated:

> The basic principle underlying the legislation is that economic progress stems from increased productivity which derives in large measure from new and improved technology. Systematic and sustained investment in research and development by industry is no less important to competitive survival than capital investment in new plant. New technology efforts provide wider opportunities for investments and generates greater productivity and thus provides the seed for the long term expansion of firms, industries and nations.

Looking at the structure of our general scientific activity, we note that industry incurred in Canada 36 per cent of the national total of research expenditure, as contrasted with 63 per cent for Britain and 74 per cent in the United States. By comparison, British industries spend on research three times as much per dollar revenue as Canada, Sweden four times as much, the United States six times as much. This discrepancy indicates the insufficiency of emphasis now placed on the practical exploitation of science and technology.

It is the view of the Minister of Industry, based on detailed analysis, that a target research intensity for manufacturing industry of almost three times the current figure is required to bring Canada into line with comparable industrialized countries. It is also true that the attainment of this target within a reasonable period of time would require a virtual doubling of the previous long-term growth rate for industrial research and development. The proposed incentive would be one of the key measures for implementing the necessary government policy in this regard.

The proposed act is not a stranger to the thinking resulting from inquiries as to what is being done by other countries, as expressed last year in Paris at the ministerial meeting on science, sponsored by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Many countries spend large sums for defence or space research, which is undertaken by industry. The act proposes to support research and development in Canadian industries directly for economic purposes. It would be less costly and more effective in meeting the particular needs of Canada.

Of course, honourable senators, research means high cost and risk of failure. Possibly because of this, Canada has been relatively weak, but it appears important that Canada should now move to an economy of innovation and leave behind the economy of imitation.

If we followed the example of England we would devote 2.5 per cent of the gross national product to research. France spends 1.7 per cent of its gross national product on research. Canada spends only 0.9 per cent of its gross national product for research.

Money invested in research, although it is required in large amounts, has proven to return the investment by a hundredfold. It is comparable to a seed. With the proper conditioning and environment such as we have here, it will produce generous economic rewards and will continue to do so if we only continue the seeding.

General Sarnoff, a renowned scientist and a pioneer in the field of research, once made this statement.

> Whatever the size of business seven years hence may be, I am sure that more than 50 per cent of the volume will be in products and services that do not exist to-day.

Honourable senators, this is an excellent indication of the importance that must be attached to research now.

In reviewing history and what is presently happening in this world of ours, we note that countries that have not been blessed by imaginative and creative minds have apparently failed in the maintenance of the essential standards for living and in providing some degree of happiness as we know it here.

Research appears to be the ever-continuing pursuit of knowledge in all things, and each enlightened step towards total knowledge has paid off handsomely by engendering new economic revenues that in turn have created additional jobs, higher standards, assurance of continuity in stronger marketing, increased productivity and better compensation for all.

Unfortunately, research is an area where Canada has fallen dangerously far behind in the last few decades compared with the United States and even with many countries of Europe. The initiative, then, to give research priority should be welcomed by all of us.

Honourable senators, by the passing of Bill C-252 much can be accomplished towards providing a constructive and positive approach to our Canadian future. It will mean the continuation and improvement of Government policy.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Yuzyk, debate adjourned.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the second reading of Bill C-270, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill amends the Small Businesses Loans Act which constitutes chapter 5 of the Statutes of 1960-61, and which was passed by a government that had in its cabinet several ministers who are now in this chamber and who sit across from me. I say that as a compliment to them because in my view the legislation has proved to be good legislation.

In the years since it was originally enacted in 1960 it has been continued and extended by succeeding governments, both Liberal and Conservative. And I think it is fair to say that during the six-year period it has been in operation it has had the support of all parties, in principle, and also of the majority, if not all, of the Members of Parliament.

Before dealing with the bill itself, perhaps I might recall to honourable senators the main provisions of the original act of 1960-61, which was modelled on the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Its plan of operation was to have the chartered banks of Canada make loans to small businesses, and those loans would, in addition to their normal security, have a limited guarantee by the federal Government. The purpose was to bridge a gap that it was felt existed between the normal banking loans made by the chartered banks of a short-term character, secured generally by receivables or inventories, on the one hand, and at the other extreme, the long-term loans made by the Industrial Development Bank. It was felt that a gap existed between these two forms of credit, and that this provision for loans to small buisnesses would be by way of intermediate term credit and would bridge that gap.

The characteristics of the loans were, first of all, that the small businesses were classified in four categories: retail, wholesale, manufacturing and service businesses. Then, to qualify by size as a small business, the gross revenue of the business had to be no greater than $250,000 a year. Generally speaking, the purpose of the loans was of a capital character; that is, to acquire assets of a permanent character such as buildings or equipment. The loans were limited in size to a maximum of $25,000 to any business. The total amount of loans to be made by the chartered banks was limited to $300 million, and the term or the period of time during which the legislation would be in effect was limited to three years from the time it was originally put into operation, which brought it then to December 31, 1963.

The rate of interest was left to be fixed by regulation. The federal Government's guarantee was limited to a maximum of 10 per cent of the total amount of loans made by any one bank. That is to say, there was no guarantee as to any amount of any individual loan, but if a bank lent in all $10 million, it had a guarantee against loss of up to 10 per cent of that $10 million—that is, $1 million.

In the intervening years the act has twice been amended. Once, of course, it was amended to extend the time of its operation from December 31, 1963, to December 31, 1966. The other amendments were of a minor and a clarifying character, and extended moderately the purposes for which a loan could be made.

In those intervening six years the experience has shown, I would think, that it has fulfilled its purpose to a considerable extent. The total amount of the loans has been in the neighbourhood of $150 million. Somewhere between 14,000 and 15,000 loans have been made, the average loan therefore running at about $9,000. The total amount of losses over the six-year period which the Government has paid to the banks has been some $139,000.

To date the maximum rate of interest on the loans has been 5½ per cent.

Now we come to this particular bill and its four main purposes. The first purpose is to extend the classification of businesses that qualify for these loans. As I mentioned earlier, there were four kinds: retail, wholesale, manufacturing and service industries. Now three more classes of business are in: construction, transportation and communications.

The second purpose of the bill I would say, is to extend the purposes for which a loan may be used but, in effect, it is really to clarify the intention of the previous legislation. The previous legislation allowed a loan to be made for the construction or purchase of alternative premises to those in which the business was being carried on. That is to say, not only could the small businessman have a loan with respect to the premises if he owned them, but if he wanted to move and change to another location he could get a loan for that purpose. However, what was overlooked was the case of the business being carried on in leased or rented premises, and there was no provision for a loan to acquire those premises. So, the second purpose of the bill is simply to strike out "alternative premises" and to make it perfectly clear the loan can be made for the renovation, improvement or modernization, or the purchase, construction, alteration or extension of any premises.

The third purpose of the bill is to extend the maximum size of small businesses from an annual gross volume of $250,000 to one of $500,000, so a business that formerly did not qualify because its gross annual volume was somewhere between $250,000 and $500,000 now does qualify.

The fourth purpose is, in a way shall we say, the main purpose of the bill. It is to extend the operations for a further period of three years, because the previous legislation expired on December 31, 1966. Since that time the banks have been carrying on making loans with the expectation that the Government would introduce this bill which would be retroactive to January 1 this year, so that all loans made since that time would come within the terms of this bill, and the legislation will extend the period of loaning to December 31, 1969.

Perhaps I should add one word with respect to the interest rate. As I said before, up until now the maximum rate has been 5½ per cent. This has been in effect even during the recent period of tight money. From my own experience, I would think the prime rate of chartered bank lending has been 6 per cent, so that the loans under this legislation have been at one-half of 1 per cent less than the prime rate, and of course that is because of the federal Government guarantee.

The figures show that in the months of October, November and December, 1966, for example, something over $6 million was loaned under this act by the chartered banks at this 5½ per cent rate, which I think is a good indication of the co-operation of the banks and of the accomplishment of the purposes intended by the act.

If the Bank Act amendment goes through and the rate of interest allowed to chartered banks is increased beyond 6 per cent, that interest rate of 5½ per cent may or may not have to be changed. This could be done by regulation in the same way as it has been done in the past.

Honourable senators, I think that explains the bill. As I have said before, it has had the support of all parties and, generally speaking, of all Members of Parliament, and I have no hesitation in commending it to you for your support.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Perhaps I might ask just one question. Do I understand that only 10 per cent of the loan is guaranteed? I understand you to say that.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I should correct that impression. I tried to make it clear that it is not 10 per cent of the loan that is guaranteed; 100 per cent of the loan may be guaranteed. In other words, there could be a full loss to the bank of the total amount of the loan—100 per cent—but the guarantee is against the pool of loans, so that all the loans that are paid in full and on which there is no loss are brought into the calculation to estimate what the total amount of the guarantee will be. On loans totalling $1 million held by one bank there could be losses of up to $100,000, and the Government will repay those losses, even though some losses are for small amounts and some for large amounts. A bank pays its own losses beyond $100,000 on a portfolio of $1 million.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Could the honourable senator give us an idea of what the percentage of loss has been over the last six years?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: We would have to calculate what percentage $139,000 is of $150 million. I think it amounts to less than 1/10 of one per cent over this six-year period.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, that is infinitesimal.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: It is less than 1/10 of one per cent over the six-year period.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: What is the maximum term of the loan?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I thank the honourable senator for asking that question. I may have overlooked that. The maximum term of the loan is ten years, an intermediate term between the short term bank loan and the long term Industrial Bank loan.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take up any more time in connection with this bill, but I should like to congratulate Senator Leonard on his explaining this bill in so few words and yet in such a masterly fashion. Having read the bill carefully, and also the debate on it in the other place, I think I can say that I have never heard a bill explained so clearly.

I should like to say that from reading Hansard of the other place, and speaking to many people, I was unable to discover anyone who thought that this act was anything but a wonderful piece of legislation. I rather gathered that the people I spoke to were somewhat surprised, but I was not. After all, this act was passed on December 20, 1960, and all honourable senators know—and Senator Leonard has been good enough to acknowledge the fact—who was responsible for it.

I should like to say a word here on behalf of the body of men who at that time formed the Government, and who had the vision to provide this incentive. Incentives have been mentioned this afternoon, and it is my opinion that this act is one of the finest incentives that has ever been laid before people in the business world. I am not a business man. I never was. I spend a lot of money, but I do not make very much. But, this act, as everybody agrees, undoubtedly has been a great incentive to small business.

I should say at this point that it has not been such a great incentive to the province from which I come. I do not know why that is so, but I am sure that the people of that province ought to take more advantage of it. The loans they have obtained under this act are extremely small in number when compared with those in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Perhaps they will take advantage of it after they read your speech.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: That is the reason I am on my feet now. It might leak through to them that there is such an act upon the statute books of Canada.

It is a good statute. There is no question about that. I have only to look at the annual report of 1965 which covers the period from 1961 to 1965 to see that 14,050 loans have been made for a total amount under the guarantee of more than $127 million. The average size of the loans, as I think has been mentioned by Senator Leonard, was $9,048. On all these 14,050 loans, only 25 claims had to be made and paid by the Government for a total of $139,000.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is, as yet. There is a great deal of money still out.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Those were the figures up to the end of 1965. I have in my hand a news release dated February 21, 1967, by the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, Minister of Finance, in which he announces that loans totalling $4.8 million were made under the Small Businesses Loans Act during the months of October to December, 1966. He states that under this legislation the Government guarantees loans—and this is what Senator Leonard has already told us—made by the chartered banks for a wide range of business improvement purposes to small business enterprises engaged in manufacturing, the wholesale and retail trade, and the service industry. A maximum of $25,000 may be lent to a borrower at any one time, and the loans must be secured and repaid over a period of ten years. The maximum rate of interest is 5½ per cent. He said also that the legislation came into effect in January, 1961, and from that date to the end of December, 1966, 16,235 loans for a total of more than $147,000,000 have been made.

From this honourable senators can understand what a wonderful piece of legislation this has been so far as the small business man is concerned, although I must say that I do not regard a business turning over $500,000 a year as necessarily a small business.

I regret that many of our small businesses do not take advantage of this legislation. Not long ago I learned that one firm in Canada controlled 70 per cent of the business of supplying food in one form or another to Canadians. To my mind that is not in the best interests of us all. This industry should be split up among a number of businesses. I hate to see any part of Canadian business life controlled by one, two or half a dozen firms.

I was disappointed to read that from October to December 1966 only two loans were made under this legislation in my own Province of Newfoundland—retail trade $25,000 and service business $15,000, for a total of $40,000. I hope all provinces will take advantage of this act. It is good legislation. Everybody says it is good legislation and, therefore, it must be good. Of course, the act was brought in by the Diefenbaker Government, and because of that fact alone it must be good.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Haig, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 1147 to 1211, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce moved the adoption of reports Nos. 1147 to 1211, inclusive, from the Standing Committee on Divorce, with the exception of report No. 1179.

He said: Honourable senators, since these reports were tabled yesterday afternoon the Standing Committee on Divorce has received a letter from the solicitor for a petitioner for divorce saying that the wife, against whom he petitioned for divorce, was killed in an automobile accident on the evening of Friday last, February 24, on Highway 401. Having regard to that, it is necessary for me to ask leave to withdraw that particular report, which is No. 1179, relating to the petition of Lutz Mueller. The respondent, who has been killed, is Anneliese Kraus Mueller.

Of course, we would not act on a letter from a solicitor without further proof. In due season we will demand a death certificate. In the meantime however, we cannot proceed in this matter, and therefore I ask leave of the House to withdraw report No. 1179.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, and reports adopted, on division.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable J. R. Cartwright, M. C., Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An act to implement agreements for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, Canada and Ireland, Canada and Norway and Canada and the United Kingdom, and to implement a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the United States of America.

An act to amend the Financial Administration Act.

An act to amend the Judges Act.

An act to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services.

The Honourable Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 2, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Berger and Chatwood have been substituted for those of Messrs. Tremblay and Orange on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National and Royal Anthems.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-220, to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be read the second time at the next sitting.

Before this motion is agreed to, as I hope it will be, may I say that our intention is to proceed with this measure tomorrow. As far as I can say at the moment, we shall sit tomorrow. At that time I think it will be possible—although I should not like to commit myself definitely at this stage—to adjourn until Tuesday evening. That is the plan I have in mind at the moment.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: What do we gain by sitting tomorrow afternoon rather than next Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There is a good deal of legislation before us, and many speeches will be made on various bills.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I doubt that.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 1123, for the relief of Lisa Lorraine Pedvis Lightstone.

Resolution 1124, for the relief of Geraldine (Gissa) Israel Cohen.

Resolution 1125, for the relief of Edith Lois Myers (Meyers) Goldin.

Resolution 1126, for the relief of Monique Lise Roy Derrick.

Resolution 1127, for the relief of Nancy Dubrofsky Richer.

Resolution 1128, for the relief of Isabel Jean Bulloch Soper.

Resolution 1129, for the relief of Pearl Brown Aaron Noik.

Resolution 1130, for the relief of Amita Brainin Schuller Schecter.

Resolution 1131, for the relief of Madeleine Arcand Fumi.

Resolution 1132, for the relief of Raynald (Renald) Rivet.

Resolution 1133, for the relief of Eva Lebovits Klein.

Resolution 1134, for the relief of Gisele Martel Ducharme.

Resolution 1135, for the relief of Jean Marie Langelier.

Resolution 1136, for the relief of Pierre Leo Richer Lafleche.

Resolution 1137, for the relief of Mary Anne Bosak Bingham.

Resolution 1138, for the relief of Sandra Kathleen Bowie MacLaren.

Resolution 1139, for the relief of Edwin Donald Ian Gaskell.

Resolution 1140, for the relief of Pierre Robidoux.

Resolution 1141, for the relief of Maria Patricia Shimkus Babin.

Resolution 1142, for the relief of Lianne Karin Margaret Neitzel Schuldt.

Resolution 1143, for the relief of Jean Eleanor White Fisch.

Resolution 1144, for the relief of Phillip Reginald Beck.

Resolution 1145, for the relief of Sophie Milberg Dlin.

Resolution 1146, for the relief of Gertrude Margerita Kaiser Hofmann Engel.

Resolution 1147, for the relief of Gladys Maxine Azulay Dooh.

Resolution 1148, for the relief of Joseph Michel Alphonse Gagnon.

Resolution 1149, for the relief of Donna Jean Yates Beeby.

Resolution 1150, for the relief of Ellen Gillon Adare Hughes Forster.

Resolution 1151, for the relief of Paula Rachel Couture Cyr Redele.

Resolution 1152, for the relief of Marie Françoise Thérèse Jacqueline Petrilli Abbott.

Resolution 1153, for the relief of Serge Desrochers.

Resolution 1154, for the relief of Justine Adelaide Stern Jedeikin.

Resolution 1155, for the relief of Monique Deneault Deneau.

Resolution 1156, for the relief of Jacques Coté.

Resolution 1157, for the relief of Raymond Norbert Chausse.

Resolution 1158, for the relief of Robert Jacques Armand Collard.

Resolution 1159, for the relief of Helen Juanita Greer Smith.

Resolution 1160, for the relief of Hazel Marie Dominey Walker.

Resolution 1161, for the relief of Joseph Markusic.

Resolution 1162, for the relief of Mary Hepburn Weigen, otherwise known as Mary Hepburn Weigensberg.

Resolution 1163 for the relief of John Julian Ignatius Viskelis.

Resolution 1164 for the relief of Suzanne Gibeau Paquette.

Resolution 1165, for the relief of Sharron Ann Beatteay McKee.

Resolution 1166, for the relief of Doris May McLaughlin Longmore Snyder.

Resolution 1167, for the relief of Jean Yves Michel de Brabant.

Resolution 1168, for the relief of Jules Joly.

Resolution 1169, for the relief of Abraham Rosenfield.

Resolution 1170, for the relief of Julianna Szkokan (Skokan) Vasi.

Resolution 1171, for the relief of Zvi Fallenbaum.

Resolution 1172, for the relief of Flora Jean Stewart Dalphy.

Resolution 1173, for the relief of Rinalda Maria Montauti Cicciu.

Resolution 1174, for the relief of Jaroslaw (Gerry) Poszywajlo, otherwise known as Jaroslaw (Gerry) Poszwaylo.

Resolution 1175, for the relief of Dorice (Doris) Alice Thibault Michel.

Resolution 1176, for the relief of Lucy Gloria Verrecchia Stanley.

Resolution 1177, for the relief of Claudette Cyr Johnson.

Resolution 1178, for the relief of Marie Lilian (Lilliane) Perusse Burnett.

Resolution 1179, for the relief of Richard Parker.

Resolution 1180, for the relief of Andre Barrette.

Resolution 1181, for the relief of Willem Franken.

Resolution 1182, for the relief of Jean (James) Wilfred Kelly.

Resolution 1183, for the relief of Rosemary Graae (Gray) Schmidt O'Brady.

Resolution 1184, for the relief of George William Brown.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the resolutions be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-204, to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-204, to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets moved the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the first order is called, may I ask permission to have Order No. 4, Bill C-266, dealing with certain salaries fixed by statute, called first.

Senator Cook, who will explain this measure, is required to sit on a committee this afternoon. If he may make his explanation in the early part of the afternoon, it would help.

I would also ask that Item No. 6, with reference to the annuity to the Governor General of Canada, be the second item of business, if that is agreeable.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

STATUTORY SALARIES REVISION BILL, 1967

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eric Cook moved the second reading of Bill C-266, to provide for the revision of certain salaries fixed by statute.

He said: Honourable senators, the main or principal purpose of Bill C-266, which was given third reading in the other place on February 23, is to revise certain salaries fixed by statute.

The bill will amend ten statutes and will adjust the salaries of the commissioners holding office under the Canada Grain Act, the members of the Income Tax Appeal Board, the Canadian Commissioners under the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act, the members of the National Energy Board, the Transport Commissioners, the members of the Tariff Board, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Auditor General, the Representation Commissioner and the Commissioner General of Expo.

I am informed that the last occasion on which these salaries were changed was in December 1963 by a special enactment, namely, chapter 41 of the 1963 Statutes.

Generally speaking, the amount by which these salaries are increased is 8 per cent. This is in line with the increases awarded deputy ministers by order in council, taking effect on December 1, 1965, and so the increases granted by the bill will also take effect as at December 1, 1965. This percentage has been adapted for most of these adjustments. The exceptions to the general rule are the Auditor General, the Vice-Chairman of the National Energy Board, and the first Vice-Chairman of the Tariff Board. Exceptions to the general rule have been made in these cases in recognition of the fact that their existing rates of pay do not reflect adequately the measure of their duties and the special responsibilities which they are carrying.

Honourable Senators, there is one special feature in this bill to which I would draw your attention. By looking at the schedule you will note that, in the case of the commissioners under the Grain Act, the members of the Income Tax Board, the Canadian Commissioners of the International boundary Commission, the members of the National Energy Board, the Transport Commissioners, and the members of the Tariff Board, the bill provides that those public officials shall be paid such salaries as are fixed by the Governor in Council, but not less than the stated figure.

The reason for the amendment is to seek the authority of Parliament to enable the Governor in Council to make future salary adjustments of these officers without the requirement of returning to Parliament to seek further legislative amendment. It does seem that there is justification for asking for a release from the requirement that the Executive must come back to Parliament, and request legislative amendments, either through an omnibus bill or through a whole series of separate amendments every time a salary increase appears to be justified.

Honourable senators will agree, I am sure, with these proposals for expediting the salary treatment of the officials covered by this bill. The fact that their rates of remuneration have remained unchanged since December 1, 1963 and that they can be altered only as a result of legislative action by Parliament—now long overdue—indicates the nature of the problem. With the legislative workload that has faced Parliament in recent years, and is likely to continue into the future, there would appear to be little justification for adding to Parliament's agenda unnecessarily through bills such as these whose sole purpose is to authorize a periodic increase in the salaries of certain officers of boards, commissions, etcetera.

Indeed, it does not seem fair to the officers concerned, to ask them to accept the long delays in salary adjustments that arise from the existing legislative requirement, especially in times like the present when outside salaries are moving upward so quickly, and all other public servants, including all deputy ministers and many other members of commissions, boards, etcetera, can have their salaries kept current and reasonably up to date by Executive action alone.

It is of course important to note that the Governor in Council has not authority to reduce any salary specified in this bill. In other words, while the Governor in Council may increase any salary, if for any reason the Governor in Council desires to reduce the salary, the authority of Parliament must be sought and obtained before this can be done. This is, of course, to safeguard the independence of these officials against interference by the Executive.

The power to make any such change by order in council does not extend to the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer, and the Representation Commissioner. It is, I understand, the view of the Government that in these three cases the special relationship existing between these three officers and Parliament is such that any change in their rate of remuneration should continue to be made only with the express legislative authority of Parliament. Finally, there is of course no need for this provision in the case of the Commissioner General of Expo as that post will disappear at the end of the World's Fair or shortly after.

Honourable senators, if the bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, on the face of it this bill appears to be quite a simple one, but it is not as simple as it would first appear. Actually, it affects the lives of only a few top officials of boards and commissions. It is not like the Carter Report on Taxation, which, if implemented, would affect the way of life of the whole of the population of the Dominion of Canada.

This bill amends ten Acts of Parliament. The amendments are shown in detail in the schedule of the bill, Part 1 and Part 2, where it says what the salaries of these officials are to be as of the first day of December, 1965.

In my opinion this bill introduces and incorporates a new principle in the fixing of salaries of certain officers whose remuneration in the past has been fixed by statute and could not be increased except by an Act of Parliament. The bill gives authority to the Governor in Council to do so without reference to Parliament at all, with the exception of the three officials mentioned a moment ago by the sponsor of the bill, namely, the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer and the Representation Commissioner, who are responsible more or less directly, I would say, to Parliament and therefore are in a different category from the other officials whose salaries in the future, if this bill is passed, will be fixed by the Governor in Council.

This represents, in my opinion, a major change in principle, because the law as it now stands gives the Governor in Council no such authority in so far as these officers are concerned.

The reason given for the change is that it is not fair to the officers concerned to ask them to accept the long delays in the adjustment of their salaries under the law as it now exists, whereas other public servants, including deputy ministers and many members of commissions and boards, can have their salaries adjusted and brought up to date by Executive action. But it seems to me that any undue delays could be taken care of if the legislation fixing the salaries is made retroactive, as appears to be the case in the bill we are now considering. I refer to clause 5 which states that this act shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of December, 1965. I presume that means that the increases in the salaries of officials concerned will be treated as having been made on the first day of December, 1965. That of course would make them retroactive.

Why is the date December 1 chosen? That is about a year and a half ago. What major salary changes have been made since that date that call for the making of this bill retroactive? Henceforth any further increases will be made by the Governor in Council.

It is most important that these boards and commissions must under no circumstances be under pressure on the part of the Governor in Council, which is of course the cabinet. I have always felt that the reason why salaries were fixed by statute was to ensure the independence and impartiality of the officials concerned and to free them from all forms of pressure from politicians. On that account I was hopeful that the sponsor of the bill would have given us more cogent reasons for the change in principle than he has so far given. We must be absolutely certain that by vesting these powers in the Governor in Council we are not doing anything that will interfere with the impartial work of the said boards and commissions.

However, there is some protection given by clause 4 of the bill in that the Governor in Council has no authority to reduce the salaries set out in Part I of the schedule to the bill. I suppose that will in a measure help to maintain the independence of these boards, and if there should happen to be any discrimination in making increases at any future time no doubt members of Parliament will come to the rescue in no uncertain manner.

I have some doubts as to the efficacy of this measure. I doubt if the fixing of the Auditor General's salary in the manner provided by the bill will make for his independence. It may or it may not. Why not adopt a recommendation in the report of the Public Accounts Committee a short time ago and tie the salary of the Auditor General to those of senior deputy ministers? All we are doing for the other officials is simply approving their minimum salaries as of December 1, 1965, and giving the Governor in Council full authority to increase salaries without reference to Parliament.

I would like to know what is the intention of the Government with respect to making increases in salaries. I hope that by passing this bill we are not taking a retrograde step.

I am glad the sponsor of the bill has suggested that it be sent to committee for study. I hope that when that committee meets we will find out what increases have been made in the salaries of top officials generally since December 1, 1965, or since December 1, 1963. We might also find out just what the Government has in mind with regard to increasing salaries at this time.

Before concluding I would like to refer to the Canada Grain Act, which is referred to in Part I of the schedule. The explanatory note states:

> Section 4 of the Canada Grain Act at present reads as follows:
>
> 4. The commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of nineteen thousand dollars and each of the commissioners an annual salary of seventeen thousand dollars.

The amendment reads:

> 4. The commissioners shall be paid such salaries as are fixed by the Governor in Council but the salary of the chief commissioner shall be not less than twenty thousand, five hundred and twenty dollars per annum—

I do not know how that figure was arrived at.

> —and the salary of each of the other commissioners shall be not less than eighteen thousand, three hundred and sixty dollars per annum.

My reason for mentioning this, honourable senators, is that I have been informed that certain research officials who work under the Canada Grain Act for the grain commissioners are receiving considerably more in salary than the commissioners themselves. I think that is one of the things that should be investigated when the committee holds its meeting.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to delay the consideration of this bill, but in fairness to Senator Cook, as a member of the Government I should say something at this stage. I agree with both the sponsor and Senator Aseltine that this is an appropriate bill for committee consideration.

Dealing first with the last point made by Senator Aseltine, when this bill is considered by the committee I think you will find that in the case of the Canada Grain Act the proposal now is to increase the salary of the Chief Commissioner from $19,000 to $20,520. Why that particular figure is specifically mentioned, I regret I cannot say at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Cook: It is 8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, it is the 8 per cent rule, I gather, and it applies generally to them all. The same percentage rule does apply to everything contained in Schedule 1.

Why December 1, 1965? I would say that by December 1, 1965, these officials whose salaries are dealt with in this bill were receiving less than they should have been. I think that is the opinion not only of the ministers concerned but in the opinion of everyone in Parliament who took a particular interest in the position.

I quite agree with Senator Aseltine that there should be an independence vested in these officials so that they will be free to exercise their functions without favour because of political pressures. This is a theme that runs through all legislation that touches upon the public service, and it is emphasized more and more. Indeed, it was emphasized the other night by Senator McCutcheon when he spoke on Bill C-182. I hasten to point out that that protection is embodied in the provisions of the schedule here when these figures are set out as a floor. As Senator Aseltine has pointed out, that is a measure of protection which provides the independence that he desires these officials to have.

Like Senator Aseltine and Senator Cook, I am a lawyer. We take a very strong stand on the importance of making members of the judiciary independent and on paying them adequately so that they can perform their functions and live in accordance with the dignity of the office they hold, and also so that the judiciary will attract persons who are worthy of that high office and who otherwise, because of their earnings in their own profession, would be loathe to accept appointments.

The principle we apply to the judiciary applies also in respect of the higher officials in the public service. That is one of the reasons why we should do all in our power, without being improvident or extravagant, to see to it that those required for these important posts in the public service of the nation should be not only adequately paid but that the pay should be attractive enough to induce good people to accept these responsible positions. We do this in the case of crown corporations, and the Executive has this authority on the recommendation of the boards of those corporations. It has worked well and, I think, without any political pressures being applied.

In view of the speech made by Senator McCutcheon the other evening commending the provisions of Bill C-182 and the reference to the Glassco Commission which emphasized much of the philosophy behind that bill, I would point out that the Treasury Board has sufficient authority to make sure that the salaries of these high officials do not run to too high a level. This is certainly a factor that the Treasury Board has constantly under consideration because, as honourable senators who have served on the Treasury Board know, a most difficult problem is created when you allow a salary or a series of salaries to get out of line. I think there is a natural brake upon any tendency to increase salaries in the public service to unduly high levels. A great sense of responsibility has been shown in this respect, and I am sure it will continue.

The Auditor General and the other two officials mentioned enjoy a special status in relation to Parliament, and the Government would be reluctant—here I am speaking for the Government—to interfere with parliamentary control over those officials. This is particularly true of Members of the House of Commons, but I think it should be equally true here. The Auditor General is an official of and works for Parliament, and is appointed for the purposes of Parliament. Therefore, only Parliament should make changes. The security of his position is, therefore, guaranteed by excluding him from the proposal.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is he taken seriously by the present Government when he says every year, and shows beyond any doubt, that we are throwing millions of dollars away and nothing is being done to remedy it? Some suggest that he should be fired, if we are not going to pay any attention to what he says.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think he is taken seriously by this Government, as he has been by every Government; certainly, the recommendations he makes are the subject of serious consideration. I do not think this Government can be singled out any more than any other Government in that respect—and I speak with full knowledge when I say so.

I would also point out that deputy ministers' salaries are not subject to the kind of parliamentary control that those of these officials are. Their salaries are fixed by order in council, and in view of the fact this is a matter of Government policy, which I think is wise, it is provident and expedient that this kind of step should be taken in the interests of assuring that proper service is given to the people of Canada by competent officials in the positions affected.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Did I understand Senator Cook to say that the general increase was 8 per cent of the salaries paid in 1963?

Hon. Mr. Cook: The increase is 8 per cent, except in the case of the Auditor General, the Representation Commissioner, and the Chief Electoral Officer. The increase was 8 per cent, to take effect as from December 1, 1965, which was the date on which the salaries of deputy ministers were increased by 8 per cent. This measure is to bring these salaries in line with those of the deputy ministers.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: According to the schedule of the bill the Auditor General is paid $25,000 per annum, and this amendment provides that he shall be paid $30,000 per annum, which is slightly more than 8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Cook: In all of these cases, except those of the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer and the Representation Commissioner, the increase is 8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I beg your pardon.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RETIRING ANNUITY BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 23, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), for the second reading of Bill C-265, to provide for the payment of a retiring annuity to the Governor General of Canada.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) moved the second reading of this bill a week ago, and at that time gave us a full explanation. There is nothing contentious in the bill.

I must say that it is not very often that we discuss in Parliament matters that pertain to our Governors General. It is not necessary, and it is not expected. We have never had reason to discuss the representatives of the Crown, inside or outside the Senate, except in the kindest of terms. Indeed, since Confederation, and even before, Canada and the Canadian provinces have been well served by Governors who have taken a very great interest in the country.

I was pleased to read not long ago that there is a possibility that an outstanding Canadian author will publish a book on the Governors General of Canada since Confederation. I am sure that that book will be an interesting and entertaining history of Canada since 1867. Our Governors General have been men who were dedicated to their work and to the country. They have travelled from one end of Canada to the other, and far into the north lands, so that they could acquaint themselves not only with the people but with the physical characteristics of the country.

Of course it was not necessary to give this bill any detailed study because at the adjournment of the debate last week it had been explained to us very well by the honourable Leader of the Government. He also pointed out to us at that time that there had been only a brief discussion on the measure in the other House, but that there had been a considerable amount of private discussion outside. I am sure honourable senators now understand the bill thoroughly and all are satisfied with its provisions.

This bill provides for annuities to be paid not only to the present incumbent but also to former Governors General who are still living. I must say that the annuity is a modest one. I was not at all sure what the salary of the Governor General was, but I was given to understand by the honourable Leader of the Government—and I have also looked up the Governor General's Act—that it is £10,000. However, Parliament in its wisdom at the time the act was passed set the pound at $4.86\frac{2}{3}$. I remember as a boy at school the pound was reckoned to be equal to $4.86\frac{2}{3}$, and during the First World War that is the rate which applied when our soldiers were paid their money in pounds in England. It is very fortunate that the pound was set at that figure because, as we all know, it has been devalued and at one time was down to $2.70. If that value were placed upon the pound it would not be fair to anyone holding the position of Governor General.

One especially good feature of this plan, to my mind, is that it leaves the door open for the appointment of any distinguished Canadian to the office of Governor General of Canada, no matter what his financial position may be. This is a wise and democratic provision.

This measure provides not only for an annuity for the present Governor General upon his retirement—which we all hope will not be for some time yet—but also for the two former Governors General, the Right Honourable Vincent Massey and Earl Alexander. Senator Connolly said last week that he was not going to attempt to gild the lily by pointing out the high regard all Canadians have for the persons who will benefit under this bill. I feel that to try to do justice to any one of these outstanding men would be to attempt an exercise in futility.

Honourable senators, I am very proud of having been a member of the Government which recommended to her Majesty the appointment of General Vanier as Governor General some few years ago.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Having been proud at that time, I have every reason, and indeed all of us have, for being even prouder today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: He and his distinguished wife, Madame Vanier, have dedicated their lives to Canada and to Canadians.

The name Massey, for generations, has been a household word in this country. As a boy on the farm I remember very well the Massey-Harris machines that we used to work with. The Massey family, and the former Governor General, have taken a great interest in business in Canada all through the years. They have been interested in the arts, in literature, in politics.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And in the universities.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes. With all those spheres the Masseys have been prominently connected.

As to Earl Alexander, he was a soldier in the Second World War. We used to hear him spoken of as the greatest general in the allied armies, and I do not think there is any doubt but that he was. I am sure that history will show that he was not only one of the greatest generals in the Second World War, but one of the greatest generals of all time.

Honourable senators, I am very pleased to speak for all senators on this side of the house in saying that we support this bill, and join with the honourable Leader of the Government and those on his side in having this bill read the second time.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable sponsor of this bill speaks now it will have effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I should like first to thank the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) for his remarks in respect of this bill this afternoon. I know that he expressed feelings that are shared by every member of this house.

I was particularly impressed by what he said about Earl Alexander and his capacity as a soldier, because there are very few people in Parliament with the distinguished record of the honourable Leader of the Opposition in the military field. He knows whereof he speaks.

I have only two points to make. When I was explaining the bill I was asked by the honourable Senator Beaubien (Bedford) whether or not the salary of the Governor General was fixed by order in council or by statute. At the time I was not sure, and I said I thought it was fixed by order in council. I was wrong. It is fixed by statute, as appears in chapter 139 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are not often wrong.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I was quite wrong on that occasion. A little humility does not hurt one once in a while.

I was also asked by the honourable Senator Paterson what the annual allowances are for the Governor General. In the Estimates for 1966-67 the annual allowance was $72,000.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux, for the second reading of Bill C-252, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, in the first place my congratulations go to Senator Desruisseaux for his excellent maiden effort and his fine introduction of Bill C-252. I am glad he made reference to the fact that Canada does not comprise only two but many ethnic groups, being in reality bilingual and multicultural. All these ethnic groups are working in harmony and unity to make Canada a better place to live in. We are happy to have Senator Desruisseaux as one of our fellow members, and I am sure he will witness that there is no better spirit of Canadian brotherhood, harmony and unity than in the Senate.

Honourable senators, the introducer of Bill C-252 stated that the Minister of Industry reported on December 20 in the other chamber that Canadian industry performed only 36 per cent of the national total of our over all scientific activity in 1963. In the same year British industry achieved 63 per cent and industry in the United States 75 per cent of the over-all national effort. The United States government was spending 3 per cent of its gross national product on research and development while Canada was spending less than 1 per cent.

This anomaly in the allocation of effort shows that insufficient emphasis is being given to the practical exploitation of science and technology. An analysis of the distribution of our national research and development activity indicates that 60 per cent of our total effort goes into research and 40 per cent into development, whereas the reverse relationship should be the case if we desire to improve our economic progress and to keep up with the leading industrial nations.

The Engineering Institute of Canada, which had set up a 10-man committee drawn from industry and universities and completed a one-year study, in a recent brief to the federal Government called for a restructuring of the total Canadian research and development effort to emphasize industrial development and pure research and to "attain the same proportionate research and development spending as in leading countries, but with emphasis on industrial research and development."

Increased expenditure on industrial research and development, it is recommended, should be guided into a distribution of 10 per cent for basic research, 30 per cent applied and 60 per cent developmental, which is approximately the pattern in Sweden and the United States.

The situation in Canada would therefore have to be changed considerably. The distribution of Government expenditures is 20 per cent to basic research, 54 per cent to applied science and only about 25 per cent to development. Compared with industrial competitor nations, Canada is at a competitive industrial disadvantage.

The Engineering Institute of Canada states that Canadian industry now suffers a "crippling disadvantage" because almost 80 per cent of the Government research dollar is spent intramurally and less than 14 per cent is contracted out to industry. In the United States the situation is almost reversed. In 1963-64 only 19 per cent of research and development funds was spent within government, while 67 per cent was returned to industry for contract work. The brief concludes:

> Under such circumstances it is very difficult indeed for Canadian industry, particularly the science-based industries, to match the innovation power of such liberally-supported competitors.

The challenge to Canada is obvious. The Canadian Government realized that the tax incentive of the 50 per cent "additional allowance" provided by section 72A of the Income Tax Act in 1962 did not have the desired effect, and was even discriminatory, since eligibility depended on the firm's tax position; many small firms who had the greater need for assistance were not in a profit-making position and therefore could not qualify. In 1963 only 265 of some 600 firms could claim the additional allowance.

Bill C-252, which is before us today and was so ably explained by Senator Desruisseaux, proposes to remove the tax incentive and in its place to provide a system of statutory grants, not subject to income tax, payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or tax credits, for which all firms performing research and development could qualify, the program to be known as General Incentives for Research and Development. The initials spell GIRD—not to be confused with the incentives associated with Gerda. In the attempt to stimulate continuing research and development, the bill provides for grants of 25 per cent of capital expenditures made in Canada in the year in these fields and 25 per cent of the current expenditures which exceed the average of eligible current expenditures made in Canada in the preceding five years; only the increment is bonused. This is a slightly complicated formula, and I think it advisable that the bill go to committee for a fuller explanation.

This is an important piece of legislation, and I agree wholeheartedly with the basic principle of the bill, as I believe most members of this chamber do. I understand there has been considerable consultation with industry and that there is general approval of this new system of incentives.

As I read the bill a few questions came to my mind, which could probably be clarified by the sponsor or in committee. My questions are:

1. Does this bill cover all the areas under the previous income tax provision, which now is being removed, and will any firms be worse off under the new system?

2. Will grants be withheld from firms who may be duplicating research already being made by another firm?

3. Will the minister be in a position to limit certain kinds of research?

4. Under his act, could foreign-owned companies incorporated in Canada receive grants for research and development that could be exclusively exploited by the parent company in a foreign country?

5. Would not a higher incentive than 25 per cent to small firms give them greater inducement to institute research and development as well as to arrange for joint research in universities or approved institutions?

6. Would it not be better for the minister to be in an impartial position by having approvals of grants made by a board consisting of representatives of industry, universities and research institutions?

In order to ensure more rapid research, development, technological innovation and expansion of markets, all of which will help to improve the economic situation of Canada, in addition to this legislation there should be a more effective government policy of general stimulation, which would include education, patents, tariff protection, employment practice and taxation, usually performed by different agencies of government but not coordinated in an overall policy of scientific and technological innovation and progress. Action should be taken on reports and recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada, the Science Council of Canada and other appropriate authoritative bodies.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, for Hon. Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, for the second reading of Bill C-270, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, this bill was extremely well explained yesterday by Senator Leonard, followed by Senator Hollett, and I cannot add much to what has been said. I wish to mention to this honourable house that the resolution was introduced in the other place on February 16. It was explained by Mr. Chrétien, and second reading was given on February 24 when it was explained by the Minister of Finance.

As was said by Senator Leonard yesterday, when the act was passed in 1961 it became a success. The Government has come to us and has asked us to increase the amount that would be available for guarantee to the banks, and also to increase the size of business which can be assisted under the act.

The act is of great assistance in certain areas of secondary industry whereby a small business, as defined in the act, which is not quite capable of getting moneys from the development funds that are available, has to deal with the local bank.

As was also explained yesterday, this bill extends the classification of businesses which can obtain these loans. In other words, it expands and widens the help which can be given to different classes of industries in this country.

As the bill was so well explained in the other place and here, I see no reason why it should go to a committee and I suggest that we give it second reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-274, to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

He said: Honourable senators, you will recall that, earlier during this session, we had before us Bill C-151, which dealt with this same matter and was given Royal Assent on July 11, 1966.

When I moved second reading of that bill, on May 24, 1966, as reported in Hansard at page 549, one of the main criticisms of the legislation at that time was that the $50 million being voted would not be sufficient, in the minds of many senators and many members of the other place, to carry out the work necessary in Canada to raise the standard of living and to develop the resources in many of the uneconomic or undeveloped areas of Canada.

I would remind honourable senators that this bill was before this house in its original form some eight months ago when it called for an expenditure on behalf of the national Government of some $50 million. Eight months ago this program was in the formative stage as far as the national government and the provincial governments were concerned.

It was necessary to define the areas of Canada in which it was necessary to apply this legislation and, having defined those areas, to suggest programs which would meet with the approval of both the federal and the provincial governments, and programs that would raise the standard of living through the development of the natural resources within those areas of the country.

At that time studies were under way in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and Quebec. Of course many of those studies have come to a conclusion and agreements have been reached between the national Government and the provincial governments as to what expenditures are necessary to do the job that I outlined a moment ago.

To give you some indication of the progress made over this eight- or nine-month period, I need only indicate to you now what happened in two specific areas. I refer to New Brunswick and Manitoba. On September 20 last an agreement was signed between the Government of Canada and the Government of New Brunswick concerning two areas in that province. The first program concerns an area of the province which is sparsely populated, only 106,000 people living there. But they do have some natural resources which, if developed, both the province and the Government of Canada believe will increase the standard of living of the 106,000 people in the area.

These people have an average income of some $500 a year, which is less than half the average income of Canadians as a whole.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is that family income?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: This is family income.

Thirty-six per cent of the labour force in this area of New Brunswick has an equivalent of Grade 4 education or less, but only 13 per cent of the total population of Canada has an average education of Grade 4 or less. In other words, the Canadian average is 13 per cent of our population, whereas in this area of New Brunswick some 36 per cent of the people have Grade 4 or less.

In this area of New Brunswick about 17 per cent of the people have Grade 9 or its equivalent, whereas the average in Canada is 33 per cent.

It is obvious from the figures I have given that a massive program is necessary in this area of New Brunswick as well as in virtually every province, to increase the standard of living through education and other programs. We realized last July, when the complement of this bill, C-151, was given Royal Assent —the debate on it having taken place in May of last year—that the $50 million was inadequate.

As a matter of fact, I said so at that time, and I quote from Senate Hansard of May 24, at page 551:

> Some people are concerned that $50 million is not enough to do the job set out in this bill. I could not agree more, but no one has said that there is to be only $50 million for this program. This is just the beginning. Before the battle can be won, it will take many times the $50 million. I am confident that this nation can afford it...

I also said that I believed the nation could not afford not to implement the program outlined in the legislation and to spend many millions as well.

Some of my colleagues in this chamber expressed some fear at that time. Some members in the other place suggested that, rather than an expenditure of $50 million, it would be necessary to spend in the neighbourhood of $2 billion to complete this program throughout Canada.

I am not in a position to say whether we will need $2 billion, or what amount we will need. At the close of my remarks I shall give some of my own feelings with regard to the total amount that it will be necessary to spend on this and related programs to accomplish what this Government, and its predecessor, desires to accomplish throughout Canada.

Investigations are now under way in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Ontario, and all of the western provinces with the exception of Manitoba, for additional programs that will be implemented in the future. But I referred a moment ago to the one area of New Brunswick and to the one program to which the Government of Canada and the Government of New Brunswick have committed themselves. They have committed themselves to an expenditure of some $90 million.

Of that $90 million in the one area of New Brunswick, $62 million of it will be federal money—not all under this piece of legislation, but under this legislation and under Bill C-152, which is the ARDA measure also passed last July.

But the total federal contribution to this one area in New Brunswick will amount to $31 million out of a total of $50 million that we voted some nine months ago. New Brunswick will take $9 million of a federal contribution to a second program in New Brunswick.

So one province alone has now committed itself to an expenditure of federal Government money of $41 million. I have no complaint. I think that New Brunswick is to be complimented for having entered into this agreement with the federal Government to endeavour to increase the standard of living and to develop natural resources in that area.

I said at the outset of my remarks that I would refer to two areas of Canada. I have referred to one in eastern Canada. I now refer to one in western Canada, namely, the Interlake Region in Manitoba. Nine months ago when Bill C-151 was before this house, the Government of Manitoba and the federal Government were in the research stage with regard to a program that was necessary in the Interlake Region of Manitoba.

During the interval of eight or nine months the governments of Manitoba and Canada signed an agreement calling for a total expenditure in this area of Manitoba of something like $65 to $75 million. Part of that expenditure will be under this program; part of it will be under the ARDA program. But the federal contribution to the Interlake Region of Manitoba under this fund alone will amount to $25 million, which is half the sum we voted eight months ago.

Taking the total amount of money that has been committed in New Brunswick and Manitoba, which are only two of our provinces, you have a sum of approximately $66 million. It is estimated now that the commitments that have been made so far will call for a federal contribution under this fund in the next two years of some $250 million. That is the reason this bill is asking that the amount of money voted by the Parliament of Canada should be increased from $50 million to $300 million.

I said a moment ago that I would, at the conclusion of my remarks, acquaint honourable senators of my feeling regarding the amount of money I think it will be necessary to spend to do what this Government and the previous Government wished to do for those underdeveloped and underprivileged areas of Canada. It seems to me that it is not the amount of money that is important. As long as we have huge areas of Canada that are have-not areas, areas that are bleeding the Treasury of Canada to perpetuate their present circumstances, that is not good enough. It matters not to me what amount of money we must spend, but if through the expenditure of that amount of money we can move those areas from the have-not class, and areas that have been receiving money from the provincial and federal treasuries to perpetuate themselves in poverty, then that will be a good thing.

If through these expenditures we can move these areas and the people who live within them to make a contribution to Canada and to our national and provincial wealth, then this is the question that we must ask ourselves. Undoubtedly we will be reviewing from time to time the success of the expenditures of $50 million, $300 million, one billion or two billion, but it seems to me that we can make progress by the expenditure of public funds, and move people from the position of being recipients of public expenditures to where they can contribute to the welfare not only of their own areas but of Canada as a whole.

I hope that some honourable senator will have the opportunity in the very near future of coming back to this chamber and being able to substantiate the expenditures that you are being asked to vote today, and of asking this House for further expenditures for this very worthwhile program.

From the comments that have been made here and in the other place in the past, I think that this program has the support of every political party in Canada. I can only conclude by saying again that it is my hope that this expenditure can be substantiated in the future, that it will have done the job it was intended to do and that members of this house and of the other place will see fit to vote substantial sums to bring about better conditions in Canada so that those people who live in depressed areas can make a contribution to our nation rather than be recipients of public funds.

I commend to you my motion for second reading of Bill C-274.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, for Hon. Mr. Pearson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 3, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-268, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Operations under the Export and Import Permits Act for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 26 of the said Act, chapter 27, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

EXPO

EVENTS COMMEMORATING CANADA'S CENTENNIAL YEAR

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few remarks at this time. First, let me say how grateful I am sure all the members of the Finance Committee were to hear Mr. Robert Shaw, Deputy Commissioner of Expo. I understand that the impression he created and the information he gave were of immense satisfaction to all the members of the committee who attended and on your behalf I thank him.

Expo is of course the showplace of the centennial year. I think it is generally understood that the purpose of the centennial celebrations is to provide opportunities to confirm, and indeed to extend, the new nationality on the northern half of the new continent about which McGee spoke so eloquently one hundred years ago. This is not all done by speeches, or financial and economic achievement, nor is it always accomplished by intellectual advance and knowledge of history. It is certainly not a product of instant physical or intellectual injection.

The fires of patriotism and the love of one's country derive from a way of life, from small experiences in home, in school, in communities both large and small. It can be inspired too by great monuments, things that Andre Malreaux calls the "Voices of Silence". The contemplation of these monuments can often fan the flame in the minds of the young so as to change their whole outlook on life.

I think of monuments outside our own country, like the Lincoln Memorial in Washington at night, the Cathedral of Chartres; the Forum Romanum. And in our own country nature herself can create monuments: The overpowering majesty of the Rockies when seen for the first time, the swell of the sea on our coasts, the glory of the Laurentians in October, and indeed the far-reaching dry, snowy landscapes in February.

Recently I have been reading the book Ancient America, which is in the Time-Life series "The Great Ages of Man." It is an account of society in the earliest of the Americas, North America and South America. Incidentally, a very great deal of credit is given to Mr. Richard MacNeish, of the National Museum of Canada for the archaeological studies he made in caves in Mexico which carried the story of the early Americans back to some seven thousand years before the birth of Christ. To say that this book is fascinating pays it only lip service.

It is important for any country and for any people to know their roots, to cultivate them, to keep them strong. It is an essential part of the progress of a people.

The other evening, I witnessed the successful production of "Les Feux Follets" in the Capitol theatre here in Ottawa. This was a performance by a small company of young Canadians in their twenties—dancers, singers, boys, girls—and was superb entertainment. Technically it was excellent. It had a youthful vivacity; it was lively, colourful and vibrant. It had its small beginnings in 1952 in outdoor parks around Montreal, with folk dancing and singing. By 1963, more ambitious theatrical performances were undertaken, as a result of which rather heavy losses were incurred. But it secured some sponsorship and it has had successful tours both in the United States and in Europe. Now, as a Canadian company, it has an established reputation.

I think the material that was used the other evening was admirably interpreted with imagination and with taste. I pay a high tribute to the creative capacity not only of the director but of the performers as well, for the luminosity of the whole production.

The theme was the Canadian mosaic. It portrayed, for example, the Indian customs of the west coast. This was particularly colourful in its costuming and in its settings; colourful, too, in what was described—the secret rites of the tribes, their religious and warlike themes. There was another section of the performance which described first the buffalo hunt of the native Indians, then allegorically the coming of the settlers to the great breadbasket of the world, the fertile Canadian prairies.

Another phase dealt with the Eskimo and with the walrus hunt, the prowess of the hunter capturing not only the walrus but also the love of the young lady of his heart and, as well, the enthusiastic acclaim of the capacity audience in the theatre.

Also, there were folk dances of Canadians whose ethnic origin is in lands in eastern Europe. It was a rousing performance, full of verve and spectacle. I should add here that some 40 per cent of this performing group are of origins other than French.

For Quebec, the familar and lovable old songs were performed, but not to excess: "Au Pres de ma Blonde," and the song that Mr. St. Laurent said was Sir Georges Etienne Cartier's favourite, "Vive la Canadienne." And there were new ones, too, in the same tradition—fiddlers, spoon-clackers, quadrilles, reels and jigs—inherited from the French, yes, but from the English and the Scots and the Irish as well, because all of them had their influence in these early communities along the banks of the St. Lawrence, La Grande Rivière.

To misquote Wordsworth; "If the waves beside them danced, they outdid the sparkling waves in glee."

For the Maritimes, two particular strains were emphasized: first the Scottish, with the pipers and the sword dancers, as well as a scene with a plaintive, hauting Gaelic song sung at a milling frolic. These customs are still preserved in Nova Scotia, perhaps mainly in Cape Breton, doubtlessly too preserved in Scotland. This scene was done with impeccable taste. The Acadians, too, were portrayed, and there was a soft, sweet singing, beautifully costumed, choral group which sang songs of the Acadians, and did the dance "avec mes sabots," a delightful portrayal of a people whom we in this country have come to think of as heroic.

Frankly, honourable senators, I do no justice to this superb production in what I say, but I would pay tribute to what the director Michel Cartier has achieved. To use the language of Audrey Ashley of the Ottawa Citizen:

> He has most almost single-handedly found that tiresome national identity that we are all looking for.

Let me say that Mr. Cartier has not said everything about our national identity, nor did he try to do so. But with what must have been relentless research in archives, in igloos, on reservations and in communities all over the country, he has shown us some of our people's early ways and in particular their spirit. He has done it through the medium of the lively arts, and Canada is in his debt. He has shown us much of ancient Canadiana, subtly, and in an artistic way he has become an archaeologist, an anthropologist and a sociologist.

Festival Canada is a centennial project and a worthy enterprise of the Centennial Commission which has been urged to do this under the direction of my colleague the Secretary of State, and to them goes much credit for encouraging this particular effort.

Mr. Lawrence Freiman, the enthusiastic Chairman of the Canadian Festival of the Arts, was responsible to a great extent for arranging this Ottawa performance. Mr. Pierre de la Grave, the President of Les Feux Follets, has stimulated and encouraged the group. Already it has played to some 90,000 Canadians in towns big and small as it works its way from Vancouver to the Maritimes. I understand it will play daily at Expo, with admission being free to the visiting public.

It is my fervent wish that every Canadian may see it. I hope that as many as possible of our young people can not only see it but see behind it and into it. If it were possible to do so financially, I would like to see it filmed in colour for showing in Canada and in every Canadian embassy abroad so that it could be incorporated in the film libraries. In my view it contains the basic and genuine Canadianism which we all reach out to grasp.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to make a comment on what the Honourable Leader of the Government has said?

I am not quite sure on which item of the proceedings the honourable leader was speaking, but he raised the matter of the Finance Committee meeting, the ex post facto meeting after we had given third reading to Bill C-271. We did this under very extraordinary circumstances due to the fact that the Government requested it on the grounds that it was a very urgent matter. The leader told us that the Expo officials required the money before the end of the week.

Yesterday Mr. Shaw answered the questions asked of him, in the main, very satisfactorily. However, in response to my question, what was the urgency for this money, his reply was that he did not know. I would now ask the Honourable Leader of the Government—in view of the fact that he asked us to waive our rules as we have never done since I have been here—what was the urgency? Did Expo have to have the money by the end of the week? As I say, Mr. Shaw told us he did not know the reason.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): All I can tell the honourable senator is that I asked for unanimous consent for the third reading of the bill the other evening because the minister himself told me—and perhaps he has better information than the Expo officials—that before the end of the week Expo would run out of money.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: It was said in committee yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am told it was said in committee yesterday, but that is not what Senator Grosart says.

That is the answer I give, and I give it to honourable senators in all frankness. The minister called me particularly and said, "By the end of the week Expo will run out of money. They need it." I thought in the first place there was no problem in the Senate giving the bill third reading on that occasion; and, in the second place, there was no objection to hearing the explanation given by the Deputy Commissioner of Expo. I understand, not only on my own side of the house but from all quarters, that the information given by Mr. Shaw was extremely acceptable and most interesting.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: May I ask the Government Leader how long that money will last Expo?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am afraid I cannot answer that question; I do not know.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, March 7, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the third reading of Bill C-204, to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, before this bill receives third reading I wish to make just a few remarks.

The bill was well explained a few days ago by the honourable senator who has just moved third reading. I would have preferred, however, to hear more of the general objectives of the legislation.

One reads in the title to this bill that it is:

> An Act to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation.

However, if one reads the "fine print" one gets a somewhat different idea of its intent —at least, I did. I wish to present some of the thoughts that occurred to me from a careful reading of the bill and after listening to the explanation by the minister and others who appeared before the committee. I can agree with the Government of Canada in its desire that we should have a film industry in this country, and I can agree with the passage of a bill to guarantee loans to corporations that are in the business of making feature films and are trying to build up this industry. Everyone is aware that we have any number of similar enactments for the encouragement of various industries.

For instance, we have legislation providing for bank loans to assist farmers and for the guaranteeing of such loans, and the provision of and guarantee of loans to small businesses, and so on. I would be quite agreeable to similar legislation in respect to the film industry, but I am sure that honourable senators who were present in committee the other day will acknowledge that this is not that kind of bill at all.

This is a bill to establish a corporation, and then to put into the hands of that corporation $10 million of public funds. Someone said not long ago that $10 million is a very small amount. I suppose, having regard to the size of expenditures made these days by government, it is a comparatively small amount. Nevertheless, it is a sizable sum of money.

What is to be done with this money? It is to be handed out—just handed out! Is it to be handed out only to established companies which are attempting to build a film industry? Not at all. One would think from reading the title of the bill and the sections of it rather hurriedly and without considering the impact of the words contained in them, as we sometimes do, that this money is for the provision of assistance to film companies only. But, after listening to the Minister yesterday I came to the conclusion that the assistance to be given to the film industry as such might be very little and that this bill is for the purpose of making handouts to all kinds of artists, would-be artists, would-be actors, scriptwriters, dime novel writers, and persons of that kind. I am very much afraid that when we start handing out money under the terms of this bill that fund of $10 million will become just as deep a sinkhole for public funds as is the C.B.C. today. I am very much afraid also that the majority of the people who will get the money will be the same type as those who have been prostituting the C.B.C. for the last year or two.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am also very much afraid that we are simply building another corporation which will be similar in type to what the C.B.C. is rapidly becoming at the present time.

Honourable senators who were in the committee yesterday will recall that the Minister said something along the line that during the last several months the carpet to her door had been worn thin by such persons as I have just referred to coming to her office and asking when they were going to get their money out of this fund.

So, I want just to issue a warning that this is the kind of bill that in my opinion should have been studied more thoroughly by the Senate than was actually the case.

Of course I am aware of the fact that there is a political philosophy in this country now to the effect that no private industry can succeed unless it is subsidized by government; unless hand-outs are made to it by government. That is what this bill does. But what worries me most is the view—and this I believe to be shared by others—that it is not so much the established film companies, companies which are dedicated to the proposition that we should have a film industry in Canada, which will benefit from this legislation. The result of this measure will be not so much the helping of that type of company, as the building up of a corps of so-called artists, actors and writers who will drain the fund from the beginning.

I would refer this house, for instance, to section 14 of the bill, which permits the establishment of an Advisory Group. It reads as follows:

> The Minister may, on the recommendation of the Corporation, appoint an Advisory Group broadly representative of the professional associations, exhibitors, distributors and unions in the Canadian film industry and including other qualified persons, to advise the Corporation on matters which the Minister or the Corporation may refer to it.

Honourable senators, there was before the committee a gentleman—I think he is the secretary-manager of an organization of actors, unions, script writers, novel writers, and so on, but I am not sure—who seemingly had the idea that it is his group, and his group only, who are going to be members of the Advisory Group.

In any event, we are dealing with a fund of $10 million and, as I said before, I would be perfectly happy if it were a fund to make loans to or provide guarantees for the film industry, but I do not think it is anything of the kind. I predict that we are building the same kind of tiger as the C.B.C. has become, and that we will have a most difficult time in holding this additional tiger by the tail. It may well become another C.B.C. octopus. I predict also that some of the handouts that will be made under this legislation will make for amusing copy in future annual reports of the Auditor General.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I would first like to thank Senator Thorvaldson for his contribution at this stage. I feel that the apprehensions he has voiced are shared by several other senators. However, I believe it is an excellent thing, after the committee meeting held yesterday, that this kind of comment be made so that the government may understand clearly that the moneys voted for this legislation must be protected—

[Text]

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, the translation system is not working. I would ask His Honour the Speaker that it be corrected so that we may follow the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, perhaps I may say just a few words in English until the translation system begins to work.

I followed as closely as I could the remarks of Senator Thorvaldson. He asked many questions of the Minister at the meeting of the committee yesterday, and all the senators who attended that meeting, I think, were generally satisfied with the answers that were given, although I admit readily that some of the apprehensions expressed by Senator Thorvaldson are shared to a certain extent by other honourable senators. I pointed out when I introduced this bill—and this was also mentioned by Senator O'Leary (Carleton) —that if we do not get appropriately qualified people to administer this fund we might well run into disaster. There is no doubt about that.

From the remarks that were made yesterday I think that the Minister and the Government are well aware of this, and I for one am convinced that we shall have the best qualified and educated businessman that can be found to look after the administration of this fund.

The honourable senator will recall that I pointed out during the committee meeting yesterday that I would be in favour of paying the chairman of this body not an honorarium but an appropriate salary. It is my view that if we are to get the best qualified man who will be able to achieve and implement what the Government has in mind, and to help in launching a feature film industry in this country, we should pay such a man his worth.

I think I should recall at this moment that Canada is the only country in the western world which does not have a feature film industry. I know that many honourable senators who are movie fans have resented in a certain way the fact that when the world awards are being distributed Canada is not part of the picture. Heaven knows, in other cultural fields we are doing very well. I think we have reached a stage now where we have the artists and facilities we need to produce in this country good commercial films. We have the Canadian way of life as something to offer the world; we have things to show and things to say. I think the feature film is one way of reaching the cultured world.

Personally I share to a certain extent some of the apprehensions that have been expressed. However, I am convinced that this is a field which Canada should now enter. Honourable senators will admit that $10 million is not sufficient to launch a feature film industry in Canada, but that is not the purpose of this bill. However, I think that by investing his amount of money it would serve as an incentive for many businessmen in the field of feature films, and we think that the money we ask for this new corporation is not too high a price for the results we hope to achieve.

There are not, of course, many safeguards in the bill. However, the Minister said yesterday—and I must agree with the view she expressed—that it has to be as flexible as possible.

Honourable senators, in concluding my remarks I again put some emphasis on the fact that if we do not get the right type of persons to operate this new corporation, dedicated and well qualified people, we may not have the result we are looking for. I am sure that the views which have been expressed, especially on third reading, will help in reaching this goal.

Honourable senators, I do not think there is anything more I can say. I believe that most honourable senators were satisfied in committee, and I know that the honourable Senator Thorvaldson was also satisfied that the Minister gave proper answers to any questions that were put to her.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We did not think there were enough safeguards.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: That might be so.

Hon. Mr. Denis: Can the honourable senator give assurance that the stars of the films will not be the separatists or the socialists, as is the case in C.B.C. radio and television programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: May I say to the honourable senator that yesterday the minister said the Government was anxious that the new administration be as flexible as possible, and therefore it was extremely important, even essential, that the persons appointed to manage the $10 million fund be not only competent businessmen but men who realize they are responsible for launching and managing, as efficiently as possible, jointly with private enterprise, a feature film industry, because this amount of $10 million is in fact paid by the Canadian taxpayers. I feel that is an excellent suggestion. The minister, and the Government as well, want to make sure that the appointees will prove equal to the task.

Hon. Mr. Denis: Can the honourable senator assure us that the people appointed at the head of this political body will have more authority than the directors of the C.B.C.? The latter have no authority over programming; the employees do more or less what they feel like doing—they rule the roost. The honourable senator is also aware of the fact that there is a unanimous feeling among the population that programs such as Sunday, This Hour Has Seven Days, Aujourd'hui, and Tirez au Clair are merely politically inclined programs far from reflecting the ideologies of existing parties; they serve as a means of spreading propaganda on behalf of emerging political parties supported by those responsible for programming.

I would therefore ask the honourable senator if he can assure us that, in this field, the situation will be different from the present situation within the C.B.C., with particular reference to television, where honourable members and ministers have no direct control, except to vote certain estimates.

Here is an example. The C.B.C. has in Paris a representative whose job it is to get interviews. He gets a salary as well as a living allowance no doubt. Why send René Lévesque, for whom I have great admiration, from Montreal to Paris when there is already one C.B.C. representative there? We cannot do anything about it, nor can the minister, except when credits are voted in the house.

If the new corporation is as free from control as the C.B.C., I feel, as stated earlier by the honourable senator, that in spite of good presidents and directors, if they have no power, it will be a disaster. I would ask the honourable senator to take my remarks into consideration.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: In reply to the honourable senator's question, I can assure him that his remarks will be taken into consideration by the government because they make a lot of sense.

Now I would like to say a word about what Senator Denis said. There was reference to this yesterday, and the Secretary of State, who will be responsible to Parliament for this new corporation said very rightly—I think it cannot be otherwise—that the minister responsible cannot have an active role in the administration of such a fund nor can he say to what types of film contributions may be made. Therefore, I believe that relations will be the same as those now existing with the C.B.C. and all those directors will be aware of the problems that may come up exactly because they are the sole administrators of the corporation. I am sure that the remarks made by Honourable Senator Denis will be taken into consideration by the government. I thank him for his contribution.

[Text]

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RETIRING ANNUITY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-265, to provide for the payment of a retiring annuity to the Governor General of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the third reading of Bill C-270, to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux, for the second reading of Bill C-252, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, before begining any specific remarks on the bill, I would like to congratulate its sponsor both on his maiden speech and on his explanation of the bill. At a very pleasant luncheon in your chambers the other day, Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of the bill reminded me that the English translation of his name was "Brooks." May I say that both his delivery and the reading of his remarks in Hansard call to mind all the music and charm of a brook; I am sure he was aptly named in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As are all the Brooks.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: This century was supposed to belong to Canada. Early in the century it was pictured that Canada would gradually fill her vast territory and develop into a great industrial nation. Perhaps we have not moved as rapidly in that regard as some people would like us to move, but we are making progress and we are gradually changing our economy from a primary one to one which is more and more industrial.

Previous governments, both federal and provincial, have instituted various measures to aid our industrial development. It has reached the stage now where we must give more attention and consideration to the fact that we will require industrial research if we are to continue our expansion and keep up not only our home markets but the increased pace in exports which we attained in the last few years.

It is totally unfair to expect industry to bear this whole burden. This applies particularly to small industries.

A recent issue of Life magazine carried an article on the development of Symmetrel, a vaccine for the Asiatic 'flu virus. Many honourable senators may have read this article. The project was carried on by Du Pont, which is an international company both in Canada and in the United States and one of very widely based operations. To develop this one vaccine cost Du Pont $8 million. This does not include anything in the setting up of production lines or distribution of the drug. The research work alone cost $8 million.

This gives us a pretty good indication of the expense which huge corporations must face in carrying out research.

Previous speakers have mentioned the disparity between the amounts spent in Canada by private industry and various Government agencies. This may be true. Perhaps we are depending too much on the excellent work carried out by the National Research Council, by the Fisheries Research Council, and by the Research Department of the Department of Agriculture. It may be that this accounts for the imbalance of the expenditures on research.

I would not want to take any praise away from the scientists working in these branches, who have an excellent record of achievement over a great many years.

The previous incentive program achieved a certain degree of success. I am curious as to the cost to the Government since the inception of the program, the one which is being amended now; and also I would like to get an estimate—I realize it can only be an estimate —of the expenditures over the next two or three years under the bill now before us.

Honourable senators, Canada spends less on research than does Sweden. We compare on a level about with India—and we do not consider India to be much of an industrial nation. It comes as a shock to us to realize that our industrial research expenditure about equals that of India. This is not good enough for us if we are to make progress in a hemisphere in which we must associate and compete with great industrial nations of the south. We must increase our industrial research.

As to the bill itself, section 2(3)(c) refers > to expenditures on or for scientific research and development, includes only expenditures incurred for and wholly attributable to the prosecution of or the provision of facilities for the prosecution of scientific research and development in Canada...

I do not pretend to be a research scientist, but I think the description and use of the word "prosecution" there is rather harsh. To me prosecution conveys the picture of a lawyer attempting to obtain the conviction of someone before the courts. Certainly, I cannot see lawyers moving into the research field.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why not?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: There is just not enough money in the field for them to move into it.

I think it is harsh and that we could find another word more appropriate and descriptive of scientists than the word "prosecution".

Honourable senators, the bill provides for a basic five-year period for capital expenditures and, if I may, I would like to spend a moment on two aspects of that provision. I refer here to an article from the Globe and Mail of Wednesday, February 22, 1967. It refers to an interview with Dr. J. J. Green, who is the Director of Litton Systems. First of all, I must say the headline is a bit unfair to the bill. It describes it as "a wrench in the research machinery." I am not entirely convinced that the headline is fair. I do not think that is the intention of the Government. At any rate, the article points out that certain firms, which were probably the most interested in research, built up their capital expenditures under the previous program to a certain level at which they could carry on for a number of years, and that they will not benefit under the description providing for benefits and capital expenditure above the five-year average.

I think when the bill goes to committee, as I hope it will, we should inquire if perhaps the five-year period is not a bit too long.

Then, at the other extreme, when the bill was before the committee in the other place, some reference was made to the automobile industries carrying on research in Canada and then attempting to utilize it in the United States. I will mention this later on, but I want to point out that the automobile industry in central Canada can readily attain the five-year base period, whereas, if we consider the two firms in the Atlantic Provinces, we will see that Volvo, operating in Nova Scotia, has been in existence for approximately four years and, if I interpret the bill correctly, it would have to wait for a number of years before establishing a five-year base period. Perhaps I am wrong in this interpretation, and if so I will be very happy to be corrected later on. The same thing would apply to a Japanese automobile firm locating in Nova Scotia. It would have difficulty in establishing the five-year base period.

The bill states that approved associations may carry on research and be included under the program. I would like very much, honourable senators, to see a consulting firm included under the description of approved associations. My reason for this is that very often, particularly in areas in which new industries are opening, it is impossible for the university to come to the plant and study all the problems that the new plant is experiencing, whereas a consulting firm could come into the plant, study the problems in the daily operation of the plant and be in a position to assist and advise the plant.

Section 10 of the Act provides measures for recovery of grants in case the firm receiving the grant does not carry on research for the required length of time. I interpreted that as tying up the property and equipment for periods up to five years. Here again I question the wisdom of tying up the investment for a period of five years. Certain firms will want to carry on research to solve one particular problem and to place them in a more favourable position to compete.

I think it is rather absurd to require that they maintain this property for a certain length of time after they have completed their research and have solved their problems.

Section 14 gives the Governor in Council the authority to make certain regulations. Honourable senators, I am basically opposed to giving the Governor in Council authority to make regulations. We have had too much of this recently. The regulations pass what is really enabling legislation and then we never see the regulations as authorized by the Governor in Council. If we are going to continue this pattern, I feel that at least the regulations should be tabled in the Senate where we can then debate and discuss them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable senator realizes that all these regulations must be published in the Canada Gazette and tabled in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: This is true. I have not been in the Senate or on Parliament Hill as long as the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I would like to ask him if he can recall one occasion in which these regulations, after being drawn up and after the enabling legislation has been passed, have been debated either in the House of Commons or in the Senate. This is the point I am trying to make.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps the honourable senator would not mind my interjecting again. I was afraid he was going to ask whether or not I knew any honourable senators or members who read the regulations. Perhaps I would have been embarrassed had he asked that question.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The thought had occurred to me, but I was afraid you would return the question, so I avoided it.

Then we come to section 14(f) where it is stated that the Minister may prescribe circumstances in which no amount need be subtracted pursuant to paragraph (d), subsection (1) section 5, upon the sale or disposition of goods for services described in that paragraph. I might say that section 14(g) is essentially the same.

Honourable senators, this makes me wonder why we put these sections in the bill in the first place, if we are in another section of the same bill going to give the Minister power, in effect, to veto the legislation that has been passed by Parliament or to amend it to suit his own purposes.

Here again I would like a thorough explanation of that from the Minister when he appears before the committee.

I mentioned earlier that certain aspects of the description of research cause me some concern. The Minister before the committee in the other place stated the description of research would be basically that of O.E.C.D. He went on to say what would be included under the bill and what would be excluded. He mentioned market research, sales promotion, quality control and routine testing of products and materials as being excluded. I regret very much that the minister took this attitude because small industries—and here again I am speaking of small industries —have great difficulty in financing and finding people to do this work. In the food industry, for example, certain aspects have really been captured by the larger firms simply because they are in a position to carry on the market and packaging research that is required. Perhaps when the Minister appears before the committee of this house he will be in a much more genial mood than he was before the committee of the other place and will make some exceptions in this regard.

There was also considerable discussion in the other place about subsidiary firms, that is, firms under foreign control carrying out research in Canada with the parent company benefiting from the research. This does not concern me to the same extent that it apparently concerned the members in the other place. I am sure I am going to shock many people by saying that I was very much impressed by the remarks made by the Hon. Mr. Sauvé in Montreal the day before yesterday, when he put the matter of foreign ownership of Canadian industries in an entirely different light. I am sure certain members of the cabinet did not censor his remarks before he made them; perhaps we would be better off if Mr. Sauvé censored the remarks of some of his colleagues before they make them.

Obviously much thought went into this subject and I find myself in agreement to a great extent with it. If we are going to complain about the so-called brain drain from Canada we should not worry whether it is a subsidiary firm or a wholly-owned Canadian firm that is carrying out research. If we can keep our own scientists in Canada, in the long run we will benefit far more than we would by any tax grant we will be providing under this bill. I think this is a most important aspect to consider in this regard.

Honourable senators, as I say, I have raised certain questions concerning the bill itself. I support the principle of the bill but I also realize it is much easier to draw up and support a principle than it is to draw up the regulations that will cover the many situations which can arise all across Canada. I hope the committee will make a very careful study of the various points that I have raised, as well as of the points that will come to the minds of other senators.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Since I interrupted the honourable gentleman once or twice already, let me now give an assurance on this point. I will certainly send his remarks to the Minister so that he will be prepared to discuss the points the honourable senator has raised, which I think are very valid points.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must warn honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Desruisseaux speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I think there is no disagreement whatever in this house concerning the importance of this bill, and we all realize that it has some very important consequences for the future of Canada. There is no doubt that it contains points that can be argued, but there are one or two points I would like to attempt to clarify without going into the details of the questions that have been raised by Senator Yuzyk and Senator Phillips.

When we speak about what has been done in Canada compared with what has been done in Sweden or in the United States of America, we must keep in mind that in the United States, for example, they have a very important and expensive space program, where research accounts for a huge part of the expenditures involved. It is also true that in the United States much of the research in this field is farmed out to private industries.

In one of the reports of the Engineering Institute of Canada I saw certain comparisons as between Canada and Sweden and Canada and the United States of which I feel the house should be made aware. So far as the question of national research is concerned, if we go into the figures for 1955-56 we find that in Canada $216 million was spent, and this grew to $449 million in 1963-64. In Sweden—and here we must remember that the population is not the same and industrialization is not carried out to the same extent as it is here—the figures for 1955-56 show $91 million spent for national research, and by 1963-64 this had grown to $281 million. From looking at these figures it is plain to see that the rate of increase per year has been faster in Sweden than in Canada.

But I would point out that this bill is only a facet of what can be done towards building the future of Canada by way of research. The bill itself replaces an act which expired on December 31 last. There is, therefore, a certain amount of urgency in this matter since two months of the year have already passed, and this legislation has not yet been enacted. I hope that by referring it to a committee we can expedite matters and so bring it before the house for third reading soon.

I would also point out to honourable senators that the share of the Canadian Government in research projects has not been small. What we have been doing may not be considered large compared with what has been done, for example, for the film industry. Nevertheless, in the year 1955-56 the Government contribution to research was $67 million, and in 1963-64 it was $62 million. In Sweden the sharing was a little more comparable, and I think we can visualize that they were a little bit behind. In Sweden it was $48 million in 1965-66 and $46 million in 1963-64. The Canadian Government's intramural consideration for research was a little higher than that. In 1963-64 it was $78 million, but in Sweden it was only $43 million.

I do not want to belittle our Canadian share in this research work, but we are all concerned and I appreciate the senator's representations as to the importance of this bill and of considering it in committee. Without taking more of your time, I conclude by saying that I think it is vital that the bill be referred to committee. While I could answer some of the other questions, it is not necessary at this time. They can be answered in committee, and we can report to you.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Desruisseaux, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

STATUTORY SALARIES REVISION BILL, 1967

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Cook for the second reading of Bill C-266, to provide for the revision of certain salaries fixed by statute.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, after having heard the clear explanation of this bill given by my good friend Senator Cook, who sponsored it, and after listening attentively yesterday to my other good friend to my right, Senator Aseltine, I realize now that there is very little for me to add. However, I do wish to make a few remarks which I think have not been made in the course of the debate up to this time.

As I understand the present bill, it has two main purposes. One is to bring up to date the salaries of certain public officers whose remuneration has hitherto been fixed by act of Parliament and has thus been incapable of any change without an amending bill. The second purpose, which introduces an important change in principle, seeks the authority of Parliament to enable the Governor in Council to make salary adjustments in respect of most of the designated officers without the necessity of bringing in an amending act.

The three exceptions to this new principle appear to be three officers having a special relationship to Parliament: namely, the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer and the Representation Commissioner. Their salaries will continue to be set by Parliament itself, as was explained to us by the sponsor, and I see no objection to that. The ostensible reason for the suggested change is to prevent unnecessary delays in salary adjustments, delays often made necessary by the pressure of other parliamentary business. I understand that the rates of pay for all these officers have been in fact frozen since December 1, 1963, whereas, other senior officials—such as deputy ministers, members of commissions and boards—have had their salaries kept current and reasonably up-to-date by Executive action.

I can only say that it appears to me that a good case has been made for this change, and that I will not oppose the second reading of the bill. I say this in part because of the safeguards contained in clause 4 of the bill. It is not necessary for me to read it again for it has already been read by the sponsor and Senator Aseltine, but it is clause 4 which precludes the Executive from reducing any such salary as is fixed from time to time or from discriminating in the payment of salaries as among the members of any one board or commission. This clause circumscribes the discretion of the Government to some degree, in that it cannot reduce salaries or discriminate in the particular way indicated. I must nevertheless warn that the discretion conferred upon the Government in respect of the salaries of such boards, commissions and officers will be wide indeed. Since it will have control over all increases, it can at least for the future discriminate in many ways as between one board or commission and another, and between one officer and another. Such a discretion can only be regarded as a qualification on the independence of these boards, commissions and officers whose salaries have hitherto been regulated by Parliament itself. Will such a discretion be abused? I hope not, but I do not really know.

We have heard much in recent days of "red circles." What a happy situation it must have been to have occupied a position surrounded by a red circle! My understanding is that this meant, in effect, that while the incumbent of the office would not be discharged, no significant salary increases were to be expected, and the office itself was marked not necessarily for abolition, but at least for a lower salary when the present incumbent left the service. How many of us would wish to be lullabied to sleep to the tune of "red circles in the sunset"?

The Minister of Finance recently remarked that discrimination is inherent in human nature, and in the nature of things, but there is such a thing as fair and just discrimination, and in conferring powers such as these upon the Executive, Parliament is not guarding against abuses.

The modern generation would, if I mistake not, regard red circling as "Endsville."

It is always difficult to prove that such things are unfairly discriminatory, but it cannot be denied that inherent in any such power to "red circle" a position is the power to frustrate and destroy.

As I remarked in respect of another bill a few days ago, this legislation too is as much an "act of faith" as it is an act of Parliament.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the sponsor of the bill speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Cook: Honourable senators, I do not believe I can now add anything useful to this debate. It has been pointed out by several speakers that the power given to the Executive to increase the salaries of these statutory officials is always, of course, subject to the control and supervision of the legislature.

It has already been pointed out that any questions as to the amount of the increases granted by this bill can be answered in committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cook, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald, for the second reading of Bill C-274, to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, in rising to say a few words in regard to Bill C-274, to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act, I should like first to congratulate the honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. McDonald). He explained this quite simple bill very well, except for the figures contained in his remarks to be found at the bottom of page 1552 and at the top of page 1553 of Hansard of yesterday. I am afraid I cannot quite understand those figures, and perhaps he will explain them after I have completed the few remarks I have to make.

I can add little to this debate, but I am very surprised that the Government should come forward at this time and ask for an additional $250 million which will increase this fund to a total of $300 million. I am amazed also at the obvious lack of planning or proper research in the first instance when the $50 million was granted in June of last year. This early request for more money makes me quite uncertain as to the ultimate cost of these rural development programs.

As was outlined to us in June of last year, there are only three area programs to be serviced from this fund, and they are in the Interlake area of Manitoba, eastern Quebec and northern New Brunswick. Does this mean that all our special projects that are outside the ARDA program—and I am sure there will be a great many other special programs—are going to be under-estimated to the tune of 500 per cent? Can our provinces, let alone the federal Government, stand this kind of careless or, should I say, indifferent estimation of cost of these projects? Are those districts that I have mentioned worth this kind of expenditure for development, or would it not be better to train all the trainable men, women, boys and girls for jobs outside those areas, and to put the helpless and older folk on welfare?

In his submission to the Special Committee of the Senate on Land Use, Dr. Kristjanson, a senior rural development specialist of the Manitoba Department of Agriculture and Conservation, said that the first approach to rural development involved big expenditures to provide what amounted to a completely new resource. The alternative was what he called the "boot strap" approach, in which people were given assistance, mostly technical, to "help them help themselves" develop their resources. He went on to explain:

> Self-help programs are excellent, provided the boot straps are long enough to hold and strong enough to pull. Years of hardships have worn the boot straps of the people in the marginal areas pretty thin and I'm afraid they will not stand much pulling.

He went on to say:

> I would suggest that we need to provide new boot straps on which to pull. This means the provision of development capital of one sort or another. Provision of this capital should not be Government handouts in the form of a series of stop-gap programs but rather funds for planned, long-range development of resources.

In his brief on rural development in Manitoba he stressed the need for detailed information and study in long-range planning. He said a list of programs submitted by the province in connection with ARDA contained a number of proposed research projects. These included soil, sociological, hydrologic and farm ownership surveys. Among other proposals drafted by Manitoba was a land purchase program for certain marginal areas, and an educational project to train people for non-agricultural work.

In northeast New Brunswick part of this money now being voted is to be used for education, land purchase, vocational training, fishery assistance, road building and recreation. The only limit to spending seems to be what the province can afford, or how much money it can put up. Of course I know that the provinces are the ones who designate the areas and map out the projects they feel should be undertaken but, as all honourable senators know, when there is a gift in the offing as large as is being promised by the federal Government those who are to receive the gift will strain themselves to the limit to take it up.

As to education, for instance, there could be a most elaborate building program and, as so often happens nowadays, our schools for primary and secondary education are going all out on innovations far beyond the needs of education as such.

As Senator McDonald said in his remarks, at the bottom of the first column of page 1552 of yesterday's Hansard, 36 per cent of the labour force in this area of New Brunswick has an equivalent of Grade 4 education or less. It is almost impossible to raise these people to a proper standing from the slum situation in which they are at the present time. I have it on fairly good authority that these people have been uneducated and in this position of poverty for so long that it is almost impossible to train the older people for anything. The only thing I can suggest is possibly some sort of vocational training to help them out.

A program in respect to roads can be a very expensive one, and recreation I would leave to you, honourable senators. We might have elaborate golf courses, bowling greens, or any number of other expensive ideas put forward in the name of developing certain areas for recreation and as tourist attractions.

To my mind, the Government should have given us some details of how it has spent the $50 million, if, indeed, any of that sum has been spent to this time. It does not seem to me to be good business for the Government to come forward and ask for additional funds without giving any account of how the previous allotment has been spent.

Having said that, honourable senators, I will say that I am all in favour of helping to develop our slum areas, and of bringing these people up to a better standard of living. Certainly we in this country should not allow our rural areas to continue, as some have for many years, in a state of poverty. For this reason I am pleased to support this bill, and I trust we shall get full value for this amount of $300 million.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable sponsor of this bill speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, my remarks will be very brief. All I wish to do is attempt to answer some of the questions that have been posed by the honourable Senator Pearson. At the beginning of his remarks he referred to some figures I had used yesterday, which appear in the Senate Hansard at the foot of page 1552 and continue on page 1553. I hope I am right in the figures I have selected. I had been talking about the commitments which had been made in New Brunswick in two areas, and two other areas, one in Quebec and one in Manitoba.

Without dealing with these figures specifically, I want to turn to the closing remarks of Senator Pearson in which he said he would like some details as to how the $50 million that was voted last July 11 had been spent.

Honourable senators, the $50 million has not been spent, but when this house passed Bill C-151 last July 11 negotiations were taking place between the federal Government and the provincial governments to formulate plans and programs, not only in the three provinces I have mentioned but in other provinces as well, and in the intervening period from July until February 3 certain plans have been completed and agreements have been signed with the provinces.

The agreements that have been signed to date are with Quebec, Manitoba and New Brunswick, but there are negotiations going on today in virtually every other province in Canada, and new agreements will be signed I expect from week to week and from month to month into the future. The $50 million that was voted last July would not begin to pay for the federal contribution for the agreements that have already been signed with the three provinces.

In order to make provision for finances to carry out agreements that will be signed from week to week and from month to month into the future, it is estimated that it will now take some $300 million instead of $50 million to carry out the program that will be agreed upon by the provinces and the national government. So we are not in a position to give any details on money that has been spent at the moment. However, this house and the other place will have the opportunity to scrutinize these expenditures once they have been made.

As I said in closing my remarks yesterday, I expect that we are going to be asked for money in the future, but I sincerely hope that before we are asked to vote any more money in addition to the $300 million, we will have some accounting at least for perhaps $250 million to $300 million and be able to assess the progress made.

I have no doubt in my own mind that if this program is going to do what I believe all honourable senators would wish it to do, then we will have to vote much more money. I believe that $300 million will not begin to do the job that we—the members of both houses—visualize must be done.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Has not all this form of welfare been done up to now? Have not all these donations been made?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes; that is the point. I have always objected personally to spending money on welfare when through those expenditures you accomplish nothing. The whole idea of this program is to raise the standard of living in certain areas of Canada so that people, instead of being recipients of public aid can make a contribution to society. This applies not only to New Brunswick and Manitoba but to areas in practically every province in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You will find worse conditions in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes. You do not have to go very far from this building to find them right in the capital city.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I have seen them.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: It is hoped that under this program we will not have to continue to give social aid, but that these people will be able to pay their own way and make a contribution to the rest of Canada as well.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In the agreements made with the three provinces he has mentioned, what proportion did the provinces agree to pay? Have you any information along that line?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes.

Under the ARDA program, the expenditures are as a rule divided 50/50: 50 per cent is paid by the provinces and 50 per cent by the national government. Under this piece of legislation, in many cases the federal Government pays the total cost. May I give as an example one area in the Interlake region in Manitoba. It is expected that the total expenditure by the federal and provincial governments under the ARDA program and this legislation will be somewhere between $65 million and $70 million. Of that total, $25 million will be paid by the federal Government under this program. The difference between the $25 million and the $65 million or $70 million will be paid under the ARDA program, under shared cost. However, there is no definite division; it depends upon the program as to what division is made between the provincial and federal governments.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. McDonald moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Earl A. Hastings moved the second reading of Bill C-220, to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-220, an act to establish an Immigration Appeal Board, requires that we address ourselves to the matter of immigration, and what I believe to be one of the most important aspects of future government policy and administration.

It is of paramount importance, because it brings into focus the difficult and complex merging of economic, social, humanitarian, legal and international aspects, all of which have a resultant impact on the delicate balance of our Canadian society today.

In this "jet age" it is necessary that Canada meet future immigration requirements with flexible policies, procedures and legislation designed to meet the everchanging circumstances of manpower needs—manpower needs which may change within a month due to technology, automation and other factors affecting the work force of our economy.

I need not remind you of the great contribution made to the prosperity and economic growth of Canada in the post-war era by those people who have come to our shores in search of a better way of life. I do not think there is an area of endeavour which has not felt the impact of the new Canadians. Agriculture, commerce, finance, industry, even politics, have been enriched by the contribution of these new Canadians who have chosen to make Canada their home.

Immigration has become a permanent institution with respect to our national life, as I said, giving a stimulus to probably every facet of our national economy.

By the end of 1967, over two and a half million post-war immigrants will have arrived in Canada. The 1961 census revealed that post-war immigrants accounted for one out of every three architects, draughtsmen, mechanical engineers, physical and occupational therapists; one out of every four civil and electrical engineers and physical scientists; and one out of every five chemical engineers, medical doctors and economists.

It has been estimated that for Canada to have trained the immigrant professionals who arrived in the period 1953-1963—this was shown in a study by the Economic Council of Canada—would have cost more than half a billion dollars.

It is not possible to make similar estimates for the more numerous non-professional but skilled immigrant tradesmen who made an equal, if not a greater contribution to our economy.

In addition to their skills, these immigrants have brought new ideas, new capital, new technology to Canada. Their demands for goods and services have contributed in no small way to the growing prosperity of the nation.

The Government of Canada, having in mind the great contribution immigration has made to our economic growth in the post-war era, and at the same time cognizant of the fact that it will play a key role in meeting future objectives, is anxious to develop a dynamic, positive, expansionist immigration policy for the future. This has resulted, as honourable senators know, in the tabling of the White Paper on Immigration in the other place by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. This document is receiving study by a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate. It is a document which has stimulated a great deal of discussion. In the light of that committee's report, I would anticipate and be hopeful for a full-scale revision of the Immigration Act in the not too distant future. That matter will be discussed by honourable senators at a later date. Personally, I hope it will result in a policy which will maintain the highest possible level of immigration, a policy which will bring to Canada annually a good number of qualified people, ready, willing and able to adapt to our society and contribute to the economy of our nation.

In developing such a policy, the Government and the department are meeting the problem on four fronts. The departmental administrative techniques and procedures have been updated, and further revisions will be made in the light of the public discussion now taking place on the White Paper. Regulations also will be amended to remove any vestige of discrimination and to provide a balance as to national interest, manpower needs and the claims of sponsorship.

Of all the steps contemplated, the bill before us, C-220, is the most urgent revision asked for by the department. It is necessary to assure that, in the administration of immigration procedures, individuals are treated with equality and consistency.

I believe that the enactment of this bill, which provides for the introduction of an appeal board, will meet that objective by providing a court of record or an impartial tribunal where departmental decisions may be appealed by those who may feel aggrieved.

At the present time it is the responsibility of the Minister and his departmental officials to administer the act. The act and regulations state who may come to Canada, and under what conditions generally they may stay; but they cannot accommodate the variety of cases that arise. Therefore, the act and regulations must be tempered; and each succeeding Minister of Immigration has tried and succeeded in bringing fair and impartial administration, coupled with a warm, sympathetic and humanitarian approach to the problems that each has had to face.

In no other department of Government is a minister subjected to such onerous responsibility as is the Minister of Immigration, now the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The paper work of the department, the time spent in examining each individual file in order to exercise the discretion vested in him, decisions which are more important because they have a very basic effect on the individual and his destiny, are formidable. No minister, regardless of his capacity for work or indeed if he were endowed with the wisdom of Solomon, can expect to be perfect. It is inevitable that there will be those who feel aggrieved at his decisions. Therefore, it is evident that the operation calls for an equitable system of appeal from departmental decisions.

At the present time there is an Immigration Appeal Board. It provides for appeals against some orders of deportation, but not all. The present board has authority only to allow or dismiss an appeal. It cannot bring into play those other very important circumstances which affect deportation and immigration matters. Again, its decisions are referred to the minister who can accept, reject, or make his own decisions. Its decision must be based strictly on legal aspects.

With such a case, the effectiveness of the board is extremely limited. It has become regarded merely as an arm of the department. When it is known that its decisions are subject to review by the minister, it is to the minister and not to the appeal board that the appeals are made in an attempt to seek redress.

Therefore, this Bill C-220 is an attempt by the Government to establish confidence in the appeal process and remove serious causes of dissatisfaction and criticism. Certainly, it will greatly reduce those very important discretionary powers which are vested in the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In effect, the Immigration Appeal Board which will be constituted will replace the minister and will be able to consider those humanitarian and other non-legal aspects which play an even more important part with respect to deportation and immigration cases.

The main provision of the bill before you, honourable senators, empowers the Governor in Council to appoint an immigration board of seven to nine members, to be a court of record and to function accordingly. Its proceedings will be public, except at the discretion of the board and when requested by an appellant they can be held in camera.

Officers of the board shall include a chairman and two vice-chairmen who will hold office during good behaviour until they reach the age of 70 years. The chairman and at least two other members will be barristers or advocates.

The chairman and not less than two members or a vice-chairman and two other members, if one of the members be a barrister or advocate, shall constitute a quorum of the board.

The chairman may direct a single member to hear evidence relating to an appeal, but that member must report back to a quorum of the board before the appeal is disposed of.

The act provides for the first time that a person ordered deported who has been returned to the place whence he came, on advising the board of his desire to appear in person at his hearing against the deportation order, may be permitted by the board to return to Canada for his hearing under prescribed terms and conditions.

Bill C-220 provides access to the board for every person ordered deported wherever the individual claims that the weight of evidence does not justify his deportation. It will abolish existing provisions of the Immigration Act excluding certain persons from the right of appeal. The individual and the Minister are on equal footing to appeal to the board a decision of a Special Inquiry Officer.

In addition, it is proposed in this bill that people who are detained pending disposition of their appeals may apply to the board against a decision of a Special Inquiry Officer refusing to grant conditional release.

Honourable senators, the board may on its hearing allow an appeal, dismiss an appeal or make an order in respect to a minister's appeal from a decision of a Special Inquiry Officer. If the appeal is dismissed or an order granted pursuant to the request of the Minister, that order must be executed as soon as practicable.

However, honourable senators, it is here that the discretionary powers are now vested in the Board, and they affect two classes: the permanent residents and all others.

With respect to a permanent resident, who for all practical purposes is a landed immigrant or, as the act states, one who has been granted lawful admission to Canada for permanent residence under the Immigration Act, the board having regard for all circumstances, may stay the order or quash it. If it stays the order, the person may remain in Canada under the terms and conditions prescribed by the board, the case being reviewed from time to time as is considered necessary.

The board may at any time amend the terms and conditions or impose new conditions and terms, or indeed it can cancel the stay and order deportation. But throughout the board may at any time quash the order for deportation.

With respect to all others, if the order has been legally made the board may then exercise discretionary powers, in that there is reason to believe that execution of the order will result in punishment for political activity or that the deported person will suffer unusual hardship, or that there exist compassionate or humanitarian grounds; then, the board may exercise its discretion and quash the order, stay the order or grant entry.

For the first time, under provisions of this bill sponsorship is recognized as a legal right of the Canadian resident. The board will have authority to make a final decision on appeals from all resident citizens who think that the department has erred in refusing admission of relatives whom they wish to sponsor. This is a bold, new, welcome concept. As the Minister stated last night, to our knowledge we are the first country in the world to give this right to its citizens.

The exact classes of unsponsorable relatives subject to appeals will be the prerogative of the Governor in Council. Initially, it is anticipated that it will cover: husband or wife; unmarried son or daughter under 21; fiancés with unmarried sons or daughters under 21; parent or grandparent; unmarried orphaned grandson or granddaughter. These are listed in the White Paper which defines them as those people who are the dependent members of the very basic family unit.

The fact is that those who may appeal with respect to sponsorship cases and the classes that may be appealed has been criticized, but honourable senators must appreciate that we are breaking new ground. The institution of an appeal system in sponsored cases is an innovation in an area where there are no precedents.

In the light of board experience and an assessment of the effectiveness of the system, it is anticipated the Governor in Council will extend the classes of sponsorable immigrants having access to the board. The Governor in Council in due course will certainly extend the right to appeal to all Canadian citizens and will cover all classes of proposed immigrants. It is felt that it would be administratively impossible to load a newly constituted board with the large number of applications for appeals that would no doubt fall on its shoulders, should it be opened to every class of proposed immigrant.

With respect to security, honourable senators, however repugnant it may seem to many of us and I am sure many of you share this with me—the act provides that the discretionary powers granted to the board with respect to staying or quashing a deportation order, or changing the decision of the department with respect to sponsored immigrants, cannot be exercised if a certificate signed by the Solicitor General and the Minister is filed stating that in their opinion, based on security or criminal intelligence reports, it would not be in the national interest for the board to exercise its discretion.

This precaution is necessary because the department receives security and criminal intelligence information from very reliable sources that provide it only on the express condition that it will not be made public and that certainly the source will not be revealed. If this undertaking were not honoured, then the sources would certainly cease to provide information essential to the national interest. It is not only the national interest that must be guarded; it is the safety of the individual. If you force the Minister to divulge his sources of information, the safety of certain individuals could be prejudiced.

This precaution is necessary, therefore. It is for the protection, as I have said, of confidential security and criminal intelligence, and it is to protect not only the security of the nation but also to assure protection of the individual.

The order of deportation, may I clearly state again, may be appealed as to law. But when that certificate is filed with the board, the board cannot exercise its discretionary powers, and the deportation order if lawful must take effect.

The board may render written decisions in allowing or dismissing appeals. Its decisions in so far as they concern law become precedents and the appellant and the department will both be allowed to appeal the board's decision on questions of law to the Supreme Court, with leave of that court. Every appellant shall be advised to the grounds on which the deportation order was made, or the refusal to approve the sponsored application for admission to Canada was based.

In conclusion, honourable senators, by the creation of this board we are breaking new ground in the administration of procedures relating to immigration. We are granting to the individual Canadian citizen, the landed immigrant, and indeed to the illegal immigrant equal status to that of the Minister. This bill is most urgent in the creation of an up-to-date immigration policy; it is urgent because it assures the proper concepts of the rights of the individual and represents a change in the essential spirit of our approach to the problem of deportation orders. I hope that it may receive the approval of honourable senators.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), debate ajourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions numbered 1123 to 1184, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, I move the adoption of these resolutions. In each case the decision was made by the Commissioner, and the evidence was read by the divorce Committee, which in turn agreed with the decision.

Resolution 1123, for the relief of Lisa Lorraine Pedvis Lightstone.

Resolution 1124 for the relief of Geraldine (Gissa) Israel Cohen.

Resolution 1125, for the relief of Edith Lois Myers (Meyers) Goldin.

Resolution 1126, for the relief of Monique Lise Roy Derrick.

Resolution 1127, for the relief of Nancy Dubrofsky Richer.

Resolution 1128, for the relief of Isabel Jean Bulloch Soper.

Resolution 1129, for the relief of Pearl Brown Aaron Noik.

Resolution 1130, for the relief of Amita Brainin Schuller Schecter.

Resolution 1131, for the relief of Madeleine Arcand Fumi.

Resolution 1132 for the relief of Raynald (Renald) Rivet.

Resolution 1133, for the relief of Eva Lebovits Klein.

Resolution 1134, for the relief of Gisele Martel Ducharme.

Resolution 1135, for the relief of Jean Marie Langelier.

Resolution 1136, for the relief of Pierre Leo Richer Lafleche.

Resolution 1137, for the relief of Mary Anne Bosak Bingham.

Resolution 1138, for the relief of Sandra Kathleen Bowie MacLaren.

Resolution 1139, for the relief of Edwin Donald Ian Gaskell.

Resolution 1140, for the relief of Pierre Robidoux.

Resolution 1141, for the relief of Maria Patricia Shimkus Babin.

Resolution 1142, for the relief of Lianne Karin Margaret Neitzel Schuldt.

Resolution 1143, for the relief of Jean Eleanor White Fisch.

Resolution 1144, for the relief of Phillip Reginald Beck.

Resolution 1145, for the relief of Sophie Milberg Dlin.

Resolution 1146, for the relief of Gertrude Margerita Kaiser Hofmann Engel.

Resolution 1147, for the relief of Gladys Maxine Azulay Dooh.

Resolution 1148, for the relief of Joseph Michel Alphonse Gagnon.

Resolution 1149, for the relief of Donna Jean Yates Beeby.

Resolution 1150, for the relief of Ellen Gillon Adare Hughes Forster.

Resolution 1151, for the relief of Paula Rachel Couture Cyr Redele.

Resolution 1152, for the relief of Marie Françoise Thérèse Jacqueline Petrilli Abbott.

Resolution 1153, for the relief of Serge Desrochers.

Resolution 1154, for the relief of Justine Adelaide Stern Jedeikin.

Resolution 1155, for the relief of Monique Deneault Deneau.

Resolution 1156, for the relief of Jacques Coté.

Resolution 1157, for the relief of Raymond Norbert Chausse.

Resolution 1158, for the relief of Robert Jacques Armand Collard.

Resolution 1159, for the relief of Helen Juanita Greer Smith.

Resolution 1160, for the relief of Hazel Marie Dominey Walker.

Resolution 1161, for the relief of Joseph Markusic.

Resolution 1162, for the relief of Mary Hepburn Weigen, otherwise known as Mary Hepburn Weigensberg.

Resolution 1163 for the relief of John Julian Ignatius Viskelis.

Resolution 1164 for the relief of Suzanne Gibeau Paquette.

Resolution 1165, for the relief of Sharron Ann Beatteay McKee.

Resolution 1166, for the relief of Doris May McLaughlin Longmore Snyder.

Resolution 1167, for the relief of Jean Yves Michel de Brabant.

Resolution 1168, for the relief of Jules Joly.

Resolution 1169, for the relief of Abraham Rosenfield.

Resolution 1170, for the relief of Julianna Szkokan (Skokan) Vasi.

Resolution 1171, for the relief of Zvi Fallenbaum.

Resolution 1172, for the relief of Flora Jean Stewart Dalphy.

Resolution 1173, for the relief of Rinalda Maria Montauti Cicciu.

Resolution 1174, for the relief of Jaroslaw (Gerry) Poszywajlo, otherwise known as Jaroslaw (Gerry) Poszwaylo.

Resolution 1175, for the relief of Dorice (Doris) Alice Thibault Michel.

Resolution 1176, for the relief of Lucy Gloria Verrecchia Stanley.

Resolution 1177, for the relief of Claudette Cyr Johnson.

Resolution 1178, for the relief of Maria Lilian (Lilliane) Perusse Burnett.

Resolution 1179, for the relief of Richard Parker.

Resolution 1180, for the relief of Andre Barette.

Resolution 1181, for the relief of Willem Franken.

Resolution 1182, for the relief of Jean (James) Wilfred Kelly.

Resolution 1183, for the relief of Rosemary Graae (Gray) Schmidt O'Brady.

Resolution 1184, for the relief of George William Brown.

Resolution adopted, on division.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 7, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 6, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE GEORGES PHILIAS VANIER

GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA
TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, today so early in her centennial year, Canada pauses. She pauses in reverence, in respect, and in awe. For the mystery of death overshadows her, overshadows her people, overshadows all they do.

Death, no respector of persons, came Sunday, quietly, peacefully, with inexorable finality to her head of state, General, the Right Honourable Georges Philias Vanier, D.S.O., M.C. and Bar, C.D., her Governor General.

Divine Providence in His infinite wisdom called General Vanier to Himself. This man had faced death before many times on the battlefield; it held no terrors for him. His response yesterday, full of years, full of honours, full of integrity, full too of confidence in the mercy of the God he served, was the response of Christian resignation. He died at his post, the highest in the land, and his death, like his fruitful life, will be an inspiration to the highest and humblest of Canadians.

Who shall measure the virtue or the achievements of this man—lawyer, soldier, diplomat, Vice-Regent?

Military honours he had, from his Sovereign, from the France he loved, from the United States. They were the bare acknowledgment of an immense personal valour and of the grievous wounds he suffered as he fought with his beloved regiment, the Van Doos, in the First War. Wherever he went thereafter, he carried the scars and infirmities which those wounds inflicted, without flinching.

Academic awards in profusion emphasized the high cultivation of his mind, the nobility of his spirit, the great patriotism of his purpose.

In his diplomatic career, promotion meant only opportunity for broader, higher service to his country and to his people.

No one who was in this chamber that September day in 1959 will forget the delicate dignity with which he entered upon his career as the representative of Her Majesty. He spoke of Canada's attachment to the Crown which, he said, holds for the world a promise of peace—and he could speak with authority of peace, because he had known the savagery of war. He assessed the free association of the nations of the Commonwealth as a power for good in the world—and he could speak with authority about freedom, for he had seen power for evil which force and the oppression of nations had wrought.

On that day too, he proclaimed the mightiness of Canada's destiny. He saw it clearly. He lived it with his every breath.

Wherever he went in Canada—and there were few hamlets that he missed in these eight years—he spoke of this land and its peoples with whom he lived and served, to the children in the schools, to the youth in colleges and universities, and of the great prospects for them in their youthful enthusiasm.

He spoke too of the family, of its basic importance to the stability of the Canadian society, and he founded an Institute to promote this high purpose. Indeed, for the family, his personal life, and that of his gracious Consort who shared all his burdens through these years, was an inspiration in itself. His only daughter, a doctor of medicine, has been serving in one of the underdeveloped countries of the Commonwealth. One of his sons is a Trappist Monk. Another works with the underprivileged among the poor of Paris. Another is an artist, and the fourth serves in the Public Service of Canada.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, General Vanier was the first Canadian of French origin to be appointed Chief of State for Canada.

He discharged his duties with grace, dignity and competence. He was a lawyer, a soldier and a diplomat of great distinction. As the representative of Her Majesty, his devotion to the Crown was a source of inspiration and an example for all Canada and, indeed, for the Commonwealth itself. His efforts to develop and foster national unity will forever remain a legacy of patriotism.

In his New Year's Day address, he said: "Open the doors and windows of the provinces. Consider and try to understand the views of other Canadians who are on the other side of the wall in all parts of the country."

He also knew the power of silence. His personal and family life told his attachment to religion—to the life of the spirit.

Proud of his country, he was always extremely attached to the language, the customs, the laws and the religion of his ancestors. He was a magnificent example of a great Canadian.

[Text]

Historians will document General Vanier's life and works. The great and the humble, by the thousands, will recall the warming experiences of even brief associations with him. As the Senate now does, so too do all the people convey to Madame Vanier and the members of her family a deeply felt sympathy.

It seems appropriate, honourable senators, that having died at his post he should conclude his remarkable career by Lying in State here in the Senate where it began, before the Throne which he honoured, while the nation pays its formal and heartfelt tribute of respect and affection to one of her noblest sons. Let the noble language he used in this chamber when he assumed the office of Governor General of Canada, let it be spoken again as he leaves us:

> Each one of us, in his own way and place, however humble, must play his part towards the fulfilment of our national destiny. To realize how mighty this destiny will be, let us lift our eyes beyond the horizon of our time. In our march forward in material happiness, let us not neglect the spiritual threads in the weaving of our lives. If Canada is to attain the greatness worthy of it, each one of us must say "I ask only to serve."

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we have listened to a most eloquent and appropriate tribute to a very great man. My words are feeble, but I assure you they are deeply sincere.

The occasion of our meeting today is a sad one. It is sad not only for us in this Chamber but for every man, woman and child across the country. Canada and the Canadian people have lost, and are mourning the passing of a very great friend and certainly a most distinguished Canadian. Even though we knew that our beloved Governor General had been in poor health for some months and that his death might be expected at any time, his passing has been indeed a severe shock. As the Leader of the Government has said, it is a shock also to people throughout the breadth of the Commonwealth, of which General Vanier was a great admirer, and to people throughout the world to whom his name was well known.

In the past twenty-four hours we have read in the press and listened on television and radio to many eulogies declaring General Vanier a great and a good man. There is little more that can be said about one than that. He could be the ideal of any man who gives service to his people and to his country. He was distinguished in all walks of life. He was an outstanding lawyer, a brilliant soldier—with one of the best records of any Canadian soldier—he was a statesman, a diplomat, and above all he was the Governor General of Canada, the highest office in the gift of this country and in the gift of Her Majesty the Queen.

The men who knew General Vanier the best were the veterans of the First World War. He served with them. He endured their hardships. He loved them, and I am sure they all loved and admired him.

As Minister of Veterans Affairs, I had the opportunity of visiting the veterans' hospitals across Canada. I recall that General Vanier never entered a town or a city in which there was a veterans' hospital without visiting that hospital and if possible seeing every man there. I remember well how these men regarded him with affection, and how their faces would light up when they spoke of him.

If I may be pardoned a personal reference, honourable senators, I should like to say that I knew the late Governor General in the First World War because the 22nd Battalion from Quebec and the 26th Battalion from New Brunswick were two battalions that were very closely associated in the First World War. We were both in the 5th Brigade. The 22nd Battalion relieved the 26th Battalion in the front line trenches, and when their tour of duty was completed the 26th Battalion relieved them. Colonel Vanier, as he was then, was as well known by our men as he was by his own. As a matter of fact, he became very well known to every man in every unit in the Canadian Army. His was a great military record.

I remember also visiting him in Paris when he was our Minister there; I shall never forget the kindness and courtesy which he and Madame Vanier extended to me. I was with Mr. Bracken at the time, and during the two days we spent in Paris the General and Madame Vanier gave us every attention they could possibly give.

I remember reading in the Telegraph, one of the leading London newspapers, a story about General Vanier in which he was described as the gentleman of unruffled calm and imperturbable courtesy. That description fitted General Vanier very well.

As the honourable Leader of the Government has told us, his name is assured a place in history. He made an immense contribution to Canadian life, and I am sure he will receive the highest praise for his desire for unity in this country. He took every opportunity of knowing Canada. He knew that it was a country very rich in its natural resources and great in its people. But while he knew that Canada is a great country, he told us that it could only remain so as a great united country.

I recall the late Governor General's New Year's speech, when he warned us against friction. He called on Canadians to:

> Open the windows and the doors of the provinces.

He urged them to:

> Look over the walls and see what is on the other side. Let us know one another and that will lead to understanding.

He said that we owe it not only to ourselves but to the world to remain strong and united, that Canada can be an example of how diversity need not lead to conflict but, on the contrary, to richer and nobler living. He warned Canadians:

> We cannot run the risk of this great country falling into pieces.

The challenge is there for Canadians to accept or reject.

Governor General Vanier said nothing that all of us did not know before, but it was appropriate that as Canada's first citizen he put the challenge into words for all of us; and no one would doubt his sincerity.

The honourable Leader of the Government spoke about General Vanier's love for family and the continuing of family life throughout this country in the future under the Vanier Institute. I will say nothing in that regard.

Honourable senators, I have often thought that we are extremely selfish and inconsiderate in our demands on the time and energy of our high officials in public life. The late Governor General was an outstanding example of overwork. He was devoted to his duty; we all know that he gave the last ounce of his energy to what he thought should be done. In these times that is particularly difficult, with television and radio appearances, and countless public functions to attend, especially in the office of Governor General. This he did at great sacrifice to himself.

Honourable senators, I wish to join with Senator Connolly in expressing my admiration for Madame Vanier for the tremendous help she had been to her late husband. He was fortunate indeed that God had blessed him with a helpmate who was of such great assistance and who joined with him in her unselfish service to the people of Canada. She has suffered a grievous loss, and she is now enduring the deepest sorrow.

To Madame Vanier and to all the family, I join with the Leader of the Government in extending our most sincere sympathy.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, because of my very long acquaintance and friendship with the deceased Georges Vanier, I venture to say a word or two.

We were classmates in the same preparatory class at Loyola College, Montreal. The college Annual Review for the year 1901 shows that in listing the examination results of that year in the preparatory classes there were fourteen subjects to be competed for, and of these the prizewinners in thirteen were: first, Georges P. Vanier, and second, Charles G. Power. In the fourteenth subject, history, the prizewinner was Charles G. Power, the second being Georges P. Vanier.

Throughout the years we continued our acquaintance and our friendship. Probably because he was more insistent on his studies than I was he finished college with his B.A. degree in 1906. I carried on until 1907.

Throughout the years our paths have crossed frequently and always in sympathy and understanding and friendship, whether as a recipient of his magnificent hospitality in Europe and elsewhere, or working together, as happened fairly frequently in Canada in administrative or military duties. Ofttimes our views were far apart, but never do I remember even a semblance of a quarrel with this great man.

Many tributes will be paid to him. His great qualities and high character will be lauded, and rightly so. But what remains mostly in my memory is the recollection of a priceless gift, his of understanding and comprehending the views, the sentiments, the desires, and even the prejudices of other people, even of the most diverse and contrary natures. He was by nature studied, calm, and given to serious consideration, yet he managed apparently without effort to control elements in the army and in civilian life who were by nature gay, careless and debonair, all the while maintaining his dignity and equanimity. I think this gift of understanding was what really went the farthest in making him what he was, a great Canadian. His racial heritage, his bicultural education, his European experiences, made of him a truly great Canadian—one whose name will pass into history, for he was a good man in every sense of the word. He was a great man.

To members of his family, and to his widow Pauline, go the sympathy of an entire nation. Pauline Archer Vanier should get a share of the credit for her late husband's highly successful career. Like him, she is of Irish-French Canadian extraction; with him, she understood and appreciated the problems of his country. To her particularly I offer my deepest personal sympathy.

[Translation]

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, due to the absence of most of the honourable senators from Quebec on this side of the house, I feel that on a solemn occasion such as this it behooves me to express condolences to the members of the family of the great deceased in his mother tongue which he spoke impeccably while having full command of English. He was an example of perfect bilingualism.

The great Canadian, the great career soldier and the distingued diplomat who has just passed away at Rideau Hall was called upon to serve the State as Governor General. He was chosen to serve his country under the authority of the elected representatives of the people and since his appointment to the post of Governor General of Canada in 1959, he was a model of competence and loyalty. He loved his country passionately and never missed the opportunity of expressing his wish to see our country progress in order and harmony.

After five years at Rideau Hall, General Vanier was certainly entitled to and fully deserved the peace and quiet of retirement. However, as the Leader of the Government was saying last night in his address on television, General Vanier agreed to stay on, in spite of his age and ill state of health, at the request of the Prime Minister himself. We can say without any hesitation whatsoever that as Governor General of Canada, he was as in all previous offices, a perfect public servant, devoted to his country.

The knowledge I have gained of Canada has convinced me that to know each other is to love each other. General Vanier had made the preceding statement last year. As the Leader of the Government pointed out a while ago, His Excellency, in one of the many speeches he delivered to a great nation he loved dearly, said: Open your hearts. And referring to the provinces, he added: Open the doors wide and, if need be, tear down the walls which may have been erected in the past, and open your arms wide to receive Canadians from all provinces; learn to known them and you will learn to love them. This will enable us to attain national unity.

He never failed to place particular emphasis on national unity whenever he had the opportunity to do so.

He did not want a citizen of Canada to say that he was a citizen of one province in particular, but a citizen of Canada as a whole.

We all mourn sincerely the passing of our distinguished Governor General. To his wife, who always supported him admirably in all his endeavours and his public duties, and to all the members of his wonderful family, we wish to convey our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I learned yesterday at dusk that our country was in deep mourning. I tried to collect my thoughts and jot down a few notes but I was unable to do it. I will therefore give free rein to my heart.

Throughout his life the Governor General had as his motto: To serve. To serve his country, his family, the whole country through the families. He served first of all on the battlefield, during the first world war, and left part of himself there. He came back severely wounded physically but he had not lost his intelligence, much less his heart, his soul and his love for his country.

I saw him more than once carrying out his military duties as commander of the Quebec region, during the Second World War. At the time, I was honorary lieutenant colonel of the Lévis regiment. Now, what can an honorary colonel do for a regiment? In normal times, aside from providing some money, he does not do much. But in wartime the honorary colonel was the one who provided the liaison between Brigadier Vanier and the Lévis regiment, which had just been mobilized to fight in European battlefields. Every time I went to see the brigadier, he welcomed me and listened to my grievances with really extraordinary urbanity and warmth, answering: I can do this, or I can do that. He acted with great sympathy and magnanimity, always in a spirit of service to his country.

As ambassador, he also served his country. I met him in Paris on several visits. A while ago the Leader of the Opposition spoke about a trip he had made to Paris, and he recounted how he had been received by our then ambassador. I can tell you that I, a small town boy from Lévis, was also welcomed most graciously and with great hospitality. In addition, Mrs. Vanier helped her husband with such devotion and ability that we were deeply touched as we saw one of our ambassadors in such a remote country greet so cordially his fellow citizens, however humble.

Finally, he served his country as Governor General of Canada. During his term of office, he strove to convince the two great races in our country that it was much better to understand each other than to fight among ourselves.

Last year, he said in one of his speeches: "The experience I acquired in Canada has convinced me that to understand is to love each other." My colleague, the honourable Senator Choquette said practically the same thing.

Our Governor General who has departed this vale of tears—although his spirit lives in our hearts and souls—ardently supported mutual understanding particularly toward the end of his life. To that end, he thought, I shall do something to reach into the families because men are formed in the home; it is in the home that straightforward and clean minds are developed.

For this purpose, a few years ago, he organized the National Conference of the Family—that is when our lamented Governor General and his wife, that marvelous couple, founded the Institute that bears his name today, the Vanier Institute, the president of which is one of our greatest physicians, the internationally renowned Dr. Wilder Penfield.

In addition to the moral and intellectual qualities already mentioned, he had another —a great religious faith. Whenever I spoke to him, I had the impression of addressing someone who was always in contact with the Beyond. General Vanier lived his faith at every moment of his life.

Quebeckers remember the years he spent among them, either as colonel of the Van Doos or as brigadier during the Second World War. They wanted his name to remain alive among them always. The city of Quebec West, in the suburbs of Quebec, has been renamed Ville Vanier. Thus his name will always remain alive in the hearts of Quebeckers.

When during the funeral of a great former prime minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the coffin was lowered into the grave, Father John Burke said to the bearers: "Lower the coffin very slowly, for this earth has never received a greater man." And next Thursday at the Citadel in Quebec City, when the casket of that great departed will be lowered, I shall be able to repeat these same words to those who will lower him down in the grave: Go down slowly, because the Citadel of Quebec City has never received into its bosom such a deserving man.

To Madame Vanier, that great and dignified lady, his admirable consort, who has always supported him in every moment of his life, and to his children, I express my admiration and my deep and heartfelt sympathy.

When a king dies, it is customary to say: the King is dead, long live the King. The Crown representative passes away, and I say: our Viceroy is dead, long live the Viceroy.

[Text]

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I would request His Honour the Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the Senate, to send to Madame Vanier a copy of the proceedings of the Senate of this day as an expression of deep sympathy of the Senate for herself and for her family in their great loss.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday, March 9, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 9, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Capital Budget of Air Canada for the year ending December 31, 1967, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1967-330, dated February 23, 1967, approving same. (English Text).

Report of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 31 of the Railway Act, chapter 234, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada—A Report on Economic, Political, Educational Needs and Policies—Volume I, issued by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. (English text).

NATIONAL MUSEUMS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-57, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Museums of Canada.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates "A" and "C" laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, presented the following report:

The Standing Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates "A" and "C" laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator if the report will be published in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: There will be a motion to that effect.

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE PRINTED AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE AND MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In view of Senator Brooks' question, honourable senators, and with leave of the Senate, I move that the Report of the Standing Committee on Finance presented today, to which were referred the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates "A" and "C" for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, be printed as an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of report see Appendix, pp. 1588-90.)

DIVORCE

REPORT No. 1179 WITHDRAWN

Leave having been given to proceed with Order No. 4:

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, thank you for the privilege you have accorded me in having item No. 4 called first. As honourable senators are aware, the Special Joint Committee on Divorce meets this afternoon at 3.30, and I wish to speak to this matter before leaving for that committee.

Honourable senators will remember that last week when certain reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce were approved I withdrew one of the cases on the ground that we had been notified that the respondent in the case had died. I said that we would ask for a death certificate of the person before disposing of the matter finally.

I now have the certificate, and it seems to be in order. Therefore, with leave, I now move that Order No. 4, for consideration of the one thousand one hundred and seventy-ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Divorce be discharged, and that the report be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved the third reading of Bill C-274, to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, this is a comprehensive piece of legislation in the sense that it provides a much larger sum of money for the purpose of the Fund for Rural Economic Development. I congratulate Senator McDonald on his statement in introducing this measure, and on some of the remarks he made with regard to the need to expand general economic development, especially in the rural areas of the country where incomes are exceedingly low.

My main purpose in rising at this stage is to ask a question about a matter which troubles me. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), being a member of the Government, will be in a position to throw some light on the problem I wish to raise.

I think it is generally agreed that the Government is wise in all the various moves it has been making in the area of rural development and in improving agricultural welfare and production in this country. But there is an organization in Canada that has been operating for a long time in this field and I think it has done an outstanding job. I refer to the P.F.R.A.—the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act—an organization which has functioned now over some 30 years. While it is true that in the main this organization has been confined to the Prairies, nevertheless, over the years there has been a feeling that its activities should be broadened to include other parts of Canada. Perhaps as an alternative to that proposition, we have the present measure, the Rural Economic Development Fund, and we have ARDA. But I want to ask, what is the position of the P.F.R.A. today? Is it really a viable, functioning entity dealing with the field in which it has had wide experience over so many years?

I think it is common knowledge that there is a real contest going on among the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Forestry and Rural Development handling the functions of this measure, and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, as to where these particular functions, in the main, will lie. I am not in any way wishing to deprecate the good work that is being done by ARDA or that proposed under this present measure, but I do want to put in a word for P.F.R.A., on my own, as a member of the Senate, because I feel that it has done an outstanding job over the years, that it deserves the utmost amount of consideration at the present time, and given a chance it will perform an even more successful and useful role in the future than it has in the past.

Over a thirty-year period the P.F.R.A. administration has spent just over $300 million, approximately $100 million of which has been used for the South Saskatchewan River development. So that under this measure there is almost as much money appropriated in one stroke as the P.F.R.A. organization has spent over 30 years.

I am not putting that forward as criticism of what is being done here, but I think it raises the whole question as to what role P.F.R.A. is going to be allowed to play in the years ahead. I am sure that the Department of Forestry and Rural Development would just like to grab P.F.R.A. and take it under its wing. As a matter of fact, I think they once had it for seventeen days when Senator Hays was Minister of Agriculture and was away from Ottawa. It got away from him for seventeen days, but he returned and got it back, and I congratulate him on that. I hope the present Minister of Agriculture hangs onto it, as I am sure he wants to, and is able to have it perform in the future the function it has been performing so well in the past.

P.F.R.A. is just as well liked and respected in western Canada as any activity of the federal Government one might wish to mention. It is in as good standing in the public mind as is Air Canada, the Polymer Corporation, the National Research Council—you name it! It is an organization that has the support and respect of the people of western Canada for the kind of job it has done; and I hope it will be given the opportunity of expansion in the future, because I think it can still do a useful job.

I do not want to pretend to have any inside information on what is going on in the Government, because I do not and have never tried to make it my business to find out, even if that were possible. But it has seemed to me that the whole question of water development on the prairies is at a standstill, and it is impossible, at least at the present time, to obtain approval for particular water projects that are of utmost importance. I think that this whole question should be sorted out.

I know that the Government needs to have a general overall economic program, and has to have some co-ordination—and I am sure it is working to this end—but I do not want to see the P.F.R.A. downgraded in the general picture any more than it has been already.

I have in my hands some of the annual reports of P.F.R.A. Up until two or three years ago P.F.R.A. put out a very attractive and comprehensive annual report. The one for 1962-63 comprises some 70 pages, and it includes graphs, drawings, tables, and so on. The report of last year is down to some 19 pages; it is not much more than a series of mimeographed pages. If this sort of reduction goes on in respect of these reports, they will no longer be worthy of the name.

The ARDA catalogue of rural development is a very comprehensive and important document. There can be no doubt but that P.F.R.A., certainly so far as growth is concerned, is not being given the role it should expect.

P.F.R.A. for many years was the baby and the pride of the late Right Honourable J. G. Gardiner. He did a tremendous amount of work in connection with its development. It is a matter of exceedingly great importance on the Prairies. Because of the good work it has done and because of the fact that the late Right Honourable J. G. Gardiner and others pioneered this field and did so much in the development of it, I hope that this essentially Prairie institution will now be given a chance to grow and expand. I hope also that the wraps will be taken off the projects that are being considered, that they may be approved by the Government, and that P.F.R.A. will play a large part in future development.

As I read the programs of ARDA and the Rural Economic Development Fund—and Senator McDonald has already said this—I see that these programs are designed to improve the economic standard of those people who live in the relatively depressed rural areas of Canada. That, of course, is a very laudable object, and something that should be given, as I know it is, general support.

It seems to me that P.F.R.A. may have a somewhat different function to fulfil. In the past it has instituted programs of small water developments for the conservation of grass and so on. Its program has been one of general conservation. It could play an important role in helping to bring about a general increase in agricultural production on the Prairies, and I would like to see it given this kind of function.

Nothing is being done in the country today by any single industry that helps us more with our balance of payments than does the production of grain on the Prairies. This is a most valuable industry. It has been valuable to the country because it has been efficient and productive, and during the last few years its production has been beyond all expectations. I think that if an organization such as the P.F.R.A. were given the job of doing everything that can be done in the way of bringing more water to the land and making necessary information on production available to the farmers themselves—I could speak at length on this—there is every possibility that the production of wheat on the Prairies over the next ten or fifteen years could be increased by as much as 25 to 50 per cent. This would help towards a solution of the economic problems that exist there today. It would help in solving the problems of our balance of payments, and it would increase the wealth production of our country.

Honourable senators, I repeat, my concern is that P.F.R.A. shall have an adequate role to play. I am not in any way deprecating the good work being done by other organizations.

I might have waited until some future date to make this statement, but if in the meantime something happens to P.F.R.A. it may be too late. I think this is the time to speak as to the kind of role P.F.R.A. is to play. If the honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) could inform honourable senators that the P.F.R.A. is not only here to stay, but to stay in the Department of Agriculture and to play an expanding and important role in the future, I for one, as well as a great many people on the Prairies, would be very happy with that kind of assurance.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the questions raised by Senator Argue are very important and should be dealt with before this bill is passed. However, I understand that the honourable Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) has the adjournment on the next item and is anxious to proceed as soon as possible. I would therefore adjourn this debate, and tomorrow either Senator McDonald or I will deal with the points raised by Senator Argue.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), debate adjourned.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Friday, March 3, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hastings, for the second reading of Bill C-220, to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, first I wish to thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak now.

Before I make any reference to the bill, I have an unpleasant task to perform. I want to talk about the let-down we have been experiencing in transportation by the two railway companies and the inadequate taxi service to and from the station in Ottawa. I am sure all honourable senators will remember very well that when we approached this matter last year there was full understanding that we would have adequate transportation by the two railway companies. That was one thing we emphasized. Yet after a period of six months of waiting we now find ourselves in an extremely difficult situation. I think the kind of transportation service we are now receiving is a disgrace to the City of Ottawa. We are now the victims of a needless fight between taxi companies. Indeed, it has reached the point where the customer's money is not even accepted—they will not take your money unless you use a certain taxi line. I do not see why we should be punished in this way.

According to the inquiries I have made, this situation is going to last for a long time. Everybody is provoked about it; and there is a dispute with the police force, and a fight among taxi companies.

The railways bring from Montreal on the daily runs an average of a hundred passengers on every train—perhaps my figure is low. On many occasions I have seen from four to eight taxis leaving behind as many as 80 people of all ages, including women, children, salesmen, businessmen, and persons from all classes of society. There they are, with no transportation. You cannot even choose a taxi; it has to belong to a firm with a franchise. We are being victimized.

I do not know how long this will continue, but it has lasted far too long already. I believe some solution could be reached if there were a will and a desire to co-operate.

We talk a good deal about communications, about telephones and radios. I see no reason at all why when a train is 20 miles or so from the station the railway cannot notify its agent by wire that the train will be arriving at a certain hour so that the agent at Ottawa could notify the taxi stand in the building. It only means a telephone call. Then the taxi-stand could call his radio despatcher, and within a few minutes after the train arrived the public could be served by taxis, or if necessary more taxis could be provided, to serve the people better.

I think that this franchise business should be stopped until we have more adequate transportation facilities. There is not only the problem of getting a taxi from the station into the city, but it sometimes takes 20 minutes to get a taxi from this building to go to the station. Furthermore, it costs about as much to go from here to the station and back by taxi as to go by train from Ottawa to Montreal.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, our colleague Senator Hastings gave us last Friday a detailed review of the merits of Bill C-220 concerning the establishment of an Immigration Appeal Board.

The honourable senator deserves congratulations for a well-prepared presentation. I almost entirely agree with him. I may say that when Bill C-220 was introduced in the other place, it did not receive unanimous approval, but the proposed amendments have made it acceptable to the majority.

I think it unnecessary to reconsider those details. Nevertheless, I am somewhat surprised to note the eagerness with which we are asked to pass the bill. It seems to me that it would have been more proper to wait until the joint committee on immigration had completed its work.

[Text]

It is well known to us that sometimes measures passed in a hurry, without knowledge of all the facts, were not exactly what was intended and result in an unhappy situation. This could very well be the situation we are in now.

My short experience with immigration, and being a member of the joint committee set up to study the problems of immigration, has clearly shown me the necessity of such an appeal board at the proper time. I am of the opinion that, before too long further amendments will be needed to this legislation, but that can only be determined by its effectiveness in the future.

The White Paper which was presented by the minister on the proposed immigration reform is a step in the right direction. As any other human achievement, it is not all perfect, but the many briefs presented to the committee and recommendations made by immigrants have been an eye-opener, to me at least, and have pinpointed some of the difficulties.

We realize now more than ever that our country, this vast Canada, needs assistance; we need more people and more foreign capital, if we want to progress. In order to achieve this progress we must reform our immigration laws. We need more realistic measures and more flexible rules.

Education, we all agree, is necessary for an immigrant, but education should not always be the deciding factor. I am of the opinion that we have put too much emphasis on education. We have focussed our attention on the trade to fit the education, rather than education to fit the trade.

With all the school facilities which we have here in Canada, it is possible and easy for anyone to raise his education to fit his employment. The aptitude that immigrants have of learning one or two new languages after a few months here in Canada is concrete proof that they have much ability in learning and are prepared to make any sacrifice to improve their knowledge.

[Translation]

I have the impression that there is a lack of communication between the potential immigrant and the admission office. Several immigrants revealed to us the little knowledge they had of Canada before embarking upon the the long journey. They knew very little about our climate, methods of work, our Canadian way of life, the functions of our government and so on. All they knew of Canada was what they had read in tourist publications describing our recreational centres, parks and hotels rather than employment opportunities.

I think there is a great difference between the tourist who comes to visit Canada, unconcerned about expenses, and the immigrant who comes to Canada with a few savings to settle down and become a citizen.

We should inform more carefully the immigrant prior to his coming to Canada. Briefs submitted have shown some of the weaknesses in this respect. We must welcome the newcomer in a human and adequate manner, help him to settle in our country, assist him in the solution of the problems which he will have to face and guide him into the right path.

We must encourage benevolent organizations, who accomplish an important work by way of preparing, encouraging and guiding the immigrant towards a pleasant way of life, providing him with the necessary means to become a good citizen, in whom Canada will take pride.

In my region, the Atlantic Provinces, there are very few problems concerning immigration. Our chief difficulty is to prevent our citizens from leaving.

Some groups who submitted briefs told us that, in the province of Quebec and in areas populated by French-speaking Canadians, immigrants were sometimes treated with some coolness. I have often heard the following expression: Here comes another damned immigrant after my job. This, of course, is not very charitable, but I think the people who said it overlooked the benefits which may be derived from immigration.

On page 17, section 34 of the White Paper, we find the following statement:

> It is still true to say that immigration effectively begins at the Island of Montreal and goes West.

This is an unhappy situation, if we are going to build a strong Canada. I am confident that when the new, reformed Immigration Act is presented in the near future, a better distribution and placement of immigrants can be expected.

In closing, I wish to mention that the Joint Committee on Immigration is doing valuable work for the nation. There is no one more qualified to speak about immigration than the people who actually had to go through the machinery of immigration bureaucracy. Some of the experiences which some immigrants endured make rather sad stories and have led to many failures.

I compliment all members of the committee, especially Senator Langlois, the co-chairman, and I can assure honourable senators that, with the exception of myself, the Senate is well represented. The attendance of Senators is good and the interest is keen. I am confident that the results of these meetings will be beneficial to the nation as a whole. The work of the committee is very commendable.

[Text]

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Hastings). This legislation gives us addition to our immigration policy and something which has been needed for many years, namely, a proper and sound appeal board.

I had expected that the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons would have finished its study of the immigration problem and would have brought in its report by this time, and that I would be making an extensive report on immigration problems.

The present Bill C-220, is a small, though very essential part of the whole problem of immigration. It covers the security of the state. The problems affecting immigration are as diverse as humanity itself and as one member from the other place said there is created a mountain of correspondence in trying to handle all the various problems which arise.

There are three main factors which one might say come to the fore in our immigration policy. First we have a very large and mostly under-populated country. Canada is dotted with some very large modern urban centres, running from coast to coast but mainly centred along the southern fringe of our land. This imbalance of settlement of our country gives rise to two problems. Manufacturing industries are located mostly in the urban centres and require many skilled workers. On the other hand, the great forest areas, the mining industry, and rural occupations would be satisfied with semi-skilled or unskilled workers. We need many thousands more people from all nations of the world if we are to become a great nation like our neighbour to the south or Russia.

Second, we have rules to guide our Department of Immigration and they must be just rules for admission to this vast country.

Third, those rules must be flexible. They too often tend to become rigid or restrictive and in many cases are harmful to the prospective immigrant to this country. I refer to clause 8 of the bill, on which I will speak later.

The concern of many of the briefs presented to the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was the restrictive tone of the White Paper in that the emphasis was too heavily placed on need for skills and education among the immigrant group, which means that there is not enough thought given to the needs of the mining, forestry and rural occupations.

During the rush of immigration in the early years of the twentieth century we in this country saw how eager the newcomer was to make a place for himself and how he outstripped many of our young people whose families had been here a number of years. The immigrant seemed to have a new perspective and applied some of the ideas brought from his home country to what he saw as needs in this country; he thereby created new positions and new work, all of which went to help build our nation.

The purpose of this bill is to set up an appeal board of seven members, three of whom must be from the legal fraternity. It is hoped that these men will be imbued with the dignity of their office and, trained in humanitarianism, will show compassion for their fellowman. This board will have the same powers, rights and privileges that are vested in a Superior Court of Record. It shall give to either of the parties to the appeal the reasons for its disposition.

Honourable senators, I personally think we lay too much stress on deportation, whereas we should be stressing the need for these people and thinking of the assistance we could give them. In many cases they could become good citizens if we leaned a little the other way, rather than thinking only of the security of the nation.

As has been said by the sponsor of the bill, the appeal board under the present act is subject to the ruling of the minister. In other words, the minister has had the final say as to the findings of the board and consequently the board finds that it is merely a body for gathering evidence. The minister, on the other hand, is burdened with the necessity of passing judgment on almost all cases, especially if the immigrant under review can get in touch with politicians or organizations which can bring pressure on the minister. This has become an almost impossible situation for the minister, and he cannot give the matter his proper attention because of all other duties of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

This new appeal board, it is hoped, will take most of the burden of immigration appeals and decisions off the shoulders of the minister. Its decision will be final, except in matters of law when the minister may make an appeal from the board's decision to the Supreme Court.

In many of the briefs which were heard by the joint committee there was general approval for the setting up of this appeal board. The Anglican Church, the Ontario Welfare Council, the Negro Citizenship Association Incorporated, Jamaica Association of Montreal, the Trinidad and Tobago Association of Montreal, and the United Council of Human Rights were among some of those who strongly supported the new appeal board.

One of the proposals in the White Paper is to open the doors of entry into this country to a great many more people. In particular this open-door policy is being made available to certain nations whose citizens have been to a large extent restricted and, one might say, almost barred from this country.

As a result of this open-door policy, one can readily see there will be a great need to take the responsibility off the shoulders of the minister. On the other hand, the new appeal board will be kept very busy, if we are to bring in as many people as anticipated and which this country needs to fill its empty spaces.

Honourable senators, I am happy to say that I support Bill C-220. I am sure it will show good results as the years go by. There are one or two small items in the bill itself to which I said I would refer. For example, clause 8(1) of the bill, reads as follows:

> The board may, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, make rules not inconsistent with this act governing the activities of the board and the practice and procedure in relation to appeals to the board under this act.

It seems to me that this clause gives rather wide powers to the board that we are setting up—possibly a little too wide.

Subsection (2) says that "no rule made pursuant to subsection (1) has effect until it has been published in the Canada Gazette." Does this mean that these rules may be reviewed by the minister, or by whoever is to review them, before they are promulgated in the Canada Gazette?

I suppose these questions will be answered when the bill goes to committee. There is one other small point, however. The word "on" at the end of line 21 on page 2 of the bill does not seem to make much sense. It reads:

> ...but where the chairman is absent or unable to act or his office is vacant and on person—

An Hon. Senator: It should be "no" instead of "on".

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The committee will see that that is corrected.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Thank you.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable senator speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Hastings: Honourable senators, may I first of all express my appreciation for the kind words of honourable senators with respect to my efforts in sponsoring this bill in the Senate. Most of the comments made this afternoon are general, of course, with respect to immigration policy and those aspects that are under discussion by the Immigration Committee on the White Paper. As I said when I introduced this particular bill, these particular aspects we will have an opportunity to discuss in the light of the whole gambit of immigration. We will have, I hope, a complete revision of the Immigration Act as a result of the discussions and report of the Immigration Committee on the White Paper.

I just wish to deal with what the honourable Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) referred to as "undue haste". The bill was presented in the other house for first reading in July. It had very extensive discussion on second reading and in Committee of the Whole, and amendments introduced by the Opposition and the Government were debated and accepted. The result of that, I believe, is that we have a good bill, and after it has received discussion by a committee of this honourable chamber, I do not think it can be said that it is being pushed with any undue haste.

It is simply one of the four avenues or fronts on which the department is operating in order to continually improve and update immigration procedures. It is the one which in their opinion and in mine is needed as quickly as possible to amend our thinking with respect to deportation. Its effect will be that immigration appeals can be heard by an independent tribunal, and all those time-consuming decisions will be taken from the minister so that he will have much more time to devote to enunciating and developing an expansionist immigration policy for our country in the future.

Some of the procedures that are already under way within the department are advances which we are making behind the Iron Curtain. For the first time we are making attempts to open immigration offices in Belgrade and Warsaw. It is an important advance in that we are now going to be able to have offices behind the Iron Curtain to process immigration applications to Canada from that part of the world.

They have also adopted the method of the non-immigrant arrival and departure cards, a method which was recommended and discussed by the committee on the White Paper. They are continually updating the quality and quantity of our overseas staff, which answers Senator Fournier's criticism with respect to the immigrant being unaware of what he should anticipate on arrival in Canada. The information that is being given at those sources is continually being reviewed and updated in that regard.

With regard to the suggestion that the legislation is placing too much emphasis on deportation, I would like to refer just quickly to section 15 where we grant to this Immigration Appeal Board wide discretionary powers in the review of a deportation order. They shall review the deportation order as to its legal aspects, and, if they find it legal, they shall thereafter bring into play these discretionary powers—and for the benefit of a permanent resident in Canada, having regard to all the circumstances, there is no limit to determination of appeal.

I repeat, having regard to all the circumstances they may stay the order or quash the order. With regard to all others, if the execution order is legal they then bring into play the discretionary powers, and if in their view deportation would result in punishment for political activity or cause the person concerned to suffer unusual hardship, or simply on humanitarian grounds they may quash the order, stay the order or grant entry. I really do believe they are not emphasizing deportation but they are in fact emphasizing the humanitarian approach that must be exercised with respect to these important deportation problems which affect the very dignity of the individual and perhaps his destiny.

With regard to other matters raised by honourable senators, I believe that they would in due course receive much more valid and comprehensive answers from members of the department who will be quite prepared to appear before the committee and answer questions.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I wonder if I may ask the honourable senator a question. Was the recommendation made from the joint committee that offices be opened in Warsaw, Poland, and in Belgrade, Yugoslavia? We know that these are communist countries and that their ideas of government are very much opposed to ours. In fact it is their stated determination to destroy our form of government. I was wondering whether a recommendation came from that special joint committee to open offices in those countries.

Hon. Mr. Hastings: I do not believe the recommendation came from any committee in particular. It is the continued policy of the department to expand within those countries and to establish a beachhead to encourage the immigration to Canada of relatives of Canadian citizens still living there.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Would the fact of such a person being a communist be regarded as a ground for preventing his becoming a citizen of this country?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Speaking on behalf of the Government, I would think so. I would think that whatever investigation would be undertaken in respect of a citizen of a country behind the Iron Curtain would certainly include a very close scrutiny of that aspect of the problem.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Is there an office in Russia?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I cannot say. I will find out and let the honourable senator know.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hastings, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill C-268, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill has a number of virtues; it is not long and it is not very complicated. On the other hand it does deal with large sums of money. The purpose of the bill is to provide the extra funds needed to take care of the extra expenditures undertaken by the Government by reason of the guaranteed income supplement which was passed by this Parliament at an earlier date.

Honourable senators will recall that we had before us for consideration, dealing with these guaranteed income supplements, Bill C-251 to amend the Old Age Security Act. I am sure the details of that amending bill are fresh in your minds, and all I will say on this point is that the guaranteed income supplement provided in that legislation adds to the basic old age security rate of $75 an additional sum varying up to a maximum of $30 per month, commencing at age 70. The age of eligibility is gradually being reduced until 1970 when it will be down to 65. At that time the guaranteed income supplement will be paid to those who are at or above that age and who meet the tests provided for in the bill which we considered earlier.

Let me tell you what the bill does. It adds one per cent to the basic rate of sales tax, and that is why you have these amendments to the Excise Tax Act contained in this bill, thus increasing the rate from 8 per cent to 9 per cent. Secondly, it amends the Old Age Security Act in which provision was made that individuals subject to payment of income tax would have to pay as old age security tax, included in their tax payment, 4 per cent of their taxable income with a ceiling heretofore of $120 which now, while the 4 per cent rate is not changed, will be increased from $120 to $240. It is expected that the increase in this ceiling—that is the maximum amount which 4 per cent of an individual's taxable income will produce in the way of old age security tax or the $240—will produce about $135 million per year. This $135 million will be added to the old age security fund which is maintained within the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The one per cent increase in sales tax in a year is expected to produce about $155 million. That sum, or whatever more or less is produced from this source, will go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund without being labelled as part of the Old Age Security Fund. The shortfall in revenue by reason of this increase in payments provided by the guaranteed income supplement is estimated, as between now and 1970, to be at least of the order of $280 million per year.

Perhaps I should now tell you just how the sales tax increase is applied. Section 1 increases the general rate of sales tax from 8 to 9 per cent, and the other 3 per cent is an old age security tax collected from the same applications as those to which the sales tax is applied, and until the mini-budget, the combined sales tax, both the true sales tax rate and the 3 per cent provision for old age security in the Old Age Security Act, achieved a total of 11 per cent. By increasing the general rate of sales tax to 9 per cent on and after December 31, 1966, the rate of sales tax applicable to goods which are generally taxable under section 30 of the Excise Tax Act will be 12 per cent.

Then we have a category of goods which, under the law presently in force, were becoming progressively exempt. They mainly consisted of machinery and apparatus for use in manufacture or production. The list of all those items of machinery and apparatus subject to this progressive exemption will be found in Schedule V of the Excise Tax Act.

The effect of that progressive exemption, having regard to the provisions of this bill, is as follows: Prior to April 1, 1967, the general rate of sales tax on this type of goods will be 12 per cent, and from April 1, 1967, to March 31, 1968, it will be 6 per cent. And on and after March 31, 1968, there will be no sales tax on goods contained in Schedule V and coming generally under the heading of machinery and apparatus for manufacture and production.

With respect to building materials, until the mini-budget came in in December they were subject to the general rate of sales tax, a total of 11 per cent, being the 8 per cent sales tax and the 3 per cent additional sales tax for the Old Age Security Fund. This bill proposes that there be no increase in that rate of 11 per cent by reason of anything that is contained in this bill. Therefore, the sales tax, the combination of the general rate of sales tax and the Old Age Security tax, will remain on building materials at 11 per cent. It became necessary in those circumstances to add a schedule to the Excise Tax Act. It is called Schedule VI and it starts on page 2. There you have the list of all these building materials in Part I of Schedule VI, and you will find in Part II of Schedule VI heating equipment. So these are the various ways in which the additional moneys to take care of this guaranteed income supplement will be provided—through the increase in the sales tax and its application in varying amounts to varying types of goods, and the raising of the ceiling so far as the individual is concerned in relation to 4 per cent of his taxable income for purposes of old age security payments.

Now, honourable senators, I cannot let this opportunity go without expressing one or two views of my own. I believe that where the Government is embarking upon programs involving a substantial expenditure like the provision of money, as in this case, to take care of the guaranteed income supplement, in all these cases the taxpayer should have a look at what the money bill is, and in the most specific and direct way he can. As a matter of fact, I think I would support a federal sales tax at the retail level rather than at the manufacturers' level. That is how strongly I feel about it. If you go into a store and order some goods and direct that they be sent to your home along with the bill, it may have a salutary effect on you if the bill arrives with the goods and you see what you are paying for an exercise of personal generosity for yourself. And I think in the case of the Government, which has no magic source for income but only the people and their earnings—and I am not opposed to various programs where money is expended such as old age security and all these other features to ease the lot of the people—I think the people of Canada should be made aware in the most direct way possible of the cost. It may be that at some stage they will voice their own opinions, perhaps to the effect that we should not go too fast and in too large amounts all at once. At some stage the burden may reach an area where it is uneconomic for the moment. This is a personal view.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Obviously!

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, although I would say this, that it is a shared view at this time and not the situation of some years ago when I was the only one in the Senate who stated such a view. But now others are coming around to that point of view today—that the people who spend the money are the ones who should tax for the money. I still assert that, and I think the provinces are coming more into that area of thought, because you get more serious, deliberate and concerned approaches to the problems of expenditures if you keep in mind what the direct cost is going to be, and the extent of that cost, and the taxpayers of necessity get greater consideration.

That opinion was an "extra" and not by way of explanation of the bill. So, if you disagree with the opinion, do not disagree with the bill because I said that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is the opinion of a great many people and organizations.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Just for the purpose of clarification, I wonder if the honourable senator would explain one matter again. With regard to the $135 million tax revenue which will be produced by increasing the ceiling to $240, did you say that goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund or the Old Age Security Fund?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I said it goes into the Old Age Security Fund, which is contained in the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Is the increase in sales tax of $155 million dealt with differently in the accounting department?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Would you please explain again the reason for dealing with the matter in that method?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: As a matter of fact, I did not give the reason at the time because I thought I might be asked a question. As the minister explained it, very simply the reason was that the level of the Old Age Security Fund in the Consolidated Revenue Fund is such that when you add $135 million to it you may have enough money to meet the additional demands by reason of the guaranteed income supplement, but it would disturb his cash flow in and cash flow out. Therefore, he has decided to increase the sales tax in this fashion so as not to disturb the economic situation as far as cash inflow and cash outflow are concerned.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: But the supplementary payments are not going to come out of the Old Age Security Fund, are they?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: As a matter of fact, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Your answer implied they are. I do not think they are.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Some part of them may, to the extent the fund is increased with that idea in mind—that is up to $135 million—and the balance is from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I have the very clear impression the other way, but we can learn about that in committee.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable sponsor of the bill tell us whether he favours doing away with the manufacturers' sales tax and putting it on the retail price? Would he then transfer the revenue from the federal to the provincial governments?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend is asking me to make pronouncements or give an opinion I have no authority to make or give, and therefore it would be purely hypothetical. I learned a long time ago not to get too far out on that kind of a limb.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Since we propose to sit tomorrow, would it be more satisfactory to the Senate to sit earlier than 3 o'clock? If so, I would have to move that by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Senators: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We have committees sitting tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Is it the intention to sit in the morning and the afternoon as well, or to have just one sitting?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It will depend a good deal on the work done in the committees.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: There is only one committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There may be two.

Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that we adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. After we see what progress we make in the morning we can decide whether there is need to sit in the afternoon and, if so, at what time.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1577.)

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE
PRESENTED BY HON. MR. LEONARD

Thursday, March 9th, 1967.

The Standing Committee on Finance to which was referred the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates "A" and "C" for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, has in obedience to the orders of reference of March 24, 1966, June 27, 1966, and November 17, 1966, respectively, examined the said Estimates and Supplementary Estimates and now reports as follows:

1. Your committee held seventeen meetings during this session of which ten were devoted to the consideration of these Estimates and, in all, some twenty-one witnesses appeared before the committee.

2. The committee followed the same procedure as in previous years of considering the Estimates in general, rather than embarking upon a detailed study of departments. The desirability of this form of procedure is strengthened by the new rules of the House of Commons. That chamber now refers the Estimates by department to its various Committees. It would be wasteful duplication for the Senate to follow the same procedure. However, the general study of the Estimates by your committee is supplemented by an examination of particular votes in those departments where committee members so desire, and during the current fiscal year, such investigations were made with respect to the National Research Council, the Atlantic Development Board and The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

3. The Main and Supplementary Estimates (A), (B), (C), (D) and (E) provided for total expenditures of $8,558,185,901 in the fiscal year 1966-67 of which $3,375,241,967 were statutory obligations and the balance of $5,182,943,934 required to be voted by Parliament. The Estimates also provided for loans and investments to be made amounting to $585,205,400. It is expected, however, that there will be further Supplementary Estimates and therefore, as has been customary in past reports of the committee, it is necessary to estimate the expenses for the current year in order to make a comparison with the total actual expenses of previous years. It has also been customary in such reports to exclude the payments out of the Old Age Security Fund because they have been considered to be a somewhat different character from the other expenditures.

For the purpose of this report, however, a table has been prepared (attached as Appendix "A") setting out government expenditures for the past 13 years, including all categories, namely those that are statutory, those that require parliamentary approval, and those under the Old Age Security legislation, but not including loans and investments. This table then shows the dollar amount of increase from year to year, and also the percentage increase over the preceding year.

4. The increase in the current year of 1966-67 over last year is estimated to be $949,000,000 or 10.9%. This is both the greatest dollar increase and also the highest percentage increase in more than 15 years. To the extent that the increase in government expenditures does not outrun the rate of growth of the economy as a whole, such increases can be absorbed without too great difficulty. Therefore, in its previous Reports your committee has examined federal Government expenditures as a percentage of the Gross National Production. For the calendar year ending December 31st, 1966, it is estimated that Canada's Gross National Production increased between 10% and 11% over 1965. The increase in the federal Government expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1967, is at a slightly higher percentage level than is the Gross National Product. To avoid higher taxes or more inflation it is desirable that the rate of increase of federal expenditures should moderate.

5. Your committee has maintained a continuing interest in the implementation of the Glassco Commission recommendations as to the form and text of the Estimates and on this matter we heard evidence from Dr. George Davidson, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, and Mr. Maxwell Henderson the Auditor General of Canada. The number of votes in the Estimates is now 243 as compared with 495 in the Estimates of 1962-63, a 50% reduction. As a consequence, the average amount per vote is very much larger than previously and there is less information of the details of expenditures in the Estimates. The Auditor General expressed his concern that in this process some of the parliamentary control over spending was being eroded. Undoubtedly the theme of the Glassco Report is to throw a much greater degree of managerial responsibility upon departmental executives than in the past, and this in turn calls for increased supervision by the Treasury Board. The Auditor General's warning should be heeded and it is to be hoped that the new procedures of the House of Commons will prevent or minimize the danger of such erosion by the greater attention that now is being given by their committees to the individual departments and in turn the Senate's responsibility would seem to require that each year it should continue the practice of having the Secretary of the Treasury Board and the Auditor General appear before the Finance Committee.

6. In past years it has been a matter of great concern to all members of the Senate that Interim Supply bills were sent to the Senate so close to the deadline when the money was required to meet salaries and other essential expenditures that this chamber had insufficient time for adequate consideration of them. The practice of referring the Estimates to the Finance Committee overcomes this objection as there is now a continuing forum for consideration of all estimates throughout the year.

7. However, an unusual occurrence took place during the current fiscal year when Appropriation Act No. 7, 1966, was before Parliament. The previous appropriation acts had furnished the government with sufficient funds for its expenses up to November 1st, 1966 and the new act was to provide further Interim Supply. There was a prolonged debate in the House of Commons and when the deadline date came for the payment of the civil servants' salaries due in mid-November, the Treasury Board on November 9th transferred $2,160,000 from vote 15 of the Finance Department, which is a contingency item vote, to those departments which did not have sufficient funds to meet their salary requirements. Your committee heard evidence on this matter from the Minister of National Revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury Board and the Auditor General and without entering into any dispute as to whether the Government or the Opposition were to blame, your committee believes that such use of Vote 15 should be avoided.

8. The affairs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation came under the scrutiny of the committee with particular reference to a program called "Sunday", about which members of the Senate had received many complaints. The committee had before it Mr. J. Alphonse Ouimet, President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and he commented that the particular program which provoked the inquiry was a mistake. Your committee believes that to avoid in the future such a mistake, which must have outraged a large percentage of viewers throughout Canada, there should be a stronger chain of supervising authority in the C.B.C., to insure that the programs do not offend against the standards of decency of the great majority of Canadians.

9. Your committee considered also the work of the Atlantic Development Board and had as its chief witness, Dr. E. P. Weeks, the Executive Director of the Board. His report was favourably received and the committee considers that the board is developing sound long-term plans to increase employment and production in the Atlantic region.

10. In its Third Annual Review at page 178, the Economic Council of Canada recommended that Parliament might consider the setting up of a "Standing Committee on Economic Affairs" of the House of Commons and the Senate, one of whose major purposes would be the examination of certain important documents which the Economic Council intends to produce annually, and the issues arising out of them. This is a recommendation which appears to your committee to have a great deal of merit and while it would not dispense with the study by the Finance Committee of the Government's Estimates, it would be a valuable adjunct for the consideration of the economic effect of such expenditures. The Economic Council points out that such a committee should have a small permanent staff of high quality. This indeed would be required and in addition such a staff could be of assistance to the Finance Committee because of the close relationship that should exist between government expenditures and government economic policies.

11. The Main Estimates contain an item, page 547, Vote L 30 to provide $110,000,000 for the purchase of securities issued by the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, (commonly called EXPO 67) and Supplementary Estimates (E) provided an additional $21,000,000 for the same purpose. Your committee examined Mr. Robert F. Shaw, Deputy Commissioner General of the Corporation, and G. D. Rediker, its Director of Finance and Administration. These officials expect that its affairs will end up with a deficit as has been the history of all world fairs, but it is as yet too early to estimate the amount of such deficit. The salvage values of a number of costly assets are as yet unknown. However, advance sale of tickets has outstripped expectations, indicating that the Exposition will have a greater attendance than anticipated. Your committee was favourably impressed by the Deputy Commissioner General's evidence and expressed to him their hope that the Exposition would be a great success and that its results would be of substantial benefit to Canada.

12. Your committee considered other matters which need not be particularly mentioned in this report. It is desirable however to acknowledge the valued assistance and cooperation of the Secretary of the Treasury Board and of the Auditor General, two outstanding officials in the Public Service. Each in his own sphere carries a major responsibility for the due expenditure of public funds and in the opinion of the Committee they have been efficient and zealous in their duties.

All which is respectfully submitted.

T. D'Arcy Leonard
Chairman

Appendix "A"

Table of Federal Government Expenditures showing Increases over preceding years and percentage increase

Fiscal Year ending March 31st	Expenditures including Old Age Security Fund (in millions)	Increase Over Preceding Year (in millions)	Percentage Increase of Expenditures over preceding year
1955	$4628
1956	4799	$171	3.7
1957	5228	429	8.9
1958	5561	333	6.3
1959	5923	362	6.5
1960	6278	355	5.9
1961	6550	272	4.3
1962	7146	596	8.3
1963	7305	159	2.2
1964	7700	395	5.4
1965	8001	301	3.9
1966	8662	661	8.2
1967	9611	949	10.9

THE SENATE

Friday, March 10, 1967

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, March 8, 1967, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-252, to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

STATUTORY SALARIES REVISION BILL, 1967

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-266, to provide for the revision of certain salaries fixed by statute, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 14, at 8 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the Government Leader if he could indicate the business we might have to deal with when we return next Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, for consideration on Tuesday evening we shall have Bill S-57, dealing with national museums which was introduced in this chamber yesterday. Debate on the bill with respect to federal-provincial fiscal arrangements has not yet been completed in the other place, but conceivably could be today. It will likely be available to us either on Tuesday or Wednesday, at the latest.

Consideration of the Bank of Canada Act was commenced yesterday in the other place, but due to a technicality—the delay in the translation of some of the evidence—it could not be proceeded with. It may very well be available to us.

My general understanding is that from now on there is going to be a reasonably steady flow of legislation. There will be appropriation bills for the new fiscal year. Interim supply will be required before the end of the month. This means that the Main Estimates for the new fiscal year will have to be tabled and referred to the Finance Committee, even before the end of this session. At the moment I am not in a position to say when the Bank Act will come to us, but I predict with some assurance that it will not reach us by Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald for the third reading of Bill C-274, to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak at any length on the point raised yesterday by Senator Argue in connection with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. Senator Argue may very well be right in feeling that lately in the legislative machine the P.F.R.A. has not been particularly prominent, but I think that can be explained by the fact that P.F.R.A. has been a going concern for a long time. We all realize the great contribution it has made to the agricultural community in western Canada. In recent times more emphasis has been placed on legislation designed to affect the agricultural community in other parts of the country.

On behalf of the Government, I say to Senator Argue and to all honourable senators that P.F.R.A. is in no danger whatever of being abolished or downgraded. As a matter of fact, it would not be inappropriate for me to say that a major study is now under way in connection with the conservation and development of water resources in all parts of the country, particularly in western Canada, and the P.F.R.A. organization has an extremely vital role to play in the development of policy and in its implementation.

I hope that this assurance will allay any fears that Senator Argue or other senators have in respect to the future of P.F.R.A.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I shall not delay the passage of this bill, but I do have a few remarks to make regarding it.

I refer first of all to the cavalier attitude that parliamentarians now seem to have with respect to the voting of hundreds of millions of dollars for projects about which they know very little. I supported the original bill passed last July to establish a fund of $50 million for the economic and social development of certain rural undeveloped areas. Standing by itself I consider $50 million to be quite a large sum of money. There is also the fact that the intention then was and, agreements have now been made, to implement it, that the provinces would pay part of the costs incurred under this act. Consequently, it appears from figures I have seen in Hansard that the original $50 million has been almost doubled in terms of the final expenditure on the rural developments that are now taking place.

Honourable senators are aware that there are three main projects to be carried out under the terms of this bill. Three areas have been selected for development—one in northern New Brunswick, one in northeastern Quebec, and another in Manitoba. The areas selected in Manitoba for development within the provisions of this bill is what is known as the Interlake region.

Perhaps my chief reason for speaking on this bill is that I was born and brought up in the northeasterly part of the Interlake area, which might be thought to be one of the more inhospitable parts of the country. I know almost every square mile of it. I have travelled it frequently, sometimes in political endeavours, sometimes attending courts, and more often on hunting and fishing expeditions, and so on. I have visited hundreds of farm homes in the area. Consequently, it came as somewhat of a surprise to me when the sponsor of the bill, the honourable Senator McDonald, referred to it as an underprivileged area, I presume having too many underprivileged people in it. He also called it an undeveloped area.

As I understand it, millions of dollars have been or will be spent in this area under the provisions of this bill, and also large additional expenditures are being added by the Government of Manitoba.

Honourable senators, I would like to present a picture of this Interlake area in my province that is quite different from that presented by the sponsor.

It contains at least ten of the finest little towns and villages in Manitoba. I do not think there is a home in that region that has not had a telephone for the past 20 to 40 years. I exclude from my remarks the Metis or the Indian population, there being some Indian reservations in this area. I do not believe there is a home in this area that has been without hydro power for from 15 to 40 years. There has certainly been complete electric power service for the past 10 years.

The Honourable Mr. Garson, a former Minister of Justice, lived and worked for part of his lifetime in the town of Ashern, which is about 160 miles northwest of Winnipeg. This is one of the best small towns in Manitoba, with splendid homes, fine schools, and excellent roads throughout the whole community. That is only one of them. One of the other good towns in the area is Gimli, which was first settled in 1875 by people from Iceland. Having resided there for 92 years, they have built up what I consider to be one of the finest and most prosperous rural communities in Western Canada. Indeed, it was announced only a week or so ago that the House of Seagram has begun the establishment of a distillery north of Gimli, at a cost of many millions of dollars. I am told that the main reason for establishing a distillery in that area is the purity and abundance of the water at small cost. The distillery will need about five million gallons of water a day, which will be obtained from artesian wells drilled to a depth of approximately 50 to 100 feet.

There is perhaps a better and more available water supply in the whole of the Interlake area than in any part of Canada. I recall that when I was a small boy my father had the first artesian well drilled in the community of Riverton, where I come from and which I want to say is one of the fine towns in Manitoba. This well was drilled in 1909 or 1910 and he got water at a depth of 46 feet, with a flow of approximately five or ten barrels a minute. That well is still flowing. In that little community there are hundreds of similar wells, with the purest water in the world. I refer to this new development north of Gimli because it is a very important development in the area. But there are others. These people have been referred to as underprivileged people living in an underdeveloped area. I know better. I do not agree with that description of the area at all. It has produced as many doctors, lawyers, scientists, educationists—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And senators.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: —as any similar area of rural Canada.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Not very many Liberals.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There was a time when the people there elected too many Liberal members of Parliament, but they seemed to change that course some years ago.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You seem to be describing Nova Scotia too.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I say very sincerely that the Interlake area is being casually referred to around the parliamentary halls as an underprivileged area, and this has shocked me.

Recently I read a report by some social service workers in regard to cases in that area, making a splendid case, of course, for the spending of money. I read all the cases referred to in the report. They were supposed to be underprivileged people and they were, but why were they underprivileged? A large proportion of their problems resulted from accident, illness, or from that proverbial condition, laziness. But there are people like that in all parts of the world, people who could not make a living no matter what kind of farm they were on.

The real problem of the Interlake area, just like that of any other, is that too many people are settled on stony land, alkaline soil, swampy land, and scrub bush land that never should have been settled. I maintain that instead of trying to develop those areas into farm lands—which simply cannot be done on a quarter section or a section covered with stones—we should help those people to relocate. We should take them off the swampy lands, the scrub brushland, the stony land and other unfit areas.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What percentage of that land falls into that category?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I would say 30 to 40 per cent of the land, perhaps more. There are other areas in Canada which are very similar.

Honourable senators, before concluding these remarks, I might mention to my friend Senator Everett, who is in the automobile business, that if one goes to a picnic or a public function in any of the large towns, such as Lundar, Gimli or Riverton, one will find hundreds of automobiles, including a fair share of Lincolns and Cadillacs.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Are they from Winnipeg?

An Hon. Senator: You can always buy an old one.

Hon. Mr. Argue: You can buy an old Cadillac for $100.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I was referring to new Cadillacs. I would like to say to my honourable friend Senator McDonald, who sponsored this measure, that I have frequently travelled by train on the C.N.R. route from Saskatoon to Edmonton and back. As you leave Saskatoon—and Senator Aseltine knows this is true—for the first 30 or 40 miles you will see wonderful farms and fine homes. If you are there in the spring you will see the crop that is just coming up, and in August you will see the heavy crops that that land produces.

Then, all of a sudden, the train comes into an entirely different area and you say to yourself, "What has happened?" Why? Because there are just very small houses; there are hardly any outbuildings, and those that are there are mostly torn down. There are only stray cattle here and there. Then you look at the land itself and you wonder what has happened to it. You now see that it is alkaline soil or stony land for probably 10 or 15 miles. It is land that should not have been settled for farming. But then again the scene soon returns to one of green fields, fine homes and evidence of prosperity.

The same thing will happen again many times on that one route between Saskatoon and Edmonton—and Senator Aseltine nods approval—because there are still people on those lands, lands that should never have been cultivated for farming purposes. They should have been used for grazing. Even at that they are not much good because they do not grow anything. You cannot grow anything on alkalized soil. That is why I agreed with Senator Argue's remarks yesterday. Bringing water to those lands is one great problem, but even water cannot do much for that kind of land.

The fact is that tens of thousands of people once settled on lands which should never have been settled on in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and elsewhere. Consequently, to my mind the problem is not one of trying to develop alkali, stony or swampy areas, but it is one of relocating these people in other areas.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: That is exactly what this bill will do.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It does not take $300 million to relocate the people who live on the bad lands in those areas. I notice in Senator McDonald's speech in Hansard for March 2, at the bottom of page 1552, that he speaks of the New Brunswick scheme. He says they have committed themselves to an expenditure of some $90 million. How many people are there in that area? One hundred and six thousand people. I will admit from evidence that I have heard that the New Brunswick area is a very, very unfortunate one. It probably needs a complete relocation of people—into other parts of New Brunswick, of course. For instance, into Senator Brooks' area.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I would like to say that New Brunswick is not nearly as bad as that part of Manitoba which the honourable senator has just described.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Those people should be moved where Senator Brooks lives, and I must say that that is one of the "Gardens of Eden" of Canada. At any rate, I just wanted to make these remarks because I do think we are talking about sums of money that are far beyond the requirements of the situation, at least as I know it in my own province of Manitoba. I want to repeat again that I think the time has come when we in this house should take a much closer look at these spending bills which provide for such fantastic expenditures without our really knowing what the money is to be spent for and whether or not it is being applied to economic use.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, my remarks will be very brief, but in view of the remarks of Senator Thorvaldson I think the record should be set straight.

In the first place, the money we are talking about in this legislation today is entirely a federal expenditure. The provinces make no contribution under this legislation. In dealing with the Interlake region in the Province of Manitoba I see from the record that I did use the word "underprivileged," which perhaps was a very poor selection in referring to people. But in the Interlake region of Manitoba it was the Premier of Manitoba and his government who decided that this was an area of Canada which should receive expenditures under this act and under the ARDA program—expenditures totalling between $65 million and $70 million.

This was the decision of the Government of Manitoba, not the decision of the Government of Canada. But then, through negotiations with the Government of Canada, arrangements were made for some $25 million to be spent under this program, and the difference between the $25 million and the $65 million or $70 million would be under shared-cost programs under ARDA or Bill C-152 that we passed last July.

Now, I am well aware that there are identical areas, or almost identical, in every province of Canada, not just in New Brunswick, Quebec and Manitoba. But negotiations are going on now between the federal Government and every other province in Canada to conduct similar programs in each and every province. The $300 million will not be spent solely on the two areas in New Brunswick, the one area in Quebec and the one area in Manitoba. The $300 million will be spent on programs in every province. It just so happens that the only agreements that have been signed to date are those with the three provinces I have mentioned. However, I expect that there will be agreements signed in the immediate future with every other province.

I agree wholeheartedly with the senator when he says there are parts of the Interlake region which perhaps should never have been settled at all. This is true in my province, and I think it is true of given areas in most provinces of Canada. This program makes provision to relocate people; this can be done under the legislation before us. Those people who have been established on non-productive land—land which the expenditure of public funds will make little if any more productive—can under this program be relocated in other parts of their province or elsewhere in Canada.

Part of the area in the Interlake region that could be classified as stony or alkali or as having too much bush will be turned into community pastures. I think honourable senators, especially those from the west, are well aware of the contribution that community pastures have made to the cattle industry in western Canada. I suggest that the carrying capacity of this land in the Interlake region when put into community pastures will be doubled or even tripled and will give the Province of Manitoba the opportunity to increase its cattle population accordingly.

The senator then referred to the facilities available in this Interlake region. I think he forgot one of the best ones, and that is that it is the best goose hunting country in Canada. Any honourable senator who wants a good goose hunt ought to go into this Interlake region.

I do not think it is necessary for me to say any more, other than I think we will be back here asking for several millions of dollars in the future, if we are going to carry out the programs people had in mind when this legislation was first thought of. Surely in a nation like Canada, with the tremendous wealth at our disposal, we are not content to see people go on forever living in depressed areas when we can either move them out of those areas, increase their level of education, or develop the undeveloped resources in those areas to provide a better standard of living. Taking the area of New Brunswick as mentioned, I am not convinced that we must relocate the 106,000 people now living there. I am confident that if the resources of that area were developed it would support not only that number of people, but many, many more.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They have there some of the finest mineral prospects to be found anywhere in Canada.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I agree. It is my hope that some of these natural resources can be developed under this act. By doing this we will make it not only possible for the present inhabitants to remain there, but we will encourage other people to settle in the area. This is true of the Interlake area also. The programs established under this act will help to provide a better standard of living not only for the people who are already settled there but for people who go there in the future. If we set up our programs in such a fashion, they will not fail. If, however, we cannot do that we will have failed in what we are setting out to do. The purpose of this bill is to improve those areas so that they will provide a reasonable standard of living for the people living there. It is far better to do this than to perpetuate various forms of public assistance. If this program is brought to its ultimate conclusion, I am confident that the people there will play an important part in developing other underdeveloped areas as well.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Will the honourable senator permit me a question? He mentioned that the provinces would take the responsibility of selecting the areas. I would, however, point out that the federal Government is paying out hundreds of millions of dollars under this program. Will it have officials go into those areas to satisfy themselves that the money should be spent there? I could make a speech along the lines of that just made by my good friend Senator Thorvaldson. I am aware that money is being wasted as far as this program is concerned, and I would hope that the federal Government will make a very close inspection before spending hundreds of millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Once an area is selected, representatives of the federal Government go in and inspect it. Then it becomes a joint effort to decide what the program should be in the area and what money should be spent.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: May I ask a question of honourable Senator Thorvaldson? Does he know a place called Arborg?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Would that be in the area called Interlake?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: We are considering building an elevator there because statistics show us that there is more grain grown in that area than in any other place where we are located.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: There are two or three elevators there now, and I have no doubt you are completely justified in building another there because it is one of the finest agricultural areas in the Province of Manitoba. The town of Arborg is in the geographical heart of the Interlake area.

Motion agreed to and bill read a third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden for the second reading of Bill C-268, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, we have had an expert and lucid explanation of Bill C-268, and I would add, in my opinion, a rather more frank explanation than was given by the minister in the other place. Senator Hayden said all that could be said about the bill from the official point of view. However, I think he has omitted some things which should be brought to the attention of honourable senators from another point of view.

He said that the bill has many virtues. I agree with him, particularly in its stated purpose which is to provide the necessary revenues to implement the recommendations of this chamber when we endorsed the report of the Senate Special Committee on Aging that there should be a guaranteed income at the rate of $105 a month for all our senior citizens over the age of 65. That was our recommendation, but in the resulting act it was first applied to senior citizens at the age of 70, which age is being reduced until now it applies to those who have reached age 68. As Senator Hayden told us, the bill provides for an additional $30 a month for those eligible under the Old Age Security Act.

As I have said, Senator Hayden told us that the bill had virtues, but I think I should add that in my view it also has some vices. The main one is that the recommendation of the Senate and the demand of the old age pensioners appears to have been used in this particular case to tax Canadians far more than necessary to meet the requirements of the Old Age Security Fund from which these payments are to be made.

We were told that the bill before us amends two different Acts of Parliament which are quite distinct, and to me there appears to be no reason for linking these amendments in one bill except to disguise the fact that the old age pensioners and this chamber are being used for raising income tax revenues not only beyond the amount that will be paid out by the fund, but to a sum that is twice that required to meet the total cost to the Treasury if we take the estimate of our own committee as to the cost of this income supplement rather than the estimates put before us by the Government.

Senator Hayden pointed out that these revenues are to be raised by amendments to these two acts. If we take the first year, for example, we find an increase in one year of $135 million as a result of the amendment raising the ceiling of the old age security tax. Then we find there will be another $155 million from the one per cent addition to the sales tax. My basic objection to the bill is that only the $135 million raised from the old age security tax is going into the old age security fund, that being the total amount required to implement the old age guaranteed supplement from the Old Age Security Fund. The $155 million, I submit, is no more than a general increase in taxation disguised, as I have said, as though it were a necessary consequence of the income tax supplement recommended by the Senate.

I fully agree with Senator Hayden that it is a sound principle that any legislation demanded by or on behalf of any section of the public has to be paid for by added taxes, and that it is in the public interest that the public be made fully aware of the cost before the demand is met. But that is certainly not the case, if I read the figures correctly, in this proposed legislation.

What evidence is there to support this statement? First of all, of course, is the fact acknowledged by Senator Hayden that only the $135 million is going to be used directly for the purposes of the bill. Second, the evidence is clear that there was no immediate need for this legislation—and in a moment I shall indicate what I think the reason for it was—but the Government rushed into this legislation saying, "We have to have this right away," even though the Old Age Security Fund is in balance, and would remain in balance for at least two years, until the middle of 1969, if no additional revenues were put into it.

Perhaps at this point I should refer to the source of some figures I shall be quoting.

Honourable senators might wish to follow them because they are rather complicated. They appear in what is headed, "Table 2. Estimated Position of Old Age Security Fund, 1965-66 to 1971-72 ($ millions)." This table was presented on December 19 last by the Minister of Finance when he was presenting his mini-budget, and it appears at page 11335 of the House of Commons Hansard of that date, if I may make that reference.

I would suggest that it might be useful were this table, with leave, made part of the record of today's proceedings.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows.)

TABLE 2

ESTIMATED POSITION OF O.A.S. FUND, 1965-66 TO 1971-72
($ millions)

Minimum Eligible Age	Fiscal Year	O.A.S. Pension Payments	Revenue from Present Taxes	Difference Col. (2)− Col. (1)	G.I.S.[1] Payments	Difference Col. (3)− Col. (4)	Revenue[1] from 1966 Change	Combined Revenues Col. (2)+ Col. (6)	Combined Payments Col. (1)+ Col. (4)	Annual Surplus or Deficit Col. (7)− Col. (8)	Balance in account at end of year[2]
		(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)	(8)	(9)	(10)
Jan. 1, 1966 Age 69	1965-66	927	1,169	+242	—	+242	—	1,169	927	+242	+217
Jan. 1, 1967 Age 68	1966-67	1,031	1,266	+235	70	+165	9	1,275	1,101	+174	+391
Jan. 1, 1968 Age 67	1967-68	1,146	1,381	+235	286	− 51	137	1,518	1,432	+ 86	+477
Jan. 1, 1969 Age 66	1968-69	1,296	1,427	+131	318	−187	147	1,574	1,614	− 40	+437
Jan. 1, 1970 Age 65	1969-70	1,464	1,505	+ 41	346	−305	157	1,662	1,810	−148	+289
Age 65	1970-71	1,619	1,590	− 29	367	−396	168	1,758	1,986	−228	+ 61
Age 65	1971-72	1,689	1,687	− 2	363	−365	180	1,867	2,052	−185	−124

[1] Represents estimated payments in respect of each fiscal year.
[2] Assumes new tax deduction tables can be put into effect on Feb. 1, 1967.
[2] Deficit of $25 million at March 31, 1965.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: There are ten columns of figures in this table, and I would like to run down them briefly to support the statements I have made. The first three columns show the present situation. Column 1 gives the old age security pension payments at the present rates from 1965-66 to 1971-72, showing them rising from a level of $927 million to some $1,689 million in 1971-72. As column 2 shows, the revenue from present taxes will roughly match the requirements over that period of time, so the fund, in effect, will be in balance. Column 3 shows the difference between the first two columns.

The next three columns show the effect on the payments that will have to be made under the guaranteed income supplement legislation, and the effect on the fund. In a moment I will suggest that the estimates by the Government of the amounts required to meet these G.I.S. payments are somewhat inflated. However, the general effect is that the payments required, according to the Government estimate, will in the first full year be $286 million, the figure Senator Hayden mentioned, rising to $363 million in 1971. And the revenue derived from the amendment contained in this bill to the old age security tax will also rise in the same period from $137 million, in the first calendar year, to $180 million in 1971. As we go along into the other columns we are shown that the fund would be in balance until 1971—which I think is far enough ahead for us to plan—by reason of the amounts proposed to be put into that fund by this bill.

I come back to the point that it is less than half the amount we are asked to vote, in spite of the fact we have been told over and over again that the reason we are asked to vote this money is that this chamber made a recommendation which was adopted elsewhere and, therefore, we are to take the blame for the imposition of taxes which will rise in the next year by $286 million or $287 million. At the same time, the evidence is as clear as day in this table that not more than half will go into the fund at any time, and the rest will go into the general revenues.

It has been suggested that the total cost, as estimated by the Government, is twice the amount being put into the fund. That is so, if the Government estimate is correct, but the fact still remains that the extra money, the money from the sales tax increase, will not in any way be used for the purpose to which it is related in this bill. That is my major objection, and I will go so far as to say I think it indicates a bit of political legerdemain in this whole operation of the mini-budget.

I said that I think the figures given to us are inflated. I hope we will be able to go into them in committee and find out exactly where this estimate came from. Certainly it is at variance with the estimate of cost given by our own committee.

Perhaps I should read what our committee said—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is the Committee on Aging?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Yes. I said, "our committee." As I go along, when I use the phrase "our committee," I do so with some pride, it being the committee which provided almost the best initiative of the Senate in the last year or so.

The committee has brought the requirements of the aged in this respect to the attention of the public, and I think it is quite entitled, as is the Senate itself, to take full credit for this measure which has been widely hailed as an important contribution to the totality of measures we have developed over the years to provide for our senior citizens.

Naturally, the Senate committee in making this recommendation—and it recommended it start at age 65—looked at the cost. This is found at page 83 of the report of the committee, under the heading, "The Committee's Findings," and reads as follows:

> It is not possible with the information available to calculate with any accuracy what such a guarantee would cost. Assuming that it would be given to all persons aged 65 and over, and that 40 per cent of this group, some 560,000 people, would need supplementation for an average amount of $400 per year, we come out with a figure of roughly $225,000,000, which represents between 25 and 30 per cent of what the Government paid out in old age security pensions during the fiscal year 1963-1964. However, this amount is not altogether an additional outlay. There were also federal-provincial expenditures on Old Age Assistance in 1963-1964, totalling close to $80,000,000 and under the new Canada Assistance Plan, if it fulfils its promise, expenditures might well be expected to rise sharply above this figure. What we appear to be talking about, therefore, is a new expenditure of something in the order of $100,000,000, and even this amount would likely decline within a few years as benefits from the > Canada Pension Plan become available, and also as the recent action by Parliament in lowering to 65 the age for old age security pensions makes itself felt.

So, honourable senators, we have this very wide discrepancy between the estimate of $100 million by our committee and the $286 million by the Government.

It is only fair to say that the bases of the two estimates are not exactly the same, although they are comparable. I have mentioned that the estimate in the report of the special committee of the Senate assumed payment of the income supplement at age 65, and at the moment it is being paid at age 68 and will move down to age 65 year by year.

On the other hand, the act to provide the income supplement did add a considerable number of pensioners because of its eligibility aspects. The latest estimates that I have seen indicate that instead of the 560,000 senior citizens eligible under the Senate committee's recommendation there will now be probably 900,000. This is because under the bill as we passed it the income supplement is partially available to single persons who have additional income up to $720 per year, and married couples who have additional income up to $1,400 per year. I know that they are not entitled to the whole supplement; they are entitled at most, in any one case, to one half. By applying these two sets of figures, and if my arithmetic is correct, this would add at the most about $30 million to the cost of the plan over and above the estimate of the Senate Committee.

It is rather interesting to note that if we add $30 million to the $100 million, which is our estimate, we come up with a figure of $130 million which is very close to the amount the Government says it is going to put into the Old Age Security Fund. This indicates to me again that the $135 million is the total amount now required to implement the provisions of the income supplement bill.

I am not saying that the Government will not need other money—perhaps it does. I am not in a position to say how much money the Government needs next year or the year after, or in each year up until 1972, but I do strenuously object to the Government's raising, as I think it does in this bill, another $155 million and much more every year by increasing the sales tax under the guise of helping the old people.

How did this happen? Let us look back at the mini-budget. As honourable senators will recall, the Government became very concerned about inflation. The Government said: "We are really going to do something about inflation. We are going to have a mini-budget. We have to have it. We are going to impose new taxes in order to control inflation." Well, between the announcement and the mini-budget, the Government's advisers or somebody else apparently persuaded the Government that they had exaggerated the situation. I do not know whether they did or not, but obviously this is the conclusion they came to because there was not one single anti-inflationary measure contained in the mini-budget.

In the mini-budget there were two measures—the two that are now before us. The minister went out of his way not once but on a number of occasions to say "I want to make it clear that these measures are not anti-inflationary." I am paraphrasing what the minister said, but I think I am fair in doing so because judging from the editorials across the country this was the impression that was left. He said "I am going to get tough with this business of people demanding more welfare services."

If he had stopped with the principle that Senator Hayden gave us, then I would have no objection at all. Senator Hayden stated yesterday that it was a good thing to relate new Government expenditures directly to the revenues required to meet them, and the taxes that would have to be imposed to provide those revenues. I agree with that entirely. But the minister here said: "No, this is another principle. We are not going to raise merely the money that we need in the fund for this income supplement. We are going to raise more."

If anyone doubts that that is what he said I will quote his exact words because I think I have them here. He said he was not proposing any changes in general taxation for the purpose either of stimulating or of applying further restraints to the economy; that the measures proposed—that is, this bill—are intended only to counterbalance, financially and economically, the expenditures on the guaranteed income supplement. He said again:

> We are asking the Canadian public to accept increased taxes in order that we may distribute more to our old age pensioners with low incomes.

I think I am permitted to quote that because it is contained in the budget material placed before Parliament in connection with the bill we are now considering.

It is also interesting to note—and I think this is support for my general statement—that the increase in the sales tax has not been made to that portion which is earmarked for the old age pension. Senator Hayden told us that, and he was very frank in doing so. One would assume, if the minister and the Government were really sincere in saying to us, "We have to have this money for the income supplement," it would then say, "We will have to increase the sales tax, and naturally we will increase that portion of the old age security tax which is earmarked for old age security." They did nothing of the kind.

Senator Hayden said that of the present sales tax of 11 per cent, eight per cent is for general revenues, and three per cent is for old age security. In increasing the sales tax by one per cent they added that to the eight per cent, making it nine per cent, and again making it abundantly clear that they had no intention that this money should go to our senior citizens' fund. It was a device for getting more revenue.

Surely, if they were trying to carry out what Senator Hayden said, and with which I agree, they would have said, "If we must have this money for the guaranteed income supplement then we are going to raise it by increasing the old age security portion of the tax."

I was pleased to hear Senator Hayden make some remarks about the sales tax. I am sure he has read the report of the Carter Commission, and I am also sure, from the views he expressed, that he had held them long before Mr. Carter expressed them. I am not saying here that I agree with everything in Mr. Carter's report, but it is interesting to note that he did suggest that the time had come to stop increasing the present federal sales tax. He said, "Let us get it down right away. Let us get it down to seven per cent." This makes sense. Why? Well, I am sure all honourable senators know the effect of the sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It is pyramiding.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Senator Thorvaldson says that the sales tax has a pyramiding effect. I would say that in most cases it adds to the burden of the tax by perhaps 100 per cent. The manufacturer starts it off by marking up his product 10 per cent. There then follows a distribution markup of 15 per cent or 20 per cent, and then a retail markup of 30 per cent or 40 per cent. It is hard to think of a case where this increase of one per cent in the federal sales tax would not increase the burden on the public by two per cent.

The Carter Commission Report said: "This is not the way to proceed. We would like to see some equity in this principle of taxation. Let us get it down to seven per cent. Let us start making a move in the right direction." Instead of that we are faced with a proposal to go the other way and once again raise the federal sales tax.

The inequity of the situation before us, as I see it and as I have indicated—and I hope proved to the satisfaction of the majority of honourable senators—is that the sales tax increase is absolutely unnecessary.

I refer again to the table, and it is the full Government estimate of the amount required to be paid out in relation to the guaranteed income supplement. The full amount is here. Balanced against the projected $286 million plus income supplement payment out of the fund each year until 1971, do we find that we have all the money we are asked to vote today? No. We find that we only have that part that is to be raised by one of the amendments before us. I say that if it is not a clear case of political legerdemain, for what purpose I know not, then I would not recognize one if I saw it.

I had intended to trace the history of the old age security tax, because it does have a bearing on what I have said. However, I appreciate the fact that we are governed by a timetable today, and I will omit that portion of the remarks I had intended to make, except to remind the house that the old age security tax itself has risen over the years from the well remembered 2-2-2 formula, being 2 per cent sales tax, 2 per cent corporate tax, and 2 per cent individual income tax. The ceiling has also risen over the years. Today it is 3-3-4 with a ceiling of $120. The purpose of this amendment is merely to raise the ceiling, as Senator Hayden pointed out, to $240. This, as I have said, will raise all the money that is required. Again I say the sales tax increase is shown to be absolutely and completely unnecessary.

Honourable senators, these being my views, I cannot in conscience as a member of the Senate Committee on Aging, accept this unfactual claim that the taxes contained in this bill are now a necessary consequence to the guaranteed income supplement that we recommended. I cannot in common sense support the imposition of certain taxes in the name of the old age pensioners, taxes which are not going to be used for their benefit, and I cannot in any circumstances vote for an increase in the federal sales tax as presently administered. For those reasons I do not support the bill.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable senator speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, may I first deal with something that my friend Senator McCutcheon posed yesterday. He asked where these increased payments would come from. When I suggested that to the extent of $135 million they would undoubtedly come from the Old Age Security Fund, my friend questioned what I had said and stated that he thought it had been indicated that it would all come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, you were wrong. In fact, all old age security payments including the guaranteed income supplement will be charged to the old age security account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

To deal with what my friend Senator Grosart has discussed, I will make the general observation, and I hope I can demonstrate it, that first I do not profess to be an expert in accountancy. Also, on the basis of what Senator Grosart has said today, I would be prepared to reach the conclusion that he does not profess to be an expert accountant either. Within that limit, as one non-expert to another, may I make certain answers to what he has said. First of all, he refers to the report of the aging committee of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Committee on Aging.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Committee on Aging. Well, the other part of it is currently going on and will ever continue to go on; there is no way in which we can stop that process, not only in the Senate but anywhere.

First, the basis of that report was to determine a minimum income for people in Canada, our senior citizens, on the basis that they had no other source of income. Finally, in the reference which my friend made to the report, the committee took a figure of 560,000 persons in Canada who might be in that position. It then roughly multiplied it by $400 a year as being the kind of supplement needed to reinforce or supplement the $75 a month, and arrived at an estimate of $225 million. My friend was trying to use this $225 million as a springboard to suggest that when a figure is now presented of an estimated cost or additional pay-out of $280 million, that we are at variance with the report of the Senate committee and we are asking for too much money.

It is true that later he went on to suggest, in what I would say was a sort of apologetic way or an afterthought, that there were some differences between the plan before us and what the Senate committee had looked at. Well, there were substantial differences. The substantial difference was that the Senate proceeded on the basis in its calculation that the persons who were going to receive this money had no other income.

Now, in the plan before us the basis is not only that category of persons which will not be reduced at all from the estimate which this Senate committee made, but also an additional category of persons who have some outside income; and while the Senate committee in its report suggested that for every dollar of outside income a dollar should be taken from the $30 supplement, the guaranteed income supplement as enacted by this Parliament, and for which provision of money is being made here, provides substantially in a different way. It says that for every $2 of outside income that such an eligible person has, the $30 shall shrink by $1. Therefore you have two categories of people covered by the plan, which is the law, and you can readily conclude that the amount of an estimate which is based on no outside source of income must be increased.

The increase may be the amount between $225 million and $280 million; it may be of that character. So I say that the Senate report does not provide a springboard for criticism. It may provide a basis for attempting an estimate of the overall amount of $280 million. In the absence of any more particular calculations that we have at this moment, it would readily appear that an increase cost of perhaps roughly $50 million or $55 million is not too great to take care of the additional people with outside income who will qualify for some part of that $30 a month.

I come now to the more interesting point of my friend's remarks. He talked about political legerdemain. I would expect him to make use of expressions like that. Perhaps there was a time I might have done so myself. I am trying to be objective in dealing with this bill, and therefore I shudder a little when my friend speaks about political legerdemain in connection with figures, because he is not an accountant, nor am I, and we may both be within 150 miles of what is the accurate situation.

Let us analyze the situation as to whether there was need for this full payment of $280 million, or whether there was need for some part of it, and how much of it, and whether people are being taxed—under the guise of needing this extra money in order to take care of this guaranteed income supplement—for some other purposes for which the Government may require money.

All money from taxes goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This old age security account is an account within the fund. This does not mean that every dollar that comes from tax impositions to provide for old age security is put into an old-fashioned tin box or a modern safe and is locked away and that when they have to make a payment they go and take the money out. All the money goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and the old age security account is entitled to a credit in that account for so much money.

To me it seems to be simple arithmetic, even if I am not an accountant, that if I have to draw on my Consolidated Revenue Fund for $280 million more than I expected to have to draw, then unless I supplement the income of the fund by an equivalent amount, if the Fund is in deficit I am increasing that deficit.

True, this paper book account, the old age security account, within the fund, has a credit balance. When we take the increase in the ceiling on personal income tax to provide an additional amount labelled for that fund, we add more, or more credit is put into that fund; but the money goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund and when it is paid out it is paid out of that fund.

It is simple arithmetic to say that, if you pay out another $280 million, and you do not put in $280 million, you have lessened your fund by that amount, in the middle of a term, and in this manner, when your calculations have not allowed for such treatment.

Senator Grosart has suggested that this bill attempts to get additional money for the Consolidated Revenue Fund and for Government purposes under the guise of the need of this money to make these old age security payments. I think that is an unfair statement, but politics being what they are, I suppose that if the opportunity occurs and you have some peg to hang it on, it is quite an easy statement to make.

It is very clear from the bill, and it is very clear from everything that the minister said, that the $155 million being produced by the one per cent increase in sales tax is not going to the credit of the old age security account: it is going directly into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is also very clear from every statement that the minister made, that in order to maintain the equilibrium that heretofore existed in the Consolidated Revenue Fund, between cash inflow and cash outflow, he would disturb that if he did not find a way to get as much additional money in as the additional money he was paying out.

We may disagree on accounting language to describe this, but it is clear that the minister has not at any time said, nor has any such representation been made to the public, that the $280 million is necessary to be raised in order to pay $280 million under the old age security payment—another $280 million.

The minister has not said that. He has said, "If I put $135 million to the credit of that old age security account, there will be enough credit in that account. But if I do that, then there will be not only that $135 million but there will be another $155 million in all, paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund in order to take care of this increased supplement; and I want as much money coming back in. I do not want at this time to increase my cash deficit in the Consolidated Revenue account."

In those circumstances, I suggest there is no basis upon which it can be suggested that this is an attempt, under the guise of taking care of this increased supplement, to levy taxes for general purposes. The purpose is stated very clearly by the minister. Whether one agrees with that purpose or not, or agrees that the taxes should be increased at this time, is another matter. Whether one says that we should face an increased cash deficit, we should face borrowing of additional money in order to take care of this instead of making this increase in taxes, that may be a perfectly legitimate comment. Then it would be a matter of the judgment of the minister and of the Government charged with responsibility of deciding which course you are going to take, to supplement the Consolidated Revenue Fund by another $280 million. Are you going to increase the taxes; are you going to present a larger cash deficit, or are you going to borrow more money? The Government has chosen the method of an increased tax. While some may disagree with it, that is the method that those who are charged with this responsibility have decided to follow. It is legitimate to criticize it, but there it is.

Honourable senators, I think I have covered the points which were raised by Senator Grosart. In the circumstances, however, I should say at this time that I think the bill should go to committee where the points which have been raised can be developed in the course of discussion there.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by Hon. Mr. Hayden, seconded by Hon. Mr. Bourque, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Even though I may be slightly out of order, may I suggest that the committee, having agreed this morning to resume when the Senate rises, meet at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would suggest that the Senate do now take recess, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 4 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS BILL, 1967

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa

10 March 1967

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 10th March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier

Assistant Secretary

to the Governor General.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-268, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-268, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age

Security Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INDIANS OF CANADA

STATUS IN CENTENNIAL YEAR

Hon. James Gladstone rose pursuant to notice:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the status, in this Centennial Year, of the Indians of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, in this year of 1967, we are hearing much about the Centennial of Confederation. This is the year to celebrate, we are told, because Canada has experienced one hundred years of nationhood. Those in my constituency have joined in these celebrations, even though we did not become a part of Canada until 1870 and did not become a province until 1905. But we recognize the need for a Canadian identity and a need to have some basis for pride in our country. It is unlikely that the Centennial will bring about much unity in our divided nation, but perhaps the movement of so many travellers during Expo '67 will provide a better understanding of the problems on both sides.

The grants given to assist local Centennial projects have been wisely spent in my corner of Canada. In the Lethbridge area we have a large Japanese population, made up of those people who were shamefully uprooted from their west coast homes in 1941, during the panic following Pearl Harbour. These Canadians—and they are true Canadians —have been important to the economy of Southern Alberta and it is fitting that Lethbridge choose to honour them during Centennial year. The wonderful Japanese garden that has been created in Lethbridge would be an asset to any Japanese community. Besides having a practical value as a park area, this garden pays tribute to a once-abused segment of our Canadian population.

My own people, the Indians of Canada, have been invited to join the Centennial celebrations. There is an Indian pavilion at Expo 67 containing displays prepared by Indian artists, and during the year attractive Indian girls from all parts of Canada will be there to tell about their people.

In other parts of Canada, Indians are using their Centennial grants to build community halls, sports and recreation areas, while others still are planning Indian celebrations and pageants for the occasion.

There are other Indians, however, who refuse to join the Centennial celebration. They are disillusioned by the way they have been treated by the Government in Ottawa and they say, "What have we to celebrate?" A century ago many of my people were free, independent and lords of vast territories. Then came the white man with his hunger for our land and his disregard for our rights. He seemed to want everything we had.

I recall the remarks of an old Indian at Sault Ste. Marie, when prospectors were staking uranium claims a few years ago. "The white men came long ago", he said, "and took all our beaver and other furs. Then they came back, built a sawmill and took all the big trees. Later they built a sawmill and took all the little trees. Now they are coming back for our rocks."

This is the way many of my people feel. On the Cold Lake Reserve in Alberta, the Indians formed a centennial committee—not to put on a pageant or build a hall, but to voice their complete lack of trust in the Government. "Give us back everything you stole from us," is the tone of their meetings. "Let that be Ottawa's centennial project," they say. Rightly or wrongly, the people at Cold Lake feel they were not properly treated and not compensated for the valuable lands given up by the treaties in the 1870's. They feel that in matters of mineral rights, timber lands, fishing and hunting rights they have been robbed by the Government.

You can call these claims unreasonable. You may say that they have no legal basis—yet, the fact that the complaints exist is an indication that something is wrong. Over the years the Government has built up such a solid wall of misunderstanding that now there is only distrust and suspicion.

For generations the Government acted as though the Indians were dying out, and the less they did the better. They seemed to be acting as caretakers of a dying race. Then the Government began to realize that perhaps the Indians were not going to die off, and they should start to do something worthwhile. Much needed health and educational services began to appear after the Second World War, and the Government started to take more interest in welfare, housing and employment.

Now we seem to be going from one extreme to the other. Now we have competition to see how fast the Indian can be integrated into the Canadian community and how fast his way of life can be changed. For generations nothing was done to help us to take our place in your society. Now many people seem to expect it to happen overnight.

A couple of years ago someone mentioned doing away with the reserves. More recently, the Ontario Government said that before long the Indians will not want their reserves! This is ridiculous!

People who talk about doing away with reserves are really talking about getting rid of the whole Indian culture. The Indian's way of life is based upon his reserve. It was not always by choice; it was the Government that put us there. We often had to make changes in our daily lives so that our old culture could fit in with the life on the reserves. But we have done it. It may look like an underdeveloped wasteland in some areas, but it is our home—the home the Government gave our ancestors.

If the young people want to leave and lead a different life in the city, that is their business. But there are many who could have successful careers right on their own reserves. I know one of the councillors on the Blackfoot Reserve who made over $20,000 last year at farming. Down home we have ranchers who are just as well off as anyone else. If the reserves disappear during this century, or even the next, it will be because my people were forced into making these changes. Most of you here would have to go back twenty generations or more to reach the stage my people were at one or two generations ago. And yet, we are expected to make this big jump in a short time.

Many young Indian people are doing well for themselves these days. There are teachers, lawyers, doctors, nurses and businessmen. But at the same time, there are others who cannot read, or know only the life of the bush. We, the Indians of Canada, are progressing according to our individual opportunities and desires. Some may be ready for integration today, and others may never be ready. However, do not be fooled by judging the Indians by the fastest or by the slowest.

People talk about the Indian drinking problem, and I have seen examples of this on the reserves I have visited. But is drinking really the problem itself, or is this just the result of the confused and terrible situation which faces my people? Do they drink just for the fun of getting drunk, or is this a way of escaping from the impossible problems of their lives?

When liquor was first given to the Blackfoot they wouldn't even take it! They called it napi-oki—white man's water. Drinking did not really become a problem until the 1870's when the buffalo started to disappear. The buffalo had provided food, clothing and religion. Take it away, and what was left? These people could see this situation, so they drank to forget.

That was the beginning of the confusion which the white man brought to us ever since. It was followed by starvation, by putting us on reserves, by taking away our pride and initiative, by taking away our children, by sending missionaries and doing away with our old religion. Each change added to the confusion. Some Indians accepted the new ways but many could not.

People complain about the Indians living too much in the past. Why shouldn't they? Very often the only sensible way of life was the one that is now gone, never to return. All that many of them have today are the promises of the treaties and black memories of Government inaction. The treaties are often the only bridge between the old and the new. The promises made, or the promises implied, by the Queen's representatives were the foundations of our present reserves.

The treaties go all the way back to Colonial times when the British recognized that the Indians had title to the land. Each time settlement moved into the frontier the rights of the Indians were taken into consideration and treaties were made. After Confederation the Canadian Government continued this practice with a series of treaties in western Canada. My own people signed Treaty No. 7, the Blackfoot Treaty, in 1877. Only on the west coast were no treaties made. There the old colony of British Columbia did not recognize Indian rights, and there has been trouble over this question ever since. In my opinion, the Indians of that province were cheated and it is the responsibility of the Government to settle this matter. I hope that this will be done through the Indian Claims Commission, whenever it is formed. For that matter I hope the commission will be able to look into many questions dealing with the treaties and land agreements. In some cases an unfortunate chain of circumstances has left Indians in a poor situation. In many other instances a lack of good faith on the part of the Government has been responsible. These are matters which have been the basis for distrust and hard feelings for many generations, and should be settled once and for all.

There are some areas in which the Government has done much good for the Indians. I think that health services are one of the most important of these. In Treaty No. 6, in 1876, the Commissioner said:

> A medicine chest will be kept at the house of the Indian agent, in case of sickness amongst you.

This was the beginning of our health services. It was a reasonable provision, for it was similar to the medical aid available to white settlers at that time.

In the years that followed, however, the health services for Indians slipped far behind. Our people were steadily dying off from tuberculosis and many other diseases. On the Blood Reserve the population fell from 3,500 in 1881 to 1,100 in the 1920's. The infant mortality rate was far above the national average, and each year the deaths far outnumbered the births.

For us in the West, I think the big change came in health services with the construction of the Charles Camsell Hospital in Edmonton just after the Second World War. At first some of my people were afraid to go there, because in the past if a person had tuberculosis there was little hope for him. But when they saw how the Camsell Hospital was helping others, pretty soon the hospital was crowded. This is a good lesson which some of the present officials have forgotten. They are in such a rush to get us integrated that they do not give us a chance to study their new ideas and accept them ourselves. If the Government had tried to force the Camsell Hospital on all Indians who needed medical attention, I am sure they would have failed. Instead they said, "Here is the service—see how it works and decide for yourselves." Today the situation is so good among the Indians of Alberta that the Camsell Hospital is turning its attention to the people in the Northwest Territories.

Another area in which we have made great advances is education. Here, however, we have a more confused picture. Much of the early education was in the hands of the churches, and often their main interest was in educating children to be good followers of their particular faith. On the other hand, there were some dedicated teachers who, through their own efforts, gave wonderful opportunities to our young people. Around the turn of the century we had a teacher from Ontario named Miss Wells, who worked with the young girls. The effects of her teachings and her example are still evident on my reserve today.

Unfortunately, such persons then and today are rare exceptions. In places where we still have unintegrated Indian schools, we often must settle for second-rate teachers. There are good teachers too, but these are the precious few who accept the challenge of teaching in an Indian school. Most of them are there because they cannot get anything better.

Over the years the Government has tried all kinds of educational methods. First, they built industrial schools away from the reserves. Then they had small day schools right in the Indian camps. After that they had church residential schools on the reserves, and in recent years they introduced integrated education. This includes the sending of young students to daily classes in nearby towns and the boarding of older students with good white families in the cities.

It is interesting to note that our first schools were similar to the vocational schools of today. These schools taught us trades and gave us lessons on getting along with the white people. I attended the Calgary Indian Industrial School for three years and during that time I was taught the trade of a printer; I worked on a few nearby ranches and learned my regular lessons.

We also had a first-rate soccer team that could beat any white team in the district. Many graduates of these schools were able to live comfortably either on or off their reserves and were well versed in practical subjects.

I think the Government made a great mistake in the early 1920s when they closed all the industrial schools and decided to build residential schools on the reserves. This resulted in segregating us from the outside world. There were seldom any opportunities to mix with white people and our whole world was confined to the boundaries of our reserves. No wonder the graduates of such schools during the past forty years have turned their backs on the white man's way of life. I think that if the industrial schools had not been closed, we would not be confronted today with the same kind of discrimination problem that faced us in the past years.

Nowadays the situation is different from the days of church-operated residential schools. The Government has placed great emphasis on integrated education and already we are seeing some good results. More students are going on to university while others are finding good opportunities away from their reserves.

Although progress has been made in education and health services, some of the other problems are far from being solved. Some of these problems are based on the differences in our outlook and our way of life. But others are the direct result of Government mishandling of our affairs.

For example, our old method of choosing chiefs had worked well for us. Perhaps it was a good idea to gradually change to a democratic elective system, but the way the Government handled it in some areas caused considerable suspicion and mistrust. For instance, if the Indians of the Six Nations Reserve near Brantford had been told of the change that was contemplated in their system, some harmonious arrangement could have been worked out. They could have gradually replaced the old tribal chiefs and councillors as they passed away. Instead, the Government abruptly ordered the change in the tribal council without consideration of the Longhouse customs. This resulted in two sets of chiefs—the old tribal leaders and those elected under Government supervision—and caused a great upheaval on the reserve.

On my own reserve our agent asked us what we wanted to do. We asked that no change be made among chiefs and councillors who were still alive, but that we would elect new ones on the new system as the positions became vacant. This was back in the 1930s. So we eventually elected six councillors under the new system, and the changeover took place quietly and peacefully. Now we have the elective system on almost all reserves in Alberta and the majority of Indians are pleased with it.

There is another kind of problem which is facing many Indians today but, happily, the Government seems to be handling it fairly well. A great number of Indians are moving to the cities and towns to get jobs, and they often need help in getting re-established. The Government has conducted upgrading classes, paid for vocational training courses, and hired placement officers to help Indians find work. Now, I understand further help may come to those who need to buy houses and receive other help in getting established. This is a much different program from the disastrous Relocation Program started in the United States, where the sole object seemed to be to force as many Indians off their reservations as possible. Here in Canada the Government has made a service available to those who want to leave their reserves but has not tried to push out any who are unwilling to leave.

I think much credit should also go to some provincial governments, cities, and organizations like the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada, who have been a tremendous help to the Indians.

I hope, honourable senators, that some of my comments here today do not seem too contradictory. On one hand, I say there is a need for my people to progress and take responsible places in society. On the other hand, I say to the Government: Stop pushing us! What I say is true: My people must progress in order to survive, but we must do this gradually and at our own speed. You cannot force this upon us overnight. Give us the opportunities, and let us take advantage of them as we feel ready for them. Some will move ahead rapidly and some will not move at all; but do not force us along this rocky road of integration, for you have not taken away all of our pride and some of us can still balk. This we will do if we feel you are trying to stampede us. Help my people to become first-class Indians, not second-class white people!

I certainly hope that we can commence this second century of nationhood with a better understanding between Indian and non-Indian. By taking the responsibility for more and more of our own affairs, we are learning to work side by side with our white neighbours. I predict that before long some of our young men will also be elected to the other place and will be able to pitch in and help govern this nation of ours. This is my hope for the century ahead.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I wish to thank the Government for setting up a Department of Indian Affairs. We have always resented being part of Citizenship and Immigration, for we are neither new citizens nor immigrants. The formation of the new department is an indication that the Government recognizes that our problems are indeed important to the Government of Canada.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, we are indebted to Senator Gladstone for bringing up this important subject at this time.

The Right Honourable Arthur Meighen frequently said in this chamber that one of the great duties of this chamber was to look after the rights of minorities in this country. I think you will agree with me that the white people of Canada have a conscience, and I think that conscience is bothering them a little over the treatment of the Indian race in this country.

In 1492 Christopher Columbus, hoping to reach the riches of Cathay, with all its spices, silks, precious stones and gold, sailed westward. After two months and nine days he landed on some land that is now America, and saw people with straight black hair, high cheek bones and copper-coloured skin. He thought he had reached the shores of India and called them "Indians," and that name has stayed with them ever since. It is estimated there were about 13 million Indians in North and South America at that time, and about one million of them north of the Rio Grande, with probably 200,000 in Canada. These Indians were scattered over a great area and 250 different languages were spoken. Some of them settled near the water and became fishermen; some spread over the forests and planes and became children of the prairies. They would pitch their tents at a stream in the prairie or clearing in the forest and live there while there was food, living on the products of the chase, and then when food became scarce they would move on to some other place.

Champlain thought they were without religion and without law, but even at that time there was a form of religion. They believed in good and evil spirits. They worshipped the sun and the moon. They believed in demons and ghosts and in a Superior Being. Champlain felt his one important duty was to Christianize the Indians. He said that the saving of the soul is more important than the gaining of an empire.

In about 1615 he got some of the Recollect Fathers to come out. Ten years later he got some Jesuits to come out. The record of those heroic dedicated priests forms a bright page in the annals of the glorious sufferings and sacrifices that have been recorded.

They paddled all day—this was work to which they were not accustomed—and they walked through the mud, the underbrush and the sloughs in unsuitable clothing. They were blamed for everything wrong that happened. They slept in wretched tents and wigwams, and ate revolting food.

Despite all this, they pressed on with their mission of mercy and they accomplished a great deal. They christianized a large number of the Huron Indians, but unfortunately the bloodthirsty Iroquois came with their tomahawks and guns and destroyed most of the converts in the Huron race.

In those days the fur trade was the great occupation of the Indians. It was a good occupation. The Indians would kill the fur-bearing animals, and the Indian women in addition to cooking the food would prepare those skins for the market.

Two European explorers, Radisson and DesGroseillers discovered that the best furs were up in the north. They went up to the area of Hudson Bay and came back with a cargo of choice furs. The Governor of France decreed that they should not own those furs, and took most of them from them. Radisson and DesGroseillers then went over to the English, and the Company of "Gentlemen Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay" was formed. That company was given control of that tremendous area of land that is drained by the streams flowing into Hudson Bay. They looked after that for about two hundred years, which were happy years for the Indians. There was contentment. Food was plentiful. The Indian peoples trapped the fur-bearing animals and they lived off the buffalo. The buffalo herds at that time were so numerous that during certain seasons of the year the ground was covered by them as far as the eye could see. The buffalo provided clothing, food and shelter for the Indians.

Things went along very well until, as the honourable senator has mentioned, 1870 when the blow fell. The Hudson's Bay Company, perhaps without any legal or moral right, sold its great territory for 300,000 pounds and one-twentieth of the land which was chiefly around their trading posts. That was a very sad day for the Indians. The fur-bearing animals were scarce; the buffalo were gone, because of repeating rifles and fast horses. The Indians could not make a living at farming, and neither could the white people at that time. The condition of the Indians was really precarious, and in some places it has remained bad ever since.

As Senator Gladstone has indicated, while some Indians have done well—and here I may say that he and his son Fred, whom I happen to know, are highly regarded as ranchers in the district in which they live—a great many Indians live in deplorable conditions and are suffering a great deal.

Away back in 1534, Jacques Cartier sailed through the Strait of Belle Isle, across the St. Lawrence, and landed on the Gaspé Peninsula. He erected a large cross there bearing the emblem of France. The Indian chiefs there at that time were a little resentful and doubtful. They feared that the white people were going to take away their land and, truly, that is about what happened.

Who owned the land? It was recognized that the Indians owned the land. They have been here twenty or thirty thousand years. They probably came long years ago in different groups from the heart of Asia across the Bering Strait, over the ice in winter and in boats in the summer, and then worked their way down through the continent. Of course during the frigid ages, during the ice period, they could not come, but about 11,000 years ago conditions were favourable and it is believed that then, and even before and since, these people made their way from the heart of Asia and spread over this continent in large numbers. They probably owned the land. At least it is sort of recognized that they did, because, as has been said, a series of treaties were made.

I have read of the treaty that the honourable senator spoke of which was signed in 1877 at Crowfoot Crossing near the centre of Alberta, just seven years after the territory was given up by the Hudson Bay Company. The Indians were provided a reserve of their own, a section of land for each family of five and certain other rights, but the Indians claim that that treaty has not been lived up to. The ammunition money has never come through; roads have been built, and the railway went through that reserve but they got no compensation for it. Also certain sections of land have been taken out of the reserve without any pay for the Indians, so that they are very much dissatisfied and probably have reason to be.

Many commissions have visited the Indian reserves. The Government has made many efforts to see what could be done, but still much remains to be done and we are hopeful that something will be done in the near future.

The Minister has outlined a program which probably would have a good result. First of all he says that we should take an inventory of the assets of the Indians. Some reserves are good and the Indians there are wealthy; some are no good and the Indians there are poor. Some in the north, as has been said, have no land at all. These Indians did not live in buildings or on lots or even on quarter sections; they were nomadic and spread all over, but the assumption should be that all the territory belongs to the Indians and all should get some benefit from it.

However, it is proposed to take an inventory first and then to make plans as to what can be done. These will be plans to increase productivity, to perhaps bring in industries, bring in more cattle and produce more agricultural products. The Indians might be supervised, but they would do that work themselves.

There have been very outstanding Indians in times gone by. For instance, there have been such Indians as Pauline Johnson, Crowfoot, Red Crow and Big Bear, Tecumseh and others. There are very many of them, very able men, and in order to improve their conditions it is hoped that the Indians themselves will take charge and, with some guidance, be given the management of their own affairs.

Loans will be made available so that there will not be the unemployment, poverty and want which is so often seen in many reserves at the present time.

Because of the measures which have been very successful lately, tuberculosis has pretty well been stamped out. The Indians numbered about 100,000 at the beginning of the century. There are now over 200,000 Indians. They have increased more rapidly than many of the ethnic groups in Canada. They need still more health inspectors on the reserve, which is their home, and they need more education and of course guidance along management lines.

It is not likely that they would ever be assimilated. They can retain their own traditions, of which they are very proud, and they can cherish the highest ideals; they can help, with the Government's assistance, to make things happier for themselves and for future generations of Indians.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), debate adjourned.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-221 respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable John Robert Cartwright, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:
Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable John Robert Cartwright, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

An Act to incorporate The North West Life Assurance Company of Canada.

An Act to provide for the payment of a retiring annuity to the Governor General of Canada.

An Act to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation.

An Act to provide for the revision of certain salaries fixed by statute.

An Act to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

An Act to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 14, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 14, 1967

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE SENATORS W. RUPERT DAVIES AND A. NEIL McLEAN

TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, since we met on Friday last still another of our esteemed colleagues has been called to his fathers. The last time I saw Senator William Rupert Davies was Wednesday as he stood in zero temperatures on Parliament Hill to pay his last respects to our late beloved Governor General, General Vanier. He had come here from Toronto especially for that solemn event. Now he has joined him in death.

Rupert Davies was born in Wales. He died soon after the feast of St. David and just before the feast of St. Patrick. This season of feasts of the Gaelic peoples was his season, for the Welsh, the Scottish and the Irish Gaels all have a deep-seated affinity, and to be of that company was to him a source of pride and inspiration.

In this house he belonged to a group apart, a group of distinguished writers, editors and publishers—the men of the press. They were and are a good company. In other days they included the first Speaker, the Honourable Joseph E. Cauchon of Le Journal de Québec, George Brown, the founder and editor of the Globe, and later John Lewis, another editor. William Templeman of the Victoria Daily Times, Edward M. Farrell of the Liverpool Advance in Nova Scotia, George P. Graham of the Brockville Recorder, R. S. White of the Gazette, Pamphile Du Tremblay of La Presse, W. H. Dennis and later a cousin, William Dennis of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, Jacob Nicol of Le Soleil and other papers, W. A. Buchanan of the Lethbridge Herald, Norman Lambert of the Toronto Daily Star and Charles Bishop of the Ottawa Citizen and the Southam chain. And today we have with us of that same distinguished group, such men as Senator Grattan O'Leary of the Ottawa Journal, Senator Desruisseaux of the Sherbrooke Tribune, and Senator Harold Connolly of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald.

Honourable senators, perhaps they all had printers' ink in their veins, but they had more. They brought to our legislative chamber a way with words, a love of language, a savour of the good phrase which could be a rapier or a sword at one time or part of a sublime sonnet at another. They had what Wordsworth called "a choice of word and measured phrase above the reach of ordinary men." Senator Davies' speeches had these qualities and we remember them for the pleasure they afforded us and the interest they stimulated in this chamber.

As a very young man, still in his teens, Senator Davies came to Canada to work as a printer. Here he found scope for his native talent. He made for himself a distinguished career in the field of publishing, radio and television in such places as Renfrew, Peterborough and Kingston. He was a senator for twenty-five of his years. He was an honorary member of the Commonwealth Press Union and of the Canadian Press. Indeed, he was at one time President of the Canadian Press. But he never forgot Wales, the land of his birth. He had a home there latterly, and was appointed High Sheriff of County Montgomery. He treasured that honour, but all the while remained a devoted and distinguished Canadian.

Senator Davies lived to see his family achieve distinction in business, journalism, communications and the field of education. He had a full life, and everyone will agree that he lived it to the end with zest. In reflecting upon that fact I hope his devoted wife and other members of his family will find deep consolation in these days of their sorrow.

On Sunday night I was telephoned and informed that Senator Neil McLean had died. Senator McLean was of New Brunswick. By ancestry he was Scottish and Dutch. Some of his forebears settled in the Saint John River area with other United Empire Loyalists who came north at the time of the American revolution.

In a sense, Neil McLean reversed this process, and for many reasons. One of these was business. His business was the marketing of the bountiful harvest of the sea from the Bay of Fundy and the North Atlantic.

At Black's Harbour the company had its headquarters. It found its markets in widely scattered parts of Canada, on the Atlantic seaboard of the United States, and indeed in many other parts of the United States, as well as in many foreign countries. In this work with his brother, a member in the other place, Senator McLean was highly successful.

Another reason for his friendship, particularly with the Americans, rose from somewhat of an accident. Campobello was no accident. It has always been there, but the lore of that place which Franklin Delano Roosevelt treasured was in fact an accident of birth, though it grew into an avocation, an avocation which comprised a love of the sea, of sailing, and of the people who lived in the Campobello area. One of these people was Neil McLean. They knew each other well, and visited often, even when F.D.R. was in the White House.

I have said that Neil McLean was of New Brunswick—he was of southern New Brunswick, and that was his designation in this chamber. In one of our last conversations some months ago he told me of a project upon which he was working to preserve some of the old names and build ngs in Hartland, the small town in which he was born.

Neil McLean was a canny trader. This is a common quality in the Saint John valley, as indeed it is in the Maritimes. At trading he excelled, and the list of his business affiliations testifies to his success in business.

Anyone who knew our late colleague would agree that to h m in a special way the adjective "folksy" applied with perfect propriety. He had a capacity for friendship, and in his younger days for fun. Even before he came to the Senate twenty-two years ago he was known well by many parliamentarians. He belonged to a group which included the late Senator Gerry McGeer and the late Arthur Slaght, when they were in the other place. Even on Parliament Hill they were unusual men, they were innovators, they were small "l" liberals as well as large "L" Liberals, but above all else they were individualists.

Perhaps because of this association, as well as because of his business background in his early days in the Senate, Senator McLean spoke about trade and about monetary policy many times. In due time he became Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Senate on Canadian Trade Relations, and he brought to that committee world experts in both fields. This was to the advantage of the Senate and of the Canadian public.

Senator McLean is credited too with exerting no small influence upon events which led to the joining of Newfoundland with Canada. One can understand how this could be. Part of it no doubt arose from a common interest in the fishing industry, but part of it too, perhaps the larger part, derived from the fact that Senator McLean had the human touch of a personality which the warmhearted Newfoundlander could appreciate.

To his wife and the members of his family our hearts go out in the suddenness of their sorrow.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I have just listened to a very fine tribute to the memory of two most distinguished gentlemen. It happens all too often that when we are away from the chamber, even for a few days, we return on an occasion of sadness such as at present arises.

We were all very sorry to learn of the passing of two of our distinguished colleagues. As neither one had been ill for any length of time, their deaths came as a surprise to most of us.

Having listened to the Leader of the Government, in his very informative reference to these two gentlemen, there seems to be very little to be added.

I did not know Senator Davies as well as I should have liked to have known him. I saw very little of him in the Senate since I came, but I was aware of the splendid role he played in his chosen career, as a newspaperman and in other communications media.

As the leader has told us, Senator Davies started at the bottom. He came to Canada from Wales as a boy of fifteen and by his ability and perseverance he rose to the top of his profession. He became president and publisher of some outstanding newspapers. He was also president of two companies which own and operate radio and television stations in Kingston and Peterborough. I understand that he was at one time President of the Canadian Press and an honorary life member of that news agency, which I understand he helped to build.

He was a member of the Senate for twenty-five years, as the honourable leader has told us. His interest in its activities was varied and most profitable to us. One has but to look at his contributions in this chamber, when he spoke on a variety of subjects of great importance to Canada and to our people. I might mention a few of his speeches which I have read in Hansard of past years—on employment, pipe lines, health, taxation, companies, technical and vocational training, and many other subjects. His remarks were well worth studying and I would recommend them to those new members who had not the opportunity of listening to Senator Davies. Although he left his country, Wales, his birthplace, as a boy of fifteen, he never forgot it. He loved Canada and Canada loved him, but he loved Wales also. He was honoured by the place of his birth. He was vice-president of the Royal Welsh Agricultural Show; he was chairman of the Council of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem for the County of Montgomery, Wales. Last, but not least—a great honour, I understand, in the Old Country—he was High Sheriff of County Montgomery, in Wales, from 1951 to 1952.

Honourable senators, I was better acquainted with Senator McLean. He and I came from the same province; I had known him for over fifty years and we were close friends.

For years he has been one of our outstanding citizens and he was highly respected, not only at his home in Saint John but all over the Province of New Brunswick. He was brought up on a farm in northern New Brunswick. He was a self-made man. As the honourable leader has told us, he was always interested in monetary questions and in finance. I first met him when I as a young man who had graduated from college went to Hampton, New Brunswick, to teach school. In those days there was a small bank there, the Bank of New Brunswick, taken over later by the Bank of Nova Scotia. Neil McLean was the manager of the bank. We roomed in the same house. So I got to know him quite well when I was a young man. Naturally, young McLean left the bank. The small bank was not big enough for him, and he went into business.

As the leader has told us, he was very successful in business. Besides his commercial activities, he took an active part in public life and, as a member of the Senate for many years, made many worth-while contributions to our debates. He talked particularly about finance and fiscal matters, of which he was an authority, although I must say that his monetary ideas were not always agreed with by his colleagues. But they were mostly sound and certainly worth hearing.

His greatest success was in the financial world. He was director of many companies. He was head of Connors Bros., one of the largest fish-packing concerns not only in Canada but in the Commonwealth. He was a director of the Maritime Trust Company, the Crown Life Insurance Co., and the Fundy Marine Insurance Co. He followed many other activities as well. As a matter of fact, he was one of our most outstanding businessmen in the Atlantic provinces.

To the families of the two departed senators I join with the honourable Leader of the Government in extending our most sincere sympathy.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few words to what has been said so eloquently by our leaders. I am speaking not only because of my close friendship with Senator Davies, but also because he had very close ties with my home City of Brantford.

It was to Brantford that he came when he arrived in Canada in 1894, an immigrant boy. Apart from a few personal belongings, his worldly wealth was 20 cents. It was not long before he got a job with the Brantford Expositor at $1.50 a week. It was at the Expositor that he learned the printing trade. From then on his life history reads like an Horatio Alger success story.

Senator Davies had an exciting, successful and inspiring life. Within ten years he was Editor and Publisher of the Thamesville Weekly Herald in Western Ontario. From there he went to Renfrew where he purchased the Mercury, a larger Ontario weekly. From there he went to Kingston and purchased the British Whig, which subsequently he merged with the Daily Standard. He entered that merger as vice-president and editor of the Whig Standard and in a few years became its president. Within another five years the Whig Standard purchased the Peterborough Examiner.

As our leaders have said, our late colleague then took an interest in radio. You will recall that at that time radio became a great news medium. He established a company which broadcast from Kingston and Peterborough, and then he formed and developed a television company.

Throughout his life, however, he never lost interest in the first city in which he made his home. How he loved to recall the days when he arrived there with little money in his pockets, and he boasted about and took pride in the fact that he started off with $1.50 a week.

I think probably I was the last senator who saw Senator Davies in Ottawa last Wednesday afternoon. He and Mrs. Davies were coming down the Senate stairs to get in their car to go on their way. I said I would see him next week. He said yes, and as he left me he said, "Be sure to look after Brantford." Little did he or I think that he would not be back with us today.

It was my privilege to attend the funeral service at Rosedale Presbyterian Church. There was a very good representation of senators at that service. If I remember correctly, there were Senator Hayden, Senator Sullivan, Senator Willis, Senator Leonard, Senator Aird and myself. I am sure we were surprised at the large family representation present. I believe the family occupied about one-quarter of one side of the church.

It was a very impressive service. The main service was taken by the minister, the Reverend Ian Mackay, and the sermon was preached by the former Bishop of Toronto, the Right Reverend F. H. Wilkinson. I wish I could have made a note of the remarks which were made. The Bishop, I remember, referred to Senator Davies as being forthright and venturesome; he described Senator Davies as one who thought about things, made his decisions about them and then did them. He was, in other words, a doer.

Honourable senators, I have before me some of the remarks made by the Reverend Ian Mackay. He said we should give thanks for what Senator Davies was able to be and do, "across the many years of his life, within the intimacy of his own home and family circle, as a citizen and churchman, as a leader in business and professional life and in the public service of this nation." The minister went on to say we should be thankful "for the strength and simplicity of his faith, and the warmth and constancy of his love, thoughtfulness, and generosity; for his zest for life," —our leader also used the word zest—"and his keen and perceptive interest in all the affairs of life; for the wisdom and grace with which he adorned the doctrine of God as a faithful and devoted member of his church which he loved and served so long and so well; and as a faithful and dedicated member of the Senate which he graced and enriched by his understanding and devotion to the public good."

Honourable senators, it was indeed a most inspiring service.

I would also like to say a few words about my friend the late Neil McLean. I made the acquaintance of Neil back about 1941 when the Bank Act was being revised. At that time I was a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee and, as the leader has said here tonight, Neil McLean took a great interest in that committee. When financial questions were being discussed in the House of Commons, he followed the debates there with close attention.

I found him a very friendly person. Years later it was my good fortune to share a desk with him for a number of years in this house. Then I learned that he was indeed a true friend, and like many of you I was the recipient from time to time of a very large salmon. He always remembered his friends in the fishing season. Neil McLean must have had some deep feelings of affection and regard. He must have been a warm-hearted man because it is known that he became a friend of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States. I am informed that he was one of the few people who could reach the late President by telephone from time to time.

We will miss him in this house; we will miss both our deceased members. I join with the leaders in extending to their wives and families my very deep sympathy.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, it has been said by our two leaders and by Senator Macdonald (Brantford) that one of our duties here tonight is to pay tribute to two honourable senators who have been our colleagues in this chamber for a long time and who have now passed to the Great Beyond. They were outstanding men; they made a great success of life and were very valuable members of this chamber. I knew both of them well, but I was more intimately acquainted and associated with Senator Davies than I was with Senator McLean. As three honourable senators have already spoken with regard to Senator McLean, I intend to confine my remarks mainly to Senator Davies.

As has been stated, Senator Davies' sudden death was a great shock to all of us, particularly so when hardly a week ago he motored from Toronto to Ottawa to attend the funeral of our late Governor General, and he sat with us some two hours in the Basilica during the ceremony. He appeared to be in perfect health, and I was very much pleased to have a short visit with him and his wife after the funeral and before they left to return to Toronto. He was planning to be in Ottawa today; his death was, therefore, wholly unexpected by himself.

Although Senator Davies came to Canada in 1894 and made his home here and had his business interests here, he also kept a foothold in Wales by purchasing in later years a fine estate on the outskirts of Welshpool in North-Wales where he was born, and he made it a point to spend part of each summer there. After the Coronation in 1953 my wife and I visited him and his devoted wife, Margaret, in that lovely Welshpool home. It is one weekend we will always remember.

Senator Davies was a journalist and newspaperman of the old school, and the training he had received in the newspaper business made him a very valuable senator. Right up to the time of his death he took a most active part in the work of this house, and he will be greatly missed by all of us.

Throughout his life he stood foursquare for:

Whatsoever things were true,
Whatsoever things were honest,
Whatsoever things were just,
Whatsoever things were pure,
Whatsoever things were lovely,
Whatsoever things were gracious and of good report.

What more can be said of anyone?

His life was an inspiration to all young people who wish to succeed and make something of themselves. He frequently stated that success is not achieved by leaning on social aid, but by working hard and saving money.

Honourable senators, to his dear wife, his sons, his grandchildren and other relatives we extend our deepest sympathy in their great loss.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, with the news of Senator McLean's death on Sunday night I was brought to the realization that of the four senators called to the Senate from New Brunswick in 1945 I am the only one left. Senator Pirie died in 1957, Senator Veniot retired last year and now, with Senator McLean's death, I alone remain of that group.

This sad event brings with it feelings of sorrow and sadness. Perhaps more than any other body I know of, the Senate makes us conscious of the quick passage of time with the removal from our midst of many wise and constant friends.

I knew Senator McLean for a great many years. The Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) and the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) have described with eloquence his achievements and attributes. It is therefore not necessary for me to add much to what they have said.

New Brunswick has lost one of its outstanding businessmen. As Senator Brooks said, Senator McLean started in the Bank of New Brunswick and became a manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Then, grasping an opportunity to purchase an old established fish business in New Brunswick, Messrs. Connors of Black Harbour, he and his brother created a modern community in that area and built the business up to such immense proportions that its products are now sold in every nation of the world.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) described Senator McLean as a man of New Brunswick. I would say he was a man of Canada, and even beyond its borders. He was a man of the United States, and his many business friends and other acquaintances were to be found in all parts of both countries. On occasion he would speak of his conversations and associations with various individuals in New York and Washington. I believe he was well known all over this continent. In his death New Brunswick has lost one of its foremost businessmen.

I want to join with others in extending to Mrs. McLean and the family my deepest sympathy. In doing so I would like to add that with all his business dealings Senator McLean was interested in many charities in New Brunswick, many more than people realized. I know of many charitable acts of the late Senator McLean. I am sure his right hand did these things without the knowledge of his left.

Senator Davies had also been a member of the Senate for all the years I have been here. He was a wonderful character. I knew him before I was appointed to the Senate, because he used to come to New Brunswick to visit a mutual friend, Mr. Howard P. Robinson, who was at that time owner of the Telegraph Journal. Senator Davies was a great friend of Mr. Robinson, and I met him at his home on more than one occasion. Our friendship grew over the years he was a member of the Senate, and it was always a delight to meet him, to listen to him and to converse with him.

I recall that on occasion Rupert Davies used to make vigorous and able speeches in this chamber, as Senator Brooks recalled. This reminiscence might please Senator Grattan O'Leary. When talking about the press on one occasion, Senator Davies described the Ottawa Journal as one of the best newspapers in Canada.

In his chosen career his rise was meteoric, as was outlined by Senator Ross Macdonald. His life story should be published all over this nation so that our Canadian youth may see what a young immigrant boy can accomplish in this great land of ours.

I join with other honourable senators in deploring his death; we shall miss him greatly in the Senate. I extend to his wife and family my deepest sympathy.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Tremblay has been substituted for that of Mr. Berger on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National and Royal Anthems.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Custodian of Enemy Property for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 3 of the Trading with the Enemy (Transitional Powers) Act, chapter 24, Statutes of Canada, 1947. (English and French texts).

Report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and Statement of Accounts certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 27(3) of the Bank of Canada Act, chapter 13, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1953-54. (English and French texts.)

Copy of Extradition Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the State of Israel, done at Ottawa, March 10, 1967. (English and French texts).

Supplementary Estimates (F) and (G) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967. (English and French texts).

Report by the Tariff Board, dated November 15, 1966, relative to the Investigation ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting Machinery and Equipment for Fresh Fruit or Fresh Vegetables, Reference No. 137 (English and French texts), together with a copy of the transcript of the evidence presented at public hearings (English text), pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act, chapter 261, R.S.C., 1952.

Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Secretary of State of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of State Act, chapter 77, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL RELATIONS

NOTICE OF MEETING

On the Order for Reports of Committees:

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, particularly for the benefit of those who are not members of the Standing Committee on External Relations, and consequently have not received a notice of the meeting, might I remark that the Honourable Paul Martin, Secretary of State for External Affairs, will appear before the committee at 9.30 tomorrow morning. First he will make a statement on NATO. He will then be prepared to answer questions on various aspects of our external relations. I extend a special invitation to all members of the Senate to be present at this meeting.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND LABOUR

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Hastings be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Leave having been given to proceed with Order No. 4.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett moved the second reading of Bill S-57, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Museums of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the short title of Bill S-57 is the National Museums Act. Having regard to the cartoon that appeared in one of the Ottawa papers a few days ago in reference to Senator McCutcheon's retirement from this house, which portrayed the Senate as a geriatrics club, I should like to suggest that the newspapers will probably have a field day with the fact that we are introducing here a museums bill. For the benefit of that cartoonist I should like to make one or two observations.

First, there is a considerable breadth of age among the members of the Senate. I am still in my thirties, and although I have been a member of this house for only some four months I should like to give that cartoonist some of my impressions of my older colleagues. I have listened to the forensic art of senators like Senator Grattan O'Leary. I have read of the political acumen of senators like Senator Power. I am aware of the intense concern for humanity by senators like Senator Croll. And, my feelings towards the older members were summed up the other day when I listened to the magnificent speech given by Senator Norman Paterson. Here was a speech that displayed wisdom and experience, and also a youthful faith in Canada that would be the envy of any member of my generation.

Honourable senators, this bill establishes a corporation to be known as the National Museums of Canada. It will comprise a national gallery, a human history museum which includes the war museum, a natural history museum, a science and technology museum which includes the air museum, and other museums which may be added from time to time to the corporation.

The present situation is that the national gallery derives its power from the National Gallery Act of 1913. The museums, as we know them, have three branches—natural history, human history and science and technology—and they derive their powers from the Northern Affairs and Natural Resources Act, but under the 1964 Transfer of Duties Act the control of museums passed from the Department of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources to the Secretary of State.

What are the shortcomings of the present situation? First of all, the National Gallery Act needs overhauling because in it we are dealing with administrative provisions that are 50 years old and which were developed for another era. In that act we find there is considerable overlapping by the national gallery in the areas that are the rightful property of other institutions, and the worst overlapping takes place in the area that is covered by the Canada Council. Since the control of museums was transferred to the Secretary of State there has been no centralized control for administration.

Honourable senators, an examination was made of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, and this disclosed that what was required was a centralized control of all museums, including even the National Gallery, for it was found that a national gallery is in fact a museum of fine arts. Therefore, this bill repeals the National Gallery Act, and the corporation it sets up will take over the assets of the present national gallery.

This examination of the Smithsonian Institution indicated that a single citizens' board was required, and the board would be able to call upon professional advice. It indicated that proper administrative and financial controls were required.

One of the most important things that the examination indicated was that there should be autonomy in the directors of the various museums and galleries comprising the corporation.

The proposed solution, honourable senators, is found in this bill. It calls for a single board of trustees composed not of experts but of citizens representing the various aspects of Canadian life. This board of trustees can appoint consultative committees of professional people to advise it in the areas in which it is not completely informed. There are four directors: a director of the national gallery, a director of the natural history museum, a director of the human history museum, and a director of the science and technology museum. There is also a secretary-general who will look after financial and administrative affairs.

I should like for a moment to concern myself with some of the detail regarding the board of trustees, the directors, and the secretary-general.

The board is appointed by order in council. It will have a chairman and a vice-chairman, who may be appointed for a maximum term of five years. Two members of the board must be the director of the Canada Council and the president of the National Research Council.

The board itself has ten members appointed for a period of four years, but in order to create a rotation the initial appointments shall be three members for two years, three members for three years, and four members for four years. One provision states that after two consecutive terms, twelve months must elapse before either the chairman or the vice-chairman, or any member of the board, other than the director of the Canada Council and the president of the National Research Council, can be appointed to the same position.

The powers of the board are as follows: They may recommend to the Governor in Council the appointment and salaries of the directors of the various museums. They may also recommend the establishment of other museums. And it is contemplated in this act that as time goes on other museums, other organizations, will be brought under the aegis of this corporation. This same board of directors may authorize the purchases of objects for the various collections in the museums; they may authorize sales, exchanges and disposals of objects in the collections; and so far as sales, exchanges and disposals are concerned, the recommendation of the particular director of the museum involved is required. The board may dispose of articles in the collection so long as they are not articles that were given to the corporation or under the terms of a trust. In order to facilitate disposals, the Surplus Crown Assets Act does not apply to this particular corporation.

The board may authorize the compliance with trusts. It can accept gifts or bequests. and by virtue of this act is a charitable organization under the terms of the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act. In fact, what we are setting up here is a national trust where people can make gifts and bequests and have an exemption under the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act.

Further, the corporation may make by-laws, with ministerial approval, for the regulation of its proceedings and for the establishment of its consultative committees. It can lay down by by-law the duties of the directors of the various museums and of the secretary-general and for the remuneration of the board and consulters.

So far as the directors of the museums are concerned, there are four: a director of the national gallery, a director of the natural history museum, a director of the human history museum, and a director of the museum of science and technology. The only thing that appears to be important in this act so far as the directors are concerned is that they are given complete charge of the professional matters pertaining to their particular museum.

The secretary-general, who is appointed by order in council, is not permitted to interfere in any way with the carrying out of the powers of the directors. The secretary-general is responsible to the board primarily for the financial administration.

Finally, the staff: There is no specific reference in the act to the staff, and for that reason they come under the Public Service Employment Act.

Honourable senators, this is not a financial bill. Administrative expenses are handled by parliamentary appropriation. Three accounts are to be set up in the Consolidated Revenue Fund. There is to be a purchases account, to which is credited parliamentary appropriations, sales of objects of the collection, interest on funds and to which is charged purchases of objects for the collection. There is to be a trust account to which is credited gifts and incomes from those gifts, and sales in accordance with the trusts, and to which is to be charged purchases in accordance with the terms of the trusts. The third account is to be a special account which will take appropriations from Parliament for the dissemination of materials, reproductions, catalogues, and so forth.

The corporation is not permitted by this act to spend beyond the balance of any one of these accounts. It is in fact a departmental corporation. It comes under the control of the Treasury Board. It is an agent of the Crown, except in the case of legal proceedings, when it becomes like any other corporation. It is audited annually by the Auditor General, and the chairman is required to report annually to the Minister who in turn reports to Parliament within 15 days after receipt of that report.

Finally, honourable senators, we come to what I think is the most important section of this bill, section 5. It outlines the purposes and powers of the corporation, and reads as follows:

> The purposes of the corporation are to demonstrate the products of nature and the works of man, with special but not exclusive reference to Canada, so as to promote interest therein throughout Canada and to disseminate knowledge thereof.

Honourable senators, while we may set up a corporation, and while it may have all the powers to do the things that it should do, it seems to me that we should be concerned really with what it will accomplish. This corporation should strive to accomplish four objectives.

The first, to educate. The operative word in section 5 is to "demonstrate". People are flocking to galleries and museums in unprecedented numbers. This is the age of education. Our citizens want a superior education and they mean to get it. They are educated by books, by lectures, by conversation. However, there is no substitute for education by actual demonstration.

The second objective, it seems to me, is to stimulate similar activities in other parts of the nation. By the end of this centennial year we shall have an unprecedented number of museums and galleries throughout the Dominion of Canada. It is one thing to build them, and many communities are doing this, but it is another thing to make them worth while and to make them successful. Many of them are going to need considerable help; they are going to need research, travelling exhibitions, training, and professional and technical help. This corporation is equipped to provide just that.

The third objective which this corporation should have in mind is to enhance our National Capital. It seems to me that the seat of government of a nation should be a place of beauty, a place of considerable interest, and, more than anything, it should reflect the culture of the nation.

Finally, the most important area that I can see for accomplishment for this corporation, is to develop a pride in our country. If we can demonstrate to Canadians the struggle which was involved in creating this country, if we can show the contribution of the many races that make up Canada, if we can cause the people to realize what sort of a future this country really has, if we can compare our cultural achievements with the cultural achievements of the rest of the world, we can help to develop the confidence that makes a country really great.

Honourable senators, this museum bill is a small matter, and yet to educate is to create an understanding. Through understanding we might just move towards truth. To move a nation one inch towards truth is to justify the work of a lifetime.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish only to congratulate the sponsor of this bill and then to move the adjournment of the debate.

This bill comes as quite a surprise to most members in this house. As there are many of us who would like to study it before commenting on it; I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS BILL, 1967

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-277 is certainly a complicated measure from the point of view of draftsmanship.

Before I attempt an explanation, I would suggest that we have in mind that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for detailed study.

This bill deals with the fiscal relationships between the federal authorities and the provincial authorities. In a sense it does not affect the taxpayer directly, though it does affect him indirectly. It is not like the Income Tax Act, where the taxpayer is directly concerned with provisions which affect him personally. It is based upon policies which have been discussed in the Tax Structure Committee and discussed also at the federal-provincial conference in October of 1966.

There were six principles propounded at those meetings, which I think can be summarized in this way:

1. That arrangements between the federal-provincial levels should give each level of government adequate access to tax sources to discharge their respective responsibilities.

2. That each level of government should, as far as possible, levy its own taxes by taking into account that the establishment of the nation under a federal constitution creates a very special situation.

3. The principle of equalization grants by the federal Government should be recognized to enable all provinces to provide an adequate level of public service consistent with existing social requirements.

4. The federal authority should at all times have both theoretical and practical authority to discharge its full responsibilities.

5. The federal-provincial arrangements should enshrine the principle of the uniform application of federal laws in every province of Canada.

6. There should be co-operation in the establishment of policies and of priorities in federal-provincial arrangements.

Some provincial programs are of exceptional priority. Education is one of those. To enable the provinces to cope with the national emergency that exists in the field of education, and in which they have jurisdiction, amendments to the Income Tax Act now pending provide for federal abatements in the personal income tax of from 24 percentage points to 28 percentage points and in the corporate income tax from 9 percentage points to 10 percentage points.

This bill does more than that. It includes equalization payments, but somewhat different from those which were originally established in 1956. It includes also special adjustment payments.

Heretofore, equalization payments were designed to assist the poorer provinces. The method used to provide these payments was, first of all, to select certain percentages of the personal income tax, of the corporate income tax, and of the succession duty levels, and to equalize the yield from these three fields to the two top provinces. The method proposed in this bill is to consider all provincial revenues at average provincial rates, to bring the yield in all the provinces up to the national average yield, and then to reduce it to a per capita basis.

Honourable senators, I have caused to be distributed a table which illustrates a comparison of fiscal allocations under the present and proposed new arrangements for fiscal transfers in respect of post-secondary education costs. This table shows in the first part the present arrangements as estimated for the year 1966-67, and in the second part the new arrangements as estimated for the year 1967-68.

If I may have permission of the Senate at this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to place this table on Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is permission granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows)

ILLUSTRATIVE COMPARISON OF FISCAL ALLOCATIONS UNDER PRESENT AND PROPOSED NEW ARRANGEMENTS FOR FISCAL TRANSFER IN RESPECT OF POST SECONDARY EDUCATION COSTS

TABLE I

PRESENT ARRANGEMENTS 1966–67 (ESTIMATED)
(millions)

Provinces	Population June 1, 1966	University grants[1] $5.00 per capita (Interim arrangements)	TVT[2] operating and capital	Total allocations
		$	$	$
Newfoundland	0.5	2.2	1.1	3.3
Prince Edward Island	0.1	0.6	0.2	0.8
Nova Scotia	0.8	5.1	4.1	9.2
New Brunswick	0.6	4.0	3.4	7.4
Quebec	5.7	28.9	68.3	97.2
Ontario	6.9	33.4	63.7	97.1
Manitoba	0.9	5.1	4.8	9.9
Saskatchewan	0.9	4.5	4.5	9.0
Alberta	1.5	7.0	7.3	14.3
British Columbia	1.9	8.9	12.9	21.8
TOTAL	19.8	99.7	170.3	270.0

TABLE II

NEW ARRANGEMENTS 1967–68 (ESTIMATED)
(millions)

Provinces	Fiscal transfer[3] re post secondary education operating expenditures	TVT capital "Phase Out"	Total
	$	$	$
Newfoundland	7.7	0.8	8.5
Prince Edward Island	1.7	0.8	2.5
Nova Scotia	13.7	6.0	19.7
New Brunswick	9.5	2.0	11.5
Quebec	106.0	45.0	151.0
Ontario	112.7	40.0	152.7
Manitoba	17.8	5.0	22.8
Saskatchewan	15.6	7.0	22.6
Alberta	30.3	7.0	37.3
British Columbia	30.6	8.0	38.6
TOTAL	345.6	121.6	467.2

[1] Per capita grants in 1966–67 involve use of out of province student factor in calculating provincial allocations. The province of Quebec, under the interim arrangements, receives a tax abatement together with an adjustment grant, the total value of which is equivalent to $5 per capita.

[2] Does not include adult operating or capital expenditures under TVT programs.

[3] The value of the fiscal transfer in respect of post secondary education operating costs was calculated according to which was of greater value to a province: $15 per capita or 50 per cent of operating costs of post secondary education, as illustrated in Table III.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps I should point out that the result of the proposed measure is that heretofore the total allocations in respect of university grants and technical and vocational training programs have amounted to some $270 million, or will, it is estimated, total that in 1966-67. The comparable estimate for the fiscal year 67-68 is $467.2 million, an increase of almost $200 million.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: But that is a temporary increase.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. Perhaps I could come to that point, because there will be a phasing out of the technical and vocational training program for another reason. May I deal first with post-secondary educational adjustments? Until now federal assistance has been given in the field of education, beginning in 1951 at the rate of 50 cents per head of population in the province. It is now at the level of $5 per head of student population. Heretofore it has been paid to provincially certified institutions at the post-secondary level—that is, above matriculation—through the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, formerly known as the Canadian University Foundation.

Under this legislation the payments which are to be made by the federal Government shall be made directly to the provinces, to enable them to expand in the field under the authority they have under Section 93 of the British North America Act. These payments will assist the provinces in dealing with the problems attendant upon their rising costs in higher education.

When I speak of higher education in the context of this bill, I mean education given above the junior matriculation level in courses that are of at least 24 weeks duration and that are designated by the provinces.

It is proposed that the plan come into operation on April 1 of this year and that the amounts to be transferred will be either 50 per cent of the operating expenses of these institutions of higher education or $15 per head of the provincial population, whichever is the greater.

There are, of course, provisions for abatement, and I have already made a short reference to that. The operating expenses, 50 per cent of which will be paid under these federal allocations, will exclude student financial aid costs; capital costs for planning, land, equipment and the like; interest and principal on capital debt; depreciation; any ancillary enterprises like residences, cafeterias, book stores, stadia which may be rented; sports costs and the like; and any rental costs incurred by the universities for buildings.

There will also be deducted from the amounts paid by the federal authority to the provincial authorities any amounts paid for assisted, sponsored or contracted research, or grants from the Canada Council and other similar federal sources.

There is provision in the bill also for a method of determining the operating costs of these institutions. This would include the taking of certificates from the provincial authorities with respect to the amounts of these costs.

There is provision for reports of auditors with respect to the costs incurred for the operation of these institutions.

There is a provision, too, in the event of a failure of an institution to file a return, to enable the federal authority to use such data as seems appropriate for the purpose of making the allocation or grant.

The Comptroller of the Treasury is authorized to require additional reports and information in respect of the program as he may require them, and the payments are to be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I have also caused to be distributed to all honourable senators a table showing the basis of calculation of the proposed 1967-68 federal fiscal transfers to provinces in respect to post-secondary education. I would ask permission at this stage of my remarks to be allowed to place this table on the Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is that Table 3?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It bears the numeral III. Perhaps I could place the table on Hansard now and point out some of the headings that are there.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows)

TABLE III

BASIS OF CALCULATION OF PROPOSED 1967-68 FEDERAL FISCAL TRANSFERS TO PROVINCES IN RESPECT OF POST SECONDARY EDUCATION COSTS

($,000's)

Provinces	Estimated population 1	Estimated operating costs of universities 2	Other post-secondary estimated operating costs 3	Total 4	50 per cent of estimated operating costs 5	Value of $15 per capita 6	Amount of proposed fiscal transfer 7	Addition of technical and vocational training capital "Phase-Out" 8	Grand total 9
Newfoundland	515	4,935	1,807	6,742	3,371	7,700	7,700	800	8,500
Prince Edward Island	111	1,489	630	2,119	1,059	1,700	1,700	800	2,500
Nova Scotia	768	22,360	4,976	27,336	13,668	11,500	13,668	6,000	19,688
New Brunswick	634	13,295	2,939	16,234	8,117	9,500	9,500	2,000	11,500
Quebec	5,861	151,615	60,454	213,069	106,034	87,900	106,034	45,000	151,034
Ontario	7,045	179,586	45,909	225,495	112,747	105,700	112,747	40,000	152,747
Manitoba	971	29,035	6,631	35,666	17,833	14,600	17,833	5,000	22,833
Saskatchewan	965	23,471	7,766	31,237	15,618	14,500	15,618	7,000	22,618
Alberta	1,497	43,289	17,397	60,686	30,343	22,400	30,343	7,000	37,323
British Columbia	1,906	53,125	8,126	61,251	30,626	28,600	30,626	8,000	38,626
TOTAL	20,273	522,200	156,635	678,835	339,417	304,100	345,769	121,600	467,389

NOTES:

(1) Includes costs of post secondary courses of study in technical institutes, teachers' colleges etc, and of "senior matriculation" courses.

(2) The arrangement is that the provinces will receive the greater of columns 5 or 6.

(3) Column 7 indicates the amounts to be transferred to the provinces on the basis of estimated total operating expenditures. When actual expenditures are subsequently known, a final settlement will be made with those provinces to which the per cent formula applies.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: These are the same tables as are on the Commons Hansard, I take it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): These tables are on the Commons Hansard, yes. I hope I am not out of order saying that, because we are not supposed to quote them. However, I have put them on the Senate Hansard for our own information and guidance.

Honourable senators will see in this Table III figures which are important in respect of the calculation of the amounts to be supplied by the federal authority, because they include the estimated population by provinces, and for each province the estimated operating costs of the universities. Also there is estimated the cost of operating other post-secondary educational institutions.

The total is computed; 50 per cent of the estimated operating costs is computed; another computation is made of the amount that could be transferred, if the province chose to take its allocation on the basis of $15 per capita. Column 7 indicates what the likely choice would be, because the province has an option here. It can take the larger of the latter two amounts.

Then there is also given a column which shows the addition of technical and vocational training costs expected to be incurred in 1967-68, and which indicates that in time these programs will be phased out.

If the provinces should select 50 per cent of the estimated operating costs, it will be seen that the total of the federal transfer would be some $339 million. If the $15 per capita choice is made the total would be $304 million. In fact, the total is more likely to be, because of the options that I have referred to, some $345 million, and that together with the allowance in the technical and vocational training program to be phased out in 1967-68 will be some $467 million.

May I say, honourable senators, that this bill repeats some of the provisions included in the 1961 legislation on the same subject, providing for federal provincial agreements to permit the federal authority to collect the taxes on behalf of the provinces, to enforce deductions and withholding provisions in respect of such taxes as required by provincial law, and to make advance payments to provinces on account of the payments that are expected to be made in the course of the fiscal year.

I am only going to point out that clause 23 of the bill provides for the making of regulations, and for the provision thereby of definitions for such terms as revenue base, revenue source, junior matriculation, post-secondary education, assisted, sponsored or contract research, and operating expenditures. These I will deal with in detail later.

Regulations will also be made with respect to the payments of advances to provinces under the tax collection agreements, and the adjustments, as well as the equalization and stabilization payments to which I shall refer. Regulations will also govern the keeping of accounts and generally they may provide for the due carrying out of the provisions of the bill.

Clause 24 deals with the proposals with respect to contracting out. At the present time the Province of Quebec is the only province which has contracted out of any of these joint programs. Clause 24 provides that any province which before September 30, 1967 should contract out in respect of the health grants program and enjoys a tax abatement therefor shall continue to have that right until the 31st March 1970. In other words there is an extension of this right for a further period of five years.

May I draw your attention, honourable senators, to the provincial revenue stabilization payments. These are dealt with generally in clauses 4 and 10 of the bill. The purpose of these payments is to place a floor to provincial revenues. Generally speaking, the floor—if I may use a layman's expression to describe it—will be 95 per cent of the general net revenue of a province in the fiscal year immediately preceding the year in which the floor has to be applied. The floor means that the federal authorities will guarantee that no provincial revenues will drop below 95 per cent of the previous year's revenue. Certainly, such a guarantee will help provincial offerings in the market when they must resort to the market for funds. The figures for the purpose of computing the stabilization payments are to be the figures as reported to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, but if a province in any given year should change its rate of taxation in a given area or change the structure of its tax—for example if it dropped the sales tax or some other tax—adjustments in the stabilization payment formula will be required. Sometimes those adjustments must be made over a period of years. For example, in the case of some provinces, if there is a windfall in a given year in respect of the sale of gas or oil rights, then there is provision in clause 10 (2) for making an adjustment that would not affect the provinces too drastically.

Honourable senators, may I deal with succession duty payments briefly. They are referred to in clause 5 of the bill. In a word, the present arrangement continues in force. That arrangement is that a province which levies no succession duties—and there are seven of them since only British Columbia, Quebec and Ontario do levy succession duties—will get the basic estate tax under the provisions of clause 5 (3) of this bill; that is, 75 per cent of the estate tax collected federally in connection with the estates opening in a province. This was the percentage which was agreed on in the federal-provincial agreement of 1964. In 1961 the allocation was 50 per cent.

Provinces which levy succession duties, however—and they are British Columbia, Quebec and Ontario—and do not increase the succession duty rates beyond those in effect on March 31, 1964, get 25 per cent of the estate tax levied federally.

As honourable senators who are lawyers know, in the case of Ontario, estates subject to estate tax get a 50 per cent abatement on their Ontario tax and Ontario gets an additional 25 per cent direct payment. In the case of British Columbia the abatement is 75 per cent.

Now, honourable senators, if I seem to have been confusing and mystifying up to this point in my explanation of this bill, you ain't heard nothing yet!

I would like to place on record at this point another table which I have caused to be distributed to honourable senators. Unfortunately, it is also designated Table II. It is headed "Estimated General Equalization 1966-67 Illustrating for Selected Revenue Sources the Manner of Determining the Entitlement of the Provinces to General Equalization."

May I put this table on the record at this point in my remarks?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows)

TABLE II

ESTIMATED GENERAL EQUALIZATION 1966-67 ILLUSTRATING FOR SELECTED REVENUE SOURCES THE MANNER OF DETERMINING THE ENTITLEMENT OF THE PROVINCES TO GENERAL EQUALIZATION

		Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
1. Population	(000)	503	108	759	626	5,733	6,868	959	953	1,459	1,850	19,818
2. Personal Income Tax
(a) Provincial Revenue	($'000)											846,154
(b) Revenue Base	($'000)	19,238	3,808	43,426	29,954	515,140	930,876	83,494	73,462	133,558	226,510	2,059,466
(c) National Average Provincial Revenue Rate	$											.410861
(d) Yield at Nat. Avg. Prov. Revenue Rate	($'000)	7,904	1,565	17,842	12,307	211,651	382,460	34,304	30,183	54,874	93,064	846,154
3. Corporation Income Tax
(a) Provincial Revenue [1]												545,936
(b) Revenue Base	($'000)	82,668	7,935	74,900	66,942	1,114,861	1,843,213	186,856	126,967	281,423	467,069	4,252,834
(c) National Average Provincial Revenue Rate	$											.128370
(d) Yield at Nat. Avg. Prov. Revenue Rate	($'000)	10,612	1,019	9,615	8,593	143,115	236,612	23,987	16,299	36,126	59,958	545,936
4. Alcoholic Beverage Revenues
(a) Provincial Revenue [1]	($'000)											362,989
(b) Revenue Base	('000 gals.)	10,493	4,621	32,100	25,571	218,167	387,721	46,267	42,517	70,004	114,131	951,592
(c) National Average Provincial Revenue Rate	($ per gal.)											.38145
(d) Yield at Nat. Avg. Prov. Revenue Rate	($'000)	5,003	1,763	12,245	9,754	83,221	147,897	17,649	16,218	26,703	43,536	362,989
5. Oil Royalties
(a) Provincial Revenue [1]	($'000)											76,319
(b) Revenue Base	($'000)	—	—	—	7	—	4,014	10,297	186,172	450,187	23,262	673,939
(c) National Average Provincial Revenue Rate	$											.113243
(d) Yield at Nat. Avg. Prov. Revenue Rate	($'000)	—	—	—	1	—	455	1,166	21,083	50,980	2,634	76,319

TABLE II—(Concluded)

ESTIMATED GENERAL EQUALIZATION 1966-67 ILLUSTRATING FOR SELECTED REVENUE SOURCES THE MANNER OF DETERMINING THE ENTITLEMENT OF THE PROVINCES TO GENERAL EQUALIZATION

		Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
6. Yield at National Average Province Revenue Rate for the other 12 revenue sources
(a) Succession Duties and Shares of Estate Tax	($'000)	1,108	225	2,602	3,152	44,120	66,210	4,163	2,652	6,479	14,851	145,562
(b) General Sales Tax	($'000)	15,546	4,658	33,252	25,551	275,311	409,130	50,994	55,031	93,083	118,523	1,081,079
(c) Motor Fuel Tax	($'000)	9,017	3,963	21,921	16,068	183,512	283,755	36,391	42,571	62,643	69,755	729,596
(d) Motor Vehicle Revenues	($'000)	2,879	1,265	6,998	5,129	58,581	90,580	11,617	13,590	19,997	22,267	232,903
(e) Forestry Revenues	($'000)	2,406	163	2,275	5,358	24,689	14,461	996	1,036	3,607	43,826	98,817
(f) Natural Gas Royalties	($'000)	—	—	—	13	—	681	—	492	17,686	1,576	20,448
(g) Sales of Crown Leases and Reservations on oil and natural gas lands	($'000)	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,372	83,552	9,547	100,471
(h) Other Oil & Gas Revenues	($'000)	—	—	—	—	—	—	139	7,724	52,886	11,618	72,367
(i) Metallic and Non-Metallic Minerals	($'000)	3,923	—	672	161	18,664	22,731	1,410	3,307	84	6,171	57,123
(j) Water power rentals	($'000)	765	—	241	341	18,785	10,060	1,600	456	299	5,159	37,706
(k) Other Provincial Taxes	($'000)	7,122	1,446	11,631	8,968	111,923	177,941	20,923	18,055	31,278	46,134	435,421
(l) Miscellaneous Provincial Revenues	($'000)	3,999	812	6,531	5,036	62,848	99,920	11,749	10,139	17,563	25,906	244,503
7. Total Yield at National Average Provincial Revenue Rates:
(a) for all revenue sources	($'000)	69,284	16,879	125,825	100,432	1,236,420	1,942,893	217,088	246,208	557,840	574,525	5,087,394
(b) per capita	$	137.74	156.29	165.78	160.43	215.67	282.89	226.37	258.35	382.34	310.55	256.71
8. General Equalization
(a) Deficiency per capita from per capita average for all provinces ($256.71)	$	118.97	100.42	90.93	96.28	41.04	—	30.34	—	—	—
(b) General Equalization Applicable	($'000)	59,842	10,845	69,016	60,271	235,282	—	29,096	—	—	—	464,352
9. Guaranteed Equalization Atlantic Provinces and Saskatchewan	($'000)	48,159	14,071	60,672	55,228	—	—	—	26,438	—	—	204,568
10. Equalization Payment (higher of 8 (b) or 9)	($'000)	59,842	14,071	69,016	60,271	235,282	—	29,096	26,438	—	—	494,016
11. Equalization and Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants payable in 1966-67 under present legislation	($'000)	37,659	10,571	50,172	44,728	150,378	—	27,657	33,047	—	—	354,212

(a) Sources: Provincial Budget Estimates and Department of Finance.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope when I have finished my remarks that Senator McDonald may have some idea of what it means, but I am not saying that categorically because I am not entirely sure that I can make it clear. Let me just say that in one day I spent eight full hours on this one point in an attempt to reduce it to understandable language—I mean language understandable to me.

General equalization payments are covered by clauses 3, 7, 8 and 9 of the bill. They are designed to help what has been termed the "have-not" provinces, which are all the provinces with the exception of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario. The first point I wish to deal with is—and you will see a reference to it in item 2 (b) of the table which I have just referred to—the "revenue base." The revenue base is the taxable potential rates for each province at the provincial rates for 16 various categories of tax sources.

Honourable senators will see from that table what I mean by "16 potential tax sources." Item No. 2 refers to personal income tax; No. 3, corporation income tax; No. 4, alcoholic beverage revenues; No. 5, oil royalties. Item No. 6 lists other sources of revenue from (a) to (l), including succession duties and shares of estate tax, general sales tax, through to miscellaneous provincial revenues.

Those are the 16 categories of tax sources to which this revenue base has been applied. The revenue base is considered to be the revenue capacity or tax capacity of the province for any one of those categories using the same standards for all the provinces of Canada. It was discussed at the Tax Structure Committee and the provinces agreed that the revenue base, which is computed in these tables for four of those categories, was the most suitable for each of the revenue sources considered. The revenue base is not the actual revenue received, but it is a computed figure for the purpose of working out a formula to determine the amount of the equalization payments.

Now may I attempt to describe this formula? The first action taken is to determine the actual national average provincial rate for each category. In the category of personal income tax, under item 2(c), in the last column, the figure is 0.410861. That is the national average provincial revenue rate for personal income tax.

The next step is to multiply the base for each province by the actual national average provincial rate. In the case of the Province of Ontario the base, in the field of personal income tax in line 2(b), is $930,876,000. That figure, multiplied by the national average provincial rate of 0.410861, produces the yield at the national average provincial rate for Ontario, in the field of personal income tax, in the amount of $382,460,000, and that figure appears in the Ontario column under item 2(d).

The same calculation is made in respect of each of the 16 tax categories to which I have already referred. If honourable senators will examine the table they will see that each average yield is far below the base itself. For example, in the field of personal income tax, in 1966-67 the Ontario base is $930,876,000, but the average, as computed in accordance with the description I have already given, is $382,460,000. For Prince Edward Island, honourable senators will see that the base is $3,808,000—in column 2(c) under P.E.I.—and that the average yield is $1,565,000.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: This is a fictional figure to get a factor to apply.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, this is a fictional figure for the purpose of getting a factor to apply, and it was worked out by tax experts who must be geniuses in the field of mathematics, comparable to Einstein himself.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Where is the fictional figure here? Is it on this form? I would like to see it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. As a matter of fact, I think it may be fair to say the figures I have been talking about so far are not fictional figures but computed figures.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: All right. Where are the computed figures?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): These are the figures to which I have been referring. All these figures to which I have referred so far have come from the computation I am attempting to describe.

The next step that is taken is to compute the total yield from the 16 categories of potential income sources in each of the provinces at the national average provincial rates. This figure is then reduced to a per capita figure for each province. For example, in the case of Ontario—and this will appear in item 7(b), under the figures for Ontario—it is $282.89. Prince Edward Island is another example. The figure in that case is $156.29. That too is in line 7(b), under the heading "P.E.I."

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Is not that figure in 7(b) for Ontario an actual calculation?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is an actual calculation based upon the computed figures that I described earlier, but you must start with the computed figures to reach this point in the calculation.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: You are taking the highest and the lowest provinces, are you?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am, for the purpose of trying to point up some of the features of this table. But I would point up the figure at the end of line 7(b), which is the national average per capita figure as computed, and that is $256.71.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: That is the national average provincial rate?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is the national figure.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: In column 7?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is the national average at provincial rates.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: At provincial rates?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, that is right.

The next step in the computation is to take the per capita figure for each province and compare it to the national average per capita figure.

The national average per capita figure is $256.71. The per capita figure for Prince Edward Island is $156.29. So, the deficiency per capita in Prince Edward Island, compared to the per capita average for all of the provinces, is the difference between those two figures, or $100.42. This deficiency of $100.42 —I am taking Prince Edward Island only as an illustration—is then multiplied by the actual population of the Province of Prince Edward Island which is given as 108,000. That deficiency of $100.42 is multiplied by 108,000 to arrive at the general equalization payment applicable to Prince Edward Island of $10,845,000.

Honourable senators, this is the way the general equalization payment is computed for all of the provinces which fit into the formula, but there are exceptions. The national average per capita yield is, as I have said, $256.71, but the yield on the national average per capita rates for Ontario, Saskatchewan and British Columbia is higher than this average figure, and so for those provinces there are no general equalization payments to be made in the fiscal year under review in these tables.

There is another exception. Under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act of 1960-61 as amended, certain transfers were made to certain provinces. Under the new agreements these provinces are given the guaranteed option of remaining under the former act or of taking the general equalization payments provided by this act. In the case of the Atlantic provinces the gains under this act will be: for Newfoundland $11.6 million; Nova Scotia, $8.3 million; and New Brunswick, $5.04 million.

There is a further exception in section 7 (c), which refers to Saskatchewan. For the first time in many years—perhaps since the beginning of its history—Saskatchewan, due to the buoyancy of her revenues, is not entitled to equalization payments. Under the old act of 1960-61 she was entitled to some $33,047,000. For the purpose of phasing out this entitlement and softening the blow—because this is a substantial amount for a province like Saskatchewan—it is proposed to reduce this entitlement by 20 per cent per annum over a period of five years, at the end of which time Saskatchewan, being a "have" province, will get no further equalization payments. In 1967-68, for example, the amount will be 80 per cent of the $33 million-odd, or $26.4 million. In 1970-71 it will be 20 per cent of that amount, or $6.6 million.

Honourable senators, the hour is late and I feel I should apologize for the time I have taken in my attempt to put on the record an explanation of this very complicated piece of legislation. This is a bill that certainly should receive study in committee. The draftsmanship of the sections is admirable, but admirable to the point where they are almost unintelligible.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It might be a good thing to have a blackboard set up in the committee on which the departmental officials can write.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: They might bring in a computing machine.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not know of any other way by which this can be done. It is a matter of reducing a mathematical formula to legal language, and in such a way that the legal language will be made to stick. In my opinion, this has been accomplished.

I have tried to avoid references to the specific sections of the bill, and it is my hope that the tables I have used and the explanation I have given are of some help.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I propose to move the adjournment of the debate, but before doing so I should like to have a point clarified. Perhaps I misunderstood the honourable Leader of the Government. He referred to the guaranteed qualization as it applies to the Atlantic provinces, and I understood him to indicate that several of the Atlantic provinces benefited under it. From reading these figures I would say that the only province to benefit during this coming year is Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: It is a guarantee. It is a floor. It cannot go lower than that, except for Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes. As I read the figures every province except Prince Edward Island is above the floor.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, while the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) is preparing to answer that question perhaps I could ask a question that is supplementary to it.

Am I right in assuming that the special guarantee for the Atlantic provinces bears a relationship to the amount paid last year under the old agreement to which is added an amount equal to the 1966-67 share of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant? The guarantee is in the fact that the adjustment grant shall be continued, as well as there being a floor under the amount that any of the Atlantic provinces will get in the future regardless of business conditions and the ups and downs of the economic world. May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if that is his understanding of it too?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Are you talking of the stabilization payment?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I am talking of the special guarantee which applies to the Atlantic provinces, and which includes the benefits of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grant.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the answer to that is: Yes. I must confess that Senator McCutcheon may be right. Perhaps I may have an opportunity of looking at these papers and dealing with his question tomorrow. In any event, there will probably be many questions that occur to other honourable senators which, if I am unable to answer them in the chamber, can be answered in committee.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McCutcheon, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 15, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the following members of the House of Commons will serve on the part of that House on the Joint Committee on the Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda): Messrs. Baldwin, Forest, Gauthier, Klein, Leboe, Lewis, Mandziuk, Mongrain, Nasserden, Reid, Tolmie and Walker.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Orange has been substituted for that of Mr. Chatwood on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National and Royal Anthems.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report, dated February 17, 1967, of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission under the Combines Investigation Act, relating to the Supply and Sale of Eggs in Kingston and Collins Bay, Ontario. (English and French texts).

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Maurice Bourget, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the National Anthem and the Royal Anthem, presented the second report of the committee:

Your committee unanimously recommends that the Government be authorized to adopt forthwith the music for "O Canada" composed by Calixa Lavallee as the music for the National Anthem of Canada with the following notation added to the sheet music: With dignity, not too slowly.

Your committee unanimously recommends that the Government be authorized to adopt forthwith the traditional music of "God Save the Queen (King)" found in the public domain as the music for the Royal Anthem in Canada.

To remove all traces of commercialism which may attach to the playing of the National or Royal Anthems, your committee deems it essential that the Government take such steps as are necessary to appropriate the copyright to the music by providing that it shall belong to Her Majesty in right of Canada for all time and that no other person shall be entitled to copyright of the music or any arrangements or adaptations thereof.

With respect to the lyrics for the National and Royal Anthems, your committee is of the opinion that its Order of Reference is far too restrictive to permit the detailed study which this question deserves.

To do justice to all Canadians, many of whom have taken a personal interest in providing suggestions to your committee, it is recommended that the committee be empowered to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable and to retain such experts as may be required from time to time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Bourget moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 1212 to 1251, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS BILL, 1967

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before Senator McCutcheon commences his speech this afternoon, in fairness to him I should first apologize for fumbling with my papers last evening in connection with a question he asked me, having to do with the table entitled "Estimated General Equalization 1966-67," in respect of Prince Edward Island.

I had outlined during the course of my speech on the bill the advantage that accrued to the other three Maritime provinces. Senator McCutcheon asked me whether or not the guaranteed equalization would apply only to Prince Edward Island. The answer, of course, is "yes." I could not find it in the table at the time, and I apologize for having fumbled so much.

A number of honourable senators have expressed some interest in the names of denominational institutions of higher education which have qualified for university grants that have been heretofore administered. As honourable senators know—and I mentioned it in my speech last evening—the grants have been dispensed on the basis of provincial recommendations by the Canadian Universities Foundation, originally, and the successor body now.

I have before me a list of the institutions for the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which I would ask leave to have printed at this point in my remarks in today's Hansard.

Heretofore, the grants have been on the basis of $5 per head to these institutions. The money will not be funnelled in future through the Canadian Universities Foundation: it will go direct to the provinces. The amount will be, not $5 a head, but either $15 a head or 50 per cent of the operating cost of the universities. This will be done through the provincial authorities and not through the Canadian Universities Foundation, and the provinces will have the right to say what the per capita distribution will be.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that this list be printed in Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The list follows)

LIST BY PROVINCES OF DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGES ELIGIBLE TO RECEIVE FEDERAL PER CAPITA GRANTS—1966-1967

BRITISH COLUMBIA
- Anglican Theological College of British Columbia
- Notre Dame University of Nelson
- Union College of British Columbia

ALBERTA
- Camrose Lutheran Junior College
- Collège St-Jean
- St. Stephen's College
- St. Joseph's College

SASKATCHEWAN
- Campion College
- Collège Mathieu (Gravelbourg)
- College of Emmanuel and St. Chad
- Luther College
- Lutheran Theological Seminary
- Notre Dame College (Wilcox)
- St. Andrew's College
- St. Peter's College
- St. Thomas College
- St. Thomas More College

MANITOBA
- Collège de Saint-Boniface
- Grand Séminaire de Saint-Boniface
- St. John's College
- St. Paul's College
- United College

ONTARIO
- Assumption University (eligible but not in receipt of grants 1967-68)
- Brescia College
- Collège Bruyère
- King's College
- Collège de Cornwall
- Huron College
- Ignatius College
- Knox College
- Petit Séminaire d'Ottawa
- Queen's Theological College
- Regis College
- St. Augustine's College
- University of St. Jerome's College
- University of St. Michael's College

Université Saint Paul
St. Patrick's College
University of Trinity College
Victoria University
Waterloo Lutheran University
Wycliffe College

NEW BRUNSWICK

Mount Allison University
Université de Moncton
St. Thomas University

NOVA SCOTIA

Acadian University
Collège Sainte-Anne
Convent of the Sacred Heart
Holy Heart Seminary
Mount St. Vincent University
Pine Hill Divinity Hall
St. Francis Xavier University
Saint Mary's University
University of King's College

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

St. Dunstan's University

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, it is of course a work of supererogation to pay any compliments to the leader of this house on the manner in which he presents a more than complicated bill. Yet I do want to say that I for one appreciate very much the manner in which he presented this bill and the supplementary material, which could have been found elsewhere but which he assembled, placed before us and put on the record.

Subject to the fact that I am doubtful whether, even in committee, we will discover just how the revenue base is determined, I think anyone who reads Senator Connolly's remarks and who studies the material which he tabled will know what will be the result of the agreements that will be entered into pursuant to the authority contained in this bill between the provinces and the federal Government, and will know what the differences will be in the financial contribution to the provinces—with some exceptions, that I shall discuss later—between the last fiscal year and the coming fiscal year, and can project what may happen in the future.

Having said all that, all that the Leader of the Government did was describe the mechanics of the bill. He said—and technically it may be all he needed to say—that this is a bill to authorize the Government to enter into certain agreements with the provinces, these are the terms of the agreements, this is substantially what they will mean in dollars and cents.

But that is not the real significance of this bill. Its real significance lies in the extent to which it accomplishes its stated purposes.

The bill can be broken down into two principal parts: the equalization and stabilization payments, and the tax abatement provisions which are tied into post-secondary education. For myself, I approve of the principle of equalization payments; I believe that the principles upon which the bill is founded in this respect are sound and that by and large the formula is sound.

There are some persons who object to the formula, however, saying that equalization should not be based upon national averages but upon the former principle, which after all was to limit equalization to three sources of taxation—the estate tax, the personal income tax and the corporation tax—and equalize these up to the standard of the average of the highest two provinces or, preferably, from their point of view, up to the standard of the highest province.

People who say that—and this is one criticism that I have of this whole matter—overlook the fact that there is a very substantial measure of equalization automatically built into certain of the shared-cost programs.

Considering the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, for instance, the popular belief is that the federal Government pays each province one half of its cost. Of course that is not correct. The federal Government pays one-half of the national average, which means it pays something in the order of 70 per cent in certain provinces and something considerably less than 50 per cent in others. In other words, there is a large measure of equalization there. If one reads the proposed Medicare Bill, one will find a similar built-in measure of equalization.

The Premier of Ontario has already stated publicly that, if for no other reason than that, the Province of Ontario must look at the proposed measure very carefully before it agrees with it. It may be that we should drop some of the façades that have become very common in legislation in the last four years, and when we say we are going to pay 50 per cent of the costs we should pay them. Then, if we need it, let us have the equalization out on the table where we can see it—because this bill provides for only a portion of the equalization payments that are received by a number of the provinces.

Having said that, I want it understood that I am limiting my approval to the principle of equalization and am suggesting that equalization should be expressed once for all in one place, and not in a number of places as is the situation today.

The bill is very disappointing in other respects. The other portions of it are designed to discharge that overriding national interest which the Prime Minister has indicated the federal Government must have, as being charged with the responsibility for the economic growth of the country, in the field of education. Realizing that education and economic growth are very closely tied together, I say that this does not discharge that overriding responsibility to which he refers.

Before I go into detail with that, let me repeat what the bill purports to do. It purports to provide authority to pay each province 50 per cent of the per capita cost of post-secondary education. Then it is made very plain, and I shall refer to this in the bill, that that refers only to current costs, or $15 per capita in the event that 50 per cent of the authorized cost, shall we say, is less than $15 per capita.

Now the mere fact that we have that alternative in the bill is indicative of the position that the Government is taking in respect to a number of matters. The Government, having intruded into the provincial field in a number of situations and having suddenly realized that these intrusions were somewhat less than welcome, to put it on a very conservative basis, is now hastening to move out. And of course Mr. Sharp offered to move out with some fiscal equivalents of all the shared programs in health and welfare—not the temporary programs designed for economic purposes which by their nature are only temporary—and he mentioned three of these which were going to be discontinued. Not only did he offer to move out of the so-called health and welfare programs, which one would expect to continue for a considerable period of time, but he suggested that when the programs expired in 1970 by the terms of the acts under which they are established, the fiscal equivalents which he was prepared to pay would continue to be paid and no restrictions would be placed on the provinces as regards the content and the nature of the programs.

Mr. Sharp said—and I read from his own words distributed on the morning of Tuesday, September 13, 1966, and which he subsequently stated to the Federal-Provincial meeting—and I suggest he said this somewhat cynically, from the point of view of the federal Government:

> Once major programs like these have been established, no government would discontinue them, because of the needs they fill and the public support they command.

Mr. Sharp is there admitting what a number of us have suspected for some time, that the real vice of these shared programs and the real vice of this intrusion into the provincial field is that it enables the federal Government, by a species of political blackmail, to impose programs in a form and of a character which a particular province might not wish to have imposed; and the suggestion is that that blackmail will now continue after 1970 because of political pressures within the particular province.

That, I may say, honourable senators, is why I think a number of provinces are looking very carefully at the Medicare proposals. I am not going into that today, except to say there are a number of provinces which have their own Medicare plans which do not qualify within the standards laid down in the bill that went through this house some time ago. Now, those provinces, believing what they have done is what is required for their province and is adequate and necessary, are asking themselves, should we be trapped once more by the dollars hung in front of us to go into a program out of which undoubtedly the federal Government will move in due course?

Just before I came into the Chamber this afternoon another example of this undue haste to move out came before me. This is an interesting document. It is Newsletter No. 2 of February, 1967, from the office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I do not recall having seen Newsletter No. 1, but that is my fault. At least, it is not wrapped in the magnificent wrappers that contain the speeches and pronouncements of the Minister of Health and Welfare and some of his other colleagues. Mr. Marchand emphasizes this point that I was coming to, and I quote:

> This increase in the contribution on account of post-secondary education is many times larger than the former grants to provincial trade and vocational high schools.

Obviously, it should be if it is going to apply to all of the post-secondary education people.

> Although the contribution will be calculated as 50 per cent of provincial post-secondary operating expenditures or the equivalent national per capita figure, it will be given as an unconditional transfer of a portion of federal income and corporation taxes. The provinces may spend the money in any way they choose, but it will escalate with the expected rapid rise in post-secondary educational spending.

This is dated February last, and I assure honourable senators it came into my mail box only this morning. So, we have it from the mouth of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that the federal Government has now made its vow and has moved out of the field of university and post-secondary education.

On October 23, 1966, the Prime Minister circulated to members a 30-page statement which he was to deliver the following day at the federal-provincial meeting dealing with the programs of education, which was the basis for the abatement provisions contained in this bill. He said:

> The provision of a basic "economic equality" for the provinces, together with equality of educational and employment opportunity for all Canadians is, in my judgment, one of the most important and beneficial goals of our confederation. To help achieve it is one of the most vital services the federal Government can provide to the people of our country.

I guess I am quoting him in reverse. Earlier he spelled out the federal proposals as they are included in this bill; and I referred to the fact the bill covered merely operating costs.

Let us see what is excluded. The ones that I think are properly excluded I will not refer to. Section 14(1) does not include:

> (b) any amount expended as or on account of the capital cost of land, buildings, physical plant, facilities or equipment...

Honourable senators, I thought the day was long past when one could say you could establish a university by sitting a learned professor at one end of a plank and a student at the other, under a shade tree in a park. Apparently that is not the philosophy of this Government.

It does not include:

> (c) any amount expended as or on account of interest;
>
> (d) any amount expended in payment of a capital debt.

I can see where you might distinguish between certain types of debt there, but if you are not going to pay anything for capital, at least you might pay something for depreciation, but in order to make assurance doubly sure there is no contribution to capital cost or to depreciation. Obviously, there should not be both.

> (g) such portion of any amount expended as or on account of rent on land, buildings, physical plant, facilities or equipment...

In other words, if you choose to rent facilities rather than build them, they are still excluded.

So we have a very narrow definition of "operating costs." The Prime Minister attempts to justify that by referring to the report of the Bladen Commission. He said:

> Finally, I should like to note that these proposals more than meet the Bladen Commission recommendations as to the amount which the federal Government should contribute in respect of university education. The request of the universities of Canada, arising from the Bladen Report, was that federal fiscal contributions should amount to 30 per cent of university operating expenditures plus an annual contribution of $5 per capita in respect of university capital expenditures.

He continued:

> From the data currently available it seems that $5 per capita is the equivalent of about 20 per cent of university operating expenditures. What the Bladen Commission was recommending, then, was that federal contributions in respect of university education should be the equivalent of about 30 per cent of the operating expenditures of universities—

Remember, this bill is dealing with all post-secondary education.

> —for operating purposes, and 20 per cent of operating expenditures for capital purposes, except that the 20 per cent in respect of capital expenditures would not rise as the operating expenditures of universities rose.

Then he proceeded to say:

> The federal Government's proposals are based upon 50 per cent of post-secondary operating expenditures, with the provision that the whole amount will increase as the operating expenditures of universities and other post-secondary institutions rise.

In other words, he is saying that based on the 50 per cent the amount will increase as these elastic fields of taxation accelerate—therefore, we think we are performing our duty.

To indicate the magnitude of the figures we are talking about, the capital expenditures that will be incurred by the Province of Ontario for universities in the coming fiscal year will be between $185 million and $200 million. Under the bill the total provision available to the Province of Ontario, including the phasing-out of the vocational training and capital costs, will be $152 million—60 or 70 per cent of the capital costs alone.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Where does the figure of $185 million to $200 million on capital account come from?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It comes from the Minister of Education of the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Is it in a document?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I think it can be found in a document. I cannot put my hand on it at the moment. However, I will stand by the figure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): But it is just capital?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, just capital.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Is that for one year?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, for one year, 1967-68.

I do not have the documents here but I am quite certain I can put my hands on them. They contain a number of speeches Mr. Robarts made either at or subsequent to the conferences held last fall. I checked the figure with a provincial economist yesterday.

If you omit the phasing-out payment of $40 million, the amount of the proposed transfer to Ontario is $112,747,000. I have no doubt that those who are knowledgeable as to the situations in other provinces can make a similar criticism.

The Bladen Commission, of which I had the honour of being a member, made specific recommendations. I want to answer the suggestion that it seems to me the Prime Minister made that he was really carrying out the recommendations of the Bladen Commission. The commission recommended that the per capita grants be raised to $5 for the year 1965-66—which they were—and increased by $1 each year thereafter until such time as the discussions with the provinces referred to in the general recommendations lead to an appropriate revision of the amount of these grants.

Let me say here that there were no discussions with the provinces, and I will document that a little later. There were no discussions with the provinces prior to these proposals by Mr. Sharp and the Prime Minister. They made their proposals, and those are the proposals that are in the bill. So, we have not yet had those discussions leading to an appropriate revision of the amount of the grants—and those are the current grants.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I take it that the honourable senator is referring to the federal-provincial meeting?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am sorry, but I did not hear the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am assuming that the honourable senator is referring to the federal-provincial meeting when he speaks about statements by Mr. Sharp and the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He will agree with me, I am sure, that prior to that time in the Tax Structure Committee the provinces and the federal authorities at the official level were discussing these problems.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I quite agree, and I am glad that the honourable Leader of the Government has brought that up because these recommendations completely ignore the findings of the Tax Structure Committee. I intend to deal with that in a moment or two.

The Bladen Commission went on to recommend that a Capital Grants Fund be established into which would be paid each year $5 per head of the Canadian population. That is an amount which would escalate. It would be some $95 million for last year, and something over $100 million in the coming fiscal year, and so on.

What the Prime Minister ignored were the further and very important recommendations, such as the recommendation that the amounts available from the National Research Council for the support of research in universities be increased to $40 million in the fiscal year 1966-67—and, of course, they were not—and be escalated by 20 per cent each year thereafter. The Bladen Commission went on to say that with respect to any grant there should be an unconditional grant of 30 per cent of the grant to the universities, which would bring that base of $40 million up to $52 million.

Let me go to the next recommendation, which is:

> That the amounts available from the Medical Research Council for the support of research in the universities, including the supplement referred to below, be increased to $20 million for the year 1966-67 and be escalated by 20 per cent each year thereafter.

Of course, when we add that 30 per cent unconditional grant we get $26 million as the base, with the 20 per cent escalation.

So, in all, the recommendation was for $78 million for 1966-67 which was to be increased thereafter. The total vote for scholarships and grants in aid of research, which are not all in post-secondary education in the year 1967-68, is $66 million. This is in the Estimates for 1967-68.

The commission went on to say:

> The amount of the annual contribution that we suggest for the first few years is $5 per head or some $100 million in total. This is based on the view that the Federal Government should contribute roughly 50 per cent of the cost of academic facilites of the universities.

Elsewhere the statement is made that the recommendation with respect to operating grants is regarded only as adequate in the view of the commission if the recommendations as to research grants are met, and, as we all know, they are not being met. They are falling short of the commission's recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In this case, by $10 million this year?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I think it is more than that, but by at least $10 million. Let us say they are falling short by $10 million or more. I think it is somewhat more, because I do not think all of those provisions go through to the universities.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In another context it may be a saving of $10 million—that is, if we revert to another discussion we had here this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Well, I would be glad some day to participate in just such a discussion. I do not want to be provoked this afternoon into reading some very significant pages contained in these Estimates which were published for the first time on Monday last. However, I would refer honourable senators to the appendix which starts at page 595 referring to employment in the public service. I think I can suggest where savings can be made, and how we can implement the recommendations of the Bladen Commission.

I said that I would document those discussions to which I referred. Well, I can do that only by inference. Mr. Sharp presented the premiers, or the Ministers of Finance, as the case may be, on September 13 last with a table, and he said: "This is our equalization formula, and this is how it will work." If honourable senators want to refer to it, it immediately follows page 5 of Mr. Sharp's release on September 13, 1966, and is his statement to the Tax Structure Committee of September 14, 1966.

In order to show how much discussion there has been and how much consultation there must have been, the total equalization payments shown in Table II, circulated by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) yesterday, was shown as $490 million-odd. Mr. Sharp's total is shown as $491 million. Then referring to the amounts paid under present legislation, the minister's table showed $354 million-odd, and the table presented shows $352 million. There were minor mathematical corrections made.

Of course the same is true of the Prime Minister's proposals on education, to which we have been referring. They were not presented on the basis of something that was open for discussion, but on the basis that there was something to be accepted, or else this was it.

This of course represents a complete departure from the report of the Tax Structure Committee, because it represents a unilateral decision. The Tax Structure Committee reported on October 28, 1966, and it says it projected that the level by 1971-72 of provincial and municipal expenditures may be expected to climb to between $16 billion and $16¼ billion, an annual increase of about 8½ per cent; federal Government expenditures will rise to about $12¾ billion to $13 billion, an annual increase of about 6½ per cent. There is no doubt that the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board have made certain that the Tax Structure Committee was wrong in those estimates, because, of course, federal Government expenditures increased 11 per cent in 1965, 15 per cent in the year just ending, and the estimates are up another 13 per cent for next year. Nevertheless, this was the document that was before the Minister of Finance and the provincial treasurers in September and October. Without reading at length, the committee stated:

> The federal Government's position would move—

That is over the period.

> —from an approximate balance in the current year, on this DBS basis, to a surplus of about $325 million or $725 million, depending upon the rate of growth of the GNP.

The committee went on to say that the provincial and municipal deficits would increase from the current level of about $900 million to about $2.4 billion or $2.1 billion by the end of the year.

The committee then warns us that these projections are based upon many assumptions, which they enumerate, and that a small change in the assumptions can make a considerable change in the figures. However, having given that warning, the committee does not retreat from what is the essential, that their projections are indicative of the trend to a surplus in federal accounts and a substantial deficit in provincial and municipal accounts. As we look ahead over the years, the provinces are going to have larger and larger deficits, and the federal Government should have more and more surpluses; but the committee says it is the broad trend in these projections that are the most helpful.

One of the things, of course, which has been ignored in these discussions has been the real responsibilities of the provinces in their own fields, and the responsibilities of the federal Government within its field, and an attempt to provide both governments with access to tax fields so that they can impose their own taxes, if you will, and carry out their own responsibilities. The increased demands on the provinces, if for nothing else than by reason of the rapidly escalating problems in the urban and metropolitan districts, has been completely ignored. It is the needs of the great metropolitan areas of this country which to a large extent account for the increased pressure on provincial revenues. All that can be said of a scheme like this, which keeps the highly elastic sources of revenues substantially in the hands of the federal Government and leaves the provinces with the less elastic sources, is that the important social and physical problems of the metropolitan centres can only deteriorate and be ignored.

That is something we could discuss at some length. However, I just want to indicate that it is a matter that should be discussed, and is a matter that obviously has not been discussed.

I am optimistic enough—perhaps it would be better to say that I am pessimistic enough—to believe that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance and the other ministers of government will make sure that the Tax Structure Committee continues to be wrong in its estimates as to what is going to happen on the federal scene, and that we will not have the balance of $325 million or more in 1972 as they projected, because there is a law laid down by Professor Parkinson, which is very true, and never more true than in affairs of government, "that expenditure rises to meet income." I suspect that it probably rises to meet anticipated income and to be a little more than current income.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And will exceed both.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: And will exceed both. Thank you, senator.

Honourable senators, I could say a great deal more. I do not accept the views of the Carter Commission respecting the necessity for these elastic sources of taxation to be retained in the hands of the federal Government and for abatement to cease. I do not accept the views that the Minister of Finance has expressed, I think explicitly, at least by implication, that he has gone as far as he can, including the offer he has made about the present health and welfare cost-sharing programs, in abatement in the field of income tax, personal or corporation, that he cannot exercise proper fiscal control in the economic field if he gives any more. I believe that a very marginal share gives sufficient manoeuvrability for any economic control that is required.

We do not make sudden and drastic changes, we hope—with the lessons we have learned in the past 20 years—in either monetary or fiscal policy. They are marginal changes and marginal controls of sources of revenue are sufficient, I think, to take care of that.

What we need, and what this bill is not based upon, is a coherent, rational assessment by all governments of where the responsibilities lie; and then the responsible governments must determine their priorities within those fields.

It is implicit that the federal Government is prepared to transfer this responsibility to the provinces where it belongs. It is implicit from what Honourable Mr. Marchand said, and which I quoted. It is also implicit by the fact that if the Province of Ontario wanted to close down every post-secondary school in the province tomorrow morning, it would still get $15 per capita per year and could devote the money to a centennial project if it chose to do so.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That would create a problem.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: This bill does not guarantee post-secondary education in any province.

The federal Government—and I am not objecting to this—is at least recognizing that it must be left to the responsible government, once having determined where the responsibilities lie, to determine its own priorities within its areas of responsibility. That is something which the Premier of Manitoba and other provincial premiers have been requesting for a considerable period of time and on which no responsible reply has come from the federal Government.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This bill should in due course provide the answer.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, but I do not think it does.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I thought you said it did.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Up to a very limited point. The bill is not looking at the whole field. It deals with equalization, and then it refers to post-secondary education. I say it accepts the principle in post-secondary education that if you are not prepared to take care of your responsibility you can spend the money in any way you wish.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It does provide a measure of provincial responsibility.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is right, in the one field. I am saying that what we need is a discussion covering a wider area. Then it will not become just a discussion of tax divisions, but of division of tax fields—hopefully on a uniform tax basis and by agreement to enable each authority to meet its responsibilities.

I do not think there is any value in labouring that point. There are provinces which do not need medical schools, there are provinces which do not need law schools, and there are those which do. Arrangements of that kind in this field are being made and will continue to be made, but it is the provincial government which has the responsibility and must determine the priority.

For each authority to go ahead independently—and that is implicit in Mr. Sharp's suggestions at the federal-provincial conference—can result only in chaos. We must have a co-operative federation, and it must be based on something more than ultimata and decrees from On High. It must be based on prior consultation and prior agreement.

The bill purports to authorize arrangements that will be in effect for five years. The one encouraging thing about it is that I do not think anybody in this chamber believes that it will be in effect for five years. There are events and circumstances which I think will make for the revision of this bill, and for a different and, I hope more satisfactory arrangement, within the next two or three years. Therefore, we can hope that by that time better counsels will prevail.

I see Senator Leonard smiling. I was not even thinking of a change of government—

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I was wondering why you were so pessimistic.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: —though that would be very helpful, when it comes, as it will. I am thinking of certain reports of royal commissions that have come down. I am thinking of the fact that when some of these transitional payments evaporate, the provinces that are going to benefit most by them will find that the future is a little hard on them.

Unless there is adequate fiscal redistribution, the goal of a strong federation which must include strong provinces—sometimes I think the federal Government does not want strong provinces—will be frustrated. As the Premier of Ontario said with respect to that conference: "Unilateral decision without consultation is no substitute for good federalism"—and with that I agree.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, we have had a very remarkable speech from Senator McCutcheon. First of all, I wish to pay him a compliment and a tribute from all of us on his contribution to the debate. He is not of the Government, and I can assume that he is thankful for that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He is likely to escape for a long time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Despite the fact that this is a most complicated and involved piece of legislation, and while he has access to many good sources of information, nonetheless he did a terrific amount of work in preparing his speech.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): His speech was critical in part, commendatory in part—a minor part, if you will—nonetheless, it is a kind of speech that we are proud to hear in this chamber.

Honourable senators, if I am brief in my comments, I should like honourable Senator McCutcheon to understand that my brevity is not a discourtesy to him, but because of the pressure upon us to deal with other work that is coming before us.

He talked about ultimata and decrees from On High being perhaps the guiding principles in federal-provincial fiscal and other arrangements. At one time that may have been true. Speaking sincerely and honestly, I say I do not believe that to be the case today. If there is one reason which I can give, more than any other—and it is not political—it is the fact that up to 25 years ago, federal-provincial meetings were attended by the federal authorities with a great phalanx of experts, on the one side, and provincial premiers on the other side, alone or sometimes with their attorneys general. Today in almost every field of government in every province there is a corps of experts who understand and appreciate the complexities of the problems affecting a federal system of government.

Improvements have been made federally and provincially by that corps of experts in helping and advising ministers and trying to find solutions for these admittedly difficult situations, and this has been a great step forward in federal-provincial relations. In fact, much of the fiscal policy of this country, rather than being decided in the Cabinet room or in the Department of Finance, is decided around the federal-provincial table.

It may be that Senator McCutcheon would say, "Yes, but you carry the big stick." Up to a point perhaps that is necessary, although I do not say it is true. I agree with Senator McCutcheon—we all agree with him—that not only the federal but the provincial authorities should have access to adequate sources of taxation to meet their increasing responsibilities in every field. But I would ask Senator McCutcheon to look at the six principles that I outlined last evening at the opening of my remarks, not as simply pious hopes but as principles upon which this Government hopes to proceed and which it hopes to see developed.

The very first one—I cannot quote it because I only have my notes here—is that the arrangements between the federal and provincial authorities should give to each adequate access to tax sources to discharge their respective responsibilities.

Senator McCutcheon then talks about the importance of the provinces. I think that is recognized, but if too much emphasis is given to that by the Government, then the Government will be criticized for down-grading the federal authority.

The fourth principle that I enunciated last evening was that the federal authority should at all times have both theoretical and practical authority to discharge its full responsibility. So there is constantly a battle of balances as among what should be done, what can be done and what must be done in order to accommodate both levels of government.

I was gratified to hear Senator McCutcheon indicate at the beginning of his speech that the principle of equalization payments is sound and that the formula that has been worked out is also sound. He went on to speak about the Prime Minister's concern with the economic growth of this country and its relation to training and education. The Prime Minister does hold this view, but it is not peculiar to him. It is a view which is shared by every thinking Canadian.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I was not being critical at that stage.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I realize that, but there is the vital matter of bringing the level of Canadian training and capacity up to what it should be to achieve productivity at a higher rate and to a higher level than we have been able to so far. Incidentally, it is obvious that the Governor of the Bank of Canada was not talking aimlessly when he said that our productivity was not as good as it should be. If we are to increase our productivity and to increase the general level of the working and thinking capacity of our people in all areas of our national life, more and still more education will be required at all levels.

I do not say that this can be done in one fell swoop. But I do say that as a result of the passage of this bill, there will, in addition to the old formula, be available to the provinces approximately $200 million in the fiscal year 1967-68. That is a fair start, if I may say so, and, as Senator McCutcheon says, it promises to escalate.

Senator McCutcheon talks about federal intrusions into the area of responsibility of the provinces. Perhaps the word "intrusion" is the appropriate word. If it is, it has been going on for a long time in the fields of social services, welfare, health, family allowances, youth allowances and other fields. But I think that if Senator McCutcheon were a member of the Government today, he would—as I am sure he did when he was in the Ministry—feel that there is a responsibility of the federal authority in this country to try to improve the standard of living and the productive capacity of every part of the country—not just to choose one and develop it at the expense of another, but to set national standards.

I say this because I think any Canadian, whether he lives in the easternmost tip of Newfoundland or the westernmost tip of British Columbia, should be entitled to the opportunities that any other Canadian has.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And I care not whether he speaks English, French, Italian, German or what language. I think his opportunities in this country should be equal. This is not an easy thing to accomplish, and standards have to be set.

So I do not believe it is fair to say, at a time when the federal Government is attempting to do this by fiscal transfers and otherwise, that it is in effect blackmailing the provinces politically. I think it has to give a lead and, if the federal Government were not giving this lead I would expect Senator McCutcheon and a good many other senators to be on their feet in this chamber saying to me, "Why can you not convey this message to your colleagues in the Government?" In such circumstances I think they would be right.

Under this new bill Ontario will get $152.7 million, including the technical and vocational training allowances. Under the existing provisions, Ontario would have had $97.1 million, including the TVT allowances. At least Ontario is going to get the difference between $97.1 million and the $152.7 million this year.

Senator McCutcheon points out that Ontario still has a heavy educational load in respect of capital costs: $185 million to $200 million. I will accept those figures, but one must remember that under Section 93 of the British North America Act the primary responsibility in the field of education is with the province. And it was only with the greatest of difficulty, politically and otherwise, that the university grant system was inaugurated and the device established of channeling this money, not to the provinces or to the universities directly, but through the Canadian University Foundation into the universities.

Now, Ontario is getting another $60 million out of us this year—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: May I interrupt for a moment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I never suggested that the federal Government had responsibility in this field. I did suggest that it is the responsibility of the Government to sit down with the provinces and make sure that each government has access to tax fields to enable it to discharge its responsibilities under the Constitution.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I accept that statement as my own; I fully agree with it. However, I say that Ontario is going to get $152 million this year under this new program, whereas it would have got $97 million under the old program. But it still has $185 millions of capital costs staring it in the face. Nevertheless, it cannot be expected that the federal Government can pick up the whole tab, or indeed much more of the tab in the field of education than it is picking up now, although it is escalated under this bill.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I did not suggest that. I said that when the Prime Minister suggested he was paying out 50 per cent of the capital costs and everything the Bladen Commission recommended, that was not a correct statement.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not want to go into any benefits the provinces might have had under the Bladen Report or under this legislation.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I only raised it because the Prime Minister did.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the honourable senator wants to discuss this in committee, there will be ample opportunity to do so. But the provinces have the responsibility in the field of education and they must be expected to bear a great deal of the cost of the increasing burden placed upon them in this respect. It is their constitutional responsibility to do so. I think they are getting a great deal of help. They got much help as a result of the 1961 legislation, but I think the new legislation is a closer approach to the ideal which Senator McCutcheon so much desires, and which we all desire.

I think I need say no more than that I commend the bill to the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE

NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I have unanimous consent to make an announcement in regard to the Banking and Commerce Committee?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The chairman of the committee proposes that that committee meet this evening at 8 o'clock to consider Bill C-277 and any other business that might be before it.

THE ESTIMATES

FINANCE COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO EXAMINE AND REPORT

Leave having been given to revert to Motions:

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (G) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1967; and

That the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, to print its proceedings upon the said Supplementary Estimates (G) and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Earl W. Urquhart moved the second reading of Bill C-221, respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-221 was introduced in the House of Commons and given first reading on July 7, 1966. For one reason or another, the bill did not receive second reading until Friday last, March 10, 1967. On that day the bill was given second reading, then considered clause by clause in Committee of the Whole, and was finally given third reading—all in the one day.

There was only one amendment to this bill, and that amendment changed the qualification date from the 1st day of January 1967 to the 1st day of October 1967. The reason for this amendment is quite clear when we look at the long period of time between first and second readings. The extension of the qualification date will enable the pension plans covered by this legislation to be suitably amended to conform to the standards for registration as provided in clause 10 of the bill.

In order to prevent any confusion I should point out that this bill does not relate to employees of the Government, for they are already covered under the Public Service Superannuation Act. This legislation concerns itself with employees who come under the Federal Labour Code or employees who are within the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code and the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. In other words, this legislation is for employees who work for employers under federal jurisdiction but outside the Government.

To state it simply, the legislation is for employees who work for the railways, for radio broadcasting stations, for banks, and so on. A complete list of all such employers appears in clause 3 of the bill. In addition, the bill covers any works, undertakings or businesses of a local or private nature in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories where the federal Government will carry out a role similar to that of the provincial governments in dealing with pension plans for employment under provincial jurisdiction. The inclusion of a pension plan in these territories was made at the request of the territorial governments concerned.

The background for this legislation can be outlined briefly and simply.

On December 18, 1964, the then Minister of Finance, speaking in the House of Commons, announced the federal Government's intention to introduce legislation as contained in Bill C-221. At that time legislation relating to the portability and solvency of private pension plans as applicable to employment under provincial jurisdiction had already come into force in the Province of Ontario. Ontario was a pioneer in leading the way for this kind of legislation.

In October 1964, an interprovincial conference on uniform pension legislation was convened. The object was to develop a model act which could be approved by all provincial authorities and passed by all provincial legislatures so that there would be uniformity in all provinces of Canada. The federal Government participated in this interprovincial conference and agreed to introduce federal legislation relating to employees under federal jurisdiction as soon as there was a wide measure of agreement among the provinces relating to legislation for employees under provincial jurisdiction.

It is interesting to note that since the act was passed in Ontario, similar acts based on the model act have been passed in the Provinces of Quebec and Alberta, and similar legislation has been introduced in the legislatures of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Bill C-221 is based on the model act which was developed at the conference on uniform pension legislation. The administration of this legislation will be handled by the Department of Insurance. The Superintendent of Insurance will be charged with the responsibility for registering and reviewing continually pension plans which are covered by this bill.

In accordance with the procedure followed in the model act, the standards for registration are spelled out in detail in clause 10 of the bill; but the detailed provisions dealing with the handling of the pension funds have been left to regulation. This will be found in clause 11 of the bill. The bill contains registration provisions under clause 10 requiring employers to whom it applies to file their existing plans and any amendments to them with the Superintendent of Insurance; and the same requirements apply to new pension plans, as they may be developed.

Honourable senators, it should be emphasized that the bill contains no provisions requiring that pension plans be introduced where none exist now. Neither does the bill prevent a plan from being terminated. The bill does not require that all employees of an employer be members of the plan, but the bill does state that a plan must meet the requirements of this legislation so long as the plan remains in force.

In clause 12, under the termination or winding-up of a pension plan, there are provisions dealing with the application of all pension fund moneys in order to provide deferred or immediate pensions for both former and present members of the plan in accordance with their respective entitlements.

As I said earlier, the standards for registration of pension plans will be found in clause 10 of the bill. These standards require that the pension plan must provide for the "locking-in" of certain contributions made by the employee after the qualification date of October 1, 1967. This will mean that any member of a pension plan who has attained the age of 45 years and who has been in the service of an employer for a continuous period of 10 years, or who has been a member of the same pension plan under different employers for 10 years and who also has attained the age of 45 years, shall be entitled under that pension plan, upon retirement or termination of his service, to a deferred pension annuity or credit, or an immediate annuity, depending on whether or not he reached the retirement age set forth in the plan. This annuity must be related to at least his service under the plan after the qualification date, which is October 1, 1967.

It must be borne in mind that this locking-in requirement does not apply to contributions for service before the qualification date of October 1, 1967, or to voluntary additional contributions. In other words, contributions made prior to October 1, 1967, may be withdrawn under the legislation but only if the plan provides for it. But it must also be stated that after October 1, 1967, contributions relating to less than 10 years' service with an employer can also be withdrawn by the employee under the legislation, but only if the plan so provides. But if he has worked the 10 years after October 1, 1967, for the same employer or under the same pension plan, and has reached the age of 45 years in either case, the employee's contributions are locked in and cannot be withdrawn.

I am referring now to the legislative requirements of this bill, but there is nothing to prevent a pension plan from having locking-in provisions of contributions at an earlier age than 45 years, or for less than 10 years' service, or both. Provision for this will be found in clause 10(2) of the bill.

Under the same subclause 10(2), limited payments of lump sum amounts are also permitted in cases where the monthly pension under the plan would be less than $10. In addition to that, a plan may provide for payment of a lump sum not exceeding 25 per cent of the commuted value of the deferred annuity benefit. This may be paid upon or after the termination of service of a member of the plan before he attains the requirement age under that plan. A plan may also provide for the payment of reduced or increased annuities because of early and deferred commencement of payment. Reduction in the amount of an annuity before it commences is also permitted in order to provide for survivor benefits, for example. Variation in the amount of the annuity in order to take into account pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act, the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan is also permitted.

These pension plans must meet the funding and solvency requirements to be set out in the regulations as well as meet the requirements for investment fund moneys to be prescribed by regulations under clause 11. This legislation provides for portability of pension rights—the right is portable—by implication, which can be understood from clause 10, by the words "deferred pension benefit" to which he retains entitlement wherever he goes. The portability factor will also be part of the pension plan provisions which must ensure that the employee receives an annuity at retirement age.

Under clause 5 of the bill, agreements may be entered into between the federal Government and the provinces respecting these pensions plans, and under clause 5(c) an agency can be set up and designated for the purpose of receiving, holding and disbursing pension benefit credits under this act. Under this subclause, if an employee has accumulated pension funds with different employers under different pension plans, these funds can be paid into an agency which will deal with the funds that might have accumulated, and he can receive a pension benefit purchased by the amount paid in on his behalf. This will enable an employee who has worked in more than one province for some years, and then starts to work for the federal Government, to have his pension credits protected. This is because this provision can apply to every province which has legislation passed under this model act. There will be discussions and co-operation between provincial and federal governments on this very point from time to time, and it is not anticipated that there will be any difficulty.

The Minister of Finance is given the power to designate such an agency, but as yet it is not known whether it will be a federal agency, a federal-provincial agency, or a private trust company, but we have the assurance that the decision on the formation of this agency will be made by agreement between the federal Government and the provinces.

I think it should be pointed out that under clause 11, moneys now in any one of these pension funds will be covered by this law in addition to moneys received after October 1 under the regulations that will be set up under clause 11. The Superintendent of Insurance will have the right to look into the investment of pension moneys in relation to all pension funds covered by this legislation to determine whether the investments are sound and secure within the requirements of the act. If the investments are not sound and secure, the Superintendent of Insurance will have the authority to force the employer to make the necessary changes and adjustments under the pension fund investigation. The employers and private companies will have a free hand in the matter of investments so long as the investments are acceptable to the Superintendent of Insurance as being sound and secure within the requirements of the act and the regulations under it.

Honourable senators, that is a brief and what I consider to be a concise explanation of this bill. I shall be happy to move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, but in that respect I shall be guided by the wishes of all honourable senators.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the next order is called I ask the indulgence of the house to say that the income tax bill has been passed by the other place. The intention is that Senator Hayden will explain that bill tomorrow afternoon. We could wait for that bill this afternoon and proceed now with the report of the Standing Committee on Finance. However, as there is a committee meeting tonight it might be more suitable if we adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, which would enable Senator Hayden to give his explanation at that time, on the understanding that as soon as this house receives the bill, it will give it first reading and proceed with second reading. Such a course of action will save our sitting on for another half hour or so this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There is no suggestion of our not having the bill by 2:30 tomorrow afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. The bill is available now. Some amendments have to be checked, and the bill is being held up while that is being done.

Hon Mr. Flynn: The honourable Leader of the Government does not expect this house to pass that bill tomorrow, does he?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, no. I am sorry that we do not have the bill at this moment.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 16, at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 16, 1967

The Senate met at 2.30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT AND TO REPEAL CANADIAN VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the second bill to amend the Income Tax Act arising out of the budget of March of last year. The first bill, which was C-216, we dealt with last summer. You will recall that that bill contained several items which were not proceeded with. Those several items were the provisions in relation to deferred profit sharing plans, the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act and the transfer of income tax provisions and some changes therein from that act to the Income Tax Act, and also the Supplementary Unemployment Benefits Act. We have in the bill before us provisions dealing with these three headings, and the opportunity has been seized upon in a number of other, shall we say unconnected and miscellaneous ways, to retouch, correct and deal with situations that have arisen since.

I propose to deal more particularly with the purposes which appear in the title to this bill, that is, the deferred profit sharing plan. This plan, as those who are on the opposite side of the chamber today know, was originally introduced by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Fleming, in 1960-61, at which time he described it as an important piece of social legislation.

I think I should refresh your minds on the general scheme of that act so that you will appreciate the changes that are being made by this bill. If you are concerned about the section pertaining to the profit sharing plan, you may refer to section 79c of the Income Tax Act which deals with all the features of the deferred profit sharing plan presently in force.

Broadly speaking, a profit sharing plan is established by an employer for the benefit of his employees, or for a defined class of the employees. Under this plan, the employer undertakes to make payments out of his profits, or computed by reference to his profits, into a trust established under the plan, of which the employees are beneficiaries or contingently may be beneficiaries.

The employer's contributions to the trust are, within defined limits, deductible in computing his income tax for the year in respect of which the payments are made. The employer's contributions to the trust and all income earned by it are allocated, usually on a contingent basis, among the beneficiaries, who are employees, but are not actually paid out of the trust until the happening of a future event, which is usually the normal retirement of the employee.

The trust is exempt from income tax on its income; and no tax is paid by the individual beneficiary employee until he actually receives payment out of the trust.

These plans, under the original provisions as well, all require to be registered. Section 79c contains the conditions and restrictions as to the content of the plan, the nature of the investments that it may make, and all such provisions of that character.

Through the years administrative practices have been developed under this section and they have had the effect of making it broadly restrictive, as a practical matter, rather than what one would appear to read from the exact line used in the statute.

However, this is before us now because, as the minister reports, abuses have developed. One of the more common abuses was to establish such a plan for a closely held corporation—that would be a corporation with very few shareholders—in such a way that, although the plan was apparently for the benefit of the employees of the business generally, thus entitling the corporation to a large annual deduction for contributions to the plan, it would ultimately benefit only a few people, namely, the principal shareholders and/or their families. It was also found that funds in the trust could be manipulated in a number of ways in order to provide immediate tax advantages to persons who were in a position to control the plan.

May I take one moment to explain that? Under these plans the annual contributions to the plan were not necessarily required to be allocated at one time. If allocated, and if an employee retired from the plan at any given time, then there was a forfeiture or a negation of any allocation to him, because he carried nothing out of the plan with him when he retired, and at some subsequent date there would be a reallocation.

By manipulating reallocations without the requirement of spreading them in some way over all the members in the plan, and by favouring a few instead of many, you might have large accumulations in the plan operating for the benefit of very few people, and mainly those who really control the plan. It was felt that this was an abuse which should be corrected. It may be that when I finish giving the explanation you will feel that the pendulum has swung too far the other way; I may make some comment on that as I go along.

In the bill before you, the changes and the tightening up designed to prevent or check these abuses have to do mainly with what is called "vesting"; that is, at some stage vesting the payments into the fund and allocating it to a particular employee—vesting them in him. Following that are the restrictions in relation to reallocation and how it may be done, the limits with respect to amounts to any particular remaining member of the plan, the question of the quality of the investment which the trust may make, and the distribution of accumulated funds.

Then, in order to keep the thing going smoothly, a system of tax penalties is provided in these sections. Then there are provisions dealing with plans presently registered and operating, and indicating how you must conform those plans to the new provisions in this bill.

May I just touch on those points? First of all, the requirement of registration is continued. In other words, any new plan that develops since and including December 21 last year must satisfy the requirements of the Income Tax Act as and when this bill becomes law.

Plans already registered but which do not comply with the new provisions found in this bill are given until January 1, 1968 to conform. If they fail, the minister may revoke the plans. I may say a little more about that later.

Concerning employer deductions, under the law as it is now the employer might make his annual contribution on the basis of the lesser of $1,500 or the amount of his contribution to the plan in that year in relation to each employee. Under the bill before us a third condition has been added. It says that the deduction which the employer is entitled to in relation to his contribution is the least of the $1,500, or the amount he pays in respect of each employee into the plan and into the trust in the year, or 20 per cent of the salaries or wages paid to the employees.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In that year.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: In that year, yes. On the question of allocations, the requirement under the bill is that those payments which are made in a particular year by the employer to the trust in support of this plan must be allocated not later than 90 days after the close of the year in which they were paid. Then it is also required that all amounts in the trust in respect of payments that had heretofore been made and that had been allocated to employees, where the employees have ceased to be employees, those amounts must be reallocated at once.

The next big element I am going to mention is vesting. This bill provides for an automatic vesting of the amounts in the plan standing to the credit of a particular employee—if he has remained in the employ of the company during that time—at the end of five years after the end of the year in which the amounts were allocated to him in the plan. If after that period the employee leaves, he is entitled to take the proceeds which have been vested in him; or, if he dies within the limited period provided in the bill, the moneys in the fund and in the trust standing to his credit must be paid to his beneficiary or his estate within the limited period after his death. But an employee who has funds vested in his name and who retires from the plan, or when he leaves at age 71, has certain rights which he may exercise. For instance, he may elect to take the payment by instalments rather than in full; and this bill provides that in those circumstances on his election the instalments may be on an annual basis, limited to a period of 10 years.

The bill also provides that instead of taking his money he may request the trustee to subscribe for an annuity, and this annuity must not have a guaranteed payment range of greater than 15 years.

There are other provisions relating to the operation of these plans after December 21, 1966. For instance, where a trustee makes use of the assets in the fund or the trust as security for a borrower, there is a tax penalty at once. This tax penalty is equal to the fair market value of the assets which were used as security, and that amount is paid as a tax penalty to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. As and when that situation is corrected, and the loan is cancelled out and the securities are released, then under the procedures provided in the bill an application may be made for a refund of the tax paid at the time of the violation of this restriction. The general restriction is that you cannot use these funds as security for loans.

I turn next to forfeitures. As I mentioned to you earlier, forfeitures would describe the situation where a person under an existing plan has ceased to be a member and therefore his allocations are undone and there is no requirement of vesting. Then, up until such time as there is a reallocation, those funds are in the position of being forfeited because their purpose has failed. If there is not an immediate reallocation, there is provision for a tax penalty amounting to 50 per cent of the money that stands in that forfeited position.

I think I have collected in a summary way the features of the tax penalty, and maybe I should put them together in one short statement for you at this time because I have talked about the tax forfeitures. I refer you to page 28 of the bill, and that applies in relation to any situation where a forfeiture occurs in the plan and in the trust after December 21, 1966.

There are two other cases where tax penalties apply. One is that if the trustee invests in non-qualified investments, there is a tax penalty to the extent of the cost of those non-qualified investments. There is a provision in the bill that if you cure that situation and sell the non-qualified investments, then you may apply for a refund, but the refund of the taxes you have paid would not necessarily be the amount you had invested in those non-qualified investments. It would be the amount you had realized on their disposition, which might be less. Therefore, you might not necessarily get back from the fund the full amount of money you expended at the time you purchased them.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Would not the qualified investments be set out on this list which the Government gives to the employer? Surely, he cannot go beyond and outside that list?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The bill sets out what are qualified investments. It is not a case of the Government or any department; supplying him with a list; it is the statute that gives the nature of the qualified investments. Nevertheless, my friend has lived long enough—and certainly I have, which is longer—to know that notwithstanding directions in relation to investments, interpretations get broadened in the private sector at times, and investments might arise which are not in the qualified category.

This business of qualified investments has two aspects. I have spoken to you about the aspect of "on and after December 21, 1966", in relation to any new plans after that date. But there is another side to the coin—that is, you have existing plans and you have investments in those plans which would not meet the requirement of "qualified investment". What is done to those? In a very broad way, you are given the period from and including 1967 down to I think 1970, in which, according to the provisions of the bill, you may liquidate the non-qualified investments and, depending on the rate of liquidation, you may pay very little tax in the meantime. If you make a complete liquidation over the period permitted you might end up with receiving back any tax penalty which you have paid because of taking that position. This appears at page 23 of the bill in the new section 105L, in the new Part IIE of the Income Tax Act, which deals with taxes on deferred profit sharing plans and revoked plans.

May I tell you, by way of a summary what appears in section 105L, because frankly the first time you read it it may seem a bit complicated.

The term "initial base of the trust," which appears in section 105L, is defined to mean the investments in the trust as at December 21, 1966. You assume then that those are not qualified investments as defined in the bill. Section 105L provides you with a basis over the period from 1967 to 1970 in which you can liquidate that position with a minimum of tax, and with the possibility, at the end of the road, of receiving refunds of any kind of tax which you have had to pay over this period.

For instance, let us say that in the year 1967 you are such a trust—that is, an existing trust on December 21, 1966—and your initial base of trust investments are non-conforming to the requirements of this bill. If in respect of the year 1967 you dispose of some of those, then the measure of determination as to whether you pay tax this year is the difference between 20 per cent of that initial base and the amount that you realized on your dispositions in that year. So, if you disposed of up to 20 per cent of your initial base in that year, at a price at least equal to their market value at December 21, 1966, you would then have no tax to pay. You can go on in the next year and in succeeding years to repeat that operation, and you may come out very well. If you decide to stay with your non-qualified investments, then of course the danger you run in the way of a tax penalty would be 100 per cent of the cost of those initial base investments as at December 21, 1966. But, section 105L gives you a method of alleviating the burden of the penalty.

I have spoken about the tax penalty in relation to the situation where you use securities in the trust as security for loans. There is a tax to the extent of the fair market value of the property which you pledge in connection with the borrowing, and it is refundable but not necessarily at the full amount. It is refundable when that transaction is undone, or when you move out of that transaction. The only instance in which there appears to be no refund is that of the 50 per cent tax on forfeitures, where the reallocation does not proceed within the time specified in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Forfeitures will develop in the event of a failure to reallocate within a certain time. What is sought to be cured by this provision? Perhaps I might put that question in another way. What would be the advantage of a trustee or a trust not reallocating?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The advantage that appears obvious right away is that if you do not reallocate at once those funds would remain at large in the trust, subject to allocation or reallocation at a more propitious time, and possibly in respect of fewer people than planned. But, it would defeat the idea of vesting.

In other words, once an employer contributes money to a plan of this kind the whole scheme of this legislation, as with earlier legislation, is to see to it that to the ultimate degree the moneys that go in are enjoyed by the beneficiairies of the plan. The only way in which that enjoyment could be had otherwise, for instance, so far as the employer was concerned, is if in connection with forfeitures the trustee was directed to pay that money back to the employer. In those circumstances the employer must take it into his income for that year so that the revenues have not been deprived of any tax. But if the employer does not take it back in, and it sits there, then as long as it is not reallocated it has no particular beneficiary. If it is forteited money it is just accumulating there.

So, in order to make the scheme of vesting effective, and where the vesting occurs within this limited period of five years, you must start with the date of the allocation or the reallocation of the money to the particular employee. That is the starting point for the five-year term.

The only comment I make on that is that it may well be that a five-year term is not a long enough term for a deferred profit sharing plan. If one of the purposes of the plan is to add an additional factor or benefit to the situation between an employee and an employer which will make continuance in his existing employment more attractive to him, it may be that ten years would be a more effective time. But I am sure that, if in the working out of this provision five years is too short a period of time, then in due course there will be requests for some change. The earlier provisions contained in Bill C-216 have been examined by the public who are interested in legislation of this kind, and I think this bill to a considerable extent reflects the views of those who have an interest in them. I have not made any comparison of the changes, if any, between the provisions of this bill and the provisions in respect of the same subject in the earlier bill, but I would doubt that there are significant changes.

I have told you about three tax elements which are tax penalties. The design is to force compliance with the particular plan of deferred profit sharing for employees. The design is to see to it that the revenues are not made less by some improper use of the funds in the plan while the person who contributes is enjoying a tax immunity. Therefore, it was felt that in order to make assurance doubly sure the tax penalties would be imposed, with the opportunity of getting them back, except in the one case of tax forfeitures.

There is one field that is not covered in the list of qualified investments but is covered separately. It has to do with life insurance. There is a provision in the bill that life insurance, if it follows the conditions that are laid out in this bill, may be regarded as a qualified investment. This provision will be found starting at the bottom of page 21 of the bill, in subsection 6 of section 105K.

May I tell you briefly what the qualifications are in order that life insurance held by or taken out by a trustee of a trust under a deferred profit sharing plan may qualify as a qualified investment? As can be seen from the top of page 22, the trust, by virtue of paying the premiums, is the only person entitled to any rights or benefits under the policy, other than the rights or benefits of the insurer. The second thing is that the cash surrender value of the policy is or will be, at a time before the 71st anniversary of the birth of the insured person, on the assumption that all the premiums under the policy are paid, not less than the maximum total amount payable by the insurer under the policy. In other words, at some time during the existence of this policy, before the man reaches his 71st birthday the sum total from the premiums paid must equal the cash surrender value of the policy.

This clearly would appear to limit the type of insurance to endowment policies, but notwithstanding that you then have a wide open provision which the trustee may follow with respect to a part of the funds in the trust and the kind of insurance that he may buy. You will find that reference on page 22 of the bill, section 105K, subsection 7. There the trustee, notwithstanding these earlier limitations which would appear to limit the insurance to endowment policies, can take 25 per cent of the payments which the employer makes into the trust and put that 25 per cent into any type of life insurance. Of course the beneficiary must be the trust, but he can, if he feels the employer is making sufficient profit to provide for a maximum contribution to the plan each year, even go the the extent of using 25 per cent to take out insurance policies on the lives of the employers. So the 25 per cent is wide open and has no limitation; otherwise the limitation would appear to be as to endowment policies. I suppose the thinking behind that is to achieve the maximum in benefit in the funds that would fall to the particular employee when he has reached his 71st year.

I have explained in a very small way the various features of this bill so far as they deal with deferred profit sharing plans. I have told you about the vesting, the reallocation, the investment limitations, the distribution, and the penalties. I did not tell you about forfeiture in order to prevent a reallocation of funds that have been forfeited through the failure of the employee to remain in the employment for at least a five-year period from the time payments were made on his behalf, so that there may not be an uneven reallocation, with substantial amounts going in one direction and very little in another direction. There is a provision in the bill which places a limitation on the amount of the forfeiture which may be reallocated to a particular employee. That may be found at page 24 of the bill. According to the language there, the amount of the limitation is:

> (b) the amount, if any, by which
>
> (i) the product obtained when $2,000 is multiplied by the number of years in which the employee was a beneficiary under the plan or under any antecedent deferred profit sharing plan that governed a trust to which payments were made under the antecedent plan for the benefit of beneficiaries thereunder by the employee's employer.

So there is not a wide and unlimited discretion in the hands of those in control of the plan and of the trust funds, when forfeitures occur, to reallocate without some regard to the statutory restrictions which put a ceiling or a maximum on the amount that may be allocated or reallocated in the direction of a particular employee. That may create uneven amounts in reallocation, but the amounts will be measured by a constant factor, and the difference may well occur by reason of the length of time one employee has been in the plan as against the length of time another has been in the plan.

This is a very summary statement, but for the purpose of spurring your interest perhaps it is provocative and you will take a look at the bill.

There is also the requirement that the trustee must file annual reports on the operations and dispositions under the plan each year within 90 days following the end of the year.

Then there are provisions with respect to procedures for applying for refunds, and also provisions for transfers from one profit sharing plan to another.

The second item partially correlated with this is supplementary unemployment benefit plans. These are covered under section 79A of the Income Tax Act as it presently stands. I refer you to section 14 of the bill, which does not change in any way the basic provisions for supplementary unemployment benefit plans.

Perhaps I should say that "supplementary unemployment benefit plans" is defined in the Income Tax Act as:

> an arrangement . . . under which payments are made by an employer to a trustee in trust exclusively for the payment of periodic amounts to employees or former employees of the employer who are or may be laid off for any temporary or indefinite period.

You will find this type of plan chiefly occurring in employment contracts as between unions representing employees and the employers of such employees. In other words, they are mainly the product of collective agreements.

The only change that is made by this legislation is to require that these plans be registered. No penalties are added and no exemptions are taken away. The idea of registration is that the department charged with the administration, by studying the operations of these plans will know whether those who were operating under deferred profit sharing plans and creating abuses might look upon this as an area which could lend itself to that sort of thing. Therefore, they will be required to register so as to have full information as to the quality and scheme of the plan. Whether there will be any limitations or restrictions will be a matter for the future.

Dealing now with the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act, this bill repeals that act and replaces certain provisions of it by similar provisions in the Income Tax Act, but with one very substantial variation.

In the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act three main things were done. First, it provided for a 33⅓ per cent straight-line cost allowance of a vessel constructed and registered in Canada; secondly, a recapture of capital cost allowance under provisions of the Income Tax Act where the proceeds are used to acquire a vessel constructed and registered in Canada; thirdly, it provided a deduction for tax purposes over a four-year period of the estimated cost of quadrennial or other special surveys required under the Canada Shipping Act.

In the course of the transfer of these provisions—basically they are income tax provisions, though up to this moment they are contained in the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act—two of them carry over and the middle one disappears, or "phases out," which is the expression used, bringing back into the Income Tax Act as income the gains on the sale of a vessel which has enjoyed the benefit under this statute.

The Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act was originally enacted in 1949. Its main purpose was to encourage the construction and conversion of vessels in Canadian yards so as to provide work in the Canadian shipbuilding industry and at the same time to encourage Canadian owners to modernize their fleets.

The scheme of the act was as follows. In the case of a vessel constructed in a Canadian yard and in the case of a conversion or major alteration done in a Canadian yard, the owner was entitled to depreciate the cost of the vessel or conversion for income tax purposes at a rate of up to 33⅓ per cent on a straight-line basis, as opposed to diminishing balance.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Written off in three years.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The capital cost of the vessel or conversion for this purpose was determined by the Canadian Maritime Commission. The Commission interpreted the act in such a way that a vessel under construction was regarded as a vessel for purposes of this depreciation, and hence it was possible for an owner to commence depreciating his vessel in the year in which construction began. To qualify for this accelerated depreciation, the vessel had to be registered in Canada or registered elsewhere in the Commonwealth under conditions satisfactory of the Maritime Commission.

The rate of 33⅓ per cent straight-line depreciation provided under C.V.C.A. Act, compared with the rate of 15 per cent on a diminishing balance basis provided in the regulations made under the Income Tax Act. So, you can see there was a substantial advantage, and a further substantial advantage, which I will mention in a moment, that the subsidies were gained, certainly in relation to fishing vessels, up to the extent of 50 per cent of the cost of construction of those vessels.

The one element that is "phasing out" is this. Under the act as it presently stands, where a vessel was disposed of by a Canadian owner under conditions that would otherwise have given rise to recapture of capital cost allowance under the provisions of the Income Tax Act, the C.V.C.A. Act provided freedom from such recapture to the extent that the proceeds of disposition of the vessel were used by any person for replacement or conversion purposes under conditions satisfactory to the Canadian Maritime Commission.

Alternatively, the vendor could deposit with the Maritime Commission an amount equal to the tax that would otherwise have been payable by reason of the recapture of capital cost allowance on the vessel sold as a guarantee that the proceeds of disposition would ultimately be used for replacement. The act required that such replacement occur within seven years from the date of disposition.

Under the provisions of this bill, the capital cost allowance position for new ships will be significantly changed. Relief from recapture, where proceeds of disposition are used for replacement, are repealed in respect of dispositions of ships acquired after January 1, 1966, unless such ship is constructed under a contract that was concluded before January 1, 1966. The relief from recapture provisions is to be completely repealed for all dispositions of vessels that occur after December 31, 1973. For the period between January 1, 1966 and December 31, 1973, freedom from recapture on the sale of a vessel will only apply in the event that the proceeds of disposition are used for replacement before January 1, 1974. This is the phasing out which I have dealt with. If the deposit which has been put up is not made use of before this terminal date, then it goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

There is more to the history of this. Another important point and one I should mention at this time is in respect to the 33⅓ per cent straight-line depreciation. When you repeal the C.V.C.A. Act, then of course you repeal that provision as well. There is nothing in this bill specifically which deals with the continuance of that 33⅓ per cent rate of depreciation, and yet to cut it off in midstream might be very injurious and affect very adversely operations and constructions that are presently in progress and which started after January 1, 1966.

In statements which have been released as to the Government's program, by the minister, it has been stated that while the provision of the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act permitting the exemption from taxpayer income of recaptureable capital cost allowances is to be discontinued, the rapid depreciation condition of the C.V.C.A Act will be retained, which means that those rapid depreciation provisions—in other words, the 33⅓ per cent—will be continued, presumably, therefore, by regulation.

Honourable senators, so far as fishing vessels are concerned, while the subsidies payable in relation to other classes of shipping construction have been announced, and they will be substantially reduced on a phasing-out basis, there is no proposal at the present time to disturb the 50 per cent of cost subsidy in the construction of fishing vessels. These are the three main provisions of the bill.

I think I should tell you that there are a few miscellaneous items. You always find them. When I get an income tax bill, I do not look first for the things mentioned in the budget resolutions, but for those extra and miscellaneous clauses said to be in the way of clarifying and correcting. I am always curious to see the extent of what is covered by the word "clarifying"; and if I find the new provisions are relieving, then I have nothing to say.

In that category, any person who may be interested will find in clause 6 of the bill that the amounts paid to qualified dental mechanics for the making or repairing of an upper or lower denture and for certain other dental work, are going to qualify as medical expenses, subject to the usual limitation of the amounts. I should tell you too—having dealt with the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements as recently as yesterday evening in committee—that you will find, in clauses 7 and 9 of this bill the provisions in respect of provincial abatement, that is, personal tax deductions under clause 7, and corporation tax deductions under clause 9. You will also find a provision, in clause 10, where there is no significant change in the deductions which an employee of a foreign country may make, but the benefit is extended to members of his family and servants.

Honourable senators, we had a bill before us recently, dealing with scientific research, on which evidence was heard in committee. You will find a provision in this bill dealing with the income tax aspects. That is in clauses 3(1), 5(4), 12 and 13.

What I have to say about this follows on under the program for advancement of industrial technology, which alphabetically they call P.A.I.T. The Department of Industry may make a grant of up to 50 per cent of the cost, other than fixed asset cost, of a specific research project, which involves a significant technological advance and affords good prospects of commercial exploitation.

If the project is unsuccessful, no repayment of the grant is required under that legislation. If it is commercially successful, the grant must be repaid with interest. Therefore, at the time the grant is received and the expenditure is being made, the amount of those expenditures, if equal to the grant, may not be used as a deduction; but if the work is successful, and commercial operation results, there is an obligation on the receiver of that grant to repay with interest. As and when he repays the grant and pays the interest, he is entitled to bring these amounts in as deductible items for income tax purposes.

You will find the same thing applies in clauses 16 and 3(1), in dealing with drilling and exploration expenses. Under the Northern Mineral Exploration Assistance regulations a grant may be made to Canadian individuals, or a Canadian-controlled or registered public company, of up to 40 per cent of the cost of a mineral exploration program, excluding oil exploration carried on in northern Canada. If the program is unsuccessful, that is the end of the road so far as the money is concerned. If the program is successful commercially, then the grant is repayable. So if the obligations to pay are provided for in these clauses, the same provisions concerning deductibility apply.

In a recent case in the Ontario courts, Bazos v. Bazos, an income tax official was subpoenaed to appear at the trial and to bring records and give evidence. He appeared without his records, saying that he was under direction not to produce those records because they were confidential. The judge told him he had better come back in the afternoon with the records or he would be committed for contempt.

Some sort of conflict developed as a result of that, and therefore consideration has been given to the value of the confidential character of income tax information. You will find a provision in this bill—starting at the bottom of page 29, Section 22, and carrying through to about two-thirds of the way down on page 30—under which, if there is such a requirement that an official or authorized person appear and bring the records from the Income Tax Division, the minister has a right of appeal. If it is a provincial court which makes such a direction, the right of appeal is to the provincial court of appeal; if it is a federal court, the right of appeal is to the Supreme Court of Canada. When the appeal is taken all proceedings are stayed until the appeal has been disposed of.

So it might not be a bad idea for the department to have printed some forms of notices of appeal both to the provincial appeal courts and to the Supreme Court of Canada. Such forms could be ready for instant use simply by filling in certain blank spaces. This might be a wise preparation in the event that there is any wholesale effort, arising out of the case to which I have referred, to get at income tax records.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That must have been an isolated case, I am sure.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My experience has been that isolated cases which open up a field do not long remain isolated. They acquire a lot of company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): There is no appeal from the Ontario Court of Appeal?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: In this particular case?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There might be.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Well, there is nothing in the bill as it is drawn. One would have to look at the provisions governing appeals from the Supreme Court of Ontario to decide whether in this particular case there was an appeal. There might well be.

These would appear to be the essential provisions. I have dealt with deferred profit sharing plans in a very summary way, believe me, because there is a lot of detail. It may be interesting and informative detail, but it is not appropriate for presentation here. Possibly that avenue could be explored with more interest before a committee, as and when this bill goes to committee.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I am quite sure you do not expect me to speak long on this complex bill, which is particularly complicated by its having to do with the Income Tax Act.

Before I go on, I would like to say how I would love to be able to speak on this bill as well as the honourable senator who has just sat down. I am reminded of the power contained in the Hamilton Falls, sometimes called Churchill Falls. The falls is a great source of power, but if we are not ready to receive it, it goes to waste. There the senator stands, like the Hamilton Falls, but if we are not ready to benefit from what he says, we lose his words as we lose the water over the falls. The analogy came to my mind as the honourable senator spoke.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Except that in this case the benefits are perpetuated in print. You cannot do that with the water from the Hamilton Falls.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I was reminded of the Hamilton Falls as the honourable senator spoke, but I at least on this side—and I am sure there may be others—had difficulty in getting the "power" even by turning on the switch, simply because I was not ready to receive it. I am not well enough versed in matters financial to be able to absorb all the wisdom spoken from the lips of the honourable senator.

I wish I understood financial matters as well as he does. Perhaps if I did, I would be a millionaire; but I am not, and I do not understand its complexities. But I do congratulate him on being able to explain things very well indeed, although to grasp all that he said would require a keen financial insight.

I have tried to study this bill carefully. To that end I made a study in the first instance of the Income Tax Act itself but, unfortunately, I bogged down completely when I began to compare the Income Tax Act with the various amendments to it. As a matter of fact, I more or less gave up.

I do not know why in the first place it was suggested to me that I should speak on this particular bill, because I know so very little about financial matters. At any rate, the only section in the bill which did appeal to me as one upon which I could concentrate was Section 24, which has to do with the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act. All that that particular section says is that the said Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act is being repealed. In other words, this particular Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act which was put into the Income Tax Act back in 1949 is being repealed.

Incidentally, the Income Tax Act at that particular time had 144 pages. Since that time it has been amended a dozen times, and I do not know how many pages are in it now. But the fact that that section was repealed took me right back to the Income Tax Act again. At any rate, I only concerned myself with Sections 11 and 20, having to do with such matters as the construction of vessels.

As has been pointed out, the question of vessel construction in Canada will be governed by section 11 and section 20 of the aforementioned Income Tax Act and the regulations under these paragraphs. To boil it down, therefore, the whole question of vessel construction and any assistance this act may give to those who build our ships in Canada will actually depend on the regulations which may be made under these two sections.

I understand that under these two particular sections, and under the regulations made under the authority of the said Income Tax Act, such items include provisions for (1) accelerated depreciation of the 33⅓ per cent on straight-line construction or major conversions of a ship in Canada; and registered in Canada or the British Commonwealth; (2) allowance of reserve for survey expenses; disposition of proceeds of insurance; (3) election in respect of proceeds from disposition of the vessel.

All these items will be taken care of by sections 11 and 20 of the Income Tax Act.

But I understand there is an item which has been dropped, whereby under certain conditions there is allowed exemption from taxable income of capital cost allowance. I discovered that much, and I am quoting from some information on shipbuilding I received from the Department of Industry.

Incidentally, I tried very hard to get facts from the various departments, and I am most grateful to the Department of Industry for the material they gave me relative to the matter under discussion. I got a list of the vessels which were constructed in the various Maritime provinces, but the amount of assistance looked so small I considered it did not come under this particular act. I think I am right in saying that it came under the Department of Industry, where subsidies were granted.

I found out that from April 1966 to February 28, 1967, close to $2 million had been paid over to assist in the construction of smaller vessels in the Atlantic provinces, and of that amount Nova Scotia got $1½ million, Quebec $212,000, Newfoundland $216,000, New Brunswick $63,000, and Prince Edward Island almost $13,000. That amount was made up of subsidies and had to do with fishing vessels, trawlers and others.

I am quoting this simply to put it on the record because I know it is not actually related to the subject we are discussing. These moneys were paid over in the construction of 24 draggers, 39 longliners, 5 seiners, and 69 multi-purpose vessels.

As I said before with regard to income tax, I take it that there are very few people in this country today who could intelligently discuss this subject. I know I for one could not, and I admit it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: All we do is pay.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I will come to that in a moment or two.

With regard to this particular income tax bill, the sections are so long and complicated that one gets competely lost in trying to understand it. And I can well understand the difficulties of high income groups or individuals when income tax time rolls round. I can quite understand how many lawyers and accountants soon become millionaires endeavouring to make out income tax returns for big business. It is quite understandable that this should be so. One has only to read the Income Tax Act to see how it is that the lawyers and accountants find themselves in such lucrative professions.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You have been misinformed so far as lawyers are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: You are a farmer at the moment as well as a lawyer, and I take it that being a farmer out west you make double what an ordinary farmer here would make.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: That is where he loses his lawyer's fees—in farming operations.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I would like to interject that I believe it is time for Canadians to take a second look at the tremendous expenditures that are being made every year by various governments. If you look at the table of federal Government expenditures printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings on March 9, you will find that since 1956 our expenditures, including those under the Old Age Security Fund, have more than doubled. These expenditures in 1956 were $4,799 million, and I understand that in the present fiscal year they will amount to $9 billion and some odd millions. This trend would indicate that in 10 years our expenditures instead of being $9.6 billion will probably be in the neighbourhood of $20 billion. For 1967-68 it is forecast that there will be an expenditure of over $11 billion by the federal Government. Where are we going?

You will note also from the public accounts of 1965-66—and I think I am entitled to mention these matters here since we are discussing an income tax bill which will be used in collecting a lot of that money from you millionaires—that our gross public debt five years ago was approximately $23 billion, whereas in 1966 it amounted to some $27 billion. Our net debt has gone from $13 billion to $15½ billion over the same period. Interest alone on our national debt amounts to over $1 billion.

We have to be very careful if we are to preserve our freedom. Once you get into debt—and this applies to a country as well as an individual—you have lost your freedom.

I well remember in 1933 when the little province where I was born had to surrender its freedom and was taken under the wing of the British Government and placed in the hands of a royal commission. I want to stress this fact, honourable senators, to impress upon you the situation into which we are getting with these vast expenditures. Look at the Estimates for the coming year and see what the expenditures are expected to be and I think you will agree with me that these should be cut back quite a lot. Many of the things we are trying to do have to be done on borrowed money, and in my view they should be allowed to stand over until we are better able to pay for them. There has not been one year in a long time when we did not have to borrow money. Think what the situation would be if the moneylenders were to say, as the people who control money in the world today could say to Canada as well as they said it to little old Newfoundland back in 1933—"No more money for you." Where are we then? As I have said before, we will lose our freedom, and if we lose that we are finished.

I have read very carefully the speeches in the other place, particularly the replies of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Sharp. I am very glad to find that the minister gave assurance that the changes which this bill will bring about will not alter in any way the Government's policy towards the encouragement of shipbuilding. You will find that reference in Commons Hansard of Thursday, March 2.

I also read the comments of another honourable member of the other place, who said, "We need lots of attention to the merchant fleet and to the encouragement of our young people to go to sea." I am afraid we are not doing that and we are not encouraging our young men to go to sea. We are approaching the point where some day most of the sailors and fishermen in our waters will have come from other countries rather than from Canada. We have to be careful on that particular point.

It is my view that a lot more attention is being paid by the federal Government to the welfare of our farmers in Canada than is being paid to the welfare of fishermen. It is only necessary to compare the number of farmers with the number of fishermen and to compare the grants and subsidies given to the farmers with those given to fishermen, and also those engaged in the building of fishing ships. It is notable that the sailors and the fishermen on the Atlantic coast—and I suppose the same applies to the Pacific coast—are not now getting the assistance required by men who go down to the sea in ships. I would like all honourable senators to examine the figures and ascertain the situation.

I do not intend to take much more of your time because I know that at this point time is of the essence. I was going to refer to the fishing vessels subsidy, but will defer my comments on that subject until a later date. These are figures relating to the Department of Industry which have to do with dragger fishermen and draggers.

I am certainly interested in this bill, but only in so far as it has to do with either merchant or fishing vessel construction. As I read it and tried to understand it I could find no instance where the shipbuilding industry would be affected in an ulterior way; and we have the word of the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Mr. Sharp, that that is correct. No changes will be made whereby the shipbuilding industry will be hampered. I am not referring now just to subsidies, but the Canadian Vessels Construction Assistance Act as it will now come into the Income Tax Act.

Before I sit down, I want to make a plea to the Government. Unless greater encouragement—and I will not say "assistance"—is given to our fishermen and merchant seamen, we Canadians are going to have to look elsewhere for men to man our ships. That may be because Canada at the moment is very prosperous. There is no question but that if you go to the Atlantic provinces, and west to British Columbia and elsewhere, you will realize that if the Government took as much interest in the welfare of these men as it is taking in that of the farmer in the central part of Canada, it would be to our mutual advantage.

I have nothing whatsoever against this bill. I agree with it entirely and I think it will be in the best interests of the country.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, as I glance around the Senate chamber I see that the attendance has thinned somewhat. No doubt some honourable senators knew I was going to make a few remarks.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The reason for the small attendance is committee meetings. I am sure that if they had known you were going to speak they would be present now.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: However, honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that this bill is before us at this time because it gives me an opportunity to discuss certain complaints which have been building up in my mind for some time with respect to income tax matters. I do not intend to speak about the provisions of the bill to any extent. I spent several days reading it over and, like my honourable friend from Newfoundland (Hon. Mr. Hollett), I finally gave up. The language and the involved matters dealt with were almost too much for me, and because of that I appreciated Senator Hayden's fine explanation of the bill this afternoon.

Honourable senators, I have two complaints. They have to do with the income tax form which all taxpayers have to fill out at this time of the year, and I have reference particularly to farmers, fishermen and ordinary taxpayers like myself. I am not referring to great corporations or big business, or anyone in that category. They have chartered accountants and others well versed in financial matters to do this work for them.

My first complaint is that when the income tax forms should be in the hands of the taxpayer he is unable to obtain them. Before I left Rosetown early in January we spent many days trying to obtain copies of the new income tax form. People were calling in for the forms every day, saying they were leaving for their holidays in the United States or other parts of the world and wanted to file their income tax returns before they left; but there were no forms available.

The other complaint I have is that when these forms were eventually received it was found they were the most complicated and difficult to understand of any we have ever had.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I wonder if the honourable senator has been listening to the radio, because every morning I hear someone on the air saying that these new forms are such that a babe in arms can understand them, and that all you have to do is look at the headings and it becomes clear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They asked the babes in arms, and they said it is untrue!

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, it has not been my experience that they are simple.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is what they tell you.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think before I am through I will have demonstrated that there is nothing to that claim.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Some babies!

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The taxpayer has to wait until he gets this envelope from the Taxation Data Centre in Ottawa, and when he opens it up he finds inside the 1966 T1 General tax guide of 20 complicated pages. Also in that envelope there is a T1 General form which is absolutely new in almost every respect, when compared to the forms of previous years. Before anyone can possibly make out this T1 General form with any degree of accuracy, if he is an ordinary taxpayer, he has to read this guide carefully and compare the sections of the guide to the sections in the T1 General form.

Then, when he thinks he understands what it is all about, he begins to compile his tax return. There is a form here which he has to tear out, and when it is filled in he attaches it to the main form. He has then to fill out a form in connection with his investment income, because there is not enough space on the back of the T1 General for that. When he has gathered all that information together he turns to page 2 of the T1 General, and fills in the information there. When he has that done he has to deal with his Canada Pension Plan return, which is also a part of this new form and it is most complicated.

When he arrives at the amount of his taxable income he has to turn back to his T1 General Tax Guide in which he will find a table which used to be attached to the form T1 General. It is not there anymore.

Then he starts to work out the amount of his tax. He finds in the Tax Guide a form headed "Detailed Tax Calculation", which is also very complicated. He fills that out, tears it from the book, and attaches it also to his T1 General.

Finally, after a lot of worry and headaches he arrives at the amount of the tax, provincial and federal. When he calculates it over again he finds he has a different answer, and when he calculates it for the third time he has still another answer.

Honourable senators, for over thirty years I have been making out income tax returns for farmers and ordinary taxpayers, and I have never run into anything as complicated as these new forms. When I first obtained the envelope containing the T1 General Tax Guide and the T1 General Form, I sat down to study them carefully.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I hope you are charging more.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I spent more than one day studying it. When I thought I understood everything pretty well I decided to make out a sample return. I took the case of an ordinary senator with no income other than his indemnity. After several hours' work I was able to complete a form that I thought would be satisfactory to the Department. It took me half a day to do it. When I began to check the computations on the back of the form I found that I had subtracted certain items that I should have added, and I had to do it over again.

I think that the ordinary taxpayer has a sound complaint. Just as he has arrived at the point where he understands how to complete his tax return the Government remodels the whole setup, gives him these new forms, and he has to start all over again. The farmer and the fisherman are in a worse position still than the persons I have just mentioned.

A farmer or a fisherman receives this envelope in which he finds the Farmer's & Fisherman's Tax Guide for 1966, which is 20 pages of complicated statements. When he reads it he sees this:

> T1 General Guide.
>
> This form is also contained in the envelope in which you will receive your T1 General. It contains information regarding the completion of your return in addition to the information found in the Farmer's & Fisherman's Guide.

Therefore, after the farmer has read through all that and has compared it with the T1 General he has to go back to read the T1 General Tax Guide which is another booklet containing, as I said a short time ago, 20 pages. After that he is able to start making out his return, if he understands what he has read, which he very seldom does.

In this guide is found a direction which says to the poor farmer:

> If you do not understand anything consult your nearest tax office.

That tax office may be a hundred miles away, and he cannot go there. If he writes he probably cannot explain exactly the information he requires.

When he gathers his information together the first thing he has to do it to make out his depreciation schedule. Look at it, honourable senators. He has a lot of farm machinery and equipment of all kinds, and he has to show the year in which each item was acquired, the kind of asset, the month of purchase, the month of disposal, the cost, the allowance for this year, and the total allowance for this and prior years, and so on. When he has that completed he attaches it to his from T1 General.

Next he has to complete a complicated form showing his income for the year and all of his deductions such as taxes, fertilizer, and everything else. That is quite a job and it takes a long time. If he has any rental income he has to file one of those rental income forms that I mentioned. If he has any investment income he has to fill out another form. All of these forms he attaches to his T1 General.

When he has all that done the next step is to carry forward the information to page 2 of the form, and here he finds out what his taxable income is. But he is still not through. The Guide tells him he must go back to the T1 General Tax Guide, in which he finds a table which shows him how to make out a detailed statement of what his income tax amounts to. If his income tax is not very heavy he can go to the back of that form and find another table which indicates to him what the federal and provincial tax will be. He enters those figures on the back of the 1966 T1 General, and he is lucky if he figures out exactly what he owes.

So, this whole business is not nearly as simple as Senator Roebuck would try to have us believe.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was not trying to have you believe that. I wanted to know if you had heard the representative of the Department who speaks on the radio every morning.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: His name is Hughes—I have heard him.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not know what his name is, but he has given us assurance.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I beg your pardon. I thought you were telling me that this was a very simple matter.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, I was not.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Actually, it is a real headache for every farmer and ordinary taxpayer. I was very disappointed when these new forms arrived and I discovered that they were so difficult. I thought from the advertising, such as Senator Roebuck has referred to, that the Department was simplifying everything so that a babe in arms could understand these returns. I am sorry but I am no babe in arms when it comes to making out these returns, because I found them very difficult indeed. I hope that when we get new forms next year they will be simplified. I would like to see everything that is required on the T1 General form, instead of having to read all these guides that I have mentioned.

Another matter I would like to speak about, honourable senators, concerns succession duty or estate tax. A person who has been paying income tax all his life has perhaps in spite of that been able to build up a considerable estate, and at his death he is taxed again. However, there is an exemption of $60,000 if he leaves a widow, and something extra if he leaves dependant children of a certain age. If he does not leave a widow and dependant children the exemption goes down to $40,000, with certain adjustments if the aggregate value of the estate is between $51,000 and $53,000. However, the point I wish to make has nothing to do with that.

In recent years, since 1959 when these exemptions were set up, the value of land in the Province of Saskatchewan has trebled, with the result that a large section of land in the area I come from is now selling for perhaps between $100 and $150 an acre. That is the valuation which the Department of National Revenue puts on it when a person dies. He may also have valuable farm equipment, perhaps worth $50,000. When he dies the exemption is $60,000, and his executors and beneficiaries are probably obliged to sell the farm, or in the case of business, to sell the business, to pay the succession duty or the estate tax.

What I wish to advocate right now is that this exemption should be increased so that the farm or the farm equipment or the business would not have to be sold. In order to take care of many of the cases we have to deal with in my part of Saskatchewan, I think the exemption should be raised to between $90,000 and $100,000 thus permitting the farm or business to be carried on in the way it was before the testator passed away.

Honourable senators, that concludes my remarks. I hope the Government will consider the matters I have mentioned, that income tax forms in the future will be simplified and that they will do something to increase the exemptions at present being allowed in connection with succession duty.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, there is just one point I would like to make about one feature in the bill that is worrying me. Senator Hayden has referred to the plans that are now in existence. There are a number of plans in connection with my own office, and I suppose in connection with the office of every senator who is a lawyer, which are approved by the Department and perhaps have been in existence for a long time.

The explanation we have been given warns us that if such plans are not in tune with this new taxation bill they may be cancelled. I do not know what then happens to the fund. I am just wondering whether in my office we must order a study not only of this bill but also of the previous act, and then a study of all the plans with which we have been connected to find out whether we are in line with the new law and what changes should be made.

If that is the situation, it is quite a serious one for every law office in the dominion that has any connection with plans of this nature.

I would like to know—and I should like to have asked Senator Hayden had he not been obliged to leave—whether the department will notify us as to the degree to which the plans are out of line with present law, otherwise it presents a very serious proposition to all the law offices that I know of.

I hope that when we meet in committee the Department will be ready to give us some direction as to what is necessary for us to do to keep in line.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS BILL, 1967

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. McDonald, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, and had been directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. John Hnatyshyn, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-220, to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-220, to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for the third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow March 17, at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 1, 1967, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, when I adjourned the debate on this bill I indicated my intention to move that the bill be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Special Joint Committee of both houses appointed to study the amendments recommended in the bill in connection with hate literature.

We had to wait until the other place was disposed to join with us in the appointment of such a committee, and then in the appointment of the members. We received only yesterday the report from the other place that they had appointed the members to serve on this joint committee.

May I shortly summarize the reasons why I intend to move the motion which I have indicated. I said that we were all in agreement with the objectives of this bill, but there was not unanimous agreement on the bill itself. In fact, I would say that we were all very critical of the bill because we were not sure whether it was useful or would achieve the purposes for which it was intended. Therefore, I thought it would be better—since most of the criticism touched upon the principle as well as on the form of the bill—that the Senate be not called upon to approve the principles of the bill before it is referred to the special committee.

Honourable senators, I think we should be as free as the members of the house are going to be when they come to this committee to consider the subject matter of the bill, without having approved the principle—in the same way as the Joint Committee on Divorce, for instance, considers all the bills that have been presented on that subject.

It seems to me that this motion is reasonable in the circumstances, and I would appeal to the honourable Leader of the Government for approval of it. I think it would meet the views of the majority of the members here.

Consequently, seconded by honourable Senator Choquette, I move, that the bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons appointed to study and report upon amendments to the Criminal Code relating to the dissemination of varieties of "hate propaganda" in Canada, as set out in Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to Amend the Criminal Code."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by honourable Senator Hugessen, that Bill S-49, intituled, "An Act to amend the Criminal Code", be now read a second time.

In amendment, it is moved by honourable Senator Flynn, seconded by honourable Senator Choquette, that the said bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special Joint Committee appointed to study and report upon amendments to the Criminal Code relating to the dissemination of varieties of "Hate propaganda" in Canada as set out in Bill S-49.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the motion in amendment is the item to which I will speak.

Having spoken to the honourable senator who has moved the amendment, and also having consulted my colleagues, I think I must take the position of resisting the amendment.

I am not completely in agreement with what the honourable senator has said, namely, that the principle running through the entirety of this bill is disapproved by the vast majority of the members of this chamber. I do agree that the speeches which have been made, for the most part—and perhaps with only one or two exceptions—have been quite critical of provisions of the bill. I am aware of the limitations and as well the scope and breadth of some of the provisions in the bill which concern certain honourable senators.

I wish to assure the honourable senator who has moved the amendment and all other honourable senators, that it is the intention of the Government to have this bill considered very carefully by this committee. I think it has been demonstrated in other measures which have been dealt with by committees of Parliament in this session, that when the Government says this, it acts accordingly. We would be perfectly willing to have every detail of this bill examined and to make such amendments as are considered to be appropriate.

I am quite confident that by following this course we would achieve the results that the honourable senator has in mind. What he wants to do particularly is to clean up this bill in many ways, and we need not go into the details. I would point out that the bill originates as a result of the study made by the royal commission. The report has been made, and for that reason the Government feels that a measure should be introduced so that very serious consideration will be given to the provisions of the bill as it is ultimately drafted.

I will give the assurance now on behalf of the Government that the Minister of Justice, who will be the minister in charge and who will be responsible primarily, will certainly give most sympathetic attention to argument made in respect of proposed amendments.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the honourable Senaor Hugessen, that Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code", be now read the second time.

In amendment, it is moved by the honourable Senator Flynn, seconded by the honourable Senator Choquette—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Those in favour of the motion in amendment will please say "Content."

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those who are against the motion in amendment will please say "Non-content."

Some Hon. Senators: Non-content.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the Non-contents have it. I declare the amendment lost.

The question now is on the motion for second reading of Bill S-49, An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 1212 to 1251, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 1185, for the relief of Margaret Grace Stark Leach.

Resolution 1186, for the relief of Pamela Ann Merrill Peck.

Resolution 1187, for the relief of Marcel Meunier.

Resolution 1188, for the relief of Attilio Forlini.

Resolution 1189, for the relief of Peter Thomas Tester.

Resolution 1190, for the relief of Gwynith Ann Davies Elliott Menard.

Resolution 1191, for the relief of Marie Edwidge Huguette Oligny Alexandre.

Resolution 1192, for the relief of Francois Labbe.

Resolution 1193, for the relief of Francine Loyer D'Amour.

Resolution 1194, for the relief of Pamela Anne Kenrick Laing.

Resolution 1195, for the relief of Brigitte Elizabeth Brandl Craig.

Resolution 1196, for the relief of Mary Marguerite Isabelle Jocelyne Lemay Derbridge.

Resolution 1197, for the relief of Diane Lillian Kirkus Black.

Resolution 1198, for the relief of William Kevin Kiely.

Resolution 1199, for the relief of Susan Ross Kilburn Edwards.

Resolution 1200, for the relief of Ada Rubin Craske.

Resolution 1201, for the relief of Joseph Rosaire Houle.

Resolution 1202, for the relief of Jacques Jean Joseph Gaudel.

Resolution 1203, for the relief of Alice Akairib Bekhor.

Resolution 1204, for the relief of Joan Lenora Brown Eadie.

Resolution 1205, for the relief of Judith Mary Allen Donohoe.

Resolution 1206, for the relief of Maurice Demers.

Resolution 1207, for the relief of Marie Pauline Gisele Leduc Paquin.

Resolution 1208, for the relief of Fernand Labonte.

Resolution 1209, for the relief of Florence Graziella Bernier Murray Miller.

Resolution 1210, for the relief of Joyce Clara Woodhouse Tracey.

Resolution 1211, for the relief of James Joseph Peard.

Resolution 1212, for the relief of Jacqueline Marchand Fortin.

Resolution 1213, for the relief of Hector Thessereault.

Resolution 1214, for the relief of Beverly (Beverley) Brooks Mallaley.

Resolution 1215, for the relief of Claude Laporte.

Resolution 1216, for the relief of Bernard Langevin.

Resolution 1217, for the relief of Stanley Harold Rowe.

Resolution 1218, for the relief of John Gerald Wellington Hall.

Resolution 1219, for the relief of Suzanne Boily Beaupre.

Resolution 1220, for the relief of Claudette Drouin Seguin.

Resolution 1221, for the relief of Gwynneth Carlyle Roberts Earl.

Resolution 1222, for the relief of Yvette Letendre Binette.

Resolution 1223, for the relief of Iris Miller Rolland.

Resolution 1224, for the relief of Ronaldo Champagne.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the resolutions be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance with respect to the expenditures set out in the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates (A) and (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1967.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, the report is printed as part of the proceedings of the Senate on Thursday, March 9. It is therefore included in your files. The report speaks for itself. It is largely factual and objective. My remarks, therefore, can be by way of brief explanation or words of supplement to the report itself.

The report is in the nature of an annual report, covering a year's work from the time the main estimates were referred to the Standing Committee on Finance approximately a year ago and including, of course, all the supplementary Estimates referred to the committee up to last week.

The report does not cover Supplementary Estimates (F) and (G), which were tabled after the committee had made its report, but nevertheless they were anticipated and the report states that there would be supplementary Estimates. Those estimates have been taken into consideration, to some extent at any rate, in the estimates of expenditures in the report. This morning the committee dealt with Supplementary Estimates (G), and Dr. Davidson, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, was our witness.

This is the procedure that almost necessarily has to be followed; that is, that we have a continuing forum dealing with the Estimates throughout the year and then towards the end of the fiscal year the committee can report on the work of the year.

In paragraph 2 of the report the committee points out that we have followed the same procedure as in past years, whereby the committee considers the Estimates in general rather than attempting to deal with them department by department. This has proved to be the proper way, I submit, particularly now that the House of Commons does refer the standing or special committees, and it would be an unnecessary duplication and waste of time and effort if the Senate in turn were to do that.

During the year, as matters developed which were of interest to any particular members, or of special interest generally, the ministers or appropriate officials of various departments were called before our committee for consideration of matters affecting their departments. During the year we had before us in that connection the officials of the National Research Council, the Atlantic Development Board, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and Expo 67.

Paragraph 3 of the report deals with the total over-all figures of the main and supplementary Estimates then available, giving the total figure at $8,558,185,901. The Estimates also provided for loans and investments to be made amounting to $585,205,400. Since that time Supplementary Estimates (F) and (G) bring the total for the year up to $8,795,617,719 for the budgetary estimates, and, for loans, investments and advances, the figure is $673,505,160. These budgetary estimates, of course, do not include all the expenditures of the Government and it has generally been customary for the Senate Committee to be interested in other expenditures such as those of the Old Age Security Fund. Therefore, for the purpose of considering the over-all major expenditures of the Government this report brings into its calculations for tabular purposes and for comment not only the budgetary expenses but also the Old Age Security Fund payments. Paragraph 4 of the report deals with that.

The budgetary expenditures are prepared well in advance even of the fiscal year itself, and they never do match the actual expenditures of the Government. As a rule the expenditures at the end of a year will be some $100 million or $200 million less than have been provided for in the budgetary estimates. This is because of lapses and time lags, and so forth. Therefore in paragraph 4 we have followed the precedents of previous years and the report deals with expenditures rather than with budgetary estimates. It makes a comparison from year to year and relates also the expenditures to the gross national product of the country. The table attached to the report applies to paragraph 4 of the report. That table shows the estimated expenditures for the current fiscal year as given by the Minister of Finance in the mini-budget, plus the old Age Security Fund expenditures. Comparing them with last year's expenditures you find an increase of some $949 million, or an increase of 10.9 per cent. The table shows that this is the largest percentage increase and the largest dollar increase since 1955. Last year's 8.2 per cent was also one of the largest increases. This paragraph of the report ends up with the words:

> To avoid higher taxes or more inflation it is desirable that the rate of increase of Federal Expenditures should moderate.

In that connection the committee is only saying what the Minister of Finance himself said, if I may quote from a speech he made in the House of Commons and which was later circulated outside the house. He said on December 19:

> —we must moderate the rate of increase in new public expenditures. Neither the capacity nor the willingness of Canadians to pay higher taxes should be taken for granted.

The same note is struck in the Bank of Canada Report released and tabled this week. At page 10 the report says:

> —there must be a realistic appreciation on the part of the public of the scale of the benefits the economy can physically provide through increases in output,—

And again at page 11:

> In this matter the attitudes and actions of governments are particularly important, not only because of the size of the government sector and closely related sectors of the economy, but also because of the disposition of others to follow patterns set, or acquiesced in, by governments.

I shall have something more to say about that later.

Paragraph 5 deals with recommendations of the Glassco Commission. As a result of the report of this commission the number of votes in the Estimates has been reduced from 495 in 1962-63 to 243 at the present time. This results in part from the program of decentralization recommended by the Glassco Commission whereby greater responsibility is placed upon departments for the control and management of their expenditures, and also that expenditures be classified by continuing programs of expenditures rather than with respect to certain classes of expenditures. The Auditor General called our attention to the fact that in this process there was some danger of erosion of parliamentary authority because on the average each individual vote is for a larger sum of money. Therefore, the committee report states that because of that possibility of erosion it is all the more important that we should continue our practice of having these Estimates before the Senate Finance Committee and having the Secretary of the Treasury Board and the Auditor General appear before the committee.

Paragraph 6 of the report deals with the fact that by reason of the continuing sittings of the Finance Committee, a problem that has been of some trouble to the Senate in past years has been overcome to a great extent —that is, there have always been complaints about the inadequate time allowed for consideration of the interim supply bills. The sittings of the Finance Committee and the fact that they have the Estimates under their scrutiny throughout the year meets the objections that have been made in the past to the question of the time limit on interim supply bills.

Paragraph 7 deals with the unusual occurrence that took place last November when moneys were transferred out of Vote 15 of the Finance estimates to meet payrolls of other departments. This was at a time when there was a debate continuing in the other place that prevented the supply bill from reaching us in the ordinary time necessary to authorize payroll payments. The Minister of National Revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury Board and the Auditor General, appeared before our Finance Committee in that connection. With out entering into any disputes as to whether the Government or the Opposition was to blame for the circumstances, the committee reports that such use of Vote 15 should be avoided.

Paragraph 8 of the report deals with another matter which was raised in the Senate—the "Sunday" program of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. You will recall that the president of the corporation, Mr. Ouimet, appeared before the committee and he commented that the particular program was a mistake. This paragraph concludes:

> Your committee believes that to avoid in the future such a mistake, which must have outraged a large percentage of viewers throughout Canada, there should be a stronger chain of supervising authority in the C.B.C., to insure that the programs do not offend against the standards of decency of the great majority of Canadians.

Paragraph 9 deals with the Atlantic Development Board. In this connection Dr. E. P. Weeks appeared before us, and I quote from the paragraph:

> His report was favourably received and the committee considers that the Board is developing sound long-term plans to increase employment and production in the Atlantic region.

Now I come to paragraph 10 which deals with the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada which recommended that Parliament might consider the setting up of a Standing Committee on Economic Affairs. I propose to say a little more about this in view of the remarks made by Senator Beaubien (Bedford) yesterday. He made those remarks on a privileged occasion, but I have his permission to speak to them because, along with others who heard him, I approve of the idea he had in mind. It seems to me that this suggestion of the Economic Council, which was also endorsed by the committee, provides a method whereby Senator Beaubien's idea might be implemented.

The Economic Council may have had some other things in mind, but unquestionably I think they were concerned with the economic effect of Government expenditures and Government actions, and for that reason the members of the House of Commons and the Senate could well have a joint committee dealing with economic affairs. The Economic Council points out that such a committee should have a small permanent staff of high quality. Your committee says:

> This indeed would be required and in addition such a staff could be of assistance to the Finance Committee because of the close relationship that should exist between Government expenditures and Government economic policies.

I want to add a few remarks of my own as to why I think that kind of committee might be a better one than, for example, to try to have the Finance Committee itself embark on a wider field of study and consideration than it does when it considers the Estimates themselves.

It is relevant to make some reference to the political situation and the kind of constitution we have in Canada. Senator Brooks referred to this yesterday, and again I have his permission to refer to what he said with approval, because he pointed out that the real control under our system of expenditures exists primarily before the Estimates actually reach Parliament. The respective ministers must prepare their Estimates; they must be submitted to Treasury Board; they must go through Cabinet; they must go through extensive scrutiny before they ever reach Parliament. But, on top of that, the power of Parliament to deal with the Estimates under our system of responsible Government is considerably limited. I might illustrate that by contrasting our system with that in the United States, where the Executive is not responsible to Congress in the same way as our Executive in Canada and in the United Kingdom is responsible to the elected representatives and ultimately, of course, to the electorate.

In the United States the budget of Estimates is prepared for the President by the Bureau of Estimates, which is really an arm of the President. It is then submitted by the President, first of all, to the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives proceeds to alter those Estimates as they put them in the form of bills, and they can alter them drastically. They can cut them down or increase them. After they have gone through that process, they go to the Senate, which has the same powers. By the time bills dealing with taxation or expenditures come back to the President, apart from any powers of persuasion that he has, and his power of veto, it is the practice that he must accept the bills with the expenditures and items as they have been revised and altered by Congress itself.

One sees the contrast between that system and ours whereby, in the first place, money bills cannot be introduced except by Executive action, by resolution and, having been brought into Parliament, traditionally and for all practical purposes the power of Parliament to deal with those bills is very limited, except with the consent of the Government.

Even more than an ordinary legislative bill, a finance bill, in effect, amounts to a vote of confidence, and if the Executive itself is not willing to amend these bills, then it is in the position of saying to Parliament, "If you do not vote the money that it is our responsibility to bring before you, or the taxes we say should be levied, then you are voting non-confidence in us."

This has been the situation not only in Canada but for a much longer time in the United Kingdom. It is only within comparatively modern times that we have reached the position of putting in certain controls by way of scrutiny, examination, calling witnesses, or asking for an accounting of expenditures by the Government and the Executive responsible to the electors. Therefore, we must keep in mind when we are dealing with these Estimates, whether in the House of Commons or here, that under our system there are very definite limits upon the powers, not only of the committees, but also of the two chambers.

This has been the subject of a great deal of thinking in the last few years, and there has grown up a general feeling that there ought to be a more effective control or, at any rate, that there ought to be a better way of bringing public opinion to bear, of achieving increased knowledge of what is going on with respect to Government expenditures. Of course, in Canada the problem is magnified by the fact the federal Government expenditures are less than half of the total government expenditures throughout Canada. The municipal and provincial expenditures amount to more than the federal Government expenditures.

In this connection I thought you might be interested, for example, to know that in the United Kingdom a good deal of study is being given to this problem. I have here a Command Paper which was issued just last year —Command Paper No. 2915 on Public Expenditure: Planning and Control. This is issued by the Chancellor of the Exchequer himself. This is not an independent study, but I think you will be interested in a couple of extracts from it which indicate the thinking of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Could we have the number of that Command Paper again, please?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: It is Command Paper No. 2915. This was presented to Parliament by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in February, 1966. This is Mr. Callaghan making the report.

Without reading it all, he says that the Government began a review of public expenditure for certain purposes, one of which was:

> ...to bring the growth of public expenditure into a sounder relationship with the development of the national economy.
>
> 3. The process of reshaping involved:—
>
> (a) A decision to limit the total growth of public sector expenditure to an average of 4¼ per cent a year at constant prices from 1964-65 to 1969-70: ...
>
> (b) Within this total, a long-term allocation of resources to each of the main public services to provide the quantitative framework for their development.
>
> (c) A strict review of individual programmes, in particular of defence.
>
> (d) The preparation of Estimates within specified limits so as to ensure their consistency with (a) and (b).
>
> (e) A review of the investment of the nationalised industries to fit in with the National Plan.
>
> (f) More effective implementation of the programmes and an improvement of financial control to get better value for money.

I will just read what his conclusion was at the end of the report. Bear in mind, this is a minister of the Labour Government, and whether he is able to carry out what he has in mind is another question. I am speaking rather of the kind of thinking and studying that is going on. He concludes by saying:

> We have, accordingly, reshaped the total programme and I can inform the House that from now on expenditure will be kept to the level that we as a nation can afford. I am giving instructions to Departments that the 1966-67 Estimates shall be drawn up within a limit which has been determined for each Department within the agreed total...

I think you realize that is somewhat different from the way we have been proceeding here in the past. So much for that.

I would like to stress that one can see that if one is to get into this kind of study, or that which Senator Beaubien had in mind, it will require the kind of staff that the Economic Council recommended, a small permanent staff of high quality. My own view is that this kind of staff is required even now, with the growth of the committee work of the Senate, without in any way derogating from the good work done by our present committee staff. To get the kind of expert opinion and advice we need, we must have more of a permanent staff of that character in the Senate.

Paragraph 11 deals with Expo 67 and the expenditures being made thereto. It points out that all world fairs have had a deficit, and no doubt this one will too, but it is too early yet to estimate the amount of it. We do know, however, that there are many advantages, both direct and indirect, from Expo 67. The advance sales of tickets has been greater than was expected.

The members of the committee were impressed by the evidence given by Mr. Robert F. Shaw, the Deputy Commissioner General, and Mr. G. D. Rediker, the Director of Finance and Administration, and expressed to these gentlemen their hope that the Exposition would be a tremendous success, and that its results would be of substantial benefit to Canada.

In paragraph 12 the committee pays tribute to the Secretary of the Treasury Board and the Auditor General, two outstanding officials in the public service. I hardly need to add to that, but I was interested to receive a letter from Mr. Henderson, the Auditor General, written after he read this report and containing some words of commendation. There is no doubt that we can benefit greatly from the help given us by these two devoted public servants.

Honourable senators, before I conclude I should like to pay a tribute to the members of the committee. They have all taken an active interest in the committee's work, and will continue to do so. In this respect I refer particularly to the members of the steering committee, namely, Senator Molson the Deputy Chairman of the committee, and Senators Flynn, Haig and Smith (Queens-Shelburne).

On motion of Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton), debate adjourned.

TELEFERRY BILL

FIRST READING

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-58, respecting interprovincial and international teleferries.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 17, 1967

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Return of Unclaimed Balances in the Chartered Banks of Canada, as at December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, chapter 48, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Return of Unclaimed Balances in the Banks incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act, as at December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 93(1) of the said Act, chapter 41, Statutes of Canada, 1953-54. (English and French texts).

Report of Air Canada for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 29 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, chapter 268, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report to Parliament of the Auditors on the Accounts of Air Canada for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 29 of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, chapter 268, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Eric Cook, for Hon. D. Lang, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons respecting Mr. Justice Leo Landreville, tabled the second report of the committee.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Sarto Fournier: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the honourable leader what is the program for the sitting for today and Monday, please.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Today we will take up the business on the Order Paper. Some of the items will be allowed to stand.

After the third readings of certain bills, we will consider the legislation which could go to committee.

Thereafter Senator O'Leary (Carleton) will deal with Item No. 3.

Subject to the will of the Senate at that time, we will probably adjourn until 3 o'clock on Monday next.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Hon. Clement A. O'Leary: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I say that I believe the records of this house would indicate that, over the years, it has become an established practice for one or more of Irish descent in this chamber to say just a few words about the Emerald Isle and its great Apostle, Saint Patrick, whose feast we celebrate today.

In the past we have had some excellent and knowledgeable speeches from such distinguished Irish-Canadian senators as Senator Burke and Senator Higgins of Newfoundland, Senator Felix Quinn of Halifax and, more recently, Senator Grosart, Senator Sullivan and Senator Quart. I may well have forgotten a few others. Of course, I am certainly not going to forget one who is the Irish-Canadian expert in the Senate—the honourable Leader of the Government, (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West).

It is not my intent to compete in any way with the great speeches that are on the record of this chamber. I come from that part of Nova Scotia where the innumerable Camerons, Chisholms, MacDonalds, MacGillivrays and MacIsaacs would not necessarily vote me into any public office as a result of the remarks I may make on this particular occasion. They are very tolerant, however, because they have on occasion for a brief period at least elected a few Irish representatives to certain public positions.

In this chamber, however, I feel much at home as I look around me—and I am not going to name any names—because we have here many honourable senators with either a whole lot or just a little bit of Irish blood. In the past I have noticed that the others have been very kind and tolerant and I am sure they are going to bear with me for just a couple of moments this morning.

I will not repeat the record of either the names or the accomplishments of Ireland's great scholars, poets, bards, warriors and missionaries. Suffice to say that irrespective of our origin we all owe much to these great men of the past who, during the Dark Ages, stood alone—stood alone in the world—not merely maintaining a spark of learning but actually holding the torch very high indeed.

St. Patrick and his missionaries were remarkably successful in their efforts to bring Christianity not only to Ireland, as we all know, but to all of the British Isles and beyond. I like to think that their greatest accomplishment was perhaps the introduction of the first simple elements of genuine Christian charity. For the first time in the history of man we read of compassion; compassion for the vanquished and the downtrodden. Every generation since then has known war and strife, but in almost every instance that we can think of, forgiveness has followed along with a deep sense of sympathy for the human misery resulting from war and strife.

I am sure that I echo the sentiments of everyone present when I wish the Irish well today wherever they may be. For all of us in this country, we are very proud and happy to be simply called Canadians.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to move the adjournment of the debate until later this day?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), debate adjourned.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS BILL, 1967

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with the provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Before the third reading is moved, may I ask the Leader of the Government if it is his understanding, as I hope it is, that the amounts allocated to the provinces as outlined in the bill are solely for educational purposes?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That certainly is my understanding. The money is to be made available to the provinces through this vehicle for the purposes of post-secondary education, and I think there is no doubt in the minds of the provincial authorities in every province that the money will be paid out for that purpose only.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Earl A. Hastings moved the third reading of Bill C-220, to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration.

He said: Honourable senators, on second reading of Bill C-220 I undertook to seek further information for the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) with respect to immigration offices behind the Iron Curtain. My answer to his inquiry is that up to the present time we have not had an immigration office in Moscow or any city behind the Iron Curtain. Such procedural matters that have to be dealt with are handled by the Canadian or British Embassy in that area. Immigration from such countries is probably confined to the very closest relatives or to the family unit—that is, aged parents, the wife, and/or children under 18 years of age of Canadian residents. It is sponsored immigration only from those sources, and they are subject to the usual security checks.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask if it is the intention to establish offices in such locations in the future? If it is only for relatives of the very few who come to Canada, why would it be necessary to establish such offices?

Hon. Mr. Hastings: The feeling of the department is that it is discrimination against certain Canadian citizens who have relatives in those countries to deny them the use of our services. It is felt by the department that the service should be expanded in that area. Efforts are now being made to establish offices to handle immigration matters.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They are getting the service already, according to the report.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): To supplement what Senator Hastings has just said, on behalf of the Government I might say that I have spoken to the minister about this matter, and I understand the establishment of offices will only proceed as the requirements justify.

It would be unfortunate to assume that upon the passage of this measure offices will automatically be established in some countries where obviously there is not much need for the service.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before item No. 3 on the Order Paper is called, may I say that I have spoken to Senator O'Leary (Carleton), and if it is agreeable I would ask that items Nos. 7, 9 and 10 be called in that order. The purpose of my request is that some of these bills may be referred to committee, and since a committee will be available next Monday morning at 11 o'clock, I think it would be our general wish that those items be considered now. Then we will revert to the normal order. I am grateful to Senator O'Leary for agreeing to this arrangement.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, March 15, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Urquhart, for the second reading of Bill C-221, respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, as the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Urquhart) explained to us, this proposed legislation is intended to provide uniform standards for private pension plans in fields covered by federal labour law.

I must pay a compliment to the sponsor because, as a novice, it was easily seen that he had done his homework, that he had worked considerably on this bill and went to great lengths to clarify it as much as he could.

In other words, this legislation protects the rights of employees in their own pension plans. For this reason alone the legislation is to be welcomed, because in the past pension plans in this country have not always been an adequate protection for those employees who might have contributed to a special pension fund.

It should be made clear at the outset that this legislation concerns itself with employees who come under the federal labour code, that is, employees who work on the railways, for interprovincial transport companies, banks, and such institutions. In other words, this bill will cover employees who come within the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and the Canada Labour (Safety) Code, as well as the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

The legislation is patterned after laws already passed by Quebec, Ontario and Alberta, and proposed in Manitoba and Saskatchewan in respect of corresponding provincial plans.

We will recall that on October 16, 1964—and I pay particular attention to the quotation the sponsor gave to us—the interprovincial conference on uniform pension legislation was held in Toronto, to which federal Government observers were invited. It was then agreed that every effort should be made to prepare a model act for consideration by the end of 1964. The Honourable Walter L. Gordon, the then Minister of Finance, made the following declaration in the other place on December 18, 1964:

> The Government has decided that as soon as there is a wide measure of agreement as to the approach to be taken by the provinces to this problem, as it applies to employment under provincial jurisdiction, the Government will, as a measure of co-operation with the provinces, introduce similar legislation applicable to employment in works, undertakings and businesses under the jurisdiction of Parliament.

With regard to the question of portability, the Minister had this to say:

> In addition, the pension plans of federal Government employees and employees of federal crown corporations will be amended to include similar provisions for portability.

The minister then hastened to make it clear that as both the provincial legislation and the proposed federal legislation on this subject will relate to private pension plans, there will be no conflict between it and the Canada Pension Plan.

So, honourable senators, it is clear that in 1964 the Government promised to move federally in line with provincial efforts to obtain uniformity of pension standards.

One of the inherent difficulties with the pension plans, past and present, is that they have not been proof against inflation. I believe that all honourable senators are aware of many sad cases in which the pensions now being paid, both in the public and private sector, are simply not adequate to cope with the rising cost of living. This problem intensifies almost daily, so that we must, and I would hope sooner rather than later, find some sensible, orderly and actuarially sound way of keeping pensions current so that they will remain reasonably commensurate with the cost of living.

Pension plans, I think it will be agreed, ought to contain built-in provisions which will allow the pensions to escalate in accordance with the increases in the cost of living. It is perhaps unrealistic to expect that this will be done pursuant to the present legislation, which does not even require all employers under federal labour legislation to have pension plans. The problem is of general concern and applies, in my estimation, to all pension legislation; and it is something that we should constantly bear in mind, and work toward, in dealing with all pension legislation. Should pensions not, in fact, be paid in constant dollars?

I am aware that the Joint Senate-Commons Committee on the Public Service is now studying the adequacy of the pensions being paid to retired public servants and military personnel. That important matter being in effect sub judice, I will not comment further; but, as far as I know, no comparable consideration is being given to the plight of those in receipt of inadequate pensions in the private sector. Politics has been described as "the art of the possible." Whatever our mistakes may have been in the past, I suggest that every step possible should now be taken to ensure that they are not repeated in the future, so that those who subsequently retire on pension will not find themselves in a position of hardship one, five or ten years later, as the result of inflation.

Having said that, honourable senators, it seems to me that this legislation is of a technical character, but it has been so well explained by the sponsor that I see no necessity for referring it to a committee. I understand that some employees who will be affected are somewhat confused and uncertain as to what the legislation will accomplish.

Some appear to think that, once this legislation is passed, all employees within the jurisdiction of the federal labour code will have pension plans protected by law; whereas, all this bill does is to ensure that if an employer has established a pension plan, or if hereafter he establishes one, it must meet the standards set up by this legislation.

I note that the sponsor of the bill is not present today. Because I do not see any necessity for referring this bill to a committee, I had hoped he would be here to answer two questions. However, I will put them on the record, and if the honourable Leader of the Government, or anyone else, has the answers, he or they might supply us with them.

My first question is: Could we ascertain how the two main categories of pension plans—the underwritten plans and the trusteed plans—are to be related and dealt with? As we know, there are usually two types of pensions, one is the sort of trust fund called trusteed plan, and there is another plan which is underwritten by an insurance company.

The second question is: I would also like to know how the contributory and non-contributory plans are to be integrated into the protective provision.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I thank honourable Senator Choquette for his remarks on this legislation.

I emphasize as he did and as the honourable sponsor did, that the initiative in this field was taken by the provinces, led by the Province of Ontario, which has the closest approach to model legislation on this subject.

As Senator Choquette has indicated, this bill is concerned not with public plans such as the Canada Pension Plan or the Public Service Superannuation Plan, but with private plans. He rightly remarks that inflation will be a continu ng problem for those under any pension plan. It has been proven only too true that in the last decade the erosion of the dollar has been extensive indeed.

In the Canada Pension Plan there is a provision for escalation based upon the cost of living. That escalation applies also to the Old Age Pension provisions. I see no possibility of providing for such escalation in the case of private plans, other than through the wise investment of the funds, because the contributions of employer and employees in private plans are based usually on a percentage of the earnings of an employee in a given year.

Whether these plans are administered by underwriting companies, as honourable Senator Choquette describes them—which would mean trust companies or insurance companies—or even through the purchase of annuities, or whether they are administered by private trustees, as is sometimes the case, the type of investment which the trustee is entitled to make is not restricted to trustee investments, Government bonds and such other trustee investments as are listed by statute in every province.

These trustees are entitled to make investments which are available to insurance companies and trust and loan companies. As all honourable senators know, that is a wide field. It allows for the purchase of equities and, while there is some restriction, it provides an opportunity for growth.

That may be the only way in which the erosion of the dollar can be taken care of in respect of private pension plans, unless by agreement between employer and employees some arrangement can be made. This bill does not deal with that, but in time perhaps such an arrangement could be worked out in private contract, under the provisions of this bill.

Honourable Senator Choquette asked about plans, the funds for which are held by trustees alone, private trustees, on the one hand, and plans which are underwritten or for which the trustee is an insurance company or a trust company.

There is nothing in this bill to scrap any of those plans where they are so underwritten in the sense that such a company is the trustee. The other type of trustee is one which has not the financial status of an insurance company or a trust company.

I take it that Senator Choquette's point is that there is more assurance for the solvency of the fund if there is an insurance company behind the plan rather than a private trustee. The only answer which can be given on that point is that this legislation seeks to provide certain rules for the safety and security of these funds, rules which will allow the Superintendent of Insurance, with whom these plans are to be registered, to look into the adequacy of the investing policy.

In that way, in a plan managed by a private trustee, the Superintendent of Insurance would have authority, under this legislation, to ensure that the trustee observes the rules requiring the fund to be kept in a proper condition of solvency.

Furthermore, there are winding-up provisions under section 12 of the bill. I suppose that also goes to the question of the security of the fund and the right of the individual employee to protection in respect of the payments to which he is entitled as a result of his contributions.

Honourable senators, in this model bill there is another provision which helps employees. Many private plans contain a clause that if an employee withdraws his services from a company and drops out of the plan, his contributions are forfeit. This is being changed under this legislation. Such plans now existing do not necessarily mean that the employer would then take the money back into income. It would normally be used to reduce the contribution which the employer would have to make in future years as a result of the withdrawal of certain employees from the plan. In those cases in the future there will be no forfeiture. There will be a vesting in the employee of his entitlement under the private plan—and basically this is what we mean by portability.

Most private plans allow an employee to withdraw his own contribution when he withdraws his services. This legislation is designed to give him more than that; in other words, to give him also an entitlement to the contributions which have been made already on his behalf by his employer.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: I thank the honourable leader for his clear explanation. Had I known he had such a good answer and could give it promptly, I would have referred the bill to committee and have asked that there be only one expert called—the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is St. Patrick's Day!

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: The honourable Senator Choquette has suggested that some proceedings should be taken to ensure that the payments shall be constant, that is, that the dollar shall be constant. Is not the practical problem confined almost entirely to keeping the dollar constant?

Honourable senators may recollect that earlier in this session I presented a very careful analysis of the dollar and its rise and fall. I have not heard any discussion as a consequence of that, although I carried on some conversation with the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. I pointed out at that time that the most potent factor in the falling of the value of the dollar was the number of dollars in circulation. After the First World War we went off the gold standard, so that from that time until now the only support that has been given to the Canadian dollar, as to the United Kingdom currency, has been sentiment: the value which people attach to the dollar. It has been largely sentimental, but influenced in the main by the number of dollars in circulation.

I pointed out at that time that today there are twice as many dollars in circulation as there were 20 years ago; there are one-half as many more dollars in circulation as there were 10 years ago. I pointed out that the temptation to force more and more money into circulation is ever present in those who control the finances of our country, because it amounts to a loan from the public interest free.

Nobody seems to understand or pay any attention to the fact that more and more money is shoved into circulation by the payment of Government bills through the printing press. Nobody seems to pay any attention to that, and yet in my judgment that is the key to the rise and fall of the dollar. I am not alone in thinking that, because we have had some wonderful experiences to show that it is true. If I may mention just one it is when the Republic of Germany brought the mark down to nothing simply by running the printing press.

We have not gone that far, but the principles are the same whether applied to our own dollar or to the German mark.

I would think that this might be a subject which we in the Senate could undertake to study seriously with great advantage. I suggested on one occasion that we call the representatives of the Finance Department and cross-examine them on what they do and why. The association between the Finance Department and the Bank of Canada brings about these changes in monetary values. If we could really come to some understanding as to the fundamentals of this problem we would greatly benefit the Canadian people.

The constant erosion, as Senator Connolly has called it, of the dollar has brought great suffering and bad business principles into the life of the nation ever since the last war. We might very well do a fine piece of public service, if we went to the bottom of this thing and reported to the Canadian people, who I am sure are uninformed on this problem.

I notice that Senator Connolly assumed in his remarks that this erosion of the dollar must go on. I cannot agree with that statement. It will go on if we follow the same policies we have in the last 20 or 30 years. It certainly will go on with its evil results to many people besides those to whom both honourable gentlemen have referred, those who live on pensions.

I hope my colleagues will give some thought to this subject.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

He said: Honourable senators, before I attempt to explain or at least give my version of Bill C-190, perhaps I might be allowed to say to my Irish friends, "The top of the mornin' to you," and just indicate to you that had it not been for two happenings in my family history perhaps I might have had some closer association with the Irish. By the time my forefathers left Scotland—perhaps I should say were chased out of Scotland—the Irish had closed their borders to us and we had to come to Canada. Perhaps that was not a bad move, but then the second blow was struck by the fact that I was born on March 16. Had that event been delayed by one day, I again might have had some closer association with the Irish.

Perhaps we should leave the celebrations of St. Patrick's Day to the Irish and, as a lonely Scot, I will attempt to give my version of Bill C-190.

There are many changes proposed in this bill, an act to amend the Bank of Canada Act, but many of them are minor, needing little if any explanation. However, there are at least two major changes. The first one is on page 2 of the bill, section 14, which attempts to spell out the relationship between the government of the day and the Bank of Canada.

I do not think it is necessary to go back into history to tell honourable senators of the growth and changes which have taken place in the Bank of Canada Act since its inception in 1934. I think it is only necessary at this time to point out that during that interval from 1934 to date there have been some differences of opinion as to who has been responsible for monetary policy in our country.

The amendments to the Bank of Canada Act being proposed now make it clear to everyone in Canada that from this time forward, if not in the past, the government of the day will be responsible for the monetary policies of this country in consultation, of course, with the Governor and the officials of the Bank of Canada.

As a matter of fact clause 14 does three things. First, it makes provision for continuous consultation between the governor of the bank and the government of the day. I need only refer to some remarks of the present Governor of the Bank of Canada made shortly after he was appointed to his present position, when he claimed that in his opinion the government of the day must accept responsibility for monetary policy, but they must be in continuous consultation with himself and other officials of the bank. Furthermore, the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance indicated that this was the method or the procedure which they thought ought to be followed. This bill makes provision for that consultation.

The bill also provides a procedure to be followed in the event there is a disagreement between the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance or the Government. And the Minister of Finance, as a minister of the Crown, speaks for the Government and on its behalf in any consultation with the officials of the Bank of Canada.

The third change is to do away with the veto power of the governor or deputy governor with regard to decisions that have been made by the directors or the executive committee. This power has been in the act for many years, but to my knowledge it has never been used and clause 14 of the bill recommended that it be removed from the act.

So, honourable senators, under this amendment it will no longer be possible for any government to deny its responsibility for monetary policy any more than it can deny its responsibility for any policy in the field of national affairs. I am confident that this was the meaning behind the Bank of Canada Act as far back as 1936, but there have been some occasions during our history when this was not agreed to by all people in public life, and personally I am pleased to see it spelled out in the bill. I hope all honourable senators will lend their support to this change.

The second major change appears at page 5 of the bill. Here we are dealing with the cash and secondary reserves requirement of the chartered banks of Canada. At the moment, as you know, we have only cash reserves, but this bill has a proposed amendment to make allowances for secondary reserves. Why is this necessary?

As I said a moment ago section 18, subsection 2, of the Bank of Canada Act would empower the Bank of Canada to impose or vary a minimum secondary reserve requirement applicable to chartered banks, replacing its existing power to vary the minimum cash reserve requirements. I quote here from the opening statement of the Governor of the Bank of Canada made before the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in October 1966:

> In certain situations the usual techniques of cash reserve management may need to be supplemented by some more direct and immediate method of influencing chartered bank lending policies. Circumstances could arise, for example, in which it was important to exert some temporary restraint on bank loan expansion while at the same time minimizing, so far as possible, a rise in market interest rates which would result from chartered banks selling Government securities to get the resources needed to meet the increased loan demand.
>
> Under the existing legislation, the Bank of Canada could try to deal with a situation of this kind by invoking its power to increase the required cash reserve ratio applicable to the banks. The effect would be to impound liquidity which the chartered banks might otherwise be able to draw upon in order to postpone an adjustment in their lending policies, since the banks would have to sell liquid assets to the Bank of Canada to meet the higher legal cash requirements. The use of this power would, however, have incidental effects on the earnings position of the institutions to which it applied, since cash reserves earn no return.
>
> To replace this power to vary the required level of cash reserves it is now proposed that the Bank of Canada should have the power to impose and vary a secondary reserve requirement. This would provide an alternative means of impounding chartered bank liquidity.

> The exercise of this power would be subject to specified limits and notice requirements. If a secondary reserve requirement were imposed under this section of the act, it could not initially be fixed at more than 6 per cent of the chartered banks' Canadian dollar deposit liabilities, and the maximum level to which it could eventually be raised would be 12 per cent. Increases in the required ratio would be limited to one per cent per month and would be preceded by one month's notice, as would the initial imposition of such a requirement. The secondary reserves included would be any cash in excess of the statutory cash requirement, day-to-day loans and Government of Canada treasury bills. The requirement would apply to the banks' average holdings of such assets each month.

In simple language, honourable senators, the proposed stand-by power included in this section would provide a means of either impounding or releasing chartered banks' liquidities, and this would in turn influence the lending policies of our chartered banks. I think we are all very familiar with circumstances occurring recently where this would have been a great asset to the economic conditions in our country.

It is my intention, if honourable senators see fit to give second reading to this bill, to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. In the event there are any questions on technical matters such as the one I have just raised, it would be my preference that they should be asked of the officials at such a meeting, because I know that officials of the Bank of Canada will be present. I say this because I have no training in the banking field, and the officials who will be present will be well qualified to answer any questions asked.

There are many other sections which have been in this act since 1934 and have never been used. The first one to which I wish to refer is section 20, at page 6 of the bill. This section removes from the Bank of Canada Act the provision whereby the Bank of Canada could act as banker or fiscal agent of a province or of the provinces of Canada. Again, this section has never been used, and the Porter Commission recommended that it be removed from the act.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: You are referring to clause 11 of this bill.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: That is right; page 6, clause 11, dealing with section 20 of the present act. There is a feeling that if the Bank of Canada were to provide these facilities to the provinces it could interfere with the central bank's management of Canadian monetary policy, and therefore the recommendation is made that it should be removed from the act.

Another change is in section 21, where the wording "payable to bearer on demand and" is removed from the notes of the Bank of Canada. The notes themselves are legal currency under the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, and therefore there is no need for continuing this wording.

The third change is in section 22 where reference is made to gold in foreign exchange reserves against notes and deposit liabilities, to back these notes by gold. This has not been the case for many years. I would like to refer to the action that was taken in 1940 when the gold reserve requirement was first withdrawn by the Exchange Fund Order under the War Measures Act and the bank's gold holdings were transferred to the Exchange Fund. The suspension was continued after the war by section 70(2) of the Foreign Exchange Act which was passed in August 1946. The wording of that section was virtually identical to that of the present section 25(1) of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act passed in 1952 with the termination of the foreign exchange control.

There are several other proposals in the bill which follow recommendations of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance concerning those who might act as directors of the Bank of Canada or be engaged on the management staff of the bank.

As you know, honourable senators, certain individuals because of the position they hold in our society, are not qualified to act as directors of the Bank of Canada, and it is now proposed to add to that list partners, officers or employees of firms of investment dealers which act as primary distributors of Government of Canada securities. I am sure all honourable senators will agree that those who occupy positions such as those already included in the act and those it is intended to add to the act, ought not to be directors of the Bank of Canada.

It is also proposed that the executive committee of the bank should be enlarged by one. It is proposed that the aggregate amount of the directors' fees should be increased. The reason for this is to make it possible for a full meeting of the board to take place more frequently in the future than has been possible in the past.

The bill proposes to make the pensions of the Governor and the Deputy Governor of the bank subject to order in council. After all, the Governor and the Deputy Governor are appointed and their salaries are fixed by order in council so it is felt to be only fair that their pensions should be set by order in council as well.

Turning to page 7 of the bill, clause 16, you will find that the period of time that may expire before the minister has to table his report in Parliament has been extended from 14 to 21 days. The only reason for adding the additional seven days is to give adequate time for its printing and translation.

As I said a moment ago, it is my intention, if honourable senators see fit to give this bill second reading, to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. At the meeting of that committee the officials of the bank will be present, and I am sure all questions will be answered to your satisfaction.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, considering the date, it would be completely unrealistic if I could not claim a little piece of the shamrock in my blood. Consequently, I want to remind you that when my former home country, Iceland, was colonized, beginning in 874, although the colonization was primarily from Norway, nevertheless, history records that about 20 to 25 per cent of the colonists came from Ireland.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And missionaries before that too.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: And, indeed, missionaries—that is, the ones from Ireland.

In regard to Bill C-190, the honourable Senator McDonald has explained its provisions very fully. As he says, there are two main provisions in the bill. One of them is contained in clause 6, which revises section 14, under the heading, "Government Directive." It involves the relationship between the government of the day and the Governor of the Bank—or, the Government and the Board of Directors of the Bank in respect to monetary policy.

The other most important feature of the bill is clause 9, which sets up a new method of maintaining reserves of the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada.

The other parts of the bill are largely what we call housekeeping provisions, although as indicated by the honourable sponsor, most of the amendments are of considerable importance. However, compared to the two I have particularly mentioned, the others are not as significant.

Section 14 is of great importance, and impinges to a great extent on the remarks made by the honourable Senator Roebuck and others earlier today concerning the erosion of the dollar. The essence of section 14 is the question of consultation between the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Government of the day—I should perhaps say, consultation between the Governor of the Bank and the Minister of Finance of the day. Consequently, one wonders why a section in the same terms as this amendment was not a part of the Bank of Canada Act when it was enacted in 1934.

I would now like to throw out the suggestion that perhaps this amendment is a mixed blessing. I realize that it had full support in the other place, and I am quite sure it will have full support here. However, I wish to recall to honourable senators that the Bank of Canada Act was drafted and enacted following a comprehensive report on the financial and banking system of this country presented by a royal commission headed by Lord Macmillan, an eminent financier and banker from the United Kingdom. I think he was considered at the time to be one of the leading world authorities on the subject of banking, particularly central banking. The Macmillan Commission did not recommend the inclusion in the act of a section such as the one now being included, and there was a very definite reason for the omission.

Let me say first, that of the nearly one hundred central banks of the world, very few of them have a similar provision to the one we are now enacting. And when I say "very few", I exclude the totalitarian countries. Indeed, the large majority of the central banks of the world are legally responsible for monetary policy, and the Government is in each case responsible, for fiscal policy. When there was a change of Government in 1935 it was, however, recognized by the Minister of Finance who succeeded the Minister of Finance of the Bennett Government that here was a situation that might conceivably lead to difficulty, namely, because the act did not specify that monetary policy was the responsibility of government.

Nevertheless, you will recall that the Governor at that time was Mr. Graham Towers, a banker of highest integrity, ability and experience. It was indeed thought inconceivable that there would not be that degree of consultation between the Minister of Finance and Mr. Towers that would prevent difficulties such as arose later on, and of which this house is very much aware. The fact is that there was unquestionably complete confidence and consultation at all times between Mr. Graham Towers and the Minister of Finance for as long as Mr. Towers held the important post of Governor of the Bank of Canada.

The system worked well, and the key to the system, as recommended by Lord Macmillan and as enacted in the Bank of Canada Act, was that the Governor of the Bank of Canada must be a man of ability, he must be a banker, and he must understand the role of the central bank in the economic fabric of a nation. I say that Mr. Towers had all those qualifications in abundance.

When Mr. Rasminsky was appointed Governor of the Bank of Canada one of the first things he did was to make a statement openly that it was his intention that at all times there would be complete consultation between himself and the government of the day. Nevertheless, the law remains today as it was in 1934, and we have only had this one unfortunate episode which occurred a few years ago, and which of course is the reason for this amendment.

I wish to recall to you, however, that not one, but two ministers of finance in this country had difficulty with the second governor of the bank. Mr. Harris had difficulty and so did Mr. Fleming. It is a fact of record that Mr. Harris stated in 1956 that by law the Government was not in charge of monetary policy in this country, and that he refused to take responsibility for it. Mr. Fleming did likewise. Indeed, both of them were right in law.

Honourable senators, I want to say that in my judgment we would not have had this amendment were it not for the needless episodes that occurred during the tenure of office of the second Governor of the Bank.

In this regard, let me quote from the Report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. In the first place, the report devoted a great deal of time and attention to this very problem, commencing with page 539. In the final event, not without hesitation however, the royal commission recommended that this amendment be enacted. Why was it not put in the original act? I think the key is set out in a sentence on page 541:

> The main reason, however, for conferring some measure of autonomy on the central bank has been the historical tendency of governments of all forms to develop the habit of inflating the currency.

The example, of course, is obvious. When a government comes to the end of its time of office and an election is pending, there is a tremendous tendency on its part to open the flood gates of the money supply, to give the economy a "shot in the arm" in order to assist the government in an election. I speak not only of Canada. This is a natural tendency in democracies in all parts of the world. That is the reason why the original act omitted the substance of the present amendment.

Continuing on page 541 of the report:

> Indeed, it was largely because the Macmillan Commission found that rates on Finance Act advances were varied mainly to meet the exigencies of government finance rather than the credit needs of the country that it recommended setting up an independent central bank.

The word "independent" there of course refers to the legal position as it was in the Bank of Canada Act—complete separation in law between monetary and fiscal policy. That omission, however, did not exclude the obvious essential of a central bank, namely, that there must be continuous consultation between the Governor of the Bank and the Government in power in regard to the monetary policy of the bank.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say on this phase of the bill. But I have tried to show that real dangers are involved when a nation completely amalgamates the monetary authority of a country, that is the agency in charge of monetary policy, and the government which is responsible for fiscal policy. Consequently, as honourable senators will observe, the amendment is very carefully drafted.

The honourable senator who introduced the bill (Hon. Mr. McDonald) indicated that the section had three parts, and I would like to draw to your attention the safeguards that are included in it. They are real safeguards and are there for a purpose. The amendment completely follows the wording suggested in the Porter Royal Commission on Banking and Finance.

The first part of the section states:

> The Minister and the Governor shall consult regularly on monetary policy and on its relation to general economic policy.

That has always been the practice except perhaps in the instance that I referred to in 1956 and later in 1961.

Then follows a most ingenious subsection 2 which authorizes a directive, not by the Minister of Finance but by order in council, and that directive is required to set out the policy of the Government in specific terms and applicable for a specified period, and the bank shall comply with such directive.

Now, this directive must be on "top of the table," and cannot be given in camera to the Governor of the Bank. Subsection 3 states:

> A directive given under this section shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette and shall be laid before Parliament within fifteen days after the giving thereof...

So, honourable senators, there are real safeguards in regard to maintaining the independence of the bank; and when, under this legislation, monetary policy is assumed by government it is done under conditions where there has been consultation, and the directive must be given in such circumstances that the public of the country will know what it is all about and be alert to the reasons for giving it. In that event, of course, the public has the final decision to make in regard to these matters.

By and large, I agree with the amendment. Nevertheless, it was my desire to point out the background of the amendment. I also want to express the hope that never again will a contest develop between the governor of the bank and the government of the country. Nothing but harm and damage would result from such a confrontation.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: May I ask the sponsor of the bill a question? On page 6, clause 12, the new section 21 says:

> (1) The Bank has the sole right to issue notes intended for circulation in Canada and such notes shall be a first charge upon the assets of the Bank.

The old section read:

> (1) The Bank has the sole right to issue notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada and such notes shall be a first charge upon the assets of the Bank.

All I see in the change is that in future it will have a right to issue notes, and previously it had the right to issue notes "payable on demand". What is the difference?

Apparently this bill will give to the Government a greater power than it had before with regard to the issue of currency. As Senator Thorvaldson has so well said, there is a danger at least of the monetary policy being guided by the interests of the party in power, the Government, rather than by the needs of the people.

Are we by this bill getting closer to making monetary policy a matter of government exigency than it was previously? It has been bad enough, but does this make it worse?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I do not think it does. The words "payable to bearer on demand" have been deleted. What does it mean? It does not mean anything, because all bills are legal tender under the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act. So all we are removing is verbiage. In my opinion, it will make no difference to the situation.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My second question is, in making the management of the Bank of Canada in monetary policy more amenable to Government control, are we making the operation of finance more in the interest of the government of the day than in the interest of the public at large?

One would not wish to confuse these two points, but in this instance, the issuance of government notes is a loan to the government without interest. Undoubtedly, the administration—and I do not care which party is in power—does not have to pay interest. They do not have to sell bonds, they simply print the money and pay their debts with it. Are we making the situation worse or better by these changes?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I do not think the situation is being changed at all. I can express only my own opinion; I cannot speak for the Government. It seems to me that the most sacred responsibility of any government is monetary control of the nation, and that governments must accept that responsibility. If they wish to fool around with monetary policy in election years, I think the people will judge them for it, and I hope they do. I do not believe any change is being made in this particular instance by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Honorable Mr. McDonald (Moosomin), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, March 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Everett, for the second reading of Bill S-57, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Museums of Canada.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, most of those who have spoken this morning have been emphatic in claiming their Irish descent and Irish blood. I might say that I can do that too. I am sure that anyone who had a grandfather by the name of Patrick Kelly who came from Cork in Ireland certainly has such a claim. I am proud to claim it and to emphasize it, not only on St. Patrick's Day but on every day in the year.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You will qualify to be president of the club.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I am speaking on a bill which has not had much publicity. It is a subject of importance to the Canadian people. Although I do not claim to have much knowledge of this subject, I have visited quite a number of museums in this country and elsewhere and, like most honourable senators and the general public, I have always found such museums of considerable interest.

We are rather surprised at this bill being introduced at this time. It was unexpected, having been introduced very recently without previous warning. While I congratulate the sponsor of the bill on having given us a good explanation of it, I think more is required and I hope it will be sent to a committee.

While speaking of Senator Everett, may I say how very pleased I am to note that one of our youngest senators is taking such an active part in the proceedings of the Senate. It is a good omen.

Honourable senators, this legislation was not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, nor in the long list of business set out in the other place and here as a matter likely to come before us. What is the urgency for this particular bill? Why could it not have waited until the next session?

There is deep interest in museums from one end of Canada to the other. Had this bill been advertised for months as has been done in the case of other measures, there would have been delegations from different cities and towns across Canada. In addition to national museums, there are semi-national museums in the large centres, and those in charge would have been anxious to come here and make representations, because it is well known that some museums are having a difficult time financially. Further, in the short time available now, all that we can give to this bill, if it is to go through before Easter, is very perfunctory attention.

May I refer to two other bills from the same source, namely, the Department of the Secretary of State. Bill C-194, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Arts Centre, is a bill very similar to this one, well advertised and given considerable attention. Bill C-204, to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation, is in the same category. If you read these bills you will find that the intention and the wording are practically the same as in this bill before us.

Now, while I make these statements, honourable senators, I am not objecting to this bill being in the Senate. My objection is to the time at which it is being introduced. We are always very happy when the Leader of the Government in the Senate tells us he is getting more work for us. We encourage him to be active in that connection. But there are certain questions: Why the urgency? Why so much secrecy regarding this bill? As it is more or less a sister bill to these other bills, why was it not introduced long ago? Why was it not introduced and explained by the Secretary of State or by someone else at that time?

If I might interject here, I do not see any great reason for unnecessarily prolonging the life of this particular session. I think we are all of the opinion that the sooner it dies the better for the session, and the better for all those participating in it. It is the longest in history, and the least productive.

I would point out to honourable senators that museums are not new in Canada. This is not something that somebody has just discovered in the last few weeks or months. We have old museums in Canada. We had museums in the provinces before the days of Confederation. I might say that we are very proud that they originated in the Maritime provinces, because the father of museums in Canada was Abraham Gesner, and the first museum in Canada—though it was not Canada at that time—was founded in the City of Saint John in 1842.

Museums have had a very interesting history in every province of Canada. There are over 200 different kinds in this country. I read a short article in a paper published in 1955 by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on museums and art galleries in Canada. The article said that the museums of Canada fall into a number of classes, depending, first, on what they regard as their chief function and, second, on the sources of the funds by which they are supported. There are natural-history museums and local museums devoted to a variety of subjects related to a particular locality or area. From the point of view of maintenance there are national museums supported by the federal Government, provincial museums financed by the various provinces, and local museums which commonly receive some help from the municipality in which they are located. In addition there are some that are supported entirely from private donations and admittance fees.

So you can see that there is a large variety of museums and very much interest in them. I have already mentioned the museum which was established in the City of Saint John in 1842. To mention some of the other more important museums, this same Abraham Gesner helped to found a museum here in Ottawa the following year, 1843. There is the great museum of the Citadel in Quebec City, a military museum. There is the Montreal McCord National Museum, which is very outstanding, and there is the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto.

The following museums have staff members specifically charged with organizing programs in education and providing extension services:

The Nova Scotia Museum in Halifax;

Laval University Museum established in 1950, the first university museum established in Canada;

McGill University Museum, Montreal, which was established a few years later;

The National Museum of Canada in Ottawa;

The Royal Ontario Museum, Toronto;

The Saskatchewan Museum of Natural History, Regina, Saskatchewan;

The Manitoba Museum, Winnipeg, Manitoba; and

The Provincial Museum of Natural History and Anthropology in Victoria, B.C.

There are many others as well.

I was interested to learn that the Royal Ontario Museum of the University of Toronto is the world's largest university museum. I am sure that all honourable senators would be very interested and proud to learn that.

We are told in the bill that the museums' work is to be extended directly with the schools. Well, for years this work in connection with schools has been going on all over Canada from the different museums. Very extensive work has been done.

More than 50 years ago, when I was at school we were taken to the museum in the City of Saint John to view the different collections there. I recall that the director of that museum, Dr. McIntosh, used to take canoe trips with teachers in the summer holidays. He would take as many as 30 teachers to see different interesting places—old Indian forts, French forts, English forts; the flora and fauna of the country and anything of interest at all. The teachers were taken to these sites and shown these things and I am sure they passed their interest and information on to the children they taught. So it is nothing new for us to say we are by this bill setting up museums for the instruction of children.

There are certain questions, honourable senators, which I hope will be answered in the committee. I think one of the questions we should ask is the estimate of the extra costs that this new setup is going to mean. We have already set up these other two organizations which I have mentioned from the Department of the Secretary of State, and already we are beginning to feel the large extra cost as far as they are concerned, and we can expect more.

Under this bill I understand we are going to set up training schools for the operation of museums. There will be travelling costs for different museums' exhibits being moved from one part of Canada to the other. Well, Canada is a very large country; transferring exhibits from one part of it to the other could be very expensive, however desirable it might be.

Some people will say that it is not going to cost an awful lot for museums. That is what we say about all these bills that come before us. It is not the cost of one particular item that is so important. If it were only one item it would be all right, but it is the cost of the dozens of items we are having to consider.

You all know the story of the straw that broke the camel's back. If you keep adding these straws which are not very heavy in themselves, they eventually break the camel's back—in this case, the taxpayer's back. As our good friend Senator Leonard pointed out yesterday, these terrific costs in Government today are putting too much of a burden on the backs of the Canadian people. Again, we heard the Leader of the Government speak today of the erosion of the dollar. These are all matters which in my opinion should be taken into consideration by the Government today, and, instead of adding to the costs, even though these things may seem at the time more or less desirable, I think it is time for us surely to consider cutting back on these costs. Let us get down to priorities as to needs.

Having made those general remarks, honourable senators, I would like now to look briefly at the bill itself. As I say, we have had so little time and there has been so little publicity regarding this bill that I think we should have a full explanation of it in the committee.

On page 1, section 3, we have the establishment of the corporation. I note from that that the Director of the Canada Council is to be the chairman. At least that is what I understood from reading it. The President of the National Research Council will be the vice-chairman. I have no objection to this, but besides these two gentlemen there will be 10 other members. So the first board is set up which will consist of at least 12 trustees, and of course that board will have to have an extra staff.

I also note that the chairman and vice-chairman and board shall be appointed by the Governor in Council for such terms, not exceeding five years each, as are fixed by the Governor in Council. Honourable senators, when we get good men appointed as directors—and I am sure they would not be appointed unless they were good men, as are the men we have now—I hope they will not be limited to a five-year tenure of office. If this were insisted upon I would regard it as being a point of weakness in the bill.

Clause 5 speaks about the purposes and powers of the corporation, and the sponsor of the bill particularly emphasized this clause. The wording of the clause is as follows:

> 5. (1) The purposes of the Corporation are to demonstrate the products of nature and the works of man, with special but not exclusive reference to Canada, so as to promote interest therein throughout Canada and to disseminate knowledge thereof.

Surely that is what we have been doing for the last hundred years, not only in our national museums but in all the other museums across the country. The clause goes on:

> (2) In furtherance of its purposes the Corporation may
>
> (a) collect, classify, preserve and display objects relevant to its purposes;

That has been done. A little further down we see this:

> (c) arrange for and sponsor travelling exhibitions of materials in, or related to, its collections.

Are they going to travel from Ottawa, the centre of Canada, to St. John's, Newfoundland, and to Victoria, British Columbia? To my mind that is going to be very expensive.

Then, honourable senators, we come to clause 6 which deals with the organization of this corporation. Mind you, we already have 12 trustees, but in this clause we read the following:

> 6. The corporation shall comprise
>
> (a) a museum of fine arts, to be known as the National Gallery of Canada;
>
> (b) a museum of human history;
>
> (c) a museum of natural history;
>
> (d) a museum of science and technology; and
>
> (e) such other museums as may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, be established by the Board.

Then clause 7 goes on to say:

> 7. (1) There shall be a director for each museum appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the board to hold office during pleasure.

In other words, honourable senators, there shall be a director for each and every museum that is set up. Again I would point out that if there is to be a director for every museum, and we do not know how many will be set up under subclause (e) of clause 6, we do not know how many directors there will be. There could be a great number of them. Frankly, I think in bills like this we see that Parkinson's law is simply running wild.

Then, honourable senators, we see that there is to be a special account opened in the Consolidated Revenue Fund and a secretary-general is to be appointed. Three special funds are to be established, which shall be under the jurisdiction of the secretary-general. You can rest assured, if there are three funds there will be three organizations established to look after them. Here again, we have more people on the payroll and more money being spent.

Clause 13, honourable senators, deals with by-laws. I do not intend to try to analyse all the clauses of this bill because I hope it will go to a committee for study. In this clause we see that the board with the approval of the minister may make by-laws, and one of the authorities given under the by-laws is for the establishment of consultative committees consisting of members of the board or persons other than members, or both. Where are we going to have these consultative committees? Will we have them all across Canada? You cannot appoint just one committee; you will have to appoint a committee in every city or town where there is a museum.

I am not trying to confuse the National Museum with other museums, but I do know that the federal Government does pay the expenses of national museums and part of the costs of others, and it is very hard to determine the difference between a national or a semi-national museum. By-laws may also be made to fix remuneration, travelling and living expenses to be paid to members of the board as provided for in the act, and to members of the consultative committees other than members of the board. Therefore, we will have numerous people being paid salaries directly from Ottawa and we shall have these consultative committees which get a per diem amount set up all across the country. They will be everywhere—how many, we do not know.

I do not intend to speak further on this matter today, but I do want to point out that in matters of bills such as this, unless the trend is halted we are going to end up following the Parkinson theory. The gross in unnecessary spending together with the eroding of the dollar—with $11 billion taxes on the people of Canada for federal Government expenses alone—I think bills such as this should be very carefully considered first by the minister responsible and then by the cabinet. I also think—though I wonder if I should say it—it might be a good thing if we had more men like C. D. Howe or Donald Fleming in our cabinets to speak to matters such as I see in this bill. I may be wrong in this respect.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not propose to speak at any length.

Senator Brooks referred to the fact that this bill came to this house unheralded and unsung. In a sense that is true, but then almost every bill that is brought here is in the same position. However, I would point out that this bill has been considered by the Government for a period of at least two years.

When my colleague Senator Deschatelets was in the Government it was first mooted that something should be done about trying to reorganize, restructure or establish on a satisfactory basis the national museums mentioned in this bill. The idea is to try to manage them in a way that will be more effective and more useful to the people of Canada. I am pleased at the great interest that Senator Brooks expressed in the importance of the work of the museums.

Like Senator Brooks, I deplore the effect of Parkinson's law, but I see no reason why it should be necessary to have an unusually large expansion of the staff required to run the museums. However, I would like to see them run in a way that will produce the best possible value for the people of Canada, young and old. I would hope that many of the problems which Senator Brooks sees in this bill can be resolved in committee. If the bill gets second reading, I shall certainly move that it be referred to a committee for study.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate recessed until 2.30 p.m.

At 2.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard for the adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance with respect to the expenditures set out in the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates (A) and (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1967.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, the O'Thorvaldsons, the O'Brooks, O'McDonalds and O'Learys having reminded us of the greatness of this day, I think that with the memory of Gaspe and an Irish town road, where I began my days, I should add just a word.

My distinguished namesake, Senator O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough), spoke this morning of Patrick as a man of compassion, and indeed he was. But Patrick was far more than that, he was a very human man. Patrick was a very belligerent man. I imagine our neighbours across the line would have called him a tough guy—and he had to be tough to deal with the Irish at that time.

Ireland when Patrick arrived there—and he arrived not exactly on his own volition—had a system of one high Irish king and a number of subordinate kings. They had their troubles—something like our dominion-provincial relations—the only difference being that instead of calling another provincial conference, they had a war.

Patrick left only two records in his own handwriting, one his confessions, an extraordinarily interesting document, and the other a letter to Corrotius, a Welsh-Scots chieftain, who carried off some of the people Patrick had baptized.

To get to know the real Patrick, not the one we see in plaster statues in our churches and elsewhere, you have to read these two documents. In fact, in the best biography written of St. Patrick by the Archbishop of Tuam, Dr. Healy, he emphasized this. He said if you want to know the personality and character of St. Patrick you have got to read what he himself wrote about himself.

If you go to Ireland today, as I have gone often, and try to follow in the footsteps of St. Patrick, at almost every well, stream or brook that you come to they will tell you almost invariably in their charming way that this was the brook where St. Patrick baptized the beautiful blonde daughter of either some chief or Irish king. It is not good history, but I imagine it is a pretty good thing for the Irish tourist industry.

There is not an ounce of evidence that Patrick banished snakes from Ireland. In fact, there never were snakes in Ireland. There is no evidence that he used the shamrock to exemplify the Trinity, and many, many other legends that are encrusted around this man by pious writers who not only created a bogus St. Patrick but also a bogus Ireland as well.

There is one legend, however, about St. Patrick which I would like to believe. It is the legend that when he was on his way to Armagh, shortly before his death, he was accosted by an angel who advised him not to go there, for some reason or another, and told him that as a reward for not going there he would be given the exclusive and particular privilege of judging all the Irish on the day of resurrection. I hope that is true, because I know he would be a just, honourable and merciful judge. And, God knows, we Irish on that last day are going to need all the help we can get.

I realize that my audience today is not an extensive one, and I am reminded about G. K. Chesterton. He was lecturing one year at Senator Connolly's old university, Notre Dame. Apparently the farmers used to drive in from Indiana to hear him. Chesterton spoke in a very low voice. One evening the farmers were having difficulty in hearing him, and voices came across the hall, "We are not hearing a word you say". Chesterton looked over his spectacles at them and said, "I am very sorry for that, but confidentially you are not missing much." So that is what I would have to say to such, for example, as my good friend Senator Leonard who very courteously and kindly explained to me that during my speech he would be on a plane on his way to Toronto.

However, I want to say this about Senator Leonard's report, which is what I am going to discuss, that, first of all, I commend him for the clarity and candour of his report—a clarity and candour which is a great improvement, a great relief from the rhetoric of most government claims or apologetics. I must add, too, in all fairness, that I think that in the past two or three years we have seen a great improvement, in that now we have a committee of this house such as the one presided over by Senator Leonard. In addition to that, in the other place the Government now refers its Estimates of most of the departments to various committees. This again is surely a step towards what is after all the most priceless right of Parliament, the right to examine and perhaps control the Queen's Estimates.

Unfortunately—and this is to be the substance of my speech—these two new steps in the right direction have not succeeded in any marked degree, at any rate, in checking or controlling government expenditures.

I had the privilege a few months ago of attending one of Senator Leonard's committees. He kindly invited me to attend on that particular day, because they had before them Mr. Ouimet of the C.B.C. On that day this committee was concerned especially with a C.B.C. program called "Sunday." I must say frankly that after listening to the discussion I would have been far more impressed had the committee shown less concern for the taste or lack of taste of "Sunday" and more concern for what it was costing the taxpayers of this country. Here you have a second-rate program, here you have, in fact, a third-rate program, and Mr. Ouimet, on this particular day explained or admitted—perhaps I should say he confessed—that this program "Sunday" was costing the taxpayers of this country $50,000 a week for each program. Therefore with a run of 26 weeks, it was going to cost the people of Canada $1,200,000.

I submit to you, honourable senators, that at this period in our history, with all the troubles that are bearing down on us, to ask the Canadian people to put up $1,200,000 for a program such as "Sunday" is an outrageous thing for C.B.C., which has no money of its own.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): This is not even a sponsored program. To ask the people of Canada to put up $1,200,000 for it is outrageous. I am not an enemy of the C.B.C. I think they do some things extraordinarily well. I would like to mention here especially the C.B.C.'s coverage of the funeral of our late Governor General. With amazing technical skill and with dignity and reverence, that piece of reporting was a credit to electronic journalism and a credit to the C.B.C. I doubt if it could be surpassed anywhere in the world.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): The trouble with the C.B.C., it seems to me, is that it has a number of young producers, and some of them have just discovered sex and appear to be obsessed with it.

Honourable senators, I am sure you will all agree with me that sex is desirable and perhaps necessary; but I do not think that you should have programs which are always at sex o'clock. I do not think that sex is something we should take out of the boudoirs and clinics and expose on television programs.

I would be the last in the world to oppose in anyway free speech on the C.B.C., and I was not concerned last year in the fuss made over a program called "Seven Days". I think the fuss made then showed a national immaturity, and certainly there has been no improvement with "Sunday." At all events, we must be careful not to interfere with freedom of speech on the C.B.C., that is, within the limits of free speech, with the realization that free speech is not an absolute. Apart from that, I think that some control in some way, by some agency, either within the C.B.C. or without it, should be exercised over the particular programs of which I am speaking.

I have said this often and I am going to repeat it here: I think that what the C.B.C. has always needed is a first-class responsible news editor, and a first-class responsible comptroller of finance.

Let us take the greatest newspaper in the English-speaking world, the New York Times. For years Times has carried on its masthead, "All the news that is fit to print". It has editors, news and managing editors and editors-in-chief, who see to it that that principle is observed. There is nothing very strange or startling about a thing like that; and surely it could be exercised in the same way with respect to the C.B.C.

So it is with the C.B.C.'s expenditures. I happened to be at one time the president of a newspaper. We operated under a budget. We knew that if we exceeded that budget, exceeded the source of our income, permitted extravagance to take hold of us, we should very quickly hear from the paper's proprietors, if not from the banks.

I submit, honourable senators, that that rule, a mere rule of commonsense responsibility for the public's money, must be applied to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation before it is too late.

This year, in the present Estimates—the Estimates of the money which we have already spent—we provided the C.B.C. with $112 million. I am not going to discuss the Estimates tabled the other day—I think that would be out of order—but surely it is permissible to say that this year we are providing them with $144 million. And do not let anyone tell you that this is because of some extra work they have taken on with regard to Expo. The sole expenditure provided with regard to Expo does not exceed $6 million. Yet $144 million is the amount, and this does not take account of money provided, or that will be provided, for the international news service of the C.B.C.; and it does not take account of loans below $35 million.

Honourable senators, those loans to the C.B.C. are not loans, and if you want confirmation on that I ask you to read the report of the Auditor General. Those are expenditures, ordinary budgetary expenditures. Is there a bank in this country, is there a lending organization in this country, which would lend the C.B.C. $35 million at the present time?

These are grants—and all of us know that not within the lifetime of any man in this Senate today will they be repaid. They will have to be written off.

Now, honourable senators, taking leave of the C.B.C. for a moment, I return to the Estimates and to Senator Leonard's statement. Senator Leonard presented this house with an excellent statement, as I have already said. He spoke of these expenditures and said that, if at any time they exceeded the growth of the gross national product they would become a matter for concern. I am speaking now of the old estimates. Senator Leonard admitted in his own statement that last year, while the increase in expenditure was $10.9 million, this was in excess already of the gross national product growth.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The same.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): When you start discussing these estimates, especially these new estimates, with people like Senator Leonard, they immediately say to you: "Surely you are not taking account of all of the extra money we have to pay out to the provinces, for example," and so on and so forth. This is true, but if Senator Leonard had looked at the tables here in the general summary of expenditures by departments, in 17 departments there were reductions, but in 47 departments there were increases—and those increases amounted to $124 million in a single year. This is not concerned with money paid to the provinces. Here we have a table of actual increased expenditures in the ordinary departments, in the ordinary running expenses of the Government, amounting to $124 million.

Senator Leonard says: "To the extent that the increase in Government expenditures does not outrun the rate of growth of the economy as a whole, such increases can be absorbed without too great difficulty."

"Without too great difficulty"—what does Senator Leonard mean by that? What would happen if the rate of increase in the gross national product started to decrease? The rate of growth is decreasing now—it certainly is not increasing—it is standing still. We have evidence of this from all the experts in the country. The gross national product is standing still, but you have the overhead built up over the past five years. Over the past five years, according to the senator's statement here, the increase in expenditure has been $5 billion. We have built up this overhead. We now have a public debt, the interest on which alone is $1,280 million. The interest on the national debt today will be three times greater than the total deficit at the end of March.

Honourable senators, there is more than that. We are building up overheads in other respects. We have built-in expenditures now that are simply appalling. We have pensions and a score of other things. These things remain. They will not depart. They will not go away. So if it should happen in our world of terrible uncertainty that the gross national product of Canada should fall—not only fail to increase but start to fall—then this country is bound to be in desperate straits because of those commitments.

Four years ago we appointed what we know as the Glassco Royal Commission. Three years later, after a cost of some $3 million, it made a report which everybody admitted at the time was a good report. Its recommendations were held to be good, but do you realize that of the 276 specifically worded recommendations—and these were recommendations to save money to the public purse and towards greater efficiency and economy—there are still 151 to be dealt with?

I think I must say here in all fairness that very often in these recommended improvements towards efficiency there is a question of opinion. I think that a man like Dr. George Davidson would perhaps know as much as any man in this country, including Mr. Glassco or the Auditor General, about whether there really could be improvements made under those recommendations. That is a realm of opinion and you have to admit that perhaps so far as a royal commission is concerned if you get 25 per cent of your recommendations accepted you are doing well.

I speak with some feeling on this matter because I was chairman of a royal commission. I made some very sensible and I think necessary recommendations. But neither the Conservative Government nor the Liberal Government had the courage to put them into effect. I always remember, when I think of the fate of my own report, what somebody once said about royal commissions: If Moses had been a royal commissioner, the Israelites would still be in Egypt. But we come to a statement by the Auditor General where it is no longer a question of opinion. It is now a question of fact.

The Auditor General in his latest report says this:

> I advised the House last year that when this (Glassco) Royal Commission concluded its work, administrative overhead in terms of staff needs and office costs was to the order of $1,000 million. The comparable figure presently estimated for 1966-67 is $1,325 million, an increase of over 30 per cent during the past four years. Some explanation of this can be found in the Summary of Employees, which shows that the number of employees authorized for departments, Crown Corporations and other instrumentalities at March 31, 1966, had increased by 10,965 over the past year. This brings to 20,512 the increase in the number of employees authorized since the Royal Commission published its findings.

Twenty thousand five hundred and twelve in three years! Who will say here that those increases were from departments where already they had not enough employees? All of us have felt over the years that our civil servants—and I am not speaking now of our top civil servants, who in many ways amaze me when I hear them in committee—are the best in the world and certainly the most honest. But anybody who knows anything about the Civil Service—and I have lived in this city with them for 56 years—will realize that to say that we needed 20,000 more employees over the last three years is utter nonsense and utter irresponsibility.

Now, I mentioned a moment ago that Senator Leonard said that if we could keep up with the growth of the gross national product in so far as expenditures are concerned, we would not be in too bad a position. But, had he been here, I should have liked to ask him this: Supposing some government, with a falling gross national product, or even threatening to fall, came along and was rash enough, irresponsible enough, to increase national spending by a $1 billion in a single year, what would he think of it? And suppose that same rash, irresponsible government increased national spending by 20 per cent in a single year, what would he think of that? Supposing this government handed over to the C.B.C. an additional $35 million in a single year, what would my friend Senator Leonard think of that? Such rashness, such irresponsibility would seem to be incredible; it would seem that it could not happen; but, honourable senators, it has happened, and the proof is in this volume just given to this house.

Six years ago Professor Norman Ward, well-known to this house, wrote a book called The Public Purse which contained this paragraph:

> Each newly elected House of Commons finds itself committed, by laws already passed... to spending $1 billion or $2 billion before it ever meets.

That was in 1961. Honourable senators, the Parliament which succeeds the present Parliament—be it a year from now or two years from now—will find itself committed, by laws already passed, to spending more than $4 billion before it ever meets.

This year alone, as I have mentioned, the interest on the national debt will exceed, by almost three times, the total deficit, yet we go on spending, piling up a mounting debt, piling up a mounting inflation and imposing grievous hardship upon the people of this country. And, honourable senators, let there be no doubt about it, it is the common people who are bearing the greatest tax burden at the present time and who are the most grievously affected by inflation.

I could give you the figures here today. I could give you the percentages that are paid. The millionaires do not pay the taxes of this country. They pay through the nose, of course, but actually people with incomes over $50,000 a year pay less than 5 per cent of the total running cost of this country. It is the ordinary people who carry the burden. Of course you tax corporations and tax them through the nose—perhaps too much so—but those corporate taxes are inevitably, and not dishonestly, passed on to the poor consumer through increased prices. It could not be otherwise.

Then you have your sales tax, and that tax bears down more heavily upon the poorer classes than upon any other. Finally, when we talk of trying to keep the increase in expenditures at least alongside the gross national product, what guarantee have we at this time that the gross national product will rise? What guarantee have we that it will not decline?

I say to you, honourable senators, in our world of awesome uncertainties there can be no guarantee that the gross national product will continue to rise, but there are signs everywhere that it may go on to fall.

Only this week we have had the respected head of the Bank of Canada warn us that rising prices threaten to put Canada out of line competitively with the United States. We have had a Governor of the Bank of Canada deplore the rise in government expenditures, and we all know this is not the only Government that is spending money; all of our provinces are spending too much and all our governments are spending too much, and this is undoubtedly what Mr. Rasminsky had in mind. He told us in a picturesque, striking phrase that we cannot get a quart of wine out of a pint jug. This has been the trouble in Canada in recent years; we have been putting distribution ahead of production, and this you cannot do. You cannot build a superstructure without foundations and we have been building the superstructure and neglecting the foundations. We have been distributing money we do not possess and which we cannot possibly distribute without grave danger to the whole economy.

Does the Government at the present time have no heed for these warnings? Does it not see the storm signals? Does it not see what is happening all over the world? A few years ago we were told that Chancellor Erhard, the great genius of Germany, had settled the economic problems of that country for all time. Well, his schemes did not work and now he is out of office. Today in trade the Common Market countries, Italy, France and West Germany, have begun to decline. Their gross national product has begun to decline and it is now barely holding its own. Unless the grace of God saves us from our folly Canada's gross national product will almost certainly decline, and when that time comes we are going to be in trouble.

Speaking of the decline in the gross national product, honourable senators, I wonder if the Government of Canada is watching what is taking place in Great Britain with respect to Britain's joining the Common Market. Just a year ago in Bristol, in a most important speech of the British election campaign, Mr. Wilson spelled out his attitude regarding British membership in that community. Entry, he said, was only possible "if the conditions are right...and those conditions require we must be free to go on buying food and raw materials as we have for 100 years...in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and other Commonwealth countries."

That was a year ago. But now Mr. Wilson is back from a visit to the six Common Market capitals, and he is no longer setting conditions. On the contrary, we are told this by the highly respected London correspondent of the New York Times, Mr. Anthony Lewis:

> Mr. Wilson has for all practical purposes accepted that the European Economic Community's agricultural policy is here to stay, and that Britain must adjust to it.
>
> He has not even suggested in his talks that he wants some special dispensation to allow free entry of food and raw materials from the Commonwealth at large.

Does the Government of Canada ever stop and think what this British attitude may do for our exports of newsprint, food, aluminum and other products? Does it stop and think what the effect of a reduction in the export of these goods would have on the growth of our gross national product?

Yet, as I said a few moments ago, honourable senators, we go on disregarding all these signs, disregarding these ominous clouds; we go on with expenditures, mortgaging our estate beyond possible capacity to pay. We go on with expenditures, spawning taxes, making inevitable higher price tags on the goods we have to export, and this without any right on our part to expect that the world will prefer our higher priced goods to the lower priced goods of our competitors. Heedlessly and recklessly we put distribution, as I have said before, ahead of production; we build superstructures without foundations, and thus too often in pursuit of a false philosophy, a philosophy condemned by all of history.

Some of you may say now, I am sure, that I am talking as a Tory traditionalist. That I deny. I am trying to speak only as a Canadian humanist, as a Canadian realist, as one who distrusts the growing power and encroachments of the State.

God forbid that we should ever return to the law of the jungle—the law of every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. But, honourable senators, at the same time I think the hour has struck for us in this country to banish the perilous superstition that it is the business of the State to direct and superintend all human behaviour. The sick and aged, the infirm, the afflicted—all of these must have the thought of a humane, civilized society. But, honourable senators, it is a far different thing when government undertakes to provide sanctuary for all of man's foibles and follies, destroying his moral fibre and initiative, eroding his human worth and dignity and inevitably imperilling his freedom.

That way, honourable senators, lies desolation and decay.

Hon. Donald Smith: Honourable senators, it seems to be my lot on a number of occasions to follow someone who has the oratorical excellence that Senator O'Leary (Carleton) has just displayed. I remember on several occasions, consecutive occasions in the house when I had the misfortune, and I always called it that, to follow Senator Farris from Vancouver, an orator of very high calibre.

We are always very glad to hear Senator O'Leary and many of us wish he would more frequently take occasion to address this house. We always learn from him and we are certainly always charmed by him.

On this occasion he has painted on the canvas with a rather broad brush, and to change the pace, as it were, I take in my hand a camel hair brush and paint over a very small part of the canvas, which is the report of the Senate Finance Committee. I am going to refer almost entirely to paragraph 9 in the report, which refers to the very interesting day spent on an examination of the activities of the Atlantic Development Board. At that meeting of the committee evidence was heard from the Executive Director, Dr. Weeks, who told us of the work that the Atlantic Development Board was doing.

Now, as a preliminary to what I have to say, I would like to make reference to a public document, one that some of us will perhaps recall, that had quite a lot to say about the problems of the Atlantic region. As a preface to what I am going to say about the Atlantic Development Board, and indeed some other government agencies which are trying to do something constructive with regard to the economic development of the Atlantic region in particular, I should like to refer to four very short passages from that document.

The first is this:

> An objective of economic policy should be to integrate and improve the basic economic framework of the Atlantic region, including in particular the transportation facilities of the area.

The second states:

> What is needed, we believe, is a bold comprehensive and co-ordinated approach to the underlying problems of the region.

The third:

> An integrated interprovincial power development and distribution system will be justified, although this may require some measure of subsidy from public funds.

And, a final quotation:

> We suggest that the federal Government establish a Capital Projects Commission for the Atlantic provinces.

Honourable senators, there may be more than one "putative" father of this child, whose name has now become the Atlantic Development Board, who may claim greater credit for the growth and development than they in fact deserve. I believe the evidence is clear that the "natural" father of the Atlantic Development Board is the author of these selections I have just read. They are excerpts from the 1957 Report of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects, whose author is Walter Gordon.

In my opinion, Newfoundlanders, Prince Edward Islanders, New Brunswickers and Nova Scotians have had good reason to recognize as valid his blueprint for economic progress in these provinces. Walter Gordon's proposals have been adopted and enlarged by successive federal governments, and followed by such meaningful action during the last few years as was described to us in the evidence given to the Finance Committee.

The conclusion reached by the committee, when it was preparing its report, ends as follows:

> The Board—

The reference being to the Atlantic Development Board.

> —is developing sound long-term plans to increase employment and production in the Atlantic region.

A great deal of money has been spent by the Atlantic Development Board since it came into the phase of its operations when it was in a position to recommend expenditures.

After listening to Senator O'Leary (Carleton), I am hopeful that any economies he would like to see made in Government expenditures would not mean cutting down the pace of spending for this particular purpose.

There is an appendix to the record of the proceedings of the Finance Committee dated Thursday, June 16, 1966, the day the subject of the Atlantic Development Board was discussed. That appendix contains a great deal of information, some of which is scattered and rather difficult to follow by those who do not have as keen an interest in this as a large number of Atlantic provinces members of this chamber, in order to get a real picture of the kind of things being done in the work of the Atlantic Development Board.

For the convenience of honourable senators, I would like to place on the record at this time, in an abbreviated form, tables indicating the nature of the work that is being done. I prepared these tables from the information contained in the evidence given before the committee, and I have done so under several headings.

Under the first group or heading there is a list of the amounts of money which have gone to each of the Atlantic provinces, and an indication as to the particular use for power development and transmission.

If I have the permission of honourable senators, I shall put this short table on the record at this point.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable senator how far back he goes?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I go back to the information placed on the record at the time Dr. Weeks appeared before the committee regarding the Atlantic Development Board.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: How far back does he go?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I think his activities went back to 1963, because up to that point their planning had not advanced to the point, and their discussions with the provincial governments had not reached the point where they had agreed on the exact expenditures desired to be made in the case of each province.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There had been a considerable amount of work done before that.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Yes, considerable planning and thought. As the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) well knows, Dr. Weeks was Executive Director of the board previous to 1963, and he assembled around him some staff at that time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that these tables should form part of the record of today's proceedings?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Table I

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD PROJECTS

(Source—Proceedings of Finance Committee, June 16, 1966)

Power Development and Transmission

N.S.	$12.1 million (of total cost of $24 million (thermal power) Trenton)
N.B.	$20 million (of total cost of $110 million (Hydro) Mactaquac)
P.E.I.	$4.3 million (submarine cable)
Nfld.	$24 million (of total cost of over $100 million (Hydro) Bay D'Espoir)
Total	$60.4 million

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): These are not my figures, but a condensation of much more difficult to understand figures contained in the report; and by glancing at these simplified tables you might obtain a better picture of the situation.

I want to refer to two figures in this table. The total amount of money allocated for power development and transmission in the provinces up to this time was $60.4 million. Perhaps I may be excused if I indicate that, of that total, $12.1 million has gone to the Province of Nova Scotia, towards the construction of a thermal power plant being built in conjunction with the Nova Scotia Power Commission at Trenton, Nova Scotia.

Another group of figures I have is under the heading of "Industrial Development Projects," and the total which has been allocated under this heading is $11.8 million. Of this amount, $7.2 million went to my province. If I mention these sums in connection with my own province, I do so because I naturally have a greater interest in them.

Table II

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

N.S.	$7.2 million
N.B.	$2.5 million
P.E.I.	$1.1 million
Nfld.	$1 million
Total	$11.8 million

The next group I have is for "Site Preparation and Water Supply for new Fish Plants." Of a total of $7.2 million, $1.5 million has gone to Nova Scotia.

Table III

SITE PREPARATION AND WATER SUPPLY FOR NEW FISH PLANTS

N.S.	$1.5 million
N.B.	$0.5 million
P.E.I.	(incl. above)
Nfld.	$5.2 million
	$7.2 million

I have some personal knowledge of the effect of this expenditure of $1½ million in my own province. There is a number of fish plants, and they are detailed in the printed record, which would not have gone forward with their development without this and some other form of assistance which was made available to them. One is located very close to where I live in Nova Scotia, and without the assistance of the Atlantic Development Board the employment picture in that particular area would be entirely different from what it is today. As a result of that stimulus, much greater additional investment was made in this particular fish plant, even to the extent that today all the local labour is at work, and that operation is being carried out in this rural area by labour from my own town of Liverpool, on a daily basis, in order to meet the labour requirements. All of the local fishermen are employed, working in much larger boats and drawing higher incomes than ever before.

I believe that if it were not for this sort of investment to stimulate this sort of development the drift would be continued out of that area of Nova Scotia, and indeed out of the province entirely, perhaps to as far as British Columbia where so many of our fishermen and those with a fisheries background have gone over the years.

Another valuable function of the Atlantic Development Board has been the provision of transportation facilities in the area and in particular toward highway construction in the Atlantic provinces. These expenditures are other than those connected with the Trans-Canada Highway. In this highway construction program, administered by the Atlantic Development Board, a total federal expenditure of $40.7 million has been made, and of that amount $12 million has gone to my own province of Nova Scotia.

Table IV

TOWARDS HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION IN THE ATLANTIC PROVINCES (OTHER THAN TRANS-CANADA)

N.S.	$12 million
N.B.	$12 million
P.E.I.	$4.7 million
Nfld.	$12 million
Total	$40.7 million

There are also several interesting and valuable efforts of the board. For example, there is miscellaneous capital assistance for research buildings and equipment now under way in both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with a total federal contribution of $3 million.

In addition, the federal Government has encouraged betterment of the industrial pollution situation in the Atlantic provinces by making a special grant of $2 million to carry out studies and to do certain work to be of some assistance in the abatement of that industrial pollution. It may be that this work which has gone forward at a rather advanced rate in comparison with other provinces may put us in the position of leading the way in this connection.

Table V

MISCELLANEOUS CAPITAL ASSISTANCE RESEARCH BUILDINGS AND EQUIPMENT

N.S.	$1,750,000
N.B.	$1,250,000
Total	$3,000,000

Industrial Pollution Abatement in the Atlantic Provinces:

Total $2,000,000

With regard to this anti-pollution campaign, I want to say that the Province of Nova Scotia itself has been the vanguard in the movement to do something about pollution. A young man from my home town was the head of this new department in Nova Scotia, and I understand there is a joint arrangement with the Province of New Brunswick in this field. This is something that the whole country, and indeed the whole continent, will have to give a great deal of attention to in the near future.

I have added the amounts of approved projects up to the time of the report, which is dated May 31, 1966, and it totals $125 million. I was informed the other day by the officials of the Atlantic Development Board that since that date an additional $17 million has been approved, and therefore the total is now $142 million. This is a considerable sum of money, and I do not feel it should be regarded as handouts in any shape or form. The money is being spent on basic solutions to some of our problems, and I think that expenditures in this field by this and other governments should be considered as investments to be repaid in the future by a much better way of life for the people who live in the Atlantic region, and which will result in increased production and employment and provide equal opportunities of all kinds.

The effort that is going on in Nova Scotia has caught the attention of the rest of this country, as well as our friends in the United States. The province has pursued a very active industrial program for some years. It has received international awards for the efforts it is making in this direction. Nova Soctia was in this field early. I think the province has had a very active department of industry. I am not sure that was the title in those days, but my honourable friend Senator Harold Connolly, who is my deskmate, was for some period the minister in charge of that department of government.

There are a great many techniques and a large number of people involved in what is found to be necessary to attain better employment possibilities and other improvements in the Atlantic Provinces.

I should like to spend a few minutes to indicate some special arrangements in financing which are being done by the federal Government toward that goal. The first is in relation to the completion of the Trans-Canada Highway. It will be recalled that a few years ago the federal share of the unfinished Trans-Canada Highway was increased from 50 per cent to 90 per cent. Since that time the extra 40 per cent federal contribution has increased the amount that the provinces would have received under the other formula by $58.5 million. In my province of Nova Scotia this meant an increase of assistance for the highway completion of $13.8 million. I have the figures for other provinces, but I will not take the time to read them into the record. If they could be made part of the record, honourable senators who are interested will be able to see them.

Table VI

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH ATLANTIC PROVINCES FOR COMPLETION OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

	Since 1963 Federal share increased from 50% to 90% Additional 40% Federal Contribution	Total Federal Contribution
Nfld.	$ 27.5 million	($ 62.6 million)
P. E. I.	1.4 million	($ 3.5 million)
N.S.	13.8 million	($ 30.5 million)
N.B.	15.8 million	($ 35.2 million)
	$58.5 millions	($131.8 millions)

	Estimated Balance to complete by 1970 Additional 40% Federal Contribution	Total Federal Contribution
Nfld.	$ 8.8 million	($ 22 millions)
P. E. I.	.6 million	($ 1.5 millions)
N.S.	9.2 million	($ 23 millions)
N.B.	11.6 million	($ 29 millions)
	$30.2 millions	($ 75 millions)
Since 1963 Grand Total	$88.7 millions	$206.8 millions

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I do not like to interrupt the honourable senator, but may I ask how far back he goes with his dates? If I recall correctly, this 90 per cent assistance must have gone back to five or six years ago at least. Have you the amounts for the respective years, or is it just a total amount?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): The only figures I have quoted show the difference it made to the financial contributions that the provinces had to pay because of the additional 40 per cent of the federal contribution, which dates back to 1963. The Trans-Canada Highway contracts or agreements between the federal authority and the provinces date back to the early fifties. As all honourable senators will recall, our own area of the country was the slowest in being able to take advantage of the standard 50 per cent offer which was made 15 or 16 years ago, and in order to encourage the early completion of the Trans-Canada Highway it was decided in 1963 to raise the amount of federal contribution from 50 per cent to 90 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In that connection I am sure the honourable senator is wrong, because it was decided in 1959 or 1960 to raise the contribution from 50 per cent to 90 per cent. We had that advantage in New Brunswick, and I am sure they must have had the same advantage in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, all I can say is that I discussed this on the telephone with the branch of the Department of Public Works which is involved in this matter, and they told me that the formula was changed in 1963. I hesitate to put it in this way, but it was the latter part of 1963.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I do not know if the Leader of the Opposition is right or wrong, but I can say that the senator on this side is right, because this was done in this form while I was Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I recall it particularly in New Brunswick, regarding the bridge across the river at Fredericton—Senator Burchill will recall this—the provincial Government paid 10 per cent and the federal Government paid 90 per cent, and there were other areas where there was the same proportion. As a matter of fact, I know definitely, because I was in the cabinet at that time.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I think I know what Senator Brooks has in mind. There was a provision some years ago that the federal Government would pay 90 per cent of any 10 per cent of the highway mileage for which any province would ask them to pay. As a result of that old formula, even the Province of British Columbia, a relatively wealthy province, was able to get tremendous assistance from the federal Government for the completion of their expensive highway through the mountains. Likewise, this bridge which my friend refers to would have been very expensive for his province unless there had been some provision for getting 90 per cent of any 10 per cent segment of the Trans-Canada Highway cost. We in Nova Scotia at that time took advantage of that particular clause in order to get 90 per cent of the cost of the most expensive highway. On the most expensive part of the highway, through Cape Breton, that was most helpful. The province which had the greatest trouble in trying to complete its share of the Trans-Canada Highway is, as we all know, the Province of Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): They graded the highway, but I do not know whether they would ever have finished it in our lifetime had this formula not been changed. If anyone deserves credit for getting this formula put on the statute books, it is the Premier of Newfoundland and the minister from Newfoundland who, I am sure, were very persuasive people. There again, of course, it helped us poor Nova Scotians out, as well as the rest of the Atlantic region.

Hon. Mr. Cook: We were just being good to you.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): As Senator Cook says, they were just being good to us.

I have one more point to make about the Trans-Canada Highway. I have said that the total spent under this new 40 per cent formula was $58½ million. It is estimated that to complete the Trans-Canada Highway in those provinces, when the bills are finally in an extra 40 per cent will mean an additional $30.2 million. Therefore, the grand total of what has been done by the federal authorities since 1963, because of the extra 40 per cent, is $88.7 million.

There are other things which the federal Government is doing for all provinces. Some are suitable for the Atlantic provinces and some are not.

As yet, we in the Atlantic provinces have not taken much action on ARDA projects, but they are coming and I think it is a worthwhile effort that is being made.

There is a rather interesting prospect in connection with the benefit which will accrue to my own province through the Rural Economic Development Fund. I was talking to someone in the Department of Forestry a few days ago about this, and he told me that surveys have been completed in five countries of northeastern Nova Scotia and in four Cape Breton counties. It is his opinion that, if the projects are approved and shared by the Province of Nova Scotia, as they will have to be under this formula, over a very long period of time the federal commitment could actually run into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Is that ARDA?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): This is under the Rural Economic Development Fund. It is the same fund which is operating to such a large extent in the province of my honourable friend from New Brunswick. I am sure he is quite familiar with what is going on in the northern part of his province in that respect. That will be very helpful in the long term.

I hesitate to mention these huge sums, running into hundreds of millions of dollars. I know it shocked some of our members not so long ago, when we were discussing this legislation under which the Rural Economic Development Fund operates, when hundreds of millions of dollars were spoken of with respect to northern New Brunswick and some rural parts of the Provinces of Quebec and Manitoba.

Again, there is something special being done for the Atlantic provinces through the use of the health resources fund. There was an extra contribution of $25 million to the Atlantic provinces. This was the sum directed to all the provinces in the Atlantic area and they, among themselves, decided to allocate it where it would do the most good.

Since Nova Scotia has up to this time the only medical school, it was very pleasing to me that the other Atlantic provinces acquiesced in the proposal that the Dalhousie Medical School be the first beneficiary under that health resources fund. I noticed in the press recently that the first cheque was delivered to the Minister of Health in Nova Scotia by the Minister of Health and Welfare from Ottawa. The amount of the federal contribution to the Sir Charles Tupper Medical Building will be $11.2 million out of a total cost of $16.7 million for the new Medical Teaching Centre.

Perhaps I should say a word about the situation in Cape Breton. I am glad to see one of the representatives of Cape Breton sitting opposite me here today.

I think the federal investment in the Crown corporation which will operate the Cape Breton coal mines in the phase-out period could be a substantial amount. This Crown corporation will also be provided with funds for broadening the industrial base of Cape Breton. Since no firm decisions have yet been made, I was able to get no further information on that.

There is an agency operating in the last few years, at least in my own province, with great results. I notice in the final supplementary Estimates which were tabled here a few days ago, that the commitment under the area development legislation was increased up to $200 million.

We were told, when the Finance Committee questioned the Secretary of the Treasury Board, that it was necessary to increase this fund at this time because of commitments which were being made, and if they did not have the increase in the fund they would have to cancel their program of supporting the industrial development in the designated areas.

This is a technique with which we are familiar, in which direct grants are made to new or expanding industries. It does not apply only to the designated areas in the Atlantic provinces but to the designated areas in all other provinces.

I have learned that the Atlantic region, with 10 per cent of the population of Canada, is receiving one-third of the investment in new industry which is supported by this program. Perhaps more important, one-third of all the new job opportunities created by this new investment have been created in the Atlantic provinces.

It would be well to point out two specific examples of the kind of industries which are being assisted by this agency. Two examples are the heavy water plants in Cape Breton. One is operated by a subsidiary, one might say, of the Government of Nova Scotia, a company called Deuterium of Canada. The other heavy water plant is under construction at the present time and will be operated by Canadian General Electric. Both of these companies have applied for development grants which will involve a federal investment of $10 million.

I was informed that the British-American Oil Refinery, which is being built in the Straits area, will also be eligible for similar support.

Honourable senators, there are other areas which the Finance Committee might well investigate at some future time. It is only fair to let the rest of the country learn how the money is being spent in the Atlantic area, particularly when extraordinary steps are being taken to improve the economy.

I hope that before long the Finance Committee will have an opportunity to examine the operations of both the Rural Economic Development Fund and the Area Development Agency.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, if Senator Smith had difficulty in following Senator O'Leary, my problem is that much greater in that I have to follow both Senator O'Leary and Senator Smith.

With deference, I would like to make two suggestions to the honourable Leader of the Government and to the officials of this house. The first is that the afternoon sittings commence at 2.30 instead of 3 o'clock. The second suggestion is that when telegrams are sent to our official residences the persons delivering them should be told to deliver them or telephone them at about 7 or 7.30 o'clock in the morning. I have spoken to a senator from the west who received his telegram at 3 o'clock in the morning. I received mine at my apartment at 2.30 in the morning.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope that one was not signed by me.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I am not suggesting who signed the telegram, but I understand that instructions go from the Leader of the Government to the Clerk of the Senate that he has been directed by the Speaker to notify honourable members.

One senator from Toronto received his at 5 o'clock in the morning and another senator from Toronto received his telegram at 6 o'clock in the morning. Why the time differences? I do not know, but all one can do on receiving a phone call at that time of the night is to get "darned annoyed".

By leaving at 4 o'clock in the morning from Winnipeg, a senator could get to Ottawa the next morning. At all events, I am sure it would be appreciated by all senators if in the telegram it were indicated that we should be phoned at 7 or 7.30 o'clock, because they all know our home phone numbers.

Honourable senators, I would like to deal now with the report of the Finance Committee presented by Senator Leonard. The report is dated March 9 and is printed as an appendix to the proceedings of that date.

I wish to advise the honourable senators that the special steering committee have a great deal of confidence in the work, attention and labour that Senator Leonard puts into the organization and conduct of his committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I understand that a few years ago this committee was fairly active, but when I was summoned here, our Whip told me what committees I would be on. He said, "Haig, you will be on this committee. It meets once a year. You will be on this other committee. It has not met for two years".

Apparently I was not expected to do a great deal of work, but then he said, "You will be on the Finance Committee as well." Since I have been on that committee I have learned more of the operation of financial matters in Government than from any other committee I have been on.

When the Finance Committee meets and hears some of those officials—who, as Senator O'Leary says, are the best in the world —they know their subject and they can project their ideas across to us in a way that even we can understand. Therefore, I would suggest to honourable members who are not on that committee that they should make a special effort to attend some of those sessions.

In paragraph 4 of the report, which Senator O'Leary discussed at great length, on a question of the amount of expenditures related to our gross national product he painted a picture indicating that so long as the gross national product is growing there is a certain proportion to which our expenditures can be related, but if the G.N.P. stays still or goes down, then this or any other government is going to be in trouble.

I also would like to comment on paragraph 7 in connection with the use of Vote No. 15 of the Finance Department to the extent of $2,160,000 which, according to Dr. Davidson, is a contingency amount in that department for this special purpose that, if during certain times before getting supplementary Estimates in they need extra moneys for salaries, they can take them from this fund. It is voted by Parliament and can be used in that way. The report says that can be avoided, and I agree with the report. If we get our supply motions in so late that either the Government or the Opposition can hold it up so that it is necessary to resort to this other vote, then I think that is wrong and I agree with the report to that extent.

Senator O'Leary has referred to the C.B.C. Unfortunately I was not at the committee meeting when Mr. Ouimet was there, so I will not comment on that.

In connection with paragraph 11 of the report dealing with Expo, a few weeks ago we dealt with a bill which would provide for some $21 million for the federal share of the expected expenditures of Expo. We were told that this had to be passed to third reading and then would go to committee. The Leader of the Government indicated at that time that that was a different method of doing things than had ever been done before.

We examined Mr. Robert F. Shaw, Deputy Commissioner and Mr. Rediker, the officials from Expo, who gave us a very clear-cut and fair explanation of the financial problems of Expo. Mr. Shaw spoke of his hopes and aspirations for the exhibition when it opens and indicated something to us which we did not realize before, namely, that there is a salvage value in certain of the exhibition buildings, minirails, railways and also bridges and La Ronde, the amusement centre. The expected loss is there, and he admitted it, but he said that in the history of world exhibitions not one of them has ever made a profit. He did say, however, that the advance sale of passports far exceeded their expectations; in fact, to such an extent that they were approximately one month late in getting new passports issued.

That is the sort of information we received when we discussed this matter with the officials of Expo, and that brings up again the fact that this committee under the chairmanship of Senator Leonard is very good in its methods of operation. It brings informed officials and even ministers before it to discuss these matters, and it is a very good education for the senators. I hope, and I know it will be so, that in future years the Finance Committee will extend its work in examining the Estimates of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, just before this part of the debate closes, may I just say two things. First, if Senator Haig's desire to have the Senate sit at 2.30 instead of 3 o'clock each day is to be complied with, it would be necessary to change Rule 7 of the Senate, which of course is not an insuperable obstacle. It can be done. Perhaps it is something which might be considered at the beginning of the next session.

Hon. Mr. Haig: How did we meet last Monday at 2.30?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): By unanimous consent, in the same way as we did today. There is nothing to prevent us from meeting when we want; we are the masters of our own procedures.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Certainly. We can meet at 1 a.m., for example.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Exactly.

Another point I am glad the senator raised is the question of telegrams. As I understand it, the telegrams that went out to summon the Senate as a result of the death of the Governor General, left here at 10 o'clock at night. I feel outraged that some senators, even closer to Ottawa than Winnipeg, did not receive those wires for hours and hours after their dispatch. I do not know why these wires cannot be delivered, no matter where they are to go in Canada, within an hour of the time they are dispatched. I am glad the point has been raised and I will raise it with the Canadian National Telegraphs. If they cannot give us better service, I think we will use another telegraph system.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would like to say, sir, that I received my telegram here in Ottawa on Tuesday last week.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions numbered 1185 to 1224, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 1185, for the relief of Margaret Grace Stark Leach.

Resolution 1186, for the relief of Pamela Ann Merrill Peck.

Resolution 1187, for the relief of Marcel Meunier.

Resolution 1188, for the relief of Attilio Forlini.

Resolution 1189, for the relief of Peter Thomas Tester.

Resolution 1190, for the relief of Gwynith Ann Davies Elliott Menard.

Resolution 1191, for the relief of Marie Edwidge Huguette Oligny Alexandre.

Resolution 1192, for the relief of François Labbe.

Resolution 1193, for the relief of Francine Loyer D'Amour.

Resolution 1194, for the relief of Pamela Anne Kenrick Laing.

Resolution 1195, for the relief of Brigitte Elizabeth Brandl Craig.

Resolution 1196, for the relief of Mary Marguerite Isabelle Jocelyne Lemay Derbridge.

Resolution 1197, for the relief of Diane Lillian Kirkus Black.

Resolution 1198, for the relief of William Kevin Kiely.

Resolution 1199, for the relief of Susan Ross Kilburn Edwards.

Resolution 1200, for the relief of Ada Rubin Craske.

Resolution 1201, for the relief of Joseph Rosaire Houle.

Resolution 1202, for the relief of Jacques Jean Joseph Gaudel.

Resolution 1203, for the relief of Alice Akairib Bekhor.

Resolution 1204, for the relief of Joan Lenora Brown Eadie.

Resolution 1205, for the relief of Judith Mary Allen Donohoe.

Resolution 1206, for the relief of Maurice Demers.

Resolution 1207, for the relief of Marie Pauline Gisele Leduc Paquin.

Resolution 1208, for the relief of Fernand Labonte.

Resolution 1209, for the relief of Florence Graziella Bernier Murray Miller.

Resolution 1210, for the relief of Joyce Clara Woodhouse Tracey.

Resolution 1211, for the relief of James Joseph Peard.

Resolution 1212, for the relief of Jacqueline Marchand Fortin.

Resolution 1213, for the relief of Hector Thessereault.

Resolution 1214, for the relief of Beverly (Beverley) Brooks Mallaley.

Resolution 1215, for the relief of Claude Laporte.

Resolution 1216, for the relief of Bernard Langevin.

Resolution 1217, for the relief of Stanley Harold Rowe.

Resolution 1218, for the relief of John Gerald Wellington Hall.

Resolution 1219, for the relief of Suzanne Boily Beaupre.

Resolution 1220, for the relief of Claudette Drouin Seguin.

Resolution 1221, for the relief of Gwynneth Carlyle Roberts Earl.

Resolution 1222, for the relief of Yvette Letendre Binette.

Resolution 1223, for the relief of Iris Miller Rolland.

Resolution 1224, for the relief of Ronaldo Champagne.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I hope that on Monday at 3 o'clock we will have received the Bank Bill and perhaps the bills associated with it. If, however, they are delayed, I hope that we will proceed to item No. 4 of today's Order Paper, the amendment to the Criminal Code, and that that debate can be wound up by Senator Roebuck and the matter referred to committee. Then we could consider Order No. 6 of today's Order Paper dealing with teleferries. I understand from Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) that he may then be prepared to go on with the inquiry initiated by Senator Gladstone.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Hon. John. J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I think it would be less than gracious of me, as Leader of the Senate, and I think you would expect no less from me than that I should express my pleasure that once more the Senate of Canada should see fit to mark the feast of St. Patrick. I would have done this earlier but for a number of reasons. I was anxious, as were all honourable senators, to deal with the urgent legislation that was to go to committee, and I was particularly anxious not to delay Senator O'Leary (Carleton) in the speech he was to make.

In expressing my pleasure on this occasion, perhaps I am not alone because it could be that the Irish Leader of the House of Lords, the Earl of Longford, as well as the Irish Leader in the Senate of the United States, the Honourable Michael Mansfield, today are having the same experience.

In this Senate, speeches alone have not always been the method used to mark this occasion. In 1955 the late Senator Felix Quinn of Halifax, beloved of us all, rose in his place and with a voice whose strength had faded, but whose timbre remained, sang very feelingly "Galway Bay", though Hansard does not reflect the singing.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls".

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls" and, perhaps "A Little Bit of Heaven".

Today in many lands besides Ireland, Tara's harp and halls are remembered; the plaintive strains of Kathleen Mavourneen, The Rose of Tralee, Love's Young Dream, The Dear Little Shamrock, and The Ministrel Boy stir the emotions of Erin's sons and daughters.

I think the Book of Kells, the Tara Brooch, Muckross Abbey, still revive, with eloquent silence, the earliest days of Western culture which the Irish preserved when, as Senator O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough) said this morning, all was darkness in Continental Europe. Patrick and Columba emerge again, for they were missionaries, and in a sense the fathers of the fabled wild geese which our good friend the senator from Gulf, Senator Power, mentioned on a number of occasions.

Dispersed indeed is this race into every clime, but wherever they are they remember the injunction which the Emerald Isle gave them in the song of Thomas Moore:

Go, where glory waits thee,
But while fame elates thee,
Oh still remember me.

In Canada's centennial year I think it is worthy of recording that of the 35 faces in the picture of the Fathers of Confederation, seven were of Irish birth or descent: Thomas D'Arcy McGee, Canada; Edward Whelan, Prince Edward Island; Ambrose Shea, Newfoundland; Edward Palmer, Prince Edward Island; A. G. Archibald, Canada; Jonathan McCully, Canada; and W. A. Henry, Canada.

Today of Canada's 20 million, 10 per cent are of Irish blood or descent. But many more—countless in number—know that Irish blood courses through their hearts, and today they too remember this and feel it.

Even some of our French-speaking fellow Canadians might be surprised to know that the name Sylvain is really Sullivan, Aubry is O'Brennan, Houssye is Hussey, Riel is Reilly, Hirouin is Kerwin, Martin is Martin, Binette is Bennett, Alarie is O'Leary, Alain is Allan.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And Flynn is Flynn.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And John O'Farrell, a Quebec lawyer, established this in a paper done in 1872, after an extensive study of the old parish registers of Lower Canada. The historic reason lies in the early settlements on the St. Lawrence and on the exodus which followed the great famine in Ireland of 1846 to 1848, and the many, many Irish immigrants to this country going back even to the days of the French regime.

May I finish with these lines from John Boyle O'Reilly, which seem so appropriate in Canada this year:

What have ye brought to our nation-building,
Sons of the Gael?
What is your burden or guerdon from old Innisfail?

* * *

Bold pioneers for the wilderness, defenders in the field,—
The sons of a race of soldiers who never learned to yield.
Young hearts with duty brimming—
as faith makes sweet the due;
Their truth to me their witness, they cannot be false to you.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: I have listened to the very eloquent and highly Irish sentences of the Government Leader, and I could not quite resist the temptation to claim for myself Irish descent as almost everybody else in this chamber has done. My mother's family came from Ireland, and I think that is one of the reasons for the character I possess, be it ever so good or ever so bad. The same respect which I paid to her I also pay to the Irish race.

I have one more word to add, honourable senators. The leader has said that I would finish the debate on the Criminal Code on Monday. I shall be prepared to do so, but I hope that I shall be well up the list on the Orders of the Day, and not way down it. Perhaps that can be understood.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is subject to our desire to deal with the Bank

Bill and the appropriation legislation. Anything we have left here should be subject to the general understanding that priority should be given to these pieces of legislation which will require Royal Assent before the Easter adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And will possibly go to a committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, indeed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, March 20, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 20, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Explanatory note respecting the Returns of Unclaimed Balances in the Chartered Banks of Canada and in the Banks incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act, tabled in the Senate March 17, 1967, together with a copy of the Canada Gazette Supplement for March 18, 1967, on the subject of Unclaimed Balances. (English and French texts).

NATIONAL MUSEUMS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-57, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Museums of Canada:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-57, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Museums of Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, this bill originated in the Senate and, with a view to keeping the House of Commons in business and with enough to do, perhaps we should give the bill third reading now, if there is no objection or further question. I am sure the House of Commons would be impressed with our efficiency.

With leave, I move third reading of Bill S-57 now.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not want to delay the bill; I merely want to say a few words. I am not convinced that the purpose of this bill has been made very clear. I was not in committee this morning, but I inquired and did not get the answers that I hoped would be given there.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Why did you not ask the chairman?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Well, the chairman is always too efficient. I would rather ask somebody else.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You would get too good an answer, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Well, maybe too good or maybe too bad, it all depends.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable gentleman want information or misinformation—or perhaps "Mister Information"?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Well, I would say the honourable gentleman is more convinced than convincing.

It seems to me that the purpose of this bill is to place under one authority the National Gallery of Canada and two or three other museums mentioned therein, and others that may be declared as federal museums because of national interest. Some of these are very specialized museums. Only the National Museum, in my view, has a national character and a wide scope.

Usually a museum serves as an accessory to a given science, operation or activity. I do not see in principle what we can gain by putting these different museums under one authority. You have to have specialists in this field, since these museums will serve very specific purposes. It seems to me that unless the establishment of one authority for various museums is proven to really add to the efficiency of these organizations, this bill will not actually achieve a good purpose.

I may be wrong because, as I said, I was not in the committee this morning. But I cannot by the simple reading of the bill find a good reason for setting up this new authority to replace the National Gallery Act. That Act was achieving a specific purpose, because the National Gallery, as I said before, is of national interest and of a very wide scope. Will this single authority take the responsibility, for instance, for museums which were under the care of the Minister of Northern Affairs? Museums concerned with the Eskimos and northern affairs are highly specialized, and I do not see how the placing of those museums under this new body will help them at all.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, maybe I can at least give the explanations we got this morning. Whether this will be good and sufficient reason as far as my friend is concerned is an entirely different matter, but what was said was acceptable to the members who were present.

In connection with these various museums that will be under this corporation when the bill passes Parliament, it was indicated that this corporation would have overriding authority with respect to each of these endeavors, but there would be a board of management—call it what you will—with special training and skill for administrative purposes as required by a particular museum. This is the plan, and we must assume that if it is carried out it will work. Whether it will work or not, we cannot tell until it gets into operation.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Whether it is required is another question.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT AND TO REPEAL CANADIAN VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 1252 to 1290, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-221, respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 16, 1967, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable Senator Roebuck speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Every honourable senator within the hearing of my voice will be pleased to know that this debate will be closed if I as sponsor speak at this time. The debate has been lengthy, and to a certain extent everyone is tired of it. It is rather difficult to remember what took place four months ago.

However, in closing the debate, honourable senators, I wish to express my grateful acknowledgement of the extent and vigour with which this debate has been carried on—a discussion which I had the honour to initiate. The fact that many of you spoke, and some critically, is a matter of satisfaction to me in a case of this kind, because, as was said by a philosopher, "In a multiplicity of councillors there is wisdom."

The debate, which commenced on November 9 last, has continued for four months. I have been impressed with the thoughtful quality of many of the addresses and the frequency with which honourable senators invoked the principles of freedom, the rights of the individual and of good government.

Besides that, I would like to acknowledge the complete unanimity with which all senators have viewed the basic principles of this bill. We seem to have been thoroughly in agreement with what Senator Croll termed "the corrosive properties of hate," and upon the desirability of unity and good will rather than of dislike and abuse of one another. The merchants of hate have no customers in this chamber. I am proud of that fact. Not one word has been said in approval or defence of hate propaganda. We would all like to get rid of that if it were within our power, and I think it is. Senator Flynn only last week said we are all agreed on the purposes of the bill.

I do not mean it to be inferred from what I have said that the bill has not met with criticism. Indeed, there has been a great deal of criticism. Some senators objected on grounds with which I am in sympathy and accord, although not entirely in complete agreement.

For instance, the thought was expressed a number of times during the debate that were the bill sent to a committee it could be improved. In this, of course, I heartily agree. We all desire the very best bill possible under these circumstances. Draftsmanship is seldom perfect. As a matter of fact, the road to perfection is long and difficult and usually rough. This is an amendment to the Criminal Code. The Code is basically restrictive, and any measure of a restrictive character warrants our most careful scrutiny.

Some senators doubted the need for this measure. Of course need is a question of fact. I honour those who see no evil and hear no evil, and so on, and find comfort and repose in the thought that "It cannot happen to us." But I am not so fortunate, for I have seen and heard in the course of my career a good deal of evil writing and speaking—propaganda such as this bill seeks to suppress.

Nor am I without support in this experience. The Special Committee on Hate Propaganda, appointed by the Parliament of Canada, has produced ample evidence of the vilest of hate propaganda and the need for this legislation. Let us consider, as I think it is very appropriate, the personnel of that committee.

The Chairman, Maxwell Cohen, is the Dean of the Faculty of Law, McGill University. Such a man is not easily deceived in evidence of this nature. He is thoroughly trained in the principles of the law. It has been suggested that Maxwell Cohen traces his ethnic origin to one of those groups which is frequently the subject of hate propaganda. So, for argument's sake, let us stand him aside for the moment—that is, if anyone thinks one should completely disregard the considered judgment of the Dean of the Faculty of Law of one of our greatest universities. Still, for the purposes of argument only, let us for the moment stand him aside.

Next, Saul Hayes is the next member of the committee to which I referred. I know him as an able barrister of Montreal, for whom I have the greatest respect. On the same grounds, let us stand him aside.

Then, who is left? What shall we say of Dr. J. A. Corry, Principal of Queen's University? There is no such suggestion with regard to him. He is a man of very high standing and is widely respected in the Canadian community.

The next member of the committee to whom I would refer, is l'Abbé Gérrard Dion, of the Faculty of Science of Laval University. Then there is Professor Mark R. MacGuigan, associate Professor of Law of the University of Toronto, a man of real distinction.

The next member, and not a professor at all, is Mr. Shane MacKay, Executive Director of the Winnipeg Free Press.

Lastly, there is Professor Pierre-Elliot Trudeau, a Professor of Law of the University of Montreal.

All those men I have mentioned are members of this special committee on hate propaganda. After a most exhaustive inquiry, they reported to the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada. The evidence of these eminent men, I suggest, commands respect. They have furnished us the very text of quantities of the most disgusting and dangerous hate propaganda at large in this country.

If all that is not sufficient—although it is in print in our own hands—let the committee we have appointed, and which will consider this bill at length, require the testimony of our own postal authorities. Those authorities can tell us, and I am sure they will, of the scurrilous literature which has polluted Her Majesty's mails.

Changing to another phase, one senator, for whom I have the greatest respect, quoted me as describing Canadians as "good-natured, kindly and hospitable." I repeat those words and I am proud of them. Of course the argument was that, if our population is good-natured, kindly and hospitable, this bill is unnecessary. However, honourable senators, I did not say that all Canadians are possessed of those virtues. Had I done so, that honourable senator could have proved me wrong, by his reference to a certain Nazi named Beattie. That man, by communicating hate in a Toronto park, incited hatred and contempt against two of the groups within the definition of this bill, "identifiable groups," which was likely to cause a breach of the peace and which in fact did so cause a breach of the peace.

Beattie was charged under a municipal by-law and acquitted on constitutional grounds. This is an incident very much in point in this debate, so I sent for the text of the magistrate's judgment. I have it here, and with your permission I wish to point out some of the leading paragraphs.

For instance, the first paragraph says:

> In this case, the defendant, William John Beattie, is charged with the breach of a by-law of the Corporation of the City of Toronto. Specifically, the charge is that on the 19th Day of June, in the year 1966, at the City of Toronto in the County of York, he unlawfully did, "in a city park, namely, in Allan Gardens, use language which was likely to stir up hatred against sections of the people distinguished by colour, race, religion, ethnic or national origin, namely, Jews and Negroes, contrary to the provisions of section 13 of By-law No. 21379, as amended, of the Corporation of the City of Toronto."

The operative section of this by-law is as follows:

> No person shall...use language or engage in any form of conduct which is likely to stir up hatred against any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, religion, ethnic or national origin, in a city park.

The case was thoroughly argued by counsel and among the submissions on behalf of the defendant were:

> That it is ultra vires the jurisdiction of the Corporation of the City of Toronto, by reason that it is, in pith and substance, legislation in the field of criminal law.

Counsel said also that it is legislation regulating the freedom of speech. I read on:

> After listening to a recording of the speech in question given in evidence in court, and upon reading a transcript of this recording, I have no hesitation in stating that the language used was most insulting, both to Jews and Negroes and would likely or probably cause hatred to be stirred up in the park as against the ethnic groups mentioned.

Then he adds:

Hatred was, in fact, stirred up.

He adds to that:

I believe it is safe to say that as of this date, there is no criminal legislation specifically dealing with the situation contemplated by the relevant section of the by-law...The Municipal Government can pass provisions prohibiting the littering of parks with garbage. The question is, can these same provisions be extended to cover "verbal garbage".

He thinks not. I quote now the conclusion of his judgment:

It would have been entirely within the authority of City Council to prohibit the defendant from speaking in the park, if for no other reason than it would require some two hundred policemen to maintain order in the park.

And his final conclusion:

In my view, the area of freedom of speech belongs to the residual powers reserved to the federal Parliament under section 91 of the British North America Act, pursuant to the Peace, Order and Good Government provision thereof and that since this matter was not assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces under that Act, the Government of Canada is the only legislative authority competent to deal with the question.

And on that understanding:

Accordingly, I must come to the conclusion that the Council of the Corporation of the City of Toronto, in passing—

The by-law in question.

—pursuant to which the defendant was charged, was acting outside the legislative competence of that body. The charge against William John Beattie is, therefore, dismissed.

Now, it was charged during this debate, and probably senators will remember it, that neither Senator Croll nor I had mentioned a single case in Canada which indicated a need for this legislation. Well, gentlemen, there it is. I do not know how you could get a more applicable or more striking case than that to which I have just referred.

As recently as June the 19th, 1966, in a Toronto park a self-boasted Nazi publicly used language which a Toronto magistrate holds was most insulting to both Jews and Negroes and would likely or probably cause hatred to be stirred up in the park against the ethnic groups mentioned. And he further adds that hatred was in fact stirred up. A Toronto newspaper says that a double ring of detectives and mounted policemen held back more than 2,000 persons, and the magistrate says it would have required 200 policemen to maintain order. The magistrate adds that there is no criminal legislation specifically dealing with this situation.

Does this not effectively answer the argument in this debate that the Criminal Code as it now stands is not sufficient? The civic government had done its best to protect its citizens from hate propaganda, but the magistrate held that such legislation is beyond the legislative capacity of the municipality or of the provincial legislature. The magistrate places responsibility squarely on the shoulders of the dominion Parliament—on this chamber at the present moment—which he says has so far furnished no criminal legislation specifically dealing with such a situation.

This bill does provide the specific legislation necessary for the prohibition of that kind of thing, and until this bill becomes law in Canada there is nothing in the statutes to prevent a repetition of this dangerous and most undesirable incident in our cities and towns. Beattie has not attempted a further public attack on the groups in question, on men whom he would defame. He has been deterred, I presume, by the 2,000 angry people of Toronto who surrounded him and from whom he was protected by police power. If that is so, are we to rely on mob law to preserve peace and decency in Canadian life?

Were we to prevent the passage of this bill, as some senators have expressed they wish to do, we would be held to have intended a natural consequence of our act: the substitution of the rule of the mob for the rule of the law—and nobody shall say that this chamber has ever opposed the rule of law.

Some senators have expressed a fear that the bill would restrict the freedom of speech. One of my colleagues quoted the Toronto Daily Star as saying that Parliament should hesitate before abridging free speech merely because it is abused by a few crackpots. Well, let me remind you that the very purpose of this bill is to prevent the malice of crackpots becoming a public nuisance. And since my friends have quoted newspapers, may I do so also? I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 10, 1967. The opening paragraph is as follows:

> The federal government has produced its version of the hate propaganda bill and this has now been referred to a joint Commons-Senate committee. The referral will involve further delay and it is thus doubtful whether the bill will get on the statute book during the present session of Parliament. In view of the incessant flow of hate propaganda, such a delay is regrettable.

As a matter of fact, the bill had not yet been referred to a committee, but a committee had been appointed in this house for the purpose of such a referral.

I will not read the whole article, because as you can see it is nearly a page, but it goes on to say that:

> The second objection, that such a law in our democratic society is not necessary, will sound hollow to many of the victims of defamation who now have no regress against the cruel propaganda war being waged against them. Only three days before Christmas the Free Press carried a report about the alarm within the Jewish community here over the flood of vicious anti-Semitic propaganda...
>
> The issue of freedom of speech has been answered by the Cohen committee report which said that a healthy society always imposes by custom and law some limits on what each of us may do and that the limits imposed by the present Canadian statutes are not sufficient to protect minorities.

The article concludes in these words:

> However, where vicious hatred is propagated against a religious group, be they Catholics, Congregationalists or Jehovah's Witnesses, the law should apply in all its rigor. Hatred is an ugly thing whatever its target and hate propaganda of no matter what stripe has no place in Canada.

Now, honourable senators, I pause to proclaim that I take second place to no one in this chamber or elsewhere in my respect for and loyalty to the principles of freedom of both speech and action. I would remind you that it was I who moved the inquiry into civil rights and fundamental freedoms some few years ago. I chaired that committee and I wrote the report. I am for the liberty of each individual.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Many years ago it was!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, not so long ago.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Nineteen thirty-two.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, it was much more recent than that

I am for the liberty of each individual, as I have just said, but that must be qualified by the equal rights of all others. But I am at least as much concerned for those groups unjustly attacked as I am for the vulgar blackguards who would defame their fellow citizens and who would thus, in consequence, threaten the peace of Canada.

With the senators who showed vigilance in defence of free speech I am in thorough accord. Free speech is essential to the preservation of freedom and of what is good in our way of life, but, honourable senators, freedom is not licence. We attach sanctions to defamatory libels of individuals. Why then is it wrong to extend that prohibition to defamation of groups of individuals?

It has been argued that Parliament cannot by law abolish hate. This bill makes no such attempt. Men's thoughts, to quote the old saying, are not triable except as they are manifested in words and in actions. So far as I am concerned, the hater is welcome to his hate. It is against his evil speaking and writing and disgusting propaganda that this bill is directed.

We have been told that the bill would prevent critical discussion of all manner of imaginary groups. Such an interpretation shows utter disregard for the very wording of the bill:

> The bill prohibits
>
> (1) the advocacy of genocide,
>
> (2) inciting hatred in public places likely to lead to a breach of the peace, and
>
> (3) wilful promotion of hatred or contempt against any identifiable group.

Now an identifiable group as defined in the bill means > any section of the public distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin.

My little Webster's dictionary defines "distinguished" as > to separate from another by some mark or quality.

It has been suggested in the face of that definition that the French Canadian separatists may be protected by this bill because of their French origin. I submit that these separatists are of exactly the same ethnic origin as all the rest of the French Canadians, and that they are only distinguished from the other French Canadians by their disloyalty to Canada. Colour, race and ethnic origin does not include political opinions.

Another suggestion was made that the coloured Pullman porters might be included in the bill, but surely they are not distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin from all other Canadians of Negro origin. They are distinguished or separated from the rest of the Negroes of our country only by their jobs, and of course are not included in this bill.

Another suggestion was that it could affect the Chinese laundryman. Well, while Chinese and Negroes and others can generally be distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin, the Chinese laundryman is distinguished from other Chinese in this country only by the job he does, and so is not included.

I thought we had reached the very limit of fantastic misunderstanding on this reading, or not reading of the bill, when somebody dragged in the Royal Family on the alleged ground that they are of Germanic origin. Now, just how the family of Mrs. Guelph is to be distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin from all other citizens of the United Kingdom who are similarly of that ethnic origin, I cannot understand. The Royal Family is distinguished by their rank and by the position they hold, and not by anything else.

Honourable senators, we were warned in one speech about what we might say in an election campaign. It is suggested that the bill might be used to silence opposition, and still legitimate criticism by alleging an attack on some group. Well, for argument's sake, I do not mind admitting that my side is all white, and the other side is all black, and others are all pinks, near pinks, and so on. But who, honourable senators, is so stupid as to confuse political colour with the colour mentioned in this bill?

You know, honourable senators, this is a serious bill. When some such criticisms were mentioned in this house and sent abroad through the press and other news media, I could not help wondering why anyone would misread a bill in that way, or had not read it at all—I do not know which.

In this bill genocide is defined as the systematic extermination of racial, national or religious groups, and the bill prohibits its advocacy, including acts done with intent to destroy in whole or in part any group of persons. Then in paragraph (e) of that first section it includes "forcibly transferring children of one group to another group." Someone with an extraordinary sense of humour suggested that the Attorney General of British Columbia might find himself in jail because he took Doukhobor children from their parents and put them with another group. Does anyone charge that the attorney general's intention was to destroy in whole or in part the Doukhobor group? If not, there is an obvious misreading of this bill which should not have gone forth from this chamber—this usually reliable chamber. The attorney general's action was, of course, in the interests of the children, so that when they were returned to their parents they might lead useful lives as educated citizens.

While the opposition was in this mood, we could not possibly hope to escape some reference to birth control and to "the pill". The suggestions made need no reply. Who is so ill-informed as to believe that the intent of the manufacturers of that medicine is the extermination of any race or group?

It was, of course, a serious tactical error when someone opposed to the bill raised the cry of British institutions. We were told that Hyde Park would not long survive were legislation of this nature enforced in Great Britain. Of course Great Britain is traditionally the home of free speech and many freedoms and so, since that question was raised, I investigated the law of England in this particular and now have the most recent legislation passed by the Imperial Parliament. It is entitled "The Race Relations Act 1965", and it is headed thus:

> An Act to prohibit discrimination on racial grounds in places of public resort; ...to penalise incitement to racial hatred.

And I turn to section 6, which is the operative portion of the bill.

> 6 (1) A person shall be guilty of an offence under this section if, with intent to stir up hatred against any section of the public in Great Britain distinguished by colour, race, or ethnic or national origins—
>
> (a) he publishes or distributes written matter which is threatening, abusive or insulating; or
>
> (b) he uses in any public place or at any public meeting words which are threatening, abusive or insulting, being matter or words likely to stir up hatred against that section on grounds of colour, race, or ethnic or national origins ...

(3) A person guilty of an offence under ths section shall be liable...

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine not exceeding one thousand pounds, or both.

You will observe that in the sections I have mentioned no qualifying or protective sections were added. It stands as I have read it.

Then section 7 reads:

For section 5 of the Public Order Act 1936 there shall be substituted the following section:—

"5. Any person who in any public place or at any public meeting—

(a) uses threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour, or

(b) distributes or displays any writing, sign or visible representation which is threatening, abusive or insulting, with intent to provoke a breach of the peace or whereby a breach of the peace is likely to be occasioned, shall be guilty of an offence."

And that is the legislation passed by the Imperial Parliament, the Mother of Parliaments, in the home of individual freedom.

Hon. Mr. Lang: Does that act mention genocide as being an offence?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not mentioned in this act, but anyone who advocated genocide would surely come under the provisions I have read. I cannot imagine anything more hateful or destructive or more likely to cause a breach of the peace than to advocate the murder of certain classes in our society.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Is the honourable senator aware of any prosecution that was ever entered under this legislation in the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have not that information at hand.

Hon. Mr. Croll: There was some.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: By the way, Senator Hayden, told us of an unruly situation he passed through this last summer when he was in England, a situation no doubt brought about by actions which that legislation sought to suppress.

This act is much more drastic than the bill before us, for the English act contains none of the safeguards for bona fide public discussion provided in our bill.

I want to read those clauses of our bill so as to have them in mind. Section 267B(3) reads:

No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) where he establishes

(a) that the statements communicated were true;

That is vastly different from the English bill that makes no reference to whether the statements are true or untrue. This gives to anyone distributing hate literature the right to defend on the ground that his statements are true, or:

(b) that they were relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true.

I do not suppose there is anyone in this chamber who would stand sponsor to anyone making an attack that he believes to be untrue. We in this chamber are not used to standing behind liars who inflame public opinion or promote hatred against other defenceless individuals.

When I was in London this last summer I found Hyde Park was very much in business, and they were carrying on as they had in days of yore.

Since others have quoted from newspaper clippings, so can I. This is a letter to the Ottawa Citizen of November 29, 1966, in which the writer says:

I was rather astonished, in Norman Campbell's column of November 16 commenting on Bill S-49 now before the Senate which will amend the Criminal Code to prevent the dissemination of racial hatred, to read: "Hyde Park in London...would not survive very long if Britain brought in legislation similar to that now before the Canadian Parliament."

Great Britain has done this very thing. Since October 1965 there has been a law called the Race Relations Act which is composed of two parts. The first deals with discrimination, a field in which our legislatures and Parliament have been active since 1951. The second part outlaws the incitement of racial hatred and, in fact, does not contain the safeguards for bone fide public controversy that Bill S-49 provides. Yet Hyde Park in London, according to all reports received, is still thriving as a centre of free speech and discussion.

My friend Senator Choquette, whom I am pleased to see before me, suggests this measure would drive hate organizations underground. Well, I say that is the place for them. If I had my way, I would drive them so far underground they would come out in China and take their place with the Red Guards.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: The other side from here is Australia, not China.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: At all events, I am not afraid of driving such people underground. I think that is the place for them. If this bill prevents the merchants of hate proclaiming their vile doctrines from the housetops, it will have served a useful purpose.

Senator Choquette also questioned why religion was not included with colour, race and ethnic origin. Why, I really do not know. I did not draft that bill, and I can only assume, and I think I read something to the effect, that we do not wish to interfere in religious discussions conducted at times with some acrimony. However, I would point out that religious wars are a thing of the past. Religious groups are no longer in danger of the thumbscrew and the rack. No one now risks being burned at the stake as a result of some religious controversy. I would point out too that religion is not enumerated in the British act.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Was not religion included in the bill drafted by the Cohen Committee?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, it was. I gather from a statement I read of one of the members that it was thought that one of the groups was not so much an ethnic group as a religious group, and there was some danger of its being left out when the matter reached the courts. I just do not know, but I will join with Senator Choquette and others in a thorough discussion of this point so that we may come to a sensible conclusion as to whether religion should or should not be added.

I should like to know also whether the religious organizations in Canada desire to be included, or whether they think it is at all necessary to be included. I will hold an open mind on this if my honourable friend will—and I know he will—and we shall discuss it at length when we get into committee.

Senator Hayden—and I am sorry to see that he is not in his seat at the moment—questioned the inclusion of the provisions regarding genocide on the ground that the crime itself had not been committed in Canada. Well, this bill has the object of preventing the haters in this country, as did Hitler in Germany, making the commission of such crimes possible. We are taking time by the forelock. Forewarned is forearmed. There can be nothing said against preventing the advocacy of genocide, or the murder of sections of our community. Anybody who argues against that must have his eyes closed to the possibilities involved.

Senator Hayden's critical pose has given a certain comfort to the opposition to the bill but, on the other hand, honourable senators, he blasts what he calls:

> the sneaky, dastardly and wide-open material that might be distributed and that might select some sections of the public, by reason of race or colour or ethnic origin, and revile those people.

And then he added that it is difficult not to be against that sort of thing. Well, I would say that it is not only difficult; it is impossible.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We are all against it, as I have always said.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Of course, we are. And I have made it very clear, have I not, that I have no objection to the discussion that has taken place?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: It was clearer at the beginning of the honourable senator's speech.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is perfectly clear now. I am arguing, honourable senators, that we are all of a mind in this regard, and that we should pass this measure as a consequence, and unanimously send it to a committee. We are all agreed on the fundamental principles of this bill. Senator Hayden said he was satisfied that the bill be sent to a committee, and that is all I desire at this moment. Let us send the bill to a committee.

Of course, it is not for me or for anyone to say that a bill of this kind is perfect. I have already mentioned the unlikelihood of anything being perfect. There is nothing that is not open to attack on the ground that it is not perfect. Perfection is seldom reached in anything.

This bill, if it is given second reading, will be referred to a joint committee of both houses that has already been appointed, for four purposes: firstly, further study of the bill; secondly, for the hearing of representations; thirdly, the improvement of the bill, if that is found to be possible; and, fourthly, to report to this chamber. In those circumstances I think that we ought to be pretty well agreed among ourselves. There is very little reason for controversy at this moment, and I commend the motion for second reading of the bill to the support of all honourable senators on the ground that the bill will be referred to a committee for further study.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: May I ask the honourable sponsor two short questions? He has quoted the Beattie case in support of the urgency of the passing of this measure into law. Do I not understand from the facts that Beattie's speech incited hatred against himself rather than against Negroes and Jews? My second question is: Would not the Crown Attorney in the city of Toronto have shown better judgment if he had laid a charge of disturbing the peace under the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hate has always a two-way action. The hate which Beattie attempted to raise against his fellow citizens, of course, recoiled upon himself. He raised a very great deal of hate, and if he continues to get away with it he will pile hate upon hate against these inoffensive Negroes and the large body of respectable Jews. Of course the hate went in both directions, and 200 policemen were required, so the magistrate says, to keep order.

The honourable senator also asks whether another charge could have been laid under the Criminal Code. The magistrate clearly said that there is nothing in the Code upon which he could rely.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: That is, in connection with the charge as laid.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He went very much further than that. After a study of the Code he said that there is nothing in it which specifically prevents an occurrence of this kind. Were it repeated, nothing could be done. I should like to make certainty doubly sure by the passage of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: We are differing only on the question of urgency.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) a question. I know that this debate has extended over many issues of Hansard, but I wonder if, before closing the debate, he, being a former Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, would put on the record of this sitting the legal meaning of "ordered to be forfeited", which is an additional penalty in the proposed amendment to the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, in the bill there is provision that hate propaganda may be seized and may be ordered destroyed on the consent of the Attorney General of the province. If the magistrate holds that literature is hate propaganda, then it may be dealt with in that way. The honourable senator asks me for a definition of three or four words, and I wonder if that is the answer he wishes.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: The additional penalty is "an order for forfeiture". Does that mean that the material will be forfeited?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. The material, of course, will be forfeited, as salacious literature—books and that sort of thing—when a person is convicted under a certain provision in the Code.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Pornography.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, pornography, but that is not the word used in the Code.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Obscene publications.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, that is the wording used in the Code. When a person is convicted of selling that kind of literature, the literature is liable to seizure under a provision which uses the very words of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I understood from Senator Roebuck that this bill did not originate with him. In other words, he had nothing to do with its drafting. I understand also that it did not originate in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is a Government bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: It is a Government bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Then, I was misinformed.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes; it was introduced first in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I was asked to sponsor it, which I did very willingly.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: It has not been before the other place?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the honourable Senator Hugessen, that Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to Amend the Criminal Code", be now read the second time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, bill referred to the Special Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on the Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda).

TELEFERRY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved second reading of Bill S-58, respecting interprovincial and international teleferries.

He said: Honourable senators, this is neither a difficult nor a lengthy bill, but if it is passed by Parliament it will have the unusual name of the Teleferry Act. I am told that "teleferry" may briefly be defined, although it is defined in the bill, as a system for the operation of aerial cable cars. Aerial cable cars or teleferries have been in operation in the Swiss and Austrian Alps for many years, In late years they have come into use in skiing areas on many continents. There is a teleferry—a chair lift, if you like,—of the gondola type on Grouse Mountain in Vancouver, used not only for skiers in the winter, but also for sightseers in the summer—when it does not rain out there. The principle of the system is used in the ski areas in many parts of Canada.

I remember the first time I visited Banff, I went up on a chair lift. Unfortunately, it was not one of the enclosed gondola type, and I don't think I have ever been quite so scared in my life. The lift travelled some 60 feet above the ground, and with the winds and the swaying of the seat I was on I wondered whether I would survive the lift to the top. I recall on that occasion meeting one of our former colleagues, the late Senator Peter Campbell, coming down the other way. He looked at me and said, "You are green." In turn, I looked at him and said, "I hope I am not as green as you are."

Of course, not all ski lifts are of the type referred to in this bill. Rope tows, and T-bars, by which the skiers are pulled up as they ride on their skies, are not of this type. The type referred to here is the enclosed gondola.

The bill is designed to cover teleferries which cross over into interprovincial or international boundaries. The specific reason for the legislation is that at this moment there is under construction over the Detroit River a teleferry system which will transport persons from Detroit to Windsor and back. This of course is in addition to the other river crossing facilities, namely the Ambassador Bridge and the tunnel, and there may still be surface ferries on the water. I am not sure.

However, we have jurisdiction to do this only in respect of teleferry systems which cross interprovincial or international boundaries, and there happens to be a gap in the law at this time. On the statute books of Canada is an act covering bridges across interprovincial or international boundaries; it is chapter 20 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. The authority to regulate traffic under the Bridges Act was vested in the Board of Transport Commission, now the Transport Board. Under that act the board may issue certificates of safety with respect to these bridges after inspection. It has authority to arrange for the inspection of bridges which are considered to be unsafe and, if necessary, to suspend their use.

There is also on the statute books of Canada the Ferries Act, chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of 1952, which relates only to ferries which operate between provinces or across international boundaries. However, it happens that it does not govern operation of ferries in the coasting trade of Canada. It provides for the issue of licences by the Governor in Council to operate such ferries. Licences for international ferries are granted under that act for a term of ten years and may be renewed. Licences for interprovincial ferries under that act are granted by the Governor in Council for a term of five years.

There is provision in that act also for the making of regulations to fix tolls, to deal with questions of forfeiture, and to examine safety of the vessels that are covered by the federal Ferries Act. So that that part of transportation over interprovincial and international boundaries is pretty well covered by existing legislation.

However, with these new systems of transportation visualized by the proposed new structure across the Detroit River, it was felt that some governing authority should be established, hence this bill, which deals with licencing, tolls, safety, the provision of regulations, and offences.

The act will come into force upon proclamation, not automatically upon the Royal Assent.

May I now deal with the specific provisions of the bill. I think I should give a little detail here, because frankly this does not seem to be a bill we would necessarily want to refer to a committee. In saying that, I hasten to add that I do not preclude by any manner or means the suggestion that it should be considered in committee, but I think that after looking at the bill honourable senators will feel that this is a matter which we could dispose of without a committee meeting.

Section 4 provides for the licensing of an organization to operate a teleferry system. It provides that the licensee must be incorporated in Canada. The term of the licence will be for 50 years but the franchise given to a successful applicant for a licence will not be exclusive to the licensee even in the area in which the system is established.

Section 4(b) allows the granting of a temporary licence for one to five years, to enable the existing company—I can only assume it is the company operating between Detroit and Windsor—to comply with this new legislation. In other words, it will be necessary, before that organization applies for a permanent licence, to secure a Canadian corporation as a vehicle under which it can operate.

There is provision for the cancellation of licences if the regulations, to be promulgated later, are violated.

In the case of international ferries, there is provision for cancellation if customs or immigration laws of Canada are infringed.

As these systems can operate over navigable waters, the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act will be available for invocation by the authorities.

Section 10(a) provides for regulation of the tolls to be charged. If the system is operated across an international boundary, the authority supervising the tolls will be the Canadian Transport Commission.

In the case of interprovincial ferries, the tolls are regulated by order-in-council, as in the Ferries Act to which I referred.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Would that be true of international toll bridges also?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. In the case of international toll bridges, under the Railway Act, the toll must be approved by what has been called heretofore the Board of Transport Commissioners but in future will be the Canadian Transport Commission.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It will be the same?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It will be the same. The Ambassador Bridge at Windsor is a good example. The schedule of tolls there must be approved by the Canadian Transport Commission before the schedule can be made effective.

The regulations will cover terms and conditions of the licence; the size, strength, structure and components of the teleferry system; and generally the question of safety.

The provisions of the Bridges Act have been incorporated into this bill.

The regulations will also provide for standards of inspection during the construction period and the operating period. They will also deal with questions of public convenience in respect of the handling of traffic, the frequency of runs and such matters. In case of necessity, particularly if the safety of someone should be called into question, the licence may be cancelled.

I am told—although I never heard of any such commercial application—that this system of transportation of persons and of chattels may be a significant means of transport in future in urban centres. Subways can be extremely expensive. Some American cities have had elevated railways but almost all have disappeared and have been replaced by subways. Whether a teleferry system will ever be commercially feasible in urban centres remains to be proved. If it should so happen, this bill would apply only if such a system should cross an interprovincial or an international boundary.

Other provisions of the bill deal with offences which may be committed, and stipulate that the bill will come into operation upon proclamation.

There may be questions which honourable senators have, and if I can answer them I shall be happy to do so.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we received this bill only within the past few days, so there has not been much time to study it. However, as the honourable leader has indicated, there is not much need to study it. I agree with that, but I believe also that it would have been an interesting bill to bring before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I hope that in another session, when these bills are left over, as they were, from the House of Commons, we might get them in the Senate a little earlier so that we can discuss them more fully.

Honourable senators, I learned a new word from this bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): So did I.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is the word "teleferry". I did not know it existed in the English language. Before I came into the chamber, I was fortunate in that the Department of Transport sent me some information regarding this bill. It followed along the line which the honourable senator has taken. I am not so sure that the Windsor-Detroit ferry will be the only one in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The leader has said we might well expect other ferries of the same kind. I do not see why there should not be such ferries all along the border, particularly in my province, for example, across the St. John River dividing Maine and New Brunswick and also across the St. Croix River.

I notice the bill refers to "passengers and chattels." Would the leader say if "chattels" includes cars. We speak of "goods and chattels," but I think the legal title of "chattels" does not include a car—although immigrants coming from the United States are allowed to bring their "chattels," and I think they bring their cars at the same time. That point should be made clear.

We also understand that this system comes under the Canadian Transport Commission as far as international licences are concerned.

The object of this bill is to provide authority to regulate those suspension line devices or systems also referred to as aerial cable cars, passenger tramways or rope-ways connecting one province with another or connecting Canada and the United States. I take it they also might connect points in the same province.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, but this Parliament would have no jurisdiction to regulate intraprovincial movement.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understand that. I also learned from the information I received that when the Government had become aware of the precise nature of the proposed works, it soon became evident that under existing legislation the Navigable Waters Protection Act was the only federal statute clearly applying to such a device. My source of information went on to inform me that no statutory objection could be raised against the proposal under either the Railway Act, the Ferries Act or the Bridges Act because they were not applicable and therefore the Department of Public Works was justified in processing the company's application.

So, this act is taking the place of those three acts, the Railway Act, the Ferries Act and the Bridges Act. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right. There is a gap in the law in respect of this type of operation.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The Bridges Act will apply for the purpose of ensuring structural safety, and when the Canada Safety Code comes into force it will apply in respect of an employee's safety and so on. I take it, then, that in general this act is to cover up what would have been provided for in these other acts.

Personally, I see no reason why it should be sent to a committee, although if we had had more time I would like to have heard more discussion on it. I am not asking that it be sent to a committee.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Do I understand the Leader of the Opposition to say that he thinks it should not go to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: If we had time I would say it certainly should go to a committee, because it is a subject which could very well receive considerable study. But under the circumstances I see no particular reason why it should go to committee because we have had a very good explanation from the leader. Moreover—and this is a little selfish—I also had a very good explanation from the Department of Transport. So far as I am concerned, it is a matter of time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable senator realizes that if he speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps I need only refer to two things. One question was posed by the Leader of the Opposition as to whether or not cars would be included within the definition of chattels as used in the bill. I would definitely say yes, in a theoretical way; but from a practical point of view, the gondolas may not be large enough to carry automobiles. I suppose it would depend a good deal upon the commercial application of the system and the amount of traffic and that sort of thing.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: They could put them on coat hangers and send them across that way.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps some of the smaller cars might go that way, but I am sure Senator Hayden does not drive the kind of car that could be put on a coat hanger.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Skidoos, perhaps!

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It would depend on the size of the gondola.

The only other point I might have raised when I was speaking earlier was that municipal authorities will of course have some say about installation within the municipality. Perhaps the provincial authorities too will have some say even in the case of interprovincial and international ferries, because they have regulations and perhaps even legislation with respect to transport devices of this kind. So there may very well be licensing required by other authorities than the federal.

In any event, the authorities seem to feel that there should be some federal supervision exercised in respect of these systems.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until 8 p.m.

At 8.15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

INDIANS OF CANADA

STATUS IN CENTENNIAL YEAR

The Senate resumed from Friday, March 10, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the honourable Senator Gladstone, calling the attention of the Senate to the status, in this Centennial Year, of the Indians of Canada.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure that we all listened with a great deal of interest to the speech given recently by our colleague, Senator Gladstone. He wanted to call our attention to the status of the Indians of Canada in this centennial year, and he certainly did so in a most impressive manner. His speech was, as we would have expected, most informative, and showed not only his great knowledge of the subject he was discussing, but also his deep understanding of the hopes, the fears and the ambitions of his people.

It is understandable that the Indian people of Canada would feel that they have been imposed upon, that they have been unfairly treated, that their rights have been disregarded. I think it must be admitted they were unfairly treated, and indeed, as he stated, treated for generations as if they were a dying race. While, of course, this is no longer true, it has left a legacy of suspicion and mistrust which will not be easily overcome.

The status of the Indians of Canada still leaves much to be desired, but it is good to note their situation is improving, and will likely improve to a much greater extent in the years to come. It is interesting to note also that the Indian population is increasing; indeed, the report of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for the fiscal year 1965-66 shows the Indian population has increased from 151,558 in 1954 to 217,864 in 1965.

I may say that of that number over 8,000 live in the Maritime provinces. The problems of Indians living, for example, in Nova Scotia might be somewhat different from the problems of those living in Alberta. Personally, I am only familiar with the conditions on one reserve, that of Eskasoni on Cape Breton Island. It is a large community—I suppose over a thousand Indians live there—and I think their main problem is an economic one, that of employment.

I have always held the view that for any minority group to better themselves it is necessary that they first obtain some type of economic security. After that comes education, for it is only through education that any minority group can attain a better status in our society.

However, I realize now much more is involved in this matter.

Recently a report was tabled here called, "A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada," which is known as Part I of the Hawthorn-Tremblay Report. In 1964 the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration asked the University of British Columbia, in conjunction with other scholars from other universities, to undertake a study of the social, economic and educational situation of the Indians of Canada, and to offer recommendations where it appeared benefits could be gained. This report is certainly tremendously worth while. It shows the results of much study and hard work. Its scope can be judged by the fact it consists of 403 pages of fairly small type and contains 91 recommendations.

While the report stresses the economic factors involved, it also stresses others. For example, on page 5 it states:

> The problems that called for detailed and objective study were concerned with the inadequate fulfilment of the proper and just aspirations of the Indians of Canada to material well-being, to health, and to the knowledge that they live in equality and in dignity within the greater Canadian society. The Indians do not now have what they need in some of these matters and they cannot at present get what they want in others.
>
> In general, they want the material blessings other Canadians have in the way of incomes, houses, cars, furnishings, clothes, foods and so on perhaps partly because they are advertised at and exhorted to want them equally with the rest of us. Their income levels and their average expenditures are rising but on the average are now far less than equal to national or regional averages and the gap is ever widening. They want and need good health but their possession of it, manifested by mortality tables and by the observation of every teacher and country doctor, is less than others possess although most Indians are more active and do more hard physical work than most Whites.

On page 63 it states:

> In seeking to explain the generally depressed position of Indians in Canada the main emphasis has been placed on social and cultural factors influencing motivations, attitudes and behaviour patterns. As brought out more fully in a later chapter, these appear to have been more important than objective physical and technical factors such as location, accessibility to resources and availability of capital.

So, there is more to the problem than unemployment or economic factors, but, at the same time the report does stress the great importance of the economic situation. At page 21 it has this to say:

> The Indian Affairs Branch is now attempting to formulate a program that will encourage the more rapid development of Indians and it proposes to attack the problem on several fronts—governmental and political, educational, social and cultural, as well as economic.
>
> The goal of economic development seems crucial in any such program for two related reasons:
>
> 1. The receipt of income depends primarily on gainful employment, and income largely determines the degree to which people can enjoy the goods or facilities and participate in the various type of meaningful facilities and activities that Canadian society has to offer. Economic rewards are an essential means to other ends.
>
> 2. Gainful employment in jobs socially defined as useful and productive still remains the most important single field of activity for the vast majority of people. It is the main tie that links the adult with his society and that gives him a sense of status and identity. Prolonged or permanent unemployment, poverty and dependency, among individuals and groups, tend to become increasingly demoralizing and give rise to a host of costly and destructive social and psychological problems.

Honourable senators it is obvious from this tremendous study that while the economic situation is one to which particular care must be given, there are other factors that must be considered before the problems facing the Indian population of Canada can be solved. I commend this report to all honourable senators. I am sure you will find it interesting, instructive and informative.

Senator Gladstone mentioned also the dissatisfaction of some of the Indian people with the treaties of the 1870's. I do not suppose it is of much importance in this day and age, but the situation in Nova Scotia, for example, in regard to the treaty rights of the Mic Mac people was most unsatisfactory. At page 236 this same report deals with this question:

> The situation in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick can only be described, in legal terms, as indeterminate. Two documents bearing similarities to recognized treaties elsewhere in Canada are in existence. The first document, Submission and Agreement of Eastern Indians—

And note the date.

> —December 15, 1725, an agreement with the Penobscot, Naridgwalk, St. John, Cape Sables and other tribes inhabiting His Majesty's territories of New England and Nova Scotia...

The second document, Treaty or Articles of Peace and Friendship Renewed, December 6, 1752—

The report mentions that these documents were not recognized as treaties because they did not have all the attributes of a treaty with a foreign power. The report deals at some length with this, and quotes the case of The King v. Syliboy which was heard in 1928 in Nova Scotia, and in which the judge took this attitude.

If I may interject a personal note here, I will say that I knew Syliboy, the party in that case, at one time. He was Grand Chief of the Mic Mac tribe, and when I knew him he lived in Eskasoni. I can tell you that he was an educated man in the very best sense of the term. He knew a great deal about the history of the Indian people and he had an extensive knowledge of their treaty rights. I remember him as a man of great natural dignity who could express himself well and who in his time gave valuable leadership to his people.

Honourable senators, I think much progress has been made by the Indian people in Nova Scotia and by the work of sympathetic and dedicated officials. The work of skilled and dedicated teachers is now becoming more and more apparent. In the reserve I mentioned leadership is coming from the Indian people themselves. The chief and the men and women of the council are sincere, able and progressive people. They are giving good leadership, and the results of this will become more and more apparent as the years go by. Yes, honourable senators, the Indian people of Canada deserve our wholehearted support, and I know they will receive that support. Yet I would like to emphasize that I believe that the leadership which has developed among themselves is much more valuable than any which can be imposed upon them.

I believe that Senator Gladstone has done well to bring this question before us at this time. He of course is a man who is well known for his efforts on behalf of his own people, and I think we can assure him in this centennial year that in his efforts and in the efforts of the Indian people to aid themselves they will have the support of all of us to the end that as the years go by they will have a better and a more happy existence.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we adjourn, perhaps I should say that ealier this evening I was in discussion with some members on both sides of the other house, and my information is that they hope to have the Bank Bill out of committee tonight. It is not expected that the bill will receive third reading tonight, although that is a remote possibility. However, it is expected that third reading of the bill will be the first order of business tomorrow. If the bill receives third reading early tomorrow afternoon, arrangements will be made to have it brought here forthwith. It is possible that we could receive it at about half past three or quarter to four in the afternoon, although I may be overly optimistic. I do take into account the fact that not only in this house but in the other place there is some concern about knowing approximately when the Easter recess will begin, because transportation is difficult to arrange.

In the circumstances, our plan is to adjourn now until the normal time tomorrow afternoon, at which time Senator Leonard will continue the debate on the motion for the adoption of the Finance Committee report. I would be hopeful that the Bank Bill will be available to us shortly after he concludes. All I can say is, say your prayers and keep your fingers crossed.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Leave having been given to revert to presentation of petitions:

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-59, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 21, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I would ask for unanimous consent that Lord Bowden of Chesterfield, a member of the House of Lords in the United Kingdom, be invited to take a seat on the floor of the Senate and later to address us.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that Lord Bowden is now waiting in the antechamber.

LORD BOWDEN OF CHESTERFIELD

GUEST OF THE SENATE

Lord Bowden of Chesterfield, member of the House of Lords of the United Kingdom, was escorted into the chamber by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, and presented to and invited to take a place to the right of the Honourable the Speaker. Honourable senators stood until Lord Bowden was seated.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I have the privilege of introducing to you today a very distinguished member of the Upper House in the United Kingdom, Lord Bowden of Chesterfield. We welcome him here on the floor of this chamber not only because he is a fellow parliamentarian but also because of his very distinguished career.

Lord Bowden is a former minister of state for the Department of Science and Education in Britain, having assumed that office in 1964. Like some of us, although we have not the title, he is a life peer. He is Principal of Manchester College of Science and Technology. He studied principally at Cambridge under one of the most distinguished scientists of our times, Lord Rutherford, who, as all honourable senators know, was not only at Cambridge but also on the staff of McGill University and later on the staff of Manchester of which our distinguished guest is now the principal.

Lord Bowden took his doctorate under Lord Rutherford. Of course Lord Rutherford was a member of a very distinguished group of scientists preceding the present generation of scientists—men like Frederick Soddy, who was of Oxford originally, subsequently of McGill and later of London, whose work on isotopes made startling advances in the field of science and who was awarded the Nobel Prize for Chemistry in 1921.

Of that company too was Sir James Jeans, who was of Cambridge and later of Princeton, a physicist, astronomer and cosmologist; and it is appropriate to note that the old Laplace theory on the solar system was replaced by a theory advanced by Sir James Jeans.

Of that company too was Sir Arthur Edington, who was also trained at Manchester and at Cambridge in the field of astronomy.

All these men—a generation really before that of our distinguished guest—were the forerunners of what we now call the new science in the fields of physics, chemistry, astronomy and mathematics. Indeed, one must include in that group the name of Albert Einstein as well. They set the stage for scientific development and for the practical application of these ideas that were developed by the new scientists. In fact, our guest participated in the practical application of this work because he was associated with Sir Robert Watson-Watt in radar research, which meant so much in the early days of the Second World War.

The point I think we want to remember about these men is, however, that they were not simply scientists. They belonged to a body I have described as the new scientists, but they were influenced profoundly by what has come to be known as the new humanism and this, in turn, led them to the old philosophy. In other words, they were not only scientists but they were cosmologisist and philosophers, and their writings fully demonstrate this point.

I think that our distinguished guest, perhaps not by blood but certainly in the intellectual sense, is a direct descendent of those men. His address at York University last week, which was commented upon so favourably in the Globe and Mail on March 16, indicated the calibre of man he is. He spoke about the over-concern that the peoples of the western world have with scientific development. In that same remarkable speech he spoke not only of the brain drain from his country, and indeed from ours, but also about the need for developing the ideas of a deep humanism and a deep sense of spirituality.

Our guest will be interested to know that we in this chamber take an interest in the field in which he is an expert. Quite recently we debated, I think with competence, a bill to establish the Science Council, and also the question of incentives to research. We have had a number of debates on various occasions during this session on the problems of higher education in Canada.

Honourable senators, I have much pleasure in asking Lord Bowden if he would be kind enough to address the Senate briefly at this time.

Lord Bowden of Chesterfield: Honourable senators, may I begin by thanking you very warmly indeed for the great honour you have done me in admitting me to your House, and allowing me the privilege of observing your deliberations.

I must thank you, Sir, for the very kind things you have said about me, and for your kindness in allowing me to speak briefly to this House.

It is a long time since I myself did any effective science, but I have been concerned for many years with the problems of administering science in industry, in universities and in the country at large. It has become apparent to me as it has to many people that the growth of science and its spectacular achievements have transformed not only our modern world, but have transformed in particular the relationship and the association between the world of science and the world of government.

When I was a student thirty years ago the number of scientists in the world was quite small, and the amount of money they required for their pursuits was again quite small. Lord Rutherford, to whom reference has been made, during my time at Cambridge never had more than £2,500 in any given year for all the research that he did—research which led to the disintegration of the atom and effectively to the creation of our modern world.

Today scientific budgets are measured by the hundreds of millions of pounds. Not only are the costs of science greater than they were, but they are continuing to grow at an annual rate of 16 per cent compound in every country of the world, which means that they double every five or six years. The resources that scientists demand are great. The responsibilities which they discharge are equally great.

It is becoming obvious that many of the most important decisions that one has to take in considering the growth of science are basically political as much as they are scientific.

If the world is to be shaped by scientists it must be shaped by scientists as advised by governments.

It was Clemenceau who said many years ago that war is too important to be left to the generals. I think in the same way that science is too important to be left to the scientists. It can only progress effectively if it is guided by the deliberations of governments and by the deliberations of such assemblies as this and of my own House in England, because the future of the world is at stake in the way in which we deploy our resources of scientific manpower, and the way in which we decide to develop this or that particular scientific achievement.

I have been much concerned of late by the extraordinary developments of what the senator has spoken of as the "brain drain". It is of course notoriously true that the whole of the new world was populated by people who left the old over a period of 100 years or more. It was a convention we admired and liked, but in the last few years this age-old tradition has changed in its very nature. A few years ago only a few per cent of the immigrants in Canada were professionally qualified. Now almost 25 per cent of them are.

There is a most desperate shortage of scientists all over the world, and they are beginning to be scarce and so precious that they are drifting from the underdeveloped parts of the world to the richer and better developed parts. One finds it in all sorts of ways. Two weeks ago 740 doctors in England took an examination to allow them to qualify to practise in the United States. That is a third of the graduate year, and 60 per cent of the doctors in our northern hospitals were educated in India.

This is a dramatic, unexpected and fundamentally important change in the whole nature of the migration with which we have been familiar for years, and it is beginning to dominate academic policy the world over.

Last year a third of our graduating physicists left for America, immediately they took their doctorates. On the other hand, in some countries, as India and Ghana, two-thirds or even three-quarters of the graduating class left immediately on graduation or as soon thereafter as they could.

The brain drain is a vast migration from Europe, and Canada too, and men are leaving the underdeveloped countries where engineers and professional men are needed for America where they already have more than any other country in the world. This is likely, I am afraid, totally to distort and almost to destroy the best efforts being made to help the underdeveloped countries in developing their educational system. It is bad enough if we lose a third of our men, but what of countries which lose 90 per cent?

It is a very long time ago since the scriptures recorded that "To him that hath shall more be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath". This describes quite literally the state of affairs in the educational world at this time. The few educated people in the underdeveloped countries come, as I have said, in this great migration ultimately ending in the United States and Canada.

It was Karl Marx who took this text as the basis of his whole political creed, which you remember was that the rich get richer and the poor get poorer almost automatically in a capitalist society. This has been disproved in individual countries since Marx's time because of the pressure of public opinion and the influence of government; but as between countries where these forces do not operate it is beginning to appear as if Marx may be right after all.

When one thinks of the motives which drive these people from the poorer countries to the rich, it appears that fields in India are remaining uncultivated largely because of the American defence effort and the American race to the moon. In the end, Marx's prophecy may be fulfilled because of American defence against communism.

This, honourable senators, is a paradox, and one might almost say it is the supreme irony of history. It is a matter which has been the concern of all of us; it is a matter far more political than scientific; it is a matter which demands the attention of government, and it is a problem which we have to study in England because we have no idea how to solve it.

I hope I may be forgiven for speaking of a matter which is greatly concerning many of us in Europe. We are worried about it. We feel that many of the efforts we have made to help the undeveloped countries are overshadowed by the sacrifices we are making to develop the developed industries of the United States.

We spend £205 million a year on aid to underdeveloped countries. We have a large established ministry to do it. And we find, unbeknownst to ourselves, that we are losing at least the equivalent of this in educating men to go to the United States. Here is an anxious problem and potentially the supreme irony which modern times has witnessed.

Sir, may I thank you very much indeed for the opportunity of being here, and thank you very much more, honourable senators, for allowing me the privilege of speaking to you and being so kind as to allow me to enter your House.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the Leader of the Government in welcoming our guest here this afternoon. The Leader of the Government has told us of the wonderful record of our guest, Lord Bowden. I may say that his record is well known not only all over Canada but throughout the whole world.

I was very interested in his remarks regarding the brain drain of his country. We recognize that, for the same thing is happening here in Canada. May I say that I come from a section of Canada which experiences the greatest brain drain of all—the Atlantic provinces. There we have not only a brain drain to the United States but also to Upper Canada, as we call it. We are very grateful indeed that we can produce the goods and can still send out a great many of our brainy people not only to the United States and Canada but wherever they are needed. There is always a good supply left.

Honourable senators, it is seldom that we are honoured by the presence of a so distinguished a guest as we have here this afternoon. It is less often that we have an opportunity of listening to remarks of such a distinguished person.

On behalf of all honourable senators, I wish to thank our distinguished guest for being with us this afternoon and for his gracious and interesting remarks. We have indeed enjoyed both very much. I hope that he has enjoyed his visit to Canada. I hope he has enjoyed his visit to Ottawa and that he will come back many times to see us again.

Again, Lord Bowden, I thank you on behalf of my colleagues here on both sides of this house.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Preceded by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Lord Bowden withdrew while honourable senators stood.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Langlois (Mégantic) has been substituted for that of Mr. Gauthier on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda).

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Annual Report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (Part I. Corporations), for the fiscal periods ending in 1963, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, chapter 26, Statutes of Canada, 1962 (English and French texts).

Report of Polymer Corporation Limited, including its Accounts and Financial Statement certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, together with a Statement of its Accounts certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 33 of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, chapter 46, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 34 of the Public Works Act, chapter 228, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Report of Proceedings under the Trans-Canada Highway Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, chapter 269, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

BANK OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND INCOME TAX ACT AND TO REPEAL CANADIAN VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT—THIRD READING

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

He said: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, I want to give some further information to the Senate which I undertook to obtain at the time this bill was being considered in committee. The information requested has to do with the availability of the forms of application for social security numbers, since there is a provision in this bill making it mandatory that a social security number be included in the income tax return of the taxpayer in 1967, with reference to the 1966 taxation year. The availability of these forms, I am told, is as follows. They are available at all Post Offices in Canada except in the Province of Quebec. In the Province of Quebec they are available at all branches of the Caisses Populaires as well as at all Unemployment Insurance offices.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Hayden, with respect to his comments concerning the Province of Quebec, why such a usual function as the post office would not be utilized for the dissemination of these forms in that province? With all respect to the caisses populaires and some other institutions in Quebec, why would not our own federal institutions be available as the source for dissemination of this type of information, as it is for applications for income tax forms?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, the information which I was requested to obtain and report on was where these forms were available for any person who wanted to make an application. I obtained that information. It is factual. I suppose my position is: "Mine not to reason why," but simply to report the information.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I think that our post offices are most available to our citizens across this country, and with all respect to caisses populaires, for which I have the greatest respect, why should they be in a position above that of our post offices? I have an idea that the appointment of a postmaster, even in the Province of Quebec, is important and if he has these forms they should be available to the people.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TELEFERRY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the third reading of Bill S-58, respecting interprovincial and international teleferries.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 1252 to 1290, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Inman for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Mrs. Inman for Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 1225, for the relief of Joseph Paul Fernand Labreche.

Resolution 1226, for the relief of Mariette Rose Lepine.

Resolution 1227, for the relief of Ubald Laurencelle.

Resolution 1228, for the relief of Frank Edward O'Dwyer.

Resolution 1229, for the relief of Robert Cyr.

Resolution 1230, for the relief of Thelma Doreen Young Magee.

Resolution 1231, for the relief of Eileen McKoy Penticost.

Resolution 1232, for the relief of Mary Ellen Dempsey Bucci.

Resolution 1233, for the relief of Gisele Bourque Dupere.

Resolution 1234, for the relief of Alice Jutigonka (Utronkie) MacDonald.

Resolution 1235, for the relief of Karinn Bjorg Gunnlogsson Sorensen.

Resolution 1236, for the relief of Margot Anne Robinson Deligniere.

Resolution 1237, for the relief of Marie Jeannine (Jeannyne) Berthe Vaillancourt Bourgeois.

Resolution 1238, for the relief of Ann Marie Falconer Porga.

Resolution 1239, for the relief of Jean-Marie Labonte.

Resolution 1240, for the relief of Mary Elizabeth (Elisabeth) Margot Jacqueline Patricia Harton Ross.

Resolution 1241, for the relief of Fernande Gauthier Beaugrand.

Resolution 1242, for the relief of Jeanettte Brash Doiron.

Resolution 1243, for the relief of Roger Hamel.

Resolution 1244, for the relief of Gussie Solomon-Nish Greenstein.

Resolution 1245, for the relief of Shirley Holtzman Spector.

Resolution 1246, for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Getty King.

Resolution 1247, for the relief of Ruth Sharon Alice Burgess Moscovitch.

Resolution 1248, for the relief of Gertrude Anna Schrotterowna Worthington.

Resolution 1249, for the relief of Michelle Jacques Leveille.

Resolution 1250, for the relief of Dorothy Doris Belbin Taube.

Resolution 1251, for the relief of Yvette Pelletier Garon.

Resolution 1252, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Leoni Landry Clement.

Resolution 1253, for the relief of Jozefa Ilnicki Kirkman Maxwell.

Resolution 1254, for the relief of Rhoda May Joudrey Wood.

Resolution 1255 for the relief of Andre Michaud.

Resolution 1256, for the relief of Pierrette Bouchard Hoffman.

Resolution 1257, for the relief of Ronald David Flanagan.

Resolution 1258, for the relief of Rolande Brullemans Villeneuve.

Resolution 1259, for the relief of Karin Luedders Holzer.

Resolution 1260, for the relief of Ailleen Staples Smethurst.

Resolution 1261, for the relief of Maria Irtl Kiss.

Resolution 1262, for the relief of Joseph Pierre Georges Etienne Girard.

Resolution 1263, for the relief of Earl Bruce Boomhour.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mrs. Inman for Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved that the resolutions be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Friday, March 17, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard for the adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance with respect to the expenditures set out in the Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates (A) and (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March 1967.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I presume if I speak now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Apparently it is not necessary to agree, and in that event I will go ahead. I gather that it will be a free for all, after I am through, but I assure honourable senators that I have no intention of trying to keep you in session until the bill to amend the Bank Act arrives.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Can you close that debate?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I certainly have no control over it.

Honourable senators, my first words must be to express my appreciation to those who have taken part in the debate on the report of this committee. I personally take more delight in listening than in speaking, but at the same time I am always conscious of the fact that debate is the essence of Parliament, where the important public issues of the day should receive the best discussion, where we should have the play and interplay of argument and the putting forth of ideas, sometimes conflicting ideas or a clash of views, and of exerting the art of persuasion and reconciliation to its greatest extent.

I also want to say that in this chamber we are extremely fortunate that we have in the person of Senator Grattan O'Leary a man who deservedly and by general acclaim is recognized as one of the most gifted speakers in Canada today and one who has no superior as a master of debate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I must apologize to him for having missed his speech last Friday. I had tried to make my plans so that I would be able to hear him, but other circumstances arose and I was not able to do so. I apologize and also express my regret for having missed the pleasure of hearing him, but I have read his remarks in full with great interest and appreciation, and there are several references I would like to make today with respect to the comments he made.

In particular I would like to make reference to two matters, one of which deals with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Senator O'Leary's comments on that part of the report. The other matter is that of Government expenditures, which is perhaps the most important part of the report, and Senator O'Leary's remarks in that regard.

With respect to both of these items I would like to make some preliminary observations dealing with the manner of the preparation of the report and its wording. I must plead guilty, as its chairman, to having had a major responsibility in the drafting of the report and its wording. I think this is necessarily so in the case of the chairman of any committee. At the same time there are definite limitations upon the chairman in drafting such a report. So far as it deals with factual matters, the report must stick to the facts as presented to the committee. So far as there are in the report statements by way of opinion or comment on what took place, they must be fair comments and not coloured by what may be the particular views of the chairman himself.

One does try to have a wording that fairly represents the consensus of the committee, or at least of a majority of the committee. That means the wording must be wide enough to cover in many cases quite a broad spectrum of the shades of opinion that may be represented on a committee.

I make these preliminary remarks to indicate that while I agree with the report, and I am not detracting in any fashion from what is in it, nevertheless, there may be things I would say in expressing my own particular views that would not be quite proper to put in the report. I recognize that once the report gets into this chamber we are all free to discuss it and express our own personal views.

Coming to the matter of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I quote from Senator O'Leary's remarks this sentence:

> I must say frankly that after listening to the discussion—

That is the discussion in committee.

> —I would have been far more impressed had the committee shown less concern for the taste or lack of taste of "Sunday" and more concern for what it was costing the taxpayers of this country.

I find myself in strong personal agreement with Senator O'Leary in those remarks. Actually I have never seen any of these "Sunday" programs, and I certainly am not tempted to do so in the future by what I have heard. Therefore, from the standpoint of the expenditure which I as a taxpayer am contributing to the $50,000 the program costs each night—or the $1,200,000 it costs for 26 nights—it is a waste of money. However, I can say it is not a waste of my time because I prefer to read rather than watch such a program.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is cancelled for next year.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I understand that, but I do not think our report had anything to do with it. I make these remarks to lead up to the fact that the report does represent what took place.

This matter arose orginally by way of a debate in this chamber where questions were asked criticizing the program. There was obviously considerable feeling that the program had been objectionable. Because of that the committee called the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Mr. Ouimet, before it and questioned him largely on the taste or lack of taste in this program, having in mind, I think, the question of how could this have happened, and how could it be avoided in the future. This is why the report was worded in this way, and why the committee acted as it did. Personally I feel, as does Senator O'Leary, that it is a lot of money to spend in a way in which I would prefer it not to be spent.

At the same time I must in fairness say, as did Senator O'Leary, that the coverage of the ceremonies and funeral following the death of General Vanier was magnificent, and we must recognize that an organization like the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation must keep talented personnel, must have a tremendous amount of equipment available to do that kind of broadcasting on short notice, over a considerable period of time, and under extreme difficulties. Consequently, it must cost a great deal of money.

In my opinion all this leads up to the question of whether we should embark upon a study of the financial situation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It would require considerable expert assistance for a committee such as the Finance Committee to undertake it; it would require a great deal of time not only of the members of the committee but on the part of others, and a good deal of money. Furthermore, this kind of study could only be embarked upon as a result of a Government decision, and even to recommend that decision, as the committee could very well do, would, I think, require more study than we have been able to make at the present time. This is by way of explanation of my view of the matter of the C.B.C.

The second matter on which I would like to comment is the subject of the financial expenditures of the Government. Here again, so that I may relate my remarks to Senator O'Leary's speech, I should quote from what he said. He quoted from the item in the report dealing with the growth of Government expenditures, and he said at the top of page 1686:

> "Without too great difficulty"—what does Senator Leonard mean by that?

Incidentally, these were not my remarks, but I will endorse them since they were in the committee's report. Senator O'Leary continued:

> What would happen if the rate of increase in the Gross National Product started to decrease? The rate of growth is decreasing now—it certainly is not increasing—it is standing still. We have evidence of this from all the experts in the country. The Gross National Product is standing still, but you have the overhead built up over the past five years. Over the past five years, according to the senator's statement here, the increase in expenditure has been $5 billion. We have built up this overhead. We now have a public debt, the interest on which alone is $1,280 million.

Those are very pertinent remarks in considering the report of this committee. It may be that I minimize in my own mind the problem to which Senator O'Leary refers. I do not look forward to the prospect engendered by his last words, that ahead of our country, in the event of these things happening, lie desolation and decay. I am not filled with foreboding to that extent. Senator O'Leary may say I minimize—or perhaps he magnifies—the difficulties.

I would like to put on record some of the factors that cause me to be not as concerned as he is with respect to the situation. In the first place, I want to deal with our present federal Government expenditures as a percentage of the Gross National Product, because this is one of the factors that makes our problem with respect to federal Government expenditures still a manageable one.

I have in my hand a table I am going to ask permission of the House to have included in my remarks in extenso, and I will describe it to the Senate. It was prepared at my request by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and is headed, "Federal Government Total Expenditures, Expenditures on Total Goods and Services and Expenditures on Defence Goods and Services as a Percentage of Gross National Product, 1951 to 1965". To make the point I want to make I shall quote only two or three of these figures. Incidentally, the table gives its source also. The data is taken from certain Dominion Bureau of Statistics publications dealing with national accounts, and that will appear in the record.

Starting in 1951, the federal Government total expenditures, expressed as a percentage of the Gross National Product, were 14.6. In the following year, 1952, this percentage jumped to 18.2. That was because of the Korean War, and the increase was largely in defence expenditures. From 1952 down to and including 1964 the percentage ranged from a low in 1956, of 16.5 to a high in 1961 of 19 per cent.

In 1965, which is the latest available figure, the percentage dropped to 16.2. That was the lowest percentage since 1951. So that one must always take into account the base upon which federal Government expenditures rest, and the power to generate the taxes and expenditures arises from the prosperity of the country which is reflected largely in the figures relating to our Gross National Product. In any event, when we went into 1966 we did so with a lower percentage of federal Government expenditures, related to our Gross National Product, than we had had in 14 years.

So, even though the expenditures rose during the year in which the committee has been studying them by slightly more than the Gross National Product, the base from which we started was sufficiently low to make the problem of the increased expenditures a manageable one. I am not defending the amount of increase or saying it is quite in order to go on increasing expenditures. I simply say that any problem created by the increase in expenditures to date is definitely a manageable one, having in mind that over the immediately preceding years federal expenses have gone as high as 19 per cent of the Gross National Product, and still we have had years of prosperity and over the whole period we have had expanding prosperity.

May I have permission to place this table on the record?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows)

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TOTAL EXPENDITURES, EXPENDITURES ON TOTAL GOODS AND SERVICES AND EXPENDITURES AND DEFENCE GOODS AND SERVICES AS A PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT, 1951 to 1965

(Dollar figures in millions)

	Gross National Product	Federal Government Total Expenditures	Percentage of Gross National Product	Federal Government Expenditure on Goods and Services Total	Percentage of Gross National Product	Federal Government Expenditure on Goods and Services Defence	Percentage of Gross National Product
1951	21,170	3,089	14.6	1,702	8.0	1,157	5.5
1952	23,995	4,373	18.2	2,489	10.4	1,800	7.5
1953	25,020	4,584	18.3	2,559	10.2	1,907	7.6
1954	24,871	4,628	18.6	2,449	9.8	1,727	6.9
1955	27,132	4,761	17.5	2,510	9.3	1,760	6.5
1956	30,585	5,034	16.5	2,683	8.8	1,802	5.9
1957	31,909	5,339	16.7	2,728	8.5	1,765	5.5
1958	32,894	6,091	18.5	2,854	8.7	1,661	5.0
1959	34,915	6,370	18.2	2,832	8.1	1,559	4.5
1960	36,287	6,662	18.4	2,730	7.5	1,546	4.3
1961	37,471	7,129	19.0	2,982	8.0	1,613	4.3
1962	40,575	7,424	18.3	3,025	7.5	1,680	4.1
1963	43,424	7,507	17.3	2,934	6.8	1,572	3.6
1964	47,403	7,891	16.6	3,046	6.4	1,584	3.3
1965	51,996	8,405	16.2	3,267	6.3	1,562	3.0

SOURCE: The data were taken from the following DBS publications: 1951 to 1954—National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, 1926–1956; 1955 to 1958—National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, 1962; 1959 to 1965—National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, 1965.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Another factor about which I wish to speak deals with what is now happening to our Gross National Product. I find that my interpretation of what is happening is rather different to Senator O'Leary's interpretation.

The latest official figures only go up to and including the third quarter of 1966, and our Gross National Product is very substantially higher in three quarters of 1966 than it was in 1965. While the figures for the last quarter are not officially available, there are reasonably reliable estimates being made which come out to an increase last year over the preceding year of about 10.4 per cent in our Gross National Product. That is a very substantial increase. I am dealing in current dollars, not in constant dollars, because on both sides of this problem we are discussing current dollars, whether they are expenditures or G.N.P.

One has to have a little sense of prophecy or speculation or gambling to look ahead and see what is likely to happen, but certainly there is no indication, from what I can read or gather, that it is as Senator O'Leary described it.

The best survey with which I am familiar on this subject is a survey made every year by the Prudential Insurance Company of America. This is about their sixteenth or seventeenth in a row; they do one for the United States and one for Canada. Considering all the conditions and the "ifs" and "buts" that may develop within the course of a year, they have been remarkably good in their forecasting. They have expert staffs, the reports are carefully detailed and the company has access to good sources of information. The report goes back over 1966 and says that:

> The economy continues to operate at record high levels as Canada prepares to celebrate its 100th birthday.

They go on to the 1967 outlook in brief. Their reasons are set out in the brochure, and they conclude:

> The Gross National Product will rise 7½ per cent this Centennial year to $61.7 billion, a better than $4.3 billion year-to-year increase—

Of the 10.4 per cent last year, 4 per cent was represented by a change in the value of the dollar. Their view is that this year the price rise will moderate to 3½ per cent, and they state that the total growth will be slower in the later part of 1967.

I am not going to develop this point further, other than to say that here is another factor that we must take into account in considering how far an increase in federal Government expenditures can be properly borne without too much difficulty. If this report is reasonably accurate it does support my view that the problem is manageable or, at least, manageable in part.

Before I come to the third factor, I should deal with the point Senator O'Leary (Carleton) made in respect of the public debt. The interest on the public debt in 1967-68 will be $1.280 billion. This expenditure, of course, has been increasing from year to year, but here again I think it has to be related to the base upon which it rests. I turned back to 1961, which I picked out as an example, and I compared the interest we were then paying on our national debt with our G.N.P., and I brought it into relationship with the figures for 1967-68. The cost of servicing our national debt rose from approximately $800 million to $1.280 billion, a rise of approximately 60 per cent. Over the same years the G.N.P. has risen from approximately $37 billion to approximately $60 billion, a rise of an almost identical 60 per cent.

The figures indicate to me that the problem is no more serious today than it was, for instance, in 1961. I could add also that the interest on our national debt is, after all, a form of transfer payment. The taxpayers pay the money and the bondholders receive it. The largest bondholders are the insurance companies of Canada. So, in effect it is the great group of Canadian policyholders that is receiving the interest. Today I think our national debt is held almost completely in Canada. Certainly more of it is held in Canada today than was held years ago, and that makes the national debt much more manageable from an economic standpoint.

The third factor in my consideration is that there is still a considerable measure of executive control over expenditures. Notwithstanding the fact that they are included in the Estimates, and notwithstanding the fact that appropriation bills based on those Estimates are passed by both houses, the Executive can still postpone and even forego expenditures. It was action along this line that the Government took a year or so ago when it decided to postpone certain capital expenditures on buildings. That was done because it was felt there was too much pressure on the building industry at that time.

These are the three factors that relieve my mind from some of the concern that I would otherwise share with Senator O'Leary (Carleton).

To my mind also there is a fourth factor, and that is that I have a considerable amount of confidence in the experience and judgment of the present Minister of Finance. I believe he is fully conscious of the dangers involved in increasing expenditures. The greatest danger at the present time is the inflationary pressure that increased expenditure puts upon the economy. We have almost reached the stage of full employment, and we can produce only so much more in the way of goods and services as our labour force can increase in numbers, and as it can increase its productivity. So, there is a limit on the amount of goods and services we can produce, and if our expenditures in both the public and private sectors increase beyond that limit, then there is strong inflationary pressure.

It is in that connection that I myself would be much happier if I could anticipate that the federal Government's expenditures will be less than the amount set out in the Estimates for 1967-68. Nothing I have said is any way in conflict with that hope. Even if my hope is not completely realized, there are still factors in the situation that leave me, at least, with no particularly strong feeling of pessimism.

I should like to thank Senator Haig also for his contribution to the debate. He is always gracious in his tributes. He is a very conscientious member of the committee and an active member of the steering committee.

Senator Donald Smith is always constructive in his work and as a member of the committee. He made the suggestion that the committee might in the next session do well to examine the operations of the Rural Economic Development Fund and the area development agencies. That is a good idea, and we will consider it when the committee meets after the Easter recess.

Honourable senators, I apologize for having been over-long, and I thank you for your courtesy and attention.

Report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until 8.00 p.m.

At 9.15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have been delaying the ringing of the bell in the hope that there might be some definite word from the other place about the Bank Act. I have talked to representatives of all parties on the other side, and I am informed that they expect to give the bill third reading, but probably not before 10 o'clock. There is of course an element of risk that one member can refuse to give unanimous consent to third reading. However, in anticipation of what they hope, and I think the majority of them are of this view, that the bill will receive third reading tonight, I move, with leave, seconded by Senator Hayden, that when the Senate rises tonight it do stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I know that the Leader of the Government has been examining every possibility of having this bill brought before the Senate as soon as possible. He speaks of our adjourning until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, and I am in absolute agreement with that. However, I would ask him this question: When we meet tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock and discuss the bill, and if we agree unanimously to second reading, to which I have no objection, shall we meet tomorrow afternoon and continue discussion of the bill at that time, and then perhaps send it to Committee? I am just trying to learn what might happen after our meeting at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I will be completely in the hands of the Senate in this respect. My hope is that we would have unanimous consent that the bill be read the second time as soon as it is available and is explained.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: When?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Tomorrow morning. The purpose of meeting at 10 o'clock is to debate the bill tomorrow morning. If there are honourable senators who want to speak tomorrow but do not wish to do so tomorrow morning, we could recess for a while and then come back and complete the debate on second reading.

I would hope that the bill would be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce as soon as the debate here is finished. I would hope also that the committee would sit immediately after that portion of the debate and the Senate rises.

There is the risk that if third reading is not given in the other place tonight we may meet here at 10 o'clock tomorrow without much use, because the Commons probably will not sit until 2.30 tomorrow afternoon unless, by unanimous consent, they agree to sit tomorrow morning.

As the Commons members seem to be anxious to adjourn tomorrow for the Easter recess, we can expect to receive interim supply appropriation bill dealing with the supplementary Estimates (G).

Honourable senators, I see no other business which would concern the Senate for tomorrow. I hope that explanation is sufficient. If there are questions I will try to answer them.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Is the leader talking now of an adjournment or is he talking of prorogation?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am talking of an adjournment over the Easter recess.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: An Easter recess.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: What business have we to do after the Easter recess?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There will be a good deal of business. There is some business on the Order Paper which we have not finished at the moment. There is the Citizenship bill and one other bill on the Order Paper, and there will be more legislation, I assume, coming from the other place.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: As I understand it, if tomorrow morning we do not receive the Bank Bill and we have to wait until 2.30 in the afternoon, I take it that we will consider Interim Supply in the hope that the Bank Bill will arrive.

So far as interim supply and supplementary supply is concerned, frankly I do not see—for reasons explained by you as leader this afternoon—why these should be held up. The key situation is the Bank bill, of course.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Precisely.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: If that bill comes to us, we will have to carry on as circumstances dictate. That is all.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We sat on Good Friday two years ago.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

THE SENATE

*Wednesday, March 22, 1967

The Senate met at 10 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BANK ACT

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-222, respecting banks and banking.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Daniel A. Lang, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, there is probably no one in this chamber who experienced a greater sense of relief than I did at the arrival here of this legislation. During the last few days, as we awaited passage of this bill in the other place, I found I was getting myself more deeply and more inconclusively involved in this rather elaborate piece of legislation, and probably not to the ultimate edification of our chamber.

Before continuing, I should say that I am indeed honoured that our leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) has permitted me to sponsor this important legislation on second reading. However, I must say that as I contemplated this honour I wondered whether the leader was somewhat circumscribed in his choice, inasmuch as there is much greater talent available to him in this chamber. Perhaps that talent is more closely involved in the sphere of banking and finance in this country.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: He could have let somebody on the Opposition side introduce it.

Hon. Mr. Lang: This Hobson's choice being forced upon the honourable Leader of the Government causes me to approach my task with a certain amount of humility and reservation. Nevertheless if honourable senators will bear with me I will attempt, as best I can, to place before you the highlights of this measure and to outline the policies behind the various provisions.

I should remind honourable senators that Bill C-222 was first introduced into the House of Commons on July 5 of last year. It will be recalled that the first version of this legislation was presented by the former Minister of Finance, but before it became law it was overtaken by the dissolution of Parliament in the autumn of 1965. After its introduction in its present form, the bill then went to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of the House of Commons. That committee held some 75 meetings on this bill, received approximately 27 briefs, heard dozens of witnesses, and considered 71 amendments. I point out these details in order to underline the fact that this bill comes to us in a well digested form, and I think, after reading this morning's newspapers, it is now even more digested than it was yesterday.

This bill represents the decennial revision of the Bank Act—a periodic revision of legislation which comes down to us from Confederation when the then provincially chartered banks first came under federal control. Their modus operandi under federal control was uncertain, and it was felt that periodic revision of these charters was the best way of adapting these heretofore provincial institutions to a new national concept.

These decennial revisions have now become a fact of our legislative life. The last one that we had in Parliament was in 1954. Accordingly, this decennial revision would, in the normal course of events, have come before Parliament in 1964. However, the delays involved have been inevitable and unavoidable, and the bank charters have been extended from time to time until this piece of legislation becomes law.

As at this moment the lives of the charters of our present banks will expire, except for the passage of this legislation, on April 11 next. Primarily this bill extends the charters of all banks for a period of ten years and permits them for that period of time to continue to carry on their business.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: For ten years?

Hon. Mr. Lang: For ten years from the proclamation of this piece of legislation. At the end of the year 1965 there were eight chartered banks in Canada with a total of 5,945 branches. Since then, as we are all aware, two additional banks have been added to this roster, namely, the Bank of Western Canada and the Bank of British Columbia.

To put in perspective the philosophical basis for this legislation, I would remind honourable senators that it is primarily founded upon the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, which reported in 1964 and is more familiarly known as the Porter Commission. This bill embodies many, if not most, of the major recommendations of the commission and puts into statutory form the objectives behind the recommendations of the commission. I only need to remind honourable senators that basically these recommendations were directed towards putting more flexibility into our banking system, to give to our banks greater investing and borrowing powers, and to make them more competitive in their operations.

*See P. 1768

Honourable senators will recall that in the recent amendments to the Loan and Trust Companies Acts, many of the royal commission's recommendations were there carried into effect, and in this legislation we see those recommendations projected into the area of banking.

I think it would be only fair to say that in studying this bill, honourable senators will recognize a certain dichotomy between two basic philosophical concepts; first, that directed towards the objective that I have just mentioned, namely, the creation of a more favourable environment for the banks in terms of their competitive aspects and in terms of their flexibility in the financial market, and as against that the problem of maintaining Canadian ownership of these financial institutions. In short, to the extent that the conditions imposed in this legislation, towards achieving Canadian control of our financial institutions, have the effect of restricting effective economic competition within Canada between non-residents and our domestic banks, these conditions tend to weaken somewhat, or blunt the effect of, the other provisions of the bill which are designed primarily to stimulate competition among banks in Canada generally.

Permit me, honourable senators, at this point, and in the most capsule form, to mention those provisions of the bill which are acknowledged to be the main provisions.

First, the banks will be able, henceforth, to make conventional mortgage loans, which will be exempt from any interest ceiling.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Which clause is that?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It is in clause 75, I think.

Hon. Mr. Lang: To maintain these clause numbers in one's mind is quite a prodigious undertaking. It is in clause 75 (1) on page 52.

Secondly, the banks' minimum cash ratio, held by the Bank of Canada against demand deposits, will be reduced; and that cash ratio will be segregated from the cash ratio required to be maintained with the Bank of Canada against term deposits.

Agreements between banks on interest rates on deposits and on loans will be prohibited.

Honourable senators, I may mention here that, in enumerating these changes, I am not giving them to you in any sequence that relates to the arrangement of the clauses in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Was there no provision in the Bank Act previously with regard to arrangements between banks?

Hon. Mr. Lang: No, there was not. The banks, as you are aware, do not fall within the ambit of the Combines Investigation Act, as that act is confined to the making of agreements restricting competition in articles which are the subject matter of trade and commerce. In other words, these service institutions do not fall within the Combines Investigation Act; and there is no reference in the present Bank Act dealing with agreements on these matters or prohibiting them.

Honourable senators, the banks will be permitted to issue debentures. Those debentures will be subordinated to a bank's liability on account of its deposits.

The six per cent ceiling on interest rates on loans will be abandoned. An ad interim interest ceiling will be imposed. This interim interest ceiling will fluctuate in direct relationship to the average market yield on short-term Government bonds, namely, one and three-quarter per cent above such average yield as that average yield may from time to time be determined. This interim ceiling will automatically disappear when that average yield on short-term Government securities drops to 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn: Does the new rate apply to the present indebtedness to the bank?

Hon. Mr. Lang: I think that would depend on whether the present indebtedness was a term indebtedness or a demand indebtedness.

As honourable senators know, the Canadian banks cannot under the present act accept any subscriptions for shares of their capital stock from any government in Canada. Under the present bill, however, government funds of certain specified characters can purchase shares in our banks in amounts up to a maximum of 10 per cent, but only on a non-voting basis. These government funds as specified are largely pension funds, hospitalization funds and other government funds of that nature, which would be acquiring shares purely in connection with their portfolio of investments.

Next, honourable senators, banks will be limited, generally speaking—and I underline that—to 10 per cent ownership of any other corporation.

Bank boards in future may not have on them directors who represent in aggregate more than one-fifth of the directors of another corporation; and, again to the same end, namely, the prevention of interlocking directorates, eventually a director of a trust or loan company may not be a director of a bank.

Banks will have to disclose in their annual financial statements their so-called "inner reserves".

Banks will be required to disclose the entire cost of borrowing; that is, the entire cost including those costs of borrowing which are not interest charges in themselves.

Finally, honourable senators, non-resident control of banks and the extent of individual control of banks is strictly limited by this legislation.

I think from hearing that enumeration of headings, honourable senators will very quickly appreciate the extent and ramifications of this legislation. To more completely inform honourable senators with regard to these various proposals, I will ask you to refer to the bill itself, which is now before you. I will deal with these main proposals seriatim as they appear throughout the bill.

First, I would refer honourable senators to clause 9, at page 7 of the bill, which says:

> Subject to this Act, the authorized capital stock of the bank shall be not less than one million dollars and shall be divided into shares each having a par value of one dollar or any multiple thereof not exceeding ten dollars.

I should remind honourable senators that at one time the equivalent of this section in the Bank Act stipulated that the par value of bank shares must be $100. In 1934 this section was amended to permit a par value of $10, and now we have a further amendment permitting a par value of $1, or any multiple thereof not exceeding $10. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the banks to subdivide their shares, the market price of which now ranges in the area of $60 or $70, and by doing so to effect a wider distribution of their shares among the public generally. Related to this clause is clause 17 (1) (b) on page 12 of the bill which gives to the shareholders of the bank the power to bring about this subdivision as permitted by clause 9.

Honourable senators, I would like to direct your attention to clause 18 (6) on page 14 of the bill. This is a major clause and provides, in short, that directors of deposit taking institutions such as savings banks and some loan and trust companies will not be eligible to be directors of a chartered bank after two years from the date the maximum loan interest rate is removed. This clause is designed to prevent interlocking directorates between financial institutions, including banks and trust companies. The time that the restriction is to take effect is to be when the interest ceiling is removed and when greater competition among these institutions is anticipated.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask a question about subclause 5 (a) which says:

> A person is not eligible to be elected or appointed a director if
>
> (a) he has reached the age of seventy-five years,—

Why is that?

Hon. Mr. Lang: That is a continuing section, senator.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I do not mean that. What is the reason for it?

Hon. Mr. Lang: I believe the philosophy behind that is similar to the philosophy behind the recent amendments to the legislation governing this chamber.

At this stage, honourable senators, I would draw your attention to clause 18, subclause (7), on page 14, which limits the number of directors of any one corporation who may become directors of a bank. Perhaps if I give an example to illustrate what I mean it may make it clearer. If there are five directors on the board of a corporation, only one of those directors would be eligible to become a director of a bank.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Of a particular bank.

Hon. Mr. Lang: Of a particular bank. If the corporate board consists of 10 directors, only two of those directors would be eligible to become directors of a particular bank.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: What is the situation if the corporation has only three directors?

Hon. Mr. Lang: I think it would be very difficult to elect a fractional director to the board. I do not think that is provided for in any corporation act with which I am familiar. Perhaps we can take them to the nearest quarter. I cannot answer your question.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We can deal with this later.

Hon. Mr. Lang: I would like now to refer honourable senators to clause 33 at page 20. This is an important clause under which the banks are to be permitted to offer new shares at a price to be fixed by the directors. Honourable senators are aware that under the present legislation the directors of a bank must, in offering a new issue of shares, offer them pro rata to the shareholders of the bank first, and also that the price of those shares cannot exceed a formula which is tied to the sum total of the paid-up capital and rest account of the bank. This provision will enable the board of directors to fix the price of the shares to be offered as they may see fit. It is anticipated that in future these offerings will be at a price more nearly equating the actual market value of the shares.

I am going to depart from the sequence for a moment and skip clauses 52 to 57 which in themselves form a block, and, I will refer, honourable senators, to clause 60 at page 41 of the bill. The amendment contained in clause 60 requires the banks to make full disclosure of what has been known as their "inner reserves." I need only remind honourable senators that under present banking legislation there are two types of inner reserves, first a reserve created out of taxable profits of a bank which is in effect a contingency reserve to meet losses which are not specifically provided for, and, secondly, there is a reserve created out of taxed profits. This latter reserve consists largely of non-deductible expenses which the bank could not charge against its taxable profits. Both these reserves must now be carried in the annual financial statements of the bank.

I should say that heretofore policy has supported the maintenance of secrecy with regard to these reserves, and I think largely because at one time the banks had to carry their portfolio of securities at their market value, whereas under the present legislation the banks can carry their portfolio securities at an amortized value which gives a much more accurate picture as to their real worth. The result is that the main objection to these reserves on the financial statements themselves is gone, and it is felt that there is no valid, subsisting reason for setting them out otherwise than publicly.

Honourable senators, I would quickly pass to clause 72 on page 49, which deals with the cash and secondary reserves of banks, which reserves represent the instrument whereby monetary control over the banks by the Bank of Canada is exercised.

Under this amendment the cash reserves which a chartered bank will be required to carry with the Bank of Canada with respect to demand deposits will gradually be replaced by the present provision, and will be increased from 7 per cent to 12 per cent. A 4 per cent reserve will be required in connection with term deposits. A 12 per cent reserve will hereafter be required in connection with demand deposits; and hereafter a 4 per cent reserve will be required on notice deposits. This will result in an overall requirement of an average of about 6.6 per cent.

In addition, we now have included in this bill a stand-by power given to the Bank of Canada to impose secondary reserve requirements, initially of not more than 6 per cent and which may be increased to not more than 12 per cent. These are requirements of which the Bank of Canada may avail itself in the event of a monetary emergency.

It is anticipated that this first-mentioned amendment will permit the banks to compete more effectively with other institutions, such as trust companies in particular, for term deposits, and is in accordance with the philosophy behind the recommendations of the Royal Commission.

Honourable senators, I quickly pass to page 52 of the bill, clause 75(1). In paragraph (c) thereof, by the inclusion of the word "immovable," the powers of a bank are extended to permit mortgage lending, and generally to the same extent as other deposit-taking institutions. Heretofore banks have been unable to lend money by way of mortgage and have only been permitted to take a mortgage when they felt they required additional security on a loan.

Clause 91(6)(a) relates to this section, and exempts such mortgages from any interest ceiling provision.

The clause also contains limitations on the extent of a bank's mortgage portfolio; and, in addition, imposes on the banks a limitation in connection with the extent to which they can advance money under a mortgage as that mortgage loan relates to the value of property, namely, 75 per cent thereof. If my recollection is correct, that is the same as the restriction under the Loan and Trust Companies Act.

Honourable senators, I pass over clause 75(2)(g), to which I will return in a few moments, and deal now with clause 76 at page 55.

This new clause places upon the banks a restriction with respect to the extent of their investment in other Canadian corporations, and particularly deposit-taking institutions such as trust companies. In essence, it provides that a bank cannot own shares carrying over 50 per cent of the voting rights of another corporation where the price paid for those shares is $5 million or less; and, again, a bank cannot own shares carrying over 10 per cent of the voting rights where the price paid for the shares is over $5 million.

The theory behind this restriction, of course, is that with respect to a smaller corporation, a bank's interest, to be at all substantial, would have to be somewhat more than 10 per cent, whereas in connection with a larger corporation a 10 per cent interest would appear to be sufficient for the bank's purposes without giving the bank overall control.

However, this clause goes on in the next subclause—namely, 76(1) (a) (ii)—to deal with a bank's interest in loan and trust companies. Notwithstanding what may be the cost to a bank of the shares in a loan or trust company, it cannot own shares carrying more than 10 per cent of the voting rights of that institution. The clause goes on to provide that any excess shares held by banks over these prescribed ceilings must be disposed of by July 1, 1971.

I should point out to honourable senators that there are a few exceptions in that clause. You will note that those exceptions give a bank the opportunity or the right to acquire shares in excess of these ceiling requirements if they are acquired in connection with the realization of a loan that the bank has outstanding. If a bank does realize shares in connection with that operation it must dispose of them within five years. A bank may also acquire shares in excess of the ceilings to which I have referred, generally, but if they do so they must dispose of them within two years.

I am advised that this latter provision is to give the banks the power to intervene in the event of a possible take-over of a Canadian company by non-resident interests. Acquisition solely for the purpose of preventing the takeover must be followed by distribution within two years thereafter of the shares among the Canadian public.

I pass on to clause 77 at page 59 of the bill. This is the clause empowering the banks now to issue debentures of their own, a matter to which I referred previously. It will be noted that these debentures must be subordinated to the deposit liabilities of the bank, and they must also conform to certain other requirements in this clause. They must never exceed, for instance, in total outstanding, one-half of the sum of the paid-up capital and rest account of the bank at the time of issue. This places a ceiling on the amount that a bank can issue. No debentures can be for a term of less than five years. This clause does give banks the opportunity of competing with other institutions for long-term funds, an opportunity which was heretofore denied them.

Honourable senators, clause 91 at page 78 of the bill is very important because it includes the amendment setting forth the formula which fixes the maximum interest rate banks may charge on loans. This clause provides a substitute for the fixed 6 per cent ceiling under the present act, which ceiling was referred to in the report of the Royal Commission as imposing a rigidity on our banking system inconsistent with the best interests of the public and of the banks themselves and which, in effect, precluded competition among the banks in this area. Although the Royal Commission recommended that the ceiling be removed altogether, under present monetary conditions in the country the Government did not feel it advisable to remove it at once, but rather to impose an interim arrangement which would, with the advent of a certain set of conditions, automatically disappear.

As I have mentioned, honourable senators, when this bill becomes law the maximum rate of interest that a bank may charge will be 1¾ per cent above the average yield on Government bonds maturing in three years or less. This average yield will be computed and announced one month before the new rate is to become effective, and that new rate will become effective at the end of each six-month period. In the interests of maintaining continuity the new bank rate until the end of this year will be arbitrarily fixed at 7¼ per cent.

Under this formula if the average yield on these short-term Government securities falls below 5 per cent—in other words, if, under the formula, the bank rate itself becomes less than 6¾ per cent—then automatically the ceiling disappears.

It may be of interest to honourable senators to know that the original bill, before it went to the committee of the other place, set forth a figure of 4½ per cent as the trigger rate, and that trigger rate was moved up to 5 per cent on the recommendation of the committee. In other words, the committee itself must have felt that the sooner the rate of interest is freed the better it would be for everyone concerned.

There are a few exceptions in this clause. For instance, there is no interest ceiling on what are known as bridging loans covering a short period of time, which come into being when a customer requires a substantial amount of money that will be shortly refinanced such as the construction of a building or similar undertaking.

Basically, this is the first move towards complete freedom of action being permitted the banks in this area.

I should like to refer briefly to clause 92, on page 81. This deals with disclosure as to the "Cost of borrowing" in respect of certain classes of loans. It is interesting to note that under this clause the practice that has arisen of late with respect to requiring a customer to maintain a minimum balance in his account when he is also carrying a loan, and which to some extent defeated the interest ceiling, is prohibited unless it be made under specific agreement with the customer.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: When the customer wants the money badly that agreement will be very easy to obtain.

Hon. Mr. Lang: I agree entirely with the sentiments expressed by my honourable friend.

Other costs which the bank incurs and charges to a customer, such as collection charges on discounted notes, now must be subject to an express agreement with the customer before they can be made by the banks.

Finally, honourable senators, I turn to clause 138, which prohibits any agreement between banks with respect to interest rates on loans and deposits. This is in conformity with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, and I suggest that this specific prohibition against such practices, now to be included in the Bank Act, should have a very salutory effect on the institutions concerned.

The prohibition contained in this clause does not apply to certain agreements which are set out in clause 138 (2). Generally, these are agreements on matters which will be performed outside of Canada, or agreements that have the specific consent of the Minister of Finance.

That concludes my reference to the specific clauses of this legislation, except those clauses which I passed over on my way through, namely, clauses 52 to 57 and 75(2)(g). If I may, I would like to deal with those clauses en bloc.

Honourable senators, to take you through these clauses would require all the erudition of a Senator Hayden and all the forensic skill of a Senator Connolly in order to give you much enlightenment. I do not aspire to those capabilities as yet, and accordingly I shall try to delineate the policies embedded in these sections rather than refer to the specific machinery contained in them for implementing that policy.

Firstly, except for any existing situation, and in the case of resident shareholders of a new bank, if the Government gives specific approval, ownership by any one shareholder and associates will be limited to 10 per cent of a bank's shares, and total ownership by non-residents will be limited to 25 per cent.

So, basically, in going through these clauses, we find two principles: firstly, that in aggregate foreigners cannot own more than 25 per cent of the shares of a Canadian bank; secondly, that individuals, whether they be Canadian or non-resident—and I will include their associates as defined by these clauses—cannot own more than 10 per cent of the shares of a Canadian bank.

In order to implement this policy these clauses go to elaborate lengths in restricting the transfer of shares and in limiting a bank's ability to accept subscriptions for shares. I think I can best describe this machinery by saying it is an attempt to recognize the status quo, to prevent any increase in individual or foreign ownership above what may now exist, to prevent an excess foreign ownership that may drop down towards the permissible level from again rising, and all with the ultimate objective of bringing excessive ownership down over a period of time, through transmissions, in the ordinary course of events, to within the permissible limits.

If you will examine those clauses you will see how complicated is the drafting necessary to deal with the problems I have mentioned. The clauses do impose upon a bank a severe onus in ascertaining to what extent non-residents do own its shares, in ascertaining who in fact are non-residents, notwithstanding what may or may not be revealed by the share register, in preventing the transfer of shares from residents to non-residents, which transfers might bring the holdings above the permissible limits or transfers as between any individuals and associates which may have the effect of bringing the holdings of an individual and his associates above the permissible limits. These clauses set out what the bank is required to do to insure the attainment of the objectives of the legislation.

Not only does it apply to transfers of shares, but it applies to subscriptions for shares as the bank may receive them from time to time in connection with new issues of their treasury stock.

I am sure honourable senators will agree with me that this may be a very heavy onus to place on these institutions, but I would point out that under clause 55(4)(b) there is a provision which alleviates considerably the burden otherwise imposed. Under that subclause, in the computations that a bank must make to meet the requirements of the act it can disregard transfers and subscriptions representing par share values under $5,000. Par share values under $5,000, I am advised, do in fact include something like 90 per cent of all the transactions of this nature which take place in connection with a bank's shares. So in the result, the banks should be very well able to deal with the requirements of the act.

Honourable senators will recall that these same provisions were inserted into the Trust and Loan Companies Act several years ago, and those institutions seem to have been able to live with them quite satisfactorily in the meantime.

In conclusion, I would direct your attention to clause 56, on page 36 of the bill, and to clause 75(2)(g) on page 53. As honourable senators are aware, there are two banks in Canada which have been occupying the public press for the past many months, namely, the Bank of Western Canada and the Mercantile Bank. Clause 75(2)(g) applies to these two banks but its effects will be felt, at least for the time being, only by the Mercantile Bank.

As honourable senators are aware, the extent of a bank's business under present legislation is not limited by relation to its paid-up capital and rest or surplus account, as it is called, as is the business of trust and loan companies.

Therefore, in clause 75(2)(g) we find for the first time the inclusion of a provision limiting the extent of the business that a bank may carry on if that bank falls within a certain category. That category is when more than 25 per cent of its issued shares are held by any one resident or non-resident and his associates, as described in clause 56.

As this clause emerged from the Banking Committee in the House of Commons, it read as honourable senators will find it at the bottom of page 53. As it then read, any bank which fell within this category, in order to increase its business beyond the stipulated limits set out in the clause, namely, twenty times its authorized capital, would have to reduce, by December 31, 1972, its resident or non-resident holdings to 25 per cent.

Yesterday in the House of Commons this clause was amended and if honourable senators would refer to the clause itself, I will read it as it now stands.

> (g) at any time after the 31st day of December, 1967, of after such later day, not being a day later than the 31st day of December, 1972, as may be prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council, have outstanding total liabilities...

And so on. Under this clause as it now reads, the Mercantile Bank, in order to expand beyond the limits set forth in that clause, will have to meet the resident ownership requirements of that clause by the end of this year, or by such later day as may be prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council but not later than the date set out in the original clause. The effect of this is to put the operation of the Mercantile Bank practically right in the Privy Council chamber.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: A pretty poor place to run a bank.

Hon. Mr. Lang: Honourable senators, I revert to clause 57, so that I may relate this clause, and then I shall have concluded my remarks herein.

Clause 57, subclauses (1) and (2) affect the operations of the Bank of Western Canada inasmuch as, by those provisions, a bank falling within the general terminology of that clause—and of which there is only one in Canada today—is excepted from the preceding restrictive provisions, in that it may accept subscriptions from Canadian residents, even if the acceptance of those subscriptions results in an individual holding shares in excess of the 10 per cent limit prescribed by the preceding clause. Obviously, this is necessary to enable that bank, namely, the Bank of Western Canada, to diversify its shareholding in an orderly manner.

The exercise of its rights under this clause is subject to control by the Governor in Council. The exercise of discretion by the Governor in Council terminates when ten years have elapsed and the Bank of Western Canada has met the limitation of 10 per cent individual ownership. That latter 10 year period, designed to give to this bank the opportunity for orderly development, expansion and diversification of shareholders, is contained in the charter of the bank itself. This clause recognizes the nature of the problems that such a new organization must face during the period of its development and initial expansion.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: To which clause are you referring specifically?

Hon. Mr. Lang: To clause 57, which deals with banks incorporated after the prescribed day. The prescribed day is the 17th day of February 1965, under clause 56(1)(c).

By the way, that prescribed day is the day that the predecessor of this bill, namely, Bill C-102, was introduced in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Was that in 1964?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: 1965.

Hon. Mr. Lang: The 17th day of February 1965.

Honourable senators, I have attempted, as best I can, to take you through this complicated piece of legislation. I hope I have been able to give you an appreciation of the extent and of the ramifications of the various provisions. It is a piece of legislation that deserves careful study by every senator.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: For how long?

Hon. Mr. Lang: That would probably depend upon the individual senator's propensities and inclinations, but I think it warrants consideration because of its long-term effects.

I really cannot resist, in conclusion, making a personal digression, with your leave. I suppose even in banking legislation there is a certain amount of humour and irony, but I thought this morning, as I read in the newspapers the headlines referring to the amendment to clause 75(2)(g) as being a "Gordon victory," that rather ironically this interpretation of the amendment may be placing the previous Minister of Finance in the role of guardian to the banking institutions of Canada against the fierce winds of competition from abroad.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Against the big bad wolves.

Hon. Mr. Lang: But, I conjured up, as I listened to the subsequent radio news, the image of the ex-Minister of Finance guarding the bridge, and he certainly appeared a most unlikely "Horatio."

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I wonder, honourable senators, if Senator Lang would clarify one point for me before I proceed. What is the effect of the amendment to clause 162 that was made in the Commons after the bill was returned from the committee?

Hon. Mr. Lang: Thank you very much, Senator McCutcheon, for bringing this to my attention. I deliberately did not mention this amendment because I do not think it is of very great significance. It is an amendment to the clause that provides for the coming into force of the bill. It is a wordy amendment which I would be glad to give to honourable senators, but I think it could perhaps be more usefully dealt with in committee.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We have it before us now.

Hon. Mr. Lang: I can say to honourable senators, however, that the purpose of this amendment is to provide that, until the clauses of this bill are in full force and effect, the restrictions imposed on the Bank of Western Canada and the Bank of British Columbia by virtue of their charters will remain in effect. In other words, it is to prevent there being any hiatus as between the coming into force of the various sections of this act and their superseding the provisions of the charters of those two banks.

I am afraid that is a clumsy explanation, but it is a mechanical amendment which really carries no significance in terms of policy.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Thank you very much, Senator Lang.

First, honourable senators, I think you would all join me in extending our congratulations to Senator Lang for the excellent outline he has given us of the effects of this somewhat complicated bill.

As I read the records, when the last decennial revision of the Bank Act was passed in 1954, the bill came before the Senate and was considered both in committee and in the Senate, not only for days but over a period of weeks. When we hear the rumours around the corridors of the Centre Block as to the Government's intention at the close of the day, and when we read explicitly in the press how we are supposed to act today, I think that Senator Lang was certainly speaking with deep irony when he said that this bill, amended late yesterday in one very important respect at least, deserves the serious consideration of every senator. So does the Bible, but that is not before us for revision in a couple of hours.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: How long would it take?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I want to protest very strongly against what has taken place here. This bill was introduced for the second time on July 5, 1966. It comes before us in the dying days of the session and it will only be passed with the expedition which seems to be expected, if all honourable senators are prepared to do as I did this morning and give unanimous consent to second reading of this bill. And I was under no obligation to do that. I will be under no obligation, when the bill returns from committee later this day, to give unanimous consent to the committee's report being considered. As all honourable senators know, there are three or four occasions on which consent can be withheld.

There are no unusual circumstances about this bill; there is no reason why it should not have been here long before now. It is simply that the Government chose to lay out the business of the House of Commons in a manner which did not give to this bill, already two years late, the priority which it deserves. With the hope of attracting votes, the Government was much more concerned with enacting those presumably vote-catching proposals, many of which are a fraud and a deception of the voters—medicare, the Canada Labour Standards Code, and others.

The proper time will come to discuss this very broad subject and, although I am intending to speak for several hours and might do it now, I will refrain from that, but I say that there is no excuse for this bill coming here only this morning. It could have been here three months ago.

Honourable senators stand up from time to time to talk about the work we do in this House and the valuable work we do in committees. This just makes us a laughing-stock. I for one am very tired of it. If I do not exercise my rights today, it will simply be evidence of the fact that I have decided that the Government of the day has no regard for this House and that, in the circumstances, it is not worth my while to interfere with the holidays of honourable members of another place.

Having said that, it should be borne in mind that it is not necessary to pass this bill today, or tomorrow, or next week. The Bank Act does not expire automatically on the night of the 31st of March or 1st of April. I have not looked up the provisions in bills extending the act, but I suspect it will continue until sometime around the 10th or 12th day of April. I see Senator Hayden nods his head in agreement. I hope the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) will accept my plea. He said yesterday we were going to recess until April 3, and I asked what business we were going to have before us then. This would be a very useful piece of business to have, and during the Easter recess honourable senators could give the bill that attention which Senator Lang says it so highly deserves.

I am not going to traverse the ground that was traversed by Senator Lang, but I have a few comments to make on certain clauses of the bill. I refer first to clause 91 dealing with interest and charges. Senator Lang has described very well what this clause purports to do, but he failed to mention what the facts are as of this morning, March 22, 1967, and how they relate to this clause. The clause provides for a fixed ceiling of 7¼ per cent until the 31st day of December 1967, and it then goes on, in subclause (9) on page 80 to set out the circumstances under which the ceiling is eliminated completely. That happens:

> Where the average of the market-yield on short-term bonds of Canada for all Wednesdays in any period of three months ending after the 31st day of December, 1966, is less than five per cent.

Now the fact is, honourable senators—and I will not be bound by these figures but I suspect my calculations are very nearly right—that the average yield on such bonds, that is bonds having a maturity of three years or less, is 5.07 per cent in January, 4.89 per cent in February, and 4.55 per cent for the first half of March. And if the closing quotations as of last night are accurate, as I am sure they are, you must take a Canada bond that has 6½ years to run before you find one that at the market price is yielding over 5 per cent. So I suggest to honourable senators that unless the trend is reversed dramatically in the next 10 days, by the 30th of April the trigger will have been pulled, and under the bill as it now stands there will be no ceiling on interest rates commencing on January 2, 1968.

The point I propose to raise before the committee, and I mention it now, is that I am puzzled as to the necessity of having, in these circumstances, a fixed rate of 7¼ per cent for the balance of this year. Personally, I have always felt that the fixing of a maximum acted somewhat like a magnet which causes other metal to rise up to its own level, and if there is no maximum, my own view is, and it is a matter of psychology, that there will be greater competition within the banking system a little earlier than would otherwise be the case.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The market will regulate it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: And the market will regulate it. So much for that.

The next matter I want to refer to is the question of directors. This is dealt with in clause 18, subclauses (6) and (7). I believe these restrictions are contained on pages 14 and 15. Subclauses (1) and (2) require no comment. Subclause (3) provides that at least three-quarters of the directors shall be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. We accept that as a reasonable provision. Then we come down to subclause (6) and subclause (7). Subclause (6) states:

> A person is not eligible to be elected or appointed a director if
>
> (a) he is a director of a bank to which the Quebec Savings Banks Act applies or of a company incorporated under the laws of Canada or a province that carries on the business of a trust company within the meaning of the Trust Companies Act, or the business of a loan company within the meaning of the Loan Companies Act, and that accepts deposits from the public.

It seems to me that the latter portion of this clause is an unreasonable and meaningless restriction. Honourable senators need only refer to various investment guides to note the extent to which some trust companies rely for their directors on persons who are also bank directors, and not only of one bank. A trust company may have on its board, and in many cases has, directors of two, three, four or even five banks.

Now, rightly or wrongly a bank directorship carries, in the eyes of many people, a certain prestige, and all our trust companies are concerned, and I think rightly so, that when this clause becomes effective—and there is no mystery about the date; it will become effective on December 31, 1969, two years after the ceiling disappears—their directors are going to have to make a choice, and it is going to be a difficult choice, and they will probably lose a number of valuable directors.

It might be better to limit the directors of a bank to some modest number like 20—not the astronomical numbers that some of them achieve. That would probably leave more people sophisticated in the financial business to go on the boards of other financial companies, and ensure that those directors who remained on the bank board were in a position to take more interest in its affairs and to be more knowledgeable regarding it. But, leaving that aside, I do say that there is no evidence that I know of that the so-called interlocking directorships between banks and trust companies have any effect whatever upon competition. There is no evidence that it lessens competition, and the theme of the Porter Commission report was that we wanted to stimulate competition.

I think this bill will do a great deal to stimulate competition in the financial field, but I do not think it is necessary that we go to extremes. It seems to me we are doing that in this case. This section strikes at what might be a vice but what, in practice, has never been demonstrated to be so. Far from improving the financial system of this country, I think it is a retrograde step, and I will have something to say about that in committee.

Subclause (7) of the same clause, starting on page 14, states that:

> A person...is not eligible to be elected or appointed a director of the bank after the first day of July, 1971, when other directors of the bank consitute one-fifth or more of the board of directors of the corporation.

Having read that, I think it probably answers the question I asked Senator Lang. Take the case of a company with three directors. Under this provision it seems to me one director of such a company could be elected a director of a particular bank. No other director of such a company could be elected a director of that bank because at that time more than one-fifth of the directors of a private company—in this case one director—would already be directors of that bank. But that is something our counsel can no doubt advise us on later.

Again, it seems to me this is too restrictive. It is also the type of provision that is so easily circumvented. Add your lawyers and your stenographers to your board of directors, and you will get down under the one-fifth, if you want to. So, it is another of those provisions which is designed to do something that I do not think it will do, because I do not think that competition in the financial field is affected by the fact that one company, for example, that I know of has more than one-fifth of its directors on the board of a particular bank. I assure you those directors do not feel they have too much influence on the bank, either as borrowers or lenders. Again, that is a matter I will refer to in committee.

I now come to clause 75(2) (g), on page 53, as amended in the other place yesterday. Senator Lang told us—and I made a note of it—that this section applied to only two banks, one of which is the Bank of Western Canada—which, incidentally, is not named as a bank in the schedule, and possibly we can have further information about that. The banks are those named in this schedule, and the Bank of Western Canada does not appear there.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It does in Schedule A, page 109.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am sorry; I was looking at the other schedule.

Clause 75(2)(g), Senator Lang told us, applied to the Bank of Western Canada and to the Mercantile Bank. But it is very obvious from reference to the other clause which Senator Lang quoted when he was dealing with the special position of the Bank of Western Canada, that the rules were provided for the Bank of Western Canada when it originally received its licence to do business. And, in fact, no matter how it is glossed over and papered over, no matter how it is said this is a subclause that applies to all banks, the fact is that it was put in here solely to affect the Mercantile Bank.

I have no brief for the Mercantile Bank as such. I make no comment as to the manner in which evidence was presented before the committee on its behalf. It will be very unfortunate if we cannot have them here to make out a case before us. But I do say that I object very strongly to legislation which is discriminatory and retroactive. That is exactly what this legislation is.

I would have no objection to the subclause—and I shall deal with this in committee—if there were a small proviso put in providing that this subclause does not apply to any bank incorporated before the 22nd day of September, 1964. That is all that is required. If it is not discriminatory, if it is not retroactive, that will make it abundantly clear. When I say it is discriminatory and retroactive, you must remember one or two things. When the Citibank purchased the shares of the Mercantile Bank, a bank which was incorporated by this Parliament—and there are members sitting here who sat on the Banking and Commerce Committee when that application for incorporation came before us, and heard the evidence of Mr. Towers, the then Governor of the Bank of Canada, who supported the application for incorporation—it was well known at that time that the basis of the application was that all of the shares of the bank were going to be held outside of Canada by non-resident bankers. Against that background, Citibank, when it bought the shares of the Mercantile Bank of Canada from the Dutch interests, did something that was absolutely legal, and is legal until this bill is passed and receives Royal assent.

The former Minister of Finance—and I hope we are almost at the end of this sordid washing of dirty cabinet linen in public that has been going on for some time—said: "I warned them." Again, I am not concerned as to the truth of the two stories. The documents seem to indicate that when the representatives of Citibank saw the former Minister of Finance there was a binding agreement entered into by memorandum of agreement, and subsequent telegrams and cables over a period of three weeks just prior to the date of that meeting. But, leaving that aside entirely, I say that we are coming to a most unfortunate situation when a member of the Executive, and particularly the Minister of Finance, can make pronouncements in his own office in the presence of two officials and two foreign financiers which have the binding effect that budget or similar statements have when made in the House of Commons.

Fifteen or sixteen months elapsed—from June or July 1963 to September 22, 1964—before the former Minister of Finance was prepared to rise in the House of Commons and say: "I am not going to be able to bring in my bank act, but I am putting everybody on warning." That is quite proper, and that is why that date of September 22, 1964 is found in certain provisions of this bill. But there is no justification in my mind for this section, unless it is amended in the manner I have suggested.

Honourable senators know it has all been spread in the press. The Mercantile Bank has nearly replaced sex—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Are you in favour of it?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, both.

It appears, if one can judge from the press, that an agreement was reached. There was retreat from the hard positions on either side, and an agreement was reached by which the Mercantile Bank would have until December 31, 1972 to bring its shareholdings to the point where clause 75 (2) (g) would not apply to it.

The appropriate amendment was made in the committee, as appears from the underlining in the copy of the bill we have before us, because this is a copy of the bill as it was reprinted containing the committee's amendments.

That seemed to end the matter. Then, yesterday something else happened. I am not really concerned. I am amused, and occasionally a little disgusted—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: And sometimes irritated.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No, not irritated—not by this matter; by other matters, yes.

I am a little disgusted at the running feud which seems to go on between the former Minister of Finance and the present Minister of Finance. All honourable senators saw the headlines this morning to the effect that Gordon had won. I wonder if they realize what the effect of this amendment is. As I read it, when this act comes into force upon proclamation of the Governor General—and that proclamation cannot be long delayed—the Governor in Council concurrently will have to pass an Order in Council under the provisions of this subsection to fix a date later than December 31, 1967 in order to permit the Mercantile Bank to open its doors the next day.

Honourable senators, this is the kind of legislation which, accompanied as it is and has been by this feud between two privy councillors—a feud that has been aired in the newspapers, and on radio and television for months—goes a long way towards tarnishing the Canadian image in London, and New York in particular, and elsewhere.

That Parliament can do this, there can be no question. I object to the original clause, but when it is quite obvious to everybody that there has been an agreement made—an agreement between the institution that is affected by this clause and the Minister of Finance—and then the Minister permits the clause to be amended in this form, the financial community elsewhere, upon which we rely to a considerable extent, is going to start wondering as to what kind of people we are and what our Government undertakings are worth.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Here the Senate can come into its own by applying sober, second thought.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am going to deal in committee with the matters to which I have referred, and I do not think I will traverse any of the other clauses. This bill, I think, will go a long distance towards increasing competition in the financial and commercial affairs of the country. That is what was recommended by the Porter Commission, and that is what we want. I am sorry that it has the blemishes that I referred to, but it may be that we can take care of those later this day, or ten days from now.

One can question or quarrel with Senator Lang's rather sweeping statement that this bill incorporates many, if not most, of the major recommendations of the Porter Commission. It incorporates the most important one, and that is of prime importance, but it does not incorporate the recommendations of the commission regarding the other deposit-taking institutions—the so-called near banks. Possibly that problem will be dealt with later and in other areas, but the only attempt to deal with it here, and it is obviously ineffective, is the restriction on the cross election of directors between banks and trust and loan companies, to which I have already referred and the restriction on bank holdings of trust and loan company shares.

One serious omission from the bill is the absence of any provision for agencies of foreign banks to operate in this country. We cannot put a fence around ourselves for ever and at the same time expect other people not to put up their own fences against us. The chartered banks in Canada have a very heavy stake, at least the five largest, in the agency system which prevails in the State of New York. Two chartered banks have wholly-owned subsidiaries which do a full banking business in certain states in the United States, a thing of course we are not going to let the Citibank do here.

The five large Canadian banks—possibly six, but certainly five—all have one or more branches in the United Kingdom doing a full banking business. One or more of them has a branch in France.

Now, the Government has apparently taken the position—and I do not agree with the reasons that have been expressed for this—that that type of operation is not going to be permitted. But certainly agency operations by foreign banks should be permitted here. They will increase competition in the financial system and also render us less vulnerable to retaliation by other jurisdictions.

It is encouraging to note that the committee of the other place which dealt with Bill C-222 requested permission to continue to sit and investigate this whole question of the proposed operation of agencies of foreign banks. May I say that this matter came up at certain committees I attended in Washington last week. We can only hope at least that this bill respecting banks and banking will eventually be corrected with respect to that deficiency.

There is of course another encouraging feature in the report of the committee of the other place, in that it said that it saw no reason why appropriate changes should not be made to the Bank Act between decennial reviews. It has been considered, although there is no law to that effect, that this was something that was inviolable and must not be touched within the ten-year period. So while I am not optimistic, I merely say that one derives some encouragement from the thought that if we do not remedy the defects to which I have referred in this chamber between now and the time the bill receives the Royal Assent, possibly amendments may occur next year or the year after as the validity of some of the arguments I have made become more apparent.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, my first comment is one of congratulation to Senator Lang for the very clear explanation he has given of the important parts of this bill, and also for indicating the changes that are incorporated in the bill as against what is in the existing act.

I find myself in rather an unusual position so far as Senator McCutcheon is concerned. It may appear from the few things I have to say that we are likely to find more common points of agreement than we usually do. Perhaps that is accounted for in part by the fact that he appeared to be mellower this morning than usual in his criticism and not as caustic as he usually is.

I know it must have been with some hesitancy that Senator McCutcheon was prepared to make the admission that in many respects this bill is good legislation even though it has some defects, the chief ones being the denial of the persons who are directors of trust companies to become directors of the banks, and the requirement that banks must within a certain period of time dispose of their holdings in the voting shares of trust companies down to a 10 per cent holding.

I was interested in his comments on the Mercantile Bank, and I may have a few things to say about that. However, in case you are fearful, I am not going to take long in what I have to say.

First, I agree on the importance of this legislation, possibly the most important piece of legislation we could be called upon to deal with. With that identification, I cannot commend as a usual course that such an important bill should be presented to us with the expectation that we would deal with it within 24 or 48 hours. It is true that in this particular case the sittings of the committee in the Commons have extended over a long period of time. They heard witnesses on all phases of the financial life of Canada, and they gave full consideration to the bill and incorporated a substantial number of amendments. All these proceedings were reported, and I would expect that most of us read the printed proceedings as they became available. Similarly, the discussions in the House of Commons were available, and I assume others read them, as I felt I had to do.

Notwithstanding all that, I would feel more comfortable if we did not have to rush our consideration of this bill—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We do not have to.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: —but the bill is here, and I am not going to be the one to have the finger pointed at and to hear it said, "You delayed the bringing into force of very useful legislation, and at the end of your consideration you adopted, perhaps with a few changes, what had already received thorough consideration elsewhere."

Perhaps the attitude I am taking is the one we take every time we receive some legislation of great importance for our consideration and when we are being pushed against a deadline. We keep protesting, but we keep giving the best consideration we can under the circumstances.

At this point, I wish to address my remarks to the provisions in relation to directors of trust companies being directors of banks. I agree entirely with what Senator McCutcheon has said, that this prohibition is unreasonable, meaningless and completely unnecessary.

The only suggestion as to why such a provision is incorporated is that banks and trust companies are competitors. They may be competitors in the area of solicitation of deposits—they are pretty strong and active competitors in that field, and the net result has been that both the banks and trust companies operate well, and over the years when directors of trust companies have been also directors of banks there has been nothing to indicate that the trust companies have not been operated 100 per cent in the interest of their shareholders and in the interests of the public.

There is nothing in what the trust companies have done in the courses that they have pursued and the policies they have followed over that period of time which would point to the possibility that there was any restriction on the policy to be adopted by reason of a particular interest of the banks in relation to the operations and policies of the trust companies.

I think this restriction is ill-conceived, that directors of trust companies will not be able to be directors of banks, or of a bank, within two years after the ceiling on the interest rate which the banks may charge disappears.

I am inclined to agree too with what Senator McCutcheon said on that point, in that, according to present indications we will be operating on a free rate by the middle of July 1968. I am not going to speculate as to whether, if we did not have this 7¼ per cent interest restriction until December 31, 1967, the conditions would not otherwise be met which would make the rate free earlier than that date. The bill provides that within two years directors of trust companies will not be eligible to be elected directors of banks.

However, on the other side of the picture, with respect to banks with any substantial holdings in the shares of trust companies, they must get their holdings down to 10 per cent by July 1971.

We have this picture, that we are asked to approve of legislation which would say that, in relation to a particular class of companies and investors, that is, banks and their investments in trust companies, for some period of time when they may still retain substantial investments in excess of 10 per cent, they are not entitled to have any representation on the boards of those trust companies; and, thereafter, so long as they retain their 10 per cent interest, or any interest not in excess of 10 per cent, they are not entitled, as a matter of law, to have any representation on the board of directors of the trust company, to take part in the determination of policy, to make suggestions with regard to the proper policies and course of action—all in the interest of looking after the investment they have.

To me, that seems basically wrong. When I compare the treatment in relation to the time period within which a bank must shed its holdings of trust company shares in excess of 10 per cent, I turn to see what treatment is accorded the Mercantile Bank. I find, in effect, they have five years, namely, to December 31, 1972; whereas the banks, in the compulsory shedding of their excess shareholdings over 10 per cent, must have this done by July 1971.

I can find no reason in logic or commonsense, or even in fantasy, to justify the difference. If we must have that situation, I can find no reason for justifying the difference in treatment as between four years and five years.

In my view, therefore, this restriction on directors of trust companies being directors of banks is entirely unnecessary, and it is against the public interest. It cannot be justified even on the ground that they are competitors, because the area in which they may be said to be competitors, that is, in the area of solicitation of deposits, is only one area in a vast number of objectives and purposes which trust companies have.

On the other hand, the areas in which the banks operate vary in many important aspects and are entirely different from the areas in which trust companies operate. They, more or less, even to some considerable extent, complement one another.

The other problem that I see is the clause to which previous speakers have referred, that is, clause 75(2) (g), which deals generally with the permitted powers, objectives and purposes of a bank. There is no doubt but that clause 75(2) (g) is designed to deal with the Mercantile Bank situation.

Remember, as it stood before the amendment yesterday, the effect of this clause was that if the Citibank did not reduce its holdings of shares of Mercantile Bank down to 25 per cent by December 31, 1972, it was then subject to this formula, that its total liabilities, which would include its paid-up capital, could not be in excess of twenty times its authorized capital.

I understand that if you tested the Mercantile Bank on this formula now, you might find it is operating in excess of what the formula would provide. Therefore, the purpose of this clause, as originally drafted, as I saw it, was to warn the non-resident shareholders holding this substantial quantity of shares in the Mercantile Bank, that they have until December 31, 1972, as a deadline by which to get down to the 25 per cent, or they would have this substantial limitation imposed upon them which would restrict their operations very substantially and would require that they reduce the scope, size and importance of their operations.

This is quite a drastic penalty to impose. But when I compare it with the amendment which was made yesterday in the House of Commons and which reached here this morning, the only way I can describe that amendment is that it will operate like a yo-yo.

Honourable senators, let me tell you why I say that. You all know what a yo-yo is: it is a little wheel on a string, and the youngsters have a way of throwing it up and bringing it down. Exactly what will happen under this clause, as amended, is that when December 31, 1967 comes—unless the Governor in Council meets and there is an order in council permitting otherwise—the Mercantile Bank, being a Canadian bank in which you have non-resident shareholders holding in excess of 25 per cent of the issued shares, must get down to this formula of total liabilities not in excess of 20 times the authorized capital.

In addition to that, where the yo-yo effect comes in is that in this clause the phrase "from time to time" is used. It says that a bank shall not, directly or indirectly—then (g) as amended says—at any time after the 31st day of December, 1967, or after such later day, not being a day later than the 31st day of December 1972, as may be prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council, have outstanding total liabilities according to this formula laid down.

That means that after December 31, 1967, and up until December 31, 1972, the Governor in Council may, from time to time, say to the Mercantile Bank: "Your situation is such that you have non-resident shareholders in excess of 25 per cent, and therefore you must get down to this formula."

The silliness of it, as it strikes me, is that this implies that when you are told to get down to this formula, the only reason for giving the Governor in Council authority "from time to time"—which means to make such an order again—is that after having got down you may move up again. Otherwise, if one wanted to impose the limitation for the whole period, one would simply say "up until December 31, 1972, this formula applies if shareholding in excess of 25 per cent is owned by non-residents." Therefore, to me it becomes a meaningless sort of thing because I cannot conceive of the Governor in Council operating on that kind of basis and I cannot understand why we provide that kind of language.

In addition, you have some shareholders who are residents of Canada, and it may be that a liquidating policy of the non-resident shareholders over this period of five years will be such that that number may increase; or the course they may prefer to take might be to issue the balance of the authorized capital—and they have about $2 million of authorized capital which they have not issued —which would increase the Canadian content. They may during this period, with the consent of the minister, increase their authorized capital so as to permit the sale of more shares to residents of Canada. In that context, then imagine providing a power by statute which would damage and reduce the scope and size and volume of the operations of the bank in this period, and which, by so doing, would most likely damage the interests of the Canadians who have contributed to it and have become shareholders over this period of time.

I think the form of the amendment is ill-conceived. I think that the clause as it stood in the bill before it was changed yesterday is more desirable, if you must have a signal in the form of a warning that these non-resident shareholders must get down to the 25 per cent basis by a definite period by saying "or else." In my view clause 75(2)(g) as it stood before it was amended yesterday is the kind of "or else" that would make a non-resident shareholder of the character of the non-resident shareholders of the Mercantile Bank endeavour to conform by the limitation period that is provided here.

Now, there are many other things I could mention but I do not propose to do so. There are many beneficial features in the bill which we have before us; it will encourage and induce more competition. I think that is highly desirable.

The banks have an important place in association with the Bank of Canada in the matter of general over-all monetary policy, in carrying out directions in that regard and being the instruments or the arms that are used by the Bank of Canada, and presumably by the Bank of Canada through the direction of the Government, in order to direct monetary policy and meet the financial requirements of the people of Canada.

Therefore, we have got to look at what is being done in the light that the banks are useful and most important institutions. They are part of our plan in designing and promulgating from time to time policies in relation to monetary matters and also for the provision of necessary financing.

May I come back in closing, then, to my chief criticism of this bill. It is entirely unnecessary and unfair to single out the trust companies and deprive them of a high quality director, one who because of his other affiliations would be of considerable value in the operation of a trust company. There is also a provision in this bill, concerning a director of another corporation—not a trust or loan company—that, when the bank holds more than 10 per cent of the shares of such a company, the director of such a company cannot be a director of the bank. Now, I think that is unnecessarily restricting the area of selection. I think the selection of directors should be left to their personal qualifications, their integrity and their interest, either representative or beneficial or both, in these various institutions. The test should be whether they are capable of doing a good job. I do not think there is any other test that is a reasonable test to apply.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I propose to deal with only two clauses of the bill, and as both of those clauses have been first of all very clearly explained along with the rest of the bill by Senator Lang, and secondly have also been dealt with by Senator McCutcheon and Senator Hayden, my remarks will be quite brief and I shall try not to traverse any ground that has already been covered.

I will deal first with clause 18, respecting the prohibition against the director of a bank being also the director of a loan or a trust company. This is a point that has been well covered by Senator McCutcheon and Senator Hayden. As they stated, the thinking behind this provision is the idea that apparently competition between banks and trust or loan companies for deposits might be lessened by the presence on a board of a trust company and a board of a bank of a common director.

I have had a lifetime of experience in the trust and loan field, and I can say with confidence that this idea is purely theoretical and indeed is a myth. From practical experience, I can say that when loan and trust companies compete with banks for deposits, the competition is keen and hard, regardless of any common directorate. One finds further evidence of this in the briefs that were submitted to the Porter Commission, and in the report itself that during the time when this practice has been going on—and indeed it has been going on ever since the beginning of banking—and especially in recent years, the banks have lost ground to the other institutions because of this keen competition.

This practice has been the proper practice, has been accepted, and has not only been legal but has been recognized for years and for generations. Therefore, not only is clause 18 based upon the false premise that it will in some way increase competition, it is retroactive in effect.

Let me recite the case of a trust company with which I am connected, if I may. I am a director of the Canada Permanent Trust Company. I am not a director of any bank, so that this legislation does not affect me personally. On the board of the Canada Permanent Trust Company, of which there are over 35 members, there are 16 directors who are also bank directors. They represent four different banks. Three of these trust company directors are vice-presidents of their respective banks. I need only give names of one or two to indicate to you that their presence on both boards is perfectly proper and perfectly right.

For example, John A. MacAulay, who is actually well-known in this chamber to a good many members, is Vice-President of the Bank of Montreal and is also on the board of the Canada Permanent Trust Company. He is the head of a well-known law firm in Winnipeg; he is a past President of the Canadian Bar Association; he is the only Canadian to have been head of the International Red Cross. He was chosen Citizen of the Year in Winnipeg two years ago and has been a tower of strength on the board of the Canada Permanent Trust Company, and I am sure, on the board of the Bank of Montreal also, without in any way lessening competition between these institutions or in any way failing to discharge his full responsibilities to the institutions of which he is a member of the board.

The other two vice-presidents, if I may just give you their names, are Mr. Edgar Burton, Vice-President of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, who is also a director on the board of the Canada Permanent Trust Company, and W. C. Harris, Vice-President of the Bank of Nova Scotia, an investment dealer well-known throughout Canada who is also a director of our company.

I mention these names to indicate to you that they are directors of both institutions so that they may bring to the bank and the trust company the general knowledge they have as to business affairs, and the wisdom and judgment they have acquired. In no way is the element of competition lessened between these institutions which are to be deprived of their services. In the first place, the directors will have to decide which board they are going to choose, and then the bank or trust company will have to replace those who resign. This has to be done within two years from a deadline date, which at present appears to be December 31, 1967. Furthermore, when one realizes that annual meetings take place early in the year to elect their directors for the coming year, the decision might have to be made very quickly, perhaps immediately. To me it appears to be ruthless, unfair, retroactive and completely unnecessary.

The other clause I propose to deal with is clause 76. This deals with the ownership by the bank of more than 10 per cent of a trust or loan company. Here I call as my witness Mr. Douglas Gibson, who was a member of the Porter Commission, and who is well known in banking circles as well as being an economist of note. On page 1637 of the Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, of the House of Commons, dealing with clause 76, he says:

> It also proposes, and this is the feature that I want to speak about, to make retroactive the application of this 10 per cent rule to arrangements that have been made between banks and other financial institutions in recent years, indeed going back as far as you like. It seems to me there are two objections to this business of asking banks to undo what already has been done. One is, the retroactive feature; in my view, one does not make something retroactive unless there is a very good reason for it.

This is why I protest against this particular clause, when a transaction of this kind of which I am aware has been entered into. It was endorsed by the authorities at Ottawa and carried out with their approval, and now to try to undo what has already been done is a very serious matter.

Senator McCutcheon has said he proposes to raise these matters again in committee this afternoon. I certainly am prepared to support amendments that would correct these two clauses to which I object. In addition to the reasons I have given, I might also indicate that there are very strong reasons for at least extending the time within which these changes must take place. I have already spoken about the cases of boards of directors, where the time expires within this two-year period. In other cases under the act the time limits have been extended. One reason, of course, for such an extension is the fact that since the bill was originally introduced quite a considerable period of time has gone by. If the time was right in the original bill, it should be extended even on the ground of lapse of time; and, in addition to that, circumstances have changed, so that as interest rates have dropped the ceiling on interest rates will end apparently on December 31, 1967, and that shortens the period for the application of the section to which I have referred.

For these reasons and on the ground of avoiding retroactivity, I would like to see proper amendments to extend the time limit made by the committee and accepted by the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must warn honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Lang speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Lang: Honourable senators, I wish to express my appreciation to Senator McCutcheon, Senator Hayden and Senator Leonard for the remarks they have made here this morning, the more so when I consider the wealth of experience in these areas that they bring to a debate of this nature. I do not think there are any other three men in Canada who combined can present a background to their judgment such as is presented by these three distinguished men. For that reason I think we must—indeed, we cannot but—give considerable weight to their thinking in connection with the clauses to which they have referred.

However, honourable senators, I draw to your attention that in essence their remarks were directed to three things, and to three things only, namely, the interlocking directorates as between banks and trust companies, the effect of clause 75 on the Mercantile Bank, and Senator Leonard's point with respect to the burden placed upon banks in requiring them to dispose of their holdings in trust companies within such a limited period of time. I think all honourable senators will agree with me that these objections do not go to the root of the legislation, nor do they affect the validity of the basic policy behind the bulk of the enactments in this bill.

I do not wish to delay honourable senators any longer at this time, but I want to thank you for you kind attention during the debate. If this bill receives second reading, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-223, respecting savings banks in the Province of Quebec.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, may I point out that this bill is consequential upon the bill we have been discussing. Senator Bourque has kindly consented to sponsor it, and he has a speech to make which will last about twenty minutes. This bill does not require special attention in view of the provisions of the Bank Act itself. Perhaps it would be convenient for honourable senators to continue to sit now so that this bill could receive second reading and then be considered in committee at the same time as the bill we have just been discussing.

Hon. Romuald Bourque, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, before proceeding with my remarks concerning Bill C-223, I would like to congratulate Senator Lang on the able way in which he presented Bill C-222. May I also thank the official of the Department of Finance who has so ably supplied me with all the possible information pertaining to Bill C-223.

The purpose of this bill is to make a decennial revision of the Quebec Savings Banks Act which, as honourable senators are aware, would, but for various circumstances, have been brought before us in 1964. This act governs the operations of the two savings banks which carry on business only in the Province of Quebec. I think it would aid in honourable senators' understanding of the bill if I related the historical background of these two savings banks.

Both savings banks have been in business for well over 100 years. The Montreal City and District Savings Bank, La Banque d'Épargne de la Cité et du District de Montréal, has its head office in Montreal, and La Banque d'Économie de Québec, the Quebec Savings Bank, has its head office in Quebec City.

At the time of Confederation these were really thrift institutions, not unlike co-operatives. They had been started under the sponsorship of the church to provide a place for the savings of the working man, and when the question of what would happen at the time of Confederation was brought forward, they were offered the opportunity of taking out a charter or of turning over their business to a chartered bank or to what was then the Dominion Savings Office. These two decided to take out charters and they now operate under their charters and under an act distinct from the Bank Act. However, while the charters have not been cancelled as is the case in the Bank Act, they are to all intents overridden by the provisions of the Quebec Savings Banks Act. Since 1954, the aim has been to endeavour to see that the provisions of the Quebec Savings Banks Act, in so far as is possible and appropriate, are similar to like provisions in the bill to revise the Bank Act.

The bill now before us may be divided into two basic categories. The first category includes those sections which are changed in order to bring the present act in line with the corresponding changes in the new Bank Act. The second category contains those sections of the Savings Banks Act which differ from the Bank Act. It is these sections which constitute the basic distinction between a savings bank and a chartered bank.

In view of Senator Lang's comprehensive explanation of the provisions of the new Bank Act, it is my intention merely to indicate the important clauses of this bill corresponding to sections in the new Bank Act. They are the following.

The first is clause 12, dealing with directors. Subclause 2 of clause 12 provides that at least three-quarters of the directors shall be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. Subclause 4 provides that following July 1, 1970, a person cannot be appointed to the board if he has attained the age of 75.

Clause 26 provides for the issue of new shares and has in paragraph (d) the restriction which is common to both acts, where an issue would violate the ownership ratios that appear later in the bill in clause 46.

Clauses 37 to 50 deal with the ownership and transmission of shares.

Clause 44 (1) corresponds to clause 51 in the Bank Act bill and provides that the bank will have the power to require satisfactory documentation before making a transmission of shares because of the death of a shareholder.

Clauses 45 to 49 are the same as the ownership clauses 52 to 57 of the Bank Act. Clause 46 contains the limit on shares held by non-residents as well as the limit on shares held by any person.

Moving now to clause 53, it is provided that the savings banks will now be required to have the same financial year as the chartered banks, namely, the 31st of October in each year. This section also contains the provisions regarding disclosure found in the Bank Act. The two savings banks will be required to disclose in their annual statements the total of their accumulated appropriations or, in other words, what is now known as "inner reserves."

Clause 55 makes the auditors responsible for all the financial statements of the bank instead of only the statement of assets and liabilities of the bank, as in the past.

The next important clause is 79, which is concerned with "Interest and Charges." The permitted interest and charges here are the same as in the Bank Act, and if and when the maximum rate of loan interest specified in the Bank Act comes off, then it will automatically come off here at the same time.

An amendment has also been made to this act as well as to the Bank Act to cover the disclosure of the cost of loans where the cost is not entirely covered by the interest charge.

Clauses 82 to 86, dealing with unclaimed balances, are brought into line with the corresponding sections in the Bank Act.

Clause 99 is the equivalent of a similar provision in the Bank Act. This gives the Bank of Canada the power to obtain information from these banks in such form as is required, but the banks shall not be required to furnish information with respect to the accounts or affairs of any particular person.

The clauses from 102 to the end of the bill—on insolvency, liquidation and winding up—are the same as in the Bank Act. It is hoped that it will never be necessary to have recourse to these sections, when enacted.

I now come to that group of clauses which constitutes the distinctive characteristic of the savings banks. Clause 63 contains the provisions concerning cash and secondary reserves. The requirements are that they shall maintain a cash reserve of 5 per cent of their deposit liabilities payable in Canadian dollars, and this reserve can be in the form of notes of the Bank of Canada, deposits with the Bank of Canada, and deposits with a chartered bank. This is more liberal than the cash reserve requirements of chartered banks. The latter must keep a reserve of approximately 6.6 per cent of overall deposits, and these reserves must be in notes of deposit with the Bank of Canada.

The secondary reserve of the savings banks is 15 per cent of deposit liabilities. However, it is not a standby secondary reserve as is the case with the chartered banks. Nor is it restricted, as it is in the case of chartered banks, to treasury bills. The savings banks are entitled to hold as secondary reserves any other securities issued or guaranteed by Canada, or a province, payable in Canadian currency. This secondary reserve requirement for savings banks creates no hardship since they normally invest well over 15 per cent of deposit liabilities in such securities.

The explanation for the less stringent reserve requirements for the savings banks is found in their more restricted and conservative lending and investment powers. Their deposits also are not as volatile, and they have practically no demand deposits at all. Moreover, these banks cannot make commercial loans. Thus, the cash reserves of these banks are not an important instrument in the exercise of monetary control by the Bank of Canada.

Clause 65 and following deal with the business and powers of the savings banks. The essential difference between the powers of these banks and the chartered banks is that the savings banks shall not lend money unless they are permitted to by the act. Thus, the savings banks are not empowered to make commercial loans. They are in the savings business for investment, mostly in the securities of Canada and the provinces, and in mortgage and personal loans.

This bill provides for some increase in the lending and investment powers of the savings banks. In clause 70 (g) there is an amendment which states that they may lend to an individual an amount which, together with any other loan he may have, does not exceed $10,000. This figure was previously $5,000.

Section 72 refers to conventional mortgages. The amount on which the loan may be based has been raised from 60 to 75 per cent of the value of the property. The bank can also take a second mortgage provided that the total of the first and second mortgages does not exceed 75 per cent.

In summary, this bill amends the Quebec Savings Banks Act to bring it in line with the changes in the Bank Act. In addition some increase in power is given to the savings banks, but the nature of their business continues to be severely restricted in comparison with that of the chartered banks.

As I said previously, these two banks began as thrift organizations, one in 1846 and the other about five years later. They became incorporated under the Great Seal, I believe, immediately after Confederation. Both are well over 100 years old.

At the time of incorporation the declared amount of their surplus was, in the case of the City and District Savings Bank, ascertained and settled at $180,000, and that of the Quebec Savings Bank at $83,000. In the case of the City and District Savings Bank this fund was designated as the Poor Fund, and in the case of the Quebec Savings Bank as the Charity Fund. Both funds are for the same purpose. The interest earned from these two funds must be distributed yearly to charitable institutions.

With very few exceptions the changes in this act are similar to, or have the same import as, the changes in the Bank Act.

As time went on these two banks were given wider powers, and especially so in the last ten years. The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance 1963 recommended they be given wider powers on investments and loans, and this has been done. The powers in this bill are ones that have been asked for or agreed upon by the banks concerned. I understand that those two banks are satisfied with the powers they are given by this bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I shall not keep you more than two minutes because, all in all, the explanations the sponsor of the bill has just given us were very clear, very complete.

In short, we are dealing here with the normal decennial revision of the charter of two financial institutions of high repute which are the first near-banks we have had in this country and because they operate in a more limited field, that of savings, in a specific area, namely, that of Montreal in one case, and that of Quebec, in the other, a special act is required.

The act is special; indeed, it has a private character as it governs only those two institutions. In the future, a special chapter could be incorporated in the Bank Act to govern them and define the differences which apply to them.

For those reasons, it is not necessary to discuss the bill any further. The most important of the new provisions concern the Bank Act; they will be discussed later on in committee, at the same time as the amendments to this last act.

I congratulate the sponsor of the bill for his explanations and I am sure that, on this side of the house, there is no objection to giving second reading to the bill immediately.

[Text]

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bourque, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly, tabled:

Report of the Department of External Affairs for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of External Affairs Act, chapter 68, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Capital Budgets of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and Eldorado Aviation Limited for the year ending December 31, 1967, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1967-324, dated February 23, 1967, approving same. (English text).

Copies of two contracts between the Government of Canada and certain municipalities in the Province of Manitoba for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, chapter 54, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English text).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, March 22, 1967, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

SURVEY OF THE CONTEMPORARY INDIANS OF CANADA

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to raise a matter that is not in any way connected with banking. All honourable senators will have received this little booklet of 400-odd pages and running to about 247,000 words entitled "A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada." On a question of privilege I should like to refer to the text which commences 10 lines from the bottom of page 148:

> Large developmental projects involving investments in the hundreds of millions of dollars, notably the Athabasca tar sands in Northern Alberta, the earlier mentioned Peace River power project in Northern British Columbia, and the Hamilton Falls power project in Northern Quebec—

It is the phrase "The Hamilton Falls power project in Northern Quebec" to which I object.

I was not greatly concerned about this until I looked at the inside cover of this volume and saw the words "Crown Copyrights reserved", and realized that this is a Government publication. As a matter of fact, H. B. Hawthorn, the Director of the survey, wrote to the Honourable Arthur Laing, P.C., M.P., Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in these words:

> In 1964 the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration asked The University of British Columbia to undertake, in conjunction with scholars in other universities, a study of the social, educational and economic situation of the Indians of Canada and to offer recommendations where it appeared that benefits could be gained.
>
> We have the honour to submit Part 1 of the findings, concerned primarily with economic, political and administrative matters.

I understand that all honourable senators have received a copy of this survey from the Honourable the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, therefore, from all appearances it is a Government document.

I have not read the whole of it, but when I got to page 148 and saw that phrase I felt I must take exception to it because, from my knowledge of geography, Hamilton Falls is in almost the centre of Labrador, which is part of Newfoundland, not Northern Quebec. Hamilton Falls happens to be in that part of Labrador that was given to Newfoundland back in 1927. The authors of this survey have not caught up with their history.

Honourable senators, in my opinion the Honourable the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should not have sent this survey to me or to anybody else when it contains a statement that is not true. I take exception to this, and I would like the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) to inform us whether it is the opinion of the Honourable the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the geographic location of Hamilton Falls is as stated in this volume.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think perhaps this is a place that we could invoke the Latin aphorism, res ipsa loquitur. If Hamilton Falls is in Newfoundland, then perhaps the royal commission or the study group that made this report certainly does not know its geography as well as it should. I will draw the remarks of the honourable senator to the minister.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: Honourable senators—

Hon. Mr. Hollett: You are from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: On a point of information, Professor Hawthorn happens to be a New Zealander, and perhaps he is not as familiar with the geography of Canada as he should be.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That lets British Columbia off the hook.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions numbered 1225 to 1263, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill, for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 1225, for the relief of Joseph Paul Fernand Labreche.

Resolution 1226, for the relief of Mariette Rose Lepine.

Resolution 1227, for the relief of Ubald Laurencelle.

Resolution 1228, for the relief of Frank Edward O'Dwyer.

Resolution 1229, for the relief of Robert Cyr.

Resolution 1230, for the relief of Thelma Doreen Young Magee.

Resolution 1231, for the relief of Eileen McKoy Penticost.

Resolution 1232, for the relief of Mary Ellen Dempsey Bucci.

Resolution 1233, for the relief of Gisele Bourque Dupere.

Resolution 1234, for the relief of Alice Jutigonka (Utronkie) MacDonald.

Resolution 1235, for the relief of Karinn Bjorg Gunnlogsson Sorensen.

Resolution 1236, for the relief of Margot Anne Robinson Deligniere.

Resolution 1237, for the relief of Marie Jeannine (Jeannyne) Berthe Vaillancourt Bourgeois.

Resolution 1238, for the relief of Ann Marie Falconer Porga.

Resolution 1239, for the relief of Jean-Marie Labonte.

Resolution 1240, for the relief of Mary Elizabeth (Elisabeth) Margot Jacqueline Patricia Harton Ross.

Resolution 1241, for the relief of Fernande Gauthier Beaugrand.

Resolution 1242, for the relief of Jeannette Brash Doiron.

Resolution 1243, for the relief of Roger Hamel.

Resolution 1244, for the relief of Gussie Solomon-Nish Greenstein.

Resolution 1245, for the relief of Shirley Holtzman Spector.

Resolution 1246, for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Getty King.

Resolution 1247, for the relief of Ruth Sharon Alice Burgess Moscovitch.

Resolution 1248, for the relief of Gertrude Anna Schrotterowna Worthington.

Resolution 1249, for the relief of Michelle Jacques Leveille.

Resolution 1250, for the relief of Dorothy Doris Belbin Taube.

Resolution 1251, for the relief of Yvette Pelletier Garon.

Resolution 1252, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Leoni Landry Clement.

Resolution 1253, for the relief of Jozefa Ilnicki Kirkman Maxwell.

Resolution 1254, for the relief of Rhoda May Joudrey Wood.

Resolution 1255 for the relief of Andre Michaud.

Resolution 1256, for the relief of Perrette Bouchard Hoffman.

Resolution 1257, for the relief of Ronald David Flanagan.

Resolution 1258, for the relief of Rolande Brullemans Villeneuve.

Resolution 1259, for the relief of Karin Luedders Holzer.

Resolution 1260, for the relief of Ailleen Staples Smethurst.

Resolution 1261, for the relief of Maria Irtl Kiss.

Resolution 1262, for the relief of Joseph Pierre Georges Etienne Girard.

Resolution 1263, for the relief of Earl Bruce Boomhour.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, if honourable senators agree, perhaps all the other items on the Order Paper can stand.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We have had a full and productive morning. We do not know how long the committee will take this afternoon, or if it will continue this evening, or even longer. In the circumstances, I think we should rise now to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5.30 this afternoon and assess the situation at that time.

That does not mean there are any foreclosure proceedings being applied to other events. However, I am asked by the Chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee to inform honourable senators that notices will be sent to their rooms, if not to their boxes as well, that a meeting of that committee will be held at 2.30 this afternoon.

The Senate recessed until approximately 5.30 p.m.

At 6.10 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I apoligize for the delay of half an hour in ringing the bell. This was because I had no definite word about the sitting beyond 6 o'clock in the other place where they are dealing now with the appropriation bills. In view of the fact they have agreed to sit beyond 6 o'clock, would it be agreeable to all if we recessed now until 8 p.m.?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until 8 p.m.

At 8.15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-223, respecting Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-223, respecting Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Bourque: I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate, it is moved by the honourable Senator Bourque, seconded by the honourable Senator Gouin, that Bill C-223, intituled—

Hon. Mr. Bourque: Honourable senators, as Senator Gouin is a director of one of these banks, Senator Power will second the motion.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BANK BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-222, respecting Banks and Banking.

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher): I move with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-222 respecting Banks and Banking, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Lang: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I do not want to trespass on your time unduly, and I shall at least try not to traverse in the same words the matters I covered when I spoke in this chamber this morning, and which were subsequently discussed in committee this afternoon. However, I have a few words to say about clause 75(2)(g) of Bill C-222.

To refresh our minds, this is the clause of the bill which affects the Mercantile Bank of Canada and which has been the subject of much debate and discussion both in and out of Parliament.

As I said this morning, after the representatives of the Mercantile Bank had given their evidence, the lines which had hardened somewhat softened, and we read in the press that the member, I think for Verdun, Mr. Mackasey, on his own authority but with the knowledge of the Minister of Finance, proceeded to New York City and bearded that sophisticated bank clerk, Mr. James Rockefeller, in his office. He came back and reported that there seemed to be a basis for compromise. Subsequently, as the minister said in evidence before our committee this afternoon, he received two messages from Mr. Clifford, the General Manager of the Mercantile Bank. By that time the Mercantile Bank had accepted the fact that the legislation, either to restrict its capacity to grow or alternatively to restrict the holdings of the Citibank in the Mercantile Bank, was going to be passed. Their representations were to the effect that at this stage—and they were not made before the committee in the other place—they wanted an opportunity to develop the bank and to make it a profitable operation so that it would be feasible to offer shares to the Canadian public with the eventual intention of reducing their shareholdings to not more than 25 per cent. That they needed time to do this is evidenced by the fact—I had intended to bring in some statements with me but it is immaterial—that in no year since they have operated have they made as much as $10,000 as I recall it.

Those who believe that obtaining a bank charter gives you a licence to print money and put it in your own pocket are very gullible people.

It was suggested that five years would be an appropriate time in which to proceed to build up the bank and to bring their shareholdings down to that which is required under the subclause to which I am referring now. As the Minister said this afternoon, he regarded that as a reasonable proposition.

In the result, a Liberal member of the Commons committee made a motion to amend this subclause, so that it would not become applicable until the 31st day of December 1972. It was a member of the New Democratic Party who seconded that motion, and it was approved unanimously by the Committee. The bill was so reported to the House of Commons in the form of the bill which we had when we first entered this chamber this morning. We knew that there had been an amendment, but we did not receive a copy of the reprinted bill until some time later.

I propose to move an amendment. Before doing so, I should say that with some reluctance I have decided not to move the amendment which I think should be made, which would be a simple amendment limiting the application of this clause to banks incorporated after a certain date and thereby excluding the Mercantile Bank. I do not hesitate to repeat that this is arbitrary, discriminatory, retroactive legislation and not the type which should go on the statute books. However, to move such an amendment would be a sheer waste of time this evening, the Government having indicated its policy. Therefore, I shall not do it.

Honourable senators, we were presented this morning with an amendment to that subclause. That amendment made the clause effective at any time, not after the 31st day of December 1972 but, after the 31st day of December 1967 or after such later date, not being a day later than the 31st day of December 1972, as may be prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council.

That means, that before the end of this year, if the doors of the Mercantile Bank are to be opened on the 2nd of January 1968 there must be an order in council saying they can go ahead until December 31, 1968. The minister suggested today that he would probably agree to that, but nobody knows whether they can go on after the 31st of December 1968—until there is another decision made, and then another decision, and yet another decision.

The minister was concerned about the employees of the bank and he also was concerned about the customers of the bank. This bank has been an asset to Canada to date and will continue to be so.

The purpose of the exercise surely is to enable the bank to become a profitable institution, the kind of institution in which Canadians will be prepared to invest a substantial amount of money, so that they will own a minimum of 75 per cent of the stock.

I think this amendment that was passed in the house yesterday will to a great degree tend to nullify the whole object of the exercise. Never at any time can there be any certainty in the minds of the operators of the bank or in the minds of the public; and if the Citibank or the Mercantile Bank, depending on whether or not they sell presently outstanding shares or sell treasury shares, come along in the spring of 1969 and offer 'X' hundred thousand shares at 'Y' dollars, I think the Canadian investors would say, "Well, now, that looks pretty good, but you are under sentence of death at December 31, 1969, and those odds are a little too great for us. So we will not buy." As a matter of fact, a very curious situation may arise one of these days when it is found that the Canadian public do not want to buy 75 per cent of this bank, but that is something we can face when we come to it.

So I take it from the point of view of accomplishing what presumably the minister wanted to accomplish, and what I think we all want to accomplish once we have, at least so far as I am concerned with great reluctance, accepted the fact that this is Government policy, then this amendment runs completely counter to and may even prevent our accomplishing the end sought.

But possibly more important than that is what I regard as almost a moral question. There were goings to and fro between representatives of the Government, whether unofficial or not, and the Citibank. There were communications between Mr. Clifford, the General Manager of the Mercantile Bank, and the Minister of Finance, who finally said concerning their final proposal—whether it was the first, second or third I don't know—"That seems reasonable to me." And the Liberal member who moved the appropriate amendment in the committee was not uninspired, I think. The fact is the minister said, "I think that is a reasonable proposal," and the committee unanimously went along with him. Now, I am not going to speculate on what inspired the amendment of yesterday in the House of Commons. I am quite willing to let the newspapers do that. Senator Lang suggested that the bill had been a little better digested yesterday. I do not like to deal in terms of that nature or we might come out with terms that would offend some honourable senators. It is not the kind of digestion that I approve of. Regurgitation might be a better word.

But I say that the Citibank was perfectly entitled to feel that it had an agreement with the Minister of Finance, and when the minister said, as he did to us this afternoon, "Of course I welcome this amendment that the Commons made," I say that I do not think that is the position that a responsible minister should take under these circumstances. I was surprised to hear him say it.

All the minister had to do yesterday evening was to say what the fact is: "This was the proposal made to me. I considered it reasonable and the bill was amended accordingly." Then the amendment either would not have been proposed or, if proposed, would have been voted down by the minister's supporters.

I say that this Parliament is putting itself in a position where great financial interests can properly say, "We cannot deal with these people. We cannot rely on them. We went a long way; we invested our money in this situation. We are taking all the risks, and we finally agreed that, if they would give us a little time to make it profitable, we would sell 75 per cent of our shares or raise the capital to a point where we would only have 25 per cent, and 75 per cent would be held in Canada. We did that, and suddenly we wake up and find that at the last moment there has been a change made and the guillotine is suspended by a hair above our heads from day to day for the next five and a half years." I suggest, honourable senators, that that is not a position in which this Parliament should place itself.

The minister said, "Of course, you may be faced with a dreadful dilemma; these people might go on and expand and not sell their shares." I am sure if the Citibank welched on its undertaking—and that is exactly what it would be—this Parliament could find many appropriate remedies to deal with the situation, even if it meant expropriation of the appropriate number of shares. Parliament controls banks, it is supreme, and I do not think we should break agreements and pass this type of legislation because we fear something of which there has been no suggestion. In my opinion such a situation will never arise.

Before moving the amendment I would make one other statement. When we were dealing with bank matters in the last few years some honourable senators have not voted because they felt that there might be a conflict of interest. While I do not agree with their position, I respect it. Should there be any bank directors here this evening, I would suggest to them that there can be no conflict of interest in dealing with this clause and with this amendment. The Government policy is clear, and I am suggesting no change in the Government policy. I am suggesting that we honour the commitments that we entered into, and that we do what the Minister of Finance suggested a few weeks ago, that is, that we implement what he thought at that time was a very reasonable proposal.

Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Choquette, that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be amended as follows:

> Page 53: Strike out paragraph (g) of subclause (2) of clause 75 and substitute therefor the following:—
>
> "(g) at any time after the 31st day of December, 1972, have outstanding total liabilities (including paid-up capital, rest account and undivided profits) exceeding twenty times its authorized capital stock if more than twenty-five per cent of its issued shares are held by any one resident or non-resident shareholder and his associates as described in section 56."

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): What you read was exactly what I read in the bill.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am reverting to the language in the copy of the bill which we received this morning, which was not the copy as passed by the House of Commons. It was the text of the bill as reported out of the House of Commons committee to that House. Subsequently, it was amended. I am striking out the words that constituted that amendment.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): If you will permit me, maybe it is a little too technical for me, but I do not grasp exactly what you mean. I am sorry to have to confess my ignorance.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Senator, I do not think you have before you the bill as finally passed. What does it say on the front of your copy?

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): If you will permit me to say so, I was following you when you were reading the amendment, and those were the exact words as I have them here.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: What I am trying to explain, senator, is that if you look at the front of your copy of the bill, I think you will find you have a copy reprinted as amended and reported by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Is that what it says on the front of your bill?

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is not the bill as finally passed by the House of Commons. I am making an amendment which, if accepted, will cancel the amendment subsequently made by the House of Commons after the bill was reported to it in the form in which you have it.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): I would like to ask the Leader of the Government to explain exactly what happened.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I would much sooner have him answer.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have listened with great care to the remarks made by Senator McCutcheon. He is always to the point and very clear.

First, let me deal with Senator Fournier's problem. He has before him the reprint of Bill C-222 as amended and reported by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. When the bill in that form reached the House of Commons, clause 75 (2) (g) was amended in the manner indicated by Senator McCutcheon, and the effect of that amendment is to require the Mercantile Bank, by the 31st of December, 1967, to reduce its holdings in this bank to 25 per cent, unless the time limit is extended by Order in council.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It has the alternatives either to dispose of its shares or reduce its liabilities.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right. It is to that amendment that I speak.

First of all, I agree that the amendment is a departure from the bill as it emerged from the committee in the other place. The amendment is described by Senator McCutcheon as arbitrary and discriminatory.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No. I think I described the whole clause as that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sorry—not only the amendment but the whole clause as arbitrary and discriminatory. Obviously, the reason is that you have here a foreign-owned bank and so incorporated by the Parliament of Canada, a bank originally owned by Dutch interests and now owned wholly by American interests, and now to say in the decennial revision of the Bank Act that Parliament should not change that is arbitrary and discriminatory.

Speaking on behalf of the Government, I must say that any bank charter must always be read as subject to the decennial revision of the Bank Act. The powers that are conferred can, in theory, be changed when the Bank Act comes before Parliament for the decennial revision.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is no question about that. The real question is whether morally it should be done in these circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right. It is a matter of Government policy in a case like this, when there is a great deal of talk about foreign domination of certain segments of our economy, that Canada in this period of expansion—which we all hope will continue—should look as carefully as it can at all these various segments of the economy in which foreign domination can be injurious. In its wisdom—and I am sure Senator McCutcheon would say "in its un-wisdom"—the Government decided that in respect of this foreign-owned bank the public interest would be served best if control of it—or indeed, of any bank in Canada—were not in the hands of a foreigner to the extent of more than 25 per cent. This is a matter of Government policy, and the Government submits that proposal to Parliament for its approval.

So far as the amendment that was moved in the House of Commons is concerned, I would point out first of all that it does not finally cut off at December 31, 1967 the time period within which this 25 per cent level must be reached. It leaves it to the Government to decide, in its wisdom, when that bank, for the purpose of putting its affairs in order or for other reasons, should make an application for an extension of time. There will be authority in the Government to decide whether the 25 per cent rule should apply then or should be postponed to a later date.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: It can be postponed up to five years.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, up to five years.

Before I leave this point I think I should say that I am sure the Government will act reasonably in respect of these extensions. I am sure also that it will act with a sense of regard for the welfare of the country and of the particular segment of the economy we are talking about, namely, the banking industry. I do not think the Government will act arbitrarily. I do not think it will be prejudiced. I think it will look at the facts, and a decision will be made, with the national interest in the background, on the basis of banking requirements and the needs of the country. Personally, I am satisfied on these points.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And the welfare of this particular bank.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That the Government will act with the welfare of this particular bank in mind is implied, I think, in what I have said.

I should like now to say something about the bank in question and its present owner. The First National City Bank is one of the large and great financial institutions in the United States and has branches and offices all over the world.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The rest of the world is not scared.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I could make a comment about that but I prefer not to do so. I do not think that Canada is scared, but I do think we want to be prudent. Prudence is a virtue. But I say that this bank has banking facilities in every part of the world, particularly the parts of the world in which Canada as a trading nation should be operating.

One of the factors that the Minister of Finance has considered in his dealings with this act, and indeed with other applications that have been made to Parliament for the incorporation of banks, is the desire to see more competition in the field of banking. There will be competition as a result of the introduction of this new institution at home.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It is not a new institution, it has been here for some years.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well, it is relatively new. It is only making $10,000 a year. It is certainly not large. You may quarrel with the semantics, but for practical purposes the bank is new.

Nevertheless, it is my firm personal conviction that this bank can give some leadership to the Canadian banks abroad in assisting the development of our foreign trade, by providing facilities that perhaps our Canadian banks do not and cannot provide now, or perhaps have not the contacts and business associations that a bank like this has and can provide. I think that having this bank as part of the Canadian banking system is a good thing for this country. I believe I reflect the views of the Minister of Finance, and I am sure I reflect the views of Senator McCutcheon, when I say that this is a desirable institution to foster and develop.

Senator McCutcheon is concerned about the fact that the bank may not be able to sell its shares in Canada because the sentence of death hangs over it by reason of the discretion of the Government has to extend or not extend the period of time within which the bank reaches the 25 per cent level. I do not think this is a sentence of death in any sense of the word, nor do I think it will ever become so. I preferred his later simile, that it is a guillotine suspended by a hair. However, I reject the latter part of the simile, because I do not think it is either that or the Sword of Damocles.

I think that what will emerge as a practical working proposition is that when this organization presents its application for an extension—and in time, I hope, for an increase in capital—that the circumstances of the development of the bank will be such that there will be no difficulty in and no controversy about granting it.

In spite of the fact that there is room, because of the discretion vested in the Government by this section, for speculation as to what might happen, I think that Parliament and the people of Canada can rely upon the Government to exercise this discretion in a wise and prudent way, having regard to all of the circumstances that exist at the time the applications are made. I see no reason why, in appropriate circumstances, the practical effect of the amendment would not be brought about by the decisions of the Government. But I think that now is too early to decide what should be done in a given circumstance in the future.

I regret that I must reject the amendment and ask the support of the Senate in this respect.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I shall keep you but a moment. I am sorry I do not possess the eloquence of the Leader of the Government; but in most of his eloquence he was not discussing the real point of the amendment. If we are to have a discussion as to foreign ownership and as to the nature of this whole clause, which I merely touched upon this morning, then I will be very glad to debate that at considerable length.

In moving the amendment, I am accepting the fact that we are going to do something that, as I said before, I regard as discriminatory, retroactive, and arbitrary.

I accept that, but I say the bank is entitled to the opportunity to manage its affairs for the next five years without any question of any discretionary action being taken at any time to prevent it doing so. It is entitled to do that, particularly in the light of the fact that there was an agreement, expressed or implied, between the bank and the Minister of Finance. That is the real point that honourable senators must consider tonight.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: What was the consideration given by Citibank for the agreement of the Minister of Finance that makes this binding agreement we are talking about now?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I do not think that question really deserves an answer. I am sure they did not really bribe the Minister of Finance. They were trying to reach a point at which they could both agree. The situation was that each retreated from his fixed line and they reached an agreement. That is in effect what the Minister of Finance said this afternoon.

I will let honourable senators read tomorrow morning what is on the Dow Jones tape tonight. I am not going to put it on the record.

I said this morning, and I say again, that we are tarnishing our reputation in the financial centres of the world by concurring in a completely unnecessary amendment made in the House of Commons yesterday.

The Minister of Finance was happy. Of course the Leader of the Government has referred to the wisdom of the Government in exercising this discretion which they are given. Of course he has to have confidence in his colleagues—he certainly has a great deal more confidence in them than I have. There is one of his colleagues who objects even to the present provision, and who may be sitting there when these discretions are exercised.

I ask honourable senators to vote for the amendment and to maintain what I hope is our reputation for fair dealing and for keeping to our agreements.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those in favour of the motion in amendment will please say "Content".

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those against the motion in amendment will please say "Non-content".

Some Hon. Senators: Non-content.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the non-contents have it.

And three honourable senators having risen:

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Are three enough?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Two would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: There are only three of us.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): There are five of you, if you count your backbenchers.

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

Amendment of Hon. Mr. McCutcheon negatived on the following division:

CONTENTS

Belisle	Grosart
Choquette	Haig
Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche)	McCutcheon—6

NON-CONTENTS

Basha	Kinley
Beaubien (Provencher)	Lang
Benidickson	Lefrançois
Bourque	Leonard
Burchill	MacKenzie
Connolly (Ottawa West	McElman
Deschatelets	Power
Fournier (De Lanaudière)	Prowse
Gouin	Roebuck
Hastings	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Inman	Urquhart
	Vaillancourt
	Vien—24

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Any abstentions? I do not think so.

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

It is moved by the honourable Senator Lang, seconded by the honourable Senator Burchill, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am informed that the Commons has not yet completed consideration of the appropriation bills, but that it should not be long before they do so. It was the intention to try to get Royal Assent tonight for the measures that are ready to be assented to before the Easter recess begins. Therefore, I suggest that we take recess and reassemble at the call of the bell.

I should like to impart to honourable senators some information contained in papers which I have been carrying around for some time. This gives details of the amount of work that the Senate has been doing since the New Year. The first of these memoranda is dated February 6, which is approximately when we reassembled after Christmas. Honourable senators may be interested to know that to date we have disposed of 31 pieces of legislation, and another one has been referred to a committee.

I think this is a fairly creditable performance for this chamber. It has been done in an orderly way. The only regret that I have—and I see there are some members of the press here this evening—is that a bill like the Bank Act should come to us at such a late stage before adjournment. This is no fault of mine. I suggest it is not really the fault of anyone at whom one can point a finger, because it is the result of circumstances in the other place over which we have no control, and perhaps in some respects over which they have no control. The Government is in a minority position.

Having said that, I am particularly proud of the kind of work that has been done by the Senate since the beginning of this year, and I think today was one of the better days. True, we did not go into this bill clause by clause or study every individual item in it. But I do say that the debate here this morning and the work that was done in committee this afternoon showed how a body with the competence that the membership of this chamber has can zero in on the essentials of a piece of legislation and do it with great credit to themselves and to Parliament. That is due in part, to the kind of explanation and debate that took place this morning; to Senator Lang, whom I compliment on his presentation; to Senator McCutcheon, for the kind of responsible argument he raised in opposition; to the views expressed by Senator Leonard and Senator Hayden, and to the work done by the members of the committee this afternoon.

While I regret the shortness of time that was available to us, I do say that the time was used to the best advantage. I do not know whether we would have had any different result if we had had more time.

Honourable senators, I suggest that we take recess now, to reassemble at the call of the bell.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the honourable Leader has spoken and I think I am entitled to speak too.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I would not have cared if this legislation had been before us for five days, five weeks or a month ahead of time and we had had an opportunity to discuss it clause by clause. If we had called for a vote we would have had the same result as we have had here, because I think Liberalism is stronger than any religion that I have ever known. Having been here for nine years, and having seen votes called and members stand up and be counted, and whenever honourable senators tell us that party lines disappear or are drawn thin in this chamber, they make me laugh—they really make me laugh.

Here we have had a vote tonight to give an honest five years to a bank like Mercantile. There is a handful of us here on the Conservative side of the house. There were those who voted in committee today and who nearly won the vote. It was eight to eight, and the chairman refused to cast the deciding vote. We have asked this chamber to vote here on many occasions, and every time our friends the Liberals stood to a man against us—that is, the Conservative Party.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Not on the same vote.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Not on the same question.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): On an entirely different question.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, but I am registering my protest here this evening to show that in this chamber I do not want to hear it said, but I will have to hear it and listen with compassion when it is said, that party lines are thinly drawn.

Hon. Mr. Power: Did any Tories vote with us?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Every time—

Hon. Mr. Power: Did any Tories vote on our side?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Every time we had a vote—

Hon. Mr. Power: You voted to a man, as we did.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Tonight there are four of us.

Hon. Mr. Power: Six.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We had votes here in which we had seven of our members cast their votes to the Liberal Party, although the latter were two to one against us.

Hon. Mr. Power: At the present time every Tory in the house has voted Tory, as the Liberals have noted Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: The last time we voted here was on the question of pensions in the Retirement of Senators Act. Seven of our number voted with the Liberal party.

On the flag issue, I know of those who voted against their own convictions, who wanted at least to retain the British emblems. When I saw them I said, "I know of at least five or six who are going to vote against the Canadian flag." They got up and voted to a man for the new flag. Was that not because of partisanship? I am saying this tonight as a protest.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Surely, this is imputing motives?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Oh well, imputing motives? I have made my point.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the last speaker had leave of the Senate to make a statement. I do not think there is any good purpose to be served by letting this develop into a debate. Are you agreed that we shall recess?

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): With leave of the Senate, I should like to make one brief remark. I have been a member of the Parliament of Canada for 30 years, and I have always been the master of my vote. Sometimes I voted with the Government, and sometimes I voted against it. I voted according to my conscience and not because I was a Liberal. I voted according to my conscience every time I had to vote, and everybody knows that.

The Senate adjourned until the call of the bell.

At 10.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1967

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-282, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-282 is known as Appropriation Act No. 2, 1967, or Supplementary Estimates (G). These will be the final Supplementary Estimates for the year 1966-67.

I understand that financial sheets have been distributed to honourable senators, and if they will refer to the last page they will see a complete listing of the different amounts of the main Estimates as well as all the Supplementary Estimates thus far, including the present Supplementary Estimates. From that list we may remove from our consideration Supplementary Estimates (F) amounting to $750,000, having to do with educational broadcasting facilities, because I understand that they are still under consideration before Parliament. On the first page of the financial sheets you will note that all appropriation acts during the fiscal year 1966-67 are recorded, with their respective amounts of expenditures. This bill will grant $324,983,578.

As I said before, these will be the last supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1966-67.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Other than (F).

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Other than (F). The honourable senator is right.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: When do we pass (F)?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I do not know. I understand that it is a contentious matter; it is in the House of Commons and has not reached us yet. That is why I said in my opening remarks that it should not be part of the discussion we have now.

Honourable senators, I was ready and prepared to go into details of the bill. I wish to emphasize that I am not under any pressure of business or time limiting my remarks on this bill. On reflection, however, honourable senators will agree that it would not serve any practical purpose to go into the details, for the following reasons.

First, all the items listed in this bill have been discussed and examined time and again during the last twelve months, on all appropriation bills introduced during the fiscal year 1966-67. Moreover—and this might be the main reason and I would hope it is well known—if I do not deal more fully with the various items of the bill tonight, it is because on Wednesday last, March 15, the Standing Committee on Finance dealt in detail with precisely the items and financial aspects of these Supplementary Estimates (G). In fact, I am holding now in my hand the voluminous transcript of what took place in that committee on that day.

While referring to that committee meeting on March 15, this might be a good opportunity to praise again the two high officers of the Treasury Board, Dr. George Davidson and his assistant, Mr. J. G. Glashan, for their outstanding performance in providing honourable senators with complete information on these interesting but complicated financial matters.

Honourable senators, even after the passage of this legislation I think I can give on behalf of our capable Chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator Leonard, the assurance that any question or clarification honourable senators might wish to have in connection with Supplementary Estimates (G) could be dealt with at the first opportunity in the Finance Committee. However, I am going to ask you tonight to accept the passing of this bill.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is a little late, Senator. Have we got the Supplementary Estimates (G) in front of us?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Well, you should have, Senator. I know that honourable senators have before them now the summary of what has taken place so far, but I thought that honourable senators also had the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If I may interrupt the honourable senator, the supplementary Estimates were tabled about a week or 10 days ago and were distributed to senators at that time. They were the subject matter of discussion on March 15 in the Finance Committee, and they are reflected in the schedule to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: At the last meeting of the Finance Committee some honourable senators raised very interesting points having to do especially with the highest amount of expenditures, such as Vote 17g, Agriculture, at page 3 of the bill. At that time there were references also to a sum of $5 million for the Department of Veterans Affairs, which is noted at page 30 of the bill. On page 1 are the expenditures concerning the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, and we had also a long and interesting discussion originating, if I remember well, with Senator Grosart and having to do with the $1 items in the bill.

I can provide honourable senators with all the details of these $1 items tonight.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: If you are asked.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: If I am asked, yes. I wish to say that this was an interesting part of the debate we had. I would mention the fact, and I think this is important, that in the past few years members of the Standing Committee on Finance have made recommendations in order that the Blue Book may be drafted in the most comprehensive way possible, and we were told by Dr. Davidson that in the coming year some of these recommendations will be carried out.

Honourable senators, having said that, I am at the disposal of senators who have any questions to ask at this point. Before I resume my seat I would like again to emphasize the fact that if the debate on this bill does not take hours, I think it fair to say that we have already spent many hours in committee with officers of the Treasury Board going into all the details of the bill. Now if honourable senators would like to ask me any questions I will try to answer them.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, as a former cabinet minister the deputy leader has just given us a very clear explanation of the Crédits de 1966-1967, Loi des Subsides No. 2 de 1967 (Totalité des Crédits dans le Cas du Budget Supplémentaire (G)). I would add this, that the honourable gentleman, having been appointed to the Senate after having been a cabinet minister, could be described as the financial critic were he in the Opposition. As a matter of fact, ever since he has taken the seat next to the Leader of the Government, he has presented to this chamber very important financial bills, and has done an excellent job in presenting those bills to us.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I know very little about figures and money bills—I usually leave that to men such as Senator McCutcheon and Senator Grosart—and the figures that have been presented to us by the sponsor of this bill, although clear, may necessitate some explanation and questions might be asked first by Senator Grosart and then by Senator McCutcheon.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, as the sponsor of the bill before us said, this whole question of the Estimates—main, interim and supplementary—has been before the Finance Committee of the Senate, and it would be difficult for anybody who is a member of that committee not to say that under the chairmanship of Senator Leonard, who I am glad to see has moved down to the front benches on the other side—

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Back to acting lance corporal tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: —has made a very great contribution to the solution of the problem that is almost eternally before us, and that is the request for instant approval of appropriation bills. We have had many complaints here, as we have had on other bills, and I personally, having sat on that committee—

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: And very active too.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The deputy leader says "very active". Perhaps a better objective might be very "querulous". But having sat on that committee, I am satisfied that today we are in a much better position to pass these appropriation bills than we were in the days when they were not being examined in detail by the Finance Committee.

I would go a little further and say, as I have suggested privately to the chairman of the committee, that I think there should be an immediate report to the Senate on the examination of these appropriation bills and the Estimates every time they come before that committee. I think the Senate should be told, "We have examined this particular appropriation bill; we have examined the figures, and we are prepared to say to the members of this chamber that we are now satisfied that, politics apart, putting aside consideration of how high the spending of the Government should go, we are satisfied that these figures the Senate is now asked to endorse make sense."

If I may get into a somewhat broader field for a moment with respect to the general complaint, that we hear over and over again that Government expenditures are rising, that every year we are spending more money than we spent the previous year, I would say that the fact of the matter is that in terms of percentage, our total Government expenditures in relation to our G.N.P. is quite modest. Actually, this year the Government is spending slightly less money, as a percentage of the G.N.P. than last year; and over the last four or five years this percentage has not risen perceptibly. In relation to the percentage of Gross National Product of other countries, we are not out of line.

I am not one of those who want to rise in the Senate or elsewhere every now and then and say, "It is terrible. I remember 20 years ago we were spending much less money." The fact is that the population is growing; the demands upon the enterprise system—of which I presume we all approve—for the care of those who are not immediately able to benefit from the system are growing. But we are in the fortunate position—and I may appear in this respect to be defending the Government's position—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Which you would do.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: —which I am quite prepared to do under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Normally you would hesitate to do it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Senator McCutcheon is quite right. Normally I would hesitate to do it, and would only do so if I were absolutely certain of my facts.

It is quite clear that the Government and its advisers have over the years been extremely careful to relate the total Government expenditures to the Gross National Product. In this respect we compare rather well with our friends in the United States when, on a per capita percentage basis—and I do not have the figures before me at the moment—we are actually spending far less on the total requirements of the Government, in spite of the fact that our total expenditures on what has been called social justice are rather higher. I think we have an excellent record over the years in this respect.

Having said that, may I now say about these Estimates that I think it would be well, in every case where we are asked to appropriate large amounts such as are required by these supplementary Estimates, if we had at the same time the report of the Finance Committee. As Senator Deschatelets has said, these particular Estimates were gone over rather carefully.

Some of us questioned, as honourable senators who are members of that committee will recall, the large number of $1 items. It is my opinion that we should get rid of these $1 items because they are fictions of various kinds. They occur in a whole group of categories. There is this fiction and that fiction. Some of them are actually amendments to legislation. I am sure that Senator Leonard, the chairman of the committee, will agree with me when I say that we have here in Bill C-282 actual amendments to acts of Parliament under the guise of a $1 grant. It is time we got rid of them. They make no sense.

There must be in the public service of Canada—in the Treasury Board and the Department of Finance—minds that can devise a better way. Surely, they could say to us: "We want to amend an act of Parliament", and then bring forward an amendment, because this is the essence of the whole legislative process. In these supplementary Estimates that are before us we are actually amending some acts of Parliament.

I have raised this point in committee. I would stress the fact that one of our problems, having in mind the Constitution, is that we resort to a lot of fictions. We resort to a great fiction when under sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act we pretend that certain types of taxation are not direct or not indirect. I say that in our hundredth year of Confederation we owe it to our country to get rid of these fictions and I think a very good place at which to start would be in these $1 items in Estimates such as these now before us.

That is all that I have to say at this time, honourable senators, except to make one other observation which is not entirely within the ambit of this bill, but is a reference to the discussion we had earlier today.

One wonders exactly what is the authority taken when a bill such as this is brought before us. I am happy that the authority this evening is that of the honourable Deputy Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets), but I could not help noticing that in respect of the matter before us earlier this evening—and I think this comment is relevant—the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) kept saying to us: "I think"; "I think you can rely on the Government"; "I think you can rely on the discretion of the Cabinet"; "I think you can rely on us over these five years not to do things that would not be in the public interest." I thought I should perhaps rise and ask him if he was giving an assurance on behalf of the Government, but at the time I thought it might be unfair because we had an amendment to a bill before us in respect to which predictions had been made as to the possible effect of the Senate's not accepting it. But, the Leader of the Government did keep saying to us: "You can rely on us, I think." Over and over again he said, "Personally..." We have still this same general attitude with respect to the supplementary Estimates. It is said: "We need this money."

We had an extraordinary case in the guaranteed income supplement bill in respect of which we were told over and over: "Oh, you can rely on us. We need this money." We were told that, in spite of the fact that the Government had presented us with a schedule which, in effect, said it did not need the money.

I suggest with all due respect to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) that it is not an adequate explanation of any bill such as this to suggest to honourable senators: "You can rely on us; we have the public interest at heart." We are dealing with legislation here, and as the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) said, we dealt with this particular bill in detail in the Finance Committee.

I would like to believe that the attitude we are going to take in the Senate is that we will not deal with pious hopes, but rather with facts as they are presented to us. In this particular case, honourable senators, I am very happy that we are dealing with a matter that has been thoroughly discussed in committee, and I would hope that in this house we shall never again be faced with a bill of this kind which has not been previously discussed in detail and reported to this house by the Finance Committee.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I wish to join in a complaint advanced by Senator Grosart with respect to the increasing number of presentation of $1 items in Estimates. I sat in the other place for a long time and was associated with the Department of Finance, and I think we were influenced by criticisms from Mr. Knowles of the other place about these items. They are increasing in number. In the bill before us there are almost 20 items that are in essence legislative items; otherwise, we would require a bill which would need three readings, as well as committee study, in both Houses of Parliament.

This is an awkward time to receive a bill of this type with these items in it, each and every one of which has so much import. I am not going to hold up this bill and delay the Easter recess, but I do want to give warning that I have never been a supporter of this type of legislation by the back-door method. It is easy not to give proper deliberation to the content of items of this kind simply because they are included in one of several Supplementary Estimates, but in future, while I occupy my place in this chamber I shall continue to protest if this process continues and increases as it has been doing in recent times.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I have only one comment to make. I hope Senator Benidickson on the next occasion will vote against the $1 items.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I might.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Good.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I move, with leave, that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 3, 1967

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-283, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1968.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be read the second time now.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, this interim supply bill, C-283, is known as Appropriation Bill No. 3, 1967. The amounts of money requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the Public Service up to April 30, 1967, or one month's supply. Though usually the first interim supply bill covers two months, this bill covers one month, or one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of all the items set forth in the main Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st day of March, 1968.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Will the honourable senator tell us why the pattern is being broken, why he said that usually two months is asked for and he is asking for only one month this evening?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I would have expected the honourable senator to complain if by tradition we covered one month and now we would ask for two months. It is the reverse in this case. I do not think there is any particular reason. The Government is asking us to provide for one month's supply. Though in former years on the first supply motion two months was asked for, it happens that in this case it is for only one month.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: We can be sure we will be sitting a month from now?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is what I wanted to know.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Since it is customary to refer the main Estimates to our Standing Committee on Finance as soon as they are tabled, it is not my intention tonight to move that this bill be referred to that committee. After approval of this bill, all the items of the main Estimates will remain subject to discussion by the committee.

The usual undertaking is therefore given that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any of these items in the Estimates when they come up for consideration in committee. We are, therefore, only asking one-twelfth. But if honourable members will look at clause 2 for certain items which are explained in Schedules A to E, they will see that we are asking for larger proportions in some cases, and I might give very briefly some details about these special items.

I understand that financial statements have already been distributed. If honourable senators would be kind enough to refer to the last page of the statements in front of them, I would ask them first of all to make a correction. At the bottom of the last page, "Appropriation Act No. 4," should read "Appropriation Act No. 2".

The last page gives the total Estimates for 1967-68, including the budgetary expenditures and loans, but excluding the Old Age Security payments. Honourable senators will note that in the coming year there will be an increase for this item of $327 million. In other words, it goes from $1,105,000,000 for 1966-67 to $1,432,000,000 for 1967-68.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: What item is that?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I am just dealing with the summary having to do with the payments from the Old Age Security Fund, on the last page of the financial statement that has already been distributed.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Of course the Minister has admitted to us that there is no such fund.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Well, I would say that this expenditure has not to be voted and the difference appears in this financial statement.

Now, if honourable senators will look at the first page of the statement that has been distributed, I think it shows very clearly the purpose of the bill. We are requesting one-twelfth of all the items and some additional proportions. I think I should now deal very briefly with them to give honourable senators at least a few details for these additional proportions.

Vote L40 at page 4, Schedule A, has to do with loans, investments and advances. The amount hereby granted is ten-twelfths of $20 million, and for all the schedules for which I am going to give some details we have to add one-twelfth. That means that for Vote L40 this ten-twelfths on Schedule A, together with the first one-twelfth of clause 2, makes eleven-twelfths for this item. I would like now to give some details about this.

This vote provides for the financing of the cost of the World Exhibition through purchase of corporation bonds.

These additional proportions are required to provide for the purchase of securities which must be issued to cover operating costs which will be incurred before revenue is received.

Now I think that as far as the World Exhibition is concerned, this will be the last request for expenditures. Of course there might be another one after Expo is over. If there is any deficit, as honourable senators know, the federal share of such deficit will amount to 50 per cent of the whole deficit. But in due time, if there is any deficit, we will have the figures and we will also have the figures about the earnings.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The Minister is very cautiously optimistic.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: This will come after all the accounts and earnings are in.

Vote No. 5 in Schedule B provides for grants for research projects carried out in universities. It is customary to pay 50 per cent of these grants early in the fiscal year, and that is the reason we are asking here for a larger proportion than the usual one-twelfth.

As far as Vote No. 10 is concerned, on page 5 of the bill, this provides for payment to the provinces under the agreements for construction of development roads up to a total of $75 million. There are still six provinces which are eligible for assistance under this program. Additional proportions are required to meet claims for progress payments for the provinces of New Brunswick, which amount to $628,015, Newfoundland $840,243, and Prince Edward Island $1,840.

As far as Vote No. 10 regarding the National Research Council of Canada is concerned, additional proportions are requested here to enable the council to pay out the grants, scholarships and fellowships authorized early in the fiscal year so that the recipients may begin work on studies.

If we refer now to page 6 of the bill, Vote No. 80 has to do with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. This vote provides for Canada's share of the cost, 37½ per cent, of certain provincial projects required for conservation and control of water. These projects are carried out in accordance with agreements between Canada and the provinces; the provinces carry out the projects. Additional proportions are required here to meet expected claims for reimbursement of approved programs as follows:

Winnipeg Floodway	$2,200,000
Metro Toronto	500,000
Upper Thames	200,000
North & West Vancouver	200,000
Alberni	100,000

Honourable senators, as to Schedule D on page 7 of the bill, Vote No. 30, for Energy, Mines and Resources Department, provides for the cost of buildings, works and the purchase of equipment, vessels and so forth required for the Marine Surveys and Research Program. Additional proportions are required to meet progress billings of $3 million under the ship construction program.

Also on page 7 of the bill, Vote 35 has to do with the External Aid Office of the External Affairs Department. This vote provides for Canada's contributions to (1) International Development Assistance; (2) International Emergency Relief; (3) International Food Aid Program; and, (4) the Indus Basin Development Fund.

As far as Vote 35 is concerned, additional proportions are requested in this vote for the purchase, as part of the International Food Aid program, of wheat during April for India and Pakistan. Payment must be made on delivery to ships in Canadian ports. It is anticipated that deliveries will be made during April to a value of $21.5 million. These requirements total more than two-twelfths of the vote.

Honourable senators, Vote L25, on page 7, having to do with Loans, Investments and Advances, provides for the payment of federal assistance on a loan basis to the Atlantic provinces for the production of power for industrial purposes.

Now, with regard to Schedule D, Vote L25, on page 7, additional proportions are required to meet anticipated claims during April from the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick totalling more than two-twelfths of the vote. These projects are all under construction.

As far as the last schedule is concerned Vote 15, on page 8, having to do with the Department of Industry, provides for the payment of capital subsidies by the Canadian Government for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in Canada. The subsidy is 25 per cent of the cost of commercial and fishing vessels and 50 per cent for fishing trawlers. Additional proportions are required here to meet subsidies which must be paid early in the new year due to the scheduling of ship completions by spring breakup and other progress payments.

Vote No. 20, legislation, House of Commons, provides for salaries and expenses of the officers and staff, including sessional assistance, the publishing of Debates, expenses of committees, stationery and supplies.

As to Vote 5, National Revenue, an additional proportion is required to cover peak expenditures incurred during each month in the first quarter due to the hiring of casual staff for the processing of tax returns.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is for the advertising to convince people they love to pay income tax.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: That is one explanation, honourable senators. There might be others.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is one good one.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, there is another item on page 8, Vote 29, having to do with the World's Exhibition.

As honourable senators can see, we are asking the Senate tonight to agree to give to the Administration one-twelfth of all the items appearing in the Blue Book, or one month's supply. Where larger proportions are needed I have tried to give honourable senators some explanation of that need. I wish to emphasize the fact that all these items will remain entirely subject to any discussion that will take place in the Standing Committee on Finance.

Honourable senators, I do not think I need say more at the present time, but if there are any questions I shall try to deal with them.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, we are very indebted to Senator Deschatelets for the detailed explanation he has given us of this, what I might call, interim supply bill. By and large, at this stage of the parliamentary session, I feel that the Government is entitled to reasonable supply without great debate.

I have glanced casually over the items in respect of which the Government is asking for more than one-twelfth, and they appear to me to be seasonal items, and I personally am not objecting to them. This does not mean that I accept the validity of the totality of the items, but in both this chamber and the other place there will be opportunities for discussing those matters at a later date.

I was particularly gratified—and Senator Deschatelets did not refer to it—to see Vote 5g on page 9 of the bill, because I would not have liked to have seen a senior ministerial portfolio go without proper recompense. However, that is taken care of, and I just want to say that I am happy about it.

I should say, honourable senators, notwithstanding the fact that we are prepared to see interim supply go through without serious debate tonight—after all, there could be no serious debate because certain persons are not available to answer questions, and such debate will follow—the Government should take cognizance of the feeling that is developing in this country that Government expenditures are rising too fast. My honourable colleague Senator Grosart, I thought, was a little too kind to the Government earlier this evening. Everything he said is true, but he started from a very low base. All I want to refer to is the recent base.

In the fiscal year 1965-66 federal Government expenditures rose by 11 per cent, which was somewhat higher than the G.N.P. In 1966-67 it rose by 15 per cent, which was much higher than the increase in the G.N.P. The Estimates we have before us are, of course, just the basic Estimates. I admit they are better Estimates than have been produced in the past in that the supplementaries should not be so great, but on the face of them they are up 13 per cent.

Obviously, we cannot go along with this sort of thing. The Governor of the Bank of Canada so stated in the report which honourable senators received last week, and it is from his report that I get these figures. If we start with a 1955 base, certainly it looks pretty good. I believe someone put such a table on the record of either this house or the other place recently. However, all these things depend on the base you start with. We have the years of 1965-66, 1966-67 and 1967-68. We are running away ahead in our increases in Government expenditures and we are not including those contributions—euphemistically called "contributions", but really taxes —which we make to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. Nor are we including those euphemistically called "contributions" that we make to the Old Age Security Fund which, as the Minister of Finance told us last week, does not exist and, like the Canada Pension Plan, is just a bookkeeping entry. We pay as we go in under that plan, and we will pay as we go out; but that is another story.

We are going to pass this bill tonight, and I agree that we should do so. I just suggest that honourable senators look at the appendix to the Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, which I hold in my hand. I am looking at the appendix called "Public Service Employment", at page 595. Nobody in this chamber has a higher respect for the members of the public service than I have. I served in it for some years. It was only by an accident that I did not serve in it for a long, long period. However, I am not talking about the people who are in the public service. I am just looking at these figures for 1965-66, including all the crown companies, excluding what I call the commercial companies, the Atomic Energy Board, Eldorado, the C.N.R. and Air Canada. Three out of the four make money, and the fourth will probably start making money one of these days. Excluding the commercial companies, the strength on October 1, 1965 was 225,000 people, and the establishment was 242,000. That means somebody decided there were 17,000 vacant slots you could put people into.

A year later, on October 1, 1966, there were on strength 235,000 people. It still was not up to the establishment of the previous year. But they had raised the establishment by 12,000 people, to 254,000.

What have they done this year? If these figures as to establishment are meaningful, and if we really need these extra 19,000 people—I do not believe we do—what have they done? They have raised the establishment by another 15,000 for the fiscal year starting on the 1st of April. That is what the Auditor General has been complaining about and that is what many people are starting to complain about.

I recognize that you cannot run a government as you run a business, but I know that you can introduce a lot more business principles into government than we have in it today.

I used to be a director of a number of companies, and one of the most significant figures that we asked for every month was the number of people on the payroll, the total wage and the average wage. We wanted that for the current month, for the preceding month and for a year before. That gave us an indication as to what was happening to productivity and whether we were maintaining our competitive position.

Honourable senators, I am going to say no more, but I am saying the Government will hear a great deal more about this in the next few months. We are passing this interim supply bill tonight but, as Senator Deschatelets has said in the traditional fashion, that will not prevent us from dealing with the details later on.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I realize that I may have risen at an inappropriate time, but two items we have before us refer to the World Exposition and I wish briefly to say something about this in the public interest.

The Premier of Quebec spoke in Toronto yesterday, I think—

Hon. Mr. Choquette: On Monday, and a very good speech.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I commend him for saying he would do everything he possibly could to make sure that with respect to accommodation there would be no discrimination as to race or colour. On one other point he rather shrugged his shoulders and indicated that perhaps it was beyond him to prevent something happening with respect to this legislation in the matter of the cost of accommodation.

Briefly, on behalf of the public, I want to say that I have some personal information which gives me some apprehension. I with my wife went to one of the newer hotel-motels in downtown Montreal, in early fall of last year. I am quite a canny fellow and I looked at the rate card on the door. I think it was $28, a little more than I normally would have expected. I said nothing about it, but the next day when I paid my account I was charged $10 less than what was on the rate card. This was autumn 1966.

In western Canada just before Christmas I heard from another friend that, having attended a wedding in Montreal, he had stayed in an old established hotel that he had patronized for many years. In this case I believe two parties were occupying what would be called a suite. Again they looked at the rate chart, but in this instance they decided that it was not what they had ever paid on any previous occasion, of which there had been many, and was beyond their pocketbook. Consequently, they went down to ask for other accommodation in this very well-established and well-known hotel, but were informed that they need not worry about the cost, that it would be all right.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It is like the interest ceiling in the Bank Act.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: So when he paid his account, he found it was much less than indicated on the door card, and was the amount he was accustomed to paying.

The third instance relates again to a western Canadian, a single woman who, at a rather late date, asked for accommodation in a good hotel in Montreal and got it. She was not of the type who normally look at the price on the wall, but she happened to look at it and, even though she could afford perhaps any price for a room and was grateful to get a room at all on that particular night, she found that the price tag was extraordinarily high. However, she made no complaint. She just paid her bill. However, she found when she paid it that it was at least $12 less than the figure on the door card.

Now, I am suggesting that the law in Quebec is not protecting the tourists who will be coming to see Expo 67. The rate cards in a lot of establishments in 1966 were fictitious and unrealistic, but maybe those are the prices that are going to be frozen under the law for 1967.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Is the honourable senator suggesting that this Parliament introduce rent control again?

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: No. I am simply suggesting that it might be the duty of the Department of Trade and Commerce, over which my honourable friend presided for awhile, to use their influence to see that there is success for Expo 67 to the extent that people attending these hotels, under the law of Quebec, will get something that is realistic in the way of rates per night.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, we have heard from honourable Senator Deschatelets for the second time tonight, and I am sure honourable senators agree with me that we are most fortunate that the Leader of the Government has assigned to his deputy the task of introducing these money bills, because as a member of the Finance Committee he is giving us very detailed explanations which are most useful to our consideration of bills such as the one before us.

I would say, however, it is my belief that we should never have a bill such as this. We should never have main Estimates, never have interim supply or supplementary Estimates before this chamber unless we have a report from the Finance Committee. I know the difficulties that we are faced with here, but I am quite sure that the Leader of the Government could, if he wished, insist that these matters come before us in time to be brought before the Finance Committee and reported to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not for interim supply.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With all due respect to the Leader of the Government who says "Not for interim supply"—I presume he bases this on the fact that interim supply is normally one-twelfth, if the bill requests a month's supply, or one-sixth if it requests two months' supply. He bases his interjection on the basic fact that the main Estimates have already been before the committee, but the fact of the matter is that we are faced with requests at this time for one-twelfth of a year or a request two-twelfths or three-twelfths. This is understandable, but I may say that whether it is supplementary Estimates or interim supply or the main Estimates, this house is entitled to a report from its Finance Committee as to why any particular amount is requested at this time. There is no other way in which we can have any kind of assurance that the detailed Estimates before us have been examined and that we are doing our duty in passing them.

The Leader of the Government may not agree, but I say to him that I am sure that all honourable senators would feel much happier in passing these Estimates if they knew they had been before the committee. I say this, because although I have to agree with the Deputy Leader on this side in the criticism he made of my friends opposite in their collective capacity, this does not prevent me paying tribute to one of my friends opposite as chairman of the committee, and saying that if these Estimates come before that committee, I am thoroughly satisfied as a member of the Senate to pass them on the basis of the report of Senator Leonard's committee. I am not in conscience prepared to pass them on any other basis, without in any way detracting from my confidence in the information placed before us by the Government Deputy Leader.

For example, the Deputy Leader said in passing, in a very casual way, that of course these estimates do not include the Old Age Security Fund. In the Old Age Security Fund we are faced with the extraordinary increase from $1,105 million to $1,432 million.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: In 1967-68.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: An increase of over $400 million, which you pass over with a casual reference. I think I understand why that is so. We dealt with the Old Age Security Fund a little while ago. We were faced with the extraordinary position which has not yet been explained, that we had a schedule placed before us saying "Here is the whole cash flow, inflow and outflow, until 1972, which says if we put this money—$135 million a year, rising to something like $183 million—into this fund we will be able to pay out." Yet we have the Minister of Finance saying that if he had not raised the sales tax he would have had to borrow money. I say there is not the least substance or support for that statement. We are dealing with these estimates, yet all we have before us is a casual statement, "We are terribly sorry that the Old Age Security Fund's estimates are up from $1,105 million to $1,432 million." I am not sure it has any relation to this interim supply bill because it is not in our schedule; it was just a casual remark.

I merely say that if these Estimates had come before us in the form of reports from our Finance Committee, we would be in a much better position to deal with them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Surely, the honourable senator will admit that once you get the main Estimates before the Finance Committee, as they are now, you have ample opportunity in that committee to ask any questions on any item of the main Estimates. Then having done so and being familiar with the item in the Estimates, when the Government representatives come here and ask for a certain percentage plus, perhaps, additional percentages, as Senator Deschatelets has already explained, surely the opportunity to examine all the items coming before this house in bills for interim supply is available to deal with them in committee as completely as need be.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank the honourable Leader of the Government for his vigorous interjection, but I have to say that I do not agree with him for one moment. If I tell someone that I will extend to him credit for so many dollars over the next year, and then he comes to me and says, this month he wants so many dollars, then I want to know why. I do not think it is sufficient answer to say, "We have considered the main Estimates; we have agreed on the main principle." Otherwise, why do we have interim supply? What is the purpose of it, if we are not here expected to examine it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well—

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Allow me to finish, if you will. I will be glad to hear the Leader of the Government's answer, but I should be allowed to enlarge on my answer to the interjection of the honourable Leader of the Government.

If the position taken by the Leader of the Government is that, having examined in our Finance Committee the main Estimates, we are now excluded from considering the interim supply bill which is asking us in one area to vote one-twelfth and in another area three-twelfths, why are not we entitled to ask "Why do you need three-twelfths? Why do you need four-twelfths? Why do you need one-twelfth at this particular time?" I think we are perfectly entitled to ask this.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is what the sponsor is here for—

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I would again suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government that unless he rises to interrrupt—in which case I will immediately take my seat and allow him to speak—with respect, he should not make interjections.

I am sorry to have to say that because we seem to have developed a custom of these casual interruptions. I am perfectly prepared to debate this matter, or any other matter. If he, as Leader of the Government, wishes to rise, I will immediately sit down and will be glad to listen to him; but I would suggest that if I am developing a point I should be allowed to do so, unless he makes his interjection within the rules as I understand them. If I am wrong on that, I would be glad to be corrected by His Honour or the Leader of the Government.

I am saying that I would like to see every supply bill—whether main Estimates, interim or supplementary—come before the Senate after consideration by the Finance Committee, because over and over again we are asked to pass these Estimates at the last minute. If they come before us as a recommendation from the Finance Committee and we had before us at this particular time a statement that the Finance Committee had considered this particular bill—and this is a bill; this is not just the schedule we are given here; this is a bill we are asked to pass—I suggest that we would follow the procedure that we have set up in referring the Estimates to the Standing Committee on Finance. Senator Leonard, the chairman of the committee, has done a magnificent job. Let us have him say to the Senate: "You have referred these Estimates to the Standing Committee on Finance. The committee has looked at them, and has approved them." The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) now says: "Oh, no, it is quite sufficient for the sponsor of the bill to explain it." I have the greatest of respect for the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets), but as long as we have the Standing Committee on Finance I suggest it makes no sense whatever to bypass it and say: "Well, we are in a great rush. We have not much time. It is now after midnight, so we should not raise this difficult question."

I say again to the honourable Leader of the Government that it would be in the interests of the prestige of this house if such matters came before us only after having been examined by the Standing Committee on Finance. This is the procedure followed in the other place.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

Thursday, March 23, 1967

12.15 a.m.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

22 March 1967

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that The Hon. J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 22nd March, at 11.50 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Motions.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 18, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

This motion, honourable senators, is made on the understanding that we are always subject to recall when required.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable J. R. Cartwright, M. C., Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An act to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

An act to make provision for appeals to an Immigration Appeal Board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration.

An act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

An act to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

An act to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

An act respecting Banks and Banking.

An act respecting Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec.

The Honourable Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bills:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

To which bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bills.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 18, 1967, at 8. p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 18, 1967

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following persons, respectively, have been summoned to the Senate:

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne, P.C.
Andrew Ernest Thompson, Esquire
Keith Laird, Esquire, Q.C.
Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Kinnear.

NEW SENATORS INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writs of summons, which were read by the Clerk; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and were seated:

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne, P.C., of Montreal, Quebec, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Bourque.

Hon. Andrew Ernest Thompson, of Kendal, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Davey.

Hon. Keith Laird, of Windsor, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Croll.

Hon. Mary Elizabeth Kinnear, of Port Colborne, Ontario, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Roebuck.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that each of the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. John J. Connolly: I am sure all honourable senators expect me to say to Senator Lamontagne from Quebec, and Senators Thompson, Laird and Kinnear from Ontario, that they are welcome in this house.

My own experience here is not as long as that of many distinguished parliamentarians present, but I can tell the new senators that over the years during which I have been a senator I have discovered that this chamber can be one of the most interesting and fruitful places in which to work.

We look forward to a continued and long association with you, and to your close collaboration with all of us in the work we are called upon to do on behalf of the Parliament and people of Canada.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Irvine had been substituted for that of Mr. Watson (Assiniboia) on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> Ordered: That a message be sent to the Senate to inform Their Honours that the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House Commons on the National and Royal Anthems be authorized to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and that it be empowered to retain such experts as may be required from time to time.
>
> Attest.
>
> Alistair Fraser
>
> for The Clerk of the House of Commons

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Expenditures and Administration in connection with the Unemployment Assistance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, chapter 26, Statutes of Canada, 1956. (English and French texts.

Report of the Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and its subsidiary, Eldorado Aviation Limited, including their Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce intituled: "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1967—and Regional Estimates". (English and French texts).

Report of the Northern Transportation Company Limited, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952 (English and French texts).

Report of the National Energy Board for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 91 of the National Energy Board Act, chapter 46, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 7 of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Act., chapter 67, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report by the Tariff Board, dated February 1, 1967, relative to the Inquiry ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting Cotton Yarns and Rovings, for Use in the Manufacture of Certain Products, Reference No. 135 (English and French texts) together with a copy of the transcript of the evidence presented at public hearings (English text), pursuant to section 6 to the Tariff Board Act, chapter 261, R.S.C., 1952.

Exchange of Notes, dated April 3, 1967, between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Socialist Republic of Roumania concerning the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries. (English and French texts).

Capital Budget of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1967, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1967-412, dated March 2, 1967, approving same. (English text).

Report on the Operations of The Canadian Wheat Board for the Crop Year ended July 31, 1966, certified by the Auditors, pursuant to section 7(2) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, chapter 44, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Department of Defence Production for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 34 of the Defence Production Act, chapter 62, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Copy of amendments made March 23, 1966, by the President and Puisne Judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada to the General Rules and Orders of the Exchequer Court of Canada, pursuant to section 88(2) of the Exchequer Court Act, chapter 98, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on Operations under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1967 pursuant to section 27 of the said Act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report on the Administration of the Canada Student Loans Act for the loan year ended June 30, 1965, pursuant to section 18 of the said Act, chapter 24, Statutes of Canada, 1964-65. (English and French texts).

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, April 12, 1967, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, including its Statements of Accounts and the Report of the Auditor General of Canada and the Quebec Provincial Auditor thereon, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 18 of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act, chapter 12, Statutes of Canada, 1962-63, as amended 1963. (English and French texts).

Report of the Board of Trustees of the Maritime Transportation Unions for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 16 of the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act, chapter 17, Statutes of Canada, 1963. (English and French texts).

Report of the National Harbours Board, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 32 of the National Harbours Board Act, chapter 187, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952 (English and French texts).

Annual Report to the Governments of the United States and Canada by the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board for the period October 1, 1965 to September 30, 1966. (English text).

Report of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, including its Accounts and Financial Statement certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Revised Capital Budget of the National Capital Commission for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-60, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 1291 to 1333, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ADDRESSES AT INSTALLATION PRINTED IN SENATE RECORDS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move seconded by Honourable A. J. Brooks, Leader of the Opposition, as follows:

> That the address of the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, P.C., at the Installation of the Right Honourable Roland Michener, P.C., Q.C., as Governor General of Canada on April 17, 1967, together with the reply of His Excellency the Governor General thereto, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I take great pleasure in seconding the motion of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West). Yesterday was a grand day for Canada, and we had a wonderful installation ceremony. All those who took part, from the highest to the lowest, deserve great commendation and praise.

Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, may I also take this opportunity to congratualte the new senators sworn in this evening. I know that the honourable Leader of the Government has congratulated them already on behalf of all members, but I should like to do so also and to wish them many years of happiness here.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, first of all, I thank honourable Senator Brooks for having been good enough to second this motion. We are following a precedent set by the Administration of which he was a member, when the late General Vanier was inducted as Governor General in this chamber.

I should like to re-echo Senator Brooks' remarks about the significance and the solemnity of the ceremony which took place here yesterday. It was a most significant day for Canada. I am sure members from all parts of both houses agree that the ceremony was conducted in a manner befitting the great occasion which it was.

Furthermore, I am particularly proud of the part played by the officials and staff of various branches of the Senate. That we were able to sit here in our normal places this evening is a tribute to the efficiency which they display on occasions of this kind, and I take this opportunity to mention it.

Motion agreed to.

For addresses see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 1783-5.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING
—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Keith Davey moved the second reading of Bill S-59, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

He said: Honourable senators, before dealing with Bill S-59, I should like to add my word of welcome to the new senators. All the new senators are friends of mine; one, Senator Thompson, is one of my oldest political colleagues. They are all welcome here for many reasons, not the least of which is that recently appointed senators like myself can now cease regarding ourselves as "new senators." I can assure the new senators that they will receive, just as I have and still do, the unfailing courtesy and co-operation of the members on both sides of the house.

In that spirit, honourable senators, I would like to make a brief reference to my recently-terminated career in Canadian professional football. Both prior to, during and since my departure, I have been most grateful for the friendly support I have received from many senators, again on both sides of the Senate. Incidentally, I think that perhaps the honourable Leader of the Government may have taken my retirement from professional sport much too literally, because certainly I would prefer tonight to be using my red tickets in the Maple Leaf Gardens. Alas, that is not to be, but I may inform the honourable senator that at the end of the first period the score is Chicago 1, Toronto 1.

I am glad to be here for several reasons tonight and to be able to sponsor Bill S-59, an act to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act. This, I believe, is the twenty-fourth bill to receive its first introduction in the Senate in the current session. Indeed, as the honourable Leader pointed out on national television the other evening, almost 25 per cent of all the legislation to pass through Parliament in this session originated in the Senate. The public, however, has absolutely no idea what it is we do here, let alone how much it is that we do here. This sad state of affairs, of course, is not the public's fault. It is ours. That, honourable senators, is another speech for another occasion.

I am also privileged to sponsor this bill because I believe it contains such intrinsically worthwhile legislation. The 15 clauses represent a series of further amendments to the Canadian Citizenship Act, passed in 1947 and amended several times since. The general effect of these particular amendments seems to me to be twofold: first, to make the act more flexible in its application, particularly so far as new citizens are concerned; and secondly, to remove certain discriminatory aspects which pertain particularly to Canadians who are not Canadian born.

It might be useful to begin by briefly outlining the structure of the Canadian Citizenship Act itself. After a brief introduction, the act is divided into seven parts, as follows:

Part I, Natural-Born Canadian Citizens.

Part II, Canadian Citizens other than Natural-Born.

Part III, Loss of Canadian Citizenship.

Part IV, Status of Canadians and Recognition of British Subjects.

Part V, Status of Aliens.

Part VI, Procedure and Evidence.

Part VII, General.

The 13 clauses of Bill S-59 constitute a series of amendments involving four of these seven parts. Three parts of the Act, Part I, Natural-Born Canadian Citizens, Part IV, the Status of Canadian Citizens and the Recognition of British Subjects, and Part V, the Status of Aliens, are not amended by Bill S-59.

I shall deal first with the first three clauses of Bill S-59, which effect amendments in Part II of the act, which as you will recall is the part dealing with Canadian citizens other than natural-born. The basic purpose of the amendments in the first three clauses is to build some flexibility into the methods of obtaining Canadian citizenship.

Clause 1 is simply a straight housekeeping amendment consequent upon subsequent amendments in the act. Clause 2, however, effects four significant changes to Section 10 of the act. Section 10 deals with the requirements for becoming a citizen.

I should like to point out to honourable senators, in the case of the four changes, what the present arrangement is, what the proposed change is, and what I understand to be the purpose of the proposed change.

At present an applicant must reside in Canada for at least two years immediately preceding application. This is now to be changed so that he must reside in Canada at least 12 of the 18 months immediately preceding application. The purpose of this particular change is to add a degree of flexibility and to make it possible for an applicant to spend some time out of the country during this period. As I say, this is intended to add a degree of flexibility which I suggest is essential in the fast-moving world of today.

The second change in this particular clause also has to do with residence requirements. At the present time an applicant is required to be Canadian domiciled. This is defined in the Immigration Act as meaning that the applicant must have spent five consecutive years after becoming a landed immigrant in Canada before he is able to apply. The change which is proposed under this act is to increase that period to eight years. Now, instead of spending five consecutive years he must spend five of eight years in Canada after becoming a landed immigrant.

That also is what I would describe as adding a degree of flexibility in a world which I suggest is moving ever faster.

Then there is the clause, which remains in the act, whereby an applicant must indicate that it is his intention to become a permanent resident of Canada. Under the existing legislation the applicant must be of good character, and now the phrase is added "and not under order of deportation;". This is a rather obvious amendment which I understand is needed to plug certain loopholes in the existing legislation.

The fourth amendment has to do with language requirements. At the present time an applicant must have adequate knowledge of either French or English, or he must have been a resident of Canada for more than 20 years. An adequate knowledge of French or English is still a requirement, but there is a change proposed for people who do not have this knowledge. The proposal is that if the applicant is over 40 years of age at the time he arrived in Canada, the residence requirement is reduced to 10 years. However, if the applicant becomes a landed immigrant when he is under 40, then the 20-year requirement remains. In other words the language requirements are being somewhat reduced for older applicants who might find it more difficult to master a new language later in life. There is also a slight easing of the language requirement so far as the spouse of the applicant is concerned. This is in the interests of holding families together, since it is felt that it will be satisfactory if the head of the family is conversant with the language.

Clause 3 refers to this general part of the act dealing with Canadian citizens other than those natural-born. This clause simply clarifies certain procedures concerning the oath of allegiance. More specifically, British subjects and minors over the age of 14 years become citizens when their certificate is granted or when they take the oath of allegiance, whichever occurs first. This is a housekeeping amendment which has a retroactive element.

Clauses 4, 5 and 6 of Bill S-59 deal with Part III of the act, having to do with loss of citizenship. The basic purpose of the amendments contained in clauses 4, 5 and 6 would seem to be to remove any trace of discrimination which may be felt to remain against Canadian citizens who are other than natural born.

Clause 4 repeals section 18 of the act —again in Part III dealing with loss of citizenship—which presently would take citizenship away from Canadian citizens other than natural born if they have been residing outside Canada for ten years. This particular clause does not pertain to Canadians who are natural born and, obviously, this is a type of distinction which is discriminatory and which for that particular purpose has been removed.

Similarly, in clause 5, which deals with the revocation of citizenship, presently the citizenship of a non-natural-born Canadian, a citizen born outside Canada, can be taken away for three of four reasons, including treason, breach of the Official Secrets Act and false pretences—particular requirements which do not pertain to Canadians who are native born. So, again this is a discriminatory distinction which is being removed.

Clause 6, also dealing with loss of citizenship, is simply a housekeeping amendment consequential upon other amendments to the act.

Bill S-59 effects some amendments to Part VI of the act, which deals with procedure and evidence, and more specifically with the procedure to be followed by applicants for citizenship.

Sections 30 and 31 of the act have been rewritten, and it is interesting to note in passing that at the present time citizenship is recommended to the minister out of 13 federal courts across the country which apparently deal with about 75 per cent of the applications, the remaining applications being dealt with in various courts in specific provinces in more remote areas.

The effect of these particular amendments is to set up a Citizenship Appeal Court. All decisions made by the Citizenship courts or by the courts where applications have been made are relayed to the minister, and under this particular amendment the minister must inform all applicants of the decision of the court, not only applicants who are successful but as well those applicants who for one reason or another are turned down. In the latter case the minister must inform the applicant that his application has been turned down, and also that he has the right of appeal.

This particular amendment also sets up the Citizenship Appeal Court, reference to which is made in section 30A on page 4 of the bill. More specifically, it states:

> (1) There shall be a Citizenship Appeal Court, consisting of one or more judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada to be designated by the President of the Exchequer Court of Canada from time to time.

Section 30A(3) states:

> Every appeal to the Citizenship Appeal Court shall be brought within thirty days from the day notice is given to the applicant in accordance with subsection (2) of section 30, by Notice of Appeal filed with the Registrar of the Citizenship Appeal Court.

In other words, an applicant has 30 days to file notice in regard to this particular kind of appeal. This court will simply confirm or reverse the other court's decision. The final decision as to whether or not citizenship shall be granted rests not with the court but remains with the minister.

I was anxious to find out how much work there would be for this particular court, and I was informed that for the past six years there have been some 360,000 applications for citizenship, only 1,200 of which have been turned down. Thus, a fraction of one per cent of all applications have been turned down. Here is an attempt to broaden the act to make it possible for such persons to have some type of appeal.

Clauses 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 all deal with sections coming under Part VII of the act, which is the General part. It is possible to divide clauses 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 into three groups.

Clause 8 deals with certain regulatory powers of the minister. Clauses 9 and 10 deal with housekeeping for a specifically vital area. Clauses 11 and 12 deal with penalties and offences under the act.

Reverting to the particular clauses, clause 8 effects amendments to section 34, which is the first section under this general part of the Citizenship Act, a section which enables the Governor in Council to make certain regulations in connection with the administration of the act. These six changes in the subsections under section 34 simply clarify the minister's position in connection with certain regulatory powers, dealing with such matters as oaths, the misuse of certificates, and fees.

Clauses 9 and 10—which, as I say, are forms of housekeeping, albeit in a most vital area—extend the complete provisions of the act to Newfoundland. It was thought this had been done before. However, a number of specific points were affected, involving foundlings, war brides, and so on. It is my understanding that the amendments contained in clauses 9 and 10 will completely remedy the situation and make the act fully operative in every respect in the Province of Newfoundland.

Clauses 11 and 12 deal with offences under the act and amend sections 41 and 42 of the act, again in this seventh and final part of the act entitled "General." The effect is to broaden the category of offences under the act. For example, not only is it an offence for a person to use another's certificate, but there are also certain additional offences such as obtaining certificates, trafficking in certificates, and allowing one's certificate to be used. Under this bill these are now offences under the act. The penalty is no longer simply imprisonment, but imprisonment and/or a fine. Offences committed outside of Canada will now come under this act.

The amendment to section 42A deals with the time limit for institution of proceedings in regard to an offence committed under the act. Up to the time of this particular amendment, summary conviction proceedings have had to be brought within six months. It is my understanding that as a result of this particular amendment the time limit is extended to three years.

Clause 13 is just what it indicates, an amendment to the French version. Its basic purpose is to correct some minor discrepancies between the English and French versions.

This is a worthwhile piece of legislation which I commend to you, honourable senators, as having the generally beneficial effect of broadening the benefits under the Citizenship Act.

It is my understanding that it is the intention to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, where it can be examined in considerably more detail.

Hon. Harry A. Willis: Honourable senators the fact of my rising to speak on this measure will not cause you to miss the score in the hockey game because I promise you I shall take only five minutes of your time.

There are not many things in which I can compete with the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), but there is one. I was present outside the chamber this evening when the honourable Leader of the Government met the charming new lady senator, Senator Kinnear, and instead of giving her a good buss he just pecked her on the cheek. Had I had his opportunity I would have done a much better job.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You have had more experience.

Hon. Mr. Willis: Honourable senators, I find it rather ironical to note that the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Davey) was a fellow company director of mine, and he resigned his directorship shortly after being appointed to the Senate. I assure him that neither I nor the company had anything to do with that.

Senator Davey has explained this bill very well, and I can say, speaking on behalf of all honourable senators on this side of the house, that we approve the bill completely. The bill amends some sections of the act that might have been debatable in the past, and I congratulate the law officers who drafted this bill on the good and thorough job they did. It must have taken them a long time.

One of the important features of this bill is that it provides for a Citizenship Appeal Court, which will consist of one or more judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada, to which a person who has been refused the right of citizenship can appeal.

I want to say to the honourable Leader of the Government—of course, I have not read the regulations that will be promulgated after this measure is passed—that those persons who are appointed to hear citizenship applications in this country must be gentle, patient, and understanding. They must understand that the applicant for citizenship before them is new to this country. He has been here only five years, and has probably never been in a court before. A judge may appear to him to be the Almighty. I have heard county court judges—and I could name two or three in particular—blast applicants for not properly answering the questions. I think that this is despicable. The Government, in my opinion, should consider setting up a school in which these special examiners, and county court judges too, can learn how to handle these cases.

I attended at one application, and the proceedings sounded like a geography lesson. The applicant was asked how many provinces there are in Canada; who is the Prime Minister of Canada; who is the Premier of Ontario, and matters like that. To me this is absolute nonsense. What the examiner or the county court judge has to find out is what the applicant intends to do in Canada. The applicant should be encouraged in his occupation, and encouraged to go to school in order to further his education. The examiners and county court judges, just because they have an official appointment—which some of them probably did not earn—should not treat these applicants as people over whom they can ride roughshod.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say about this bill. It contains some clauses which affect Newfoundland in particular, and perhaps my honourable colleague, Senator Hollett, will have something to say about them. I should like to point out in conclusion that the author of this legislation, and the man who started it on its way, was the former Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the Honourable R. A. Bell.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I shall not keep you one second longer than I am compelled to, but apparently somebody wishes me to say a few words in connection with this bill because it mentions Newfoundland specifically.

At the outset of my remarks I should like to say "Welcome" to the four new senators introduced this evening. I hope their stay here will be long and happy, and useful not only to themselves but to the country as well.

I was appointed to this chamber in 1961, and since that time 45 new senators have come along. Some honourable senators have passed on to their great reward, and others have left us to enjoy the quietude of retirement. I mention this only to show how quickly our names ascend the list, particularly having regard to the ages of some of us when we were appointed.

As I looked around the chamber tonight at the very large number of senators present I could tell at a glance who had been down to Florida, and I wondered why they came back. I know now that they came back in order to retain their citizenship, and I extend a word of welcome to them as well.

Senator Davey has given a splendid explanation of this bill, and there is no need for me to say much about it. I want only to comment on one or two points.

Section 4, which is found on page 2, concerns the resumption of citizenship lost through residence outside Canada. I know a good many Newfoundlanders who, after Newfoundland came into Confederation, worked for a while in Canada. Some of them worked in the great airplane industry, and when that was phased out they had to go somewhere else to seek a job. A good many of them went to the United States of America. I am pleased to see that section in this bill, because I believe it allows such persons to retain their citizenship for a certain number of years.

I turn now to section 9, which is on page 6. Honourable senators will remember that section 39 of the act, as was pointed out, provided that a person who was a British subject on April 1, 1949—that is April Fools' Day—and who was born in Newfoundland, became a Canadian citizen. This amendment takes care of a person who was born on a ship registered in Newfoundland. I have yet to know or hear of any person in Newfoundland who was born on a ship. No doubt it has happened, but only to a very few. I did not want honourable senators to get the impression that most of us Newfoundlanders were born on a schooner, steamer, or fishing raft. If there is any person who did come into the world at such a place then I should like to welcome him as a citizen of Canada.

Honourable senators, even though I was accused of fighting against Confederation, I am proud to be a Canadian citizen. I never did fight against Confederation. What I fought against was the method and procedure adopted for bringing Newfoundland into Confederation. I think I have told you that story before, and I do not need to go into it now. All I will say in that respect is that I am very proud to be a Canadian.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: There are one on two other things I should like to mention. Section 39a on page 7—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Before the honourable senator proceeds may I draw his attention to the subsection at the bottom of page 6, and ask him to tell us what that means?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Yes, I was coming to that. I have heard talk of found-ins, and, of course, I have heard talk also of foundlings. It will be noted that there is an amendment to section 39 of the act having to do with the poor Canadian born on a ship registered in Newfoundland.

The explanatory note to subclause (1) of clause 9 states:

> The purpose of this amendment is to make it clear that persons born on a ship registered in Newfoundland are Canadian citizens.

Subclause (2) of clause 9 is in respect to wives. The explanatory note states in part:

> The purpose of this amendment is to provide that the wives of those persons who, by virtue of section 39, became Canadian citizens on the first day of April, 1949, are also Canadian citizens if they were British subjects on that date and had been admitted to Newfoundland for permanent residence.

At this date that is not of great importance. Subclause (6) reads as follows:

> Every foundling who was first found as a deserted infant in Newfoundland shall, until the contrary is proven, be deemed to have been born in Newfoundland.

Newfoundland is not the only place where one finds a deserted infant. I am sure that deserted infants can be found in Ottawa, Montreal, or indeed anywhere. I dare say a few can be found in Newfoundland. Is it a fact that a deserted child or a foundling can have Canadian citizenship? I shall have to look up the act to see if it applies to all deserted children.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I was wondering when an infant ceases to be an infant. Of course, in law it applies to any child under 21.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That law applies in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: How old is a foundling?

Hon. Mr. Willis: What is a foundling?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Subclause (6) states "who was first found as a deserted infant". I think that is the answer.

I do not think that that subclause should apply just to Newfoundland. That is all I object to; otherwise, I am in favour of this bill, because I feel it has straightened out the whole matter so far as citizenship is concerned. I do not know why they should have picked out Newfoundland. Newfoundlanders are good people. The impression seems to be given that we were all deserted, born on ships, and were foundlings. We were not. Our people originated from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and also France. I think we have the same kind of blood in our veins as do all those conceited people in the other provinces. I am sorry Newfoundland is mentioned specifically; I see no necessity for it. However, it is there. If any other explanations are necessary I will try to get them from the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Or in committee.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Yes, in committee. Clause 10 of the bill amends the act by adding immediately after section 39, sections 39A and 39B. The explanatory note states:

> The new section 39a provides for the acquisition of Canadian citizenship by persons born in Newfoundland or outside Newfoundland to Newfoundland parents and who ceased to be British subjects, for any reason other than marriage, before the first day of April, 1949.

I promised that I would not detain the house. I will merely conclude by saying that I find nothing wrong with the bill except for some of the wording, which I think should be amended. The bill gives a black eye to Newfoundland. We have already received too many of these and do not want any more.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There will not be any more.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the National Anthem and the Royal Anthem.

Hon. Maurice Bourget: Honourable senators, before saying a few words only on the report under study, I should like to join those of my colleagues who have already spoken in extending to the four new senators my sincere congratulations on their appointment. I am sure that this evening the Senate has grown richer by admitting them to its ranks and that, as they have already done in the past, they will share for the greater good of our country their varied knowledge as well as their great competence.

Honourable senators, as I have just said, I do not intend to speak at length on the report now under study; it is clear enough for honourable senators to grasp its significance with ease.

After a few meetings of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, it was agreed that the committee should recommend unanimously that the Government be authorized to adopt without delay the music of "O Canada" by the composer Calixa Lavallée for Canada's national anthem. In addition, the committee has also recommended unanimously that the Government adopt without delay the traditional air of "God Save the Queen" now in the public domain as the music for Canada's royal anthem. These are the two main recommendations in this report.

All the members of the committee agreed that these two airs have undergone the test of time and that they were generally accepted in the country.

As for the words of the national anthem and the royal anthem, the committee did not have the power to give the question comprehensive consideration; that is why the committee requests in the report that its terms of reference be extended to permit the questioning of the greatest possible number of witnesses, to require the production of documents, and reports, and to retain services of experts in order to make definite recommendations on this matter.

The question of copyright of the music has also been considered by the members of the committee. It has been agreed to recommend that the government take the necessary measures to obtain the copyright of the music, and to provide that it will always remain the property of Her Majesty in right of Canada.

I thank the honourable senators who sat on the committee for their excellent co-operation, as well as the three witnesses, Mr. Erik J. Spicer, Parliamentary Librarian, Mr. J. Guy Sylvestre, Associate Librarian, and Mr. Lewis Levy, counsellor from the Justice Department. The information they have supplied in their testimony before the committee was most useful.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say on this report. I hope it will be adopted by the Senate as unanimously as it was in the committee taking into account meanwhile that it was accepted by the House of Commons without debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Yuzyk, debate adjourned.

NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT PARIS, FRANCE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Friday, February 17, the adjourned debate on the notice of the Honourable Senator Aird that he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twelfth Annual Conference of NATO Parliamentarians held at Paris, France, 9th November to 14th November, 1966, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, in resuming the debate on the report of Senator Aird on the Twelfth Annual Conference of NATO Parliamentarians, I should like to congratulate Senator O'Leary (Carleton) on an articulate presentation, the brilliance of which was enhanced by the fact that it was extemporaneous.

In that speech, Senator O'Leary made four points. First, he criticized the selection and briefing of delegates to meetings of international associations. I do not propose to comment on his criticism, except to note that he seems to have received the general agreement of this house on that point.

Secondly, he suggested that NATO should be reassessed and, in particular, that Canada should reassess her position vis-à-vis NATO.

His third point was that we in this house should receive substantive information regarding the foreign policy of this country.

In answer to those two points which Senator O'Leary raised, the Secretary of State for External Affairs appeared before the Senate External Affairs Committee and gave a full statement of Canada's foreign policy as it relates to NATO.

I might comment further on Canada's NATO military commitment. Each year, the heads of the various NATO governments meet with the military chiefs of NATO and indicate the forces that their particular country can provide to NATO. At the December ministerial meeting, the countries provide those forces that they have indicated they will provide. I can state with assurance that Canada is living up to the commitment it made at the last December ministerial meeting.

As to Senator O'Leary's fourth point, I should like to examine it in some detail. He stated as follows, as reported at page 1465 of Hansard:

> Does any honourable senator believe that this country, alone almost in the world, has some obligation to keep the peace between Turkey and Greece? Honourable senators, these are two NATO powers; they are on one of the flanks of NATO. If it was the obligation of any nation or any number of nations to keep Greece and Turkey apart, that obligation was with the NATO nations themselves.

Honourable senators, the Cyprus force is a United Nations force. It was established by unanimous resolution of the Security Council on March 4, 1964. Its mandate was extended by a unanimous resolution of the Security Council on December 15, 1966, to June 26, 1967.

It is not true to say that Canada is almost alone in that force. On December 5, 1966, the force was composed of 4,436 military personnel: Britain was contributing 1,092; Canada, 876; Denmark, 673; Sweden, 618; Finland, 608; Ireland, 520; Austria, 49.

That did not include a civilian police force of 174 provided by Australia, Austria, Denmark, Sweden and New Zealand.

Honourable senators, the United Nations force in Cyprus is financed by voluntary contribution. Over 40 countries are contributing to this fund. Canada is responsible for the pay and allowances of its force that it would pay if that force were within Canadian shores. As far as the extra costs of being in Cyprus are concerned, Canada is paying less than 50 per cent of those costs attributable to its own force.

Senator O'Leary says that it should be a NATO responsibility. Unfortunately, I cannot agree. Surely one of the main purposes of the United Nations is to keep peace among the nations of the world.

In doing what the United Nations is doing in Cyprus, it is carrying out its function and its obligations. NATO, on the other hand, is an alliance. It is not set up to keep peace among its member countries, and I think that if it attempted to do what is being done in Cyprus, we might endanger the whole viability of the alliance itself.

Senator O'Leary (Carleton) goes on to say, as reported at page 1466 of Hansard:

> I say it is not the role of Canada, it is not the duty of Canada, to go to this far-off island and keep peace between Turkey and Greece.

We might infer from that, that Senator O'Leary is confining himself to the dispute on Cyprus between Turkey and Greece. But Senator O'Leary goes on to quote from Senator Fulbright's writings, as follows:

> ...Americans today are acting, as if they were God's agents on earth, to see over all human behaviour.

I can only infer from that that Senator O'Leary's concern extends to all Canadian international obligations. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that this is a valid concern, and it is a crucial concern, because before we can decide on Canada's role vis-à-vis NATO we must decide whether we as a nation want to become involved, whether in fact we do have international obligations or whether in fact we should concentrate on our own problems at home.

It is not an easy decision to make. I suggest to you that the United States of America has made that decision, but it is easier for them than for us. They have world-wide interests, and they have the power, both military and economic, to be effective throughout the world. Despite the fact that they have made the decision, there is an enormous division amongst Americans as to whether or not that decision was correct.

Canada's choice is far more difficult. It is costly—it costs in money, it costs in effort, it even costs in blood. It would be far easier to depend on the United States of America, especially when one considers how little Canada can contribute, in relation to the United States. How much nicer it would be to concentrate on our own problems. Then, we could not be accused of imposing our morality on the rest of the world.

Honourable senators, before we decide, I suggest that we look at what is happening. Look at France. France is dealing with its international obligations today as though it were involved in an eighteenth century balance of power. England is talking of removing its forces on the Rhine in order to protect its foreign exchange balance. Germany is balking at paying the costs of troops provided by other nations to defend German soil. And the African states cannot even come together for their own economic development.

Now, I suggest to you that this is not isolationism; it is a form of selfish nationalism. And so long as we permit that selfish nationalism to grow, then we can be sure that western unity is in danger. If western unity is in danger, then our whole way of life is in danger, and I suggest to you that this country cannot afford to let that happen.

Canada must be concerned with the environment of the world in which it lives. Just as in any neighbourhood in which I live I must be concerned with the environment and what goes on around me, so a nation like Canada has to be concerned with its environment. Therefore, I suggest to you that we must be involved in international obligations.

To return to Senator O'Leary's point: should we be involved in this far-off island? Should we have been involved in the Congo, in the Gaza Strip, in the Colombo Plan; should we be involved in NATO, in the United Nations, and in far-off islands?

Neville Chamberlain referred to Czechoslovakia as "a country we know so little about," and that was part of the overture to a world war.

Honourable senators, we must be involved. We must do our part to prevent a breakdown in western unity. We must do our part to prevent the rise of selfish nationalism. We must contribute to international economic development; we must contribute to the peaceful settlement of disputes, and we must seek an environment in which Canada can prosper.

If I am told that the contribution that Canada can make is not worth while, then in defence I invoke the lines of a young English poet who agonized over whether his contribution in the First World War as a sailor would be worth while, and he resolved it for himself with these lines:

> If I should die, think only this of me:
> That there's some corner of a foreign field
> That is for ever England.

Honourable senators, Canada must do more than contribute to world peace and prosperity, if only to set an example to the rest of the world.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Honourable senators, it was not my intention to speak on this subject, but seeing that Senator Everett has given us a challenge and has said that Senator O'Leary was partly wrong, I would like to accept that challenge and adjourn the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Belisle, debate adjourned.

THE LATE SIR DONALD SANGSTER

PRIME MINISTER OF JAMAICA—TRIBUTE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before moving the adjournment of the Senate, I think it appropriate to pay a tribute of respect to the late Sir Donald Sangster, Prime Minister of Jamaica, who died in Montreal on the 11th day of April of this year.

Sir Donald—and he held his title for only a few days before he died—was known personally to many members of this chamber primarily because of his connection with the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. He was in the Parliament of Jamaica for some 18 years. In the course of his parliamentary career he had been Minister of Social Welfare, Minister of Finance, and acting Prime Minister. On February 21, 1967, he became Prime Minister in his own right. His fatal illness came within a month of his election to office and he died at the early age of 55.

There are few men who have meant so much to Jamaica, emerging from its colonial status, as did Donald Sangster, but his career was not only illustrious there. It was illustrious abroad too.

He had been a governor of the World Bank and of the International Monetary Fund since 1963. He attended the Prime Ministers Conferences in 1964, 1965 and 1966. He had a broad outlook on world problems and on Commonwealth problems, and this vast and broad experience inured greatly to the benefit of Jamaica.

He was elected to Parliament first in 1949. He became associated with the work of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association the following year. He attended innumerable meetings and was chairman of the General Council in 1963-64 when a very successful meeting was held on the Island of Jamaica.

To say that he was respected and admired by all who knew him is rather to understate the case.

I frankly considered Donald Sangster to be a catalyst of the Commonwealth. He enjoyed the confidence of the older members of the Commonwealth, the developed countries. But he enjoyed, too, the confidence and respect of the undeveloped, the new countries, the emerging countries. At Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conferences as well as at C.P.A. meetings, he was able to reconcile diverging points of view which might otherwise have led to crises.

He was to be in Malta this coming May for a special meeting of a working party appointed by the General Council, and his absence from that meeting will indeed be a loss to the people who attend and for the work that is to be done.

I should say to the Senate that I had the honour to represent the Government of Canada in Montreal on April 12. On that occasion I attended first of all a very moving private ceremony which was held in a funeral home. This ceremony was conducted by the Reverend Robert Brown of the Anglican Church, chaplain at the Montreal Neurological Institute.

That service was attended by those officials from Jamaica who were in Montreal, by some of his political associates and by those of his relatives who were in Montreal. I was particularly touched by the fact that the doctors, nurses and other people from the Neurological Institute came to that service dressed in the clothing that they wear in their work at that great institution.

He had been there for some two or three weeks, perhaps a little longer, but in that time they had become very devoted to him, and it was a most moving experience to see them on that occasion.

I was greatly impressed, as I am sure all honourable senators would have been, at the lying-in-state in Christ Church Cathedral from six o'clock that afternoon until the body was removed to be taken to Jamaica. The dignity of the Very Reverend Dean Bothwell of the cathedral in Montreal and the collaboration of the Roman Catholic Bishop Carter of Jamaica in the ceremony late that night when the body was being removed, was also an experience one will not soon forget.

A guard of honour was mounted by the Canadian forces. It performed superbly and indeed it was a most appropriate part of the tribute.

Above and beyond all these impressions, I could not help but be moved by the deep sorrow which was evident in the demeanour and upon the faces of his relatives as well as his associates from his native country. Their names I need not mention, but the genuine grief which afflicted them all I shall not soon forget. I was particularly impressed by the fact that for the five hours during which the body lay in state in that beautiful cathedral there were groups of young Jamaicans there constantly. These were young people, gentle people, who had left their country to live in Canada. To them he was Donald, their leader, sprung like them from their Island in the Sun, but snatched by death so soon after his great electoral victory hardly a month before, snatched at the height of his power, snatched before he could realize the achievement of his dreams for the new Jamaica that will surely emerge.

I pay tribute to him not only as a great Jamaican, as a great Commonwealth statesman, but indeed as a great world statesman.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(see p. 1772)

ADDRESS BY THE PRIME MINISTER, THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LESTER B. PEARSON, P.C., AT THE INSTALLATION OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE ROLAND MICHENER, P.C., Q.C., AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA
THE SENATE CHAMBER, MONDAY, APRIL 17, 1967

Your Excellency,

It is my privilege as Prime Minister to extend to you on behalf of the government and people of Canada our warmest good wishes as you assume the high and honourable position of Governor General of Canada.

May I respectfully request, Your Excellency, as your first official duty as the Queen's representative in Canada, that you convey to Her Majesty a message of loyalty and devotion from the Canadian people. Please assure Her Majesty how delighted we are that our Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh will be with us on the 1st of July, to celebrate the centennial of Confederation.

You begin your term of office, sir, at an historic moment. Throughout the one hundred years of our history as a Confederation, the post of Governor General has been filled by men of distinction who have all contributed significantly to the development of Canada and to the achievement of the proud position which we are celebrating throughout this centennial year.

We have been made more aware of the opportunities and the burden of your great office by the unexcelled contribution which your immediate predecessor made to the lasting benefit of all the people of this land. His memory will be treasured and his service to Canada will never be forgotten and I am sure that his life and work will be an inspiration to you as you take up your heavy duties.

We all realize how especially heavy these duties are in our centennial year. It is indeed another evidence of your willingness to serve your country that you readily consented to become Her Majesty's representative in Canada knowing that you and your wife would immediately be faced with a most demanding program of engagements. We, sir, have no doubt that you will meet the challenges of this office with the same skill and wisdom that you have met the others that you have faced throughout your varied career.

We remember well your distinguished performance when you occupied the chair in that other place and "never sold the truth to serve the hour". Although tradition will now bar you from attending there, your reputation is secure as one of the very best of our "first commoners".

You were, of course, no stranger to public service. It has been in the tradition of your family. Your father is remembered as a member of this very chamber where we are now gathered. You yourself, until a few days ago when you received the Queen's summons to represent Her Majesty in Canada, were serving half way around the world as the High Commissioner of Canada to India. There you have been able to test the strength and texture of the fabric of the Commonwealth. At the same time you were the Canadian Ambassador to Nepal and in the clear light of the far Himalayas you may have seen your country, its problems and its future in a new and different perspective.

Tennysons' lines fit well your career,

"Much has he seen and known; cities of men,

And manners, climates, councils, governments

Himself not least, but honoured of them all."

Through all this you have been accompanied and aided by your wife whose qualities of heart and mind have earned her an enviable reputation with all who know her.

Your Excellency, you begin your term of office as Her Majesty's representative in Canada with the best wishes of us all. We welcome you with great good will. Que Dieu vous garde. May God's grace and help be with you.

REPLY OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE ROLAND MICHENER TO THE ADDRESS OF THE PRIME MINISTER IN THE SENATE CHAMBER ON THE DAY OF HIS EXCELLENCY'S INSTALLATION AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA, MONDAY, APRIL 17, 1967

Prime Minister,

So quick has been my transition from New Delhi to Ottawa that I have the sensation of having run all the way, and arrived here amongst you, somewhat out of breath—but as you can see, that does not leave me speechless. On the contrary I am full of ideas and emotions some of which I hope to be able to express to you at least in a preliminary way.

First, I am filled with gratitude for the generous words with which you have welcomed me and my wife and with appreciation for your earlier words, even more consequential, in which you gave to Her Majesty the advice upon which she acted in naming me as her representative in Canada. The honour is great and greatly valued, however awesome the responsibility.

Notwithstanding your encouraging expression of confidence that my wife and I will be equal to the task, I am all too well aware, and here I speak for myself alone, of the gap between my qualifications and the potentialities of the office of Governor General. These potentialities have been amply demonstrated by my predecessors. The Right Honourable Vincent Massey, the first Canadian Governor General, gave the office a new significance for Canadians. Their Excellencies the late Georges Vanier and Madame Vanier in the last seven years have so fully represented all that is good in the whole Canadian community, that they have justly won the respect and affection of everyone. His courageous efforts to complete his task in failing health confirm his place among the noblest of our public men.

With other Canadians we have mourned his loss and offered our sympathies to Madame Vanier with a full realization that no other couple would be able to begin at the high level of excellence and esteem to which they had elevated their public responsibilities.

However, we are greatly heartened in entering upon our term of office by the thought that the Governor General has come to represent the Canadian people as a whole and that in addition to his necessary and important constitutional functions he now symbolizes for Canadians the stability and continuity of their national life and institutions. In consequence all Canadians have a personal interest in the office and in helping the incumbent to reflect their hopes and aspirations for the future. Already we have been encouraged by the good wishes of many of those whom we shall serve, and we hope to earn and deserve such encouragement from all. It will make our task possible and our lives happy. In any event, Prime Minister, I shall not fail through lack of effort nor of will to serve.

I gladly undertake to assure at once to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth of Canada, as you have requested, the loyalty and devotion of the Canadian people and our delight that she and The Duke of Edinburgh will soon be with us to join in our Centennial celebrations. May I add to this message my own humble duty to our Queen and my profound gratitude for the trust which she has entrusted in me.

Canadians look forward as well to welcoming other royal and distinguished visitors from Commonwealth and friendly nations who will be honouring us with their presence during this momentous year. We are grateful for their esteem and respect which will remind us that our birthday celebrations have significance beyond our own boundaries. 1967 is a time to assess our past achievements in the society of nations and to seek means of extending our contributions to the peace and happiness of the whole family of man.

To my friends in Quebec I should like to say that we look forward very much to the pleasure of living amongst them for a time each year at The Citadel. From there my wife and I shall be able to look down the river to the Ile d'Orleans where we have spent many happy days.

We now see in French Canada a renaissance of that creative vigour and intellectual brilliance which have long been a mark of French civilization. All Canadians may well take pride in the achievements which are taking place in Quebec for they will stimulate and strengthen Canada as a whole. We are fortunate to possess two mighty currents of civilization: French and British. To these first mainstreams of our national existence have been added the diverse and notable contribution of settlers from other lands and races who have ventured to our shores. They have provided Canada with additional sources of strength and richness.

We look forward, in due course, to visiting all of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific and Arctic, not forgetting Alberta, where I was born and raised, Manitoba my wife's birth-place, and British Columbia, her former home, as well as Ontario, the centre of my public and professional activities.

Having set ourselves the goal of representing what one Canadian has called "la collectivité entière qu'on appelle le Canada", we shall seek to meet and know Canadians in their home communities. In Government House we hope to welcome Canadians of all walks of life, to provide a neutral and friendly environment for the discussion of differing points of view, and a centre for the encouragement of excellence in all worthy fields of Canadian endeavour.

In concluding, may I add my prayer to that of the Prime Minister that God's grace and help may direct us all in our common efforts to sustain and strengthen Canada, our Home.

23031—132

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 19, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CENTENNIAL OF CONFEDERATION

CONGRATULATORY RESOLUTIONS IN U.S. SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—EXTRACTS FROM CONGRESSIONAL RECORD PRINTED AS APPENDIX

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that on March 14, 1967, concurrent resolutions were submitted to the United States Senate by Senator George D. Aiken of Vermont, and to the House of Representatives by Congressman Cornelius J. Gallagher of New Jersey, extending congratulations to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the 100th Anniversary of Confederation.

These two prominent parliamentarians of our great neighbouring country who have sponsored these resolutions are very well known in Canada by reason of the active part they have always taken in the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, and the great contributions they have made to establish and perpetuate friendly relations between our two countries.

The resolution introduced in the Senate of the United States reads as follows:

> Whereas the year 1967 marks the centennial of the Confederation of Canada; and
>
> Whereas the century of Canadian Confederation has been marked by close ties of friendship and association between Canada and the United States; and
>
> Whereas relations have been strengthened through the annual meetings of the legislators of Canada and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it
>
> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States extends its congratulations and its best wishes to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the Confederation of Canada and in affirmation of the affection and friendship of the people of the United States for the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, the resolutions have been referred to committees—by the Senate to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and by the House of Representatives to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They now have been reported back and adopted unanimously by both houses.

I know that honourable senators would like me to thank the Members of Congress, through the Speakers of both chambers, for the good wishes that they have extended our country on this historic event.

Honourable senators, may I now be permitted to table certain extracts from the Congressional Record of the United States containing the remarks made by the two sponsors in support of the passage of the aforementioned concurrent resolutions. I would ask, with leave, that these extracts be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day. Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of extracts see appendix, pp. 1805-7.)

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I ask a question? I am sure we are all delighted to receive the expression of good wishes from the United States. However, I would like to ask if any Commonwealth countries, for example, or any other countries, have passed resolutions of this kind, and if and when they do is it our intention to have them all published in our records here?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, so far as I am advised, this is the first congratulatory message sent to Canada by any legislative group in the world. I think it is highly appropriate that our nearest neighbours should be thinking of us at this time and that our opposite number in terms of parliamentary establishments, namely, the Senate of the United States, should be so generous and thoughtful in doing this at this time. In saying this I am sure I speak for all honourable senators.

In reference to Senator Brooks' question, Canada will be receiving some sixty or more Heads of State this year, including representatives of the highest level from probably all Commonwealth countries. Whether parliamentary action will be taken or not, I do not know. In other countries if this happens it would seem to me that, for the purpose of the historic records of Parliament, it would be highly appropriate to have such messages placed on our records. I assume that is why the honourable Leader of the Opposition asked the question.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to make it abundantly clear that I am not objecting to this procedure. I appreciate it very much, as I am sure all members of the Senate do. However, it occurs to me that there were references in the press, though I may be wrong, to certain other countries having congratulated Canada on her centennial; and I do not wish it to appear that we are playing any favourites in that connection.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On the contrary, I would hope not. However, I will take it upon myself to make inquiries on this point. Such messages are more likely to come about the first of July than at any other time. I will inquire, and if there are such messages in existence I will notify the Senate. Then we may deal with them as we are dealing with this one.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of a Report, dated March 23, 1967, to the Minister of Labour by the Honourable Mr. Justice C. Rhodes Smith, Industrial Inquiry Commissioner, with respect to the causes of the stoppage of operations at British Columbia Ports, pursuant to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, chapter 152, R.S.C., 1952. (English text).

Report of the Fisheries Research Board of Canada for the year ended December 31, 1965. (English and French texts).

Report and Financial Statements of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to sections 17(3) and 18 of the Export Credits Insurance Act, chapter 105, and sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

HON. SENATORS POULIOT AND WALKER

WELCOME ON RETURN TO CHAMBER AFTER ILLNESS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure I bespeak the views of all when I say how pleased we are to see two of our colleagues return to us in good health, namely, Senator Pouliot and Senator Walker. We missed both of them while they were away and we welcome them back.

HON. M. GRATTAN O'LEARY

FELICITATIONS ON BEING NAMED TO THE CANADIAN NEWS HALL OF FAME

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure we should take judicial notice of the fact that our colleague, the honourable Senator M. Grattan O'Leary, was elected to the Canadian News Hall of Fame, during the recess of the Senate.

There were two others elected with him, both very distinguished journalists and great Canadians, the Honourable Joseph Howe of Nova Scotia and Mr. Ralph Allen of Toronto.

Sometimes I wonder about Senator O'Leary, for he even occupies a niche in stone in the Hall of Fame in this building. But I can say that it gives us great pleasure to live with the immortals.

THE LATE KONRAD ADENAUER

FORMER CHANCELLOR OF THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY—TRIBUTE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I think it would be appropriate in this chamber to mark the regretted death at 91 years of age of Konrad Adenauer, the late Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany.

I wish to point out that in the remarks I make here I am associated with Senator Brooks in the views I express.

The New York Times summarized what Adenauer meant to the world, particularly to the West, when it wrote:

> Unbowed by the years and unspoiled by success as he was undaunted by adversity, he has become an almost legendary figure in his own day.

Honourable senators will know that in 1933 Adenauer, who was then in public life in Germany, was shorn of his official positions when the Nazis came to power, and that he was twice imprisoned during the Hitler regime.

He resumed office after the war effectively in 1949, and at that time he took on the task in such a way as to heal the wounds that war had inflicted upon West Germany. The work he did led to the economic prosperity and political stability of the institutions of Germany.

He was one of the great people in the Christian Democratic Party, or Christian Democratic Union, and he won resounding success at the polls as the leader of that party in 1949, 1953 and 1957.

Perhaps it is needless to add that he was by training a lawyer as well as an economist. He was Mayor of Cologne for 16 years, and during his tenure he transformed that whole city into a modern model.

I cannot think of Cologne without picturing it in its marvellous setting on the Rhine or without seeing in my mind's eye its magnificent twin-spired cathedral and its Shrine of the Three Kings. According to the legend, after the three kings had left Bethlehem they returned to their own countries by way of Cologne, but one of them died there. Whether there is any basis in fact for the legend, I do not know.

The work that Konrad Adenauer did in changing the character and climate of Western Europe after the devastating war of 1939-45 can never be adequately acknowledged. The leadership which he gave as chancellor was one of dignity and self discipline, both in the conduct of the internal policies of his country and in that of its foreign affairs.

It is significant to say that the new attitude of Germany was demonstrated when the Bundestag made a symbolic payment to Israel of $750 million to make up in part for what had been done under another regime in that country to a minority and a persecuted people.

Adenauer has led West Germany into membership in the Council of Europe, European Coal and Steel Community, European Payments Union, European Economic Community, European Atomic Community, Western European Union, and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. West Germany has become an influential member of all these organizations.

He was instrumental in 1957 in reaching agreements in principle for further negotiations on East-West tensions with the Soviet Union, and for further emphasis on the political and economic aspects of the NATO Alliance. Among the many honours he received I am proud to say one was an honorary doctorate from the university of the city in which we are now sitting, the University of Ottawa.

The world, and particularly the Western World, mourns the passing of a distinguished and great statesman.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Davey for the second reading of Bill S-59, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, I do not expect to prolong the debate on Bill S-59, but there are one or two points I wish to put forward.

Before doing so, I would like to congratulate the sponsor of the bill for the very fine explanation he gave of the various points contained therein, the purpose of which is to clear up some of the problems that have arisen in the application of our present Citizenship Act. No doubt in the future we will have occasion to correct some other problems.

A word of appreciation should be said of those who drew up this bill. It is one of the best bills I have seen for some time. The explanatory notes throughout the bill make abundantly clear the reasons for the particular changes that are made, and I hope others in drawing up future bills will take this to heart and follow the same practice, especially with respect to those bills which come from the other place.

Senator Willis last evening made a vital point in regard to our treatment of prospective citizens. I agree that our judges and the officers of the department should be asked to treat these people with every consideration and respect. As he said, they are strangers entering a strange country whose ways are completely different, travelling as we do at a much faster pace than those countries from which these people have come. I have no doubt they feel at a loss and are nervous as to where to start.

We have a great and vast country, with a wonderful and virile people. We are as rich a country as any in the world in the bountiful supply of natural resources. Furthermore, ours is a great democratic nation where freedom is extended to all and where there is room for many more millions of people.

We must show respect to these newcomers by granting them every courtesy, by making them welcome and providing temporary stopping places for them until they can go to their new jobs or get in contact with their sponsors or relatives. A welcoming party should meet the boats and planes as they bring these people to our lands. By that I do not mean officers from the department; I mean various societies such as the churches and the Salvation Army and groups of that nature.

From a number of briefs submitted to the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration by the various ethnic groups, I know they are trying hard to set these people on the road to becoming citizens of this country. They do a great deal, at their own expense and in their own time, trying to assist these individuals to adjust. I am sure that the ordinary citizens of our country could be of valuable assistance to these immigrants in adjusting to new conditions.

One of the things that puzzles me is why so many immigrants do not take the trouble to become fully-fledged citizens of Canada. I understand from the department that many immigrants never bother to apply for citizenship. It seems to me that we need to do a job of "selling" our loyalty, our traditions and our freedom to these people. We do not take enough trouble to indoctrinate these potential citizens, in impressing upon them the great advantages to be had by becoming a Canadian citizen. We should be proud to tell of our history and material progress. We should be proud to tell of our heritage, and of the service in both world wars and the Korean war by not only those of the two founding races but also by representatives of all nationalities who have come to this country; and that they are proud to stand shoulder to shoulder with other citizens in their fight for freedom.

If I might digress a little, as a rule those who have come to this country have been of a very aggressive type; they must have been, otherwise they would never have left their home countries. A large area of that part of Saskatchewan from which I come was abandoned during the thirties, but second generation Germans, Russians, Poles, Hungarians and Austrians stepped into that country during the mid-thirties, and today that area is one of the most prosperous and wonderful one can drive through.

It seems to me we do not even begin to do enough to train newcomers and the children in our schools to respect this country and to help to build a more unified Canada.

Speaking of Germans, I was sorry to hear the Leader of the Government announce that that great man who was Chancellor of West Germany, Konrad Adenauer, has died. When in Germany a short while ago, I had the privilege of meeting him and talking with him. He spoke through an interpreter, but I could see by the twinkle in his eye that he knew what my question was before it had been interpreted to him. I felt he used an interpreter because he wanted a little time before answering questions to make sure he made no mistakes. He did a tremendous job for West Germany. The people of Europe, in general, have his characteristics and if we could only bring more of them to Canada we could make it a more wonderful country than it already is.

I want to say just a word about the bill itself. I am not sure I agree with clause 2(3)(e)(i), which states:

> ...he was forty years of age or more at the time of his lawful admission to Canada for permanent residence and has resided continuously in Canada for more than ten years,

In other words, he could apply for Canadian citizenship at the age of 50, 51 or 52. But, on the other hand, if he was less than 40 years of age—say, 38 or 39—he would have to spend 20 years in this country before he achieved the age of 58 or 59. This is the way I read this clause, and it seems to me unjust. I would be happy to hear the honourable Leader of the Government explain it.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I should like to add just a few words of explanation, and I want to relieve Senator Hollett of the worry and anxiety he expressed last night at the inclusion of the new subsection 6 in section 39 of the act. This new subsection is found in section 9 of the bill, at the bottom of page 6, and it reads as follows:

> Every foundling who was first found as a deserted infant in Newfoundland shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to have been born in Newfoundland.

Newfoundland has not been singled out, because section 7 of the Citizenship Act, which became law in 1946, provides as follows:

> Every foundling, who is or was first found as a deserted infant in Canada, shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to have been born in Canada.

It is only because Newfoundland came into Confederation after the Citizenship Act came into force that we now find a number of tidying-up provisions which ensure that the law which applied generally in Canada up until the time Newfoundland came into Confederation now applies with equal force to Newfoundland.

It seemed to me that the honourable senator was a little concerned about what a foundling is. I have tried to do some research on this. I suppose the best place to find out anything about foundlings is the works of Charles Dickens. However, it would appear that a foundling is a child who does not seem to have any family connections of any sort, and who is completely deserted and on his or her own. As I suspected last evening when I put a question to Senator Hollett, a foundling could be a person of any age up to 21 years. I have heard of a case of a man of 72 years who applied for citizenship on the basis that he was a foundling at the age of 10 when he came to Canada. It was only after a tremendous amount of research that the authorities were able to discover that while it was true that he had come to Canada at the age of 10 years, he had come as part of a settlement of children of that age group in foster homes in Canada. He did not recall anything of those circumstances, but this was something contrary to the law and, therefore, he was not deemed to be a Canadian.

There have been persons of other ages—of the age of 18 and 19 years—who have applied for citizenship on the basis of this section with respect to foundlings. I would say that the only limitation is age 21.

The only other remark I should like to make is that in my opinion these amendments are good. When I referred back to the debate in the Senate on the original bill in 1946 my recollection was refreshed, and I remembered that I was the one who explained it at that time. I must say that that does not seem as long ago as it does when I subtract 1946 from 1967.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak in this debate, perhaps you will consent to my closing the debate on behalf of Senator Davey, who is unavoidably absent this afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I need not compliment Senator Davey, but I do desire to thank him for taking on the work of sponsoring this measure. He has been complimented already by other speakers who have taken part in the debate. This was the second occasion upon which Senator Davey has sponsored a bill in this chamber, and he acquitted himself in a way that pleased all of us.

I thank Senator Willis also for the contribution he made last night. I am advised that while it is true that county court judges and district court judges in many areas do, in fact, deal with citizenship applications, in many other areas there are special federally appointed judges who do this work.

Senator Willis discussed the kind of questions that were put to applicants by the judges before whom they came. Section 10 of the Act requires that a person who is applying for Canadian citizenship must satisfy the court that he or she has an adequate knowledge of the responsibilities and privileges of Canadian citizenship. This might be the reason why an applicant is asked who is the Prime Minister of Canada, or who is the Premier of Ontario or of Nova Scotia, or of any other province. However, I do want to say to Senator Willis that the officials of the department heard his comments last night about the kind of reception these people should be given by the citizenship courts and the citizenship judges. Not only do they agree with his views, but they are going to circulate his speech to all of those men and women before whom these citizenship applications go. Senator Pearson made the same point this afternoon. This is one of the useful things that can be accomplished in a chamber such as this.

Senator Hayden has already dealt adequately with the points raised by Senator Hollett, who also made a valuable contribution to the debate. The reason why these special provisions in respect of Newfoundland are in this bill is as stated by Senator Hayden. If further information is required on that point then I am sure Senator Hollett will be able to obtain it when the bill is before the committee.

I am afraid that Senator Hayden has rather upstaged me on the point of the foundling infant. The definition of an infant in law, as I remember it, is that an infant is a person under the age of 21 years. I am sure there are many young ladies under the age of 21 years in Newfoundland whom a good many of us would like to find as foundlings, if you will, and see what we can do with them and for them!

I was very pleased to hear Senator Pearson commend the draftsmen on the very full notes that appear on the right-hand pages of the bill. This bill is exceptionally well drafted, and I wish the same could be said of other pieces of legislation that we receive here. Commendations of this kind are encouraging to the draftsmen of legislation in the Department of Justice.

I cannot say very much at this time with respect to the welcoming of immigrants to this country, other than to suggest that perhaps Senator Pearson would make inquiries of the officials who will attend before the committee. I do know from my own experience that in the great ports, both water and air, there are organizations who make the extending of a warm welcome to newcomers to this country a special aspect of their work, and who do a great deal in providing amenities and services to these people.

That to me, however, is only the beginning of the process. I think it is proper to say that all Canadians have a continuing responsibility in respect of our treatment of new citizens who come to join us to help build this great half of the continent. I believe our social organizations in many communities recognize this fact, and that our legislators are well aware of the importance of doing all in their power to integrate people in an economic as well as a social sense in the life not only of the individual community but of Canada herself. This is a continuing responsibility. One of the reasons for it is that basically we are all immigrants, but some of us have been here a little longer than others.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, under normal circumstances I would suggest that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour. However, the Chairman, Senator Hnatyshyn is unavoidably absent by reason of illness. Since the Chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee is here today and will also be here tomorrow, I would ask that the bill be refered to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, if that is agreeable.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of the second report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the National Anthem and the Royal Anthem.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, the second report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the National Anthem and the Royal Anthem, as presented in this chamber by the Joint Chairman, Senator Bourget, should, and I have no doubt will, receive the unanimous approval of the Senate.

Canadians from coast to coast and from the 49th parallel to the Arctic, who are now in the midst of celebrating their centennial, will be happy to know that at least the traditional music of "O Canada" and "God Save the Queen" will be made official. We now have the music, but not the words—wordless anthems.

For several years the Government and the people of our country have been preparing for the joyful celebration of the centennial. To give Canada a better image of our nationhood, a new flag was adopted and made official by Parliament two years ago. The Liberal Government employed every means of persuasion and pressure to get the endorsement of a new design for the Canadian flag, and only time will tell how acceptable it will be to the Canadian people.

It would have been expected that the same Government would have been just as zealous in regard to adoption of the Canadian National Anthem and the Royal Anthem. Certainly the intention was made known in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the third session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament on April 5, 1965, which stated:

> You will be asked to authorize my Government to provide that 'O Canada' shall be the National Anthem of Canada and that 'God Save the Queen' shall be recognized as the Royal Anthem of Canada.

Nothing was done in this respect during the Twenty-Sixth Parliament, even though this matter was much less controversial. The Speech from the Throne, at the opening of the first session of the Twenty-Sixth Parliament of January 18, 1966, repeated the same statement. Yet action was not taken until recently, two years after the original announcement and when we are already celebrating our centennial.

In the meantime, the Government has gone ahead on the assumption that the Special Joint Committee would approve the lyrics with the words and poetry of "O Canada" and "God Save the Queen" and has issued, under the authority of the Secretary of State of Canada, a Centennial Guide Book for Teachers, which was edited and published by the Centennial Commission. All honourable senators must have received this bookbinder with the illustration of an old-fashioned school slate having a drawing of the centennial symbol on it. I hope all honourable senators have read the Guide Book.

The first page of the Guide Book contains "O Canada" with an introduction stating that Calixa Lavalée was the composer of the melody, which has universal acceptance, that Judge A. R. Routhier wrote the French words and that Sir Stanley Weir wrote the English version. There is no mention that this is the National Anthem of Canada.

The second page contains "God Save the Queen" and "Dieu Sauve la Reine" with an introduction stating that:

> The composer of the music and lyrics for this hymn has never been definitely identified.

There is no mention that this is the Royal Anthem of Canada.

The Guide Book is excellent in providing suggestions to teachers, both in French and English. A wide variety of activities are proposed for children at the elementary school level and students at the high school level. For example, on page 7, under Flag Day, in February, it is suggested that elementary school pupils do an exercise in penmanship and memorization and write in English and French two verses of "O Canada" and "God Save the Queen" and memorize them. There is Citizenship Day in May, when new citizens are to be welcomed, and appreciation shown for the contributions of the various ethnic groups to Canada.

During the centennial celebrations the Canadian people are urged to be enthusiastic about their country. Yet, the plain fact remains that we do not have an official anthem. This is the responsibility of the present Government. Most people will sing the two anthems found in the Guide Book.

I would like to bring to the attention of honourable senators that the Special Joint Committee, of which I am a member, could reach no agreement as to the lyrics and words of the National Anthem and the Royal Anthem. All agreed that more suitable words and lyrics should be found.

The members felt that the order of reference was much too restrictive to make possible a thorough study of our anthems. Consequently, the Special Joint Committee recommends that it:

> be empowered to call for persons, papers, and records and examine witnesses; to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable and to retain such experts as may be required from time to time.

Just as a national flag is a symbol of our nationhood and sovereignty, so is the national anthem. We should have had our national and royal anthems officially approved by this time so that they would have been sung during the centennial celebrations. At this late date, let us see to it that these anthems be officially adopted at least within the centennial year in order to avoid the censure of future generations.

Report adopted.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved second reading of Bill S-60, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill which it is my privilege to introduce at this time will add a new Part to the Food and Drugs Act, to provide special controls for what are to be called "restricted drugs".

This bill is necessitated by the abuse which is developing in Canada of the drug lysergic acid diethylamide, which is popularly known as LSD.

When the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate asked me if I would be prepared to move second reading at this time, I was not sure whether he asked me because he thought I had had some experience with the drug. However, since then I have got a new title, "Hippy Hammy". I can assure honourable senators that I have had no experience with the drug and, after the research I have attempted to do in preparing my remarks this afternoon, I do not think I ever will.

Honourable senators, the bill itself is brief; it consists of but four pages. The amendments are simple and straightforward, but are of tremendous significance to Canadians and to young people throughout the world.

Owing to the widespread publicity which has been given to this drug, all honourable senators are undoubtedly aware of the problem created by its abuse. It may be useful at this point if I trace briefly the background respecting the drug and say something about the reasons why special controls for it have become necessary now in the public interest.

The drug LSD was first developed some twenty-eight years ago. It did not progress beyond the stage of an experimental drug, the medical value of which has never been demonstrated, nor the dangers associated with its use.

In 1962, when the Food and Drugs Act was amended to deal more particularly with new drugs, a special schedule was added covering what may be referred to as "prohibited drugs"—those are drugs the sale of which is prohibited in Canada.

Because of the status of LSD and its lack of demonstrated medical value, this drug was added to the schedule in 1962. Regulations were devised, however, which permitted the sale of the drug to institutions approved by the minister, for the purpose of clinical and laboratory research in those institutions by qualified investigators, for the purpose of determining the hazards and efficiency of this drug. This was intended to provide for the legal distribution of the drug, for research purposes in approved institutions, where strict supervision could be maintained over patients using the drug. I am advised that this arrangement was endorsed by the Canadian Medical Association.

Honourable senators, this drug, which is classed as an hallucinogenic drug, is extremely powerful. A patient receiving an administration of it may have physiological effects lasting even for twenty-four hours. It was considered, therefore, that the use of the drug must be confined to research and experimental purposes, and that only in an institution, under careful supervision, where the patient could be controlled, guarded and observed as the drug was being used. In other words, the drug is not one that has any general employment in the practice of medicine, as far as the present knowledge of the drug is concerned, nor is it one that should be used by general practitioners in the course of their day-to-day practice.

Honourable senators, this is the background of the situation and of the legislation now covering the circumstances under which research into the use of this drug may be carried out.

In view of the fact that the drug had never been popularly used, either in the medical field or for any other purpose, it was considered that the prohibition of its sale, including its distribution, would be sufficient safeguard and would still permit facilities to institutions for experimental purposes under proper supervision.

However, within the last year or more, this particular drug has attained, for non-medical use by lay people, a popularity which is not confined to Canada but is virtually global.

The problems presented by the abuse of this drug have been of such major concern to so many countries that only last year the use of the drug was the subject of a study by a special committee of the United Nations Narcotics Commission. The commission unanimously adopted a report condemning the non-medical use of the drug and recommending that measures be taken to confine its use wholly to medical research proposals in institutions where adequate supervision could be exercised. This supervision was strongly supported by the Canadian Drug Advisory Committee. I am sure all honourable senators are aware that this committee is composed of specialists charged with the responsibility of advising the government of the day on the use or abuse of drugs.

Honourable senators, notwithstanding the reported dangers of the non-medical use of this drug, it has found an unfortunate popularity in Canada and the United States by high school and university students, as well as a class of anti-social persons commonly known as the beatniks. Indeed, there have been some deaths and mental disabilities which can be attributed directly to the improper use of the drug LSD.

In the controls which have been exercised, under the authority I have described, possession of the drug itself is not an offence. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police are very concerned with the growing abuse of LSD and feel that the situation will continue to deteriorate unless unauthorized possession is made an offence. This change would enable the police to deal more effectively with trafficking in the drug and possession for the purpose of trafficking, as well as with illegal possession. It is hoped that the offence of illegal possession will discourage young people from using it and will help to control trafficking in it. This, coupled with better education and understanding on the part of not only young people but all of us, may lead to the reduction and eventual elimination of the improper use of this highly dangerous substance.

Honourable senators, I think that what I have said sufficiently outlines the background which necessitated this proposed amendment to our present legislation. However, honourable senators may be interested in a brief outline of the various controls which the Food and Drugs Act now provides and which will be supplemented by the addition of Part IV, which is contained in the amending bill before us.

The Food and Drugs Act provides authority to control the sale and conditions of sale for drugs generally throughout Canada. Many drugs available in Canada are not subject to any special measure of control and can be freely purchased in any drug store in Canada. These are called over-the-counter drugs. There is, however, a class of drugs which possess some special dangers and which should only be used under medical advice and under a prescription. These are commonly called the prescription drugs, and the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act contain a list of such drugs which may only be dispensed on a medical prescription by a qualified physician.

A third group of drugs is classed as controlled drugs. These drugs may only be dispensed on a medical prescription, but in addition there are special control measures with respect to their importation, manufacture and commercial distribution throughout Canada.

The drugs in this list are the barbiturates and the amphetamines. Because of the evidence of a growing traffic in these drugs, it was considered back in 1961 necessary to develop a special control for these particular drugs. I am advised that the control measures that were adopted at that time have generally speaking been effective. I should, however, point out that the possession of a controlled drug is not in itself an offence, although trafficking and possession for trafficking are offences.

The next group of drugs listed in a special schedule to the present act, of which the sale is prohibited, are thalidomide and LSD. I have already outlined the exceptions to the prohibition with respect to the legislation concerning LSD and its availability to institutions for experimental work.

The next class of drugs is the narcotics, which are subject to special legislation and which need no elaboration for our present purposes. Perhaps I should point out that our control of narcotic drugs is in conformity with our international obligations under various narcotic conventions and treaties to which Canada is a party. These are the categories and controls which are presently provided under existing legislation.

With the increasing popularity of LSD for non-scientific or medical purposes, it has become necessary to introduce an additional control which will recognize this and similar substances for the dangers which they possess and which will prohibit both unauthorized possession of them and trafficking in them.

The purpose, therefore, of the bill before us is to establish a new class of controls for what is called restricted drugs. The essential difference between a restricted drug and a controlled drug will lie in the offence of unauthorized possession, in addition to more rigid controls with respect to the legal distribution, which will be limited to medical and scientific research. The drug which is of medical concern is LSD, but the legislation is wide enough to permit other drugs to be added by regulation.

It may be appropriate in this connection to refer to a recent press article attributing to one of the proponents in the United States of LSD a statement to the effect that a more potent substance is available to replace LSD. This amendment would therefore permit appropriate action being taken, if any such substance should become available in Canada. In other words, it can be added to the new Part IV by regulation.

It is not contemplated that drugs will be added to this schedule provided by Part IV, unless they possess some very special dangers and ought to be restricted by rigid controls to scientific or experimental use only. Such drugs would, generally speaking, be of a type which would not be used by general practitioners in their medical practice, except under strictly controlled conditions and supervision in institutions. Under no circumstances would these drugs be legally available for sale in Canada for self use.

In the opinion of the enforcement authorities, the addition of Part IV to the Food and Drugs Act will be of material assistance in controlling and reducing the present non-medical use of LSD. As new drugs possessing danger of abuse or similar hazards are developed, the legislation will permit adequate controls being imposed with respect to them.

Honourable senators may wonder why LSD could not merely have been added to the narcotics schedule and thus been brought under narcotic control. I should say that this step was carefully considered by the appropriate authorities. It was rejected essentially for the reason that LSD and drugs of similar character are neither traditionally nor medically regarded as narcotics. They are not under international control as narcotics. It has, therefore, been thought wise that we ought to develop a pattern of control which could parallel in some respects the type of control exercised over narcotic substances but which would recognize the medical difference between these experimental drugs and those which are subject to the Narcotics Control Act.

I have already mentioned that as the possession of a controlled drug is not an offence, it would have been insufficient to have classed LSD as a controlled drug. I should perhaps go on to explain briefly that, under the regulations which are proposed, all dealings in LSD will be strictly controlled; only a licensed dealer will be empowered to deal in this drug, and his licence will control strictly the circumstances of his dealings. This at the present time will be limited to the sale to authorized institutions for particular research activities that have proper supervision and qualified investigators. The possession of the drug will therefore be limited to licensed dealers and to approved institutions, and by personnel employed whose duties require them to be in possession of the drug.

In conclusion, it is considered by the competent authorities that these measures will go a long way in helping to control the growing abuse of LSD. It is hoped that with better public understanding and education we will eventually be able to eliminate the non-medical use of LSD in our country.

Perhaps before I conclude my remarks I should refer honourable senators to page 1 of the bill at the bottom of the page where the new Part IV appears and where we have the definition section dealing with possession, regulations, restricted drugs, trafficking and so on, followed by the proposed penalties for possession or trafficking or both.

One other fact that I should acquaint you with is what facilities there are available in Canada today for the legal distribution of LSD. There is only one firm in Canada legally authorized to import LSD. That is the firm of Sandoz in Montreal, a subsidiary of Sandoz, Switzerland, the firm which originally invented and developed LSD. By agreement Sandoz distributes LSD exclusively to Connaught Medical Research Laboratories in Willowdale, Ontario, which firm is the sole distributing agent for this drug in Canada. In addition to the controls set up in our regulations, Connaught has worked out a form of application and certain conditions which must be met by an institution which applies for a quantity of LSD. The information required by Connaught includes the name of the investigators who will be responsible for its use in their institution. There is no suggestion of any diversion of LSD in Canada from legal sources, and all of the LSD which has been encountered to date in this country for illegal use has been smuggled into the country. It may have been legally purchased in the first instance in Europe, or illegally manufactured somewhere on the North American Continent. It is my understanding that the police in fact have seized LSD that they know is the result of illicit manufacture somewhere in North America, but which has been smuggled into Canada.

It is my hope that those senators with medical training and some of those with legal training will take part in the discussion of this piece of legislation at this time. I expect it would be the wish of honourable senators to have this bill go to committee, and it would be my intention to move that it be referred to committee, provided you are prepared to give it second reading.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, Senator McDonald has explained this bill very fairly, and my remarks on seconding it will be very brief.

We are faced with great danger as a result of this drug. LSD, or lysergic acid diethylamide, which is the proper name, is indeed a very dangerous drug. What is it? It is an Ergot drug that derives from a fungus which goes normally with a cactus, or other plants, but which has very deadly effects. What effect does it have? Well, it is understood that the cells of the brain require certain food, a certain stimulus—Scrotinen is the name given to it—and for some reason when this drug is administered that precious substance does not reach the cells of the brain and as a result its action is very much confused.

What does it do? It brings depression, hot flushes, sweats, and it brings convulsions and mental breakdown which result in certain delusions and false beliefs that cannot be corrected. It brings hallucinations and panics and the whole character of the person is usually changed. The pupils are dilated. Sometimes the effects pass over in two or three hours, sometimes they last for weeks and sometimes they last forever and the person is a mental cripple for the rest of his life. Sometimes it brings on convulsions and death.

What use is it? As has been explained, it is of some use. Sometimes it can be given under proper supervision to people who are very badly depressed because it brings a certain amount of ecstasy. Sometimes in certain stages of alcoholism it is of value. It can possibly be given to a person who is greatly depressed because of dying of cancer or something of that nature. It always brings a feeling of unreality, resulting in split personality, schizophrenia, and, as I said, it banishes reality. It brings on a false impression in that it gives people the belief that they are something that they are not; sometimes it makes them think that they are supermen. For instance, one drop in a cup of coffee has caused a woman to jump out of a window and kill herself. Just one very, very small dose caused a man driving his car to feel that he was driving into the river just at Niagara Falls. Fortunately when he stopped at the red light he had sense enough to follow the other cars. But he thought he was going right into Niagara Falls.

So, honourable senators, you will understand that it is a very dangerous drug. The Province of Alberta has banished it completely except in certain institutions. The Province of Saskatchewan and many states are doing the same. It is quite appropriate, since this is a criminal matter, that the Government should prohibit the use of this drug except in very special circumstances.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this particular subject today, and without seeming to be perfunctory I wish to congratulate the sponsor of this legislation. He has certainly learned his lesson well, particularly his explanation of hallucinogenic aberrations. I like to get one of those terms in once in a while to get back at my legal friends.

I want to congratulate my esteemed medical colleague, Dr. Gershaw, on the remarks he made.

Some honourable senators may recall that when I spoke on the amendments to the Food and Drugs Act in 1962, when discussing the drug thalidomide, I stressed the importance and the dangers of LSD. At that time we did not enforce it in the way that we should have, and we are probably doing so now as a result of the undue propaganda which this matter has received from the C.B.C.

Associated with me in these remarks is my colleague of St. Michael's Hospital, our neuropsychiatric research man, Dr. Henry Berry. This presentation is based on the latest scientific research that has been done in this particular field right up to the present time, and it has been my good fortune to serve on the Medical Committee of the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto and to have sat on the Connaught Committee in dealing with this drug and its circulation through Sandoz, as Senator McDonald stated.

Today I am going to speak mainly from a medical point of view. I think this is probably one of the most important pieces of legislation that has come into this chamber. I support it in full, but I do not think that the penalty is drastic enough. There is a fine differentiation, Senator McDonald, between what is a narcotic and what is not a narcotic. The medical dictionary describes a narcotic as one who is in a state of stupor. Well, I have seen many of these people, and they are certainly in a state of stupor. From a medical point of view the question whether this should be termed and used under the heading of a narcotic has still to be decided. It is my opinion that it should be.

Now, lysergic diethylamide is one of the alkaloids which can be derived from lysergic acid. The two main sources of LSD are ergot, which has been known as a poison for many centuries, and the Morning Glory plant. I believe that is one of the most important sources of its manufacture before being smuggled into this country.

The Swiss chemist Hoffman accidentally discovered the hallucinogenic properties of this drug in 1943, as mentioned by Senator McDonald. At that time it was tested for its oxytocic effects. By that we mean the speeding up of a pregnancy; and it was used in that particuler capacity at that time.

The effects of this drug are divided into various headings, and I feel this is important enough, Senator Connolly, that we should put this on the record, seeing that you were good enough to have the bill introduced in the Senate. I am sure we shall get speedy action on it.

When used for therapeutic effects, a dosage of 50 to 400 micrograms—a microgram being one millionth of a gram—produces the following changes: During the first thirty minutes to two hours there are visual distortions, increased vividness of colour, a shifting of objects about the room and shimmering distortions of outlines and surfaces. Autonomic effects of tremor, perspiration, dilatation of the pupils, palpitation as well as nausea and vomiting, are seen. It must be a very unstable individual who wants to take this flight of fancy! The visual patterns become more ordered with the appearance of geometric figures, swirling images with a great rapidity of movement and intensity of colour. However, when asked to do a drawing, here are some of the things they draw—a good example of modern art, that is about what it is! The senses of touch, smell and hearing are similarly intensified, and cross-over effects between senses may occur.

During the second to fifth hour the patterns and images become more meaningful, emotions tend to be labile with laughing, deep depression and weeping. Early memories may be recalled with violent emotional outbursts, and the person may act out his emotions towards people whom he misidentifies. Acts of dangerous violence occur. Experiences of a religious mystical quality and a sense of communion with God also occur—as under the "Arch Priest" Timothy Leary, the psychedelic exponent of the North American continent. He should be locked up!

The third phase lasts from the fifth to the tenth hour, during which the patient returns to reality but with a recollection of the experience he has just had.

Examination of patients under the influence—and I have seen them with my colleagues—and in the above stages reveals a loss of logical thought and capacity for reasoning, flight of associations, preoccupation with the intense images and an inability to speak or communicate in a normal manner. Problem solving, capacity for learning and motor performance are impaired. Anyone who saw the show Sunday afternoon on "Heritage" saw two good examples of these individuals.

What is its usefulness in psychiatry? The usefulness of this drug in psychiatric treatment is not yet established. It has been used in a variety of psychiatric conditions, and has now been applied to most forms of psychiatric abnormality. These conditions include alcoholism, drug addiction, personality disorder, schizophrenic illness—by that we mean a division of the mind, distortions, cleavages —involutional depression, chronic neurosis, adolescent behavioural problems, childhood schizophrenia; and it has also been used in group therapy.

In Senator McDonald's own province is an outstanding research man in this particular field, Dr. Abraham Hoffer, who has reviewed the clinical studies with this drug and has had a very extensive experience in its use—and I wish to congratulate him. Dr. Berry of St. Michael's in Toronto has also been engaged in this work; and Dr. Baker at the Toronto Western Hospital and the University of Toronto published his experience with this drug in 150 psychiatric patients in the Canadian Medical Association Journal in 1964.

Although many reports are optimistic in tone, it is generally held that the use of LSD in psychiatric treatment is at an early and exploratory stage. There is some indication that it is of value in the neurotic disorders, alcoholism, some forms of personality disturbance, and of little or no value in paranoid states—that is a tragedy—acute psychosis and the organic psychoses.

What are the contra-indications to this drug? They vary, and include pregnancy, epilepsy and organic brain disease.

The dangerous effects are the important ones I wish to put on the record. They are three. The first is a panic reaction with violent or destructive emotional outbursts; the second, prolonged psychosis; and the third, recurring perceptual distortions or feelings of depersonalization up to a year after last taking the drug.

Panic reactions, acute, and at times violent emotional outbursts occur—and this is important—in the experienced drug user as well as the novice, with terror and excitement. These patients may require hospital care, and recovery is usually rapid under proper supervision. At times the experience may lead to tragic results—like the young man who committed suicide in Toronto a couple of weeks ago. Hallucinations may appear, and in one published instance voices forbade a man who was preparing for an examination to continue with his studies. E. Geert-Jorgensen reported that of 129 patients treated with LSD, one committed suicide a few hours after the treatment session, another shot himself six months later, four attempted suicide during their course of treatment, and months after treatment had ended several had shown a spontaneous revival of the effects the drug had originally produced. Cohen, in his book Drug of Hallucinations, 1964, London, has gathered information systematically on these side effects of the drug.

I now turn to the problem of ever-widening distribution. The drug has been widely publicized in the press and by other media—I have already referred to Leary—and at university seminars, and there is considerable evidence that its use in the style of self-experimentation has also increased. It has been extolled by the leader of this North American cult as a sacramental agent, opening the path to new and spiritual experience—complete balderdash!

There is an evident need for absolute control of distribution of such a medication—hence the urgency of this legislation being passed—and no consistent argument can be offered against such control. Its indiscriminate use by "thrill-seekers," adolescent groups, students and searchers for the "aesthetic experience" can too often end in tragedy and in permanent emotional brain damage and disability, as Senator Gershaw stated.

There has been general agreement that LSD in itself is not a drug of addiction, but the people who go after it are those of emotional instability. It should be noted, however, that certain patients, usually with psychiatric abnormalities of the character disorder type, who have repeatedly taken the drug for the emotional experience that if offers, have difficulty in stopping its use.

Distribution of this drug should be restricted to qualified investigators and physicians performing psychiatric research in a university setting or conducting properly designed and controlled studies of the therapeutic effect of the drug, as the sponsor has stated.

The sale of LSD has been prohibited for several years under the federal Food and Drug Act, except to legitimate scientific and medical institutions doing laboratory or clinical research with it.

This bill will outlaw possession of the drug and possession for trafficking of LSD, by establishing a schedule of hallucinatory drugs under the Food and Drug Act and setting out conditions for their sale. This would make it possible for the Government, by administrative order, to add new hallucinatory drugs to the list as they become known.

The use of LSD for "kicks" by untrained thrill-seekers has been the cause of growing concern. Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia have outlawed it.

Before I close, I would like to make a few brief remarks on one of the outstanding men in this field in America, William A. Frosch of the Bellevue Psychiatric Hospital in New York. He recently published a work which was given to me by Dr. Berry. I put this extract on the record for the benefit of the Department of National Health and Welfare:

> Although the dangers associated with the taking of LSD are mentioned in the popular literature about the drug, someone intent on obtaining the more highly publicized positive effects can readily dismiss them especially since any resultant psychosis is pictured as readily reversible and a step toward health, which in a series of hospital patients has shown it most certainly is not.
>
> In the uncontrolled setting in which LSD frequently is used in the community, the danger of bodily injury also exists, since a person under the influence of the drug believes himself invulnerable, and may take unwarranted risks. Another danger of the use of LSD, in our sample, was the rationalized purpose of selfhelp that enabled some people to avoid seeking more constructive ways of dealing with their problems until their life situation became such as to make meaningful change very difficult.
>
> Our continuing evaluation of the results of taking LSD bears out the early impression that it is a dangerous drug when self-administered. Nevertheless, the danger of adverse reactions does not appear to be limited only to those who take the drug without supervision. Psychotic reactions have occurred when the individual was carefully selected and took the drug in a controlled environment, or in settings considered optimal by advocates of its widespread use.
>
> These preliminary findings suggest the need for further research into the adverse—as well as the beneficial—effects of LSD, with particular emphasis on the recurrence of symptoms.

Honourable senators, it is my considered opinion that anyone who will peddle LSD will peddle morphine, will peddle heroin, will peddle cocaine, and the penalty to be imposed cannot be too severe.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I confess at the outset that I am not as knowledgeable on this subject as are Senators Gershaw and Sullivan, but then, on the other hand, who is? We are extremely fortunate in having among our number two such eminent physicians who know what they are talking about, and who can talk to us in a fashion we understand. However, I gave myself a cram course on LSD this morning.

Last night I was listening to the radio and watching television, and I heard a few sniggering announcers—

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: It was the hockey game.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No—on the C.B.C. and other stations talking about this bill now before us being the biggest happening in the Senate in a long time. I did not know about that. I thought we conducted public business here in our usual responsible manner, but at that moment I made up my mind that if this was going to be a great event, then I was going to participate in it.

So, I read up on as much of this subject as I could this morning, and it will be clearly understood that my contribution at the present time is theoretical, and not hallucinatory. From what I read I came to this conclusion—and this much I do know—that this drug interferes with the mind of man, and makes him in certain circumstances less than a beast. That has been borne out by what has been said already. I support the bill.

I know that LSD is a valuable and powerful tool for clinical research into psychiatric disorders. Experimental tests under strict control have been carried out on people who show anti-social tendencies, mostly of the criminal kind. There has been some success in its use on alcoholics, but potentially it is a tool in the field of psychiatry, with unpredictable results.

A dosage of a very minute amount—I ask honourable senators to imagine a dose that will cover the head of a pin—will produce an hallucinatory state for from 10 to 24 hours. Misuse of it, of course, as has already been indicated, can do great physical damage, particularly to the liver.

No one can predict how a person will react to the use of this drug. Its use may lead even to suicidal tendencies, and certainly to very profound psychiatric upsets. It is used very often by the misguided as a psychic energizer to produce interesting and attractive sensations—or so they say. On the other hand, from what we have heard here, and from the honourable senator who introduced the bill, it is quite clear that its use invites disaster. I was told this morning by a man in our Government who had seen a film of a person under the drug, that that person was in a state of absolute terror.

Sometimes we ask ourselves: Who uses these drugs? I am told, and the literature indicates, that they are students at universities seeking kicks, to use their expression; they are young professional people experimenting; they are self-proclaimed creative types who use it, I suppose, to justify themselves. Then, there are the fringe people of all kinds who will do anything for attention.

The drug is difficult to detect. It is odourless, colourless and tasteless. It is not of an addicting kind, but it is powerful.

How do these people obtain it? Some of the speakers this afternoon have already indicated that. The drug is bootlegged from countries outside the American hemisphere, and sold on campuses and on the streets in many places. It is obtained sometimes from manufacturers abroad, and is misused. It can be home-brewed by someone who knows something of chemistry. I am told that you drop a tiny bit of it on a cube of sugar which you eat, and away you go! Sometimes it will be rubbed on the glue on the flap of an envelope, so that it may be licked off. These are not my thoughts on the matter. I obtained this information from the literature I read, and I believe this to be so.

I will do as my honourable friend suggested, and approach this subject in a legal fashion by calling some experts as witnesses, because I do not have the knowledge that Senator Gershaw and Senator Sullivan have. We have in this country what is now called a psychedelic cult—a dangerous fad—which is led by a former professor of Harvard, Timothy Leary, who calls this drug a cerebral vitamin.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: He is from Yale.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am told he is from Harvard, but that does not make any difference. He says it is a cerebral vitamin, and he refers to it as "psychedelic," which comes from the Greek and means, "mind manifesting." I quote him as saying:

> I get revelations from my cells which are wiser and older than my mind.

I cannot add anything to what has been said, that is, that the drug should be used for research and experimental purposes under strict supervision, controlled, guarded and observed.

This morning I was startled when I found a full page advertisement in the Vancouver Sun of March 11, 1967, which reads in part as follows:

> Published by the Vancouver School Board—A message to young people and parents regarding the dangers of LSD (Lysergic Acid Diethylamide).
>
> As the Vancouver City Medical Health Officer, I wish to make it very clear to all citizens that LSD is an extremely dangerous drug.

He goes on to urge them to read most carefully what he terms as five major dangers associated with LSD:

> First, the Individual: Persons who use LSD are often young. They cannot cope with the overpowering effects of the drug.
>
> Second, Psychological and Physical Reactions: LSD can result in bodily harm to the users and to others. It can create a panic state of mind. It can cause distortions of shape, size, colours, distances, sounds and time. A second may seem an hour; an hour, a second. A person on the fourth story of a building may believe he is two feet from the ground and jump to his death.
>
> Contrary to what some users say, LSD is not a psychedelic drug. It produces hallucinations. LSD does not expand the mind; the drug shrinks it.
>
> The effects are not temporary. Repeat of these hallucinations can occur later at the most unexpected times with great danger to everyone around. Therefore, the brain damage may be permanent even after one single experience with LSD.
>
> Third, Impurities and Unknown Dosage: The impurities and the impossibility of controlling the dosage in the commonly obtained form of LSD add to the dangers of this drug. The regular medical dosage is so small that one ounce of LSD would be sufficient to treat 300,000 patients.
>
> Fourth, the Legal Consequences: The sale of LSD in Canada is prohibited. It is even illegal to give or transfer LSD to any person. The only exception is for use at approved research centres, on the approval of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.
>
> The penalty for any violation can be up to a $500 fine and/or six months' imprisonment if the conviction is by summary court procedure. The penalty on conviction by indictment procedure can be up to $5000 fine and/or three years' imprisonment.
>
> If prosecution proceeds by indictment and there is conviction, the offender then has a criminal record across Canada. This record will prevent him from emigrating in the future to a number of countries in the world. It will also prevent him from holding public office and other important positions in industry, business and the professions.
>
> Fifth, the Social Consequences: The possible social consequences are serious. Case histories show a slipping in achievement in every phase of life. Secrecy that surrounds the use of LSD and all illicit drugs tends to drive young people into groups separated from the rest of society.
>
> The overwhelming evidence shows LSD to be an extremely dangerous drug. No one should allow it to enter his or her body. The only exception would be under the highly skilled control of a medical specialist at an approved research centre.

Now may I take you back to February 4, to an article by Sydney Katz, a Toronto Star staff writer of considerable repute. I am quoting from the Toronto Star:

> The dangerous mind-changing drug LSD is being bootlegged into Toronto in increasing quantities, Metro police and RCMP report.
>
> Doctors and other health authorities worried by this influx warn persons using the drug that when taken in uncontrolled surroundings it can have extremely dangerous effects.
>
> To find out what these effects are, I attended an LSD party in a comfortable apartment in downtown Toronto at which four people consumed sugar cubes containing 450 milligrams of LSD.
>
> For three of them it was the second LSD party in as many evenings.
>
> Chemically known as lysergic acid diethyalamide, LSD is one of the most powerful and weird drugs known. Odorless, colorless and tasteless, a miniscule quantity can cause a normal person to experience hallucinations, delusions and a variety of indescribable physical and phychological sensations.
>
> The strange manner in which the drug causes the senses to run amok was well illustrated at the party I attended.
>
> A 31-year old actress, Valerie, gazed at a thick red, orange and yellow rug in terror. "I've got to keep fighting it...It wants to haul me in. I'm in despair. I've got to hang on."
>
> An attractive 19-year old salesgirl, Jill, sobbed bitterly for over an hour. "I'm afraid...I see ugliness, coldness and dishonesty. It comes at me...it's all around me. I'm having a bad trip."
>
> Phil, a 26-year old musician, sat quietly in a corner absorbed by the strange changes taking place in his body. "My head feels big and I feel pressure points building up in different places around my body."

Bruce, a handsome 27-year old man who has been addicted to heroin for eight years, says: "This is beautiful stuff. I hear rapturous music. I see trees burst into flame. Compared to LSD, heroin is death."

Federal health authorities regard LSD not as "a beautiful drug" but as a deadly chemical. It is not even available to doctors.

Then, from the Toronto Star of February 10, 1967:

LSD is "easily available to anyone who takes the trouble to look for it" at prices from $2.50 to $10, three experts in psychedelic drugs agreed last night.

On the eve of the first in-depth look at the drug experience ever staged on a North American university campus, a University of Toronto audience heard that:

There are at least 80 substances capable of producing psychedelic experiences and hallucinations; three-quarters of these substances are derived from plants that can be grown in North America.

Under LSD, people have learned German in a week, been cured of alcoholism and psychosis, killed themselves attempting to fly and collapsed in mental hospitals unable to face themselves or reality.

Young people are using the drugs "in the worst possible way—joy-riding" in order to "get where the action is."

"Perception 67"—the weekend University College festival to investigate the delicate and deadly mind-expanding drugs—has taken elaborate steps to present all sides and not act as a show case for the drug experience.

As a matter of fact, I rather thought they had taken such steps:

In last night's preview Hart House debate, three guest experts blazed away from all sides, stealing the show from a student argument on whether people should have a right to "tune in, turn on, drop out."

Here again we have the Star columnist, Sidney Katz quoted a little later:

...that much of the values of the drug are "fantasy and self-hypnosis" used by youngsters searching for instant psychoanalysis and trying to avoid decisions.

And Senator Sullivan referred to a report in the Toronto Telegram of March 20, 1967, reading as follows:

Exponents of the controversial drug LSD contributed to the death of a 20-year old Metro boy, his father charged last night.

John Stern, a talented piano student from Strathearn Road, plunged 120 feet to his death from the Bloor St. East viaduct Saturday night after experimenting with the drug.

"There's not the slightest doubt that disciples of LSD contributed to his death, his murder," the father, Milton Stern, said. "So does every publication that in any way glorifies this drug as a magic gift that can broaden and enlighten anyone."

The dead youth attended the psychedelic festival, Perception 67, at the University of Toronto recently in which the feature speaker was Dr. Richard Alpert, associate of Dr. Timothy Leary, driver of the LSD bandwagon in the U.S.

Dr. Alpert urged the use of LSD as a creative boon to artists in all fields.

I want to close with a somewhat lengthy article by the most eminent authority in Canada on the subject. It is well worth while putting it on the record. Since this bill has originated in this house, I think we owe special duty in having the record complete so that others may be informed by what has been said. This is by J. Robertson Unwin, Director of Adolescent Service, Allan Memorial Institute, McGill University, Montreal:

The death of a twenty-year old Toronto student last weekend isn't the first to be connected with the unsupervised experimentation with the drug LSD. Each year deaths are reported as occurring during or following the state of abnormal consciousness induced by this substance; many of these deaths are unpredictable suicides, a rare one is due to homicide, and a few are accidental, the result of acts of daring carried out in a state of excitement during which judgement is seriously impaired; the intoxicated and deluded person is convinced that he is capable of superhuman feats, such as flying off high buildings.

If you still don't know what LSD is, or what its effects are, you must have been isolated from the mass media for years. Magazine articles and television programs have glamorised this drug to the point where it is a serious, and seemingly reasonable, temptation to a very large number of our young people. This irresponsible journalism, presenting as it does the seductive promise of self-discovery, unbounded creativity, orgastic feelings and splendid visions, usually underplays, negates or ignores the very real dangers. It is left to psychiatrists, parents and educators to witness and regret the damage, sometimes irreversible, which LSD can do to developing personalities. Deaths are only one aspect of the other side of the coin; a percentage of LSD users will suffer from passing but serious mental disturbances which will require psychiatric attention and probably hospitalisation; others, already vulnerable, will develop long-lasting psychoses which will require psychiatric treatment for many years; quite a few people will experience acute terror, some will develop such a depth of depression during the LSD experience that suicide becomes a distinct possibility; some depressions will occur only some time after the immediate effects seem to have worn off, so that a suicide may go unexplained. Rarely a state of extreme rage induced by LSD will lead to murder. Psychiatrists have observed a type of "echo" phenomenon in which some time after the actual LSD "trip," students re-experience visions and changes in their awareness of their body, without taking further LSD; this understandably panics them. Lastly, a few young people, lacking the self-confidence to meet the ambiguities of every-day life and doubting their ability or worthiness to form satisfying relationships, will become habitual LSD users, welcoming escape into a world of lotus eaters, into which the reality around them can intrude only vaguely and transiently. Their intellectual and personality development stagnates, they find themselves even more alienated from the world outside the drug cult, and retreat to the periphery of society into a parasitic group composed of misfits, smouldering psychotics and unfulfilled messiahs. Proposed laws banning the possession of LSD will possibly place the distribution into the hands of narcotic syndicates which will try to introduce the LSD user to heroin so as to produce a drug addict and thus a steady market.

There is reason to expect that, in responsible professional hands, LSD may be of definite use as part of the treatment of psychiatric conditions which have proved difficult to relieve by our present techniques. Encouraging results have been reported but the technique is still in the experimental stage and much research remains to be done. It is ironic that, as a result of the public hysteria surrounding the biased publicity given to LSD, research workers sometimes find it difficult to obtain adequate legitimate supplies of this drug which virtually any youth can pick it up on campus or in coffee houses. And make no mistake about the easy access which young people have to this substance at every major university or high school and in every large city in Canada—nearly every student must decide whether or not he wants to try LSD—for he most certainly will have the chance.

I plead with you not to try this drug unless you are under medical supervision. The effects on any given person are still largely unpredictable, and only a doctor will know how to correct the undesirable or dangerous side effects. To take LSD without medical surveillance is to play Russian roulette with your identity and potential: You may sabotage your mental health and prostitute your future. Don't be seduced by petulant prophets of the new morality who have themselves flamed out in their own quest for a place in society and would drag you down in the whirlpool of their own temper tantrums. Don't let them turn the cool generation into the fool generation.

Honourable senators, he is the expert and there is not much that I can add to what he has had to say. From everything I have read and everything you have heard today, this drug seems to be very popular among those "nuts" who are looking for "kicks".

Those who try LSD sometimes look upon themselves as courageous, pioneering individuals. I think they should be reminded that an LSD trip is not always a round trip and most likely can lead to a trip to an asylum, a prison or grave. What we are doing here today needs very urgently to be done.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Walker, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce numbers 1291 to 1333, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted, on division.

Leave having been granted to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 1264, for the relief of Doreen Katherine Pegler Zieroth.

Resolution 1265, for the relief of Leslie Gordon Lloyd.

Resolution 1266, for the relief of Irene Bofilios Meisel.

Resolution 1267, for the relief of Kathleen Agnes Smith McDonnell.

Resolution 1268, for the relief of Gabriella Pozner Kamel.

Resolution 1269, for the relief of Marlene Alice Fortin Kelly.

Resolution 1270, for the relief of Joan Elizabeth James Piercey.

Resolution 1271, for the relief of Adolf Alfred Kehle.

Resolution 1272, for the relief of Lise Lafond Prud'homme.

Resolution 1273, for the relief of Joan Irene Evestaff Forward.

Resolution 1274, for the relief of Dulcie Forde Rea.

Resolution 1275, for the relief of Carol Joan Robinson Moneypenny.

Resolution 1276, for the relief of Patricia Ruth Edgar Jotkus.

Resolution 1277, for the relief of Agapit Mathieu.

Resolution 1278, for the relief of Edouard Georges Oscar Beltrami.

Resolution 1279, for the relief of Agnes Vickers Driver.

Resolution 1280, for the relief of Roger Bisaillon.

Resolution 1281, for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Butler Tsubota.

Resolution 1282, for the relief of Shirley Marie Burns Palmer.

Resolution 1283, for the relief of Mary Helen Maher Gilfillan.

Resolution 1284, for the relief of Granville Hubert Nickerson.

Resolution 1285, for the relief of Mary Louise Lockett Reid.

Resolution 1286, for the relief of Jan Alexander Mygind Barynin.

Resolution 1287, for the relief of Georges Lauda.

Resolution 1288, for the relief of Jocelyne Mallette Ladouceur.

Resolution 1289, for the relief of Rita Genereux Marquis.

Resolution 1290, for the relief of Sylvia Mary Dennis Gough.

Resolution 1291, for the relief of Jean Marjorie McNally Haymond.

Resolution 1292, for the relief of Evangelia Mavrogianni Saleh.

Resolution 1293, for the relief of Monica Solange Perdriel Clayton.

Resolution 1294, for the relief of Marion Elizabeth Forsyth Bowers.

Resolution 1295, for the relief of Irmgard Durmann Gollnik.

Resolution 1296, for the relief of Patricia Anne Fletcher Astwood.

Resolution 1297, for the relief of Dorothy Gloria Fellows McCarthy.

Resolution 1298, for the relief of Lilian (Lily) Last Haynes, otherwise known as Lilian (Lily) Lastova Hanak.

Resolution 1299, for the relief of Aline Bourassa Fregeau.

Resolution 1300, for the relief of Barbara Simota Francescone.

Resolution 1301, for the relief of Joseph Michel Charles Arthur Charlemagne Bedard.

Resolution 1302, for the relief of Joseph Victor Amedee Mercier.

Resolution 1303, for the relief of Lise Suzanne Hebert Lépine.

Resolution 1304, for the relief of Paul Lecavalier.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that these resolutions be considered at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKES AFFECTING THE PUBLIC WELFARE—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to the disruptive and costly effects of strikes in services affecting the public welfare.—(Honourable Senator Farris).

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, I do not intend to discuss this matter at this time. I want to do considerable study on this matter before I am ready to speak to it.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1786.)

CENTENNIAL OF CONFEDERATION

CONGRATULATORY RESOLUTIONS IN U.S. SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—EXTRACTS FROM CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

CONGRATULATIONS ON CENTENNIAL OF THE CONFEDERATION OF CANADA

Mr. Aiken: Mr. President, I send to the desk a Senate concurrent resolution extending the congratulations of the U.S. Congress to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation of Canada.

For some years now, I have served as chairman of the Senate delegation which participates in annual Canada-United States Interparliamentary meetings. In cooperation with Representative Cornelius E. Gallagher, who serves in a similar capacity in the House of Representatives, I am today introducing this resolution.

It may seem like a small thing for the Congress to extend its congratulations to the Parliament of Canada on this occasion. I must note, however, that it is usually the good things that go unnoticed. One of the good things in our foreign relations has been the close and understanding relationship between Canada and the United States. Certainly, when one thinks of states throughout the world with long borders, there are few who have had such friendly relations as have existed between Canada and the United States. Indeed, close association often breeds quarrels and disrespect. This has not been the case between our two countries.

I know the Senate will approve this concurrent resolution unanimously and I hope that members of this body may find occasion to speak of our close relationship.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of the concurrent resolution printed in the Record.

The Presiding Officer: The concurrent resolution will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the concurrent resolution will be printed in the Record.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 16

Whereas the year 1967 marks the centennial of the confederation of Canada; and

Whereas the century of Canadian confederation has been marked by close ties of friendship and association between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas relations have been strengthened through the annual meetings of the legislators of Canada and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States extends its congratulations and its best wishes to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation of Canada and in affirmation of the affection and friendship of the people of the United States for the people of Canada.

—Senate
March 14, 1967
p. S3690

By Mr. Aiken, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, without amendment:

S. Con. Res. 16. Concurrent resolution to extend the congratulations of Congress to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the Centennial of the Confederation of Canada (Rept. No. 77).

Mr. Aiken subsequently said: Mr. President, today the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations reported favorably and unanimously on Senate Concurrent Resolution 16 which extends the congratulations and best wishes of the Congress to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the Centennial of the Confederation of Canada.

Mr. President, this favorable report sets forth the reasons for the resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to have an excerpt from the report and the resolution (S. Con. Res. 16) printed at this point in the Record.

There being no objection, the excerpt from the report and the concurrent resolution were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM REPORT ON SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 16

Senate Concurrent Resolution 16, to extend the congratulations and best wishes of the Congress to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation of Canada.

PURPOSE OF THE RESOLUTION

The purpose of Senate Concurrent Resolution 16 is to extend congratulations and best wishes of the Congress to the Parliament of Canada as a gesture of goodwill and friendship in marking the 100th anniversary of the confederation of Canada.

COMMITTEE ACTION

Senate Concurrent Resolution 16 was introduced by Senator Aiken, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Canadian Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Relations, on March 14, 1967.

DISCUSSION

July 1, 1967 will mark the 100th birthday of Canada, our friend and neighbor to the North. On that day one hundred years ago, four British colonies banded together in the Confederation of the Dominion of Canada. These former colonies, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, and Quebec, have grown to a federal state of ten provinces and two northern territories sprawling in beauty and grandeur from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from midcontinent to the North Pole.

The relationship between the United States and Canada is unique in the world community. There are probably no two countries in the world more similar in character and national values, the products of a common heritage and mutual interests spanning the entire spectrum of international association. The relationship between the Congress and the Canadian Parliament is in keeping with this tradition. Delegations from the Congress and the Canadian Parliament meet annually to discuss matters of mutual interest through the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group. These meetings have resulted in strengthening further the strong bonds between our respective legislative bodies.

It is fitting and proper that the Congress should take action to formally extend its greetings and best wishes to Canada's Parliament to mark this centennial year. The passage of this resolution will be but a small token in affirmation of the respect and affection of the people of the United States for the people of that great land.

S. CON. RES. 16

Whereas the year 1967 marks the centennial of the confederation of Canada; and

Whereas the century of Canadian confederation has been marked by close ties of friendship and association between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas relations have been strengthened through the annual meetings of the legislators of Canada and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States extends its congratulations and its best wishes to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation of Canada and in affirmation of the affection and friendship of the people of the United States for the people of Canada.

—Senate
March 20, 1967
p. S4013

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Speaker, I am introducing this resolution to extend the congratulations of this body to the Canadian Parliament on the occasion of the Canadian Centennial.

As chairman of the House delegation to the annual Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, I can unhesitatingly attest to the numerous and close ties between the United States and Canada. The many official and unofficial relations between our two countries are evident on the national as well as individual level. The more than 5,000 miles of undefended frontier between the two countries is as much an example of mutual trust as it is of mutual understanding. And while this may sound like a well-worn cliché, how many other countries in the world can make a similar claim?

Moreover, the unity that is exemplified by the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group is not only a symbol, but a manifestation of the growing harmony that defines our relationship. This is to be seen in our mutually beneficial trade patterns as well as the obligation we share in the defense of North America through the combined command known as NORAD.

So, it is well that we should take time out of our busy days—days when every decision made seems to be a decision which will bring us closer to peace in the world—to recognize the peaceful and harmonious relations that have existed between the United States and Canada since 1867 when the four provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick were united and formed the nucleus for present day Canada.

I would hope that everyone in the House will vote for this resolution, and that our Canadian counterparts to the north will be reminded of the esteem and respect in which we hold them and their beautiful country.

—House of Representatives
March 14, 1967
p. H2647

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON THE OCCASION OF THE CENTENNIAL OF THE CONFEDERATION OF CANADA

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution No. 28, expressing the sense of the Congress on the occasion of the Centennial of the Confederation of Canada.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 280

Whereas the year 1967 marks the centennial of the confederation of Canada; and

Whereas the century of Canadian confederation has been marked by close ties of friendship and association between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas relations have been strengthened through the annual meetings of the legislators of Canada and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States extends its congratulations and its best wishes to the Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation of Canada and in affirmation of the affection and friendship of the people of the United States for the people of Canada.

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Speaker, it is a rare occasion for this House to have the privilege of expressing its sentiments on the centennial of another nation. We have such an opportunity today. This year marks the 100th anniversary of the confederation of Canada.

We date our start as a nation from a revolution. Canada dates its start from an evolution. In 1867 the British Parliament enacted the British North America Act which brought together four provinces—Upper and Lower Canada—now Ontario and Quebec—Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in a governmental structure similar to that of England. Since that date the geographic growth of Canada has been much like that of the United States in the 19th century and early 20th century—the inclusion of the western and central provinces—until today its ten provinces and its territories span the continent and stretch beyond the Arctic Circle.

As a nation Canada has conducted its international affairs with dignity and with understanding. In a world of extremism it has followed a course of moderation and of tolerance that mirrors the temperament of its people. We in the United States should count among our blessings the presence on our border of Canada.

It is easy to become lyrical about our northern neighbor—its unbounded natural beauty, the warmth of its people, the ease with which we can communicate with each other. It is probably the only country where a visiting American has a sense of being abroad yet completely at home.

This House salutes Canada in its centennial year and wishes for it another century of peace, progress, and prosperity.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

—House of Representatives
March 20, 1967
p H2960

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 20, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of a list of recommendations of the Royal Commission on Government Organization, approved by the Government on March 9, 1967 (English and French texts).

Copy of a letter, dated February 2, 1967, addressed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the President of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited with reference to the supply of natural gas to Eastern Canada. (English text).

Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons respecting Mr. Justice Leo Landreville referred to in the Second Report of the said Committee, tabled in the Senate on March 17, 1967 (Issues numbered 1 to 7, both inclusive). (English and French texts).

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-59, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-59, to amend the Citizenship Act, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendment:

Page 2: Immediately after line 20, add the following as new subclause (4):

"(4) Subsection (8) of section 10 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'(8) Subparagraph (i) of paragraph (c) of subsection (1) does not apply to a person who

(a) has resided continuously in Canada for a period of one year immediately preceding the 1st day of June, 1956, and has been admitted to Canada for permanent residence prior to the 31st day of December, 1956 and, in addition, has also resided in Canada for a further period of not less than four years during the six years immediately preceding the 1st day of June, 1953; or

(b) acquired Canadian domicile before the coming into force of this paragraph'."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that this report be taken into consideration now.

Honourable senators, the amendment which was made in committee this morning was one which was requested by the department. While in the reading of it, it sounded quite lengthy, the amendment as to subparagraph (a) is simply the re-enactment of subsection (8) of Section 10 in the exact language as it now appears in the act. But subparagraph (b) contains the new part. It simply preserves any rights which up until this bill becomes law are enjoyed by any individual in Canada by virtue of his having acquired what is called immigration domicile.

May I explain that under the Citizenship Act as it now stands, domicile for purposes of citizenship is defined as being domicile under the provisions of the Immigration Act. Now, under the provisions of the Immigration Act, in order to acquire domicile, the conditions that you have to establish are: lawful admission to Canada; the establishment of a residence in Canada, and the specific intention to remain permanently in Canada. After five years have elapsed from the date when that occurs, then you have acquired, under the Immigration Act, what is called immigration domicile.

Now, immigration domicile does not necessitate physical residence in Canada for every day of that five years. For instance, you could at the end of five years acquire immigration domicile, if you had lawfully landed, had established your residence and had expressed the intention of remaining permanently. You may have then gone out of Canada for several years in connection with some project or enterprise, working in another country, but while you are away that time is running, and if when you return five years have elapsed from the date on which you were legally landed, and you had met these other requirements, you are then said to have had immigration domicile and, under the Citizenship Act at this moment, you would have domicile for citizenship purposes.

But in this bill before us we have changed the provision in relation to domicile and have provided that for citizenship domicile you must spend in Canada five years out of the eight years immediately preceding your application for citizenship. The thinking behind this is that people who are going to acquire Canadian citizenship should have a longer period in Canada in order to soak up and become familiar with the attitude and spirit of Canadianism and to get to know the country, the people and their living habits.

So you have this marked difference now under the amendments of the Citizenship Act contained in this bill. There is the requirement of physical residence for a period of five years within the eight years immediately preceding the application. Because of that there could be some people in Canada now who have acquired immigration domicile because they have met the requirements, and if so it is not the intention that when this bill becomes law they should be deprived of those rights. If they have acquired those rights, subparagraph (b) of the amendment today saves those rights for them, and they do have the necessary domicile to apply for Canadian citizenship.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: I think we all agree with the amendment; it is very appropriate. We also appreciate the explanation given by the honourable chairman of the committee.

I am sorry I had to leave the committee this morning before this matter came up, because I had intended to have something to say about it. May I say that there were a few things about the committee which were a little disappointing, and in saying that I do not mean the explanations given by the minister, because she gave the explanations as pertaining to her department, which has to do with citizenship. Now Citizenship and Immigration have been divided, and in my humble opinion that was a great mistake; no two subjects are more interlocked. It did occur to me at the meeting of the committee this morning that there should have been information available from the two departments as they apply to citizenship and to immigration. This information should have been known by the department concerned with citizenship, and they should have been able to answer the questions that were asked. Frankly, it would appear from today's meeting of the committee that in the administration of this department and in the administration of the department concerned with immigration you could not find a better example of the right hand not knowing what the left hand was doing. They deal with the same people and the same subject matter.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You mean behaving like strangers?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, they were strangers. They did not know the answers to the questions asked. I really think those two departments are so closely connected that it should still be the Department of Citizenship and Immigration instead of as we now have it, the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Manpower is a very important matter, but to my mind it comes under the Department of Labour rather than under the present department. I hope the Government will take into consideration the question of uniting these departments and putting them on a commonsense, logical basis, the same as they were before.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If they were in the same building where rapid communications could take place, it would serve the same purpose.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: No, it would not. We asked questions this morning that the department of citizenship were unable to answer. I think the chairman will agree with me—and I do not wish to give the impression of speaking for him—that there was information asked for this morning which should have been known by the officials of the department of citizenship, because, as I have said, immigration and citizenship are very much interlocked, and their work is very much the same in some matters.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): On behalf of the Government I would say that the remarks that have been made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) bear more than casual scrutiny, and I will undertake to see that the views which he has expressed here are placed before all the ministers concerned. I think that would include the minister in charge of citizenship, the minister in charge of immigration and manpower, and also the Minister of Labour. I will do that at the first opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: May I add a word? I was concerned this morning because in seeking some information it appeared that certain statistics were in a straitjacket. By that I do not mean that the citizenship department did not want to furnish the information, but they just did not have it. I cannot conceive of a situation where you should not have two departments working more closely together than in this field, because actually the citizenship department takes over after the immigration department has done a certain amount of its work, and I would think that from the earliest time, when a person becomes a potential candidate for citizenship, this information should be building up in Citizenship as well as in Immigration.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I wish to join with my colleagues who have welcomed the four new senators to this great hall of fame, the chamber of the Senate.

We have a fifth great lady as one of our colleagues. We have a former cabinet minister, a Privy Councillor, who is known for the brilliancy of his mind and the kindness of his heart—and I say that in spite of the fact that I may often disagree with him. Besides that, we have a gifted former leader of the Liberal party in the Province of Ontario, and a very dear friend who was the right arm of the Honourable Paul Martin and our colleague Senator Croll, in Windsor.

Honourable senators, I want to ask a question of you, a question that I have asked myself. It is this. We are all grateful to the party that appointed us to the Senate, and it is a legitimate feeling. However, how long is the period during which that gratitude to the appointing party will preclude us from expressing freely our opinion on any matter?

I wonder what would be the reaction of my colleagues to that question, because on one occasion when I was leaving this building, I met at the Senate door a leading member of the Opposition who asked me what kind of trouble I would make for the Leader that afternoon. What happened was that I fell on the stone and could not put my question. I was very much surprised that anyone was under the impression that when any member of the Senate asks a question he means to make trouble for someone. I replied that I had never made any trouble for my Leader in the Senate, and that I would never do so.

With regard to the bill that is before us, I regret to disagree with my Leader. I find it is an awful piece of legislation. I do not blame the present minister for that, but it has been from the very beginning, because the word "citizenship" is all wrong. We are not in a republic; we are in a kingdom and we have a Queen, and the Queen is the head of our state; and we do not see the Queen of Canada without the Kingdom of Canada.

Therefore, although I was born a British subject—as most, if not all of you were —afterwards, when the citizenship legislation was passed, I became a citizen of Canada automatically and also a citizen of the Commonwealth, because the Commonwealth is an organization. I do not mean the British Commonwealth; I mean the Commonwealth without the adjective "British", which includes in its membership countries like India and Pakistan, whose heads of state are elected presidents. Each one of us now, after having been born a British subject, is also a citizen of Canada and a citizen of the Commonwealth.

I understand that those who reside in a real republic can be called citizens. Those who live to the south of us are called citizens of the United States, and that is the right way to designate them. But, when we have a Queen as the head of state then those who live in the kingdom are subjects of the Queen and not citizens. Therefore, the use of the word "citizen" is improper. I do not know why it was used in the first place.

This morning the Minister told me that she had seen signs in Great Britain mentioning "British citizens." Well, Englishmen have the same right as Canadians to make mistakes, and to change the meaning of words from that given in the dictionary. My contention is that that inscription was wrong. It was wrong in the same way as the title of this citizenship bill for Canada is wrong.

When legislation similar to this is discussed in England they do not speak of citizenship; they speak of nationality. They talk of the British nationality of the British subjects, who are subjects of the Queen of Great Britain and her other possessions.

This is the first point that I wish to make. In due course I may try, with your help, to have this word changed in order that we may have better legislation on the Canadian nationality.

Honourable senators, there is something else I want to say. I agree entirely with what the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) has said, and I am very glad that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) has said that he will submit that suggestion to the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It would be a very good move to place immigration and the so-called citizenship in the same department.

I have only one other thing to say. I should like to refer to what was said in the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster Hall on May 8, 1937 about migration to Canada. It is only one paragraph, and I ask you to permit me to read it:

> Assisted migration means more relief to the unemployed. What we need in our country is experienced farmers. The "Back to the Land" policy has been a failure during these last years...The Dominions are not supposed to be clearing houses for any part of the Empire.

The expression that was used was "dumping ground." The autonomous countries of the Commonwealth should not be the dumping grounds for the unqualified.

I should like to qualify what I have just said by mentioning that some friends of mine who are just back from the British Isles told me that a very large number of residents of the West Indies have gone to London to get the dole—not to work, but to get the dole which is available there in considerable amounts. There were some articles in the press about it.

Before I sit down, I want to warn the Government to be very careful in bringing to this country immigrants that are not qualified; they should all be screened. It should not be considered a matter of race, because there are bad French immigrants as there are good ones; there are bad English immigrants, as there are good ones, and there are good and bad people of every race. To discuss immigration from the racial point of view is a great mistake; it must be discussed according to the personal worth of each immigrant.

Honourable senators, the quotation I have given is from a speech by Jean-François Pouliot, M.P., Temiscouata.

Report adopted.

23031—133½

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Earl W. Urquhart, for Hon. Mr. Davey, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

JOINT COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I have the indulgence of the house merely to state that the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament on Divorce was called to meet at the half hour, which is now five minutes late, and that a number of us must withdraw for that purpose. I wish my fellow members to be so advised.

NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY

NEWS REPORT—INQUIRY

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, yesterday Canadian Press and C.B.C. news items indicated that as a result of the bids received on the first portion of the Northumberland Causeway being higher than the departmental estimates, the contract would not be awarded, or as an alternative the design would be altered to eliminate the railway crossing. I would ask the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) if he can assure the Senate that there has been no change in Government policy in regard to the Northumberland Causeway and that the contract will be awarded as scheduled.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I think I should take this question as notice, since I am advised that there is no change in Government policy in respect of the causeway. I also have heard some discussion to the effect that part of the newspaper report arose from certain calculations that were made, which I understand were ill-founded in fact. Beyond that, I think I should not go this afternoon, because I do not have adequate information. However, at the next sitting I will bring whatever is available and give it to the Senate at that time.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 25, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

NEWSPAPER REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Mr. Speaker and honourable senators, before the orders of the day are called, may I rise on a question of privilege.

I would like to comment briefly on a remark made in the Montreal Gazette this morning by a Dr. Morton Shulman of Toronto. Dr. Shulman says that our LSD proposal on legislation is the wrong approach.

This man thinks he speaks with a degree of infallible authority on every subject. He pontificates as though he is the last word.

As a medical man, may I say that when Dr. Shulman establishes himself as an authority in some field of medicine, I may accept him.

EXPO

INQUIRY RE TRAVEL ARRANGEMENTS FOR SENATORS ATTENDING OFFICIAL OPENING

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, may I take this opportunity of asking the Leader what are the arrangements for transportation to Montreal on the day of the official opening of Expo 67? Will it interfere with some of the Senate meetings?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The official opening is to take place on Thursday of next week. The travel arrangements will probably be similar to those made on the occasion of the visit by Commonwealth Parliamentarians.

I do not wish to become dogmatic and have the last word on this, but I expect that due notice of the arrangements will be sent to all honourable senators in ample time for them to take advantage of them.

I believe it would be the desire of all honourable senators, assuming that the other place does not sit—and I think this is a fair assumption—that the Senate should not sit on that day.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald for the second reading of Bill S-60, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, had I known we were going to hear such eloquence and common sense yesterday, I would not have allowed my name to be put down here. I wish to congratulate Senators Gershaw, Croll and McDonald on their very able presentations; but I am sure that everyone will excuse me if I cite for special attention the masterly address of one who in this house is in a better position to talk on this subject than anyone else, my friend and your friend, Senator O'Leary.

An Hon. Senator: Senator Sullivan.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes, I should have said Senator Sullivan.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): One Irishman is as good as another.

Hon. Mr. Walker: It is all the same, they are all great men. The trouble is that the name O'Leary is getting quite close to that of Dr. Tim Leary, a great proponent of LSD. Some people get it mixed up at times with N.D.P., but the mixing is purely coincidental. They have only one thing in common, they have—

Hon. Mr. Lamontagne: Hallucinations.

Hon. Mr. Walker: A new senator has supplied the word—they have hallucinations. So that he may get credit for this, may I say that such word has been supplied by our new and able Senator Lamontagne.

When I listened to Senator Sullivan on St. Patrick's Day, I wanted to make a contribution. My ancestry goes back to the Battle of the Boyne. But when he got through, everything was said and I could do nothing but quietly slip away.

On medicare I had a speech already prepared. I worked nine hours on it. I prepared it myself and I wrote it myself. But when Senator O'Leary—excuse me, Senator Sullivan, the other great Irishman—got through his discourse, he had said everything. I said nothing and I quietly slipped away.

Today I was tempted again to do the same thing because, like Alpha and Omega, it was the beginning and the end of this mighty debate on LSD. Perhaps for the first time in this debate, however, we can deal with the bill itself and find out what the sections of it refer to.

Before doing so, however, I want to set my friend Senator Sullivan correct. In the Journal today, the headline states that Senator Sullivan urges "Lock Leary Up". Well, he may not be locked up today, but he has been convicted and sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment—this great proponent of LSD in the United States—not under any Act pertaining to LSD, because there is not a national Act there, but because of his participation in the use and propagation of marijuana. This is something in the right direction.

I find it very difficult to account for the tremendous increase in recent months in the use of LSD across Canada. I can think of three good reasons. One is the C.B.C. which, in four shocking programs, shocking to the point of being beneath contempt, glorified the use of this drug and made it attractive to young people. This is one of the most shameful things the C.B.C. has ever done. Widespread has been its influence, and it has become smart now for the young people to use this drug.

Today I was handed last night's Telegram, with pictures of eight authorities to say that the LSD bill before the House is not deterrent. As you look at them, one cannot tell who is male and who is female, unless the editor has the names mixed up. Those who have masculine names seem to be women, and vice versa.

Looking at them all, somebody said—it was my son who said it—"Aren't they a sleazy looking bunch of kooks?"

If this is the effect of LSD, all we should do is publish pictures, not of what they see in hallucinations but of what we see when we look at them.

The second tremendously harmful influence was the article which glorified the use of this drug, in Life magazine, the magazine with ten million circulation.

When you speak to young people about it, they say: "What about Life, did you see what Life says?" I am not going to devote any more time to it, because that magazine is published in the United States, though it is widely circulated in Canada.

The third reason—around Toronto, anyway—is that the Board of Governors—and my friend, Senator Sullivan, is one of them —allowed a symposium on the use of LSD at the University of Toronto, attended by hundreds of young people. The symposium has become the thing to attend, and it is becoming immensely popular. It would appear to be, although it is not, under university auspices.

Thirty-five years ago I was one of the Crown prosecutors for the Dominion Government. As you can imagine, the Liberal Government was not in power in those days. I used to prosecute, through the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, those who trafficked in opium and heroin. There was a commissioner of police who used to sign his telegrams to me: "General Sir James MacBrien." As a young prosecutor, I felt very important, in getting these letters of instruction from General MacBrien. As prosecutor, I knew how difficult it was for those very able-bodied and dedicated police—as they were then and as they are today—to get the evidence to sustain a prosecution.

Therefore, although I do not agree with the principle involved, in how far this bill has gone, I am going to study with you, very briefly, the clauses of this bill and point out the need for them.

Here is a drug which is colourless, odourless, tasteless, can be carried around in blotting paper or in cubes of sugar as well as in a bottle in its original liquid form. The required dose is one thousandth (1/1,000) rather than one hundredth (1/100) of a gram. Prohibition, therefore, whether desirable or not, is very, very difficult thing to enforce, as you can see.

Somebody has said that because of the minimal amount necessary for a person to "take a trip" into the land of hallucination —just a minute speck of it is sufficient for that—if you took a pound of LSD and put it in the water supply of a city, it would be a very effective way in time of war of putting the whole city out of commission. Whether or not that will ever be tried, I do not know.

The effects of LSD have been gone into by Dr. Gershaw and Dr. Sullivan in great detail, and I shall not attempt to repeat all of its effects, including the final result of suicide. In fact, that is possibly what happened to that young, talented Toronto student who apparently committed suicide. I am sure, however, that suicide is a misnomer there. It was an accident in his case because, like so many other people under the inflence of this drug, he no doubt thought he could stand on the viaduct and fly. They believe they can fly, and that is one of the strange effects of this drug.

As a result of it they feel capable of almost anything, including flying.

Now, shall we study the bill just for a moment? It is very brief and, after all, it is the bill that you are going to pass, not the effects of LSD. We have here Bill S-60, an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act. As you know so well, the Food and Drugs Act has rather a simple name but, nevertheless, it provides authority to control the sale and conditions of sale for drugs generally throughout Canada.

In clause 1, which substitutes a new Section 30 for the old one, we see, in addition to what it already does, that it now controls "goof balls" and barbiturates. It now proposes not only to control drugs such as those, but it is going to restrict the use of certain drugs.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And possession of them.

Hon. Mr. Walker: And also possession, yes, and that is very important. The terms of this bill, so far as many parts of it are concerned, parallel the control of narcotics as in the Narcotics Control Act. The penalties are not as severe, but they should not be as severe because we are dealing with people who know not what they do; they are young people—just as with our own children and grandchildren as we watch them grow up until they learn through experience—and at the present time there are tens of thousands of these young people using this drug who really are doing so with innocent intentions. Nevertheless, the matter has gone so far that a halt must be called.

If you go over to page 1 of the bill, you will see that the restricted drug as used means any drug or other substance included in Schedule J. In Schedule J, at the back of the bill, we find the only drug which comes yet under this act is LSD.

You will notice, though, that Schedule J is left open, and I am sure, as this excellent department which controls these matters finds and experiments with other drugs, including mescalin, they will be added to this schedule. Some day that and other drugs will perhaps be added to it, but not until these matters have been completely investigated.

Now, on page 2 section 40 in the amended bill recites that no person shall have a restricted drug in his possession, except as authorized by this Part.

Since LSD is the restricted drug, you cannot have it in your possession. Subsection 2 says:

> Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and is liable
>
> (a) upon summary conviction for a first offence to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment, and for a subsequent offence to a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both fine and imprisonment.

Now, that is a good thing. It is not as tough as the penalty for peddling, using or having in possession heroin or other such drugs, but it is sufficient to get started, because with young people, whether it is $1,000 or less, or whether it is imprisonment, it is to them a very serious penalty, and until they are brought to their senses something has to be done to protect them from themselves.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: And to get the peddler.

Hon. Mr. Walker: And, as we also used to do with the police, we tried to get the boss peddler. He was so smart, however, that he always had stooges acting for him, distributing the opium or heroin, and I am sure it will be even more difficult to get the peddler of LSD. Upon conviction of an indictable offence—and I am referring to subsection (b) of subsection (2),—a person is subject to a fine of $5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years. In other words, where the prosecuting authorities feel that the accused is really in possession of this drug to use it for peddling in a big way, they can lay an indictable charge. And for people who are convicted of such offences, the fine can be as high as $5,000 and there can be a term of imprisonment not exceeding three years, or there can be both fine and imprisonment.

Students I am sure would not come under that subsection, but nevertheless it is necessary to include it so that the top people who are really responsible for this thing can be properly punished.

Now, in Yorkville in Toronto you can see the effects of this drug. All you have to do, as I often do, is walk up Avenue Road around Yorkville. You can see by the faces of the people you meet that they are either taking goof balls or LSD. They are certainly taking something. You can see the same look over in England on Carnaby Street, London, where I have watched them, and even on King's Row. I went to a bazaar on King's Row last September and found that this wonderfully historic street is now desecrated by beatnik people who have subjected themselves to the use of drugs. They were there in states of stupor, carrying on bazaars, but so far as I could see everybody was too stupid to sell anything. Everybody seemed to be under the effects of some narcotic.

Section 40, honourable senators, deals only with the possession of the drug. Section 41 is a very important section which says that no person shall traffic in a restricted drug or any substance represented or held out by him to be a restricted drug. In other words, no one shall sell LSD or peddle it.

Then, in subsection 2 it states that no person shall have in his possession any restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking. Even if he is not trafficking but has the drug in his possession for that purpose, he is guilty.

Subsection 3 states that:

> Every person who violates subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an offence and is liable
>
> (a) upon summary conviction, to imprisonment for eighteen months; or
>
> Upon conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for ten years.

There is no question of a fine here but simply imprisonment. There is no alternative. There is mandatory imprisonment. Fines are no good. We found that out years ago. These traffickers in drugs can afford to pay the fines and go scot free. Putting them in jail is the only way to get them out of the trade, and even then you will only get them out of the trade until their conviction has expired and they get back at it again.

Then if one of the big kingpins is caught we find that he is liable, under subclause 3

> (b) upon conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for ten years.

That is about what they did to Dr. Timothy Leary in the United States because of marijuana. In other words, if the Attorney General through the Crown Attorney presents an indictment, it is up to the judge and the crown attorney to see that accused is properly tried, and if he is convicted he can be put in jail for a period of ten years. This will not apply to a student, but it will apply to the real masters behind the running of this iniquitous drug.

Clause 42 is simple enough, but I must admit that on first reading I could not understand it. It reads as follows:

> 42. (1) In any prosecution for a violation of subsection (2) of section 41, if the accused does not plead guilty, the trial shall proceed as if the issue to be tried is whether the accused was in possession of a restricted drug contrary to subsection (1) of section 40.
>
> (2) If, pursuant to subsection (1), the court finds that the accused was not in possession of a restricted drug contrary to subsection (1) of section 40, he shall be acquitted,. . .

In other words he may be charged with having it in his possession, and, secondly, he may be charged with trafficking in it. But if he is acquitted on the charge of trafficking, then the court may go ahead and find that the accused was at least in possession of a restricted drug under subsection 1. Then, having found that, and if he has pleaded "not guilty," and if found in possession, he shall be given an opportunity of establishing that he was not in possession of a restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking. In other words, once he is found in possession and it appears that he was trafficking as well, he shall have an opportunity of proving that he was not trafficking in the drug, and thereafter the prosecutor shall be given an opportunity of adducing evidence to the contrary.

Subclause 3 reads:

> (3) If, pursuant to subsection (2), the accused
>
> (a) establishes that he was not in possession of the restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be acquitted of the offence as charged but he shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (1) of section 40 and sentenced accordingly; or
>
> (b) fails to establish that he was not in possession of the restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged and sentenced accordingly.

In other words, he shall be sentenced for trafficking.

This is a different situation from that which existed in the law when I was a criminal lawyer thirty or thirty-five years ago. At that time we always followed the old British tradition that an accused was innocent until proven guilty, and that he was at all times entitled to the benefit of the doubt. Here the onus has somewhat shifted, because here there is almost a presumption of guilt to be rebutted by the accused himself. This is something that we do not like; I do not like it; I am sure my learned friend Senator Hayden does not like it, and I know most of us do not like it, but instead of being as rigid as we used to be, we have to apply common sense. In those days we did not have anything of such anonymous quality as LSD to deal with, a substance that you could hide almost anywhere.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: We did not have common sense either.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I don't agree that we did not have common sense either, because we always went on the basis that the accused was innocent unless proved to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Here he still has to be proved guilty, but the onus has shifted to him and he must show that he was not trafficking.

Let us suppose a man is apprehended, and is found to have in his possession a large quantity of LSD. Is it not obvious that he has not that large supply for his own use? What is he going to do with it? He could not use a large supply in a hundred years. Therefore the element of proof of trafficking comes in. This is an element of proof; this is evidence as such, and the Crown can use this evidence, provided it does so properly. It is then up to the accused to show that he was not in fact peddling the drug, despite the presumption that he in fact was. Now, this is very difficult to swallow.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask a question? While you are dealing with the very question of onus, this clause has struck me as putting a very heavy onus on the accused, and I do not see in this clause or any subclause any wording to the effect that the accused would also have the occasion or the opportunity to prove how he came into possession. It seems very onerous on an accused, if he cannot prove that he was trafficking, that he is still guilty of being in possession. Supposing somebody just throws the drug into the accused's car or deposits it in the latter's apartment for the purpose of getting rid of it. What is the case then? There is no provision here, as I see it, for giving the accused an opportunity to explain how he came into possession of it.

Hon. Mr. Walker: But again the Crown always should be fair and should listen to any reasonable argument, and it would not be considered as constructive possession if in fact the accused had an adequate excuse such as the instance you mention, if the Crown believed him.

Let me give you an example. I remember prosecuting the Foster brothers, two famous bootleggers who kept a still in North York. In that case we had the R.C.M.P. go out at five o'clock one morning, before dawn. They heard the tin cans rattling, the still was operating and they could smell the fumes of good whisky being manufactured. The sergeant cried "Police!" and they put on their lights. The brothers were old pros at manufacturing the illicit whisky and when the lights came on they were just looking at their handiwork. They were out in a swamp and they claimed they were in possession of nothing, and were acquitted. That is how far the Crown will go under certain circumstances.

I think we must admit that we have no alternative in Bill S-60, and may I say that this shift of burden of proof is not new. In the Narcotic Control Act there are the same provisions; they were incorporated in 1961, and they seem to be working well without any evidence of any injustice resulting.

Clause 43 gets rid of much of the red tape which we used to experience as crown prosecutors. It reads as follows:

> 43. (1) No exception, exemption, excuse or qualification prescribed by law is required to be set out or negatived, as the case may be, in an information or indictment for an offence under this Part or under section 406, 407 or 408 of the Criminal Code in respect of an offence under this Part.

In the old days unless you had the indictment drawn up perfectly and put in everything that you had in mind, you could find a clever lawyer getting up and picking holes in it. They are getting away from all this nonsense, and they are trying to see that justice is done rather than that there should be an opportunity for two clever lawyers to have a competition to see which one is the smarter.

Subclause 2 of clause 43 reads as follows:

> (2) In any prosecution under this Part the burden of proving that an exception, exemption, excuse or qualification prescribed by law operates in favour of the accused is on the accused, and the prosecutor is not required, except by way of rebuttal, to prove that the exception, exemption, excuse or qualification does not operate in favour of the accused, whether or not it is set out in the information or indictment.

This too is taken from the Narcotics Control Act.

The next clause is a sensible one, and it was even there in my day—section 44—which allows the certificate of an analyst to be entered as an exhibit of proof that the object seized and found in the possession of a person is in fact LSD.

Then it goes on to remedy other sections by reason of the new changes, and there is nothing else of any importance to us here except the schedule at the end, to which I trust will be added, in due course, drugs other than LSD.

May I say that Canada leads the world in the manner in which it has dealt with LSD. England is terribly upset and worried, and they are formulating legislation at the present time. However, they take so long to do things over there, even with a new government, and they do not seem to be able to come up with any proper formula at the present time.

The United States has no federal law at the moment, but several states are so exasperated by the effects of the use of LSD that they have incorporated their own laws. However, the United States is now framing a special act over and above the Drug Abuses Act they now have. At the present time LSD is under special control in the United States, but it is not yet an offence under the federal law to have LSD in one's possession.

My concluding remarks are that we have to give credit where credit is due. The Department of Justice, in which I served for two years as parliamentary assistant to the minister, is a splendid one. Whoever drafted this legislation has done an excellent job; and I honestly trust that through this legislation we may contribute our part to stamping out this evil which is now leaving so many of our young people derelict. They do not know any better; they cannot help it; they are not responsible, and, therefore, we have to take the law in our own hands and protect them from themselves.

I earnestly hope that at some time the C.B.C.—which was instituted by the Government of Canada for the benefit of all Canadians and to enlarge the vision of Canada as a great country—will devote if not an hour, if not two hours, if not four programs, at least half an hour to showing the evils of LSD.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I suppose they will refuse, because it would not attract an enthusiastic audience.

I trust that the University of Toronto will not allow—and I will ask my friend the Governor, Senator Sullivan, to go back and see that no more of this nonsense is perpetrated—symposiums on the effects of this drug, one of which symposiums turned out to be an effort to magnify and glorify the use of the drug.

On the whole, our press has been rather good. There have been some unscrupulous articles, but not emanating from the regular press.

This is a terrible problem. I see it every day as I walk the three miles to my home. I did not realize at first what was the matter with these people, but obviously they are under the influence of drugs. These beatniks in the Yorkville area, as in England, have this haunted, goofy look. They seem almost to be depraved, and one thing they have in common: to look at them you cannot tell who is a man and who is a woman.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak at any length on this bill. I think we all agree that it is a necessary measure. Certainly after hearing the able and impressive presentation of Senator Sullivan yesterday, we now know that legislation of this kind is imperative.

However, I do want to follow up what Senator Walker has been saying on the penalty clauses, because you know that there is an old saying in law that hard cases make bad law, and I think part of this is bad law.

As was mentioned, section 40 provides the penalty for persons found in possession of this drug:

> (2) Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and is liable
>
> (a) upon summary conviction for a first offence to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment, and for a subsequent offence to a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both fine and imprisonment; or
>
> (b) upon conviction on indictment to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years or to both fine and imprisonment.

Upon conviction on indictment there is no provision, for example, for a heavier penalty for a second or subsequent offences.

Then, when we look at section 41, which is the section providing the penalty for trafficking in this drug, we find that a person who has it in his possession for the purpose of trafficking, upon summary conviction is subject to imprisonment for 18 months—and that is not "up to 18 months" or "liable to 18 months"; this is a mandatory term of 18 months' imprisonment. Upon conviction on indictment for the same offence the mandatory term of imprisonment is 10 years. To me it does not make good sense that there should be this vast difference in the penalty upon summary conviction and upon indictment.

If you look at the Narcotic Control Act you will find that the penalty for a person having any narcotic in his possession for the purpose of trafficking, which is an indictable offence, is imprisonment for life. He is liable to that imprisonment, but it is not mandatory that he be given life, but any term up to that. So, this is a more severe penalty.

I do not like section 42. As Senator Walker pointed out, this is not new; it is taken practically word for word from section 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. What it means is this: if a person is charged under section 41 for having this drug in his possession for the purpose of trafficking in it, then the prosecution is like a two-way affair. First of all, the Crown must prove that the accused had it in his possession; and once the Crown proves that, then the whole burden of proof changes and the accused must prove that he is innocent of having it in his possession for the purpose of trafficking in it.

I may be an old-fashioned lawyer, but I still believe that the Crown should prove a person guilty beyond reasonable doubt. I have no use for any type of legislation under which a person must prove his innocence. It is wholly foreign to our system of law, and it certainly should not be encouraged.

I can understand the problem when the Crown argues that the accused must have had the drug in his possession for the purpose of trafficking in it, but it is very hard to prove this. But you will note that this clause provides that if a person proceeds to prove his innocence, the Crown can then bring in evidence to offset that. So, if the Crown can bring in evidence after the accused has given his evidence to show that he is innocent, then certainly it could have done it before.

In my opinion this type of legislation is not good so far as penalty provisions are concerned. In our anxiety and determination to control this drug I do not think we should allow ourselves to put on the statute books something that is bad law, something which provides that an accused person must prove his innocence, even though this is such a vicious type of crime. It may be said that the Crown must be given every assistance because this is a terrible type of crime, but we must be particular in not allowing this to be an excuse for doing away with the ordinary rights of the individual under our law.

It is my hope that when this bill goes to committee a good hard look will be given to section 42, and an endeavour made to improve it.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I have not the experience of the learned speakers who have preceded me, and who have spoken from the heart from the point of view of the lawyer and of the doctor. I should like to speak on this bill from the humane point of view.

My only criticism of this legislation is that it seems to forget the fact that 99 per cent of the young men and women who are becoming accustomed to using this drug are sick people, and that the jail or penitentiary is no place for sick persons. It would have been much wiser to have included in this bill a provision making it possible for the court to place these people under medical care in some institution in order to see if something could be done for them.

I was a magistrate for some 25 years, and I had a good many sick young people before me because of certain offences that they had committed, and I tried always to keep them from going to jail or penitentiary. I do not believe we have the right to send a person who is either mentally or physically sick to prison for an extended term.

I have no sympathy for the trafficker in this drug or any other drug, and I would be happy if this bill provided that such persons be confined in the penitentiary for life. They are the devils who are destroying the lives of these young persons in various parts of our country.

I would hope, honourable senators, that when the committee considers this bill some provision will be inserted making it possible for the court to decide whether the convicted person is sick, and if so to order that he be given proper medical attention. I could not but help say these few words, because I feel that it will be possible under this measure to send a young man or young woman, who is really sick and who needs medical treatment, to prison. I hope that the committee will take note of what I have said.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, for Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions numbered 1264 to 1304, inclusive which were presented yesterday.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolution 1264, for the relief of Doreen Katherine Pegler Zieroth.

Resolution 1265, for the relief of Leslie Gordon Lloyd.

Resolution 1266, for the relief of Irene Bofilios Meisel.

Resolution 1267, for the relief of Kathleen Agnes Smith McDonnell.

Resolution 1268, for the relief of Gabriella Pozner Kamel.

Resolution 1269, for the relief of Marlene Alice Fortin Kelly.

Resolution 1270, for the relief of Joan Elizabeth James Piercey.

Resolution 1271, for the relief of Adolf Alfred Kehle.

Resolution 1272, for the relief of Lise Lafond Prud'homme.

Resolution 1273, for the relief of Joan Irene Evestaff Forward.

Resolution 1274, for the relief of Dulcie Forde Rea.

Resolution 1275, for the relief of Carol Joan Robinson Moneypenny.

Resolution 1276, for the relief of Patricia Ruth Edgar Jotkus.

Resolution 1277, for the relief of Agapit Mathieu.

Resolution 1278, for the relief of Edouard Georges Oscard Beltrami.

Resolution 1279, for the relief of Agnes Vickers Driver.

Resolution 1280, for the relief of Roger Bisaillon.

Resolution 1281, for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Butler Tsubota.

Resolution 1282, for the relief of Shirley Marie Burns Palmer.

Resolution 1283, for the relief of Mary Helen Maher Gilfillan.

Resolution 1284, for the relief of Granville Hubert Nickerson.

Resolution 1285, for the relief of Mary Louise Lockett Reid.

Resolution 1286, for the relief of Jan Alexander Mygind Barynin.

Resolution 1287, for the relief of Georges Lauda.

Resolution 1288, for the relief of Jocelyne Mallette Ladouceur.

Resolution 1289, for the relief of Rita Genereux Marquis.

Resolution 1290, for the relief of Sylvia Mary Dennis Gough.

Resolution 1291, for the relief of Jean Marjorie McNally Haymond.

Resolution 1292, for the relief of Evangelia Mavrogianni Saleh.

Resolution 1293, for the relief of Monica Solange Perdriel Clayton.

Resolution 1294, for the relief of Marion Elizabeth Forsyth Bowers.

Resolution 1295, for the relief of Irmgard Durmann Gollnik.

Resolution 1296, for the relief of Patricia Anne Fletcher Astwood.

Resolution 1297, for the relief of Dorothy Gloria Fellows McCarthy.

Resolution 1298, for the relief of Lilian (Lily) Last Haynes, otherwise known as Lilian (Lily) Lastova Hanak.

Resolution 1299, for the relief of Aline Bourassa Fregeau.

Resolution 1300, for the relief of Barbara Simota Francescone.

Resolution 1301, for the relief of Joseph Michel Charles Arthur Charlemagne Bedard.

Resolution 1302, for the relief of Joseph Victor Amedee Mercier.

Resolution 1303, for the relief of Lise Suzanne Hebert Lépine.

Resolution 1304, for the relief of Paul Lecavalier.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 25, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 25, 1967

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADIAN FORCES REORGANIZATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-243, to amend the National Defence Act and other acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 30 of the Penitentiary Act, chapter 53, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61. (English and French texts).

HON. PAUL YUZYK

FELICITATIONS ON PUBLICATION OF HISTORY OF UKRAINIAN CANADIANS

Hon. John J. Connolly: May I take this opportunity to draw the attention of honourable senators to a publication by one of our colleagues, Senator Paul Yuzyk, entitled Ukrainian Canadians: Their Place and Role in Canadian Life. It is a study of the history and achievements of the Ukrainians in Canada. This scholarly work is timely and useful, and I commend it to all honourable senators.

I congratulate Senator Yuzyk on joining our corps of authors, which includes Senator Power and Senator Gershaw.

DIVORCE

BIEGA APPEAL—REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, I wish to table a report of the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to examine and report upon the petition of Joyce Regina Nagine Biega:

The Special Committee of the Senate appointed to examine and report upon the petition of Joyce Regina Nagine Biega, of the Village of Vaudreuil, in the District of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, has in obedience to the order of reference of Monday, 14th November, 1966, examined the said petition, and now reports as follows:

1. The Committee recommends that the prayer of the petition be not granted.

2. The Committee further recommends that the draft bill based thereon filed with the Clerk of the Parliaments on 5th August, 1966, in accordance with subsection (2) of section 2 of "An Act authorizing the Senate of Canada to Dissolve and Annul Marriages", 1963, chapter 10, be not proceeded with, and that the said bill be thus disposed of within the meaning of subsection (3) of section (2) of the said Act.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 26, at 11 o'clock in the morning.

Motion agreed to.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE FOR CANADA

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I wish to refer to a resolution passed unanimously by this house six years ago, in February 1961. The effect of it was to give proper place to the former Prime Minister of Canada in the Table of Precedence. It was the wish of the Senate that it should be done at that time because Mr. St. Laurent was then eightieth on the Table of Precedence, whereas he should have been immediately after the then Prime Minister. I was very glad to learn that after such a long time the Government early this month agreed to give proper rank to the two former Prime Ministers of Canada, Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Diefenbaker, who had, after all, been the first citizens of this country.

I now have a further suggestion to make, and I make it at this time because I feel it to be urgent since the material for the next edition of the Guide to Relative Precedence at Ottawa is now in the hands of the printers. In that material the first in order of precedence is the Governor General. Then come the Prime Minister, the Chief Justice of Canada and only one of the two surviving Governors General, Mr. Massey. I cannot understand why the Earl Alexander of Tunis, who was the immediate predecessor of Mr. Massey, has been overlooked. It has been said to me in certain quarters that it was because he is not a resident of Canada. That is no reason at all, in my view, for not having his name before that of Mr. Massey in the order of precedence.

Honourable senators, I make this suggestion now because the book, the Guide to Relative Precedence at Ottawa, is at the printers and the new edition will come out shortly. Now is the time to see to it that the correction is made. I expect that the good sense and the fair mindedness of the Secretary of State will solve the problem in all fairness and to the satisfaction of all.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As the Acting Secretary of State, I will draw this matter to the attention of the authorities forthwith. Perhaps I should inform the honourable senator that Earl Alexander is in Canada tonight.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Yes; he is a resident of Canada today.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, for Hon. Keith Davey, moved the third reading of Bill S-59, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 20, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald for the second reading of Bill S-60, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I can assure you that I have anticipated the great national event that is occurring in Toronto tonight. Consequently, I have applied the pruning knife to the full in preparing my remarks, and I hope that as a result everyone will have the opportunity of taking some part in this event—probably the last two periods.

Honourable senators, I think it is a fair commentary to say in regard to Bill S-60, which came to the Senate in the first instance, that in a couple of days of debate we have collected together in Hansard an abundance of real knowledge on this subject matter, namely, lysergic acid diethylamide, commonly known as LSD. We have had the advantage of having the statements of medical men as well as lawyers concerning the important matters dealt with in the bill, and it has become clear that there is substantial agreement in this house on the need for legislation to apply stricter controls to this dangerous, indeed ghastly, drug and also to impose penalties for contravention in keeping with the known danger in its use.

There exists a considerable volume of literature on the drug, both in medical journals and elsewhere, and practically without exception the drug is declared to be dangerous and, in fact, a terrible menace, especially in the case of young people seeking thrills. Amazingly, however, as is always the case, some persons appear to champion its use; and in Canada what is to be most deplored is the sensational and ghoulish character of recent C.B.C. television broadcasts regarding LSD. There has been also much irresponsible journalism on the subject of this drug, particularly in magazines.

These actions of the C.B.C. and the writings of journalists have no doubt popularized this drug out of all proportion, and are to a large extent responsible for its widespread use in Canada by students and other people, including especially the beatnik crowd.

The C.B.C., over the years, has shown an ability to provide much very fine programming, but to my mind it is a crying shame that this medium can be so much influenced by what seems to be a small group of sensation seekers who appear to revel in producing programs that outrage the sensibilities of most decent Canadians. Everywhere one hears the cry: "Is there not a way of amputating this cancer from an otherwise fine institution?" Perhaps the Senate should try to represent the conscience of the Canadian people with a view to the fumigation of these indecent and damaging C.B.C. programs.

One of the most tragic problems gnawing at our civilization today is that of mental health. Perhaps I should say that the problem is one of mental disorder rather than of mental health, for such it is. This condition in Canada is serious enough at the present time without the use of dangerous drugs to augment it. A few days ago the Canadian Mental Health Association, a very responsible organization which has existed in this country for half a century, presented a brief to the Government of Canada concerning the subject matter of mental health. Some of the statements made by the spokesmen of this organization were shocking, and I should like to quote from the brief that was presented to the Cabinet a few days ago.

> A medical and social disaster is developing in Canada. It has been developing for many generations. It is a disaster of which the Government has been aware for at least as long as the Canadian Mental Health Association has been in existence—a period of fifty years.
>
> —up to 3 per cent of the population now suffer incapacity from mental illnesses;
>
> —up to 30 per cent of the population suffer now from partially disabling emotional disorders;
>
> —suicide is causing increasing concern. It has become a leading cause of death. It is commonly associated with mental depression and has become prevalent in young people and even children.

I quote further:

> Official statistics released by the federal Government reveal a constant number of more than 75,000 patients under the care of Canadian mental hospitals. Mental illnesses account for 41.6 per cent of hospital-patient days per year. Scientific studies carried out in Canada and the United States indicate the high probability that up to half a million Canadians are seriously incapacitated through mental illnesses of various kinds.

Apart from the known effects upon the human brain of the use of LSD, the above statements, which I believe to be factual, indicate the need for doing everything possible by legislation to ban the use of this and like drugs, because we are informed there are many drugs that have a similar effect to that of LSD, either present on the market today or that will be coming on the market in due time. Surely there is too much mental disorder now; it need not be artificially induced. The fact is, of course, that the drug is now subject to the present control provisions of the Food and Drugs Act. However, in the light of recent events, this is not sufficient protection against its irresponsible use, and the basic change presented by this bill is to make possession of the drug by the public at large illegal.

I understand from remarks made by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. McDonald) that much thought was given to whether or not this drug should be added to the schedule of prohibited drugs in the Narcotic Control Act, and the reason given for not doing so is that LSD and drugs of similar character are neither traditionally nor medically regarded as narcotics.

The sponsor proceeded to say that they are not under international control as narcotics, and it has therefore been thought wise that we ought to develop a pattern of control which should parallel in some respects the type of control exercised over narcotic substances, but which would recognize the medical difference between these experimental drugs and those which are subject to the Narcotic Control Act.

However, as we are aware, the subject of the control of narcotics is not only national in scale, but international. For this reason it occurs to me that if LSD had been brought under the scheme of the Narcotic Control Act this might have given us the benefit of the international controls which are available only in regard to narcotics.

I will not proceed further with this point of view now, but I am sure that we will be interested in hearing a full explanation in committee as to why this drug was not included in the schedules of the Narcotic Control Act where we have developed very expert legal and police machinery for regulating the traffic in narcotic drugs.

Despite what I have just said in regard to the control of narcotic drugs, I was somewhat shocked to read in the Globe and Mail this morning the following headline:

> Narcotics offences rise 80 per cent in year, DBS report says.

I am sure that everyone must deplore the difficulties of controlling the narcotics traffic as well as the traffic in other drugs.

I now wish to make some reference to the penalty sections of the bill. These were discussed here most ably by Senator Walker and Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton). Both speeches were an excellent contribution to the debate on the bill. Indeed, it was most useful to have views of a person like Senator Walker, who has had a practical experience in prosecutions under the Narcotic Control Act. On the other hand, Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) quite rightly brought to our attention the natural aversion of defence counsel, and in fact of most lawyers, to shifting the onus of proof at any time to an accused person. I will comment briefly on their combined remarks.

Undoubtedly tremendous difficulties will face the authorities in the enforcement of this act. Think of the problems involved in restricting possession of a substance which is colourless, odourless and tasteless. In addition, one application of it is so small that it could rest on the point of a needle. An article written by a medical doctor, an expert on the drug, stated that an ounce of pure lysergide could hallucinate more that 500,000 men. Take a practical example: A person could have possession in an inside jacket of enough of the stuff to supply a fantastic number of possible customers; nevertheless, it would be impossible to prove that the accused was selling, that is, trafficking, in the drug unless he was caught in the actual act of delivery to another for money. In the case of a drug such as LSD this would usually be a most difficult, if not impossible, task.

It may be true that we should hold fast to most of the legal and constitutional precepts which were developed in a very simple age, when there were few safeguards for an accused person. Nevertheless, in a complicated society such as we have today, new procedures must be adopted to cope with problems such as this, where society cannot be protected without some onus of proof being thrown on the accused. However, one must observe that the onus under section 42 is not shifted onto the accused until the offence of possession has already been proven. This procedure is not new in this country; many federal and provincial statutes, including the Criminal Code, provide for shifting the onus of proof under various circumstances. The job of Parliament is to ensure that the well-established principles of the liberty of the person shall not be diminished by legislative acts except for reasons based on good common sense.

It is my belief that, generally, when statutes creating criminal offences have presumed to place an onus of proof on the accused, it has been done only after the application of ample safeguards to protect the known principles regarding the liberty of the subject. To me, it is not an application of common sense to presume that a person who is found in possession of a quantity of a forbidden drug, far in excess of personal requirements, should not have to show that he was not engaged in trafficking in it. Consequently, I am quite in agreement with the provisions of section 42 in this regard.

As for the penalties provided in the bill, these are obviously severe, but I understand from my reading on this subject that the dangers in the promiscuous use of this drug are every bit as great, or worse in some instances, than those resulting from the use of narcotics. For instance, the worst feature in the use of LSD appears to be the creation of suicidal tendencies in the user. What could be more menacing than that?

Honourable senators, this bill has had excellent and detailed treatment from former speakers. No doubt we will learn much more about the subject when we listen to officials from the Department of National Health who I presume will appear before us in committee.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, when one rises to make a speech in Parliament, one does so at times with the feeling of being engaged in an exercise in futility. That is my feeling this evening, because of the rumours prevalent that the present session will end tomorrow evening. If that should be the case, this bill, S-60, may not be dealt with in the other place or, if it is, I will enjoy the spectacle of the other place being left in the kind of situation in which senators are so often left, being forced to deal with legislation in a hurry.

The amendments to the Food and Drugs Act proposed in this bill are clearly necessary. We cannot permit the widespread non-medical use of drugs such as LSD.

Senator McDonald (Moosomin) in his excellent introduction, set forth ample reasons to support the bill. Other senators have adopted the viewpoint of the sponsor and have added their own viewpoints. The effects and dangers of LSD have been described vividly by two medical men, Senator Sullivan and Senator Gershaw. Honourable senators are well aware of these effects, so I need not go into detail.

One of our first tasks is to discuss who should control this drug. We must leave it to those best qualified, to the psychiatrists and psychologists. In Canada these people must get permission for their projects and must work under supervision of the Food and Drug advisory committee.

Secondly, we must ask ourselves why it is necessary to pass legislation in this respect. We can see that this is an effort to counter the widespread and indiscriminate use of the drug.

The sponsor of the bill, Senator McDonald (Moosomin), mentioned that LSD had gone through three periods—the first, about 20 years ago, when it was used in only a limited way in Europe to assist in psychiatric treatment; the second period, where it was to be the answer to all the problems of mankind; and now, the third period, its widespread use in what is commonly known as the "Cubehead Revolution." This occurs largely among university students who appear to be searching for new experiences. Sometimes they seem to be either more brilliant than we were when we were in universities or they appear to have much more free time. We had to study during university life, but students now seem to be free to look for more varied experiences. As Senator Thorvaldson has said, it has become fashionable in the press and on television to glamorize the life of an LSD addict as one of leisure and as the ideal life to follow.

Honourable senators, it is not only the university students who are taking LSD. I was surprised to read in an article that it is estimated that this year in the United States 100,000 professional people will take the so-called "trip". I mentioned this over the weekend to an American professor who is engaged in some research, and he told me that this is the "cocktail group". I find it difficult to believe that so many highly trained professional people would take the "trip".

I am impressed by the trend in behaviour in the last few years. The young people have gone through various phases—"goofballs," an increase in the use of marijuana, and now LSD. This leaves me wondering if there is not some professional group pushing these drugs to make them fashionable. If this is the case, the penalties outlined in the bill are not severe enough.

We must consider, thirdly, the effect of the amendments we are making by this bill. It will be difficult to control the possession and sale of LSD, because of the nature of the substance. I am reminded of the story of a drug peddler who went through the customs, carefully guarding his little phial of LSD. It fell and broke, and the LSD spilled all over his suit. However, this peddler showed his initiative by saving the suit, and telling those who wanted a "trip" to lick the suit, to get the same effect as if they had taken the drug directly.

I think this story illustrates that it is going to be extremely difficult to administer these amendments. Of course, in this I am in no way criticizing the amendments. They are all we can do at the moment.

Two years ago a university in the eastern part of the United States conducted a survey among its freshman students to determine how many had taken LSD. Apparently 15 per cent of the freshmen admitted taking LSD. Then the state passed a law very similar to the one before us. This year the same university conducted a further survey of the same type. It found that approximately 35 per cent of its students admitted taking LSD, despite the state law outlawing the possession and distribution of the drug.

This fact, together with the fact that the drugs now available to the student group contain a very high percentage of impurities, greatly concerns the American authorities. The impurities that are left in a drug such as LSD are usually very poisonous. This has caused a number of American authorities to suggest that the federal Government set up a centre at which those people who feel they must "take the trip" can get the drug under proper supervision.

I do not think that Canada is ready to go that far; I am certainly not so advocating. I am merely attempting to point out that there is a danger that is perhaps not fully realized, in that the impurities left in the drug, shall we say by amateur manufacturers, are going to be most harmful to those who buy LSD on the so-called black market.

One further point I wish to raise is that I would like to see greater emphasis placed on research into this particular drug. Four or five years ago in the United States there were underway a number of projects studying the possible benefits of LSD. Then various states began to pass laws prohibiting the possession of the drug, and the research program in the United States dropped drastically as a result. I can think in particular of two excellent projects in the Boston area. One dealt with the use of LSD in terminal cancer and the other concerned its use among retarded children. These studies were being conducted by outstanding research scientists, but, when LSD fell into disrepute, these projects were abandoned. In my opinion this is most unfortunate. We should still be carrying out research; we should still be assisting and encouraging those who are engaged in research.

The Senate has very wisely avoided the attitude that the research worker falls into the same category as the addict. I would hate to see the research people so maligned. Fortunately, the Senate has avoided that pitfall.

I was pleased that the sponsor of the bill made reference to education stamping out the use of this drug. It is very important that, in addition to these amendments, we establish an educational program to counteract the use of LSD; but, if I may go back to the research aspect again, we must have further research into the motivation for taking LSD and research into its effects, before we can begin an educational program.

When we have a greater understanding of the whole subject, I hope that we can then set up an educational program to convince both young and old of the dangers of using LSD.

Hon. Fred A. McGrand: Honourable senators, almost everything has been said that can be said on this bill. Its purpose is to suppress the sale of LSD. Little has been said, here or elsewhere, on the place that LSD and the other 25 or 30 similar drugs are going to have in society as we know it today. Some of these drugs are much more dangerous than LSD—especially one known as DMT.

This is the age of technology, where people depend on technological advances to meet their physical and emotional needs. It is a period of transition. The absolutes of yesterday are disappearing. Old truths have died and the new ones have not yet been born. For this reason no one can say what place these drugs or other wonder drugs will have after the new truths have been born.

The use of LSD has been described as a means of enabling one to visit the past or visit the future. Under the influence of LSD, some have described their "visit" to ancient Egypt: they saw it as it was thousands of years ago. Others say they have seen future cities with all the technical advances dreamed of for the future.

Those who know most about this drug are convinced that it does not give a creativity that is not already present. The only single evidence supporting the drug was the case of an architect who, while under its influence, with the aid of a psychiatrist was able to plan a better environment for mental patients in an institution. It is most likely that he already had the idea of what he wanted to present and was aided by the psychiatrist in defining it.

It is certain that at this stage LSD does not carry with it the moment of truth. It does accentuate already existing feelings. A strongly religious person develops a deep religious experience while under the influence of the drug. The same could be said for other tendencies. Its danger lies in its effect on the psychopath and the schizophrenic. Those on the border line could become actively insane.

Its influence depends on three things: first, the setting with its surroundings; second, the personality, and that includes the control factor—the reaction is different according to the personality; and the third is what the indoctrinated expects to get out of his experience.

LSD is not a habit-forming drug but it is dependency-producing. Partial insanity of a permanent nature can follow. It is not an expensive drug to manufacture. While the drug in pure form is manufactured by a reputable drug company, much of the drug used is manufactured in the western United States. It reaches the illicit market not in pure form. It is about 10 per cent LSD and 90 per cent impurities, or contaminants which add to its dangers.

Most of the young people who use LSD are not criminally inclined; they are only seeking an experience. They want to take a risk. They want to experiment with the unknown. They do not buy this drug on the black market from a narcotic pusher—they are induced by their friends to explore the world of fantasy with what they believe is a mind-expanding drug.

A generation ago young people put an aspirin tablet into a glass of ginger ale or Coca-cola; others dropped cigarette ashes into their beer for the same purpose—the experience of a thrill.

When a C.B.C. program portrayed the use of LSD and its mind-expanding properties, young people wanted to get in on the act. They are searching for something to identify with and this is one way to find identification.

The young people who walked for OXFAM two weeks ago did it for a constructive and productive purpose. They have already established their identity. Many of them did it to register their objection to the neglect of the poor in India by the rich nations of the West. They wanted to do something in a positive way. Many of the beatnik types, as they are described, are less fortunate; they register their protest in a negative manner. They have no confidence in the present order of things; they want to defy establishment for what they believe is its smugness, its greed, its pride and its hypocrisy. Many of them are struggling with a school curriculum which is beyond them; some of them are drop-outs.

I watched a program on TV recently about a school in Ottawa for slow learners, some slightly subnormal. These pupils were trained to do useful work in stores, restaurants and in offices but they have not passed Grade 10. For these people there is only one thing in the future—frustration.

High school students who make low averages are bewildered at the prospect of making a living in a world where they must be trained and retrained at least four times in order to hold a job in the future. Can you blame them for trying to read the future and their place in it by the use of mind-expanding drugs?

People with a positive or negative approach to their problems seek others with similar ideas and become a segment of society. Protesters with a negative approach seek out other protesters; they form a sub-culture that leads to delinquency and crime.

The conscientious draft dodger who protests against the dropping of Napalm or anti-personnel bombs on unprotected people find something in common with the protesters who cannot make a grade in high school. They are forced to find identity in what may be a sub-culture. There is no other place to go.

If there is an explosion in the beatnik population—who is responsible?

Some years ago an educator wrote a book on the school curriculum entitled So Little for the Mind.

It would be hard to say how many of these bewildered people are mentally ill; some of them are, but many of them are socially maladjusted. The recent submission of the Canadian Mental Health Association says;

> It is now believed that the commonly used prevalence rate for mental illness of 10 per cent of the population is an understatement.

The opening paragraph in a recent article on psychiatric care in Canada reads:

> If psychiatric hospital admissions continue to climb at the present rate, every eighth Canadian child will spend part of his life in a mental institution.

This may come as a surprise to some, but not to those who have observed the tendencies at work that will send some to mental institutions and others to penal institutions.

There is a mental illness component in industrial absenteeism and marital discord.

This submission suggests that mental illness costs the Canadian economy between $500 million and $600 million annually. The amount of money allocated to medical research in Canada is about $21 million. Some of this comes from sources other than government. This amount has doubled since 1962 but the amount allocated for investigation in mental health has dropped from 8.1 per cent in 1962 to 5.7 per cent in 1966.

There is plenty of money for medical research in physical diseases. The United States spends $2 billion a year in medical research, much of it is spent in basic research—science for the sake of science—and is lost as far as human needs are concerned. But there is a scarcity of money to do research into mental illness and for the study of the problems which afflict those bewildered people on the fringe of illness with a personality problem.

Some time ago I read a press report from Baltimore, Maryland, entitled "Superstitious woman scared to death." It described a woman who believed her life was doomed by a hex. She told the doctors when she was admitted to the hospital that she was to die within three days. Two days later she was dead.

The woman described her past life; she had been born on Friday the 13th in an area of Florida, one of three children delivered by a midwife. According to the woman's story, the midwife told the mother that her three children were hexed and the first would die before her 16th birthday, the second before her 21st birthday and the third before her 23rd birthday. The first two died according to prediction and the third was convinced she would die before her 23rd birthday. She did die the day before her birthday. Doctors said the autopsy showed several serious physiological disorders but they believed that terror may have hastened her death. The immediate cause of death was cited as primary pulmonary hypertension.

Dr. John Harvey, a Professor of Medicine at Johns Hopkins Medical School, presented the case to some 200 medical students at a clinical pathlogy conference. He pointed out that eminent physicians have demonstrated that a patient's state of mind can be translated by the body into physiological disorders. He said the woman's case had all the elements of Voodoo deaths in Africa. This appears as an isolated case but we are surrounded by maladjusted persons with different degrees and at different stages of maladjustment.

About a year ago I read of a psychiatrist who had spent some time in Africa where he had observed the treatment of mental patients by witch doctors. He was so impressed that after he returned to this continent he decided to go back to Africa for closer examination of the methods used by the witch doctors.

While the allotment of money for medical research goes up, the percentage for psychological research goes down.

LSD and similar drugs did not appear suddenly and without purpose. For years some psychiatrists have believed that insanity is caused by some biochemical and biological change taking place within the body. It was logical to explore the mind with drugs that would cause a temporary change in the person's thoughts and produce a temporary insanity during the action of the drug. As a result many such drugs were produced and tried.

There seems no doubt that at some time in the future the use of experimental drugs will reveal some of the causes of insanity and other drugs will help to relieve them. Every advance carries its own problems with it. When this day comes, there will be a rash of personality drugs. Thousands of people will seek a change in their personality. There will be investigations and treatments because it will be considered an essential freedom to possess a suitable personality.

Few people who undergo plastic surgery for facial disfigurements are ever satisfied with their new nose, and few people will be happy with their new personality.

It will take many days in hospital and laboratory tests to make minor or major adjustments and, of course, it will all be paid for by medicare. And why not, under those circumstances? It would be considered every person's undeniable right to possess a suitable personality in order to experience happiness. The use of personality expanding drugs will be a "must." Right now there are drugs on the market that are supposed to prolong youth for some 50 years.

The people who tampered with LSD are the forerunners of the advocates of drugs for the expansion of the personality, and the drug produced to expand the personality will be as effective as LSD in the expansion of the mind. They will be here, and someone will pay for them.

The C.B.C. has been criticized for making too much of LSD. The C.B.C. is concerned with entertainment for 20 million Canadians, and the customer usually gets what he wants and is willing to pay for.

What are people going to do with their spare time as the work day shortens? What will they do to escape boredom? They cannot spend all their time on entertainment.

One thing made evident by the Committee on Aging and the Aged was the emotional strain on workers when they retired and were not trained to use their surplus time. They had been trained to work, but not how to live.

Civilization made slow progress in the Stone Age and in climates where people toiled all year in order to eat. The advances of civilization were made in areas where some people had spare time to study their problems and record them in a written language.

In the future, it will not be the long hours of work but the long hours of idleness. Now is the time to lay down the blueprint of a plan that will enable people to work and at the same time to study the demands and needs of their environment, their responsibilities as well as their rights and freedoms. The greatest freedom man can ask for is freedom from the poisonous by-products of a society which calls itself affluent. So much for the body; so little for the mind! This plan must start with the young, must help those who have already found their identity, and assist those who do not know where to find it.

This is the first time we have legislated on LSD or similar drugs, but it is not the last time that we shall be engaged in the problems of people who wish to use them.

Hon. J. Harper Prowse: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to waste your time by repeating everything you have already heard from the medical men and experts who are far better qualified to tell you about the kind of drug LSD is and the effects it has on the individuals who take it.

However, I am of the opinion that this is most important legislation. It is legislation which we have a responsibility to press through to a conclusion, in order that unsuspecting young people may not become the victims of things they do not understand.

The reason I believe the legislation is important is simply this, that by attaching to its manufacture, its possession and its use the type of strictures and penalties this legislation proposes, we tell them, in a way that no amount of logic can, that we are serious about this and that what they are playing with is nothing short of their lives. A statement to people that this thing is dangerous, that it can be damaging, that it can do thus and so to you, might have the same effect upon them as the strictures they used to hear on the use of alcohol, because most young people soon discovered this was a way in which they could safely indulge their sense of adventure without losing their immortal souls. Hence the very prohibitions became a reason for indulgence.

It would seem to me, from all I have been able to read, that that is the very reason there is this interest in LSD today. I suspect that the man who suggests seriously in a magazine article that 100,000 or 200,000, or whatever the figure may be, professional people in the United States will go on an LSD "trip" this year for the experience, is making a guess in the realm of the spectacular in order to be sure to sell his story or to establish himself as a serious thinker or writer. It is inconceivable to me that people mature enough to be able to establish themselves as professional people would be prepared to play with something as dangerous as LSD appears to be. I think it would be impossible for this to happen, except for one other very important example we have had before us now for some years. Perhaps I may speak because I am one of those who were unimpressed by the logic of the arguments.

For some years now members of the medical profession have been screaming their heads off and blasting our ears with arguments to show that if I smoke cigarettes the probability is that I am taking years off my life every time I light my lighter. Obviously, a great many people remain unimpressed by the arguments. I am sure that if I were weighing the pleasure I get out of cigarettes against so many years of my life, the argument would be easy to believe, but because there is controversy I am yet to be convinced that this matter has been settled.

I say this is happening in the area of LSD and, for that matter, marijuana. We kick the C.B.C. because they are large, they are everywhere, they are able to reach out, and it seems to be popular to slap at them; but let us not, in fairness, get the idea they are the only villains of the piece. Everybody who regards himself as a thinker seems to feel it is his responsibility to stand up to defend and explain that the use of marijuana, or LSD, or the so-called psychedelic or mind-expanding drugs, add something to the human being because they permit him some kind of experience he cannot have by himself. If he is a writer, a musician, or an artist the suggestion is that under the influence of these drugs he can become something he is not. In other words, he becomes an instrument of the drug.

Now, whether this be true or not, my opinion is that every time we tell people they can safely play with these things, and that by so doing they can become a little better than other men who suffer from a sense of inferiority, then every boy and girl in this modern, electronic world who feels they have been cheated out of the opportunity of adventure must get the idea that here is an area in which they can seek the adventures that were available to everybody three centuries ago.

Let us look at this, honourable senators. As long as there is no penalty other than a fine of $25 or $50, such as is meted out for the abuse of alcohol, or no penalty at all except the possibility that the public might explode—and they have not seen anybody explode yet—the lure to adventure is going to be greater than anything else.

We do not really have in this country a tremendous problem in respect of narcotics. I can tell this house that in the City of Edmonton we have an absolutely minimal problem with narcotics because we have an excellent group of R.C.M.P. officers who work on the control of them, and who give their complete co-operation in treating the dealing in them as a serious matter. Those who think they want to be in the narcotics business have long since decided that Edmonton is a mighty poor place in which to ply their trade or to get a supply. When we come along and say that we are not going to argue about whether LSD is safe or unsafe, or about whether there should be a fine or something else, but that if you are caught with it you will go to jail, let us not be told by anybody that because it might be a little difficult to obtain a conviction we should not have this legislation. Believe me, honourable senators, anybody who has seen the R.C.M.P. work on drug matters will know that once they have clear instructions as to what is expected of them they will take care of the situation.

I remember an occasion upon which I was prosecuting one of these cases. I looked around the court room and saw a bearded beatnik, as hopeless a looking character as I ever saw in my life, sitting a short distance away. I asked the R.C.M.P. corporal who was with me, "Is that one of the prisoners?" He replied, "No, that is our witness." He was the undercover man. This fellow had lived with the people who were suspected of wrongdoing, and I can tell you that they took him to their bosom. He could out-talk them and outlook them, and act more like a beatnik than any one of them. Once the R.C.M.P. know that they have the go-ahead and the duty to do something, you can depend on their doing it.

We do not need to make LSD a narcotic and thus have to worry about international control such as we have when dealing with drugs like cocaine and heroin that come into the country from outside. The reason we have international control in respect of those drugs is because trafficking in them calls for transfer between different countries. This is not necessary with LSD because, if my information is correct, the average intelligent Grade 12 chemistry student can produce his own LSD. It may be a little impure but it will be good enough to give him all the kicks he wants. With just a little ingenuity it is a simple substance to manufacture. It might be manufactured just for some of the gang if we do not have, and do not emphasize, the new section 39(d) which provides that "traffic" means to manufacture, sell, export from or import into Canada, and everything else. I hope that there will be some way of making it clear that anybody who makes this stuff—any smart kid who is prevailed upon to make it—puts himself in a position where he is not just in possession and subject to the lighter penalties which can mean up to three years' imprisonment, but is into the area of trafficking, the penalty for which can be up to ten years' imprisonment, because trafficking means, among other things, "to manufacture".

When we tell the young people of Canada that the result of our considered opinions, based on experience and the best advice available to us, is that to have anything to do with this kind of a drug puts them in the position of having committed a crime for which society is going to put them away for a period up to ten years, we will have made the point more effectively and more usefully than the use of all the logic from old men to young men ever could.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take more than a few minutes to close this debate. It was Senator Thorvaldson, I think, who said he had taken a pruning-knife to his remarks. When I slipped out for a moment to listen to another debate that was taking place in another room I took a pick-axe to mine.

There are three areas I want to touch on in closing this debate, and I do so only because of the arguments put forward by honourable senators.

I should first say a word of thanks to all honourable senators on both sides of the house who have taken part in this debate. I think they have added much to the debate, and my congratulations go out to every one of them.

A few days ago we heard some remarks to the effect that it was not good enough to take persons who had become users of LSD, or people who were manufacturing or distributing this drug, and simply place them in jail and lock the door. The methods used in our penal institutions have improved a great deal over the years. It is my understanding that certain medical and educational treatment is available in them today, and it is my sincere hope, as I know it is the hope of all honourable senators, that this treatment end and educational end will increase so that we can look forward to the day when they will be part of the total penal system. So, I am not unduly concerned about the thought that we may be placing some of these people behind bars and forgetting them, because I do not think that will be the case.

There was some criticism made of the penalties under this measure. Some honourable senators considered the penalties too severe, while others thought they were not severe enough. This is a matter of personal opinion, to which we are all entitled, but I would ask honourable senators to compare the penalty section of this measure to that of the Narcotic Control Act. If they do they will discover that the wording of the two sections is virtually identical. Section 3 of the Narcotic Control Act provides:

> (1) Except as authorized by this Act or the regulations, no person shall have a narcotic in his possession.
>
> (2) Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for seven years.

Some criticism has been made of the bill now before us because it provides that any person found guilty of trafficking is liable to imprisonment for certain periods of time. However, it is my understanding that under the Narcotic Control Act, the judiciary of this country have not interpreted "liable to imprisonment for seven years", in the sense that seven years is the minimum and maximum penalty. There has been discretion used, and I have no doubt that the judiciary will use the same discretion under the legislation that is now before us.

My third point is about the onus of proof, and here some honourable senators have thought that we had a reversal of a principle of British justice. There are two examples I can cite. First, in Regina v. Guertin heard by the Court of Appeal of the Province of Ontario, Chief Justice Porter, in a judgment handed down on March 9, 1961, points out that the onus is on the Crown to prove possession.

The second reference I would like to make, if I may be permitted to refer to the other place, is in the debates of that house in the session 1960-61. On June 6, 1961, the Minister of Justice, at that time the Honourable Davie Fulton, made some remarks during the debate on the Food and Drugs Act. At page 9540 he said:

> The Crown, under section 33 of the new act, if this bill passes, will have to prove the facts upon which it relies to establish the guilt of the accused. It is not until the Crown has proven its case that the accused is under any obligation to enter a defence. It is a well understood principle of criminal justice that criminal statutes themselves may provide that certain inferences will be drawn from certain facts; that is all that is being done here. In every one of these cases, just as here, the Crown has to establish the facts from which the statute then says that the inferences may be drawn.

That is the identical argument which ought to be used with regard to the penalty sections of this act. I can only repeat that the Crown must prove possession, and the individual who is being charged must have some excuse for having it in his possession. He must have a reasonable excuse for possession, sufficient to convince the judge before whom he is appearing.

That is all I want to say with respect to these three facts.

In conclusion, some reference has been made to television and radio programs and to the press. It seems to me that the news media—whether radio, television or the newspaper—has some responsibilities to the general public. I am one of those who sometimes wonder today if they have accepted the responsibilities in the light of some of the problems that we are faced with in Canada and in other parts of the world. It seems to me that television programs would have done a much better service to the people of Canada if rather than glorifying a drug such as LSD in the minds of our people they had presented a program to be reviewed by the Canadian people indicating the dangers associated with the use of this drug. Surely this is a responsibility of the public press. I sometimes doubt if our public press accepts this responsibility. I hope it will take a leading part in the educational programs that are necessary to acquaint our people with the dangerous use of this and other drugs and commodities that are now or may be available in the future.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. McDonald, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

NOTICE OF MEETING

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I understand it is the intention to stand all other items on the Order Paper.

May I draw to the attention of the Senate that the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce has indicated that the meeting on the bill which has just received second reading will be held tomorrow at 9.30 a.m.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, April 26, 1967

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PRIVATE BILL

INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-10, respecting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendment to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

1. Page 1, Line 7. Clause 1 is deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"1. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 3 of chapter 34 of the statutes of 1949 (1st session), as amended by chapter 66 of the statutes of 1952-53,

(a) the capitalization of the Company is hereby reduced to one hundred million dollars by cancelling twenty million of its unissued shares, and

(b) each of the issued and remaining unissued shares of the capital stock of the Company of the par value of five dollars is hereby subdivided into five shares of the par value of one dollar each, so that the capital stock of the Company shall be one hundred million dollars divided into one hundred million shares of the par value of one dollar each."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that this amendment be considered now.

I am sure, honourable senators will remember this bill because it was passed by the Senate under different bill numbers on three separate occasions. On each of those occasions it went to the other place, where it was talked out.

The bill has finally passed the other place with one amendment which is, in fact, extremely simple. The company had 40 million shares authorized, and a fear was expressed in some places that the authorized but unissued shares would somehow or other be issued for a consideration that would benefit certain insiders. This, of course, has never been the case. As there were an unnecessary number of authorized but unissued shares in the treasury this amendment proposes to eliminate 20 million of them. The company is not in any sense embarrassed by this amendment. Those unissued shares are not necessary, and the company is quite happy to accept the amendment. This amendment does not affect the performance of the company in the carrying out of its functions.

Amendment concurred in.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Permits issued under the authority of section 8 of the Immigration Act for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 8(5) of the said Act, chapter 325, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of the Canadian National Railways for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 40 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter 29, Statutes of Canada, 1955. (English and French texts).

Capital and Operating Budgets of the Canadian National Railways for the year ending December 31, 1967, pursuant to section 37 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter 29, Statutes of Canada, 1955, together with a copy of Order in Council P.C. 1967-795, dated April 20, 1967, approving same. (English text).

Report of the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 17 of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, chapter 311, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French text).

Report of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, including its Accounts and Financial Statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to sections 85(3) and 87(3) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-60, to amend the Food and Drugs Act:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PENITENTIARIES

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. W. M. Benidickson, Joint Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Penitentiaries presented the third report of the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Benidickson moved that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRINTED AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE AND MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the third report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Penitentiaries, presented today, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of report see Appendix, pp. 1863-8)

THE ESTIMATES

FINANCE COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO EXAMINE AND REPORT

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1968; and that the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, to print its proceedings upon the said Estimates and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, in connection with the Estimates, there may have been some confusion in the minds of some senators as to the situation regarding the 1966-67 Estimates and the 1967-68 Estimates. As honourable senators know, the 1966-67 Estimates have been before us for a long time. Would the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance be good enough to bring us up to date on the present situation?

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, the main Estimates for 1966-67 were referred to the Standing Committee on Finance about a year ago, in March 1966. Sittings of the committee took place throughout the year. As the various supplementary Estimates came along, those supplementaries were also referred to the committee.

On March 6, 1967, the Finance Committee made its final report, not only on the main Estimates but also on those supplementary Estimates which had been referred to it during the year, bringing them together in toto and dealing with them on a total basis.

Subsequently, two supplementary Estimates were tabled and also referred to the committee. The Finance Committee, at its last meeting, which took place on the Thursday before our Easter recess, dealt specifically with the final supplementary estimates of 1966-67.

As I understand it, there are no further estimates in connection with 1966-67. The committee has reported on all matters referred to it in that connection.

In the week before the Easter recess the 1967-68 Estimates were tabled, but no order was made specifically referring them to the Finance Committee. The motion now before us refers them specifically to the committee.

In the meantime, anticipating this reference, a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance has been called for 2 o'clock this afternoon. The witness will be Dr. George Davidson, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, who is our usual witness to commence the study of the Estimates for the year.

Honourable senators, may I say that while the 1967-68 Estimates were not specifically referred to the committee, there has already been one interim supply bill which came in at about the time the committee was having its last meeting before the Easter recess. Some reference was made to that supply bill at that time but the Estimates had not been specifically referred to the committee.

Therefore, this afternoon at 2 o'clock we start the study of the Estimates for the 1967-68 year. That study will continue for months, at any rate, giving us an opportunity, week by week, to consider both the main Estimates and whatever other supplementaries may come from time to time. This will include, presumably, the interim supply bill which one may expect in the next day or so, if not today.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Then we may take it definitely that we are through with the 1966-67 Estimates and that any bills which come up for interim supply or supplementaries are dealing entirely with 1967-68?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is my understanding. Dr. Davidson said there would be no further supplementary estimates, and we have dealt with the matter on the basis that the 1966-67 business is a completed performance.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Friday, April 28, at 11 o'clock in the morning.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Would the honourable leader explain what the program is?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): For today?

Hon. Mr. Flynn: What is anticipated for Friday?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I thought I explained that thoroughly last evening. Generally, we plan to deal today with the National Defence Act amendments —today and on Friday.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Is it understood that the other place wants to finish its work tonight?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hear rumours to that effect.

Motion agreed to.

PRECEDENCE AND PROTOCOL

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, may I direct your attention to a matter which you will realize in due course to be of personal interest to each one of us. I refer to precedence and protocol.

According to the dictionary, "precedence" is rank, ceremonial priority order; the order observed by persons of different rank on ceremonial occasions. "Protocol" is the rules prescribing the etiquette in ceremonies of state; the code prescribing deference to rank and strict adherence to due order of preference and correct procedure, as in diplomatic exchange and ceremonies.

To complete the information, "precedence" comes under the Secretariat Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State; and "protocol" belongs to the Department of External Affairs.

What I want to know is if the guidelines of precedence apply to protocol and if the guidelines of protocol apply to precedence.

It may be difficult to answer the question in that form, but it would be much easier if the honourable Leader of the Government, in his usual obliging manner, would get us the orders in council actually in force which have been passed for both precedence and protocol, in order that we may know the rules of each and if there are some rules which apply to both. I may ask a formal question at the next sitting of the Senate.

CANADIAN FORCES REORGANIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-243, to amend the National Defence Act and other acts.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-243, which is an act to amend the National Defence Act and other acts, is known as the Canadian Forces Reorganization Act. This bill raises important questions of policy in respect of the armed forces of Canada. These questions include first of all the matter of the defence of the nation, having regard to the problems that exist today in the field of defence in respect of conventional warfare and nuclear warfare. It is bound to raise also questions of Canada's treaty obligations in the field of defence, and more particularly our position under the NATO Alliance and the NORAD agreement.

It is bound to raise questions about our role in the peacekeeping operations in which our forces are engaged under the aegis of the United Nations. It is, of course, bound to raise questions about the matter of efficiency and effectiveness within the armed forces, not only now in the existing circumstances but in circumstances which might develop in the foreseeable future. It is bound to raise questions about financial involvement of the Canadian people for defence and the capacity of the economy of this country to support an adequate and appropriate defence budget. It is bound, moreover, to raise questions about the problem of morale within the forces.

These are all issues which will be dealt with in the course of an enlightened, informed and reasonable debate which I anticipate will take place in this house.

I would like to deal first with the legislation. It is based primarily upon the White Paper on Defence which was issued in March 1964. It is based also on, and is a consequence of, the act for the integration of the forces which was passed in the session of 1964-65 as chapter 21. This act replaced the former chiefs of staff of the three services by a Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, and a single Chief of Defence Staff in charge of that committee. The measure before us takes the process which has been a long process—and I will deal with that history a little later—and pursues it by proposing the unification of the three armed services of Canada into one service to be known as the Canadian Armed Forces, under a single minister, perhaps with an associate, and under a single Chief of Defence Staff.

I would point out to honourable senators first of all that this measure is enabling legislation. It does not require unification to take place here and now. It will be a process in which the authorities and the department will be engaged for some time. Indeed, the work they have been doing since 1963 is all basic to the further development which will ultimately result in unification and which will probably not be completed before 1971 at the earliest.

The bill proposes that the components of the Canadian Armed Forces shall consist of the regular forces, as they are understood, and people who are engaged there are on active service for the period of their engagement; the reserve forces, which need not be defined in this house because every honourable senator knows what they are and what their roles are; and also for the organization of special forces to deal with special situations which emergencies in the field of defence might create.

The bill provides that the elements of the unified force will be organized in traditional groupings and will be assigned to duties on a functional basis as required by the missions to be undertaken. The anti-submarine air forces will be part of the Maritime Command. The tactical air squadrons will be part of the Mobile Command. The naval units will be part of the Maritime Command. In case of need of combined operations, all three elements of the forces, land, sea and air, can be involved and mobilized for the purpose at hand.

I would emphasize at this stage that the traditional groupings within this force will remain. The sea components, for example, will still include ships, squadrons of ships, fleets, and they will be able to work either alone or in conjunction with associated fleets under treaties or, in emergency, with allied units of a similar character. The land components will include after unification companies, battalions, regiments, brigades, and the other units to which land forces heretofore have been accustomed.

The air components will still include squadrons, wings and groups.

The bill provides that the ranks for officers and men for administrative purposes shall carry army designations, but where appropriate and guided by the wishes of persons involved, provision may be made for the use of traditional rank designations. For example, if a naval designation of rank is desired, this can be authorized by order in council. The same provision applies to ranks in what has heretofore been known as the Royal Canadian Air Force.

The bill provides that the three services shall continue in existence, but as a unified force. The existing units and other elements will continue. The commissions and ranks that have been attained by members of the forces will continue at the same level as before, without any disturbance arising out of the provisions of this bill.

After unification, officers and men now in the three services will not be forced to perform duties they could not have been required to perform before unification.

I think these will be the areas and the points around which the greater part of the debate here will revolve. But, as Senator Walker pointed out the other day, we have a piece of legislation before us and we should look at it as a whole. So, I propose to deal briefly now with some of what I consider to be the consequential amendments which flow from the basic proposition laid down in the bill.

The remaining clauses, from 8 to 60, are principally changes in wording. They result from changes which flow from the fact that heretofore we have had three separate services and hereafter we shall have a single unified force.

The regulations which will govern this force and which have been evolving over the years, by reason of integration will have to be re-amended and re-adopted. They are to be approved by the Governor in Council, as they have been heretofore, or by the Treasury Board. I would point out that they preclude the minister, on his own authority from making these orders and regulations.

The bill provides that the members of the reserve forces cannot be forced to transfer to the regular force. It is provided that the officers and men of the Canadian Armed Forces may be seconded to the forces of other countries, and vice versa, subject to the act and the regulations. This represents no change from what has been done with the forces divided into three groups.

The bill provides that the Canadian Armed Forces may be placed on active service by order in council in an emergency for the defence of Canada, or pursuant to international agreements—for example, arising out of some emergency, say, under the NATO or NORAD agreements. I may say that the regular forces are, in fact, now on active service, and have been since the Korean War. However, in this modern day and age, when serious emergencies arise quickly, it is necessary for the Executive to have the authority to place the forces on active service almost within minutes. However, it is provided that when such an order in council is passed placing the forces on active service, Parliament must be summoned within 10 days to give its approval.

In the event of a national disaster, either existing or imminent, the regular unified force is immediately liable for duty upon the proclamation being issued. The reserve forces will be liable for call-out for the duty which is prescribed for the reserve forces.

Pay and allowance matters will be controlled by the Treasury Board. The non-public property of units or elements in the forces when they are disbanded—and this occurs from time to time, in any event—will be vested in the Chief of the Defence Staff as trustee for former officers and men and their dependents. A good example of this is the situation that developed so frequently after the last war when, for example, ships were paid off and put into mothballs. There were canteen and other funds which had been accumulated by the crews of the ships. Provision is made for the safeguarding of such funds in this way.

There are consequential changes and other changes in respect of the disciplinary provisions of the National Defence Act respecting offences and punishment, and the questions of courts martial and of appeals. There is provision too for the exemption from jury duty of members of the reserve forces on active service, for members of the regular force and for members of any special forces which might be organized.

There is provision in the bill for assistance to the civil power when it is required, and the conditions under which assistance can be given to the civil power are set out. Payment for these services is also provided.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable leader: Are not all these matters or duties he has catalogued provided for at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. Senator Brooks is quite right about this; they are provided for. All I am saying now is that heretofore the provisions of the act in respect of these matters have dealt specifically with the Royal Canadian Navy, the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Canadian Army. These are consequential changes only, and they are designed only to make it clear that in place of these three different services these provisions will apply to the unified force. These are purely consequential changes.

There are provisions too for fines and offences. I may say in this respect that in some cases the fines have been increased, depending upon the nature of the crime for which the fine is to be levied.

Clause 65 provides that the act will come into force by proclamation.

I should draw the attention of honourable senators to the two schedules to the act. Schedule A, on page 28, gives a comparison of ranks between the three existing services, and the situation that would obtain for the Canadian Armed Forces when they are unified. Schedule B sets out the consequential changes in some 27 various federal statutes which are necessary as a result of the changes made by this bill—for example, the Pensions Act, veterans' legislation, superannuation, income tax. Again, I say these are all consequential amendments made necessary because of the different wording in the mother act.

I should like to take a few moments in which to indicate very briefly some of the steps that have been taken over the years, and which lead now to this eventual step of unification. In 1946 provision was made for a single Minister of National Defence. In 1947, when the Defence Research Board was set up, it was a single Defence Research Board designed to serve the needs of all of the services.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That was also after the war and there was no need for more than one.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes; it was set up in 1947.

In 1950 the National Defence Act was amended. A uniform military law was established, as was a single appeal board which would be available to members of any force. A full-time independent chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee was set up in 1951. There was also set up a Defence Council consisting of the Minister and his associate, the chairman of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, the chiefs of the three staffs, the chief of the Defence Research Board, and the deputy minister on the civilian side.

A tri-service approach in the service colleges has been followed. These colleges are, the R.M.C. in Kingston, Royal Roads near Victoria, and le Collège Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean, Quebec. They have operated under a tri-service approach since their establishment.

Subsequently, the legal, medical and chaplain services were integrated. Later, under the army, the dental, food procurement, and postal services were unified. There was coordination attempted and carried out very extensively in the field of supply.

In 1962 the Glassco Commission proposed a unified approach to the management of the business of the forces. In 1964, as I have already indicated, the White Paper on Defence was tabled and studied. It dealt with reductions in costs, and the problems of reducing costs, and manpower for operations and maintenance. I might say that good progress has been made in those fields.

Let me give an example of the kind of problem that arises in respect of cost. In the Estimates of 1962-63, some five or six years ago, and in the Estimates of 1966-67, the amounts for National Defence were approximately the same, namely, a little over $1.5 billion. In 1966-67, the fiscal year just ended, if the pay, allowances, salaries and other upkeep were paid out on the establishment that existed in 1962-63 the cost would have been $1.4 billion. Had this happened, having regard to the fact that it was prudent to put a ceiling on the defence expenditures of this country—and the Government had to take a decision on this—the funds available in 1966-67 for equipment, construction, and development would have been $97 million. There would have been a 70 per cent reduction in the amount of money available for the purchase of the weaponry and other equipment that was required for the forces to operate. The fact of the matter is that in 1966-67 the amount of money that was made available under the ceiling already prescribed for defence expenditures was not $97 million but $327 million.

In matters of defence it is a foregone conclusion, I think, that every parliamentarian will say that civilian judgment must prevail. This judgment, in the last analysis, must be exercised by the Executive, by Government, but it has to have the support of Parliament in getting its programs approved. This civilian judgment has to be exercised while seriously considering the national interest and the nation's ability to pay, with full consideration being given to the prudent uses of public funds, and with serious regard to our defence policy in relation to other national problems. I say this without in any way detracting from the sincere and earnest efforts of the senior officers, whether they be navy, air force, or army, to do as much as they can for their individual service, to get the best equipment and to make as effective a force as possible. However, it is a fact that these men are well aware that ultimately the civilian judgment must prevail in respect of how far we can go and how much we can do.

Honourable senators, in our lifetime Canadians have fought in two world wars and in Korea. Our service units have had NATO assignments and NORAD assignments, and they have been engaged in every peacekeeping operation the United Nations has proposed. One of the most glorious parts of the history of this country, which is now celebrating its Centennial, has been written by the men and women who served so valiantly in these forces. I am aware, as we all are, that for these people who have survived a very deep personal involvement persists. This involvement is both rational and emotional. The men who have served in the forces have been witnesses to the death of their comrades in arms. They have been witnesses to the physical incapacity, both partial and total, of young men like themselves who volunteered in the fullness and freshness of youth to defend their country. It is a source of deep concern to them personally to see their companions dependent upon the state. They have been witnesses to cases of mental incapacity, both psychological and psychiatric. These pitiable situations affect them particularly, but they affect the civilian population at large.

As with families so indeed it is with comrades in arms: the fact that men together have confronted death, disaster, danger, and capture is bound to promote a core of surviving loyalty to each other, and in many cases gratitude, for often a man feels that he would not be alive today except for some exceptional act a comrade had performed to save his life. Because of involvement in a national effort like a war, a great esprit de corps is bound to develop. Such esprit de corps, spirit of loyalty, and affiliation applies not only to individuals but to units; it applies also to services and to insignia.

Nothing that Parliament or any other body can do will erase this great achievement which is written in the history books, on monuments, in cemeteries, in hospitals and in homes. It is revived in reunions, in meetings of the legion, and of veterans organizations such as the recent Vimy celebrations.

However, honourable senators, as in civilian society, changes—economic, political, social and religious—are going on all the time, and scientific, technical and social change promote evolution and sometimes virtual revolution. It is also abundantly true that similar changes occur in respect of the military requirements of a nation as well. The methods of training and fighting in World War II were vastly different from those of World War I. In World War I the general theory was that the navy put the army ashore and let them fight there. In World War II the three elements of the services united in important combined operations. There are many examples, but perhaps the landings in Normandy are as good as any.

In times described as peace times there have been tremendous advances, developments and changes in the thermo-nuclear capabilities of nations. Scientific discoveries have changed the concepts of military capacity and requirements. In an age of giants in this nuclear era such powers as Russia, the United States and China, Canada—although it plays an important role, looking at it realistically—lacks the population, the wealth and the facilities to compete in this field. The role of Canada's forces, confronted with the military situation that exists in the world today, without downgrading it, is bound to be a supplementary role. Even so, until only a few years ago 25 per cent of the budget of this nation was devoted to the provision required for the armed forces. The percentage now is 15. Not that it has come down, but other expenditures have increased. But we must bear in mind that the cost of effective military establishment is escalating constantly. This is of national concern. The Spitfire, which was such an important weapon in World War II, cost $25,000. Today the cheapest, the lowest-priced fighter to be used effectively, costs $1 million. There are others that cost up to $3 million and $4 million, and it could very well be that in the future the cost of such equipment will be many times higher. These are facts of life. People are crying for lower taxes. They are also crying for peace. The fact of the matter is that the faster rate of obsolescence of weapons leads to inefficiencies in the forces, and unless we re-equip we are going to be far behind, not only in the defence of our country but in our obligations to the other nations to which we are bound by treaties. It therefore seems to be a logical step, the culmination of a logical process, for Canada to embark upon this unification program, which, as I have already stated, has been in process for some time.

Our forces are relatively smaller than the forces of larger powers. We have relatively fewer permanent professional persons in them. Our forces in wartime were largely civilian volunteers. We have relatively less "service first" or "unit first" attitudes in this country, and we have relatively less vested interests in a military establishment. What is proposed will permit a more adaptable, more realistic approach to reorganization.

Let me emphasize that unification will not downgrade our treaty obligations with our allies. They know the processes which we plan and there is no complaint. Let me also emphasize that unification will increase the efficiency and effectiveness of our forces, because we shall have relatively more money to spend on efficient and effective weaponry, and to watch for future developments in this field.

Unification will eliminate so much duplication and waste that has gone on in the past. Everybody knows about such duplication and waste, even persons within the services. I think it can be said both in the field of conventional warfare and that of nuclear warfare, under the obligations we have through the NATO and NORAD treaties, and in our peacekeeping operations, that as a result of the proposals contained in this bill Canada's force will be a more useful one. We must continue to adapt to constant change, to changes which involve both strategy and tactics in training and in operations. This has been going on for some time.

The land forces use missiles now and other weaponry against aircraft and against missiles. Aircraft today attack ships and submarines and other aircraft and land installations, other ships, aircraft and underwater vessels.

Combined forces have become the order of the day more and more. I believe that the effectiveness, the adaptability, the economy, and morale, will all be promoted as a result of the passage of this legislation.

I wonder whether there is a country where adaptability has been proved any more abundantly than it has been in Canada. For example, there was the tremendous achievement which resulted from the work of my friend on my right, the honourable senator from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power) when he was the Minister for Air during the last war. Think what great achievement for the western cause resulted from his not only sponsoring and establishing but running the air training scheme, as well as keeping the fighting forces of Canada in the air. No higher tribute can be paid to any man than the work done by our colleague during those terrifying and troublesome years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I can give another example. When I went with the Honourable Angus Macdonald, as his assistant, to the navy, the navy had 1,500 men and 15 ships, and I think, although I am not sure, the majority of the ships were harbour craft. The naval college had been disbanded. The only place where training could be given for the officers was abroad, particularly in England. Morale, if it existed at all, could scarcely have been lower than it was in the navy in 1939. By 1945, the Canadian Navy in terms of ships and personnel was as big as the Royal Navy was in 1939—and in 1939 the Royal Navy was the greatest navy in the world.

At the beginning, the morale was virtually absent, but the adaptability of the Canadians to develop, not only these three services—and I speak only about two at the moment—and to conduct the war effort at home for the supply of ourselves and our allies, is something that nobody ever can erase from the history of our peoples.

Honourable senators, by this unification bill we are blazing a new trail, a trail which I venture to say many of the bigger and older countries would love to embark upon. Frankly, it would have been easier for the Government to go along with the status quo. To stir up this kind of debate and excitement, and a good deal of misrepresentation too, was not something that any government enjoys doing; and as a member of the Government, I speak not only personally but for my colleagues in the cabinet.

I believe sincerely that if we had not started to take a realistic look at the defence situation in which we find ourselves today, if we had not started to provide efficient, modern equipment, always having regard to the taxpayer's pocket and to the capacity of the country to hold up its head with honour in the face of its international commitments, if we had not done all these things, the Government would have been justifiably subject to the most stringent of criticism.

Hon. Mr. Farris: What does my honourable friend mean by the word "misrepresentation?"

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think there has been a good deal of unreasonable, irresponsible talk about the effect that is proposed by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Who is doing that?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I say it appears in the press; it appears in many places.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Including the minister's statement.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Is the honourable leader referring to the retired admirals?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, no.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They made statements about it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not talking about these men at all.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: No?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not talking about those men at all, because I know them personally and I know that they have given service.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: So do I.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They are dedicated men, and I give them full credit for the great service they have given to this country.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And they know what they are saying.

Hon. Mr. McDonald (Moosomin): Some of them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They know what they are talking about at this time, but the problem of civilian control is an important factor in this matter. It is not the military duty or responsibility to look ahead to see what the problem will be for the Canadian people, for this nation of ours, and to say how much we can support in the way of defence and still maintain our international commitments, our commitments to look after the defence of our country, to manage our economy.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is a responsibility which lies on the shoulders of civilians—primarily on the Government, but indeed upon the shoulders of every Member of Parliament. If the Government did not take the kind of steps it has been taking, as poposed in the bill, it would have been criticized severely and rightly so.

To meet our national and international commitments, if we are to do our duty by ourselves and by our allies we have two choices—either we increase our spending or we reorganize. We have chosen the way of reorganization.

I commend the bill to the Senate.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, we are all indebted to the honourable Leader of the Government for the manner in which he has explained this contentious bill; but listening to him, I wondered if he really believed and approved of what he was saying.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, that is not fair.

Hon. Mr. White: If the honourable senator wishes to ask a question—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I say it is not fair to ascribe motives, as to whether he believes what he says in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Anyone who does not agree with him is not fair.

Hon. Mr. White: Everyone agrees that if this bill is passed, and no doubt it will be passed, it will affect the direction in which our forces will go for decades to come. The importance of the bill makes it all the more imperative that we proceed with caution in that we do not make so sweeping a change in our established military system that it will be impossible to change back to the present set-up.

The average Canadian, reading in the press of the daily reports of the Defence Committee, which has been conducted in more than marked contrast to the manner in which other committees are conducted, must feel that the Defence Committee's operations were effectively scuttled and undermined before the very first meeting of the committee. The Defence Minister produced his integration-unification plans with loud trumpets, and announced that they were the be-all and end-all in defence planning. He adopted a hard, inflexible and uncompromising position which he has not changed.

I do not in the slightest degree presume to be an expert on integration and unification. Frankly, I do not think there are any experts on unification. Expert witnesses before the committee have favoured integration; I do not think there is any doubt about that. Many have cautioned us to go slow on unification; others have given evidence that unification of our armed forces cannot succeed. True, certain officials still on the staff of the Department of National Defence have given evidence in favour of unification. In listening to the honourable leader of the Government, I wondered if at times he did not confuse integration with unification, because in various parts of his speech he mentioned many branches of the services which had been integrated and, as I said before, I doubt if there is very much objection to integration of many of these services.

In my opinion, the honourable leader failed to touch on the one most important point pertaining to this bill. I refer to the future role of our armed forces. The minister, with all his ballyhoo, has also failed to outline and give a picture of the future role of our forces. I suggest that the minister should tell Canada first, then the rest of the world, what the future position of our forces is; what are our interests, what are our commitments, and how we intend to meet these commitments. What are Canadians trying to be to the world?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You want a prophet rather than a minister.

Hon. Mr. White: What are we trying to be to ourselves? Certainly, I think the first question we want answered is what is the role of our armed forces for the future. The Government and the minister have failed to provide a satisfactory answer. Are Canadians to accept a future course based on a child-like faith that the Government is necessarily right, wise and just?

The honourable leader has pointed out that at the present time Canada has certain military commitments around the world, in addition to NATO and NORAD, and of course the defence of Canada. At the present time Canadian forces are carrying out peacekeeping duties in several countries, and performing other duties in various parts of the world. Only a few days ago I read in the press that the Honourable Paul Martin stated that if required Canada would send troops for peacekeeping in North and South Vietnam. Only a day ago I read further that Canadian forces are now being readied for this task.

I think the time is long past due when Canada should stop offering to send troops around the world to keep the peace. There are well over one hundred member nations of the United Nations, and if the peacekeeping troops are to be under the direction of the UN, then that organization should have complete charge and should allot the proportion of troops among all member nations. More important still, the cost of such peacekeeping forces should be borne in proper proportion by all UN members, which I understand is not the case today. Canadian troops have been in the Gaza Strip for many years. Why are they not rotated with troops from other countries?

I well remember the short debate in this chamber when troops were to be sent to Cyprus, the immediate urgency as stated by the Leader of the Government. The troops were going for a period of three months—now extending into years, with no end in sight. I hope the United Nations is paying the cost of this operation and that Canada is only paying her share.

What is to be the future role of our armed forces? Is Canada to maintain present air and ground forces in Europe under NATO, carry on with NORAD and continue our present naval operations, and build a mobile force, as recently stated by the Chief of Staff in press reports? Is this not spreading our forces too thin over too many projects? If Canada maintains its present commitments and builds the proposed mobile force on top of them, then Canada will have a much larger defence bill. The estimates for the current year are $1.7 billion. Does the Government intend to increase the defence budget?

There is another reason why the Government should announce its plans for NATO and NORAD, and Canada's anti-submarine role: some changes and reductions will have to be made if the new mobile force is to be financed without an increase in the defence budget. It is a very interesting question as to whether or not the Canadian people would accept a vast increase in the defence budget.

Can our present commitments be reduced? The basic one is the defence of our own territory as carried out through NORAD and our anti-submarine role. Canadians know they cannot defend their country alone and, for this reason, agreed to a part in the United States dominated umbrella erected over the whole continent. Canadians have a duty to provide their share; moreover, sovereignty is involved. We realize in Canada that the United States will not leave this continent vulnerable in any area.

I hope no one will suggest that we buy our way out of our anti-submarine role. Our commitments to NATO are in a different class. Many people have felt for a long time that our forces in Europe should be withdrawn or reduced. With the easing of the cold war, the risk of conflict has subsided. It is more or less repugnant—and even more for those countries that must accept them than for us—to maintain troops on another country's soil. Also, we would be in a much better position to talk and deal with Russia if we were not maintaining armed forces against them.

Government supporters attempted to make much of the so-called admirals' revolt. Their views were dismissed as those of tradition-bound admirals; their arguments were stated to be a minority view—considered of little effect, confined to the navy and a few sections of the air force; but the army was reputed to be right behind the minister and his plan for unification. Later evidence before the committee showed that the army and air force were not behind the scheme; that dissatisfaction was widespread and deep. It was not an admirals' revolt; it was a revolt by many of the country's senior military advisers. It has been stated that the staff were suddenly told to unify by the centennial year. The whole issue is one of common sense. The evidence against unification by two top ranking generals before the Defence Committee contained a great deal of common sense.

It appears to be so logical, sensible and reasonable to decide on the future role of our forces before any unification of the forces takes place. One cannot dismiss the evidence before the committee which raises substantial doubts about the headlong rush to a single service concept. Many high ranking officers, with years of service, all voiced their opinion against unification—one suggested the need for a five-year period to shake down work already done on integration.

How the country's commitments to NATO and NORAD will fit in with unification is something the minister and his supporters have never satisfactorily explained. It must be very plain that unification has no place in the army brigade in Europe, or in the air division there, or in the navy's anti-submarine role. I would ask the question: What are these units to unify with?

It cannot be pointed out too strongly that with Canada's present commitments to NATO and NORAD, where the R.C.A.F. and the army play important roles is in co-operation with the armies and air forces of other nations, the plan to unify the armed service in this country would confuse planning and compound difficulties in co-operation among nations.

Evidence before the committee indicated that a great deal of reorganization has gone on, but there is still much to be done. It is a case not only of being unsure of where unification is heading, but also of being unsure of how far integration has brought the armed forces. As one witness put it, "Can the country afford to be launched on an uncharted course at very high speed toward a dim destination?" Surely this is a good time to reduce the speed and take another good look at our destination.

Many military personnel are of the opinion that there is a major error in the unification program, which lies in the confusion and lack of understanding as to how far integration is to be attempted below the level of regiments, ship's companies and other combat units. Such moves could well destroy the all-important factor of morale, pride and family spirit of these units.

It is interesting to note that every commander of note in history is on record as holding that the value of morale or team spirit is far greater than that of mere numers.

There should be no attempt to experiment with integration below the level of the regiment, or its equivalent in the naval and air services. The emphasis should lie with integrated staffs, service formations, training establishments, holding depots, hospitals, engineers, transport, dental and medical services, signals and other corps.

It is ridiculous to argue that there can be any savings in cost or gain in efficiency by having the fighting units of army, navy and air force all wearing identically coloured uniforms.

One cannot stress too strongly the effect of unification on the forces. Up to the present, men have functioned most effectively as members of an identifiable group. The spirit of unity, of brotherhood, is enhanced by tradition, pride in one's organization and by a distinctive uniform which is a mark of membership. The value of esprit de corps cannot be measured with precision; no price tag can be placed on it, yet we all recognize its intrinsic contribution in the quality of our armed forces. It is the heart of the true fighting force. We should not tamper with the precious esprit de corps—that sense of identification—by immersing it in a vast agglomeration of a single service. Traditions, pride of service and unit identification cannot be purchased with dollars; they are built through the loyalty, gallantry, courage, sacrifice and blood under conditions of heroism and danger. Once destroyed, they cannot be quickly restored by a mere Act of Parliament. As two world wars have illustrated, Canadian servicemen are not reactionary, hidebound or old-fashioned—quite the contrary. The minister will find full support for a high degree of integration among his service personnel but not to the point where identification of combat units is sacrificed; there is neither efficiency nor economy in this—just the reverse.

During the time that this bill has been before Parliament, all honourable senators have received copies of many briefs, petitions, editorials, letters and other printed material pertaining to it. I wish to refer to two of them. The first is a small pamphlet by R. S. Malone, publisher of the Winnipeg Free Press, containing editorials which appeared on the editorial page of that paper. After a number of articles, it has summed up under the heading "Time to Consider," and with your indulgence I would like to read the summary.

> Speaking in defence of his policy for complete integration of the three defence services, down to and including combat units, Mr. Hellyer, Canada's minister of national defence, declares that many leading military experts advocate this development and that confidence is the key word to his program.
>
> The facts of the case do not seem to support this view, as documented by previous articles on this page. Indeed many of our service units are seriously under strength and confidence and morale in Canada's fighting services is now considered to be at an all-time low by many serving officers. This is not all due to such things as rates of pay but largely to the threat posed to the traditions and identifications of combat units and uncertainty about the future.
>
> Mr. Hellyer has chosen to interpret and term any resistance to his program, the resignations of senior officers and any qualified advice on the subject, as a challenge to civilian government by the generals, a military power play. This, of course, is quite ridiculous. Those he appears to accuse are the very persons who took up arms to back the government in the fight for democratic principles against a military dictatorship in Europe and a Communist tyranny in Asia. Mr. Hellyer would be wiser to consider seriously the expert advice that has been offered through a sincere sense of duty by many of his senior officers.
>
> Their professional views are not by the wildest stretch of the imagination any challenge to constitutional civilian control of the army, despite the hysterical screams which have recently appeared in print by ill-informed writers, who have not bothered to study the facts.
>
> The truth of the matter is that a vast majority of experienced officers fully support a high degree of integration of the defence forces in all the various supply, support, administrative and directing facilities but not to the level of combat units, where esprit de corps and efficiency would be destroyed.
>
> Senior officers are not only entitled to make their considered opinions known to the government, indeed it is their responsibility to offer their professional advice. Under the present command structure erected by Mr. Hellyer, however, they have been effectively muzzled while remaining in the service.
>
> It serves little purpose to attempt to discredit officers who have served their country well by picturing them as a pack of outdated blimps. The national interest would be better served by a serious consideration of their views and a change in the command structure to ensure that in future the defence chiefs are free properly to tender their advice on military matters to the cabinet and government of the day.

There was another brief that everyone received from the Navy League of Canada, Naval Officers Associations of Canada, and the Royal Canadian Naval Association, in which the whole matter was reviewed. I wish only to read the last paragraph under the heading "Conclusions," which appears on page 37 of that brief.

> The navy program in recent years has resulted in a high proportion of its budget being spent on new equipment; with a high proportion of its personnel at sea, its administrative organization well within the bounds of reason, the force well equipped, effectively trained and as efficient—ship for ship—as the navy of any other nation. Yet after almost three years of integration the number of ships has been cut almost in half, difficulties in manpower are increasingly manifest, new construction of ships of a type originally planned to be laid down in 1963 have not yet been laid down and all of its seamen admirals either released or resigned well in advance of the usual retirement age. It is difficuult to characterize this as progress.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, there is no doubt that this bill is going to pass. The bill to unify the forces will be shoved down the throat of Parliament and the public of Canada in the same manner as the new flag was rammed down the throats of the Canadian people.

I have yet to read or hear any explanation as to why the word "Royal" in Royal Canadian Air Force and Royal Canadian Navy has to be abolished or as to why the uniforms have to be changed. There has always been a group in this country that seeks to destroy and abolish anything that has become a tradition or that has acquired an historical background. Out the window it goes for something new and untried—a 1967 model.

The minister will find that all military personnel have a great pride in their unit. Each unit had in the past, and has today, certain badges, flashes and other distinctive markings. For example, in the First World War each division had a different coloured beret—red, blue, grey and green. They had patches on their sleeves to denote their brigade and regiment; they also had regimental badges. Each soldier wore his beret and badges with great pride and distinction. It is pride and loyalty which prompt men to enlist. In time of war if you ask a member of the forces why he enlisted he will be embarrassed and tongue-tied, but inside he knows why he enlisted. Pride, loyalty and tradition prompt enlistment and inspire men to rise above themselves, to transcend the normal bounds of human endurance. Destroy or take away these intangibles that make soldiers win battles, that make citizens build a nation, and all you have left is a hollow reed.

The recent ceremony at Vimy Ridge is a perfect example of what I have been trying to say. The action at Vimy Ridge in April 1917 has always been described as the day on which Canada became a nation. April 9, 1917, was a day of blood; it was also a day of triumph; it was a day that will live forever in the hearts and minds of Canadians.

It may be interesting to honourable senators to note the large painting just behind me. It is of the little village of Albain St. Nazaire, which is immediately behind Vimy Ridge—anyone who was there will recognize it—and the road they are travelling along leads to the little village of Souchey.

Do you not think that the veterans of Vimy who returned to Vimy for the ceremony a few days ago, or the thousands of Vimy veterans across Canada who gathered on Vimy Day to honour the fiftieth anniversary of this memorable battle, were proud of the part they played 50 years ago? And on the fiftieth anniversary these old soldiers wore their berets, badges and medals with great pride and distinction.

Only a few days ago in this chamber and outside this building, when His Excellency was sworn in as Governor General, you had an example of the colour, pomp and ceremony of the military on parade. How dull it would have appeared if all the uniforms had been of one colour. The guard of honour, the R.C.M.P.—how would they have looked if everyone had been wearing the one drab green coloured uniform? All the glamour and the colourful spectacle of the changing of the guard in front of these buildings during the summer months will be lost if the troops are to wear a dull green uniform.

In closing, I reiterate that until this country knows the future role of its armed forces, no further steps should be taken in the unification of the forces. If the minister answers the question as to the future role of the armed forces, then perhaps at the same time he will answer another simple question: Why the great rush in unification, when experienced officers advise that it will take several years to complete and shake down the integration of the forces?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m.

At 3 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Leave having been granted to revert to reports of committees:

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-60, to amend the Food and Drugs Act, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 2: Strike out lines 22 to 32, both inclusive, and substitute therefor the following:

"41. (1) No person shall traffic in a restricted drug or any substance represented or held out by him to be a restricted drug.

(2) No person shall have in his possession any restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking.

(3) Except as authorized in this Part or the regulations, no person shall promote the use of or trafficking in a restricted drug.

(4) Every person who violates subsection (1), (2) or (3) is guilty of an offence and is liable

(a) upon summary conviction, to imprisonment for eighteen months; or

(b) upon conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for ten years."

2. Page 4: Strike out lines 6 to 11, both inclusive, and substitute therefor the following:

"(3) In addition to the regulations provided for by subsection (1), the Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) authorizing the possession or export of restricted drugs and prescribing the circumstances and conditions under which and the persons by whom restricted drugs may be had in possession or exported, and

(b) defining for the purposes of subsection (3) of section 41 the word 'promote' and prescribing the circumstances and conditions under which and the persons by whom the use of restricted drugs may be promoted."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Molson: I move, with leave of the Senate, that this report be taken into consideration now.

Honourable senators, when Bill S-60 was before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, in the course of discussion it was felt that in addition to the evils of trafficking in these substances and the damage of using them, there was another feature which in the course of amending this bill it would be wise to incorporate, namely, that of dealing with the matter of the promotion of the use of or trafficking in these drugs. For that reason, after considerable discussion in committee, subsections 1 and 2 of Section 41 remained the same, but a new subsection 3 was substituted. That new subsection has been read, but I would repeat it, because it deals with those who would promote the use of or trafficking in the drug.

(3) Except as authorized in this Part or the regulations, no person shall promote the use of or trafficking in a restricted drug.

It was felt that the evil of promotion was just as great or had as many implications as the other offences with which the bill tries to deal, and having then in that paragraph set out that promotion is not permitted, it became necessary to define promotion.

That is now covered in Section 45, subsection 3. In the bill subsection 3 is a single subsection, but in the amendment it is divided into paragraphs (a) and (b). Paragraph (a) remains as it was previously, and paragraph (b) is added. This now empowers regulations to be issued. Paragraph (b) reads:

defining for the purposes of subsection (3) of section 41 the word "promote" and prescribing the circumstances and conditions under which and the persons by whom the use of restricted drugs may be promoted.

I think it was the unanimous feeling of the committee that these amendments were improvements to the bill, and for that reason I am very pleased to move concurrence.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: I was not in committee, because I am not on the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. That committee is reputed to be very wise, but most of its members are concerned more with dollars and cents—more with dollars than with cents—spelled c-e-n-t-s.

I think this bill might have been sent to another committee. When I spoke on this matter the other day I was really in earnest in suggesting that something should be done to aid persons who may have in their possession this drug innocently or because they are ill. Something should be done to keep such persons out of jail at least for a while until it is determined whether something can be done. I do not know whether that question was brought up in committee, but in listening to the report of the committee I heard no reference to it.

You will note Section 40, subsection (1):

(1) Except as authorized by this Part or the regulations, no person shall have a restricted drug in his possession.

(2) Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and is liable

(a) upon summary conviction for a first offence to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment.

Now, with respect to a young person—say anywhere from 17 to 20 years of age, if you like—who is a bit disturbed mentally and who has this drug in his or her possession, I think it is unfair that such a person should be sent to jail for a period of time, whether it be for six months or eighteen months. I think it also unfair to fine him $1,000. You are making a criminal out of that person without considering the fact that he or she is not a well person.

I should have thought that somebody in the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce would have suggested some means to offset committing such an unkindness, and that is putting it very mildly. I say it is a crime to send a person that young to jail unless the person is a bona fide criminal.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask, does the bill not say that such a person is only liable to be sent? In other words, is this not in the hands of the magistrate or judge who hears the case?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is right. It is not a maximum or minimum.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is what the departmental people have said.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: He is liable to be sent —yes, but I quite understand that a magistrate or judge could sentence that person to the full term in jail because he will be disgusted. He has sons and daughters of his own and he regards this as such a terrible thing that he may send the accused to the penitentiary. He may not bother about how sick that person is.

I feel that there should be a section in the bill to take care of such an individual, so that he will be sent to a doctor or to a hospital or some other place for proper analysis and treatment. I only bring this question up because I think that before the bill passes some consideration ought to be given to this aspect, if for no other reason than that it is in the cause of humanity.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, I think the honourable senator who has just taken his seat was absent yesterday afternoon when I closed the debate on second reading. For that reason, and for that reason only, I should say a word or two at this time.

The provisions of this act are similar to those contained in the Narcotic Control Act, and it is my understanding from the information I have received that the judiciary in imposing penalties under that act take into account every circumstance relating to the person involved in trafficking in drugs. I understand that in cases where a young person or a university student is being prosecuted under that act members of the judiciary have in certain instances imposed jail sentences which were never served. At all times, so far as my information goes, the judiciary have been fair in assessing penalties, and I am convinced that that will be the case under this act.

The second point I want to make is that it is no longer true that when we sentence persons to institutions, and the door is locked and they are in institutions, and the door is locked and they have no medical or educational facilities available to them. Our penal institutions have made some progress—perhaps not enough—over the years, and they are now making greater strides than ever before to provide facilities for medical care and education and even psychiatric care. I have every confidence that that will be the case with people who are penalized under this act.

To sum up, honourable senators, the two points I want to make are that the judiciary has shown great discretion under the Narcotic Control Act, and it will do the same under this act. Furthermore, when people are sent to penal institutions today they do receive educational benefits and medical treatment, and it is hoped by all of us that these facilities will improve as time goes by.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I would like to substantiate what Senator McDonald has said. There is no question, Senator Hollett, as to these people being treated as criminals. They will be given the best medical and psychiatric care possible. They will not be thrown into an institution and treated as ordinary criminals.

This is important legislation, and I hope we will pass it. All those who are interested in medical research and in psychiatry are looking forward to it.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Honourable senators, I would like to ask what is meant by this word "promotion". Does this refer to advertising in the newspapers, to radio talks on the subject, or to television programs on the subject? What is meant by "promotion" in this sense? How far do we extend "promotion"?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps honourable senators would not mind if I answered this question or attempted to do so on behalf of the chairman and on behalf of Senator Molson.

First, the idea of using the word "promotion" originated in the mind of Senator Molson, and I think it is a very worthy amendment. Many people have asked, what we are going to do about the news media—the press, radio and television—discussing these things and perhaps glorifying their use to a certain extent? It seems to me that this wording meets the consensus that developed in the debate here, and we are very grateful to Senator Molson for making the suggestion, lawyer and all though he is not.

In the second place, let me say that the clause as already drafted has been very carefully considered by the drafting officers of the Crown, and they agree that the language in which the clause is now phrased is suitable. Moreover, there is authority now given to the minister to deal with these matters with a little more latitude perhaps than was originally intended in the bill. The Senate does this in the hope of meeting emergencies that could develop, and we do not know what these emergencies might be.

Therefore, I think the changes that are proposed are very good and far-seeing changes and deserve the commendation of all parliamentarians.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Honourable senators, if it is in order, I would like to move an amendment to clause 40 of this bill, subclause (2) (a). After the words "one year or to both fine and imprisonment", I move that we add the words "unless it can be proven that such person is in need of hospital or psychiatric treatment;".

Hon. Mr. Leonard: On a point of order, I suggest that the amendment proposed by Senator Hollett is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Why?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: The motion before the house is for the adoption of the report of the committee, and I think that is what the Senate now has to deal with.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, there is a motion before the house which I will now put. I assume that the debate has now been concluded.

With leave of the Senate, it is moved by honourable Senator Molson, for honourable Senator Hayden, seconded by Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne), that the motion be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

An Hon. Senator: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: Adopted, on division.

THIRD READING—NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: With leave, I move third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Before the motion is adopted I would like to propose the amendment which I read earlier.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: As I understand it, the honourable senator is making the motion that the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended according to the terms he has suggested.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I move that the bill be amended by adding to clause 40, subclause (2) (a), the words "unless it can be proven that such person is in need of hospital or psychiatric treatment."

Hon. Mr. McDonald: May I bring to the attention of Senator Hollett Bill C-292, which has not come before us as yet but which I think will come very shortly. It seems to me that it is only a matter of time until the provisions of this bill are extended to include the type of drug we are now dealing with, and I think this bill would satisfy the desires of the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: But the bill we are referring to now is Bill S-60, not the one you have in your hands.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, since we propose to sit on Friday, it might suit the convenience of the Senate to adjourn consideration of this motion for third reading until the next sitting, and thus give Senator Hollett an opportunity to draft his amendment so that we can all see it. Would that be satisfactory to the sponsor of the bill?

Hon. Mr. McDonald (Moosomin): Yes.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion be withdrawn?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. McDonald (Moosomin) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FORCES REORGANIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from earlier this day the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-243, to amend the National Defence Act and other acts.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, this is a very important bill. For this chamber it is of special significance and at the same time it offers us an opportunity which we ought not to muff. I have sat in this chamber for some years, and regularly there have come before us from the other place bills that have been flagged, "Hurray, hurray, hurray! We have to close Parliament," or, "We have to meet a deadline," and somehow or other we have always hurried and accommodated them. Despite the protests, we have never done anything about it.

Today the picture is somewhat different. Here we have a bill on which the House of Commons spent 16 days and its committee 26 days. It is a very important bill, and I think the country has the right to take a look at us and see how we handle this bill in these circumstances. The other place is adjourning tonight and will not be back for a week. I do not suggest we continue talking until the members of the other place return, but I think there should be a thorough discussion of this bill. I think our views should be heard loud and clear. Members ought to participate, with short speeches. That is all I want to say on that point.

The speech made by my leader, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), was delivered with feeling and conviction; in my view it was an admirable presentation. He is knowledgeable on the subject and he was, as usual, markedly eloquent.

Senator White is no amateur when speaking on a subject such as this, because he, Senator Brooks and I, until we came over here, were members of the Veterans Affairs Committee in the other place. I must admit that Senator Brooks was our mentor, but they have lost their way now, our courses have diverged somewhat, as I gathered from Senator White's speech, and I anticipate that would be Senator Brooks' view expressed in his own way.

Senator White spoke about the future role of the armed forces. I do not know what that will entail, but this much I do know, that this country has always met every commitment it has made, whether in regard to NATO, or NORAD, peacekeeping or putting out brush fires. I think it is fair to say that we have a unique and most desirable reputation in the world, in that we are associated with peacekeeping forces, and the world praises us for that.

No matter what steps are taken under this bill, I feel confident that we will continue to be helpful under those circumstances. I think this house must appreciate something the members know as well as I do, that one of the reasons we wind up in Cyprus, on the Gaza Strip and in other places is because we are acceptable. There are other nations which are prepared to offer their forces; but for political reasons their forces are unacceptable.

Hon Mr. Brooks: Other small nations do.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Of course they do, but most small nations cannot afford to participate. We can and do participate.

This is the contribution we make, and we are proud of it. And really, we can afford it; it is not that burdensome. I see no reason why we should not continue. My only hope is that we shall never have to go beyond that. We will give all the peacekeeping forces that are needed, but we hope that beyond that it will not be necessary to go, because two days of actual combat will make up for all the peacekeeping forces we can finance in a whole year.

I have thought about this bill and have come to the conclusion that I am able to support it. It has now come to the Senate for consideration. It has had long and careful consideration in the other place and in the select committee, and I believe that the Minister of National Defence should be commended rather than vilified for his determination to see this bill translated into law. I know that he has felt the heat—not an unusual experience for politicians—but ever since he accepted his present portfolio he has remained in the kitchen in full charge of the menu.

I am not going to detain the house long. This bill has been fully debated; it has been over-debated elsewhere. I do not feel I can add anything to the thinking, but I have already made the point that members ought to participate, and that is why I am participating. I may say in a little different form what has been said, but I do not think I can add an original thought.

As is usual with us, we are debating this bill on the motion for second reading, and I propose to state my reasons for supporting the principle of this bill.

As I conceive it, the main purpose of the bill is to provide for the unification of the Canadian forces. I do not consider it a mystery as to what is intended by that expression. What is contemplated is the establishment of a single service into which the previously established services—known as the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force—are to be embodied following the coming into force of the appropriate provisions of this bill.

I note also—and this fact should not be lost upon this house—that this measure will not come into effect upon its receiving Royal Assent. Clause 65, which is the final clause, makes it clear that this act or any provision thereof shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council. In other words, the accomplishment of unification—that is, of a single service concept—will not be sudden, but will be a phased process. It will be brought about following the passage of the bill through Parliament—and I do not think there should be any doubt on that point—but gradually, and in an orderly manner so that there will be a minimum of disruption.

I came across some matters that I think are interesting, and about which I will take a moment to tell you. The problems in respect of centralizing or unifying armed forces are very old and perplexing ones. I came across a report on the formation of the British army at the time of the outbreak of the Crimean War. I am not attempting to relate one to the other, but I think this is interesting.

There were at that time six major components of the army. Operations and numbers were controlled by the Home Secretary. The Commander-in-Chief dealt with promotions of Horse and Foot. The Ordnance Board was responsible for all arms, stores, barracks, fortifications as well as the pay and discipline of the Artillery and Engineers. Provisions and fuel was controlled by the Treasury Commissariat, while the Board of Officers dealt with clothes.

These agencies, the note says, pursued their own ways, and dealt with each other as little as possible. The restoration of some reasonable semblance of command and control took some time, and there were 567 commissions and committees worrying away at the problem. This leisurely and cumbersome process of making administrative and military sense out of organizational chaos was barely acceptable in the 19th century. The facts of military life today mean that we can no longer afford the luxury of a long drawn out evolutionary process to achieve a suitable defence posture in Canada.

Let me delve for a moment into something that all honourable senators know as much about as anyone else, namely, military history. Military organizations, like other organizations, almost invariably become rigid and more elaborate as they grow older. In wealthy countries armies become larger, and they entrench themselves behind fortifications. You and I lived in the time of the Maginot Line. Such fortifications became vulnerable, as history shows, to forces which had speed, mobility and imagination. One need only mention the achievements of a number of guerilla forces in the last few years to recognize the military virtues of daring and flexibility. Above all, we need to encourage innovation in the whole military function. We need not only innovation in equipment but we need also to sustain and achieve an innovative mind in our whole approach to military organization and costs.

It is not so long ago that warfare was dominated by land battles, sea battles and air battles. These now belong to another era. The standard pattern of military tactics today is what used to be known as combined operations in the Second World War, and those of us who were participants in that war know that it did not come about easily. It took us a very long time to learn that process and be able to obtain the co-operation that was necessary and essential. It paid off in the end. Military units, whatever their basic environment, tend to fight together as a team, and their effectiveness depends on teamwork, co-operation, and mutual understanding. I know that this is not achieved by emphasizing disparate services, loyalty to an individual service, and the specialized roles of the different services. Military people must fight as a unit, and it follows that they should be trained as a unit, and be subject to unified direction.

Some honourable senators will recall the name of Liddell Hart, who wrote very effectively on war subjects upoon which he was an authority. He wrote a book entitled Paris, or the Future of War, which was published in 1925. In going through it I came across this comment attributed to Field Marshal Earl Haig, who was a great soldier. I take it that he was protesting against Liddell Hart's book. This is what he said:

> Some enthusiasts today talk about the probability of the horse becoming extinct and prophesy that the aeroplane, the tank, and the motor-car will supersede the horse in future wars. I believe that the value of the horse and the opportunity for the horse in the future are likely to be as great as ever...I am all for using aeroplanes and tanks, but they are only accessories to the man and the horse, and I feel sure that as time goes on you will find just as much use for the horse—the well-bred horse—as you have ever done in the past.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: When was that written?

Hon. Mr. Croll: In 1925. That was Haig's comment made at the time the book was published.

I am not speaking disparagingly of Haig, but I think this does indicate the highest military thinking at that time.

The single service concept is not new, but certainly on the coming into force of the present bill Canada will become the first country in the world to espouse it.

The Associate Minister of National Defence, who was in Europe recently at the Vimy ceremonies, told me that he came back through the Scandinavian and other countries. He said that the only thing the defence officials of those countries were interested in was what we were doing about defence and how our bill was getting on. He told me that that was the one matter discussed, and that they envied us very, very much. Well, Canada will be out in front, and there is nothing unworthy about that.

In my opinion, as a serving soldier in World War II, Canada will provide a lead for other countries which will fall in line eventually. Nor should "Surprise!" or "Foul!" be called by those who have recently opposed the present bill. Unification was clearly foreshadowed as the end result of integration as long ago as the tabling of the Government White Paper of March 1964, issued under the signature of the present minister, following which "command integration" was begun. I should like to quote from page 19 of the White Paper:

> Following the most careful and thoughtful consideration, the Government has decided that there is only one adequate solution. It is the integration of the Armed Forces of Canada under a single Chief of Defence Staff and a single Defence Staff. This will be the first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada.

Nothing has been sprung on anyone by virtue of this bill. Over three years ago the present Government made its intentions perfectly clear, so that "one who runs may read". The creation of a unified command was to be followed by the establishment of a united force. It is as simple as that. The enactment of the present bill will make possible the implementation of an over-all policy clearly enunciated in 1964.

Much has been made of the fact that some retired admirals, generals and air vice-marshals, in giving evidence before the Commons committee, have expressed misgivings, doubts and fears about the end result of unification. I do not think it is necessary, in order to support this bill, to denigrate these distinguished former officers because of their opposition to the "single service" concept, or to dismiss their testimony as irrelevant. It would be, to my mind, less than natural for them to contemplate with equanimity the absorption into a united force the particular services with which their active military careers have been associated. Account has been taken of their points of view and the decision reached, in accordance with the view of the present defence staff under General Allard, and with the broad policy announced in 1964, that unification throughout the armed forces should logically follow integration at the top. In this decision, I entirely concur.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the senator a question? Is it not a fact that these generals, admirals, and others he is speaking of, have all agreed that the 1964 integration policy was correct, but that what they are objecting to is unification, and objecting very strongly? Integration was accepted by all leading military men at that time, and is accepted now.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I do not disagree with what Senator Brooks has said. However, they do not agree with the very last sentence I read from the White Paper: "This will be the first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada."

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They say it should not be extended to combat forces, and that is the objection.

Hon. Mr. Croll: What I have said is that they have a right to say it. I expected them to stand up for the force, but in the end a decision had to be made by others than themselves, and there is a responsibility on the House of Commons and upon us, to make the decision. It is all very well for us to take advice and to listen, but we are responsible for carrying out policy and we are responsible to the people of Canada. After listening to them we have come to a different decision. That is what I am saying.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I do not wish to interfere with the honourable senator's argument, but he has spoken of civilians determining military expenditure, and I also heard the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) say this morning that the civilians should decide. In 1939 and 1940, and even before that time, General de Gaulle, who is recognized as one of the great leaders on military matters in the world, told the French government that they should have tanks and other armaments of that kind. He presented his case to the government. Instead they went ahead with the Maginot Line. General de Gaulle proved to be correct, because when the Germans came the French were met with tanks and modern warfare, for which they were unprepared. The Germans came within a certain distance and just walked around the Maginot Line and destroyed France, following which many hundreds and thousands of soldiers were lost.

In my opinion, the Government should decide how much money it has to spend, and having determined that amount it should tell the defence leaders what they can spend on decided armaments. That is what de Gaulle tried to get across to the French people at that time.

Hon. Mr. Croll: After the war I was associated in Parliament with one whom I regarded as one of my mentors, a gentleman called Senator Brooks. I was always interested in what he had to say, as I am interested now in knowing what he will have to say when he closes the debate. I do not quarrel with what de Gaulle said. He was right and they were wrong. I also remember what General Eisenhower said when he vacated office as President of the United States. He said, "Don't let the military make these decisions for you. This is a civil responsibility, and civilians ought to make it." Let us keep that in the back of our minds.

Let me now make one short observation with respect to the economics in the defence of Canada, because Senator White raised it and said they had not proved they were economies. I do not know if in this short period of time we are able to prove anything, but it was held out to us that there would be a possibility of economies, and of course we are all hopeful there will be savings as a result. The economic aspects of defence refer primarily to the way the resources devoted to defence are used. Improvements in the pattern of resource allocation naturally lead to greater efficiency, and this is the vital aim. To achieve the most economic use of defence resources, it is essential to review and adjust at reasonable intervals the disposition of forces and equipment. In countries where forces are large, the size of adjustment is usually small in relation to the total so that the changes can be made without any serious disruption of military effectiveness. However, in a country such as Canada, the substitution of one weapons system for another, or a complete change in the role of a military formation, may be very difficult. This is because the individual components of the defence organization, such as brigades, squadrons of ships or air bases, are usually indivisible and each is large compared to the total.

The transfer of military resources from one component to another may leave the reduced component uneconomic in size and incapable of functioning effectively. This is particularly true in Canada where most of the individual defence programs are conducted at or near the minimum feasible level in terms of force components.

The problem is compounded when the military forces of a country are divided into separate services. Basically this is because changes and adjustments which become necessary may be relatively so large that the viability of an individual force may be impaired—or at last this fear may exist. Thus, the retention of individual services introduces a further rigidity and impedes adjustments which may be both rational and economical. From these considerations it may be concluded that small military forces in particular should be as homogeneous and flexible as possible and subjected to unified analysis and control in order to make possible the continuous adjustments which are dictated by the changing military, technical and political environment.

The Leader of the Government said today that there was duplication, there was waste, and that money which could be saved could be used for essentials. Senator White in his remarks spoke of morale. Much has been said outside this chamber about morale. It has been said that morale in the navy, army and air force is now at a low ebb. I do not know about that. I do know that it is extremely difficult, under any circumstances, to keep morale high in any armed force in peacetime. And during a war it is difficult to keep morale in any force which is sitting and doing nothing. Some of us have had considerable knowledge of that experience.

In the case of the Canadian Armed Forces, their active participation in various peacekeeping missions has contributed to their morale but, honourable senators, nothing is more destructive of morale, whether in armed forces or elsewhere, than uncertainty. The present uncertainty about the future must be ended forthwith, if the morale of the personnel is to be maintained or raised. Once a principle is established, there is no difficulty in working out details. They fall into their natural places.

Here I agree with Air Marshal Miller, who did not declare against unification but did not believe, at any rate, that it should be rushed until command integration has shaken down. But, at least the uncertainty in principle must be ended, and ended now. Let us have the single united command, and the single united force contemplated by the White Paper, approved in principle now.

Senator White spoke also about tradition. That is very important. There are clearly customs and traditions in any institution which are very valuable and which ought to be preserved at all costs. The notion, too widely held, that unification of the Canadian Forces implies the abandonment of tradition, of pride in the regiment, and other ingredients of esprit de corps, can be summarily dismissed. I say this from everything I have heard in the debates outside this house and here.

The preservation of the intangible factors which support and sustain any fighting unit is an essential goal, but along with this it is important to foster innovation. It is the process of innovation and the stimulus of new ideas and methods which inject enthusiasm and vigour into any organization. At the risk of seeming repetitious, let me say there is no intention of abandoning the regimental system.

"Integration" and "unification" may not be the most apt terms to describe what has happened or what is to happen, but let us not worry ourselves to death about semantics.

May I commend to those with doubts and hesitations the wise words of Shakespeare:

> Our doubts are traitors.
> And make us lose the good we oft' might win
> By fearing to attempt.

Hon. Rheal Belisle: Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak at length, although this matter warrants a long discussion. To get to the point regarding our military forces, I have always looked upon the defence policy as simply an extension of foreign policy.

It is my contention that the Canadian people are entitled to be informed clearly of the future role that is to govern the organization and operation of Canada's armed forces. The situation will remain confused until the Government indicates what is to be the purpose of the armed forces of Canada. We should be told clearly whether Canadian forces are to perform in the peace keeping role or are intended to have a full combat capability, not only for the direct defence of Canada but in particular within the present strategy of the NATO and NORAD alliances. I think we should be given a full reason why so many of our senior officers have been fired, released or pensioned. I must confess that I am greatly worried about the future of our forces, not so much about the uniforms or the ranks but because of the effect of unification on their morale.

The arrogance of the Minister of Defence —both in the House of Commons and before the Defence Committee—concerning his department's intentions regarding unification is but another example of the lack of courage of a government which refuses to proclaim its convictions. I regret his attitude at a time when our armed forces are placed face to face with a grave problem.

It must be regarded as unusual in Canadian politics to find a defence minister so much on the defensive as is the case with Defence Minister Paul Hellyer. He now finds fault with the use of the word "unification" as a descriptive term applied to what he now prefers to call "amalgamation" of Canada's armed forces. The fact is simply that Mr. Hellyer finds himself backed into a corner by commanders of the armed forces who have had war experience. Their opinions cannot be lightly brushed aside by speeches on economy and efficiency. There has been more than a little inefficiency at the political level in Canada's military past.

The political decisions of past Liberal governments in Ottawa have worked to the detriment of Canada's armed forces on a number of occasions. The "Hellyer plan" for unification has been riddled by the fire of experienced men with solid military backgrounds. But Mr. Hellyer shows no signs of retreat. He says that the combined services, now partly operative in the Maritime Command, is proving to be a most effective system of defence.

How can Mr. Hellyer be so sure? It has not been tested under war conditions. If he wants to play with words, what is the situation if "offence" is substituted for "defence" in his assertion on the most effective system?

The Canadian public has good reason to be concerned when the glove of challenge is thrown down by "career" military personnel. Perhaps the concern would be less if it were not for the record of past mistakes in political judgment on matters pertaining to Canada's armed forces.

Senior officers of all services have expressed a near unanimous opinion that what we are planning to do is dangerous to our democracy—that if ever a commander of a command decided to set himself up to control this country of ours, he has a ready-made organization to achieve it. If a minister of national defence and a commander, mobile command, get together, we could have a dictatorship overnight. The Members of Parliament, Rear Admiral Landymore said, "should contemplate this set-up organization with some alarm".

He said this was "an invitation to have trade unions in the armed forces since," he argued, "men could give notice to quit" in order to exert pressure. With this, "subtle silent collective bargaining is entering the armed forces."

May I ask the Government: Should we not stop, look and listen before crossing this very dangerous intersection? Surely what has happened in Quebec regarding the school teachers should give us grave concern and the serious thought that the right to strike should be re-examined in our legislation, not encouraged.

I was amazed to read what Mr. R. S. Malone, the publisher of the Winnipeg Free Press, famous or infamous for its partisan support of the Liberal Party, wrote about this subject. Mr. Malone, a Second World War brigadier—not a corporal—in the Canadian army, with staff experience in Europe and the Pacific theatre, has written a number of editorials critical of the Hellyer plan and calling for stringent parliamentary review. Publisher Malone writes in the Free Press that:

> A conscription issue is almost inevitable within the next two years if Defence Minister Hellyer's present plan of armed forces unification becomes law in Canada.
>
> Our reserve or militia formations of army, navy and air force, as well as our various volunteer cadet services, will in the future have little if any recruiting value for any amalgamated or unified regular force where all unit and service identification have been lost.
>
> The fact is obvious that Mr. Hellyer's pending legislation will make them rather obsolete museum pieces and they will very quickly fade out of the picture.

Mr. Malone goes on to say:

> Two principles have been basic to Canada's defence for the last 50 years: compatibiity with Britain and United States military organizations on which Canadian defence has been greatly dependent, and voluntary recruitment backed up with local or regional reserves and militia units. In addition to discarding these principles, Mr. Hellyer has yet to explain how a unified Canadian force would fit in with distinctive NATO formations under Canada's treaty obligations.

If Mr. Malone is right, without militia formations and various cadet services, it will make it most difficult to find recruits for the new force. In such a case, the Minister of National Defence would be compelled to resort to conscription in order to maintain the numbers needed for the security of Canada or for outside operations. Nor will all the reviling and accusations of disloyalty made by the Defence Minister bring more recruits to his super force. And, if no recruits could be attracted, what a Hellyer of a force that would be.

Honourable senators, if this had appeared in a Quebec newspaper, people would say, "Here they are at it again. Always the same old fighting horse of conscription." But no, this is the alarm sounded by a leading Liberal paper of Winnipeg.

All Canadians should certainly be concerned about this implication. After reading this bill, one cannot help but think that there is so much guesswork in it that for the present the most sincere well-wisher is forced to assume a wait-and-see attitude.

Can the Minister of Defence find the man he needs? Can he bind the three forces behind him? Recently we read where the Right Honourable Prime Minister said at a convocation, and I quote:

> We must be strong in the conviction that the destiny of Canada is to unite not divide. We must see Canada in its progress, its magnificence, as a great country with an honourable past, an exciting present, and a future unlimited.

I hope that he was sincere, and that he will pass on this speech for Mr. Hellyer to read, because the last of our most important components, our armed forces, has been badly divided. We are living in an exciting present and if the existing policy does not change it will soon be a limited future for them—I mean the Government.

It is my thinking that Canada should recognize the diversity in the Communist world and take a second look at our defence programs. From its present policy it is obvious that this bewildered Government espouses a principle and then looks for practical ways to give it expression. And all those, military or otherwise, who do not agree, must go.

General Moncel told the Defence Committee that he retired essentially because he did not feel that under present or future conditions he could continue loyally to carry out his instructions.

General Moncel said:

> It was abundantly clear to me that to forge ahead with unification was moving on an uncharted course at very high speed toward a dim destination.

Our armed forces, having inherited the best of England's and Canada's traditions, wisdom and confidence, should not now be sacrificed for one man's new idealogy or dream. Canadians have achieved independence and influence and can remain ahead if we continue to use the process of adaptablity and patience. These are qualities that the entire continent, if not the world beyond, is in dire need of learning. World events of recent weeks and the chaotic conditions that the world is in should give the Minister of Defence real food for thought.

It is my opinion that the extended and enlightening defence unification hearings have made it increasingly evident that a national review of Canadian foreign policy should be made by Parliament. I know this mere suggestion will make foreign policy experts in the East Block throw up their hands in horror, but the recurrent theme of the dissident generals and admirals is the uncertainty over and the fulfillment of Canada's future military commitments. Since these commitments depend on the Government's political commitments in the years ahead regarding NATO, NORAD, the UN, Vietnam, Rhodesia and disarmament, among others, a public airing of where we stand and what we should be doing in future would seem an urgent and useful exercise.

The Defence Minister, while taking the Government line that nothing is changing, except a little more peacekeeping, has been less than forthright on the subpect. He told the committee that Canada must be ready by the end of 1967 to produce a new military commitment for NATO's next five years. As we know, the NATO treaty is open to general review in early 1969. The NORAD agreement expires next year, unless renewed. The efforts of Canada to encourage a sounder-based peacekeeping role for the United Nations met rebuff last fall, at a time when Canada is establishing its first permanent peacekeeping force.

The continuing problems of the Vietnam war and Rhodesian sanctions—with the possibilities that Canadian forces may some day have a policing role to play in either area—suggest the need for public discussion before Canada becomes involved merely by default. If for no other reason than what I would call "educating the public," the views of government experts and outside consultants ought to be sought and placed before both chambers. I know that our able Secretry of State for External Affairs shows an increasing tendency to invoke the aura of high confidentially around foreign policy areas on questions widely discussed in public. He often appears to be doing what Senator Fulbright, author of a timely new book of essays called The Arrogance of Power, said that the United States administration has been doing:

> Narrowing the permissible bounds of public discussion by relegating an increasing number of ideas and viewpoints to the growing category of unthinkable thoughts.

Canada is coming to a historic turning point. There has to be a new ideal born in order to restore the human quality now buried in a society of affluence.

Canada has never had a military hierarchy and we have no real world military history. We have a good history, but our population is small and we shall never be a dominant military power—at least in my lifetime, and that is good.

Two major powers exist in the world, and it is foolish not to recognize it. By making the right move and choices in defence policy, Canada can become a nation with no worries about her future as a distinct and separate nation. It is my thinking that it has been too easy for too long to blame our troubles on others, namely, the Americans.

I know that Canadian Peace Corps and civic action programs would be welcomed in many countries if the signing of military assistance agreements—with its overtone of alignment—were not a prerequisite.

I am not one of those who feel that we should always conserve the status quo and maintain service tradition for the sake of tradition, but I am uneasy about the methods Defence Minister Hellyer has employed to carry out his plans.

Events of the past weeks in the Defence Committee have done nothing to reassure me. The spectacle of one of Her Majesty's privy councillors publicly branding a senior naval officer—and a gentleman—as guilty of "18 months of consistent disloyalty" seems to me to be going overboard in pushing what is, after all, a political concept. Nor does it help his case that Mr. Hellyer apologized. By overstating matters the minister leaves himself open to a bitterness of attack that he could easily avoid by practising a measure of restraint.

There is a touch of what might be called "C. D. Howeism" in Mr. Hellyer's makeup. He does not suffer fools gladly; he does not even countenance the legitimate concern of men of proven ability, experience and leadership throughout long and distinguished careers in the service, both in peacetime and in war.

This strikes me as a shortsighted approach. It makes me wonder how thoroughly Mr. Hellyer thought his policy through before he set out to ram it through Parliament over the opposition of all critics.

What has annoyed me most was not the way he answered the criticism of the politicians, but the way he treated the servicemen. I have the uncomfortable feeling that Mr. Hellyer may be better at making mud pies than he is at running a trim and happy ship down at defence headquarters. The services, after all, are built on loyalty—and loyalty is a fragile and precious thing which can be destroyed by a politician who shoots off his mouth, and employs a slick public relations technique to get his way against all criticism.

As one who has had some experience as a soldier during the last war, I understand how much more important it is to keep and work for peace. We have chosen peacekeeping as one of our major world roles, and this should be actively pursued. It is a valuable contribution to the maintenance of international stability, and something this country is well equipped to undertake. But it is no secret that our peacekeeping operations have suffered from one common weakness. There has been no advance planning. Everything has had to be improvised at the last minute. This was inevitable the first time, but far too little has been done to learn the lessons of the past and apply them to the next crisis.

In a sense this is not Canada's fault. These frustrations result from the inability of the United Nations to establish a permanent peace force or prepare contingency plans even of a most general nature. If the policy-makers at the UN are unable to make progress, should we not reconsider our position before embarking on a unification system that will upset our whole military forces? If after many years of debate in the UN they cannot agree on the usefulness of a police force and it is not directly wanted, why are we changing our whole setup? Why do we not suggest a stockpiling of key items of equipment? After the 1965 Kashmir fighting the United Nations observer mission was without radio sets for two months. Until the sets arrived, the mission had to rely on the Indian and Pakistani armies for communications. This is only one item where we can help.

The concept of changing our whole military systems, which have operated with dignity and satisfaction over the years, just to play a bigger role in world peacekeeping operations, does not convince me at all. If what we have done already cannot be recognized, approved and sanctioned by the United Nations, then I think we should only continue to play our present roles with the established forces that we have, with the thought of changing when the need arises.

Considering the magnitude and variety of our involvement in world affairs it is essential that the Government at least integrate its own efforts more effectively. Foreign policy can no longer be separated from domestic policy. Commerce, agriculture, labour, treasury and internal fiscal policy, too, are all doing things that influence our foreign relations.

After the events of last week, as reported in the press, that the Bonn Government has withdrawn its offer to help pay for the upkeep of Britain's Rhine Army; that the British Government served notice on West Germany that unless the costs of maintaining the British Rhine Army are offset by the Germans, the troops will be brought home; that President Johnson's administration also has been warned that West Germany has no funds to ease the foreign exchange burden of American forces in West Germany, at least until 1969, and that President De Gaulle sees no more usefulness for NATO military obligations—what are we doing there? Why are we not spending this money instead, if we have to spend it abroad, for the relief of hunger and misery in the Far East?

Unfortunately, the Canadian people, whose lives are most directly affected by our foreign policy actions—who are regularly taxed, and sometimes killed because of our world-wide diplomatic and military commitments—often seem as confused and uninformed as ever, in this age of mass communications and instant news, about the world we live in, and Canada's role in shaping the one which our children will inherit.

Perhaps the late President Roosevelt was right on April 12, 1945, an hour before his death in saying that: "The only limits to our accomplishments of tomorrow are our doubts of today."

I would like to close by quoting an anecdote by scientist-professor Albert Einstein. Mr. Einstein was once asked why it was that mankind, having been clever enough to achieve the grand scale release of nuclear energy, was apparently unable to avert its use in the destruction of mankind. "That is very simple," Einstein replied, "it is because politics is so far more complicated than physics."

Honourable senators, certainly we have seen an illustration of that in the extended debate on this bill.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, I have not made a speech in so long that if I get mixed up this time you will forgive me.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It will be the first time.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Well, I would not like to say that. I have been working at it for a great many years.

I was wondering just what this controversy was about at this time, and I made up my mind it was no occasion for me to speak on the contentious issue that we are considering. However I could not resist the temptation of saying a few words and, if you will pardon me, perhaps being a little frivolous.

We had an assurance from Senator White, when he spoke in a very effective, argumentative speech, that, after all, there was no doubt that this bill was going to be carried here. Then we heard my friend Senator Croll announce the same decision. Then from the interruptions of my old New Brunswick friend (Hon. Mr. Brooks)—because I came originally from New Brunswick—I gathered that he too had made up his mind that there are other things going on at this time which are more important than convincing the majority of Liberals here to turn down the Government's bill.

I decided to take a new tack at this time and, instead of listening to what was said, I began to watch the various speakers' hands. In his speech, my friend Senator Croll would have been dumb if he had not had his hands. I was surprised that Senator Brooks, in his interruptions, was working his hands too, perhaps not as I would, but I am hanging on to the desk so that I will not offend. Then the last speaker, Senator Belisle, had a new stunt in working his hands; he held them this way, clasped together.

So, watching the debate in this frivolous way—and I can assure you I would not be frivolous in this case if I thought there was the least doubt about the result—I am reminded of a story. Two Jewish friends were crossing the bridge at midnight with their fur coats on, the temperature being 40 degrees below zero. Ikey asked, "Jacob, why don't you talk?" And Jacob replied, "Freeze your own hands!"

It is very satisfactory for us all to note that the weather is getting warmer. I am told you are catching up with Vancouver. This is all I have to say.

Hon. J. Harper Prowse: Honourable senators, I believe this particular piece of legislation, which has already passed through the Commons and is now before us, provides the Canadian Parliament with an opportunity to take a step forward and to achieve for itself in history a niche which is provided by few other pieces of legislation, because I do not think there is a nation in the world today that does not wish it had it within its reach to achieve what this bill intends to achieve and what is going to be achieved, and that is the unification of the armed forces.

There is probably nothing that has added to the burden of the taxpayers of the western world to the same extent as the senseless competition—not alone in this country or as much in this country as in others—which has marked the activities of the various armed services in their attempts to achieve a priority for their own particular services. It is a case where self respect has been pushed beyond the point of virtue to the point where it has become the sin of pride. And that, I suggest to you, is what lies at the basis of the opposition which has been heard right across the country, from certain limited elements alone, to this piece of forward-looking legislation.

It has already been suggested here—and I am sure that before the debate is finished half a dozen or more speakers will suggest the same thing—that what we should do is decide, first of all, how much money we have to spend on defence, and then find out how we want to spend it. In other words, we set aside the dollars first and set up our defence force afterwards to fit the available dollars. I suggest this is not the case. I suggest that what we have to do is, first of all, decide what we want to achieve, and then find out what it will cost us. When it comes to national defence we cannot afford not to pay the bill.

We are told that until we have a study and have brought in international experts and a whole lot of other people to tell our Department of External Affairs what they ought to be thinking, and then have it formulated into a plan, it is impossible to determine what we ought to expect from our armed forces. With respect, I submit that that is nothing but arrant nonsense. If it is put forward seriously by anyone, then I am surprised that they would think they could get away with it. You do not even have to be a corporal to figure out what we are going to require in a general way in terms of armed forces, or what the role of our defence forces in the foreseeable and immediate future is going to be. All one needs to do today is to read the newspapers and use a little bit of the ordinary common horse sense that most people, and surely every member of this chamber, have been given.

In the first place, who are our neighbours? We have one neighbour, the United States of America. I think I can assure them that the present policy of the Canadian Government is that it intends to continue to be friendly toward them. While we may resist attempts on their part to become over-friendly and over-possessive with us in a business way, we certainly do not need to set up any force for the purpose of trying to take any pieces of land away from them. Nor is it foreseeable or thinkable that we ought to set up any kind of a force to prevent them from forcibly taking away from us anything that we possess.

The only danger then that we have to face is assult from across the seas, or from across the pole. That would have to come from a nation big enough to be a threat to the United States. Any threat to us which is big enough to be a threat to the United States would be out of the realm of tactical warfare and into the realm of strategic warfare. It would not be a matter of armed forces; it would be a matter of war between weapon systems. It would be the pushbutton war that we have read about.

We may from time to time, in order to maintain our self-respect, want to co-operate with the United States by providing or sharing facilities for the defence of this continent. We achieve that today through NORAD. We have achieved it through co-operation in the construction and maintenance of the lines of radar warning stations. I have no doubt that we have achieved it by the exchange of information, and in other ways. But we are a nation of 20 million people, and certainly we have no bothersome little neighbours on our doorstep. We do not have to worry about having an army to protect ourselves from picayune raids from people across the street. So, I say, without having to sit down and draw up a long sketch of Canadian policy, that the first thing we have to do is perfectly clear, and that is to ally ourselves where we can, and as best we think we are able, with the United States in the defence of this continent against attack from somewhere else.

As I understand from my reading, such an attack can come from only two places, one of which is the Soviet Union. The possibility of attack from the Soviet Union remains, but the probability becomes less every day. The other place from which attack might come, and this I think is hardly yet possible although it may become probable at some time in the future, is Red China.

It is perfectly obvious, I think, that if we were assaulted by either of these two giants, no matter how great our resolution and no matter how complete our mobilization of men and resources, we could make no more than a few futile gestures and give our lives for that we believe to be a principle, because we would have no hope of successfully defending ourselves unless somebody else came to our defence.

Some fifteen years or so ago, with the lessons of World War II behind us, and with the fear that the Russians might decide to roll westward, it was realized that none of the nations of Europe by themselves, recovering as they were from war and occupation, possessed the capacity to stop Russia. The only thing that could possibly stop it was an association which would be immediately at its throat; not the force of wearied Europe, but the might of young America. So, we had the concept of NATO whereby a total group of nations whose populations amounted to 350 million, and whose productive capacity outclassed that of Soviet Russia, banded themselves together and said: "An attack on one of us will be an attack on all. In the meantime, to show our resolve, each of us according to our ability will make a certain commitment which we hope and expect will be sufficient to hold any attempted onrush in check until we can mobilize the might that these troops will represent." So, we had NATO.

Then, with the development of the atomic bomb and the realization that we might not be alone in the possession of such weapons, and particularly with the realization that there was the capability of delivering these warheads by means other than that of the conventional airplane, we had the development of the American defence system, and our co-operation on a continental basis, which gave us NORAD in which we participate.

All honourable senators will remember the example of Suez, when Britain and France decided that there ought to be something done to protect their particular interests in that area. Without alerting any of their partners around the world they walked in, and then, having discovered that perhaps they had taken on more than they ought to, they got out. I do not want to start an argument over that episode, but certainly the peace of the world was maintained at that time because a suggestion that came from this country—from the man who is now the Prime Minister—was accepted and followed. We saw then, for the first time, a peacekeeping force in which we participated, and in which we were acceptable because it was known that we could not have imperialistic intentions.

We have been accepted in the role, frustrating and perhaps unsuccessful as it may have been, of a member of the Control Commission in Viet Nam.

For the same reason, we are a nation which, because of our geographic position, our size, and our industrial potential, cannot be accused credibly, or suspected incredibly, of having aggressive intentions against any other country in the world. It is this, then, that gives us a special opportunity of being acceptable to all when it comes to providing men for peacekeeping forces.

So, I say to this house that one does not have to be an expert on foreign affairs; all one has to do is read the newspapers from day to day. It is perfectly clear that the role that will be expected from our armed forces will be one of participating in attempts at peacekeeping under NATO or under the United Nations, and, of course, we prefer that it be under the United Nations. For example, if one of these days there should come a letter from Hanoi saying that they are prepared to accept the suggestion that there should be a drawback and that they would like to sit down and discuss terms on which a peaceful solution could be reached of the problem that exists there, it is generally understood that there would have to be some kind of occupying referee force put in between to take up the slack as both sides move back. As one of the members of the International Control Commission, this is a task which Canada might reasonably be expected to undertake under the auspices of the United Nations.

If this should happen, I can tell you that it will not be simple. It is not going to be small, and it is not going to be cheap, because it will be necessary not only to police the parallel which separates north and south, but to police a good section of the Cambodian border. It is not only going to necessitate substantial troops from this country, but also from each of the smaller and uncommitted nations of the world. So, when you suggest that nobody knows what our role is going to be, then I say that you are either trying to kid me or else you lack some fundmental basic understanding that is beyond my comprehension. I come to the conclusion that when people tell me we do not know what our role ought to be, all they are saying is that they want to argue and are going to start off by saying let's agree to disagree.

Now, who is going to tell us what we should do? Generals do not get elected, and admirals do not become admirals as a result of a popularity contest with their men. If this should ever happen, God help the army, the navy, the air force or any of the armed forces. It is Parliament that must answer to the public. The generals, the admirals and the air vice-marshals can get the medals and the honours; they can have all the front pages and go around in uniform and enjoy their glamour—and God bless them, they have earned it. When it comes to picking up the check and paying the bill and taking the blame for it, the Members of Parliament have to do that.

It seems to me a perfectly unarguable proposition that if I am going to have to pay the bill, or justify the bill, I ought to be able to say which menu sheet I should look at and choose from. And that is what we are talking about now.

I do not suggest for a moment that these senior officers who have said that this is a terrible thing and that it is going to wreck everything are being dishonest or saying anything but what they have believed. But I have been convinced for years that there are two places in this world where a man, if he stays long enough, can get completely out of touch with realities. One is to be a professor in a university; the other is to be a senior officer in any of the armed forces. The reason is that they are protected in their environment from practically every kind of reality.

Let me give you an example. I sent to the library for a book which they do not have at present, entitled, The Weapons of World War III, by John S. Tompkins, who once wrote for the New York Times. In his book he writes about the weapons they are using and their trouble in determining the kind of weapons with which the forces should be equipping themselves. I recommend this book for your reading.

In Vietnam the Americans are now using the M. 16, a light automatic rifle. It does not fire the weak little bullet we are all familiar with that fires from the 22 rifle. It is a sort of high-powered 22. I had the privilege of firing one. It is a beautiful little weapon. It has a high muzzle velocity, and because of the hydrostatic effect of its projectile—the shock effect—you don't have to hit any bone of a person to break it; the shock itself will break it, and practically every casualty becomes a kill. What is more important—and those who have served as infantrymen will understand me—you don't carry just one bandoleer with 50 rounds, or two bandoleers with 100, or four bandoleers with 200, which is considered a full load of ammunition, but this has a logistic point of supply. You can load a soldier with 600 rounds, 580 to be precise, of this small ammunition which weighs a third as much and takes up half the room of the ammunition which conventional rifles require. They now have a light automatic rifle with a rate of fire of 750 rounds a minute. It has a steel barrel, and all the other parts are made of nylon, and it cannot clog or jam. Do you think if you offered that to an army they wouldn't say, "Well, what are we waiting for? Give them to us." The American armed forces had these rifles and were carrying out studies on them, but I gather that their studies are something like royal commissions in Canada, which indefinitely postpone decisions. Because, try as they might, they could not get the authority to send these rifles to Vietnam, and their armed forces were stalking around with M.15's, big and ugly things that were running out of ammunition and were practically useless in jungle type of fighting such as they were doing.

What a beautiful weapon! You can lie down on a range and get good hits up to 1,000 yards, whereas the M.15 is effective only to 500. Someone did a little research and found that most of the damage was done at ranges of less than 300 yards. Finally the Secretary of Defence, Mr. MacNamara said, "Take 5,000 of those things out there. I don't care what they do with them. If they don't like them they can bury them." This was done over the heads of the whole military establishment.

Since then they have sent 685,000 of them out to Vietnam, because everyone who got his hands on one did not want anything else.

I tell this to make the point that if you have men who have spent their whole lives doing a particular thing in a particular way, they are going to find it is unthinkable that they could perhaps accomplish the same thing in any other way. If they admit that there is some other way of doing it, then surely they must almost have to say, "I am not only unnecessary but I was never necessary."

The moment a man with experience admits that there is a new way to do things, a different way from any he has ever known, automatically it is to accept the fact that his experience is for naught. If there were some generals, if there were some admirals, if there were some air vice-marshals who served this country honourably and well, and to whom we owe a debt for that service, who suddenly found they were faced with a situation they could not comprehend, then let us give them our sympathy, for they deserve it. But that is all their reasoning deserves.

Tradition? Somebody spoke this morning about tradition, and when they did so—I am almost ashamed to repeat it—the thought came to my mind that I had read once where Wellington, looking at his troops when there was a debacle of some kind, said, "I think they joined the army for drink—damn it all, every one of them joined the army for drink."

That is not why the men are in the armed services today; that is not why they joined the army. It is not why men joined the armed services in 1940 to 1945. But they did not join because they had some sense of tradition, that they were going to join something their fathers had been in. As a matter of fact, most of the units were re-organized and on a different basis. The air force in World War I was so small that it was not its tradition that induced young men to join the air force in World War II. It was the chance to write their own history and reach out themselves and touch the face of God.

What takes men into the armed forces and into war is their sense of duty and not a sense of obligation to people long since dead. It is not a sense that they can walk in the reflected glory of some illustrious ancestor whose lights have long since gone out. What makes a man join up is the idea that he gets, here and now, that as a man he has a responsibility to do these things, and he does them. So, if there is a lack of morale in the services at the present time, that lack of morale is the responsibility of the men who lead them.

I agree with the statement that the uncertainty which has been given to these things, by the unnecessary discussion, has contributed more to that lack of morale than anything that is contained in this piece of legislation. When we walked through Europe with flashes on our shoulders, we felt an immediate kinship, and no sense of rivalry, with the man who was in blue or navy blue and wore the same flashes. This was a face from home, this was a friend. But we found this: I can remember as an infantryman being told we were going to have tank support, and goodness knows how many men we lost unnecessarily until we found out how to use tank support and it found out how to support us—and that was all in the same service.

American marines in Vietnam today have a completely integrated force. They have their own naval unit, their own shipping, their own air transport, their own fighter planes and bombers, and they have their own men on the ground.

Let me tell you that in World War I Canada had soldiers who started off as generals, or ended up as generals, who got sent back to Canada as generals. They were illustrious soldiers in World War I but could not get "off the ground" as soldiers in World War II because they could never get it into their heads that somebody had invented the airplane, that an airplane provided a new dimension to the strategy and tactics of war.

In the infantry today, you do not have trucks running up and down as we had in World War II. The helicopter is taking over completely from the truck, and largely from the tank, and so the Americans in Vietnam have what they call the air cavalry division.

It is perfectly obvious, I suggest, to anyone who reads even a little more than his newspapers, that in the task we are going to be called upon to perform, whether it is peacekeeping or trying to put out a brush conflagration, a brush-fire war, we are going to have to send some kind of self-contained all-inclusive force—and somebody will have to command this force.

I thought it was a rather strange thing when an admiral who is so upset retired from the Eastern Command. What was his command ship? If I understand correctly, it was the Bonaventure, an aircraft carrier, which in my understanding is a floating aerodrome. What is there in the memory of Nelson that tells you what to do with a floating aerodrome?

The use of aircraft carriers and aircraft in naval areas requires a completely new concept and a completely new approach. I thought that it made good sense when the admiral was replaced by an air vice-marshal.

The only thing I know about that particular boat, or ship—I do not want to insult my maritime friends—is that it has been used recently to transport some equipment from Canada to our troops in Cyprus.

Speaking of transport requirements, we can move practically all our equipment by air today, and much more cheaply than we can by any other way. We can do a lot of moving of anti-submarine material by air.

Surely the decisions ought to be made by men who do not care which way the material is transported, because they are not involved in one answer more than another? That is the whole idea of the armed forces unification, that men will learn to think in terms of the three- or four-dimensional way that is thought of now when they are studying strategy. Then they will be able to go out and ask, "What is the best answer to this problem?" And not ask, "What happened in the past and what is the best answer that will insure that we get our share of the budget this year, because if we let it slip this year it will be hard to get it back next year?"

I submit to you that this is all that the argument is about now, and that this bill effectively ends it. We are going to look like a bunch of silly people if we let ourselves be jockeyed into giving up a chance to achieve what every government would like to be able to do, that is, to unify its armed forces. This is the one way we can be sure that the taxpayer's dollar that goes into national defence will be spent to the best advantage. We will be able to offer our young people, as an incentive to joining up, not just the adventure of one arm of the services but the adventures of all arms of the service. We will not limit them to having to be satisfied, if they want tradition, with the traditions of one service, but we will give them as their common heritage the wonderful tradition and honours of all our services.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to ask the honourable senator a question? Will you leave Hansard as it is and not revise your speech, because I believe it will make interesting reading.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that is a gross impropriety.

Hon. Mr. Prowse: I have no intention of changing the record.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that is quite an improper suggestion for the senator to make. I would ask him to withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: I shall withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: May I ask a question, please? I believe the honourable senator said that in this bill we are doing something which every nation in the world would like to do. Would the honourable senator tell me why they cannot do it it or why they do not go ahead and do it?

Hon. Mr. Prowse: For the very simple reason that in the United States they have vested interests tied in with each of the armed services. They have 250,000 men in Europe, half a million men in Vietnam and equivalent numbers elsewhere, but they have achieved integration in their marine corps. But when it comes to starting a battle in the lobbies at the level they are able to bring down there, it is just a practical impossibility.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Friday, April 28, at 11 o'clock in the morning.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1833)

PENITENTIARIES

THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Wednesday, April 26, 1967

The Orders of Reference appointing the Joint committee direct that it is "to consider the state of penitentiaries under the control of the Government of Canada and the plans of the Government in relation thereto..." In pursuance of these Orders of Reference, the Committee had placed before it the matter of the design of the standard maximum security institution which the Canadian Penitentiary Service proposed to build at the various locations described in a ten-year plan of institutional development produced in 1963, namely: one in the Atlantic region; two in the Quebec region, one of them at Ste. Anne des Plaines; two in the Ontario region; one in the Western region. Two maximum security institutions on this design are proposed in the first phase of a ten-year program. The contract for one of these institutions, Ste. Anne des Plaines, had already been let before the matter was referred to the committee. A final decision was pending on the second of these maximum security institutions, to be built near Kingston, at Millhaven, Ontario.

In considering the standard maximum security institution design that is proposed, the Committee held nine formal hearings over the period from June 30, 1966, to April 6, 1967. Members of the Committee also held informal meetings in Washington, D.C., with senior officials of the Bureau of Prisons of the United States Department of Justice. In addition, members of the Committee visited St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary on October 19, 1966 and Kingston Penitentiary on November 4, 1966.

The following witnesses were heard during the formal hearings: The Honourable L. T. Pennell, Q.C., Solicitor General of Canada; Mr. A. J. MacLeod, Q.C., Commissioner of Penitentiaries; The Honourable Mr. Justice R. Ouimet, chairman of the Canadian Committee on Corrections; Mr. T. C. MacDonald, Q.C., the Deputy Solicitor General of Canada; Mr. J. C. A. LaFerriere, Regional Director (Quebec Region), Canadian Penitentiary Service; Mr. I. B. Simpson, Facilities Planning Officer, Canadian Penitentiary Service; Magistrate E. W. Kenrick, Chairman, Canadian Corrections Association; Professor Justin Ciale, Department of Criminology, University of Montreal; Professor J. V. Fornataro, School of Social Work, University of British Columbia; Mr. A. M. Kirkpatrick, Executive Director, John Howard Society of Ontario; Mr. H. B. Kohl, Architect, Toronto; Mr. W. T. McGrath, Executive Secretary, Canadian Corrections Association; Dr. G. J. S. Wilde, Department of Psychology, Queen's University, Kingston; Dr. N. L. Freedman, Department of Psychology, Queen's University, Kingston; Mr. W. A. Brister, Governor, Morton Hall, Borstal Institution, Swinderby, Lincoln, England; Mr. Clarence B. Litchfield, Architect, New York City, N. Y.

The Committee also had the benefit of certain materials that were made available for its assistance, namely: a brief submitted by the Canadian Corrections Association (printed as an Appendix to the Proceedings); an "Evaluation of the Design for Maximum Security Prisons Developed by the Canadian Penitentiary Service" prepared by the Canadian Committee on Corrections, bearing date November 10, 1966, and containing a detailed sketch of an alternative design prepared by Mr. H. B. Kohl; a memorandum to the Solicitor General from the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, bearing date November 29, 1966, replying to criticisms of the Canadian Penitentiary Service design contained in the "Evaluation" prepared by the Canadian Committee on Corrections; a model and working plans of the proposed Canadian Penitentiary Service design; certain films prepared by the Canadian Penitentiary Service; and slides demonstrating the alternative design prepared by Mr. Kohl.

The Committee wishes to emphasize the peculiar difficulty with which it is presented by this reference. Architectural design, especially as it relates to prison architecture, is a highly specialized field. The committee was informed that only a very few architects in North America are recognized as experts in the field of prison architecture. The design for a maximum security institution that is proposed by the Canadian Penitentiary Service is strenuously opposed by representatives of both the Canadian Corrections Association and the Canadian Committee on Corrections. It is similarly opposed by one prison architect, and apparently viewed with something less than enthusiasm by another. In the latter case, the architect is a recognized expert in the field. In the circumstances, therefore, the Committee finds itself placed in the role of adjudicator.

It is common ground that opinions among architects as to what is desirable may differ. Further, we are told that a proper assessment of any prison design can only be obtained from long and intimate association between an architect and the planning authority. To this extent any "outside" expert is at a disadvantage, and assessment or criticism offered by him must be viewed with some measure of caution. At the same time, a prison design of necessity reflects—implicitly if not explicitly—the correctional philosophy that it is intended to embody. There comes a point, therefore, at which it is a particular correctional philosophy itself that is in issue. This does not mean that the difficulties are removed, for here also the questions to be resolved are in the domain of experts—experts whose opinions once again differ.

In assessing the Canadian Penitentiary Service design, it is important to bear in mind that the maximum security institution is to be one of a complex of integrated and contiguous institutions. This complex, in addition to the maximum security institution, is to consist of a regional reception centre, a medium security institution, a minimum security institution, a special correctional unit and a medical psychiatric centre. There are immediate design implications to this plan. This explains why it is considered practicable to arrange for food preparation outside the institution. It explains the absence of a reception and classification unit in the design. It is also offered as some explanation as to why the separation of the hospital from the offices of the clinical staff is not considered inherently objectionable, for under the plan as it is conceived, services that would otherwise be provided to clinical personnel by the hospital will be provided by the medical psychiatric unit outside the institution. A further implication is that the special correctional unit will remove from the maximum security institution some of the more violent inmates classed as non-psychotic, and the medical psychiatric centre will remove psychotic inmates. This in turn is reflected in the more limited space allotted for the disassociation unit and for the hospital.

The criticisms of the proposed design may be divided into two categories: those directed to the general conception of a maximum security institution as conceived by the Canadian Penitentiary Service; and those concerned with particular features of the design itself. These two categories are not, of course, entirely separate. Criticism in point of detail provides, understandably, much of the evidence that is advanced in support of the challenge to the design in its general conception. For convenience, however, we will consider the various criticisms that have been made under these two headings:

The criticisms that have been directed at the general conception of the Canadian Penitentiary Services' standard design for a maximum security institution are the following:

(1) Control of inmate movement of unnecessarily rigid and centralized, and the consequent restrictive atmosphere will result in serious loss of time and disruption of program. It is further suggested that efforts at rehabilitation will be inhibited by the manner in which inmate control is conceived in the institution.

(2) There is too great a division of staff from inmates in the proposed institution and this can give to prisoners the impression that the staff is afraid of them. Emphasis needs to be placed on increasing contact between inmates and staff, rather than on increasing separation.

(3) The space allocated for program needs is inadequate. This point is made in reference to a number of detailed features of the program design: i.e. educational facilities; provision for recreation; dining facilities; the library; etc. However, the argument also proceeds at a more fundamental level. the contention is that the design reflects no conception of "program" that the institution is planned almost exclusively by reference to custodial considerations, without any clear assessment as to the kinds of prisoners who are to be placed in the institution or the kind of program that is required if there is to be any hope of effecting behavioural change. A correctional institution, it is said, should be built around an express conception of the program that is to be conducted in it, and such is not apparent from the present design.

(4) The design is wanting in flexibility. It cannot be modified to meet changing conditions in later years, and especially change in the prevailing philosophy of corrections.

The Committee proposes later in this interim report to return to these cirticisms of the general conception of the design. The Committee turns at this point to an assessment of criticisms of particular features of the design. The principal criticisms on matters of detail, with our comments, are as follows:

(1) There are too many control points in the present design. This contributes to an oppressive atmosphere in the institution. It accentuates the separation between inmates and staff. It results in too large an allocation of manpower into unproductive tasks, with a consequent reduction of funds available for training and rehabilitation.

Comment: It seems to the Committee that this criticism has been answered in part, but only in part. An analysis provided by the Canadian Penitentiary Service indicates that the number of 24-hour control points is only five. It appears to the Committee, however, that the total number of control points, including those operated for shorter periods, remains large—in comparison, for example, to the maximum security institution at Marion, Illinois. Moreover, as we interpret the design, an inmate would not be able to move from the cell unit to any other part of the institution without passing at least three control points. This suggests to us an atmosphere of rigid and oppressive security. The Committee notes further that the argument that there is an economy to be derived from the Canadian Penitentiary Service plan is based on the express assumption that inmates will be able to move through the institution free of escort. Expert testimony that the Committee has received suggests that this assumption may well be questionable. If inmate movement is to take place in the manner apparently contemplated by the Canadian Penitentiary Service—that is, without escort and through a series of narrowly separated control points—the Committee wonders whether this itself is not some evidence to sustain the more general criticism that an undue separation between inmates and staff is built into the design.

(2) Inadequate provision is made for an educational program. Three day rooms are specified as being for educational use. These are too small. They are dispersed, so that it is difficult to establish an integrated teaching program. They also suffer from the positioning of a control point outside the door of each room.

Comment: The Committee was informed that the workshops building is designed with sufficient flexibility that additional classrooms can be provided. Experience elsewhere has apparently been that the amount of classroom space required is usually underestimated. It is the Committee's view that the present plans for the workshop building contain inadequate provisions for classroom facilities and your Committee recommends a complete review of the educational requirements and the provision of adequate facilities therefor. The Committee was also informed that day rooms are to be designed in such a way that blinds could be installed to be pulled down to block off the view from the control point outside the door. The Committee recommends that blinds be installed and used in such a manner as to remove as far as possible the custodial atmosphere. It seems to the Committee that the criticism concerning dispersal of classrooms can only be answered if it is assumed that the main educational program is to be conducted in the workshops building. The Committee was impressed by testimony received that many foreign prison jurisdiction are increasingly utilizing manuacturing facilities as an important tool in the rehabilitative process. The Committee recommends that the prison design take into consideration the possible inclusion of this type of development.

(3) The space allocated for a library is too small. Clearly the library will not be large enough to contain many books. Nor is it large enough to permit inmates to use the library for reading purposes.

Comment: The Committee understands that the intention is that inmates will place orders for books and that the books will be brought to them at their cells. It would appear to the Committee, that, under this arrangement, any rehabilitative benefit that in inmate might obtain from being exposed to a library is lost. The Committee recommends that library space be expanded, to allow selective access by inmates to the library.

(4) Dining facilities are inadequate. As the institution is conceived, inmates will eat either in small groups in day rooms or individually in their cells. There is no provision for a large central dining hall, or for any dining room of intermediate size. This arrangement is criticized on several counts. The day rooms are small, so that as a practical matter most of the inmates will eat in their cells. The use of day rooms for dining purposes, with the consequent problems of waste and food odours, is inconsistent with the multi-purpose use that is contemplated for such rooms. There is, in any event, a need for a larger dining facility where inmates can be observed in more open surroundings in assessing whether they are ready for transfer to medium security institutions.

Comment: The Committee is convinced that dining in the day rooms is an improvement over the present cell dining arrangement in maximum security prisons; however, the Committee believes that some larger group dining facilities should be seriously considered. The Committee is further convinced, on the evidence that it has heard, that a larger dining facility does not present an unreasonable problem of control, even in a maximum security institution.

(5) The arrangement whereby food will be prepared outside the walls, in preference to an interior kitchen, is undesirable, both because the quality of the meals will suffer and because this will be a vehicle for the entry of contraband into the institution.

Comment: This criticism has been answered to the Committee's satisfaction on the basis that the kitchen is for the common use of a complex of adjoining institutions.

(6) The Canadian Penitentiary Service design provides for a small combined exercise room and auditorium, but no gymnasium. It is contended that this is inadequate.

Comment: The Committee is sympathetic to this criticism, and noted on one hand the larger space per inmate of indoor recreation facilities provided by the U.S. Federal Bureau of Prison but also noted greater use of outdoor facilities in the Canadian prison system. The Committee recommends that more consideration be given to the multipurpose use of indoor recreational facilities.

(7) The location of areas in relation to one another is badly planned. For example, the hospital is separated by substantial distances from the offices of clinical personnel and from the disassociation unit. Similarly, the chapel is placed in a location such that access to it can be obtained only by passing through the maximum number of control points. Nor are separate offices provided for chaplains in immediate proximity to the chapel.

Comment: It appears to the Committee that there would be substantial advantages to Chapels being centrally located with chaplain's offices in close proximity.

It will be evident in reviewing these criticisms of particular features of the Canadian Penitentiary Service design that some have been answered, or answered to a degree. Still others, although not all, can be met by additions or modifications to the design. The Committee thinks it important to note also that a number of features of the design have elicited favourable comment. Reference might be made in particular to the arrangement of cells into small, segregated cell units, to the provision of outside cells throughout, and to the placing of interview rooms close to the cells. While there has been some complaint that the proposed institution is too large for effective correctional procedure, we think it only fair to point out that the proposed inmate population of 432 compares favourably with other institutions of this kind.

The criticisms of the general conception of the proposed maximum security institution are more difficult to assess for the very reason that they are less specific. Nevertheless, the Committee is of the opinion that there is some merit in each of the four general criticisms that were outlined previously. The Committee makes the following observations:

(1) The manner in which the control of inmate movement is conceived in the institution is likely to have a repressive effect. The opposite view expressed to the Committee was that the width and comparative shortness of the corridors will give a feeling of spaciousness that is less oppressive than results from the longer corridors that are customary in such institutions. The Committee believes that this view fails to take into account the multiplicity of glass enclosed control points that characterizes the design. The Committee thinks also that the complexity of the corridor design can only serve to accentuate inmate awareness of omnipresence of "control".

(2) It seems evident to the Committee that the Canadian Penitentiary Service design provides for the maximum separation of staff from inmates. All of the evidence that we have heard is to the effect that the tendency in correctional development is to break down unnecessary barriers between inmates and staff as the most hopeful means of effecting personality change. This development is documented in the correctional literature and borne out in experience with maximum security institutions such as Marion, Illinois. The committee recognizes the need to protect officers from attack. The question is whether protection is to be bought at too high a price in this design. It is relevant to note that the workshop building will apparently contain a "catwalk", presumably to permit an armed guard to preside over work activities. Our information is that no such protection has been built into a federal prison in the United States in over half a century and that "catwalks" in earlier prisons have in most cases been removed. The criticism, therefore, that the design is concerned primarily with "custodial emphasis" seems warranted.

(3) Specific criticisms concerning program space have been considered above. The Committee has been able to obtain no satisfactory comparative assessment of the overall allocation of space for program purposes, in part because of the multi-purpose use that is apparently contemplated for the workshop building. The Committee is concerned about the approach that the Canadian Penitentiary Service appear to have brought to program planning in relation to architectural design. There seems to have been little attempt made to seek out professional advice concerning the kinds of programming that might serve most effectively to meet the needs of prisoners and what, architecturally, might be desirable to facilitate such programming. It is the Committee's understanding that leading modern prison architects have come to recognize this as their most important and creative function. Put in its simplest terms, more attention should be given to program planning prior to design and construction.

(4) It is more difficult to comment on the criticism that the proposed institution lacks flexibility. In some respects the institution is designed with a particular view to flexibility. The Committee notes that the three "activities buildings" can all be extended, that the workshops building is apparently designed so as to allow considerable freedom of internal alteration, and that the design and placing of the cell units is such that space for day rooms or interview rooms can be increased by the removal of cells. It is also claimed for the design that it provides for maximum flexibility in grouping for purposes of segregation, although we think it only fair to note that this claim has been challenged. The Committee has serious doubts whether the building is adaptable to evolving program needs in accordance with developments in correctional philosophy and questions whether it would readily allow for any program that presupposes relatively free and uninterrupted inmate movement.

If this is all that there were to consider, the Committee is inclined to the view that there should be a basic and detailed re-examination of the standard design for a maximum security institution proposed by the Canadian Penitentiary Service before any further construction is allowed to proceed. There are, however, other considerations.

It has been impressed upon the Committee that there is an urgent need for an early start on another maximum security institution to relieve overcrowding at the St. Vincent de Paul and Kingston Penitentiaries. The Committee did hear evidence that the inmate population at Kingston Penitentiary has been reduced, that medium security institutions are not operating to full capacity and that the opening of the Warkworth institution will further relieve the pressure of population. There is some evidence also, that the estimated percentage of inmates requiring maximum security custody as expressed in the ten-year program on which the Canadian Penitentiary Service building plans are based is too high. Nevertheless, the Committee thinks that the case for an early start on one additional maximum security institution has been made. The Committee is informed that the preparation of a new design would take a considerable time to complete. The Committee has heard estimates that vary between one to three years.

However, we have no hesitation in recommending a basic review before any consideration is given to constructing additional maximum security institutions in accordance with this design, as is apparently contemplated under the ten-year plan of institutional development. To begin with, the Committee has serious reservations about the design itself. Secondly, the Committee is concerned that the estimated percentage of inmates requiring maximum security custody may be too high. Under the ten-year plan, this segment of the inmate population is estimated at 32 percent. The Committee notes that the Manual of Correctional Standards of the American Correctional Association, which lists a number of leading Canadian authorities as contributors and consultants, express doubt "if real maximum security facilities are needed for more than 15 percent of an unselected prison population". The Committee appreciates that the inmate population in the penitentiary system is in some respects unique in that the system receives only offenders sentenced to imprisonment for periods of two years or more, so that it is not "an unselected prison population". However, the Committee thinks that more evidence is required to account for a difference between 15 percent and the Canadian Penitentiary Service estimate of 32 percent. Authoritative evidence has been received by the Committee that would indicate that developments in the correctional field are moving at such a rapid rate that design should be adaptable to changing concepts. The evidence that a higher percentage of offenders are sentenced to prison in Canada than elsewhere and the likelihood that the report of the Canadian Committee on Corrections will result in a change in sentencing procedures, confirms this view. The Committee questions whether the ten-year plan of the Canadian Penitentiary Service sufficiently takes into account the increasing trend in correctional technique towards less secure custody—a trend that extends, we are informed, to many prisoners who have until recently been thought to require custody under conditions of maximum security.

In conclusion, the Committee approves the decision to construct a second maximum security institution on the standard design proposed by the Canadian Penitentiary Service, subject to the following recommendations:

(1) That the specific modifications to the Canadian Penitentiary Service standard design recommended in the text of this Committee's Report be implemented.

(2) That no additional maximum security institutions be built on this design without allowing for a period of experience with the one institution under construction and the one contemplated; and without a basic review of the standard design in the light of developing correctional philosophy.

(3) Moreover, before any further consideration is given to the construction of additional maximum security institutions, the Canadian Penitentiary Service should prepare a detailed statement of the program that it proposes to conduct in such institutions, with particular reference to programming directed to behavioural change, and that every effort be made to relate requirements, in terms of space, classification and architectural design, to the best knowledge available concerning programming for behavioural change in the correctional context.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. M. Benidickson
Joint Chairman

THE SENATE

Friday, April 28, 1967

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CANADIAN FORCES REORGANIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

Leave having been given to proceed with Order No. 2:

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, April 26 the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-243, to amend the National Defence Act and other acts.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, I recall as a member of the R.F.C. and later the R.A.F. that in the later stages of the First World War we definitely had some co-operation between the air force and the artillery and between the air force and the infantry. This co-operation was developed very much in the Second World War, and the navy made use of the air force as soon as they could in the first war. The British navy was recruiting men in Canada for the Royal Naval Air Service in 1915. So, honourable senators, this co-operation of the services is nothing new; it has merely been developed on sound bases, established and approved by scientific means.

Let no one in this chamber go away with the idea that in my day the army, the air force and the navy did not use every device that could be brought forward to bring down the enemy. In the First World War there were new developments, such as the use of the tank, the air force and many other things. Also, honourable senators, no one should leave this chamber—especially those who were not in a combat unit—with the idea that the insignia, the flashes and the medals were not proudly worn. There was no Canadian active air force during the First World War, and many hundreds of young Canadians joined the British air force, the R.F.C., later the R.A.F., and we were very proud to be able to wear a flash on our shoulders bearing the word "Canada".

I believe that today the people of Canada suffer from mass indifference. This is a serious problem for those who have the job of running the forces of this country. On the whole, Canadians are fairly free from want; they belong to the affluent society. As a result, one could say they are interested only in money, cars, travel, games, or plain lazing watching television.

On the other hand, we have an energetic youth group in our high schools and universities. There is considerable rebellion evident among these young people; they want to do things in a hurry. We can say too that on the whole they are indifferent to tradition. They could not care less about the loss of the Canadian Ensign or the pattern of our new flag. They could not care less about our famous regiments and the traditions built up at great sacrifice by those regiments. They could not care less about the loss of traditions in our navy and air force, both built with great heroism and sacrifice in the two world wars.

Honourable senators, may I remind those of you who have not been on active service in either of the two world wars or in any other war, that battles are won by the careful cultivation of esprit de corps in each unit during peacetime. In whatever service you may serve, when the call comes for active duty all the spirit, tradition and esprit de corps come to the fore. In battle each man learns to admire his colleagues for their special help and consideration. Each unit believes it can do battle better than any other. There is a spirit of rivalry between regiments, brigades, divisions, and other units; between squadrons, between ships. How else could our Canadian forces, made up mostly of men of a peace-loving country, have won such fame in battle, fame that is world-wide?

I was surprised to read in the evidence given before the National Defence Committee of the other place a statement made by General Allard while he was being questioned by one of the members of the committee. He said:

> There is a great deal of value in traditions—and we respect them. There is no thought of eliminating worthwhile traditions.

He went on to explain this in these words:

> I used to watch the effect of tradition. I served with the British Army and in some cases tradition was a hindrance and those are the traditions that I say must disappear.

The elimination of tradition is a touchy subject in the Canadian forces today. It is being suggested, for instance, that the word

"Royal" be eliminated from the names "Royal Canadian Navy" and "Royal Canadian Air Force". This disturbs a great many men who are presently serving.

Honourable senators, tradition is a way of life in our country. We follow tradition in this chamber, as do the members of the other place. Traditions are preserved in our churches, and in fact in almost every walk of life. We must be very careful when we think about eliminating tradition.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we in this country are suffering from indifference, especially among our middle-aged citizens, and from rebellion by our youth.

We have made an extensive use of royal commissions and joint committees of the Senate and the House of Commons, and other means of inquiry, to explore almost every subject before proceeding to legislation in respect of it. Yet, what did the Minister of Defence do before he presented Bill C-243 in the House of Commons? He brought out what is known as the White Paper. From that time on to the present he has drifted from one program to another. I cannot say it better than that. The minister is a restless politician, and he has been trying to build up his image before the young men and women of this country. It seems that he has not much use for the brass, and this appeals to our youth.

This bill was given second reading, or approval in principle, in the other place before there was any inquiry or real discussion of it by the National Defence Committee. Of course, no matter what went on in the Defence Committee after that, very little could be amended or discussed. The committee could do little else but hear witnesses, and the other place could do little but register loudly its protests.

At the outset the White Paper of 1964 indicated that the Government was aiming at integration; and integration—as most of those who were in the know or who took the trouble to find out—meant generally the tying together of certain department and headquarters staffs to enable the whole organization to eliminate certain duplications and to function more efficiently under one Chief of Staff. However, as time went on it became clear that integration was not to be the end, but merely the beginning of the transformation of our armed forces. It became clear that unification was what the minister had in mind—the complete unification of all our armed forces—although there is still no definition forthcoming from the Department of National Defence as to what is meant by "unification." We are left to guess what the word means.

This change has been going on steadily since 1964 and has apparently created a great deal of confusion right from the top down in the armed forces. In fact, it became so bad that a great many of our senior officers retired, or were asked to leave, because they could not agree with what was taking place or agree with the minister.

My feeling is that we live in a very hard, practical, jealous world, which is full of envy. We must, in my opinion, do all we can to retain a proper balance with our fighting forces. While most people agree with integration, they are very hesitant to continue to complete integration or unification until there has been a sound base for these new changes and a chance to correct any possible errors that might take place.

In our military build-up we should conform largely to what is taking place with our neighbour to the south or with other members of the Commonwealth, who have in no wise indicated that they are going to unify their military forces; although in some cases there is considerable integration taking place, especially in the United States and Great Britain.

Our next thought, honourable senators, should be given to the defence of Canada. We have a vast land mass and many thousands of miles of coastal area. Today North America has become the centre of western civilization, or perhaps I should say the base of western civilization, from a military standpoint. The United States and Britain are involved in policing strategic points throughout the world; and since North America is the centre of defence for the western world, we should concentrate our forces in defending Canada which, to my mind, would be the greatest assistance to our neighbours to the south. Because of our large land area and vulnerable coastal lines, it seems to me that we should be concentrating on maintaining a mobile army and a sound navy which would be able to stand off any enemy vessels approaching our shores, and our air force should be concentrated at strategic points across this dominion to lend assistance to the army and the navy.

Some say we live in a new era, and that war is a matter of foreign policy, that NATO is becoming less and less necessary. They reason that the navy is now largely needed as transport. How do they account for all the uses of a navy such as that of the United States Navy or the Royal Navy? When trouble starts in the Middle East or in Southeast Asia either of these navies will stand offshore. In many cases they have prevented a full-blown war. This happened in the case of China and Taiwan, as well as in Cyprus and Malaysia. Our navy is needed to protect our fishing rights and offshore minerals. We have agreed with NATO to help, and defend if necessary, certain areas against submarine activity.

Of what value is any international agreement without the force behind to support it? We live in a world of rebellion, fear and hate, and the tempo of each of these is growing in many areas and countries as the years go by. Strong-willed men are too numerous in our time to allow for anything less than a strong navy and air force, each prepared for immediate action until the army can take its place to defend the rights of the country.

The submarine is now a very effective weapon of attack. Nuclear power enables it to attack not only other naval vessels but the coastal cities and inland areas, by lying quietly along the coast until time for attack in force, with air and missile support. We must have an effective navy, able to counter without having to await specific orders for each move from one central authority. Wars are fought by individuals, who are given general instructions or orders, and who must then exercise a great degree of individual "savvy" as the battle progresses from day to day.

It seems that the minister feels that we should not only do this type of work of defending Canada but that we should have a special force which could be more or less under the control of the United Nations and which could be rushed to any point in the world to stop any small confrontation of the smaller nations which might lead to a larger war. With the present unrest in the world today, engendered by people of communistic outlook, it could be that there will be a great many of these small confrontations and if we continue on our present path we will be involved in so many of these that our forces will be scattered very thinly, our hope of defending our own country minimal, and we could be open to attack by anyone who had the notion of absorbing our great resources. We would be leaving the United States flank wide open to an attack with conventional arms brought in by large air transport.

General Allard says, however, that we have advanced so far in integration at the present time that we cannot stop and that we must push for unification as rapidly as possible. If we are to maintain defence forces in Canada and also peacekeeping forces for the use of the United Nations, it is going to cost this country a great deal of money. There is no question but that the capital cost of equipment will go up, and instead of a budget of $1½ billion, we could be running into a budget of something like $2 billion or $2½ billion before long. With our population of 20 million, can we afford this?

Democracy is a system built up over the years. The foundation of our democracy is built very solidly on our religion, on our law, on our education, on goodwill, on our police force and on our armed forces. There is a very fine balance maintained in each of these. No one thinks of tossing out our religion; no one would blast our laws and change them completely; nor would they suddenly alter our police system. It is hard to change our educational program, though we do find some small changes are necessary. Yet one of the principal stones in the foundation of democracy in this country—I am speaking of the armed forces—is being virtually torn apart. We are going to rebuild the armed forces, but it will take some five or six years to do so. To my way of thinking, honourable senators, that is wrong.

I think this whole affair has been a colossal mistake. It has been rushed into because the minister is one who believes in reformation, speed and action. He feels that he must have action all the time. This is an over-weening ambition that some men have when they find themselves in a position of responsibility. I feel sorry for him. If he must make this unification system work, I trust that at least he will not harm our country too much in his efforts to obtain unification, which he loudly trumpets as the most modern aspect of armed forces, as if he alone thought it all up and is the first man in the world to show those admirals and generals what a civilian can do when he decides to use his power.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I want to say first that I am against this bill. I want to try to explain that I am against this bill because I cannot understand unification.

I was in the army for five years. Certainly that does not make me an expert, at least not for a future war, but, having seen the various services in action, I cannot see how we could achieve unification in actual practice.

The training is different for the three services. They have different weapons and their spheres of activity are different. I cannot understand, therefore, how unification could ever work.

It is a pretty poor argument to say you are against something when you do not even understand it. Perhaps I get that from my Irish mother. There is an old story of the Irishman who said, "What is it?—I am agin it." And there we are.

Our Chief of Staff said he could make it work. I have a great deal of respect for General Allard, and if he says it can work, perhaps he is right.

The majority of the elected representatives of the people have spoken in the other place, and apparently they are in favour of unification. Therefore, although I cannot personally endorse the bill, I feel that all good Canadians have to put their shoulders to the wheel if the bill is passed and make do for the best.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, in rising to make a few brief observations about this bill, I am deeply conscious of the fact that we cannot here change this bill, and that nothing we may do or say here at this time will make much difference to it. But we can voice—and I think it is our duty to voice—the deep concern, the grave misgivings which weigh down upon so many responsible people in this country at this time about the character and implications of this bill.

It is true, honourable senators, that with this measure we are embarking upon a voyage into the unknown, accepting an adventure which some of the most responsible and knowledgeable people in this nation have characterized as an adventure with irresponsibility. We are in fact being committed to a plan which may not fit at all, or which may only fit disastrously, into the world that may be with us two, three or five years hence.

I have read most of the evidence given before the Commons committee on this bill. I have read the speeches in the other place and I listened to the speeches given here this week by Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) and Senator Croll.

Senator Connolly in a kindly reference to me a few days ago said that there were times when he wondered about Senator O'Leary. Well, there are times when I wonder about Senator Connolly. I always listen to him with interest, with respect and often with admiration—admiration for his talents, for his dedication and for his eloquence. After he began his speech last week and had gone almost halfway through it, I said to my deskmate Senator Grosart, "If this bill had been introduced in the other place with the moderation and spirit of conciliation being shown by Senator Connolly now, we might have avoided a great deal of controversy." But, sadly, as he went on Senator Connolly seemed to remember that he was not only a member of this house, that he was not only a senator, but that he was a member of the ministry, and then he lapsed into the accents and into the lack of logic which we have heard from the Minister of National Defence in the other house.

Of the things that Senator Connolly stressed, one, for example, was that this was a matter or issue of civil control, and surely that was a vast irrelevance. The question of civil control over the military was established in this country more than 60 years ago when Sir Wilfrid Laurier dealt with Lord Dundonald, and it has been reasserted again and again by all parties and by all prime ministers. To raise it now is simply to try to provide a smoke screen which will confuse the people of this country about the real purposes of this bill.

There is no question at all and there can be no question about civil control over the military.

I have read, as I said, most of the evidence given in the other place, given in the committee of the other place, and the evidence which impressed me most, and which must impress any reasonable person most, was the evidence given by three of our leading military experts. They were Air Chief Marshal Frank Miller, former Chief of the Defence Staff; Lieutenant General Robert Moncel, former Vice-Chief of the Defence Staff, and Lieutenant General Frank Fleury, former Comptroller General of the Armed Services.

Now, it has been said that these men are speaking for vested interests. These men are retired. They have no more vested interest in the organization of our military defence. They are speaking from their experience, from their knowledge and from their dedication to this nation, which has been very great and was established long ago. And what do they say? I want to quote from these gentlemen only briefly because they have been quoted before in the other place and perhaps in this house as well. Vice-Marshal Miller said:

> It is my feeling that the Canadian services are not yet ready for unification. I do not see any monetary return from unification, nor any significant military effectiveness.

What did General Moncel say? Moncel told the committee that to force unification is "moving on an uncharted course at very high speed toward a dim destination."

Then, there was Admiral the Earl of Mountbatten. Mountbatten was interviewed about six months or a year ago by the C.B.C., and he made certain statements to them. The C.B.C., always ready and willing to do a chore for the ministry—or for the Liberal Party for that matter—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Well, I will debate that at any time with the honourable gentlemen opposite. The C.B.C. reproduced a television interview which they had with the Admiral which seemed to make him say that he was in favour of unification.

Well, this surprised some of our people, and a gentleman in Victoria, Commodore Harold V. W. Groos, wrote from Victoria to the Earl of Mountbatten asking for a statement: did he or did he not say what the C.B.C. tried to make him say on the TV program which they reproduced in the middle of this controversy? Why they did it, I ask honourable senators opposite to explain. This is what Mountbatten wrote back to Commodore Groos:

> Few people still oppose the integration of arrangements for pay, food, clothing, furniture, equipment, etc., since this must be a more economical way of providing them.
>
> In fact I believe the British reorganization, although much disliked and opposed by many senior officers at the beginning is now accepted as reasonable and more efficient and economical.
>
> In the British reorganization care has been taken to preserve esprit de corps and morale and those traditions which help to maintain this in the services and fighting units.
>
> It has been accepted that to achieve this the three services must retain their uniforms and ranks with an identifiable professional head of their service. The idea of a single uniform and rank structure was also rejected as undesirable and unnecessary.

In other words, what is now proposed by this bill and by the Minister of National Defence, was rejected as undesirable and unnecessary by the British Government.

Admiral Mountbatten goes on to say this:

> Unified command at the appropriate level is exercised by an officer from any one service, wearing his own uniform and using his own service rank (assisted by an integrated staff) who commands all units of the three services placed under his command.
>
> These were the views I expressed or intended to convey when I was asked to explain them to the Canadian press, radio and television. Nothing has happened to change those views.

These, honourable senators, are the views of experts. Now it has been said, and it was said in the other place, that this is not a task for experts; it is a task, the Minister of Transport said—and it was seized upon by the Minister of National Defence—for politicians. Now, let there be no doubt about it; the politicians must control the decisions that are made rightly or wrongly, but the question is, are they making it in the right way and with the right advice? If you were reconditioning an aircraft carrier would you go to the politicians to be told how it should be done or what changes and alterations should be made, or would you go to the engineers and officers who had been operating the ship?

Honourable senators, it is as simple as that. These military officers have not said that you must do such and such a thing, but they have given their honest advice, and that is what government is about. Democratic government is built up in that way; parliamentary government is built up in that way. We have to have advisers. Last session, for example, we created in this country a science council. What did we create it for? We created it to secure advice from experts, from scientists, regarding legislation having to do with the application of science. Is it logical then to say that we must take the advice of politicians or civilians against the advice and experienced views of men who have been at the head and who have been intimately concerned with the organization and operation of our defence forces?

Having read as much of the evidence as I could—and I think I have read most of it —given before the committee of the House of Commons on this question, I say to you in all sincerity that I do not believe there have been answers given to completely relevant questions about the implications of the possible consequences of this measure. Again and again the question was asked, what will this measure mean to our international commitments? And although we had statements from the Secretary of State for External Affairs and from others, no satisfactory answer was given.

I put this to honourable senators: Within a year or two we may be embarking in connection with our defence on what is known as ABM—anti-ballistic missiles. If it should come that under our obligations and commitments to NORAD we should be compelled—and we would be compelled unless we accepted some desperate alternative—to have in this country ten or twelve of our largest cities ringed by anti-ballistic missiles, then this country would be committed to an expenditure estimated at $3 billion a year. How can anyone say how this measure will relate to a situation like that?

At the present time the Ambassador of the United States, Mr. Thompson, is negotiating in Moscow with the Russians about whether they should embark on anti-ballistic missiles. We know from reliable sources that no progress has been made, and in fact there is some belief in authoritative quarters that already the Russians have gone ahead with anti-ballistic missiles ringed around Moscow. I repeat, if the United States Government cannot induce the Russians to withhold these measures, to back away from anti-ballistic missiles, then the United States will be compelled to go along; and, if the United States is compelled to go along, if it is compelled to ring its cities with anti-ballistic missiles, then what will be the effect upon Canada? That, I suggest, is a question which should have been engaging the attention and thought of the Canadian Government during the past year and not this tinkering with our defence setup. Mr. McNamara has estimated that anti-ballistic missiles for the United States will cost $30 billion. For Canada, we can reduce that to $3 billion, which is just about double our military budget at the present time.

I have not heard a single answer to the question as to what this is going to mean in the way of costs. I listened, as I said, to Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) make a very skilful defence regarding improvements and changes that have been made in our military defence setup, but the trouble with that is that he was arguing about integration. Everything he said had been done or would be done, could be done under integration. It is unification we are talking about, the loss of identity of various military and naval units. This is what is causing concern among Canadian people at the present time.

I would hope that if this measure passes —which it will—I hope that it succeeds, because to wish it well is only to wish well for Canada. I also hope that Senator Connolly's almost lyrical defence of this measure, his pleas, his assumptions and his prophecies, are better grounded than the fears of people in this nation who know a great deal about defence, and are deeply disturbed about this bill.

Hon. Frank C. Welch: Honourable senators, this bill has already been pretty well talked out in the other place and also has been discussed here for several days, but coming as I do from an area in Canada where we have so many of the armed forces personnel, I feel I should express myself regarding the bill now under discussion.

We have in Nova Scotia, only sixty-five miles east of my town, the cities of Halifax and Dartmouth, where much of the economy depends on the armed forces, especially the navy. Then in Greenwood we have one of the largest, if not the largest air force base in the Commonwealth. We also have the Cornwallis navy base, the base where millions of dollars have been spent. This is a small city within itself. On this base the Minister of National Defence has the guillotine lifted and ready to drop. However, Mr. Hellyer says he will decide its fate by 1968. Should he decide to drop the axe and close Cornwallis, the whole economy of western Nova Scotia will suffer greatly, and the millions of dollars worth of equipment will be reduced to nil, and probably sold by Crown Assets for next to nothing.

Honourable senators, you cannot move swimming pools, skating rinks, tennis courts, baseball fields and school grounds. Neither can the civilian population move the places of business set up outside the base to accommodate the trade created by the naval service. I mention this just as one of Mr. Hellyer's wild schemes.

I, however, express the opinion shared by many people that the Honourable Paul Hellyer, Minister of National Defence, has moved too far, too fast and too soon in his plans for unification of the three services of Canada, without giving the necessary explanations not only to the public but to the servicemen in general.

It is my personal estimation that the honourable minister has not made his intentions clear until the second reading of Bill C-243 in the Commons on December 7, 1966, and even then his deductions left much to the imagination, and many questions unanswered, unanswered especially for those who have had some experience with the military backgrounds of the three services.

In the original White Paper on Defence (1964), considerable stress was placed on the reduction of manpower costs associated with headquarters, training, operations and maintenance expenses that would be cut by unification. It was further suggested unification would eliminate duplication and triplication of staff and administration expenses, but to my knowledge no figures were given except perhaps rather vague ones.

As I have said, the public and services were tired of generalities and wanted facts not words, and possibly during the second reading of Bill C-243 we were given something to really think about. In the Commons on December 7, 1966 the honourable minister said:

> I wish to put this in more concrete terms by comparing expenditures in the fiscal year 1962-63 with estimates for the fiscal year 1966-67, both years being close to the same level of approximately $1,575,000. The conclusion is sometimes reached, because the figures are approximately the same, that there have been no reductions in costs in the Defence Department. If I apply to the actual strengths of military and civilian personnel employed in the Department in 1962-63 the pay, allowance and salary rates applicable in 1966-67, the costs for personnel would now be $1,141,000,000. Adding to this the the costs of approximately $335 million applicable in both years for other upkeep costs such as maintenance of aircraft, vehicles, buildings, etc., I have a total figure of $1,476,000,000. If this had been allowed to happen provision for all of the capital costs, including military equipment, construction and development would have had to be reduced to $97 million in 1966-67; compare this to the $327,000,000 available in the budget. In other words a reduction in the capital program of about 70 per cent from that provided in the 1966-67 estimates would have been necessary.

This was in December of last year, yet the figures tabled in the House of Commons some weeks ago in spending Estimates had a figure of $1,572,690,001. This figure is still considerably above that of $1,476,000,000 which the honourable minister had said he did not want to happen. Somewhere along the line, in those billions and millions of dollars, I lost track of the honourable minister.

To return for a moment to the minister's speech of December 7, 1966, apparently Mr. Charles Lynch, writing in the Ottawa Citizen on the following day, December 8, had doubts also. I would like to quote a few remarks from his article. He wrote:

> But in terms of content, it left something to be desired, at least for those who wonder what the role of our unified armed force is going to be, and what it will be able to do that could not have been accomplished by the three existing armed forces operating on an integrated basis.
>
> Many of Mr. Hellyer's arguments in support of unification—and the speech contained little else—have an improvised air about them, as though he had dreamed up unification first and then devised the evidence in support of it afterwards.

Later Mr. Lynch wrote:

> Mr. Hellyer leaves us in no doubt about his own belief in unification —which is not surprising since the program is his own personal obsession.
>
> But the doubts that have been expressed by some of our senior professional military men remain unanswered.
>
> Nor has Mr. Hellyer faced up to the apparent discontent on the part of serving soldiers, sailors and airmen.
>
> He assures us that they are content, or that they will be when the full advantages of the program are made clear to them.

Honourable senators, I do not like the idea of rehashing old statements. I am well aware of the fact that many of you have read these statements before, but I would like to touch briefly on remarks made by Lieutenant-General Fleury, who retired three years before the end of his term of service. Lieutenant-General Fleury, as Comptroller General, testifying before the Standing Committee on National Defence as to the activities under an integrated headquarters, spoke at page 1491 of the report as follows:

> I began to have considerable misgivings about the direction and speed of integration some weeks at least, if not months, before my retirement. ...I came to realize, or I thought I came to realize, that things were being done under the cloak of integration which really were not part of the integration process at all. I discovered to my surprise, because this was not my first tour in Ottawa—it was my fourth—that communications were very bad within the headquarters, and between the headquarters and the commanders in the field. I found that the tried and true channels of communication which had been the warp and woof of navy, army and air force procedures in chain of command for decades had largely been discarded. I found that officers working for me knew more, or said they knew more, or thought they knew more, about what was in the mind of the minister than I did. I found that security information as I knew it, was practically non-existent. The whole headquarters reminded me of a giant sieve. I saw evidence of disloyalty, and near disloyalty, in some people to the point literally that on one, two or three occasions a week, I would sit at my desk and feel like vomiting. I decided after all these years that this was an atmosphere, that these were conditions under which I could no longer conscientiously serve, and I asked for my retirement.

I wonder, honourable senators, how many men like Lieutenant-General Fleury have not expressed these opinions.

Much water has passed under the bridge since last summer, when we experienced the now famous revolt of the admirals, and in a great many incidents the sympathies of the public rested with such gentlemen as Admirals Landymore and Brock.

It is my personal opinion that these gentlemen were treated like bad boys by the Minister of National Defence. Admiral Landymore is reputed to have said that Mr. Hellyer deleted a section concerning personnel from the brief he presented to the Standing Committee on Defence of the other place. The Minister is reputed to have done this because, as he said, "personnel information dealing with the state of naval morale was not within Admiral Landymore's responsibilities."

I shall not go into the background of the minister's record of wartime service—enough has been said on previous occasions about that without my placing my thoughts on record; nor will I dwell on his divorcing himself from realities or abilities, because abilities he must possess otherwise the Prime Minister would not have appointed him to his present position, unless perhaps he is stuck with him.

I do question, however, his sense of responsibility. As an officer, regardless of how junior, would he not be aware of what makes a fighting unit tick? Morale is one of the most important things in a fighting unit, as any honourable senator who has served will vouch for.

Perhaps, though, morale is something that is hard to determine, as was evident by figures published in the issue of the Halifax Herald of March 28, showing that enlistment figures for the army were down, while recuitment figures for the navy and air force were up. Are the men enlisting today aware of what is about to happen in the future—one force, one command, one uniform?

If I am permitted to break for a moment from party affiliation, and my party's stand on integration, and speak as I think I do speak for the large majority of Canadians, I will say that I am not wholly opposed to the integration of some of the functions of the services. It is felt by some people that partial integration might work, and that such departments of the navy as the medical, dental, nursing, chaplain, music, food, education, legal, physical education, supply, meteorological, and other departments might be combined with those of the other services. But, before I or anyone else can pass an opinion, either for or against, the following questions must be answered.

What are the future commitments of Canada's armed forces? What is their role as a fighting force destined to be? Is it to remain as we have known it in the past? Or, is it the intention of the Department of National Defence to maintain our services as a sort of police force?

If the Minister of National Defence would give the people of Canada some idea of what the role of the Canadian armed forces will be, then we might not be so emotionally concerned, and it would do much to promote goodwill among the service personnel and to boost morale, which is so badly needed.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, normally I like to congratulate an honourable senator on his presentation of a certain viewpoint, and to thank him for his contribution, even though it is not in complete agreement with my own. Therefore, I am very happy to thank and to congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for his introduction of this bill in this chamber. He gave us a lucid explanation, one that I appreciated very much. I thank him for that. My only criticism is that he white-washed the bill a little bit too much, and I take nothing away from him when I say that.

It will be no surprise to the honourable Leader of the Government when I tell him that I oppose this bill. He knew when he introduced it that we on this side of the house were not in agreement with it. However, it is his right to introduce the bill, and it is my right to oppose it, and that, honourable senators, is what I intend to do. I intend to oppose this bill to the best of my ability.

The bill is entitled: "An Act to amend the National Defence Act and other Acts in consequence thereof". When we think of amendments we think of minor changes, but in reading this bill I came to the conclusion that it is not an amendment but a complete change.

In this connection I thought of a ship going into a drydock for a refit. Normally, when a ship goes into drydock for refit certain repairs are made to it. Probably there is a replacement or an improvement of the engines, and various other kinds of work performed, so that the vessel comes out of drydock in far better condition than when it entered. But, honourable senators, the Department of National Defence went into drydock for refit, and it came out completely unfit. In fact, I would say that it came out of drydock in the form of "Hellyer's Ark"—not Noah's Ark but Hellyer's Ark—a sort of mongrel vessel containing a little bit of everything, structurally unsound, and built to remain in one place and one place only, namely, the drydock. So, honourable senators, let us leave it there.

We have in Canada at the present time armed forces constituted in the same way as the armed forces of almost every nation in the world. Every leading military nation in the world maintains three services. Every leading nation in the world has considered unification, but not one of them has adopted it. In fact the leading military nation of the world, the United States, has not only rejected unification but it is now moving more and more towards the British tradition of regiments, brigades and fleets. They are instilling in the members of their army a pride in being a member of a regiment. To a large extent they are adopting our uniforms. At Expo yesterday, when I saw the men in kilts lined up, I thought of the fact that the United States, for their ceremonial occasions, are clothing their men in the kilt.

We must not overlook the fact that our experts in military defence advised against unification. We must not overlook the other fact that their advice was unheeded. I use the word "experts," despite Mr. Pickersgill's statement that there are no experts but only advisers. I ask: "How can one advise a person when he refuses to listen and continues on in his own arrogant way?" The Minister of National Defence, in my opinion—and it is a humble opinion; I do not profess to be an authority—refused to listen to advice except that from one person and one person only, his public relations officer. He was interested in nothing but publicity in order to build up his campaign for the leadership of the Liberal party. Let us not forget that his aim was publicity, and this is the underlying motive behind this bill. I ask the Senate to remember that.

Admiral Rayner, in discussing the action of the Minister of National Defence and in explaining the reasons for his retirement, stated that the minister refused to listen to the advice of his senior military advisers. I ask honourable senators to note that he used the plural—advisers. This causes one to wonder about and consider the qualifications of the minister. He is apparently so qualified that he can completely disregard the advice of his own expert advisers.

Speaking frankly, I do not think the minister has any qualifications that entitle him to disregard the advice of the experts. In fact, I do not think he has even one favourable entry in his ledger. I ask you to consider the minister's actions shortly after he became the Minister of National Defence.

Honourable senators will recall that some time ago in Montreal four people broke into an armoury one morning and stole certain small arms, rifles, etc., and the question arose, "What are we going to do about this?" Under such circumstances, normally the Minister of National Defence would make sure that our weapons were properly guarded and protected, and carry on according to the tradition of our armed forces in Canada. But what did our present Minister of Defence do? He acted in the most horrible way. He went around to various stations of the armed forces in Canada, withdrew their weapons—and it makes me laugh when I hear all these grandiose speeches on weaponry—gathered them up in the middle of the night and they were taken into secret hiding places so that no one could steal them.

Honourable senators, is that in our tradition? It is not. We have had our moments of glory, and at times we have had occasion to stack our weapons, but they were always stacked in honour; they were never taken away and put into a secret hiding place. In my opinion, the minister acted most cowardly on that occasion. I think it was the most cowardly act in history, and that he should have been removed from office at that time.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Don't go too far.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I say it was cowardly that he was afraid to act as a Minister of National Defence should do, and I do not retract it for anyone.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame, shame.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Maybe, but I am entitled to my viewpoint, just as Senator Smith is entitled to his. I ask him not to adopt the policy of the opposite side, and to sit down without speeches. If he wants to make a speech he can make it when I am through.

The sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West)—and I give him credit for his introduction—mentioned that there were certain points in the bill that were bound to raise discussion. I am in perfect agreement with him on that. The only disagreement I have with him, and it is really a matter of regret, is that I would have liked him to give a little more attention to these facts in his speech and attempt to answer them. When he closes the debate, as I assume he will, I hope he will give us an explanation in this regard. I like to be fair, even to a Grit. I realize it is difficult for him to do this because the minister has not given him any explanation, but I hope he will take the initiative and give us the information that he has been denied. Perhaps in all fairness I should not say he has been denied the information, but rather that he avoided giving the information.

We need a complete outline of Canada's defence role. Where do we fit in NORAD and NATO? Are we preparing for nuclear war or are we preparing for a so-called bush war?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is the honourable senator suggesting that I should have delivered a longer speech than the one I made?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would not say a longer speech, Senator Connolly, I would say a more informative, more lucid speech.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If you say my speech should have been more clear, you must mean that it should have been longer.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I mean "clear" in your sense of the word, but not necessarily in my sense of the word.

The Minister of National Defence handed over Canada's defence role to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—it was too hot a potato for him to handle—and this expert made the usual vague, lengthy speeches one would expect from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He emphasized Canada's peacekeeping role. However, I would point out we are not a Senate of the United Nations. It is not a United Nations bill that is now before us. It is Canada's National Defence Act that is before us. It is our own national defence that is at stake, and I think we should look at this bill from that point of view. In fact, I feel rather badly that this bill, making such a drastic change and destroying so many of our traditions, should come up in the centennial year, because I feel that if this bill passes, if we adopt this defence policy, we are going to have to depend more and more upon the United States and be in the position of many smaller underdeveloped nations of the world who depend on the United States for defence and financial assistance, but who are very quick to shout, "Yankee, go home." I have a great deal of sympathy for the Americans in this regard. I am afraid that we have joined the "Yankee, go home" chorus from a financial standpoint, and I fear that after a short while, say within five years, we may be attempting to do the same thing from a military standpoint.

Earlier I asked the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for a clear outline of Canada's defence role—our function in NORAD and NATO. While Senator White was addressing the house at one point he asked what Canada's future role should be, and Senator Roebuck interjected, "You want a prophet not a minister." Well, honourable senators, I do not think our minister is humble enough to be content with the role of a prophet; he would rather be a Messiah. Quite frankly, I would forfeit a prophet or Messiah and just ask for a Minister of National Defence who seems to know what he is doing.

The third point raised by the Leader of the Government in the Senate was the fact that the bill is bound to bring up Canada's peacekeeping role. I am just as proud as any Canadian that Canada is invited to participate in a peacekeeping role. I think I am being fair to the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary) when I say that I echo his sentiments and would be more pleased if the United Nations footed the bill. While we in Canada tend to think of Canada as being the peacekeeper, the United Nations has not shown the same interest in peacekeeping activities as Canada has.

Last year Ireland—and this should appeal to the Leader of the Government in the Senate—introduced a motion in the United Nations to have some procedure established for so-called peacekeeping operations and the procedure to be followed. That attempt on the part of Ireland was a complete failure; the United Nations showed no interest in it whatsoever. This leads me to wonder why Canada should go on talking about peacekeeping and deploying our forces for a peacekeeping role, when we have received very little encouragement from the rest of the world.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator mind if I interjected for a moment?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I always enjoy the interjections and interruptions of the leader.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He described the frustration experienced by Ireland before the United Nations. Would he not agree that this frustration came not from the people who had urged Canada to adopt these peacekeeping roles, but rather from the people who would like to see the trouble continue to develop in the places where the peacekeeping operations are taking place?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The honourable leader may be quite right in saying that certain nations urged Canada to do this, but again I would point out to him this is a National Defence Act we are considering. The larger nations, the military powers in the United Nations, were not interested in the resolution, and that is why it failed. That is why we must still keep our Department of National Defence up to a certain peak, to a certain level where they are prepared to deal with any emergency, whether peacekeeping or an act of war.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): When Canada embarked upon the peacekeeping role, and particularly the peacekeeping role in Cyprus, the pressure upon this country to do this came from the bigger countries of the Western world. I think I said so at that time. The more powerful nations said: "You people have no imperialistic ambitions and have the capacity to do this kind of thing and must do it. We are mistrusted: you are not."

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Again I come back to my earlier reply to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is fine to say that certain nations urge this, but this means overlooking the fact that we are not keeping our defence forces against the people who are urging us. We are keeping our defence forces to counter the communist nations. We are not attempting to counteract the coming nations of Africa or any one of that nature: it is the communist nations that we must be on guard against. Certainly, the communist nations did not urge Canada to proceed in this manner.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, no. That is the point I made.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I refer again to the introductory remarks of the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. Somehow, I like to flatter him. There is a little Irish in my ancestry, too, and it may be that this accounts for it. He emphasized at one time that our defence consumed 22 or 25 per cent of our national budget. This brought forth the idea that we had to reduce this amount in the national budget. I cannot share the concern of the Leader of the Government in this regard. Perhaps I would have been more impressed by the statement, had our federal expenditures decreased. But they did not decrease; they have gone up steadily. The only difference I can see is that, while we have reduced our percentage of the tax dollar spent on the Department of National Defence, that percentage has been taken over by the Department of National Welfare. If we must reduce defence, then let us take a sincere look at the Department of National Welfare, which is now the largest spender of our tax dollar.

Honourable senators, the matter of morale was raised also. I ask you if anyone thinks that Admiral Landymore spoke up to gain publicity. Admiral Landymore, through his wartime exploits, his career in the Royal Canadian Navy, has received all the publicity that any one man could possibly want. It was all favourable. He was in an atmosphere in which he received no criticism; he did not have to go looking for publicity. He spoke out against unification, because he was concerned not only with the future of the Department of National Defence but with the future of the Royal Canadian Navy and its role in Canada's defence. He was also concerned with the low morale in the navy; he was merely showing in this regard an interest in his men's welfare. This is one aspect of Admiral Landymore's career which cannot be taken away from him, that he appreciated and understood his men.

If honourable senators think that morale has not been affected, let me remind you that when the Minister of National Defence went to Halifax he had to speak behind closed doors. It is rather a shocking situation; that the Minister of National Defence should have to go behind closed doors—there is something wrong with the morale. This measure is not being accepted by dedicated career men in the services.

Honourable senators, I am also impressed by the difference in treatment accorded those officers who opposed unification and those who supported unification. We had the rather ridiculous situation of certain officers with certain viewpoints—I should say in all sincerity they professed to possess those viewpoints—being promoted, giving speeches in favour of unification, and being sent out to make such speeches.

I was annoyed very much by one thing which occurred before the last federal election. Air Vice-Marshal Reyno made a trip to the Maritimes. He also was speaking behind closed doors. The men were called in for an address by the air vice-marshal. He urged them to support unification, and his favourite expression was that Mr. Hellyer was the best defence minister Canada ever had.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Honourable senators, having been a member of the R.C.A.F. in wartime, I still look upon our colleague, Senator Power, with a great deal of respect. I am sure that he will have second thoughts on Air Vice-Marshal Reyno's remarks.

On the other hand, those who opposed the viewpoint of the minister have been released from the service, and attempts have been made to disgrace them and to belittle their viewpoints. Apparently, this is the situation in the Department of National Defence today: "Do not give advice; the minister has already made up his mind, and do not confuse him with the facts."

During the introduction of the bill, emphasis was placed on the suggestion that this is merely enabling legislation. I am fed up to the teeth with "enabling legislation." We always receive "enabling legislation." I could spend half an hour reciting instances of enabling legislation. When you try to find out what the Government has done, with their orders in council, as I mentioned quite recently in the Senate, you cannot find out. I become more and more suspicious of this form of legislation as the days go by.

If we are going to destroy the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Royal Canadian Navy—as the bill clearly sets out to do—why should we term it "enabling legislation?" Why should we not do this right away, instead of having all this nonsense said about its being only enabling legislation?

The evidence before the National Defence Committee shows that the minister issued instructions for one service and one uniform by July 1, 1967. Since that evidence was tendered, a rather pious attitude has crept in: "Do not worry about that, we will take a certain amount of time to bring in unification." However, the order has not been rescinded; it is still in effect in the Department of National Defence, calling for one uniform and one service by July 1, 1967.

I urge the Senate to give very serious consideration to the pleas of Air Marshal Miller. This man has probably had more military experience than any other Canadian. He has a knowledge of the defence department, a knowledge of our military requirements, which I do not think can be equalled anywhere in Canada. Later on I will read some of his remarks to you.

Normally I do not quote remarks, because I take the view that if I cannot give my own opinion I should not quote someone else's. However, I am going to draw your attention to the proceedings of the Defence Committee at page 2296. There the Honourable Mr. Harkness, a former Minister of National Defence, asked Air Marshal Miller this question:

> Did you or the other chiefs of staff advise that unification should be proceeded with? I make a distinction here between unification and integration.
>
> Air Marshal Miller: I do not think there was any advice of that sort given.

Honourable senators, if the chiefs of staff did not give the advice for unification, who did? Was it the public relations officer who has replaced all our senior officers in the Department of National Defence?

I am also intrigued by the fact that this matter must have come before the cabinet, and surely the cabinet must have given some consideration to the fact that the military experts opposed unification. And did all members of the Cabinet support unification? Surely, honourable senators, not all the members of the Cabinet can be as arrogant and determined as the Minister of National Defence?

Again, on page 2297 of the National Defence proceedings, Air Marshal Miller stated:

> Again, there are no significant military advantages.

No significant military advantages. If there are no military advantages, what are the advantages? One can only conclude that they are political—

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: And God help us, honourable senators, if in the Department of National Defence political considerations surpass and are considered to be of greater importance than military considerations. I am quite accustomed to there being political considerations in the welfare measures—

Hon. Mr. McDonald: We are sure getting them now.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: We are certainly getting the welfare, honourable Senator McDonald.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Politics too.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: As I say, I am accustomed to this in welfare, but I do not think it is necessary to have it in the Department of National Defence. Surely we can put this on a logical basis without it becoming a political consideration.

Honourable senators, I want to read to you Air Marshal Miller's final statement before the Defence Committee, I quote:

> Gentlemen, could I say thank you for your courtesy and understanding. I would like, because of the difficulty I have encountered with impressions other witnesses have left with you, to say that I have been honoured and proud to serve with the Canadian Forces. I think they are outstanding national representatives of Canada. I think only of making them better and I am convinced that they have embarked upon a very imaginative and, I think, proper development in this matter of integration providing a single management and a single planning and a single financing operation.
>
> I feel the next step that was forecast in the White Paper, that of doing way with the services, will cause the loss, against this business we have been discussing recently, of a lot of people we cannot afford to lose and that we will not get very much of a benefit from this single service proposal. Maybe after the lessons of integration have been learned and the team has worked out—and they are not through the integration learning process—the follow-on then of a single service will be a natural and non-argumentative course. But I make a plea for you to interpret my position as being in favour of integration as we have it now, as it is developing. I am not closing the book at all on some future unification but because of the need to get the integration machinery oiled up and working I would not want a disruptive influence such as unification to be thrown into the machinery at this time. That is my personal view and I want to make it and leave it very clearly with you.

Then Mr. Foy interrupts and says:

> It is going to be done very slowly, air marshal, with the assurance that it will take at least five years.

Mr. Foy may have a blind political faith, he may have a certain faith in this Government and in this minister that I do not have, but I am afraid I cannot accept that assurance. In fact, I think even the Prime Minister showed some concern after this statement was made, because he indicated that he was impressed by this plea, which is one of the reasons I have read it to you. Apparently someone got to him, however, and told him to change his mind, and we now have the bill proceeded with.

The bill also contains a gesture of understanding of the feelings of the servicemen. It is rather unusual throughout the bill, but it does contain one gesture towards the feelings of servicemen in that members of the R.C.A.F. and the Royal Canadian Navy may maintain their present rank designations, if they desire. This raises an interesting question: What happens to a member of the service today who retains his present rank designation? Can you imagine a wing commander in the air force today insisting on maintaining that appointment and looking for his promotion under the new rank of colonel? It is just not going to happen. In fact, I think life would be made very miserable for anyone who attempted to keep his present rank designation.

The bill then goes on to state that the officers and men presently in the service will not be required to perform different duties. That is, someone who is in the air force now will not be transferred to an infantry regiment. However, it also provides a different form of service for those coming into the service. This to me seems rather odd. We are going to have a unified service—why have the two designations, what I would call an ante-Hellyer force and a post-Hellyer force? Certainly, the chap who is presently in the service is going to be very different from the new recruit coming in three months after this bill has come into effect.

Honourable senators, by virtue of this very fact you are creating two new services which I describe as ante-Hellyer and post-Hellyer.

The bill also raises a problem in recruiting, and we all know that recruiting has been a great difficulty for the minister. Normally, when a recruit joins the service he is attracted by some particular aspect or atmosphere of the service which appeals to him as an individual. Now when a recruit comes in he comes into this unified service, and what does he have? He has nothing to attract him but green: he has a green policy, a green service and a not-so-green future.

During my remarks, I emphasized that we needed an explanation of our future defence role. I was impressed by the fact that this was missing in the debate in the other place, but I was also impressed with the fact that there was no explanation given as to how a new recruit would be better off.

What sort of serviceman would he be, and in what way would he be better?

Here again I ask the leader of the Senate to explain these things to us. Give me some facts to show me how our serviceman is going to be better after unification than he is today. Show me that when you take a recruit and train him—and many honourable senators have gone through the procedure of being recruited and trained, as I have—show me or give me some facts and figures as to how you are going to make this man a better serviceman than he is today. I cannot see it, and no one has taken the interest and no one has bothered to attempt to explain this aspect to me. Then after his training what is his future in the service? Is he going to be in a submarine this time this year and in a tank this time next year? I would like an explanation of that. Are we going to train him for one task, make him an expert in that, and then move him to another and go through the costly procedures of retraining him? I am sure the minister has this information available and would be only too happy to give it.

I want to emphasize again that we have not had the facts on unification. I join with Senator Welch in saying that I as a Maritimer am naturally concerned with the future of our anti-submarine warfare. Here let me bring up the fact that while it was emphasized that we were going to save money on equipment, no one has stated what type of equipment was going to be bought. Could we not have at this stage of the debate some information as to the type of equipment we will have? Anti-submarine units both on the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast contain a large number of Neptune aircraft. These are now obsolete and must be replaced. What consideration has the department given to replacing these aircraft?

In addition, it would not be a bad idea to have an accurate, factual description of unification. The White Paper has used these terms interchangeably, and it has caused a great deal of confusion not only in the public mind but also in the minds of senior officers of the defence department. No one to my knowledge in either political party has opposed integration, and I do not think any senior officer of any department has opposed it. But the people actively involved in making integration work have realized the fact that there are still many problems to be solved, and they must be solved. I would point out, honourable senators, and I am sure you all read the evidence in the National Defence Committee, that it is estimated that the materiel command will take three to five years to be complete. They are planning for integration within that command, and yet we are now adding more problems to them in giving them unification.

The sponsor of the bill emphasized that unification will give a great deal more adaptability and efficiency to the services. I do not wish to be unfair to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and state that he was implying that the forces are presently inefficient. I do not want to create that impression at all because I am sure that that was not his intention. But the leader completely nullified his arguments by referring to the adaptability and the wonderful response of Canadian forces in two world wars. Certainly our forces responded but they did so as three separate services without unification, and I think that has completely destroyed his argument that adaptability and efficiency are going to be increased under this bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Because there is no nation among the allied forces that has a greater record for response and efficiency than Canada has.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And we can do it again.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Not under this bill. You have not shown one instance in this bill where it can be more efficient or more adaptable. I'm from Missouri; I want to be shown.

Another aspect to be considered is that in the introduction of the bill the minister made vague reference to the fact that it was Parliament's function to assume the final responsibility for our defence planning. I cannot disagree entirely with that remark, but I want to point out that our senior military officers were also concerned with this. We have had senior military officers who have participated in the planning of NATO and NORAD, and their advice was received and respected in both NATO and NORAD and in all the organizations of the Western world. Is it not only fair and logical that we in the Senate should consider their advice and give it the same respect, the same high esteem that Canadian officers have in military organizations such as I have just mentioned? Let us not fool ourselves. They are concerned with the changing pattern of defence and the changing needs; they are just as concerned as Tommy Douglas, Grégoire and Caouette. Let us not turn around to these people who have given a lifetime career to this and say, "Mind your own business. We will make the final decision."

As honourable senators will by now have guessed, I am opposed to the loss of designation, or whatever you would like to term it, of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force. Surely our Government can recognize that there are many individuals presently serving in these forces who take pride in the accomplishments of the Canadian services. In addition to this there are hundreds of thousands of ex-servicemen who share that pride. I was greatly impressed by the remarks made by the Honourable Angus MacLean, senior member in the other place for Queens, Prince Edward Island, my province, in which he brought out the value of these traditions and how much they mean to so many people, particularly in the Atlantic provinces. It was not a long address; it was an off-the-cuff address, but it was sincere, and I ask you before you vote to take the time to read this speech of an outstanding Canadian of whom we need not be ashamed. I am not going to attempt to destroy those remarks by quoting from them; I am going to ask you to read them.

Honourable senators, in closing may I remind you of the list of senior officers who oppose unification? Perhaps you will bear with me while I read them to you: General Charles Foulkes; Lieutenant General Moncel—and we have heard various remarks about "the admirals' revolt," but it was not merely an admirals' revolt, because here we have senior men in the Army also opposing unification; Vice-Admiral Rayner; Air Vice-Marshal Hendrick; Admiral Brock; Admiral Pullen; Admiral Stirling; Lieutenant General Fleury; Air Marshal Curtis; Air Marshal Annis; Lieutenant General Simonds; Air Chief Marshal Miller; and, of course, Rear Admiral Landymore.

In addition, Lord Mountbatten, who probably commanded the greatest body of combined forces of any man in World War II, has described the idea of unification as being ludicrous. General Eisenhower has emphasized the benefits and need of different uniforms and services, their pride and traditions.

Honourable senators, as I said earlier, Mr. Pickersgill says that there are no experts, no advisers; and the Minister of National Defence comes along and says that you should use your God-given sense. The distinguished officers whose names I have just read possess their fair share of ability and, in fact, more than their fair share of God-given sense.

That is exactly what I am going to do, honourable senators: I am going to ask you to use your God-given sense, to respect the advice given by these military men, and reject this bill.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I do not intend to take more than a minute of your time, but I do want to say a few words because I am worried. I do not know exactly what is going to happen; it has not been described to us. However, as I look around me, particularly as so many honourable senators are here, I see quite a number of men who served in the first or second world war, and I ask: Why did you enlist? Why did so many of your comrades give their lives? Was it not for the defence of traditions and freedom?

I will ask another question: Why did these men enlist in the army, or the navy, or the air force? Was it not because they felt they could be of most service to their country in the particular branch they chose?

Now your sons and your grandsons will have to enlist in the Canadian Armed Forces. They will immediately be conscripted; in my view, it is conscription. After they have joined the Canadian Armed Forces they can be put in the navy, or the army, or the air force, just as the head of the forces decides. These young men will have no say in the matter. That I take as unfortunate, because I believe an individual can give of his best in the particular arm of the forces with which he wishes to associate himself.

I come now to a particular clause I wish to speak on and this is the only reason I am addressing you.

Clause 13 of the bill repeals Section 28 of the act, and a new Section 28 is substituted which reads:

> (1) An officer or man

—a sailor, a soldier, or an air force man—

> (1) An officer or man may be attached or seconded to the armed forces of any state,...

—any state in the world. In other words, if your son or grandson enlists in this unified force he can be seconded to serve in a Russian brigade, a Chinese brigade, in Viet Nam, if you like—wherever the head of the forces wishes to send him. I say this is a disguised form of conscription. In other words, they enlist in the armed forces and are sent to the army, navy or air force—not where they would like to be sent but according to the wishes of the head of the forces. Then, after that man is inducted into the forces he can be sent to any state in the world to serve in a foreign service branch.

I do not like that. Perhaps because I am old-fashioned. Heretofore, we have fought in wars only because we wanted to defend ourselves and our traditions. These were the only reasons we enlisted. We wanted to protect that which had been handed down to us by our forefathers. Henceforward our sons and grandsons will not have that opportunity. They are to join the armed forces and will be told, "All right, you go here. You go here. You go there. I want to send you to Russia"—or somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): When you are on active service. There is no change in the legislation with respect to that point.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: There is in that section.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Oh, it is there. All right, I will take up more of your time than I intended to.

The old section 28 reads:

> An officer or man may be attached or seconded to another component of the Service of the Canadian Forces in which he is enrolled or to any component of any Service of the Canadian Forces...

There is no mention of any other state. That is the section we have wiped out and which has been replaced by this new one.

Hon. Mr. McDonald (Moosomin): It is in the following section.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Now we put in this section:

> An officer or man may be attached or seconded to the armed forces of any state,...

There is a difference there.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable gentleman mind telling us whether he is reading from Bill C-243 as passed by the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I have "Bill C-243, An Act to Amend the National Defence Act and other Acts in consequence thereof."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): "As passed by the House of Commons," or for first reading?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: They may have made an amendment to that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is what I have been trying to say to the honourable gentleman. I understand this clause was removed from the bill before it was passed.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: This particular section?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Then I am glad to hear it, and my remarks are irrelevant. I was worried when I saw it, and that is the only reason I rose in my place. I hope it has been taken out, and I take the honourable leader's word on that.

I do not think we should make this a political question; it is too serious for that. I do not agree with certain things in this bill. That is one clause I thought remained in the bill as passed; and, as I say, that is the only reason I rose in my place.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-278, respecting the occupational training of adults.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-280, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1967

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-293, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

Bill read first time.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions.

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Operations under the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the International Development Association Act for the year ended December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 2 of the first-mentioned Act, chapter 13, R.S.C., 1966-67, and section 5 of the latter Act, chapter 32, Statutes of Canada, 1960. (English and French texts).

PENITENTIARIES

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the third report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Penitentiaries.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I want to take merely two minutes in which to tell the house that this Special Joint Committee has done excellent work. On this occasion it is not appropriate for me to give details of what resulted from the inquiries and deliberations of the committee, inasmuch as it has been announced that a new session is to commence immediately following the prorogation of this session. At some time during the next session I can promote a debate on this subject by way of inquiry.

All I need say at this time is that Senator Fergusson, who seconds my motion, and I agree that the rather lengthy report of the special joint committee which was made an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of Wednesday last is an indication of the effort made by the committee in its deliberations, and also of its recommendations.

Report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until the call of the bell at approximately 3 p.m.

At 3 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN SENATE GALLERY

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we commence our proceedings this afternoon, will you allow me to announce the presence in the gallery of the Honourable J. E. Snedker, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan. Mr. Snedker is a very active member of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and was at the New Zealand meeting. We are very pleased to see him here today.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to join the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) in welcoming the Speaker of the Saskatchewan Legislature.

CANADIAN FORCES REORGANIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from earlier this day the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-243, to amend the National Defence Act and other acts.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, before entering into the debate on this bill, I do not think it would be out of place for me to say how pleased I was about the opening of the Canadian World Exposition yesterday. I am not saying that as one who attended at the opening, because I did not. However, I have watched with great pleasure and approval the work that has been done by the commissioners and others who have been responsible for this great event for Canada. I was a member of the Government which had something to do with the laying of the keel. They were confronted with considerable anxiety at that time, for they were concerned about the terrific work that would be connected with an exhibition of this kind.

I wish to congratulate the Mayor of Montreal on the good job he has done. I wish also to congratulate the Province of Quebec. Finally, I congratulate the Dominion of Canada on having opened what I hope and believe will be one of the greatest expositions the world has ever seen.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, this debate has been going on for a long time. Anyone who happens to be the last speaker on his side, following a multitude of speakers, has a difficult task, because while one does not like to be repetitious, it is extremely difficult to speak without saying something which has already been said, not only once but many times.

I wish to congratulate the honourable members from this side of the house who have spoken. Their speeches have been logical, and I am sure were well prepared. If I hesitate as I go through my notes, it is because I am trying to leave out a good deal of what has already been said better than I can say it.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I object that I have not been congratulated for my speech.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You can always take the congratulations for granted, Senator Farris. The honourable senator and I, years before he went to British Columbia, lived in a little county called Queenstown in the Province of New Brunswick. May I say, without flattering him, that the name of Farris stands very high down there. We are very proud of the men we have sent to British Columbia.

I say to the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) that I think he did a very good job. By that I do not imply that I approve of the bill but I do believe that had Senator Connolly been the Minister of National Defence in the present Government we would never have had a bill such as this before us at the present time. If we pass it, Canada, in the truest sense of the phrase, in my opinion will be buying a pig in a poke.

We have heard many times that the Govemnent should have explained unification to Parliament and the Canadian people. It has not been done. Neither Parliament nor the Canadian people understand today what is meant by this unification bill. It should have been shown that it is in reality legislation for the defence of Canada, and I do not think that even my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, can assist in that.

My remarks on this bill will be brief, first, because the subject has been dealt with fully both by those in opposition and those who approve. It has been discussed from practically every conceivable angle by members in the other place, by active and retired military experts, by the press, radio and television, and is now being discussed by the Senate of Canada.

After listening to the excellent speech by my good friend Senator White the other day, and since then to other good speeches from this side of the house, there is little more that can be added.

My second reason for being brief—one that has been mentioned quite often—is that it is apparent that the intention of the Government, from the debates and votes in the other place, is to force the measure on the people of Canada, whether they wish it or not. In spite of the strongest arguments which can be advanced in opposition to the bill, both in Parliament and out of it, they are determined that the measure shall be passed.

Honourable senators, I do not think that in the more than 30 years I have been in Parliament I have ever heard stronger, more logical or convincing reasons why a bill of this kind should not be passed. I do not think any committee has ever had such expert advice before it as did the Committee on National Defence, and most of the advice was against the bill.

I sometimes wonder why, when we have spent many millions of dollars to educate our military, when we have such expert colleges as the Royal Military College at Kingston, the Royal Military College at St.-Jean, Québec, and Royal Roads in British Columbia for the training of our soldiers and sailors, all of which are costing us many hundreds of thousands of dollars, the advice which is given is not accepted by those in the Department of National Defence at the present time.

This morning, the honourable Senator Phillips from Prince Edward Island gave a list of the senior officers in Canada who were opposed to this bill. I know most of those officers and they are known to honourable senators. It was like a roll of the outstanding military men of this country for the past 25 years. With very few exceptions, those men, who should know what they are talking about, and in my opinion do, were opposed to this bill. I need not read their names, but I know them. There were men such as Admiral Brock, Admiral Dillon, and Lieutenant General Moncel. They are not old fogies, as some people would try to have us believe. Most of them are in their forties, some in their early forties; and most of them retired two or three years earlier than they had intended, because they were absolutely opposed to the bill before us now.

Reading their speeches and their evidence, we can realise there are some things which they simply could not understand. For example, they could not understand how the Canadian armed forces was going to operate with a one-rank structure. As one of them said, it is difficult to imagine a lieutenant-colonel commanding a ship or an admiral being a lieutenant-general. It is not so difficult for the air force to conform to the new rank structure, because its present rank structure goes by army ranks and army units. I shall have something more to say about this.

Honourable senators, it is platitudinous to say we are interested in the defence of Canada. We are anxious that our country should play its full part in the preservation of peace in the world, because by that means we will have peace also in Canada. It is not easy for us to determine just what our defence should be in peacetime. That is a difficult assessment to make in any country and it is becoming increasingly more difficult.

Honourable senators, we were given reasons for changing the organization of the armed forces; but we were confronted with this situation, and so was the House of Commons, that the principle of this bill was determined by second reading before ever it went to a committee.

There appeared before that committee the most outstanding men we have had, possibly, in the history of the defence of Canada. Without waiting for their advice, the principle in this bill was approved. The advice those men gave was not considered at all. They were all practical soldiers, well trained, and they had served in war as well as in peace.

Honourable senators, it was difficult to understand how the Minister of National Defence, having heard their evidence, could continue to be so stubborn and so arrogant. He has not deviated one iota from the ideas set out in his original bill, in spite of all the expert advice he has received.

The honourable Leader of the Government says it is the duty of the Government to determine the defence policy. That was well answered this morning by my good friend Senator O'Leary (Carleton).

The Government decides how much money should be spent, but surely the expenditure should be made on expert advice. Similarly, in the case of the Department of Public Works and in nearly every other department, the Government decides how much money may be spent but takes the advice of those in the respective departments as to how the expenditures shall be made.

Honourable senators, it is obvious that the first consideration of the defence force in any country is the sovereignty and security of the country. This has been true ever since organized countries have existed in the world. It holds good today everywhere. If certain things have been suggested which seem too expensive for a department, it is up to the Government to decide priorities. This is done in every department, particularly in the Department of Defence.

The first priority is the security and sovereignty of the country. In my humble opinion, the second priority should be our association and our alliance with other countries which will help in the defence of our own country, namely, with NATO and with NORAD. The third priority is the peacekeeping tasks.

If Canada cannot afford all three of these, I believe the one which we should do without is the peacekeeping task. I do not think we can afford all of them.

We are proud of the part Canada has taken in peacekeeping tasks in the world in the past. She has played a leading part and has done a splendid job, as Canadian soldiers always do, no matter what the task, whether it be in the United Nations, NATO, in actual war, or otherwise. We never have had any reason to be other than proud of our Canadian soldiers. However, we seem to have become very international in our thinking. The thinking of our prime minister seems to be almost exclusively along this line of peacekeeping tasks.

Mention has been made of Cyprus. We have a small force there, but ours are not the only troops in Cyprus. We had about 800, out of over 5,000—about one-sixth. We have troops on the Gaza Strip—also only a fraction of the force there—who have been there for some years, although we were told when they went there they would be there but a few months. We had troops in the Congo. We had and have some men in Kashmir.

All of these put together do not amount to a very large number of troops. It is said that the reason Canada is asked to send peacekeeping troops is that the powerful nations would not prove acceptable.

Canada has never been a colonial power, but it seems a bit ludicrous for us always to be selected for peacekeeping duties when you consider the size of our country, our population, and our tremendous resources, for Canada is one of the great countries in the world. I might say, however, that I noticed the other day that we were twenty-seventh on the list at the funeral of Adenauer. Of course, that might be explained more on the basis of personal diplomacy concerning the representatives than on anything else.

But coming back to what I was saying, the countries selected for this particular peacekeeping work are not great countries, and it is not altogether a compliment to Canada for it to be said that she has been selected for peacekeeping service.

To draw another parallel, in large scale wars such as the Korean War, the troops comprising our side come from the larger countries: the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Australia and the like. That applies to Vietnam, for example. But in the confrontation between Malaysia and Indonesia, a short time ago there were no peacekeeping troops involved at all. Great Britain sent part of her fleet, together with 40,000 troops. If she had not done so, there would have been a war. There is no question about that.

As I mentioned, the United Nations Emergency Force in Israel and the United Arab Republic consists of 4,580 officers and men, of which 810 officers and men are Canadians. The rest are comprised of troops from small, albeit great, countries. They come from Ireland, for example, and the Irish troops are good and made a splendid record in the Congo in helping to keep the peace. Other countries involved at this level are Finland, Holland and Sweden, but you do not find any of the great countries connected with this particular duty.

Canada has more responsibilities than any of these other countries that I have mentioned. Look at our coastline. It was mentioned here today and it has been mentioned before that we have half a continent to protect. Ireland has a short coast; Finland and these other countries are overshadowed and generally protected by the unbrella of Europe so far as their defences are concerned. We have more to think about than have these small countries in that we have half a continent to look after.

Believe me, there are many countries today who look with envious eyes upon Canada. We have what many other countries would like to have. It is our responsibility in defence matters, therefore, to arrange our program in such a way that we will be able to defend what we have at present and in the future.

I come now to NATO, an organization which has been in existence some 18 years and of which Canada has been a member since its inception. Last year I had the great honour and pleasure of being a member of our delegation to NATO. Since NATO was first established it has gone through many changes and many difficult times, perhaps the worst being in the last two or three years, and the question is repeatedly asked: Is NATO necessary? That is a question I heard when I was in Paris. To my mind, the answer is yes. For if it had not been for NATO during the last 20 years we probably would have had a war with the communists. But NATO has had a deterrent effect upon Russia and the other communist countries.

In spite of changed conditions, however, the 14 members of NATO are of the definite opinion that NATO should be retained. In spite of relaxation of the cold war, in spite of the detente, in spite of the fact that Russia and the communist countries seem more friendly, and in spite of the nuclear deterrent, still the nations of Europe feel today that NATO is something that must be retained. And in my humble opinion Canada must retain her position as a part of NATO.

I was very interested to hear the statement of the Commander in Chief of the NATO forces when he spoke at NATO last fall. He advocated that we must retain NATO as a defence for Europe and as a defence for the world. Another speech which I listened to with great interest was that of the Admiral of the NATO fleet, who was of the opinion that we must have a strong fleet in order to protect us in the event of war.

There is another point I would like to make. In the peacekeeping forces of the United Nations, which are after all scattered here and there all over the world—sitting down, as it were—we do not get the excellent kind of training for our troops that is available to them in their service with NATO. In NATO our troops are brigaded, or are with divisions of the British, the French and the American troops and those of other countries. They have splendid training and splendid manoeuvres. They are always in top shape.

Moreover, many of our troops have gone up north with the Scandinavians, training for northern warfare. So it is a good thing for Canada, apart from the fact that she should be part of NATO, to have her troops associated with troops where she will get good training.

I also heard the admiral speak, and I was rather shocked at what I heard, because he pointed out to us that despite the fact that there seemed to be a slackening off of the cold war, Russia had the largest fleet in the world. This was more or less of a confidential nature, but it has been published since, so I do not think there is any objection to my repeating it. He pointed out that when Russia builds ships, whether they are for the navy, the merchant marine or for fishing, they are all being built as naval vessels. He spoke about the ships that go to the north with great steel hulls for ice breaking. They do not have their steel hulls for ice breaking in the St. Lawrence River. They go to the northern part of Canada and to the northern part of Europe to be used in the event of war for breaking ice there and for manoeuvring in those particular places.

He also spoke of the Russian submarines, saying that Russia's submarines were all over the world. He spoke about Russia's submarines being in the northern part of Canada. I was glad to hear it mentioned this morning that we have in our navy, which is small but very effective, one of the most effective anti-submarine units in the world, and if this bill does anything to lessen its efficiency, it certainly will not be for the benefit of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It was told to us that the ultimate aim of NATO—and I used to emphasize this—is to secure the peace of the world. That is its ultimate aim—not, as I said a few minutes ago, to send 400 or 500 troops to the Gaza Strip, to Africa or to India.

We cannot do anything if the large countries determine to go to war. What happened when China determined to take over Tibet? She simply went in and took it over. There would be no use sending peacekeeping forces there. There is no use sending them to any area where there is liable to be anything but a very small brush war.

Now I come to NORAD, and I think what I have already said applies here. Our first responsibility is to the defence of Canada. We cannot defend it alone; it would be useless to think of such a thing. It was well said this morning that the defence of Canada is united with the defence of North America. We have 20 million people and the United States has 200 million people. One-tenth would probably be the proper proportion of the defence that Canada could provide for the North American continent if necessary. We must continue as a member of NORAD.

Perhaps honourable senators will be interested to know just what troops there are in the NATO ground force as well as the numbers that the Russians or the communists have in Europe. According to the latest report I have, we have 779,000 troops in NATO ground forces. The Canadian troops amount to 20,000. I might say that Canadian land troops are not in a unit by themselves. They have been associated with other units and other brigades belonging to other countries. Our air force is attached to the American air force. We have no separate command of our own forces. What is the total communist ground forces? It is 970,000. It is this balance of troops in NATO that has been the great deterrent to war in the last 20 years.

Honourable senators, I want to say a word about unification. We have heard quoted many times remarks by Air Vice-Marshal Miller. I know him well; I think everyone who has been in the least way connected with military matters in this country over the last 20 years knows his name. He defined integration as a force having a single defence staff, a single planning staff and a single budget procedure. Integration has been a very widely supported; everyone supports integration. He defined unification as a single force having a single rank structure, a single administrative chain of command, a common uniform and a force wherein the trades and ranks would be called by common names.

At first the words unification and integration had the same meaning, indicating integration. All these generals, admirals and air force men that I have mentioned agreed that integration is a good thing, and they have been in favour of it, but they have been opposed to unification, particularly for combat troops. Most of the expert witnesses who appeared before the National Defence Committee were in favour of some form of integration of the services, but those no longer serving are unanimously opposed to Mr. Hellyer's plan for unification of combat troops. There is no deviation. They all believe that military organization, the medical corps, the dental corps, the army service corps and all these supporting services in the combat services can be very easily integrated and should be. It is done in other countries; I think Great Britain has integration, and perhaps France and some other countries. But they do not have unification.

Like my good friend the honourable senator from Prince (Hon. Mr. Phillips), I do not like to quote too much the opinions of others, but I have here some opinions which should carry some force. Speaking of the common rank structure, General Moncel in his evidence on page 1336 before the committee, when asked, "Do you see any need for the proposed common rank structure as far as the navy or the people who are engaged in naval operations are concerned?", replied no. I would mention here that General Moncel had command of the large Gagetown Camp down in my own province. It is one of the largest in the Commonwealth. Senator Burchill and others who know him, know what an excellent soldier he proved to be, not only there but throughout his military life.

General Foulkes, in his evidence at page 1242, on being questioned, did not think it would be advisable that the navy rank structure should be changed. Names of ranks should be left as they are. He said "Certainly I would not have done this because I would have foreseen that this kind of thing would bring forth irritation—in other words—it would be doing more harm than good."

Admiral Landymore at page 1056 said: "I hope we won't make this mistake"—setting up a common rank structure—"as it is unworkable and one of the weakest points of the legislation."

Honourable senators, I do not make too much criticism of the common uniform, although as an old soldier I do not like to see it being changed. I do not see the necessity. Nevertheless, I would like to give the opinions of some of the senior officers on this subject. Air Marshal Annis in his evidence at page 1440 said: "I think perhaps one of the major appeals of the military has been the variety of uniforms. I would rather suspect that a single uniform right across the board for walking out is something they would consider drab."

Vice-Admiral Rayner in his evidence at page 2031, speaking about not having a distinctive naval uniform, said that in his opinion it would have this effect on morale, recruiting and our relations with other navies:

> Well, I think amongst naval personnel it would be catastrophic. Today a Canadian sailor in his blue uniform with "HMCS" on his cap tally and "CANADA" on his shoulder, identifying him as a Canadian sailor can go anywhere in the world and he is highly respected. This is first of all because he is a Canadian and second because he is a professional sailor. I believe if our men have to go to Cherbourg or Portsmouth or Norfolk, Virginia, in green uniforms that they will find themselves a laughingstock. I am told that this is the one thing that does concern a lot of junior men. They just wonder what is going to happen when they have to go into foreign naval ports in queer uniforms.

Speaking on the question of morale, Air Marshal Annis in his evidence at page 1435 had this to say:

If you will forgive me, I will repeat that my chief concern is with those in the combat career field—the deck officers and the ratings who are the armament and that type of rating in the navy, the infantry, artillery and armour of the army, and the air crew of the air force. These are the people who are the hard core—they and those who do the maintenance—in each of the services. They are the people who would suffer most by unification. They would lose their uniform and their other sort of identity, and they are the people whose morale problem is most difficult because, as I said, a uniform is being taken away from them.

Later in his evidence, with regard to recruiting, he said:

One can offer them a career, but it is rather short and these fellows, especially the soldiers, have to be healthy because at age twenty-three or twenty-four they are finished as combat people. . . .It is the worry about the morale, and the difficulty of acquiring into the services and retaining the hard core people that I worry about. Unification, in my opinion, would have a very difficult psychological impact on them. I think, given more time, more confidence, that the supporting services in integrated form can give them the support they need and this sort of thing —given time, their morale could perhaps stand the buffet that would come by unification. It might even happen that the time would come when we could safely say, "We are going to unify," and a gasp of dismay through these trades would just not occur.

There is a long list of quotations, as everyone knows, which we have all heard quite a number of times. In closing, I say there is much more that could be said, but it would be repetitious. However, I do wish to say it was a mistake to introduce a bill of this kind, one which is very controversial, into Canadian politics at a time when we should be endeavouring to encourage and retain unity. This is not a unifying bill.

We have a minority government, and an unstable one which must and does depend for its life on splinter parties—the Creditistes gave their full support; the Separatists; the Socialists, the party to the left; Social Credit, a party with a financial policy with which none of us agrees. These are the allies of this Government which is putting this bill through now.

In my humble opinion, honourable senators, a party that wishes to put through legislation of this kind, and the other disruptive legislation we have had in the past two or three years, should have a strong mandate from the people—which this Government has not. I am satisfied that if we had among us men like Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Robert Borden, the Right Honourable Mackenzie King, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, we would not have this type of legislation before us now.

From the legislation we have had before us in the past few years, you would think we were an emerging nation, that we had no past—we must have a new flag; we must have a new constitution; we must have a new culture. And yet, here we are, a nation with the cultures of two great races, and after all these years they say we must have all these new things. They need them in Ghana; they need them in Urindi; they need them in Niger; they need them in Sierra Leone; but, surely, here in Canada we have established ourselves as a great nation and we do not have to divorce ourselves from everything that has been done in the past?

The other day Senator White spoke about the million men serving in two world wars. He mentioned that Canada has taken part in two great wars, that we have had a million men in uniform. I have met many thousands of those men, and in all my experience I have never heard one soldier say that he was ashamed of his uniform or that he wished he did not have it. If there has been any complaint about the uniform, it has not come from the man who was wearing it but from the man who was watching him wear it.

As I said a moment ago, we are all concerned about the defence of our country. That is our first consideration. The Leader of the Government in the Senate has been asked, as have the government members of the House of Commons, to tell Parliament and the people of Canada what is to be gained by the passage of this unification bill. Do we know what will be our contribution to NATO? No, that has never been explained. Do we know the answer to the more important question: What about NORAD; what about the defence of our own country? We have been told by the prime minister, and by other members of the cabinet, that we should be creating an international force. I repeat that we are more interested in the protection and defence of our country than we are in sending little blobs of troops all across the world. We have heard nothing definite. There are some things we do know and they are very certain. It has been said that this is the main reason for passing this bill, but I do not think and would hate to think it is. However, we do know that after this bill is passed there will be no Royal Canadian Navy; they will do away with the "Royal". There will be no Royal Canadian Air Force; there will be no Canadian Army, as such. It is definite this bill will determine that. There will be no separate uniforms. As I said before, in all my experience with members of the Canadian forces—and there were one million of them in the two wars—I never heard of one of them complain about his uniform; he was very proud of it. As I say, Senator White explained it well the other day.

Take the navy. We have heard excerpts from the evidence of one of the admirals here. He asked what will be thought of our navy men as they visit the different centres of the world where they will meet navy men from other nations. You can tell a navy man wherever you see him, whether he be in the French, Canadian, American, British Navy, or whatever it is. But if he wears a green uniform, will he be distinguished as a navy man; will he be distinguished as a sailor? Instead of being mistaken for a British or American sailor, they will not even know that he is a sailor.

Honourable senators, I feel this bill does not add to the quality of the defence of our country. It is not the type of bill that should be passed by the Parliament of our country, and if we had amongst us now some of the men who had the destiny of this country in their hands in the past, I do not think that today we would have a bill of this kind before us for passage.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I would remind the honourable senator that if he speaks at this time it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have just a word to say. It is that in government, as in society, order must prevail.

I believe in hierarchy. If there is a department of government in which there should be order, and of which there should be one head—not two heads or three heads, because two or three heads are for monsters—it is the Department of National Defence.

I remember the time when an n.c.o., a former sergeant, was Minister of National Defence. He was one of the best we ever had, and he was the minister who controlled the whole department, without any associate. I am referring of course, to the Honourable Norman Rogers, who died in an airplane accident and who was mourned by all who knew him. I knew him well. I sat across the aisle from him in the House of Commons, and had numerous conversations with him. I do not want to speak of the dead, but he told me many times of how much more difficult it would be for him to administer his department if he had to consult with anyone before making a decision. He told me: "The only ones I consult before making a decision are the heads of the department. I consult them, and I consult my colleagues, and then, as head of the department, I make my decision which is final, and which is approved by my colleagues." That is my idea of sound government.

I appreciate the feelings of my colleagues, and I appreciate what has been said by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) in his eloquent speech. I listened to what was said by other honourable senators who followed the Leader of the Government. But, I am for order in society, and for order in each department of government. If there is a department in which those who belong to it have to obey authority it is the Department of National Defence. The officers and men of the Department of National Defence can express their opinions only after they have resigned. If they are sincere, then they have to choose between an expression of their opinions and their loyalty to the minister. They cannot stay in the department and contradict orders given by the minister who is the final authority.

That being said, honourable senators, I shall not persist. I have made my position clear. I am not a military man, but I had a lot to do with military men during the war. I remember one day I said in the House of Commons that the brass hats in the department who had never seen a theatre of war were wrapped up in more red tape than the Egyptian mummies. Mr. Mackenzie King called me to order, but his Honour the Speaker did not insist that I retract what I had said.

That being said, I persist in my view, although I respect the views of others.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, in winding up this debate I must say that it has been a complete and a very good one. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) having just resumed his seat, I am bound to say that few of us have heard him speak either more eloquently or with greater conviction than he did here this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): While some of us may not agree with all the views he expressed, nonetheless we would defend to the limit his right to say them, and express our delight in hearing him put his views forward as sincerely and succinctly as he did. No member of the Parliament of Canada has a finer record of service, not only on the civilian and parliamentary side but on the service side. I pay that tribute of respect and, if I may say so, of affection to Senator Brooks.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What I have said of Senator Brooks I say, in some respects, of all who participated in this debate. Politics has entered this debate, but politics is not out of place in a political debating chamber. There are people who are very concerned about the situation which the presence of this bill in Parliament creates. As I said in my opening remarks, no group of men were more aware of the development of such a situation than the Government itself.

A choice had to be made, and after a weighing of the alternatives the choice of integration leading ultimately to unification, on balance, seemed to be the appropriate one. I say here and now that I cannot stand before the Senate of this country and assure everybody that this is going to have a perfect result. Who could? Parliament is a human institution. The defence forces of the country are a human institution. One tries to do what one can within his capacity in terms of finance, personnel, and skills. One tries to observe his commitments to other countries. One tries particularly in this day not to be concerned too much about the criticism that will come if change is advocated, because change is a fact of life today, and change in the field of defence is a difficult prospect to face and to plan for.

Integration generally has been approved. It is a continuing process, and good progress has been made. Unification of the forces has always been in prospect. It is fair to say that when the processes of integration began the ultimate aim was always expressed by Government spokesmen to be that of unification. It cannot be accomplished in its detail overnight. Many of the detailed arrangements will take years to bring about.

I am happy to stand in my place here today and say with respect to the evidence of Air Vice-Marshal Frank Miller, the friend of us all, that there is a great deal in what he said about timing and about haste. I do not deny that to him, and I do not deny that to any of the people who have quoted him. However, it was considered that if the step were not taken now, upon balance there would be inequities develop within the three services and a greater decline in morale than otherwise would have occurred because of the uncertainties which lie ahead if this final step had not been taken. Therefore the policy decision, difficult though it was to take, was to proceed now.

I have been asked what the future role of this force will be. I wish, as I am sure the military authorities in every country wish, that one could lay down with precision what the prospects of the forces are likely to be. We do not know if in future there will be a nuclear war. We do not know if a war or wars will be conventional ones, or whether conventional wars will escalate to the nuclear stages. But certainly if conventional forces are required, then land, sea and air elements will be needed. Under this bill the Canadian forces will have land, sea and air elements. I refer to section 5(2) of the bill, which states:

> The units and other elements of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force existing at the coming into force of this Part shall, subject to the provisions of the National Defence Act, continue to be the units and elements of the Canadian forces.

This is specifically provided for in the bill. These forces will be used in various roles. I for one will not downgrade the value of peacekeeping. Who can say what might have happened in Cyprus if the United Nations force, in which Canada played such an important part, had not only gone there, but was willing to stay there.

I cannot forget the fact that when the force was first authorized I said here that it was thought that the emergency might be over in three months. But over two years have elapsed and the emergency has not yet passed. In Cyprus there might have been another Vietnam, and I do not apologize, and I do not think any Canadian need apologize for the fact that the Canadian forces joined forces with even smaller nations, nations who were trusted by the people on both sides in the conflict that existed in Cyprus and who were willing to accept the role of mediators, and hoping ultimately to be peacemakers.

The role of peacekeeping is quite different from the role of NATO, because when peacekeeping operations are involved there is already a crisis. Who can foresee, or even see in retrospect, whether or not the work that was done in Cyprus, as well as in other places, had great value or not. But at least the powder keg was kept under control where these forces, large or small, were sent from this country to try to help in maintaining the peace.

I do not think I could add much to what Senator Brooks said so admirably about the role of NATO. No one even now will say that it is unnecessary. In my humble opinion—and I, too, am not a military man—the Canadian force, though unified, can perform its NATO role as effectively and as efficiently, probably more efficiently, than would be the situation that has prevailed heretofore, if for no other reason than the equipment that will now be available to it, will be more useful to it and to the allies with which it is associated.

I hope that the need for NATO will disappear in time. I am proud that a former Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. St.Laurent, had so much to do with the establishment of that alliance. I have visited the troops, as have so many of my colleagues, and we are very proud indeed of the way in which they have conducted themselves since they were put into those NATO places.

NATO has been the shield of the West. The guard cannot be let down until we are sure. Here I only paraphrase what Senator Brooks has said so much better and more eloquently than I can.

A good deal has been said about morale. I need not go into the question of units and formations, because I have already quoted section 5, subsection (2) of the bill, which provided for the continuation of the units and the formation. But the people in the unified force will still have the tasks which are assigned to them. The sailor will be trained to sail ships, not to fly aeroplanes, not to drive tanks. This is not new. In the army, which is an integrated and unified force, there is this breakdown of assignments of roles. You do not train an artillery man and make an infantryman out of him, and you do not train an engineer and put him into the artillery. Likewise the same allocation of specified and special roles will continue to prevail while the force is unified under a single commander with a single minister.

On the question of uniforms, much has been said about the walking-out uniform. I suppose it will be some time before the walking-out uniform is authorized. However, I would remind honourable senators that the mess kit that heretofore has been used in the forces will be the same; that the dress uniform with the badges and flashes, and insignia, and all the rest of the decoration that goes with it, will be the same; that the combat or working dress will be the same—and it is not always very beautiful.

I remember my own experience in crossing the Atlantic in a convoy in a short forecastle 90-foot Corvette. The uniforms that were worn there included moccasins, running shoes, sweaters and duffle coats. I have pictures to prove it, because I had them on myself.

The walking out uniform undoubtedly will be changed, but I do not think that will make much difference. During the war, when new summer uniforms were designed for the forces, they were all the same, whether army, navy or air force. The only distinctive features were the service insignia on the shoulders, caps and arms.

The rank designations can remain the same. I said, in opening, that the army rank designations are to be used for administrative purposes. But there is provision in this bill whereby regulations can be made to continue the designations which have prevailed heretofore.

Someone has said that this Government refuses to confirm its convictions, and has added that Liberals have worked at times to the detriment of the armed forces. I do not wish to become political, but I am as proud of the work of the armed forces as all of us are, regardless of party—proud of names like Ralston and Power and Macdonald and Claxton and Campney and others who have served this department as ministers.

It has been said, too, that the world commitment policies of this Government are ill-informed and confused. I reject that assessment of the foreign policy of this Government, with the same language: I say that such an assessment is ill-informed and confused. If there is one place where our commitments are very clear, it is in the field of foreign affairs.

This morning, Senator O'Leary (Carleton) said that he wondered about me. I must apologize for having failed to conclude a sentence the other day, when I was making a laudatory remark about him. I said then that sometimes I wondered about Senator O'Leary. My wonderment only was when he was going to stop getting more and more honours heaped upon him, as he is putting us all into the shade in that respect. He deserves every one of them.

Senator O'Leary said this morning, that in part of my opening I performed as a senator. There is no higher compliment which can be paid to anyone, in my opinion, than to have that said of him. Senator O'Leary went on to say that in the latter part of my opening I performed as a member of the Government, particularly when I went on to talk, as he paraphrased it, about the importance of civil control of the military.

I must have left the wrong impression with the honourable senator. I had Lord Dundonald's name down in my notes, and I thought of myself, why should I thrash out old straw—that principle was established many years ago.

The point which I wished to make is that, even though this bill involves a field of action in which great expertise is required, ultimately the responsibility, as to how that expertise is to be used, must fall upon the shoulders, not of the experts but of civilians in Parliament and more especially in the Government. It was the Government which had to make the decision to present this legislation, even though it was a minority government and even though it was not an easy decision to make.

I cannot refrain from noting, in passing, that the vote in the other place in favour of this bill was two to one. I should add that as a cabinet minister I am bound to observe the principle of cabinet solidarity.

Senator O'Leary talked about the awful prospects ahead, when the intercontinental ballistic missile day should come. God grant that day does not come. God grant that men can sit down as reasonable men at a table and decide that we shall not have it. However, if we have it, then, on the McNamara evidence, it will cost, as Senator O'Leary said, $30 billion a year, and perhaps 10 per cent of that for us. That is the kind of defence spending this country cannot undertake. One of the steps in the direction of trying to keep our defence expenditures at a level which is satisfactory to this economy and to the taxpayers, who have to pay too many taxes now, is one of the objectives and aims of this bill. If the expenditure ever reaches $3 billion, we will wonder where the money is to come from.

Senator Phillips said that, after this bill is passed, we will become more dependent upon the United States for our defence. I have great personal regard for Senator Phillips, but I must tell him frankly that, on the evidence of the kind of money which is available for new, modern weaponry, not only will the situation not deteriorate but, under the savings effected in other areas, our forces will be more useful for the defence of North America than otherwise they would have been.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not make that statement with any sense of arrogance. It is a fact of life which has been proved already, if one looks at the defence estimates.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Has not that always been the case? It is an evolution; it is a matter of getting arms.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In a sense, that is true. However, the obsolescence of arms increases with greater rapidity now than it ever did in the history of the world. I gave an example, the Spitfire, which cost $25,000 in the last war and which was one of the great flying machines of the war. Today, the very cheapest fighter equipment which can be acquired is worth a minimum of $1 million. And the better types are worth $3 million and $4 million. Indications are that in the future it will cost many times that amount for the most modern equipment.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: May I interrupt the honourable senator for a moment? He mentioned certain savings in the purchase of equipment. In my remarks this morning, I asked for a more detailed account of the savings and of the type of equipment. If the honourable senator has those facts and figures now—I do not wish to place him on the spot— I would like a little more information in this regard, since he was kind enough to refer to my earlier remarks.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I did not come equipped to talk about equipment this afternoon; I came particularly to talk about unification and about equipment in the background only of unification. But let me say to Senator Phillips that the finance Committee will be re-established at the beginning of the session and it would be highly appropriate for him to ask some very detailed questions about the kind of new weaponry being acquired by the forces of this country.

I think he will find the information very illuminating, in that while there is $314 million more available this year than would have been the case if the establishment of five or six years ago had been in existence this year, the efficiency of the forces as a result of the acquisition of this equipment is not only beneficial for the forces but will be helpful indeed for us to fulfill our international commitments under the treaties by which we are bound.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Do I have your support in getting that before the Finance Committee?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There is no problem at all. Indeed you have.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would like to say, too, that I think from time to time it will be the duty of parliamentarians and senators, because Parliament is now almost in continuous session—and I hope, please God, that Parliament will always be in existence in this country—to have periodic reviews of the results that are proclaimed for the unification of the forces, to see whether they are working out in fact. There is no arrogance in my making a statement of that kind.

Speaking of arrogance, I am a little upset when the word is applied to my very old friend, the Honourable Paul Hellyer. I knew him when he first came to Parliament as a very young member. He was later defeated, and was returned in a by-election. After he returned to Parliament both he and I became very interested in the work of NATO parliamentarians. I remember the first occasion we went to Washington as observers, but at our own expense, attending one of these meetings.

I feel I owe it to him to say that he spent day and night working, interviewing as many of the people as he could from the forces of all of the countries represented at that meeting of parliamentarians within the alliance. He spent hours talking to the American officers about problems of defence and what the future held. The next fall we were in Paris; this time we were delegates and did not have to pay our own expenses. Again the same process went on so far as he was concerned. He talked not only with people in the military establishment of the countries of the alliance but also with those at SHAPE, who knew, if I may use the expression, something about the "shape" of things to come.

This man was dedicated to the work of the armed forces long before he had the opportunity of becoming the minister. He is sincere, and to say that he is arrogant seems to cast him in a role that simply just does not fit the carcass at all. I am proud to call him a cabinet colleague.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He is restricted by a financial ceiling. What he is trying to do is to take steps not only to economize through integration and unification but to make the forces efficient and effective. I give him credit for this: he is not afraid of taking steps that involve change—

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): He is not a coward.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Indeed he is no coward! And if he thinks it is going to improve the effectiveness of the armed services of his country, either for the defence of his country or for the fulfillment of its commitments in its international alliances.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., seconded by the honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C., that this bill be now read a second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: On division.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave I move third reading now.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Speaker, before we pass third reading, I have my reservations about giving unanimous consent to third reading, but I will give it on the condition that I can join the Leader of the Government in terming the Minister of Defence a "carcass."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What are you saying?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You said that my description of arrogance did not fit the carcass.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is quite right. You want an undertaking from the Leader of the Government to do what?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I said I will join you in your description of the minister.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate, it is moved by the honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., seconded by the honourable Senator Deschatelets, P.C., that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Donald Cameron moved the second reading of Bill C-278, respecting the Occupational Training of Adults.

He said: Honourable senators, in speaking to this very important bill, I find myself somewhat at a disadvantage, probably because of my error of commission by attending Expo yesterday. I blithely went down there thinking that I would have Saturday and Sunday to work on the bill. I was still in that blissful state of unawareness of what was going on at 11.45 this morning when I was advised that the hope was that this session of the Senate would conclude this evening.

I must say that my unhappiness about the situation in which I find myself is mitigated somewhat by the fact that I will be able to enjoy the weekend regardless of what I do with the bill this afternoon.

In passing, may I say—I do not know whether anyone else has said it or not—that I was proud yesterday to be a Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I must say that the production put on by the group of dedicated Canadians at Expo is a credit to everything we have stood for in the past and is a particular credit to the individuals who brought about this magnificent achievement. I think everyone who was there felt that the achievement has far exceeded their expectations, and we owe them a deep debt of gratitude for the success that I know Expo is going to be in 1967.

Bill C-278 is in three sections. Before going into the detail, I want to make some general observations. First let me say that it is a pleasure to have the privilege of introducing this bill in the Senate. I say that because it marks a significant forward step in the development of an intelligent national manpower policy. It is a recognition by Canada of a principle that has been recognized for some time in other countries, particularly in Sweden, that a man in training for employment and a man in training to improve his skills is an important part of the labour potential of the nation. It also recognizes that a man in training has a right to an income for himself and for his dependents during the time he is taking training. No longer must he be unemployed to be able to partake of training programs, but any adult who meets the criteria established under this bill is eligible under the act.

Here I would like to read a statement made by the minister partly in the House of Commons and partly during a federal-provincial conference last October. I am referring now to page 15344 of the House of Commons Debates where he was dealing with the financial aspect of it, and its effect on the public, particularly on young people in school. He said:

> Financially, from the point of view of the public, which is what matters, we are not creating a distinction between education and training.

As an educator I want to emphasize the importance of that because you cannot logically distinguish between education and training, although we can understand the reasons why sometimes this is done to meet certain hypersensitivity about constitutional matters.

> We are making them more alike. We are accepting the financial responsibility for seeing that free training is available to all adults when they need it, in the same way that free education is available to all children. Finally on this point of the alleged distinction between education and manpower training, let me repeat what I said in October to the federal-provincial conference: "The distinction we do make is quite different. It is not between kinds of education. It is a distinction between the needs of people—"

I want to underline this.

> "—between, on the one hand, students in the ordinary sense and, on the other hand, men and women who are or have been earning their living but who need further training or retraining for productive employment."

And that is a very good distinction to make.

> That means, of course, that there is one financial distinction. In order to take training most adults need a replacement income. But no province, as far as I know, has proposed to pay an income to the children in its schools. Therefore there is a line to be drawn as to when people should get training allowances. Obviously, if we pay allowances to young people of 17 or so, we create an incentive for them to drop out of school early and take training later.

Apropos of that, I am going to give the results of a survey made in September 1965 and February 1966 on this very matter under the Point Five Program. In that survey it was found that of persons 14 to 19 years of age nearly three-quarters were living at home with their parents. Secondly, it was found that about 13 per cent wanted jobs and therefore training just to have something to do. Of the male trainees in the September survey, 48.1 per cent were living at home and sought work to support themselves only; 15.4 per cent sought work just to have something to do, and 15 per cent were working to help their parents support their families; 5.7 per cent sought work to support their own families, and were therefore automatically eligible for allowances under this particular legislation.

Now, although those aged 14-19 had about the same drop-out rate as those aged 20 or over—approximately 44 per cent—they quit training for very different reasons. Those under 20 tended to leave because they were not serious about training; those over 20 tended to leave for economic or health reasons, and the reasons for the drop-out are spelled out on the following table.

Reasons for Drop Out

	Age 14-19	Age 20 or Over
Lack of motivation, absenteeism, lack of adjustment, disciplinary	34%	20%
Financial, family problems, health	18%	29%
To take a job	17%	22%
Course not suited to trainee	3%	5%
Other and unknown	28%	23%

That gives a pretty good estimate of what would happen if the allowances were made, as has been suggested that they should be, for people younger than 17 years of age.

Before going further I would like to pay a tribute to the former Government for initiating the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act of December 1960. That was a good act which has served Canada well in the years since 1961 when it came into force. At that time we had less than 100,000 places for students in technical and vocational training schools. Today, as a result of that act, we have over 300,000 places and it is estimated that by 1970 we will need 500,000 places. If so, honourable senators, we have no reason for complacency today.

In June 1966 the Training Allowance Act which was Bill C-186 was passed to provide federal contributions to the provinces of 100 per cent of the costs of providing training allowances of $35 per week to persons on technical and vocational training under federal-provincial programs, and up to 90 per cent of the cost of providing supplementary allowances to meet family circumstances and living costs. Enrolment in adult vocational training increased by 400 per cent between 1962-63 and 1963-64, as a result of these particular acts. Adult education at the secondary level increased by about 70 per cent in the same period. Here we can see the dramatic results of this legislation.

In the federal-provincial conference in October 1966 the Prime Minister indicated the intention of the federal Government to phase out existing agreements, to clarify purposes and to expand activities in adult training. There has been a lot of talk about the change in policy on the part of the federal Government. Some people have argued that the Government is curtailing programs and placing a greater onus on the provinces. An examination of the facts presents a very different story. It will be recalled that for many years after the federal Government sought to meet the national needs for trained manpower and provided more and more money for doing so, there was a constant barrage of fire from at least some of the provinces that the federal government was exceeding its constitutional authority and breaching the terms of the British North America Act which made education the exclusive prerogative of the provinces. Now, when the federal Government says to the provinces, "We are sharply defining our role and are confining it to the education and training of adults for which we will pay 100 per cent of the costs to the provinces," some of the provinces are claiming that they were betrayed. Obviously, they cannot have it both ways. Under this bill the provinces will do the training, and the federal Government will reimburse them 100 per cent for every man and woman they train. I particularly want to underline "women" because the provision applies to them equally.

In addition, so that no individual and no province will be inconvenienced, the federal Government, under Part II of this act, makes provision for transitional agreements under which individuals presently enrolled, whose courses were not completed by March 31, 1967, would be enabled to complete those courses. In the main, this will be over by June 30, 1967.

In addition, under Section 20 of Part II there is provision for a continuation of the capital grants formerly made to the provinces under the Technical Vocational Training and Assistance Act.

I want to supplement this with some general information to round out the picture.

Since 1961 the federal Government has been sharing in the provincial costs of technical and vocational training through a number of programs under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. These contributions assisted the provinces with operating and capital costs of technical and vocational training at the secondary, post-secondary and adult levels.

For some time it has been apparent that a major breakthrough is badly needed in adult training. The majority of the funds contributed by the federal Government to date have been used in secondary and post-secondary areas. Relatively little has been spent on training, retraining and upgrading adult workers.

In 1965, under the old program, the federal Government contributed 90 per cent of the training allowances which the provinces paid to unemployed workers. It also paid 75 per cent of the provincial costs of providing that training.

One of the major difficulties in training adults was the very low level of the allowances. They ranged from $10 per week to $55 per week, with a majority clustered near the bottom. In addition, they were, in large part, paid by the workers themselves; they contributed their unemployment insurance benefits towards their allowances. Too often, training was regarded as a useful way of keeping the unemployed busy.

The 1965 Training Allowances Act set the minimum allowance at $35 per week and the maximum at $90, depending of family circumstances and living costs. The federal Government agreed to pay the provinces the first $35 and to contribute 90 per cent of the remainder.

The act also broke the connection between the adult training and the unemployment insurance system. Any adult who receives a training allowance has all his unemployment insurance benefit rights preserved.

Here I want to interject something else that is rather interesting, and which may cause us some difficulty in Canada. If you analyze the weekly earnings across Canada, you will find that in Prince Edward Island last year they were $62; in Quebec they were $106; in Ontario and Alberta—and I am speaking from memory—they were about $112.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Does that include men and women?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Yes. In the Province of British Columbia the weekly earnings were $117. There is a tremendous discrepancy when you find that the average earnings of people at one end of the country being almost half those at the other end.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Does this average include men and women?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Yes. That is my understanding.

The new Adult Occupational Training Program will even more completely sever the historic association between training and unemployment. Any eligible adult, whether employed, unemployed or working for himself, can be referred to training by a Canada Manpower Centre if the training will increase his income, employability, or contribution to the economy.

This will not be a shared-cost program. It will be a federal program carried out with the co-operation of the provinces. The Canada Manpower Centres will select the adults to be trained and pay for their training—usually in provincial centres, but also in industry.

The allowance limits, and the protection of the worker's unemployment insurance benefits, will remain the same. But now the federal Government will pay the whole allowance, and will pay it directly to any trainee who has taken on adult economic responsibilities. Ordinarily, a person must have been working or seeking work for the past three years, but a person with dependents can qualify if he has been out of school for just one year.

Adults who lack these economic responsibilities—and this is important to remember—will nevertheless get free training if they are one year past school leaving age and have either been out of school for a year or are in apprenticeship or other employment involving part-time training.

The training will normally be provided in courses of one year or less operated by the provincial or municipal government. The federal Government will not run schools, but it will pay the provinces 100 per cent of the costs of running the courses, and will pay rent for the necessary buildings and equipment.

When arrangements are made with a firm to train its workers, the program will pay the costs of running the course, including reimbursement of the wages the company pays workers while they are learning. The program will normally apply only to "classroom" training in industry, the kind that very few firms are able to finance. But when workers' jobs are threatened by technological change, even "on-the-job" training will be available to help them adapt.

Besides paying living allowances and "buying" the necessary training services from the province, the program will help the provinces to acquire the necessary buildings and equipment. This will be done by lending them money for adult training facilities. They can take up to thirty years to repay, and the federal Government, by "renting" the facilities for adult use, will pay for their construction. In effect, adult training facilities will cost provincial taxpayers nothing, and the province will have the free building after thirty years.

The Adult Occupational Training Program is the federal Government's recognition of its responsibility for matters affecting the existing labour force—employment, productivity and economic growth. Because this is a federal responsibility, the Government of Canada will pay 100 per cent of the costs. At the same time, however, the federal Government will terminate its activities in the field of education at the secondary level which is, constitutionally, solely the responsibility of the provinces.

The token federal contribution to the operating costs of provincial vocational high schools, and federal sharing in the cost of educating continuing secondary level students in provincial trade schools ended on April 1, 1967. But the very substantial capital grants to the provinces for building secondary, post-secondary, and adult technical and vocational training facilities will be phased out only gradually. The grants will continue at a 75 per cent cost-sharing rate, until each province has received $480 for every person in its 1961 youth population; that is, the youth population between 14 and 19. A further $320 per person will be available on a 50 per cent sharing rate. The provinces have already received nearly $600 million of these grants, and they will receive a further $550 million. Funds will be available for exactly the same purposes as before, but there will now be no time limit on their use.

The federal contribution on account of the provincial cost of post-secondary education is being consolidated and considerably expanded. In place of grants of about $50 million in the fiscal year 1965-66 for universities and post-secondary technical and vocational training, the federal Government will next year pay to the provinces well over $300 million.

This increase in the contribution on account of post-secondary education is many times larger than the former grants for provincial trade and vocational high schools. Although the contribution will be calculated as 50 per cent of the provincial post-secondary operating expenditures, or the equivalent national per capita figure, it will be given as an unconditional transfer of a portion of the federal income and corporation taxes. The provinces may spend the money in any way they choose, but the amount will escalate with the expected rapid rise in post-secondary spending.

I indicated at the beginning of my remarks that this bill contains three parts. Part I, in sections 3 to 6, defines various specific terms in the act. "Adult" and "adult eligible for a training allowance," and so on, are defined. This part also defines eligibility in terms of the length of time out of school, and the length of time away from work, and so on.

Sections 7 to 9 deal with training allowances. I referred to these earlier as being $35 per week, and up to a maximum of $90 per week.

Section 10 makes provision for research. In a rapidly changing society it is vitally important that funds be made available for exploring new methods, new techniques, and new equipment. This is one of the valuable sections of the bill.

Section 11 provides for loans to the provinces, and these I referred to earlier. The provinces can obtain money for constructing additional buildings and purchasing additional equipment, and pay it back over a period of 30 years. In the meantime, as a result of renting the facilities to the federal Government, they can actually obtain a free building at the end of 30 years.

Section 12 deals with the regulations under which the occupational training of adults is administered today.

Part II makes provisions with respect to unemployment insurance benefits, and the relationship of unemployment insurance benefits to grants made under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. A person receiving a grant under that act cannot receive a payment under the Unemployment Insurance Act, but provision is made to extend the time in which benefits may be payable so that he is not the loser.

Part III deals with transitional agreements. It makes provision for the protection of those individuals who were taking a course of training which was not completed at the expiry of the old agreement on March 31, 1965. It provides also, as I said before, for those who will likely terminate their training program by June 30, 1967, but even then there is provision for their continuing beyond that date. Secondly, it makes provision for extending the agreements with the provinces so that they may continue providing the facilities.

Honourable senators, I do not know that I need go into this any further. If there are any questions I shall do my best to answer them. The three parts of the bill are as I have outlined them, and its main points are those that I made in my introductory statement.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, as appears on the surface, we have heard a complete run-down of the bill from Senator Cameron. There is not much of what has been presented officially by the Government as to the intention, and the effect, both present and future, of this measure, that he has left out. What he did leave out, however, are the things about this bill that have been said by others, and what the sponsors of the bill in the other place have not said about it, and which, to the best of my knowledge have not been explained to the satisfaction of those most vitally concerned, namely, the provinces who are expected to provide the facilities for the carrying out of the intention of the bill.

I was interested to hear Senator Cameron say at the very beginning of his remarks that he was inclined to compliment the minister on the fact that he had not drawn a distinction between training and education. I am pleased to know that that is the impression of Senator Cameron, because it is interesting to note that it is the very opposite of the general impression that has gone abroad. In support of that statement I should like to quote—and I had not intended to do this—from an article on this subject which appeared in the Globe and Mail on April 22 last. It is entitled "The Retraining Row," and one paragraph reads:

> But the crisis—

That is, the crisis created by the manner in which this bill has already been implemented.

> But the crisis lies deep, going back to Mr. Marchand's oft-repeated notion that training and education are distinctly separate.

That called for an answer from the Deputy Minister of Education for Ontario, Dr. J. R. McCarthy, who said: "This is unacceptable to any knowledgeable educator in Canada today." Mr. W. G. Davis, the Minister of Education for Ontario, said: "The more I think about it, the more artificial I think the division is." Yet, that division is the basis of the whole concept of the bill.

I am glad to discover that the sponsor of the bill in this house, the honourable Senator Cameron, finds himself in complete disagreement with the justification for the bill as stated by the Government. I am not surprised at that, because confusion and chaos have been created by this bill. The Government has been warned, but the Government has refused to do anything about it.

If honourable senators doubt my word on that may I say that there is plenty of evidence—and it is admitted by the Government—that letters have been received from at least three provincial premiers pleading with the Government not to introduce this bill in this form at this time. The words "chaos and confusion" have been used in relation to those communications. We find instead of co-operative federalism in the approach to this legislation, the introduction of the sledge-hammer, and in a manner unprecedented, I believe, in the history of the Parliament of Canada.

I refer, of course, to the fact that there is not the least necessity for this chamber to discuss or pass this bill. What we do here in that connection will have no effect whatsoever on the bringing into effect of the provisions of this bill. The fact of the matter is that the regulations under this act were passed by order in council on April 1, and proclaimed in words identical to those contained in the bill, and this bill is now in effect completely.

The manpower managers of the federal Government are now in these training centres. They are up there—this will surprise you and perhaps justify my earlier suggestion that this has caused chaos and confusion —with blank cheque books. I have been told this, and I have investigated it personally. At one centre in Toronto, one of these federal employees, operating under the authority of this bill that we are now asked to pass, but which has not yet been passed, had to turn to his partner and say: "I am all out of blank cheques." These are blank cheques of the Government of Canada in the hands of people who are operating under the authority of a bill which we in this chamber are now asked to pass. That is why I say we are dealing with a completely unprecedented situation.

Some honourable senators apparently are not aware of this, judging by the looks of surprise on their faces. But the evidence is all there. You may say to me, there must have been some attempt at justification. Of course there was. The attempt is described in the article to which I have referred:

> By employing tricky legislative footwork, Mr. Marchand wiggled through an order in council that permitted him to put into effect on April 1 the regulations of the act-to-be.
>
> That the act isn't yet law (it is slated for second reading on Tuesday) makes little difference. On the question of living allowances, the act and the regulations of the order in council are worded identically.

"Worded identically," and it is more than that.

> The behind-the-scenes struggle over them is one of the most astonishing chapters in federal-provincial affairs.

That is the background of the bill that we are now asked to enact into law. It is interesting, of course, that in the bill there is the usual clause by which we will now pretend —I use the word "pretend" advisedly—we will go through the farce of granting to the Governor in Council the authority to make regulations under this act. Those regulations, as I stated before, were put into effect on April 1 by order in council and are now being used around the country by operators of the federal Government.

I wonder what we are doing here? I wonder why we are wasting our time? I am sure that senators who have been here longer than I will begin to wonder if we are not faced in this act with a completely new way of legislating. If this is legal, if it is constitutional, it can be repeated ad infinitum, and it means that at any time the Government can bring in a bill and ask Parliament in that bill for the right to make regulations by order in council. It can then casually put a statement of the amount it needs to carry out those regulations in the Estimates. Then as soon as interim supply is granted it can say, "We have the complete authority to do what sometime later we will ask Parliament to grant"—in this case one month later.

On occasion I have objected to the haste with which we passed interim supply. It has been said to me that I should not worry about it because interim supply is merely a grant of one-twelfth, or perhaps two-twelfths, and it is just pro forma, and I have been asked why I want it referred to the Finance Committee. The best reason in the world is that the only justification for this unconstitutional act by the Government is that we passed interim supply in March without looking at it. So did the House of Commons. It bases this whole unconstitutional action on the fiction of the passing of interim supply; and that is what we are doing.

Hon. Mr. Farris: If it is unconstitutional it will not have any effect.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Certainly coming from one of the most eminent of the constitutional lawyers in Canada that is interesting. I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I am not in a position to say whether it will be challenged or whether the whole action of the Government in this is illegal. I used the word "unconstitutional" in the broad sense, that is to say it is against the traditions of Parliament, against the customs and usages of the Constitution. Whether it is strictly against the law I do not know, nor do I know whether the writer in the Globe and Mail is correct in saying that by "employing tricky legislative footwork," the Government and the minister have been able to bypass Parliament. I do not know which it is, but certainly from my scant knowledge of constitutional law, in terms of the traditions and usages which, as I understand it, are in a sense part of the constitution, this is away beyond the pale. It has never been done before. Why has it been done? Well, one of the things this legislation does is to apply the guillotine to an act which has been in effect since 1961, namely, the Vocational, and Technical Training Act, which incidentally was introduced originally by the Honourable Michael Starr. Over the years that act has been responsible for the building of eight hundred schools, and it has given additional education to some 300,000 students. Now it has suddenly terminated. The Government said it does not want this act any more for reasons of its own, and that it is going to be replaced with another act.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think it expired, did it not?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Of course, an act of Parliament never runs out until it is terminated or replaced.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I asked the question because I am not sure, but I think it had a date of expiration, which was March 31 of this year.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Yes, it did.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I stand subject to correction on that. It may have had a date of expiration, and that is a very interesting point which I was going to mention later. Perhaps the act itself did have a terminal date. Certainly the agreements under the act were not renewed. It commenced in 1961, and it is now 1967. One of the big complaints of the provinces, of course, was that they were committed to this. It was assumed that this would be a long-term program, and the physical commitments under this act amounted to $1,200,000,000 federally and provincially. They had to assume that this act was going to carry on, and they based their programming on that assumption. All of a sudden the federal Government said, "No, we are going to terminate this and we are going to offer you a new act."

I am told that the federal Government is now offering the provinces a nine-month agreement under this act, an act under which, if they are going to co-operate in it, will cost them millions of dollars. Senator Cameron told us that they will get some of it back, but they will not recover all of it by any means. I heard through the grapevine in the corridors that some provinces, if not all of them, are going to refuse to sign. I hope they do, for this is a preposterous thing.

An honourable senator asked, "What is the guillotine?" The guillotine came down, but came down slowly but effectively. There was a federal-provincial conference at which the purport of this bill was presented. It made a great deal of sense and it was felt that if it was put into effect sensibly it would do a great deal of good. I am not objecting in any way to the concept of it, but I am objecting to the way in which it has been introduced, the way it has been implemented, and the way the federal Government has given a complete denial to the principle of co-operative federalism. This is not a case of stubbornness on the part of the provinces. It is not merely a case, as some of the federal authorities have indicated, of civil servants in the provinces being hard to get along with. Eight of the ten provinces have objected to this. There are letters—which so far the Government has refused to table—from at least three premiers, perhaps from more, begging the Government to hold this up. The phrases used are: "This will create chaos and confusion," and "this takes us headlong over the brink."

Anyone with any awareness of what is going on in the attempt being made to implement this bill before we pass it will thoroughly agree with me on that point.

Honourable senators, there are many other aspects of this bill I would like to discuss now, but my colleague, Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) will speak on some of the other points.

Although I have not seen the public statements, in my investigations I have found—and perhaps the sponsor of the bill will correct me if I am wrong—that the net cost to the Government of Ontario, to take but one government, of this precipitate action, will be $100 million.

I will not go into the details, but my information is that, far from all this being an example of wonderful largesse by the federal Government, the net cost—I make that statement in the hope that it will be thoroughly investigated, and corrected if necessary—to Ontario alone will be $100 million that they would not have had to spend in the education field if this bill had not been implemented, as it has been, before being passed.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Perhaps Senator Fournier would not mind if I rise at this stage.

First of all, the bill before us now certainly enlarges the opportunities for adult training. With that objective everyone agrees. This is bound to cost more, not only to the federal Government but to the provincial governments. However, the approach generally by the federal Government to the provinces, for the implementation for the proposed program, will be one of co-operation and of help in the laudable objective of improving the skills, the facilities and the capacities of our people, as the result of the automative process which is constantly escalating.

I feel sure those agreements will be worked out. Contrary to what Senator Grosart has said, I hope that all of the provinces will take advantage of the newer and better conditions which this bill provides.

Honourable senators, I wish we had time to go into committee on this, to have officials before us, so that Senator Grosart and others could get detailed information. However, there may be an opportunity on a later occasion for that purpose.

Senator Grosart has made a valid criticism in respect of the regulations, although I cannot agree with everything he has said. The adult training program heretofore in existence actually expired, I am informed, on March 31.

In the main Estimates of 1967-68, dealing with the Department of Manpower, there was spelled out in some detail, when one-twelfth supply of this estimate was granted in the interim supply for April, that the department was empowered to draw up regulations under this item. That is legislation. Such a procedure, technically, is legal. But frankly, I agree with Senator Grosart that this type of procedure is undesirable.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Would the honourable senator agree with me in the broader sense that it is unconstitutional?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, I do not think that is a good word. It is undesirable; but if it is legal it is constitutional. There is no question about this.

Rather than have this gap, and in anticipation of the larger and better provisions for the adult training of the people, Parliament did give that approval. Frankly, I did not look at that detail at the time the interim supply bill was passed; but it was discussed in the House of Commons, and they knew and realized what they were doing at the time. It enabled the administrative side to continue with the work.

As I say, I do not like legislation being passed by means of items in the Estimates. We have had that debated here time and time again; and we have had it before our Finance Committee and we know it is not a good practice.

There was an emergency on this occasion and, rather than disrupt the manpower adult training program, this device was adopted. It was admitted in the House of Commons that it was a device. They had the authority of the law officers of the Crown—which the Government must accept—that this was a proper legal course to follow, regardless of how unsatisfactory it may be, and is, from a parliamentary point of view. It would be much more desirable to have this kind of legislation before us, and thereafter make the regulations. I make no apology for the present practice. The fact of the matter is that time ran out and some device had to be adopted and this was the only device available.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Would the honourable senator agree that expediency is the usual excuse for breach of the democratic process?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, I think we have to make government work.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have the honour to express my views on Bill C-278, an act respecting the occupational training of adults. Senator Cameron has given a fine description of the bill. I have known him for a long time but I would imagine that in the education picture university educators and trade training and vocational educators do not always share the same views. Although we aim at the same purpose we have different ways of doing things and we are dealing with different types of problems.

I thank Senator Grosart for his kind remarks, and also the Leader of the Government, both of whom have discussed many of the points which I wished to deal with in my speech.

Honourable senators, I do not think this bill is all wrong, but I have some reservations, most of which have been mentioned already by Senator Grosart and by other critics of the bill.

As this is a completely new approach in vocational education, I believe that in order to understand the bill it is desirable to portray a bit of the history of vocational trade training. I may mention first some of the difficulties of the trade training we had some years ago. In 1925, at the age of 17, I found myself out of school with a Grade 10 education and two years of vocational training, which included motor mechanics, electricity, carpentry and draughting. There is no need to say that the training was elementary.

My ambition was to become a full-fledged motor mechanic and welder. The nearest training school in those trades was 250 miles from home. This was the situation faced by many hundreds of boys like myself at that time, with no money and no training facilities within reach. There was but one solution, to pack up your ambition and to work at anything you could find—to earn any further training. One had to keep struggling, and it was eleven years later that it became possible for me to set foot in a training school at Halifax, 600 miles from home.

Honourable senators, throughout all that time, from 1925 to 1936, there were many disappointments and many rough roads. I mention this in order to draw a comparison between those early days and the facilities and opportunities at the disposition of our youth today. There is no problem today for young men or women who may wish to take training. It is at their doorstep, within the reach of any one. The distances have been eliminated. The financial problems have been resolved. Assistance by provincial and federal governments, in many instances, is substantial and above the need of the trainee. Courses are given without exorbitant fees. What a change this is!

Let us now see what was done. Much was done but the process was slow. Vocational schools were recognized as the dumping ground for academic failures. This was a very serious problem. I can remember very well one time I had a boy who came into my class, but after a week of attendance the principal came in, asked him what he was doing there, and said, "You are too smart to take vocational training. You should go back to Grade 11, because your marks were good." That was not the ambition of the boy, but it was the feeling of the principal that the boy was too good to take vocational training. The trouble is that if you are going to train anybody, he really must have basic education.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear. You are right.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): So the results were not too good sometimes, and if the academic people wondered why we could not train anybody, the reason was that we could not get results with failures from Grade 5, Grade 6 and Grade 7. How could they expect us to produce results with this type of boy? That was one of the problems.

However, I am making my story short. In 1919 an act was introduced by the Government called the Technical Educations Act of 1919. In that act they defined technical education, yet in the definition there is nothing about promoting technical education. They mention promoting industry and the mechanical trades, and to increase the earning capacity, efficiency and productive power of those employed therein, and they mention $10 million from the federal Government spread over a period of 10 years.

In 1931 there was another act for the promotion of vocational education in Canada. The act was to increase the expenses from the original act to $750,000 per year for a period of 15 years. That would include assistance to land and buildings, tools and equipment. However, very little was said about training.

The act of 1919 dealt mostly with enlargement of financing, and the bill had, for effect, to earmark $4,500,000 additional to assist training programs already in existence over a period of four years by adding an extra $1,500,000 per year above any amount already allotted under the Technical Educations Act.

In 1942 a Vocational Training Co-ordination Act was passed. In that act, "vocational training" means:

> Any form of instruction the purpose of which is to fit any person for gainful employment or to increase his skill or efficiency therein, and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, includes instruction to fit any person for employment in agriculture, forestry, mining, fishing, construction, manufacturing, commerce or in any other primary or secondary industry in Canada.

I find Section 3 very interesting, because at that time we were in a war situation. Under section 3, subsection (a) we find that the act is to provide vocational training to:

> Fit persons for employment for any purpose contributing to the efficient prosecution of the war whether in industry or in the armed forces.

Honourable senators, in 1940 we found ourselves fighting a merciless war to defend our liberty. It was a mechanized war of machine against machine manned by human beings. Unfortunately, at that time human beings were easier to replace than equipment, and in many cases equipment was saved at the sacrifice of human life.

At that time our allied authority turned to Canada for equipment: small arms, artillery, tanks, trucks, airplanes, and so on. Factories were being built everywhere. Young boys were leaving school and women were leaving their homes. Employment boomed and every human hand was employed and production was expected and badly needed.

Technical and vocational training schools were opened across the country. I will not go into the type of training because we have not got the time.

Honourable senators, I wish to bring to your attention who is to be trained and what we are to find in Canada. We find jacks-of-all-trades, and this is what we were referred to by many people overseas. The fact was that Canadians could build homes from the ground up to the roof, including doing the carpentry, the heating, the electrical work and the plumbing. We were jacks-of-all-trades. On the farms we made our own equipment, built our own barns and sheds and did our own painting, put in our own plumbing and made our own water systems.

Overnight the older boys became mechanics. They were not so much able to repair things as they were able to go out into the scrap yards and buy used cars, change the parts and put the cars back on the road. That was showing a great deal of efficiency.

Yes, we could do anything, but we lacked precision instruments. We could fit part "A" with part "B", providing that part "A" and part "B" were available to us. That was the problem. The production program which was introduced then was to build a lot of equipment, guns and airplanes with parts coming from all over Canada. Parts came from Halifax, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, and elsewhere. We had then to send them to a central shop to be put together. That was the problem; none of them would fit because we had not the part "A" to fit the part "B" at our disposal.

We did not know how to read blueprints. We did not know how to use precision instruments such as surveyors' gauges, and so on, vernier scales and micrometers. All these things needed skills we did not possess.

For the first two years of this production, all we did was to build tremendous scrap piles. I remember going to visit a factory in Montreal which had a contract to make artillery guns. They had lines of guns already made, but they could not make the breach block because each one of them was ruined by the final filing because the man doing it did not have the right touch. It had to be filed down to one-thousandth of an inch, and our tradesmen, or most of them, had no idea how small one-thousandth of an inch was. The result was that these breach blocks could not be filed by men. So we turned around and trained a group of women. They were trained to use instruments, precision instruments, surface plates, dial gauges and things of the sort, and finally they were successful, using the women to do the final filing to fit those breach blocks.

I did find out, and I am not the only one, that we encountered fewer difficulties in training young boys and young women who had never done any work before, because this was a completely new field for them. It was easier to train that type of person to be a success than it was to train a motor mechanic or a jack-of-all-trades who would not believe in this new equipment but thought he could do it all as he did it in the past, with the result that nothing he did was acceptable.

Thus we found that our vocational and technical institutions could not cope with the situation, and a special program had to be set up to meet the demand and so the Dominion Commonwealth Scheme was established. Qualified instructors were brought from various countries to Canada to train Canadians to operate this training program. I am proud to say I was one of the first to be trained by that group. Then, as the program expanded, we had our turn to teach and to train other men.

Once the war was over Canada was among the leading industrialist countries in the world. Our war training had served its purpose, but it did not meet the requirements of peacetime. Many school buildings and equipment were available, and many cities took advantage of that, but soon we found out that the cost of operating such schools was prohibitive. Furthermore, the equipment was obsolete and the most modern equipment was needed.

To make a long story short, assistance was needed from a central authority. However, we struggled along and employment was quite favourable. Anyone who wanted to work could do so. But more techniques and skills were required with every passing day, and it was becoming more and more difficult for industries to follow the technical evolution, what with electronic and nuclear fission fields opening up. There were different lines of progress which we simply could not follow.

The war training program made a great contribution in raising the standard of our labour force and of tradesmen who really wanted to learn something and to better their future. But it was a different situation for a large group of young men and women. Many young men who had left school to accept trade training through the Commonwealth Training Program, who had had no occupation of any kind between the time they left school and their training period, which provided them with jobs of anywhere from $60 to $100 or $125 per week, found much difficulty in adjusting themselves to peacetime work at a much lower salary and where experience and ability were of major importance. Jobs were scarce and competition was high. Many young men and women were spoiled by this training and by this war emergency pay. They were also spoiled by the easy money and the easy occupation they had had. They felt that that was the way of life, and many were never able to readjust themselves. They could not adapt themselves to this new after-war occupation.

Industries were also the victim of those circumstances. A market was just not there, production had to be reduced, and salaries had to be readjusted to meet the conditions. Then in 1960 we had the act to which Senator Cameron referred, the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. As a result of this legislation more than $\frac{1}{2}$ billion was spent by governments, both federal and provincial, to build new schools, to buy equipment, to train teachers and technicians, all under the regulations. Supervision and administration came under each respective provinical Government, and progress was being made.

One of the major problems those training institutes had to face was the selection of the candidates to be trained. This is still a problem. First, to be trained as a technician you must have a good basis of academic education as well as mechanical ability. Above all you must have the ambition to learn a trade, to better your position, and just not attend a school to draw remuneration, as has been the case on many occasions. I know of one place in one province where our premier has sometimes the ability to blow a publicity balloon. In 1963 he was embarking on a training program which was new in the area. But he put through this program in the way we are getting into this one without the proper knowledge and without the proper survey. The result was—I am going to make this very short because I want to mention an example—that everyone went in for vocational training. Everybody was going to get a trade and a very fine job and raise the standard of living of the people in that particular province. I know of one place not very far away from my own home where two schools got into operation under the scheme, and they were sponsored, and I hate to say this, by the church. In one place the church hall was rented. It was not long before that school was pretty well filled up. Nobody had any intention to increase his education. He left his job because there was a little remuneration, something like $25 a week with approximately $3 for transportation. The school was filled, and then one day somebody had to make a report to the department about what was going on. The inspectors arrived and it turned out that the school was running a barn dance, and that half the students were drunk on moonshine they were making from their own distillery. That is the way it was operated.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well, that is a form of adult training.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): As a result the school was closed. I mention these things because I hope this new program, while operated by the federal Government, will have a staff of knowledgeable, experienced people all over Canada. These people can bring somebody in and ask him as to whether he can qualify for this or that. I am afraid I can see a weakness developing there. I think that part should have been left to the provinces, because they have the persons qualified to enable the scheme to be embarked on gradually over a period of years.

I am of the opinion that it is very sad to find in this bill that a young boy will have to be a member of the labour force for three years before he can qualify for training. This to me is the worst feature of the bill. Where will a boy of 16, 17 or 18 work in the labour force for three years without prior training? This is completely against logic and the trend of today. On the one hand we say to our young men "In order to find a suitable position in this world you must have training, you must take a trade, you must improve your skill." On the other hand we say "Boys, you cannot take trade training, you cannot learn a trade until you have worked in the labour force for three years."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Sixteen is the school-leaving age, and I think that is one of the reasons for that provision.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): That is a problem, but it is not possible for a lot of people ever to reach Grade 12 or get an academic education, because they have not got what it takes. But they must have some ability to become a skilled mechanic in some trade. This young boy of 16, 17 or 18 years, if he has three years to wait to get a job—and it is almost impossible to find a job today whereas in my day it was always possible to get a pick and shovel and go out and dig a hole—he will get a girlfriend, marry her and raise a family and get an allowance. There are many people doing that.

There is another problem. What do you suppose a young married man with a few children and not too much ambition to improve his knowledge will do when this bill comes into effect? Naturally he will call at the manpower office and apply for a trade, with the best story in the world—and they are experts at that—knowing that under this new act he can almost double his salary. Who will be there to orient him, to question his ability, and so on? Then he is accepted and lives with his family at the taxpayers' expense for the next 12 months. At the end of this allotted time—and I am not saying training because there will be a big difference between the allotted time and the training period—he is placed in an industry. In 30 days he proves that he has not the qualifications or the skill to carry on at that capacity. What will he do next? He will go back to the manpower office and he will say with tears in his eyes, "I am sorry. I took the wrong course, so I am applying for another course." And so he goes on for another 12 months at the taxpayers' expense.

I have noticed from the discussion which has taken place that many people seem to think that a man needs three or four trades to live today. Those are exceptions. Those who need three or four trades to live today do so because they have not become qualified in any one trade. A man who has one trade, a plumber, a mechanic, an electrician, whatever you like, and is qualified in that and becomes expert in it, can live. It is not necessary to qualify in three or four. He may be out of work for a month or two because of seasonal unemployment, but then he has his unemployment insurance to take care of that situation. If he works for nine or ten months, he can make up with the overtime for what he has lost, and there are no problems. I think we are spending too much time on the question that everybody has to have five or six trades to make a living. We should emphasize that these boys should spend some money and specialize in one trade and become expert in that. Then there will be no difficulties.

Last winter the federal Government passed Bill 186, which I was pleased to see enacted. I remember that when the bill was introduced we were told that it was to take care of some of the deficiencies in our system whereby some students were not paid whilst attending schools while others were. This bill has not covered that situation. I have read this bill many times, and its purpose was good. Anyone receiving training would receive some remuneration, but unfortunately in practice it has not worked out that way. I do not know what happened or where the loopholes are, but in some places in several classes there are boys of 16, 17 and 18 years who are getting nothing—not a penny; while in other clauses, say in the age group of 25 to 30, some are getting as much as $75. These boys who get over $35, what are they doing with their money? I have investigated. At night they drink beer, play guitars and borrow cars, and they are having one hell of a time at the Government's expense. They are receiving too much money, and I think we should control the amount they receive. Boys should have enough money to pay for their board, $22 to $25 a week, plus a few dollars for living expenses. But we should not pay them $40 to $45 extra to play guitars and drink beer.

So, this bill has not served the purpose for which it was enacted, and I would like to know why. I have inquired, and I have been told it is Ottawa, and that Ottawa can make the regulations. In the meantime, the courses are going on and boys are not getting anything.

Honourable senators, I am very thankful for the attention you have given me. I have cut out many pages from my speech for good reason, but I want to leave you with one thought. We think in vocational education that every child in Canada, from the mentally retarded to the intellectual, is entitled to the best education he can receive to suit his ability. Problems are not common with the intellectual, but rather with those who are not so fortunate. In the vocational schools it is our aim that if we can train a boy to become nothing but a street sweeper, we will devote two years to making him a darned good one. This attitude and understanding applies to all trades.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, I do not want to make a speech at this late hour, but I listened with interest to the discussion on this bill. The speech of the honourable senator opposite, who has been an educationalist, was most interesting. I rose to speak because of one or two points.

The first is that it was said here that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Honourable Mr. Marchand, stated that there was a difference between training and education. Someone objected to that. I agree with Mr. Marchand. Through education a man knows things, and through training he can do things. You need the man who can do things and you need the man who knows things, and the two should work well together.

I have been interested in manufacturing in the marine industry in Nova Scotia for over sixty years, and during that period I have dealt with a good many men. In the old days we had the apprentice who usually took three years to learn his trade, and during that time he was not paid very much. I remember in those days I was offered a job in a bank at $75 a year, and when I objected they said, "We cannot train a man and pay him at the same time."

I know that in the town of Lunenburg, before rubber boots were made, they had leather boots. An apprentice learned to make them in the wintertime, and in the summertime his boss sent him to Labrador with the fishermen, and paid him. That money paid for his training as a boot maker.

I think this bill results from progress. We now pay for this training out of our own pockets. We send men away to technical schools or they may take correspondence courses. We pay a portion and the government pays a portion. We have to do it, or we cannot survive. We live in a competitive industry, and if our men are unable to do the things that come before them, in this day and age, with the rapid changes that are occurring, we are lost. It costs us thousands of dollars a year now, and so I am very satisfied with this bill.

I was interested in the remarks of my honourable friend, Senator Grosart, on the constitutionality of the bill. I am not worried about that. I am worried about whether we have the law to enable us to do the job. I have been in politics a long time. I remember when the old age pension bill was introduced in Canada. I think it was Mr. Bennett who brought it in, and someone said it was unconstitutional. Then we had to take it to the Privy Council in order to have the constitutional question determined. My thought is that if this bill is unconstitutional, we had better stop giving the provinces all this money to spend in order that we can carry on. Politically, it is a bad thing because we give this money to the provinces and they gain control of it and take advantage of it. Political patronage is a nice thing, and they get credit for what the dominion Government gives them. The voters are only beginning to find out about this. If you deduct what they get for gasoline and liquor from their treasury, about 88 per cent of the money comes from Ottawa, but no one seems to think the government in Ottawa should get any credit for it.

I do not want to talk about that at the present time, but I want to say it is a late hour to be talking about the constitutionality of this bill. We have been doing this for many years, and I think we are going to continue to. Now we are getting down to tackling technical education, and I am very proud of this fact.

I recall when I was a member of the Council of Public Construction of Nova Scotia, and we were going to get a new superintendent of education. He was a boy from the province who had been down in the United States. He came up and made a speech in the school for the blind, and I went to hear him because I was a member, without portfolio, of the provincial government at that time. I was a young fellow and a friend of the premier, and he always told me to attend these things. Well, the speaker defined education as the power to survive. He said that the dinosaur was a big, powerful animal but it had disappeared, whereas the flea was still with us because it knew how to survive. I thought that was pretty funny at the time, but I think that he was right. A nation whose people are not educated will not survive. You know that, and you know this is happening in the world. In the Province of Nova Scotia we need technical education because we are short of technically-trained men. A man in my plant, having little education, can leave me and go into the fishing industry, where some are making a large yearly income. I know men in my plant who have passed through technical college in Nova Scotia and who have been to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They have a Master's degree. When they come home they say to me, "John, why do we have to work for so little, while other men with little education are making as much as you do in the Senate?" I reply that the working man is coming into his own because the world has discovered that you need men who can do things. We learned the laws of gravity and motion years ago, but the Russians were the first to put these theories into practice and put their Sputnik into space.

It seems to me a man lives in his house and sits down to dinner, and if the lights go out he must send for a technical man. If his furnace goes wrong, he sends for a technical man. If a ship comes in and we have not the technical crew to do the job on the ship, or the machinery, then we are in a bad way.

That is the way industry is today. It needs men who can do things. It must pay for merit. What I object to in respect of the labour unions, although I have never had any serious trouble with them in 60 years, is that they ask for impossible things. We are in conference now, and they say that they want the pay of the workers on the Pacific coast, or of those in Halifax, and I have to point out to them that we are a rural industry. They telephoned this morning and asked me if I thought we could give five more percentage points for merit. That seems to be better than having a 5 per cent increase across the board. Having an increase across the board is no good, because a man who cannot do the job is not much good to you anyway. Industry must have men who can do things.

What we need today is production, and more production. We can get production only when the workers and the managers know what they are doing. When they work together industry can be very successful.

I remember that one time I employed a young mechanic who had an aptitude for electricity. He was a good radio man. That was in the rum-running days, and this young fellow was the telegrapher who spread the news around. He was caught and put in the penitentiary for two years. When he came back he was the best electrician I ever had. It is my opinion that they do a splendid job of educating people. However, industry must have men with aptitudes. Before we employ a man today we are very careful to investigate his habits, and make sure that his ideas are sound.

As I have said, I live in a town in which the people are pretty sound, and we have to pay for this virtue. We get all the money back if they succeed in their studies and apprenticeship. But some of them do not succeed, and that costs money. This bill is timely because I think that in Nova Scotia we have tended to emphasize the training of men in the intellectual professions, who do not stay in the province after their graduation. The have too much education, and their field is small.

I know shipbuilders in Nova Scotia today who can hardly write their names, but they build splendid ships. I can take as an example a man like Henry Ford. He had little education, but he had great aptitude. There are examples in the electrical and railroad companies of the world in which you will find that one man who is at the top now invented a certain thing, and another man invented something else, and from that they carried on to other things.

In our fisheries the men work on shares. A man has to prove himself at a very young age. Last week a crew was out for ten days and made $700, and that is pretty good. The herring fishery is becoming so good that an income of $5,000 or $6,000 per year does not mean too much.

It seems to me that in education in Nova Scotia too much stress has been placed on the intellectual professions, but the man we need is the man who works and produces. For that reason I think that technical education is what Nova Scotia wants. Technical education is needed too in Newfoundland and, in fact all over the Maritime provinces. We must have people who can do things because our population is not large, and the other provinces of Canada are our biggest competitors. The only advantage we have is that of tide-water, and we have to do the best we can with it. That is why we hear in Halifax complaints about ice-breaking on the St. Lawrence. But, it is my opinion that progress cannot be stopped, and it will be extremely difficult to stop ice-breaking on the St. Lawrence. We must show what we have ourselves, and if we do that we will get along famously.

This bill will do a great deal of good. It will give courage to the men who have not much education. I do not know just how an adult is going to be defined. An adult seems to be a person who has left school. Students in Nova Scotia can go to Grade 12, but most of them do not get that far. They do not finish school, and thus cause much of our trouble.

It has been my experience in politics that when we receive a bill from the House of Commons we read it and seem to understand it. Then along come the regulations and the orders in council, and they tie people's hands; they do not seem to do what the act is intended to do. In the interests of the objectives of this bill we must be careful to see that people can understand it, and that it is not curtailed by orders in council passed afterwards.

Honourable senators, I apologize for taking up so much of your time, but this subject is interesting to me. In my opinion, this measure is a step forward. It is what we need, and I am pleased to see that young people now are being paid for becoming apprentices. If we follow and amplify what Joey Smallwood did in Newfoundland, we will give them some education also free of charge.

I support the bill, and commend it highly.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I shall not keep you very much longer, but I do want a little information. I should like to put a question to the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Cameron) and I would appreciate very much his answering it.

First, however, I want to congratulate my colleague from the Province of New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Fournier, Madawaska-Restigouche) on his excellent and interesting speech. Senator Fournier has made a great contribution to vocational education in New Brunswick. In fact, he was our outstanding exponent of vocational education, and it owes a great deal to him.

I have received a letter from the director of a very important institution in New Brunswick, the Maritime Forest Ranger School. He is greatly concerned about how this legislation is going to affect him. He points out that under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act the school received a great deal of aid, making it possible for the school to double its capacity and to enrol more students. He states:

> Planning is started on a program, in conjunction with the Forest Extention Service, to train custom cutting crews who could carry out proper harvesting operations for woodlot owners who cannot do the work themselves.

Of course, in planning that program he figured he was going to continue to receive this technical training assistance. He is greatly concerned as to whether he is now going to get it, or whether this bill is going to cause him to change his plans.

I can say to the Senate that the Maritime Forest Ranger School, as any honourable senator from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—because many of the pupils come from Nova Scotia—knows, is doing a marvellous job for our youth. If the honourable sponsor of the bill is able to assure me on this matter, I would appreciate it very much.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must warn honourable senators that if Senator Cameron speaks now, other than by way of answering a question, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, as I understand the definitions in this bill, my answer to Senator Burchill's question is that it can be used to meet the needs for trained manpower in any aspect of industry. If there is a need for trained forest rangers in New Brunswick. Nova Scotia, or anywhere else, and there are people who need training in that work, then they would qualify under this legislation. That is the way I interpret it.

Now, you put your finger on one of the reasons for some of the confusion about this act. Under the old act the provincial governments were able to set up their program as they saw fit, and they have been almost a law unto themselves in this respect. One of the criticisms that has been made under the old act is that sometimes training programs were provided for which there were no jobs for the trainees when they got through. The trend under Bill C-278 is completely reversed. If there is a need for any trained person in any particular industry, he may go to the Manpower Services and qualify under this act. That is my understanding. So forest rangers would qualify if there is a demonstrable need.

I now come to Senator Grosart's question and his emphasis on the division between training and education. He has certainly put his finger on one of the areas in which I am sure the minister himself is not entirely happy. I know from personal experience that a great many educators are not happy with this almost exaggerated division between education and training. I like the hard, practical definition by Senator Kinley, that education is the knowledge of things, and training is how to do them. That is a commonsense definition. But in this particular instance the artificial distinction between education and training is a distinction that is forced upon the minister and upon the Government of Canada by the people who have for years been raising the constitutional issue every time the federal Government made some contribution to education. I hope the time will come when we can do away with this distinction, but at the moment, as I understand it, this is a way of meeting the need by separating two aspects of the total program of education which have a very direct relationship.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) answered the constitutional aspects of this question raised by Senator Grosart on the regulations, and I need not develop that, except for one aspect. Senator Grosart is as aware as anyone else of the situation which was brought about which made this so-called "slippery footwork" necessary. He is quite aware that the expectation was that this bill would have come early in March and be dealt with before the end of March and there would be no need to carry on this program by an order in council instituting the regulations. I say to Senator Grosart that if the Government had not put those regulations into effect by order in council, thousands of men and women under this program would have been thrown out of their programs on April 1. Not only that, but they would have had their allowances, their subsistences withdrawn, and they would have been in a pretty desperate situation today.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I ask the honourable senator a question? He has said that if these regulations had not been put into force people would have been thrown out of the technical and vocational training plan. May I ask him if there is any relationship whatsoever between the other act and this bill?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Only that this bill replaces the other act and makes provision for continuity in a more effective form.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: But does this bill not deny that training or exclude from it at least two-thirds of the people to whom training was available? And I might add that that is a provincial minister's statement.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I do not agree with the statement, and I have great respect for the minister. What I ask Senator Grosart is this: What would you have done under the circumstances if on April 1 people training under this program had to stop their training and if their allowances had been discontinued? What position would we be in today?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: In answer to that, I would say that the obvious thing to do was merely to extend the terminal date of the old act, which could have been done very simply.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What do you mean by "simply"?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I say that the people who would have been thrown out, the young people, are not reinstated in any way; they are specifically excluded from the benefits of this act.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: What my friend says is correct. Legislation could have been brought in to extend the act, but the majority of the Members of Parliament thought that the replacement by this act would be better, or they would not have passed it. There is provision for the young people to go on to take these training courses, but without allowances. In other words, they can get free training under this program, just the same as anyone else can.

Regarding the provincial commitments to carry on the building program they had envisaged and extended over the years, and which my friend now suggests would be cut off, the federal Government will loan the provinces under this transitional program the money for new buildings and equipment and new training, and the loan can be repaid over a period of 30 years. The loan can be earned or repaid by the fee the provinces will collect from the federal Government. It is a pretty good deal, because the kind of buildings erected today should be good for 50 or 60 years, or longer, and will be good for at least 30 years after the loan has been paid off.

Senator Grosart also said that 8 of the 10 provinces had refused to sign the agreements. He may have information I do not possess.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am sorry, but I must rise on a question of privilege. I am quite sure I did not say that 8 of the 10 provinces have refused. I have no information that any province has refused, and if I gave that impression I regret it.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I am very sorry if I misunderstood, but I understood my friend to say that. I understood him to say that he had authoritative information that 8 of the 10 provinces had refused. I do not think that is correct.

Now, with regard to the Province of Ontario, Senator Grosart mentioned a figure of $100 million which could be the added cost to the province of the coming into effect of this act. I suggest that neither Senator Grosart nor any official of the provincial department of education in Ontario can say, as of this moment in time, that a change in this legislation is going to cost the Province of Ontario $100 million. I suggest that that statement is on a par with some others which appeared in some of the newspapers. May I say also that I too have a copy of the Globe and Mail for Saturday April 22, before me. In it is an article entitled:

> The Retraining Row
> Queen's Park points a finger at Ottawa
> ...and Ottawa points a finger right back...

But the statement is not made on the basis of that article that 7,000 people be thrown out of this program. The most authoritative figure I can get is that it is somewhere nearer 2,000; so there has been a very loose use of figures in connection with the effect of this program. All I am prepared to say is that no one at this time can accurately say that it will cost the Province of Ontario $100 million more as a result of changes in this act.

May I turn to Senator Fournier and his valuable description of Canada's slow and painful evolution from an agrarian economy to an industrial economy. That has been characterized by a very difficult evolution. Fortunately, I think we are gradually becoming a little more professional in our technical and vocational training today. Senator Fournier made an interesting and useful contribution to this debate. He was quite right when he said that much of the success of the program will depend on the quality of the manpower counselling officers. I could not agree more. This program will stand or fall on the quality of the men who are doing the consulting and doing the counselling. My plea to the Government and to the minister and his officials would be to make sure that they get thoroughly qualified officers to act in a consulting and counselling capacity.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): The word I was looking for was "counselling."

Hon. Mr. Cameron: This is the most important part of it. The right counselling is vitally important.

I was somewhat perturbed about Senator Fournier's threat as to what is going to happen to the population, when he said that the only way for the young fellow of 17 to qualify for a retraining program grant was to get married, start raising a family, and then qualify for an allowance. I hope this dire necessity will not come about.

I do not agree with the senator when he says that the person who must be trained three or four times in his life is in need of that training because he was not trained right in the first place. He used the illustration of the electrician and the plumber. We will always need electricians and plumbers, if we can afford to pay them. However, there are many skills and some industries which are completely disappearing. In other words, there is no substitute for them. There are people on jobs in the motor industry in Oshawa and Windsor, and places like that, whose jobs are disappearing because they are being mechanized out of existence. That is the kind of person who may have to be trained three or four times.

Senator Fournier also, with his Acadian practicability and his kindly sense of humour, put his finger on one of the dangers in this kind of legislation, one which is inherent in any kind of welfare legislation. I do not like to use the word welfare in connection with this legislation, but it can be classed in the category of one which has a potentiality for abuse. This is something we must guard against in unemployment insurance, hospital insurance and in this particular bill.

Again, it comes back to the kind of men administering it.

Senator Fournier spoke of the minister. Some people like myself have sat on the Joint Committee on Manpower and Immigration. You have read the White Paper which the minister brought in and you know what we did to it in the committee and what the delegation who came before the committee did to it. The White Paper today is only a shadow of its former self, but the minister was completely reasonable in his acceptance of the amendments and changes, which he agreed were sound. I am sure that, if there are difficult points in this legislation, as there undoubtedly will be, we will find the minister and his staff just as reasonable in modifying the regulations as he was in the case of the Manpower and Immigration White Paper.

Honourable senators, I certainly commend this bill to your concurrence.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-280, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a short bill and the explanation will be short also. Its purpose is to terminate, effective March 31 last, the tax period to which the special 5 per cent refundable tax on business profits applies; and also to terminate, on the same date, the period of collections of the tax from corporations.

Bill C-216, which was given Royal Assent in July of last year, imposed a 5 per cent refundable tax on business profits. The tax period was from May 1, 1966, to October 31, 1967, 18 months. The minimum period, before repayment was to start, was 18 months from May 1, 1966, and the maximum period was 36 months.

The purpose of this tax was to immobilize and divert a portion of the flow of funds which was going into the capital expenditures incurred by business, and basically to attempt to curtail the inflationary pressures which were building up at the time the budget was made last year.

The present amendment reduces the tax period by six months. This is done by substituting the words "March 31, 1967" for the words "October 31, 1967," where they appear in the present law.

Honourable senators, there is no change in the proposal for the repayment of the tax. The law continues to provide that the tax will be refunded, with interest at 5 per cent, at such time as the Governor General may prescribe by order in council; that this time shall not be less than 18 months or more than 36 months after the date on which the instalment is due, or the date on which the payment was made, whichever is the later.

The last three months of 1966 and the early months of this year have seen some moderation in the rate of increase in the demands on Canadian economy. There have been signs of acceleration in economic activity. The Government last month extended the application of the deferred capital cost allowances because of this fact. The present amendment of the Income Tax Act is a complementary measure. Both of these measures, it is hoped, will enable businesses in Canada to proceed with plans for capital expenditures at more normal rates than might otherwise have been undertaken.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, the attitude of this side of the house in regard to Bill C-280 can be described in one word, and that word is "Bravo!"

My colleagues on this side of the house support this bill wholeheartedly. I would remind you that we opposed this tax unanimously when it was imposed 11 months ago. We are delighted to know now that the Government has repented of what it did at that time.

As we all know, repentance is good for the soul; and perhaps the present Government needs something good for the soul, in regard to its financial achievement, or lack of achievement, during the last fiscal year; indeed, during the last several fiscal years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You mean, it has a soul?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The achievements have been pretty good.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Milton described true repentance as "the golden key that opens the palace of eternity." I certainly am not hoping or expecting that the present Government will be in power for eternity; anything but that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It seems like eternity.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I intended to make a few more extended remarks, but if I let myself go in regard to the financial policy and actions of the present Government in recent months, or recent years for that matter, it would be quite some time before I could conclude my remarks. Consequently, in order to be brief—and I would not do this but in order to be brief—I will quote from Senate Hansard of July 13, 1966. I know I should be too modest to quote my own remarks, but again I do this simply to save time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You could not find any better remarks to quote.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: And this evening time is of the essence.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are too modest.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: At any rate, we had some harsh words on this side in regard to this subject matter last year. On page 952 of the Hansard, July 13, 1966, I said:

> In my opinion the most vicious of the income tax amendments is the one which compels businesses, indeed forces them, to make a loan to the Government of 5 per cent of their cash profits. This is dictatorial in the extreme. Think of it! Loans by business enforced by the Government. People in this country have always recognized the right and privilege and power of governments to tax, but I suggest it is something entirely new and unheard of that in peacetime the Government of this country should compel companies and businesses to lend it money. I would add much more to what I have just said in this regard were it not for the fact that Senator McCutcheon has already indicated the purposelessness and the uselessness of a thing of this kind.

Now, in the light of those remarks, and also the remarks made by Senator McCutcheon along the same line, regarding the imposition of this tax, you can quite understand the pleasure we have on this side in supporting this bill, which eliminates this tax, even though refundable.

One other thing I wish to say is that the bill does not go far enough. I would like to see a refund made immediately of the amount that was collected under this tax. That amount has been approximately $18 million a month, and the total that has accrued to the Government under the tax exceeds $200 million. That amount should have been refunded at the present time, and not as provided in the original bill, namely over a period of time extending from 18 months, from the beginning of the imposition of the tax, to 36 months thereafter. However, that was not done and we would like to have seen it done.

Then in regard to the original imposition of the tax, there was also a deferral of depreciation allowances which presumably still continue.

I think the deferrals of these allowances should also have been done away with in this bill, but they were not.

However, thank heaven for small mercies! I am sure the bill is part of a process to repeal the mistake that was made by the Minister of Finance a year ago, and consequently we on this side support the bill most heartily.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am glad of your repentance.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave, I move third reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1967

SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of Bill C-293, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

He said: Honourable senators, you will recall that just before the Easter recess we passed the first appropriation act for the year 1967-68, an act which is known as Appropriation No. 3 and which provided for the several charges and expenses of the Public Service for one month ending April 30 instant.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We apparently have no copies of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I believe copies of the financial statements are now being distributed, senator.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: May I interrupt the honourable senator for a moment? Are copies of the bill available? I am not referring to this statement which has just been distributed.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I believe copies of the bill are also being distributed. The bill we have before us is known as Appropriation Bill No. 4, 1967, and it provides for a total sum of $1,034,689,911.16. It represents generally two-twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1968, as laid before the House of Commons at the present session of Parliament, except Loans, Investments and Advances. Vote L40, for which no proportion is granted hereby, will provide necessary requirements for the Public Service for two months up to June 30, 1967.

There are also in the bill 16 specific votes which are listed in Schedules A, B, C, D, in respect of which an additional proportion is being required and for which I might give some brief explanation later.

The form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills, and honourable senators will note that in no instance the total amount of any item is being released by this bill. This is, of course, one of the reasons why I do not intend to go into too many details in my presentation. There is also another good reason: on Wednesday last, April 26, the Standing Committee on Finance met under the chairmanship of Senator Leonard. At that time Dr. Davidson and his assistant, Mr. Glashan, were the witnesses. The committee dealt precisely with the over-all study of the 1967-68 Estimates, although I must admit that we did not deal specifically with the bill we have now in front of us. Honourable senators will agree, I think, that this was not possible at the time owing to the fact that the bill had not yet been passed in the House of Commons. But at the end of that meeting of the committee it was made clear that any specific questions and any further information about this appropriation bill or any specific vote for which we are asking a greater proportion than two-twelfths, can be dealt with at the next meeting of the Finance Committee.

Having said that, I might refer you to the financial statement which has been distributed. On the page before the last, which is intituled "Estimates 1967-68," you will notice that the main Estimates for 1967-68 amount to $10.1 billion. This will reach $11.5 billion with the addition of the payments from the Old Age Security Fund. From the main Estimates of $5.9 billion which have to be voted, since the first appropriation bill we passed amounted to $583.6 million, it leaves today a total to be voted of $5.4 billion, and if the bill before us passes, the balance to be voted will amount to $4.3 billion.

If honourable senators would now refer to page 3 of the bill, Schedule A, I shall give as briefly as I can a few words of explanation covering the votes for which we are seeking larger proportions than the general proportion of two-twelfths. In Schedule A, Vote 5, additional proportions are required to enable the Public Service Commission to proceed with the purchase of homes and furnishings—these homes are to be ready for occupancy by July 1, 1967—and the equipping and furnishing of two language schools in Ottawa and Montreal. It is also to provide for the purchase of some 23 homes in Quebec and Toronto, the furnishing of these homes, and the equipping and furnishing of four language schools required under the bilingual and bicultural program.

Turning now to page 4, Schedule B, Vote 18, which deals with the Privy Council office, we find here that additional proportions are requested to cover the cost of 21 of the 60 state visits planned during Expo, plus the costs incurred in connection with the visits of Her Majesty the Queen and Princess Alexandra. These expenses must be met during May and June.

On page 5, Schedule C, Vote 35 in connection with the External Aid office, an additional proportion is requested for shipment of wheat, flour and other foodstuffs to India and Pakistan. This amounts to a total of $62 million out of the $75 million included in the main Estimates. This will be required by the end of June.

The second vote on page 5 of the bill is Vote 15 which deals with Industry. This provides for the payment of capital subsidies by the Canadian Government for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in Canada. The subsidy is 25 per cent of the cost of commercial and fishing vessels, and 50 per cent for fishing trawlers. Progress payments on the vessels now under construction will require subsidy payments totalling $10 million during May and June, or a total of four-twelfths of the vote.

The third item on page 5, Schedule C, is Vote L25 for Energy, Mines and Resources. Here additional proportions are required to meet expected commitments to June 30. The provinces have advised the federal Government that they will need more than half the vote before the end of June. The requirements at this time total $12.4 million, and they will be distributed as follows: Newfoundland $7 million, Nova Scotia $3.5 million, and New Brunswick $1.9 million.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Only $1.9 million for New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: This is the proportion needed by the province before June 30. I must take it for granted here that the Province of New Brunswick does not need more than that before that date.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They are using hydro power.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: On page 6, under Energy, Mines and Resources in Vote 35, an additional proportion is requested for two reasons. One reason is that expenses are higher in the months when survey parties are in the field. This vote has to do with geological surveys, and the former Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, Senator Benidickson, is more aware than I am of what is involved in this item. The second reason is that almost three-fourths of the payment for aeromagnetic surveys amounting to $700,000 out of $1 million is payable in advance in accordance with the terms of the contract with these services.

The second item on page 6, Vote 20, deals with Fisheries; an additional proportion is requested here to enable the board to pay out the major portion of the grants for research. The board proposes to pay $312,160 out of the $400,000 provided in the Budget as grants during the next two months to various universities. It is customary to pay these grants once the awards have been made by the universities grants committee, which met last month.

The third item on page 6, Schedule D, Vote 15, Forestry and Rural Development, also calls for a greater proportion, and the reason is that field research generally is carried on during the summer months, and expenditures are therefore running at more than one-twelfth per month.

The fourth item is Vote 1 under the heading Justice. An additional proportion is required here for two reasons: to enable the department to cover the cost of the administration of justice in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, pending recovery from the territories, and to meet the expenses associated with the setting up of district offices in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver to handle problems encountered by the Department of National Revenue.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Where do you read that?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: On page 6.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I cannot find it.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, if you would be kind enough to look at page 6, under the heading "Justice," this is Vote No. 1, where an amount of $3.9 million is being asked for. I am just giving a few details for this vote and the other votes I am mentioning, because we need more than the proportion of two-twelfths.

On the same page, page 6, under the heading, "Legislation. The Senate," Vote No. 5, General Administration, this vote provides for the administration expenses of the office of the Clerk of the Senate. An additional proportion is required as the expenditure exceeds the one-twelfth per month while the Senate is in session. A similar explanation applies to vote No. 20, at the bottom of page 6.

On page 7, Schedule D, Vote No. 1, National Gallery of Canada, this vote provides for the operating expenses of the National Gallery and a payment of $750,000 to the National Gallery Purchase Account. An additional proportion is required to cover the cost of a painting by Rembrandt at a price of $362,000, which is more than one-half of the amount of $750,000 included in the Estimates for such purposes.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Are these paintings now the property of the National Gallery or the Canadian Government?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I would think they would be the property of the Government of Canada and, of course, the responsibility of the National Gallery.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I do not want to make any extended remarks at this time—perhaps at some stage we will have the time to go into it. I visit the National gallery quite often, and sometimes I see things that are exposed in this million-dollar marble building that are not fit to display anywhere—old pieces of scrap metal, the weldings on which are so poor they would never pass Grade I in the schools, and yet some have tried to make me believe this is a piece of art. Someone is nuts; maybe it is me. Perhaps sometime that could be explained.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: This would be a matter that could be brought up at the next meeting of the Finance Committee. I think it would be most interesting to have the experts present from whom we could get the relevant information. If I have any advice to give to my honourable friend it is that it would be an excellent idea if he could get in touch with the chairman of the committee when we sit the week after next, and I think maybe senators would be interested in this particular topic.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Are we not going to sit next week?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: No.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Has that been officially announced?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Not yet.

Hon. Mr. Farris: How can a senator from Vancouver find out what is going on here?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: It will only be a matter of minutes before I am through.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: With respect to the honourable senator's announcement about a Rembrandt portrait, is the $362,000 the total cost of the Rembrandt, or is it a fraction of the cost?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I mentioned $362,000, which is more than one-half of the amount of $750,000 included in the Estimates for such purposes.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: We can deal with this in our subsequent inquiries in the Finance Committee in ten days' time.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Yes, we could then have the right figures, the purpose, and so forth.

Under "Secretary of State, Centennial Commission" Vote No. 35, an additional proportion is required to cover the hiring of professional staff and the bulk of the direct advertising costs connected with the publicizing of the Centennial which are incurred early in the year. Vote No. 40 is for a similar purpose. Additional proportions are required as the bulk of the expenditure for the operating costs of the train and caravans will occur during the spring and summer.

Vote No. 15, the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, page 7, provides for the administration of the bureau and for its advertising and promotion programs to attract visitors to Canada. An additional proportion is required to meet the cost of the special centennial advertising program, and costs of other travel promotion advertising programs which must be carried out and paid for in the early part of the year.

As far as the last item is concerned, the 1967 World Exhibition, vote No. 29, on page 7 of the bill, an additional proportion is required to meet the costs of preparation for the World Exhibition, the operating expenses for the first two months of Expo, and to make advance payments to performers who will be appearing in the special events planned.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Outside of your statement, what proof do we have of these facts?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I was just about to say, honourable senators, that it would be of great interest to all honourable senators to go into the details of this item which concerns the 1967 World Exhibition—

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not only talking about that one item, but about all of them. I cannot find any proof of what you say.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: This is precisely—

Hon. Mr. Farris: I cannot find any proof of these requirements, except your statement.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I have made the statements and given the general figures applying to each item. After all, this is only a proportion of all the items mentioned in the Blue Book. I mentioned at the beginning of my presentation that we are requesting two-twelfths of all the items in the Blue Book. For some 16 or 17 specific items I have given a few details, because we have to pay an additional proportion before June 30.

At the next meeting of the Finance Committee we can discuss the details of any of these items. At the meeting of the committee on April 26 last it was agreed that at the next meeting—of course, it was not possible to mention a specific date—we are going into the details of this bill with the witnesses who are able to give us the information.

I hope, honourable senators, that for the time being this will be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the honourable senator could advise the house as to Votes 15 and 29 on page 7. Are those amounts recoverable? Are these amounts in the form of a loan or an advance of expenses to Expo, and if so are they likely to be recovered?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: If I understand the matter correctly, the costs of Expo 67 are being shared by three levels of government. The federal Government has agreed to pay 50 per cent of the cost, the Province of Quebec 37½ per cent, and the city of Montreal 12½ per cent. What the revenues or the salvage value will be, of course, nobody yet knows, but the accounts will be closed at the end of the six months' operation, and it will be known then whether there is a deficit or a surplus, and at what level. I cannot answer the specific question as to whether this is an advance or a loan, but I might venture a personal opinion, although I am not an accountant, that this is in the nature of an advance.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, once again an interim supply bill has been presented in this house by Senator Deschatelets. I know I speak for all when I say that the more he performs this duty the more we admire the way in which he does it. We find him always fully informed and able to answer the questions that are raised. Those of us who are members of the Standing Committee on Finance know that he is a regular attender at its meetings, and one of the major participants in its activities.

If I understood Senator Farris correctly, he raised a question as to what evidence we have that the amounts here requested are required. Senator Deschatelets was far too modest to say that the evidence we in this house have, and upon which we must rely, is the fact that the supply bill is introduced by the honourable senator on behalf of the Government, and he has been provided by the officials with the information he gives us. We were told that at the last meeting of the Finance Committee. There is no other evidence that can be put before us than a responsible statement made on behalf of the Government that these amounts are required.

The time available for discussion of interim supply bills is always short, particularly in this chamber, and I am personally very glad to see a trend in the administration of the Senate towards having such bills referred to the Standing Committee on Finance. It is to be hoped that where possible they will be sent to that committee before they are presented in the Senate, so that the house may have the committee's reports on them. As that is not possible in this case, we do have, at least, the assurance of the honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) that this bill will be considered by the Finance Committee.

I need hardly say that I looked very carefully through the wording of the votes, by which we are asked to vote additional supply, to see if the word "regulations" occurred anywhere in them. I am pleased to say that it does not. On another occasion when we voted supply the bill contained an innocent looking item—I shall not read it, but honourable senators will take my word that it was indeed very innocent looking, and I do not believe there was a senator or a member of the place who realized its significance—to provide money in respect of regulations that were not then in existence, and which was used in the manner mentioned in the debate to the bill that was before us previously. I assure honourable senators that if there is ever a request again for a vote on the Estimates in respect of regulations to be made under an act that has not been passed, it will be opposed in both houses on the grounds that it is capable of misuse. Such a vote was misused as recently as an hour ago.

It has been suggested that we might discuss the purchases of the National Art Gallery, in respect of which there is an item in this bill. If I may speak personally I will say that I would hope we do not do that. I myself have been interested in collecting art for a good many years, but I would not like to hear a discussion in open committee as to the justification for the purchase of abstract art. I say merely that I do not understand it, but I have to accept the judgment of people who are much more knowledgeable than I that there is something in it.

In saying this I am reminded of a story that Mr. Allan Jarvis, a former director of the National Art Gallery, told on one occasion. There were two juvenile delinquents who were being chased by the police. They took shelter in a museum of modern art. They looked around at the abstract paintings on the walls, and one said to the other: "We had better get the heck out of here or we will be blamed for this too." That might be the attitude of some honourable senators were we to have a demonstration of some of the abstract art that is being purchased by the National Art Gallery. I hasten to say that I take no stand on the matter. I do not understand it, but I presume that those who do know what they are doing.

This bill, of course, is in the usual form. We are prepared, I take it, to vote the two-twelfths requested in general by the Government to meet its requirements during the next two months. I followed the reasons given by the honourable sponsor for the requests made for other than two-twelfths, and I have no comments to make on them other than those I have already made. However, I am glad to see there is an item here in Schedule C of the bill which I consider to be one of the finest acts of external aid by Canada in recent years, that is, the provision of food to meet the famine conditions in India.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say on the bill. Again, I congratulate the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) on the manner in which he introduced the bill and for the detailed information he provided.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I wish to join Senator Grosart in congratulating the sponsor of this bill.

I do not know whether it is clear on the record, and if not, it should be, that in no item in the Estimates for 1967-68 is there a final distribution of funds. Some items are for two-twelfths, and some of a larger amount. Is it correct that none are closed?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): None are closed.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I am pleased that the honourable Senator Benidickson brought that to my attention. I forgot to mention that in no instance is the total amount of any item being released.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Then I presume that at the next session we shall have every opportunity to look into any item on the Estimates.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Very good.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I am not voting on this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

Leave having been granted to return to motions:

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, May 8, at 10.30 in the morning.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, May 8 at 10.30 o'clock in the morning.

THE SENATE

Monday, May 8, 1967

The Senate met at 10.30 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate the honourable Senator Deschatelets in his capacity as Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: No doubt he will inform us of the procedure that will be followed this morning. Perhaps he could also tell us of the procedure and business for the balance of the week.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his kind words and the co-operation he has given me.

As honourable senators know, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) is attending an important Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference abroad, and he may be away for a few weeks. The main purpose of the sitting this morning is to provide me with an opportunity of giving the Senate a brief outline of the program for the week.

It is expected that we shall adjourn within a few minutes, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 10.50 for Royal Assent and prorogation at 11.00 oclock. This afternoon we shall meet at the call of the bell at approximately 3.45 for the opening of the new session and the reading of the Speech from the Throne.

We will sit at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at which time five bills will be reintroduced for first reading, namely, a bill to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act, the Interpretation bill, the National Museums bill, the Visiting Forces bill, and the Teleferry bill. As these bills have passed three readings in the Senate and have been considered by committees, I do not think there will be a lengthy discussion on any of them.

Immediately after first reading of these five bills tomorrow, the honourable Senator Desruisseaux will move the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, to be followed by the seconder, the honourable Senator Nichol. The Senate might then adjourn until Wednesday afternoon, when we could proceed with second reading of the five bills, and if sufficient time remained we might proceed with the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

On Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, the five bills I mentioned might receive third reading —although there is no cause for urgency or hurry—and we could continue with the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

I do not know whether it will be possible to arrange for a meeting of the Finance Committee on Wednesday morning. If the appropriate witnesses are on hand, a meeting will gladly be arranged, because I know that honourable senators are anxious to examine in detail the last interim bill we passed a week ago.

Unless something unexpected occurs, it is intended to adjourn on Thursday afternoon until the following Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Honourable senators, I feel that is as far as I can go. Again I wish to thank all honourable senators for their kind co-operation in order that the work of the Senate can proceed as effectively as in the past.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I am sure we all commend the honourable Acting Leader (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) for his remarks and his explanation of the proposed work.

Honourable senators, the honourable Acting Leader advises us that we will be going on with the Speech from the Throne on Wednesday. The mover and the seconder, of course, are more or less in a preferred position as far as their speaking is concerned because they will have been acquainted with the contents of the Speech from the Throne, in accordance with the usual practice.

After the speeches of the mover and the seconder, the speaker who follows is the Leader of the Opposition. I must advise the Acting Leader of the Senate that I will not be in a position to deal with the Speech from the Throne on Wednesday, having seen the text only on Tuesday evening. It would be utterly impossible to proceed on Wednesday. While I do not intend to review everything in the speech—and that would not be expected—I realize that as Leader of the Opposition I must say something on what is contained in the speech. I certainly would like to have more time to look it over and study it.

The honourable Acting Leader also speaks about continuing the debate on the Speech from the Throne on Thursday. I have spoken about my own position. I speak also for those others who have not seen the speech: they must have time to prepare. I would point out that the procedure in the opening of this session is entirely different from that of any session I have attended since I entered Parliament. I see that my honourable friend, a former Speaker and leader of the house (Honourable W. Ross Macdonald), nods. In other years the Speech from the Throne was brought down on a Thursday, as we all remember, and those who were to speak on it had Friday, Saturday—of course, none of us would work on Sunday—Monday and Tuesday, until the afternoon, to learn what was in the speech and prepare our remarks.

I am not blaming the honourable Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I think it is a fair criticism to say that the other place has shown very little regard for the Senate. We spent a lot of time on five important bills, which went from us to the House of Commons. In my opinion there was no reason why those bills could not have been considered there before the prorogation. They could have been given attention before Thursday, and we could have opened Parliament as usual on Thursday and continued in the regular way.

Honourable senators, the proposed arrangement makes it difficult for the leader here and for the rest of us. I am prepared and anxious to co-operate in every way I can, but I wish to notify the Acting Leader of the Government that I will not and cannot be prepared to go on with the debate on the Speech from the Throne on Wednesday—and if I do not go on, nobody else should.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I would like to say a word, with respect to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. He is very humble, because with his ability and experience I am sure that within 24 hours he could deliver his usual good speech.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I want to sleep some time.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: The fact that a delay of a few days might take place before he enters the debate would also help me, as I intend to follow him.

Honourable senators, I know that order of speakers can be arranged with the co-operation of the Leader of the Opposition. We will get together, and I am sure that we will find a way so that the debate can go on before we have the pleasure of hearing him.

Honourable senators, there is one point I forgot to mention. There will be a slight inconvenience for certain honourable senators because this afternoon four chairs on each side of the chamber will be removed in order to accommodate the coloured television, which takes up more space than the usual television coverage. I hope honourable senators will appreciate the situation and understand that there is nothing we can do about it. I trust that they will be able to find other chairs in the same row. I have to take responsibility for this, but there is nothing we can do about it. Naturally, their seats will be available to them tomorrow.

IMMIGRATION

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Leopold Langlois, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration, presented the third report of the committee:

> The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration makes its third report as follows:
>
> On Thursday, October 20, 1966, the following matters were referred to the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration for its consideration and report:
>
> The White Paper on Immigration tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on October 14, 1966, and tabled in the Senate on October 18, 1966, and also the reports on immigration matters made to the Government of Canada by Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., in 1964 and 1966.
>
> From November 10, 1966, to May 8, 1967, the committee held 37 meetings and heard 39 briefs from the Government of the Province of Manitoba, representatives of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, professional and businessmen's associations, labour unions, many national organizations of ethnic groups and individuals.
>
> The committee not presently having access to all the evidence adduced before it is reluctant to present a final report to both Houses.
>
> Your committee therefore recommends that it be reconstituted next session and the evidence adduced during the present session, in both French and English, be referred to it so that it will be in a position to pursue its work on this important matter, namely, Canadian immigration policy.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NINTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Maurice Bourget, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Public Service, tabled the following report:

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Public Service makes its ninth Report as follows:

On Tuesday, January 10, 1967, your committee was empowered to inquire into and report upon the matter of pensions paid to retired civil servants or their dependents under the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act. At a later date, the order of reference was widened to encompass pensions paid on account of the service of former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and of former members of the armed forces. The term retired employees in this report refers therefore to retired civil servants and retired members of the R.C.M.P. and armed forces.

A total of eight meetings was held during which the committee heard the evidence of twenty-one witnesses representing:

The Department of Finance

Treasury Board

The Department of Insurance

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police

The Department of National Defence

The Federal Superannuates National Association

The Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada

The Public Service Alliance of Canada

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police Veterans' Association

The Association of Canadian Forces Annuitants.

Your committee also received correspondence from individuals outlining various points they felt should be considered.

In its deliberations on the matter of pensions, your committee soon realized that a general solution to the problem was not an easy one. Many factors affecting the level of certain individual pensions were isolated, thereby complicating your committee's task even further.

The witnesses have indicated uniformly their concern for the position in which a large number of retired federal employees find themselves with fixed retirement pensions being progressively eroded, sometimes over a long period of years under the pressures of rising living costs.

In the committee's view, the government should do what it reasonably can to protect and preserve, or failing that, to restore in some measure the original purchasing power of the contributory pensions which, under the Public Service Superannuation Act, and similar enactments, it has provided for its retired employees.

With this consideration in mind, your committee recommends immediate action by the government, to up-date and extend the provisions of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act (1959). This Act provided at the time of its passage limited and partial pension adjustments to meet a portion of the rise in post-war living costs. It covered only those beneficiaries who had retired prior to January 1, 1953: its benefits were available only to those below a pension ceiling of $3,000 ($1,500 for widows). Helpful though it was at the time of its passage, the Pension Adjustment Act of 1959 no longer meets the minimum justifiable requirement in the case of those former employees who retired prior to January 1, 1953; and, it makes no provision whatever for employees who have retired since that date.

The committee recommends that any plan to improve the position of these retired employees should conform to the following requirements:—

(a) it should be capable of quick and early implementation in the form of legislation in the next session of this Parliament;

(b) any adjustment in pensions should not be limited to a particular date of retirement and should be in addition to any other increase already granted under the Pension Adjustment Act of 1959;

(c) it should maintain the principle contained in the present legislation that benefits should be related to length of service;

(d) it should conform to the principle that any adjustment formula should take account also of the time which has elapsed since retirement;

(e) it should take into account the increase in living costs during that period of time; and

(f) it should increase the ceilings in the 1959 Pension Adjustment Act.

The task of the committee was facilitated through the assistance rendered by the departmental representatives. In particular your Committee wishes to acknowledge the help received from Mr. H. D. Clark, Director of Pensions and Social Insurance Division Department of Finance.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Maurice Bourget
Joint Chairman

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

SIXTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. David A. Croll tabled the sixth report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

MOTION TO PRINT AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE AND MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Croll moved, with leave of the Senate, that the sixth report of the Joint Committee be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of report see Appendix, pp. 1928-49.)

ROYAL ASSENT AND PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

2nd May, 1967

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Gerald Fauteux, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber at 11.00 a.m. on Monday, the 8th May, 1967, for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills and of proroguing the First Session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gérald Fauteux, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General of Canada has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Gérald Fauteux, Puisne Judge of Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk Assistant.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

An Act to incorporate Anniversary Life Insurance Company.

An Act respecting La Société des Artisans.

An Act to incorporate Laurier Life Insurance Company.

An Act to amend the National Defence Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

An Act respecting the occupational training of adults.

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

The Honourable Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bills.

PROROGATION SPEECH

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the First Session of the Twenty-Seventh Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

During the First Session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament, which opened on January 18th, 1966, much important legislation has been enacted and many government actions of great significance have been approved.

The hearts of all Canadians were saddened during this session by the death of our distinguished and well-beloved Governor General, His Excellency General Georges P. Vanier. His selfless devotion to duty during a lifetime of public service will always be an inspiration and an example to all.

Recognizing the vital importance to Canada of effective administration of our public affairs, early in the session you approved a measure providing for an extensive reorganization affecting certain departments of the government to enable them to respond more appropriately to the needs they serve, and to facilitate closer co-ordination in various fields of government activity. You also have enacted three measures which together make provision for a complete transformation of the processes of personnel management in the Public Service of Canada. They provide for the introduction of collective bargaining and for the continuation and extension of the merit principle of appointment under an independent Public Service Commission. My Government has also announced a series of programs designed to encourage the development of bilingual skills within the Public Service of Canada.

Following an important Federal-Provincial Conference held in October, major improvements were made in the fiscal arrangements with the provincial governments. A new system of equalization payments was introduced which will enable all provincial governments to provide a reasonably comparable level of basic services. A new revenue stabilization policy will protect provinces against serious declines in total revenues. Substantial additional financial resources have also been made available to the provinces in respect of the costs of post-secondary education.

You have completed the first comprehensive review of the Bank Act in the past decade, and have approved a measure amending that Act to bring it into line with present-day needs. This statute completes the most thorough and far-reaching revision of our banking legislation that has ever been made, and will increase the degree of competition and flexibility both within the banking system and between the banks and other financial institutions, thereby improving the service available to the people of Canada. A further step in the strengthening of our financial system was the adoption of legislation to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Approval was given to the Canada-U.S. Agreement on automotive products. My Government regards this agreement as one of the most important trading arrangements ever made between Canada and the United States. It has already led to a substantial increase in production and employment in the automotive industry, and to a significant decrease in the imbalance of trade between the two countries in these products.

In recognition of the importance of science and technology to Canada's industrial and economic well-being, you approved during to increased activity in industrial research and development.

You have approved the National Transportation Act which will provide a completely new basis for an overall approach to the development of transportation in Canada. This measure defines a national transportation policy suited to modern requirements in this country and provides for the establishment of a national transportation authority to give effect to the policy. It provides for new methods of fixing freight rates and for the rationalization of branch lines. Through these and other provisions, the Act will be of major assistance to the continuing economic growth of the country.

You have enacted legislation authorizing the unification of the Canadian Armed Forces. This makes possible the completion of the reorganization begun in 1964.

You were obliged to give consideration to labour disputes of serious concern to the national interest. My Government, deeply aware of the human as well as the economic price of work stoppages, has appointed a Task Force of highly qualified persons to examine, as a matter of urgency, the many aspects of labour-management relations and to make recommendations for their improvement.

You have amended the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act so that standards prescribed in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code concerning hours of work and minimum hourly rates of pay will be applicable to Government construction contracts. You have also amended the Code to ensure that longshoremen who work for more than one employer may qualify for general holidays. The Canada Labour (Safety) Code that you have enacted constitutes Canada's first national safety code and is an important addition to the body of labour law applying to industries within federal jurisdiction.

You have adopted a measure to make crop insurance applicable to all phases of agriculture and to make the program more attractive to Canadian farmers. The establishment of the Canadian Dairy Commission represents an important milestone for Canadian agriculture. Measures were also enacted to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia, and to establish a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

Under the provisions of the Fisheries Development Act, passed during the session, fishery development activities are being intensified in co-operation with the governments of the provinces and with the fishing industry.

My Government has continued in its efforts to work for the co-ordination of measures to reduce poverty and increase security in all parts of Canada. In this connection, a measure has been passed providing for guaranteed income supplements for recipients of old age security. You have also enacted legislation introducing the Canada Assistance Plan to provide assistance to persons and families in need.

A measure of particular importance enacted during the past session was the Medical Care Act which provided for the commencement in Canada of a national Medical Care Program. This measure will make a major contribution toward the improvement of the health of the people of Canada and toward the mitigation of domestic financial crises caused by illness.

You have approved legislation authorizing the establishment of a Health Resources Fund to provide financial assistance to the provinces to aid them in research and in the training of health personnel.

You have passed legislation to encourage the occupational training of adult Canadians by the payment of training allowances and by providing for the federal purchase of training services through the facilities of the provinces and of industry.

Under the provisions of a major extension of the National Housing Act, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been authorized to insure loans made by approved lenders and make direct loans to persons who intend to purchase, improve and occupy existing housing. To assist provinces and municipalities in continuing their efforts to combat soil and water pollution, the period of forgiveness for loans made on sewage treatment projects has been extended three years to March 1970. Mortgage loans have also been made available for the provision of student housing at vocational and training schools, training hospitals and schools for special groups of handicapped people.

In order to provide young people with increased opportunities for service to the community, you have approved a measure to establish the Company of Young Canadians.

In the last Session of Parliament before the day marking the Centennial of Confederation, it was appropriate that attention should be given to some of the symbolic and non-material aspects of our nationhood. The achievement that began with the adoption of our national flag was carried forward with the approval of "O Canada" as our national anthem. My government also announced the approval by Her Majesty the Queen of the Order of Canada as a means of recognizing service of special quality and merit to our country.

Looking to another aspect of the quality of our national life, my government has established a Royal Commission to inquire into and report upon the status of women in Canada and upon the steps the government might take to ensure for women equal opportunities with men in all aspects of Canadian society.

My government has tabled a White Paper setting forth its views with regard to future broadcasting policy. This statement, together with the report of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on the subject, will provide the general background for the legislation on broadcasting which is soon to be introduced.

You have enacted a measure to provide for the establishment of a National Arts Centre, which will be the principal centennial project in the National Capital and will have beneficial effects for the performing arts in Canada. You have also passed legislation to establish the Canadian Film Development Corporation which will help to stimulate the film industry in this country.

You have approved a measure establishing rights of appeal to an independent tribunal both by persons ordered to be deported and by Canadians wishing to sponsor the admission of certain relatives to Canada. A White Paper defining the principles of immigration policy has been presented for your consideration.

Many other important items of legislation were approved in this session of Parliament which has been one of the most productive in our history. My government is conscious, however, that the need for legislative change and reform in Canada is greater today, and more constantly demanding, than at any period in our history. The accomplishments of this Session of Parliament must, therefore, be regarded less as a source of satisfaction than as an indication of the pace and scope of change that must be maintained and increased if the needs of the country are to be met.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1924.)

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

SIXTH REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

April 25, 1967

1. Introduction

Your Committee met in Ottawa on 42 occasions in the period September 28 to December 13, 1966. It tabled an Interim Report on December 20 outlining its findings based on this first series of hearings. For ease of reference, this Interim Report is included as Appendix D. It resumed public hearings on January 17, 1967 and met 17 times in Ottawa in the period up to February 16. Immediately following this, two subcommittees were established and these subcommittees began a series of public hearings in most of the major centres of Canada. Several additional meetings of your Committee were held in Ottawa after their return from their field trip.

Your Committee found that many organizations and individuals were eager to express their views on the cost of living in Canada and on many other aspects of consumer welfare. Your Committee was a forum for the expression of consumer complaints, ideas and suggestions and provided a useful means of informing the public on current economic issues. Men of business, the academic community and members of the public service gave your Committee a great deal of valuable information which has a direct bearing on public policy. The submission of this report does not mean that parliamentary concern for the well-being of consumers can now be suspended even temporarily.

Much of the attention of your Committee has been devoted to factors influencing the cost of food. To a lesser extent your Committee has concerned itself with housing. Your Committee recognizes that price changes have been very important in other fields of consumer expenditure. This is clearly indicated by the behaviour of the various components of the Consumer Price Index published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The change in the principal components is illustrated by the following index numbers (1949=100).

	Component Weights	March 1967
All-Items	100	146.5
Food	27	143.3
Housing	32	148.4
Clothing	11	130.8
Transportation	12	155.6
Health and Personal Care	7	185.2
Recreation and Reading	5	163.7
Tobacco and Alcohol	6	127.5

Your Committee is well aware of the importance of those areas which it has not investigated but its time was almost completely absorbed by issues to which it assigned a higher priority. There remain many issues affecting consumers requiring continuing investigation which can be usefully carried out by a parliamentary committee. With this in mind your Committee again recommends that it be continued as a standing committee preferably for the life of a parliament to maintain surveillance over the welfare of consumers. It is particularly important to extend the Committee's life until the forecast department of the government responsible for consumer affairs is in full operation.

Your Committee is very conscious of its debt to may people for their helpful assistance during the course of its hearings. It recognizes that the preparation of some of the information asked for from corporate witnesses was burdensome and costly and it gratefully records its appreciation of the cooperation which was universally displayed both by them and by other witnesses. The list of witnesses appearing before your Committee is shown in Appendix B and Appendix C.

Recommendation:

That a standing committee of the House of Commons and Senate be appointed, preferably for the life of a parliament, to concern itself with the problems of consumer welfare.

2. Price Trends in Canada

Your Committee heard from many sources of the social and economic advantages of relative price stability and had presented to it a variety of statistical material on price trends. It must be clearly appreciated that the problems associated with rising prices exist in other countries and also that the recent Canadian experience has been relatively favourable. The following table, showing the trend of consumer prices in 27 countries from 1958 until late 1966, indicates that Canada has not fared badly in comparison.

Change in the Cost of Living in Twenty-Seven Countries (from 1958 to November, 1966)

	Percentage Change
United States	14
Canada	16
Australia (to September, 1966)	19
Belgium	20
Greece	20
South Africa	21
Germany	22
Mexico	24
New Zealand (to third quarter, 1966)	24
Switzerland	26
United Kingdom	27
Portugal (to October, 1966)	28
Austria	29
Ireland	29
Pakistan	29
Norway	31
Italy	34
Sweden (to October, 1966)	34
France	37
Finland	43
Denmark (to October, 1966)	44
Japan	50
Israel	60
India (to October, 1966)	65
Spain (to September, 1966)	65
Turkey	77
Yugoslavia	167

Source: International Financial Statistics February 1967.

Much of the expert testimony of both academic and government economists emphasized that the increase in the cost of living which has been observed in Canada in the recent past is a complex phenomenon. There have been many influences at work and these in turn set up chain reactions which ultimately permeate the economy and have a buoyant influence on particular prices and on the price level in general. One fact to bear in mind is that the Canadian economy is strongly influenced by the prices of imported commodities which fluctuate in response to world market conditions. In other cases, there was evidence that the price of some foods had increased because of a fall in farm output attributable to lower prices in an earlier period.

While your Committee observed erratic increases in the prices of some farm commodities, it noted that farm prices are subject to a complex of market and technical influences. Farm prices have been affected by short-term cyclical movements as well as by changing agricultural technology not to mention changes in taste, weather and erratic fluctuations in world supply and demand. Your Committee found it difficult to arrive at any generalization concerning farm prices in view of the different patterns which were observed. Nor did it make any judgment on the trend of farm income in Canada, an issue which fell outside its terms of reference.

In general, it is to be expected that prices will rise in response to high levels of demand arising from larger amounts of money that people have to spend on consumption. An increase in consumer prices will in turn generate demands for higher wages which affect costs and so the whole process is a self-reinforcing one.

This complicated process is sometimes oversimplified and an attempt made to attribute a general price increase solely to some particular group such as trade unions, business, financiers, farmers, profiteers or even consumers themselves. The evidence presented to your Committee did not support any such unsophisticated view. It is instructive to note that the trend of consumer prices in Canada and the United States has exhibited a similar pattern. The table below shows the course of the Consumer Price Indexes since 1949. Although the absolute levels of these indexes differ the close correspondence in their movement is remarkable.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEXES
(1949 = 100)

	Canada	United States
1949	100	100
1952	116.5	111.5
1955	116.4	112.5
1958	125.1	121.3
1961	129.2	125.9
1962	130.7	127.0
1963	133.0	128.5
1964	135.4	130.6
1965	138.7	132.8
1966	143.9	136.6

Your Committee heard on several occasions about certain statistical investigations which had analyzed the relation between unemployment and price changes. The general conclusion seemed to be that once unemployment reached some critical level attempts to reduce it further would lead to price increases. Such statistical analyses throw interesting light on the problems of price stability but the validity of the precise relations appear to depend heavily on a number of special assumptions. Your Committee has some concern that an oversimplified version of the so-called "trade off" relationship showing the statistical relation between unemployment and price changes might foster the view that an increase in unemployment is essential if excessive price increases are to be curbed. Price stability which is achieved at the expense of increased unemployment is not an acceptable policy in the opinion of your Committee. It believes, on the contrary, that reasonable price stability and reasonably full employment levels are compatible, assuming that both the government and the public are well informed and act accordingly.

On numerous occasions, expert witnesses before your Committee stressed the importance of timing in any actions taken by the government to counteract either inflationary or deflationary trends. However, changes in fiscal policy are usually tied to federal budgets whose timing is strongly influenced by administrative considerations. Correspondence between short-run economic fluctuations and the presentation of a budget may be erratic and this raises the question whether it would be practical to introduce some additional flexibility in fiscal policy. The suggestion has been made that some discretionary authority be given to the government to modify tax rates within specified limits. Some of the discretionary features embodied in the legislation relating to the five per cent refundable tax on corporations introduced in the spring of 1966 will serve as an example. Your Committee believes that the feasibility of greater discretionary fiscal authority is worth exploring.

Recommendation:

That consideration be given to the feasibility of providing the government with greater discretionary fiscal authority.

3. The Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada

In March, 1965, the Economic Council of Canada was asked by the Government to undertake a special study of economic conditions in Canada. Specifically the Council was requested:

1. To study factors affecting price determination and the interrelation between movements in prices and costs and levels of productivity and incomes.

2. To report on their relationships to sustained economic growth and to the achievement of high levels of employment and trade and rising standards of living.

3. To review the policies and experiences of other countries in this field and their relevance to Canada.

The results of the Council's work were published in November, 1966 with the title "Prices, Productivity and Employment." It was a fortunate coincidence that this valuable and timely analysis became available to your Committee in the course of its deliberations. The Chairman of the Economic Council supplemented the published report with oral testimony to your Committee. Following this, the Senate formally referred the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada to your Committee. In consequence, many of the hearings of your Committee in the early part of 1967 were in the form of commentaries and elaborations on some of the conclusions of the Economic Council. A number of distinguished academic and other economists gave testimony on different aspects of the Economic Council's report. Since the number of witnesses was limited, it was not possible to ascertain whether there was any consensus among Canadian economists on the main conclusions of the Economic Council's report but the evidence presented to your Committee indicated that there was a substantial measure of agreement among the expert witnesses. Your Committee is aware that differences of opinion on the Economic Council's report exist among professional economists but its general conclusion was that these differences are not sufficiently important to cast doubts on the validity of the Economic Council's findings and recommendations.

A detailed assessment by your Committee of all the Economic Council's conclusions is not called for but your Committee does have some comments on a few specific topics. These are:

(a) The need for improved economic statistics;

(b) The encouragement of economic research;

(c) Public information on economic affairs.

(a) The need for improved economic statistics

Your Committee became aware, early in its hearings, of the need for reliable, comprehensive and timely statistical information in order to form a judgment on the state of the economy. These views were formed before the issuance of the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council but the following observation in the Review summarizes the conclusions of your Committee:

> Questions of high policy are decided on the basis of the presumed accuracy of our economic statistics. If the statistics are inaccurate, the policies may well be wrong. Good information is required for good decision making at all levels —business firms, governments, labour unions, and private individuals. In the light of this, it is clearly of fundamental importance to consider Canadian price measures from the standpoint of their reliability and usefulness for economic analysis and policy decisions.

In its interim report, your committee recommended "both a greater degree of interdepartmental co-ordination in the compilation of price statistics and the diversion of professional staff to expand and improve the statistical information on prices throughout the public service, and particularly in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics." Your Committee reaffirms this recommendation.

Any general and persistent increase in the price level has a profound effect on both the economic and social fabric of a country. When the rate of increase exceeds some critical level it produces unrest and inequities and may create economic problems which have a high social cost. Parts of the population may be able to adapt to rising prices but in general these will be those who have economic or market power and whose earnings increase sufficiently fast to maintain their real income. That part of the population which is disadvantaged and economically weak will usually suffer. The handicapped, the aged, the pensioners, the underemployed and the unskilled workers bear an undue share of the burden of rising prices. One major contribution which could be undertaken by the federal government would be to carry out surveys of family expenditure patterns at frequent intervals to provide some objective assessment of the impact of rising prices on the disadvantaged. While it was not your Committee's duty to enquire in detail into incomes policy, your Committee feels that one aim of such studies would be to facilitate studies of the feasibility of establishing guaranteed minimum annual incomes for all citizens.

Your Committee has also been made aware, through testimony submitted to it, of the pressing requirement for more and more factual information about social, demographic and economic trends both regionally and for Canada as a whole. It recommends that this whole area of activity within the public service be kept under continual review by the government to ensure that the necessary manpower and financial resources are available to support a vigorous and coherent program.

(b) The encouragement of economic research

Your Committee was particularly impressed by the recommendation of the Economic Council for the creation of "an independent research institute, specializing in the analysis of current economic developments..." This would be a counterpart of a number of similar agencies in other countries which have contributed so outstandingly to the understanding of economic problems. Your Committee concurs in this view concerning the need for such an agency and is also in agreement with the views of the Economic Council concerning its organization and independence.

In the opinion of your Committee, such a research institute should have four principal functions. The first would be the issuance at frequent intervals of bulletins on economic developments designed primarily for government and business. The second would be the dissemination of information to the general public. This would be intended to promote greater popular understanding of economic issues. The third would be to provide a training ground for academic and other students of economics. This visualizes the establishment of a number of internships or fellowships which would be open to graduate students, business economists or representatives of the press or other media. The fourth function would be to sponsor and stimulate research on economic problems in Canadian universities. This would be an attempt to remedy the present deficiencies in funds available for academic research in applied economics in Canada.

(c) Public information on economic affairs

Your Committee called attention in its Interim Report to the desirability of a much wider dissemination of information about the prices of consumption goods. It reiterates its views on this subject and emphasizes the importance of detailed price information if the market place is to be competitive. The extent to which the government can publicize information about individual prices is necessarily limited because of the wide variation among local markets. Consumers must follow the trend of prices in their own locality if they are to exercise rational and informed choices. Your Committee, however, believes that the newspapers and other media of public information should devote even greater attention to the presentation of factual and interpretive information about price movements in order to stimulate informed public discussion on economic affairs. The object would be not only to assist consumers in shopping more carefully, but to improve the level of public understanding of a variety of developments in the economy including trends in wages, income, interest rates and other economic indicators.

Recommendations:

a) That efforts be made to achieve a greater degree of inter-departmental coordination in the compilation of price statistics and that more professional staff be diverted to expand and improve statistical information on prices throughout the public service;

b) That the federal government should carry out surveys of family expenditure patterns at frequent intervals to provide some objective assessment of the impact of rising prices on the disadvantaged;

c) That a vigorous and coherent program of research on social, demographic and economic trends in Canada be undertaken;

d) That an independent research institute specializing in the analysis of current economic developments be established;

e) That the government, newspapers and other media devote greater attention to the dissemination of information on price movements and economic affairs.

4. Regional Committee Hearings

During the fall of 1966, it became evident from the letters and submissions to your Committee that public concern over the rising cost of living was widespread and that the problems of diverse regions could not all be dealt with during the Committee's sessions in Ottawa. For one thing, it was not practical for many groups and organizations in the provinces to travel to Ottawa to present briefs. Consequently, it was decided that sessions of your Committee should be held in a number of centres outside Ottawa. It was the opinion of your Committee that regional views might yield useful information on trends in the cost of living generally and on the costs of housing in particular.

Having received the authorization on December 20, 1966, from the Senate and House of Commons "to adjourn from place to place," your Committee scheduled public hearings in twelve cities selected primarily to represent the various regions in the country. To save time, two subcommittees were formed which covered eastern and western Canada simultaneously between February 20 and March 1. During the hearings outside Ottawa the subcommittees heard 197 witnesses who spoke on behalf of 90 groups and organizations. A list of the cities visited and the witnesses appearing before each subcommittee is given in Appendix C.

This report makes no attempt to summarize the vast amount of written and oral information presented. The written submissions of the witnesses have been printed as a part of the proceedings of your Committee (No. 39, March 21, 1967). It is the hope of your Committee that this body of testimony will be of continuing value for study and research by various government departments, and in particular by the Department of Consumer Affairs which it is hoped will be established.

The subcommittees found without exception that public interest in the cost of living was keen in every part of the country. This was demonstrated repeatedly both by the number of witnesses and spectators in attendance at the hearings and the extent of public interest in the sessions. Most impressive, however, was the degree of concern shown on the part of the witnesses. It was evident that considerable research and thought had been devoted to the written and oral testimony. In view of the very short notice that was given, most of the submissions were exceptionally well prepared. The Committee wishes to record its appreciation to all the participating individuals, groups and organizations for their valuable testimony and co-operation.

A good deal of useful information on various aspects of food costs was presented and most of it substantiated the earlier findings of your Committee. However, your Committee noted that there did not appear to be complete unanimity among Canadian consumers on specific consumer problems. The range of opinion on certain advertising and promotional practices, for example, was so wide that few conclusions could be drawn about their acceptability to the average consumer. On the other hand, the consumer was unanimous in her appeal for more informative labelling on packaged goods. There was also a widespread opinion that the proliferation of package sizes was excessive and that size standardization was needed for numerous products.

In many instances consumer groups were well aware of the previous work and findings of the Committee. Many presentations did no more than emphasize the findings and recommendations tabled in the Interim Report of December 20, 1966. It is the conclusion of your Committee that national and regional publicity given to its sessions in Ottawa had provided useful information to many consumers.

In line with a recommendation in the Interim Report, several organizations called for more and better consumer education and information services. Nearly all consumer groups expressed the view that a government body was needed to protect their interests on a continuing basis.

Both subcommittees were impressed by the high calibre of the testimony presented on the subject of housing. Treatment of this complex subject was often very thorough and extensive.

5. Department of Consumer Affairs

Your Committee has been pleased to note from statements in the House of Commons that consideration is being given by the government to the establishment of a Department of Consumer Affairs. Testimony presented to your Committee indicates that there is widespread public support for such an agency and it urges that the necessary legislative and administrative action be taken as quickly as possible.

Your Committee believes that a centralization of government responsibility for consumer problems would be beneficial to the general welfare. At the present time, inadequate recognition is given to the growing importance of consumer protection. Present responsibilities in this field are spread over several departments and the lack of a completely co-ordinated approach is evident. Consumer protection is a technical field involving legal and technical specialization and there would be great advantages in assembling in one agency the expertise necessary to deal with a wide range of consumer matters. Above all, a department would clearly assign responsibility to a minister and his staff to do all in their power to improve the lot of the Canadian consumer.

While your Committee is not in a position to make specific recommendations concerning the way in which a Department of Consumer Affairs should be organized it does suggest that the components of the department concerned with consumer affairs should have three principal functions or aims: (a) consumer standards; (b) consumer protection; (c) consumer information.

(a) Consumer standards

Great progress has been made in Canada in the development of grades and standards for consumer goods, particularly for food. Nevertheless, your Committee feels that much remains to be done in the extension of the grading system to include a much higher proportion of the items in the family budget. The development of grades often involves technical difficulties and would clearly require the co-operation of industrial or producing groups. However, your Committee is strongly of the opinion that the grades that are established should reflect the tastes and preferences of well-informed consumers. Your Committee also feels that a standard method of designating grade standards would help the consumer. The present system which makes use of numbers, colours, letters and adjectives for different commodities is confusing to the uninitiated and would be more informative if the grade designations were standardized and simplified. Standards should not apply only to specific commodities, but where feasible packaging and weights and measures should be designed to inform the consumer as fully as possible.

Although your Committee is reluctant to become involved in the technical aspects of grade labelling, it did conclude that the consumer would benefit by the establishment of standard grades at the retail level for such foods as beef, bacon and sausages. Your Committee noted the use of a stamp "Canada Approved" on certain products processed in plants inspected by the Department of Agriculture. The wording of this stamp is easily subject to misinterpretation and your Committee suggests that a different form of words would be more suitable.

(b) Consumer protection

Your Committee perceives the need for an expert group within the Department to investigate any merchandising practices which take advantage of or mislead consumers. This group should have the responsibility for looking into consumer complaints and for undertaking legal or other action to rectify legitimate grievances. One example of an area which would merit attention is Section 306 of the Criminal Code dealing with misleading advertising. Evidence before your Committee has shown that this section is used very little, in part because the Attorneys-General of the provinces are absorbed with more immediate matters, and in part because the wording of the section is open to differing interpretations. Your Committee is of the opinion that the Department of Consumer Affairs should investigate complaints and undertake specific studies of advertising practices which tend to mislead consumers so that appropriate legal or administrative action could be taken to eliminate abuses in advertising and selling practices.

(c) Consumer information

In its Interim Report, your Committee called attention to the need for additional efforts by government departments "to distribute as widely as possible attractive and informative material which will help the Canadian housewife to be a well informed and careful shopper." The formulation of an information program should be centralized in the Department of Consumer Affairs. Without disputing the value of informative and attractive pamphlets for distribution to schools, consumer groups and the general public, your Committee believes that increasing attention should be devoted to television programs of interest to consumers. The impact of information conveyed in this fashion is likely to be greater, provided the material is well-conceived and well-executed.

Your Committee was favourably impressed during its hearings in Ottawa and in other parts of the country by the valuable work being done in continuing consumer education by the Consumers' Association of Canada. This organization has been effective in sponsoring many changes beneficial to the health and pocketbook of the consumer. Its periodical publication "Canadian Consumer" (Le Consommateur) contains a great deal of useful information on consumer products. Your Committee believes that the program of product testing which the Consumers' Association of Canada has undertaken would be of great value to a much larger group of Canadian consumers. In addition to the Consumers' Association of Canada, your Committee wishes to acknowledge the vigour and initiative of other consumer organizations, both local and national, who drew attention so forcefully to the problem of rising food prices during 1966.

Your Committee heard expert testimony on the question of the control of domestic commerce through the criminal law and was impressed by the views expressed by Lord Atkin for the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Proprietary Articles Trade Association v. A.-G. for Canada, (1931) A.C. 310.

> "if Parliament genuinely determines that commercial activities which can be so described are to be suppressed in the public interest, their Lordships see no reason why Parliament should not make them crimes. 'Criminal law' means 'the criminal law in its widest sense': A.-G. for Ontario v. Hamilton Street Railway Company, (1903) A.C. 524. It certainly is not confined to what was criminal by the law of England or of any Province in 1867. The power must extend to legislation to make new crimes. Criminal law connotes only the quality of such acts or omissions as are prohibited under appropriate penal provisions by authority of the State. The criminal quality of an act cannot be discerned by intuition; nor can it be discovered by reference to any standard but one: Is the act prohibited with penal consequences?...

Despite this, your Committee feels that too much reliance has been placed on criminal law in controlling or prohibiting practices which are injurious to the welfare of consumers. The fact that federal jurisdiction for consumer welfare has depended so heavily on criminal law has made it difficult to regulate some practices which are undesirable from an economic point of view but which do not seem to be "crimes" to a layman. Your Committee believes that more reliance should be placed on the federal powers to regulate trade and commerce to impose standards of good behaviour in the marketplace. There appears to be a need for a commission or board under the aegis of the Department of Consumer Affairs which is empowered to hear public testimony and to enjoin persons from conducting business in a manner which, through misrepresentation, incorrect labelling, misleading advertising or fraudulence, is injurious to the public welfare.

Recommendations:

a) That a Department of Consumer Affairs be established to undertake the discharge of federal responsibility for consumer standards, consumer protection and consumer information;

b) That simplified and standardized methods of designating grade standards be established for the widest practical range of consumer commodities;

c) That packaging and weights and measures be designed to inform the consumer as fully as possible;

d) That the stamp "Canada Approved" on certain products be replaced by a less ambiguous designation;

e) That the Department of Consumer Affairs undertake studies of advertising practices with a view to eliminating abuses in advertising by appropriate legal or administrative action.

f) That a consumer information program be centralized in the Department of Consumer Affairs;

g) That more attention be devoted to television as a means of informing the consumer;

h) That a commission or board under the aegis of the Department of Consumer Affairs be established and empowered to hear public testimony and to enjoin persons from conducting business in a way that unfairly or adversely affects the welfare of consumers.

6. Housing

Your Committee heard testimony on the factors which were increasing the cost of housing in Canada. It was emphasized by some witnesses that the many new houses embodied changes which reflected higher quality or greater convenience. Your Committee found difficulty in distinguishing between the increased costs associated with higher quality housing and other aspects of increased costs of building houses. The attention of your Committee was directed to many elements which tended to increase the cost of residential housing including the cost of serviced land, interest rates, fluctuations in the availability of mortgage credit, higher labour rates, increased sales taxes and rising material costs.

The National Housing Act, since its inception, has undoubtedly contributed to the improvement of housing conditions in Canada. This legislation clearly recognizes the importance of good housing in the betterment of social conditions and in the creation of a satisfactory family environment. However, your Committee has concluded that the division of jurisdiction in the housing field among the municipal, provincial and federal authorities has proved a serious bar to action. This is particularly true in the field of public housing where the regional distribution of expenditures leaves much to be desired. Your Committee feels that the lack of progress in public housing in some areas of the country reflects a need for vigorous and decisive action by all levels of government. It was pointed out by the President of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that during 1966 about 60 per cent of the total federal grants of $100 million for public housing went to Ontario. This fact appears to establish a lamentable lack of geographic balance in the public housing program because of the failure of some of the provinces to take advantage of the relevant provisions of the National Housing Act. Your Committee suggests that there should be an annual federal—provincial conference on housing whose principal purpose would be to assess the housing requirements of each province in the short-term future. This would permit an up-to-date review of housing conditions and it is hoped would stimulate the appropriate levels of government to improve the effectiveness of the provisions of the National Housing Act.

In one other area your Committee is of the opinion that there is an unacceptable lack of symmetry in the National Housing Act between the treatment of new and existing housing. Recent changes in the Act concerning existing housing were referred to in testimony by the President of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation:

> The recent legislation to bring lower priced existing homes under the insured loan provisions of the National Housing Act is also part of the effort to remould our arrangements to meet the circumstances of the future. This legislation is intended to remove the inequity that existed in the past in terms of ease of access to home-ownership as between those in the lower income groups and those of higher income groups. It will, at the same time, help to bring about a more efficient use of our housing stock and add to the incentives for the better maintenance of the older part of that stock.

Your Committee's view is that the amendments to the National Housing Act providing for guaranteed loans on existing housing, introduced in 1966, was a major step forward.

However, it feels that the double-barreled requirement involving both buying and improving a property as well as the maximum guarantee of $10,000 is unsatisfactory. Your Committee is of the opinion that there should be no difference in the maximum loan between new and existing housing. Apart from this, your Committee believes that such loans should be available for the purchase or the improvement of the existing stock of housing. This proposal is made because of the recognized difficulty of adding to the amount of housing available in the short run. Any action which can be taken to use existing stocks more effectively should be encouraged.

Your Committee reached the conclusion that a significant contribution to the improvement of the quality and quantity of the housing now available could be achieved by an increase in the upper limit of home improvement loans made under Section 24 of the National Housing Act.

In its argument for greater stability in the construction industry in its Third Annual Review, the Economic Council of Canada lists two factors which have impeded successful governmental action:

> (1) An excessively short-term, intermittent, and one-way approach to the problem. A policy for stabilizing the growth of construction expenditure that manifests itself chiefly as an attempt to cut back spending in years when a boom situation and numerous pockets of excess demand have already developed is unlikely to stem the momentum greatly in the short run. Its main effect may well be deferred somewhat, involving some risk of administering a depressant to a patient that has begun to need a stimulant.
>
> (2) An excessive concentration of attention on the instability of construction spending in the private sector of the economy, as compared with that in the public sector, some of which is inherently more susceptible to stabilizing action.

The heavy impact of fiscal policy on the volume of residential construction results in fluctuations which impair the efficiency of the construction industry and lead to intermittent housing shortages. These bring with them serious economic and social problems.

Your Committee feels that there is an overwhelming need for a national housing plan based on the premise that every Canadian deserves a decent place to live in. Good intentions in this field have abounded but progress has been unsatisfactory. Local planning has, with few exceptions, been inadequate but the chief obstacle has been the lack of local or municipal financial resources. This difficulty is not likely to disappear. After hearing testimony on the subject your Committee concludes that housing has been a neglected poor relation for far too long.

The objective of a viable housing plan is not likely to be achieved so long as responsibility rests unevenly with municipal, provincial and federal authorities. To clarify the federal responsibility and to assign to housing the importance it deserves, your Committee recommends that a much higher priority be assigned to the housing problem by the federal government.

Recommendations:

> a) That there should be an annual federal-provincial conference on housing to assess the housing requirements of each province in the short-term future;
>
> b) That the maximum loans available under the National Housing Act for existing housing be no less than for new houses, and that such loans be available either for purchase or improvement;
>
> c) That the upper limit of home improvement loans under Section 24 of the National Housing Act be increased;
>
> d) That the federal government assign a higher priority to the problems of housing in Canada.

7. Concentration in the Food Processing and Distribution Industries

Monopolistic control of any significant part of food processing or distribution in Canada is inimical to the national interest. Your Committee has therefore been most eager in the course of its hearings and investigations to detect any instances of undue market power. In its Interim Report your Committee recommended:

> that a thorough assessment should be made of the organization of the food industry with the object of publicizing any monopolistic tendencies which may exist, of determining whether the market power of any group or groups is sufficient to impair the workings of a competitive market and whether there are any undue barriers to entry.

Some preliminary investigation in this field was sponsored by your Committee but it became evident that any firm conclusions would have to be based on detailed research, which could not be carried out in the time available. Your Committee agrees with the conclusions of the Economic Council of Canada in its Third Annual Review.

> It is clear that a continuous approach, to the extent that it is possible, is likely to be more effective than, say, an approach which consisted only of sporadic ripostes to those more obvious exercises of market power which readily attract public attention.

One witness in speaking before your Committee and referring to the National Commission on Food Marketing in the United States said:

> The Commission did not find a general case for opposing vertical integration and conglomeration. It did conclude, however, that the good conduct of firms of this kind would be more nearly assured if they were required to disclose to the public the financial results of their operations in each major field in which they were engaged.

Your Committee strongly espouses the doctrine of visibility in corporate affairs. It feels that many more intimate details of the way particular markets work should be exposed to the public view. The argument that the competitive position of a firm would be damaged by the revelation of information must be balanced against the possibility that its actions may be damaging to other members of the industry or to the public. As an example, your Committee feels that more information should be made public on advertising, selling and promotional expenses and the way these costs are shared by the different levels of the food industry. The precise method by which this should be done is outside the province of your Committee but it nevertheless feels that the information is essential to anyone studying the impact of market power in Canada.

In the course of dealing with the question of market power and consumer protection, the Economic Council of Canada concluded that market power could not "be assigned sole or principal responsibility for the kind of rising price phenomenon which the economy typically experiences as it moves through a business-cycle expansion." Your Committee subscribes to this conclusion but it has at the same time noticed a tendency in both Canada and the United States toward increasing concentration in the manufacture and distribution of consumer goods. Such trends are not readily assessed and it is not possible to measure the increased concentration with precision or to predict its impact on market behaviour. Your Committee feels that the question of concentration, particularly in areas affecting the consumer, should be the subject of continuous review and examination. Such an examination might well include corresponding analyses of price behaviour to determine whether there is any identifiable relation between price trends and the degree of concentration in particular areas of the economy. A judgment about the social consequences of market power does not, of course, depend solely on the course of prices but may involve many other aspects of economic behaviour which might affect the welfare of the community. For example, your Committee would be greatly concerned if increasing concentration were associated with barriers to entry or any other restrictive practices which would diminish the effectiveness of competition.

Your Committee noted that the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act reported the discontinuance of a study of concentration in the food retailing industry in Canada on March 15, 1963 (Report of the Director of Investigation and Research, Combines Investigation Act for the year ended March 31, 1963). Your Committee recommends that this study be resumed on a continuous basis and broadened to cover both food retailing and manufacturing in Canada with a particular view to examining concentration, market power and trade practices in the relations between retailers and suppliers.

Your Committee also reiterates the conclusion of its Interim Report that the differences in the disclosure requirements of public companies and private companies whose operations significantly affect the public should be abandoned.

Recommendations:

a) That the government, as a matter of policy, encourage the publication of data concerning detailed corporate operations which affect consumer welfare;

b) That the discontinued study of concentration in the food retailing industry conducted by the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act be resumed and broadened to cover both food retailing and manufacturing:

c) That the differences in the disclosure requirements of public compagnies and private companies whose operations significantly affect the public be abandoned.

8. Commodity Taxes and Tariffs

Your Committee has observed a number of instances where new or increased taxes on commodities have had the effect of increasing consumer prices. It did not undertake to explore this question in detail partly because of the anticipated release of the Report of the Royal Commission on Taxation (1966). Your Committee noted with interest and approval the comments of the Royal Commission on Taxation on the regressive characteristics of the present sales taxes and its recommendation that "necessities" and goods and services required to produce "necessities" be exempt. Low income groups which are particularly susceptible to economic damage by rising prices are also hurt by fiscal policies which rely unduly on commodity taxes.

The federal sales tax on margarine was complained of frequently by consumer groups before your Committee during its hearings across the country. Representatives of margarine manufacturers also gave testimony recording their opposition to the retention of this tax and indicated that the benefits of repeal would be completely passed on to the consumer.

The Royal Commission on Taxation (1966) referred to this question in the following terms:

> Before leaving the subject of food, mention must be made of an anomaly which does not create administrative difficulties under a manufacturer's tax but which nevertheless amounts to discrimination of such flagrant character that it cannot be ignored. Butter is exempt from sales tax, but margarine butter's direct competitor and inexpensive substitute, is taxable in nine of the ten Canadian provinces. Only Newfoundland consumers are allowed to purchase tax-exempt margarine...Hence not only is there discrimination between competing products but there is also discrimination between Canadian consumers depending on their province of residence. From a neutrality standpoint, it is imperative that both butter and margarine receive the same sales tax treatment.

Your Committee agrees with this conclusion.

Some evidence was also presented to your Committee concerning the impact of tariffs on consumer prices. The fundamental impact of tariffs is on the pattern of utilization of domestic resources and it is clear that abrupt changes in such patterns may lead to unwanted dislocations. Canadian tariff policy in recent years has been moving in the direction of reducing trade barriers and it seems obvious to your Committee that the process must be a gradual one and must also involve time-consuming international negotiations. On the other hand there are certain existing tariffs which are a burden to consumers and whose protectionist characteristics are either negligible or redundant. They provide some revenue to the federal government but, in general, the amounts are not large and the incidence may be erratic. In the opinion of your Committee, the prospective Department of Consumer Affairs should carefully study the problems associated with tariffs in this category.

Recommendations:

a) That the discriminatory tax treatment of margarine be modified;

b) That the Department of Consumer Affairs should undertake studies of tariffs on certain classes of food items which may be unduly burdensome to consumers;

9. Advertising

A considerable volume of evidence was accumulated by your Committee on the economic and other effects of commodity advertising. There is clearly a wide spectrum of opinion on the social benefits of advertising and on the impact of advertising expenditures on the cost of consumer goods. Although it does not wish to make any recommendations respecting the control of advertising expenditures, your Committee was concerned about the volume of advertising whose sole or primary purpose is to create consumer preference for a particular brand of some staple product on the basis of trivial variations. Your Committee's opinion is that an extensive program of compulsory grade labelling for established and common consumer goods would encourage some reduction in socially wasteful advertising costs.

10. Co-operatives

Since the beginning of 1967, your Committee heard testimony from a variety of representatives of co-operatives in Canada including the Co-operative Union of Canada (Ottawa), Maritime Co-operative Council (Moncton), Federated Co-operatives Ltd. (Saskatoon), Co-op Wholesale Society of British Columbia (Vancouver) and the Newfoundland Co-operative Union (St. John's). The views presented covered a wide range of issues affecting the cost of living but your Committee did not feel it appropriate to express a judgment on the actual or potential benefits to consumers to be achieved through the techniques of the co-operative movement. Your Committee did, however, conclude that federal legislation governing the incorporation of co-operatives is long overdue. This recommendation is totally unrelated to the question of the taxation of co-operatives, an issue which was outside the purview of your Committee.

Recommendations:

That federal legislation governing the incorporation of co-operatives be introduced as soon as possible.

11. Behaviour of Food Prices over the Christmas Season

Early in November, your Committee became aware of the view that food stores normally raised the prices of many foods during the Christmas rush. It announced publicly that it had enlisted the help of the Consumers' Association of Canada in conducting a survey of prices to determine whether this was so.

A list of 34 food items was drawn up and representatives of the Consumers' Association of Canada in 14 cities were asked to record the prices on November 15, December 1, December 15, December 23, 1966 and January 15, 1967. Each shopper kept a record of the prices in a particular store, often a supermarket in her locality. The cities included in the survey were: Charlottetown, Edmonton, Halifax, Hamilton, Montreal, Moose Jaw, Nanaimo, Ottawa, Quebec City, St. John's, Nfld., Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

No attempt was made to simulate a food basket which reflected the pattern of expenditure on foods and therefore no conclusions can be reached about changes in the total cost of buying food for a family over this period. However, many common types of food purchases such as bananas, bread, hamburgers, pork chops, eggs, margarine, butter, tomato juice and sugar were included along with some others which are often bought at Christmas such as cranberries, turkey, raisins and walnuts. Nationally advertised, private labels and unbranded foods were on the list.

Altogether, 71 stores were covered by the survey but in a few cases not all the stores were covered in each survey. Similarly, not all the products, particularly brand name merchandise in a particular size, were available in each store. There were therefore some gaps in the data and item by item comparisons could not always be made.

When the results of the survey were completed they were mailed to Ottawa and turned over to the International Business Machines Co. Ltd. for analysis. The analysis was carried out on an electronic computer and it was possible to summarize the results in this way. To avoid the presentation of large masses of statistics it seemed easiest to compare the total cost of an identical basket of goods in each store in successive surveys. The identical basket of goods, of course, varied between stores. The percentage change in each store from one survey to the next was calculated. This yielded the following comparisons:

Survey 1 to Survey 2 (November 16—December 1)

Survey 2 to Survey 3 (December 1—December 12)

Survey 3 to Survey 4 (December 12—December 23)

Survey 4 to Survey 5 (December 23—January 13)

An examination of the results did not provide any evidence of a trend to increased prices in the 1966 Christmas season. In fact, between December 12 and December 23, there was a preponderance of stores where prices dropped. The nature of the survey was such that precise measurements of the trend of prices were not practical but the bulk of the stores in the sample showed declines in the aggregate cost of the sample of foods beginning on December 1. On the basis of this evidence, the Committee concluded that there was a downward trend for the sample of prices in the stores covered by the survey over the 1966 Christmas season.

12. Trading Stamps and Related Issues

In accordance with the findings of its Interim Report your Committee undertook further investigations of the impact of trading stamps on consumer prices. Representatives of the Canadian Association of Stamp Companies testified before your Committee and a review of many of the studies on the subject was carried out. The findings of these studies, none of which applied specifically to Canada, indicated that prices were normally higher in stores that gave stamps compared to stores that did not. The differentials, however, were small. There is little doubt that many consumers like trading stamps but it is also true that any competitive advantage resulting from the introduction of stamps tends to decline as they come into general use. Your Committee has observed that, in the recent past, the use of trading stamps in Canada has diminished. Your Committee still believes, as it stated in its Interim Report, that the food retailing industry should adopt reasonable and fair standards in its non-price promotional activities in order to give consumers the benefits of vigorous price competition.

Recommendation:

That the food retailing industry should adopt reasonable and fair standards in its non-price promotional activities in order to give consumers the benefit of vigorous price competition.

13. The Profits of the Major Food Retail Chain Stores

In the early fall of 1966, there was widespread criticism of the major food retail chains because of rising food costs. Accusations were made that recent price increases were a result of profiteering. After hearing testimony from the principal corporate retail chains and a number of important food wholesalers your Committee decided that additional information was necessary and undertook to commission a detailed study of profit levels in the corporate food chains. This study was carried out on behalf of your Committee by Clarkson, Gordon & Co. and the results were tabled on April 11, 1967 and ordered to be printed as a part of the proceedings of the Committee.

The significant profit ratios for the food retailing operations of the five corporate chains (The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company Limited, Dominion Stores Limited, Loblaw Groceterias Co. Ltd., Canada Safeway Limited and Steinberg's Limited) are summarized in the table below.

All Chains	Sales ($ Thousands)	Profit Ratios (per cent) Profit/ Sales	Profit/ Equity	Profit/ Total Assets
1965-66	2,081,092	1.66	12.56	6.65
1964-65	1,949,437	1.60	12.30	6.75
1963-64	1,845,188	1.51	12.10	6.67
1962-63	1,703,555	1.37	11.09	6.12
1961-62	1,622,970	1.35	10.93	6.25

The computation of these ratios involved severe difficulties since the accounting systems of the chains do not readily yield such ratios for food retailing by itself. The necessary qualifications are carefully set out in the study prepared by Clarkson, Gordon & Co. The written submission and oral testimony indicated that the behaviour of profit ratios in the major food retail chains did not support the opinion that any very significant component of the rising trend of food prices during 1966 could be explained by changing profit levels in food retailing.

All which is respectfully submitted.

David A. Croll,
Joint Chairman

APPENDIX A

PROGRESS REPORT

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON CONSUMER CREDIT (PRICES)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. Introduction
2. Price Trends in Canada
3. The Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada
4. Regional Committee Hearings
5. Department of Consumer Affairs
6. Housing
7. Concentration in the Food Processing and Distribution Industries
8. Commodity Taxes and Tariffs
9. Advertising
10. Co-operatives
11. Behaviour of Food Prices over the Christmas Season
12. Trading Stamps and Related Issues
13. The Profits of the Major Food Retail Chain Stores

Appendix A: Table of Contents
Appendix B: List of Hearings and Witnesses in Ottawa
Appendix C: List of Hearings and Witnesses Outside Ottawa
Appendix D: Interim Report, December 20, 1967

APPENDIX B

List of Hearings and Witnesses in Ottawa

No. 28 January 17, 1967. Canadian Consumers Protest Association (Mrs. L. Wilson, President; Mrs. S. Hammond, National Director, Hamilton; Mrs. B. Gelinas, National Director, Montreal), Professor L. Skeoch, Department of Economics, Queen's University.

No. 29 January 19, 1967. Canadian Construction Association (Mr. M. Stein, National Vice-President-elect; Mr. S. D. C. Chutter, General Manager). Canadian Welfare Council (Mr. M. Wheeler, Director, Special Project on Housing; Dr. M. A. Malik, Associate Director, Research and Special Projects; Dr. P. Geisel, Associate Director of Research).

No. 30 January 24, 1967. Mrs. A. F. W. Plumptre, Past President, Consumers' Association of Canada.

No. 31 January 26, 1967. Mr. H. W. Hignett, President, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Dr. G. E. Brandow, Professor of Agricultural Economics, Pennsylvania State University.

No. 32 January 31, 1967. Dr. O. Thür, Department of Economics, University of Montreal. Dr. Walton Anderson, Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada.

No. 33 February 2, 1967. Co-operative Union of Canada (Dr. A. F. Laidlaw, General Secretary; Mr. R. S. Staples, President; Mr. D. F. MacDonald, Director; Mr J. MacDonald, Excutive Secretary, National Labour Co-operative Committee).

No. 34 February 7, 1967. National House Builders Association (Mr. W. G. Connelly, President; Mr. W. M. McCance, Director of Research; Mr L. C. Gunby, Chairman, Economic Research Committee). Mr. W. A. Beckett, President, W. A. Beckett Associates.

No. 35 February 9, 1967. Mr. J. A. Scollin, Criminal Law Section, Department of Justice. Dr. G. L. Reuber, Department of Economics, University of Western Ontario.

No. 36 February 14, 1967. Dr. D. Smith, Department of Economics, Queen's University. Dr. D. Slater, Department of Economics, Queen's University.

No. 37 February 16, 1967. Canadian Association of Stamp Companies (Mr. M. West, Chairman, Dr. B. Dixon, Assistant Professor, Commerce and Business Administration, McGill University).

No. 38. April 11, 1967. Clarkson, Gordon Company (Mr. Donald C. Scott, C.A., Mr. Marcel Camerand, C.A., Mr. Fred S. Mallett, C.A., Mr. John H. O'Callaghan, Senior Consultant, Woods, Gordon & Co.).

APPENDIX C

List of Hearings and Witnesses outside Ottawa.

Eastern Canada

No. 1 February 20, 1967 Halifax, N.S. Mr. C. W. McAllister, Manager, The Housing Authority of Halifax. Mr. Ralph M. Medjuck, President, Centennial Properties Ltd. Maritime Co-op Services Ltd.. Mr. W. H. McEwen and Mr. Keith Russell. Consumers' Association of Canada (Nova Scotia), Miss Theresa MacNeil. Consumers' Association of Canada (P.E.I. Branch), Mrs. P. B. Butt. Mr. Duncan McIntyre, Saint Francis Xavier University. Professor Milton Moore, Department of Economics, Dalhousie University.

No. 2 February 21, 1967 Saint John, N.B. Saint John Consumer Protest Committee; Mrs. Lola Mitton, Mrs. Margaret Roy, Mrs. Anna Hebert. Urban Renewal Commission; Mr. B. R. Doucet, Mr. Donald Buck, Redevelopment Officer, Mr. E. F. Charlton, Chairman, Saint John Housing Authority, Mr. W. M. Hazen, Manager, Saint John Housing Authority, Mr. Bernard Elliot, Shamrock Realty Ltd. Miramichi-Ease-the-Squeeze Committee; Mrs. F. Balser, Mrs. G. W. Yates. The Oromocto and Fredericton Protest Group; Mrs. E. M. Doerksen. Saint John Board of Trade; Mr. George Robinson, Mr. Wallace Trynbull, Mr. J. Watts, and Mr. G. H. Lummis.

No. 3 February 22, 1967 Montreal, Quebec. Retail Merchants Association of Canada Inc., Mr. D. W. Rolling, General Manager Consumers' Association of Canada (Quebec); Mrs. R. Brander, Provincial President, Mrs. N. W. Duck, Mrs. Pierre Lemerise, Mrs. Lucille Forget. Le Federation des Consommatrices du Quebec Inc., Mrs. Helene Meynaud, Provincial Secretary, Mrs. Georgette Grenier, Mrs. Nicole Mougeau, Mrs. Madeleine Plamondon. N. D. G. Angry Consumers; Mr. Norma Myer. Inflation Fighters of Montreal, Mrs. Veronica Morissette. Inflation Fighters of Laval, Mrs. Pat Ball. Montreal Diet Dispensary; Mrs. Agnes Higgins, Executive Director. La Ligue des Femmes du Quebec; Mme. Blanche Gelinas, Mrs. Bernadette LeBrien. East End Price Protestors; Mrs. L. A. Munday, Mrs. Veronica Morissette. Chateauguay Valley Consumers League; Mrs. J. D. Sizaire, Mrs. Ellen Harnest. Mr. Adrien Letourneau, Letourneau et Freres.

No. 4 February 23, 1967 Quebec City, P.Q. L'Association Canadienne des Consommateurs, Quebec City Section. Mrs. Lucien Farrell, Mme. Paul Demers, Mme. T. J. Lamontagne, Mme. G. Goulet. Le Federation du Quebec des Unions Regionales des Caisses Populaires Desjardins; Mr. Andre Morin, Senator C. Vaillancourt, Mr. I. Bonnier, Mr. Henri Louis Marier, Mr. John-Paul Langlois, Mr. Rene Croteau, Mr. Paul Emile Charron, Mr. Harry French. The Canadian Construction Association; Mr. Armand Trottier, Immediate Past President. Dr. Roger Dehem, Laval University. Mr. Jean-Claude Allard, Manager, Yves Germain Inc., Building Contractors.

No. 5 February 27, 1967 London, Ontario. Consumers' Association of Canada (London); Mrs. H. S. Tennant, Mrs. W. A. Shepherd, Mrs. A. Vogelsang, Mrs. J. Askew, Mrs. R.E.K. Pemberton. Catholic Family Centre; Mr. F. P. Martin, Mr. A. McEchearn, Director Family Services Bureau. ,Kitchener-Waterloo C.A.C., Mrs. B. M. Jackson, President, Mrs. K. E. MacIntosh. Consumer Protest Shoppers Association of London and District; Mrs. G. E. Ball, Mrs. Irma Reid, Mr. Andrew A. Chrisholm. Windsor C. A. C.; Mrs. Eleanor Haddow, Mrs. John Durrent, Mrs. W. H. McDowell, Mrs. W. P. Augustine. Consumer-Producer Association of Windsor; Mrs. Nelson Dearing, Mrs. Mary McCallum, Mrs. Rose Marie Warren, Mrs. Barbara Ellis, Mrs. Bernice Lasorda. Sarnia C. A. C.; Mrs. L. J. Archibald, Mrs. E. M. McAlpin. London and District Labour Council; Mr. Roland Parris, Mr. Vern Crawford, Mr. R. Sexsmith, Hamilton and District Consumers Protest Association; Mrs. Suson Hammond, Mrs. Betty Bridgewood, Mrs. Peggy Robertson, Mrs. Alice Pow.

No. 6 February 28, 1967 Toronto, Ontario. Ontario Housing Corporation; Mr. P.E.H. Brady, Mr. R.W.R. Riggs. Cadillac Development Corporation Ltd.; Mr. E.A. Diamond. Bramalea Consolidated Development Ltd.; Mr. A.F.B. Taylor, Mr. A.S. Armstrong, Mr. H.D. Smith, Mr. S. Edwards Toronto, Humber, Oakville and St. Catherines C.A.C. and C.A.C. (Ontario); Mrs. Gordon B. Armstrong, Mrs. W. Brechin, Mrs. S.B. Karim, Mrs. R.J. O'Donnell, Mrs. G.B. Barrick. Women Against Soaring Prices; Mrs. Grace Hartman, Mrs. M. Ruble, Mr. Peter Homenuck. Ontario Federation of Labour; Mr. David Archer, Mr. D.F. Hamilton, Mr. Henry Weisbach, Mr. John Eleen, Mr. J.H.Craig. The Canadian Economic Foundation; Mr. George J. Rogers, Mr. Walter Huebbischer. Edible Oil Foods Institute; Mr. T.S. Snowden, Mr. David Scott Atkinson, Mr. John Hegie. Urban Development Institute; Mr. Grant L. Duff. Corporation of the Municipality of the Borough of Scarborough; Mr. A. Kellerman, Mr. Allan Johnson, Director of Purchasing, Mr. Karl Mallette, Controller.

Western Canada

No. 1 February 20, 1967 Port Arthur, Ontario. Mayotte Construction Co. Ltd.; Mr. E. L. Mayotte, President. C.A.C., Fort William Branch, Mrs. C.E. Wachter. Consumer's Action Committee, Fort William; Mrs. Alice Peck, President. Mrs. D.K. Dickey, Home Economist. Headway Builders Limited; Mr. R.D. Kennan, President. Mr. Don MacLeod, Welfare Administrator, City of Fort William.

No. 2 February 21, 1967 Winnipeg, Manitoba. Housing and Urban Renewal, Metropolitan Corporation of Greater Winnipeg; Mr. E.G. Simpson, Director, Mr. J.G. Thomas, Assistant Director. Home Development Co. Ltd.; Mr. Phil Young. Canadian Association of Consumers, Manitoba Branch; Mrs. D.M. McLean, President, Mrs. R.W. Menzies, Research Director, Mrs. E. Tilheridge, Convenor of Investigations. Canadian Consumers Protest Association; Mrs. Gail Pearase, President, Mrs. E. Heber, Recording Secretary, Mrs. Doreen Plowman, Corresponding Secretary Mrs. Donna Hagnor, Treasurer, Mrs. Barbara Gommerman, Publicity Chairman, Mrs. Jackie Senhow, Mrs. Eva Reeves, Mrs. Frances Hall. Mr. C.W. Gonick, Department of Economics, University of Manitoba. Mr. O.P. Tangri, Assistant Professor, Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Manitoba. Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce; Mr. Evan McCormick. Age and Opportunity Bureau; Dr. C. Earle Gordon, President, Mrs. A.S.R. Tweedie, Executive Director, Mr. Scott.

No. 3 February 22, 1967 Regina, Sask. Cairns Homes Ltd.; Mr. R. Gerla, General Manager. C.A.C. Saskatchewan Branch, Mrs. Gordon Moxley. Regina Food Suffragettes; Mrs. Bonney Petruic, Treasurer, Mrs. Betty Marzek, President. Federated Co-operatives Ltd.; Mr. L.L. Lloyd, President, Mr. L.J. Doucet, Chairman, Managers' Advisory Committee, Mr. J.E. Trevena, Director of Information, Mr. W. Bergen, Controller, Mr. A.V. Kroll, Research Director.

No. 4 February 23, 1967 Edmonton, Alberta. Chartered Investment Ltd.; Mr. J.L. Harris. Canadian Cattleman's Association; Mr. Fred Newcombe. Edmonton Welfare Council; Mr. L.D. Hyndman, Mr. E.S. Bishop, Executive Director. Mr. S.C. Rodgers, Chief Planner, City of Edmonton. National Farmers Union, Mr. Atkinson, President, Mr. Paul Baby, Vice-President. Lethbridge Consumers Protest Assoc.; Mrs. Ruth Truant, President. Consumer Protest Association; Mrs. K. Swinton, President, Mrs. Proserloe, Mrs. N. Lampton. Dr. T.L. Powrie, Dr. M.D. Stewart, Department of Economics, University of Alberta.

No. 5 February 24, 1967 Vancouver, B.C. C. A. C., Vancouver Branch; Mrs. S. Ettinger. President, Mrs. T. D. Stout, Mrs. L. van Blankenstein. Co-op Wholesale Society of B.C.; Mr. K. F. Harding, Vice-President, Mr. R. L. Simpson, Assistant General Manager, Mr. A. E. Pershick, Manager, Retail Services Division, Mr. Corbin King, General Manager Terrace Co-op, Mr. Hans Hanston, General Manager, Dawson Creek Co-op Union. B. C. Federation of Labour; Mr. R. C. Haynes, Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. Paul Phillips, Research Director. Mainland Dairymen's Association; Mr. F. V. Bradley, Secretary Manager. Women Against Soaring Prices; Mrs. Carol Millan, President. C. A. C., Victoria Branch; Mrs. R. P. A. Coombs. Women Against High Prices; Mrs. Elaine Podovinnikoff, Chairman. B. C. Federation of Agriculture; Mr. R. B. Stocks, Manager. Mr. W. E. Graham, Director of Planning, City of Vancouver. West Coast Land Development Ltd., Mr. James Houston, Vice-President.

Newfoundland

No. 6 March 1, 1967 St. John's, Nfld. Mr. A. Vivian, Commissioner of Housing, Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing, Government of Newfoundland and Labrador. Newfoundland Co-op Union; Mr. G. Haggett, President, Mr. D. Garland, Managing Director. Newfoundland Fish Trades Association; Mr. Eric Harvey, Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. H. Lake, Mr. G. Etchegary, Mr. P. Russell, Mr. P. K. McGrath. C. A. C., St. John's, Nfld. Branch; Mrs. G. M. Walsh, Provincial President. Women's Club, Memorial University of Newfoundland; Mrs. Evelyn Barton, Chairman, Mrs. E. T. Kelly, Member. Mrs. J. A. McKim.

APPENDIX D

INTERIM REPORT

(Tabled in Both Houses of Parliament Tuesday, December 20, 1966)

1. Preamble

During the first two weeks of September, 1966, the Senate and the House of Commons agreed to expand the terms of reference of the Joint Committee which had been appointed earlier to enquire into the problems of consumer credit. The added responsibility given to your Committee was "to enquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months." Because of the public concern over increases in food prices, your Committee decided to concentrate its attention initially on the reasons for the upward movement in food prices. It also undertook to present an interim report to Parliament sometime during December. Your Committee met on forty-two occasions in the period from September 28 to December 13, 1966 and heard testimony from a representative cross-section of individuals and organizations. The list of hearings and witnesses during this period is shown in an appendix. Because of the pressure of time, many of the witnesses appeared on very short notice and your Committee wishes to record its appreciation to them for their invaluable assistance in its efforts to throw light on the factors influencing consumer prices.

Recently, Parliament has also referred to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Prices) the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Prices, Productivity and Employment." This important and complex report obviously requires detailed study and because of the shortness of time, it has not been possible to do more than refer briefly to some of the conclusions of the Economic Council of Canada which impinge directly on the work of your Committee.

This interim report is necessarily brief. It is not and could not be expected to be an exhaustive analysis of the evidence. The limitations of time meant that the report could deal with a limited number of issues. Many other problems referred to during the Committee hearings require additional evidence, study and research before useful conclusions can be drawn.

2. General Observations

The economic experts both from the public service and the academic commmunity who gave evidence to your Committee made it obvious that the factors influencing the cost of living in Canada were many and varied. Some changes could be explained by the increased price of imports. Canada's trading relations with other countries are intimate and important and it is therefore natural that the general increase in price levels in the recent past in most western countries has had a contagious effect on Canadian prices. In addition, domestic changes in the price of goods and services interact and reinforce each other. A great deal of the evidence presented to your Committee emphasized the fact that consumer prices moved in response to changed market conditions in other sectors of the economy or in markets outside Canada. These changing market conditions, in turn, affected the share of the national income going to labour, to farmers, to business and to others, but there was nothing to indicate that the recent changes in the cost of living in Canada arose out of unusual or unwarranted increases in the sizes of their respective shares. Your Committee's review of the evidence has not yet revealed any group or sector of the economy which could be singled out and blamed for the recent increase in consumer prices. Its general conclusions were that there have been many factors contributing to the changes in the cost of living, particularly the price of food.

While there are many groups in the economy which are able to protect themselves against the rising costs of living, your Committee must recognize there are many, such as the handicapped, the aged and the unemployed, upon whom the burden of price increases falls most heavily.

Since your Committee commenced its hearings on September 28, food prices as reflected in the food component of the Consumer Price Index have declined slightly and it is believed that the information which reached the housewife through the Committee hearings has had a stabilizing influence. The hearings have had a significant educational value for the members of your Committee, for the housewives and for the business community. Public attention has been focussed on the importance of the price and quality of consumer goods and it is the earnest hope of your Committee that Canadian housewives will shop both selectively and carefully.

For the first time, full public disclosure of the business practices and affairs of companies appearing before your Committee was requested. This applied to Canadian companies as well as to subsidiaries of non-Canadian corporations. In some instances, new light was thrown on extensive inter-corporate relationships which had not been made public before. In one case, one newspaper reported "For the first time amazing extent of holdings revealed" and a press service referred to the "Stunning scope of food empire". All the proceedings were open and no information was given to your Committee in confidence. There was extensive coverage of the work of your Committee in the newspapers and on the radio and television.

3. The Need for Statistical Information

Your Committee experienced some difficulty in obtaining satisfactory statistics on the prices of a number of important commodities at the farm, wholesale and retail levels. This was particularly true of meats. In part, this arose from the division of responsibility between the Department of Agriculture and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. It is the view of your Committee that there will be continuing interest in the trend of prices. For purposes of economic analysis and studies of distribution, improved statistics concerning prices at all distributive levels are essential. For this reason, it recommends both a greater degree of interdepartmental co-ordination in the compilation of price statistics and the diversion of professional staff to expand and improve the statistical information on prices throughout the public service, and particularly in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. While the quality of the work performed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is very good, your Committee firmly believes that its work in some fields was being impeded by shortages of professionally qualified staff.

The principal way of informing the public of the changing level of prices is the monthly Consumer Price Index issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. This is a sophisticated and valuable economic measuring device but it is nevertheless difficult for an ordinary consumer to interpret it as it applies to her normal purchases for her family. While the existing published consumer price indexes provide a very useful measure of price movements affecting consumers nationally and in major urban centres, additional statistical indicators are required. In particular, there is a pressing need for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to broaden the scope of its retail pricing program to encompass a wider range of qualities of goods and services and to allow more useful item price averages to be derived, by cities, on a continuing basis. It is recognized that an expansion of available retail price statistics along these lines will require additional resources, both in the field collection of price data and in its evaluation, processing and analysis. A good deal of information on various aspects of consumer prices is published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics but it is not usually easily available to the consumer. The consumer appears to be less well served in this respect than some other groups in the community. For example, her ability to detect seasonal and other trends in food prices is impaired by a lack of information. Your Committee recognizes that there are technical problems in compiling accurate price statistics but nevertheless believes that it is an appropriate governmental function to disseminate price information as widely as possible to the consuming public.

Although your Committee's primary concern was with prices, it necessarily became involved on several occasions with other kinds of economic statistics. Specific evidence was given, notably by the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, that there were serious deficiencies in the government system of collecting, analyzing and issuing statistics relating to economic conditions. Moreover, your Committee was impressed by the urgent need for comprehensive, accurate and timely statistics in the formulation of government economic and fiscal policy. Because of the importance of having good and current information about short-run economic changes, your Committee proposes that a detailed review of the government statistical system be undertaken with a view to modernizing, improving and co-ordinating the whole process of collecting and compiling economic data.

Recommendations:

(a) That additional staff resources be provided to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to improve the collection of urgently needed statistical information on price movements.

(b) That more information concerning consumer prices be made available to the public in as simplified a form as possible.

(c) That a thorough review be made of the governmental system of collecting, analyzing and issuing other types of economic statistics in addition to price statistics.

4. Parliamentary Responsibility for Consumer Affairs

The experience in Canada and in many other western countries demonstrates the need for Parliament to be informed on both general and specific economic developments. Economics cannot properly be the exclusive province of experts, even though it has aspects which are technically complex. The study of particular legislation or special problems by ad hoc parliamentary committees does not meet the continuing need of Parliament to become familiar with the issues of current economic policy. For this reason, your Committee has concluded that it would be desirable to establish a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons whose primary aim would be to keep under continuous review the whole field of consumer affairs. In addition to this, the proposed Committee should have the responsibility for surveying economic developments in the Canadian economy which affect employment, income and consumption levels. A Committee of Parliament would be immediately responsive to parliamentary or public concern over problems affecting the consumer.

It is recommended further that such a Joint Committee be established for the life of a parliament in order to provide continuity to its work and that it should act on problems referred to it by Parliament.

It is essential to provide the Joint Committee with the services of a professional staff. It is of interest to note that the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council makes a somewhat similar suggestion and outlines some specific tasks which a Joint Committee might undertake.

Recommendation:

That a Joint Committee be established to review consumer affairs and the state of the Canadian economy.

5. The Influence of Consumer Demand on Food Prices

It was brought out in testimony before your Committee that there is an increasing tendency for consumers to buy convenience foods. Such foods require a minimum of preparation before cooking and in some cases merely need to be thawed. In part, this is a consequence of the increasing number of married women in the labour force and the unwillingness or inability of many consumers to devote much of their time to food preparation. Your Committee has no views on the cultural aspects of this development but does recognize the fact that the price of convenience foods must inevitably include some allowance for the costs of preparation. If consumers prefer partially or completely prepared foods, they should be perfectly free to exercise their choice. However, if their time spent in the kitchen is reduced, it is to be expected that the cost of eating will be increased.

In the past few months, there has been widespread publicity and controversy concerning rising food costs. Public interest has been stimulated by the formation of consumer protest organizations, by the hearings before the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Prices) and by discussions in the press and on the radio and television. Your Committee has gained the impression, based partly on the volume of its mail from the public, that consumers are looking at prices more carefully. There are quite acceptable substitutes for many types of food and consumers can affect the prices of particular items simply by not buying them if they think the price is excessive. It is also true that some consumers could reduce their food budgets by shopping carefully provided the retail food markets available to them are truly competitive. The conclusion of your Committee is that if consumers are well informed and discriminating in their shopping practices they can reduce their food bill appreciably in many cases. Consumer education is a matter of such importance for the welfare of individuals and families that increasing attention should be devoted to it in the Canadian educational system beginning in the secondary schools. A vast amount of information useful to consumers is available through newspapers, magazines and the publications of government departments. Your Committee's opinion is that increased efforts should be undertaken by the government departments involved to distribute as widely as possible attractive and informative material which will help the Canadian housewife to be a well informed and careful shopper.

Recommendation:

That increasing attention be devoted to consumer education both through the educational system and by the wider distribution of information useful to consumers through government channels.

6. Consumer Standards and Consumer Protection

The problems of the consumer in the market place are accentuated by the changing nature of retailing itself. The rise of the supermarket has meant that for a wide range of commonly purchased items retailing has become impersonal. At one time the retailer was a source of information about the products he sold but the modern supermarket offering many thousands of products usually relies on the consumer to select her own purchases on the basis of her own knowledge.

Product information must be provided. Consumers must be informed about physical properties or products they are buying such as weight, volume, quality and number of units and this information should be immediately available at the time of purchase and should be expressed clearly and unequivocally.

Your Committee could cite many examples taken from letters received from dissatisfied consumers about merchandising and packaging techniques which annoy the consumer and make it difficult if not well nigh impossible for the consumer to compare price and quality of different products effectively and quickly.

Facts should be presented in a prominent place on the package or container in a form which is legible and free from graphic distortion. Where applicable, the ingredients should be revealed both by name and percentage of composition, and the consumer should also know about the quality of the product.

In particular:

(1) the product should be described by its generic name where this is meaningful;

(2) where products are of a certain type, variety and quality, they should be graded;

(3) packages should be designed in terms of size, shape or dimension in a way that will not deceive or mislead retail purchasers;

(4) the net quantity of the contents in terms of weight or measure should be expressed as simply as possible and in terms which can be easily interpreted;

(5) the essential information about a packaged product and its physical contents should be stated in a prominent place on the label.

It is essential for the government to take all measures within its power to foster the welfare of the consumer. In particular, the government has a responsibility for protecting the consumer against all forms of exploitation.

One aspect of this responsibility was referred by the Government in July, 1966 to the Economic Council of Canada for investigation. The terms of reference of the study to be carried out are:

"In the light of the Government's long term economic objectives to study and advise regarding:

(a) the interests of the consumer particularly as they relate to the functions of the Department of the Registrar General;

(b) combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade;

(c) patents, trade marks, copyrights and registered industrial designs."

In the normal course of events the findings of the Economic Council of Canada will not be available until late 1967. Your Committee, however, feels that the function of consumer protection is of such urgency as to require the establishment of a Department of Consumer Affairs. Because of the special responsibility of the Department of Health and Welfare, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of the Registrar General, your Committee is not prepared to recommend the nature of the administrative structure for such a department until the Economic Council of Canada reports. However, because of the need for consumer protection, for coordination of existing legislation and for the immediate establishment of machinery to receive and investigate consumer complaints, the Economic Council of Canada should be asked to report on item (a) of their reference as soon as possible.

Additional legislative authorization may be necessary ultimately for the protection of the consumer but this should not stand in the way of immediate action which could be carried out under existing regulations. Your Committee reached certain specific conclusions, which are:

(a) with particular respect to food, that the establishment of standards and grades should be extended to cover all commonly purchased foods for which standards or grades would be useful to the consumer.

(b) that a standardized nomenclature for designating grades for different classes of food should be developed as quickly as possible and that an intensive campaign should be undertaken to acquaint consumers with the meaning of the grades;

(c) that manufacturers of consumer products should be required to modify their packaging techniques so that, where applicable, the weights or contents are expressed in terms which minimize the difficulties of calculating and comparing prices.

Recommendations:

(a) That a Department of Consumer Affairs headed by a Minister be established.

(b) That immediate steps be taken to promote standardization and simplification of grades, nomenclature and packaging for commonly purchased consumer items.

7. The Promotion of Retail Sales

Your Committee noted, with interest, the variety of promotional schemes which had been introduced by the major retail chains to encourage customer loyalty. One senior executive of a corporate chain expressed the view:

> "A lot of people are anxious to play games and have these contests. It is all part of their present-day life to engage in these adventurous things. It is a challenge...Have you ever considered how dull it would be for a housewife to go into a store and see nothing but price tickets and a display of produce."

The competitive significance of promotional devices was emphasized by another chain store executive when he said, "If stamps are in fashion, then you had better be in style yourself."

The impact of stamps, premiums, games and contests on the retail price level is difficult to assess and clear differences of opinion were expressed by responsible officials of the chain and other stores. Your Committee did not have sufficient evidence at this time to reach any final conclusions about the effect of promotional devices on prices but it did conclude that the different forms of promotion should be used with restraint. Its opinion was that competition not based on price should not be allowed to diminish unduly the healthy effects of vigorous price competition at the retail level. It is your Committee's intention to conduct further investigations for the purpose of making final recommendations on promotional devices such as trading stamps, games and contests.

Your Committee, however, saw at least one example of a technique of price competition which it considered to be objectionable. This was the system, evidently sponsored by manufacturers or processors, of labelling packages to imply that the product was being sold below the regular retail price. The use of the so-called "cents-off" labels seems to be of fairly recent origin and now to be quite common for such classes of commodities as detergents and processed foods. Your Committee feels that this device tends to create uncertainty about what the regular retail price is, particularly in a period of change. Cents-off labels therefore, confuse the consumer and lead to abuses. Anything which smacks of deception in advertising and merchandising is unacceptable. Competition or promotion on the basis of price or quality is a desirable goal but competitive methods which create doubt or confusion should be prohibited.

Your Committee learned much about the methods used by chain stores to attract customers. On the other hand, it observed some actions by food retailers which were poor from the viewpoint of their public relations. Your Committee's attention was repeatedly drawn to the practice of remarking goods on the shelves with a new and higher price without removing the old price. Whatever the reason for the practice, your Committee's view was that some adjustment in the method of inventory management and more care in marking prices on containers would eliminate this irritant to consumers.

Recommendations:

(a) That non-price competition by retail food outlets should not be allowed to become sufficiently important to outweigh price competition.

(b) That cents-off labels, in view of their tendency to cause confusion and to distort price relationships, should be prohibited.

(c) That the Minister to be responsible for consumer affairs undertake a review of the effectiveness of the investigation and prosecution procedures under existing statutes relating to misleading advertising.

(d) That more care should be used in re-marking the prices of goods in the inventories of retail food stores.

8. Public Disclosure

In times of both depression and prosperity, Canada has in the past resorted to a series of Royal Commissions or parliamentary inquiries on prices and price spreads, each of which has had to compile its own information on costs, profits and return on investments. Your Committee was no different, and used its parliamentary privilege to ask for and receive from corporate witnesses information never before made public. However, your Committee feels strongly that if those responsible for or concerned about the management of public affairs are to be properly informed, such information should be available publicly on a continuous basis for the scrutiny of parliamentarians, public officials, consumer groups, investment analysts and the academic community. Such public disclosure would also be a spur to greater efficiency and productivity by preventing inefficient entrepreneurs from hiding their inefficiency from shareholders or public scrutiny. Further, your Committee sees no reason why large public companies should be compelled to compete in the market place against other large private competitors whose operations are almost wholly secret and many of which are privately held wholly-owned subsidiaries of non-Canadian parents.

Recommendations:

(a) That the distinction between disclosure requirements for private companies of significance to the public and public companies be eliminated.

(b) That the disclosure requirements for both public and such private companies be enlarged to assure full and complete disclosure of corporate activities to give to the public sufficient information for meaningful continuous analysis and comparison.

9. Profits of Corporate Food Chains

The Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Prices) asked for and received detailed statistical information concerning the experience of the companies which appeared before it. One of its principal purposes was to determine if there had been any significant recent changes in the levels of costs, prices or profits which would help to account for the upward movement of the cost of living. In particular, your Committee concerned itself with the profit levels of the corporate food chains. This whole question was looked into by your Committee.

One way of measuring profitability is to examine net profit after taxes as a percentage of gross sales. Your Committee is aware that this method of comparing profit levels has some deficiencies and that an analysis should also be made of profits in relation to invested capital. Such an examination raises theoretical and practical accounting problems and while the necessary research has been started, the results are not available for this interim report. Your Committee has retained the services of a firm specializing in management consulting and accounting which has undertaken to conduct a study in this field.

The level of profits in the Canadian economy as a whole was discussed by several expert witnesses who testified before your Committee. Their opinion was that in the late stages of an expansionary period there tended to be a squeeze on profit margins. This resulted from rising costs and the inability of sellers in competitive markets to raise prices sufficiently to offset them. Although statistical evidence was not conclusive, it did appear that profit levels or ratios had not risen generally and that one would have to look elsewhere to explain the changes in the cost of living after a long uninterrupted period of prosperity.

10. Advertising

Your Committee heard lengthy arguments concerning the economic consequences of advertising. It also accumulated a considerable amount of information relating to advertising expenditures and the way in which advertising costs are shared among different distributive levels in the food industry. There was evidence that the market power of the retail level of the food industry was sufficiently strong to shift some of the burden of advertising costs to food processors or manufacturers. In time available to your Committee, it was not possible to ascertain all the facts necessary to reach any firm conclusion. However, your Committee decided that more information was needed.

11. Concentration and Cost Levels in the Food Industry

The terms of reference of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Prices) necessarily meant that primary attention was focussed on factors influencing recent changes in consumer prices. Your Committee was not, as a result able to devote more than passing attention to some of the longer run influences at work in wholesale and retail food distribution.

Although the preliminary judgment of the Committee was that profits in the different levels of food processing and distribution had not increased substantially or generally in the recent past this does not answer a very relevant question, namely, whether the cost levels in the industry were reasonably low in the light of Canadian conditions.

Your Committee uncovered specific evidence of great concentration of market power. It came to public attention as a result of questions by your Committee and disclosed more particularly to so-called Weston Empire.

This disclosure was an astonishing revelation and the enormity of the Weston complex surprised even the sophisticated. The far-reaching implications will take some time to assess. The Weston Empire reveals for the first time vast holdings and control over food and other related aspects of the economy which will need further investigation to reveal all the implications and to do this, more specific information will of course be required.

The detergent and soap industry, it appears from the evidence, is controlled by three giants which among them have between 85 and 90 per cent of the total business.

The five great corporate food chains and the voluntary chains control more than 75 per cent of the grocery business in urban areas and their percentage is increasing.

In one part of the food processing industry, one firm controls 100 per cent of the market in the Maritimes and Western Canada and at least 80 per cent of the market in Ontario and Quebec.

The domination of a few large corporations in some sectors of the Canadian economy is clearly evident and gives rise to the question, "Is this in the public interest?" Your Committee feels that the implications of this question must be fully examined.

In view of this, your Committee recommends that a thorough assessment should be made of the organization of the food industry with the object of publicizing any monopolistic tendencies which may exist, of determining whether the market power of any group or groups is sufficient to impair the workings of a competitive market and whether there are any undue barriers to entry.

Recommendation:

That the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Prices) continue with its investigation of concentration in the food industry.

12. Price Control

The view is sometimes expressed that price control by government edict is the easy answer to price stability. All the witnesses who were questioned on this matter disagreed with the opinion and demonstrated clearly that this was an unworkable and unrealistic solution. Your Committee concurs in the conclusion that price control is a fallacious method of attempting to control any general increase in prices. It notes, furthermore, that the federal government does not have the constitutional power to enter this field.

13. Co-operatives

In order to meet its self-imposed deadline of an interim report in December, your Committee did not have an opportunity to call witnesses on co-operative organizations, but recognizing the importance of the movement intends to do so.

All which is respectfully submitted.

David A. Croll
Joint Chairman

Ron Basford
Joint Chairman

INDEX

Abbreviations

1r, 2r, 3r	=	First, second, third reading
amdts	=	amendments
com	=	committee
div	=	division
m	=	motion
neg	=	negatived
ref	=	referred
rep	=	report
r.a.	=	royal assent

Acts passed during the Session:

PUBLIC ACTS

Assented to February 8, 1966

Chap.		Bill No.
1.	Appropriation Act No. 1, 1966	C-116

Assented to February 23, 1966

2.	Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, An Act to extend time for consideration of objections	C-126

Assented to March 9, 1966

3.	Appropriation Act No. 2, 1966 (Main Supply 1965-66)	C-140

PUBLIC ACTS – Continued

Assented to March 31, 1966

Chap.		Bill No.
4.	Admiralty Act, An Act to amend the	C-161
5.	Appropriation Act No. 3, 1966	C-157
6.	Appropriation Act No. 4, 1966	C-159
7.	Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, An Act to amend the	C-3
8.	Judges Act, An Act to amend the	C-160
9.	Milltown Bridge Act	S-15

Assented to May 12, 1966

10.	Aeronautics Act, An Act to amend the	C-153
11.	Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, An Act to amend the	C-152
12.	Bills of Exchange Act, An Act to amend the	S-14
13.	Bretton Woods Agreements Act, An Act to amend the	C-144
14.	Canada – United Kingdom, Canada – Sweden, Income Tax Agreement Act, 1966	C-154
15.	Canadian National Railway Branch Line – Amesdale	C-165
16.	Export and Import Permits Act, An Act to amend the	S-23
17.	Farm Credit Act, An Act to amend the	C-171
18.	Fisheries Development Act	C-145
19.	Science Council of Canada Act	C-149

Assented to June 2, 1966

20.	Appropriation Act No. 5, 1966	C-189
21.	Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance Act, 1966	C-185
22.	Northwest Territories Act, An Act to amend the	C-146

Assented to June 16, 1966

23.	Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code, An Act to amend, An Act to amend the	C-169
24.	Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, An Act to amend the	C-2
25.	Government Organization Act, 1966	C-178
26.	Research Council Act, An Act to amend the	C-150
27.	Training Allowance Act, 1966	C-186
28.	Yukon Act, An Act to amend the	C-147

PUBLIC ACTS – Continued

Assented to July 11, 1966

Chap.		Bill No.
29.	Appropriation Act No. 6, 1966	C-224
30.	Appropriation Act No. 7, 1966	C-226
31.	Atlantic Development Board Act, An Act to amend the	C-213
32.	Bankruptcy Act, An Act to amend the	S-17
33.	Canada Student Loans Act, An Act to amend the	C-197
34.	Canadian Dairy Commission Act	C-205
35.	Canadian National Railway Branch Lines, Osborne Lake, Manitoba and Guernsey, Saskatchewan	C-210
36.	Company of Young Canadians Act	C-174
37.	Crop Insurance Act, An Act to amend the	C-208
38.	Customs Tariff Act, An Act to amend the	C-200
39.	Exchequer Court Act, An Act to amend the	C-201
40.	Excise Tax Act, An Act to amend the	C-198
41.	Fund for Rural Economic Development Act	C-151
42.	Health Resources Fund Act	C-199
43.	Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act	C-211
44.	Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1966	C-193

Assented to July 15, 1966

45.	Canada Assistance Plan	C-207
46.	Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act, An Act to amend the	S-42
47.	Income Tax Act, An Act to amend the	C-216
48.	National Arts Centre Act	C-194
49.	St. Lawrence Ports Working Conditions Act	C-215

Assented to September 1, 1966

50.	Maintenance of Railway Operation Act, 1966	C-230

Assented to November 17, 1966

51.	Appropriation Act No. 8, 1966	C-245
52.	Livestock Feed Assistance Act	C-218

Assented to November 22, 1966

53.	National Housing Act, 1954, An Act to amend the	C-241

Assented to November 28, 1966

54.	Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, An Act to amend the	S-53

PUBLIC ACTS – Continued

Assented to November 30, 1966

Chap.		Bill No.
55.	Appropriation Act No. 9, 1966 (Main Supply)	C-248

Assented to December 14, 1966

56.	Appropriation Act No. 10, 1966	C-254
57.	Boundary between the Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, An Act respecting the	S-45
58.	Boundary between the Province of Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories, An Act respecting the	S-46
59.	Canada Labour (Standards) Code, An Act to amend the	S-54
60.	Canada Lands Surveys Act, An Act to amend the	S-48

Assented to December 21, 1966

61.	Boundary between the Province of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, An Act respecting the	S-47
62.	Canada Labour (Safety) Code	S-35
63.	Export Credits Insurance Act, An Act to amend the	C-253
64.	Medical Care Act	C-227
65.	Old Age Security Act, An Act to amend the	C-251

Assented to February 9, 1967

66.	Canada Corporations Act, An Act to amend	S-51
67.	Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act, 1965-66	C-229
68.	Judges Act, An Act to amend the	C-262
69.	National Transportation Act	C-231

Assented to February 17, 1967

70.	Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act	C-261

Assented to February 23, 1967

71.	Public Service Employment Act	C-181
72.	Public Service Staff Relations Act	C-170

PUBLIC ACTS – Concluded

Assented to March 1, 1967

Chap.		Bill No.
73.	Appropriation Act No. 1, 1967	C-271
74.	Financial Administration Act, An Act to amend the	C-182
75.	Income Tax Convention Act	S-56
76.	Judges Act, An Act to amend the	C-267
77.	Postal Services Interruption Relief Act	S-55

Assented to March 10, 1967

78.	Canadian Film Development Corporation Act	C-204
79.	Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act, An Act to amend the	C-268
80.	Fund for Rural Economic Development Act, An Act to amend the	C-274
81.	Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act	C-265
82.	Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act	C-252
83.	Small Businesses Loans Act, An Act to amend the	C-270
84.	Statutory Salaries Revision Act, 1967	C-266

Assented to March 23, 1967

85.	Appropriation Act No. 2, 1967	C-282
86.	Appropriation Act No. 3, 1967	C-283
87.	Bank Act	C-222
88.	Bank of Canada Act, An Act to amend the	C-190
89.	Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967	C-277
90.	Immigration Appeal Board Act	C-220
91.	Income Tax Act, An Act to amend the, and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act	C-259
92.	Pension Benefits Standards Act	C-221
93.	Quebec Savings Banks Act	C-223

Assented to May 8, 1967

94.	Adult Occupational Training Act	C-278
95.	Appropriation Act No. 4, 1967	C-293
96.	Canadian Forces Reorganization Act	C-243
97.	Income Tax Act, An Act to amend the	C-280

LOCAL AND PRIVATE ACTS

Assented to Mar. 31, May 12, June 2, July 11, 15, Nov. 17, Dec. 14, 21, 1966; Feb. 9, Mar. 10, May 8, 1967

Chap.		Bill No.
	Banks
98.	Bank of British Columbia, An Act to incorporate	S-16
99.	Bank of Western Canada, An Act to incorporate	C-111
	Insurance Companies
100.	Anniversary Life Insurance Company, An Act to incorporate	S-28
101.	Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation, An Act respecting	S-13
102.	Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada, An Act to incorporate	S-12
103.	Income Life Insurance Company of Canada, An Act to incorporate	S-11
104.	Laurier Life Insurance Company, An Act to incorporate	S-27
105.	North West Life Assurance Company of Canada, An Act to incorporate The	S-25
106.	Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company, An Act respecting The	S-6
107.	Société des Artisans, An Act respecting La	S-41
	Pipe Lines
108.	Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, An Act respecting	S-10
	Railways
109.	Canadian Pacific Railway Company, An Act respecting	S-32
110.	Canadian Pacific Railway Company, An Act respecting	S-34
	Religious Organizations
111.	Canadian Board of Missions of the Church of God, An Act to incorporate (General Offices: Anderson, Indiana)	S-18
112.	Evangelical Covenant Church of Canada, An Act to incorporate The	S-38
113.	Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated, An Act to incorporate	S-7
114.	Lutheran Church in America – Canada Section, An Act to incorporate	S-39
115.	Mennonite Central Committee (Canada), An Act to incorporate	S-37
116.	Presbyterian Church in Canada, An Act respecting The Trustee Board of The	S-20
117.	United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces, An Act respecting	S-33

LOCAL AND PRIVATE ACTS – Concluded

Chap. Bill No.

Trust and Loan Companies

118. General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, An Act respecting S-8
119. League Savings and Mortgage Company, An Act to incorporate S-30

Miscellaneous

120. International Society of Endocrinology, An Act to incorporate The S-29
121. United Grain Growers Limited, An Act respecting S-5

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne at opening of Session

Motion for, Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald, 29-35; seconded, Hon. L.M. Gouin, 35-37
Ordered that Address be presented to the Governor General, 735
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aird, John B., 227-31
Argue, Hazen, 729-35
Baird, A.B., 99
Belisle, Rheal, 103-7
Bouffard, Paul H., 50-55
Bourque, Romuald, 666-71
Brooks, A.J., 40-48
Crerar, T.A., 564-71, 576
Denis, Azellus, 409-12
Fournier, Edgar E., 57-64
Fournier, Sarto, 541-7
Gershaw, F.W., 80-82
Gouin, L.M., 35-37
Hollett, Malcolm, 93-99
Inman, F. Elsie, 100-3
Irvine, Olive L., 322-7
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 29-35
O'Leary, Clement A., 220-3
Pearson, Arthur M., 307-12
Pouliot, Jean-François, 193-7, 201-4
Quart, Josie D., 253-5
Rattenbury, Nelson, 279-82
Roebuck, Arthur W., 126-9
Vaillancourt, Cyrille, 526-30

Adenauer, Konrad, former Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, the late, 1787-8

Adjournments
Emergency sittings, authority to convene Senate, 24
March 31, 397
May 12, 547
July 14, 977
September 1, 1037
September 13, 1051
December 21, 1340
February 9, 1435

Administration of Justice, Special Joint Committee (re Mr. Justice Landreville), appointment, 1176, 1231-2; agreed to, 1232
Members
Commons, 1292, 1347, 1433, 1443, 1473, 1495
Report, 1360

Admiralty bill C-161. 1r, 386; 2r, 386-7; 3r, 387; r.a., 397

Adult occupational training
Age limit, 1908
Allowances, 1900-1
Buildings and equipment, provincial loans for, 1912
Commonwealth training program, 1907
Counselling officers, 1913
Drop-outs, 1898
Federal-provincial agreements, 1899, 1903, 1912-13
Nova Scotia problems, 1910-11
Technical and vocational training schools, 1905-6
Transitional agreements, 1901
Unemployment insurance benefits, 1901
Weekly earnings in provinces, 1899
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 1911
Cameron, Donald, 1897-1901, 1911-14
Connolly, John J., 1904
Fournier, Edgar, 1905-9
Grosart, Allister, 1901-4, 1912
Kinley, John J., 1909-11

Adult Occupational Training bill C-278. 1r, 1885; 2r, 1897-1914; 3r, 1914; r.a., 1925

Aeronautics
Accidents, 512-13
Air Transport Board, 452, 512
Fees and charges, levying of, 451
Obstruction of investigations, 513
Offences against air regulations, 452

Aeronautics – Concluded
Preservation and protection of civil aircraft, 452
Rockets, moored balloons and kites, 452
Working conditions, regulations re, 451
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 451-2
Haig, J. Campbell, 512-13

Aeronautics bill C-153. 1r, 401; 2r, 451-2, 512-13; ref to com, 513; authority to print com proceedings, 525; rep of com without amdt, 525; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Aetna Casualty Company of Canada bill S-4. Hon. Mr. Cook. 1r, 29; 2r-ref to com, 64; rep of com with amdt, 166; fee paid last session, 168; 3r, 187

Aging
Canadian Conference on Aging, Toronto, 130
Community neglect of older people, 140
Social Workers Assoc. brief on, 140
Danish National Institute on Social Research, 79
Davis, Dr. R.E.G., consultant, 129
Health problems, nursing and homemaker facilities, 75-76
Housing, 76-77
Income for Canadians at 65 yrs., 70, 72-73, 113, 116, 130
Means test, 114
Recommendations, 73
Income tax returns, 114
Jewish Home for the Aged, Toronto, 176
National Commission on Aging, 115
New Brunswick homes for the aged, 141-2, 188
Organizations in other countries, 130, 131
Press comments on Senate Special Committee, 174
Report of Senate Special Committee, 89 et seq
Retirement preparations, discussions and program of United Automobile Workers, 139-40
Segregation of elderly people, 188-9
Senior Citizens day at Expo67, suggestion, 175-6
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 140-2
Croll, David A., 69-80 (See Appendix p. 89)
Fergusson, Muriel McQ., 129-31
Grosart, Allister, 112-14
Haig, J. Campbell, 139-40
McGrand, Fred A., 187-9
Quart, Josie D., 173-6
Roebuck, Arthur W., 114-17

Aging, Senate Special Committee
Appointment, 23
Members, 23
Report, discussion on, 69-80, 112-17, 139-42, 173-6, 187-9
See Appendix p. 89 et seq for complete report

Agreements, conventions, treaties
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 616-25, 735-42, 747-57, 779-87, 809, 853
Income tax, Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, and certain other countries, and convention between Canada and the United States, 1350, 1369-77, 1418-19, 1424
Income tax, Canada-United Kingdom, 401-2, 438-46, 497, 530, 547

Agricultural and Rural Development bill C-152. 1r, 401; 2r, 414-16, 449-51; ref to com, 451; authority to print com proceedings, 496; rep of com without amdt; 496; 3r, 350; r.a., 547
See also ARDA

Agriculture
Agricultural program of Liberal party, excerpts from pamphlet on, 732
ARDA, 221-2, 308, 309, 310, 414-16, 449-50, 549, 672-3
Crop insurance, 310-11
Education related to local livelihood, 308-10
Enlargement of farms through government assistance, 671
Exodus from farms, 664-5, 671-2
Farm land utilized by railway line, 537
Farm machinery costs, 311
Farm problems and subsidies, 221-3
ARDA, 221, 222
Marginal or submarginal farmers, 221
Nova Scotia milk surplus, 222
Uneconomic farm units, 221, 223
Income of farmers, 549-50
Northwest Territories, 589-90
Rural poverty, 308-10
Soil utilization in foreign countries, 529-30
Weed control, research on, 484-5
See ARDA,
Water resources.

Air Canada
Interim financing requirements, 1410
Machinists strike, 1124-5, 1149
Temporary loans to, 1410
See Labour conditions

Aird, Hon. John B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 227-31
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 616-22
Adjustment Assistance Board, 619
Balance of payments problem, 619, 620
Duty-free vehicles and parts, 618
Economic Council Review, 620
Employment, 618
Exports of automotive products, 618, 619
Industrial structure, improvement in, 617-18

Aird, Hon. John B. – Concluded
Automotive products –Concluded
Kennedy Round, 620, 621
Motor vehicle production, 618
Prices and wages, 621
Royal Commission on Automotive Industry, 617
Tax policies, 621-2
Economic development and Government responsibility, 228-31
Canada Development Corporation, 230-1
"Creative federalism", 229-30
Excerpt from Fortune, 230
Criteria and discipline in government administration, 229-30
Economic Council of Canada, 228
Educational requirements, 229, 230
Pressure on economy through rapid expansion, 228
Productive potential, 228
NATO Parliamentarians, 12th annual conference at Paris, France, 1283-7
Britain and the European Common Market, 1283-6
Financial Post editorial, 1286
Canadian delegation, 1286-7
Economic problems, 1284-5
European unity, 1284
GATT negotiations, 1284
International liquidity and reserve currency, 1284
New York Times article by C.L. Sulzberger, 1284
NATO and Canada, 1284
Peacekeeping force, 1287

Alberta
Alberta Medical Plan, 80
Petroleum industry, Rainbow Lake, 1091–2
Sulphur production by Shell (Canada) Ltd., 610-11
Water resources, 936, 937-9

Anniversary Life Insurance, see York Life Insurance Company

Anthem, see National and Royal Anthems

Appendixes
Aging, Senate Special Committee report, 89
Appropriation bill No. 5, answers to questions on lamprey control and research, fisheries 12-mile limit, Atlantic provinces power development, 801–7
Appropriation bill No. 6, answers to questions on immigrants, manpower mobility program, freight assistance, veterans hospitals, technical and vocational training, 1000-2
Appropriation bill No. 9, answers to questions on Oromocto, Marville and other Canadian stations, National Gallery, Centennial Commission, 1352-4
Bank of British Columbia bill S-16, rep of com, 381-4, Commons amdts, 1242
Bankruptcy bill S-17, rep of com, 596-8; Commons amdts, 777
Centennial of Confederation, congratulatory resolutions in U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, 1805-7

Appendixes – Concluded
Centennial Performing Arts, allocation of grants, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 1069–71
Commissions, name, nature, personnel, and date, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1073-4
Constituencies of Canada, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1093-5
Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, Special Joint Committee
Report (interim) 1307-13
Report, final, see Appendix to Feb. 16
Report presented at end of Session, 1928-49
Dominion Day, conduct of non-essential business on July 1, 1967, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Davey, 1072
Electoral redistribution, newspaper articles by Hon. Jean-François Pouliot, 179-84
Estimates for fiscal year ending Mar. 31/66, report of Finance Committee, 297-9
Estimates, main and supplementary (A) and (C) for fiscal year ending Mar. 31/66, report of Finance Committee, 1588-90
Governor General of Canada, installation of the Right Honourable Roland Michener, address by Prime Minister and reply by Governor General, 1783-5
Interparliamentary Group, Canada-United States, report of eighth meeting, 163-5
Labour Relations, report of dispute between Shipping Federation of Canada and International Longshoremen's Assoc., 871-7
National Research Council bill C-150, rep of com with amdts, 581
Penitentiaries, report of Joint Committee, 1863-8
Selection Committee report, 25

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1966 C-116. 1r, 107; 2r, 107-12, 118-25; 3r, 125; r.a., 131

Appropriation bill No. 2, 1966 C-140. 1r, 283; 2r, 283-9; 3r, 289-90; r.a., 291

Appropriation bill No. 3, 1966 C-157. 1r, 340; 2r, 347-52, 371-3; 3r, 394; r.a., 396

Appropriation bill No. 4, 1966 C-159. 1r, 360; 2r, 370-1; 3r, 394; r.a., 397

Appropriation bill No. 5, 1966 C-189. 1r, 600; 2r, 626-31; 3r, 636-8; r.a., 648 (Answers to questions, 801-7)

Appropriation bill No. 6, 1966 C-224. 1r, 913; 2r, 916-21; 3r, 921; r.a., 930 (Answers to questions, 1000-2).

Appropriation bill No. 7, 1966 C-226. 1r, 923; 2r, 923-9; 3r, 929; r.a., 930

Appropriation bill No. 8, 1966 C-245. 1r, 1169; 2r, 1169-74; 3r, 1174; r.a., 1175

Appropriation bill No. 9, 1966 C-248. 1r, 1197; 2r, 1212-23; 3r, 1226; r.a., 1232 (Answers to questions, 1352-4).

Appropriation bill No. 10, 1966 C-254. 1r, 1234; 2r, 1244-9; 3r, 1249; r.a., 1263

Appropriation bill No. 1, 1967 C-271. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1527-33; 3r, 1533; r.a., 1541

Appropriation bill No. 2, 1967 C-282. 1r, 1758; 2r, 1758-61; 3r, 1761; r.a., 1768

Appropriation bill No. 3, 1967 C-283. 1r, 1761; 2r, 1761-8; 3r, 1768; r.a., 1768

Appropriation bill No. 4, 1967 C-293. 1r, 1885; 2r, 1915-20; 3r, 1920; r.a., 1925

ARDA, 221-2, 308, 309, 414-16, 449-50, 549, 672-3
- Advisory committee, 415-16
- Fringe areas to benefit from program, 415
- Nova Scotia, 449-50
  - Dyking, drainage and other projects, 449-50
  - Electric power research, 449
  - Market-garden farm units, 449-50
  - Tourist development, 450
- Speakers: Honourable Senators
  - Blois, Fred M., 448-50
  - McDonald, A. Hamilton, 414-16
- See Rural economic development

Argue, Hon. Hazen
- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 729-35
- Farm Credit bill C-171, 519-22
  - Cost-price squeeze, 520
  - Credit advice for farmers, need for, 521
  - Family farms, 519-20
  - Land prices, excerpt from report of Farm Credit Corp., 520-1
  - Loan statistics, 521
- Introduction to the Senate, 199
- Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1129-33
  - Board, functions of, 1130
  - Co-operatives and free enterprise, 1129-30
  - Expenditures of Canadian Wheat Board, payment of by western producers, 1131-2
  - Farm machinery costs, 1133
  - Storage facilities, accelerated depreciation for, 1132
  - Transportation subsidy, 1130-1
  - Variations in prices and grain qualities, 1129
- National Transportation bill C-231, 1398-1401
  - Branch Lines, abandonment of, 1398-1400
  - Crowsnest Pass Agreement, 1398
  - Freight rates, 1398
  - Legal counsel for producers, 1400-1
  - MacPherson, M.A., Chairman of Royal Commission on Transportation, 1398
- Old Age Security bill C-251, 1331-3
  - Alberta legislation, 1332
  - Needs test, 1332
  - Productivity of nation, increase stressed to alleviate taxation, 1333
- Pearson, Right Hon. Lester B., Prime Minister, 730

Argue, Hon. Hazen – Concluded
Producers in western Canada, 730-5
Agricultural program of Liberal party, excerpts from pamphlet on, 732
Cattle produce, 732
Crop exports, 732
Prices and costs, 733-4
Saskatoon prairie conference, 734-5
Two-price system, 734
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-274, 1578-9
PFRA, 1578-9
Water resources, development in western Canada, 1579

Armed forces, see Canadian Forces Reorganization, Visiting Forces.

Arts Centre, see National Arts Centre

Aseltine, Hon. Walter M., P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 1 C-116, 121-3
Appropriation bill No. 8 C-245, 1172
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229, 1411-13
Capital expenditures, 1412
Gordon, Donald, accomplishments as president of CNR, 1413
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda), Special Joint Committee, 1167
Davies, Hon. W. Rupert, the late, 1615-16
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 238, 258-63
Court, definition, 260-1
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill B (McMeans bill), 259-61
Explanatory notes, 260
Provincial courts, 260
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill 0-6, 262
Press comment on divorce reform, 262
Estimates, 121-3, 1247
Dollar items, 123
External aid, 1247
Governor General's warrants, 121-2
Farm Credit bill C-171, 517-19
Capital increase, 517-18
Cost-price squeeze, 518-19
Interest rates, 519
Machinery costs, 518
Mortgage loans, 517
Income Tax bill C-259, 1657-9
Income tax returns, delay in receipt of and complications in form, 1657-9
Succession duties and estate tax, 1659
India, Hindu Kush River dam being built by Canadians, 1247
Judges bill C-267, 1518-19
Capacities forbidden to judge unless by special appointment, 1518
Divorce action, 1519
Salary revisions, 1518-19
McLean, Hon. A. Neil, the late, 1615

Aseltine, Hon. Walter M., P.C. —Concluded
Northwest Territories bill C-146, 591, 607-10
Carrothers Commission, 609, 610
Newspaper article re report, 609
Excerpt from speech of 1953 advocating extension of provinces to include NWT, 608-9
Mileage and population, 608
Revenue and expenditures, 591, 610
Power, Hon. C.G., honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, University of Saskatchewan, 607
Privilege, question of, Ottawa Citizen article on Senate passage of bills, 892-3
Statutory Salaries Revision bill C-266, 1545-6
Authority of Governor in Council, 1546
Grain Commissioner, 1546
Retroactive clause, 1545

Assistance plan
Abuses, possibility of, 900, 901, 904, 908
Acts amended by bill C-207, 901
Allocations for services, 898-9
"Assistance", definitions of, 897
Blind persons, 903-4, 908
Co-ordination between governments, 898, 932
Duration of Agreement, 899
Established programs (interim arrangements), 901
"Evils" of the welfare state, 904-6
General assistance and welfare services, 899
"Have" and "have-not" provinces, 932
Health and welfare expenditures, 902, 905
Comparisons of selected countries, 933-4
As percentage of gross national product, 933
Disability benefits, 934
Family allowances, 934
Old age benefits and survival benefits, 934
Unemployment benefits, 934
Indian welfare, 899-900, 903, 908
Jurisdiction, federal-provincial, 902-3, 908, 909
Mother's allowance, 901
Needs test, 898
Old age assistance, 901
Persons eligible for assistance, 898
Rural poverty, preliminary report on selected areas, 906-7
Standards, difficulty in establishing of, 906, 933
Work activity projects, 900
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 903-4
Connolly, John J., 897-901, 907-9
Croll, David A., 931-5
Macdonald, John M., 906-7
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 904-6
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 901-3, 909
Walker, David, 900

Assistance Plan bill C-207. 1r, 897; 2r, 897-909; ref to com, 909; authority to print com proceedings, 931; rep of com without amdt, 931; 3r, 931-5; r.a., 976

Atlantic Development Board
Anti-pollution campaign, 1691-2
Cape Breton Island, 1694
Economic surveys, 819-20
Electrical energy projects, 817-18, 1690
Fish plants, 1691
Fundy Trail, costs of development, 820
Health Resources Fund, 1694
Highway construction, 1691
Incomes in Atlantic provinces, 817, 819
Industrial developments, 817-18, 1691
Information re establishment of, 819
Mactaquac dam, 818
P.E.I. causeway, 820
Projects for which commitments have been made, 817
Research, 1691
Rural Economic Development Fund, 1693-4
Ship-building, 820
Stipulations for approval of projects, 817
Trans-Canada Highway, 1692-3
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Fournier, Edgar, 820
McElman, Charles, 815-19
Phillips, Orville H., 819-20
Smith, Donald, 1689-93

Atlantic Development Board bill C-213. 1r, 799; 2r, 815-20; 3r, 854; r.a., 929

Atlantic provinces
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Burchill, 630, 725, 801-7
Economic prospects, 280-2
Fishing industry, development programs, 280-1
Hydro power development, 278-80
Livestock feed grain assistance, 1076, 1083-90, 1096-9, 1104-7, 1116-19, 1129-33, 1137-8, 1158-60, 1168-9, 1175
New Brunswick, 280-2
Northumberland Strait construction, 771-2, 773
Passenger rail service, 1416, 1423
Transportation problems, 1361-5, 1378-80, 1401, 1403-5, 1416, 1423
Winter works program, 318-19, 332-4, 494-5
See also individual names of provinces

Automotive products
Adjustment Assistance Board, 619
Amendment to agreement, reported on in U.S. Code Congressional (And Administrative) News, 752-3, 782-3

Automotive products – Concluded
Authority for implementation of treaties or agreements, 622-4, 736, 747-50, 753-6
Constitutional Law, excerpt from, 736
International Waterways Agreement, Sir Robert Borden quoted, 737
Oppenheim's International Law, excerpt from, 754
Trade agreements by Order in Council, 785
U.S. law, 737-8
Benefits to Canadian Industry, 617-18, 750, 780-5
Date agreement enters into force, 739-40
Duty-free imports, clauses dealing with, 738-9
Duty-free vehicles and parts, 618
Economic Council review, 620
Employment, 618, 622, 756, 780-2
Exports of automotive products, 618, 619
Financial Post article on "Life Under the Auto Pact", 781-2
Ford Motor Co. expenditures in Canada, 780
Imbalance of payments, 619, 620, 622, 750-2, 756, 785-6
Industrial structure, improvement in, 617-18
Jigs, dies, et cetera, 787
Kennedy Round, 620, 621
Letters of commitment, 752-3, 783-4
Motor vehicle production, 618
Prices and wages, 621
Reciprocal concessions, 784-5
Reduction of import duties "for concessions granted", 747-8
Royal Commission on Automotive Industry, 617
Tariff concession to U.S. manufacturers, 622-3
Tax policies, 621-2, 624
Trade agreements by order in council, 785
Trade deficit in automotive exports, 619, 620, 622, 750-2, 756
Globe and Mail report on, 751-2
U.S. domination of automobile industry, 624
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aird, John B., 616-22
Grosart, Allister, 747-57
Hayden, Salter A., 779-87
Hugessen, A.K., 735-42
Roebuck, Arthur W., 741-2
Walker, David, 622-3, 786
Willis, Harry A., 623-5

Automotive products, Canada-United States Agreement, motion for approval, 616-25, 735-42, 747-57, 779-87; ref to com, 787; authority to print com proceedings, 809; rep of com recommending approval of Agreement, adopted, 853

Baird, Hon. A.B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 99
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, the late, 361
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 335-6
"Baird's Law", 336
Collusion, 335-6
Newfoundland, 335, 336-7
Quebec, question of opting out, 336

Baird, Hon. A.B. – Concluded
Military Committee of NATO Parliamentarians' conference, 99
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 551
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., the late, 362

Bank bill C-222. 1r, 1728; 2r, 1728-45; ref to com, 1745; authority to print proceedings, 1750; rep of com without amdt, 1750, m for 3r, 1750 m in amdt, 1753-6, neg, 1756, 3r, 1756; r.a., 1768

Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-3. 1r, 300; 2r, 314-15; 3r, 315; r.a., 397

Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill S-53. 1r, 1188; 2r, 1188; 3r, 1189; r.a., 1209

Banking and Commerce Committee
Members, 25, 258, 715, 1360
Reports
Aetna Casualty Company of Canada bill S-4. Rep of com with amdt, 166
Agricultural and Rural Development bill C-152. Authority to print com proceedings, 496; rep of com without amdt, 496
Assistance Plan bill C-207. Authority to print com proceedings, 931; rep of com without amdt, 931
Automotive Products, Canada-U.S. Agreement. Authority to print com proceedings, 809, rep of com recommending approval of Agreement, 853
Bank bill C-222. Authority to print com proceedings, 1750; rep of com without amdt, 1750
Bank of British Columbia bill S-16. Authority to print com proceedings, 330; rep of com with amdts, 367, 381-4
Bank of Canada bill C-190. Authority to print com proceedings, 1701; rep of com without amdt, 1701
Bank of Western Canada bill C-111. Authority to print com proceedings, 889; rep of com without amdt, 889
Bankruptcy bill S-17. Authority to print com proceedings, 314; rep of com with amdts, 577-80, 596-8; Commons amdts ref to com, 759-61; authority to print com proceedings, 809; rep of com, Commons amdts concurred in, 809-10
Bills of Exchange bill S-14. Authority to print com proceedings, 268; rep of com with amdts, 268-9
Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-144. Authority to print com proceedings, 540; rep of com without amdt, 540
Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-261. Authority to print com proceedings, 1462; rep of com without amdt, 1462
Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation bill S-13. Rep of com without amdt, 167-8
Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement bill 1966 C-154. Rep of com without amdt, 497
Citizenship bill S-59. Authority to print com proceedings, 1808; rep of com with amdt, 1808-11
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169. Authority to print com proceedings, 563; rep of com with amdt, 564, 593-4
Corporations bill S-51. Authority to print com proceedings, 1143; rep of com without amdt, 1143
Excelsior Life Insurance bill S-26. Rep of com without amdt, 496

Banking and Commerce Committee – Continued
Reports – Continued
Export and Import Permits bill S-23. Authority to print com proceedings, 363. Rep of com without amdt, 363
Farm Credit bill C-171. Rep of com without amdt, 525
Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements bill C-277. Authority to print com proceedings, 1660; rep of com without amdt, 1660
Film Development Corporation bill C-204. Authority to print com proceedings, 1543; rep of com without amdt, 1544
Fisheries Development bill C-145. Authority to print com proceedings, 524-5; rep of com without amdt, 525
Food and Drugs bill S-60. Authority to print com proceedings, 1833; rep of com with amdts, 1845-7
General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada bill S-8. Rep of com without amdt, 167
Government Organization bill C-178. Authority to print com proceedings, 714; rep of com without amdt, 714
Health Resources Fund bill C-199. Rep of com without amdt, 853
Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada bill S-12. Rep of com without amdt, 167
Income Life Insurance Company of Canada bill S-11. Rep of com without amdt, 167
Income Tax bill C-216. Authority to print com proceedings, 956; rep of com without amdt, 956
Industrial Research and Development Incentives bill C-252. Rep of com without amdt, 1591
Interpretation bill S-9. Authority to print com proceedings, 211; rep of com with amdts, 852
Labour (Standards) Code bill S-54. Authority to print com proceedings, 1195; rep of com without amdt, 1195
Lands Surveys bill S-48. Authority to print com proceedings, 1009; rep of com without amdt, 1009
La Société des Artisans bill S-41. Authority to print com proceedings, 878; rep of com without amdt, 878
Laurier Life Insurance Company bill S-27. Rep of com without amdt, 563
League Savings and Mortgage Company bill S-30. Rep of com without amdt, 563
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218. Authority to print com proceedings, 1168-9; rep of com without amdt, 1169
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47. Authority to print com proceedings, 1008; rep of com without amdt, 1009
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45. Authority to print com proceedings, 1007; rep of com without amdt, 1007
Medical Care bill C-227. Authority to print com proceedings, 1282; rep of com without amdt, 1282
National Museums bill S-57. Authority to print com proceedings, 1700; rep of com without amdt, 1700
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill 1966 C-185. Authority to print com proceedings, 614; rep of com without amdt, 614
North West Life Assurance Company of Canada bill S-25. Rep of com without amdt, 413
Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company bill S-6. Rep of com with amdt, 167
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55. Authority to print com proceedings, 1300; rep of com without amdt, 1300
Quebec Savings Banks bill C-223. Authority to print com proceedings, 1750; rep of com without amdt, 1750

Banking and Commerce Committee – Concluded
Reports – Concluded
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151. Authority to print com proceedings-rep of com with amdt, 714
Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories bill S-46. Authority to print com proceedings, 1007; rep of com without amdt, 1008
Seaboard Finance Company of Canada bill S-21. Rep of com without amdt, 413
Statuory Salaries Revision bill C-266. Rep of com without amdt, 1591
Training Allowance bill C-186. Authority to print com proceedings, 725-6; rep of com without amdt, 726
United Grain Growers Limited bill S-5. Rep of com without amdt, 166
United Investment Life Assurance Company bill S-40. Authority to print com proceedings, 808; rep of com without amdt, 808
Visiting Forces bill S-50. Authority to print com proceedings, 1169; rep of com with amdts, 1224
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42. Authority to print com proceedings, 889; rep of com without amdt, 890
York Life Insurance bill S-28. Rep of com with amdts, 496

Bank of British Columbia bill S-16. Hon. Mr. Farris. 1r, 133; 2r, 144-6; ref to com, 146; authority to print com proceedings, 330; rep of com with amdts, 367, see appendix 381-4; 3r, 367; Commons amdts, 1233, 1242, 1243-4; r.a., 1263

Bank of Canada
Cash and secondary reserves, 1675-6
Consultation between governor and government, 1675, 1677-9
Director, executive committee, pensions, 1676-7
Gold reserves, 1676
Monetary policy, responsibility for, 1677-8
"Payable to bearer on demand", 1676, 1679
Speakers: Honourable Senators
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 1674-7, 1679
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1679
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1677-9

Bank of Canada bill C-190. 1r, 1646; 2r, 1674-80; ref to com, 1680; authority to print com proceedings, 1701; rep of com without amdt, 1701; 3r, 1719

Bank of Western Canada
Capital stock, 883
Incorporators, 882-3
Shares to be held by non-residents, 883
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 884
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 881-4, 885
Roebuck, Arthur W., 885
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 884-5

Bank of Western Canada bill C-111. Hon. Mr. Leonard. 1r, 870; 2r, 881-5; ref to com, 885; authority to print com proceedings, 889; rep of com without amdt, 889; 3r, 889; r.a., 976

Bankruptcy
Abuse of bankruptcy laws, 247-9, 274-5
Briefs presented re administration of act, 248
Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, 248
Collusion between debtor and creditor, 225
Credit Grantors Association brief, 277
Creditor's lack of interest when bankruptcy declared, 264-5, 277
Deficiencies in bankruptcy act, 274-5
Discharge from bankruptcy, 216-17, 579
Fraud squad, 275
Gifts to trustees, 226
Information to be furnished by trustee, 217, 579
Judicial administration, Bankruptcy Court of Montreal, 251
Jurisdiction of federal Government, 277
Limitation on debt accumulation, 213
Mercier Commission, 248-52, 276, 277-8
Orderly payment of debts, 213
Preference as to debtor, 215-16
Press reports, 248, 252
Proposal, 215, 263, 579
Quebec bankruptcy rings, 248-50, 251, 252
Rec-Stone Co., 252
Reviewable transaction, 226
Solicitor-client privilege, 578, 759-60
Statistics on, 249
Summary administration, 212-13, 278
Superintendent of Bankruptcy, authority of, 213-14, 218, 226, 250, 577-8, 760
Transactions made at 'arm's length', 225, 226
Transfers of property prior to bankruptcy, 226
Trustees and inspectors, suspect activities and screening of, 250-1, 278
Trustees' obligations, 226
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 276-7, 761
Croll, David A., 274-6, 761
Flynn, Jacques, 263-5
Hayden, Salter A., 212-18, 277-9, 577-80, 759-60, 761
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 761
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 247-52
Walker, David J., 225-7, 760-1

Bankruptcy bill S-17. 1r, 159; 2r, 212-18, 225-7, 247-52, 263-5, 274-9; ref to com, 279; authority to print com proceedings, 314; rep of com with amdts 577-80; (see Appendix, 596-8); 3r, 580; Commons amdts (see Appendix, 777), ref to com, 759-61; authority to print com proceedings, 809; rep of com, Commons amdts concurred in, 809-10; r.a., 929

Banks and banking
Amdt to Bill C-222, Hon. Mr. McCutcheon, 1753, 1755, neg, 1756
Borrowing cost, 1733
Capital stock and shares, 1729-30, 1731, 1733
Cash reserves, 1729, 1731
Debentures, 1732
Directors, 1730-1, 1737-8, 1741, 1743-4
Interest rates, 1729, 1732, 1736-7
Mortgage loans, 1729, 1731-2
Non-resident shareholders, 1729, 1733-4, 1742
Shares in loan or trust company, 1732, 1741, 1744
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1753-5
Hayden, Salter A., 1740-3
Lang, Daniel A., 1728-35, 1744-5
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 1743-4
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 1735-40, 1750-3, 1755, 1756
See also names of individual banks

Baptist General Conference of Canada bill S-43. Hon. Mr. Haig. 1r, 878; 2r, 894-5; ref to com, 895

Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L.
Consumer Credit Joint Committee, 344
Divorce Committee, 22
Divorce Joint Committee, 343-4
Excelsior Insurance Company bill S-26, 393
Internal Economy Committee, 22
Penitentiaries Joint Committee, 344
Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway bill S-31, 453
Standing Committees, 23, 25-26, 258

Beaubien, Hon. L.P.
Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-261, 1459
Classification of institutions to be insured, 1459
Premiums, 1459
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1871-2
Economic wealth and per capita spending, 838
Health Resources Fund bill C-199, 837-8
Inflationary tendencies, 838
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1489
Economic factors of strikes, 1489
Taxation, 837, 838
World Exhibition, 1532
Highway safety and bilingual signs, 1532

Beaulieu, Madame Jeanne-Pauline, Mother of the Year, award of Florists Transworld Delivery Assoc., 399

Belisle, Hon. Rheal
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 103-7
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1853-7
Peacekeeping commitments, 1855
Press comment, 1854
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1277-8
Hate literature and propaganda, 1277-8
National unity, 103-4
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151, 673-6
Cost-price squeeze, 674
Farm Leadership Awards, 675
Sudbury Star article on Northern Ontario economy, 674-5
United Nations, 104-7
Communist China, question of admission to, 105
Pope Paul VI, His Holiness, visit to UN, 104-7

Benidickson, Hon. W. M., P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 9, 1966 C-248, 1216-17
Appropriation bill No. 2, 1967 C-282, 1761
Appropriation bill No. 3, 1967 C-283, 1765-6
Canadian National Railway bill C-165 (Bruce Lake), 416-17
Bruce Lake Iron Mine Co., sponsoring of by Steel Co. of Canada, 416
Costs of line, 416
Iron pellets development, guaranteed tonnage and penalty clause, 416-17
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229, 1409-11
Air Canada, interim financing requirements, 1410
Auditors, 1410, 1411
Capital expenditures, 1409
Deficit, 1410-11
Interest on government loan, 1410
Preferred stock purchases by Finance Minister, 1409-10
Temporary loans to CNR and to Air Canada, 1410
Estimates, 1761
Dollar items, 1761
World Exhibition, 1765-6
Export and Import Permits bill S-23, 344-6, 347
Area control, 345
Authority of Governor in Council, 345
Export controls, 345-6
Permits, 345
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 345
Income Tax bill C-259, 1719, 1720
Introduction to the Senate, 1
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1098
Territorial definitions, 1098
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 990-1
National Housing bill C-241, 1183-4
Low-cost homes, lack of loans for, 1184
Penitentiaries, report of Joint Committee, 1833, 1863-8, 1885

Bills, Numerically, Commons
See also individual titles
C-2 Fair Wages and Hours of Labour
C-3 Bank and Quebec Savings Banks
C-111 Bank of Western Canada
C-116 Appropriation No. 1, 1966
C-126 Redistribution
C-140 Appropriation No. 2, 1966
C-144 Bretton Woods Agreements
C-145 Fisheries Development
C-146 Northwest Territories
C-147 Yukon
C-149 Science Council of Canada
C-150 National Research Council
C-151 Rural Economic Development Fund
C-152 Agricultural and Rural Development
C-153 Aeronautics
C-154 Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement
C-157 Appropriation No. 3, 1966
C-159 Appropriation No. 4, 1966
C-160 Judges
C-161 Admiralty
C-165 Canadian National Railway (Amesdale to Bruce Lake)
C-169 Combines Investigation and Criminal Code
C-170 Public Service Staff Relations
C-171 Farm Credit
C-174 Company of Young Canadians
C-178 Government Organization
C-181 Public Service Employment
C-182 Financial Administration
C-185 Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance
C-186 Training Allowance
C-189 Appropriation No. 5, 1966
C-190 Bank of Canada
C-193 Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment
C-194 National Arts Centre
C-197 Student Loans
C-198 Excise Tax
C-199 Health Resources Fund
C-200 Customs Tariff
C-201 Exchequer Court
C-204 Film Development Corporation
C-205 Dairy Commission
C-207 Assistance Plan
C-208 Crop Insurance
C-210 Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous)
C-211 Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer
C-213 Atlantic Development Board
C-215 St. Lawrence Ports Working Conditions
C-216 Income Tax
C-218 Livestock Feed Assistance
C-220 Immigration Appeal Board
C-221 Pension Benefits Standards
C-222 Bank
C-223 Quebec Savings Banks

Bills, Numerically, Commons – Concluded
C-224 Appropriation No. 6, 1966
C-226 Appropriation No. 7, 1966
C-227 Medical Care
C-229 Canadian National Railways
C-230 Maintenance of Railway Operation
C-231 National Transportation
C-241 National Housing
C-243 Canadian Forces Reorganization
C-245 Appropriation No. 8, 1966
C-248 Appropriation No. 9, 1966
C-251 Old Age Security
C-252 Industrial Research and Development Incentives
C-253 Export Credits Insurance
C-254 Appropriation No. 10, 1966
C-259 Income Tax
C-261 Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation
C-262 Judges
C-265 Governor General's Retiring Annuity
C-266 Statutory Salaries Revision
C-267 Judges (Salaries)
C-268 Excise Tax and Old Age Security
C-270 Small Businesses Loans
C-271 Appropriation No. 1, 1967
C-274 Rural Economic Development Fund
C-277 Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements
C-278 Adult Occupational Training
C-280 Income Tax
C-282 Appropriation No. 2, 1967
C-283 Appropriation No. 3, 1967
C-293 Appropriation No. 4, 1967

Bills, Numerically, Senate
See also individual titles
S-1 Railways (pro forma)
S-2 Ottawa Terminal Railway
S-3 Finance Charges (Disclosure)
S-4 Aetna Casualty Company of Canada
S-5 United Grain Growers Limited
S-6 Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company
S-7 Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated
S-8 General Mortgage Service Corporation
S-9 Interpretation
S-10 Interprovincial Pipe Line Company
S-11 Income Life Insurance Company of Canada
S-12 Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada
S-13 Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation
S-14 Bills of Exchange
S-15 Milltown Bridge
S-16 Bank of British Columbia
S-17 Bankruptcy
S-18 Canadian Board of Missions of the Church of God (General Offices: Anderson, Indiana)
S-19 Divorce (Extension of Grounds)

Bills, Numerically, Senate – Concluded
S-20 Presbyterian Church in Canada, Trustee Board of S-21 Seaboard Finance Company of Canada
S-22 Electoral Boundaries Readjustment
S-23 Export and Import Permits
S-24 Guides Catholiques du Canada (secteur français)
S-25 North West Life Assurance Company of Canada
S-26 Excelsior Life Insurance Company
S-27 Laurier Life Insurance Company
S-28 York (Anniversary) Life Insurance Company
S-29 Endocrinology, International Society of S-30 League Savings and Mortgage Company
S-31 Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway
S-32 Canadian Pacific Railway (Saskatchewan)
S-33 United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces
S-34 Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta)
S-35 Labour (Safety) Code
S-36 Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company
S-37 Mennonite Central Committee (Canada)
S-38 Evangelical Convenant Church of God
S-39 Lutheran Church in America – Canada Section
S-40 United Investment Life Assurance Company
S-41 La Société des Artisans
S-42 World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation
S-43 Baptist General Conference of Canada
S-44 Richelieu Bridge Company
S-45 Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary
S-46 Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary
S-47 Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary
S-48 Lands Surveys
S-49 Criminal Code (Hate propaganda)
S-50 Visiting Forces
S-51 Corporations
S-52 Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited
S-53 Bank and Quebec Savings Banks
S-54 Labour (Standards) Code
S-55 Postal Services Interruption Relief
S-56 Income Tax Agreements
S-57 National Museums
S-58 Teleferry
S-59 Citizenship
S-60 Food and Drugs

Bills of Exchange
Cheques marked 'For deposit', Commons amdt, 400
Compliance with Canada Labour (Standards) Code re holidays, 209, 223
Non-juridical days added or deleted, 209-10, 223
Payment of bills of exchange on Saturday or non-juridical day, 209, 223
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Cook, Eric, 209-10, 400
Hayden, Salter A., 268-9
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 223

Bills of Exchange bill S-14. 1r, 132; 2r, 209-10, 223; ref to com, 223; authority to print com proceedings, 268; rep of com with amdts, 268-9; 3r, 296; Commons amdt, 400; r.a., 547

Bills, Private

See also individual titles

Aetna Casualty Company of Canada S-4. Hon. Mr. Cook. 1r, 29; 2r-ref to com, 64; rep of com with amdt, 166; fee paid last session, 168; 3r, 187

Bank of British Columbia S-16. Hon. Mr. Farris. 1r, 133; 2r, 144-6; ref to com, 146; authority to print com proceedings, 330; rep of com with amdts, 367, see appendix 381-4; 3r, 367; Commons amdts, 1233, 1242-4; r.a., 1263

Bank of Western Canada C-111. Hon. Mr. Leonard. 1r, 870; 2r, 881-5; ref to com, 885; authority to print com proceedings, 889; rep of com without amdt, 889; 3r, 889; r.a., 976

Baptist General Conference of Canada S-43. Hon. Mr. Haig. 1r, 878; 2r, 894-5; ref to com, 895

Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation S-13. Hon. Mr. Cook. 1r, 100; 2r, 142-3; ref to com, 143; rep of com without amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1263

Canadian Board of Missions of the Church of God S-18. (General Offices: Anderson, Indiana). Hon. Mr. Cameron. 1r, 166; 2r, 190-1; ref to com, 191; rep of com with amdts, 580-1; 3r, 607; r.a., 930

Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta) S-34. Hon. Mr. Prowse. 1r, 471; 2r, 535-7; ref to com, 537; authority to print com proceedings, 632-3; rep of com without amdt, 633; 3r, 658; r.a., 929

Canadian Pacific Railway (Saskatchewan) S-32. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 471; 2r, 534-5; ref to com, 535; authority to print com proceedings, 632; rep of com without amdt, 632; 3r, 658; r.a., 929

Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company S-36. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 563; 2r, 610-11; ref to com, 611; authority to print com proceedings, 743; rep of com with amdt, 743-4; 3r, 744

Endocrinology, International Society of, S-29. Hon. Mr. Molson. 1r, 413; 2r, 513-15; ref to com, 515; rep of com without amdt, 688; 3r, 688; r.a., 930

Evangelical Convenant Church of Canada S-38. Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn. 1r, 650; 2r, 704; ref to com, 704; rep of com with amdt, 848-9; 3r, 868; r.a., 1442

Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated S-7. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 39; 2r, 67-68; ref to com, 68; rep of com without amdt, fee paid last session, 134; 3r, 134; r.a., 397; refund of fees, 1241

Excelsior Life Insurance Company S-26. Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien. 1r, 393; 2r, 406-8; ref to com, 408; rep of com without amdt, 496; 3r, 496

Bills, Private – Continued

General Mortgage Service Corporation S-8. Hon. Mr. Leonard. 1r, 39; 2r-ref to com, 68; rep of com without amdt, 167; fee paid last session, 168; 3r, 187; Commons amdt, 1233; r.a., 1263

Guides Catholiques du Canada (secteur français) S-24. Hon. Mrs. Jodoin. 1r, 343

Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada S-12. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 91; 2r, 144; ref to com, 144; rep of com without amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1263

Income Life Insurance Company of Canada S-11. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 91; 2r, 143-4; ref to com, 144; rep of com without amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1263

Interprovincial Pipe Line Company S-10. Hon. Mr. Molson. 1r, 57; 2r, 82-84; ref to com, 84; rep of com without amdt, 133; fee paid last session, 133; 3r, 134; Commons amdts, 1832; r.a., 1925

La Société des Artisans S-41. Hon. Mr. Deschatelets. 1r, 770; 2r, 811-12; ref to com, 812; authority to print com proceedings, 878; rep of com without amdt, 878; 3r, 879; r.a., 1925

Laurier Life Insurance Company S-27. Hon. Mr. Flynn. 1r, 404; 2r, 493-4; ref to com, 493; rep of com without amdt, 563; 3r, 586; r.a., 1925

League Savings and Mortgage Company S-30. Hon. Harold Connolly. 1r, 413; 2r, 455-6; ref to com, 456; rep of com without amdt, 563; 3r, 586; r.a., 1339

Lutheran Church in America, Canada Section, S-39. Hon. W. Ross Macdonald. 1r, 650; 2r, 712-13; ref to com, 713; rep of com without amdt, 848; 3r, 848; r.a., 930

Mennonite Central Committee (Canada), S-37. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 604; 2r, 638-9; ref to com, 639; rep of com without amdt, 688; 3r, 688; r.a., 930

North West Life Assurance Company of Canada bill S-25. Hon. Mr. Croll. 1r, 363; 3r, 395-6; ref to com, 396; rep of com without amdt, 413; 3r, 413; r.a., 1611

Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company S-6. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 39; 2r-ref to com, 67; rep of com with amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1175

Presbyterian Church in Canada, Trustee Board of, S-20. Hon. Mr. Kinley. 1r, 211; 2r, 265; ref to com, 265; rep of com without amdt, 367; 3r, 367; r.a., 648

Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company S-31. Hon. Mr. Bourget. 1r, 453; 2r, 586-8; ref to com, 588; rep of com without amdt, 632; 3r, 658

Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited S-52. Hon. Mr. Hastings. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1091-2; ref to com, 1092; rep of com with amdts, 1164; 3r, 1196

Seaboard Finance Company of Canada S-21. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 293; 2r, 317-18; ref to com, 318; rep of com without amdt, 413; 3r, 446

United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces S-33. Hon. Mr. Brooks. 1r, 471; 2r, 509; ref to com, 509; rep of com without amdt, 580; 3r, 580; r.a., 930. Refund of fees, 987

Bills, Private – Concluded

United Grain Growers Limited S-5. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 39; 2r, 64-67; ref to com, 67; rep of com without amdt, 166; 3r, 187; r.a., 547

United Investment Life Assurance Co. S-40. Hon. Mr. Leonard. 1r, 666; 2r, 717-18; ref to com, 718; authority to print proceedings, 808; rep of com without amdt, 808; 3r, 808-9

York Life Insurance Company S-28. Hon. Mr. Walker. 1r, 413; 2r, 454; ref to com, 454; rep of com with amdts, 496; 3r, 530; r.a., 1925

Bills, Public

Government bills initiated in the Commons

Admiralty C-161. 1r, 386; 2r, 386-7; 3r, 387; r.a., 397

Adult Occupational Training C-278. 1r, 1885; 2r, 1897-1914; 3r, 1914; r.a., 1925

Aeronautics C-153. 1r, 401; 2r, 451-2, 512-13; ref to com, 513; authority to print com proceedings, 525; rep of com without amdt, 525; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Agricultural and Rural Development C-152. 1r, 401; 2r, 414-16, 449-51; ref to com, 451; authority to print com proceedings, 496; rep of com without amdt; 496; 3r, 350; r.a., 547

Appropriation No. 1, 1966 C-116. 1r, 107; 2r, 107-12, 118-25; 3r, 125; r.a., 131

Appropriation No. 2, 1966 C-140. 1r, 283; 2r, 283-9; 3r, 289-90; r.a., 291

Appropriation No. 3, 1966 C-157. 1r, 340; 2r, 347-52, 371-3; 3r, 394; r.a., 396

Appropriation No. 4, 1966 C-159. 1r, 360; 2r, 370-1; 3r, 394; r.a., 397

Appropriation No. 5, 1966 C-189. 1r, 600; 2r, 626-31; 3r, 636-8; r.a., 648 (Answers to questions, 801-7)

Appropriation No. 6, 1966 C-224. 1r, 913; 2r, 916-21; 3r, 921; r.a., 930. (Answers to questions, 1000-2).

Appropriation No. 7, 1966 C-226. 1r, 923; 2r, 923-9; 3r, 929; r.a., 930

Appropriation No. 8, 1966 C-245. 1r, 1169; 2r, 1169-74; 3r, 1174; r.a., 1175

Appropriation No. 9, 1966 C-248. 1r, 1197; 2r, 1212-23, 3r, 1226; r.a., 1232. (Answers to questions 1352-4).

Appropriation No. 10, 1966 C-254. 1r, 1234; 2r, 1244-9; 3r, 1249; r.a., 1263

Appropriation No. 1, 1967 C-271. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1527-33; 3r, 1533; r.a., 1541

Appropriation No. 2, 1967 C-282. 1r, 1758; 2r, 1758-61, 3r, 1761; r.a., 1768

Appropriation No. 3, 1967 C-283. 1r, 1761; 2r, 1761-8; 3r, 1768; r.a., 1768

Bills, Public – Continued

Government bills initiated in the Commons

Appropriation No. 4, 1967 C-293. 1r, 1885; 2r, 1915-20; 3r, 1920; r.a., 1925

Arts Centre, see National Arts Centre

Assistance Plan C-207. 1r, 897; 2r, 897-909; ref to com, 909; authority to print com proceedings, 931; rep of com without amdt, 931; 3r, 931-5; r.a., 976

Atlantic Development Board C-213. 1r, 799; 2r, 815-20; 3r, 854; r.a., 929

Bank C-222. 1r, 1728; 2r, 1728-45; ref to com, 1745; authority to print proceedings, 1750; rep of com without amdt, 1750; m for 3r, 1750, m for amdt, 1753-6, neg, 1756, 3r, 1756; r.a., 1768

Bank and Quebec Savings Banks C-3. 1r, 300; 2r, 314-15; 3r, 315; r.a., 397

Bank of Canada C-190. 1r, 1646; 2r, 1674-80; ref to com, 1680; authority to print com proceedings, 1701; rep of com without amdt, 1701; 3r, 1719

Bretton Woods Agreements C-144. 1r, 470; 2r, 506-9; ref to com, 534; authority to print com proceedings, 540; rep of com without amdt, 540; 3r, 540; r.a., 547

Canada Assistance Plan, see Assistance Plan

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation C-261. 1r, 1443; 2r, 1447-60; ref to com, 1460; authority to print com proceedings, 1462; rep of com without amdt, 1462; 3r, 1462; r.a., 1467

Canada Student Loans, see Student Loans

Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement C-154. 1r, 401-2; 2r, 438-46; ref to com, 446; rep of com without amdt, 497; 3r, 530; r.a., 547

Canadian Forces Reorganization C-243. 1r, 1820; 2r, 1834-45, 1848-62, 1886-97; 3r, 1897; r.a., 1925

Canadian National Railway (Bruce Lake) C-165. 1r, 401; 2r, 416-19; ref to com, 419; authority to print com proceedings, 453; rep of com without amdt, 453-4; 3r, 476-7; r.a. 547

Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous) C-210. 1r, 770; 2r, 787-90; ref to com, 790; authority to print com proceedings, 849; rep of com without amdt, 849-50; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee C-229. 1r, 1348; 2r, 1409-16; ref to com, 1416; authority to print com proceedings, 1433; rep of com without amdt, 1434; 3r, 1434-6; r.a., 1442

Combines Investigation and Criminal Code C-169. 1r, 452; 2r, 457-62; ref to com, 462; authority to print com proceedings, 563; rep of com with amdt, 563-4, 593-4; 3r, 594; r.a., 758

Company of Young Canadians C-174. 1r, 808; 2r, 854-6; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Bills, Public – Continued

Government bills initiated in the Commons

Crop Insurance C-208. 1r, 909; 2r, 909-13, 921-3; 3r, 923; r.a., 930

Customs Tariff C-200. 1r, 762; 2r, 762-5, 791-2; 3r, 811; r.a., 929

Dairy Commission C-205. 1r, 769; 2r, 821-30; ref to com, 830; authority to print com proceedings, 853; rep of com without amdt, 853; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Exchequer Court C-201. 1r, 790; 2r, 814-15; 3r, 854; r.a., 930

Excise Tax C-198. 1r, 769; 2r, 797-9; 3r, 811; r.a., 929

Excise Tax and Old Age Security C-268. 1r, 1554; 2r, 1584-6, 1596-1604; ref to com, 1604; authority to print com proceedings, 1604; rep of com without amdt, 1604-5; 3r, 1605; r.a., 1611

Export Credits Insurance C-253. 1r, 1314; 2r, 1314-17; 3r, 1317; r.a., 1339

Fair Wages and Hours of Labour C-2. 1r, 649; 2r, 685-7, 696-704; ref to com, 704; authority to print com proceedings, 744; rep of com without amdt, 744; 3r, 744; r.a., 758

Farm Credit C-171. 1r, 401; 2r, 515-22; ref to com, 522; rep of com without amdt, 525; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements C-277. 1r, 1604; 2r, 1620-31, 1633-43; ref to com, 1643; authority to print com proceedings, 1660; rep of com without amdt, 1660; 3r, 1670; r.a., 1768

Film Development Corporation C-204. 1r, 1408; 2r, 1424-32; ref to com, 1432; authority to print com proceedings, 1543; rep of com without amdt, 1544; 3r, 1556-9; r.a., 1611

Financial Administration C-182. 1r, 1480; 2r, 1491-3, 1498-9, 1510-15; 3r, 1526; r.a., 1541

Fisheries Development C-145. 1r, 401; 2r, 463-70, 477-82; ref to com, 483; authority to print com proceedings, 524-5; rep of com, 525; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Government Organization 1966 C-178. 1r, 649; 2r, 677-85, 689-96; ref to com, 696; authority to print com proceedings, 714; rep of com without amdt, 715; 3r, 727-9; r.a., 758

Governor General's Retiring Annuity bill C-265. 1r, 1495; 2r, 1495-7, 1548-9; 3r, 1559; r.a., 1611

Health Resources Fund C-199. 1r, 778; 2r, 831-40; ref to com, 840; rep of com without amdt, 853; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Immigration Appeal Board C-220. 1r, 1542; 2r, 1567-70, 1580-4; ref to com, 1584; authority to print com proceedings, 1660; rep of com without amdt, 1660; 3r, 1670-1; r.a., 1768

Bills, Public – Continued

Government bills initiated in the Commons

Income Tax C-216. 1r, 943; 2r, 943-54; ref to com, 954; authority to print com proceedings, 956; rep of com without amdt, 956; m for 3r, 958, m in amdt, 956-61, defeated, 961; 3r, 961; r.a., 976

Income Tax C-259. 1r, 1647; 2r, 1647-60; ref to com, 1660; authority to print com proceedings, 1701; rep of com without amdt, 1701; 3r, 1719-20; r.a., 1768

Income Tax C-280. 1r, 1885; 2r, 1914-15; 3r, 1915; r.a., 1925

Industrial Research and Development Incentives C-252. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1533-7, 1549-51, 1559-63; ref to com, 1563; rep of com without amdt, 1591; 3r, 1591; r.a., 1611

Judges C-160. 1r, 387; 2r, 387-93; 3r, 393; r.a., 397

Judges C-262. 1r, 1348; 2r, 1367-8; 3r, 1368; r.a., 1442

Judges C-267. 1r, 1516; 2r, 1516-24; 3r, 1526; r.a., 1541

Livestock Feed Assistance C-218. 1r, 1076; 2r, 1083-90, 1096-9, 1104-7, 1116-19, 1129-33, 1137-8, 1158-60; ref to com, 1160; authority to print com proceedings, 1168-9; rep of com without amdt, 1169; 3r, 1169; r.a., 1175

Maintenance of Railway Operation C-230. 1r, 1013; 2r, 1013-37; 3r, 1037; r.a., 1037

Medical Care C-227. 1r, 1234; 2r, 1234-8, 1249-60, 1264-73; ref to com, 1273-4; authority to print com proceedings, 1282; rep of com without amdt, 1282; 3r, 1282-3; r.a., 1339

National Arts Centre C-194. 1r, 954; 2r, 961-8; 3r, 969; r.a., 976

National Defence, see Canadian Forces Reorganization

National Housing C-241. 1r, 1177; 2r, 1177-87; 3r, 1187; r.a., 1194

National Research Council C-150. 1r, 453; 2r, 483-5; ref to com, 485; authority to print com proceedings, 540-1; rep of com with amdts, 591, 599, 611-12; 3r, 612; r.a., 758

National Transportation C-231. 1r, 1341; 2r, 1341-7, 1377-82, 1384-1405; ref to com, 1405; authority to print com proceedings, 1417; rep of com without amdt, 1420; 3r, 1420-3; r.a., 1442

Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance C-185. 1r, 551; 2r, 551-61, 581-6; ref to com, 586; authority to print com proceedings, 614; rep of com without amdt, 614; 3r, 634-6; r.a., 648

Northwest Territories C-146. 1r, 561; 2r, 588-92, 607-10, 645-8; 3r, 648; r.a., 648

Old Age Security bill C-251. 1r, 1317; 2r, 1317-38; 3r, 1338; r.a., 1339

Pension Benefits Standards C-221. 1r, 1610-11; 2r, 1643-6, 1671-4; 3r, 1702; r.a., 1768

Bills, Public – Continued
Government bills initiated in the Commons

Public Service Employment C-181. 1r, 1477; 2r, 1477-80, 1500-9; 3r, 1509; r.a., 1509

Public Service Staff Relations. 1r, 1473; 2r, 1473-7, 1481-91; 3r, 1498; r.a., 1509

Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer C-211. 1r, 790; 2r, 840-3; 3r, 854; r.a., 930

Quebec Savings Banks C-223. 1r, 1745; 2r, 1745-7; ref to com, 1745; authority to print proceedings, 1750; rep of com without amdt, 1750; 3r, 1750; r.a., 1768

Redistribution C-126. 1r, 158; 2r, 168-70; 3r, 170; r.a., 178

Research Council, see National Research Council

Rural Economic Development Fund C-151. 1r, 548-9; 2r, 549-51, 662-6, 671-7; ref to com, 677; authority to print com proceedings, 714; rep of com with amdt, 714; 3r, 726-7; r.a., 929

Rural Economic Development Fund C-274. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1551-3, 1564-7; 3r, 1578-80, 1591-6; r.a., 1611

St. Lawrence Ports Working Conditions C-215. 1r, 969; 2r, 969-76; 3r, 976; r.a., 977

Science Council of Canada C-149. 1r, 401; 2r, 419-26, 446-8; ref to com, 448; authority to print com proceedings, 541; rep of com without amdt, 541; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Small Businesses Loans C-270. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1537-40, 1551; 3r, 1559; r.a., 1611

Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment 1966 C-193. 1r, 808; 2r, 843-7, 868-70; m for 3r, 879, m in amdt, 879-80, agreed to, 881; 3r, 881; concurrence by Commons in Senate amdt, 929; r.a., 930

Statutory Salaries Revision C-266. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1544-8, 1563-4; ref to com, 1564; rep of com without amdt, 1591; 3r, 1591; r.a., 1611

Student Loans C-197. 1r, 765; 2r, 765-9, 792-6; 3r, 811; r.a., 929

Training Allowance C-186. 1r, 707; 2r, 718-23; ref to com, 723; authority to print com proceedings, 725-6; rep of com without amdt, 726; 3r, 747; r.a., 758

Yukon C-147. 1r, 649; 2r, 704-6, 710-12; 3r, 715; r.a., 758

Government bills initiated in the Senate

Bank and Quebec Savings Banks S-53. 1r, 1188; 2r, 1188; 3r, 1189; r.a., 1209

Bankruptcy S-17. 1r, 159; 2r, 212-18, 225-7, 247-52, 263-5, 274-9; ref to com, 279; authority to print com proceedings, 314; rep of com with amdts, 577-80 (see appendix 596-8); 3r, 580; Commons amdts ref to com, 579-61 (see appendix 777); authority to print com proceedings, 809; rep of com, Commons amdts concurred in, 809-10; r.a., 929

Bills, Public – Continued
Government bills initiated in the Senate

Bills of Exchange S-14. 1r, 132; 2r, 209-10, 223; ref to com, 223; authority to print com proceedings, 268; rep of com with amdts, 268-9; 3r, 296; Commons amdt, 400; r.a., 547

Canada Corporations, see Corporations

Canada Labour
See Labour (Safety) Code,
Labour (Standards) Code.

Canada Lands Surveys, see Lands Surveys

Canadian Citizenship, see Citizenship

Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, see World Exhibition

Citizenship S-59. 1r, 1715; 2r, 1773-8, 1788-91; ref to com, 1791; authority to print com proceedings, 1808; rep of com with amdt, 1808-11; 3r, 1821

Corporations S-51. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1099-1100, 1107-9; ref to com, 1109; authority to print com proceedings, 1143; rep of com without amdt, 1143; 3r, 1143; r.a., 1442

Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) S-49. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1109-14, 1119-21, 1126-9, 1135-6, 1198-1205, 1210-12, 1227-31, 1366-7, 1702-9; ref to com, 1709-10

Divorce (Extension of Grounds) S-19. Hon. Mr. Roebuck. 1r, 185-6; 2r, 233-42, 243-7, 258-63, 273-4, 377-80, 394-5, 487-93; amdt that bill be ref to Special Joint Committee on Divorce, 497-506; agreed to 506

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment S-22. Hon. Mr. Pouliot. 1r, 305; 2r, 337-8, 352-7, 408-9; bill withdrawn, 409

Export and Import Permits S-23. 1r, 313; 2r, 344-7; ref to com, 347; authority to print com proceedings, 363; m for 3r, 363-7; 3r, 393-4; r.a., 547

Finance Charges (Disclosure) S-3. Hon. Mr. Croll. 1r, 28-29; m for 2r, 359; m in amdt to ref bill to joint committee, agreed to, 359

Food and Drugs S-60. 1r, 1772; 2r, 1792-1802, 1812-19, 1821-30; ref to com, 1830; authority to print com proceedings, 1833; rep of com with amdts, 1848

Income Tax Agreements S-56. 1r, 1350; 2r, 1369-77, 1418-19; 3r, 1424; r.a., 1541

Interpretation S-9. 1r, 57; 2r, 109-12, 204-6; ref to com, 206; authority to print com proceedings, 211; rep of com with amdts, 852; 3r, 852

Labour (Safety) Code S-35. 1r, 561-2; 2r, 604-7, 640-5, 658-61; ref to com, 661; auth- to print com proceedings, 725; rep of com with amdts, 850-2; 3r, 852; r.a., 1340

Bills, Public – Concluded
Government bills initiated in the Senate

Labour (Standards) Code S-54. 1r, 1189; 2r, 1189-94; ref to com, 1194; authority to print com proceedings, 1195; rep of com without amdt, 1195; 3r, 1195; r.a., 1263

Lands Surveys S-48. 1r, 980-7; 2r, 996-8; ref to com, 999; authority to print proceedings, 1009; rep of com without amdt, 1009; 3r, 1009; r.a., 1263

Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary S-47. 1r, 980; 2r, 995; ref to com, 995; authority to print com proceedings, 1008; rep of com without amdt, 1009; 3r, 1009; r.a., 1263

Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary S-45. 1r, 979; 2r, 988-94; ref to com, 994; authority to print com proceedings, 1007; rep of com without amdt, 1007; 3r, 1007; r.a., 1339

Milltown Bridge S-15. 1r, 132-3; 2r, 177-8; ref to com, 178; authority to print com proceedings, 224; rep of com without amdt, 224; 3r, 247; r.a., 397

National Museums S-57. 1r, 1577; 2r, 1617-20, 1680-3; ref to com, 1683; authority to print com proceedings, 1700; rep of com without amdt, 1700; 3r, 1700-1

Ottawa Terminal Railway S-2. 1r, 22; 2r, 84-87; ref to com, 87; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com without amdt, 186; 3r, 201

Postal Services Interruption Relief S-55. 1r, 1264; 2r, 1293-8; ref to com, 1298; authority to print com proceedings, 1300; rep of com without amdt, 1300; 3r, 1300; Commons amdt, 1516, 1527; r.a., 1541

Railways (pro forma) S-1. 1r, 6

Richelieu Bridge Company S-44. 1r, 979; 2r, 1100-2; ref to com, 1102; authority to print com proceedings, 1243

Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary S-46. 1r, 980; 2r, 994; ref to com, 994; authority to print proceedings, 1007; rep of com without amdt, 1008; 3r, 1008; r.a., 1263

Teleferry S-58. 1r, 1668; 2r, 1710-13; 3r, 1720

Visiting Forces S-50. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1122-3, 1161-3; ref to com, 1163; authority to print com proceedings, 1169; rep of com with amdts, 1224; 3r, 1224

World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, S-42. 1r, 864; 2r, 885-8; ref to com, 888; authority to print com proceedings, 889; rep of com without amdt, 889; 3r, 890-2; r.a., 976

Bishop, Hon. Charles L.
Deceased September 28, 1966
Tributes, 1053-5

Blois, Hon. Fred M.
Agricultural and Rural Development bill C-152, 448-50
Federal-provincial agreement, 449
Nova Scotia, 449-50
Dyking, drainage and other projects, 449-50
Electric power research, 449
Market-garden farm unit, 449-50
Tourist development, 450
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, the late, 14
Financial Administration bill C-182, 1498-9
Responsibilities of Treasury Board, 1498-9
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1104-7
Cattle breeding, decrease in, 1105
Cultivation in Maritimes for grain production, 1105-6
Transportation costs, 1105
Youth interest in farming through 4-H clubs, 1106

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.
Deceased February 20, 1966
Tributes, 147-58
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 48-55
Aging, Special Committee, appointment and members, 23
Bicultural co-operation, 55
Buchanan, Hon. John A., retired, 19
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, the late, 12
Connolly, Hon. John J., recovery from illness, 138-9
Crerar, Hon. T.A., 60th wedding anniversary, 100
Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, appointment as, 8-11
Divorce Committee, appointment, 23-24
Economic prosperity, 51-52
Gross national product, 51
Manpower and national resources, effective use of, 52
Unemployment decrease, 51
Emergency sittings, authority to convene Senate during adjournment, 24
Estimates, motion to ref to Finance Com, 39-40
Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated bill S-7, 134
Grant, Hon. Thomas V., retired, 19
Internal Economy Committee appointment, 23
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 11
Library of Parliament, 37-38, 132
Medicare, 54
Pension Plan, 53-54
Posthumous honour of Privy Councillor, suggestion by Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 473
Printing of Parliament, 38, 132
Property qualification of Senators, 132
Restaurant of Parliament, 38
Retirement of Senators, 50-51
Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., retired, 18
Senate committees, work of, 49-50
Standing Committees, 37
Tremblay, Hon. Leonard D.S., retired, 18-19
Universities, scholarships and bursaries, 52-53
Wood, Hon. Thomas H., the late, 11-12

Boundaries, provincial
Lands Surveys bill S-48, 980-7, 996-9, 1009
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47. 980, 995, 1008-9
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 979, 988-94, 1007
Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-46, 980, 994, 1007-8

Bourget, Hon. Maurice., P.C.
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 157
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 158
National and Royal Anthems, 1778
Privy Council appointment, 162
Public Service Joint Committee, 744, 770-1
Report, 1923-4
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1473-7
Collective bargaining rights, 1474-5
Employee grievances, 1475-6
Grievance procedures, 1476
Public Service Staff Relations Board, 1474
Retroactivity to pay review date, 1476
Safety and security of the public, 1475
Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company bill S-31, 453, 586-8
Iron Ore Co. developments in northern Quebec, 587-8
U.S. investments, 587
Time extension to complete railway, 586-7
Speaker, acting, 432, 453, 496, 523, 540, 1038
Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment bill C-193, 843-7, 879, 880
Appeals to Treasury Board, 847
Armed forces pensioner re-employed in Public Service, 846
Death benefit, 846
Diplomatic services, 845-6
Employment after retirement, 847
Intercolonial and PEI Railways employees, 845-6
Portability of benefits, 846
Public Service, 844
RCMP and armed forces, 845
Superannuation or pension acts amended under bill C-193, 844

Bourque, Hon. Romuald
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 666-71
Canada's potential, suggested Senate study of, 670-1
Minority groups, unrest and dissension created by, 667-9
Quebec Savings Banks bill C-223, 1745-7
Cash reserve, 1746
Directors, 1746
Interest and charges, 1746
Lending and investment powers, 1746-7
Queen Elizabeth II, tribute in Montreal newspaper, 666-7

Bowden, Lord, guest and speaker in Senate Chamber, 1716-18

Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, P.C.
Deceased March 31, 1966
Tributes, 360-3

Bretton Woods Agreements
Canadian borrowings, 532
Group of Ten, 532
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 506-9, 531
International Monetary Fund, 506-9, 531
Quotas and contributions, 533-4
Report of Finance Minister, amdt to effect submission on calendar year basis, 506
Reserve asset, 532-4
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 530-4
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 506-9

Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-144. 1r, 470; 2r, 506-9, 530-4; ref to com, 534; authority to print com proceedings, 540; rep of com without amdt, 540; 3r, 540; r.a., 547

British Columbia
Fishermen and packers, agreement re prices, 458-62, 563-4, 593-4
Fishing monopoly, 469
Indian fishermen, brief re encroachment by foreign fishermen, 481

British North America Act, 126-9
Boundaries of provinces, provisions re, 995
Provisions re money bills, 980-7
Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, excerpt from, 982
House of Commons amdt to Senate bill M-9 re National Parks (1947), and other precedents, 982-3
House of Lords procedures, 982-3
See Constitution of Canada

Broadcasting, 253-5, 287-8
See Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Brooks, Hon. A.J., P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 40-48
Appropriation bill No. 1 C-116, 118-21
Appropriation bill No. 5 C-189, 628-30, 631
Appropriation bill No. 6 C-224, 919, 920
Appropriation bill No. 9 C-248, 1214-15
Bank of Western Canada bill C-111, 884
Bishop, Hon. Charles L., the late, 1054
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., appt. as deputy leader, 8-9
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 149
Bowden, Lord, guest in Senate Chamber, 1718
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, the late, 361

Brooks, Hon. A.J., P.C., – Continued
Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-144, 530-4
Canadian borrowings, 531
Group of Ten, 532
International Bank, 531
International Monetary Fund, 531
Quotas and contributions, 533-4
Reserve asset, 532-3
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1851, 1886-92
Defence of Canada, 1888-9, 1890, 1892
Peacekeeping commitments, 1888-9
Uniforms, 1890-1
Canadian National Railway bill C-165 (Bruce Lake), 418-19
Elimination of branch lines, 418
Employment, 418-19
Citizenship bill S-59, 1809
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, the late, 12
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 149-50
Connolly, Hon. John J., return after illness, 304-5
Crerar, Hon. T.A., retired, 572-3
Crerar, Hon. T.A., sixtieth wedding anniversary, 100
Dairy Commission bill C-205, 826-8, 829, 830
Halifax Chronicle, article on briefs presented by United Milk Producers Assoc., 827-8
Income of dairy farmers, 828
Prices, 827
Davies, Hon. W. Rupert, the late, 1613-14
Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, 1052
Deutsch report, 42-43, 44
Divorce, Joint Committee, 316
Dutch Elm disease, 295
Estimates, 118-21, 331-2, 334, 370, 628-30, 771-2, 919, 920, 1215, 1245-7, 1354
Administrative and financial errors of Government, 119
Auditor General's report, 119
Capital outflow of Canadian funds, 120
Centennial Commission, 1215, 1354
Colombo Plan and wheat sales to India, 771
Dollar items, 771-2
External affairs, 629
External aid, India and Pakistan, 1245-7
Feed assistance to provinces, 771
Fisheries, lamprey control and research, inquiry, 629, 725, 801-2
Freight assistance, 920, 1000
Glassco Commission recommendations, implementation of, 119
Government expenditures, 1214
Immigrants, assistance to, 920, 1000
Inflationary tendencies, 120-1
National Defence, 1214-15
Accommodation overseas, 1215
Mutual aid, 1214-15
Oromocto, 1214
National Employment Service, 920, 1000
National Gallery, 1215, 1352-4
Northern affairs and national resources, 629-30
Northumberland Strait construction, 771-2

Brooks, Hon. A.J., P.C., – Continued
Estimates – Concluded
Undertaking by Leader of Government that passage of bill will not preclude further discussion, 919, 920
University grants, 1215
U.S. investment guidelines, effect on Canadian economy, 119-20
Veterans affairs, 920-1, 1000-1, 1215
Export and Import Permits bill S-23, 346-7
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 345-6
Export Credits Insurance bill C-253, 1315-16
Finance Committee study of Estimates, 771-2
Foreign aid, Canada's contribution, 47
Freight assistance payments, inquiry, 920, 1000
Governor General's Retiring Annuity bill C-265, 1496, 1548-9
Heath Mines, New Brunswick, 419
Immigrants, assistance to, inquiry, 920, 1000
Immigration Appeal Board bill C-220, 1584, 1670
India and Pakistan, drought and hunger conditions, 1245-6
Oxfam of Canada, 1246
Interpretation bill S-9, 110-12
Commission for revision of Statutes, 111
Definitions of land and broadcasting, 111
Standard time, 111-12
Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill S-10, 83, 84
Eligibility of employees to purchase shares, 83
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 654
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 12
Lamprey control, inquiry, 629, 801-2
Lands Surveys bill S-48, 984-5
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 991
Manpower and mobility, inquiry, 920, 1000
McKeen, Hon. Stanley S., the late, 1239-40
McLean, Hon. A. Neil, the late, 1613-14
Milltown Bridge bill S-15, 177
Mining employment in Atlantic provinces, 418-19
Ministers' participation in Senate debates, 476
National Museums bill S-57, 1680-3
Financing of, 1683
Museums with educational programs and extension services, 1581
Objectives, 1682
Personnel, 1682
National Transportation bill C-231, 1360-6
Canadian Transport Commission, 1362-3
Corridor road, 1364
Freight rates, 1364
MacPherson Commission recommendations, 1364
Maritime problems, 1361-5
Pipeline competition, 1362
Press comment, 1364-5
Water transportation, 1363
NATO Parliamentarians' meeting at Paris, France, 1290, 1470-2
Canadian delegates, briefing of, 1471-2
Jurisdiction of NATO, 1471
Military Committee, 1290

Brooks, Hon. A.J., P.C., – Concluded
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1327-8, 1336-7
War Veterans Allowance, 1328
O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan, retirement from presidency of Ottawa Journal, 341-2
Organization of American States, 47
Peacekeeping activities, 46
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55, 1294-5
Press comments, 1294-5
Specific delays, 1295
Strikes and consequences of, 1294-5
Poverty, alleviation by training and regional development, 43-44
Power, C.G., 49th anniversary in Parliament, 1292
Redistribution bill C-126, 168-9
Retirement of Senators, 41-42
Rules of the Senate re money bills, 984-5
Taylor, Hon. William H., retired, 654
Teleferry bill S-58, 1711-12
Chattels, transporting of, 1712
Trade deficit, 630
United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces bill S-33, 471, 509
Universities, scholarships and bursaries, 44-45
Vanier, General Georges Philias, the late, 1573-4
Veniot, Hon. Clarence J., retired, 654
Veterans hospitals, administration of, 920-1, 1000-1
Water resources, 45-46
Wood, Hon. Thomas H., the late, 12-13
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., the late, 361
World Exhibition, 1529-32
Assets, disposal of on termination of Exhibition, 1531
Deficit, 1530-1
Highway safety and bilingual traffic signs, 1531-2
Loan from Government, 1527-9
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 887-8

Buchanan, Hon. John A.
Retired October 2, 1965
Tribute, 19

Budget Speech, accommodation for Senators in Commons gallery, 340, 1292

Buildings and Grounds Committee
Members, 26, 269

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival
Adult Occupational Training bill C-278, 1911
Aging, report of Senate Special Committee, 140-2
Nursing homes, 141-2
New Brunswick, 141-2
Appropriation bill No. 5, C-189, 630

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival – Concluded
Assistance Plan C-207, 903-4
Blind persons, 903-4
Widow's case cited, 903-4
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, inquiry, 630, 725, 802-7
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 276-7, 761
Business failure in N.B., 276-7
Protection of creditors, 276-7, 761
Canada Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35, 606-7
Canadian National Railway bill C-165 (Bruce Lake), 419
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229, 1415-16
Maritime transportation problems, 1416
Dairy Commission bill C-205, 822
Davies, Hon. W. Rupert, the late, 1616-17
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 394-5
Excise Tax bill C-198, 799
Building materials, 799
Government Organization bill C-178, 684
Health Resources Fund bill C-199, 839
Medical profession, lack in New Brunswick, 839
Medicare, 839
Heath Mines, New Brunswick, 419
Judges bill C-267, 1522-3
Salary for extra-judicial services, 1523
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 16
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1137-8
Administration of assistance, difficulties of, 1137-8
Cattle breeding, 1137, 1138
McLean, Hon. A. Neil, the late, 1616
National Transportation bill C-231, 1401-2
Corridor road, 1402
MacPherson, M.A., chairman of Royal Commission on Transportation, 1401
Maritime problems, 1401
Marketing, 1402
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 586
Taylor, Hon. William H., retired, 656
University finances, 1436-9
University of New Brunswick, 1436-7
Enrolment explosion, 1438
Exchange of students from other provinces, 1439
Financial crisis, 1437-8
Veniot, Hon. Clarence J., retired, 656

Caisses Populaires du Quebec, 1417-18

Cameron, Hon. Donald
Adult Occupational Training bill C-278, 1897-1901, 1911-14
Allowances, 1900-1
Buildings and equipment, provincial loans for, 1912
Counselling officers, 1913
Drop-outs, 1898
Federal-provincial agreements, 1899, 1912-13
Transitional agreements, 1901

Cameron, Hon. Donald – Continued
Adult Occupational Training – Concluded
Unemployment insurance benefits, 1901
Weekly earnings in provinces, 1899
Appropriation bill No. 6 C-224, 921
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, the late, 362
Canadian Board of Missions of the Church of God (General Offices: Anderson, Indiana) bill S-18, 166, 190-1
Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta) S-34, 537
Farm land utilized by railway, 537
Centennial Performing Arts, allocation of grants, inquiry, 1066-7, 1069-71
Davey, Hon. Keith, appointment as Commissioner of Canadian Football League, 774-5
Estimates, 921
Library of Parliament, 921
Technical and vocational training, 921, 1001-2
Film Development Corporation bill C-204, 1430-2
Awards, 1431
Distribution of films, 1431
Film Commissioner as member of board, 1430-1
Films and film makers of Canada, 1430
Financial arrangements, 1432
Outside control, danger of, 1432
Immigration, landed immigrant status, 916
Labour conditions, Air Canada machinists strike and Postal workers threatened strike, inquiry, 1124-5
Labour conditions, strikes affecting the public welfare, 1147-52
Air machinists strike, 1149
Areas of public service where strikes should be prohibited, 1151
Disruption in national life, 1147
Fair Employment Practices Act, coverage of organized labour suggested, 1151
Montpetit Report, 1124, 1148, 1150-1
National referee or council to deal with labour problems, 1151
Overtime demands of construction workers, 1147-8
Personnel administration deficiencies, 1150
Senate responsibility, 1151-2
National Arts Centre bill C-194, 963-4
Director, responsibilities of, 964
Programming, 964
Olympic Games, misrepresentations by certain groups re effect on water resources, 935
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1485-7
Inefficiency in government administration, 1486
Responsibility in strike action, 1486
Strikes obstructing government business, 1486-7
Student Loans bill C-197, 766-9
Bursaries and scholarships, 766
Interest-free status, 769
Loan statistics for June and July 1965, 767, 768
Provincial allocations, 769
University students in other countries, statistics, 766
Vocational training assistance, 766
Technical and vocational training, 766, 921
Schools and research, inquiry, 921, 1001-2
Water resources, conservation of, 935-41
Alberta Society of Professional Engineers, letter to Prime Minister from president of, 937-9

Cameron, Hon. Donald – Concluded
Water resources – Concluded
Grande Coulee dam, 936
Lethbridge Northern Irrigation District, 936
McNaughton, General A.G.L., contribution in conservation of water resources, 937
National water policy, arguments in favour of, 939-40
North American Water and Power Alliance (NAWAPA), conference on, 937
PFRA, 936-7
Projects in western Canada, 936-7
Saskatchewan conference on development of water resources, summary of, 940-1
South Saskatchewan River dam, 936
Water resources board, federal-provincial, suggestion for, 935-6
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., the late, 362

Canada Assistance Plan, see Assistance Plan

Canada Corporations, see Corporations

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation
Board of directors, 1447
Caisses populaires, 1448, 1453
Classification of institutions to be insured, 1459
Conflict with provincial act, 1457-8
Creditor remedies available, 1453-4
Definitions, 1448-9
Deposits, 1449, 1457, 1459-60
Effective date of insurance, 1450, 1455-6
Failure of financial institutions, 1455
Failure of member institution, 1456, 1460
Financial Post article by president of Guaranty Trust Co., 1458-9
Inspections, 1451, 1454
Objects, powers and duties, 1447, 1449
Premiums, 1450-1, 1459
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Beaubien, L.P., 1459
Connolly, John J., 1447-53, 1455-6, 1459-60
Grosart, Allister, 1353-5, 1456-9

Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-261. 1r, 1443; 2r, 1447-60; ref to com, 1460; authority to print com proceedings, 1462; rep of com without amdt, 1462; 3r, 1462; r.a., 1467

Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation bill S-13. Hon. Mr. Cook. 1r, 100; 2r, 142-3; ref to com, 143; rep of com without amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1263

Canada Labour
See Labour (Safety) Code,
Labour (Standards) Code.

Canada Lands Surveys, see Lands Surveys

Canada student loans, see Student loans

Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement
Canadian Tax Journal review of agreement, 443-4
Copyright royalties, 442
Exchange of information, 439-40
Pensions and annuities, 441-2, 444-5
Profits from industrial or commercial operation, 440
Profits from ships or aircraft, 441
Protest against form of bill, Hon. Mr. Roebuck, 445, 446
Residence requirements, 443
Supplementary agreement with Sweden, 438
Withholding tax, 438-9, 440, 444
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Farris, J.W. de B., 445-6
Hayden, Salter A., 438-43, 446
Roebuck, Arthur W., 445, 446
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 443-5

Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement bill C-154. 1r, 401-2; 2r, 438-46; ref to com, 446; rep of com without amdt, 497; 3r, 530; r.a., 547

Canada-United States Automotive Products Agreement, see Automotive Products

Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, see Interparliamentary Group

Canadian Board of Missions of the Church of God S-18. (General Offices: Anderson, Indiana). Hon. Mr. Cameron. 1r, 166; 2r, 190-1; ref to com, 191; rep of com with amdts, 580-1; 3r, 607; r.a., 930

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Abuse of authority, 374-5
Censorship of media of communication, 1203-5
Content of programs approved, 1222-3
Control of expenditures and programming, 1216, 1218-23, 1665, 1685-6
Coverage unfavourable to prominent persons, 255
Declaration of Women, brief presented to government officials, 254-5, 1221-3
Expenditures, 374-5, 376, 569-70
Overseas special interview, 375
Highway safety education, "It could happen to you", Hon. Edgar E. Fournier, 64
Loans and advances to, 287-8
Penfield, Dr. Wilder, criticism of CBC, 255
Tape-recording in House of Commons by student in gallery, 1204
TV program "Sunday", 1202-5, 1216-23, 1665, 1685
Use of TV and radio facilities criticized, 253-5, 1202-5, 1217-23

Canadian Citizenship, see Citizenship

Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, see World Exhibition

Canadian Dairy Commission, see Dairy Commission bill, Dairy industry

Canadian Film Development Corporation, see Film Development Corporation

Canadian Football League, Hon. Keith Davey appointed Commissioner, 774-5

Canadian Forces Reorganization
Anti-ballistic missiles, 1874
Civil control, 1872
Competition between armed forces, 1857
Defence of Canada, 1870-1, 1888-9, 1890, 1892
Expenditures for defence, 1837, 1838, 1849, 1875, 1879, 1895-6
Morale, 1880, 1894
Officer designations, 1835, 1882, 1894
Pay and allowances, 1836
Peacekeeping commitments, 1841-2, 1849, 1855, 1858-9, 1878-9, 1888-9, 1894
Press comments, briefs, etc., 1843-4, 1854, 1872-3, 1875, 1881, 1883
Recruitment and training, 1882
Seconding of forces to other countries, 1836, 1884-5
Uniforms and insignia, 1844, 1894
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Beaubien, L.P., 1871-2
Belisle, Rheal, 1853-7
Brooks, A.J., 1851, 1886-92
Connolly, John J., 1834-40, 1893-7
Croll, David A., 1848-53
Farris, J.W. deB., 1857
Hollett, Malcolm, 1884-5
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 1872-4
Pearson, Arthur M., 1869-71
Phillips, Orville H., 1877-84
Pouliot, Jean-François, 1892-3
Prowse, J. Harper, 1857-62
Welch, Frank C., 1874-6
White, George S., 1840-5

Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243. 1r, 1820; 2r, 1834-45, 1848-62, 1886-97; 3r, 1897; r.a., 1925

Canadian National Railway (Bruce Lake)
Bruce Lake Iron Mine Co., sponsoring of by Steel Co. of Canada, 416
Costs of line, 416
Elimination of branch lines, 418
Employment, 418-19
Iron pellets development, guaranteed tonnage and penalty clause, 416-18
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Benidickson, W.M., 416-17
Brooks, A.J., 418-19
Burchill, G. Percival, 419
Crerar, T.A., 417-18

Canadian National Railway (Bruce Lake) bill C-165. 1r, 401; 2r, 416-19; ref to com, 419; authority to print com proceedings, 453; rep of com without amdt, 453-4; 3r, 476-7; r.a. 547

Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous)
Alwinsal Potash of Canada Ltd., 788-9
Blairmore Sands, 788
Employment, 789
Potash production and revenue, 788-9
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., 788
Employment, 788
Ore reserves, 788
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Hnatyshyn, John, 789-90
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 787-9

Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous) bill C-210. 1r, 770; 2r, 787-90; ref to com, 790; authority to print com proceedings, 849; rep of com without amdt, 849-50; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Canadian National Railways financing
Air Canada, interim financing requirements, 1410
Auditors, 1410, 1411
Capital expenditures, 1409, 1412
Centennial Gazette, article on history of Canadian railways, 1414
Deficit, 1410-11, 1414
Gordon, Donald, accomplishments as president of railway, 1413, 1415
Maritime transportation problems, 1416
Moratorium on interest on government loan, 1410
Preferred stock purchases by Finance Minister, 1409-10
Temporary loans to CNR and to Air Canada, 1410
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aseltine, Walter M., 1411-13
Benidickson, W.M., 1409-11
Burchill, G. Percival, 1415-16
Connolly, John J., 1414-15

Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229. 1r, 1348; 2r, 1409-16; ref to com, 1416; authority to print com proceedings, 1433; rep of com without amdt, 1434; 3r, 1434-6; r.a., 1442

Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta) bill S-34. Hon. Mr. Prowse. 1r, 471; 2r, 535-7; ref to com, 537; authority to print com proceedings, 632-3; rep of com without amdt, 633; 3r, 658; r.a., 929

Canadian Pacific Railway (Saskatchewan) bill S-32. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 471; 2r, 534-5; ref to com, 535; authority to print com proceedings, 632; rep of com without amdt, 632; 3r, 658; r.a., 929

Canadian Trade Relations Committee
Members, 26, 269

Canadian University Service Overseas, 856, 857, 859
Leddy, Dr. Francis, 859
Volunteers, 856, 862-3

Canadian vessel construction assistance
Depreciation, 1653
Relief from recapture, 1653
See Income Tax bill C-259

Capital punishment, 59, 410, 728-9
Propaganda re, 410

Carrothers, Dean A.W.R., Chairman of Commission of Inquiry on the Northwest Territories, 590-1, 609, 610

Carter, Hon. Chesley W.
Introduction to the Senate, 1038

Cartwright, Hon. J.R., M.C., Royal Assent, 1541

Centenary of Confederation
Centennial Performing Arts, allocation of grants, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 1066-7, 1069-71
Conduct of non-essential business on July 1, 1967, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Davey, 1067, 1072
Congratulations to Canada, extracts from Congressional Record, 1805-7

Choquette, Hon. Lionel
Admiralty bill C-161, 387
Appropriation bill No. 2, 1967 C-282, 1758
Bishop, Hon. Charles L., the late, 1054-5
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation TV program "Sunday", objection to, 1202-3
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1198-1203
"A Jew in Germany" article by Irving Layton, 1203
C.B.C. TV program "Sunday", 1202-3
Defence proviso on conviction, 1201
Duplessis "padlock law", 1200-1
Nazism, 1199, 1200
Obscene literature, 1202
Press comments on "hate" legislation, 1199-1200
Religion, non-inclusion in identifiable group, 1200
Rex vs Palmer case, sale of contraceptives, 1202
Saumur vs City of Quebec, freedom of religion, 1202
Customs Tariff bill C-200, 791
Kennedy Round of Tariff negotiations, 791
Divorce
Appeals, 1005, 1007
Biega, Joyce Regina Nagine, appeal against judgment, 1005, 1007
Committee duties in relation to evidence heard by Commissioner, 134-5
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 238, 239, 243-4, 245, 336, 337
Export and Import Permits bill S-23, 394
Rhodesia, restriction on trade with, 394
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 467
Government Organization bill C-178, 685-92
Labour, 690-1
Manpower and Immigration, 680-1, 685
Precedent in omnibus bill, 689-92
Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35, 605, 606
Library of Parliament, 357-8
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185- 555-6, 585, 634-5
McNair Commission recommendations, 555-6
Ottawa Terminal Railway bill S-2, 86-87
Greber Plan, 86-87
Station relocation, 87
Pension Benefits Standards bill C-221, 1671-2
Inflation, effect on pensions, 1671-2
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1481-3
Press comment, 1482-3
Public sector, right to strike questioned, 1481-2
Smith, Mrs. Sydney J., the late, 1104
Statutory Salaries Revision bill C-266, 1563-4
Executive powers of discrimination, 1564
Vanier, General Georges Philias, the late, 1575
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 887, 891

Citizen of the Year
Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, Junior Chamber of Commerce (Brantford) award, 187

Citizenship
Citizenship Appeal Court, 1774-6, 1790
Citizens other than natural-born, 1774
Deserted infant or foundling, 1777-8, 1789-90
Domicile, 1773-4, 1808-9
Hospitality to immigrants, 1788-9, 1791
Language requirement, 1774
Nationality, Commonwealth citizenship, subjects of the Queen, 1810-11
Offences, 1775
Newfoundland, inclusion of, 1777
Screening of immigrants, 1811
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1809
Connolly, John J., 1790-1, 1809-10
Davey, Keith, 1773-5
Hayden, Salter A., 1789-90, 1808-9, 1810
Hollett, Malcolm, 1776-8
Pearson, Arthur M., 1788-9
Pouliot, Jean-François, 1810-11
Willis, Harry A., 1775-6

Citizenship bill S-59. 1r, 1715; 2r, 1773-8, 1788-91; ref to com, 1791; authority to print com proceedings, 1808; rep of com with amdt, 1808-11; 3r, 1821

Civil Service Administration Committee
Members, 26

Combines Investigation and Criminal Code
(B.C. fishermen and packers)
Application of terms to select group, question of, 459-62
Criminal Code provisions, 458
Delegation of powers to Commons, 458-9
Extension of date of moratorium, 458
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 457-60, 462-3, 593
Crerar, T.A., 461-2
Farris, J.W. de B., 461
Hollett, Malcolm, 459, 460
Macdonald, John M., 460
Roebuck, Arthur W., 460-1

Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169. 1r, 452; 2r, 457-62; ref to com, 462; authority to print com proceedings, 563; rep of com with amdt, 563-4, 593-4; 3r, 594; r.a., 758

Comeau, Hon. J. Willie
Deceased January 11, 1966
Tributes, 11-18

Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company bill S-36. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 563; 2r, 610-11; ref to com, 611; authority to print com proceedings, 743; rep of com with amdt, 743-4; 3r, 744

Commission of appointment
Speaker of the Senate, Hon. Sydney J. Smith, 1

Commissions
Automotive Industry (1960), chairman Dean Vincent Wheeler Bladen, 617
Bankruptcies, Liquidations, Proposals and Voluntary Assignments, chairman Colonel Lucien Mercier, 248-52, 276, 277-8
Electoral Boundaries Commission for Quebec, chairman Mr. Justice Paul Langlois, 169-70, 179-84, 193-7
Government Organization, chairman J. Grant Glassco, 119, 123, 297
Health Services, chairman Honourable Emmett M. Hall, 833, 834, 835, 1073
Industrial Inquiry, Laurin Picard, 971
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary Commission, chairman R. Thistlethwaite, 989-90
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary Commission, chairman R. Thistlethwaite, 989-90
Northwest Territories, chairman Dean A.W.R. Carrothers, 590-1, 609, 610
Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary Commission, Chairman R. Thistlethwaite, 989-90
Transportation, chairman M.A. MacPherson, 1342-3, 1347, 1364, 1384-91, 1392, 1398, 1401

Commissions, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot
Name, nature, personnel and date, 1067-8, 1073-4

Committee of Selection, 7, 22, 23, 25-26, 37
See Selection Committee

Committees
See also individual names
Special Joint
Administration of Justice
Consumer Credit (Cost of Living)
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda)
Divorce
Immigration
National and Royal Anthems
Penitentiaries
Public Service
Special, Senate
Aging
Standing
Banking and Commerce
Canadian Trade Relations
Civil Service Administration
Debates and Reporting
Divorce

Committees – Concluded
Standing – Concluded
External Relations
Finance
Immigration and Labour
Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts
Miscellaneous Private Bills
Natural Resources
Orders and Customs
Public Buildings and Grounds
Public Health and Welfare
Standing Orders
Tourist Traffic
Transport and Communications
Standing Joint
Library of Parliament
Printing of Parliament
Restaurant of Parliament

Committees, general data
Meetings, conflict with Senate and Commons sittings, 1077-9
Subject matter of meetings, indication on notices requested, 830-1

Commons amendments to Senate bills
Bank of British Columbia bill S-16, 1233, 1242
General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada bill S-8, 1233
Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill S-10, 1832
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55, 1527
Senate bill M-9 re National Parks (1947) and other precedents, 982-3

Commonwealth
Crises in Commonwealth, 271
Definition of, 205-6
External Relations Committee empowered to make inquiry into Commonwealth relations, 270-2
Authority to print proceedings, 432
Nations acknowledging allegiance to, 270
Parliamentary Association, 348, 432-8, 509-12
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 345-6

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, New Zealand Conference, 348, 432-8, 509-12
Agenda, 511
Aid to underdeveloped countries, 512
Canadian delegation, 432-3, 509-10
Chairman of General Council, 438
Economic growth in Commonwealth, 434
Between Niger and Nile by Arthur Toynbee, 435
Bryant, Sir Arthur, letter to New Statesman, 435-6
Future of Association, 437-8

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association – Concluded
New Zealand, 510-11
Politics, 510-11
Trade, 511
Unemployment, non-existence of, 511
Parliamentary government, discussions on, 436
Poverty and resultant problems, 434
Proceedings at Parliament Bldgs., Wellington, 433
Rhodesian question, 433
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 348, 432-8
Welch, Frank C., 509-12

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Ottawa Conference, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Haig, 600-3
Agenda of 12th meeting, 601-2
Commonwealth of the World, 601
Commonwealth self-help, 601-2
Intra-Commonwealth aid, 602
Parliamentary government in the modern world, 602

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Ottawa conference, (Sept. 28-Oct. 4/66), report on, 1056-64, 1080-3
Discussions on
Kashmir, 1059
Rhodesia, 1059
South Africa, 1059
Viet Nam, 1060-1
Faith and Freedom, by Barbara Ward, excerpt from, 1063
Meetings of committees, 1057, 1058-9, 1060
Missionary work in underdeveloped countries, 1062
Concensus of committee, 1062
Parliamentary institutions, various countries, 1061, 1064
Concensus of committee, 1061
Representatives, 1057
Self-help, 1060
Commodity price stabilization, 1060
Trade and foreign aid, 1081-2
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1056-64
Grosart, Allister, 1080-3

Company of Young Canadians
Administration, 857
Advisory committee, 858
Age limit, 858
Aspirations of Young Canadians, excerpt from Company's publication, 855
Background of Company, 856
Canadian University Service Overseas, 856, 857, 859, 862-3
Charitable organization, 857
Director, 857
Educational programs in Commonwealth, 863

Company of Young Canadians – Concluded
Excerpts from report of Stewart Goodings, 861
Ground rules, 857
Leddy, Dr. Francis, chairman of Organizing Committee, 859
Membership, inquiries re, 858
Missionary organizations, 863
Objects and powers, 856
Organizing Committee, 859-60
Poverty and affluent society, 855, 861
Projects approved, 858, 860
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 861-3
Davey, Keith, 854-8
Quart, Josie D., 860-1
Yuzyk, Paul, 858-60

Company of Young Canadians bill C-174. 1r, 808; 2r, 854-6; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Comtois, Hon. Paul, Lieutenant Governor of Quebec
Deceased February 21, 1966
Tributes, 147-58

Confederation, see Centenary of Confederation

Conferences
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association
New Zealand, 348, 432-8, 509-12
Ottawa, 600-3, 1056-64, 1080-3
Federal-Provincial meetings, documents deposited in Clerk's office, 1198
NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, 99, 1283-90, 1439-42, 1463-7, 1468-73
Prairie conference, Saskatoon, 734-5

Connolly, Hon. Harold
League Savings and Mortgage Company bill S-30, 413, 455-6
Credit unions in Nova Scotia, 455-6

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate
Adenauer, Konrad, the late, 1787-8
Admiralty bill C-161, 387
Adult Occupational Training bill C-278, 1904
Appropriation bill No. 3 C-157, 347-52, 372-3
Appropriation bill No. 4 C-159, 370-1
Appropriation bill No. 5 C-189, 626-8, 629, 630, 631
Appropriation bill No. 6 C-224, 916-20, 921
Appropriation bill No. 7 C-226, 923-8
Appropriation bill No. 8 C-245, 1173-4
Appropriation bill No. 9 C-248, 1217-19

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. —Continued
Assistance Plan bill C-207, 897-901, 907-9
Abuses, possibility of, 900, 901, 908
Acts amended by bill C-207, 901
Allocations for services, 898-9
"Assistance", definitions of, 897
Blind persons, 908
Co-ordination between governments, 898
Duration of agreement, 899
Established programs (interim arrangements), 901
General assistance and welfare services, 899
Indian welfare, 899-900, 908
Jurisdiction, federal-provincial, 908, 909
Mother's allowance, 901
Needs test, 898
Work activity projects, 900
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Burchill, 801-7
Bank bill C-222, 1753-5
Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill S-53, 1188
Bishop, Hon. Charles L., the late, 1053-4
Bowden, Lord, guest in Senate Chamber, 1716-17
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, the late, 360
British North America Act, provisions re money bills, 980-3
Precedents of money bills dealt with in Senate, 982
Procedures in House of Lords, 982-3, 985
Business of the Senate, resumé, 523-4
Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-261, 1447-53, 1455-6, 1459-60
Board of directors, 1447
Caisses populaires, 1448
Definitions, 1448-9
Deposits, 1449, 1459-60
Effective date of insurance, 1450, 1455-6
Financial aspects, 1448
Inspection, 1451
Member institutions in difficulty, 1460
Objects, powers and duties, 1447, 1449
Premiums, 1450-1
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
Censorship of media of communication, 1203-4
Control of expenditures and programming, 1218-19
Question of privilege, 1203-4
Tape-recording in House of Commons by student in gallery, 1204
TV program "Sunday", objection to, 1203-4
Canadian Corporation of the World Exhibition, see World Exhibition
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1834-40, 1893-7
Achievements of Canadian forces, 1837-8
Expenditures for defence, 1837, 1838, 1895-6
Morale, 1894
Officer designations, 1835, 1894
Pay and allowances, 1836
Peacekeeping commitments, 1894
Seconding to other countries, 1836, 1885
Uniforms, 1894

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. – Continued
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229, 1414-15
Centennial Gazette, article on history of Canadian railways, 1414
Deficit, 1414
Gordon, Donald, past president, 1415
Cape Breton, 723
Centennial of Confederation, congratulations to Canada, extracts from Congressional Record, 1786-7
Churchill Falls, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 707
Citizenship bill S-59, 1790-1, 1809-10
Citizenship Appeal Court, 1790
Deserted infant or foundling, 1790
Hospitality to immigrants, 1791
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169, 457-60, 462-3
(B.C. fishermen and packers)
Criminal Code provisions, 458
Extension of date of moratorium, 458
Application to select group, question of, 459, 462
Delegation of powers to Commons, 458-9
Committee meetings, conflict with Senate and Commons sittings, 1079
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, New Zealand Conference, 348, 432-8
Canadian delegation, 432-3
Chairman of General Council of C.P.A., 438
Economic growth in Commonwealth, 434
Between Niger and Nile by Arthur Toynbee, 435
Bryant, Sir Arthur, letter to New Statesman, 435-6
Future of Association, 437-8
Parliamentary government, discussions on, 436
Poverty and resultant problems, 434
Proceedings at Parliament Bldgs., Wellington, 433
Rhodesian question, 433
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Ottawa Conference, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Haig, 600-3
Agenda of 12th meeting, 601-2
Commonwealth of the World, 601
Commonwealth self-help, 601-2
Intra-Commonwealth aid, 602
Parliamentary government in the modern world, 602
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Ottawa Conference (Sept. 28-Oct. 4/66), report on, 1056-63
Discussions on Kashmir, 1059
Rhodesia, 1059
South Africa, 1059
Viet Nam, 1060-1
Faith and Freedom by Barbara Ward, excerpt from, 1063
Meetings of committees, 1057, 1058-69, 1060
Missionary work in underdeveloped countries, 1062
Concensus of committee, 1062
Parliamentary institutions, various countries, 1061
Concensus of committee, 1061
Representatives, 1057
Self-help, 1060
Commodity price stabilization, 1060

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. — Continued
Company of Young Canadians bill C-174, 861-3
Canadian University Service Overseas, 862-3
Educational programs in Commonwealth, 863
Missionary organizations, 863
Volunteer work of Canadians at home and abroad, 862
Constituencies of Canada, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1079-80, 1093-5
Consumer Credit, Joint Committee, appointment, 317
Comment on committee work, 1446-7
Terms of reference, enlargement of, 1039-42, 1048-50
Crerar, Hon. T.A., retired, 571-2
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) Special Joint Committee, motion for appointment of, 1144, 1146-7, 1167, 1661-2
Customs Tariff bill C-200, 773-4, 791-2
Kennedy Round of tariff negotiations, 791, 792
Rates of duty printed in Minutes of Proceedings of Senate, 773-4
Davey, Hon. Keith, Commissioner of Canadian Football League, 774
Davies, Hon. W. Rupert, the late, 1612
Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, appointment as Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, 1052
Divorce appeals, 1006-7
Biega, Joyce Regina Nagine, appeal against judgment, 1006-7
Divorce, Joint Committee, appointment, 315-16
Dutch Elm disease, 404-5, 413-14
Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill S-22, 408-9
Estimates, 347-52, 626-31, 772, 801-7, 916-20, 921, 923-8, 1000-2, 1217-19, 1244-5, 1246, 1247, 1248, 1249, 1352-4
Agriculture department, 349, 926, 927
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, 630
Atomic Energy Control Board, 349
Borrowing authority, 351-2, 928
Centennial Commission, 1354
Commitment according to terms of item, 371, 928
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, 628
Estimates (1966-67) including budgetary expenditures and loans, excluding old age security, table printed in Debates, 918, 924
External Affairs, 350, 627, 629
External aid, India and Pakistan, 1244-9
Finance Department, 349, 627
Fisheries Department, 628, 926
Forestry Department, 628
Health and Welfare, 350-1
House of Commons, 350
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 928
Justice department, 350, 926
Loans, investments and advances, 926, 927-8
Maritime Commission, 349, 351
Mines and Technical Surveys, 350, 627, 926, 927
National Defence, 1352
National Gallery, 1352-4
National Harbours Board, 349-50
National Research Council, scholarships and grants, 349, 927
Northern Affairs, 351, 926
Payments after end of fiscal year, 371
Penitentiaries, 351

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. – Continued
Estimates – Concluded
Senate expenses, 628
Statement on effect of Appropriation bill No. 6, 917
Supply (1966-67), table printed in Debates, 925
Transport department, 349, 351, 926
Undertaking that passage of bill will not preclude further discussion, 916, 919, 920
Veterans Affairs, 351
Water resources, 926
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, 926
Expo events commemorating Canada's Centennial Year, 1554-6
Expo travel arrangements for Senators, 1812
Export and Import Permits bill S-23, 366-7
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 366-7, 393-4
Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements bill C-277, 1620-31, 1633-4, 1641-3
Contracting out, 1625
Education costs, fiscal allocations, 1622-5
Universities qualified for grants, 1633-4
General equalization payments, 1626-30
Exceptions, 1630
Prince Edward Island, 1633
Provincial entitlements, 1627-8
Principles decided at conference, 1620
Provincial revenue stabilization payments, 1625
Succession duties, 1626
Federal-Provincial meetings, documents deposited in Clerk's office, 1198
Finance Committee study of Estimates, 772
Financial Administration bill C-182, 1515
Fisheries, 12-mile limit, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 802
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1847
Government Organization bill C-178, 677-85
Crown lands, 682-3
Energy, Mines and Resources, 682
Glassco Commission recommendations, 678, 682
Forestry and Rural Development, 682
Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 681
Labour, 681
Manpower and Immigration, 680-1, 685, 695
Registrar General, 680
Secretary of State, 683, 684
Solicitor General, 679
Access to files of RCMP, 679-80
Treasury Board President, 683, 684, 695
Governor General's Retiring Annuity bill C-265, 1495-7
Annuity amount, 1496
Entertainment allowance, 1496
Former Governors General, 1495, 1496
Salary, 1495
Widows, 1495
Grant, Hon. Thomas V., the late, 1351
Grey Cup, National Football Playoff in Vancouver, 1197
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., retired, 1355-8
Immigration, Special Joint Committee, 1065-6
Income Tax Agreements bill S-56, 1376-7

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. – Continued
Income Tax bill C-216, 960
Stock options, 960
Income Tax bill C-280, 1914
Business profits, tax period on, 1914
India and Pakistan, 1244-5, 1247-8, 1249
Delegation to Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meeting in Ottawa, 1245
Drought and hunger conditions, 1244-5
Canadian contributions for relief of, 1248
Costs of shipping wheat, 1248
Distribution of food and money, methods of, 1247-8, 1249
Letter from Prime Minister of India, 1244-5
Inflation
Finance Committee conclusions summarized in 1959 report, 1040
Government proposals to counteract, 1040-1, 1049-50
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 653-7
Judges bill C-267, 1521-2
Capacities forbidden to judge unless by special appointment, 1522
Salary for extra-judicial services, 1521
Judicial appointments, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 305-6, 391
Labour conditions, 1152-3, 1154
Rights of workers in public service, 1153
Task force to deal with industrial disputes, 1152-3
Labour conditions, Air Canada machinists and Postal workers, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 1124-5
Labour (Standards) Code bill S-54, 1189-92, 1194
Holidays and annual vacations, 1189-90
Apportioning of responsibility for, 1190-1
Longshoremen, 1189-90
Multi-employer employment, 1189-90
Labour Relations, report of dispute between Shipping Federation of Canada and International Longshoremen's Assoc., 867, 871-7
Lamprey control and research, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 801-2
Lands Surveys bill S-48, 980-3, 984, 985, 996-7, 998
Erection of monuments, 997
Examination fees, 998
Examiners, 996
Resurveys, 997
Survey measurements, 997
Surveyor General of Canada, administration of office, 996
Legal services, fees paid by Government to members of Quebec Bar, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1147
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1083-90, 1096, 1098, 1159-60
Board, establishment of and duties, 1088-90
Advisory Committee, 1088-9
Exports, 1086-7
Food shortages, 1087-8
Maritime feed production problem, 1087
Price variations, 1084-5, 1086
Statistics re livestock feed assistance, 1084-6
Territorial definitions, 1098
Transportation subsidy, 1085, 1086
Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, Honorary President of Junior Chamber of Commerce, 878
MacKenzie, Hon. Norman A., national president of Association of Canadian Clubs, 689

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. – Continued
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1013-21, 1036-7
Cameron, Mr. Justice, report and recommendations, 1016-17, 1020
Collective bargaining procedures, 1018
Conciliation boards and chairmen, 1014-15
Events leading up to strike action, 1013-15
Freedman, Mr. Justice, report of, 1017-18
MacPherson, Mr. Murdock, report of, 1020
Mediator, appointment of, 1021
Munro, Mr. Justice, 1014; report and recommendations, 1015-16, 1020
St. Lawrence Seaway workers, increase of 30%, 1036
Union issues in dispute, 1013-14
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47, 995
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 993-4
McKeen, Hon. Stanley S., the late, 1239
McLean, Hon. A. Neil, the late, 1612-13
Medical Care bill C-227, 1270
Michener, the Right Honourable Roland, Governor General of Canada, addresses at installation of, 1772, 1783-5
Ministers' participation in Senate debates, 474-6
National and Royal Anthems, Special Joint Committee, 1384
National Arts Centre bill C-194, 967-8
Television and development of the Arts, 968
National Housing bill C-241, 1177-81, 1185
Aggregate maximum of loans insurable under NHA, 1179
Co-operatives, 1185
Economic development in building industry, 1177-8
Housing demands, 1177, 1181
Housing starts, statistics on, 1178
Interest-free loans, question of, 1186
Low-rent housing, 1178-9
British Columbia, 1179
Inuvik, 1179
Ontario Housing Corp., 1178-9
Operating losses, 1179
Ottawa, 1186
Sales tax, 1185
Sewage treatment projects, 1180
Student housing projects, 1180
National Museums bill S-57, 1683
National Transportation bill C-231, 1379, 1380
Maritime problems, 1379, 1380
NATO Parliamentarians, 12th annual conference at Paris, France, 1076, 1287-90, 1468-70
Britain and the European Common Market, 1289
Economic problems, 1290
Nationalism in Europe, 1289
Peacekeeping force, 1288
Problems of NATO, 1288
Question of privilege, re statement on Canadian delegates, 1468-70
The Proud Tower, by Barbara Tuchman, 1288-9
USSR, 1288, 1289
Northumberland Causeway, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Phillips, 1811

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. – Continued
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1317-21, 1336-8
Absence from country, 1320
Appeals, 1321
Authority of Parliament to legislate in pension matters, 1317-18, 1336
Cost to government, 1319, 1337-8
Deductions because of other income, 1320
Guaranteed income supplement, 1319
Information concerning income, 1321
Interim payments, 1321
Married applicants, 1320
Needs test, 1320
O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan, election to Canadian News Hall of Fame, 1787
O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan, retirement from presidency of Ottawa Journal, 340-1
Pan-American Games 1967 in Winnipeg, 746-7
Penitentiaries, Joint Committee, appointment, 316-17
Pension Benefits Standards bill C-221, 1672-3
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55, 1297-8
Strikes and consequences of, 1297-8
Power, Hon. C.G., 49th anniversary in Parliament, 1292
Power, Hon. C.G., publication of memoirs, 1125-6
Press report on Senate passage of bills, 893
Prison administration, female inmates, inquiry, Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, 915
Public Service Employment bill C-181, 1503
Merit system, 1503
Public Service Commission powers, 1503
Public Service, reports of Committee tabled, 1383
Return after illness, 302-4
Richelieu Bridge Company bill S-44, 979
Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W., 89th birthday, 1515-16
Rules of the Senate, 18A, re ministers' participation in Senate Debates, 981
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-274, 1592
PFRA, 1592
St. Jean Baptiste parade, 968
Dandurand, Hon. Raoul, the late, honoured by parade float, 968
St. Lawrence Ports Working Conditions bill C-215, 969-72, 974-5
Compulsory arbitration, 972, 975
Industrial Inquiry Commission, 970
Mediator, Judge René Lippé, 969-70
Negotiations re new agreement, breakdown of, 969
Protection of workers and job security, 971
Saving provision to vary agreement, 971
Terms for settlement of strike, 970-1
St. Patrick's Day, 1697-8
Sangster, Sir Donald, the late, 1780-2
Smith, Mrs. Sydney J., the late, 1104
Snedker, Hon. J.E., Speaker of Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan, visitor to Senate, 1886
Spellman, Howard Hilton, visitor to Senate, 1510
Stanley Cup, congratulations to Hon. Mr. Molson on success of Canadiens, 497
Statutory Salaries Revision bill C-266, 1546-7
Auditor General, 1547
Grain Commissioner, 1546
Retroactive clause, 1546

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C. – Concluded
Symonette, Lady, wife of Premier of Bahamas, visitor in Senate Gallery, 889
Taylor, Hon. William H., retired, 653
Teleferry bill S-58, 1710-13
Chattels, transporting of, 1712
Inspection of construction, 1711
Interprovincial or international boundaries, 1710
Licences, 1711
Tolls, 1711
Training Allowance bill C-186, 723
Uganda Minister of Public Works, visitor to Senate, 1038
Ukrainian Canadians: Their Place and role in Canadian Life, by Hon. Mr. Yuzyk, 1820
Vanier, General Georges Philias, the late, 1572-3
Veniot, Hon. Clarence J., retired, 653
Wabana Mines, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 707
White, Hon. George S., return after illness, 1055
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., the late, 360-1
World Exhibition, 1527-9, 1532-3
Assets, disposal of on termination of Exhibition 1528-9
Loan from Government, 1527-9
Borrowings to date, 1528
Grants, 1528
Revenue forecast, 1528-9
Removal of foreign pavilions, 1529
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 890

Conservation of water resources, see Water resources

Constituencies, population of, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810, 867, 1079-80, 1093-5

Constitution of Canada, 126-9
Amendment of the Canadian Constitution, by Hon. Guy Favreau, 126-7
B.N.A. Act amdts, control of, 126-8
Fulton-Favreau formula, 126-7

Consumer credit
Captive sales financing, 1445
Cooling-off period on credit purchases, 1446
Counselling for consumers, 1446
Interest rates, disclosure of, 1444-5
Low-cost consumer loans through banks, 1445
Used car sales, 1446
See also Appendix to Feb. 16 for Report of Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, Special Joint Committee
Appointment, 317
Bills ref to joint com, 328, 359
Economic Council of Canada, Annual Review, ref to com, 1195-6
Members
Commons, 328-9, 400, 1050, 1052, 1075, 1076, 1347, 1443, 1473, 1516
Senate, 344, 1050, 1065
Message from Commons, 301, 1038-50
Reports, 1307-13, 1444-7, and Appendix to Feb. 16
Adjournment from place to place, 1300
Quorum, 393
Recommendations of committee, 1301-2, 1444-6
Report, presented at end of Session, 1928-49
Terms of reference, 317, 1038-50

Cook, Hon. Eric
Aetna Casualty Company of Canada bill S-4, 29
Bills of Exchange bill S-14, 209-10, 400
Cheques marked 'For deposit', Commons amdt re, 400
Compliance with Canada Labour (Standards) Code re holidays, 209
Non-juridical days added or deleted, 209-10
Payment of bills of exchange on Saturday or non-juridical day, 209
Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation bill S-13, 100, 142-3
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1135-6
Defining of offence, 1136
Excise Tax bill C-198, 797-8
Articles progressively exempted, 797
Furs, 797, 798
Machinery and equipment, 797
Margarine, 798
Tire retreads, 797
Two or more articles in one package, 797
Judges bill C-262, 1367-8
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 581-3
Historical sketch of Newfoundland, 581-2
McNair Commission recommendations, 582-3
Statutory Salaries Revision bill C-266, 1544-5, 1547-8
Authority of Governor in Council, 1544-5
Officials affected by revision, 1544

Corporations
Amdt of charters by application to Registrar General, 1100
Company formations without parliamentary legislation, 1108
Corporations without share capital, 1107
Legislative authority of Parliament, extension of, 1107
"National" organizations, 1109
Religious organizations, 1099, 1108
Supplementary letters patent, 1107, 1108
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Flynn, Jacques, 1107
Hayden, Salter A., 1108-9
Hugessen, A.K., 1107-8
Macdonald, W. Ross, 1099-1100

Corporations bill S-51. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1099-1100, 1107-9; ref to com, 1109; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com without amdt-3r, 1143; r.a., 1442

Cost of living, see Consumer Credit and Cost of Living

Crerar, Hon. T.A., P.C.
Retired May 31, 1966
Tributes, 571-6
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 564-71, 576
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 374-5, 376, 569-70
Abuse of authority, 374-5
Spending on overseas interview, 375
Canadian National Railway bill C-165 (Bruce Lake), 417-18
Iron pellets development, guaranteed tonnage and penalty clause, 417-18
Civil Service Commission, method of filling positions, 568
Estimates, 373-7
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 468
Socialism, question of, 468
Franking privileges, 375
Government extravagances, 374-6, 567-71
Inflationary tendencies, 566
Labour unions and strike settlement, 567
Loans, investments and advances, 375-6
National Democratic Party, 468
O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan, retirement as President of Ottawa Journal, 342
Parliamentary secretaries, 375
Party leaders, change advocated, 565, 571
Prestige of Parliament, 565, 571
Provincial affairs, infringement by federal government, 565-6
Sixtieth wedding anniversary, 100
Tributes to deceased senators, 373-4
Welfare and social security legislation, 376

Crime
Bankruptcy, criminal elements and murders, 247-8
LSD, illegal sale and use of, 1792-1802, 1812-19, 1821-30
Morality breakdown of young people, 527-8
TV and radio programs, 253-5, 527-8

Criminal Code
See Combines Investigation and Criminal Code, Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda).

Criminal Code (Hate propaganda)
Abuse of freedom, 1156
"A Jew in Germany", article by Irving Layton, 1203
Anti-discrimination legislation, Ontario, 1156
Appeals, 1113
Bill of Rights, 1155, 1279
British Race Relations bill, 1157, 1227
Cartoonists, 1114

Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) – Concluded
CBC television program "Sunday", 1202-3
Committee study, chairman Dean Maxwell Cohen, 1111, 1157-8, 1201
Defence provisos on conviction, 1201
Defining of offence, 1136
Duplessis "padlock law", 1200-1
Flag burning on Parliament Hill, 1114
Forfeiture of pamphlets, newspapers, arms, etc., 1113, 1709
Freedom of Speech, 1704
Freedom, preservation of, 1119-20, 1129, 1136, 1280
Genocide, 1111, 1127, 1227-8, 1279, 1706
"Group" or "identifiable group", 1112-13, 1120, 1127-8, 1279-80
Hate literature and propaganda, 1230, 1277-8, 1280, 1281
Human rights and fundamental freedoms, 1228-9
Interpretation of offence, 1211-12
Nazism, 1199, 1200, 1703-4, 1709
Beattie Case, 1703-4, 1709
Obscene literature, 1202
Offence in other than a public place, 1120
Onus of proof of offence, 1211
Penalties, 1112, 1113, 1367
Potential for harm from purveyors of hate, 1109-10, 1156
Press comments, 1127, 1200, 1704-5, 1707
Racial riots and mass murders, 1227, 1231
Radio and TV regulations, 1110
Religious groups, 1200, 1708
Rex vs Palmer case, sale of contraceptives, 1202
Saumur vs City of Quebec, freedom of religion, 1202
UK Race Relations Act, 1706-7
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Belisle, Rheal, 1277-8
Choquette, Lionel, 1198-1203
Connolly, John J., 1203-4, 1661-2
Cook, Eric, 1135-6
Croll, David A., 1154-7
Everett, Douglas D., 1279-81
Flynn, Jacques, 1366-7, 1661
Fournier, Edgar, 1114
Grosart, Allister, 1204-5
Hayden, Salter A., 1227-31
Hollett, Malcolm, 1157
Lang, Daniel A., 1119-21
MacKenzie, Norman A., 1136
Phillips, Orville H., 1167-8
Pouliot, Jean-François, 1157-8
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1109-14, 1702-9
Walker, David, 1126-9
White, George S., 1210-12

Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1109-14, 1119-21, 1126-9, 1135-6, 1198-1205, 1210-12, 1227-31, 1277-81, 1336-7, 1702-9, ref to com, 1709-10

Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) Special Joint Committee
Appointment, motion for, 1144-7, 1166-7; agreed to, 1167
Commons concurrence, 1516
Members
Commons, 1632, 1719
Senate, 1166

Croll, Hon. David A.
Aging, Senate Special Committee, résumé of final report, 69-80, 89 et seq
Attitude of aging adult, 71
Employment, 73-74
Government grants for social research, 77-78
Danish National Institute on Social Research, 78
Recommendations, 78
Health problems, nursing and homemaker facilities, 75-76
Housing, 76-77
Income, 70, 72-73
Recommendations, 73
National Commission on Aging, 78-79
See p. 89 et seq for complete report
Assistance Plan C-207, 931-5
Federal-provincial co-ordination, 932
"Have" and "have-not" provinces, 932
Health and welfare expenditures, comparisons of selected countries, 933-4
As percentage of gross national product, 933
Disability benefits, 934
Family allowances, 934
Old age benefits and survival benefits, 934
Unemployment benefits, 934
Standards, establishing of, 933
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 274-6, 761
Deficiencies in bankruptcy act, 274-5
Fraud squad, 275
Mercier report, 276
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1848-53
Economics in defence, 1852
Military history, 1860
Peacekeeping commitments, 1849
White Paper, 1850-1
Consumer credit
Captive sales financing, 1445
Cooling-off period on credit purchases, 1446
Counselling for consumers, 1446
Interest rates, disclosure of, 1444-5
Low-cost consumer loans through banks, 1445
Used car sales, 1446
Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, Special Joint Committee
Authorization to adjourn from place to place, 1300
Recommendations of committee, 1301, 1444-7
Report, 1307-13, and Appendix to Feb. 16, 1967
Report presented at end of Session, 1928-49
Terms of reference, 1047-8

Croll, Hon. David A. – Concluded
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1154-7
Abuse of freedom, 1156
Anti-discrimination legislation, Ontario, 1156
Bill of Rights, 1155
British Race Relations bill, 1157
Hatemongers, effect on society, 1156
Estimates, 494-5
Winter works program, 494-5
Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill S-3, 28-29, 359
Bill ref to joint com, 359
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1798-1802
LSD, 1799-1802
Article by Director of Adolescent Service, McGill University, 1801-2
Clinical uses and reactions, 1799
Dangers of, press comments, 1799-1802
Death of Toronto student, 1801
Toronto Star report on LSD party, 1800-1
Vancouver Sun, report on Vancouver School Board message to students and parents, 1799-80
Immigration, landed immigrant status, application for, 915-16
Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35, 604-7, 660-1
Accident statistics, 605, 606
Glassco Commission recommendations, 604-5
Ships, trains or aircraft, 660-1
Water supplies and sanitary facilities, 661
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1023-7
Compulsory arbitration, 1025
Montreal Gazette editorial on defying of Parliament by labour, 1027
Right of employees to strike, 1023-4
Ministers' participation in Senate debates, 474
North West Life Assurance Company of Canada bill S-25, 363, 395-6
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1325-8
Groups disregarded under bill, 1325
Income requirement form, 1327
Recommendations of Senate Special Committee on Aging, 1326-7
Welfare programs, inadequacy of, 1328
Training Allowance bill C-186, 722
Winter works program, inability of Atlantic provinces to participate, 494-5
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 888

Crop insurance
Calculation on individual record, 911
Costs of insurance, 911
Deductible, raising of, 912
Federal contribution, 911
Hail insurance, 922-3
Information to policyholders as to benefits, 912
Maximum coverage, 911, 922
Statistics (1964-66), 622
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Fournier, Edgar E., 912-13
Hastings, Earl A., 909-12
Pearson, Arthur M., 921-3

Crop Insurance bill C-208. 1r, 909; 2r, 909-13, 921-3; 3r, 923; r.a., 930

Crowsnest Pass, 1346, 1386-91, 1398
Historical review, 1390
See National transportation

Customs tariff
Balloons, logging equipment, 763
Carnations, 762-3
Drawback, 764
GATT, 764, 791, 792
Extension of time for rates of duty, 762
Kennedy Round of Tariff Negotiations and Arrangements, 764
Liquorice, 763
Litharge, 763
Oriental rugs or carpets, 762
Potash and rock salt equipment, 763
Rates of duties, table printed in Minutes of Proceedings of Senate, 773-4
Settlers' effects, 763-4
Well equipment, 762
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Choquette, Lionel, 791
Connolly, John J., 791-2
Hayden, Salter A., 762-5

Customs Tariff bill C-200. 1r, 762; 2r, 762-5, 791-2; 3r, 811; r.a., 929

Dairy Commission bill C-205. 1r, 769; 2r, 821-30; ref to com, 830; authority to print com proceedings, 853; rep of com without amdt, 853; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Dairy industry
Commission and consultative committee, 824-5
Consumer protection, 829-30
Financing of commission, 822
Fluctuation in volume and price, 821
Income of dairy farmers, 828
Jurisdiction, federal and provincial, 821, 822, 823-4, 830
BNA Act cited, 824
Licences, 825-6
Milk surplus in N.S., 222
Penalties for offences, 826
Prices, 827
Regulations made by Governor in Council, 825
United Milk Producers, article in Halifax Chronicle, 827-8
Vesting of property, 829
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 826-8, 829, 830
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 821-2, 829-30
Roebuck, Arthur W., 828-9
Willis, Harry A., 822-6

Davey, Hon. Keith
Canadian Football League, appointment as Commissioner, 774-5
Citizenship bill S-59, 1773-5
Citizenship Appeal Court, 1774-5
Citizens other than natural-born, 1774
Language requirement, 1774
Offences, 1775
Residence requirements, 1773-4
Company of Young Canadians bill C-174, 854-8
Administration, 857
Advisory committee, 858
Age limit, 858
Aspirations of Young Canadians, excerpt from Company's publication, 855
Background of Company, 856
Canadian University Service Overseas, 856, 857
Charitable organization, 857
Director, 857
Ground rules, 857
Membership, inquiries re, 858
Objects and powers, 856
Poverty and affluent society, 855
Projects approved, 858
Dominion Day, conduct of non-essential business on July 1, 1967, inquiry, 854, 1067, 1072
Introduction to the Senate, 199

Davies, Hon. W. Rupert
Deceased March 11, 1967
Tributes, 1612-17

Debates and Reporting Committee
Members, 26

Declaration of Women
Brief to Government officials re CBC programming, 254-5, 1221-3

Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 409-12
Capital punishment, 410
Propaganda re, 410
Film Development Corporation bill C-204, 1558, 1559
Personnel, 1559
Highway accidents, 411-12
Police force, 411-12
Armed forces for police duty, 411-12
Cadets, 411
Quebec, 411
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55, 1293-4, 1298
Functions and powers of judge, 1293-4
Industrial Property, Paris Convention for protection of, 1293
Patent agents, protection for, 1293
Press comments, 1294

Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., 8-11
Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, appointment as Deputy Leader, 1052-3
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., 147

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C.
Aeronautics bill C-153, 451-2
Air Transport Board, 452
Fees and charges, levying of, 451
Offences against air regulations, 452
Preservation and protection of civil aircraft, 452
Regulations re working conditions, 451
Rockets, moored balloons and kites, 452
Appropriation bill No. 8, 1966 C-245, 1169-72
Appropriation bill No. 9, 1966 C-248, 1212-14, 1223
Appropriation bill No. 2, 1967 C-282, 1758-9
Appropriation bill No. 3, 1967 C-283, 1762-4
Appropriation bill No. 4, 1967 C-293, 1915-18, 1920
Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, appointment as, 1052-3
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 237
Estimates, 1169-72, 1212-14, 1223, 1758-9, 1762-4, 1915-18
Authority to supplement other votes to provide for unforeseen expenses, 1172
Centennial Commission, 1171, 1918
Commercial and fishing vessels, 1763, 1916
Contingencies, 1213
Dominion Coal Board, 1213
Energy, Mines and Resources, 1763, 1916-17
Expo, 1171, 1918
Fisheries research, 1917
Foreign aid, 1171, 1763, 1916
Forestry and rural development, 1917
Freight rates and branch lines, 1213
House of Commons staff, 1763
Justice department, 1917
Kejimkujik national park, 1171
Manpower and immigration, 1213
Maritime transmission lines, etc., 1172
National Capital Plan, 1170
National Gallery, 1917
Payroll payment before interim supply passed, 1172
Privy Council, 1916
Public Service Commission, 1916
Research satellite program, 1171
Road construction, 1763
Salaries, 1171
Senate, 1917
Supplementary (G), 1758-9
Travel Bureau, 1918
University research, 1763
Veterans affairs, 1214
World Exhibition, 1762-3, 1918

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C. – Concluded
Film Development Corporation bill C-204, 1424-8, 1557-9
Agreement with other countries as to national films, 1426
Dubbing of film, 1427
Finances, handling of, 1558-9
Guarding against "bad investment", 1426
Members, 1425
Objects and powers of corporation, 1425
Introduction to the Senate, 199
La Société des Artisans bill S-41, 770, 811-12
National Transportation bill C-231, 1341-7, 1405
Bridges, 1345
Canadian Transport Commission, 1343-4
Crowsnest Pass rates, 1346
Extra-provincial motor vehicle transport, 1345
Freight rates, 1343-6
Jurisdiction of provinces, 1341-2
MacPherson Commission, 1342-3, 1347
Money-losing services, 1345
Railways, telephones and telegraphs, 1345
Transitional subsidy, 1346
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1483, 1489, 1491
Safety and security of the public, 1483
Richelieu Bridge Company bill S-44, 1100-2

Desruisseaux, Hon. Paul
Industrial Research and Development Incentives bill C-252, 1533-7, 1562-3
Bonus on capital expenditures, 1536
Scientific activity in Canada as compared with other countries, 1536-7, 1562-3
Introduction to the Senate, 978

Dessureault, Hon. Jean-Marie
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 150
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 150
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 656-7

Divorce
Alimony, 449
Appeals, 1003-7
"Baird's Law", 336
Biega, Joyce Regina Nagine, appeal against judgment of Senate Commissioner, 1003-7
Committee appointed to hear appeal, 1011-12, 1125, 1424; report adopted, 1820
Children involved in, 136-8, 239-40, 375, 492-3
Federal jurisdiction of, 492
Collusion, 273-4, 335-6, 500-3
Committee duties in relation to evidence heard by Commissioners, 135-8
Common law marriages, 235
Court, definition, 260-1, 428
Cruelty, 240-1, 430
Desertion, 429, 499-500

Divorce—Concluded
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill B (McMeans bill), 234, 259-61
Explanatory notes, 260
Provincial courts, 260
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill 0-6, 234, 262
Domicile, 499
English act cited, 240, 241-2
Grounds for divorce, extension, 234, 240-1
Illegal divorces, prevention of, 321-2
Judicial separation, 499
Jurisdiction in marriage and divorce, 492
Law and Practice of Divorce in Canada, 236
Le Devoir, article by Claude Ryan, 488-9
Missing spouse declared dead, 499
Mueller, Lutz, withdrawal of petition because of death of respondent, 1540
Newfoundland law, 236-40, 335-7, 377-8
Non-consummation of marriage, 499
Pregnancy for which husband not responsible, 499
Press comment on divorce reform, 262
Quebec and Newfoundland, 236-40, 335-7, 488, 489
Rape, 498-9
Regina vs Pichette and Santerre, 502-3
Resolutions, approval by Senate without knowledge of facts, 490-3
Rules, suggested change re appeals, 1005-7
Senate Divorce Committee, 238-9, 379-80, 490-3
Sodomy, 499
Statistics, 134, 138, 1369
United Church of Canada, book on Marriage Breakdown, excerpt from, 235
United Church of Canada General Council resolution, 321, 379
Unsound mind, 241, 242, 274, 321-2, 430, 499
Whiteside report, 810
See Journals of the Senate for names of individuals
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aseltine, Walter M., 258-63
Choquette, Lionel, 238, 239, 243-4, 245
Gershaw, F.W., 273-4
Grosart, Allister, 427-31
Haig, J. Campbell, 321-2
Hnatyshyn, John, 378-80
Inman, F. Elsie, 377-8
Roebuck, Arthur W., 185-6, 233-42, 244-7, 497-506

Divorce Committee
Appointment, 23-24
Leave to sit during adjournments and sittings of Senate, 92, 109
Members, 22
Reports, 92, 109
Special committee to hear Biega appeal, 1011-12, 1125, 1424
Report, 1820
Subcommittees, 92, 109, 1011-12

Divorce Committee, Special Joint
Appointment, 315-16
Bills ref to joint com, 328, 497-506
Members
Commons, 328, 649
Senate, 343-4, 778
Message from Commons, 300
Reports, 650, 687, 1077-9

Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19. Hon. Mr. Roebuck. 1r, 185-6; 2r, 233-42, 243-7, 258-63, 273-4, 377-80, 394-5, 487-93; amdt that bill be ref to Special Joint Committee on Divorce, 497-506; agreed to, 506

Divorce Reports
Nos. 2-113 : 134-8
114-169 : 167, 191
170-226 : 186, 206
227-282 : 201, 218
283-337 : 211, 231
338-400 : 293, 306
401-448 : 314, 358
449-498 : 404, 426
499-579 : 454, 485
580-635 : 564, 594
636-670 : 604, 639
671-710 : 744, 775
711-751 : 770, 799
752 : 810
753-816 : 913
817-847 : 1096
848-909 : 1124
910-1041 : 1241, 1260
1042-1098 : 1369, 1406
1099-1146 : 1480, 1493
1147-1211 : 1525, 1541 (No. 1179 withdrawn, 1577)
1212-1251 : 1632, 1662
1252-1290 : 1702, 1720
1291-1333 : 1772, 1803

Divorce Resolutions
Nos. 1-112 : 159-62, 171-3
113-168 : 191-2, 208-9
169-225 : 207-8, 232-3
226-281 : 218-19, 256-7
282-336 : 231-2, 265-7
337-390 : 306-7, 338-9
391-437 : 358-9, 396-7
438-487 : 426-7, 458-7
488-568 : 485-7, 568
569-621 : 594-5, 612-13
622-656 : 639-40, 661-2
657-696 : 775-6, 812-13

Divorce Resolutions – Concluded
697-737 : 813-14, 863-4
738-800 : 914-15
801-830 : 1133-4
831-890 : 1160-1, 1205-6
891-1021 : 1260-3, 1274-6
1022-1074 : 1406-7, 1408-9
1075-1122 : 1493-4, 1499
1123-1184 : 1542-3, 1570-1
1185-1224 : 1662-3, 1696-7
1225-1263 : 1720-1, 1748-9
1264-1304 : 1803, 1819

Documents tabled, see Journals of the Senate

Dominion Day, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Davey, re establishments conducting business on July 1, 854, 1067, 1072

Drugs, see Food and drugs

Duggan, Hon. James
Introduction to the Senate, 978

Dutch Elm Disease, 294-6, 404-5, 413-14

Economic Council of Canada, 228
Annual Review ref to Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Cost of Living), 1195-6
Precedent as to passage of 1936 bill, 357

Economic prospects
Atlantic provinces, 816-20
Canada Development Corporation, 230-1
"Creative federalism", 229-30
Excerpt from Fortune, 230
Criteria and discipline in government administration, 229-30
Economic Council of Canada, 228
Economic development of Canada and Government responsibility, 228-31
Economic wealth and per capita spending, 838
Educational requirements, 229, 230
Foreign investments in Saskatchewan industry, 32
Gold and uranium potential, 543-7
Gross national product, 51, 298
Incomes, Atlantic provinces, 817, 819
Inflationary tendencies, 120-1, 124, 543, 838, 949, 954, 1040-4, 1049-50, 1214, 1217
Manpower and national resources, effective use of, 52
New Brunswick, 57-58, 280-2
Northwest Territories, 588-92, 607-10, 645-8

Economic prospects – Concluded
Pressure on economy through rapid expansion, 228
Productive potential, 228
Unemployment decrease, 51
U.S. control of gold price, 543-4
U.S. investment guidelines, effect on Canadian economy, 119-20, 123-4
Yukon Territory, 710-11

Education
Adult occupational training, 1885, 1897-1914
Education vs economy, Family Herald report, 310
Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, 1620-31, 1633-43
France, child instruction, 309-10
Jurisdiction in educational matters, 793-6
Medical profession, training years, 838-9
New Brunswick, 281
Newfoundland, 98
Ontario capital costs, 1637, 1642
Provincial jurisdiction, 1635, 1639-41
Requirements in economic development of nation, 229, 230
Rural education in relation to local livelihood, 308-10
Scholarships and bursaries, 44-45, 766
Skill training vs true education, 425
Student loans, 765-9, 792-6, 811, 929
Technical and vocational training, 74, 425, 766, 921, 1001-2, 1905-6
University degrees, question as to necessity of, 308
University grants and loan statistics, 308, 767, 768, 1663-4
See Adult occupational training,
Student loans,
Technical and vocational training,
Universities.

Electoral boundaries
Commissions' reports, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 93
Gaspé County, 355
Judicial appointments to commission of inquiry, 353-4
Langlois Commission, 354
Maps, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 726
Maps on redistribution, procedure in redrawing of, 352, 354-5
Newspaper articles by Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 354
Objections by Members of Parliament, 337-8, 353-6
Precedent as to passage of 1936 bill, 357
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 408-9
Pouliot, Jean-François, 305, 337-8, 352-7, 409
See also Redistribution

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill S-22. Hon. Mr. Pouliot. 1r, 305; 2r, 337-8, 352-7, 408-9; bill withdrawn, 409

Electricity
Atlantic provinces, 57-58, 279-80, 842, 843
Brinco corporation, Nfld., 842, 843
New Brunswick, 57-58, 842-3
Private enterprise, Alberta, 843
Public Utilities income tax transfer to provinces, 840-3
Western Canada, 322-4, 843

Emergency sittings
Authority to convene Senate during adjournments, 25
Parliament recalled from recess to deal with maintenance of railways, 978

Employment
Alwinsal Potash of Canada Ltd., 789
Automotive industry, 618, 622, 756, 780-2
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., 788
Indians, The Pas, 324
Senior citizens, 73-74
Technical and vocational training programs, 74
Vocational trainees, employment status of, 722
See Labour

Endocrinology, International Society of, bill S-29. Hon. Mr. Molson. 1r, 413; 2r, 513-15; ref to com, 515; rep of com without amdt, 688; 3r, 688; r.a., 930

Estimates
Agriculture department, 349, 926, 927
Amending of legislation without parliamentary procedure, 286-7
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, 630
Atomic Energy Control Board, 349
Auditor General's report, 119
Authority to supplement other votes to provide for unforeseen expenses, 1172
Borrowing powers, 284-5, 351-2, 928
Borrowing statistics, 285
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 287-8, 1216, 1665, 1722
Capital outflow of Canadian funds, 120
Centennial Commission, 1171, 1354, 1918
Colombo Plan and wheat sales to India, 771
Commercial and fishing vessels, 1763, 1916
Commitment according to terms of item, 371, 928
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, 628
Contingencies, 1213
Defence goods and services, 1724
Dollar items, 123, 125, 286, 288, 289, 771-2, 773, 1760-1
Dominion Coal Board, 1213
Economic Council, 1665-7
Effect of Appropriation bill No. 6, statistical table, 917
Energy, Mines and Resources, 1763, 1916-17
Estimates (1966-67) including budgetary expenditures and loans excluding old age security payments, table printed in Debates, 918, 924
Expo67, 1171, 1667

Estimates – Continued
External Affairs, 283-4, 350, 627, 629
External aid, India and Pakistan, 1244-9, 1916
Feed assistance to provinces, 771
Finance Department, 349, 627
Fisheries, 629, 631, 725, 801-2, 926, 1763, 1917
Foreign aid, 1171, 1244-9, 1763, 1916
Forestry and rural development, 628, 1917
Freight assistance and maintenance of branch lines, 920, 1000, 1213
Glassco Commission recommendations, implementation of, 119, 123, 297, 1664-5
Government expenditures, 108-09, 298-299, 1214
Statistics, 299
Governor General's warrants, 108, 121-2, 124-5
Gross National Product, 51, 298, 1722-5
Health and Welfare, 350-1
House of Commons, 350, 1763
Immigrants, assistance to, 920, 1000
Indians, loans and advances, 287, 288, 289
Inflationary tendencies, 120-1, 124, 1214, 1217
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 928
Justice Department, 350, 926, 1917
Library of Parliament, 921
Loans and advances
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 287-8
External Affairs, 283-4
Indians, 287, 288, 289
Mines and Technical Surveys, 927-8
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, 926
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, 926
Manpower and immigration, 318-19, 1213
Maritime Commission, 349, 351
Maritime transmission lines, etc., 1172
Mines and Technical Surveys, 350, 627, 926, 927
Moneys allocated to specific vote, transfer of, 1665
National Capital Plan, 1170
National Defence, 1214-15
Accommodation overseas, 1215, 1352
Mutual aid, 1214-15, 1352
Oromocto, 1214, 1352
National Employment Service, 920, 1000
National Gallery, 1215, 1352-4, 1917
National Harbours Board, 349-50
National parks, 318, 1171
National Research Council, scholarships and grants, 349, 927
Northern Affairs and National Resources, 351, 629-30, 926
Northumberland Strait construction, 771-2, 773
Old Age Security fund, 285, 298, 1766-7
Payments within one month from end of fiscal year, 371
Payroll payment before interim supply passed, 1172
Privy Council, 1916
"Public expenditure, spending and control", U.K. White Paper, 319, 1666-7
Public Service, 1764-5, 1916
Research satellite program, 1171
Road construction, 1763
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, 926

Estimates—Concluded
Salaries, 1171
Senate, 1917
Solicitor General, penitentiaries, 351
Supplementary (A), 771-3, 853-4, 1557, 1588-90, 1663-7
Supplementary (B) tabled, 848
Supplementary (C), 1174-5, 1588-90, 1663-7
Supplementary (E), 330-1, 367-70, 385
Supplementary (F), 1664
Supplementary (G), 1664
Supply (1966-67), table printed in Debates, 925
Technical and vocational training, 921, 1001-2
Transport department, 349, 351, 926
Travel Bureau, 1918
Undertaking by Leader of Government that passage of bill will not preclude further discussion, 916, 919-20
University grants and research, 1215, 1763
U.S. investment guidelines, effect on Canadian economy, 119-20, 123-4
Veterans Affairs, 351, 920-1, 1000-1, 1214, 1215
Water resources, 926
Winter works, 297-8, 318-19, 334-5, 494-5
Quebec, Atlantic provinces and Ontario, 297-8, 318-19, 332-5, 494-5
Terms of program, 333
Unemployed absorbed in, 333-4
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, 926, 1527-33, 1762-3, 1765-6, 1918

Estimates, referred to Finance Committee
Fiscal year ending Mar. 31/66, m agreed to, 39-40
Authority to print proceedings, 69
Report, 293, 297-9, 318-20, 331-5, 373-7, 494-5
Supplementary (E), 330-1
Authority to print proceedings, 367
Report, 367-70, 385
Fiscal year ending Mar. 31/67, m agreed to, 331
Authority to print proceedings, 432
Supplementary (A), 771-3
Authority to print proceedings, 853-4
Report, 1577, 1588-90, 1663-7, 1721-6
Supplementary (B) tabled (not ref to Com), 848
Supplementary (C), 1174-5
Report, 1577, 1588-90, 1663-7, 1721-6
Fiscal year ending Mar. 31, 1968, m agreed to, 1833-4

Evangelical Convenant Church of Canada bill S-38. Hon. Mr. Hnatyshyn. 1r, 650; 2r, 704; ref to com 704; rep of com with amdt, 848-9; 3r, 868; r.a., 1442

Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated bill S-7. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 39; 2r; 67-68; ref to com, 68; rep of com without amdt, fee paid last session, 134; 3r, 134; r.a., 397; refund of fees, 1241

Everett, Hon. Douglas D.
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1279-81
Bill of Rights, 1279
Freedom of speech, 1280
Genocide, 1279
Group or identifiable group, 1279-80
Hate Propaganda, Committee on, 1280, 1281
Introduction to the Senate, 1135
National Museums bill S-57, 1617-20
Board of Trustees, and powers, 1618-19
Objectives, 1619-20
NATO Parliamentarians conference at Paris, 1779-80
Military commitment and peacekeeping responsibility of Canada, 1779-80

Excelsior Life Insurance Company bill S-26. Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien. 1r, 393; 2r, 406-8; ref to com, 408; rep of com without amdt, 496; 3r, 496

Exchange bill, see Bills of Exchange

Exchequer Court
Deputy registrars, appt. of, 814, 815
Fees, 814, 815
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Hugessen, A.K., 814
Macdonald, John M., 814-15

Exchequer Court bill C-201. 1r, 790; 2r, 814-15; 3r, 854; r.a., 930

Excise tax
Articles progressively exempted, 797
Building materials, 799
Furs, 797, 798-9
Machinery and equipment, 797, 798-9
Margarine, 798, 830
Services, precedent in tax on, 798, 799
Tire retreads, 797, 798, 799
Two or more products in one package, 797
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 799
Cook, Eric, 797-8
Macdonald, John M., 798

Excise tax and old age security fund
Building materials, 1585
Carter Commission report, 1601
Committee on Aging, findings, 1599-1600, 1602
Tax increase and progressive exemptions, 1585
Tax increase in relation to Old age Security fund, 1599-1601
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Grosart, Allister, 1596-1602
Hayden, Salter A., 1584-6, 1602-4

Excise tax bill C-198. 1r, 769; 2r, 797-9; 3r, 811; r.a., 929

Excise Tax bill and old Age Security bill C-268. 1r, 1554; 2r, 1584-6, 1596-1604; ref to com, 1604; authority to print com proceedings, 1604; rep of com without amdt, 1604-5; 3r, 1605; r.a., 1611

Expo67
Events commemorating Canada's Centennial Year, 1554-6
Travel arrangements for Senators, 1812
See World Exhibition

Export and import permits
Area control, 345
Authority of Governor in Council, 345
Export controls, 345-6
Intergovernmental arrangement, 364-6
Permits, 345
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 345, 364-6
Legality of, 364-6, 393-4
Strategic materials, 345-6, 365
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Benidickson, W.M., 344-6, 347
Brooks, A.J., 346-7
Choquette, Lionel, 394
Connolly, John J., 366-7, 393-4
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 363-6

Export and Import Permits bill S-23. 1r, 313; 2r, 344-7; ref to com, 347; authority to print com proceedings, 363; m for 3r, 363-7; 3r, 393-4; r.a., 547

Export credits insurance
Contracts approved by Governor in Council, 1316-17
Contracts with an exporter, 1314, 1316
Liability under contracts outstanding, 1314-15
Power to accept note, etc., of foreign government and reschedule debts, 1315
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1315-16
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 1314-15, 1316-17

Export Credits Insurance bill C-253. 1r, 1314; 2r, 1314-17; 3r, 1317; r.a., 1339

External aid
Food and money distribution methods, 1247-9
Hindu Kush River dam being built by Canadians, 1247
India and Pakistan, drought and hunger conditions, 1244-9
Italy, flood distress, 1248-9
Letter from Prime Minister of India, 1244-5
Oxfam of Canada, 1246
Transportation costs, 1248

External Relations Committee
Commonwealth, motion by Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson that Committee make inquiry into, 270-2
Authority to print proceedings, 432
Members, 25, 314

Fair wages and hours of labour
Fringe benefits, 697
Jurisdiction over wages and hours of labour, 702
Labour-management representations, 697
Minimum wage in Nova Scotia, 698, 702
Overtime, 686
Penalties, 686
Powers of Governor in Council and minister, 700-1
Standard rate of pay, 686
Statement by Vice-President of CLC, 702
Working hours, 686
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Grosart, Allister, 700-2
Hnatyshyn, John, 696-7
Macdonald, John M., 698-700, 702
Roebuck, Arthur W., 702
Smith, Donald, 685-7, 703-4

Fair Wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2. 1r, 649; 2r, 685-7, 696-704; ref to com, 704; authority to print com proceedings, 744; rep of com without amdt, 744; 3r, 744; r.a., 758

Farm credit
Capital increase, 516-18
Cost-price squeeze, 518-19, 520
Family farms, 519-20
Interest rates, 519
Land prices, 520-1
Loan losses, 517
Loan statistics, 517, 521
Machinery costs, 518
Mortgage loans, 517
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Argue, Hazen, 519-22
Aseltine, Walter M., 517-19
Hays, Harry, 515-17

Farm Credit bill C-171. 1r, 401; 2r, 515-22; ref to com, 522; rep of com without amdt, 525; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Farming
Agricultural program of Liberal party, excerpts from pamphlet on, 732
Cattle produce, 732
Cost-price squeeze, 674

Farming – Concluded
Crop exports, 732
Farm Leadership Awards, 675
Income, farm families, 549-50
Income, rural non-farm families, 549-50
Livestock feed assistance, 1076, 1083-90, 1096-9, 1104-7, 1116-19, 1129-33, 1137-8, 1158-60, 1168-9, 1175
Loss in farm population, 582-3, 664-5
Producers in western Canada, 730-5
Production costs and sales prices, 733-4
Rural economic development, 548-51, 662-6, 671-7, 714, 726-7, 929, 1551-3, 1564-7
Rural poverty, 308-10, 549, 551, 672, 906-7
Saskatoon Prairie Conference, 734-5
Two-price system, 734
Unemployed settlers and farmers, inquiry by Labour Dept., 663
Youth interest in 4-H clubs, 1106
See Agriculture,
Livestock feed assistance,
Rural economic development.

Farris, Hon. J.W. de B.
Bank of British Columbia bill S-16, 133, 144-5
Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement bill C-154, 445-6
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1857
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169, 461
Ministers' participation in Senate debates, Rule No. 18A, 471-3

Fauteux, Hon. Gerald, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court
Royal assent, 291

Favreau, Hon. Guy, President of the Queen's Privy Council
Author of Amendment of the Canadian Constitution, 126-7

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements
Contracting out, 1625
Education, post-secondary, 1622-5, 1635-8, 1642-3
Bladen Commission, 1636, 1637-8
Newsletter from Dept. of Manpower and Immigration, 1635-6
Ontario capital costs, 1637, 1642
Operating costs, 1636
Provincial jurisdiction, 1635, 1641
Universities qualified for grants, 1633-4
Equalization, principle of, 1634-5
General equalization payments, 1626-30, 1638
Exceptions, 1630
Provincial entitlements, 1627-8
Jurisdiction in tax fields, 1639-41
Prince Edward Island, 1633
Principles decided on at conference in Oct/66, 1620
Provincial revenue stabilization payments, 1625
Succession duties, 1626
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1620-31, 1633-4, 1641-3
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 1634-41, 1642

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements bill C-277. 1r, 1604; 2r, 1620-31, 1633-43; ref to com, 1643; authority to print com proceedings, 1660; rep of com without amdt, 1660; 3r, 1670; r.a., 1768

Fees, parliamentary
Baptist General Conference of Canada bill S-43, refund, 1480
Evangelistic Tabernacle Inc., fee paid last session, 134
United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces, refund, 987

Felicitations
Bourget, Hon. Maurice, Privy Council appointment, 162
Crerar, Hon. T.A., 60th wedding anniversary, 100
Davey, Hon. Keith, appointment as Commissioner of Canadian Football League, 774-5
Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, Citizen of the Year award from Brantford Junior Chamber of Commerce, 187
Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, Honorary President of Junior Chamber of Commerce, 878
MacKenzie, Hon. Norman A., National President of Association of Canadian Clubs, 688-9
Power, Hon. C.G., honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, 607
Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W., 89th birthday, 1515-16

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.
Aging, Senate Special Committee, 129-31
Canadian Conference on Aging, Toronto, 130
Davis, Dr. R.E.G., consultant, 129
Income for older persons, 130
Organizations in other countries, 130, 131
Financial Administration bill C-182, 1491-3
Responsibilities of Treasury Board, 1492-3
Prison administration, female inmates, inquiry, 915

Film Development Corporation
Agreement with other countries as to national films, 1426
Awards, 1429, 1431
Distribution of films, 1431
Dubbing, 1427
Film Commissioner as member of Board, 1429, 1430-1
Films and film makers of Canada, 1430
Financial arrangements, 1428-9, 1432, 1556, 1558-9
Members, 1425, 1557, 1559
Objects and powers of corporation, 1425
Outside control, danger of, 1429, 1432
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Cameron, Donald, 1430-2
Denis, Azellus, 1558, 1559
Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 1424-8, 1557-9
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 1428-30
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1556-7

Film Development Corporation bill C-204. 1r, 1408; 2r, 1424-32; ref to com, 1432; authority to print com proceedings, 1543; rep of com without amdt, 1544; 3r, 1556-9; r.a., 1611

Finance Charges (Disclosure) bill S-3. Hon. Mr. Croll. 1r, 28-29; m for 2r, 359; m in amdt to ref bill to joint committee, agreed to, 359

Finance Committee
Members, 26, 269, 314
Reports
Dairy Commission bill C-205. Authority to print proceedings, 853; rep without amdt, 853
Estimates, fiscal year ending Mar. 31/66, 293, 297-9, 318-20, 331-5, 373-7, 494-5
Authority to print proceedings, 69
Supplementary (E), 367-70, 385
Authority to print proceedings, 367
Estimates, fiscal year ending Mar. 31/67, 331, 1577, 1588-90
Authority to print proceedings, 432
Supplementary (A), 771-3, 1577, 1588-90, 1663-7, 1721-6
Supplementary (B), not ref to com, 848
Supplementary (C), 1174-5, 1577, 1588-90, 1663-7, 1721-6
National Research Council bill C-150. Authority to print proceedings, 540-1; rep with amdts, 581, 599, 611-12
Science Council of Canada bill C-149. Authority to print proceedings, 541; rep without amdt, 541

Financial administration
Governor General's warrants, 1511-12
Treasury Board responsibilities and powers, 1492-3, 1498-9, 1510-14
Delegation of, 1511
Glassco Commission recommendations re, 1513, 1514
President, 1513, 1515
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Blois, Fred M., 1498-9
Connolly, John J., 1515
Fergusson, Muriel McQ., 1491-3
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 1510-15

Financial Administration bill C-182. 1r, 1480; 2r, 1491-3, 1498-9, 1510-15; 3r, 1526; r.a., 1541

Fisheries
Arctic char, monopoly by federal Government, 467
Atlantic provinces, development programs, 280-1
Steel trawlers and wooden vessels, 280
Training of fishermen, officers and crew, 280
B.C. fishermen and packers, agreement re prices, 458-62
B.C. Indian fishermen, 482-3
Encroachment by foreign fishermen, 482

Fisheries – Concluded
Federal Government assistance to industry, 463-6
Inspection regulations, 465-6, 479
Instruction and research, 480-1
Lamprey control and research, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 629, 725, 801-2
Newfoundland inshore fishermen, 95-96
Nova Scotia, 377-80
First place in dollar volume of landed fish, 477-8
Inshore fishermen, 479-80
Loans for new construction, 479
Subsidies, 95-96, 364-70
Socialism, question of, 467-9
Twelve-mile limit, 631, 725, 802
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Choquette, Lionel, 467
Crerar, T.A., 468
Gladstone, James, 481-2
Hollett, Malcolm, 468-9
O'Leary, Clement A., 477-80
Phillips, Orville H., 480-1
Roebuck, Arthur W., 468, 469
Smith, Donald, 463-8, 482-3

Fisheries Development bill C-145. 1r, 401; 2r, 463-70, 477-82; ref to com, 483; authority to print com proceedings, 524-5; rep of com, 525; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Flag, national
Burning of Flag by students on Parliament Hill, 1114

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 3 C-157, 371-2
Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-3, 315
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 263-5, 809-10
Creditor's lack of interest when bankruptcy declared, 264-5
Proposals, 263
Solicitor-Client privilege, 809-10
Superintendent's authority, 263
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 152-3
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 152
Corporations bill S-51, 1107
Corporations without share capital, 1107
Legislative authority of Parliament, extension of, 1107
Supplementary letters patent, 1107
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1366-7, 1661
Penalty, 1367
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 487-9
Le Devoir, editorial by Claude Ryan, 488-9
Quebec and Newfoundland, exclusion from provisions, 488, 489
Income Life Insurance Company bill S-11, 143-4

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C. – Concluded
Judges bill C-267, 1519-22
Admiralty districts, 1520
Capacities forbidden to judge unless by special appointment, 1520
Salary for extra-judicial services, 1520
Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35, 658-60, 850-1
Motor vehicles, authority of Governor in Council re, 850, 851
Restrictions in application of code, 659-60
Water supplies and sanitary facilities, 659, 660
Lands surveys bill S-48, 983
Laurier Life Insurance Company bill S-27, 404, 493-4
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1096-8
Board, functions of, 1097-8
Price variations, 1097
National Museums bill S-57, 1700-1
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1487-9
Arbitration boards, 1489
Public sector, right to strike, 1487-8
Quebec Savings Banks bill C-223, 1747
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151, 726

Food and drugs (LSD)
Clinical use, 1795-7, 1799
Dangerous effects and reactions, 1793, 1797-1802, 1813-14
Death of student John Stern attributed to LSD, 1797, 1801, 1813
Glamorizing of LSD through news media, 1801-2, 1813, 1821, 1828, 1830
Leary, Timothy, head of psychedelic cult, 1797, 1799, 1801, 1813
Conviction and sentence, 1813
Legal distribution, 1795
Medical care for addicts, 1818, 1846-7
Originators of, 1795, 1796
Penalties, 1845-8
Press comments, 1799-1802, 1821
Study by UN Narcotics Commission, 1783
Toronto Star report on LSD party, 1800-1
University of Toronto weekend "Perception 67" on drug experience, 1801
Unwin, J. Robertson, McGill University, article on glamorizing of LSD through news media, 1801-2
Vancouver School Board publication re dangers of LSD, 1799-1800
Mental health statistics, 1822, 1826-7
News media, glamorizing of drugs, 1821-2, 1828, 1830
Onus of proof, 1830
Penalties, 1823, 1829-30
Youth protests, 1825-6
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1847
Croll, David A., 1798-1802
Gershaw, F.W., 1795-6
Hollett, Malcolm, 1818-19, 1846, 1847, 1848
Macdonald, John M., 1817-18
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 1792-5, 1817-18, 1829-30, 1846-7
McGrand, Fred A., 1825-7
Molson, Hartland de M., 1845-6

Food and drugs (LSD) – Concluded
Speakers: Honourable Senators – Concluded
Phillips, Orville H., 1823-5
Prowse, J. Harper, 1827-9
Sullivan, Joseph A., 1796-8
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1821-2
Walker, David, 1812-17

Food and Drugs bill S-60. 1r, 1772; 2r, 1792-1802, 1812-19, 1821-30; ref to com, 1830; authority to print com proceedings, 1833; rep of com with amdts, 1845-8

Forestry
Dutch Elm disease, 294-6, 404-5, 413-14
Woodlot implements, tariff on, 671

Fournier, Hon. Edgar
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 57-64
Adult Occupational Training bill C-278, 1905-9
Age limit, 1908
Commonwealth training program, 1907
Technical and vocational training schools, 1905-6
Atlantic Development Board bill C-213, 820
Ship-building industry, 820
Capital punishment, 59
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1114
Cartoonists, 1114
Flag burning on Parliament Hill, 1114
Crop Insurance bill C-208, 912-13
Immigration Appeal Board bill C-220, 1580-1
Lack of communication with immigrants, 1581
White Paper on Immigration, 1581
Industries, assistance advocated, 57
New Brunswick hydro developments, 57-58
Saint John River, Dickey Dam, 57-58
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1328-31
Income requirement form, 1329-30
Social security without responsibility, 1330
Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer bill C-211, 842-3
Beneficiaries of transfer, 842
Brinco Corporation, Newfoundland, 842, 843
New Brunswick, question of benefits, 842-3
Refund limits, 842
Taxi service from Ottawa railway station, 1580
Traffic accidents, 60-64, 1331
Emotions contributing to accidents, 60-61
"Hospitality on the Highway", safety program of Highway Safety Council, 1331
"It could happen to you", TV program for highway safety education, 64
Suggestions for government co-operation in prevention of, 62-63
United Nations, twenty-first session of General Assembly, 1165-6

Fournier, Hon. Sarto
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 541-7
Divorce, children involved in, 136, 137-8
Economic development, 542-6
Gold, 543-4
Subsidies, 543
U.S. control of price, 543-4
Inflationary tendencies, 543
International Nuclear Energy Commission, NATO resolution re, 545-6
Uranium, 544-7
France, international relations with respect to sale of uranium, 546-7
Negotiations with USSR, 546
Potential, 544-6

France
Jet purchases from, 312
Uranium sales, potential for, 544-7
Withdrawal from military alliance, 1441

Freight assistance, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920, 1000

French-Canadian liberalism, question of privilege, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 272-3

Gelinas, Hon. Louis P.
Bank bill and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-3, 314-15

General Mortgage Service Corporation bill S-8. Hon. Mr. Leonard. 1r, 39; 2r-ref to com, 68; rep of com without amdt, 167; fee paid last session, 168; 3r, 187; Commons amdt, 1233; r.a., 1263

Gershaw, Hon. F.W.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 80-82
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 273-4
Collusion, 273-4
Unsound mind, five year period questioned, 274
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1795-6
LSD, adverse effects from uncontrolled use of, 1795
Clinical uses, 1795-6
Indians, status in Centennial Year, 1609-10
Health services, 1610
Pioneers of Canada, 1609-10
Treaties and land rights, 1610
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1158-9
Community pastures, 1159
Cost-price squeeze for food producers, 1159
Transportage, shortage of box cars, 1158

Gershaw, Hon. F.W. – Concluded
Medical Care bill C-227, 1259-60
Alberta plan, 1260
Costs to individuals and to Government, 1259, 1260
Difficulties experienced in other countries, 1259
Hall report, 1259
Medicare, 80-82
Alberta Medical Plan, 80
Areas of special concern, 81
Costs, 80-81
Medical profession, lack of trained personnel, 81
Opinions expressed by Canadian Medical Assoc. and other groups, 80-81
Research needs, 81
Water resources, conservation of, 614-16
Flood and drought control, 615, 616
Irrigation projects, 616
Pollution of waters, 615

Gladstone, Hon. James
Appropriation bill No. 2 C-140, 289
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 481-2
B.C. Indians, 481-2
Encroachment by foreign fishermen, 482
Indians, 289, 995, 1605-8
Alcoholism on Indian reserves, background of, 1606
Centennial grants and projects, 1605
Cold Lake Reserve centennial committee, 1605
Education, 1607-8
Industrial schools, closing of, 1607-8
Elective system of government on reserves, 1608
Health services, 1607
Lack of representation in House of Commons, 995
Loans and advances to, 289
Reserves and Indian culture, preservation of, 1606
Status in Centennial Year, 1605-8
Treaties and land agreements, 1606-8
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1098
Territorial definitions, 1098
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47, 995

Glassco, J. Grant, chairman of Royal Commission on Government Organization, 119, 123, 297, 420, 423-4, 682
See Government Organization

Gold, 543-4
Subsidies, 543
U.S. control of price, 543-4

Gouin, Hon. L.M.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 35-37
Bilingualism and biculturalism, Canadian unity in development of, 36-37
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 155-6
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 156
Federal-provincial relations, 36
Flag and national anthem, 36
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 656
Peacekeeping activities, 35-36

Government
Criticisms of Government in railway dispute, 1021-3, 1028-30, 1032-6
Leadership of major parties, 565, 571
Monetary policy, 1045-7
Prestige of Parliament, 565, 571
Provincial affairs, infringement by federal government, 565-6

Government expenditures, 374-6, 567-71, 1656, 1685-8
Authority to supplement other votes to provide for unforeseen expenses (Payroll deduction), 1172
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 374-5, 376, 569-70, 1216, 1685-6
Centennial Performing Arts, 1066-7, 1069-71
Employees in government, increase in, 1687
Franking privileges, 375
Glassco recommendations, 119, 123, 297, 420, 423-4, 682, 1686-7
Gross National Product, decline in, 1686-8
Health and welfare programs, 902, 905
Inflationary trends, 1040-4, 1049-50, 1214, 1217
Loans, investments and advances, 375-6
Parliamentary secretaries, 375
See Estimates

Government organization
Chief Electoral Officer, 728
Crown lands, 682-3
Energy, Mines and Resources, 682
Financial authority of departments, and management of resources, 297
Firms hired by Government to ascertain feasibility of Glassco recommendations, 123
Forestry and Rural Development, 123, 297, 420, 423-4, 682
Glassco Commission recommendations, 119, 123, 297, 420, 423-4, 682, 1686-7
Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 681
Industry, 694
Justice Department, 727
Labour, 681, 690-1
Manpower and Immigration, 680-1, 685, 695
National Revenue and Finance, 694
Public Works, 694
Registrar General, 680
Reduction of votes in estimates, 1664-5
Secretary of State, 683, 684
Scientific policies, 420, 423-4

Government organization – Concluded
Solicitor General, 679
Access to files of RCMP, 679-80
Statistics on implementation of Glassco recommendations, 119
Treasury Board President, 683, 684, 695
Water resources, recommendation re, 682
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Choquette, Lionel, 685-92
Connolly, John J., 677-85
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 692-5
Pouliot, Jean-François, 727-9

Government Organization bill 1966 C-178. 1r, 649; 2r, 677-85, 689-96; ref to com, 696; authority to print com proceedings, 714; rep of com without amdt, 715; 3r, 727-9; r.a., 758

Governor General
Deputy
Cartwright, Hon. J.R., 1541
Fauteux, Hon. Gerald, 291, 1924-5
Hall, Hon. Emmett M., 929-30, 976-7, 1339-40
Taschereau, Hon. Robert, 2, 131, 178, 397, 547, 647, 757-8, 1037, 1175, 1194, 1197, 1209, 1232, 1263, 1442, 1509
Opening of Parliament, 1-6
Speech from the Throne, 3-6
Prorogation of Parliament, 1924-7
Speech from the Throne, 1925-7

Governor General Georges Philias Vanier
Deceased March 5, 1967
Tributes, 1572-8

Governor General Roland Michener, installation of, 1772, 1783-5

Governor General's Retiring Annuity
Annuity amount, 1496
Entertainment allowance, 1496
Former Governors General, 1495, 1496
Salary, 1495, 1549
Widows, 1495
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1496-7, 1548-9
Connolly, John J., 1495-7, 1549

Governor General's Retiring Annuity bill C-265. 1r, 1495; 2r, 1495-7, 1548-9; 3r, 1559; r.a., 1611

Grain
Exports, 732
Feed assistance to provinces, 771
Producers in western Canada, 730-5
Production costs and sales prices, 733-4
Wheat for relief of drought and hunger conditions in India and Pakistan, 1244-9
Wheat sales to India, 771
See Livestock Feed Grain Assistance

Grant, Hon. Thomas V.
Retired August 19, 1965
Tributes, 19
Deceased December 24, 1966
Tributes, 1351

Grey Cup, see Sports

Grosart, Hon. Allister
Adult Occupational Training bill C-278, 1901-4, 1912
Costs to government, 1904
Federal-provincial agreements, 1903
Aging, report of Senate Special Committee, 112-14
Income tax returns, 114
Means test, 114
Mental patients, treatment of, 113-14
Minimum income for Canadians at 65 years, 113
Appropriation bill No. 9 1966, C-248, 1216
Appropriation bill No. 2, 1967 C-282, 1759-61
Appropriation bill No. 3, 1967 C-283, 1766-8
Appropriation bill No. 4, 1967 C-293, 1919
Automotive products, Canada-U.S. agreement, 747-57
Effect on Canadian industry, 750
Employment of skilled and unskilled workers, 756
Letters of Commitment, 752-3
Amendment proceedings as reported in U.S. Code Congressional News, 752-3
Procedure on implementation of treaties and agreements, 747-50, 753-5
Oppenheim's International Law, 754
Parliamentary approval, lack of, 753-5
Reduction of duties 'for concessions granted', 747-8
Trade deficit in automotive exports, 750-2, 756
Globe and Mail report on, 751-2
Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation bill C-261, 1353-5, 1456-9
Caisses populaires, 1453
Conflict with provincial act, 1457-8
Creditor remedies available, 1453-4
Deposit, definition of, 1457
Effective date of insurance, 1455-6
Failure of financial institutions, 1455
Failure of member institution, 1456
Financial Post article by president of Guaranty Trust Co., 1458-9
Inspections, 1454
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation TV program "Sunday", 1204-5

Grosart, Hon. Allister—Concluded
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Ottawa conference, 1065
Report on, 1080-3
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1204-5
Davey, Hon. Keith, appointment as Commissioner of Canadian Football League, 774
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 239, 240, 427-31
Clarification of grounds, 429
Senate, inclusion as divorce court, 428
Estimates, 1759-1, 1766-7
Dollar items, 1760
Old Age Security Fund, 1766-7
Excise Tax bill and Old Age Security bill C-268, 1596-1602
Carter Commission report, 1601
Committee on Aging, findings, 1599-1600
Tax increase, in relation to Old Age Security fund, 1599-1601
External aid, transportation costs, 1248
Fair Wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2, 700-2
Labour-management representations, 697
Powers of Governor in Council and minister, 700-1
Statement by Vice-President of CLC and IBEW, 702
Interpretation bill S-9, 204-6
Broadcasting, radio, communication, 205
Commonwealth, 205-6
National Arts Centre bill C-194, 964-7
"Edifice complex", 966
National Capital Arts Alliance, 966
Ottawa arts centres of former years, 966
Secretary of State, contribution to the Arts, 965
NATO Parliamentarians, Canadian delegates, 1473
Northwest Territories bill C-146, 646-8
Self-government, 647-8
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1321-5
Groups disregarded under bill, 1322-3
Provincial pension plans, effect on, 1323
Recommendation of Senate Special Committee on Aging, 1322, 1324-5
Press report on passage of bills by Senate, 894
Public Service Employment bill C-181, 1500-7, 1508
Merit system, 1501, 1502
Parliamentary staff, 1502, 1506
Political activity, 1502, 1504-6, 1508
C.S. Commission memorandum re, 1505
Public Service Commission powers, 1502-4
Treasury Board responsibilities, 1501-2
Trade and foreign aid, 1081-2

Guides Catholiques du Canada (secteur français) bill S-24. Hon. Mrs. Jodoin. 1r, 343

Haig, Hon. J. Campbell
Aeronautics bill C-153, 512-13
Accidents, 512-13
Obstruction of investigation of accidents, 513
Powers of Board, 512

Haig, Hon. J. Campbell – Concluded
Aging, report of Special Senate Committee, 139-40
Community neglect of older people, 140
Social Workers Assoc. brief on, 140
Retirement preparations, discussions and program of United Automobile Workers, 139-40
Baptist General Conference of Canada bill S-43, 878, 894-5
Bill withdrawn and fees refunded, 1480
Commonwealth Parliamentary Assoc., Ottawa conference, inquiry, 600-3
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 321-2
Illegal divorces, prevention of, 321-2
United Church General Council resolution, 321
Estimates, 1695-6
Mennonite Central Committee (Canada) bill S-37, 638-9
NATO Parliamentarians, 1473
Pan-American Games 1967 in Winnipeg, 745-6
Small Businesses Loans bill C-270, 1551

Hall, Hon. Emmett M., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal Assent, 929-30, 976-7, 1339-40

Hastings, Hon. Earl A.
Crop Insurance bill C-208, 909-12
Calculation on individual record, 911
Costs of insurance, 911
Deductible, raising of, 912
Federal contribution, 911
Information to policyholders re benefits, 912
Maximum coverage, 911
Immigration Appeal Board bill C-320, 1567-70, 1583-4, 1670
Deportations, 1584
Immigrant census in industrial and scientific field, 1567
Immigration offices in communist countries, 1583
Non-immigrant arrival and departure cards, 1583
Officers and members of board, 1568-9
Permanent resident or landed immigrant, 1569
Security or criminal intelligence reports, 1570
Sponsorship, 1569
White Paper on Immigration, 1568
Introduction to the Senate, 199
Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited bill S-52, 1077, 1091-2

Hate propaganda, see Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda)

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.
Automotive products, Canada-U.S. agreement, 779-87
Amdt to agreement, 782-3
Benefits to Canadian industry, 780-5
Employment, 780-2
Financial Post article on "Life Under the Auto Pact", 781-2
Ford Motor Co. expenditures in Canada, 780

Hayden, Hon. Salter A. – Continued
Automotive products – Concluded
Imbalance of payments, 785-6
Jigs, dies, et cetera, 787
Letter of Agreement, non-approval of extension, 783-4
Reciprocal concessions, 784-5
Trade agreements by order in council, 785
Bank bill C-222, 1740-3
Directors, 1741, 1743
Non-resident shareholders, 1742
Shares in loan or trust company, 1741
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 212-18, 277-9, 577-80, 759-60, 761, 809
Credit Grantors' Association brief, 277
Creditors' lack of interest to investigate, 277
Discharge from bankruptcy, 216-17, 579
Information to be furnished from trustee, 217, 579
Jurisdiction of federal Government, 277
Limitation on debt accumulation, 213
Mercier report, 277-8
Orderly payment of debts, 213
Preference as to debtor, 215-16
Proposal, 215, 579
Solicitor-client privilege, 578, 759-60
Summary administration, 212-13, 278
Superintendent of Bankruptcy, authority of, 213-14, 218, 577-8, 760
Trustees, screening of, 278
Bills of Exchange bill S-14, 268-9
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 154
Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement bill C-154, 438-43, 446
Copyright royalties, 442
Exchange of information, 439-40
Pensions and annuities, 441-2
Profits from industrial or commercial operation, 440
Profits from ships or aircraft, 441
Residence requirements, 443
Supplementary agreement with Sweden, 438
Withholding tax, 438-9, 440
Citizenship bill S-59, 1789-90, 1808-9, 1810
Deserted infant or foundling, 1789-90
Domicile, 1808-9
Corporations bill S-51, 1108-9
"National" organizations, 1109
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1227-31
British Race Relations bill, 1227
Genocide, definition in UN Charter and responsibility of contracting nations, 1227-8
Hate literature, 1230
Human rights and fundamental freedoms, 1228-9
Racial riots and mass murders, 1227, 1231
Customs Tariff bill C-200, 762-5
Balloons, logging equipment, 763
Carnations, 762-3
Drawback, 764
GATT, 764
Extension of time for rates of duty, 762

Hayden, Hon. Salter A. – Continued
Customs Tariff bill – Concluded
Kennedy Round of Tariff Negotiations and Arrangements, 764
Liquorice, 763
Litharge, 763
Oriental rugs or carpets, 762
Potash and rock salt equipment, 763
Settlers' effects, 763-4
Well drilling equipment, 762
Excise Tax bill and Old Age Security bill C-268, 1584-6, 1602-4
Building materials, 1585
Committee on Aging, findings, 1602
Sales tax increase and progressive exemptions, 1585
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., retired, 1358-9
Income Tax Agreements bill S-56, 1369-76
Alimony and maintenance payments, 1373
Capital gains, 1374
Dividends and interest, 1372-3, 1375
Dual residence, 1375
Entertainers, 1374
Funnel Company, 1376
Insurance companies, 1375, 1376
Ireland, 1375-6
Movable property, 1374
Nonresident status of companies incorporated in Canada, 1371
Norway, 1376
Pension or annuity, 1374
Professional services, 1373
Royalties, 1373
Salaries, wages, etc., 1373
Teachers and students, 1373, 1376
Termination of U.S. agreement on six months' notice, 1370
Trinidad and Tobago, 1370
United Kingdom, 1370-5
Income Tax bill C-216, 943-8, 953-4
Capital cost allowance, 948
Charitable organization, 946
Communication of information, 946-7
Manufacturing or processing business, 946
Nonresident-owned investment corporation, 947
Oil and gas explorations "in Canada", 947
Potash mining, 945
Refundable tax, 947-8
Stock options, 944-5
Tax Appeal Board, extension of age limit for members, 945
Tuition fees, 943-4
Withholding tax, 944
Income Tax bill C-259, 1647-54, 1719-20
Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act, repeal of, 1652-3
Deferred profit sharing plan, 1647-51
Abuses, 1647-8
Forfeitures, 1649, 1651
Initial base of trust, 1649-50
Life insurance, 1651
Penalties, 1649
Vesting, 1648-50

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.—Concluded
Income Tax bill C-259 – Concluded
Dental expenditures, 1653
Scientific research, 1653-4
Supplementary unemployment benefit plans, 1652
Interpretation bill S-9, 852
Lands Surveys bill S-48, 997-8
Examination fees, 998
Payments to examiners, 997-8
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 993
National Museums bill S-57, 1701

Hays, Hon. Harry, P.C.
Farm Credit bill C-171, 515-17
Capital increase, 516
Loan losses, 517
Loan statistics, 517
Introduction to the Senate, 258

Health and Welfare
Aging, report of Senate Special Committee, 89
See also Aging
Assistance plan, 897-909, 931-5, 976
Health resources fund, 778, 831-40, 853, 868, 929
LSD, 1792-1802, 1812-19
Medicare, 80-82
See Food and Drugs,
Medical Care.

Health resources fund
Advisory Committee, 832
Allocations of fund, 831, 832, 834
Atlantic provinces, 831, 834
Calculation of costs, 832
Conditions of payment, 832
Gundy, C.L., and committee, 833, 836
Hall Commission on Health Services, 833, 834, 835
Health training facility, 831, 832
Medical profession, 833, 839
New Brunswick, 839
Research in Canada, 833, 836
Schools, lack of teaching personnel, 835-6
Training years, 838-9
Medicare, 839-40
Provincial requirements, 834-7
Ray Farquharson Clinical Investigation Unit, 833
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Beaubien, L.P., 837-8
Burchill, G. Percival, 839
Lang, Daniel A., 831-3
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 834-7, 839-40
Phillips, Orville H., 838-9

Health Resources Fund bill C-199. 1r, 778; 2r, 831-40; ref to com, 840; rep of com without amdt, 853; 3r, 868; r.a., 929

Highway accidents, see Traffic accidents

Hnatyshyn, Hon. John
Deceased May 2, 1967
Canadian National Railway bill C-210 (Stall Lake-Watrous), 789-90
Potash potential in Saskatchewan, 789
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 378-80
Senate Committee, 379-80
United Church General Council resolution, 379
Evangelical Convenant Church of Canada bill S-38, 650, 704
Fair Wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2, 696-7
Fringe benefits, 697
Labour-management representations, 697
Northwest Territories bill C-146, 645-6
Mineral production, 645
Pine Point Railway, 645
Self-government, 646
Yukon bill C-147, 710-11, 712
Finances, 712
Self-government, 711, 712

Hollett, Hon. Malcolm
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 93-99
Appropriation bill No. 5 C-189, 631
Churchill Falls, inquiry re development of, 707
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1884-5
Seconding to other countries, 1884
Citizenship bill S-59, 1776-8
Deserted infants or foundlings, 1777-8
Newfoundland, inclusion of, 1777
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169 (B.C. fishermen and packers), 459, 460
Committee meetings, conflict with Senate and Commons sittings, 1078
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1157
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 240, 245
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 468-9
Fisheries, twelve-mile limit, inquiry, 631, 725, 802
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1818-19, 1846, 1847, 1848
Medical care for addicts, 1818, 1846
Penalties, 1846
Government expenditures, 1656
Income Tax bill C-259, 1654-7
Subsidies for construction of small vessels in Atlantic provinces, 1655-7
Judges bill C-160, 392
National Transportation bill C-231, 1405
Newfoundland, 1405

Hollett, Hon. Malcolm – Concluded
Newfoundland
Inshore fishermen, federal Government subsidy to, 95-96
"Labrador takeover" by Quebec, suggestion by St. Jean Baptiste Society, 97-99
Judgment of British Privy Council re Newfoundland boundaries, 97-98, 553-4
Student aid, 98
Transportation, 1405
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 552-5, 556, 557-8, 559
Boundaries, 553-4
Grants from federal Government, 554-5, 556, 557
McNair Commission recommendations, 552
National debt, 553
Perpetuity of agreement, 555, 556
Revenues and expenditures, 557
Trans-Canada Highway, 557
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1489-90
Results of strikes in certain sectors, 1490
Right to strike questioned, 1490
Small Businesses Loans bill C-270, 1539-40
Loans and losses, 1540
Monopolies, 1540
Newfoundland loans, 1540
Subsidies to fishermen and farmers, 95-96
Survey of Contemporary Indians in Canada, Hawthorn-Tremblay report, question of privilege, 1748
Wabana mines, inquiry re closing, 707

Housing, see National Housing

Hugessen, Hon. A.K.
Retired January 1, 1967
Tributes, 1355-60
Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate, 147
Appropriation bill No. 2 C-140, 283-5
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 735-42
Date agreement enters into force, 739-40
Duty-free imports, clauses dealing with, 738-9
Procedure on treaties and agreements, 736
Constitutional Law, excerpt from, 736
International Waterways agreement, Sir Robert Borden quoted, 737
U.S. law, 737-8
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 147-8
Bourget, Hon. Maurice, Privy Council appointment, 162
Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company bill S-36, 743-4
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Ottawa conference, 1063-4
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 148-9
Corporations bill S-51, 1107-8
Company formations without parliamentary legislation, 1108
Religious organizations, 1108
Supplementary letters patent, 1107
Estimates, 283-5
Borrowing powers and statistics, 284-5
Loans, investments and advances, External Affairs, 283-4

Hugessen, Hon. A.K. – Concluded
Evangelical Convenant Church of Canada bill S-38, 848-9
Excelsior Life Insurance Company bill S-26, 407
Exchequer Court bill C-201, 814
Deputy registrars, appt. of, 814
Fees, 814
Income Tax bill C-216, 958
Stock options, 958
Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill S-10, 133-4
Labour Safety (Code) bill S-35, 850, 851
Mechanical standards for vehicles and equipment, authority of Governor in Council re, 850
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 16
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 993
National Research Council bill C-150, 483-4
Name change of Research Council, 483
Science library, 484
Securities or money acquired by gift, bequest, or otherwise, 483-4
Ottawa Terminal Railway bill S-2, 84-86
Company powers, 85
Employees of railway unions, 85
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55, 1295-6
Limitations under bill, 1295
Patent agents, protection for, 1295
Rainbow Pipe Line Co. Ltd. bill S-52, 1164
Redistribution bill C-126, 168, 170
Science Council of Canada bill C-149, 419-22
Council duties, 420
Expenses, 421
Glassco Commission recommendation re, 420
MacKenzie, Dr. J.C., recommendations submitted to Prime Minister, 420-1
Members, 419-20
Science organizations in other countries, 422
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 891

Immigration
Assistance to immigrants, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920, 1000
Landed immigrant status, application for, 915-16
See Immigration Appeal Board

Immigration and Labour Committee
Members, 26, 269, 715, 1617
Report
Fair wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2. Authority to print com proceedings, 744; rep of com without amdt, 744

Immigration Appeal Board
Appeal Board powers, 1582, 1583
Deportations, 1582, 1584
Immigrant census in industrial and scientific field, 1567
Lack of communication with immigrants, 1581
Non-immigrant arrival and departure cards, 1583

Immigration Appeal Board – Concluded
Officers and members of board, 1568-9
Permanent resident or landed immigrant, 1569
Security or criminal intelligence reports, 1570
Screening of immigrants, 1811
Skills and education, restrictive emphasis on, 1582
Sponsorship, 1569
White Paper on Immigration, 1568, 1581, 1583
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J. 1584, 1670
Fournier, Edgar, 1580-1
Hastings, Earl A., 1567-80, 1583-4
Pearson, Arthur M., 1581-3
See Citizenship

Immigration Appeal Board bill C-220. 1r, 1542; 2r, 1567-70, 1580-4; ref to com, 1584; authority to print com proceedings, 1660; rep of com without amdt, 1660; 3r, 1670-1; r.a., 1768

Immigration, Special Joint Committee
Appointment, 1065-66
Members
Commons, 1075, 1143, 1164, 1176
Senate, 1065
Message from Commons, 1075
Reports
Authority to sit in Toronto and Montreal, 1360
Immigration Appeal Board bill C-220. Authority to print com proceedings, 1660; rep of com without amdt, 1660-1
Third report re White Paper, meetings and witnesses, reconstitution of committee, 1922-3

Imports
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 345-6
See Import and Export Permits bill S-23,
Trade.

Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada bill S-12. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 91; 2r, 144; ref to com, 144; rep of com without amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1263

Income Life Insurance Company of Canada bill S-11. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 91; 2r, 143-4; ref to com, 144; rep of com without amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1263

Income tax agreements
Alimony and maintenance payments, 1373
Capital gains, 1374
Dividends and interest, 1372-3, 1375, 1418-19
Dual residence, 1375
Entertainers, 1374
Funnel company, 1376
Insurance companies, 1375, 1376
Ireland, 1375-6
Movable property, 1374
Nonresident status of companies incorporated in Canada, 1371
Norway, 1376
Pension or annuity, 1374
Professional services, 1373
Royalties, 1373
Salaries, wages, etc., 1373
Teachers and students, 1373, 1376
Termination of U.S. agreement on six months' notice, 1370
Trinidad and Tobago, 1370
United Kingdom, 1370-5
Withholding tax, 1372-3, 1375, 1418-19
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1376-7
Hayden, Salter A., 1369-76
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1377
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1418-19

Income Tax Agreements bill S-56. 1r, 1350; 2r, 1369-77, 1418-19; 3r, 1424; r.a., 1541

Income Tax, bill C-216
Capital cost allowance, 948
Charitable organization, 946
Communication of information, 946-7
Manufacturing or processing business, 946
Nonresident-owned investment corporation, 947
Oil and gas explorations "in Canada", 947
Potash mining, 945, 951
Public utilities income tax transfer to provinces, 840-3
Refundable tax, 947-8, 949, 952
Stock options, 944-5, 950, 952-3, 956-60
Tax Appeal Board, extension of age limit for members, 945
Tuition fees, 943-4
Witholding tax, 944
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 960
Hayden, Salter A., 943-8, 953-4
Hugessen, A.K., 958
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 958-9
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 948-51, 954, 956-7, 958-9
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 951-3

Income Tax bill C-216. 1r, 943; 2r, 943-54; ref to com, 954; authority to print com proceedings, 956; rep of com without amdt, 956; m for 3r, 958, m in amdt, 956-61, defeated, 961; 3r, 961; r.a., 976

Income Tax, bill C-259
Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act, repeal of, 1652-3
Depreciation, 1653
Relief from recapture, 1653
Deferred profit sharing plan, 1647-51
Abuses, 1647-8
Forfeitures, 1649, 1650, 1651
Initial base of trust, 1649-50
Life insurance, 1651
Penalties, 1649
Vesting, 1648-50
Dental expenditures, 1653
Income tax returns, delay in receipt of and complications in form of, 1657-9
Scientific research, 1653-4
Subsidies for construction of small vessels in Atlantic provinces, 1655-7
Succession duties and estate tax, 1659
Supplementary unemployment benefit plans, 1652
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aseltine, Walter M., 1657-9
Hayden, Salter A., 1647-54
Hollett, Malcolm, 1654-7
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1659-60

Income Tax bill C-259. 1r, 1647; 2r, 1647-60; ref to com, 1660; authority to print com proceedings, 1701; rep of com without amdt, 1701; 3r, 1719-20; r.a., 1768

Income Tax, bill C-280
Business profits, tax period on, 1914
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1914
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1914-15

Income Tax bill C-280. 1r, 1885; 2r, 1914-15; 3r, 1915; r.a., 1925

India and Pakistan
External aid to, 1244-9
Drought and hunger conditions, 1244-9
Food and money distribution methods, 1247-8, 1249
Hundu Kush River dam being built by Canadians, 1247
Oxfam of Canada, 1246
Shipping costs, 1248

Indians
Alcoholism on Indian reserves, 1606
Assistance Plan, extension of provisions to Indians, 899-900, 903, 908
B.C. fishermen, 481-2
Beothuk Indians, Newfoundland, 582
Centennial grants and projects, 1605
Contemporary Indians in Canada, A Survey of, Hawthorn-Tremblay report, 1713-15, 1748
Question of privilege, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 1748
Cold Lake Reserve centennial committee, 1605
Economic development, 1714
Education, 1607-8
Industrial schools, closing of, 1607-8
Elective system of government on reserves, 1608
Employment, The Pas, 324
Health services, 1607, 1610
Lack of representation in House of Commons, 995
Loans and advances to, 287, 288, 289
Northwest Territories, 588-9
Pioneers of Canada, 1609-10
Reserves and Indian culture, preservation of, 1606
Treaties and land agreements, 1606-7, 1610, 1714-15
The King v Syliboy, 1715
Status in Centennial Year, 1605-10, 1713-15
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Gershaw, F.W., 1609-10
Gladstone, James, 1605-8
Hollett, Malcolm, 1748
Macdonald, John M., 1713-15

Industrial research and development incentives
Authority of Governor in Council, 1562
Capital expenditures, 1536, 1561
Costs of government research, 1580
Engineering Institute of Canada, brief and recommendations to Government, 1550
Monopolies, 1562
"Prosecution" of scientific research, 1560
Questions on provisions of bill, 1550-1
Scientific activity in Canada as compared with other countries, 1536-7, 1550, 1562-3
Subsidiary firms, 1562
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Desruisseaux, Paul, 1533-7, 1562-3
Phillips, Orville H., 1559-62
Yuzyk, Paul, 1549-51

Industrial Research and Development Incentives bill C-252. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1533-7, 1549-51, 1559-63; ref to com, 1563; rep of com without amdt, 1591; 3r, 1591; r.a., 1611

Industry
Alwinsal Potash of Canada Ltd., 788-9
Atlantic provinces, 278-82, 816-20
Automotive products, Canada-U.S. agreement, 616-25, 735-42, 747-57, 779-87, 809, 853

Industry – Concluded
Fisheries, 280-1
Forestry, western provinces, 322, 323-4
Monoca A.G. company, 323
Gold mining, 543-4
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., 788
Hydro power, Nelson River, 322-3
Mining, western provinces, 325
Potash, Saskatchewan, 322, 325-6
Sulphur production by Shell (Canada) Ltd., 610-11
Uranium potential, 544-6

Inflation, 120-1, 124, 543, 838, 949, 954, 1040-4, 1049-50, 1214, 1217, 1671-4
Estimates, inflationary tendencies, 1214, 1217
Finance Committee conclusions summarized in 1959 report, 1040
Government proposals to counteract, 1040-4, 1049-50
Pensions, effect on, 1671-4

Inman, Hon. F. Elsie
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 100-3
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 377-8
Children involved in divorce, 375
Newfoundland law, 377-8
National Transportation bill C-231, 1423
Passenger rail service to P.E.I., 1423
Problems of Maritimes, 1423
Tourist industry, 101-3
New Brunswick, 101, 103
Mactaquac Dam, 103
Newfoundland, 101-2
Nova Scotia, 103
Transcontinental tours for parliamentarians, 103

Inquiries
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, Hon. Mr. Burchill, 630, 725, 802-7
Centennial Performing Arts, allocation of grants, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 1066-7, 1069-71
Churchill Falls, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 707
Commissions, name, nature, personnel and date of each, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1067-8, 1073-4
Commonwealth Parliamentary Assoc., Ottawa conference, Hon. Mr. Haig, 600-3
Constituencies of Canada, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810, 867, 1079-80, 1093-5
Dominion Day, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Davey, re establishments conducting business on July 1, 854, 1067, 1072
Dutch Elm disease, Hon. Mr. Roebuck, 294-6, 404-5, 413-14
Electoral Boundaries Commissions' reports, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 93
Electoral boundaries, maps, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 726
Fisheries, 12-mile limit, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 631, 725, 802
Freight assistance, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920, 1000
Immigrants, assistance to, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920, 1000
Judges, appointment as Commissioners, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 93, 305-6, 391

Inquiries – Concluded
Labour conditions, Air Canada machinists and Postal workers, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 1124-5
Lamprey control and research, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 629, 725, 801-2
Legal fees and travelling expenses received by solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810, 867, 1147
Legal services, fees paid by Government to members of Quebec Bar, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 604, 634, 650-3, 778-9
Manpower and mobility, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920, 1000
Northumberland Causeway, Hon. Mr. Phillips, 1811
Population of constituencies, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810, 867
Precedence and Protocol, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1834
Prison administration, female inmates, Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, 915
Redistribution, objections filed with Speaker of House of Commons, 224-5, 313-14
Senate chamber and reading room, lighting, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 40
Senators, title after retirement, Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, 414
Technical and vocational training schools and research, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 921, 1001-2
Veterans hospitals, administration, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920-1, 1000-1
Wabana mines, Newfoundland, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 707

Internal Economy Committee
Appointment, 23
Members, 23
Report
Telephone service privileges for Senators, 92

International conferences
Canadian delegates, briefing and continuity of, 1463-4, 1467
NATO Parliamentarians, Canadian delegation, question of privilege, 1468-73

International Society of Endocrinology, see Endocrinology

Interparliamentary Group, Canada-United States
Report of Eighth Meeting, 163-5
Committees, Trade and Defence, 163-4
Delegates, 163, 165
Ottawa and Montreal programs, 164

Interpretation bill
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 110-12
Grosart, Allister, 204-6
Hayden, Salter A., 852
Macdonald, W. Ross, 109-12, 206
Roebuck, Arthur W., 112, 197-8

Interpretation bill S-9. 1r, 57; 2r, 109-12, 204-6; ref to com, 206; authority to print com proceedings, 211; rep of com with amdts, 852; 3r, 852

Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill S-10. Hon. Mr. Molson. 1r, 57; 2r, 82-84; ref to com, 84; rep of com without amdt, 133; fee paid last session, 133; 3r, 134; Commons amdts, 1832; r.a., 1925

Irvine, Hon. Olive L.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 322-7
Manitoba, economic development, 322-5
Forestry, 322, 323-4
Monoca A.G. Co., 323
Nelson River, federal and provincial agreement, 322-3
Kettle Rapids, 323
Road construction, 325
The Pas, 323-4
Frontier Collegiate, 324-5
Indian employment opportunities, 324
Technical training school, 324
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151, 592-3
Fishing resources, 593
Interlake area, Manitoba, 592-3
Farm population, loss in, 592
Saskatchewan, economic development, 322, 325-6
Potash, 322, 325-6; Esterhazy, 326

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.
Appropriation bill No. 9 C-248, 1222-3
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, good content of programs, 1222-3
National Housing bill C-241, 1184-5
Labour done by owner, 1185
Rural districts, 1185
National Transportation bill C-231, 1402-5
Equalization of port shipping, 1404
Freight rates, 1403-4
Halifax harbour, 1403-4
Maritime problems, 1403-4
Pipeline transportation, 1403
St. Lawrence Seaway tolls, 1404

Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B.
Retired June 1, 1966
Tributes, 653-7
Guides Catholiques du Canada (secteur français) bill S-24, 343

Joint Committees, Special
Administration of Justice
Consumer Credit and Cost of Living
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda)
Divorce
Immigration
National and Royal Anthems
Penitentiaries
Public Service
See also individual names

Joint Committees, Standing
Library of Parliament
Printing of Parliament
Restaurant of Parliament
See also individual names

Judges
Admiralty Court, 386-7
Appointed to commissions, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 93, 305-6, 391
Further inquiry, 1067-8, 1073-4
Capacities forbidden to judge unless by special appointment, 1517, 1520, 1522
Divorce action, 1518, 1519
Retirement pay, 1517, 1523
Salary for extra-judicial services, 1517, 1520-21, 1523
Salary revisions, 1516-20
Superannuation for judges and senators, 879
Travelling allowance, 1517
Widow's pension, 879, 1523
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aseltine, Walter M., 1518-19
Burchill, G. Percival, 1522-3
Connolly, John J., 1521-2
Cook, Eric, 1367-8
Flynn, Jacques, 1519-22
Macdonald, W. Ross, 388, 1516-18, 1520-1, 1523-4
Pouliot, Jean-François, 389-92, 1067-8, 1073-4
Walker, David, 388-9, 1368
See also Legal profession

Judges bill C-160 (Salaries for additional judges). 1r, 387; 2r, 387-93; 3r, 393; r.a., 397

Judges bill C-262 (Salaries for additional judges). 1r, 1348; 2r, 1367-8; 3r, 1368; r.a., 1442

Judges bill C-267 (Salary revisions etc.). 1r, 1516; 2r, 1516-24; 3r, 1526; r.a., 1541

Justice, Administration of, Special Joint Committee, 1176, 1231-2, 1292, 1347

Juvenile delinquency, 253-5, 527-8
LSD, use of by students, 1797-8, 1800-2
See also Crime

Kickham, Hon. Thomas J.
Introduction to the Senate, 978

Kinley, Hon. John J.
Adult Occupational Training bill C-278, 1909-11
Nova Scotia problems, 1910-11
Bishop, Hon. Charles L., the late, 1055
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 154-5
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, the late, 362
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, the late, 13-14
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 468, 469
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 13
McKeen, Hon. Stanley S., the late, 1240-1
Trustee Board of Presbyterian Church in Canada S-20, 211, 265
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., the late, 362-3

Kinnear, Hon. Mary Elizabeth
Introduction to the Senate, 1770

Labour
Accident statistics, 605, 606
Air Canada machinists strike, 1124-5, 1149
Automotive Transport Assoc., 643-4, 658
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, 86
Canadian labour force, Deutsch report, 44
Dispute between Shipping Federation and International Longshoremen's Assoc., report of mediator, 867, 871-7
Factories under federal jurisdiction, 641
Fair Wages and Hours of Labour, 649, 685-7, 696-704, 744, 758
Labour (Safety) Code, 604-7, 640-5, 658-61, 725, 850-2
Labour (Standards) Code, 1189-94, 1195, 1263
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1013-37
Postal Services Interruption Relief, 1264, 1293-8, 1300, 1527, 1541
Postal workers threatened strike, 1124-5
St. Lawrence Seaway workers, wage increase of 30%, 1036
Terms of settlement for two-year collective agreement between Longshoremen's Assoc. and Shipping Federation, 975-6
Unskilled young people, 1302-3
Vocational training and regional development programs, 43-44
See Labour (Safety) Code,
Labour (Standards) Code,
Maintenance of Railway Operation,
St. Lawrence Ports Working conditions.

Labour conditions, strikes affecting the public welfare
Air machinists strike, 1149
Areas of public service where strikes should be prohibited, 1151
Disruption in national life, 1147
Fair Employment Practices Act, coverage of organized labour suggested, 1151
Montpetit Report, 1124, 1148, 1150-1
National referee or council to deal with labour problems, 1151
Overtime demands of construction workers, 1147-8
Personnel administration deficiencies, 1150
Senate responsibility, 1151-2, 1153, 1154
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Cameron, Donald, 1147-52
Connolly, John J., 1152-3, 1154
MacKenzie, Norman A., 1153-4

Labour (Safety) Code
Glassco Commission recommendations, 604-5
Health and Welfare recommendations re construction camps and eating establishments, 642
Mechanical standards for vehicles and equipment, authority of Governor in Council re, 850-1
Penalties for violation of regulations, 640
Transport Commissioners' decision, 642-3, 657-8
Unions and strike settlements, public interest in, 567
Water supplies and sanitary facilities, 641-2, 659, 660, 661, 851-2
CPR diesel locomotives, 641
Locomotive engineers, negotiations re, 644
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 606-7
Choquette, Lionel, 605, 606
Croll, David A., 604-7, 660-1
Flynn, Jacques, 658-60, 850-1
Hugessen, A.K., 850, 851
Roebuck, Arthur W., 640-5, 657-8, 851-2

Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35. 1r, 561-2; 2r, 604-7, 640-5, 658-61; ref to com, 661; authority to print com proceedings, 725; rep of com with amdts, 850-2; 3r, 852; r.a., 1340

Labour (Standards) Code
Holidays and annual vacations, 1189-94
Apportioning of responsibility for, 1190-2
Longshoremen, 1189-90, 1193
Multi-employer employment, 1189-90, 1193
Quebec strikes, 1193
Union leaders, 1193-4
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1189-92, 1194
Pouliot, Jean-François, 1192-4

Labour (Standards) Code bill S-54. 1r, 1189; 2r, 1189-94; ref to com, 1194; authority to print proceedings, 1195; rep without amdt, 1195; 3r, 1195; r.a., 1263

Labrador
Hamilton Falls, question of privilege, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 1748
Newfoundland-Labrador boundaries, 97-99, 553-4, 558-60
Takeover by Quebec, suggestion of St. Jean Baptiste Society, 97-99

La Fédération des Caisses Populaires du Québec, 1417-18

Laird, Hon. Keith
Introduction to the Senate, 1770

Lambert, Hon. Norman P.
Deceased November 4, 1965
Tributes, 11-18

Lamontagne, Hon. Maurice, P.C.
Introduction to the Senate, 1770

Lamoureux, Hon. Lucien, Speaker of the House of Commons
Appointment, 2-3

Landreville, Mr. Justice, Special Joint Committee on Administration of Justice to consider removal of, 1176, 1231-2, 1292, 1347, 1433, 1443

Lands surveys
Erection of monuments, 997
Examination fees, 998
Examiners, 996
Payments to, 997-8
Resurveys, 997
Survey measurements, 997
Surveyor General of Canada, administration of office, 996
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 984-5
Connolly, John J., 980-3, 984, 985, 996-7, 998
Flynn, Jacques, 983
Hayden, Salter A., 997-8
Macdonald, W. Ross, 984
Pouliot, Jean-François, 985-7

Lands Surveys bill S-48. 1r, 980-7; 2r, 996-8; ref to com, 999; authority to print proceedings, 1009; rep without amdt, 1009; 3r, 1009; r.a., 1263

Lang, Hon. Daniel A.
Bank bill C-222, 1728-35, 1744-5
Borrowing cost, 1733
Capital stock and shares, 1729-30, 1731, 1733
Cash reserves, 1729, 1731
Debentures, 1732
Directors, 1730-1
Interest rates, 1729, 1732
Mortgage loans, 1729, 1731-2
Non-resident shareholders, 1729, 1733-4
Shares in loan or trust company, 1732
Bank of British Columbia bill S-16, Commons amdts, 1243-4
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1119-21
"Group" or "identifiable group", 1120
Offence in other than a public place, 1120
Restriction on freedom, 1119-20
Government Organization bill C-178, 682, 683

Lang, Hon. Daniel A. – Concluded
Health Resources Fund bill C-199, 831-3
Advisory Committee, 832
Allocations of fund, 831, 832
Calculation of costs, 832
Conditions of payment, 832
Health training facility, 831, 832
Medical profession needs, 833
Medical research in Canada, 833
C.L. Gundy and committee, 833
Ray Farquharson Clinical Investigation Unit, 833
United Investment Life Assurance Company bill S-40, 717-18
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 885-7, 888, 891
Copyright or trademark protection, 885-8
Exception, 886
Infringement action or other legal proceeding, 887, 891
Presumption of injury, 886, 888
Copyright vested in corporation, 886-7
Licensing of vendors, 887

Langlois, Hon. J.G. Leopold
Immigration, report of Joint Committee, 1822-3
Introduction to the Senate, 931
Visiting Forces bill S-50, 1122-3
Disciplinary jurisdiction, 1122
NATO references, deletion of, 1122
Personal injuries and property damage, 1123
Police function, 1123

Langlois, Mr. Justice Paul, chairman of Electoral Boundaries Commission for Quebec, 169-70, 179-84, 193-7

La Société des Artisans bill S-41. Hon. Mr. Deschatelets. 1r, 770; 2r, 811-12; ref to com, 812; authority to print com proceedings, 878; rep of com without amdt, 878; 3r, 879; r.a., 1925

Laurier Life Insurance Company bill S-27. Hon. Mr. Flynn. 1r, 404; 2r, 493-4; ref to com, 493; rep of com without amdt, 563; 3r, 586; r.a., 1925

Leader of the Government in the Senate
Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C.
Deputy
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., 8-11
Deschatelets, Hon. Jean Paul, 1052-3
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., 147

Leader of the Opposition in the Senate
Brooks, Hon. A.J., P.C.

League Savings and Mortgage Company bill S-30. Hon. Harold Connolly. 1r, 413; 2r, 455-6; ref to com, 456; rep of com without amdt, 563; 3r, 586; r.a., 1339

Lefrançois, Hon. J. Eugene
NATO Parliamentarians, 12th annual conference at Paris, France, 1440-2
Bilingualism for overseas bases, 1440
Canadian delegation, 1440
Economic problems, 1441
France, withdrawal from military alliance, 1441
Germany, foreign policy, 1441-2
USSR power, 1441
Senators, title after retirement, 414

Legal profession
Legal fees and travelling expenses received by solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810, 867, 1147
Legal fees paid by Government to members of Quebec Bar, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 604, 634, 650-3, 729, 778-9
See also Judges

Leonard, Hon. T. D'Arcy
Appropriation bill No. 1 C-116, 107-9, 123-5
Appropriation bill No. 2 C-140, 288-9
Appropriation bill No. 8 C-245, 1173
Bank bill C-222, 1743-4
Directors, 1743-4
Shares in loan or trust company, 1744
Bank of Western Canada bill C-111, 881-4, 885
Bretton Woods Agreements bill C-144, 506-9
International Bank, 506-9
International Monetary Fund, 506-9
Report of Finance Minister, amdt to effect submission on calendar year basis, 506
Reserve asset, 534
Estimates, 108-9, 123-5, 188-9, 285, 293, 297-9, 318-20, 330-1, 367-70, 385, 773, 1663-7, 1721-6
Borrowings of government, 284-5
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 1665, 1722
Defence goods and services, 1724
Dollar items, 125, 288, 289, 773
Economic Council, 1665-7
Expo67, 1667
Glassco Commission recommendations, 123, 1664-5
Government expenditures, 1722-6
Governor General's warrants, 108, 124-5
Gross National Product, 1722-5
Indians, loans and advances to, 288
Inflationary tendencies, 124
Manpower department, 318-19
Moneys allocated to specific vote, transfer of, 1665

Leonard, Hon. T. D'Arcy – Concluded
Estimates – Concluded
National parks, 318
Northumberland Strait, 773
Old Age Security fund, 285
"Public expenditure, spending and control", U.K. White Paper, 319, 1666-7
U.S. investment guidelines, 123-4
Winter works program and provincial subsidies, 318-19
Quebec, Atlantic Provinces and Ontario, 318-19
Estimates ref to Finance Committee
Fiscal year ending Mar. 31/66, 331
Authority to print proceedings, 69, 432
Report, 293, 297-9
Supplementary (E), 330
Report, 367-70, 385
Fiscal year ending Mar. 31/67, 331
Authority to print proceedings, 432
Supplementary (A), 771-3
Authority to print proceedings, 853-4
Report, 1577, 1588-90, 1663-7
Supplementary (B) tabled (not ref to com), 848
Supplementary (C), 1174-5
Report, 1577, 1588-90, 1663-7
Excelsior Life Insurance Company bill S-26, 406-7
Export Credits Insurance bill C-253, 1314-15, 1316-17
Contracts approved by Governor in Council, 1315
Contracts with an exporter, 1314, 1316
Liability under contracts outstanding, 1314-15
Power to accept note, etc., of foreign government and to reschedule debts, 1315
General Mortgage Service Corporation bill S-8, 39, 68
Commons amdts, 1233
Income Tax bill C-216, 958-9
Stock options, 958-9
National Research Council bill C-150, 611-12
Orders and Customs Committee, appointment, 7
Rules of the Senate, No. 119, suspension of, 885
Selection Committee, appointment, 7
Small Businesses Loans bill C-270, 1537-9
Classification of small business, 1538
Guarantee on loans, 1539
Interest rate, 1538, 1539
Loans and losses, 1538
Operation of legislation extended, 1538
Purposes for which loan may be used, 1538
United Investment Life Assurance Company bill S-40, 666
University finances, 1302-6
Bladen Commission, 1304
Comparison of graduates, Canada-United States, 1303
Federal-provincial policies, 1304-6
Church-related institutions, 1305-6
Labour force needs, Economic Council report on, 1303
Student population, 1304
Unskilled young people, 1302-3
York University, 1303

Library of Parliament, Joint Committee
Librarian's report tabled, 6
Members
Commons, 132, 329, 340, 548
Senate, 25; message to Commons, 37-38
Report
Salary revisions, reclassifications, 357-8, 1178, 1223

Lippé, Judge René, mediator in labour dispute
Report re Shipping Federation of Canada and International Longshoremen's Assoc., 871-7

Livestock feed assistance
Board, establishment of, and duties, 1088-90, 1097-8, 1130
Advisory Committee, 1088-9
Cattle breeding, 1105, 1137, 1138
Community pastures, 1117, 1119, 1159
Co-operatives and free enterprise, 1129-30
Cost-price squeeze, 1159
Cultivation for production of grain in Maritimes, 1105-6
Expenditures of Canadian Wheat Board, payment of by western producers, 1131-2
Exports, 1087-6
Farm machinery costs, 1133
Food shortages, 1087-8
Loans for livestock, haybalers, buildings, 1117-18
Maritime feed production problem, 1087
Meat shortage, 1117
Price variations, 1084-5, 1086, 1097, 1129, 1131
Storage facilities, provision of accelerated depreciation for, 1132
Territorial definitions, 1098
Transportation costs and subsidy, 1085, 1086, 1105, 1130-1, 1158
Box car shortage, 1158
Youth interest in farming through 4-H Clubs, 1106
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Argue, Hazen, 1129-33
Benidickson, W.M., 1098
Blois, Fred M., 1104-7
Burchill, G. Percival, 1137-8
Connolly, John J., 1083-90, 1096, 1098, 1159-60
Flynn, Jacques, 1096-8
Gershaw, F.W., 1158-9
Gladstone, James, 1098
Pearson, Arthur M., 1116-19

Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218. 1r, 1076; 2r, 1083-90, 1096-99, 1104-7, 1116-19, 1129-33, 1137-8, 1158-60; ref to com, 1160; authority to print com proceedings, 1168-9; rep of com without amdt, 1169; 3r, 1169; r.a., 1175

Longshoremen, terms of two-year collective agreement with Shipping Federation, 975-6

LSD, see Food and Drugs

Lutheran Church in America, Canada Section, bill S-39. Hon. W. Ross Macdonald. 1r, 650; 2r, 712-13; ref to com, 713; rep of com without amdt, 848; 3r, 848; r.a., 930

Macdonald, Hon. John M., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate
Assistance Plan C-207, 906-7
Rural poverty, preliminary report on selected areas, 906-7
Inverness, average income, 907
Standards, difficulty in establishing, 906
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169 (B.C. fishermen and packers), 460
Exchequer Court bill C-201, 814-15
Excise Tax bill C-198, 798-9
Furs, 799
Machinery, 798-9
Services, precedent in tax on, 798, 799
Fair Wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2, 698-700, 702
Minimum wage, Nova Scotia, 698, 702
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1817-18
Convictions and penalties, 1817-18
Indians, status in Centennial Year, 1713-15
Contemporary Indians in Canada, A Survey of, Hawthorn-Tremblay report, 1713-15
Economic development, 1714
Treaty rights, 1714-15
The King v. Syliboy, 1715
National Housing bill C-241, 1181-2
Nova Scotia Housing Commission, loans to co-operatives, 1181
Older homes, 1181
Senior citizens, 1182
Student housing projects, 1182
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1485
Parliamentary staff, 1485
St. Lawrence Ports Working Conditions bill C-215, 972-5
Compulsory arbitration, 974
Conference between labour and Government representatives, 972-3
Terms of settlement, amendment by negotiations or "otherwise", 973
Training Allowance bill C-186, 720-2
Basic allowance, federal-provincial agreement re, 721-2
Unemployment insurance, amdt re vocational trainee, 721

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., appt. as deputy leader, 9
Citizen of the Year, award of Brantford Junior Chamber of Commerce, 187
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, the late, 17
Corporations bill S-51, 1099-1100
Amdt of charters by application to Registrar General, 1100
Religious denominations, 1099
Davies, Hon. W. Rupert, the late, 1614-15
Divorce appeals, 1005
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., retired, 1359-60

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C. – Concluded
Interpretation bill S-9, 109-10, 206
Changes and definitions, 110
Commission for revision of Statutes, 206
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 656
Judges bill C-160, 388
Judges bill C-267, 1516-18, 1520-1, 1523-4
Capacities forbidden to judge unless by special appointment, 1517
Divorce action, 1518
Retirement pay, 1517, 1523
Salary for extra-judicial services, 1517, 1523
Salary revisions, 1516-17, 1520
Travelling allowance, 1517
Widow's pension, 1523
Junior Chamber of Commerce, Honorary President, 878
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 17-18
Lands Surveys bill S-48, 984
Lutheran Church in America, Canada Section, bill S-39, 650, 712-13
McLean, Hon. A. Neil, the late, 1615
Rules of the Senate re money bills, 984
Taylor, Hon. William H., retired, 655

MacKenzie, Hon. Norman A.
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1136
Freedom, preservation of, 1136
Introduction to the Senate, 300
Labour conditions, 1153-4
National Arts Centre bill C-194, 961-3
Accounts and financial transactions, auditing of and reporting on, 963
Arts centres in Canadian cities, 962
Board of Trustees, 962-3
Director, 963
Objects and powers of corporation, 963
National President of Association of Canadian Clubs, 688-9
NATO, 1466, 1472
Canadian delegates, 1472
Effectiveness questioned, 1466
Public Service Employment bill C-181, 1477-80, 1507-8
Appeals, 1478
Languages to be used for examinations, 1478
Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, 1508
Merit system, 1477-8
Political activity, 1478-80, 1507, 1508
Public Service Commission powers, 1507
Reports to Parliament, 1507
University finances, 1138-42
Freedom in university financing, 1141
Medical profession, excerpt from report of Dr. J.F. McCreary, 1141
National concern for universities, provincial lack in, 1140
Non-provision for universities in BNA Act, 1138-9
Operating expenditures, forecast of, 1140

MacKenzie, Hon. Norman A. – Concluded
Water resources, conservation of, 1205-9
Export of hydro-electric power, 1207-8
Harmon Doctrine re U.S. ownership and control of waters, 1208
Letter from Economics Dept. of U.B.C., 1209
Press comments, 1208-9
Water and air pollution, 1207
Yukon bill C-147, 704-6
Bank accounts, establishment of, 705
Council and advisory committee, remuneration of, 705
Jails, 705
Mentally-ill persons, 706
Tax sale of lands, 705
Territorial accounts, 706

Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C.
Introduction to the Senate, 978
Medical Care bill C-227, 1234-7, 1272-3, 1283
Administrative agents, provincial, 1235
Contributions, federal, and costs, 1235, 1236, 1283
Health Resources Fund, 1273
Health Services, Royal Commission, 1236, 1272
Medical profession needs, 1273
Other health services, 1236
Physicians services, 1235, 1236
Portability, 1236
Public administration, 1273
Universal coverage, 1236

MacPherson, M.A., chairman of Royal Commission on Transportation, 1342-3, 1347, 1364, 1384-91, 1392, 1398, 1401

Maintenance of railway operation
Collective bargaining procedures, 1018
Compulsory arbitration, 1025
Conciliation boards and chairmen, 1014-15
Mediator, appointment of, 1021
Montreal Gazette editorial on defying of Parliament by labour, 1027
Reports by
Cameron, Mr. Justice, 1016-17, 1020
Freedman, Mr. Justice, 1017-18, 1020
MacPherson, Mr. Murdock, 1020
Munroe, Mr. Justice, 1014, 1015-16, 1020
Right of employees to strike, 1023-4, 1035
Union issues in dispute, 1013-14
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1013-21, 1036-7
Croll, David A., 1023-7
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 1014, 1032-6
O'Leary M. Grattan, 1027-30
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1030-2
Walker, David, 1021-3
See also Labour, Railways

Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230. 1r, 1013; 2r, 1013-37; 3r, 1037; r.a., 1037

Manitoba
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., ore reserves, 788
Industrial development, 322-5
Forestry, 322, 323-4
Nelson River, 322-3
The Pas, 323-4
Interlake area, loss in farm population, 582
Rural economic development, 1553
Winnipeg, 1967 Pan-American Games, 745-7

Manitoba-Northwest Territories boundary
BNA provisions re boundaries of provinces, 995
See also Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 995
Gladstone, James, 995
Roebuck, Arthur W., 995

Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47. 1r, 980; 2r, 995; ref to com, 995; authority to print proceedings, 1008; rep without amdt, 1009; 3r, 1009; r.a., 1339

Manitoba-Saskatchewan boundary
B.N.A. Act provisions re boundaries, 990, 992
Commissions set up to deal with boundaries survey, 989
Manitoba-NWT survey, 990
Manitoba-Saskatchewan survey, 990
Saskatchewan-NWT survey, 990
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Benidickson, W.M., 990-1
Brooks, A.J., 991
Connolly, John J., 993-4
Hayden, Salter A., 993
Hugessen, A.K., 992
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 988-90, 992-3
Roebuck Arthur W., 992, 993

Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45. 1r, 979; 2r, 998-94; ref to com, 994; authority to print proceedings, 1007; rep without amdt, 1007; 3r, 1007; r.a., 1263

Manpower and mobility, National Employment Service, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920, 1000

Maritimes, see Atlantic provinces and names of individual provinces

McCutcheon, Hon. M. Wallace, P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 2, 1966 C-140, 285-8
Appropriation bill No. 7, 1966 C-226, 928-9
Appropriation bill No. 3, 1967 C-283, 1764-5
Bank bill C-222, 1735-40, 1750-3, 1755, 1756
Amdt proposed, 1753, 1755, neg, 1756
Bank of Western Canada, 1738
Directors, 1737-8
Foreign banks, lack of provision to operate in Canada, 1739-40
Interest rates, 1736-7
Mercantile Bank, 1738-9
Consumer Credit, Joint Committee, terms of reference, 1042-4
Dairy Commission bill C-205, 830
Estimates, 285-8, 1764-5
Amending of legislation without parliamentary procedure, 286-7
Dollar items, 286
Loans and advances, 287-8
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 287-8
Indians, 287
Public Service employees, 1764-5
Excelsior Life Insurance Company bill S-26, 407-8
Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements bill C-277, 1634-41, 1642
Education, post-secondary, 1635-41
Bladen Commission, 1636, 1637-8
Newsletter from Department of Manpower and Immigration, 1635-6
Ontario capital costs, 1637, 1642
Operating costs, 1636
Provincial jurisdiction, 1635
Equalization, principle of, 1634-5
General equalization payments, 1638
Jurisdiction in tax fields, 1635, 1639-41
Financial Administration bill C-182, 1510-15
Governor General's warrants, 1511-12
Staff of government, increase over year, 1514
Treasury Board responsibilities and powers, 1510-13
Delegation of, 1511
Glassco Commission recommendations re, 1513, 1514
Government Organization bill C-178, 692-5
Industry Dept., 694
National Revenue and Finance, 694
Public Works, 694
Health Resources Fund bill C-199, 834-7, 839-40
Hall Commission on Health Services, 834, 835
Medical schools, lack of teaching personnel, 835-6
New Brunswick, 835
Medicare, 839-40
Provincial requirements, 834-7
Research facilities urged by C.L. Gundy and committee, 836
Income Tax bill C-216, 948-51, 954, 956-7, 959-60
Nonresident-owned investment corporations, 950-1
Refundable tax, 949
Stock options, 950, 956-7, 959-60
Inflation, Government proposals to counteract, 949, 954, 1042-4

McCutcheon, Hon. M. Wallace, P.C. – Concluded
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1014, 1032-6
Criticism of Government procedure, 1032-6
Right of Government employees to strike, 1035
McKeen, Hon. Stanley S., the late, 1240
Medical Care bill C-227, 1237-8
Health Services Royal Commission, 1237
Responsibility of provinces, 1238-9
Socialism, 1238

McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 29-35
Aetna Casualty Company of Canada bill S-4, 64
Agricultural and Rural Development bill C-152, 414-16
Advisory committee, 415-16
Fringe areas to benefit from program, 415
Bank of Canada bill C-190, 1674-7, 1679
Cash and secondary reserves, 1675-6
Consultation between governor and government, 1675
Director, executive committee, pensions, 1676-7
Gold reserves, 1676
"Payable to bearer on demand", 1676
Boundaries of provinces, BNA provisions re, 995
Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous) bill C-210, 787-9
Alwinsal Potash of Canada Ltd., 788-9
Blairmore Sands, 788
Employment, 789
Potash production and revenue, 788-9
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., 788
Employment, 788
Ore reserves, 788
Canadian Pacific Railway (Saskatchewan) bill S-32, 471, 534-5
Sodium sulphate, Ingebright Lake, 535
Centennial celebrations, 30
Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company bill S-36, 563, 610-11
Sulphur production by Shell (Canada) Ltd., 610-11
Investments, 610, 611
Company of Young Canadians, 34-35
Dairy Commission bill C-205, 821-2, 829-30
Consumer protection, 829-30
Financing of commission, 822
Fluctuation in volume and price, 821
Jurisdiction, federal and provincial, 821, 822, 830
Deputy Whip, 1355
Economic prosperity, 31, 32
Foreign investments in Saskatchewan industry, 32
Expo67, 30-31
Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, 31-32
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1792-5, 1829-30, 1846-7
LSD, 1792-5, 1829-30
Dangers of, 1793
Legal distribution and originators of, 1795
Study by UN Narcotics Commission, 1783
Penalties, 1829-30

McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton—Concluded
Food and Drugs – Concluded
Onus of proof, 1830
News media, responsibility to general public, 1830
Restricted drugs, control of, 1794
Sale and conditions of sale of drugs, 1794
Grain marketing and cash advances for unthrashed grain, 34
Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada bill S-12, 91, 144
Income Life Insurance Company of Canada bill S-11, 91, 143
Introduction to the Senate, 1
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 988-90, 992-3
B.N.A. Act provisions re boundaries, 990, 992
Commissions set up to deal with survey of boundaries, 989
Manitoba-NWT survey, 990
Manitoba-Saskatchewan survey, 990
Saskatchewan-NWT survey, 990
National Transportation bill C-231, 1392-7
Branch lines, 1393-4
Grain handling facilities, 1395-7
Land and mineral rights, 1392
MacPherson, M.A., chairman of Royal Commission on Transportation, 1392
Peacekeeping activities, 31
Poverty, 32-34
Farm income and failures, 33
Railways, abandonment of, 34
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151, 549-51, 676-7
ARDA, 549
Income, farm families, 549-50
Income, rural non-farm families, 549-50
Poverty in rural areas, 549, 551, 676
Provincial responsibility in implementing programs, 676
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-274, 1551-3, 1566, 1594-5
Interlake area, 1594-5
Progress in New Brunswick and Manitoba, 1552-3
Provincial-federal agreements, 1566
Saskatchewan, 31-34
Diamond Jubilee, 31
Farm income, 33-34
Oil industry, 32
Potash industry, 32
Pulp mill, Prince Albert, 32
Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-46, 994
Seaboard Finance Company of Canada bill S-21, 293, 317-18
Wood, Hon. Thomas H., the late, 18

McElman, Hon. Charles
Atlantic Development Board bill C-213, 815-19
Electrical energy projects, 817-18
Incomes in Atlantic provinces, 817
Industrial developments, 817-18
Mactaquac dam, 818
Projects for which commitments have been made, 817
Stipulations for approval of projects, 817
Introduction to the Senate, 258

McGrand, Hon. Fred A.
Aging, Senate Special Committee, 187-9
New Brunswick homes for the aged, 188
Segregation of elderly people, 188-9
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1825-7
Mental health statistics, 1826-7
Youth protests, 1825-6

McKeen, Hon. Stanley S.
Deceased December 1, 1966
Tributes, 1239-41
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 152

McLean, Hon. A. Neil
Deceased March 12, 1967
Tributes, 1612-16
Milltown Bridge bill S-15, 177-8

Medical care
Administrative agents, provincial, 1235
Alberta plan, 80, 1260
Areas of special concern, 80
Associated professions, 1267-8
British National Health Service, 1253
Calculation of contributions, 1236
Costs to individuals and to Government, 80-81, 1235-6, 1259, 1260, 1283
Dental clinics, mobile, 1269
Difficulties experienced in other countries, 1251, 1259, 1282-3
Doctors' right to "opt" out of plan, 1257
Health Resources Fund, 1273
Health Services Royal Commission, 1236, 1237, 1259, 1272
Liberal Party platform re medicare and other welfare matters, 1270-1
Medical profession needs, 81, 1255-6, 1266, 1273
Opinions expressed by Canadian Medical Assoc. and other groups, 80-81
Other health services, 1236
Paper work, forms, etc., 1267
Penfield, Dr. Wilder, comments on free medical services, 1250
Physicians services, 1235, 1236
Political implications, 1250, 1252, 1265-6
Portability, 1236
Press comments, 1256
Program for Government, suggestion, 1254
Public administration, 1273
Research needs, 81
Socialism, 1238, 1251, 1252-3, 1266
Sigerist, Prof. Henry, "On the Sociology of Medicine", 1257-8
Tubercular and mental patients, 1266
Universal coverage, 1236

Medical care—Concluded
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1270
Gershaw, Fred W., 80-82, 1259-60
Macnaughton, Alan A., 1234-7, 1272-3
McCutcheon, M. Wallace, 1237-8
Phillips, Orville H., 1264-70
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1270-1
Sullivan, Joseph A., 1249-58

Medical Care bill C-227. 1r, 1234; 2r, 1234-8, 1249-60, 1264-73; ref to com, 1273-4; authority to print com proceedings, 1282; rep of com without amdt, 1282; 3r, 1282-3; r.a., 1339

Mennonite Central Committee (Canada) bill S-37. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. S-37. 1r, 604; 2r, 638-9; ref to com, 639; rep of com without amdt, 688; 3r, 688; r.a., 930

Mercier, Col. Lucien, Commission of Inquiry into Bankruptcies, Liquidations, Proposals and Voluntary Assignments, 248-52, 276, 277-8
See Bankruptcy

Méthot, Hon. Léon
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 154
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 154

Michener, Right Honourable Roland, P.C., Q.C., Governor General of Canada, 1772
Address by the Prime Minister, 1783
Reply by the Governor General, 1784-5

Milltown Bridge bill S-15. 1r, 132-3; 2r, 177-8; ref to com, 178; authority to print com proceedings-rep of com without amdt, 224; 3r, 247; r.a., 397

Mining
Alwinsal Potash of Canada Ltd., 788-9
Bruce Lake Iron Mine Company, 416-19
Gold, 543-4
Subsidies, 543
U.S. control of price, 543-4
Heath Mines, New Brunswick, 418-19
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co., 788
Iron Ore Co. developments in northern Quebec, 587-8
U.S. investments, 587
Northwest Territories, 589-90
Potash, Saskatchewan, 322, 325-6
Sodium sulphate, Ingebright Lake, 535
Uranium, 544-7
Potential for sale to France, 544-7

Ministry, The, according to precedence, iii

Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee
Members, 25, 258
Reports
Canadian Board of Missions of the Church of God (General Offices: Anderson, Indiana), bill S-18. Rep of com with amdts, 580-1
Endocrinology, International Society of, bill S-29. Rep of com without amdt, 688
Evangelical Convenant Church of Canada bill S-38. Rep of com with amdt, 848-9
Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated bill S-7. Rep of com without amdt, fee paid last session, 134
Lutheran Church in America bill S-39. Rep of com without amdt, 848
Mennonite Central Committee (Canada) bill S-37. Rep of com without amdt, 688
Trustee Board of Presbyterian Church bill S-20. Rep of com without amdt, 367
United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces bill S-33. Rep of com without amdt, 580

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M.
Endocrinology, International Society of, bill S-29, 413, 513-15
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1845-6
Government Organization bill C-178, 684
Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill S-10, 57, 82-84, 1832
Eligibility of employees to purchase shares, 84
Share subdivision and market value, 82-84
Stanley Cup, congratulations on success of Canadiens, 497

Mother of the Year, Madame Jeanne-Pauline Beaulieu, award of Florists Transworld Delivery Assoc., 399

Museums, see National Museums

National and Royal Anthems, Special Joint Committee
Appointment, 1383
Authority to call for persons, papers, records, and witnesses, etc., 1770
Members
Commons, 1443, 1516, 1542, 1617
Senate, 1384
Message from Commons, 1348, 1632
Reports, 1778, 1791-2
Quorum, 1444
Recommendations of Committee, 1632

National Arts Centre
Accounts and financial transactions, auditing of and reporting on, 963
Arts centres in Canadian cities, 962
Board of trustees, 962-3
Director, responsibilities of, 963, 964
"Edifice complex", 966
National Capital Arts Alliance, 966

National Arts Centre – Concluded
Objects and powers of corporation, 963
Ottawa arts centres of former years, 966
Programming, 964
Secretary of State, contribution to the Arts, 965
Television and development of the Arts, 968
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Cameron, Donald, 963-4
Connolly, John J., 967-8
Grosart, Allister, 964-7
MacKenzie, Norman A., 961-3

National Arts Centre bill C-194. 1r, 954; 2r, 961-8; 3r, 969; r.a., 976

National Defence, see Canadian Forces Reorganization

National Housing
Aggregate maximum of loans insurable under NHA, 1179
Co-operatives, 1181, 1185
Economic development in building industry, 1177-8
Housing demands, 1177, 1181
Housing starts, statistics, 1178
Interest-free loans, question of, 1185, 1186
Labour done by owner, 1184, 1185
Low-rent housing, 1178-9, 1184
British Columbia, 1179
Inuvik, 1179
Ontario Housing Corp., 1178-9
Operating losses, 1179
Ottawa, 1186
Nova Scotia Housing Commission, loans to co-operatives, 1181
Older homes, 1181
Rural districts, 1185
Sales tax, 1185
Senior citizens, 1182
Sewage treatment projects, 1180
Student housing projects, 1180, 1182
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Benidickson, W.M., 1183-4
Connolly, John J., 1177-81, 1185
Isnor, Gordon B., 1184-5
Macdonald, John M., 1181-2
Pouliot, Jean-François, 1185

National Housing bill C-241. 1r, 1177; 2r, 1177-87; 3r, 1187; r.a., 1194

National Museums
Board of Trustees, and powers, 1618-19, 1682
Financing of, 1683
Objectives of corporation, 1619-20, 1682
Museums with educational programs and extension services, 1581
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1680-3
Connolly, John J., 1683
Everett, Douglas D., 1617-20
Flynn, Jacques, 1700-1
Hayden, Salter A., 1701

National Museums bill S-57. 1r, 1577; 2r, 1617-20, 1680-3; ref to com, 1683; authority to print com proceedings, 1700; rep of com without amdt, 1700; 3r, 1700-1

National Research Council
Name change of Research Council, 483
Research projects of NRC, 484-5
Science library, 484
Securities or money acquired by gift, bequest, or otherwise, 483-4
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Hugessen, A.K., 483-4
Roebuck, Arthur W., 485
Yuzyk, Paul, 484-5

National Research Council bill C-150. 1r, 453; 2r, 483-5; ref to com, 485; authority to print com proceedings, 540-1; rep of com with amdts, 591, 599, 611-12; 3r, 612; r.a., 758

National transportation
Branch lines, 1393-4, 1398-1400
Bridges, safety and construction of, 1345
Canadian Transportation Commission, 1343-4, 1362-3, 1378
Cominco, 1391
Corridor Road, 1364, 1378
Crowsnest Pass Agreement, 1346, 1386-91, 1398
Historical review, 1390
Extra-provincial motor vehicle transport, 1345
Freight rates, 1343-6, 1364, 1379-80, 1385-91, 1398, 1403-4
Grain handling facilities, 1395-7
History of railway operation in Canada, 1397-8
Ice-breaking on St. Lawrence Seaway, 1363
Jurisdiction of provinces, 1341-2
Land and mineral resources, 1388, 1392
Legal counsel for producers, 1400-1
MacPherson Commission, 1342-3, 1347, 1364, 1384-91, 1392, 1398, 1401
Maritime problems, 1361-5, 1378-80, 1401, 1403-5
Money-losing services, 1345
Northumberland Strait causeway, 1381, 1422-3
Objectives of Government and CPR, summarized by V.C. Fowke, 1390
Passenger rail service to P.E.I., 1423

National transportation—Concluded
Pipeline competition, 1362, 1403
Press comment, 1364-5
Railways, telegraphs and telephones, 1345
Research division, 1378
"Reservations on Grain", by A.R. Gobeil, 1390-1
Tolls, St. Lawrence Seaway, 1404
Transitional subsidy, 1346
Transportation costs to central Canada, 1380
Water transportation, 1363
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Argue, Hazen, 1398-1401
Brooks, A.J., 1360-6
Burchill, G. Percival, 1401-2
Connolly, John J., 1379, 1380
Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 1341-7, 1405
Hollett, Malcolm, 1405
Isnor, Gordon B., 1402-5
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 1392-7
Paterson, Norman McL., 1397-8
Phillips, Orville H., 1377-82
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1387, 1388, 1389, 1390, 1393
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1384-92

National Transportation bill C-231. 1r, 1341; 2r, 1341-7, 1377-82, 1384-1405; ref to com, 1405; authority to print com proceedings, 1417; rep of com without amdt, 1420; 3r, 1420-3; r.a., 1442

NATO, see North Atlantic Treaty Organization

Natural Resources Committee
Members, 26, 269

New Brunswick
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, projects to 13 June 1966, 804-5
Economic prospects, 280-2
Electrical energy, 57-58, 817-18, 842-3
Dickey Dam, 57-58
Fundy Trail, costs of development, 820
Heath Mines, employment, 418-19
Homes for the aged, 141-2, 188
Labour safety association, 606-7
Milltown Bridge, 132-3, 177-8
Municipal, educational and taxation structure, reconstruction in, 280-2
Education, 281
Press comment, 281
Royal Commission on, 281
War on poverty, 281
Racial and religious tensions, 279, 282
Rural economic development, 1552-3
Robichaud, Hon. Louis Joseph, Premier, 280, 281, 282
University of New Brunswick, 1436-7
Financial crisis, 1437

Newfoundland
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, projects to 31 Mar. 1966, 805
Bay d'Espoir, electrical energy development at, 818
Boundaries, Privy Council judgment re, 96-99, 553-4, 558-60
Churchill Falls, development of, 707, 842
Divorce laws, 237-40, 377-8
Hamilton Falls, question of privilege, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 1748
Historical sketch, 581-2
"Labrador takeover" by Quebec, suggestion of St. Jean Baptiste Society, 97-99
McNair Commission recommendations, 552, 555-6, 582-5
National debt, 553
Revenues and expenditures, 557
Student aid, 98
Subsidies to fishermen, 95-96
Trans-Canada Highway, 557
Wabana mines, closing of, 707

Newfoundland additional financial assistance
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Baird, A.B., 551
Choquette, Lionel, 555-6, 585, 635-6
Cook, Eric, 581-3
Hollett, Malcolm, 552-5, 556, 557-8, 559
Pouliot, Jean-François, 558-9, 585-6, 634-5
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 583-5
Vien, Thomas, 552, 554, 555, 559-61

Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill 1966 C-185. 1r, 551; 2r, 551-61, 581-6; ref to com, 586; authority to print com proceedings, 614; rep of com without amdt, 614; 3r, 634-6; r.a., 648

Nichol, Hon. John L.
Introduction to the Senate, 199

North Atlantic Treaty Organization, 99, 346, 365, 366, 1283-90, 1439-42, 1446, 1463-7, 1779-80
Bilingualism for overseas bases, 1440
Britain and the European Common Market, 1283-6, 1289
Canadian delegates, 1076, 1286-7, 1440
Economic problems, 1284-5, 1290, 1441
European unity, 1284-5
Export and import controls, 346, 365-6
Foreign policy and obligation of Canada, questioned, 1464-7
GATT negotiations, 1284
Integration of North American and European forces, 1464
International Energy Commission, resolution re, 545-6
International liquidity and reserve currency, 1284
Military commitment and peacekeeping responsibility of Canada, 1779-80
Military Committee, 99, 1290
Nationalism in Europe, 1289
NATO and Canada, 1284, 1464-7

North Atlantic Treaty Organization—Concluded
New York meeting, 99
New York Times article by C.L. Sulzberger, 1284
Paris meeting, 1076
Peacekeeping force, 1287, 1288, 1465-6
Prestige of Canada, 1464
Problems of NATO, 1288
Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., honorary life president of NATO Parliamentary Assoc., 18-19
Soviet Union, 1288, 1289, 1441
The Proud Tower, by Barbara Tuchman, 1288-9
Twelfth annual conference held at Paris, France, 1283-90, 1439-42, 1463-7, 1468-73
Canadian delegation, 1076, 1286-7, 1440
Briefing and continuity of, 1463-4
Question of privilege, 1468-73
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aird, John B., 1283-7
Baird, Hon. A.B., 99
Brooks, A.J., 346, 1290, 1439
Connolly, John J., 1287-90
Everett, Douglas D., 1779-80
Lefrançois, J. Eugene, 1440-2
MacKenzie, Norman A., 1446
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 1463-6
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1466-7
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 365-6

Northumberland Causeway, inquiry re new report, Hon. Mr. Phillips, 1811

North West Life Assurance Company of Canada bill S-25. Hon. David A. Croll.1r, 363; 2r, 395-6; ref to com, 396; rep of com without amdt, 413; 3r, 413; 3r, 413; r.a., 1611

Northwest Territories
Carrothers Commission, 590-1, 609, 610
Elected members of Council, 588
Indemnity, 588
Extension of provinces to include NWT, excerpt from 1953 speech of Hon. Mr. Aseltine re, 608-9
Government of, 589, 646-8
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47, 980, 995, 1008-9
Mileage and population, 588-9, 608
Mineral explorations, 589-90, 645
Pine Point Railway, 645
Revenues and expenditures, 591, 610
Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-46, 980, 994
Self-government, 646-8
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aseltine, Walter M., 591, 607-10
Grosart, Allister, 646-8
Hnatyshyn, John, 645-6
Prowse, J. Harper, 588-92

Northwest Territories bill C-146. 1r, 561; 2r, 588-92, 607-10, 645-8; 3r, 648; r.a., 648

Nova Scotia
ARDA projects, 449-50
Dyking, drainage, etc., 449
Electric power research, 449
Market-garden farm units, 449-50
Tourist development, 450
Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, projects to 13 June 1966, 806-7
Credit unions, 455-6
Fisheries, 477-80
Inshore fishermen, 479-80
Landed fish, first place in dollar volume of, 477-8
Loans for new construction, 479
Inverness, average income, 907
Milk surplus, 222
Rural poverty, preliminary report on, 906-7
Thermal generating station, Trenton, 818

Officers and Chiefs of branches of the Senate, xix

Oil and gas industry
Rainbow Lake, Alberta, 1091-2
Sulphur, Alberta, 610-11

Old age security
Absence from country, 1320
Alberta legislation, 1332
Appeals, 1321
Authority of Parliament to legislate in pension matters, 1317-18, 1336
Cost to government, 1319, 1337-8
Deductions because of other income, 1320
Guaranteed income supplement, 1319
Groups disregarded under bill, 1322-3, 1325
Information concerning income, 1321, 1327, 1329-30
Interim payments, 1321
Marginal cases, 1335
Married applicants, 1320
Needs test, 1320, 1332, 1335
Provincial pension plans, effect on, 1323
Recommendations of Senate Special Committee on Aging, 1322, 1324-7
Violation of income tax law, 1335
War veterans allowance, PEI deduction on account of, 1328, 1334
Welfare programs, inadequacy of, 1328
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Argue, Hazen, 1331-3
Brooks, A.J., 1327-8, 1336-7
Connolly, John J., 1317-21, 1336-8

Old age security – Concluded
Speakers: Honourable Senators–Concluded
Croll, David A., 1325-8
Fournier, Edgar, 1328-31
Grosart, Allister, 1321-5
Phillips, Orville H., 1333-4
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1334-5
See also Excise Tax and Old Age Security

Old Age Security bill C-251. 1r, 1317; 2r, 1317-38; 3r, 1338; r.a., 1339

O'Leary, Hon. Clement A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 220-3
Estimates, 494
Farm problems and need for subsidies, 221-3
Applications for assistance, lack of information on, 221-2
ARDA, 221, 222
Marginal or submarginal farmers, 221
Nova Scotia milk surplus, 222
Uneconomic farm units, 221, 223
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 477-80
Inspection regulations, 479
Nova Scotia fisheries, 477-80
Fisheries Loan Board, new construction loans, 479
Inshore fishermen, 479-80
Landed fish, first place in dollar volume, 477-8
Progress of fishing industry in other countries, 478
Nova Scotia winter works program, 494
St. Patrick's Day, 1669-70
Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment bill C-193, 868-70
Employment after retirement, 869
Portability, 869

O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan
Assistance Plan C-207, 904-6
Abuses, danger of, 904
"Evils" of the welfare state, 904-6
Welfare expenditures, 905
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 761
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1872-4
Anti-ballistic missiles, 1874
Civil control, 1872
Statements of prominent military men, 1872-3
Canadian News Hall of Fame, election to, 1787
Estimates, 1684-9
Film Development Corporation bill C-204, 1428-30
Awards, 1429
Film commissioner as member of board, 1429
Management of finances and distribution of films, 1428-9
Outside control, danger of, 1429

O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan – Concluded
Government expenditures, 1685-8
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 1685-6
Employees, increase in, 1687
Glassco recommendations, 1686-7
Gross National Product, decline in, 1686-8
Taxation, burden on poorer classes, 1687-8
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., retired, 1357-8
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 15-16
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1027-30
Criticism of Government procedures, 1028-30
Times comment, 1029
NATO Parliamentarians, 12th annual conference at Paris, France, 1463-6
Canadian delegates, briefing and continuity of, 1463-4
Cyprus peacekeeping force, 1465-6
Foreign policy questioned, 1464-6
Integration of North American and European forces, 1464
Obligations to NATO, 1465
Prestige of Canada, 1464
Retirement from presidency of Ottawa Journal, 340-3
Science Council of Canada bill C-149, 422-6
Glassco Commission recommendations re, 423-4
MacKenzie, Dr. J.C., recommendations to Prime Minister, 423-4
Ministry of Science, Senator as head of, 425
Personnel, choosing of, 424-5
Scientific revolution, warning of Sir Winston Churchill, 423
Skill training vs true education, 425

Opening of Parliament, 1-6
Speech from the Throne, 3-6
See Address in reply

Orders and Customs Committee
Appointment, 7

Orders in Council, documents, reports, etc., see Journals of the Senate

Ottawa Journal President, Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary, retirement, 340-3

Ottawa Terminal Railway Company
Company powers, 85
Employees of railway unions, 85-86
Greber Plan, 86-87
Station relocation, 87
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Choquette, Lionel, 86-87
Hugessen, A. K., 84-86
Roebuck, Arthur W., 86

Ottawa Terminal Railway bill S-2. 1r, 22; 2r, 84-87; ref to com, 87; authority to print com proceedings 186; rep of com without amdt, 186; 3r, 201

Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company bill S-6. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 39; 2r, 67; ref to com, 67; rep of com with amdt, 167; 3r, 187; r.a., 1175

Pakistan, hunger and drought conditions, external aid for, 1244-9
See India and Pakistan

Pan-American Games 1967 in Winnipeg, 745-7
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 746-7
Haig, J. Campbell, 745-6

Parliamentary Association, see Commonwealth Parliamentary Association

Parliamentary Secretaries, iv

Paterson, Hon. Norman McL.
Divorce statistics, 138
National Transportation bill C-231, 1397-8, 1420-2
Historical sketch of western railways, 1420-2

Pearson, Hon. Arthur M.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 307-12
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1869-71
Defence of Canada, 1870-1
Traditions, preservation of, 1869-70
White Paper, 1870
Citizenship bill S-59, 1788-9
Hospitality to immigrants, 1788-9
Crop Insurance bill C-208, 921-3
Extended coverage, 922
Hail insurance, 922-3
Saskatchewan, 923
Statistics (1964-66), 622
Education, 308-10
Child instruction, France, 309-10
Degrees, question as to necessity of, 308
Education vs economy, 310
Reports by Canadian Welfare Council, 308, 309; Family Herald, 310; Modern France, 309-10
Rural education related to local livelihood, 308-10
University grants, 308
Farm machinery costs, 311
Grey Cup, National Football Playoff in Vancouver, 1197

Pearson, Hon. Arthur M. – Concluded
Immigration Appeal Board bill C-220, 1581-3
Appeal Board powers, 1582, 1583
Deportations, 1582
Skills and education, restrictive emphasis on, 1582
White Paper on Immigration, 1583
Livestock Feed Assistance bill C-218, 1116-19
Community pastures, 1117, 1119
Loans for livestock, haybalers, buildings, 1117-18
Meat shortage, 1117
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151, 671-3
ARDA, 672-3
Enlargement of farms through government assistance, 671
Exodus from farms during drought, 671-2
Interlake area, Manitoba, 672
Rural poverty, 672
Woodlot implements, tariff on, 671
World hunger, 672
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-274, 1564-7
Manitoba program proposals, 1565
New Brunswick allocation of funds to special projects, 1565
Under-estimating of programs, 1564-5
Rural poverty, 308-10, 672
ARDA, 308, 309, 310, 672-3
Welfare Council report re, 308, 309
Taxation, inquiry by Land Use Committee, suggested, 311
Trade, 311-12
Jet purchases from France and effect on international relationships, 312
Saskatchewan Government pressure for purchase of British goods, 312
Water resources, conservation of, 708-10
ARDA report on, 709
Irrigation projects, 708-9
PFRA, 708, 709
Methods of conservation, 708-9
Pollution, 708

Pearson, Hon. Lester B., Prime Minister of Canada
Address at installation of the Right Honourable Roland Michener, as Governor General of Canada, 1783

Penfield, Dr. Wilder, criticism of CBC program, 255

Penitentiaries, Special Joint Committee
Appointment, 316-17
Members
Commons, 328, 496, 759, 1075, 1348
Senate, 344, 878
Message from Commons, 300-1
Report
Quorum, 853
Services required for purpose of inquiry, 1351
Third report printed as appendix, 1833, 1863-8, 1885

Pension benefits standards
Coverage for employees under federal jurisdiction but outside the Government, 1643-4
Federal-provincial agreements, 1645
Inflation, effect on pensions, 1671-4
Investment of pension moneys, 1645
Locking-in requirement, 1644-5
Portability, 1645
Provincial acts, 1644
Standards for registration of pension plans, 1644
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Choquette, Lionel, 1671-2
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1673-4
Connolly, John J., 1672-3
Urquhart, Earl W., 1643-6

Pension Benefits Standards bill C-221. 1r, 1610-11; 2r, 1643-6, 1671-4; 3r, 1702; r.a., 1768

Petitions
Divorce, Joyce Regina Nagine Biega, appeal from judgment of Senate Commissioner, 1003-7, 1011-12, 1125
Extension of time for filing, 330, 525

Phillips, Hon. Orville H.
Atlantic Development Board bill C-213, 819-20
Economic surveys, 819-20
Fundy Trail, costs of development, 820
Incomes in Atlantic provinces, 819
Industry, information re establishment of, 819
P.E.I. causeway, 820
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1877-84
Expenditures for defence, 1879
Morale, effect on, 1880
Officer designation, 1882
Peacekeeping activities, 1878-9
Recruitment and training, 1882
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1167-8
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 480-1
Instruction and research, 480-1
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1823-5
LSD use by students and professional persons, 1824-5
Educational programming re, 1825
Research needs, 1824
Health Resources Fund bill C-199, 838-9
Medical profession, training years, 838-9
Industrial Research and Development Incentives bill C-252, 1559-62
Authority of Governor in Council, 1561
Capital expenditures and five year base period, 1561
Costs of government research, 1560
Monopoly by large firms, 1562
"Prosecution" of scientific research, 1560
Subsidiary firms, 1562

Phillips, Hon. Orville H. – Concluded
Medical Care bill C-227, 1264-70
Associated professions, 1267-8
Dental clinics, mobile, 1269
Liberal Party platform in 1919 re medicare, 1265
Medical profession needs for personnel, 1266
Paper work, forms, etc., 1267
Percentages of federal-provincial contributions, 1269
Political implications, 1265-6
Socialism and effects, 1266
Tubercular and mental patients, 1266
National Transportation bill C-231, 1377-82, 1422-3
Canadian Transport Commission, 1378
Captive shipper, 1380, 1381
Corridor road, 1378
Costs of capital, 1380-1
Freight rates, 1379-80
Maritime problems, 1378-80
Northumberland Strait Causeway, 1381, 1422-3
Potatoes, costs of transportation to central Canada, 1380
Research division, 1378
Northumberland Causeway, inquiry, 1811
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1333-4
PEI deduction from war veterans allowance, 1334

Picard, Laurin, chairman of Industrial Inquiry Commission, 971

Police force
Armed forces for police duty, 411-12
Cadets, 411
Newspaper comments, 411
Quebec, 411

Population of constituencies, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810

Postal services interruption relief
Functions and powers of judge, 1293-4
Industrial Property, Paris Convention for protection of, 1293
Limitations under bill, 1295-6
Patent agents, protection for, 1293, 1295
Press comments, 1294-5
Strikes and consequences of, 1296-8
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1294-5
Connolly, John J., 1297-8
Denis, Azellus, 1293-4, 1298
Hugessen, A.K., 1295-6
Thorvaldson, Gunnar S., 1296-7

Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55. 1r, 1264; 2r, 1293-8; ref to com, 1298; authority to print com proceedings, 1300; rep of com without amdt, 1300; 3r, 1300; Commons amdt, 1516, 1527; r.a., 1541

Postal workers, threat of strike, 1096
Inquiry, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 1124-5

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 193-7, 201-4
Appropriation bill No. 2 C-140, 289-90
Appropriation bill No. 9 C-248, 1219-21, 1226
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 156
Suggestion for posthumous honour of Privy Councillor, 473
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, control of programming, 1219-21
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1892-3
Capital punishment, 728-9
Chief Electoral Officer, 195, 728
Citizenship bill S-59, 1810-11
Nationality, Commonwealth citizenship, subjects of the Queen, 1810-11
Screening of immigrants, 1811
Commissions, name, nature, personnel and date of each, inquiry, 1067-8, 1073-4
Committee meetings, conflict with sittings of Senate and Commons, 1077-8
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 156-7
Constituencies, population of, inquiry, 810, 1079-80, 1093-5
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1157-8
Nuremberg trials, 1158
Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Canada, 1157-8
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) Special Joint Committee, 1145-6
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 489-93
Children, federal jurisdiction of, 492
Senate Committee disregard of, 492-3
Divorce resolutions, approval without knowledge of facts, 490-3
Marriage and divorce jurisdiction, 492
Electoral boundaries
Commissions' reports, inquiry, 93
Maps, inquiry, 726
Redistribution, objections by Members of Parliament, inquiry, 224-5
Electoral Boundaries Readjustment bill S-22, 305, 337-8, 352-7
Gaspé County, 355
Judges appointed to commissions, 353-4
Langlois Commission, 354
Maps on redistribution, redrawing of, 352, 354-5
Newspaper articles by Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 354
Objections by Members of Parliament, 337-8, 353-4
Opinions quoted, 355-6
Precedent as to passage of 1936 bill, 356
Estimates, 289-90, 334-5, 495, 1219-21, 1226, 1248-9
B and B Commission, expenses of, 1249
Curtailment of non-useful expenditures, 1249
External aid, 1248-9
Food and money distribution, 1248-9
Interest free loans, 1185

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François – Continued
Estimates – Concluded
Italy, flood distress, 1248-9
Lack of opportunity for discussion of, 289-90
Winter works, Quebec, 334-5, 495
French-Canadian liberalism, spokesman for, question of privilege, 272-3
Government Organization bill C-178, 727-9
Chief Electoral Officer, 728
Justice Department, 727-8
Liberty, freedom and responsibility, 729
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., retired, (letter read), 1360
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 657
Judges bill C-160, 389-92
Judicial appointments to commissions, 93, 170, 194-5, 305-6, 353-4, 391; reply to inquiry tabled, 413
Justice Department, 727
Drafting of legislation, 986-7
Labour (Standards) Code bill S-54, 1192-4
Multi-employer employment, 1193
Quebec strikes, 1193
Union leaders, 1193-4
Lands Surveys bill S-48, 985-7
Legal fees and travelling expenses received from the Government by solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public in Quebec, inquiry, 810, 892, 1147 (reply tabled, 1143).
Legal services, fees paid by Government to members of Quebec Bar, inquiry, 604, 634, 650-3, 729, 778-9
Liberty, freedom and human rights, and related responsibility, 637-8, 729, 1220
Ministers' participation in Senate debates, Rule No. 18A, 473-4
National Art Gallery, proposed purchase of $6 million painting, 638
National Housing bill C-241, 1185
Interest-free loans, question of, 1185
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 558-9, 585-6, 634-5
Boundaries, 558-9
Protest against bill, 634-5
O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan, retirement from Ottawa Journal presidency, 342
Postal strike, threat of, 1096
Precedence and Protocol, inquiry, 1834
Press report on Senate passage of bills, 893-4
Privy Council appointments, suggestions, 29, 473
Quebec constitutional rights, 795-6
Redistribution bill C-126, 169-70, 179-84. See also 193-7
Judges appointed to commissions, 170, 194-5
Langlois Commission, 169-70, 179-84
Newspaper articles re 'bungling' in electoral distribution, 179-84
Quebec historic names, elimination in redistribution, 169, 179-84, 195-6
Senate special committee to study, suggestion, 194, 196-7
Redistribution, objections filed with Speaker of House of Commons, 224-5, 313-14, 337-8, 352-7
Rules of Senate and House of Commons re introduction of bills, 985-7
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151, 662-5, 726-7
La Patrie article on home life, 664
Rural and urban population, 726
Unemployed settlers and farmers, inquiry by Labour Dept., 663
War effects on rural population, 664-5

Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François—Concluded
Senate, 40, 193-4, 196-7, 356
Chamber and reading room, lighting, 40
Duty in analyzing legislation, 193-4, 196-7, 356
Globe and Mail comment, 356
Senators of prominence in business, professional and political fields, 201-4
Statute books, revision of, 637
Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment bill C-193, 879, 880-1
Student Loans bill C-197, 765, 793-6
Provincial jurisdiction in educational matters, 793-6
Quebec, 795-6
Questions presented by Hon. Mr. Pouliot on Bill C-110 (1964) in committee, 793-4
Superannuation for judges and senators, and pensions for widows, 879
Table of Precedence for Canada, suggested amdt., 1820-1
Taylor, Hon. William H., retired, 657
"The other place", 985-6
Translation problems, 880-1
Treasury Board regulations, appointments, and quorum, 1226
Veniot, Hon. Clarence J., retired, 657
Water resources, conservation of, 715-17
NAWAPA diversion scheme, Globe and Mail article, 716-17
Pollution, resolution by Mayors' Group to do research on, 717

Poverty
Company of Young Canadians, aspirations in relation to poverty and plenty, 855-6
Farm income and failures, 33
Nova Scotia, average income in Inverness, 907
Poverty and affluent society, 855
Rural poverty, 308-10, 549, 551, 672
Welfare Council report re, 308, 309
Training and regional development programs, 43-44
War on poverty in New Brunswick, 281
World hunger, 528-30

Power, Hon C. G., P.C.
Crerar, Hon. T.A., retired, 574-5
Doctor of Laws, honorary degree from University of Saskatchewan, 607
Felicitations on 49th anniversary in Parliament, 1292-3
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 18
Memoirs, publication of, 1125-6
Vanier, General Georges Philias, the late, 1574-5

Precedence and Protocol, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1834

Presbyterian Church in Canada, Trustee Board of, bill S-20. Hon. Mr. Kinley. 1r, 211; 2r, 265; ref to com, 265; rep of com without amdt, 367; 3r, 367; r.a., 648

Press and periodicals, etc.
Amendment of the Canadian Constitution, by Hon. Guy Favreau, 126-7
Between Niger and Nile, by Sir Arthur Toynbee, 435
Brandon Sun
Hate propaganda legislation, 1199
Brantford Expositor
Divorce reform, 262
Centennial Gazette, article on history of Canadian railways, 1414
Christian Science Monitor
World hunger, assistance from wealthy countries, 672
Faith and Freedom, by Barbara Ward, excerpt from, 1063
Family Herald
Education vs economy, 310
Financial Post
Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, article by president of Guaranty Trust Co., 1458-9
Life Under the Auto Pact, 781-2
Fortune
Creative federalism, 230
Gazette
Bankruptcy investigation by Government, 252
Bankruptcy, Rec-Stone Co., 252
Globe and Mail
Bankruptcies, brief of Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, 248
Hate propaganda legislation, 1199
NAWAPA diversion scheme, 716-17
Pollution of water, 717
Senate performance of duties, 356
Trade deficit in automotive exports, 750-2
Halifax Chronicle
United Milk Producers Assoc., 827-8
Jewish Voice
Hate propaganda legislation, article by Rev. Ernest Marshall, 1199-1200
Le Devoir
Marriage and divorce, article by Claude Ryan, 488-9
Le Saint-Laurent
1965 Redistribution – Quebec disfigured by the Langlois Commission, 181-4
1965 Redistribution – The madness of a new wave, 179-81
London Free Press
Hate propaganda legislation, 1199
Memoirs of Chubby Power, A Party Politician, 1125-6
Modern France
Child instruction, 309-10
Montreal Gazette
Editorial on defying of Parliament by Labour, 1027
New Statesman, letter on economic growth, by Sir Arthur Bryant, 435-6
Ottawa Citizen
Passage of bills by Senate, 892-4
"The Senators show us how", 174
Ottawa Journal
Deutsch report, 44
"Labrador takeover" by Quebec, 97-99
Senate Special Committee on Aging, article on work of, 174
St. John's Evening Telegram
Subsidies from Government to fishermen and farmers, comparisons, 95

Press and periodicals—Concluded
Sudbury Star
Northern Ontario Economy, 674-5
Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada, Hawthorn-Tremblay report, 1713-15, 1748
Times
Railway dispute, comment on Government procedure in, 1028-30
Toronto Daily Star
Divorce, 236
Hate propaganda legislation, 1199
LSD party, 1800-1
University of Toronto weekend "Perception 67" on drug experience, 1801
Toronto Telegram
Death of student John Stern attributed to LSD, 1801
Hate propaganda legislation, 1200
Ukrainian Canadians: Their place and Role in Canadian Life, by Hon. Paul Yuzyk, 1820
Unwin, J. Robertson, McGill University
LSD, effects and glamorizing of drug through news media, 1801-2
U.S. Code Congressional (and Administrative) News
Automotive Products Agreement, amdt proceedings re Letters of Commitment, 752-3
Vancouver Sun
Publication of Vancouver School Board re dangers of LSD, 1799-1800
Welfare Council report on rural poverty, 308
Winnipeg Free Press
Food shortages, 1087-8
Winnipeg Tribune
Electoral distribution, Senator Pouliot charges "bungling" in, 179

Prince Edward Island
Tourist literature, 344
Winter works program, 332-4
See also Atlantic provinces

Printing of Parliament, Joint Committee
Members
Commons, 132
Senate, 25; message to Commons, 38, 329

Prison administration, female inmates, inquiry, Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, 915

Private bills, see Bills, private

Privilege, question of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation TV program "Sunday", Hon. John J. Connolly, 1203-4
Food and Drugs bill S-60, newspaper report of remark by Dr. Morton Shulman, 1812
French-Canadian liberalism, spokesman for, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 272-3

Privilege, question of – Concluded
NATO Parliamentarians, Canadian delegates, 1468-73
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1470-2
Connolly, John J., 1468-70
Grosart, Allister, 1472
Haig, J. Campbell, 1473
MacKenzie, Hon. Norman A., 1472
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 1463-6
Ottawa Citizen article on Senate passage of bills, Hon. Mr. Aseltine, 892-4
Survey of Contemporary Indians in Canada, Hon. Mr. Hollett, 1748

Privy Council, iv
Appointments, suggestions by Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 29, 473

Pro forma bill
Railways bill S-1. 1r, 6

Property qualification of Senators, 1, 199, 258, 300
Return presented, with motion for supplementary return, 132
Supplementary return presented, 386

Prorogation of Parliament
Notice of, 1924
Speech from the Throne, 1925-7

Prowse, Hon. J. Harper
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1857
Competition between armed forces, 1857
Peacekeeping commitments, 1858-9
Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta) S-34, 471, 535-6
Gas and sulphur production, 536
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1827-9
Glamorizing of LSD, 1828
RCMP control of narcotics, 1828-9
Introduction to the Senate, 199
Northwest Territories bill C-146, 588-92
Carrothers Commission, 590-1
Elected members of Council, 588
Indemnity, 588
Government of Territories, 589
Mileage and population, 588-9
Revenues and expenditures, 591
Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer bill C-211, 843
Free enterprise, Alberta, 843

Public bills, see Bills, public

Public Buildings and Grounds Committee
Members, 26, 269

Public Health and Welfare Committee
Members, 26, 269

Public Service Employment
Appeals, 1478
Languages to be used for examinations, 1478
Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, 1508
Merit system, 1477-8, 1501-3
Political activity, 1478-80, 1502, 1504-8
C.S. Commission memorandum re, 1505
Public Service Commission powers, 1502-4, 1507
Reports to Parliament, 1507
Treasury Board responsibilities, 1501-2
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 1503
Grosart, Allister, 1500-7, 1508
MacKenzie, Norman A., 1477-80, 1507-8

Public Service Employment bill C-181. 1r, 1477; 2r, 1477-80, 1500-9; 3r, 1509; r.a., 1509

Public Service, Special Joint Committee
Bills ref to joint com, 649, 725
Members
Commons, 688, 707, 759, 1053, 1075, 1124, 1143
Senate, 470, 757, 866, 1065, 1197
Message from Commons re appointment, 402
Motion to print reports in Minutes, 1383
Reports
Employer and employee relations, 1383
Employment in the Public Service, 1383
Financial Administration Act amendment, 1383
Meetings, witnesses, recommendations, 1923-4
Quorum, 744, 771
Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment bill C-193, amdt to French version, 771
Terms of reference, 1348, 1366, 1526

Public Service Staff Relations
Appeal to Parliament, 1484
Arbitration boards, 1489
Collective bargaining rights, 1474-5, 1481-2, 1487-8, 1490
Economic factors of strikes, 1489
Employee grievances, 1475-6
Grievance procedures, 1476
Parliamentary staff, 1485
Press comment, 1482-3
Public Service Staff Relations Board, 1474
Responsibility in strike action, 1486

Public Service Staff Relations—Concluded
Retroactivity to pay review date, 1476
Safety and security of the public, 1475, 1483, 1490
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Beaubien, L.P., 1489
Bourget, Maurice, 1473-7
Cameron, Donald, 1485-7
Choquette, Lionel, 1481-3
Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 1483, 1489, 1491
Flynn, Jacques, 1487-9
Hollett, Malcolm, 1489-90
Macdonald, John M., 1485
Roebuck, Arthur W., 1483-5, 1488

Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170. 1r, 1473; 2r, 1473-77, 1481-91; 3r, 1498; r.a., 1509

Public utilities income tax transfer
Beneficiaries of transfer, 842
Brinco Corp., Nfld., 842, 843
Free enterprise, Alberta, 843
New Brunswick, question of benefits, 842-3
Refund limits, 842
Taxing of utility corps., in relation to income tax structure, 841
Time lag in transfer, 841-2
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Fournier, Edgar E., 842-3
Prowse, J. Harper, 843
Urquhart, Earl W., 840-2

Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer bill C-211. 1r, 790; 2r, 840-3; 3r, 854; r.a., 930

Quart, Hon. Josie D.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 253-5
Aging, Senate Special Committee, 173-6
Jewish Home for the Aged, Toronto, 176
Press comment on Senate Committee, 174
Senior Citizens' day at Expo67, suggestion, 175-6
Appropriation bill No. 9 C-248, 1221-2
Beaulieu, Madame Jeanne-Pauline, Mother of the Year, 399
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 153
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 253-5, 1221-3
Corrupt use of TV and radio facilities, 253-5
Coverage unfavourable to prominent persons, 255
Declaration of Women, brief presented to Government officials, 254-5, 1221-3
Penfield, Dr. Wilder, criticism of CBC, 255
Company of Young Canadians bill C-174, 860-1
Excerpts from report by Stewart Goodings, 861
Members of organizing committee, 860
Projects in Canada, 861
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 153

Quebec
Bankruptcies, 248-52
Bankruptcy Court of Montreal, 251
Bankruptcy rings, 248-50, 251, 252
Criminal elements and murders, 247-8
Rec-Stone Co., 252
Commissions, name, nature, personnel and date, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1067-8, 1073-4
Comtois, Hon. Paul, Lieutenant Governor, the late, 147-58
Divorce laws, 237-40
Judges appointed to commissions, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 93, 305-6, 391
Legal fees and travelling expenses received from Government by solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 810, 892, 1147, (reply tabled, 1143)
Legal services, fees paid by Government to members of Quebec Bar, 604, 634, 650-3, 729, 778-9
Redistribution of electoral boundaries, 169-70, 179-84, 305, 337-8, 352-7
St. Jean Baptiste Society brief re "Labrador takeover", 97
Winter works program, 318-19, 332-5
See also Judges,
Legal Profession.

Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company bill S-31. Hon. Mr. Bourget. 1r, 453; 2r, 586-8; ref to com, 588; rep of com without amdt, 632; 3r, 658

Quebec Savings Banks
Cash reserve, 1746
Directors, 1746
Interest and charges, 1746
Lending and investment powers, 1746-7
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Bourque, Romuald, 1745-7
Flynn, Jacques, 1747

Quebec Savings Banks bill C-223. 1r, 1745; 2r, 1745-7; ref to com, 1745; authority to print proceedings, 1750; rep of com without amdt, 1750; 3r, 1750; r.a., 1768

Queen Elizabeth II, tribute in Montreal newspaper, 666-7

Question of Privilege, see Privilege, question of Questions, see Inquiries

Railways
Abandonment of, 34
Canadian National Railway (Bruce Lake) bill C-165, 401, 416-19, 453-4, 476-7, 547
Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous) bill C-210, 770, 787-90, 849-50, 868, 929
Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta) bill S-34, 471, 535-7, 632-3, 658, 929
Canadian Pacific Railway (Saskatchewan) bill S-32, 471, 534-5, 632, 658, 929
History of Canadian railways, 1397-8, 1385, 1420-2, 1414
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1013-37
National Transportation bill C-231, 1341-7, 1377-82, 1384-1405, 1417, 1420-3, 1442
Ottawa Terminal Railway bill S-2, 22, 84-87, 186, 201
Parliament recalled from recess to deal with strike negotiations, 978
STELCO, government subsidy to build railway, 468-9
Taxi service from Ottawa railway station, 1580
Water supplies and sanitary facilities, 641-2

Railways bill (pro forma) S-1. 1r, 6

Railways, maintenance of
Cameron, Mr. Justice, report and recommendations, 1016-17, 1020
Collective bargaining procedures, 1018
Compulsory arbitration, 1025
Conciliation boards and chairmen, 1014-15
Criticism of Government procedure, 1021-3, 1028-30, 1032-6
Times comment, 1029
Events leading up to strike action, 1013-15
Freedman report, implementation of, 1017-18
MacPherson report, implementation of, 1020
Mediator, appointment of, 1021
Munroe, Mr. Justice, report and recommendations of, 1015-16, 1020
Rate structures, controlling of, 1018-19
Right of employees to strike, 1023-4, 1035
St. Lawrence Seaway workers, increase of 30%, 1036
Union issues in dispute, 1013-14
See also Maintenance of Railways bill C-230

Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited bill S-52. Hon. Mr. Hastings. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1091-2; ref to com, 1092; rep with amdts, 1164; 3r, 1196

Rattenbury, Hon. Nelson
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 279-82
Admiralty bill C-161, 386-7
Deputy judges, 386
Sheriff's jurisdiction, 386-7
Atlantic provinces, 279-82
Atlantic Development Board, commendation, 279-80
Fishing industry, development programs, 280-1
Steel trawlers and wooden vessels, 280
Training of fishermen, officers and crew, 280
Hydro power developments, 279-80
Milltown Bridge bill S-15, 176-7

Rattenbury, Hon. Nelson – Concluded
New Brunswick, 280-2
Economic prospects, 280-2
Educational improvements, 281
Racial and religious tensions, 279, 282
Reconstruction in municipal, educational and taxation structure, 280-2
Press comment, 281
Royal Commission on, 281
Robichaud, Hon. Louis Joseph, Premier, 280, 281, 282
War on poverty, 281

Redistribution
Judicial appointments to commissions, 93, 170, 194-5, 305-6, 353-4, 391, reply to inquiry tabled, 413
Langlois Commission, 169-70, 179-84
Newspaper articles re 'bungling', 179-84
Objections filed with Speaker of House of Commons, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 224-5, 313-14
Quebec historic names eliminated in redistribution, 169, 179-84, 195-6
Senate special committee to study, suggestion, 196-7
See also Electoral boundaries
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A. J., 168, 170
Hugessen, A. K., 168, 170
Pouliot, Jean-François, 169-170, 179-84
(See also 193-7)

Redistribution bill C-126. 1r, 158; 2r, 168-70; 3r, 170; r.a., 178

Research Council, 453, 483-5, 540-1, 591, 599, 611-12, 758
See National Research Council

Restaurant of Parliament, Joint Committee
Accounts and financial transactions, report on, 400
Members
Commons, 301-2, 329, 471
Senate, 25; message to Commons, 38

Retirement of Senators, 41-42, 50-51
Title of retired Senators, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Lefrançois, 414

Retirements from the Senate, see Senators, retired

Rhodesia
Discussions at meeting of Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, 433
Trade restrictions, 345-6

Richelieu Bridge Company bill S-44. 1r, 979; 2r, 1100-02; ref to com, 1102; authority to print com proceedings, 1243

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., P.C.
Retired December 24, 1965
Tributes, 18, 19

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 126-9
Admiralty bill C-161, 387
Aging, report of Senate Special Committee, 114-15
Co-ordination of organizations, 115
Minimum income, 116
National Commission on Aging, 115
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 741-2
Bank of Canada bill C-190, 1679
"Payable to bearer on demand", 1679
Bank of Western Canada bill C-111, 885
Birthday felicitations, 1515-16
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, the late, 362
Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement bill C-154, 445, 446
Protest against form of bill, 445, 446
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229, 1411, 1415
Combines Investigation and Criminal Code bill C-169 (B.C. fishermen and packers), 460-1
Application of terms to select group, question of, 460-1
Delegation of powers to Commons, 461
Constitution of Canada, 126-9
Amendment of the Canadian Constitution, by Hon. Guy Favreau, 126-7
B.N.A. Act amdts., control of, 126-8
Fulton-Favreau formula, 126-7
Consumer Credit, Joint Committee, terms of reference, 1040-7
Crerar, Hon. T.A., retired, 575-6
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1109-14, 1702-9
Appeals, 1113
Committee study under chairmanship of Dean Maxwell Cohen, 1111
Forfeiture of pamphlets, newspapers, arms., etc., 1113, 1709
Freedom of speech, 1704
Genocide, definitions of offences under, 1111, 1706
Identifiable group, 1112-13
Nazism, Beattie case cited, 1703-4, 1709
Penalties, 1112, 1113
Police persecution, 1113-14
Potential for harm from purveyors of hate, 1109-10
Press comments, 1704-5, 1707
Religious groups, 1708
Radio and TV regulations, 1110
UK Race Relations Act, 1706-7
Dairy Commission bill C-205, 828-9
Consumer protection, 829
Vesting of property, 829

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.–Continued
Divorce, 185-6, 233-42, 244-7, 497-506, 1003-7, 1011-12, 1125
Alimony, 499
Biega, Joyce Regina Nagine, appeal against judgment of Senate Commissioner, 1003-7
Subcommittee to hear appeal, 1011-12, 1125
Children involved in divorce, 239-40
Collusion, 500-3
Common law marriages, 235
Cruelty, 240-1
Desertion, 499-500
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 234, 498-500
Domicile, 499
English act cited, 240, 241-2
Grounds for divorce, extension, 234, 240-1
Judicial separation, 499
Law and Practice of Divorce in Canada, 236
Missing spouse declared dead, 499
Mueller, Lutz, withdrawal of petition because of death of respondent, 1540
Non-consummation of marriage, 499
Pregnancy for which husband not responsible, 499
Provincial acts, 236-7
Quebec and Newfoundland, 237-8, 239, 240
Rule 113 re reference of petitions to Committee, 1004
Rape, 498-9
Regina vs Pichette and Santerre, 502-3
Senate Divorce Committee and Commissioner, status of, 238-9, 501-5
Sodomy, 499
Statistics, 134, 138, 1369
United Church of Canada, book on, Marriage Breakdown, excerpt from, 235
Unsound mind, 241, 242, 499
Whiteside report, 810
Divorce Committee
Appointment, 23-24; subcommittees, 92, 109
Leave to sit during adjournments and sittings of Senate, 92, 109
Members, 22
Divorce Committee, Joint, 316, 650, 687
Reports, 650, 687, 1077-9
Divorce (Extension of Grounds) bill S-19, 185-6, 233-42, 244-7, 497-506
Divorce Reports
Nos. 2-113 : 134-8
114-169 : 167, 191
170-226 : 186, 206
227-282 : 201, 218
283-337 : 211, 231
338-400 : 293, 306
401-448 : 314, 358
449-498 : 404, 426
499-579 : 454, 485
580-635 : 564, 594
636-670 : 604, 639
671-710 : 744, 775
711-751 : 770, 799
752 : 810
753-816 : 913

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Continued
Divorce Reports – Concluded
817-847 : 1096, 1121
848-909 : 1124
910-1041 : 1241, 1260
1042-1098 : 1369, 1406
1099-1146 : 1480, 1493
1147-1211 : 1525, 1541 (No. 1179 withdrawn, 1577)
1212-1251 : 1632, 1662
1252-1290 : 1702, 1720
1291-1333 : 1772, 1803
Divorce Resolutions
Nos. 1-112 : 159-62, 171-3
113-168 : 191-2, 208-9
169-225 : 207-8, 232-3
226-281 : 218-19, 256-7
282-336 : 231-2, 265-7
337-390 : 306-7, 338-9
391-437 : 358-9, 396-7
438-487 : 426-7, 458-7
488-568 : 485-7, 568
569-621 : 594-5, 612-13
622-656 : 636-40, 661-2
657-696 : 775-6, 812-13
697-737 : 813-14, 863-4
738-800 : 914-15
801-830 : 1133-4
831-890 : 1160-1, 1205-06
891-1021 : 1260-3, 1274-6
1022-1074 : 1406-7, 1408-9
1075-1122 : 1493-4, 1499
1123-1184 : 1542-3, 1570-1
1185-1224 : 1662-3, 1696-7
1225-1263 : 1720-1, 1748-9
1264-1304 : 1803, 1819
Dutch Elm disease, 294-6, 404-5, 413-14
External aid, food distribution, 1247
Fair Wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2, 702
Jurisdiction over wages and hours of labour, 702
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 467, 469
B.C. fishing monopoly, 469
Socialism, question of, 467, 469
Government Organization bill C-178, 684
Hydro power transmission over long distances, 326-7
Income Tax Agreements bill S-56, 1377
Income Tax bill C-259, 1659-60
Deferred profit sharing plan, 1660
Inflation, 1040-7, 1673-4
Canadian currency in circulation, 1046-7, 1674
Monetary policy of Government, 1045-7, 1673-4
Interpretation bill S-9, 112, 197-8
Definition of time and land, 112
Demise of the Crown Act, 197
Judges bill C-160, 392

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Concluded
Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35, 640-5, 657-8, 851-2
Automotive Transport Assoc., 643-4, 658
Factories under federal jurisdiction, 641
Health and Welfare recommendations re construction camps and eating establishments, 642
Penalties, 640
Transport Commissioners' decision, 642-3, 657-8
Water supplies and sanitary facilities, 641-2, 851
CPR diesel locomotives, 641
Locomotive engineers, negotiations re, 644
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., the late, 17
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1030-2
Manitoba-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-47, 995
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 992, 993
Medical Care bill C-227, 1270-1
Liberal Party, instigation of unemployment insurance and other welfare matters, 1270-1
National Research Council bill C-150, 485
Research projects of NRC, 485
National Transportation bill C-231, 1387, 1388, 1389, 1390, 1393
N ATO Parliamentarians, 12th annual conference at Paris, France, 1466-7
Canadian delegates, continuity and briefing of, 1467
Foreign policy and obligation of Canada, questioned, 1466-7
Ottawa Terminal Railway bill S-2, 86, 87
Employees of railway unions, 86
Pension Benefits Standards bill C-221, 1673-4
Press report on passage of bills by Senate, 893
Public Service Staff Relations bill C-170, 1483-5, 1488
Appeal to Parliament, 1484
Freedom to strike, 1484
Tolpuddle Martyrs, 1484
Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-46, 994
Science Council of Canada bill C-149, 422
Cold firecrackers, 422
Training Allowance bill C-186, 722-3
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., the late, 362
World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42, 888, 890, 891
Yukon bill C-147, 711-12

Royal Anthem, see National and Royal Anthems

Royal assent, 125, 131, 170, 178, 291, 386, 397, 540, 547, 632, 648, 743, 757-8, 929-30, 976-7, 1037, 1174, 1175, 1187, 1194, 1197, 1209, 1232, 1243, 1263, 1338, 1339-40, 1433, 1442, 1526, 1541, 1604, 1611, 1924-5
Cartwright, Hon. J.R., M.C., 1541, 1611
Fauteux, Hon. Gerald, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 291, 1924
Hall, Hon. Emmett M. Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 929-30, 976-7, 1339-40
Taschereau, Hon. Robert, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, 131, 178, 397, 547, 648, 757-8, 1037, 1175, 1194, 1197, 1209, 1232, 1263, 1442, 1509

Rules of the Senate
Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, excerpt re introduction of money bills in Senate, 982
No. 18A, ministers' participation in Senate Debates, 471-6, 981
No. 113, re divorce petitions, 1004
No. 119, suspension of, 454-5, 885

Rural economic development
ARDA, 549, 592, 1565, 1567
Farm Leadership Awards, 675
Federal-provincial agreements, 1566
Fishing resources, 593
Implementation of programs, responsibility for, 675, 676
Income, farm and rural non-farm families, 549-50
Interlake area and other western towns, Manitoba, 582-3, 1553, 1565, 1592-5
New Brunswick, 1552-3, 1565
PFRA, 1578-9, 1592
Poverty in rural areas, 549, 551, 676
Rural and urban populations, 726
Sudbury Star article on Northern Ontario Economy, 674-5
Under-estimating of programs, 1564-5
Water resources, development in western Canada, 1579
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Argue, Hazen, 1578-9
Belisle, Rheal, 673-6
Flynn, Jacques, 726
Irvine, Olive L., 592-3
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 549-51, 676-7, 1551-3, 1566
Pearson, Hon. Arthur M., 671-3, 1564-7
Pouliot, Hon. Jean-François, 662-5, 726-7

Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-151. 1r, 548-9; 2r, 549-51, 662-6, 671-7; ref to com, 677; authority to print com proceedings, 714; rep of com with amdt, 714; 3r, 726-7; r.a., 929

Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-274. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1551-3, 1564-7; 3r, 1578-80, 1591-6; r.a., 1611

St. Jean Baptiste Society of Montreal, suggestion that Quebec take possession of Labrador, 97-99, see also 553-4, 558-60

St. Lawrence Ports working conditions
Compulsory arbitration, 972, 974, 975
Conference between labour and Government representatives, 972-3
Industrial Inquiry Commission, 970
Mediator, Judge René Lippé, 969-70
Protection of workers and job security, 971
Saving provision to vary agreement, 971
Terms for settlement of strike, 970
Amendment by negotiations or "otherwise", 970-1, 973
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 969-72, 974-5
Macdonald, John M., 972-5

St. Lawrence Ports Working Conditions bill C-215. 1r, 969; 2r, 969-76; 3r, 976; r.a., 977

St. Patrick's Day, 1669-70, 1697-8

Sangster, Sir Donald, the late, 1780-2

Saskatchewan
Alwinsal Potash of Canada Ltd., 788-9
Crop insurance, 923
Diamond Jubilee, 34
Farm income and failures, 33-34
Industrial development, 322, 325-6
Potash, 32, 322, 325-6, 788-9
Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary bill S-45, 979, 988-94
Oil industry, 32
Pulp mill, Prince Albert, 32
Sodium sulphate, Ingebright Lake, 535
Water resources, 936, 940-1

Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories boundary
Speakers: Honourable Senators
McDonald, A. Hamilton, 994
Roebuck, Arthur W., 994
See also Manitoba-Saskatchewan Boundary

Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories Boundary bill S-46. 1r, 980; 2r, 994; ref to com, 994; authority to print proceedings, 1007; rep without amdt, 1008; 3r, 1008; r.a., 1263

Savoie, Hon. Calixte F.
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, the late, 14-15

Science Council
Expenses, 421
Glassco Commission recommendations re scientific policy, 420, 423-4
MacKenzie, Dr. J.C., recommendations to Prime Minister, 420-1, 423-4, 447, 448
Medical research, 447
Ministry of Science, Senator suggested as head of, 425
Personnel, 419-20, 424-5, 447-8
Science organizations in other countries, 422
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Hugessen, A.K., 419-22
O'Leary, M. Grattan, 422-6
Roebuck, Arthur W., 422
Sullivan, Joseph A., 446-8

Science Council of Canada bill C-149. 1r, 401; 2r, 419-26, 446-8; ref to com, 448; authority to print com proceedings, 541; rep of com without amdt, 541; 3r, 541; r.a., 547

Seaboard Finance Company of Canada bill S-21. Hon. Mr. McDonald. 1r, 293; 2r, 317-18; ref to com, 318; rep of com without amdt, 413; 3r, 446

Selection Committee
Appointment, 7
Reports
Divorce Committee members, 22
Internal Economy Committee members, 22
Standing Committees members, 23, 25-26; appointment, 37

Senate
Adjournments
March 31, 398
May 12, 547
July 14, 977
September 1, 1037
September 13, 1051
December 21, 1340
February 9, 1435
Emergency sittings, authority to convene Senate during adjournment, 24
Parliament recalled from recess to deal with railway legislation, 978
Globe and Mail comment on Senate performance of duties, 356
Lighting in chamber and reading room, 41
Officers and Chiefs of principal branches, xix
Rules of the Senate
Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, excerpt re introduction of money bills in Senate, 982
No. 18A, Ministers' participation in Senate debates, 471-6, 981
No. 113, re divorce petitions, 1004
No. 119 suspension of, 454-5, 885
Speaker of the Senate, Hon. Sydney J. Smith, Commission of Appointment, 1

Senators
According to seniority, alphabetically and by provinces, v-xvii
Prominence in business, professional and political fields, 201-4
Property qualification, 1, 132, 199, 258, 300, 931, 978
Retirement of, 41-42, 50-51, 414
See Senators, retired
Telephone privileges, 92
Title after retirement, 414

Senators, deceased
Bishop, Hon. Charles L., 1053-5
September 28, 1966
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., 147-58
February 20, 1966

Senators, deceased – Concluded
Bradley, Hon. F. Gordon, P.C., 360-3
March 30, 1966
Comeau, Hon. Joseph Willie, 11-18
January 11, 1966
Davies, Hon. W. Rupert, 1612-17
March 11, 1967
Grant, Hon. Thomas V., 1351
December 24, 1966
Hnatyshyn, Hon. John –
May 2, 1967
Lambert, Hon. Norman P., 11-18
November 4, 1965
McKeen, Hon. Stanley S. –
December 1, 1966
McLean, Hon. A. Neil, 1612-16
March 12, 1967
Wood, Hon. Thomas H., 11-18
November 26, 1965
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L., 360-3
March 30, 1966

Senators, new
Argue, Hon. Hazen Robert, 199
Benidickson, Hon. William Moore, 1
Davey, Hon. Douglas Keith, 199
Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, 199
Desruisseaux, Hon. Paul, 978
Duggan, Hon. James, 978
Everett, Hon. Douglas Donald, 1135
Hastings, Hon. Earl Adam, 199
Hays, Hon. Harry William, 258
Kickham, Hon. Thomas Joseph, 978
Kinnear, Hon. Mary Elizabeth, 1770
Laird, Hon. Keith, 1770
Lamontagne, Hon. Maurice, 1770
Langlois, Hon. J.G. Leopold, 931
MacKenzie, Hon. Norman Archibald MacRae, 300
Macnaughton, Hon. Alan Aylesworth, 978
McDonald, Hon. Alexander Hamilton, 1
McElman, Hon. Charles Robert, 258
Nichol, Hon. John Lang, 199
Prowse, Hon. James Harper, 199
Thompson, Hon. Andrew Ernest, 1770
Urquhart, Hon. Earl Wallace, 199

Senators, retired
Bishop, Hon. Charles L. –
September 23, 1966
Buchanan, Hon. John A., 19
October 2, 1965
Crerar, Hon. T.A., 571-6
May 31, 1966

Senators, retired – Concluded
Grant, Hon. Thomas V., 19
August 19, 1965
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., 1355-60
January 1, 1967
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., 653-7
June 1, 1966
Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL., 18-19
December 24, 1965
Taylor, Hon. William H., 653-7
June 1, 1966
Tremblay, Hon. Leonard D.S., 18-19
September 2, 1965
Veniot, Hon. Clarence J., 653-7
June 1, 1966
Woodrow, Hon. Allan L. –
March 14, 1966

Senior citizens, see Report of Special Committee on Aging, p. 89 et seq

Shipping Federation
Report re dispute between Shipping Federation of Canada, Inc., and International Longshoremen's Assoc., 871-7
Terms of settlement for two-year collective agreement, 875-6

Small Businesses loans
Classification of small business, 1538
Guarantee on loans, 1539
Interest rate, 1538, 1539
Loans and losses, 1538, 1540
Monopolies, 1540
Newfoundland loans, 1540
Operation of legislation extended, 1538
Purposes for which loan may be used, 1538
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 1537-9
Haig, J. Campbell, 1551
Hollett, Malcolm, 1539-40

Small Businesses Loans bill C-270. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1537-40, 1551; 3r, 1559; r.a., 1611

Smith, Hon. Donald
Atlantic Develcpment Board, 1689-93
Anti-pollution campaign, 1691-2
Cape Breton Island, 1694
Fish plants, 1691
Health Resources Fund, 1694
Highway construction, 1691
Industrial development, 1691
Power development and transmission, 1690

Smith, Hon. Donald—Concluded
Atlantic Development Board – Concluded
Research buildings and equipment, 1691
Rural Economic Development Fund, 1693-4
Trans-Canada Highway, 1692-3
Estimates, 332-4, 1689-95
Fair Wages and Hours of Labour bill C-2, 685-7, 703-4
Overtime, 686
Penalties, 686
Standard rate of pay, 686
Working hours, 686
Fisheries Development bill C-145, 463-8, 482-3
Arctic char, 467-8
Fish-processing plants, 464
Inspection regulations, 465-6
Long-liner vessels, 463-4
Payments for construction, etc., 464
Precedents in promotion of high quality food, 466
Telephone privileges for Senators, 92
Winter works, 332-4
Prince Edward Island, 332-3
Quebec and Atlantic provinces, 332-3
Terms of program, 333
Unemployed absorbed in, 333-4

Smith, Hon. Sydney J., Speaker of the Senate
Appointment as Speaker, 1
Budget speech, accommodation for Senators in Commons gallery, 340, 1292
Centennial of Confederation, congratulations to Canada, extracts from Congressional Record, 1786, 1805-7
Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, Joint Committee, 301, 328-9, 1038-50
Death of Mrs. Sydney J. Smith, expressions of sympathy to Speaker, 1104
Divorce Committee, 300, 328
Library of Parliament Committee, 329
National and Royal Anthems Committee, 1348
Penitentiaries Committee, 300-1, 328
Printing of Parliament Committee, 329
Property qualification of Senators, supplementary return, 386
Public Service Committee, 402, 1348
Restaurant of Parliament Committee, 301-2, 329
Senators, new, introduction to the Senate, 1, 199, 258, 300, 931, 978, 1135

Speaker of the House of Commons
Lamoureux, Hon. Lucien, statements re appointment, 2-3

Speaker of the Senate
Reading of Commission appointing Hon. Sydney J. Smith, 1

Speaker of the Senate, Acting
Bourget, Hon. Maurice, 432, 453, 496, 523, 540, 1038

Special Committee, Senate, see Aging

Special Committees, Joint
Administration of Justice
Consumer Credit and Cost of Living
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda)
Divorce
Immigration
National and Royal Anthems
Penitentiaries
Public Service
See also individual names

Speech from the Throne
Opening of Parliament, 3-6
See Address in reply to Speech from the Throne
Prorogation of Parliament, 1925-7

Spellman, John Howard, Chairman of Special Committee on Matrimonial Law, Bar Assoc., New York State, 1510

Sports
Canadian Football League, Hon. Keith Davey appointed Commissioner, 774-5
Grey Cup, National Football Playoff in Vancouver, 1197
Olympic Games, misrepresentations by certain groups, 935
Pan-American Games 1967 in Winnipeg, 745-7
Stanley Cup, congratulations to Hon. Mr. Molson on success of Canadiens, 497

Standing Committees
Members, 25-26
See Committees, Standing, also individual names

Standing Committees, Joint
Library of Parliament,
Printing of Parliament,
Restaurant of Parliament.
See also individual names

Standing Orders
Members, 25
Report
Petitions for private bills, extension of time for filing, 330, 525

Stanley Cup, congratulations to Hon. Mr. Molson on success of Canadiens, 497

Statistics
Automotive industry, 618-19
Bankruptcies (1956-64), 249
Capital outflow of Canadian funds, 120
Common law marriages, 235
Constituencies of Canada, population, 810, 1093-5
Crop insurance (1964-66), 622
Currency in circulation, 1046-7
Farm population, loss in, 582-3
Gold mining, 543
Government borrowings, 285
Government expenditures, 299
Health and welfare expenditures (1957-66), 902
Income, farm and rural non-farm families, 550
Livestock feed assistance, 1084-6
Population, 1046-7
Rural poverty, 550
Student loans, 767, 768
University students in other countries, 766
Uranium production, 544-5

Statute Law (Superannuation) amendment
Appeals to Treasury Board, 847
Armed forces pensioner re-employed in Public Service, 846
Death benefit, 846
Diplomatic services, 845-6
Employment after retirement, 847, 869
Intercolonial and PEI Railways employees, 845-6
Portability of benefits, 846, 869
Public Service, 844, 846
RCMP and armed forces, 845-6
Superannuation or pension acts amended under bill C-193, 844
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Bourget, Maurice, 843-7, 879, 880
O'Leary, Clement A., 868-70
Pouliot, Jean-François, 879, 880-1

Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment bill 1966 C-193. 1r, 808; 2r, 843-7, 868-70; m for 3r, 879, m in amdt, 879-80, agreed to, 881; 3r, 881; concurrence by Commons in Senate amdt, 929; r.a., 930

Statutory salaries revision
Auditor General, 1547-8
Authority of Governor in Council, 1544-6
Executive powers of discrimination, 1564
Grain Commissioner, 1546
Officials affected by revision, 1544
Retroactive clause, 1545-6
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Aseltine, Walter M., 1545-6
Choquette, Lionel, 1563-4
Connolly, John J., 1546-7
Cook, Eric, 1544-5, 1547-8

Statutory Salaries Revision bill C-266. 1r, 1524; 2r, 1544-8, 1563-4; ref to com, 1564; rep of com without amdt, 1591; 3r, 1591; r.a., 1611

Strikes, see Labour

Student loans
Bursaries and scholarships, 766
Disadvantages of student loans, 792-3
Interest-free status, 769
Jurisdiction in educational matters, 793-6
Northwest Territories, 793
Provincial allocations, 769
Questions presented by Hon. Mr. Pouliot on Bill C-110 in committee, 793-4
Statistics for June and July 1965, 767, 768
University students in other countries, statistics, 766
Vocational training assistance, 766
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Cameron, Donald, 766-9
Connolly, John J., 765
Pouliot, Jean-François, 765, 793-6
Vaillancourt, Cyrille, 796
Yuzyk, Paul, 792-3

Student Loans bill C-197. 1r, 765; 2r, 765-9, 792-6; 3r, 811; r.a., 929

Sullivan, Hon. Joseph A.
Dutch Elm disease, 295
Endocrinology, International Society of, 515
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1796-8
LSD, 1796-8
Clinical uses, 1796-7
Dangerous effects and reactions, 1797
Distribution and control of, 1797-8
Excerpt from book by W.A. Frosch of Bellevue Psychiatric Hospital, N.Y., 1798
Originators of, 1796
Medical Care bill C-227, 1249-58, 1282-3
British National Health Service, 1253
Difficulties in other countries, 1282-3
Doctors' right to "opt" out of plan, 1257
Gladston, Dr. Iago, "Medicine in Transition", 1255, 1257
Medical profession needs for personnel, 1255-6
Penfield, Dr. Wilder, comments on free medical services, 1250
Press comments, 1256
Program for Government, suggestion, 1254
Sigerist, Prof. Henry, "On the Sociology of Medicine", 1257-8
Socialistic implications, 1251, 1252-3
Question of privilege re newspaper report of remark by Dr. Morton Shulman on Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1812
Science Council of Canada bill C-149, 446-8
Medical research, 447
Terms of reference and personnel, 447-8

Superannuation, see Statute Law (Superannuation)

Supply bills
See Appropriation bills,
Estimates.

Table of Precedence for Canada, suggested amdt., Hon. Mr. Pouliot, 1820-1

Taschereau, Hon. Robert, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of Governor General
Opening of Parliament, 2
Royal assent, 131, 178, 397, 547, 648, 757-8, 1037, 1175, 1194, 1197, 1209, 1232, 1263, 1442, 1509

Taxation
Corporation tax, 837, 838
Customs tariff bill, 762-5, 791-2, 811, 929
Excise tax bill, 769, 797-9, 811, 929
Farm machinery costs, 311
Income Tax Agreement, Canada and United Kingdom, 401-2
Income Tax bill C-216, 943-54, 956, 958, 956-61, 976
Income Tax bill C-259, 1647-60, 1701, 1719-20, 1768
Income Tax bill C-280, 1885, 1914-15, 1925
Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer bill, 790, 840-3, 854, 930

Taylor, Hon. William H.
Retired June 1, 1966
Tributes, 653-7

Technical and vocational training
Schools and research, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Cameron, 921, 1001-2
Senior citizens, 74
Skill training vs true education, 425
Technical schools built since 1961, 766
See Adult occupational training

Teleferries
Chattels, transporting of, 1712
Inspection of construction, 1711
Interprovincial or international boundaries, 1710
Licences, 1711
Tolls, 1711
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Brooks, A.J., 1711-12
Connolly, John J., 1710-13

Teleferry bill S-58. 1r, 1668; 2r, 1710-13; 3r, 1720

Thompson, Hon. Andrew, P.C.
Introduction to the Senate, 1770

Thorvaldson, Hon. Gunnar S.
Assistance Plan bill C-207, 901-3, 909
Health and welfare expenditures (1957-66), 902
Indian welfare, 903
Jurisdiction in social and welfare services, 902-3
Bank of Canada bill C-190, 1677-9
Consultation between governor and government, 1677-9
Monetary policy, responsibility for, 1677-8
Bank of Western Canada bill C-111, 884-5
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 247-52
Abuse of bankruptcy laws, 247-9
Criminal elements, 247-8
Bankruptcies (1956-64), 249
Briefs presented re administration of act, 248
Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, 248
Judicial administration, Bankruptcy Court of Montreal, 251
Mercier Commission of Inquiry into Bankruptcies, etc., 248-52
Press reports, 248, 252
Quebec bankruptcy rings, 248-50, 251, 252
Rec-Stone Co., 252
Superintendent's jurisdiction, 250
Trustees and inspectors, suspect activities, 250-1
Bills of Exchange bill S-14, 223
Compliance with Canada Labour (Standards) Code re holidays, 223
Non-juridical days added or deleted, 223
Payment of bills of exchange on Saturday or non-juridical day, 223
Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement bill C-154, 443-5
Canadian Tax Journal review of agreement, 443-4
Pensions and annuities, 444-5
Withholding tax, 444
Commonwealth, 270-2
Crises in Commonwealth, 271
Motion that External Relations Committee make inquiry into Commonwealth relations, 270-2
Nations acknowledging allegiance to, 270
Ottawa conference in 1965, 272
Estimates, 1247
Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated bill S-7, 39, 67-68
Export and Import Permits bill S-23, 363-6
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, illegality of, 364-6
Intergovernmental arrangement, 364-6
Strategic materials, 365
External aid, India and Pakistan, 1247
External Relations Committee, authority to print proceedings, 432
Film Development Corporation bill C-204, 1556-7
Advisory Group, 1557
Finances, handling of, 1556
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1821-2
Glamorizing of LSD through news media, 1821
Mental illness statistics, 1822
Penalties, 1823

Thorvaldson, Hon. Gunnar S.–Concluded
Income Tax Agreements bill S-56, 1418-19
Withholding tax on interest and dividends, 1419
Income Tax bill C-216, 951-3
Potash mining, 951
Refundable tax, 952
Stock options, 952-3
Income Tax bill C-280, 1914-15
Business profits, tax period on, 1915
Mennonite Central Committee (Canada) bill S-37, 604
National Transportation bill C-231, 1384-92
Cominco, 1391
Crowsnest Pass Agreement, 1386-91
Historical review, 1390
Freight rates, 1385-91
History of railway operation in Canada, 1385
Land and mineral resources, 1388
MacPherson Commission, 1384-91
Objectives of Government and CPR, summarized by V.C. Fowke, 1390
"Reservations on Grain", by A.R. Gobeil, 1390-1
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 583-5
McNair Commission recommendations, 582-3
Time element in terms of bill, 584
Old Age Security bill C-251, 1334-5
Marginal cases, 1335
Needs test, 1335
Violation of income tax law, 1335
Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company bill S-6, 39, 67
Postal Services Interruption Relief bill S-55, 1296-7
Limitations under bill, 1296
Potential for disaster from strikes, 1296-7
Rural Economic Development Fund bill C-274, 1592-4, 1596
Interlake area and other western towns, 1592
United Grain Growers Limited bill S-5, 39, 64-67
Capital, increase in, 65
Shareholders, 65, 66
Taxation, 65-66

Tourist industry
New Brunswick, 101, 103
Newfoundland, 101-2
Nova Scotia, 103
Prince Edward Island, literature on, 344
Transcontinental tours for parliamentarians, 103

Tourist Traffic Committee
Members, 26, 269

Trade
Area control, 345
Authority of Governor in Council, 345
Automotive Products Agreement, Canada and U.S., 616-25, 735-42, 747-57, 779-87, 809, 853

Trade—Concluded
Commodity price stabilization, 1060
Customs tariff, 762-5, 791-2
Export and Import Permits bill S-23, 344-7, 363-7, 393-4, 547
Export and import controls, 345-6
Imbalance of trade in automotive products, 619, 620, 622, 750-2, 756
Jet purchases from France and effect on international relationships, 312
Kennedy Round of Tariff Negotiations and Arrangements, 764, 791, 792
Permits, 345
Rhodesia, restrictions on trade with, 345-6
Saskatchewan Government pressure for purchase of British goods, 312
Trade and foreign aid, 1081-2
Uranium, potential for sale to France, 544-7

Trade Relations Committee
See Canadian Trade Relations Committee

Traffic Accidents
Armed forces for police duty, 411-12
Emotions contributing to accidents, 60-61
"Hospitality on the Highway", safety program of Highway Safety Council, 1331
"It could happen to you", TV program for highway safety education, 64
Suggestions for government co-operation in prevention of, 62-63

Training Allowance
Basic allowance, federal-provincial agreement re, 720, 721-3
Employment status of trainees, 722
Unemployment insurance, amdt re vocational trainee, 719-21
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Connolly, John J., 723
Croll, David A., 722
Macdonald, John M., 721-2
Roebuck, Arthur W., 722-3
Urquhart, Earl W., 718-20

Training allowance bill 1966 C-186. 1r, 707; 2r, 718-23; ref to com, 723; authority to print com proceedings, 725-6; rep of com without amdt, 726; 3r, 747; r.a., 758

Transport and Communications Committee
Members, 25, 269, 1360
Leave to meet during Senate sittings, 811
Reports
Aeronautics bill C-153. Authority to print com proceedings, 525; rep of com without amdt, 525
Canadian National Railway (Bruce Lake) bill C-165. Authority to print com proceedings, 453; rep of com without amdt, 453-4
Canadian National Railway (Stall Lake-Watrous) bill C-210. Authority to print com proceedings, 849; rep of com without amdt, 849-50
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill C-229. Authority to print com proceedings, 1433; rep of com without amdt, 1434

Transport and Communications Committee—Concluded
Reports – Concluded
Canadian Pacific Railway (Alberta) bill S-34. Authority to print com proceedings, 632-3; rep of com without amdt, 633
Canadian Pacific Railway (Saskatchewan) bill S-32. Authority to print com proceedings, 632; rep of com without amdt, 632
Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company bill S-36. Authority to print com proceedings, 743; rep of com with amdt, 743-4
Interprovincial Pipe Line Company bill S-10. Rep of com without amdt, fee paid last session, 133-4
Labour (Safety) Code bill S-35. Authority to print com proceedings, 725; rep of com with amdts, 850-2
Milltown Bridge bill S-15. Authority to print com proceedings, 224; rep of com without amdt, 224
National Transportation bill C-231. Authority to print com proceedings, 1417; rep of com without amdt, 1420
Ottawa Terminal Railway bill S-2. Authority to print com proceedings, 186; rep of com without amdt, 186
Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway bill S-31. Rep of com without amdt, 632
Rainbow Pipe Line Co. Ltd. bill S-52. Rep of com with amdts, 1164
Richelieu Bridge Company bill S-44. Authority to print com proceedings, 1243

Transportation, see National Transportation

Treasury Board
Regulations, appointments, quorum, 1226
Responsibilities in respect to Public Service, 1501-2

Tremblay, Hon. Leonard D.S.
Retired September 2, 1965
Tributes, 18-19

Tributes
Adenauer, Konrad, the late, 1787-8
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 147-58
O'Leary, Hon. M. Grattan, retirement from presidency of Ottawa Journal, 340-3
Sangster, Sir Donald, the late, 1780-2
Vanier, General Georges Philias, Governor General of Canada, the late, 1572-8
See Felicitations,
Senators, deceased,
Senators, retired.

Uganda Minister of Public Works, visitor to Senate, 1038

Unemployment
Adult occupational training, 1897-1914
Training Allowance bill C-186, 707, 718-23, 725-6, 747, 758
Winter works program, 333-4

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics
Negotiations with France re uranium, 546
Power of Russia, 1288-9, 1441

United Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of the Maritime Provinces bill S-33. Hon. Mr. Brooks. 1r, 471; 2r, 509; ref to com, 509; rep of com without amdt, 580; 3r, 580; r.a., 930; refund of fees, 987

United Grain Growers Limited bill S-5. Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson. 1r, 39; 2r, 64-67; ref to com, 67; rep of com without amdt, 166; 3r, 187; r.a., 547

United Investment Life Assurance Company bill S-40. Hon. Mr. Leonard. 1r, 666; 2r, 717-18; ref to com, 718; authority to print proceedings, 808; rep of com without amdt, 808; 3r, 808-9

United Kingdom
Canada-United Kingdom Income Tax Agreement, 401-2, 438-46, 497, 530, 547
"Public expenditure, spending and control", U.K. White Paper, 319

United Nations, 104-7
Communist China, question of admission to, 105
Pope Paul VI, His Holiness, visit to UN, 104-7
Twenty-first session of General Assembly, reported on by Hon. Edgar Fournier, 1165-6

United States
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 616-25, 635-42, 747-57, 779-87, 809, 853
Congratulations to Canada on Centennial of Confederation, extracts from Congressional Record, 1786-7, 1805-7
Gold, control of price, 543-4
Interparliamentary Group, Canada-United States, 162, 163-5
Investment guidelines, effect on Canadian economy, 119-20, 123-4
Investments in northern Quebec mining, 587
North American Water and Power Alliance, 937

Universities
Degrees, question of necessity of, 308
Grants, increase in, 308
Loan statistics, 767, 768
LSD, use of by students, 1797-8, 1800-2
Newfoundland student aid, 98
Northwest Territories student grants, 793
Scholarships and bursaries, 44-45, 52-53, 766
Students in other countries, statistics, 766
University of Toronto weekend "Perception 67" on drug experience, 1801
See Student loans

University finances, 1138-42, 1302-6, 1436-9
Comparison of graduates, Canada-United States, 1303
Bladen Commission, 1304
Federal-provincial policies, 1304-6
Freedom in university financing, 1141
Labour force needs, Economic Council report on, 1303
Medical profession, excerpt from report of Dr. J.F. McCreary, 1141
National concern for universities, provincial lack in, 1140
Non- provision for universities in BNA Act, 1138-9
Operating expenditures, forecast of, 1140, 1304
Student population, 1304
University of New Brunswick, 1436-7
Unskilled young people, 1302-3
York University, 1303
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Burchill, G. Percival, 1436-9
Leonard, T. D'Arcy, 1302-6
MacKenzie, Norman A., 1138-42

Uranium, 544-7
Negotiations with France re, 544-7
Potential, 544-6

Urquhart, Hon. Earl W.
Introduction to the Senate, 199
Pension Benefits Standards bill C-221, 1643-6
Coverage for employees under federal jurisdiction but outside Government, 1643-4
Federal-provincial agreements, 1645
Investment of pension moneys, 1645
Locking-in requirement, 1644-5
Portability, 1645
Provincial acts, 1644
Standards for registration of pension plans, 1644
Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer bill C-211, 840-2
Electrical energy, gas and steam, corporation income tax transfer to provinces, 840-1
Taxing of utility corporations in relation to income tax structure, 841
Time lag in transfer, 841-2
Training Allowance bill C-186, 718-20
Basic allowance, federal- provincial agreement re, 720
Unemployment insurance, amdt re vocational trainee, 719-20

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 526-30
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., appointment as deputy leader, 8
Bouffard, Hon. Paul H., the late, 151-2
Comtois, Hon. Paul, the late, 150-1
Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B., retired, 657
Morality breakdown of young people, 527-8
Freedom of wrongdoers, 528
TV, radio and newspaper propaganda, 527-8
La Fédération des Caisses Populaires du Québec, 1417-18

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille – Concluded
Student Loans bill C-197, 796
Jurisdiction in educational matters, 796
Vanier, General Georges Philias, the late, 1575-6
World hunger, 528-30
Soil utilization in foreign countries, 529-30
Denmark, 529-30
Taiwan, 529

Vanier, General Georges Philias, Governor General of Canada
Deceased March 5, 1967
Tributes, 1572-8

Veniot, Hon. Clarence J.
Retired June 1, 1966
Tributes, 653-7

Veterans' hospitals, administration of, inquiry, Hon. Mr. Brooks, 920-1, 1000-1

Vien, Hon. Thomas, P.C.
Crerar, Hon. T.A., retired, 573-4
Newfoundland Additional Financial Assistance bill C-185, 552, 554, 555, 559-61
Boundaries, 554, 559-60
Grant from federal Government, 554
Perpetuity of agreement, 560

Visiting forces
Damage from activities outside scope of duties or employment, 1162-3
Disciplinary jurisdiction, 1122
Motor vehicles, ownership of and responsibility for, 1162
NATO references, 1122
Personal injuries and property damage, 1123
Police functions, 1123
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Langlois, J.G. Leopold, 1122-3
White, George S., 1161-3

Visiting Forces bill S-50. 1r, 1077; 2r, 1122-3, 1161-3; ref to com, 1163; authority to print com proceedings, 1169; rep of com with amdts, 1124; 3r, 1224

Visitors
Beaulieu, Madame Jeanne-Pauline, Canadian Mother of the Year, 399
Bowden, Lord, guest and speaker in Senate Chamber, 1716-18
Kalema, William Wilberforce, Minister of Public Works, Uganda, 1038
Snedker, Hon. J.E., Speaker of Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan, 1886
Spellman, Howard Hilton, Chairman of Special Committee on Matrimonial Law, Bar Assoc. of New York State, 1510
Symonette, Lady, wife of Premier of Bahamas, 889

Vote
Bank bill C-222, 3r, m in admt neg, 1756
Income Tax bill C-216, 3r, m in amdt neg, 961

Walker, Hon. David, P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 9 C-248, 1217
Assistance Plan bill C-207, 900
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 622-3, 786
Balance of payments and automobile trade deficit, 622
Employment, 622
Parliamentary approval, lack of, 622-3
Tariff concession to U.S. manufacturers, 622-3
Bankruptcy bill S-17, 225-7, 760-1
Collusion between debtor and creditor, 225
Gifts from debtor, 226
Reviewable transaction, 226
Solicitor-client privilege, 760
Superintendent's powers, 226
Transactions made at 'arm's length', 225, 226
Transfers of property prior to bankruptcy, 226
Trustee's powers and report to Supt., 226
Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) bill S-49, 1126-9
Freedom of Speech, 1129
Genocide, 1127
Group protection, 1127
Identifiable group, 1128
Press comments on bill, 1127
Divorce appeal against decision of Commissioner (Biega), 1005-6
Food and Drugs bill S-60, 1812-19
Convictions and penalties, 1814-17
Death of Toronto student, 1813
Glamorizing of LSD through news media, 1813
Hallucinatory effects, 1813-14
Leary, Timothy, head of psychedelic cult, conviction and sentence, 1813
University of Toronto weekend "Perception 67" on drug experience, 1813, 1817
Government expenditures, 1217
Judges bill C-160, 388-9
MacKenzie, Hon. Norman A., national president of Association of Canadian Clubs, 688
Maintenance of Railway Operation bill C-230, 1021-3
Criticism of Government procedures, 1021-3
Rules of the Senate
Revision suggested re divorce appeals, 1005-6
Suspension of No. 119, 454-5
York Life Insurance Company bill S-28, 413, 454-5

War on poverty, 32-34, 43-44, 281
New Brunswick, 281
See Poverty

Water resources, conservation of (Hon. Mr. Gershaw), 614-16, 708-10, 715-17, 935-41, 1206-9
Alberta Society of Professional Engineers, letter to Prime Minister from President of, 937-9
ARDA report on, 709
Export of hydro-electric power, 1207-8
Flood and drought control, 615, 616
Grande Coulee dam, 936
Harmon Doctrine re U.S. ownership and control of waters, 1208
Irrigation projects, 616, 708-9, 936-7
PFRA, 708, 709, 936-7
North American Water and Power Alliance (NAWAPA), 716-17, 937
Pollution of waters, 615, 708, 717, 939
Press comments, 1208-9
Saskatchewan conference on development of water resources, summary of, 940-1
Water and air pollution, 1207
Water resources board, federal-provincial, suggestion for, 935-6
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Cameron, Donald, 935-41
Gershaw, F.W., 614-16
MacKenzie, Norman A., 1207-9
Pearson, Arthur M., 708-10
Pouliot, Jean-François, 715-17

Welch, Hon. Frank C.
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1874-6
Expenditures for defence, 1875
Nova Scotia economy, effect on, 1874
Press comment, 1875
Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, New Zealand conference, 509-12
Agenda, 511
Aid to underdeveloped countries, 512
Canadian delegation, 509-10
New Zealand, 510-11
Politics, 510-11
Trade, 511
Unemployment, non-existence of, 511

Welfare, see Health and Welfare

Whips
Chief Government Whip in the Senate
Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L.
Deputy
McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton
Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate
Macdonald, Hon. John M.

White, Hon. George S., P.C.
Canadian Forces Reorganization bill C-243, 1840-5
Abolishment of 'Royal', distinctive uniforms, insignia, etc., 1844
Future role of forces, question of, 1841
Peacekeeping commitments, 1841-2
Press comments, briefs, etc., 1943-4
Criminal Code (Hate Propaganda) bill S-49, 1210-12
Interpretation of offence, 1211-12
Onus of proof of offence, 1211
Hugessen, Hon. A.K., retired, 1359
Return after illness, 1055
Visiting Forces bill S-50, 1161-3
Damage from activities outside scope of duties or employment, 1162-3
Motor vehicles, ownership of and responsibility for, 1162

Willis, Hon. Harry A.
Automotive products, Canada-United States agreement, 623-5
Parliamentary approval, lack of, 623-4
Tax policy, 624
U.S. domination of automobile industry, 624
Citizenship bill S-59, 1775-6
Citizenship Appeal Court, 1776
Dairy Commission bill C-205, 822-6
Commission and consultative committee, 824-5
Jurisdiction in price control, 823-4
BNA Act cited, 824
Licences, 825-6
Penalties, 826
Regulations made by Governor in Council, 825
Press report on passage of bills by Senate, 894

Winter works
Provincial subsidies, 318-19, 332-4, 494-5
Quebec, Atlantic Provinces and Ontario, 318-19, 494-5

Women, Declaration of, brief re TV programs, presented to Government officials, 254-5, 1221-3

Wood, Hon. Thomas H.
Deceased November 26, 1965
Tributes, 11-18

Woodrow, Hon. Allan L.
Deceased March 30, 1966
Tributes, 360-3

World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation
Accommodation rates, 1765-6
Assets, disposal of on termination of exhibition, 1529, 1531
Copyright or trademark protection, 885-8
Exception, 886
Infringement action or other legal proceeding, 887, 891
Presumption of injury, 886, 888
Copyright vested in corporation, 886-7
Deficit, 1530-1
Highway safety and bilingual signs, 1531-2
Licensing of vendors, 887
Loan from Government, 1527-33
Borrowings to date, 1528
Grants, 1528
Revenue forecast, 1528-9
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Beaubien, L.P., 1532
Brooks, A.J., 887-8, 1529-32
Choquette, Lionel, 887, 891
Connolly, John J., 890, 1527-9, 1532-3
Croll, David A., 888
Hugessen, A.K., 891
Lang, Daniel A., 885-7, 888, 891
Roebuck, Arthur W., 888, 890, 891

World Exhibition, Canadian Corporation, bill S-42. 1r, 864; 2r, 885-8; ref to com, 888; authority to print com proceedings, 889; rep of com without amdt, 889; 3r, 890-2; r.a., 976

World hunger, 528-30, 672
Soil utilization in foreign countries, 529-30
Denmark, 529-30
Taiwan, 529

York Life Insurance Company bill S-28. Hon. Mr. Walker. 1r, 413; 2r, 454; ref to com, 454; rep of com with amdts, 496; 3r, 530; r.a., 1925

Yukon
Bank accounts, establishment of, 705
Council and advisory committee, remuneration of, 705
Finances, 712
Jails, 705
Mentally-ill persons, 706
Self-government, 711, 712
Tax sale of lands, 705
Territorial accounts, 706
Speakers: Honourable Senators
Hnatyshyn, John, 710-11, 712
MacKenzie, Norman A., 704-6
Roebuck, Arthur W., 711-12

Yukon bill C-147. 1r, 649; 2r, 704-6, 710-12; 3r, 715; r.a., 758

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul
Company of Young Canadians bill C-174, 858-60
Canadian University Service Overseas, 859
Leddy, Dr. Francis, chairman of organizing committee, 859
Orientation program, 859-60
Industrial Research and Development Incentives bill C-252, 1549-51
Engineering Institute of Canada, brief and recommendations to Government, 1550
Questions on provisions of bill, 1550-1
Research comparisons, 1550
National and Royal Anthems, 1791-2
National Research Council bill C-150, 484-5
Research projects of NRC, 484-5
Student Loans bill C-197, 792-3
Disadvantages of student loans, 792
Northwest Territories, grants to graduates remaining in NWT, 793
Ukrainian Canadians: Their Place and Role in Canadian Life, by Hon. Mr. Yuzyk, 1820
Weed control, research on, 484-5